growth is fundamental as more and more Canadians require shelter in a shrinking market and face severe economic hardships. Our society is built upon the premise that ownership of private property is an inherent freedom. The erosion of ability to own property is a serious social problem in Canada today. The right to own property guards the troubled boundary between the individual and the state. It is not the only separation as many other traditions, institutions and laws are also important, but Canadians have always taken pride in ownership of property.

There is no question that record high interest rates have done much to harm seriously the housing situation in Canada. The dream of many Canadians to acquire a home of their own has been shattered largely as a result of government economic policies or lack thereof. Two serious housing problems have developed in Canada over the past two years, those being availability and affordability, both largely as a result of high interest rates. When not enough housing units are produced to support the demand, we see shortages in supply. It has been estimated that Canada needs some 220,000 new housing units each year. During 1980, only some 159,000 new units were built, while in 1981, only some 178,000 units were built. The November, 1981, Conference Board forecast predicts that only 180,000 units will be constructed in 1982. These figures indicate a possible shortage of 143,000 units over a three-year period. Investors faced with high interest rates think twice about investing money in construction these days. As a result, apartment construction has virtually ground to a halt. The national vacancy rate fell from 2.8 per cent in April 1980 to some 1.2 per cent in October 1981, and continues to fall. As we have heard in the House this evening, in some areas it is zero. Many large centres across Canada experience serious shortages as more and more people compete with fewer housing unit vacancies. It is not just home owners who are experiencing problems these days, but also renters who are facing a bleak housing market. This will continue unless current adverse trends are turned around.

It is hard to believe that in a country with so much space and so many resources, as well as the over-all potential of a standard of living second to none, there should be any housing problems. It is up to the Government of Canada to implement programs to reduce interest rates for housing in an effort to provide Canadians with an adequate supply of housing units which are basic to the strength of any country. The government should realize it is difficult to ask Canadians to deal with the serious economic issues facing them today, without the added worry of struggling just to keep the basic necessity of a roof over their heads. Canadians must feel confident about the security of their family units and the basics such as food, shelter and clothing, as we tackle the problems of high inflation, interest rates, unemployment and rapidly increasing energy costs.

High mortgage rates are clearly having an impact upon the affordability of housing. In the third quarter of 1981, the average price of a home sold in Canada was $77,900. Assuming a 10 per cent down payment and $1,000 in property taxes, and using the rule of thumb that total payments for principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 30 per cent of gross income, a family income of $45,000 is now needed to afford an average-priced home. Canadian home owners, or hopeful home owners, have been faced with dramatic price increases due to high interest rates and rising house prices on the market in the last few years, the results of which are being felt today.

According to CMHC, as many as 40,000 Canadian families may lose their homes because of high interest rates. Many of these people are hardworking members of society trying to get ahead but frustrated in their efforts by the poor state of our economy brought about by years of federal government neglect and high interest rate policy. Approximately 1,200,000 Canadian families will have to renew their mortgages over the next two years, many at substantial increases in monthly payments. This will place undue pressure on an already stretched budget. These two problems of availability and affordability of housing units are serious indeed and deserve and demand immediate and effective government action in an effort to set things straight.

Canadians expected relief in the form of responsible solutions to the economic problems facing the country, but have found that relief in the recent federal budget was virtually non-existent. While the budget offers builders some assistance in the construction of new apartments, the limited assistance will only have a slight impact on the high break-even costs faced by most builders.

The MURB program which was responsible for the construction of some 25,000 rental units last year has been cancelled, and the government will reduce its commitment to subsidize social housing in 1982 from 30,000 units to 25,000 units. That is a drop of 5,000 units. The net effect of the above two policy decisions is a reduction of some 15,000 needed housing starts. The government promised, after continuous criticism throughout the summer and early fall, to bring in some form of relief for home owners in dire straits, such as people facing huge mortgage rate increases because of the government's high interest rate policy. The relief brought forward in the budget, if you can call it relief, or for that matter if you can call it a budget, is little more than a program which allows people to keep their homes by going further into debt.

The proposed Canada mortgage renewal plan as contained in Bill C-89 does little, if anything, to resolve Canada's current housing crisis. On an average-priced home in Canada today at the high level of interest being paid on a mortgage spread over the length of a usual repayment period, a Government of Canada guarantee to defer interest or for those who qualify for a grant, the maximum relief of $3,000 is minimal and not an effective solution to such a serious problem. This proposed plan is to expire on November 11, 1982, and apply to mortgages which matured on or after September 1, 1981. Such a short-term measure, which the minister responsible for CMHC indicated "is providing the help people need to get them through these difficult times," must be questioned as to its effectiveness since some three months after the federal budget we see no improvement on the economic and housing horizon. This is not surprising since the so-called budget did not address itself to providing solutions to the causes of our economic and housing woes.

In the information kit on the proposed Canada mortgage renewal plan issued on November 12, 1981, in the questions and answers section, this question is posed: "This proposed plan appears to me to be simply a postponement of the inevitable. I will still face a hardship situation in a year from now when this plan runs out. What do I do then?"

The answer section indicates that the Canadian government "is simply unable to afford an extended benefit plan." Recent reports indicate the federal government is to spend millions of dollars on advertising the new Canadian Constitution, which I am sure will be of small comfort to struggling home owners. The answer goes on as follows:

> It is hoped, however, that while the plan is in operation, the personal financial situation of home owners will improve to the point where a decreasing proportion of income will be required to carry monthly mortgage charges. At the same time, this is an opportunity for home owners to consider their personal situations and to plan for the period when the plan terminates.

I would suggest that if the personal financial situation of home owners improves to any degree between now and November 11, 1982, it will not be as a result of any efforts on behalf of the federal government whose three-months-old budget has done little but slam the average Canadian.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that, at the same time, this is an opportunity for home owners, and indeed for all Canadians, to consider the economic mess in which this government has put the country, and an opportunity to plan to replace this worn out government with a Progressive Conservative government.

Bill C-89, while dealing with provisions of the mortgage interest renewal plan, also deals with various other measures which the government says will make CMHC "more business-like and more flexible". I would hope that such changes would result in effective and efficient programs and service to the public through fair and effective programs designed to improve the housing situation in Canada.

These are trying times for many Canadians. The 12.5 per cent annual average rate of inflation in 1981 was the largest annual average rate in 33 years. Unbelievable interest rates, record unemployment and energy costs, are changing the lifestyles of many hardworking Canadians through no fault of their own. Luxuries are the first items to go as part of the cost-cutting forced by rapidly increasing costs and more slowly increasing incomes. Canadians can learn to live with temporary reductions in their standard of living if they realize that effective solutions are forthcoming to get the nation's economy on the rails again.

After so many years of economic mismanagement by the present government, the Canadian people are losing their patience. In 1968, Canada's standard of living was the third highest in the western world; by 1981, it was thirteenth. With our abundant resources, Canada should have the highest standard of living and be on top. Many hardworking Canadians are finding that these economic hardships are gouging out not just the luxuries of life, but the necessities of life as well. Many Canadians, often families where both the husband and wife work, are finding it difficult to provide food, clothing and shelter for their families. It used to be in Canada that a single breadwinner maintained an increasing standard of living while paying off a mortgage, but now such a concept is but a dream to many Canadians. It is bad enough that many unemployed Canadians are having serious problems maintaining adequate housing, but when working families start losing their homes, the government must realize the seriousness of the problem.

The rural and native housing program, which is administered by CMHC, has caused a great deal of controversy in my riding of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. This program was approved by the federal cabinet in 1974. Its original objectives were to ensure adequate housing for low-income persons living in rural areas and small communities with a population of 2,500 or less. The program encourages client involvement to motivate and help the program's clients solve their housing problems through their own organization and efforts by providing the opportunity for client involvement in the planning and building of the units.

The program operates with various benefits and assistance available to those eligible. Section 40 of the National Housing Act is considered the lead provision under the rural and native housing program. Section 40 is the home ownership part of the program whereby ownership is made possible to low-income families by gearing monthly payments to income in accordance with a purchase-payment-to-income scale. This is a federal-provincial cost-sharing program whereby capital costs and losses are shared on a 72-25 per cent basis. I understand that under this part of the program the houses were to be built or acquired by CMHC and then sold to clients at the subsidized rates.

The program is designed to assist people to purchase a home and to pay for it based on their capacity to pay rather than the housing cost. Payments are based on 25 per cent of income with a minimum down payment of $500—or "sweat equity."

I understand that the program went into operation very quickly after it was approved by cabinet but before adequate guidelines and procedures could be developed, and that in October, 1976, the first formal directives were issued to the field offices, giving decentralized authority to branch managers for rural and native housing under Section 40, resulting in some inconsistencies.

● (2130)

In 1977, because of difficulties encountered in achieving targeted goals for the first few years of the program, a special task force was appointed by CMHC to review the total program, and a number of policy and procedural issues were identified and brought to the attention of management for resolution. In light of recent concerns in my riding over the program, I ask the minister to review policies and procedures to ensure the smooth and effective working of the rural and native housing program.

In view of the very high interest rates of the last two years, the housing crisis in Canada has deepened beyond certain select groups. People in the cities, towns and on farms are experiencing problems in trying to keep a roof over their heads. Families where both spouses work hard to get ahead are finding it hard to hold on to their houses, if they can even afford one at all. Many who work hard just to hang on to their homes find that many other sacrifices are necessary also.

In light of such troubled times facing so many Canadians, it is necessary that various government programs be not only fair but be seen to be fair and appropriate for the times. Many people who work hard to get ahead and pay their taxes do not feel it is fair when, through no fault of their own, they lose their homes or have to struggle to maintain them, while at the same time the government offers a heavily subsidized program to a chosen few to acquire housing. Such a program, while commendable in principle during sound economic times, is felt by some to be out of tune with today's troubled times. This is not to say there is no need for government programs to aid Canadians' housing problems, but rather that existing programs should be equitable and appropriate.

I understand that under Section 40, CMHC can either purchase existing homes or have new homes built. This would, or perhaps should, entail an adequate selection of sites, builders, or an inventory of houses in a targeted area. Questions arise as to the criteria to be followed, the search process and the best decision for those affected. Questions also arise as to the selection of participants, and here we must remember this program is set up for communities of fewer than 2,500 people where often you find they know each other and what goes on in their community.

There is a controversy in my riding concerning the home ownership aspect of the rural and native housing program, and I would like to set out what I perceive to be some problems associated with it, particularly in Madoc and Marmora. When it is decided to go into an area with the program, it is necessary to select the best way to advertise and make the program known to eligible persons. At a time when so many Canadians are experiencing high housing costs and shortages, it is important that any program be adequately made known to avoid controversy and achieve a fair and representative response.

What are the best means of getting the information to and identifying potential applicants? Does CMHC contact local municipalities, welfare, community and social agencies, or federal and provincial Members of Parliament for a possible client list? Is there to be television, radio or newspaper advertising, or public meetings in target areas to acquaint all interested local residents with the program? After all, this is a taxpayer subsidized program for certain people at a time when many other taxpayers are losing their homes and going into debt. It is imperative that suitable guidelines exist to ensure adequate information and feedback.

Then there is the decision on whether to build new or buy existing housing, which raises questions and concerns. Who does CMHC approach to assess local housing and land markets? Should it be local real estate agents, municipal officials, the applicants, local residents or the local media? Are only those houses and lots listed for sale looked into, or is an effort made to find out about additional property which might come on the market? What guidelines exist as to requirements for the housing being sought, and on what basis is the decision made to buy existing or build new homes? I feel these and other issues must be addressed in order to provide comprehensive guidelines for this important program.

There are also areas of concern as to the successful applicants. How are they assessed and what are the priorities? Is there an application cutoff time, and how is it determined? How much weight is given to such matters as the order in which the application was made, initiative shown, recommendations by various agencies, family income, number of dependants, ability to meet commitments, source of income, credit rating, current housing situation and any interrelationship between applicants? I feel that it is of the utmost importance to have objective and equitable guidelines for this crucial stage of the program, especially in smaller communities where adequate public knowledge and consultation is fundamental to the effective working of such a program.

The concept of any such program and the methods to be followed in its implementation must be comprehensive, objective, fair and make common sense if the program is to work. If one family is struggling hard to keep their home as their expenses increase faster than their income, a program whereby another family in the community is provided with a new subsidized home is bound to create controversy unless managed in a most convincing way. With today's economy and tight housing situation, many beleagured taxpayers trying to keep their homes find it hard to be convinced about such programs because of many of the concerns and problems I have just raised.

I have seen many of these concerns raised at meetings in Madoc and Marmora where people attend from other areas with similar questions concerning the rural and native housing program. Residents of the target area were quite concerned over various aspects of the program such as type of housing selection, availability and applicant selection. During one meeting, a friend and local politician suffered a heart attack and passed away after expressing his feelings on the program. Another politician resigned his post, and a local election of officers resulted to fill council vacancies.

I have been contacted by constituents expressing their concerns on the program as planned for various areas in the riding. Many of the concerns are over topics I have already mentioned, and go to stress the necessity of suitable guidelines and an appropriate program in tune with the economic times if Canadians are to be convinced of the program and if it is to operate effectively and efficiently.

Public consultation, input and acceptance is important to the functioning of such programs in small municipalities, and it is usually more acceptable for the public to find out things first-hand rather than by rumours. People like to be made aware of the implications of such programs, especially when they are subsidized by taxpayers' money.

Canada is facing severe economic problems right now, and a housing shortage is one of the aspects of the poor state of the economy. The latest budget did little to help Canadians, many of whom continue to struggle in an uphill battle to get ahead. There is a need for federal programs and assistance to get the economy moving again. There is also the need for a comprehensive housing policy to aid various levels of Canadians struggling to acquire or maintain shelter. Such policies must realize the seriousness of the problems facing the country when hardworking families are having a hard time keeping their homes. Programs must be assessed and reassessed to take into account the problems, needs and concerns of all Canadians if they are to be effective and respected in practice. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having this opportunity to speak before the House this evening, especially after publicly announcing my interest in the construction industry this weekend. In fact, I should like to point out that although my colleagues from central and eastern Montreal and I may have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to add further measures to assist the construction industry, our request to the Prime Minister should not be interpreted as a criticism of the bill now before the House, which has my full support.

To me, this bill is extremely important for the operation and administration of the mortgage insurance fund. It will help the government and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to be more effective in the area of public mortgage insurance. However, I should like to focus on the social aspects of the bill. Bill C-89 is important because it deals directly with two urgent social problems, namely, renewal of mortgage loans and rental accommodation. The bill is also a tool for dealing with other social problems. It enables the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to facilitate the provision of mortgage loans that are adapted to periods when mortgage rates fluctuate considerably. These loans offer greater security with respect to monthly payments, so that people can still consider purchasing a home as a way of increasing their security and providing for their retirement years.

The bill will help to ensure that the mortgage funds required in the long term will be available on the market. I agree with the minister that the bill does not reproduce all his plans for the housing sector. It is a start in the right direction, but again I agree with the minister that we must go further and deal with the problems of rural and native housing and low-income tenants. In fact, in a few weeks I shall be celebrating, with the people of my constituency, to mark the acquisition of several hundred co-operative housing units by the citizens of the riding of Montreal-Mercier. We have here a federal government program that is helping low-income people to become home owners. Mr. Speaker, it would not be fair to hold up this bill too long because of the provisions it does not contain, since the minister has clearly indicated his intention of dealing with other problems in due time. Members will recall that the decision to set up the plan was first announced in the budget speech by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on November 12. In fact, the previous speaker was asking the minister to elaborate on the programs. Mr. Speaker, I feel that those who attend the proceedings of this House have several times witnessed the indignation and outrage shown by opposition members when the minister made his announcement, and this evening, the same members are asking us to announce the details of these programs. So, Mr. Speaker, what else can I do, except commend a bill aimed at helping our fellow citizens. The first aspect of the bill, Mr. Speaker, is a security provided by the government to those lenders willing to allow home owners with liquidity problems to delay payment of the interest on their mortgage loan. Would-be eligible home owners who must pay more than 30 per cent of the household's gross income in principal, interests and taxes and, as the case may be, half of joint condominium charges. Consequently, those people would have a substantial equity in their home, in that the home has a much higher value than the amount still outstanding on the mortgage loan. The above-mentioned plan will allow them to use their equity to solve their liquidity problems.

This arrangement is not available to everyone. Thus, individuals who do not have a substantial equity in their home, for example, the co-owners of a condominium unit whose value has decreased throughout the years could not resort to that solution. To those who only have a small equity in their home and who have to repay more than 30 per cent of their income in monthly payments, the plan provides a direct grant of up to $3,000.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that many hon. members have received letters and phone calls from their constituents who are anxious to know whether the plan would apply to their particular circumstances and how they could take advantage of it. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials who administer the scheme advise people to first contact their lenders. These lenders, I mean the banks, trust companies, credit unions, etc., which grant mortgage loans, are aware of the terms and conditions of the plan and have the application forms. They are ready to discuss this plan with their borrowers and help them decide whether they are eligible for the assistance provided by way of insurance or a grant, as well as fill out the application form. This form is then sent to a branch of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHC officials advise me that they have already received a number of applications, but they will not be in a position to offer either insurance or a grant as long as this bill which is now before the House has not been passed and as long as Parliament has not empowered it to act. As everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, there are measures provided for in the MacEachen budget, but for this program to be implemented, this bill must be passed by the House.

There are a few facts which people interested in this scheme should know. First of all, only those who own their own homes and live in them are eligible. For instance, a home owner could not obtain either insurance or a grant for a second house which he is renting out to others or which is occupied by members of his family. However, if he occupies an apartment a duplex or a triplex he owns, he will be deemed to be the home owner occupying that apartment for the purpose of this program. The assistance will apply to only one mortgage, either the first, second or any other, whichever the borrower chooses, on condition this mortgage loan was obtained when the house was bought. Of course, the assistance would apply to only one mortgage renewal. The grants will be paid to the lender on behalf of the borrower and not directly to the latter. It is understood that these grants would be tax free.

Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear to my constituents that a cheque will not be addressed directly to the home owner who is experiencing difficulties but that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will send one to the lending institution after it has approved the application.

To decide whether or not the income of a borrower makes him eligible for assistance under this bill, the income of the whole family before taxes is taken into account. That is, the income of the wife and husband, as well as other sources of income such as rental income, investment income, family allowances. As I have said before, the mortgage lenders are quite willing to discuss the program with their clients. I can even say that the willingness with which lending institutions have lent a hand with the application of the program has been of great value to the public. Because they have agreed to assume part of the administration of the plan by screening applications for assistance and putting up the funds, those institutions have enabled the government to make substantial savings in terms of costs and man-years.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that the Liberal government has always respected that long-standing tradition between the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Canadian lending institutions, and co-operated with the private sector to bolster our economy and, of course, the housing sector as well.

Naturally the plan has come under criticism, particularly because it has failed to find a lasting solution to the problems of Canadians who occupy their own homes and who are faced with the difficult rearrangement of their personal expenditures as a result of soaring interest rates. Still we must admit that the program plan does meet its objective which is to help those people who may lose their home owing to high interest rates. I should even add, Mr. Speaker, that the plan offers that assistance in such a way as to make it possible to take into consideration at the same time the restraint which the government must use in the administration of public funds in these trying times and, of course, the urge to help the home owner keep the house on which he has already made sizeable payments.

The Canada mortgage renewal plan is an adequate answer to the problem of the current economic situation. It is a major feature of the bill introduced in the House, and I urge my colleagues to study it very carefully and diligently. The Canada mortgage renewal plan amounts to a fair solution of the problems inherent in renewing mortgages. Generally speaking, owners living in their own home earn appreciably higher incomes than renters do and, something which is just as significant, they have much larger assets than renters do. An over-all assistance program for mortgage renewals would be extremely costly, of course, and it would have transferred the income of small-wage earners to others who are much better off. It would then have been very difficult to reconcile such a program with the will of the government to help the most needy.

● (2150)

[English]

This is why in 1979 I so strongly opposed Bill C-20. The program was very unfair. It promoted subsidies and grants for everyone. This, of course, was to be done using the money for those who cannot afford a property.

[Translation]

However, the government realized that the tendency of mortgage terms to get increasingly shorter has caused great uncertainty among home owners. Mortgage renewal can affect in many ways the wellbeing of families and create cash problems. Mortgage renewal has been a source of uncertainty both for existing and prospective home owners and rental housing contractors. Confidence is very low, Mr. Speaker, and measures will have to be taken to renew confidence. The Canada mortgage renewal plan helps reduce uncertainty in households that are or will be renewing their mortgages. Other steps no doubt will be needed later, and I am ready to discuss them at other times.

Numerous discussions have dealt directly with the current mortgage instrument problems, namely, their short term, which generally is one year, and their uncertainty. Many people have urged that this instrument be changed. Home owner associations suggested we should come back to a 25-year mortgage term, because it would give families the certainty of being able to meet their monthly payments. Home owners want the assurance they will be able to meet their payments. With that security, families can plan for years ahead. However, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the current global and North American economic situation can make such a program possible. And at any rate, I am not sure either that a return to a 25-year term would necessarily solve the problem. such a plan would transfer to investors the uncertainty pertaining to interest rate fluctuations, which finally would lead to a reduced supply of mortgage funds. Other solutions have been put forward, for instance, variable rate loans, loans with capital gain participation, loans with indexed principal. I am not sure these proposals will succeed, but they certainly deserve to be put to the test, and it will take time for the market to accept them. That is why I am happy that Bill C-89 enables the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to propose those types of mortage loans in order that present and future home owners may take advantage of them if they so decide.

Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to consider the social impact of this legislation or the broader question of housing without dealing with rental housing. This is an area I am quite aware of, because the constituency of Montréal-Mercier probably includes a majority of renters. All members of the House are concerned with the supply of rental housing and the problems faced by low-income renters in tight markets.

Earlier, I mentioned the co-op housing program and noted that this was a formula introduced by the Liberal government to allow low-wage earners to become home owners. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this program has proven effective and I am happy that the residents of the Mercier riding can benefit from it. Moreover, the Canadian government will finance 40,000 new rental units in 1982, including 25,000 units under the non-profit and co-op housing programs, which provide housing for low and middle-income tenants. In addition, the Canada rental supply plan will finance another 15,000 units to prevent a worsening of the shortage of rental housing. The bill will play a major role in providing these 15,000 units by enabling the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to insure more substantial loans for rental housing.

Mr. Speaker, we are facing four major social problems: the first is that of the availability and supply of rental housing at reasonable prices. In this regard, the bill now before the House will help to ensure that the 15,000 rental units announced in the budget will prevent a further deterioration of the markets which are faced with a rental housing shortage. No one will claim that this bill will solve every housing problem in Canada, but I believe that it is a positive beginning and this is why I support the minister's efforts and this bill. The commitment entered upon by the government is obvious if we consider the 25,000 non-profit or co-op housing units to be built in 1982.

The second problem concerns low-income tenants throughout the country. Through its non-profit and co-op housing programs, the government has shown its concern for these people. The minister has also expressed support for a housing allowance program and his wish to consider this proposal at length.

The third problem, Mr. Speaker, is the lack of confidence or the uncertainty which besets present and future occupant home owners. The Canada mortgage renewal plan and the provisions of this bill, which will allow CMHC to help develop new forms of mortgage loans, are aimed at solving this problem. In any case, Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to remind hon. members that it would be a complete fraud to pretend to solve all of Canada's economic problems with the introduction of such a bill. This is why I invite my colleagues in the opposition to consider this positive measure, to try to improve its content, but also to approve it as soon as possible since our constituents are anxious to see it passed quickly.

The fourth problem, Mr. Speaker, concerns the miserable housing conditions of our native and rural population. As I came from a rural area before settling down in an urban area, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am aware that the housing situation is indeed distressing and in this respect agree with my colleagues across the aisle. However, I do not believe that this is a good reason to prevent or delay the implementation of such a bill. If we are aware of problems in other sectors, Mr. Speaker, other action could be taken, and this is why I urge my colleagues to support this bill. I believe that the government has shown concern for the native people, the problems of employment and the rural situation. With respect to financing, we have had the previous bill on Canagrex, and I believe that this government has shown no reluctance in supporting positive action to help the Canadian people.

● (2200)

[English]

I think that a short discussion of this bill is needed. I hope that my colleagues will support Bill C-89. Although I recognize it is the role of the opposition to oppose, they should also take part in discussions and approval of measures.

This is a very positive measure. I believe that Canadians can afford this program and approve these measures, and it is my hope that we will vote on this important bill shortly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) wishes to be recognized now so that he may be recognized tomorrow. Is that the case?

Mr. Keeper: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA—TRANSFER OF TOURISM OFFICE FROM OTTAWA TO YARMOUTH, N.S. (B) ADVICE TENDERED BY MINISTER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, until November 30, 1981, the main ingredients of the government's decentralization policy were patronage, lack of respect for the taxpayers' dollar, political advantage to a particular ministry and secrecy.

On that day, as a result of two questions to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) on the proposed move of the distribution unit of the Canadian Government Tourism Office, two new elements were added—stupidity and weakness.

Lest you think, Mr. Speaker, that I am too hard on these two hon. gentlemen, I should tell the House the facts. Let me begin by saying that it is now common knowledge that in stopping the decentralization program in 1979, the Clark government saved the Canadian taxpayer approximately $250 million and eliminated countless negative effects on the delivery of government services to the people of Canada. I presume that if this government had asked for the same advice on costs and efficiency from the same public service, it would have received the same advice as our government received. Therefore, the present policy must be based on political advantage, and lack of respect for the taxpayers' dollars, laced with a generous amount of patronage. But there is more, and this is where stupidity and weakness enter.

In 1977, before the Clark government stopped the move, the Minister of State for Small Businesses advised the President of the Treasury Board not to move the tourism distribution unit to Yarmouth. Again, on April 29, 1981, in a letter that the Minister of State for Small Businesses admitted writing to the President of the Treasury Board—which everyone can see if they ask—the minister pleaded an eloquent case against the move. He recalled the consistent advice against the move over the years, related how the standard of service would be lowered and described the distribution centre as much more than a warehousing operation; rather, a sophisticated office with national and international responsibilities to get Canada's message out within a critical delivery component. He detailed how the move to Yarmouth would increase the costs of the operation, impose time penalties on the service and agreed that if there was a strong case against the move to Yarmouth in 1977, there was an even stronger case in 1981, and certainly stronger today.

Only in Ottawa, only within the Treasury Board could such foolishness abound. For example, a distribution unit is to be moved where no postal workers will be available. Material which should be out in the marketplace will have to be stored in the post office in Halifax. These delays will mean missing media deadlines. Agents, embassies and offices abroad will suffer from unco-ordinated shipments, and cost increases will be enormous. For example, with regard to provincial costs, Ontario provided 124,000 pounds of literature in the past twelve months at a shipping cost of $3,200. The Yarmouth cost would be $17,240. British Columbia provided 53,000 pounds at a cost of $9,600. That cost would climb to $15,565. Some might grow fainthearted in the face of this logic and the good sense of the letter, but no one should ever accuse the government of faintheartedness when it comes to stupidity. It embraces stupidity in a manner which is truly breathtaking. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism recognized stupidity for what it was and admitted it to the House. He said he wrote the letter; he did not agree with the move; it would make him a laughing stock; and he asked for another unit to be moved. When I read that, I said there was a glimmer of hope for this poor benighted creature. However, seconds later, he dashed this slim glimmer of hope to the ground. He said, and this is where he demonstrated his weakness: "Please save me from the member from Yarmouth. She is thrashing me to death with her purse. Find me another unit for Yarmouth. I can't stand it." Another unit could not be found, so he changed his mind, and what was ridiculous, what was irrelevant, and what was stupid before now became the order of the day for government business.

Even this tired, listless, weak-willed, patronage-ridden and ramshackle excuse for a government has to account to the people at some time. Let it do so now. Let it produce all the correspondence. The parliamentary secretary is here. Let him produce all the correspondence and the studies on decentralization. Let the government find that other department or unit to go to Yarmouth. Nobody disagrees with the federal presence in Yarmouth, but how can the government fly in the face of a move which has been condemned by everyone and even by the minister himself? Who is in charge over there? What establishes the rule over there? Is it good sense; is it patronage; is it the appropriate delivery of government service; or is it the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) or the public interest? Find another unit, please, Mr. Speaker, even if you have to intervene personally. It is painful for me to have to sit here day after day and to see the government make such a fool of itself.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat shocked to hear some of the adjectives used by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) because when we look at the employment rate of that area of Nova Scotia and compare it with that here in the nation's capital, we note that it is over 4 per cent higher than here in central Canada. There are, therefore, humanitarian reasons behind this move, and humanitarian reasons behind moves to other areas in the Atlantic region which do not enjoy the opportunities we enjoy here in central Canada. Part of the decision was based on the need for decentralization so we could be in closer contact with people in outlying areas. We should look at this matter in the true Canadian context of sharing. We must provide the people of that area with a standard of living comparable to that in the nation's capital. I hope this is one move in that direction. We should not be greedy and hold everything in central Canada. We should be willing to share.

Work is proceeding on the Canadian Government Office of Tourism facility in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Completion of the new structure and occupancy is scheduled for 1983. Officials of the office of tourism have had several meetings with officials of the city, Canada Post and the Department of Employment and Immigration, to ensure the transition is done as smoothly as possible so as not to inconvenience people seeking travel information and literature on Canada. Transportation companies, including CP Transport, have been asked for plans and estimates of costs for moving the tourist information to the Yarmouth distribution centre. Officials of the Canadian Government Office of Tourism also met with Canada Post officials in Halifax recently and were assured of the fullest co-operation possible. A postal plan for servicing Yarmouth will be presented to the CGOT shortly to allow time for the new Crown corporation to settle in.

Meetings have also been held in Yarmouth with Employment and Immigration Canada in relation to possible staffing requirements for the new facility. Here in Ottawa a professional career counsellor is advising those employees of the distribution centre who will be relocating in the national capital area on retraining, job rotation and relocation.

The Canadian government wants to decentralize, and, in view of the high unemployment figures in the Yarmouth area compared with those in the city of Ottawa, I do not think we should be complaining but, rather, trying to help those people who are disadvantaged.

THE ECONOMY—QUERY RESPECTING MATTERS CONSIDERED WHEN PREPARING BUDGET. (B) DURATION OF RECESSION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my remarks tonight centre on a question I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on December 9 of last year. At that time I was pointing out to him that, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Gray) in the House, I felt he should inform the House concerning the plight of some 140,000 people who the Canadian Manufacturers' Association had indicated only that day had lost their jobs over the last three months. The emperor was in one of his snarky moods that day and simply said "I will be very happy to convey the hon. member's representations to the minister; I believe he will be in the House presently." I followed up my question by asking would he indicate why he and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had put us in the place where we were experiencing such a serious recession in Canada. The emperor then came back and said that he could not agree with that premise and that he had no answer to give.

The reason I have reiterated the question and the two answers is that I think that in reality this government does not fully realize the hardship it is creating in this country. The CMA people at that time indicated that 140,000 people had lost their jobs. As we know, within the last week the president of the CMA is now saying that it may be 400,000 Canadians who will be out of work as a result of the present recession we are in.

The Prime Minister may feel he can quibble with our words. He may feel he can say that it is technically not a recession, but every economist in Canada would disagree with him. The fact is that for the last four years this country has had a negative real growth on a per capita basis in each of those four years.

Let me not ask you to accept my figures, Mr. Speaker. In the October issue of the internationally well regarded magazine Euromoney, it was pointed out that Canada among world countries had an economic performance between 1974 and 1981 ranking number thirtieth. That means we ranked after countries such as Taiwan, Singapore, Hong Kong, Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, Iraq, Egypt, Thailand, Cyprus, Japan, Korea, Burma, Paraguay, India, Honduras, Libya, Pakistan, Indonesia, Tunisia, Trinidad and Tobago, The Philippines, Panama, Guatemala, Ecuador, United States of America, Norway, Germany, Austria, Malawi—and then Canada.

I mention this because I think it is time that not only the emperor himself but his ministers, those dwarf ministers that surround him, somehow accepted the plight they have caused in the country. We have a competitively high inflation level in Canada. In fact, the same economic review I have referred to, the October issue of Euromoney, says that as far as inflation is concerned we have the nineteenth worst inflation level they record. As far as economic growth in those years is concerned, 1974 to 1981, we ranked forty-eighth.

I am suggesting to the House this evening that, bearing in mind the riches we have in this country, the resources that we have, the agricultural produce and capability we have, our talented people, and the proximity we have to the wealthiest market in the world, it is time the government accepted the challenge to make us number one again among world nations.

This is why I am suggesting, since we have now slipped into a recession, that the Prime Minister should offer some explanation not only to the House but to the people of Canada. He should be willing to tell us why, in terms of personal wealth, for example, we have slipped behind Switzerland which now has personal wealth for every man, woman and child of $14,240 in United States dollars. He should be willing to tell us why we are behind Luxembourg with $12,820 in personal earnings; Sweden with $11,920; Denmark, $11,900; Germany, $11,730; Belgium, $10,890; United States, $10,820; Norway, $10,710; Iceland, $10,490; The Netherlands, $10,240; France, $9,940. Then comes Canada! We used to be a proud No. 2 on the list. How come the emperor has allowed us to sink so low?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, several points were raised by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) with which I will deal in the order he presented them. Originally the hon. member asked his question on December 9, 1981. In his preamble he said to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau):

> In view of the fact that we are now faced with the worst red ink figures in our relationship with the rest of the world in terms of trade—

Then he went on to ask why we were in the same situation in terms of losing jobs; basically that was the question he asked.

If one listened to the rhetoric of the question, one would assume that in fact our trade balance in 1981 was the worst on record. In fact, the way it was worded one would think there was a trade deficit in 1981. Yet the figures show that in 1981, despite the fact that the hon. member quoted from Euromoney, the economic review, Canada had a $6.5 billion trade surplus. Admittedly that is not quite as good as the record of 1980. I remind the hon. member that there was still a Liberal government on this side of the House when Canada had its largest trade surplus in history of $7.8 billion. If one listened only to the rhetoric of the hon. member opposite, one would think that the country was faced with a trade deficit, and the facts prove the opposite.

In 1981, in terms of trade, had the fourth quarter or the last quarter of that year been projected on a yearly basis, the result would have shown an even better record trade surplus between Canada and its major trading partners in the world. Evidently the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) has done an excellent job in terms of promoting Canadian products. This shows up in our trade surplus with other markets.

In addition, the hon. member asked why Canada was doing so poorly when we were in such close proximity to the wealthiest market in the world. I would assume by that he meant the United States. It is fair to say that roughly 70 per cent of all exported Canadian products are traded with the United States. The hon. member opposite would be in agreement with me that the United States is in its worst recessionary period since the post war period as well. It should be borne in mind that when 70 per cent of everything produced in the country goes to the United States, whose economy is in trouble as well, that the Canadian economy will be in trouble. With the budget and by some of the measures we have introduced we are trying to alleviate the unemployment situation to which the hon. member referred. I am confident that as the United States economy turns around, we will find the economy of Canada will correspond in a like manner.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR VACCINATION PROGRAM TO COMBAT RED MEASLES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, on November 20, 1981, my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare was phrased as follows:

> A disease which is seriously underrated by the public and also by some health workers, as far as morbidity is concerned, and one that can and does cause significant brain damage, is red measles. This serious virus infection is preventable by vaccination. The United States is committed to a national vaccination program, with a goal of completely eliminating the disease arising within that country by 1982. Does the Minister of National Health and Welfare have any plans to stimulate and co-ordinate such a program in Canada where the responsibility for health rests with the provinces?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare answered:

> Madam Speaker, the jurisdiction for implementing such health policy remains with the provincial health authorities. However, the fact is that the National Advisory Committee on Immunization which prepared guidelines for the eradication of measles in Canada strongly recommended that legislation be enacted in each of the ten provinces requiring measle immunization prior to school entry. Unfortunately it has not been implemented in some parts of Canada. I do not have the direct power to do it, so I guess an occasion such as this to tell the public is of value.

My purpose in bringing this question to the attention of the minister again is because I feel this is an important issue and one which focuses on the physical wellbeing of all Canadians and our progeny.

The urgency of this situation is heightened by the fact that in 1980 the reported rate of measles in Canada was approximately ten times higher than in the United States. In Canada there were 13,750 cases, having a rate of 58 per 100,000 population; whereas in the U.S.A. there were 13,430 cases (the rate being 6 per 100,000 population).

It was estimated that approximately 2,500 Canadians were infected with red measles in 1981. While this figure is down considerably from previous years, it becomes less impressive when we realize that only 2,347 measle cases were reported in the entire United States during the first 26 weeks of 1981. What we must all realize is that we have reached a point where we can eliminate this infectious disease. Red measles has hitherto been referred to in Canada as a common childhood disease. It is not by any yardstick a benign disease. Complications such as middle-ear infection and bronchopneumonia occur in one out of every 15 cases. Inflammation of the brain or encephalitis occurs in one out of every 1,000 cases of measles. This condition leaves some with permanent brain damage and others with residual paralysis. Mental retardation occurs once in every 3,000 cases sometimes due to a result of the encephalitis. The disease can be eradicated but in order to do so a 100 per cent comprehensive program of public, not private, vaccination is required.

In June, 1981, the Canadian Paediatric Society passed a resolution promoting a more universal use of the vaccine to immunize citizens against the disease. The National Advisory Committee for Immunization has continually made similar recommendations. In addition, the Canadian Medical Association in August, 1981, recommended compulsory vaccinations to eradicate this disease. Implementation of such a program is the responsibility of the provincial legislature. The response to these submissions has not been favourable in any province except the province of New Brunswick.

Compare this response with that in the United States where all 50 states have such legislation in force. There, children must have a certificate in order to be admitted to school and if a case of measles breaks out, all members of the school must show an immunization record as proof of having been vaccinated. If no such proof is available, they are excluded from school. It is only through well supervised programs of this nature that the 1982 goal of completely eliminating the disease within that country will be realized.

Relating this back to Canada, Mr. Speaker, since supplies of the vaccine are already available at the provincial level it seems to me that the federal government's role should not only entail providing educational information and encouraging universal acceptance of vaccination programs, especially those relating to certain age groups, but it should also be encouraging the remainder of the provinces to enact legislation which would facilitate the degree of control now being achieved over the disease in the United States. In this way we would be encouraging a national health strategy to eliminate indigenous measles in Canada. A commitment must be made by the federal government to do this.

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I just begin by saying that the minister is in agreement with everything the hon. member has said in his preamble. I think the hon. member has correctly pointed out the saddest situation that can arise, which is when the government or the medical profession has the wherewithal and the weapons to eliminate disease and we find these are not being used properly. From a medical practitioner's standpoint, that is one of the saddest things in terms of trying to educate the public.

As an example of that, Mr. Speaker, the major commitment of the World Health Organization in the 1970s was to eradicate smallpox on a worldwide scale. From the medical practitioner's standpoint, one realizes that that is much more difficult in terms of immunization than it would be in the case of measles. I think basically what we have to do as a national government is educate the Canadian public as to the ease with which we can eliminate or eradicate the incidence of measles in Canada. We have to begin by educating the parents to have their youngsters undergo vaccination prior to their entering school, or at least in their very early school years.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) points out quite correctly that roughly one in every 15 reported cases results in ear infections and pulmonary pneumonia. As he mentioned, we have severe brain inflammation in one out of every thousand cases. Even more important, we have records of several unnecessary deaths occurring in Canada in the last few years because young children contacted measles.

The minister has pointed out that the United States, on the other hand, in 1978 instituted a program to eliminate measles by the year 1982, and it has been rather successful. I just want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will be meeting with her provincial counterparts in the next six to seven weeks and we hope to be able to convince those provincial ministers to institute compulsory immunization programs. That is the only way we are going to eradicate measles in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

P.C. 1982-367

Certified to be a true copy of a Meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 8 February, 1982

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise:

1. that in the absence from Ottawa of the Prime Minister or in the event of his being unable to perform the functions of his office, the next senior minister who is in Ottawa and is able to perform the functions of the Office of Prime Minister, be authorized to act for the Prime Minister;

2. that in the absence from Ottawa of a Minister whose name is set out in Column II of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

3. that in the absence from Ottawa of the Ministers named in Columns II and III of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of both of those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

4. that in the absence from Ottawa of the Ministers named in Columns II, III and IV of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of all those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Prime Minister or, if the Prime Minister is absent from Ottawa or unable to perform the functions of his Office, the next senior minister who is in Ottawa be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

5. that where an Office set out in Column I of an item of the Schedule to this Minute is vacant, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item; and

6. that where an Office set out in Column I of an item of the Schedule to this Minute is vacant, in the absence from Ottawa of the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of the Office set out in Column I of that item, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item.

FISHERIES

AFFIRMATION OF RIGHT TO HUNT HARP SEALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I believe, Madam Speaker, you will find after consultation that there is unanimous consent for this motion which is on a matter of urgency because there is a resolution before the European Parliament which would have the effect of banning the importation of seal products into the countries of the European Economic Community. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), and with the support of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That, in the opinion of this House, the annual harvest of harp seals by Canadians is an important source of income to a large proportion of the native population of northern Canada and approximately 6,000 fishermen living in Newfoundland and Quebec, which last year generated well over $12 million into the economy of these areas, and that this House reaffirms the right of Canadian sealers to go about their legitimate pursuit under the strict supervision of the Government of Canada, free from harassment and interference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHARGES LAID AGAINST VASYL OVSIYENKO BY U.S.S.R. AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering that a member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group was recently transferred to KGB headquarters and is being charged with "verbal agitation and propaganda" for having written to the United Nations describing severe conditions in the labour camp where he was previously held, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Canadian government make representations on behalf of Vasyl Ovsiyenko to the Soviet authorities in order that these charges be dropped and Ovsiyenko freed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Some members of the Conservative Party have been creating the illusion that they would not change the Crow rate if they were in government. The former Tory minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), is quoted as saying, "I want to assure you that any change in the application of the Crow benefit will come only after there is full consultation with the producers—" and "—if there is any change of application of the Crow rate it will have to be coupled with adequate service guarantees—". Therefore, since it is clear that the policy of the Conservative Party is not to keep the Crowsnest Pass rate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That the Conservative Party commit itself immediately to full public support of Liberal attempts to change the Crowsnest Pass rate, so that its public position reflects its real position, which is to abandon the Crow rate.

Mr. Mazankowski: What did Blakeney say?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

PROPOSALS TO STIMULATE HOUSING CONSTRUCTION AND EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, given the assurance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the House yesterday that "this cabinet and caucus is very much united", I know this motion will receive unanimous consent. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the government bring forward measures to stimulate the housing construction industry because of its well-known spin-off effects and help business hire more youths under the age of 25 right now, and that the government adopt these proposals as set out in a letter dated February 3, 1982, sent to the Prime Minister, released publicly, and signed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of State.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

PRAIRIE FARM EMERGENCY FUND—USE FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, over one year has gone by since the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) agreed to refer Bill C-245, to repeal the PFA Act and set up a trust to fund research into cereal grains and oilseeds suitable for use in the Canadian Wheat Board area, to committee. Almost six months have gone by since western grain farm organizations formed the Western Grains Research Foundation with similar objects to those set forth in Bill C-245. To date the minister has taken no action, with the result that approximately $2 million of interest on the prairie farm emergency fund producers' money has been lost to research. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the Minister of Agriculture take immediate action to ensure that the money held in the prairie farm emergency fund, together with accrued interest since February 3, 1981, be made available for research and development as proposed by both Bill C-245 and the Western Grains Research Foundation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST THAT LAND UNNECESSARILY EXPROPRIATED BE RETURNED TO PEOPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House require the government to put an end to the bureaucratic control exercised by the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Ltd., which in requesting the investment of millions of dollars in Canada is merely looking after its own interests, and that the government immediately return all land unnecessarily expropriated.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED COMMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG-ASSINIBOINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency that was raised yesterday in this House but was denied unanimous consent by some hon. members. I am referring to the comments made about blacks in South Africa by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). Once again, Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House request the member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine to retract his repugnant and despicable statements; failing this, that this House urge the Conservative caucus as well as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to expel the member from their caucus.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

PENSIONS

DELAY IN MEETING PENSIONERS' NEEDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In his address to the National Pensions Conference in March, 1981, the Prime Minister said:

We are determined to bring about a substantial pension reform—that determination imposes a sense of urgency.

The Prime Minister then promised a July meeting with the provinces on pensions. We have had no such meeting. The government then promised a green paper on pensions for October. We have had no such green paper. October became December, December became February, and now we are told that we should expect it in May, and the paper is no longer green. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That this House censure the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, all of whom were participants in the National Pensions Conference held in Ottawa last March, for their irresponsible delay in failing to provide adequate or any solution to the urgent and pressing needs of pensioners in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE JUDICIARY

NEW BRUNSWICK APPOINTMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. With respect to the recent appointment of the defeated former New Brunswick Liberal leader, Joe Daigle, to the $70,000 a year seat on the New Brunswick Court of the Queen's Bench, and the earlier appointment of his defeated predecessor to the provincial supreme court in 1978, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House commend the Minister of Justice for his noble and purely humanitarian gesture and trust that he will continue his completely impartial and unbiased practice of appointing all has-been Liberals to such esteemed and lucrative positions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

MEDICAL CRITERIA USED IN RECRUITMENT PROCEDURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Ministry of National Defence has recently initiated a new recruitment campaign for the Armed Forces. Recruitment officers in employment centres across the country are informing applicants that successful cartilage operations will not be a deterrent to their admission into the forces. However, young persons are, in fact, being turned down by the Armed Forces after initial recruitment on the grounds of non-medical compliance, simply because they have undergone corrective surgery for cartilage-related problems. In light of this unfair practice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Minister of National Defence review recruitment procedures with a view to eliminating unfair and unduly restrictive requirements, without which young persons who have corrected minor medical problems would be admitted into the forces.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEFINITION OF CABINET SOLIDARITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to come back to the question of the split in the government over the budget, and I would address my question to the Prime Minister who will recall, I am sure, the classic definition of cabinet solidarity as given by the late Prime Minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the occasion of his firing of the minister, Israel Tarte, from his cabinet over a disagreement on tariff policy. Mr. Laurier said at that time, in 1903:

It would be a mere redundancy for me to affirm that the necessity for solidarity between the members of the same administration is absolute; that the moment a policy has been determined upon, then it becomes the duty of every member of that administration to support it and to support it in its entirety.

That was Prime Minister Laurier's standard, and it has been the standard of all Prime Ministers to this date. Does the Prime Minister accept that definition of cabinet solidarity?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am satisfied that the caucus is entirely behind the Minister of Finance in this matter.

Mr. Crosbie: How far?

An hon. Member: What about the cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: And the cabinet, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition is not so satisfied. I just ask him to keep that in mind the next time he is asked to form a cabinet.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): That will be soon, Pierre.

REQUEST THAT TWO MINISTERS BE FIRED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister dismisses a century of parliamentary tradition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —trying to keep together his tattered and divided cabinet. The Prime Minister will know that in the speech dated January—

Miss Bégin: Twenty-fifth.

Mr. Clark: —twenty-fifth. I thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare in one of her last actions, I trust, if she is a woman of principle in the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance said at that time in a speech, part of which the Prime Minister quoted selectively, and I am quoting the minister:

> For all these reasons, I believe that we must resist the temptation to veer away from restraint, whether to gain a temporary and minimal increase in jobs or simply to reap the transitory political benefits.

That was the Minister of Finance's statement on January 25.

We now have both the Minister of State and the Minister of National Health and Welfare veering away from the central policy of the budget, that of restraint, admitting that they cannot compute the cost in millions of dollars of the programs they are recommending in disagreement with the minister. Obviously we have a clear disagreement between what the Minister of Finance has said and what two of his cabinet colleagues have said.

My question to the Prime Minister is very straightforward. Is he going to fire the two ministers who disagree with his Minister of Finance, or is he going to abandon the Minister of Finance and abandon a century's tradition of cabinet solidarity?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I said yesterday, Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is showing more concern about unity in our government than he is about unity in his own party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That is the way he has of forgetting his own problems. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that I have heard these ministers in and out of cabinet, I saw them vote on the budget, I saw them supportive of the budget, and I have seen them exercise that role in caucus, in cabinet, and in the House of Commons. That is satisfactory to me.

Now, if the Leader of the Opposition wants to get a great deal of joy out of quoting Laurier, I can understand that because he is one of the great men to whom they should look.

• (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: I only hope that this line of questioning will continue for quite a while, because I am happy with the situation in my caucus. I can understand why the Leader of the Opposition is not happy with the situation either in his caucus or in our caucus, but let us continue to discuss it. I would like to hear some more quotes from the opposition, preferably from Sir John A. Macdonald this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING FREEDOM OF MINISTERS TO DISAGREE ON POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as the Prime Minister did when he described hon. members of Parliament as nobodies, and as he did when he muzzled this House, he now proposes to joke about the fundamental traditions of our Parliament as he ignores them. Our interest here is not in quoting Laurier; rather, our interest here is to ensure that respect is given to what Laurier stood for and what every Prime Minister before this Prime Minister stood for in terms of cabinet solidarity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I would like to make the very loose standards which the country has come to associate with this Prime Minister exactly clear. Is the Prime Minister now saying that because the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of State, and Lord knows how many other ministers, have written to him disagreeing with his Minister of Finance, and because they once voted for the budget, they are free to disagree with every major thrust the Minister of Finance puts forward? That is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare has done. That is what the Minister of State has done. If that is the standard of the Prime Minister, let him say so; if it is not, let him tell us his standard of cabinet solidarity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there is a very simple test of cabinet solidarity, and it is the one which Laurier applied. The right hon. member should look at the circumstances described by Laurier in the case he cites. It is that, when a minister disagrees with the cabinet, he resigns from that cabinet.

Mr. Nielsen: Right on!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Or she resigns.

Mr. Trudeau: Or she resigns if she disagrees with the position of the budget or of the government on any particular matter; or, if he or she is a member of the caucus, he or she does what members in the caucus of the Leader of the Opposition did. He or she resigns from the caucus and gets out.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's right.

Mr. Trudeau: That is what cabinet solidarity means. In every other circumstance, the ministers and the caucus are holding together, and they are sticking with the government. This does not mean, as I said—

Mr. Crosbie: The weasels, Allan.

Mr. Trudeau: It is really very interesting to see the amount of time we will spend in this question period answering questions by the opposition seeking out a division in this caucus. If there is a division, why don't the members sit as independents?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: You have an example. Just in the past months two hon. members of that caucus left the caucus because they disagreed with the Leader of the Opposition. We did not spend our time gloating about it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We have the same freedom every time there is a vote on the budget. I have a lot of time to give to this subject, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We haven't, for you!

Mr. Trudeau: I hope you will let me stay on my feet in spite of all of this heckling and guffawing. I have more to say, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I will be brief, but I want to pursue—

Some hon. Members: Bravo!

Mr. Clark: The Liberals are trying to shout me down, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: We love you, Joe!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Very difficult for you, Allan!

Mr. Clark: I do want to pursue this brand new theory of cabinet solidarity which the Prime Minister is bringing out in contempt of the conventions—

An hon. Member: We like it!

Mr. Clark: Yes. Yes, the Liberals like it because it is in contempt of Canadian history and Canadian practice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister has just said that cabinet solidarity is honoured by ministers, and that if ministers disagree with a policy, they resign. In other words, the responsibility is theirs. That was not Laurier's view. Laurier believed that a leader has a responsibility. Laurier believed that if there was a disagreement such as now exists in the cabinet of Canada, the Prime Minister had a responsibility to find the courage either to fire the dissident members or fire his Minister of Finance.

• (1425)

Mr. Nielsen: Or resign as a bloc.

Mr. Clark: Or resign as a bloc.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister smirks.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. It is going to be one of those days, like it was yesterday. I am afraid we are very late in the progress of our question period. I have to ask members on both sides of the House to be very brief in their questions.

Mr. Nielsen: And their answers.

Mr. Clark: We will be brief in our questions, and I trust in the answers and the heckling. My question of the Prime Minister is this. Does his brand new theory of cabinet responsibility and cabinet solidarity mean that the Prime Minister can abdicate all responsibility for maintaining a common front and maintaining cabinet solidarity? Is it entirely up to the ministers, or will the Prime Minister accept his duty to ensure that his ministers speak with one voice, instead of saying one thing through the voice of the Minister of Finance and a totally different thing through the voice of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I hope a great deal more of this question period will be taken up with the expression of concern on the other side for a division in this cabinet.

Mr. Waddell: Why don't you talk about jobs?

Mr. Trudeau: Why don't you talk about jobs? I do not think the member of the NDP, arrogant as he is, can suggest—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. I simply ask the Prime Minister to answer only the question that was asked of him, and not encourage the hecklers.

Mr. Trudeau: I accept your direction, Madam Speaker. I point out to the member of the NDP that I cannot be faulted for answering a question from the Leader of the Opposition.

I put it to the Leader of the Opposition that the test of any Prime Minister, and that certainly included Laurier, was not to go to the Leader of the Opposition to ask him what he thought about the solidarity of the government's cabinet. If I want to change ministers or ask for their confidence, I will do it because I judge it as necessary to show that this government is united on this budget. I do not think it was Laurier's theory that I should go to the opposition and say, "Now, are you satisfied with the solidarity in my cabinet? Do you think everything is okay over here because, if you don't, I will ask for a few resignations." I am satisfied with the state of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You are the only one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: There is great jubilation over there about the state of this government. Let them continue worrying about solidarity on our side. It will help them to forget about the knives that are being stuck into the Leader of the Opposition's back by his own party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That, ladies and gentleman, is our Prime Minister!

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE WROTE LETTER REQUESTING BUDGET CHANGES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me remind the Prime Minister that there is a reason why we are pursuing this matter. It is because the people in this country do not know whether to listen to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of State, the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister. That is the point that is at issue, not the flippant responses he has given us just now. We have had an incredible display here of political cowardice—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. At this time we usually go to the other party. The official opposition has already taken the first 15 minutes of question period.

Mr. Crosbie: Blame the Prime Minister. No, we will not put up with that. There is the guilty party right there!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, there have to be answers to the questions. The point is that this first question has taken 15 minutes, and I do have to enforce the rule strictly. Otherwise, I will have to move on to the other party.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I will be brief, but I need one sentence of introduction. The point is that there has been an incredible display of political cowardice—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wilson: —where a minister, after voting for the budget, has turned right around—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he is supposed to ask a question, not make a speech or comment on answers.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, then let me put my question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Send him back to the minors.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Can you not keep order, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Wilson: Since the Minister of Agriculture has been known to be in opposition to this budget, and since one of his staff has said that there is nothing in the budget for agriculture, has the minister written a similar letter to the Prime Minister asking for changes in the budget?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I want the hon. member to know that I am not aware of any of my staff saying that there is nothing in the budget. I think I have sent at least 1,000 letters to people who have asked me what is in the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: We have explained to them what is in the budget. There are some very good things in the budget for agriculture. Changes were made by the Minister of Finance in December—

Mr. Clark: Order!

Mr. Whelan: —which were even better than we had expected at that time.

I want to say to the hon. member that the letters which I exchange with my Prime Minister always have "personal and confidential" on the top.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it is unlike the letters from the Minister of Health and Welfare and the Minister of State.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The minister said two years ago that he would resign if interest rates went above the current level of 13 per cent at that time. It has since become common practice for ministers to vote one way in the House and say another thing in their constituencies in order to save their political hides—to use the words of the Minister of Finance, to reap the transitory political benefit.

Would the minister take this opportunity to say what he has proposed to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister in support of those auto workers and other manufacturing workers who have been laid off as a result of the budget and as a result of the high interest rate policy of the government, or does he support the high interest rate policy of the government?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I voted for the budget, as did other members on this side of the House.

Miss MacDonald: And high interest rates.

Mr. Gray: The hon. member is so busy trying to develop fictitious rifts on this side of the House—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Gray: —that he overlooks completely the fact that less than two weeks ago I announced a program to provide $25 million over the next two years to help auto parts companies develop new projects which would bring people back to work and create thousands of new jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: And increased rates.

Mr. Crosbie: So what.

Mr. Gray: I also announced a program involving an expenditure of approximately $93 million to encourage new production facilities in the area of microelectronics and advanced production machinery and which would also assist all levels of industry, including auto parts manufacturing. It will help them to adopt new production processes in order to become more productive and efficient and maintain existing jobs and create thousands of new jobs. The hon. member is talking while we are acting in a concrete way to deal with the real problems of the economy.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PURPOSE OF ESTABLISHMENT AND CONSEQUENCE OF CHANGE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, at last! I have a question for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister agree that one of the original purposes of the Crow rate was to encourage the establishment and maintenance of rural communities on the prairies and, if so, does he realize that the proposal made by the Minister of Transport in Winnipeg yesterday could have exactly the opposite effect if implemented, namely, the destruction of those communities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Crow rate was established in order to encourage the development of agriculture in the west. Of course included in that is the establishment of a solid economic base for many communities in the west.

There have been some changes in the country over the last 100 years with regard to methods of transportation, methods of production, the size of our markets, the growth rate of communities, urbanization movements, in demographic movements within Canada, and in changes of the age groups.

After this period of time I think it is perfectly reasonable for the government to review something which has existed since the last decade of the nineteenth century, in conjunction with all the interests in the west, and to appoint a westerner, a professor of agriculture and economics in the west, to help bring together the various and sometimes opposing views in the west on how this should be done. That is the position of the government.

PRINCIPLE OF EQUAL RATES FOR EQUAL DISTANCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I now hope the Prime Minister will deal with the question which I asked. I will put it in more precise form.

Despite the opposition of the overwhelming majority of farmers in the prairies to any move that would change the principle of equal rates for equal distance, the Minister of Transport said in his announcement yesterday in Winnipeg that changing this principle is clearly one option that the government is considering. Does the Prime Minister understand that, if this option is acted upon and this principle destroyed, the railway companies will not only have the power but will also have the financial incentive to destroy hundreds of small communities on the prairies? If he agrees with that, will he take steps to ensure that that option is no longer one which this negotiator can consider?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party insists that the overwhelming majority of people in the west are opposed to the government's initiatives in conjunction with many western groups.

Mr. Broadbent: I am talking about the principle of equal rates for equal distance.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know where he gets those statistics.

I know that the NDP is opposed to any change, but I have here a list of many organizations which support a change in the Crow rate. There is Unifarm, 63,000 members; Alberta Cattle Commission, 13,000 members; Alberta pool, 55,000 members; United Grain Growers Ltd., 60,000 members—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Clark: Who is in charge, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: —Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, 70,000 members. So the list goes, Madam Speaker. There is the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, 90,000 members.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, everyone in the west is not like the NDP. They are not afraid of change. They are not afraid of improving their economic situation by looking again at institutions. They are not slavishly bound to the principles of the Regina Manifesto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, all I can say to the Prime Minister is that if he had acted on the principles of the Regina Manifesto we would not have the problems in Canada that we have today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Of course, the Prime Minister was around at the time; he is old enough to have signed it. It is alleged that he believed in it at one time.

I can provide a list, including the leader of the Liberal party of Saskatchewan, of many groups, including two governments in the prairies—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Read it.

Mr. Broadbent: —that oppose what the Prime Minister is doing. He ignored the question. I was talking about the principle of equal rates for equal distance. However, I will set that aside and deal with the man who has been appointed the negotiator. Considering the fact that this man, Mr. Clay Gilson, is the same man who was a member of an earlier Liberal commission which actually recommended the death of many small communities in the prairies, will the Prime Minister at least recognize the importance of such small communities and remove this man from his participation in this important inquiry?

• (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, dealing with the preamble first, the hon. member says I could have signed the Regina Manifesto. I was in my middle teens then, and I suppose I did have the kind of immaturity which would have permitted me to sign it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says it is further alleged that I still believe—or believed—in the principles of the Regina Manifesto. I ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party, do he and his party believe in the principles of the Regina Manifesto, or have they turned their backs on it now to be a mere opportunistic electorally bound party? The Leader of the New Democratic Party laughs because he does not want to answer, but his is the party which departed not only from its principles but also from its conscience a long while ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

ACTION NEEDED TO HELP EAST COAST INDUSTRY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister obviously does not mind having weasels in his cabinet who vote one way and talk another.

My question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Two of the minister's colleagues have tried to escape their responsibility for the budget by writing the Prime Minister a letter asking him to adopt certain policies which are not contained in the budget. I call them the Judas goats. Has the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans washed his hands of the budget and of the Minister of Finance, and has he written a letter to the Prime Minister asking the Prime Minister to expedite measures to help the east coast fishing industry which is now devastated and which will not be functioning in April if steps are not taken to give it financial assistance? Has he written to the Prime Minister to save the fishermen? We cannot wait until next summer for the Kirby report. If he has not done that, does the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans support the budget and the policies of the government?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I did not have to write letters to anybody. A few days before Christmas we made decisions in cabinet which in fact allowed the plants at Gaultois and Grand Bank to continue operations. It was the sort of encouragement that allowed the fishery to take place this winter in a disciplined and orderly way and, in fact, which gives me much more of a sign of hope than I have seen for a good number of months. So the hon. member might save his rhetoric and look at what we are doing, not at letters I did not write.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, it is good to find one minister with some backbone, and not an India rubber man or woman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The minister is going to sink with the ship.

THE BUDGET

POSITION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister a follower or a modern day

Pontius Pilate, or will he answer my question? Is he just going to wash his hands of this? The minister realizes the high unemployment rate in Newfoundland, the highest in Canada. He will also realize that the few people working in Newfoundland who are receiving benefits under dental or hospital plans paid for by their employers are being taxed under the budget. Is the minister making representations to the Minister of Finance to exculpate himself from this responsibility, or does he accept responsibility for the fact that the budget taxes the employed and does nothing for the unemployed? What is his position, or is he going to jump the sinking ship like the other furry creatures across the aisle?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I have said before that this budget is better for the average Newfoundlander than for people in any other province in Canada. There will be 250,000 Newfoundlanders who will benefit. Nineteen thousand families will be better off as a result of this budget. That is far better than imposing an 18-cent tax on gasoline as the hon. member did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: That will come back to haunt you, Rompkey.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Colleagues of the minister, including the Minister of National Health and Welfare, have rejected the restraint measures of the budget and have put forward a new program of grants to encourage business to create jobs for those under 25 years of age. I would like to ask the minister if he also has urged this proposal upon the Minister of Finance, or does he, in fact, reject the proposal put forward by his ten colleagues in the House of Commons at a time when the unemployment level for people under the age of 25 is running at one half million?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, last Thursday in the House when we had an opportunity to debate the question of job creation, I issued an invitation to hon. members opposite to come forward with some constructive proposals about what things we could do. The fact that there were absolutely no constructive proposals coming from the opposition meant we were quite willing to accept them from members on our own side. We seem to be the only ones prepared to come forward with good ideas about how to deal with job creation.

I merely remind the hon. member that in the last several weeks we have brought forward a number of special measures. We have brought forward an innovative measure for work sharing, which has been taken up by members of trade unions and employers right across Canada. We signed an agreement yesterday with the province of Ontario for a job-creation program—it could be extended right across Canada—to put many people back to work. We are listening very carefully to members of this caucus who are prepared to be positive and constructive, and not simply destructive like hon. members opposite.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, so much for the additional 40,000 people under the age of 25 who last Friday also found themselves without jobs.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the minister responsible for housing. Ten Liberal members from Quebec, including the Minister of State, do not believe that the housing measures in the budget go far enough, and they have asked for special incentives for the construction industry. Has the Minister of Public Works submitted any additional housing proposals to the Minister of Finance, or is he content to stick with the budget measures which have been put forward by the Minister of Finance, in defiance of the proposals put forward by two of his cabinet colleagues?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure Canadians listening to that question understand that it comes from a member of the previous cabinet whose sole offer to assist in housing was the offer to privatize CMHC, to withdraw from social housing, to withdraw support for co-op and non-profit housing, and to back away from housing totally. Our record of government shows that we have supported non-profit housing and co-ops, we have supported supply, and we have supported affordability. That is what we are doing in the legislation which is before the House today. If the hon. member were serious, she and her colleagues would support that legislation to create supply, and that would assist Canadians in a better way than the question she has asked today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

USE OF WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND MONEYS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. However, I see that he is again avoiding Parliament and making major policy announcements outside the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hovdebo: Yesterday the Minister of Transport made an announcement about $1.35 billion of that elusive Western Development Fund being spent for western transportation needs. This House is well aware of the repeated government folly of subsidizing railway companies. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture can answer this question.

An hon. Member: No, he can't.

Mr. Hovdebo: What kinds of guarantees will be put into legislation to guarantee that the public and farm users can expect a return on this investment of $1.35 billion of western money? What equity will the government take in the railways if this money is given to them? What service improvements can we expect to have if this money is spent on the railways?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member looks at the proposals which were put forward by the Minister of Transport, he will see that one of the very key principles contained in them is the requirement of performance guarantees by the railroads. It is certainly our basic commitment that any changes to the Crow rate would be brought about by negotiations which would involve all parties, including the railroads, and we would expect not only performance guarantees from the railroads but also that they would produce clear evidence as to how this particular change would go to the benefit of the entire western economy by enabling us to diversify our economy into all kinds of other areas of economic activity, and to ensure that much of the production and the investment by the railroads will be contained within western Canada. I can assure the hon. member that this is one of the most important significant improvements to help develop a new western economy. In other words, we believe that all westerners ultimately will share in that particular commitment.

BENEFITS GIVEN TO CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, those guarantees we hope will be in the legislation which will come before this House.

I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture, or to whomever wants to answer it. In the light of what the Right Hon. Prime Minister said in answer to the question from the member from Oshawa, the government seems about to change the Crow rate which is in an act of Parliament, one that westerners regarded as part of the terms of their entering Confederation. If the government can abrogate this statute, take away these benefits to a particular group in the west, the farmers, can the government also take away those benefits which were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway by the Railway Act in 1881, the benefits of 25 million acres of mineral rights? Is it possible that the government could include that in the legislation and renege on that bit of legislation as well as on the statutory Crow rate passed in 1925?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, the direction and guidelines given to the negotiator are to include all parties who are essential to the development of an expanded railway capacity. The direction that the negotiator will be following in the discussions and consultations will be to determine the best financial formula to be shared by the government, by the producers and by the railroad. The negotiator must ensure that there is a proper financial package to enable the capital to be invested so we can expand the carrying capacity of the railroad, so the farmers can move their goods, sell on the export market, and so that they can prosper. The best guarantee we can give the western farmers is to help them to move their goods to the market so that they can gain the kind of return they deserve for their products.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—EFFECT OF CHANGE ON FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for agriculture. In regard to the statutory Crow rate which, as the member for Moose Mountain said, is the Magna Carta for western Canada, the minister knows that farmers have been faced with the highest cost of production in the history of farming. Fuel costs under this government have risen 65 cents a gallon. Gasoline costs have gone up 86 cents a gallon under this government's administration. Machine costs have gone up 100 per cent in the last three years. Facing these increased costs to farmers, in the minister's judgment is it fair to put the increased cost of freight on the farmers at this time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes far-reaching statements before he asks his question. I would just answer in this way, when he talks about fuel. The farmers in Canada have fuel much cheaper here than the farmers in the United States of America. They are still better off than the main farmers with whom they compete.

The hon. member asks is it fair. I believe that in 1970 farmers were paying about 70 per cent of the cost of transportation of their grain at that time. They will be paying by 1985 about 20 per cent or around that figure; and by 1990 they will be paying about 7 per cent of the cost. The many farmers whom I have talked to have said, "Look, give us a good transportation system; we are willing to pay more for it." We are not suggesting that they pay the full cost of transportation, we are suggesting that they contribute more to the cost of moving their produce.

The minister has just stated that by moving that grain to market, rather then having it in storage on farms or in elevators, we can show by just a 10 per cent improvement there will be $400 million more into the farmers' pockets in western Canada. That is what it is all about, making that economy stronger, making it work better and in a better fashion for all people concerned.

PROJECTED COST TO FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that the national energy policy of this government took $52 billion out of western Canada. Is the minister able to say in this House that, in his judgment, by the year 1986 the cost to the farmer might be, or might not be, $1 a bushel for shipping grain?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member in using figures is grasping them out of the sky or some other place. There is no way that we have said they would pay 100 per cent of the cost. The Minister of Transport made it clear in Winnipeg when he made his press announcement, and the document clearly stated, that they will always have preferred treatment for the movement of grain. They will get a bigger share of the cost. As the Prime Minister said, thousands and thousands of farmers said, "We are ready to sit down and talk; we are ready to negotiate a proper program for the transport of our grain so that we can get it to market, so that we can sell the product that we produce."

The former minister of transport can tell you he was about ready to recommend some changes in the current Crowsnest Pass rate himself.

EXCISE TAX

TRANSFER FROM MANUFACTURING TO WHOLESALE LEVEL—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister remembers that in his budget speech he said that the shift of the excise tax to the wholesale level from the manufacturing level would be delayed until July 1, 1982, to provide time for the business community to study the proposals and make constructive comments.

Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that we are now at February 9 and about to start the study of main estimates, would the minister agree with the submission of the industry as a whole that the effective date should be January 1, 1983, rather than July 1, 1982, because it will be impossible to make the necessary recommendations to him in this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that I have had representations from interested groups who have expressed some concern about the implementation date. It is expected that we will be able to produce draft legislation within the next month or so and at that time I would be able to make clear whether it is possible to extend the date of implementation. Certainly the matter will be reviewed in light of the concerns expressed by interested parties.

Mr. Clark: What does Monique think?

REPRESENTATIONS TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I hope the minister will understand that the House committee in this matter will be rather preoccupied with his own main estimates and other matters necessarily referred to it, and cannot dedicate the necessary time to hear public representations, which they are allowed to do and should do, so as to make the appropriate recommendations to the government and have them considered by July 1.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not find myself in conflict with the hon. member's questioning or with his suggestion. I am saying to him and to the House that I am currently reviewing whether a delay is warranted. It may very well be. I will announce my decision when the draft legislation is available for the House.

Mr. Clark: What about Monique?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE EARLY ACTION TO HELP REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Some two weeks ago when he spoke to the Canadian Club he said that he was not prepared to stimulate the economy now in order to deal with the increasing unemployment but that, if circumstances changed, he would give some consideration to that idea some six months down the road. Given the fact that since the minister spoke, the new unemployment figures are out, that for the first time since the 1930s we have more than one million unemployed, the ten provincial premiers, and Liberal members of Parliament from Quebec and, we understand, some of the Ontario Liberal members, have called on him to take steps now to stimulate the economy and to start reducing the number of unemployed, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether he is giving serious consideration to doing something now rather than waiting six months?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of using the expression "six months" in my Toronto speech. What I did say was that I could not at the present time contemplate a major stimulant of the economy. I listed the reasons why I thought it would not be the best way to create jobs in Canada, that what we might do now we would lose later on. But I said that within the policy of restraint I was quite prepared to state that the government would consider taking targeted and specific measures to improve growth, productivity and investment. I believe that the comments made by my caucus colleagues were perfectly consistent with the particular approach I laid out in that speech.

REQUEST FOR POLICIES TO PRODUCE JOBS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnpeg North): Madam Speaker, this morning's edition of The Gazette reported that 800 workers at Quebec's largest domestic appliance manufacturing plant were laid off last Friday. It is not suprising that Quebec members are concerned about what is happening. Besides the more than one million unemployed according to Statistics Canada, there are also 400,000 or 500,000 people who have not been counted because they have quit looking for work. How long will we have to wait? How much more unemployment will we have before the minister realizes that his policies are leading to further disaster? Will we receive policies to create jobs rather than to destroy them?

Mr. La Salle: Will it be another one million, Allan?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to the appliance industry. Just a week or two ago, in an effort to assist the appliance industry and to change circumstances, we dedicated, I believe, $15 million over a two-year period to assist the industry. It is in that specific targeted way that I believe we can take the best steps at the present time to meet the problems of lay-offs and unemployment.

FORESTRY

SIGNING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is a follow-up to a question which I asked him last year with respect to the serious crisis faced in the forest industry with lay-offs of over 100,000 people throughout Canada. I was delighted to hear yesterday that he followed my suggestion that idle hands in the forest industry should be used in the task of forest renewal and in its various areas. How many agreements has the minister signed with provinces? Is it the intention of the federal government to go into partnership directly with industry to ensure that the gap is bridged, that some of these people retain their jobs, and that in so doing we make a long-term investment in our future, namely, the replenishment and renewal of our depleting forestry resources?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, at this point in time the agreement we signed with Ontario is the only one. It is based upon the proposal to put several thousand workers back into Ontario forests. At the time of the announcement I also indicated that that particular arrangement is available to all other provincial governments which have major forest industries within their jurisdiction. I will be writing to the provincial ministers of those provinces to outline the details and criterion of the program. In the hon. member's province of British Columbia there has already been some initial indication of interest. Certainly I welcome his help in developing a program for that province, as I would in any other province.

At the same time we have available for the forest industry the work-sharing concept, which means that forestry companies would be able to maintain part of their work force under a work-sharing arrangement. We would deal directly with the companies and the unions in that respect. I would certainly welcome any help the hon. member would give in working with the companies and the provincial governments in this area. I would be quite happy to speak with him after question period so that we can work out arrangements.

FUNDING FOR PROJECTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, the minister is relying solely upon the resources of the unemployment insurance fund to sustain these new programs. Is there any additional money at his disposal to further the aims of what he announced?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Madam Speaker. Just before Christmas we brought forward a special $52 million employment program which had, as part of its reserve, additional moneys for community development projects and a special reserve for what we call "special response features". This means that we can put direct employment money into hard-hit communities. We have already allocated that to certain resource communities, to certain manufacturing areas in Ontario, and to certain fishing communities. We still have some money available. If the hon. member wants to make representations, I would be glad to hear them.

PETITION

MR. NYSTROM—SENIOR CITIZENS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and seventy-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on Monday, February 8, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

HON. CHARLES LAPOINTE—REQUEST HON. WALTER BAKER WITHDRAW REMARKS

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The Minister of State for Small Businesses, on a point of order.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, I should like your advice, because I believe that in the course of the debate in the House yesterday, more specifically during the adjournment debate, my privileges as a member of this House have been breached.

Madam Speaker, yesterday evening the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) quoted me as having made a statement regarding the member for South West Nova (Mrs. Campbell), and I formally deny having made this statement. It is just not true, Madam Speaker. I want to make it clear that I have never expressed such views in writing, orally or in any form whatsoever and have no intention of doing so. I think that quoting me as the author not only constitutes a breach of my privileges as a member of this House, it is also an insult to my colleague for South West Nova, and I think the member for Nepean-Carleton should withdraw what he said last night.

Madam Speaker: The fact that a member quotes another member as the author of a statement does not constitute a question of privilege nor even a point of order. This is the kind of debate we are constantly having in the House of Commons, involving opposing views on the manner in which certain statements are interpreted. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton made a statement and he interpreted one of the minister's statements. He is responsible for his interpretation, that is all. I am very sorry, but I cannot accept this as the subject of a point of order or a question of privilege.

[English]

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I was the Member of Parliament to whom the hon. member referred. It seems to me a very sexist remark when Members of Parliament are denigrated because of their sex. What would the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) suggest for a male Member of Parliament?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Since there was no question of privilege or point of order, I can hardly accept a second speaker on the matter.

MR. NIELSEN—CONCEPT OF COLLECTIVE RESPONSIBILITY OF CABINET

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a far more serious and important question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the jeers of Liberal hecklers across the way before they even know the nature of my question of privilege.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): I said "Let's hear it".

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) is one of the hecklers. I rise not only as a member of the House to make this appeal on behalf of every individual member and all members collectively, but as one of the officers of the House who has an obligation and a responsibility to see to it that the constitutional conventions of this place remain intact, indeed that the institution itself is not eroded.

It concerns a very valid distinction which must be made between the concept of cabinet solidarity and collective responsibility. In the former case it is a political question. The splits and the cracks as they show might entertain us, but do not suggest themselves as a remedy on a question of privilege. But the latter principle of collective responsibility strikes at the very heart of the reason for being in this place.

I have only had the opportunity since the matter arose during this question period to provide myself with three precedents which I will submit to the Chair for consideration in a moment.

Collective responsibility, which is not what was being spoken of today in the exchanges but was the subject matter of the exchange, is a concept which legitimizes the position and advantages possessed by the ministry in this House, being responsible government. It strikes at the very roots of responsible government. Responsible government, the foundation of our parliamentary democracy, holds that the ministry must have the support of the majority of the House of Commons to carry out the functions of the administration. I will be citing from Sir W. Ivor Jennings in that light in a moment or two.

Collective responsibility, in my submission, Madam Speaker, recognizes that each of the members of the ministry draws his or her personal mandate from majority support given by the House to the cabinet as a whole. If a cabinet minister, and the authorities are clear on this point, tries to put distance between the cabinet's stated policy and his or her own public declarations, then that person puts himself or herself and the House of Commons in a false position, which the House has a right to see resolved.

In my submission, the cabinet is collectively responsible to the House of Commons for the development of policy and the administration of the government. This responsibility is confirmed in a series of votes held throughout the parliamentary year, most notably the Speech from the Throne, on opposition no-confidence motions and on the budget votes, which we have already taken in this House. It is because the present government has carried the House and its members with it on these votes that it is entitled to carry on as a ministry.

Each individual minister draws his or her own position, authority and privileges as a cabinet minister from the acceptance by the House of the policies of the government. Ministers are accorded by the House the right to answer questions, to table documents, to move certain motions and to speak at times for extended periods. They have larger offices and staff allocations. Flowing from this position in the House ministers are able to exercise executive direction over their departments.

If a minister publicly expresses disagreement with a key element of government economic policy by putting forward the idea that short-term economic stimulation is not antithetical to the long-term battle against inflation, then he or she is directly opposing the stated view of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and is attacking a policy approved by the House when it supported the finance minister's budget.

The two ministers are thereby challenging their own right to continue as ministers because they are challenging the policy by reason of which the House has confirmed the government's mandate as a government. Members of the House are therefore entitled to ask, how do these two members of cabinet justify their continued exercise of the rights and privileges of a cabinet minister when they themselves have rejected the policies on the basis of which the House has allowed them these rights and privileges?

Logically, Madam Speaker, and in constitutional practice, there are only two conclusions that may be drawn. Either the two ministers feel that the House does not in fact still support the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and, therefore, it is the rest of the cabinet, and not themselves, which is ignoring the will of the House. Or the two ministers who signed the letter have chosen to disagree with the policy still supported by this House, and consequently must resign the positions and privileges accorded to those who accept the implications of collective responsibility.

I submit that this interpretation is the normal and obvious one. It is supported by two quotations, one from Laundy and Phillips in "An Encyclopedia of Parliament". The other is from Redlich's "The Procedure of the House of Commons".

Because the House allows specific privileges to ministers and because the majority in the House has supported the cabinet in certain of its policies, cabinet ministers who will not support these policies have an obligation to the House to resign. That is a paraphrase from page xiii of Redlich's "The Procedure of the House of Commons."

As the spokesman of the House to the Crown, I submit that you have an obligation to assist the House in resolving the invidious position in which this House and all of its members have been placed by this utter disregard of the principle upon which the institution itself has been founded, namely, the principle of collective responsibility. Nothing could be clearer from the two references which I have referred to you for your consideration.

In "An Encyclopedia of Parliament", the pages for reference are numbers 66 and 67. I will quote briefly from the bottom of page 66 as follows:

> The cabinet is thus a committee drawn from the ministers of the government, presided over by the Prime Minister, whose function is to frame the general policy of the government and to co-ordinate its administrative activities. It accepts collective responsibility for all the activities of the government, from which it follows that there must be no fundamental disagreement amongst its members.

Further on in the same paragraph, we find this:

> Every minister must abide by cabinet decisions or resign, and an attack upon an individual minister is an attack on the cabinet as a whole.

Cabinet proceedings are then described, and so on.

I have one last quotation for the attention of the Chair from Sir W. Ivor Jennings. It is found in the third edition of "Cabinet Government". I do not think there can be any doubt about the standing of Sir Ivor Jennings as an authority. No one would quarrel with him. Here is what Sir Ivor Jennings says about cabinet responsibility, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not seem to like the word "Solidarity". At page 277 of the third edition, Jennings quotes Lord Salisbury as follows:

> It is only on the principle that absolute responsibility is undertaken by every member of the cabinet who, after a decision is arrived at, remains a member of it, that the joint responsibility of ministers to Parliament can be upheld, and one of the most essential principles of parliamentary responsibility be established.

In other words, the collective responsibility of cabinet for everything that is done is one of the most essential principles of parliamentary responsibility.

If we are to allow this, Madam Speaker—and I urge upon you the responsibility which you, in my submission, have for the protection of the rights of all of us in this institution—and if you will not assist in helping us to resolve this issue, then the government will continue this invidious practice and the whole concept of collective responsibility falls to the ground, much to the ultimately disastrous consequence of the usefulness of this institution.

I therefore very strongly suggest, Madam Speaker, that you take the matter under advisement, consider the references I have cited, and if you should indeed find there is a very vital question of privilege involved here, collectively and individually, then I would move the appropriate motion to have the whole question examined in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in the hope they could report at the earliest possible moment in order that there be no further erosion of a long accepted principle, one which is so vitally important to the continued function of this institution.

Madam Speaker: In response to the hon. member, to begin with it was not clear to me whether this question of privilege really arose directly out of today's deliberations, but I listened anyway. There were questions asked about the matter of cabinet solidarity so I assumed that this question flowed from today's deliberations, which is why I listened to the hon. member, although he was referring to something which happened outside the House and might have required notice. I just want to point that out to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) because he did not say quite clearly for what reason he was rising at this moment to invoke his question of privilege.

If the hon. member looks at the definition of a question of privilege, and I am sure he has looked at it nearly as often as I have, he will see that he has not demonstrated to me in any way that he was subjected to any type of harassment, threat or any other impediment which might have founded his question of privilege. He refers to cabinet authority as emanating from this institution. I must reply that these matters concern ethics, and if ministers are to be more or less in solidarity with government policies, that is a choice they themselves make. It has very much to do with their personal conception of ethics.

As for what the Prime Minister's conduct should be in these cases, that also refers to any Prime Minister's personal concept of ethics and to the importance that he attaches to the way cabinet solidarity should be expressed. I can see the hon. member does not agree with the Prime Minister's concept of cabinet solidarity. That is his choice and his privilege, of course, and he may dispute it as much as he cares to. I am sure he will not let any occasion pass by where he can express his sentiments on this particular matter.

Throughout the history of Canada I suppose we have had several types of cabinet and several types of expressions of cabinet solidarity, and that these cabinets have been more or less efficient, related or not to the way in which they dealt with cabinet solidarity. I guess this is what makes for the strength or weakness of cabinets, but I fail to see it as the foundation for a question of privilege, be it individual or collective. I do not see how we can consider a collective question of privilege because it is defined as relating to an individual member.

However, the hon. member has invoked a personal privilege so I can answer him. Despite the pleas the hon. member makes to me to assist the House in obtaining redress on what he feels is a question of privilege, I must say I cannot assist him in obtaining this redress. This is the kind of thing that parties in the House dispute and debate at length, and I invite them to do just that on the proper occasion.

The hon. member has quoted many authorities, all extremely remarkable, and it was interesting to hear these quotations and refresh our memories about some of the principles which form the basis of cabinet solidarity, which is more a custom than anything else. However, he has not demonstrated to me where his privilege was affected in this particular circumstance; therefore, I must tell him that I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNDUE LENGTH OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of some remarks you made today during question period. I rise to support and encourage you in what you said to us at that time. I believe this affects all of us here, and indeed affects the function of the institution of Parliament itself.

My point of order has to do with the length of some questions and answers in question period. I blame no particular person, but this afternoon it just happened to be the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in an exchange which took some 15 minutes and gobbled up the time of other members. I just thought it was important that some of us rise and say that we will support and encourage you to try to police question period as much as possible.

Point of Order—Mr. Nystrom

In doing that I want to refer you to Beauchesne's fifth edition, page 131, Section 358(2), where it says:

Answers to questions should be as brief as possible—

I think, Madam Speaker, after watching the Prime Minister in particular today, that the answers were very long indeed. In addition, I would refer you to Section 359 of Beauchesne's, where it says:

A brief question seeking information—

The words are "brief question". It goes on to say:

(1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.

(2) The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence. A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply. A supplementary question should need no preamble.

I point this out, Madam Speaker, because there are 284 members in this House. All of us are politicians, all of us can be very verbose, and if we let this trend continue there is going to be less and less participation from all of us in this House.

I make these remarks in a totally non-partisan manner because we can all be as guilty as the next person. I just wanted to encourage you to do what you can to make question period a bit more snappy and functional, which in turn will make Parliament a bit more meaningful for the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have been observing question period for a long time as well. Without intending any reflection whatsoever on the Chair, it has been my observation that, generally speaking, the remarks of the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster—

Mr. Clark: Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Gimaïel: In Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nielsen: Yorkton-Melville, I am sorry. I have a better idea of where Saskatchewan is than the hon. member who is interjecting. I happen to have been born there. What we are doing on this side is acting in self-defence because it does the Chair no good to chastise this side for lengthy questions when the Liberal ministers answer at great length. The initial exchange, incidentally—and I have checked with the deputy opposition House leader who keeps a stop watch on the questions and answers—was timed at 12 minutes, of which—

Mr. Cosgrove: Nine minutes were interruptions.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) will not stop yapping so he can hear the accurate statistics being quoted. Of the total of 12 minutes, the answers of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took up seven minutes. So that should answer that.

Then yesterday, Madam Speaker, we on this side were told to keep our questions short, but no encouragement was given to the Liberal ministers to keep their answers short. We know what the Prime Minister is up to when he stands in the House and takes up all of our time. He realizes that there are a few million TV viewers out there and that the more TV time he gets, the better he will appear. That is the real purpose behind what he does.

I would therefore urge the Chair, like the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to keep questions and answers brief. Your Honour will recall that at the beginning of this session we certainly did set an example by keeping questions short. However, the lengthy answers, which became longer and longer, forced us into the position in which we find ourselves, where we must ask lengthy questions in order to get our appropriate share of the time, the 45 minutes, which is a very short time within which to ask our questions, in any event.

We will certainly co-operate with the Chair. If the Chair wishes to impose stricter standards of conduct on hon. members by asking them to keep their questions short, we will co-operate if the same attitude is taken with respect to the answers given by ministers. If ministers will keep their answers short and direct them to the questions, we will certainly keep our questions short, snappy, brief and concise.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, since the question usually comes first, it stands to reason that if the question is short and to the point, it will be much easier for us to provide short and concise answers.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I could not more greatly welcome the remarks which have been made concerning the shortening of questions during the course of the question period.

Mr. Andre: And the answers.

Madam Speaker: My frank opinion is that the whole matter is getting completely out of hand, and I must get up like a jack-in-the-box to remind hon. members that their questions should be short.

Mr. Andre: How about their answers?

Madam Speaker: If hon. members do not follow these directions from the Chair, what else can I do but conclude that we will have fewer questioners during the course of the question period and, as the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has said, fewer hon. members will be able to participate during the question period.

Concerning the shortness or length of questions and answers, I do want to remind the hon. members that, as I do with regard to questions, I occasionally rise in an attempt to get hon. members to terminate their answers.

Mr. Andre: Very occasionally.

Madam Speaker: If one looks at Hansard, one finds that that is substantiated. However, I think hon. members are overlooking the fact that the Chair is here every day and knows what is happening in the House. I do not pretend to be the only one who knows what is going on in the House, but I do know what is going on. I am here every day; I can judge who is lengthy one day and who has been lengthy for a whole week. From time to time I decide to move in on an hon. member to ask him to be a bit more brief. Perhaps I might have been lenient for two or three days in a row if I felt the hon. member had a point to make; but, then, on the fourth day, I might decide to move in on him because he simply might have thought that I would allow him to carry on in this manner forever.

There are circumstances in which some hon. members must have more time in order to expose their questions, and I try to judge such circumstances as best I can. As I say, I am not always universally correct in my instant judgments, but I do my best. I would like the trust of the House with regard to this particular task which, believe me, is not exactly an easy one.

When hon. members do not follow my direction to be shorter in their answers, I do compensate. Hon. members will have noticed today that four Liberals wanted to ask questions, but none of them was allowed. I did not recognize them in compensation for the fact that some of the answers had been rather lengthy. Furthermore, I extended the question period by seven minutes to compensate for the time which had been taken during the question period as a result of heckling and applauding so as not to penalize those hon. members who were very eager to ask questions.

I welcome the remarks of hon. members because I hate to stand up here and preach to them every day. I do not conceive my role as being one which tries to prevent people from doing what they want to do, but, on the contrary, one which ensures that the debates are conducted in such a fashion that everyone will have a chance to express themselves. I must make such judgments on a daily basis. I therefore welcome the remarks and the terrific resolve shown by hon. members to ask questions which will be short, snappy and to the point. That would result in a great question period.

Mr. Nielsen: And the answers.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order that has to do with this one and concerns the duration of question period. The Standing Orders are also very clear as to the duration of question period, at what time it is supposed to begin and when it is supposed to end. If questions are too long or if members are noisy on either side of the House, I submit that the Speaker of the House is bound by the Standing Orders and has no discretion to extend question period beyond the time set in Standing Order 15(3), which is very specific.

We are prepared to moderate the length of our answers, provided the questions are brief as well. We want to be clear and concise and comprehensive, but on the other hand, we should also appreciate it if the Standing Orders were applied literally, where the duration of question period is concerned. It is not because we are sticklers for form, but because we the ministers, including myself, have other commitments, and our daily schedules are arranged on the assumption that we shall be able to leave at three o'clock and not at 3.07 or 3.09.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I deplore the fact that the government House leader has shown criticism of the Chair in such a manner. Our Standing Orders are shot through with orders which relate to time limits, such as an order which requires us to rise at ten o'clock in the evening, an order stipulating a time limit on the late show, and orders which relate to rising at six o'clock on Wednesday and five o'clock on Friday. However, in this place, both under the old rules and under the new rules, it has been the practice for the Chair not to see the clock, or, indeed, for hon. members to suggest that the Chair not see the clock, thereby by implication suspending those Standing Orders.

Mr. Pinard: By unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: The government House leader says "by unanimous consent".

Mr. Pinard: Right on!

Mr. Nielsen: That has not been the practice in the House in the past.

Mr. Pinard: Oh, yes! Oh, yes!

Mr. Nielsen: The Speaker has simply not seen the clock. Indeed, on many occasions, the Speaker has seen that a time has expired before it actually has expired. I see that Madam Speaker is indicating no. However, hon. members have often called it ten o'clock before it was ten o'clock, and they have often called it six o'clock before it was six o'clock.

Mr. Pinard: By unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: If there is no dissent, then no debate arises on the matter. Technically, the government House leader is correct. However, that has been a longstanding practice in the House, particularly in circumstances such as those which the Chair, herself, recognized today, which justified not seeing the clock for an extra seven minutes.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, with reference to your ruling, and I am speaking with the greatest of respect, I thought Your Honour might perhaps have dwelt a little more on answers rather than with questions and with ministers rather than hon. members.

However, for my part, as an hon. member on our side and as the deputy House leader responsible for the question period, I would much prefer that Your Honour cut questions and answers equally short rather than compensate by continuing. I would prefer to hear cabinet ministers answer questions rather than read. I compliment the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for being well briefed. However, rather than hearing him read a list of organizations, inadvertently omitting the Liberals from Saskatchewan, I would rather see Your Honour jump in to cut off the questions and answers. Let us run this place the way it should be run.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The President of the Privy Council is right. The Standing Orders are quite clear, and anyone who reads them will see that question period is supposed to end at a given time. However, as the hon. member knows, sometimes my eyesight is not very good, and there are days when I really cannot see what time it is. It is one of the few prerogatives I have as the Speaker of the House. I hope that the House will allow me to use this prerogative, which is really minute, and which I try to use as little as possible. Hon. members must have noticed that question period ends on time, since I know perfectly well that members as well as ministers may have appointments to keep and they must be able to schedule their time. It is therefore very important to have question period finished at the time it is supposed to finish, and I try to conform to this rule as much as possible.

As for the remarks by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), I should like to point out that there are some courtesies the Speaker of the House must observe with regard to the Prime Minister of this country and the Leader of the Opposition. I have my own concept of what these courtesies should be, and I try to be fair and, of course, I must be fair. But there are also days when I may decide to laugh along with the hon. members, and I find it is a way of relieving tension in the House. I have noticed that there are members who sometimes object to the fact that I smile from time to time, but I think it is a very healthy attitude for the Speaker not to take life too seriously, and I think that when emotions start rising in the House, the Speaker should remain calm and keep a sense of humour. That happens to be my style. I am not going to change: that is the way I am. I am getting used to you, and I hope you will get used to me.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have had notices of intention to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26. I will hear first the statement of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and later from the other member.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED CHANGES TO CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, I ask leave of the House to consider a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It arises out of the announcement made in Winnipeg yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) concerning major changes to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. The minister chose to make this important announcement outside the House, thereby denying members of the House of Commons the opportunity to respond and to seek clarification of the many complex aspects of the government's proposal.

The announcement, Madam Speaker, proposed to remove an historical and statutory right enjoyed by the grain producers of Canada and will result in an openended freight rate structure which will cost producers hundreds of millions of dollars. This comes at a time when producer costs are rising and incomes declining. Because of the profound effect this policy will have on Canada's grain producers, because Parliament has been circumvented by the minister's announcement, because the policy requires clarification and answers to the many questions it raises, I believe it is imperative that Parliament be allowed to debate this urgent and vital matter.

If you find these conditions consistent with the terms of Standing Order 26, Madam Speaker, I will be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Madam Speaker: Since the two notices are very similar, I will hear now the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have given you the appropriate notice, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of debating a specific and important motion requiring immediate consideration, namely the government's announcement outside Parliament in Winnipeg yesterday that it is proceeding to abandon the Crowsnest Pass grain rate, the confederation bargain protecting western farmers against the monopoly powers of the railways of this country, which will depress farm income even further and have serious ramifications on the national economy of Canada.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the rules do not permit me to elaborate on the reasons for moving the motion, except to say that I believe the representatives in this House of the people of the prairies must have an opportunity to have some input into the debate on this very important issue. The Crowsnest rate agreement in western Canada is like the Magna Carta to our part of the country and we need an opportunity to discuss it here in this House.

Madam Speaker: These two notices of motions are quite similar in nature, although worded differently. They were examined very closely so as to make a judgment on whether they fulfil the requirements of Standing Order 26.

I need not remind hon. members that since its inception in 1897, the Crowsnest Pass agreement has been the subject over the years of many discussions and debates in the House of Commons. The fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has now announced a change in those rates, a change which will be subject to consultations, studies and even legislation, does not meet the requirements for a debate under Standing Order 26, although I recognize that it is very important to debate this question.

The hon. members who submitted the motions, in my opinion, have not demonstrated clearly and precisely that, in the words of Section 16 of Standing Order 26, the matter proposed for discussion relates to a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. It is my understanding that the Minister of Transport will be introducing legislation respecting the Crowsnest Pass agreement, at which time there will be ample opportunity for debate.

In addition, there are several opposition days remaining in this supply period when hon. members may set down motions to discuss this particular subject. Accordingly, it is with regret that I cannot accept the hon. members' applications.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,230, 3,455, 3,473, 3,474, 3,475, 3,476 and 3,504.

[Text]

RCMP SECURITY SERVICE FILES

Question No. 3,230—Mr. Cossitt:

Will the government give a firm guarantee that no files possessed by the RCMP security service prior to the announcement of the establishment of a civilian security service will be destroyed, altered or changed in any way (a) during the transfer to the new agency (b) after the new agency is in full operation and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) No. Although no destruction is taking place at this time, a complete review of security service file schedules and destruction policy is currently under way.

(b) No. This government cannot guarantee that security service files will not be destroyed, altered, or changed in any way after the new agency is in full operation as new government controls may preclude retention of some classes of information.

BLANK CASSETTE TAPES FOR MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Question No. 3,455—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In the past two years, how many lots of blank cassette tapes were purchased for inmates at the Millhaven Institution and what was the total number of cassette tapes purchased?

2. How many cassettes were actually issued to student inmates?

3. Did any cassettes end up elsewhere and, if so, where?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. During the past two years (November 19, 1979 to November 19, 1981) one lot of 130 blank cassette tapes was purchased by the academic department at Millhaven for educational purposes.

2. Seventy-one blank cassette tapes were used to recopy some master programmed tapes, replace damaged or defective ones and to produce some programmed tapes of the teacher's own making. In turn, all of these tapes have been distributed to inmate-students for instruction in their courses. Of the lot, 59 cassette tapes still remain unused.

3. No.

TRAVEL OF SOVIET DIPLOMATS

Question No. 3,473—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,692 which stated in part that Soviet diplomat Mr. I. Lobanov travelled to Kingston, Ontario on October 21, 1980 for a period of one day (a) what were all the reasons for the trip (b) what details are known to the government about the trip?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) and (b) A Soviet diplomat is not required to state the purpose of the trip when filing the prescribed travel notice.

See also reply to question No. 1,551 answered February 1, 1982.

Question No. 3,474—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,692 which stated in part that Soviet diplomat Mr. A. Makarov travelled to Belleville, Ontario on April 23, 1981 for a period of three days (a) what were all the reasons for the trip (b) what details are known by the government about this trip?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): See reply to question No. 3,473 answered this day.

Question No. 3,475—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,692 which stated in part that Soviet diplomat Mr. V. Iouchine travelled to Kingston, Ontario on April 8, 1981 for a period of two days (a) what were all the reasons for the trip (b) what details are known to the government about this trip?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): See reply to question No. 3,473 answered this day.

Question No. 3,476—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 2,692 which stated in part that Soviet diplomat Mr. I. Konovalov travelled to Toronto and Niagara Falls on January 20, 1981 (a) what were all the reasons for the trip (b) what details are known to the government about this trip?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): See reply to question No. 3,473 answered this day.

DPW—COST OF METRIC CONVERSION

Question No. 3,504—Mr. Domm:

Since early 1980, did the Department of Public Works operate fully in metric measurements and, if so, what was the total cost of conversion from Canadian units of measurement?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Public Works Canada has been operating fully in metric since January 1, 1980, in its tendering processes and internal operations. The total cost of conversion to metric units of measurement to date is $472,000.

*AD HOC FEED GRAIN SUPPLY COMMITTEE

Question No. 3,440—Mr. Murta:

With reference to the Ad Hoc Feed Grain Supply Committee announced on August 11, 1980 (a) how many meetings were held and (i) on what dates (ii) at what locations (iii) which organizations or individuals made representations (b) what amount was spent by the government on the Committee and what was the breakdown of the expenditures, including meeting costs, entertainment costs, allowances to the members of the Committee and costs associated with the preparation of the final report?

[English]

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in reply to question No. 3,440, in so far as the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned, six meetings were held; on September 5, 1980, in Ottawa, September 18, 1980, in Ottawa, October 7, 1980, in Ottawa, October 24, 1980, in Winnipeg, November 24 and 25, 1980, in Ottawa and January 29, 1981, in Ottawa. The locations are as above.

The Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, the Grain Transportation Co-ordinator and the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange attended.

The answer to (b) is $19,650.26, of which meeting costs, including travel expenditures, amounted to $14,600.26, fees to advisers $5,050, entertainment costs nil. Costs of typewritten reports to ministers were not separable.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I ask the government House leader whether that has anything to do with the borrowing bill that he will be bringing in?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am not sure if I understood the question. If this has anything to do with the borrowing authority bill? Yes, Madam Speaker. The disposition of those ways and means motions will be reflected in a bill dealing with borrowing authority, oil and gas revenue tax and excise tax. This bill will be introduced tomorrow but will not be debated tomorrow. It is unlikely that it will be debated this week, and therefore the business for the remainder of the day is as announced, debate on the bill related to the National Housing Act. Tomorrow we will debate the second reading stage of the Customs Tariff Act and, if necessary, we will come back on Thursday to the National Housing Act, unless we terminate debate today.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I thought that would be the intention. As a matter of courtesy, I want to inform the government House leader and the Chair that we will concur with the passing of these notices of ways and means today but will be raising a point of order with respect to the form of the bill, which the government House leader has had the courtesy to inform me of, before first reading.

It is an unusual time to raise such a point of order, but due to a previous ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome, there appears to be a Catch-22 situation wherein by virtue of one of his previous rulings we cannot argue the point at second reading. It has to be done prior to that time and the only other time it can be done is either between the notices of ways and means and first reading or between first and second reading. I think tomorrow would be the appropriate time to raise the point. I wanted to inform both the Chair and the government House leader that we intend to raise that point.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT
CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, February 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today to discuss Bill C-89 which has been introduced by the government. It provides legislative authority to the government for its housing programs and for the implementation of the measures in the November 12 budget dealing with housing. It provides the authority for neighbourhood improvement and public works at the municipal level.

It almost goes without saying that the provisions in this legislation are totally inadequate to meet the housing needs of Canadians and completely fail to provide the economic stimulus needed to provide work for the over one million Canadians who are unemployed today. It is not only Canadians and New Democrats who are aware of these failures to provide economic stimulus; this knowledge is even beginning to penetrate the backbenches of the Liberal caucus. That in itself is an accomplishment because of the reputation the Liberal party has of being a party with discipline.

I would like to read from an article in La Presse dated February 8, an article which I think is important for people to be aware of. It reads:

[Translation]

Following two meetings of their regional caucus, the members of Parliament for the central-eastern part of Montreal have released a letter to the Prime Minister asking Mr. Trudeau to immediately initiate measures to fight unemployment.

The first proposal calls for the stimulation of the housing construction industry because of its well known spin-off effects.

It is extraordinary that Liberal backbenchers would recognize that there is a real need for economic incentives.

[English]

The question that we must ask ourselves is, why do the programs of the government, particularly in housing, fall so dismally short of what is needed? Not only do they fall short of people's basic human needs, but they do not provide any help for the general health of the economy.

There are some basic reasons why these programs fall short of what is needed, and I must say that some of these reasons apply equally to the programs of the past Conservative government. I do not wish to leave those hon. members in comfort. Quite simply, this government, as well as past governments, has refused to understand and recognize the value of investing the public dollar, particularly in the area of housing with which we are concerned today. The government is blinded by its preoccupation with deficits. Incidentally, if you consider both federal and provincial revenues, these deficits would come much more into balance.

Not only does the government refuse to recognize the value of investment, but it is also afraid of charting an independent economic policy for Canada. It does not have the courage to establish Canada's own fiscal policies with its own approach to public expenditures. It does not have the courage to establish our own monetary policies. Of course, this is a well known fact to all Canadians as we watch the government simply follow the actions of the United States government.

There is another important reason why the housing programs of the government do not live up to what is needed. The government does not believe in providing economic leadership. This is clearly what is needed today and it is what Canadians are calling for, including ten Liberal backbenchers. Economic leadership is needed, especially when people are suffering, and it is obvious that Canadians with mortgages are suffering greatly, as well as people who rely on rental accommodation.

Having set out the basic inadequacies of the government housing programs, I would like to deal with them more specifically. First, I would like to deal with the mortgage renewal program. I am disappointed that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) is not in the House for this debate. I do not know if he is behind the curtain but I hope he will be here when I deal with some other important matters during my speech.

The minister quite clearly tried to align his mortgage renewal program with the mortgage assistance program established by the new Manitoba government. I will not go into detail on this point because my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will lay out in detail the differences between those programs later. I will simply say that the federal Liberal program takes the interest which people cannot pay today because of the government's economic policy and rolls it back into the capital debt which these people have in their mortgage. All the government is doing is piling up debt for the future. If this strategy is being applied for the average home owner who is struggling now, in light of the predictions for another rise in interest rates—another ride up the rollercoaster—Canadians surely cannot afford to ride up that rollercoaster again.

The federal program simply protects banks but does nothing to help people. This has forced provincial governments in Manitoba and Saskatchewan to take some real action. I will read to hon. members something printed in an article in The Globe and Mail about the Manitoba program. I point out that it is in The Globe and Mail so that hon. members will know it is not a biased account of the program. The Globe and Mail is hardly a socialist journal, at least not yet. Perhaps with the new New Democratic Party leader in Ontario The Globe and Mail will see the light.

Manitoba's NDP government unveiled a . . . interest-relief program yesterday that will put cash into the pockets of needy home owners.

It will not go into the pockets of bankers but into the pockets of home owners.

Home owners whose new mortgage payments exceed 30 per cent of their household income will receive benefits up to $275 a month . . . The money doesn't have to be paid back.

The article went on to indicate clearly that any long-term solutions to high interest rates must come from Ottawa. That is where the problem was created. However, clearly there is a difference between the quality and the efficacy of the federal program, which falls far short, and the provincial program in Manitoba, which provides real assistance in the form of real dollars to real people.

Mrs. Mitchell: Well said.

Mr. Keeper: I want also to draw to the attention of this government the action being taken in Saskatchewan. Manitoba responded with a program. Saskatchewan has responded with legislation and has introduced mortgage moratorium legislation. The Saskatchewan government introduced legislation which will guarantee that no citizen loses his home by virtue of the ever-rising interest rates the government across the way is creating. The federal government clearly could take some legislative action, and the first good move would be to tax the windfall profits of banks and use that money to get some real assistance to people having mortgage difficulties.

I want to refer to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), who is sitting at my side today. She spoke yesterday about this housing bill, and I must say I was very impressed. Her speech contained a depth of information which is certainly lacking on the other side of the House. Hon. members opposite do not know how to deal with facts. The hon. member for Vancouver East dealt not only with the mortgage renewal program but also with other important areas of housing.

Mrs. Mitchell: I dealt with the minister too.

Mr. Keeper: The hon. member dealt with all these things quite well. I am glad the minister is in the House today. I welcome him here. I hope he can learn something from this side of the House.

Mr. Cosgrove: I am here to check the facts.

Mr. Keeper: I am glad the minister is not hiding behind the curtain. The social housing programs this legislation allegedly enables are totally inadequate and, in the words of my colleague, leave one million poor at the mercy of the private sector. My colleague dealt with the program in detail, but that is an accurate evaluation of it. The rental housing program being pursued by the government provides only 15,000 units. It has been said, even by members of the Tory party, that those 15,000 units will not even meet the need in Vancouver. If those rental units were to be built in each community across the country where people rely upon rental units, I doubt there would be one unit for every community in the country. The program is clearly inadequate. Since my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East, has dealt in full detail with this aspect of the government's housing programs, I merely point out that they fall short of what is needed, and I will build on what my colleague said and deal with some other aspects of housing.

I intend to deal, for example, with a priority of the minister, native housing. I hope he listens to my comments. I want to deal with the policy, and then perhaps the minister will adjust his policy. I want to deal with native housing, neighbourhood improvement and federal-provincial-municipal financial relationships. These are all matters which I am sure are close to the minister's heart. In his own speech yesterday he said that he places a very high priority on the rural and native housing program. I hope his actions will bear out those words. I hope to make some comments which might provide him with some perspectives on that program which he might find useful, if he is willing to take action.

Mr. Cosgrove: I hope you will support the new program.

Mr. Keeper: The rural and native housing program has been around for a decade. It was begun as a result of very heavy lobbying by the Native Council of Canada. The fundamental essence of this program is that it is a native run program. It was native conceived and provides for the needs of native people. The government rightfully plays the role of providing the financial and human resources necessary to support this type of activity, but I must say that the fundamental principle which must underlie this program and its growth and development is the principle that the program be native run. In other words, it must respect the right of self-determination for our native people. That is a right about which we hear native people speak eloquently and strongly right across the nation. That right is often expressed in relation to nations, but I think it can also apply to communities and government programs. The principles of self-determination and that this program be native run are fundamental. The program has achieved the creation of native housing corporations, but I suggest there is potential for future growth and for strenthening the concept of self determination.

One of the difficulties associated with the present program is that it is subject to two housing bureaucracies. It is subject not just to the federal bureaucracy but also to provincial bureaucracies at the same time. That is because the program is run under a federal-provincial arrangement. In many cases federal-provincial agreements are appropriate, but I suggest such an agreement is inappropriate in relation to native housing corporations. Such corporations should not be subject to two bureaucracies when groups such as co-ops and others who develop housing are involved with only one bureaucracy. Private developers deal essentially with only one housing bureaucracy. I see the minister shaking his head. I ask him to listen carefully: this point is fundamental. It has to do with the fundamental principle underlying the program. It has to do with the fact that only if native people are able to run their own programs will there be any real development of native leadership. That is the only way native people will ever move out of the poverty which has engulfed our communities for the last 100 years.

I believe the first step which must be taken—and it has been taken already—is the creation of native housing corporations. The second step is for the federal government to go it alone in this area and to provide 100 per cent of the money required for native housing so that native people are no longer subject to both federal and provincial bureaucracies. I suggest that would make for a more efficient administrative process. It would deliver a bigger bang for the buck. More housing would be delivered faster because there would be less bureaucracy through which to move.

I would like to look into the future for a moment. I hope the minister has learned something from my previous comments. Once we have only one bureaucracy policing native housing corporations, I suggest the next step should be toward greater and greater responsibility to be held by native housing corporations. This would increase the level of responsibility of native leadership to deal with the real problems of native people. Such an increase in the level of responsibility would increase the strength of the leadership. It would increase its authority and bring about more respect on the part of the native community. This would be beneficial for the whole country.

That is the fundamental principle I see involved in the rural and native housing program, and that principle should be reflected in any projected improvements to the rural and native housing program. I hope there will be improvements. Even if they do not meet my ideals, I would like to see an attempt made to follow these principles.

Mrs. Mitchell: How about more money?

Mr. Keeper: That is exactly what I am talking about. It is not just a question of money, it is how that money is utilized. That is why I just mentioned the principle.

The second aspect of native housing that I would like to deal with is the question of urban native housing. Although it is related to rural native housing to some degree, it is a separate item. Once again we have native housing corporations. They certainly need more money because the native housing corporations under the present program have to rent three units at near market rents in order to be able to subsidize one unit for a moderate income native family. What is left out in this process is the native person who is on low income. If there is anything that a native housing corporation in a city such as Winnipeg or Vancouver or Montreal should do, it is to serve the native people who have the lowest incomes.

I would like to suggest that there is a necessity here to add dollars to the package to improve the assistance that will allow for the subsidy of rent so that the native housing corporations can serve those native people who have the greatest need, those who have low incomes. This can be done and it is important that it be done. I like to give credit to the federal government for what it does, and I have no objection to that. I have no objection to politicians making great announcements and taking credit.

Mrs. Mitchell: Give him credit for MURBs.

Mr. Keeper: Here is a real opportunity for him to take unilateral action. The government designed a program which has been around for a decade, one which assumed provincial financial participation. That provincial financial participation has not materialized, but perhaps it is time to learn that that program was in the first instance ill designed. It is time to change the design of the program and for the federal government to go it alone in order to see that no native person in this country will be without adequate housing. I think that is important in the light of the general economic benefit for the native people across the country.

There is one exception with regard to the provinces that I must mention, and that is the province of Saskatchewan, the province of my colleague. The province of Saskatchewan made a commitment for 1,000 units and tied that into the federal program. That is a significant move. So there is an exception. However, I do not want the minister to wait for another ten years to see if another province will move in that direction. I think it is time for him to take some real action which will fill some human need and provide some economic stimulus.

I would like to say something about why it is important to improve the housing conditions of native people in cities, particularly those in poverty conditions. I come from Winnipeg and I think Winnipeg is a good model of what I am thinking about right now. In the inner city of Winnipeg there is unemployment of upwards of 40 per cent, 50 per cent or 60 per cent. There is an old housing stock, and there are native people living in the worst kind of housing conditions. When people are living in those kinds of housing conditions, they move around a lot; the children end up going to four or five different schools in one year. One can imagine what a detrimental impact that has on their education.

The teachers in the schools came to me when I was a city councillor in Winnipeg dealing with the question of housing and indicated quite clearly that if those children are going to make use of the dollar that we and the public put into the educational system they must have good, adequate housing and are not living in four or five different locations in the city in one year. How can they get a good education if they have to move every few months? It is just not possible. There is a fundamental issue of justice here.

There is also an economic question here in the sense that if we want to utilize the public dollars that we have invested in education, for example, in order to give people equal opportunity, we must provide them with adequate housing, with good housing, so they can live in one spot, the children can go to one school all year round rather than to five different schools which would put an unnecessary stress and burden on the teachers as well as on the children. Therefore, this matter is essential and important.

I would make one other comment with regard to native housing. I raise this caution to the minister. I hope he listens to what I have to say because I really do feel that perhaps there is some hope that he will act on some of my suggestions, at least partially, and take some remedial action. If I name the principle, perhaps he can at least take a step in the right direction.

I want to caution the minister. I read his news release with regard to the bill we are dealing with today, and a good one it is.

An hon. Member: Which is good, the news release or the bill?

Mr. Keeper: He makes reference in this news release to a more businesslike approach. I know that will find much approval in many quarters. He is trying to present a particular public image. Again we have the game of politics. I have no objection to anyone playing politics but I do want to caution him, in the application of his ideology, his business-oriented ideology, that he not carry it so far as to impair the potential delivery of programs. In other words, if he applies this notion of making it more businesslike to national housing programs, that he not do it in a way that would make it impossible for native housing corporations to deliver housing.

I just want him to be very careful of how he applies his ideology, to read carefully the recommendations from his own bureaucrats, because he does mention in this same news release "flexibility". He is anxious to have more flexibility. Who is going to have the flexibility? Obviously, it is the bureaucrats. We want to be sure that whatever is being done not be lost in any effort to present a particular kind of public image for the government.

This is just a caution to the minister, a friendly caution, and I hope that as he examines the recommendations from his civil servants he will keep that in mind. I really hope that he will. As he follows his ideology, he could still allow for the program to be workable. That is the important point, in my mind.

So, Mr. Speaker, that is really what I have to say on native housing. I hope the minister takes some recognition of what I had to say and that it has some impact on the government's native housing programs and policies. If it does not, I will take note of it and will have something to say here again.

I would like to move on to some other matters that I said I would cover. One of those is the older neighbourhoods. Once again we have the enabling legislation here, which allows the government to get involved in such things as the community services contribution program. That is the program that was to help with the rehabilitation of older neighbourhoods. I wish to share a little information here with the House. The community services contribution program is a program of which the minister last year announced a termination. He still has the gall to continue to issue press releases claiming credit for public works under that program in my province.

Mr. Cosgrove: I am still paying for it.

Mr. Keeper: The minister should not only be paying for it but should be increasing the amount of funds that are available for these municipal public works, in order to provide increased employment across the country and so that the one million people who are unemployed today will have jobs. It is not just a claim for credit for reducing expenditure, for expenditures that are going to end.

Mr. Cosgrove: Reduced.

Mr. Keeper: Reduced. Let me give the House an example. I do not want to get lost in names, but at one point this program was not called the community services contribution program. Let me quote from the document I have here:

> The community services contribution program replaced the municipal infrastructure, municipal incentive and neighbourhood improvement programs.

It replaced three programs.

> These 3 programs provided $399 million in loans and grants for 3 kinds of services. The CSCP which began in April of 1980 provided $250 million a year for 10 kinds of services.

They had three programs before they consolidated, they reduced the budget and called it the CSCP and now they are reducing that and soon will be contributing nothing. There has been no assurance from the government side of the House that there will be a replacement program. Bill C-89 enables the government to implement a replacement program, but there is no evidence in the budgetary or expenditure statements of government that it will be replaced. It continues to cut back and to follow its own economic lunacy. The minister should know that there are people in the country who are concerned about the fact that CSCP is being terminated. In fact, many municipal mayors and councillors are concerned. I am sure the minister knows them.

Mrs. Mitchell: They do not speak to him now.

Mr. Keeper: Shame, indeed. I have a letter from the city of Winnipeg outlining the damage which will result from the termination of the program. I have an inch thick file of letters from towns and cities right across the country. In a letter from the city of Edmonton it was indicated that if the government wanted to show it cared for the west this was the way to do it—institute a replacement program which will aid municipalities in their public works. I have a letter from the city of Calgary which indicated its concern about Liberal government cutbacks of funds to local communities. Also I have letters from the Surrey municipal council and the city of Moose Jaw, etc. I have more documentation outlining the genuine concern of Canadians across the country that the program be reinstated and expanded.

Perhaps it is too much to ask of government to institute a replacement program.

Mrs. Mitchell: What about a replacement government?

Mr. Keeper: That would be ideal, but dealing with the reality of today, the minister should give serious thought to a replacement program. I notice the enabling legislation allows the minister to make loans for neighbourhood improvement and such. At least it is possible for the minister to have a replacement program based upon a loan program that would be in line with his privatization philosophy, if he is not prepared to give grants. He has not indicated a willingness to take that small step. We are waiting for the minister to take seriously the appeals of cities and towns across Canada for funds for municipal public works. The people who are out of work would like to see some dollars for that purpose as well.

I should like to talk briefly about federal-provincial-municipal finance. When the government was first elected Parliament dealt with a bill respecting grants in lieu of taxes. At that time the minister promised, after the legislation went through the House, to study the program put in place. Apparently the study was to be brought before committee so that hon. members could have another look at it. Nothing has happened. The tragedy is that the government continues with a grant in lieu of taxes system, wherein the federal government retains arbitrary authority for how much it will pay for a building located in any municipality when a better model exists and has been put in place. This model is based upon the notion that the federal government respects the local taxation system. We should have a taxation system, rather than a grants system.

In this area there is much to learn from the province of Quebec. There are many hon. members in the House who are from Quebec, so the government has a good source of advice. Quebec implemented a taxation system which respects the local taxation system and local democratic institutions; it is not an arbitrary authoritarian grant program which leaves the final decision with the senior government.

Of course, municipalities are in need of financial resources. The federal government is bloated in terms of financial resources. It should treat fairly local governments as it relates to them in a federal relationship. We know the government has much to learn in the area of intergovernmental relations. I once again flag the fact that the issue is not forgotten. There are municipalities which want the federal government to respect local governments. As well, there are citizens who want the government to respect their locally-elected representatives and to treat them fairly.

In conclusion, all my remarks, whether they relate to this housing legislation, mortgages, social housing, rental housing, native housing, neighbourhood improvement or local municipal finance, are really an appeal to the government to respond to the needs of Canadians. Quite simply they assume a government which is capable of seeing the value of investing in communities and people. They assume a government with the courage to develop Canadian economic policies in the area of monetary and fiscal matters. They assume a government willing to show leadership in economic matters at a time when the people of the country are hurting. They involve a renewed commitment to democracy, not only to political democracy and rights but to economic rights of people. It is time for the government not only to listen but to act.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak on Bill C-89 which was brought in by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Crosgrove) who I am delighted to see present. It amends the National Housing Act and provides very necessary funds. The government says that the proposed legislation would give Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation more flexibility in responding to housing problems and enable it to conduct its operations in a more businesslike manner. I am sure we will all say amen to it and hope it is correct.

I have had dealings with various CMHC offices and certainly in most cases they have been excellent. On other occasions I have not been overly enthused with the delay and doubletalk. In one specific case we were endeavouring to obtain a loan for an apartment house in my home village. We had all the necessary information and approvals. It was getting on to autumn and, just when the entrepreneurs were to commence building, they were told by CMHC that they required special land tests and so on. The upshot was that after spending a few thousand dollars the project involving seven or eight apartments went down the drain.

The plan will offer interest deferral guarantees of up to $3,000 for borrowers who have some equity in their homes and are obliged to renew their mortgages at rates of interest which would require an excessive proportion of their income. For borrowers with the same problem but with no substantial equity, the government will provide grants up to $3,000. The program will apply to mortgages renewed between September 1, 1981, and November 12, 1982. It will only be for home owners who are required to pay more than 30 per cent of their gross family income. It is really a scheme for home owners to borrow against equity to pare down their payments and to pay off the amount at a later date.

This grant and loan guarantee program will assist a total of 50,000 home owners out of nearly a million who will renew their home mortgages during the time limit imposed by the government. In fact, 37,500 of the 50,000 assisted will receive temporary help, but only 12,500 will receive real financial assistance.

Decent affordable accommodation is a basic right which all Canadians feel they should have. Housing is one of the most necessary of consumer goods. Buying a home is probably the largest single investment made by any family. Houses are purchased for investment or for security reasons. Every single Canadian has a direct interest in housing. People rent, own, construct or maintain a home, sometimes all of those things. Residential construction is a major industry and a significant segment of the economy.

It has been said that as the construction industry goes, so goes the economy. We are all aware of the sad situation with respect to the economy at the present time. When housing starts decline, renters and owners are not the only ones affected. A decline in housing starts has a snowball effect on many segments of the economy. The pressure on low-income people comes about by available housing becoming more costly. Reduced mobility of the work force is another very serious situation. This is caused by the unemployment connected with trades associated with construction, such as bricklayers, cabinet makers, plumbers and so on.

What about those selling or manufacturing bricks, insulation, carpets and on and on? Many bankruptcies have occurred in these particular industries. Some are just hanging on more or less by their teeth hoping that things will improve.

A depressed market results in less money in circulation. Cutbacks will, of course, have long-term effects. We are all aware how long it takes to build houses. You cannot have the economy change overnight and just say "presto" and have houses appear.

I can speak with some experience because I have been a real estate broker for a great number of years. I am not active at the present time, naturally, but I have a small firm that is operated by my sons. I checked with one of them today to find out how the little village of Burks Falls is affected by the serious situation in 1981. My son told me that by working his butt off in 1981 he managed to increase the business. I say more power to him. But in a great many cases housing sales have declined considerably. As a result, real estate brokers have been feeling the pinch too. That situation occurs not only in small places in Canada but even in the metropolitan areas with booming populations.

My hon. friend from Mississauga says the real estate market there has been very depressed. Mississauga was the fastest growing area in Canada. I do not know whether it has that same distinction now but its real estate market has been affected.

Being able to afford a home is very important. A great many people across Canada, both young and the not so young, all hope some day to be able to purchase a home. However, because of high interest rates the affordability of housing has become a major problem.

As far as availability of housing is concerned, Canada needs just over 220,000 new housing units each year. In 1980, only 159,000 were built. In 1981, only 178,000 units were built. For 1982, the latest forecast predicts that only 180,000 units will be built. This will result in a shortage of 143,000 units over a three-year period.

High interest rates have resulted in a dramatic decline in the construction of new apartement units. For a landlord in Ontario to break even on the financing of a new building at today's interest rates, he would have to charge $800 per month for a one-bedroom apartment. Because this rate is more than double current rental rates, construction of buildings has all but ceased. The vacancy rate, or the number of housing units available to Canadians, has dropped dramatically all across the country. People just cannot find a place to live and cannot afford those that are available. The situation is getting worse and people are getting desperate.

In the third quarter of 1981, the price of an average home in Canada was $78,000. Assuming a 10 per cent down payment, $1,000 in property taxes and using the rule of thumb that total payments for principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 30 per cent of the gross family income, a family income of $44,500 is now needed to afford an average-priced home in Canada. House prices in the major cities, such as Toronto, Calgary and Vancouver, are higher. I understand that Vancouver has the distinction of having the highest priced housing in the country.

In 1978, mortgage rates were in the vicinity of 10.25 per cent. As most of us are aware, the rate now is in the vicinity of 18 per cent. The cost of an average home in 1978 was $55,000. The increase in the price of a home, coupled with higher interest rates, means a 129 per cent increase has occurred in the cost of servicing a mortgage on a new home. Approximately 1,200,000 Canadian families are facing renewal of their mortgages over the next two years. Those people renewing a 10 per cent mortgage at 18 per cent will see their monthly payment rise by 41 per cent. Some 40,000 Canadians are expected to lose their homes as a result.

Last fall the minister, as most of my colleagues will remember, asked members to write to him to give him specific cases of those people who would be losing their homes because of mortgages coming up for renewal during that very high interest rate period. I believe I wrote ten letters outlining ten cases to the minister. Some people came to my office almost crying. People were telling me that their payments in the $300 to $350 bracket would rise to the $700 bracket if they renewed their mortgages. Certain people told me that the mortgage companies had issued ultimatums to them saying they would not renew mortgages. I made it my business to contact either the head or the regional offices of the mortgage companies. In some cases, the mortgage companies stated that the individual mortgagor was slow in paying or was getting behind and the company was not interested in that kind of a hassle. Because of insufficient annual income, mortgage companies knew that those who were having a difficult time paying their present mortgages would find it absolutely impossible to pay a rate half as much again. This put many of them in a very serious situation and they had to walk away from their homes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the great budget of November 12, the help the poor and soak the rich budget, certainly has not done much for housing. There is virtually no relief for the housing market. The net effect may be that housing starts will plummet even further. The budget offers builders some assistance in the construction of apartments, but the interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit will only have a slight impact on the $800 per month break-even point faced by most builders.

I am also aware, Mr. Speaker, that only 15,000 units are going to be built under this plan. They are in certain areas where, in all fairness, the need is great but where the economy is probably the most buoyant. I do not think the small rural areas qualify. Toronto, maybe Hamilton, Calgary and Vancouver will. I am well aware they are just crying for apartments and houses, but that is where the money will be allocated. However, if we were to contact CMHC in Parry Sound-Muskoka or some other rural areas, I think we would find a line-up and nothing would be available.

We are all aware of the cancellation of MURB which was responsible for the construction of about 25,000 units last year, 10,000 more than the government expects from its new program. Of the $150 million available through this bill, $112 million will go to those 15,000 units, which leaves $38 million for all the other programs. And I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that is going to be spread pretty thin across the country.

The government is also reducing its commitment to subsidize social housing in 1982 from 30,000 to 25,000 units. These two policy decisions will result in a total reduction of 15,000 units. Only this blundering government would consider reducing incentives for the construction of rental housing in a period of severe rental housing shortage. Throughout the summer and fall the government promised to bring in some measure of relief for home owners in dire straits. However, the relief in the budget is little more than a program which allows people to keep their homes by going further and further into debt. In February, 1980, the Liberal government promised to make home ownership easier so that more Canadians could choose between renting and owning. Is this the way they keep their promise?

The Progressive Conservative Party believes an urgent need exists to provide relief to home owners in the form of mortgage interest and property tax credits. For a person renewing a $40,000 mortgage at 18 per cent, the tax credits would have lowered the effective interest rate to 14¾ per cent for the 1981 tax year, and to 13½ per cent for the 1982 tax year.

Another reservoir of funds has dried up or may dry up, Mr. Speaker, because of this ridiculous budget and its regulations regarding life insurance. I suppose I could be accused of having a conflict of interest because I have had a licence to sell life insurance since 1938, despite the fact that I am not doing so at this time. However, I am very familiar with the situation. Life insurance companies provide untold millions for home mortgages and for business.

I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that when I contacted the insurance company I was agent for and said that Mr. and Mrs. John Smith would like to have a mortgage in Burks Falls or Huntsville or wherever, I was very annoyed to be told that it just was not feasible for them to service a mortgage in that area; they would rather look out of the window of their skyscraper and say "We can loan all the money we want to right here and keep an eye on it". Mind you, that has changed down through the years and they now provide mortgage money for rural areas, but I can tell you that 25 or 30 years ago it was pretty difficult to get a life insurance or mortgage company to go into a small town. Of course, CMHC came along and did a good job. And then they did not do so good a job, so hold your applause.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member will accept a question at the termination of his remarks?

Mr. Darling: Yes, I will, Mr. Speaker. Now, the CMHC in its wisdom, when no other funds were available, made direct loans to individual home owners in villages and rural areas. Then, of course, some bureaucrat came along with the brilliant idea that these villages would no longer qualify unless they put in sewers. A good many of the small municipalities could not do that, and there was a period where finally someone got to the minister and the bureaucrats who made the decision, and it was changed so that they were able to get these direct loans.

I want to emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the minister responsible and other members on that side of the House will talk to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), quietly but in a persuasive manner, and tell him that he should forget all about the few paltry millions from the life insurance proceeds because it will not be worth sending out the bureaucrats and collectors to try to get the money. There are other more simple ways, and surely to God they will have enough brains to do it.

Those of us sitting here make a reasonable income. In fact, in the eyes of some it is an unreasonable income. Now, all you have to do is have those with an income of $50,000 or more pay 10 per cent more in taxes. We might squeal like stuck pigs, but that, in my view, is fairer than trying to squeeze it out of those in the very low income bracket.

Let me say that we on this side of the House are certainly in support of the bill. We are aware that in all probability the minister is more than aware of the serious situation. The minister had considerable experience before he was demoted. I hope he is listening to this because he, along with myself, served for many years in the highest form of government, that is municipal government; now we are in the lowest form of government! The minister, as the head of a very prosperous city, as a member of the great metro council, and also, I am quite sure, as a member of AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, and other municipal organizations, should know just how serious the situation is with respect to housing. I feel, and I hope I am right, that we do have more or less of a friend in court, as the minister knows the problems for small centres as well as big centres.

I want to mention one other problem which the hon. member who spoke previously mentioned, and I wish to commend him for it, and that is the problems of native people and those in rural areas concerning housing. I believe the minister did intimate that there will be another bill or something coming through which will particularly relate to rural and native housing. I say amen to that. I am also hoping that the RRAP, the Rural Rehabilitation Assistance Program, will be continued because that provides improved housing for areas in which there is no great boom of new housing. That is certainly important. Of course, some of that money is available in grant form to those who qualify on the means test.

We are all aware of the palace revolt. In this great metropolitan daily newspaper, I see the headline "Grits in Palace Revolt".

Mr. Cullen: The Toronto Sun.

Mr. Darling: The Toronto Sun.

An hon. Member: The bible of Toryism.

Mr. Darling: I do not know about that entirely, either; but it certainly keeps the Liberal government on its toes and may it continue to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: We are well aware of the palace revolt. I believe ten Members of Parliament were greatly concerned and I guess for very good reason, because they had been getting the message when they went to their respective ridings. Two of them were cabinet ministers. They were worried enough to write a letter to the king-emperor himself, voicing their disapproval in no uncertain terms, which took considerable courage.

Despite the fact that some people say the two cabinet ministers should resign because of this, I say that they should stay in cabinet and keep putting the heat on the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I know very well that it is not restricted to ten hon. members. The hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) was at home for five weeks, I assume; perhaps he was holidaying for part of the time, but I bet he got the message. Probably the only people who had a reasonably enjoyable and quiet holiday were the Members of Parliament in the opposition, because I do not know how any Liberal Member of Parliament could go out in public without being confronted by people concerned about the terrible budget, or MacEachenitis, or whatever one calls it.

A good many of our members can remember a task force on housing about a decade ago. I am now speaking about senior members of Parliament. I know I was not here at the time, and in looking around this august chamber today, I do not see too many in the House who were here at that time. There are two hon. members on our side who were probably here. This task force on housing was instituted and headed by the hon. Paul Hellyer, who was responsible for housing at the time, I believe. Paul Hellyer came out with an outstanding report and presented it to the cabinet. I believe it recommended that one million homes be built over the following five years. The Prime Minister took it, and I guess he put it up on the shelf and let it gather dust. Mr. Hellyer was so disenchanted that he resigned from the cabinet; he later resigned from the Liberal government when he saw the light and came over to this side of the House. When he was defeated, the House of Commons certainly lost an outstanding parliamentarian.

As I mentioned before, we are still in a continually high interest rate period although interest rates have come down from the highest level reached back in September of 1981, I believe, when mortgage rates reached the astronomical figure of 21.4 per cent. I know that at that particular time businessmen were paying 24 per cent and 25 per cent for loans at their banks. As a result of that, many of them ended up by going bankrupt, and some are still simply hanging on. We are still in the 18 per cent bracket when it comes to renewing mortgages, and this is certainly a serious situation.

In 1965, the average new home cost about $17,000, and older homes were even less. In 1981, the average home cost $74,000 and, of course, much more in some cities. I am also aware that the average wage in 1965 was about $5,000 and that the interest rate was pretty well around the 7 per cent bracket. I guess we all wish that we could come back to the 7 per cent bracket, but not necessarily to the $5,000 average wage.

The average income in Canada today is about $18,000, with mortgage rates in the 17 per cent and upward range. However, estimates now state that in certain areas the average house will cost $100,000 to build, which is far beyond the capability of well over 90 per cent of the people of Canada.

Let us not forget that last fall a great many irate people appeared on Parliament Hill whose mortgages were coming due on their homes. I can tell hon. members that they comprised a very unhappy group. They wanted to talk to people. I believe they did talk to a group, and they spoke to the minister in one of the committee rooms in the West Block. I happen to be one of those who went out on the Hill and was able to speak to a good many of these home owners. I asked them, "Well, how did you vote in the last election?" Needless to say, a considerable number of them said that they voted Liberal, but they would never vote that way again. I said, "Well, it serves you damn well right." I said, "I should not say that. I certainly feel sympathy for you, but that is the message I want to try to get across to you."

An hon. Member: Stan, Stan!

Mr. Darling: That is true. That is just telling it like it is. It was amazing to hear the stories of these people, who were very worried. One particular man was getting on in years, and by that I mean he was not very young. I said, "Have you got a mortgage?" He said, "No but I am here to protest because my daughter and her husband have a mortgage and it looks as though they will lose their home." He was a resident of Ottawa. I am quite sure that a good many of the people who appeared on Parliament Hill finally had to decide that there was nothing else to do but to take the keys and hand them back to the mortgagees, and then walk away to look for some sort of rental accommodation within their budgets.

We are all well aware of the tragedy which occurred two or three weeks ago in the little village of Spanish, Ontario, up in the Sudbury area. Nine people died in a fire there, including a family of seven. As most hon. members have read, this particular family was purchasing a home in Spanish. In fact, I have seen a picture of it, and it was a modern bungalow. Because of the drastic increase in the family's mortgage payment as a result of high interest rates, they finally decided that there was just no way they could swing it and keep it. They just walked away from that home and moved into an apartment in a converted school. As a result of moving there, they all burned to death.

Mr. Lewis: How do you feel about that, Paul?

Mr. Darling: A case like this could happen time and time again. We know that many people here in Canada are living in very poor accommodation, accommodation which is unquestionably unsafe under fire standards and maybe under health standards as well. Something must be done.

The minister must get the message across to the rest of his government that housing is important. We must do something concrete so that it will help a great many more people than it seems this bill will help. In the past, I heard one of the hon. members mention that literally billions of dollars have flown from Canada to the United States because the economic climate is more attractive there. Interest rates are higher. When the interest rates again go up here, some of this money will return. I am aware of this and I am sure the minister must be as well. Many successful developers who are developing and have developed land, built homes and apartments, have reached the point where the economic climate is not satisfactory in Canada, so they have gone to the United States where they are welcomed with open arms. That is a fine state of affairs when we are literally crying for housing here.

The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the federal government are partly to blame, but not entirely. As I mentioned in the House, the other levels of government are also to blame. There is the red tape of the municipal governments, the damn planners, zoners, and all the rest who hold up the development of buildings. Consequently the developers have said "That's it".

Each time there is a delay, it adds to the cost of the land. The developers borrow money on a short-term basis. When interest was at 12 per cent, money was borrowed for short periods in order that they could get the plans ready and the lots subdivided. By the time they were ready to build, they were paying 16 and 17 per cent. This is because they had been held up by the bureaucracy.

Some municipalities in the United States have come up with a brilliant idea which I wish our municipal and provincial governments would adopt. They presented their idea to the planners and citizens' groups. If an apartment or housing development is going to be built in a certain area, there are always many citizens who do not want the additional traffic, housing and schools, and they immediately start petitions. This causes delay, delay, delay and raises the cost of housing. It also cuts down on the amount of housing available.

In certain areas of the United States they have decided to cut down on the long delays. The planners, zoners, and municipal groups which have to approve these matters are being told that the procedure will be done in reverse. Rather than plans sitting on their desk for months or even years, they are given 90 days in which they had better come up with a damned good reason why the project should be delayed or it will go through automatically. If we followed that procedure here, it would help the housing industry and would probably result in cheaper housing.

I hope the minister will accept some of these suggestions presented by members on all sides of the House. He is aware that much needs to be done. We on this side have presented various suggestions with regard to housing. As we stated, mortgage interest deductibility and municipal tax deductibility are both suggestions that should be considered. I bet that a great many of the thousands of people who voted Liberal in February, 1980, wished they had the opportunity to vote again today. They would welcome that program with open arms.

Having been a municipal mayor for a number of years, I am sure the minister will agree that having to pay tax on tax is unfair. Why should people who pay municipal taxes to Scarborough or to the village of Burks Falls not be able to deduct that amount from their income tax up to a certain level?

When I was a vice-president of the Ontario Mayors and Reeves Association, I made that suggestion. It received the endorsement of 90 per cent of those who were present, but did not get very far when it came to Ottawa, where it was just thrown in the ashcan. It is one area where a home owner would get a break. This has been done in the United States for years. We have adopted some of their other tax measures, such as capital gains.

This brings me to another can of worms, the capital gains tax and the way it is being tightened up. According to the Minister of Finance, all businessmen have more or less been tarred as crooks. That is it in a nutshell. In a holier-than-thou attitude on November 12, the minister said that he would tighten all loopholes for businessmen and women, yet those "loopholes" were legitimate business expenses.

Mr. Taylor: Absolutely.

Mr. Darling: They were brought in by the government in the first place, having been dreamed up by the bureaucrats. I spoke to the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), about this. He said that those same bloody bureaucrats brought those suggestions to him, but he told them where to put them. Why did the present Minister of Finance not do the same?

Something else that affects the economy and housing is the capital cost allowance, which has been reduced. The minister in his wisdom says it will make no difference. I can tell him that it will make a considerable difference to those who were going to expand their operations and purchase additional equipment. They are no longer going to do that.

There were 17 items on which the minister recanted on December 18. Many of us are still worried about the effect that some of the items he listed will have. Some are just a delay. Others may be good and he may follow through with them. Before the budget is finally passed, I hope the minister will take seriously the suggestions with which he has been bombarded. I also hope that this housing bill will provide more money than originally intended.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling)—Trade—(a) Importation of light trucks (b) Request that government take action; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—National Defence—Possibility of leasing equipment from United States; the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—National Defence—(a) Committee study of Canadian Forces Base Chatham, N.B.—(b) Minister's recommendations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Cosgrove: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the last speaker indicated that he would entertain a question at the end of his comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I understood that, but the hon. member used all his time. This can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cosgrove: The hon. member made some interesting requests with regard to the role of the Government of Canada in housing. I wish to refer to comments by his colleague who represents the Conservative Party and sits to his right. I quote from Hansard of February 5, 1981, page 6932:

> The province of British Columbia is well-off and can look after its own housing problems; it does not need to come to the federal government for assistance. This government should stick to the areas in which it performs well and not go into areas of provincial jurisdiction—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister of housing would have benefited considerably from the Speaker's comments at noon today—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I will first have to hear the minister who has the floor on a point of order.

• (1710)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, my question was, who is representing the position of the Conservative Party, the last speaker or the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I presume that the minister will be in his seat this evening. The hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will be speaking later this evening and I suggest that he direct his question to him.

As far as Vancouver, British Columbia, is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I represent a rural area, not one of the great wealthy areas like a borough of metropolitan Toronto or even wealthy British Columbia, although there are poverty pockets even there. Therefore, I feel that the government certainly has a job to do to assist the housing industry. Regardless, that is the message I will deliver and continue to deliver.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I should like to comment on this bill, which affects a major sector of the economy in Canada and particularly in Quebec, namely, housing. Two years ago, in a situation similar to the one we have today, our friends opposite were objecting to a program we had brought in, which today, as the minister is aware, would provide $150 per month. The bill was voted down with the help of the New Democratic Party, which is now complaining that nothing has been done for two years. Looking back, Canadians must realize that the solution we proposed 24 months ago was the right one, considering the situation prevailing today. What has happened since? Not much, except for an election and a government that is categorically opposed to helping home owners and is letting a major industry, namely, residential construction, go into bankruptcy.

Yesterday, the minister asked us to pass the bill quickly. I can see why he would rather not have a long debate in the House, and if I were in his shoes, I would feel very uncomfortable. However, I believe some of the members of this House will remind the minister, and he deserves to be reminded, that a bill that is supposed to help only 10 per cent of those who need help is entirely unsatisfactory and incomplete. When everyone keeps repeating that 40,000 Canadians stand to lose their homes, the minister comes up with a proposal that is going to help one out of ten, and only under certain conditions.

Since the session resumed, I have been trying to make my colleagues wake up to various facts such as the present state of the economy, a budget that is unacceptable, the hundreds of representations coming from all parts of the country and the present high rate of unemployment. Today, we are concerned with housing. I remember, Mr. Speaker, I probably forgot to tell the House about this. In August, 1981, when I was returned to Parliament after a byelection, one of the three main points I stressed in my campaign was the lack of a policy on interest rates, which was causing so much suffering and concern and had caused thousands of people to lose their homes—I shall be giving some figures later on, not my own, but provided by a highly respected organization. It was clear that people were very unhappy about the fact that nothing was being done and wanted action, so I promised the people of the riding of Joliette that I would go and remind the minister that he had a responsibility here, and would ask him to have a little more guts and use his influence to persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who refuses to listen or talk to them. I believe our repeated attacks were successful in waking up ten of our colleagues who actually went so far as to sign a piece of paper. Incredible! Mr. Speaker, either this is some kind of joke, and the public will be their judge, or these people are in earnest. If they are, it means that by writing to the Prime Minister and publishing their letter, they are actually admitting they are unable to speak to the Prime Minister directly, and this group includes two ministers.

Or else it is part of a plan, considering the results of the recent federal-provincial conference, where the government lost the confidence of the ten provincial premiers, and considering the fierce opposition from all parts of the country, with organizations actually telling the government that it is leading the country straight into bankruptcy. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) realizes that he can no longer keep his Minister of Finance or in any case maintain his economic philosophy which has been a colossal failure—and it wasn't me that said it at the federal-provincial conference! In the circumstances, the Right Hon. Prime Minister is clever enough not to want to give the credit to all his opponents. The Minister of Finance has to be allowed to backtrack, and with this plan involving two ministers and eight other members, the Right Hon. Prime Minister would subsequently be able to say that he backtracked because of internal pressures. If that were true, not ten but at least 50 members would have signed the letter.

I wonder whether the members for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) and Duvernay (Mr. Demers), whom I saw a while ago, and the member for Verdun (Mr. Savard) would have signed the letter as well. And today, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bégin) had even harsher words than usual in front of the television cameras, and during oral question period, we had this absurd situation where the Right Hon. Prime Minister felt he had to challenege his caucus and his members. He looked them in the eye and asked them: It isn't true you don't support me, is it? And the Minister of National Health and Welfare even applauded. Quite a show. Unfortunately, this is the kind of attitude I have often seen around here. I was reading in yesterday's Hansard the speech made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette) who, after signing the letter in which they asked for emergency measures in the housing sector, because they realized that the country was losing 50,000 units, asked us to push this bill through at top speed. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I think there are members of the official opposition who have some comments they want to make to the minister, and I have felt for quite some time that the minister must feel very dissatisfied about his failure to convince the Minister of Finance that more should be done than what he is giving us today. This bill is deplorable, and it fails to meet any of the needs of Canadians today.

The present government seems to forget that to turn the economy around, it has to do more than increase its expenditures by 22 per cent and put hundreds of thousands of people out of work as a result of the energy agreement, which is generating billions for the federal treasury. The government should have redistributed this revenue fairly and used the money to turn around the most productive sectors of our economy, including the construction industry. Mr. Speaker, the House will agree that the situation has been very tough in this sector during the last two years. A sector that involves 33 per cent of the labour force has been ignored. Once more, the minister is going to ask us to trust him, to support his policies and to help pass this entirely inadequate measure. If we consider the construction industry's significance as a producer of economic spin-offs and as an industry that generates 30 per cent of the jobs in this country, it is really hard to believe that a federal subsidy affecting 15,000 housing units in Canada, including between 1,000 and 1,500 in Quebec, is going to turn around construction, when we actually need 200,000 units. In Quebec alone, at least 35,000 units are needed each year. Because there is a shortage of new housing, the construction industry is in a slump, there is a shortage of accommodation and rents are inflated.

I also deplore the lack of any concrete measures to promote the recovery of the building industry. I greatly deplore the fact that the government has failed to implement our proposal to set a preferential interest rate for mortgages, thus enabling thousands of home owners to keep their homes and thousands of other Canadians to realize their legitimate dream of becoming home owners. Nothing has been done in this regard, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that socially, to become a home owner is something good and positive for an individual. He becomes more committed to his own municipality, to his province and to his country. Nothing in this legislation confirms that the government pursues that objective.

Of course, 12,000 Canadian taxpayers out of approximately 900,000 who will face renewal of their mortgages in 1982 will receive assistance. No one can deny that enabling renters to become home owners not only has very positive social and human consequences but also enriches the community and contributes to the general welfare. I would also like to point out that the budget of the Conservative government included a proposal which would have helped home owners. That proposal involved a $150 monthly credit, as I said earlier. That type of housing credit would have prevented the social tragedy that we experienced last year and are still experiencing. It is useless to blame the United States and international economic conditions because nothing prevents a government with some sense of morality and social responsibility to implement a special program of preferential interest rates, which would at the same time be a good way to boost the building industry.

I am thinking, Mr. Speaker, about some of the figures mentioned yesterday in the House when my hon. friend for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said the following:

> We know that the proposals contained in this bill will affect only about 12,000 households in Canada out of approximately 900,000 which will be renewing. It barely addresses the problem, and those who are in "dire straits"—a term used by the Prime Minister in addressing what the government intended to do; he suggested it would help those in dire straits—can look forward to a one-time payment. Yet we are told that mortgage interest rates are on the way back up again after falling from the high of 21.4 per cent of last September. We are told they are on their way back up again and will again reach 20 per cent this year.

It is obvious that the legislation now before us does not provide this assurance and encouragement to those who want to become home owners. To meet the needs of the Canadian people, an average of 220,000 housing starts a year would be needed between 1981 and 1986. In 1981, there were only 178,000 housing starts while 222,000 would have been necessary to meet our needs.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to quote a few figures, those of the Quebec Homebuilders Association. In 1976, there were 68,748 housing starts; in 1977, 57,580; in 1978, 43,671; in 1979, 41,730; in 1980, 29,186; in 1981, 29,500, and 26,000 are expected in 1982. Mr. Speaker, this shows how important it is to deal with this matter today, and I think it would be interesting for the minister to realize the negative impact of such a lack of measures and how costly it is for Canadians. For example, I have here a report of the eastern township branch of the same organization, from which I would like to quote the following excerpt:

> We would like to point out to you that every thousand dwellings that remain unbuilt results in a dead and irremediable loss of $84 million for the gross national product as well as a loss of 680 direct jobs and 580 indirect jobs, not to mention the 950 jobs lost through the multiplying effects.

A quick calculation—and it is important that the minister know this and realize exactly what this government is responsible for in the end—a quick calculation reveals that 44,000 units were not built in 1981, keeping in mind the needs of Canada, and that it entails the loss of 30,000 direct jobs, a loss of 25,520 jobs and a total loss of 41,800 jobs if we take the multiplier effect into consideration. That amounts to a gross national product loss of $3.696 billion. That is the result of a lack of policy which happens to be of great significance to Canadians who need it.

Mr. Speaker, I am thinking about those figures and the prevailing situation across Canada, about those hon. members who dared speak their mind ever so gently and very politely castigate the Minister of Finance and his colleague responsible for housing for failing to do the bare minimum. I hope there are more than ten on the other side. When I look at the current situation in my province alone—I say that because a lot of members from my province sit across the aisle—I have the impression that there must be at least five times as many who feel the same way. They would not run the risk of being called dirty names as some of them were by the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste not so long ago. As Quebecers and Canadians, I suggest we have responsibilities and duties in the House.

I told the people of my riding of Joliette that I would urge this government to take measures which meet their needs and which flow from moral and social responsibilities. That is what I am doing today. I strongly condemn this minister and this government for failing to propose adequate measures. One member from Quebec spoke last night, and I hope there will be others. I hope that the ten members who signed that letter will stand up and rake the minister over the coals, as I am doing, because he failed to come up with a measure to meet the minimum requirements of thousands of Canadians. Then again, maybe the whole thing was a big joke to enable the Prime Minister to discredit members of the opposition who for too long have been doing their job and discharging their daily responsibilities in seeking improved benefits for people who are suffering. In the short term, there may not be 25 solutions, there are no miracle solutions, true enough, but we have to make a choice. There are certain classes of people who cannot be left to fend for themselves.

Today I will not mention the thousands of home owners who, in addition to interest rates, have to cope with a problem created by an unacceptable product, urea formaldehyde foam insulation, which the government approved but for which it will not take any responsibility. There are enough Canadians who are suffering as I speak. There are enough Canadians whose first ambition is to become home owners. Thousands of Canadians are worried and wondering whether they will be able to keep their own home. God knows how hard they worked and did everything they could to keep their home!

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there is no need debating in the house day after day and asking this government to come to its senses. Would it be that the Prime Minister has lost all contact with reality? Is the Minister of Finance persevering in his lunacy to the point where ten hon. members and, I hope, more of them, will press him further?

How can a government imagine that it still deserves the public's confidence when it leaves so many problems unsolved? How can the minister responsible for housing still sleep soundly tonight, feeling that he is answering the needs of Canadians? I do not doubt the minister's intention to try to obtain more from the Minister of Finance, but if indeed he has tried, I must tell him now that he has failed miserably. We have known other ministers who had needs and who had made known the respective needs of their departments, and who have failed in their efforts to communicate with this Minister of Finance who will not hear anything nor accept the fact that his current policy, in line with his predecessors' policies, is a complete failure. On behalf of thousands of Canadians, and Quebecers too, I can say to the housing minister that there are in Canada people who have problems—these figures are self-explanatory—

Mr. Cyr: They are Canadians too!

Mr. La Salle: Yes, they are Canadians too. Perhaps the member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) could tell me what else is new. I was referring to Quebecers because I am from Quebec, and other members are going to talk about Ontario or Alberta. Mr. Speaker, whatever I say, they are going to be offended. I want to ask the Minister of Housing to make a statement and to give us something better than this inadequate legislation. I am sure, and I cannot say it often enough, that if they have been forced to take a position, there must be more than ten members who think this way. It just is not possible that only the opposition takes this view. I believe the members opposite also have a responsibility, and I feel that we must, that it is our duty, to demand that they do more and do it better. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, it was generally felt last week, no longer have the confidence of the provincial premiers. That is obvious. I wonder how long the Prime Minister is going to persist in his stubborn attitude, while Canada's problems get worse and worse. People say he is going to retire. He may not give a damn, but he has no right to make Canadians suffer the way he is doing now through his own stubbornness and the attitude taken by his Minister of Finance. I want to tell the minister responsible for housing, who needs our support, that we are with him all the way, but not unless he brings in measures that do more than this non-legislation being served up in the House today. Canadians need more than that, and thousands of Canadians are demanding action by the government. The Canadian economy needs to be stimulated, and this can be done by stimulating the construction industry. Thousands of people would get their jobs back. That is why I am making these demands today, and I will continue to do so as long as the government fails to respond satisfactorily to the needs of our constituents across Canada, including those in my own province.

Mr. Speaker, I shall give other members a chance to express their views and make their comments. I hope that there will soon be a measure to deal with interest rates, that there will be programs, and although the program proposals may differ, we know perfectly well that there are not 15 different ways of lowering interest rates in order to turn around the construction industry and give Canadians a chance to have their own homes. Special interest rates are necessary, whatever the program or arrangement, but they should not be restricted to 15,000 units, as the minister said today. Shelter should be a right and it should be available. If this is part of our social policies, it should also be part of the policy of the minister responsible for housing. It should also be part of the philosophy of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, who was talking about a just society only 15 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, we have come a long way since then and our society seems to be getting less and less just. I think many Canadians are realizing that too many promises have never been kept. Today, I once more want to ask this government to provide just and equitable measures that will help thousands of Canadians make a happier life for themselves.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes earlier the minister for housing, who is no better at asking questions than he is at answering them, made some comments with respect to certain comments of mine at an earlier point. Clearly the minister must understand that the provincial governments which are involved in housing in terms of land, land assembly and land servicing—by and large are able to direct the planning of their provinces adequately to make sure that houses can be built, and where we have land costs that are totally outrageous, as we have in British Columbia, or certainly had, that a lot of those problems are stemming from areas of provincial responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, the major national responsibility which the minister refuses to accept is his government's totally inept handling of the interest rate concerns in this country and particularly how those interest rate concerns affect the housing industry. That total ineptness was no more pronounced than could be pronounced in the budget of November 12.

In the past months or year or year and a half, we have seen the total destruction of the capital markets of the country. It is not very long ago that a person borrowed money on a mortgage for 25 years. That slipped to ten years, then to five years, and now, even in accordance with the admission of the minister, to six months. You know, we almost have the interest rates for the long-term financing of Canadian housing today determined every Thursday on the auction of 90-day treasury bills.

Mr. Speaker, this condition in the long-term financial markets of the country lies totally at the doorstep of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the colleague of this minister who now apologetically brings before the House a makeshift, shabby piece of legislation, patchwork of the worst order, to try to solve, in a patchwork type fashion—to try to solve but not even begin to solve, some of the problems that the financial policies of his government have created.

Let me deal briefly, Sir, with the budget and how it destroyed the long-term markets even further than they were already destroyed. The minister will know that one of the major sources of medium and long-term money in this country, perhaps the greatest source, has been the insurance industry. What does this budget do? It attacks the insurance industry, it attacks annuities, it attacks all types of long-term savings, by trying to create a deemed income concept. The insurance industry declared before public hearings, both here in Ottawa and in London and in Kitchener, that that industry will lose at least $1.75 billion of long-term capital for long-term investment in the economy of this country for housing, if you want to put it that way, in this year alone by the action in this budget.

What does the budget do? It attacks registered retirement savings plans by discouraging people from borrowing on a short-term basis to purchase them. It discourages long-term savings and wipes out the IAAC program. It makes deferred annuities unpalatable and attacks long-term life insurance. If the government was looking to do damage to people who wanted mortgages for decent periods of time, it could not have done it better. Where was the minister when that matter arose? Has the minister written a letter, as did his cabinet colleague who is sitting beside him now, to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) respecting housing concerns?

What have we heard from the government in connection with long-term capital? John Acheson, president of Dominion Life, said that the effects of the budget with its deemed income provisons will further damage what savings are left in the insurance industry by forcing that industry to keep more and more of its money in short-term investments, because it will be obligated to look after the distribution of income every three years to policyholders and annuitants to pay their income taxes.

The effects of the budget with respect to registered retirement savings plans, IAACs, deferred annuities and life insurance, destroy one of our great sources of long-term capital and pins us even further to the day by day market situation where people cannot find money for a ten-year, 20-year or 25-year commitment; they will only obtain 90 day commitments.

Gerald Voisin of Kitchener spoke to us during our hearings in that city. He said that builders today were playing Russian roulette. If brave enough they start projects, but in order to do so they are required to do an analysis of the cash flow. He asked how builders could calculate their interest rates. Are they to take 18 per cent out of the sky and say that that will be the interest rate? They cannot obtain commitments on projects which will be open for business, for example, in September. Builders will not be able to fix interest rates on their projects until September, and then they would only be fixed for one year. One must be nuts or playing Russian roulette to commence a building operation in the private market with the present monetary system. What is the minister's attitude toward apartment construction? What about these $7,500 loans? What about the balance of the cash? There is no fixed interest on the balance of the cash. There is no place where a builder can obtain ten-year or 20-year mortgage money to determine his carrying costs, fix his project and package it. Unless there is some stability in the marketplace, $7,500 interest-free loans, about which I will speak later, are absolutely useless.

The government attempts to say that it is doing something for housing in this patchwork bill, but it does not even begin to look at the problems which now exist. It clearly throws out the MURB program. Perhaps there was good reason for doing that, perhaps there were some abuses of the program; there were certainly some problems. But it does not get down to the brass tacks of encouraging investors into the marketplace. The attitude of government in its $7,500 loans for apartment construction indicates that it believes big government knows best where to put the building and what are the housing requirements.

For a moment I should like to talk about the interest rate problem. All hon. members know that to carry a $15,000 mortgage at 10 per cent costs approximately $447 per month. At 20 per cent, it is nearly doubled to $807 per month. There are massive changes in what people can afford to carry. A person who borrowed at 10.5 per cent in 1978 is now looking down the pipe at 19.5 per cent or 9 per cent more, but his or her income has not risen proportionately to carry the cost of the debt. This is one of the reasons for the problems with AHOP loans. People were sucked into buying houses on the basis that they thought they were receiving reasonably long-term financing from the government. They found out they were receiving only five-year financing and that their interest rates doubled. When they were committed up to the hilt to purchase properties, there was no way their incomes could conceivably increase to meet virtual double payments five years later. That is the essence of the situation.

Perhaps the problem is worse today than it was prior to the budget. When a person decides to purchase a house, he is looking at a six-month or one-year mortgage at 18.5 per cent or 19 per cent. What will he do in six months' time when his mortgage comes due? Will interest rates this August be 20.5 per cent or 20.75 per cent, as they were last August?

Before coming into the House today I heard that American interest rates were up again and that the U.S. T bill rate auctioned today at 14.10 per cent. If the government follows the trend in American interest rates and does its usual thing, interest rates in Canada will rise once again and there will be the Thursday auction concept whereby the cost of financing property will vary almost weekly. How can a young couple, or anyone for that matter, make a long-term commitment to purchase a home with the idea that the Thursday cost might be different next Thursday or the following one? We cannot expect people to buy or commit themselves on that basis. Builders cannot work on that basis, prospective owners cannot buy on that basis. The bill does not address the problem.

The ministry issued a CMHC paper entitled, "CMHC 6-81 BP", to which I should like to refer. It indicated that over the next two years approximately 1.2 million households will be renewing their mortgages. It also set out the tables on those mortgages and indicated that most of those households will be able to do so, although adjustments will be painful. It indicated that for these households house payments will increase but that they will still be paying less than 30 per cent of income for mortgage debt. Also it went on to indicate that their equity will allow them to take steps to reduce their mortgages and that 30,000 to 40,000 households cannot even take steps to help themselves and retain their homes.

Presumably it was as a result of this report that the minister came up with the most half-baked expropriatory program ever conceived by any government. Mr. Speaker, when you and I purchased our homes we may have assumed mortgages and made payments on them. Every time we made payments we felt that the debt was reduced a little. Perhaps it was only $10 or $15 per month, but at least it was something. The government says that you use 30 per cent of your gross income toward housing payments. You use all of your blood and sweat to pay the payments, and if you have $44,000 worth of mortgages, like Fernando Brunetti at 2500 Harmond Court in Mississauga, you go into this kind of scheme advocated by the minister. But after a year, you do not owe $44,000, you owe $46,000. What kind of a disgraceful, immoral, indecent suggestion is that? That is the very suggestion contemplated in the guarantee provisions to the insurance and trust companies in this bill. You use 30 per cent of your gross income, your blood and sweat, and you pay and pay and pay, and at the end of the year you owe $2,000 more than you did at the beginning of the year. All of that is justified because you have equity in your property and you are borrowing against your equity. In other words, the Brunettis can live in their house. They cannot afford to do so, but the government says: just live there and owe more and more money. In other words, operate just like the Government of Canada. The government cannot pay its bills, so it borrows more. This bill creates an immoral and indecent suggestion.

It is true that the bill goes on to do something for those people who eventually get to the point where they have no equity. For those people, the minister says "I will be nice to your big bank or trust company. I will pay your big bank or trust company up to $3,000 so they will not throw you out until after November 12, 1982."

Here we have a problem that is going to suck people in to greater and greater debt. These are debts they cannot pay today because they do not have enough income to pay the payments today. But after November 12, 1982, they will owe, as in the case of the Brunetti family, $2,000 more than they already owe. They cannot pay the interest on $44,000 because of this interest rate policy of the government. I do not know how people can pay interest on $46,000. Until interest rates decline 6 per cent, the Brunettis do not get into a positive position of 30 per cent of their gross income for housing. Isn't that great? We have a situation where we know people cannot afford the interest on the $44,000 at the current demanded rate of the trust company, so we say: capitalize the interest. But we know that the effect of capitalizing interest will be to increase the debt by $2,000. We know in our heart of hearts that we only have to look in the financial pages to see what the money markets are like and we know that interest rates will not be down 6 per cent by November 12, 1982. We know, and the minister knows, that the Brunettis will be up the creek for $2,000.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does the hon. member stand by his offer to accept a question at the end of his remarks?

Mr. Blenkarn: I will be most delighted, Mr. Speaker.

I want to leave the question of this despicable system where people owe more after a year than they already now owe. This is a condition certified more or less by this bill. Indeed, the bill offers to guarantee that kind of arrangement.

I want to go to the next matter dealt with in the bill which is that of allowing the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to deal with premiums on its insurance fund.

I suppose I was quite refreshed yesterday when the minister spoke. He said that if his actuaries had looked at AHOP and how to ensure AHOP mortgages properly, they should have received a premium of 8 per cent of the amount of money involved on each AHOP mortgage.

We all know that if Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation had to charge a premium of 8 per cent as a mortgage insurance fee, there would not have been any AHOP in the first place. A discount of 8 per cent on a $44,000 mortgage is $3,200. That would have been the fee. If that had been the case, there would not have been any AHOP at all. That probably would have been good for Canada. This party was not really in favour of it. I am sure that my friends to the left were not all that hot to trot with AHOP either. AHOP was essentially a deferred mortgage payment program. The same type of philosophy that is behind this "borrow on your equity program" contained in this bill is a philosophy developed by the officials in the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This minister says that that type of insurance, his actuaries tell him, would cost 8 per cent. That should tell the minister something. That should tell the minister that he has some pretty poor officials in his ministry and in the corporation. These were the people who thought out AHOP and who got the corporation into a financial mess in its mortgate insurance account and lost $600 million or $700 million. This is the group of people who now determine that the insurance fee should be 8 per cent for an AHOP mortgage. Yet this is the group that would go on and on with a program to add interest to debt and put people closer and closer to bankruptcy.

Surely the minister must see through the advice that he is getting. Surely the minister must, in that very analysis of his insurance fee, understand what has happened.

I made a suggestion yesterday in this House. I put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. MacLellan) who, I presume, has something to do with this particular field. I asked whether the parliamentary secretary could indicate whether the new provisions in this bill would enable the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to guarantee a fixed rate of interest for five years.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) had the floor.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, immediately before the dinner adjournment I was commenting on a question I asked of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I asked him if one of the reasons for the change in the insurance provisions of the act was to allow CMHC to guarantee a fixed rate of interest for five years on payment of an appropriate fee. I made that suggestion because that might be a worth-while thing for the corporation to do. I know the minister wants to ask me some questions with respect to where I or my party may stand, and I suggest that in the process he might answer that question.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with apartment shortages that exist throughout Canada. Clearly it is because of this government's program with respect to handling accommodation as an investment that we have gone from a situation where apartment landlords were prepared to give you a trip to Florida or three months rent free along with all sorts of other advantages if you signed a lease, to one where we have now in Mississauga, according to a report I received today from the corporation, a vacancy rate of 0.3 per cent. That is a reduction from 0.8 per cent in the past year, and clearly all the indications in the minister's own report with respect to rental accommodation are that we are very rapidly getting to the point where there will be absolutely no rental accommodation in the country.

In making that statement, Sir, I ask you to look at our past history. From 1971 to 1973 we were constructing 106,000 apartment units a year, and we produced them because we allowed the owners to deduct the capital cost and associated carrying charges from their other income. We treated apartments the same as we would any ordinary investment income. Now I want to point out that anyone who has ever been involved in the building business, whether building apartments, office complexes, a group of stores or shopping centres, knows the project will not carry itself in the first, second or third years from rent alone. In that case the owner or developer has to have some method whereby he can write off new project losses against other income.

Now ever since 1971, when we changed the Income Tax Act around, the tax laws have prevented those who would invest in rental accommodation from treating it as a business. The consequences are that if you are collecting rent and that is your only business, it does not qualify under the small business provisions of the Income Tax Act. You cannot write off the cost of a car used to collect the rent, or other things associated with that project. If the rent you collect is insufficient to cover your martgage interest or capital costs associated with the building, you cannot deduct those costs from other income. It has to be confined to the rental from the building.

Now, Sir, those very conditions imposed by this government in its tax changes have led to the situation where investors look at residential rental units as a no-no, something you do not want to invest in. And the minister wonders why we have a shortage. Now, of all things, we have a situation where the government comes along and says to those who build rental accommodation: Well, here is $7,500 for free, build us a suite.

That is not the way to go about it. We do not need the bureaucracy of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, we do not need a series of grants and a series of proposals to understand that there will never be a situation where any government can ever provide enough grants or make enough payments to individuals to get them to do something which does not make business sense.

I therefore ask the minister, who is here tonight, will he please look at the whole problem? He should look at the situation we had prior to these changes to the Income Tax Act with the surplus of rental accommodation we had in those years and compare it with the deficit in rental accommodation we have today. He would then realize that it is not the builders, it is not the developers, it is not the rich landlords and it is not provincial rent controls which have caused the problems. The problem has been caused because the economics of the matter, which have been determined by tax laws, among many other things, have militated against apartment construction. The $7,500 grant for each of 15,000 units is a bag of nothing. It will not solve the problem of the shortage of rental accommodation in Canada this year. It will not even go partway there. The minister will know that from 1971 to 1972 we built an average of 106,000 apartment units a year. In 1981, we built 52,000 apartment units, of which 35,000 had to be government assisted, and only 17,000 were built by the private market on its own. The forecast in the minister's own briefing notes is that there will be precious little, if any, construction next year without some sort of government assitance. The fact is that if we were to change the tax laws and get back to realities, we would wind up with a private market which would satisfy our needs.

I want to leave that subject of apartment shortages for a moment. It is a horrendous problem. It means that shortly people will pay key money to have an apartment. People who cannot afford an apartment will have to live with mother. As mentioned by other hon. members, the costs of a one-bedroom unit today amount to $750 to $800 a month, if the true costs were calculated.

However, aside from the social problems which this situation creates, we will get nowhere with this business of continuing to make grants in an attempt to bribe builders to build something which is not worth building, because they will not receive the financial returns they would normally expect to receive.

Let us really deal with the real problem. The problem boils down to interest rates. As Your Honour knows, we as a party held hearings right across Canada in 14 cities. One hundred and sixty-eight witnesses came before us. Many of those witnesses were involved in builder organizations and real estate board organizations. They were people who were concerned about housing and people in the housing field. When we asked what kind of interest rate people could realistically afford to pay under the present economic climate, the answers came back to us that it would be somewhere between 12 per cent and 14 per cent. The Hamilton district building group said that over a 14 per cent interest rate, every increase by one per cent eliminates 25 per cent of the purchasers. The same applies, of course, to apartment rents, because it is obvious that no one will build an apartment building without getting a mortgage on it, and one must pass the mortgage interest on to the rent charged. Therefore, we are not making any distinction between owners and renters.

What we must have is a government which is prepared to come to grips with the fact that interest on housing loans must be at a fixed rate, one which the purchasers or renters can reasonably afford to pay on the basis of their incomes. Somewhere along the line, a government must divorce the housing cost of money from the commercial cost of money for ordinary business transactions. This is because, when one builds a building, it should last for 25, 35 or 50 years. Indeed, the amortization of a building was originally thought to be a 50-year proposition. One is building a long-term asset, and the debt should be paid off in around 25 to 30 years. The debt must be guaranteed for that period, and the interest rate on that debt must be guaranteed for much longer than six months. It must be guaranteed for a year, two years or three years, which is presently the duration of guarantees today. Indeed, it must be guaranteed for a long period of time. If we are to end up with a government-induced high interest rate policy, the government surely has an obligation to ensure that people have a place to live. It should organize a pattern to ensure that people can borrow long-term money at a fixed rate of interest, on a fixed type of amortization plan.

I say to Your Honour that this government is proposing to come to this House with an expensive $350 million or $400 million plan. I am not exactly sure what the budget states. It strikes me that if one wanted to reduce interest rates by 2 per cent or 2.5 per cent per year, that would finance $15 billion or $16 billion worth of new mortgage money at a reduction of 2 per cent from, say, 18 per cent to 16 per cent. However, if this government were really interested in doing something, that is the kind of approach it would consider. It would say, "Look, we have to supply long-term plans at a rate which is perhaps less than the short-term treasury bill rate determined by the Bank of Canada's Thursday options."

Second, one would think that if the government wanted to do something, it would say to home owners, "Accept the suggestion of the home builders association." Why does the government not allow people to take their RRSP money, their registered retirement savings plan money, and invest it in their own accommodation?

Mr. Friesen: Right.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why should people not be able to invest it in themselves? Why should they have to put it with a mortgage company which can then lend it to someone at 16 per cent or 18 per cent interest and all the rest of that nonsense? Why can they not take their own savings money and put it in their houses and, of course, pay taxes on the money when it comes out of their houses when they eventually sell them or when they die? Why can they not take that money and reduce the amount of their indebtedness as a result? Is there anything wrong with investing in real estate, investing in oneself? That suggestion was made by the home builders. There is nothing wrong with it. However, we have not heard that type of suggestion from the Minister of Finance.

What other things can we do? I say to Your Honour that the mortgage tax credit plan which was introduced in the Crosbie budget was a plan which this government should be considering. It certainly has been considered by United Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in their brief to us from Sudbury. That union clearly came out in favour of that type of an approach to reduce interest rates. It would reduce interest rates in this market by 3 per cent to 4.5 per cent. There are a number of other things which could have been done. But this government's attitude is that housing is a great benefit. It thinks that home owners are making a profit because all of a sudden they are part of the tax expenditure plan, that they are costing the government $4.5 billion in taxes because their equity is not taxed, and that because they do not pay rent, which is a benefit, it is somehow not proper and not fair. If you make a capital gain on your home, that is not fair either. If you want to deduct interest over and above the interest you get to develop some real estate or to write off the soft costs you pay to your planner, developer or surveyor, that is not fair. If you want to write off the capital cost allowance, that is not fair because it would make it easier to own and easier to develop rental property. Again there is a tax on, of all things, loans by employers to employees to assist them in buying homes at lower rates of interest than normal. These housing loans should be taxed by the taxman, which would make it more difficult for people to live in a home.

The program of this government and its whole attitude toward housing is repugnant to our society. It is about time the minister looked at this bill and told the Minister of Finance that it is not much of an answer, that the program should be changed in order to come up with something that will attack the housing concerns of Canadians.

Mr. Cosgrove: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in today's proceeding the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) indicated he would answer a question. I had the opportunity to make reference to a comment by him recorded in Hansard. With the permission of Your Honour, I would like to proceed to that question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair might indicate that is not a problem ordinarily if a member has some time left in his remarks. He would then have the right to answer a question or invite other members to ask questions. Unfortunately, the hon. member for Mississauga South has used all the time available to him. If he indicates he would be willing to answer a question and the House gives its unanimous consent, there is no difficulty. Is there unanimous consent for some sort of an exchange?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cosgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members. I had the opportunity of referring to a comment by the hon. member for Mississauga South. I am sure the hon. member has the quotation. It is recorded at page 6932 of Hansard for February 5, 1981.

The gist of the comments was in the question earlier of the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). The question related to the opinion of the hon. member for Mississauga South who said, and I am paraphrasing, that British Columbia can look after its own housing problems, presumably because of the state of its finances. My question is related to the hon. member's responsibilities toward his constituency in the province of Ontario. Does the hon. member believe that the province of Ontario is providing adequate response to the problems identified with respect to housing by hon. members?

Mr. Blenkarn: I thank the minister for his question. It is my view, and I will not relate it as a party position because I do not propose to speak as critic on housing for our party at this time, that I essentially answered this question at the beginning of my speech.

The minister was engrossed with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who, I understand, has now developed an interest in housing.

Mr. McDermid: She is writing a new letter.

Mr. Blenkarn: My colleague says she is writing a new letter to the Prime Minister. I can understand that. I answered the question at the beginning of my speech. The minister did not hear me, so I will repeat it.

The real reason for the existence of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation since its inception was to make it possible for people to acquire money in a market by way of an insurance scheme. If CMHC would stick to that job, it would serve a purpose. However, when it decides all of a sudden to become the great "hander-outer" of money, it must be borne in mind that the real problem with respect to housing is dealt with by the provinces which have control over land, planning and things of that nature.

If the minister had followed my speech this evening, he would have noticed that at no time did I suggest further powers for the corporation. I suggested he look at this bill with respect to the possibility of using the insurance provision to guarantee interest rates for five years on an insured basis. I made the suggestion because that is the type of thing Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation may well be empowered to do just as the Government of Canada is empowered to control interest rates under the terms of our Constitution. But the Government of Canada is not really involved in building houses or financing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I did seek the unanimous consent of the House for the hon. member to enter into some sort of question and answer, but I did not think he would start another full speech. Perhaps we can get on, unless there is some need to complete that.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the bill before us in terms of the supply of affordable rental accommodation in Canada. Hon. members are very much aware of the difficulties encountered by Canadians in many parts of the country in finding suitable, affordable housing to rent. In many of our larger cities, the vacancy rate has dropped below 1 per cent, and 1 per cent vacancy rate means that only one apartment in a hundred is available for rental.

This problem is not a new one. Its origins go back as far as the early seventies when the cost of land, labour and material were rising very rapidly. Rents, however, did not rise at the same rate, and we found ourselves in a situation in which it was just not profitable to invest in rental construction.

In the mid-seventies, governments, both federal and provincial, intervened. The federal government offered tax incentives and subsidies through the assisted rental program. The provinces brought in rental controls. These measures, together, while providing help and protection for many tenants, prevented the increase in rents which might otherwise have occurred and which would have made rental construction a profitable enterprise.

Since that time, of course, continuously rising costs, coupled with high and volatile mortgage interest rates, have caused a further decline in rental activity. Unfortunately, the scarcity of rental accommodation affects low-income people most severely. Low-income tenants whose rents rise sharply are unable to find alternative accommodation. That is because no reasonably priced housing is being built. Rental investors are discouraged from construction activity because of high interest rates and rental problems associated with competing in a split rental market where older units are rent controlled and newer ones are not.

In these circumstances the people who are least able to compete in the market, such as single parent families, families with children, the elderly and infirm, are hardest hit of all.

The government has approached this problem from two directions. It has taken steps to increase the supply of rental accommodation and it has provided help for those who are most seriously affected by the shortages.

I know that hon. members are aware of the measures announced in connection with the budget which are designed to improve the situation. The Canada rental supply plan will make interest-free loans available to assist in the construction of 15,000 units across Canada in tight market areas.

Mr. McDermid: In the next two years.

[Translation]

Mr. Bockstael: The Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has travelled across the country to discuss the plan with the provincial housing ministers and hear their views as to how the available units should be allocated. The minister told us that some of the provinces were not satisfied with their share of the pie, and his answer to them was very straightforward. He asked them what resources they were themselves willing to set aside to solve the problem. Some of the provinces are willing to supplement the assistance provided under the federal plan through provincial programs. As explained by the minister, the units provided under the Canada rental supply program will give an additional impetus to the rental housing projects undertaken late in 1981 by allowing them to become eligible to use the tax measures concerning the write-off allowed for MURBs. The changes brought about by this bill allow the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, CMHC, to be of greater assistance to the contractors who are willing to take the risks involved in building rental housing in spite of the market conditions.

[English]

Because of the rigidity imposed on CMHC by the National Housing Act, as it now stands, the corporation has been unable to be as helpful in financing rental construction as it would otherwise have been. Until now the act has restricted CMHC to charging premiums of 1¼ per cent or 1⅛ per cent, depending on whether the insured loan is advanced in instalments or on completion of the building.

This rigidity, together with high mortgage rates and rising construction costs, has had the effect of further discouraging builders who contemplated constructing rental accommodation. I am told that at one point when mortgage interest rates reached 21 per cent, CMHC could not insure more than 50 per cent of the loan value of projects being undertaken.

Under current mortgage insurance underwriting practices, an increase of 1 per cent in mortgage interest had the effect of reducing the loan level by approximately 10 per cent. This relationship exists because the single largest item among the operating costs of a rental project is debt servicing. In some cases, for a variety of reasons, some developers are prepared to operate their projects at a loss. However, the risks involved in this type of operation are just too great to be insured with a premium fixed at 1¼ per cent.

This is one of the restrictive limitations which this bill would remove. The legislation now before us would delete from Section 5 of the National Housing Act any reference to specific premiums. In future they would be set by CMHC, subject to government approval, at a level which would be commensurate with the actual risks and costs involved. This change would be perfectly consistent with the intention of Parliament when the act was first introduced—namely, that the mortgage insurance fund was to be managed on full cost recovery principles.

This change will give the corporation the flexibility it needs in supporting rental accommodation and all other residential construction to alter its premiums according to changing markets and economic circumstances. More important, this bill will make it possible for CMHC to give more incentives to people who are willing to build such housing. This is in the interest of all those Canadians who are lacking affordable rental housing. CMHC will be able to increase its own levels without jeopardizing the mortgage insurance fund and permit entrepreneurs to get their projects started without having to put up an unjustifiable proportion of capital from their own pockets.

Such a change would not only be in the best interests of CMHC and the building industry but of all those Canadians who, by choice or necessity, rent their homes.

The current rental situation is only one element of the proposed legislation. Now I would like to touch upon the other themes. Before I do, I wish to emphasize just how important the Canadian rental supply plan will be to Canadians all across the country who live in areas where rental housing is in short supply or where population growth is expected to take place.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where is there a surplus?

Mr. Bockstael: The plan will help put into place up to 15,000 affordable rental units in target areas of need.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is just about enough for Scarborough.

Mr. Bockstael: I am thinking of markets in western Canada where the conditions of very low vacancy rates have created housing difficulties. Well known examples of such markets in the west are Calgary, Regina, Vancouver and Victoria.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about Mississauga?

Mr. Bockstael: I should also add, Mr. Speaker, that these much needed 15,000 units are over and above the 25,000 social housing units which the government is committed to provide in 1982.

Mr. Blenkarn: That gives us 40,000.

Mr. Bockstael: These will be provided under CMHC's non-profit and co-operative housing programs. Together, these two federal housing initiatives will produce 40,000 affordable homes for Canadians from coast to coast.

Some amendments may merely seem a dry recitation of technical modifications to an act which has been a major benefit to Canadians since its inception many years ago. But they are much more than that. On the face of it, permitting CMHC to increase its loan levels for the housing industry does not seem to have much impact on the housing consumer. There might not seem to be much connection superficially, but these so-called technical changes will enable those same builders to come into the rental market with units that will be put at the disposal of young and older families and individuals who might otherwise experience serious difficulty in obtaining the housing they need.

The Canada rental supply plan is only one part of the amendments under Bill C-89. The Canada mortgage renewal plan provides important assistance for people who would otherwise incur undue hardship when renewing their mortgages. The government will provide up to $3,000 a year, either in interest deferral or as an outright grant, to home owners who would have to pay more than 30 per cent of their gross income on payments of principal, interest and taxes and 50 per cent of condominium charges.

This is an honest and equitable way to deal with the problem. It targets the help to people who need it and restricts grants in this time of restraints to people who, through no fault of their own, have no equity in their homes.

Other important facets of the bill are the amendments which will enable CMHC to ensure alternative mortgage instruments. Once again this is directed in a very real way to the people of Canada. Potential first time owners have had problems recently getting into the home owner market because of high interest rates and short-term mortgages. Thanks to the amendments, these Canadians will be able to choose from a broader range of mortgage instruments designed to overcome these difficulties and improve access to home ownership.

I have already spoken at some length on improvements to CMHC's business operations and their importance to the Canada rental supply plan, but I would like to emphasize again that these amendments will have real meaning to individual Canadians. That is why we are here. We are here to put in place policies and legislation that respond to people's needs.

I am satisfied that this bill addresses major issues in housing today, but even this bill is only part of the government's housing thrust. Discussion is well under way on a comprehensive new rural and native housing program, which again will have a major beneficial impact on western Canada. As a longer-term priority, taking into account the need for fiscal restraint, research is continuing into the concept of shelter allowances. The minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has already mentioned these in his own address on this bill. I look forward to further action on these important housing fronts.

I will wind up my remarks by saying I believe Bill C-89 will enable the government to respond in an equitable and sensitive way to the current issues of mortgage renewals, rental housing, availability and access to home ownership, and I am pleased to support this bill.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that as I listenedd to my friend, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), who has just finished his speech, I wondered, coming as I do from the same city, how it was possible for him to make the speech he did, because all the people I talk to and all the things I read indicate that the situation is exactly the opposite to what the hon. member for St. Boniface indicated. I know housing prices in Winnipeg are probably less that 50 per cent of prices in cities such as Vancouver or Toronto.

The provincial department of industry and trade puts out a weekly report on various aspects of business life, and one of the items contained in that report every week is a list of the homes in metropolitan Winnipeg which were purchased in a given week two or three weeks prior to the release of the report. I have subscribed to that service for several years, and probably my friend, the hon. member for St. Boniface, also subscribes to that service. For years the list would run six, eight or ten typewritten pages. In the last two or three issues I have received—and I would be happy to show them to my friend, the hon. member for St. Boniface, if he has not seen them—the list has been down to one page. People in Winnipeg are not purchasing homes. They cannot afford to do so. They cannot afford the down payments, and they cannot afford the monthly mortgage payments. When the hon. member for St. Boniface says this bill will help first time home buyers, he is not talking about Winnipeg, and I suggest to him he is not talking about Canada.

The hon. member for St. Boniface also said that the provisions of this bill would take the pressure off people who are finding it difficult to meet their monthly mortgage payments when they come to renewing their mortgages. At some time last summer when the mortgage interest rate escalated from something in the neighbourhood of 12 per cent or 13 per cent to 17 per cent, 18 per cent and, for a period, to over 20 per cent, and when some Members of Parliament from both opposition parties started to ask the minister in charge of housing and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) about how people would deal with this problem, we received replies from both ministers that it was not a very serious problem, that most people who had to renew their mortgages were not having any real problems, that their incomes had gone up, that they could manage, and all that sort of nonsense. I wanted to find out what was happening in my own area, so I surveyed two housing developments in which the houses are probably ten years old or less. I sent questionnaires to residents in those two areas. There were 7,000 homes involved. I assumed, I think quite properly, that most people involved in buying houses are carrying five-year-term mortgages. The questionnaire was directed specifically to people who had to renew their mortgages in 1981-82. I calculated that there was a possibility of getting 1,700 replies. I could not believe what happened. I was receiving 50 replies every day, and eventually I received over 500 replies of a possible total, as I have indicated, of 1,700.

I want to put on the record some of the replies, and I hope the hon. member for St. Boniface and the minister are listening. One of the questions was:

> By how much did your monthly payments increase since you last negotiated your mortgage?

One man who replied indicated that his mortgage payments will go up by $300. In the space for comments he wrote:

> My wife has had to go to work to make it possible for us to survive. I resent having to pay $300 to the bank for absolutely nothing.

Another man said his mortgage payments will go up $333 a month. He said:

> Although we won't suffer "hardships" as long as we continue bringing in two full salaries, we cannot afford to start a family—

Another resident's mortgage payments will go up by $300 a month. That resident's comment was:

> We are a two-income childless couple. Having old fashioned ideas about a mother staying home to raise her children the increase in our mortgage will certainly decide for us whether to have children or not.

Here is another one:

> We purchased a house in April, 1981, and we received a 14½ per cent mortgage for five years, we were very fortunate, now we'll both have to work because we'll need both salaries to pay for the house. After five years we'll decide on whether or not we can survive on one salary—

I will read just one more. This party says that her payments have gone up by $235 a month plus $80. What does the $80 represent? She writes:

> The $80 represents AHOP portion which we were promised (documented) a rate of 11¾ per cent interest but which the federal government is now charging in excess of 21 per cent interest. For an initial loan of $3,690 under the new terms (which are unfair, underhanded and unjust) we must repay over $15,000.

I could spend all my time on this because almost every one of these 500 replies contained that kind of comment. Then the minister and the hon. member for St. Boniface tell us this program will help these people.

Now, the minister talked about this great program that the federal government has put into effect that is going to help these people who are caught in this trap. He said to my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) that it was like the Manitoba government program. The minister shakes his head. Yes, that is what he said—and nothing could be further from the truth. Let us just look at it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cosgrove: What are the facts?

Mr. Orlikow: What does the federal program provide? I will put the facts on the record and if I am wrong, the minister or one of his stooges will have an opportunity to correct the record.

What is the federal government's program? It is a program of interest rate deferral. If the interest rate is high, as it has been, they pay two per cent less on their monthly payments than the current interest rate. That is just a deferral. What they have not paid is added to the principal. The result is that the house owner will owe more on his mortgage next year than he did at the beginning of this year. I wish the minister would keep cool. The minister has suggested that people can get up to $3,000 in a grant. Our calculations are that the only people who will get that grant are people who bought homes under the AHOP program—which never should have been developed. They are the only ones who qualify for the grant. They are the only ones who would have less than the 5 per cent equity in their house contract and they are the only ones who would qualify for this grant.

Let us compare that with the program that the Manitoba government put into effect. Their program is not one of interest deferral. Their program is one of direct subsidy, not to the bank, not to the mortgage company, but to the person owning the house and paying for it in his mortgage, and the subsidy can be up to $275 a month on mortgages of not more than $40,000. That is paid if the principal, interest and taxes exceed 30 per cent of the household income.

Let me emphasize again that unlike the federal program, which is an interest rate deferral, which has to be repaid, this is a grant. Home owners who have renewed their mortgages between July 1, 1981, which is about the time when mortgage rates really skyrocketed, and December 31, 1981, will be eligible for up to 24 months of assistance, retroactive to January 1, 1982. Other home owners will be eligible from the time of their next mortgage renewal, and the assistance will be for up to 24 months.

I close this part of my speech, Mr. Speaker, by saying to the minister again that under the Manitoba program the home owners who receive assistance do not have to pay back the amount of assistance that they have received. That is entirely different from the program developed by the federal government. The minister may shake his head, but facts are facts. I can tell the minister that I spoke yesterday to two or three people who are leaders in that mortgage action committee, the organization of people who have really been hit by the skyrocketing increase in the mortgage rates, and they are very happy with the Manitoba program. They recognize that the rate of mortgage interest is really the responsibility of the federal government. They regret that the government of Manitoba is going to have to put millions of dollars this year and next year into this program, but they accept the fact that the government of Manitoba is moving in to meet a very important need in a field which is really the responsibility of the federal government.

We have been told that one of the main purposes of this bill is to alter the terms and conditions under which mortgage insurance is offered to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We have been told that this is one more way of getting more funds into the mortgage market. Every time a change is made to the National Housing Act, which relates to mortgages, the argument has been made that the change is necessary to make mortgage money available through the lending institutions. What do we see and what is the record in connection with this argument?

What we have seen is the 6 per cent ceiling on national housing mortgages removed in 1967. The requirement that mortgages be set at no more than 2¼ points above long-term government bonds was removed in 1969. Mortgages were supposed to go down to less than 9 per cent as a result. There has not been a mortgage rate below 9 per cent since then. The roll-over term in mortgages was introduced in 1973 to enhance the attractiveness of mortgages as an advance. Before that we had 25-year mortgages. We are told that we would have five-year mortgages that would really induce the lending institutions to put more money into the market. Now we are being told that we cannot have five-year mortgages, that we should have one-year mortgages. In fact, we are told that we should have mortgages that change every time the bank interest rate changes.

New mortgage rates are being introduced in this bill, the variable rate mortgage in which your rate changes every time mortgage rates go up. Under today's conditions this means that the mortgage rate could roll over every week when the bank rate changes. This will eliminate risk to the lender who presumably puts the money into the market. It also allows for more interest deferral. The changes in mortgage insurance will encourage the use of these vehicles.

There was a time when a mortgage was a debt which people incurred with full knowledge of what they were getting themselves into and what the total payment would be.

The people who replied to my questionnaire said they thought in 1975 and 1976, when the interest rate was between 11 per cent and 12 per cent, that they had a pretty fair idea of what they would be paying for all the years that they were paying for the house. Five years later they were getting the kind of increases to which I referred.

In today's market, in the way the government proposes to set it up, there is no way of determining how much the person would have to pay or how long it will take him to pay off the debt on the house. The provision for mortgage insurance on all these risk instruments which the government is proposing moves Canada ever closer to the permanent debtor society.

As my colleague says, they are AHOPing all houses—as if we have not had enough bitter experience of that disaster.

In allowing the insurance to determine the premium totally based on the risk factor, the people who can least afford the extra cost, that is, the home purchaser, will be asked to shoulder it, and the lender, who has better insurance cover for any risk he takes, will be encouraged to exercise even less discretion in providing it. Since second mortgages can also be insured, insurance will probably become a requirement for these loans, adding more costs and encouraging more people to get into debt way over their heads, which is exactly what happened when we adopted the AHOP program.

Who is going to benefit from this? Not the home owner. The people who are going to benefit from this are the banks. Let us just look at what is happening to the banks. In one year, between 1980 and 1981, bank profits went up by 37.7 per cent. The Bank of Montreal profit in 1980 was $263 million; in 1981 it was $358 million. The Toronto-Dominion bank profits went up from $182 million in 1980 to $255 million in 1981. The profits of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce rose from $192 million to $310 million in 1981, and the profits of the Royal Bank rose from $327 million in 1980 to $492 million in 1981. This was a total increase of $500 million in one year. This is the kind of money we require in order to build the housing units we need.

It was bad enough that the banks experienced tremendous increases in profits. It was even more insulting that the Liberal government allowed banks to get away with tax rates as low as 9 per cent in 1981, which was lower than the tax rate of people earning under $10,000. The average tax rate for the five largest banks in 1980 was 15.3 per cent, a paltry amount compared with the 50 per cent rate of a decade ago. If banks had paid taxes at normal corporate rates of 46 per cent, they would have paid $650 million to the federal treasury rather than paying approximately $225 million. The government wonders where to get money from; this is one area.

We in the New Democratic Party have a couple of proposals for the government and the minister. First, we propose a windfall profits tax to regain lost tax dollars banks should have paid. Second, it is time the government did what many governments in the western world have done, that is direct banks to set aside a portion of their loan portfolios for reasonably priced mortgages. Instead of such a program, we see a disastrous housing program which will exacerbate the deplorable situation in which many Canadians live.

It has been estimated that the housing needs of the country would be met if we constructed approximately 220,000 housing units this year.

Mr. Cosgrove: With the help of the NDP government of Manitoba?

Mr. Orlikow: The NDP government of Manitoba will look after itself. It will have to account to the people of Manitoba four years from now on its record. I have more confidence in the ability of that provincial government to be re-elected than I have in the ability of the present Liberal government, especially if it does not change its policies.

Rather than meeting that need, the projection for housing starts this year is somewhere between 145,000 to 165,000. A report in yesterday's paper indicated that housing starts for January, 1982, were at an all-time low. In 1979 there were 197,000 housing starts; in 1980 they dropped to 158,000, the lowest figure since 1966; in 1981 there were 178,000 housing starts. This figure will decline very substantially in 1982.

Hopefully we will receive these 160,000 housing starts, which is the top estimate, but what would be the effect if we built 220,000 units? If an additional 60,000 units were erected this year, it could involve an additional 120,000 jobs for construction workers, electricians, plumbers and construction material manufacturers. It would put some of the thousands of laid-off forest workers back to work. It would create a market for appliances so that the lay-offs, about which I asked the Minister of Finance earlier today, would be obviated, such as 800 people in an appliance plant in Montreal who were laid off last Friday. It would give some hope to the people who manufacture appliances, television sets, radios and plumbing supplies. These would be some of the results of an active housing program. These additional homes could be targeted as social housing. It would involve an additional $500 million expenditure to the Canada Mortgage and Housing budget. As I have already indicated, the funding for this could come from the windfall profits of the banks in 1981.

I take this opportunity to say to the minister that I am bitterly disappointed with the failure of the government to begin programs which would lead to the construction of new housing units and with its failure to bring forward programs to help stop the rot of the core areas of most Canadian cities. Such a program would permit people to remodel, refurbish and rehabilitate tens of thousands of homes, the quality of which has been reduced in the last 25 years. I am referring to houses in the core areas of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver from where we have seen an exodus of people. These are areas in which the schools, streets, sewer, water and power systems have been built and paid for. People are moving out of these areas to the suburbs. Schools in these core areas have been closing, while new schools costing tens of millions of dollars have been built and are being built in the suburbs. Why are people moving from these areas? It is partly because of the age of the homes and because the conveniences they expect to find in homes in the 1980s are different from what they were in the 1920s and the 1930s. We should have had for a long period of time, for at least ten to 20 years, very aggressive housing rehabilitation programs.

Mr. Cosgrove: Like the one we have in Winnipeg?

Mr. Orlikow: Like the one they are beginning again in Winnipeg. There was no need for these people to move to the suburbs. Years ago they paid from $20,000 to $50,000, and in recent years $100,000 or more, when homes which had been built years earlier could have been rehabilitated and brought up to present-day standards for a fraction of the cost. But the Liberal government was not prepared to say to the provinces and the municipalities that it was willing to co-operate and share in the funding of such programs.

This brings me to a program of which I am very proud. The new NDP government of Manitoba announced that it was reinstituting and starting at a much greater pace a program which was in place from 1969 to 1977, its critical home repair program. Under the program, pensioners will receive grants of up to $1,500, and low and moderate-income Manitobans who occupy their own homes will receive up to $3,000 in combined loans and grants. The premier announced that the program was established as a successor to the highly successful pensioners' home repair program. During those eight years some 19,000 homes were repaired at a cost of $17 million, of which some 14,000 homes were repaired as a result of applications made or approved during the 1975 to 1977 period.

Under the new program, here are some of the guidelines. The income qualification ceiling for pensioners has been increased from $10,000 to $14,000. A maximum $1,500 grant, not a loan, is available to those with an income of $7,000 or less. A sliding scale provides $1,100 for those with incomes of $9,000 to a minimum of $100 for those with incomes of $14,000. The government of Manitoba has increased the income qualification ceilings for families from $10,000 to $16,000. The income eligibility is adjusted to take into account dependants. Where adjusted income is $10,000 or less, a family is eligible for a $700 repayable loan at a fixed subsidized rate and the optional low interest repayable loan of $900 has a potential total of $3,000. The Manitoba government has increased the maximum potential grant for pensioners from $1,000 to $1,500. The government has increased the maximum potential grant or loan for low-income families from $2,000 to $3,000. The Manitoba government has reduced the effective interest rate for loan repayment to a fixed subsidized rate of 9.5 per cent over eight years from 14.5 per cent.

This is what the government of Manitoba did. This is a have-not province, whether it has a Progressive Conservative government or a New Democratic Party government. The government will not solve the housing problems of the city of Winnipeg, but the government is at least making a start and it is helping people who need assistance to rehabilitate the kinds of homes found in the core area of Winnipeg which need so much improvement.

I wish that the federal government, which has so much more ability to plan and fund these kinds of programs, would start something of that nature.

An hon. Member: It would have to clean house first.

Mr. Orlikow: Let me deal with just one more point. I wish that the government would reconsider the disastrous decision it made a year and a half ago to suspend and end the community services contribution program. That program replaced three earlier programs, the neighbourhood improvement program, the program to help municipalities fund sewer and water extensions, and another program.

When the minister announced the ending of other programs and announced the establishment of the community services contribution program, he said that it was designed to provide sewer and water systems, non-profit housing and improvements to neighbourhood facilities.

In a very short period of time, because of this insane insistence of the government that expenditures have to be reduced, that program which the minister announced with such great fanfare was ended. The program was created in 1978 to fill the gap left by three other improvement programs which were snuffed out by the government. It started out with a lower budget than the budget for the three programs it replaced. But the government committed itself when the same minister whom we have now committed the government to funding the new program for five years. Two years later into the program the minister said that the projects that had already been started would be funded to completion, but no more money would be provided to replace the community services contribution program.

What that meant for the city of Winnipeg was a very serious block in its plans to rehabilitate the older part of the city. Federal funds totalling over $12 million were made available to the city of Winnipeg for a project carried out between January 1, 1979, and December 31, 1981. Unfortunately, there will be no more funding of any projects after this year. With the federal government deciding not to replace the program, what we will have in Winnipeg and in other cities is a significant increase in the rate of unemployment and an almost complete stoppage in the plans to rehabilitate those areas which are seriously run down in Winnipeg, about which I know the most.

What we have had from this government and from this minister since the government took over has been retreat after retreat and stoppage after stoppage. As I have indicated by quoting from some of the replies I received to the questionnaire I sent out, this has put tremendous pressure on people who purchased homes in good faith five or six years ago. An almost complete stop has been put to plans of cities to rehabilitate their core areas. A virtual halt has been put on purchases of new homes. I do not have time to go into this, but we are seeing virtually the end of the building of rental accommodation, whether in the private or in the public sector.

When the minister prides himself that he is providing funds for the building of 15,000 rental housing units, he is not even talking about meeting the needs of one city, let alone meeting the needs of the whole country.

All of this disaster that I have recounted in the field of housing is only part of the picture. We see this kind of halt put to essential improvements in almost every phase of life of Canadians. We see it because the government, although it has not quite adopted the whole range of Reaganomics, has adopted the essential part of Reaganomics, and that is the idea that no matter what cost to people and to necessary institutions, somehow the deficit in government expenditures must be halted.

Mr. Cosgrove: We have not adopted their deficit.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister of Finance has said that this situation is temporary, that the economy is going to get moving in the United States some time this summer and automatically the Canadian economy, which is so closely geared to the American economy, has to pick up. One only needs to read a newspaper such as The New York Times to see how false that hope is. The President of the United States, that great conservative, who spent 20 years telling the American people that government deficits were a disaster, and if only he were elected he would do away with government deficits, is telling the American people that next year the deficit will be $96 billion. That is if the American Congress accepts the very sharp cuts in social welfare which the president proposes. If the Congress does not, and in an election year it is not likely to then they will be talking about a deficit of over $100 billion. The American government will have to go to the market to borrow the money. When the Americans do that, they will be competing with the needs of the private sector. The inevitable result of that will be an increase in interest rates in the United States and in Canada, since the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance have adopted a policy that Canadian interest rates shall be locked in with those of the United States. Therefore, we will be facing increased interest rates in this country. That, Mr. Speaker, will be a disaster for home owners, renters, in fact all the people of Canada. That is the inevitable result of this government's housing policies.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in the debate this evening and to be able to follow the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), or perhaps "the hon. member for a disaster about to take place" would be the more appropriate designation. I found it interesting in the extreme that he can see nothing but disaster, and that caused me to reflect just a moment, Mr. Speaker, that we as Canadians, all in the same boat as he professes to be in tonight, would have such a pessimistic outlook on the future of Canada, indeed of ourselves as individuals, as to make us all seek some kind of professional help to try to get up and out of these doldrums.

Mr. Orlikow: I would love to be proven wrong.

Mr. Daudlin: I just cannot perceive that anyone with so little optimism for the future could hope to be in fact representing those who sent him here. I hope those who are more optimistic about the future of Canada than he professes to be will write him and tell him that they do have a little optimism notwithstanding what he says here.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that he was quick to try to characterize the concepts and precepts promoted by this government by calling them Reaganomics. Yet, for some strange reason, he seems to be able to make the jump—by not having the kind of deficit forecasting that exists over there, the $96 billion at best and over $100 billion at worst—and criticize this government for allegedly following Reaganomics, and miss the fact we are not proceeding in that direction of deficits which he finds so abhorrent.

An hon. Member: You are worse.

Mr. Daudlin: I do not know how one can be on both sides of that chasm except that perhaps it is not a chasm, perhaps it is a fence and he is in the unfortunate position of being on both sides at the same time, which has the unfortunate consequence of being incredibly painful. Perhaps that is why he is so pessimistic tonight.

Mr. Orlikow: A beautiful night.

Mr. Daudlin: I wish to support Bill C-89, Mr. Speaker, a bill to amend the National Housing Act and the CMHC Act. I think one of the overlooked undercurrents in this debate has been the constant and responsible manner in which CMHC has performed its duties. I wonder how many other organizations have had the same record of excellence over the past 35 years. Perhaps it would do us some good to review the events for a moment.

Mortgage insurance was introduced in Canada by CMHC in 1954, and in fact the Government of Canada has been helping Canadians since the 1930s to fill their housing needs by making sure there is an adequate supply of mortgage money. CMHC emerged in the waning years of World War II. In its earliest years, when it was known as Central Mortgage and Housing, it administered joint public and private mortgage loans, although mortgage insurance did not come into effect until the mid-1950s.

The mortgage insurance fund was financed with premiums paid by borrowers, and it pooled the risks involved in mortgage investment. In addition, CMHC made direct mortgage loans in many parts of Canada where private loans were not available. When the MIF was established it was intended to be totally self-financing. Premiums were set at a level which would be enough to offset any claims which could be reasonably met. Of course, the fickle finger of fate, if I may describe it as such, caught up with this scenario. An unprecedented rise in claims created a liquidity problem for the fund since its accumulation of marketable securities was depleted and most of its assets were in real property, which CMHC had accepted in settlement of claims.

More important, there was a problem of solvency. Currently, the premiums which CMHC can charge for mortgage insurance are set out in the National Housing Act and cannot be adjusted except by an act of Parliament. This is one of the reasons why these changes to the National Housing Act must be made, so that CMHC can operate in a more businesslike approach. It is essential to the well-being of CMHC.

It has already been stated that the bill before this Parliament would allow CMHC to adjust mortgage insurance premiums, set them at a level appropriate for the risk involved, and sufficient to cover the cost and expenses of doing business. This arrangement would allow CMHC to insure new, innovative mortgage instruments which it could not cover under the fixed premium system. The CMHC application fee has never been really adequate to cover the shortfall out of operating revenues. They have been covered primarily out of surpluses which have accrued from its own direct loans to builders and home owners. I must say, in supporting this bill, that I find the CMHC approach to doing business to be totally responsible. This is evident in the amendments before the House.

The bill would in large measure correct this shortfall by permitting CMHC to charge application fees appropriate to the costs. In short, the fund would be self-sustaining. Furthermore, any surpluses accruing after costs and expenditures would be retained by the fund. This is only good business practice and would enable CMHC to undertake the normal business practice of setting aside surpluses in the good years to provide for any future deficiencies.

Keep in mind that the current legislation under which CMHC conducts its insurance business was framed and evolved in an extended period of relatively stable growth and low inflation. Times have changed, Mr. Speaker, and these changes to the act are responses to current realities. It is clear that the changes will make CMHC more responsive, more in tune with what is happening in the business and housing world.

There is a tremendous amount of resourcefulness in industry in this country. I firmly believe these changes will allow CMHC, in the housing sector, to play an important role in responding to the challenges of the eighties. There is no shortage of great ideas in the private sector. As a result of these changes, it will allow government to perform an essential supportive role, heretofore prohibited under the restraints of the old NHA. The changes are all intertwined: The terms and conditions under which CMHC may insure mortgages, the way it may charge for that insurance and the methods by which it may settle claims on these mortgages.

It is disappointing that some hon. members opposite cannot fully grasp the significance of these amendments which will allow CMHC to be more responsive and responsible. If it paid any heed at all to the comments from the other side, the government would have to spend probably billions of dollars on housing. And where will the money come from? The taxpayer, by whatever means. The members opposite must have some unshared wisdom about some untapped source of cash. When will they learn that the role of government, as has been amply demonstrated by this government, is to be both responsive and accountable to the people, the taxpayers of Canada?

Take, for example, the statements made in the House yesterday about the rental housing situation. A prime example of this, Mr. Speaker, is the Progressive Conservative housing critic's comments about the current rental housing situation. The hon. member seemed to be implying that the government was not meeting its responsibilities with respect to rental housing. Unfortunately, he was quoting out of context a document which was made public some months ago. Repeated attempts were made by the government to explain that the analysis of the rental housing situation in the document was based on a "worst case scenario".

I should like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it was in order to discharge this very responsibility that the scenario was drawn up. It permitted the government to review all options carefully and to propose the Canada rental supply plan, which is designed to put some 15,000 affordable rental units into place in the coming months. It is an equitable and responsible program, and indications from the development industry have confirmed a general support for the thrust of the program.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member complains that the rental supply plan is inadequate to meet all rental housing needs. In making that comment, we should all remember that the hon. member speaks for the same political party which would have privatized CMHC and diminished dramatically the federal government's role in providing affordable housing for all Canadians. I think emphasis should be drawn to that last statement. It should not be overlooked by this government.

There was also criticism that there had been no meaningful discussion with provincial housing ministers. During my time in the House since 1974, how many times have I heard that over and over again? One begins to wonder how one defines "meaningful discussion", and what it means to hon. members who, in fact, claim it has not taken place. Does it somehow mean that in order to have a meaningful discussion one must adopt the position of the opposite party? Is that meaningful discussion?

Mr. McDermid: That's what you guys do all the time.

Mr. Daudlin: In any event, whatever the definition, the claim and criticism is that there has been no meaningful discussion with provincial housing ministers. Once again, it seems to me that this demonstrates that the members of the opposition have not been listening. If they had been listening, they would have heard the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) say that he had travelled across the country to discuss the principal components of the proposed amendment to the National Housing Act. As a matter of fact, it might be worth while to quote the minister who indicated that he had discussed the legislation and that he was generally pleased with the response he received. The minister said:

> In my conversations with them I have emphasized that housing, in Canada, is a shared responsibility and that the provinces, as well as the national government, have a role to play in providing access to housing and particularly in responding to local needs and local priorities.
> I am happy to say that, in some cases, the provincial governments are responding to the federal initiative and are developing programs which would be compatible with the Canada rental supply plan.
> The federal government's initiative, combined with ongoing social housing programs, has been welcomed, as a contribution to the alleviation of a serious problem. I have given them the assurance that the available resources may be reallocated during the year if it is found that one region is not taking up all of the assistance that was designated for its use and there is an urgent need elsewhere.

I ask Your Honour, reflecting on what the minister has said, can a reasonable man conclude in any way, shape or form that there has not been discussion, that there has not been reflection on the issue and that there has not been a meaningful discussion with the provincial ministers? Even so, the claim is made.

I believe that Bill C-89 is a positive response to a number of problems confronting Canadians today. I have not gone into detail about the Canada mortgage renewal plan because it has already been covered in some detail by previous hon. members. However, once again, the renewal plan is an example of a program which is tailored to real need and to the need for restraint. No one in this House wants to stifle debate or worthwhile suggestions which could help to improve the supply of affordable housing. Indeed, it has frequently been suggested that we would not only be pleased to accept any good idea but that we would also adopt it and, if pressed a little, give credit to the author. However, that does not seem to be the purpose of what is going on in the House today. It seems, rather, to be simply criticism for criticism's sake, and that is unfortunate.

Improving access, supply and home ownership security is what this bill is all about; but unrealistically expensive and unworkable proposals which go against current thinking and the current economic and fiscal situation can only serve to delay implementation of sensible and targeted programs which would be of real benefit to Canadians across the country.

I commend the provisions of Bill C-89 to hon. members opposite. For the sake of both home owners and renters from coast to coast, I hope that there will be no undue delay in obtaining passage of the amendments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, before I begin my remarks I would like to announce the passing of one Daisy Graydon, who was the widow of the former leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and a former member of Parliament, Gordon Graydon, the former hon. member for Peel, which constituency he represented from 1935 to 1953. I know that two of my colleagues, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) sat with Mr. Graydon in this House. I know we all pass on our sympathies to the family and friends of Daisy Graydon.

I welcome this opportunity to speak on the subject of housing and the issues facing the Canadian housing market today and to discuss Bill C-89. It is a sad commentary on what we are going through today, but I have in my hand a bumper sticker which I came across just recently. It states, "I live in this car. Trudeau took my house". It is a shame that that type of thing has to be seen in this country.

Mr. Lewis: Laugh!

Mr. McDermid: Hon. members opposite think it is funny. Canadians often debate whether housing is a right or a privilege. Over the last year, we have seen the dreams of many home owners shattered and the aspirations of would-be home owners destroyed because of the failure of our economy and destroyed because of inflation and the high cost of money.

The present interest rate policy and the approach of this government in taxing the low and middle-income Canadians to the point where they have barely enough left to exist, and its approach to inflation, all contribute to a situation in housing which has reached crisis proportions, whether the government will admit it or not.

Most Canadians dream of owning their own home. That dream is being turned into a nightmare for some and a distinct impossibility for others. Everyone needs a place to live. Whether what we call home is a rental unit, an apartment, a single family dwelling or whatever, depends on our needs and means, but having a place to call home gives us security and roots. Whether we own or rent, the issue facing each of us is affordability. Some of the stories which have been told in the House over the last couple of days of debate are very true. A family in my riding has now doubled up. They have lost their home and have moved in with their parents. They are facing a very bleak time right now. I know of a couple earning $18,000 a year. The man drives a car and is now being taxed $3,800 for the privilege of driving that car. That raises his income and puts him in a different income bracket. He has just refinanced his home, but he cannot afford the payments any longer because of the new tax bracket which this government, with its inept budget, has put him into.

The shelter costs for a great many of us represent the largest, most important expenditure we make. Given the importance of housing to each of us, and given the fact that housing represents a basic right of all Canadians, how can this right be ensured by government? I believe and can honestly say that this government has done nothing to ensure affordable housing. It has done nothing to spur housing starts but has done just the opposite. It has eliminated any incentive builders may have had. However, being an optimist, I can say that it is not too late for a reassessment of our interest rate policy. I urge those Liberals with the courage to stand up for what was formerly the great Canadian dream to do so.

The current policies of this government are damaging every job-creating sector in this country. The Canadian residential construction industry was a healthy, viable concern until the last couple of years. Roughly 5 per cent of our labour force is dependent on this industry for jobs. The industry has no incentive to construct moderately priced ownership and rental housing. It is not constructing this kind of housing because it is being destroyed by high interest rates and by economic conditions as a whole. Two years ago, there were some 7,500 builders in Canada. Today, only 3,500 still survive, and that number is going down every day. If we look briefly at our population growth, the impact of our record low housing starts becomes very evident. Our population has grown tenfold in the last 130 years. Our over-all population growth has never been lower than 1 per cent. In my riding alone, the growth rate has been roughly 10 per cent per year over the past five years.

I would like to speak briefly with regard to a particular segment of the housing problem in my riding of Brampton-Georgetown. However, to really do the subject justice, I would like to refer to the Peel region as a whole.

The Peel regional government makes up the communities of Caledon, Brampton and also of Mississauga. It is under the chairmanship of Frank Bean who presides over close to half a million people. It represents a perfect example of the unwillingness of this government and its lack of foresight and planning.

As we all know, the federal government implemented AHOP. The minister refers to it as "a hope". Some say, no. It was implemented in 1973 to encourage construction of affordable new housing. When it was introduced, AHOP represented a major shift in federal housing policy. Previously CMHC had been concerned with supplying mortgage funds. AHOP was CMHC's first attempt, some hope it is their only attempt, to offer direct ongoing cash subsidies to home buyers and, oh boy, it failed.

The perils of AHOP in Peel have been and continue to be brought to the attention of the minister responsible for housing. However, until recently it would appear that the loopholes of AHOP have been of no great concern to him and his government.

The AHOP fiasco was foreseen by the Peel region, by the member of Parliament from there, and should have been seen by CMHC, but no one at the federal level could admit that there were problems with the government's panacea to housing shortages.

Jim Crozier, the commissioner of social services in Peel, made representations many times to the minister. AHOP owners groups made many representations to the minister over the years, and he did not listen. He did not listen until very recently.

When AHOP began, the rapid growth rates between 1971 and 1980 and available land made Peel a prime location for developers building under AHOP. In 1971 the population of Brampton was 70,838. In June, 1981, it was 148,150, an increase of over 100 per cent. The Peel region saw an increase of 79 per cent in that same period.

A large part of the AHOP problem was that too many AHOP units were built in Peel too soon. Inducements brought in buyers that should not have reasonably been expected to be buyers, and the ethics of the matter left much to be desired. This was discussed in the House many times.

Although AHOP did increase demand among families otherwise ineligible for home ownership, this subsidized demand was not enough to absorb all the AHOP units. The glut of AHOP housing had profound short-term effects on the retention of value.

Because of the imbalance of supply and demand in Peel, gimmicks to market the units were used; one dollar down payments, five month free rent options, low mortgage rates. Many of the people attracted to AHOP, 73 per cent, were young, first-time buyers. Closer credit screening would have saved many dreams. The real estate value of AHOP units created another problem. Values of many homes actually depreciated, and I know that to this day there are still units being sold under their original mortgage value. The ethics of the efforts of the developers and government to attract virtually any low-income family can be questioned. They had a responsibility. They did not live up to it.

Current figures show that 55 per cent of Peel's AHOP units have had their titles returned to CMHC as a result of foreclosure, issuance of power of sale or quit-claim deeds. That is 55 per cent, and the minister says this program is a success. The dreams of all these people have been shattered.

The number of AHOP units on CMHC's books constantly changes. There may be more coming on this year when people remortgage their homes. Currently CMHC has title to 527 units in my area. Of this, 351 are high rise and 176 are row. Last year 50 to 75 units per month were being returned to CMHC. What will it be this year? We do not yet know.

It was the AHOP issue and the dedicated work of people such as Jim Crozier and Marlene Grant that brought to light our serious housing problems. People became concerned, fearful, and began feeling helpless about the whole housing issue. The minister started to take note when they began banging at his door in Scarborough. He then realized that maybe something was wrong in this country.

Something that concerns me is that this system put these people into the homes. The system also kicked them out and shattered their dreams. When this happens, people rebel against the system. I do not want to see, and I know the minister does not want to see, people rebelling against the system, but when the system does that, it follows.

I would like for a moment to address a point repeatedly made by my friends in the NDP concerning the defaulted AHOP units. The solution put forward by that party over the last year, and by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) was to turn the vacant AHOPs into rental units. That sounds like a very commendable solution. However, it does not take into consideration the realities of the real estate market.

Home owners who had their hard earned savings invested in the purchase of their units became very concerned that the vacant units might be turned into rent-geared-to-income units. They were concerned about the retention of the value of their homes or about trying to get the value back to what they originally paid for it. If statistics can be believed, they had every right to be concerned.

Rent-geared-to-income units should not be proposed in ownership projects. Market values dictate that the ownership and rent-geared-to-income projects be kept separate, unless it is a co-op housing development.

In Bill C-89, which we are debating, the minister responsible for housing has finally seen fit to introduce legislation to pass the meagre assistance to home owners facing mortgage renewals. I sat through his speech yesterday. It was interesting to note his comments on the $3,000 grant being offered. What he failed to mention was the fact that very few people will be eligible to take advantage of this grant because the regulations are so severe.

This government grant does not begin to solve the mortgage renewal problem. What it does, I am afraid, is to postpone the inevitable. It will make those few who are eligible dependent on Ottawa for the very roof over their heads, a dependence which is very dangerous when one considers the philsophy of this government and its irresponsibility.

The minister's comments yesterday were of some interest. I wondered how he could stand in his place and say that the amendments in this bill will permit young families to buy their first home. That is beyond me. Is this bill going to lower the interest rates? Is this bill going to change our real estate market trends geared, because of economic conditions, to second and third time buyers who have existing equity? No. Mr. Speaker. It was enlightening to hear the minister for the first time admit that there has been a financial drain in the CMHC fund because of high AHOP defaults.

What is infuriating is that we on this side of the House have been asking for action for two years. It has taken this government two years to become, as the minister says, sensitive and concerned about the problem. Those are empty words. For people facing an escalation in shelter costs, there is very little good news, and this bill certainly gives none.

Returning to the role of the government ensuring our rights to housing, the erosion of real income and the escalation in shelter costs have shut out the vast majority of young people who are in search of accommodation. If the minister's riding is like my riding, I am sure that he has had young people coming to him every day of the week to ask how they will be able to afford a home or where they can rent an apartment. The fact is that these accommodations are just not available. The severe shortage of affordable rental accommodation no longer makes renting an alternative. By the end of 1982 there will be an estimated shortfall of 1,517 rent-geared-to-income units in Peel alone. The fact that these units are needed by families and senior citizens may not be of any concern to the minister but it is of great concern to me and to my constituents because if these shortfalls continue we are headed for severe hardship in my particular area of Canada and I know in the minister's area as well.

The minister stated that part of the $350 million for housing which was included in the now infamous budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will finance the rental supply plan over the next two years. We need 1,500 units right now in my riding alone. We do not need them tomorrow, not by the end of 1982, but right now. That is the waiting list. It is a legitimate waiting list.

The stimulus to construct 15,000 units over the next two years across Canada is quite infinitesimal, but it coincides with everything else the government is doing. For example, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) stood up and said, in answer to a question today about high interest rates, that the government gave $25 million to some group that is going to create thousands of jobs. We know that is not true, knowing the cost of creating one job.

Now this minister is throwing a little here and there—they are all doing it just to say, "Are we not great? We are doing something." But they are not really doing anything.

I sat here yesterday and listened to a number of Liberal members talk about the Progressive Conservative proposal for mortgage interest deductibility and property tax deductibility program. I think it is time that we dispelled some of the myths that the government constantly enjoys creating. My hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson), stood in his place yesterday and had the audacity to state that our proposal would have been unfair.

Mr. Cosgrove: To renters.

Mr. McDermid: I will come to that, Mr. Minister. According to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, a deductibility program for any type of expense always benefits higher income taxpayers. I would suggest to him that the realities of paying a mortgage do not solely belong to higher income earners, something which may be a revelation to members opposite because they are all high income earners. Most people who have mortgages are not rich. I invite the hon. member to tell the young families in my riding who are struggling to pay their mortgages that they are rich. I invite the hon. member to come to Bramalea and to the villages of Heart Lake where it is the ambition of young families—who would benefit greatly from a deductibility program—to pay off their mortgages, to tell them that they are rich. These families make up the majority of my riding. I ask the hon. member to tell them that they are rich.

The rich have always had the same deductibility benefit which the Liberals consider unfair for middle and low-income earners. The proceeds from a mortgage are invested, and the interest has always been a tax write-off, and still is to a limited extent, of approximately $10,000 a year. Why would a deductibility program extended to an average Canadian home owner be unfair? It would effectively reduce their mortgage interest by 3½ per cent to 4 per cent right now. Would it be unfair to renters?

Mr. Cosgrove: Yes.

Mr. McDermid: In answer to the minister, his government introduced the measure which enables the owner of the rental unit to deduct mortgage interest as a business expense. They have always had that privilege. This has helped to keep rents lower than would have otherwise been the case if deductibility was not available to the owner.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is a scam.

Mr. McDermid: I can tell the minister, Mr. Speaker, that if that were not there, rents would be tremendously higher. Owners already have that privilege.

Mr. Cosgrove: Higher than $1,000?

Mr. McDermid: That is another myth the government likes to spread around. They have had that particular privilege for a very long time.

Mr. Cosgrove: Is that why you have rent control in Ontario?

Mr. McDermid: That is right. Therefore, I ask where the unfairness is in our attempt to help the home owners who needed help the most. It would help senior citizens stay in their homes a little longer because they could deduct the property tax from their income to give them a little better chance to stay in their homes instead of being forced out because of higher taxes.

I would also like to tell the parliamentary secretary that, with regard to those people who are renewing three or five-year mortgage plans who, according to him, have experienced significant increases in equity, equity does not mean a thing unless that property is sold.

I would like to reiterate that if what is contained in Bill C-89 is all that the government is willing to do or to propose to alleviate some of the problems facing us, then let us get on with it.

At this point I would like to congratulate the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I am thankful that the minister has stayed in the House during the full debate. That is a rare occurrence with this government. He is to be congratulated for that. As a matter of fact, I feel sorry for him because I genuinely believe that he does have some concern for the home owners, but I think that the Minister of Finance and his cabinet colleagues have hung him out to dry.

Mr. Cosgrove: Have you read the Matthews report?

Mr. McDermid: That is three years old. Why do you not do something?

Mr. Cosgrove: You have it in front of you.

Mr. McDermid: The provisions in Bill C-89 are not adequate. It will not encourage adequate housing starts. People who are renewing mortgages are not adequately assisted, and the rental accommodation shortage is not adequately addressed. However, it is obvious that the meagre aid in Bill C-89 is all that Canadians will get. The government has been too slow in attaching any significance to the housing question. Far too many people are suffering, and this, combined with the negative effect of the so-called budget, paints a dismal picture.

When you add the housing situation to the economic picture, the lack of confidence in this government which is evident across Canada is very understandable. Nothing could serve the national interest more than a few resignations by members opposite. As a matter of fact, if the government is doing everything right, as it says it is, and if it has the support of Canadians, I challenge the Liberal government to call an election now based on its budget and its housing programs. The people of Canada will get rid of an unimaginative and uninspiring group of incompetents and save them the embarrassment of resigning. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—(A) IMPORTATION OF LIGHT TRUCKS (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, when I rose last week to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) a question regarding the importation of small Japanese trucks, I was only touching upon a small part of an extremely large problem. Two questions during our daily question period cannot address the real problems facing our automobile industry. The question put to the minister is symbolic of the whole problem. Let me be a little more specific and you will see the dimensions of the problem.

When the Japanese ministry of international trade and industry wrote to our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on June 4, 1981, an understanding on a quota was reached with respect to automobiles. We agreed to increase our quota by 10 per cent over the 1980 import totals. The Americans negotiated a 6 per cent decrease in their import totals of Japanese automobiles. Light trucks were not part of our quota consideration and, as a result, light truck imports increased 122 per cent over the previous year.

Three of our domestic manufacturers have introduced light trucks comparable to those imported from Japan. We are presently levying a tariff of 12.9 per cent on imported trucks. That tariff is due to decrease to 9.2 per cent under a GATT agreement which we have signed. When we look at the American action in this field, we see that the Americans levy a 25 per cent tariff, and they do not intend to reduce that tariff under the GATT agreement. In other words, they are going to take a tariff protection route for the domestic manufacturers of small trucks.

My point is that with domestic production under way in North America in light duty trucks, does it not make sense to have a quota and a stabilized duty of even 12.9 per cent? If we do this, we will assist our domestic production in getting a foothold in the marketplace. To do otherwise would add to a problem which is already out of hand.

We have only had one year of surplus since the auto pact was signed. Each year our balance of payments in the automotive account has been in deficit and is growing and growing by gigantic leaps and jumps. The standard reply that 50,000 jobs have been created is what we usually hear from the minister. However, with the downturn in the industry, many of these jobs are now becoming redundant. The pressure for change in the auto pact has been building for a number of years.

A few years ago the government decided to hire a consultant to review the auto pact and to make recommendations. The government employed Simon Reisman, a former deputy minister of industry, who was one of the architects of the original auto pact. Naturally, Mr. Reisman found little wrong with the agreement he helped put into place. I recall attending a meeting with Mr. Reisman at which he simply put down anyone who was critical of the auto pact. Even at that time we could see the tremendous disruption which was taking place in our balance of payments. Of course, after listening to Mr. Reisman, I left in disgust.

A very large part of our current account deficit is tied up in the automobile industry. We are dumping more and more money into a variety of programs, only to see them fall apart down the road. It is this type of patchwork approach we have to stop. We must review the whole matter with a sense of urgency.

I see a decline in the manufacture of heavy duty trucks in Canada; this spells trouble for the transportation of goods down the road. It is just not attractive to become an investor in the automobile industry today, and yet we see a pent-up demand building which is being held up by high interest rates. I am not convinced that the minister, his department and the government are really aware of the size of the problem facing us.

If the negotiators meeting with the Japanese do not insist on a quota for light trucks, my statements will prove to be correct. A realistic look at the auto pact over the last 18 years shows that in the early stages our Canadian content was 58 per cent. In 1981 that slipped to 56 per cent. In other words, after 18 years of involvement in the auto pact, Canadian content dropped 2 per cent rather than going up as it should have.

We are a mobile society. The automobile, the light truck and the heavy duty truck will be with us for as far as we can see ahead. I want the minister to tell us when we will begin to address this very, very serious problem.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my good friend, the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). Let me first look at the reality. Japan is one of our main trading partners. In 1980 we exported $4,345,-474,000 worth of goods to Japan and imported from Japan $2,791,516,000 worth of goods. In other words, we sold a little over $1.5 billion worth of goods more to Japan than we imported from Japan. If there is a complaint, it is a complaint from Japan's side that we are not purchasing more from Japan.

The figures are deceiving. I have carried the hon. member's figures through somewhat. His thesis is that because we do not have the 25 per cent tariff the United States has—our tariff is only 12.8 per cent—that is damaging and we should do what the United States has done.

Two years ago, and we are talking about mini-trucks specifically, the Japanese had six per cent of our market. Last year they had 11 per cent; and this year, in this short period, it is 16 per cent. That is, with a tariff of 12.8 per cent. The tariff in the United States is double that amount; it is 25 per cent. Yet for the last three years the Japanese share of the United States market has been 20 per cent. With double tariff, they have a larger share of the United States market.

We are now concerned. Earlier this year we reached an agreement on passenger cars with the Japanese, that from April 1, 1981, to March 31, 1982, they would not export more than 174,213 cars, to Canada.

Mr. Corbett: That is 10 per cent above the 1980 basis, it is not light trucks.

Mr. Irwin: It does not include light trucks, that is right. But General Motors is now in the mini-truck business, and I hope their truck is productive. I find it humorous to hear a spokesman for that great party of the free enterprise system here in Canada telling Canadians that once again we should protect American companies operating in Canada, the three of them, because they are not operating productively.

I spoke to a superintendent of U.S. Steel on Sunday about the car market and he said that with inflation going down and interest going down, hopefully, we still have the problem on this continent, especially with U.S. Steel, that the Japanese are manufacturing their automobiles and trucks at $10 U.S. per hour and the Americans are manufacturing theirs at $20 U.S. per hour. You cannot blame all that on labour. This involves an attitude, a matter of reinvesting in modernized equipment. More tariffs, as the hon. member has suggested, create more subsidy to inefficiency. I note that my time is up. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—POSSIBILITY OF LEASING EQUIPMENT FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a very high regard for the men and women in Canada's Armed Forces. I feel that they fulfil their function admirably and under considerably great difficulty. I have a high regard, too, for the gentleman who is our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), who was himself a gallant soldier. I feel that Parliament's function is to indicate to our Armed Forces the role that we want them to perform and then to give them the personnel and the material to fulfil that obligation. It is in supplying the Department of National Defence with the personnel and material that I feel we are not fulfilling our function adequately as parliamentarians. Tonight I would like to indicate some constructive measures that I hope we can consider in fulfilling that obligation.

It is my opinion that our Armed Forces are understaffed and underequipped because they are underfinanced. In 1963, 24 per cent of Canada's budget was allocated to the Department of National Defence. This year 8.6 per cent of our budget is so spent. In 1963 we had 120,000 men and women in our Armed Forces, and today we have 80,000. In the year 1980-81 we budgeted $5.04 billion for national defence and in 1981-82 we will increase that to $5.9 billion.

Over the years our increases in real dollars when stripped of the inflation factor, barely meet 3 per cent requirement of NATO. We are at the lower edge of prudence in that regard. I think we met that requirement this year, thanks to the expenditures for new fighter aircraft.

Speaking of our new fighter aircraft, we expect the first copy of the 137 F-18A Hornets to be available this fall, probably in October. Two years ago when we signed the contract for this fighter aircraft—and it is badly needed—we felt that the estimated cost would be $2.3 billion. Right now the estimated cost is $5 billion. This increase in cost is certainly not entirely the fault of the Department of National Defence, but it raises some question which I think we should address about the viability of the management process and ongoing re-equipment planning in terms of the Armed Forces.

It has been 11 years since we have had a white paper on national defence. It is just about time we took a look into the future, did some planning and had another one. In the army component of the Armed Forces we have trucks which are older than the drivers. This is the situation in regard to much of our mobile equipment. We have 19 tanks stationed in Canada and the rest are with NATO in Europe. These 19 tanks are barely enough for training purposes. The Leopard tank, about which I am speaking, is an excellent tank, but its numbers are so small that it can fulfil very few functions. We have received reports that in western Canada some members of the Armed Forces exist on welfare. I should like to see the report rebutted, and I hope the opportunity to do so will be taken tonight when the parliamentary secretary replies to this allegation.

Our navy has four 280 Tribal class destroyers. These are efficient and can give good account of themselves. The other grand old ships of the line are regrettably just about 30 years old. They can get the steam up when their boilers are not cracked, but they have to stay pretty well within hailing distance of ports because of their advanced age. The St. Laurent was sold two years ago. While it was being towed down south to be junked, the towline broke and the St. Laurent sank; that is the sad story of our navy. We have four Oberon class submarines, three on the east coast and one on the west. They take their turns being patched up because they are 20 years old. The one on the west coast is in dry dock most of the time. We have six frigates in the definition contract stage. This contract was varied or altered once. I cannot say with reliability when they will come on line, but I can say that they are very badly needed.

What will we do about the situation? It will cost a tremendous amount of money to purchase new equipment. Canada has very extensive shoreline in the north, on the east and on the west. We have a small population with a limit to what we can raise in revenue, as well as tremendous demands on our dollars.

My suggestion is that we should take a page out of World War II experience, when we had an excellent lend-lease program with the United States of America, and that we rent or lease equipment from the Americans. What about our sovereignty? Can we do this and maintain our sovereignty? What about Canada's defence industry and our superior training methods? Will the Americans be interested? We will never know until we ask them, but I think the answer would be affirmative because the Americans have been our friends in peace and our allies in war. They know our economic situation and our limitations. We supply the defence for their northern frontier. They have large amounts of equipment and a tremendous budget which will be increased. The amount for which we would lease from them would be infinitesimal. If we enter into a contract to lease from them, we can protect our sovereignty and perhaps receive some spin-off benefits in terms of defence construction for Canadian industries. I notice my time is almost up. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, for your indulgence.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on the surface the idea of leasing military equipment as proposed by the hon. member would appear to have some merit, at least in theory. In practical terms, however, this is an option that has not normally been entertained for a variety of reasons which I will try to outline.

There is an interdepartmental committee under the chairmanship of the Treasury Board secretariat that studies instances wherein leasing could constitute a desirable means of satisfying certain facility and equipment needs. Unfortunately, in the case of military equipment, the Department of National Defence has no knowledge of any such modern equipment, compatible with Canadian requirements, that is available for lease. While it is entirely possible that upon investigation some equipment could be found it is most probable, however, that the owner nation would have already discarded such equipment as being either too old, beyond the state of economic repair, or requiring considerable modernization to make it capable of contemporary utilization. I am sure the hon. member does not want us to be second cousins to anyone in the military department.

In most cases, modern equipment not actively in use by owner nations, is normally required by these nations as reserves in time of war and it is unlikely that they could be made available for long-term lease. In general terms, it can safely be said that the equipment must fit the task to be performed.

Certainly, this is very relevant to the point made by the hon. member in his original question in which he said that we had only 19 Leopard tanks in Canada. On this point, I would like to correct him by informing him that we have 43 tanks in Canada.

Mr. Howie: Not in Canada.

Mrs. Appolloni: In Canada.

Mr. Howie: The rest are in Europe.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I gave the hon. member the courtesy of my attention. Surely he can reciprocate. Even as a Tory, he might have some good manners.

Mr. Howie: Try to be accurate.

Mrs. Appolloni: More important is the point that tanks do not have a significant part to play in any of the defence of Canada scenarios. If we do have tanks at Gagetown it should be clear that they are for the training of the armoured personnel who will man our Leopard tanks stationed in Europe where they do have an important operational task.

The question of Leopard tanks is more interesting in some other aspects, and I can understand the hon. member basing his question on the fact that we did, a few years ago, rent that type of equipment from our German allies. But we must put this matter of the tanks in the correct context. The short-term leasing of Leopard tanks made imminent good sense because we were getting that very type of equipment in our own inventory shortly thereafter.

A factor that is not readily understood and one that is omitted from the member's comment is the fact that the rental of equipment itself is only one very small part of the total defence equation. Ancillary questions that must be considered include the retraining of operations and maintenance personnel, additional spare parts and support equipment requirements, the compatibility of current ammunition holdings, and, most important of all, the capability of the equipment to fulfil the task at hand.

I see that my time has run out, although I could have gone on at length, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—(A) COMMITTEE STUDY OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B. (B) MINISTER'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, on November 8, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) confirmed that the U.S. F-18 Hornet fighter plane will not be based in Chatham, New Brunswick, but instead will go to Cold Lake, Alberta, and Bagotville, Quebec. He confirmed that the squadron presently based in Chatham will be phased out and, indeed, the existence of the air base itself has become very much in question. The personnel that are based there will be transferred or laid off, as the case may be. That announcement was made on November 8, 1981.

By December 15, the minister had used the typical ruse of this government of giving the air base a reprieve. He postponed the replacement of the fighter squadron until 1984. We have seen this sort of thing happen several times. It is part of the old syndrome of "Boys, we will rip your head off"; only to hear then, "Don't worry, fellows, we don't really mean that, we are just going to break your legs".

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) did the same thing when he talked about indexing pensions and other things which would have had a severe consequence to some of our pensioners. When it ended, it was just an ugly rumour and it wasn't really going to happen at all, but he would not close the door to it. This seems to be the way this government operates, and that is a little disconcerting to say the least.

The minister met with the leaders of the region during the latter part of December and assured them there would be some things happening in Chatham. He would not be specific but said there was going to be something in Chatham to alleviate the base closure. He said he would get back to them in January or February and in the meantime was going to set up an interdepartmental task force made up of various deputy ministers from however many departments were involved, and said they would report to Parliament by the end of January. They were going to be charged with the responsibility of making suggestions as to what they were going to replace that base with.

On February 3, Mr. Speaker, after telling the minister I wanted to know what suggestions the task force had made and what suggestions he was going to make to cabinet, I asked the minister:

> Will the minister now tell the House what recommendations that committee has made?

The minister's response was:

> Madam Speaker, the answer is yes.

What kind of a response is that, Mr. Speaker, to a quite explicit question? I simply asked if the minister would tell the House what the committee's recommendations were and he answered:

> Madam Speaker, the answer is yes.

Then he went on to explain that Canada's security was well taken care of, which is not at all what I asked him. After I reminded him of that, he did indeed respond in substance, because I believe he was embarrassed into some kind of response that at least alluded to the fact that I had asked the question.

Let me just give you a brief history of the role of this base in Chatham. It has in the past played a very important role in the defence of Canada in the Atlantic Coastal Canadian Identification Zone. We are told by National Defence people that there is an increase in Russian Bear aircraft travelling in this zone.

Mr. Speaker, you point to your watch; I would just like to confirm that I do have seven minutes, and I have used three of them now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member has until 10.25.

Mr. Corbett: As I recall, Mr. Speaker, I got on my feet at 10.20. But at any rate, let me simply say that this base plays a very important role. The minister will say that they are moving the F-18 aircraft to Bagotville because it can take care of the northern regions of Canada which must come under scrutiny as well. Let me tell the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, in case he does not know it, Chatham is located at a more northerly position in this hemisphere than is Bagotville. In addition, it is farther east and is therefore closer to the identification zone and certainly in a much better position to identify these aircraft.

We also have a very important situation in that over 3,500 people will lose their jobs in the Chatham area. That will mean the loss of $25 million or $30 million in wages and an additional $12 million in lost spin-offs.

The people at Chatham are looking for replacements. They are looking to this government to do something about the situation in which they find themselves. They are concerned, and they have every right to be concerned. I have asked the Minister of National Defence to tell the people of Chatham, in specific terms, what replacement for the air base he will recommend to his cabinet colleagues. I have asked him to assure those people who will lose their jobs, and their families, the townsfolk of Chatham and the businessmen of the community who will be greatly affected by this closure that, indeed, the government will be taking specific, positive steps to ensure that all of that lost income will be replaced, as the minister and the government has suggested in very, very general terms. I expect that the assistant to the minister will now be very specific and will answer the question.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I would like to emphasize to hon. members present, and especially to the people of the Miramichi region, that the decision to locate the eastern operational base of our new fighter aircraft, the CF-18 Hornet at Bagotville, was taken with the best military and strategic intelligence available. A thorough analysis of all basing postures was completed before a final decision was reached.

In the context of protecting Canadian sovereignty in the military sense, of course national defence would have preferred to operate a larger number of bases, thus ensuring adequate overlap of air defence coverage. However, when all factors were weighed and considered, it became necessary to compromise in certain areas.

There were three main factors considered in our deliberations with regard to the selection of the best location for our bases: peacetime sovereignty; threat and air defence considerations and, of course, cost.

In the initial stages of the program, operational research staffs completed a detailed study of all basing operations and detailed comparisons were made among the various options identified.

Mr. Corbett: Why Bagotville?

Mrs. Appolloni: For eastern Canada it was found that, given the technical capabilities of the aircraft, geography, weather, etc., the optimum locations for the protection of peacetime sovereignty were Bagotville, and Goose Bay as back-up.

Mr. Corbett: What about the G.I. considerations?

Mrs. Appolloni: With regard to the second factor, that of the threat and air defence considerations, based on our strategic assessment of the continental threat to North America having regard to Warsaw—

Mr. Corbett: What about the lost jobs?

Mrs. Appolloni: —pact basing deployments, radar coverage, probable axis of approach defence coverage and other strategic military considerations, Bagotville and Goose Bay were again determined to be the optimum operating bases.

Finally, the cost factor played a very important role in our decision. Our present fleet of fighter aircraft consists of some 190 aircraft, of three different types. While the Department of National Defence was not able to replace the old aircraft on a one for one basis, the maximum number were purchased within the allocated budget. This reduction in fighter aircraft units, together with the extremely high cost of ground support and test equipment, led the department to the conclusion that two main bases, plus two deployment bases, would be the maximum infractructure—

Mr. Corbett: What about the lost jobs?

Mrs. Appolloni: —that we could afford within the program budget.

Mr. Corbett: The economy!

Mrs. Appolloni: All hon. members are aware of the constraints that we are currently under.

Mr. Corbett: $33 million!

Mrs. Appolloni: When all these factors were considered in concert, the threat, the protection of Canadian sovereignty and the cost, it was concluded that the CF-18 should be flown from two main operating bases, Cold Lake and Bagotville, and two deployment bases, Comox and Goose Bay. The decision was based on strictly military, strategic and economic considerations.

Mr. Corbett: Politics!

Mrs. Appolloni: These are the facts, Mr. Speaker. They speak for themselves. To suggest, as the hon. member does, that we are somehow abandoning the people of Miramichi is sheer hogwash.

Mr. Corbett: Yes, but what are you going to do?

Mrs. Appolloni: We have a committee which is working with the people of Miramichi along with our able Member of Parliament for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne).

Mr. Corbett: What does it have to say?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I know the hon. parliamentary secretary will understand that the Chair has no choice but to interrupt. Three minutes is the limit for answering.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, at this time the House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

POLAND—VANCOUVER MEETING RESOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On January 30 in Vancouver the Liberal cabinet representative had to leave the "Poland for the Polish" rally before the adopted message of the meeting could be given to him. He had to leave to attend the Vancouver Canucks hockey game. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the House receive and adopt the message of that day which asks the rhetorical question: "Is it wise to continue trading, including trading in foodstuffs, with a junta which violates every edict of the Helsinki Accords by building the Iron Curtain higher and stronger than it has ever been around Poland; moreover, is it wise to continue trade with a junta that has nothing in common with the spirit of the Canadian Constitution and its article we hold dear—namely, Peace, Order and Good Government—that is, responsible government? Is it wise to trust such a junta and expect the exported food to reach the people of Poland?"

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—POLICY OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Some members of the New Democratic Party have been creating the illusion that they would not change the Crow rate if they were in government. Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan is quoted in the January, 1982, edition of Business Life as saying:

I think it is clear that the railways should get additional compensation for the grain they carry. Whether they get it from other resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which they got as part of the bargain, or whether they should get it from the Government of Canada, or whether they should get it from the shippers or some combination thereof, is perhaps what the bargaining is all about . . . but the perception of our government really is that the farmers ought to keep the benefit of the Crow rate.

If we want to address the issue of who is to pay the additional compensation to the railways, we are prepared to address that issue.

Therefore, since it is clear that the policy of the NDP is not to keep the Crowsnest Pass rate, I move, seconded by the hon. member from Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the NDP commit itself immediately to full public support of Liberal attempts to change the Crowsnest Pass rate so its public position reflects its real position, which is to abandon the Crow rate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MINISTER URGED TO INTRODUCE NEW MEASURES FOR BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the fact that unemployment in Canada has reached the point of crisis, and considering that economic forecasters feel that the unemployment rate could reach as high as 10 per cent in the coming months, with no indication of government action, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Minister of Finance stop beating around the bush by saying that he is considering representations from Canadian business and industry and immediately introduce new measures which would assist in bringing Canada out of economic oblivion and create better employment opportunity for Canadians who have lost all hope and trust in their government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL FUNDS NOT BE USED TO AGGRAVATE UNEMPLOYMENT CRISIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an important and urgent matter. Considering that the conversion program launched by the Domtar Company in Donnacona, Quebec, will eliminate 125 jobs out of 600, while remaining eligible under the federal-provincial assistance program for the pulp and paper industry; and considering that 57,000 jobs have already been lost in Quebec in one month alone, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the House urge the government to provide a guarantee that federal funds will not be used to worsen the current unemployment crisis in Quebec and throughout Canada.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED COMMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG-ASSINIBOINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Chénier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chénier: I am really proud that my fan club is in good form on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chénier: In view of the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has refused twice this week to retract statements he made about the black population of South Africa, and in view of the fact that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has denounced his colleague's statements, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael):

That the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition make a statement to this House on whether he plans to follow the example of his predecessor, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, when he expelled the previous member for Moncton, Mr. Len Jones, for making similar remarks.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE APPLIED TO AUTOMOBILES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Every person who has ever purchased an automobile knows that when that automobile is driven off the lot it has depreciated by 10 per cent to 20 per cent. Indeed, in the first year the value of a new automobile, in most cases, depreciates at least 30 per cent, if not more. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House condemn the reduction in the first year capital cost allowance with respect to automobiles as totally inappropriate as it fails to recognize true depreciation and reality, is unfair, and particularly damages our ailing automobile industry.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS REQUESTED FOR DEFENCE OF MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, it is becoming increasingly clear that the RCMP security service was acting under the direction of top Liberal policy advisers, cabinet ministers, and indeed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Whereas the continuing harassment of the RCMP is completely demoralizing the finest police force in the world—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: —I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Liberal government come clean and admit to the country that not only were they aware of the activities of the RCMP security service, but they ordered them, and that the Solicitor General be directed by this House to release immediately the 33 documents requested by the RCMP defence lawyer which are essential for a full and fair hearing of the 17 RCMP members now charged.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AID

AUDIT REQUESTED OF CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. On November 28, 1981, Canada's external affairs minister announced the suspension of a six-year, $21 million project in Haiti, and according to reports the entire operation was a sorry mess of wholesale waste, local corruption and featherbedding, all funded by the Canadian taxpayer. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That an immediate and thorough audit of CIDA's operations, especially as they apply to the Haitian project, as well as other specific large-scale CIDA programs, be carried out by Canada's Auditor General with a view to determining their viability and over-all value to the people in the country in which aid is being provided.

PARLIAMENT HILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF DAYCARE CENTRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 43. On October 24, 1979, I asked the then Conservative minister of national health and welfare that a model daycare centre be established on Parliament Hill to demonstrate the need for daycare in the workplace across Canada. We have also urged the federal government to establish a national daycare policy and expand start-up funds for new centres. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House congratulate the House of Commons daycare employees' committee and Madam Speaker for their persistence in establishing the Parliament Hill daycare centre announced today, and ask that until further spaces are available priority be given to employees to use this centre with adequate subsidies, and that a higher fee for executive staff and MPs be established; in addition, that the Minister——of National Health and Welfare immediately take aggressive leadership to expand affordable daycare centres nationally.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, to meet the shortage of skilled workers in Canada and reduce unemployment levels, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the federal government give serious consideration to the examination of shortening the training periods for apprenticeship programs in Canada, much along the same lines as practised in many European apprenticeship programs.

HUMAN RIGHTS

AIR CANADA MANDATORY RETIREMENT AGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise seeking the attention of all hon. members on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Considering the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada ruled unanimously yesterday that Ontario municipalities cannot impose a mandatory retirement age of 60 on firefighters, even if it has been negotiated into their collective agreement; and in view of the fact this case is almost identical to the case of Captain Ross Stevenson, which I have been raising in this House for the past year, an Air Canada pilot forced to retire because of the collective agreement between the Canadian Airline Pilot's Association and Air Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy):

That the Minister of Transport introduce an order in council ordering Air Canada to reinstate Captain Ross Stevenson to his original position of airline pilot with Air Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

HOUSING

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Interest rates are rising again and many home owners who must renew their mortgages this year will face extreme hardship. Those who cannot rearrange their budget to accommodate this increase will lose their homes. Since Canadians are being faced with massive payment increases over which they have no control, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the National Housing Act be amended to include a provision for a mortgage insurance fund which would protect home owners against the uncertainties of major increases in their mortgage payments when their mortgages come up for renewal.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFIT ALLOWANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and public importance. The November, 1982, termination of the moratorium on taxation of northern benefit allowances is a recipe for short-term industrial chaos in Canada's mining industry and for the long-term demise of family and community life for workers in many northern resource centres.

In spite of serious warnings by both mine labour and management about the inadequacy of a one-year transition period to deal with two or three-year agreements and adjustment to an as yet undefined regime of general northern assistance, the consistent and continuing refusal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to meet with Steelworker Union officials on this subject is both incomprehensible and irresponsible. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House demand that the Minister of Finance stop hiding and immediately agree to meet with United Steelworker representatives on this issue in response to their urgent requests of several months' standing.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PENSIONS

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON PENSIONERS' INCOME

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Consumers' Association of Canada has called the Liberal budget "outrageously unfair" to senior citizens, and the association's pension consultant, Thomas Delaney, has estimated that between 200,000 and 400,000 senior citizens will be hurt by the budget.

The minister has earned the trust of many senior citizens. Is she planning to betray their trust by allowing pensioners' income to be reduced? Specifically, has she also asked the Minister of Finance to reinstate the $1,000 pension deduction for pensioners contributing to an RRSP?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that in several articles—she mentioned only one—published recently in the English Canadian press, in which the impression was given that Canadian pensioners would be adversely affected by the budget, one or two examples were given of pensioners with very high incomes who, though they were over sixty-five, were still working and receiving a salary or some kind of income, and who also were still contributing to a registered retirement savings plan. Obviously, they happen to be in the upper socioeconomic levels of our society, and their earnings are much higher this year, they will have to pay more taxes just like any other Canadian. There is nothing unfair about this at all. I can assure the House that all Canadian pensioners are benefiting from the MacEachen budget, because of the high rate of indexation being applied to all pensions.

[English]

CALCULATION OF TAXABLE INCOME

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has told the House in her answer, as I understand it, that the income of pensioners will not be reduced under the budget. I would therefore ask her why John Arthur, the president of the Canadian Pensions Conference, said that her own officials say that the proposal to tax health care benefits would disqualify many pensioners from receiving supplementary pensions such as the guaranteed income supplement. The minister's own officials are telling people in the pension field that pensions will be reduced. Is it true that the minister is refusing to take health care benefits into the calculation of taxable income in defiance of the budget of the Minister of Finance?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I do not have a clue as to why Mr. John Arthur supposedly said that to my colleague. I met him yesterday in the elevator. He did not say anything to me. He had a big smile.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Met him in the elevator!

Miss MacDonald: That is the only place he will meet her!

Miss Bégin: The hon. member should ask him. What I know for a fact is that all senior citizens in Canada who need help are total or partial beneficiaries of the GI supplement. The supplement costs the country a fortune. We consider it to be a right for all those over the age of 65 who are in need. Our objective as a government is to bring all of them above the poverty line. This is their right, and the supplement should not go to those who do not need it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

INVESTMENTS IN REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is too bad she can only meet Mr. Arthur in the elevator. He appeared before our Conservative task force on the budget, here on Parliament Hill, to give us that information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The minister has continually criticized the private sector for not contributing enough toward pension incomes. Since pension funds are designed to pay only part of a pensioner's income, many Canadians borrow money each year to invest in an RRSP, as the minister knows. The average amount of money borrowed by Canadians to invest in an RRSP is about $2,215. Does the Minister of National Health and Welfare support the plan to tax the interest paid on funds borrowed to purchase an RRSP, thus reducing the opportunity for Canadians to provide for their own future, because that is the inevitable result? Does she support that plan?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, if I told the hon. member that I am taking a stand on the point she just raised, she would accuse me of failing to respect the opinion of the House. The hon. member knows perfectly well that this general budget proposal was referred by the Minister of Finance on December 18, I believe, to a parliamentary committee for consideration. Where pension reform is concerned, the hon. member does not seem to realize that RRSPs are an instrument used by taxpayers to accumulate pensions if they happen to be among those who can afford to invest $3,500 or $5,000 every year. Most Canadians cannot, and therefore cannot take advantage of RRSPs. The budget is taking the aggregate of tax privileges and trying to introduce an element of fairness, and I shall always support this principle.

EDUCATION

FEDERAL FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. The minister will know that he is paying $1.8 billion to the provincial governments this year for post-secondary education. In answer to a question on February 3 from the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that her cash payments to the provinces for the three health programs for which she is responsible will be increased next year by 13.4 per cent. Will the minister's cash payments to the provinces, now at $1.8 billion, be increased by 13.4 per cent?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. member for bringing a very important subject to the floor of the House. It provides me with an opportunity to remind hon. members that, at the recent first ministers' conference, the Prime Minister made an offer to the provinces that we would extend for the next two years the provisions under which funds are transferred in the block form to the provinces, for post-secondary education purposes, increasing in the vicinity of just over 12 per cent in each of those years, provided that the provinces undertake that they do not during that time diminish the percentage of the cost of post-secondary education which they are paying out of their own funds.

Unfortunately, we have a very sad situation in this country. We have a serious problem in relation to post-secondary education because most of the provinces, year after year, have been decreasing the percentage of the cost of post-secondary education that they pay, while the federal government has year by year been increasing its percentage. For instance, in the hon. member's province of Ontario, the portion that the provincial government of Ontario pays—

Madam Speaker: Order. I remind the House that we are in favour of short questions and short answers.

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the minister then is confirming that he paid the provinces this year $1.825 billion and he will be increasing that by a percentage which is the same percentage as required under the Established Programs Financing Act for 1982-83. Will he confirm that, and will he confirm that there will be no diminution during the next fiscal year, in his estimates, of the amount of money that is required under the existing and Established Programs Financing Act to be paid to the provinces designated for post-secondary education?

● (1425)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member must remember that the transfer from the federal government to the provinces for post-secondary education is made up of two components, tax points made available for that purpose by specific agreement, and cash payments.

An hon. Member: Yes or no?

Mr. Regan: I am not confirming the exact figures that the hon. member may be using for one portion of that over-all payment, but I would be happy to provide those figures to him after question period, or at his convenience.

I think the important thing for the hon. member to remember, and I count on him for his support, in the improvement of post-secondary education in this country, is that we are prepared to do our part and increase our portion as we have been increasing it year by year. However, it is time for some of the provinces, such as Ontario, to stop cheating the students and universities by paying less than their share.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT STIMULATE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if I can get the attention of the Prime Minister I would draw to his attention that many suggestions have been made for stimulating the Canadian economy. So far the government has said no to them all. There is also a need for approximately 220,000 housing units this year and, according to the figures which were released in the last few days, there will be a shortfall of approximately 70,000 badly needed units. Considering that the provision of these units would not only meet housing needs but would also provide between 100,000 and 150,000 jobs in home appliances, construction and the forest industry, why does the government not move in this very sensible direction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are, of course, a great many demands for government spending, one of which is housing. That is why there was an attempt to satisfy, in part, this demand through some provisions in the budget.

As the hon. member will remember, I indicated in the House a couple of days ago the many areas where, almost on a weekly basis, the government is announcing spending programs to help the various sections of the economy.

An hon. Member: How about Ontario?

Mr. Trudeau: One week it is western transportation, another week it is the forest industry in northern New Brunswick. Just a few days ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a joint scheme with Ontario to keep jobs in northern Ontario. I will provide the hon. member with a list, if he wants. The government has many current programs for creating jobs. It is not sufficient for the hon. member opposite simply to stand up and say that there is a need here and a particular need there—why do we not spend more money? The answer to that, of course, is that, in the over-all reality, to spend more money we have to increase our deficit again which is already very large and therefore risk impairing the battle against inflation.

PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT DEVOTED TO HOUSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister, considering that spending in this area does not involve money leaving Canada but involves meeting a shortfall in housing needs which would not be inflationary in that respect, and considering that the cumulative deficits of all governments in Canada, federal and provincial, make it clear that, as a percentage of our gross national product, Canada is not putting more in this sector than most other industrialized countries, at a time when we have more than a million unemployed why does the government not move very clearly in this direction? It would, as I stated, provide 100,000 to 150,000 additional jobs, and also meet the serious housing crisis.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member makes the point that if we take together the provincial surpluses and deficits and the federal deficit, the percentage is not as great, but he is addressing the federal government, which has a very large deficit—something in the area of $10 billion—and to that extent we are far from attempting to balance our budget. We are injecting money into the economy at a very substantial rate, and all the various schemes I have been referring to are creating jobs.

The hon. member has a good idea: put unemployed workers to work building houses. The question is that we need a fund of capital to pay for the building of those houses. That fund of capital can come either from withdrawing capital from other worth-while projects, or from printing money, which is inflationary, or it can come from increasing the deficit, which is also inflationary. That is why, no matter how valuable the ideas put forward by many members of this House, including many on this side, if they involve massive new funding they will not in the long run create new jobs. They will create inflation. Inflation will mean that interest rates will go up and, if interest rates go up, that will be seen with opprobrium by the hon. member opposite.

TAXATION OF BANKS' PROFITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, there is one sector of the economy the Prime Minister left out, and in this respect I ask him to reply with the same seriousness with which he has addressed the first two questions. Considering that the one set of institutions in this country which has benefited from high interest rates is the banks, which had record profits in 1981, would the Prime Minister tell the House why a special tax on the banks, which would bring their tax level up to what other corporations pay, is not imposed by the government in order to get the money to provide the jobs to produce houses? This precise approach would not be inflationary.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the particular question of high interest rates let me repeat to the hon. member what I have said, I believe, a few times before. If inflation is running at about 12 per cent, which it is now, I do not think we can realistically expect Canadians generally, or the hon. member in particular, to lend money at much less than 13 per cent or 14 per cent. That is why there is a higher interest rate than there would be if inflation were lower.

Mr. Broadbent: I am talking about bank profits.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand. That is the second point. The hon. member should let me finish the first point. I want him to understand, first, that it is not that the banks are artificially saying, "We are going to make a lot of money and we will lend money but only at 15 per cent or 16 per cent" or whatever it is.

Mr. Broadbent: Twenty-one per cent.

Mr. Trudeau: The margin between inflation and the bank rate today is no larger than it traditionally has been.

Mr. Broadbent: You are wrong.

Mr. Deans: Twenty-one per cent.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Oshawa had a chance to ask his question. I believe he should allow the Right Hon. Prime Minister to answer it.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am not talking about the particular rate of a particular bank to a particular consumer who may be a high risk, or who may be in a position where he is borrowing for purposes which do not guarantee the return. I am talking about the general bank rate. I repeat that the reason the bank rate is high is that inflation is high. That is why we believe that the way to bring interest rates down is to bring inflation down. If we can bring inflation down to 7 per cent or 8 per cent, then interest rates will fall because a great spread will not be required.

Mr. Kristiansen: Tax the banks and invest the money.

Mr. Trudeau: Just a final word on the banks. The Minister of Finance has dealt with that question before. He has indicated that over all—and I am not an apologist for the banks—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh?

Mr. Trudeau: I am trying to remember the statistics the Minister of Finance put forward. If we look at bank profits over a period of time we see that they are not now out of line with what they traditionally have been. If the banks are making very high profits, then they should pay very high income tax.

Mr. Broadbent: That is the point.

Mr. Trudeau: They are paying high income tax.

Madam Speaker: Order!

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION PAID TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The minister will know that hon. members on all sides of this House have been receiving letters, telephone calls and complaints about the government's pitiful approach toward aid for urea formaldehyde foam insulation victims. Indeed, home owner groups in major centres across the country are holding meetings to condemn the government's woefully inadequate drop-in-the-bucket and too-late approach. In view of this negative nation-wide reaction, will the minister reconsider much more meaningful compensation to many of those whose homes are absolutely worthless?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member has a different line of information from the one I have. On the contrary, I have received a number of positive responses to the very important and significant contribution of the Canadian government toward helping the victims of this product.

As the hon. member mentioned, some people are having meetings. They are having meetings to inform home owners of the programs available and to try to get more money from the government. I do not blame them for this, but I want to point out to the hon. member that, rather than criticizing the government for what we have done so far, he should join with me in trying to convince the provinces to take their share of responsibility and to put an amount of money equal to what we have provided on the table. That amount is $110 million.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I am sure the government's program has met with the complete satisfaction of the minister's campaign manager. This is one issue he cannot slough off onto the provinces.

REQUEST THAT REMOVAL COST BE TAX DEDUCTIBLE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Many home owners are being forced to spend thousands upon thousands of dollars to remove the foam for health reasons and at their own expense. Will the Minister of Finance at least consider as an interim measure the cost of removing the foam as income tax deductible since it was, I repeat, this government which created the UFFI mess in the first place?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that this is a tax measure, of course it would have to be considered in the budgetary context.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—DEGREE OF FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The minister has informed us several times that he was waiting for the findings of a study to determine whether the federal government was responsible for the UFFI problem.

Since the minister has agreed to pay subsidies, perhaps he could inform us whether he agrees it is the federal government's responsibility? And since he is asking the provinces to provide assistance, to what extent is the federal government responsible?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, these questions certainly reflect the complete ignorance or stupidity of the hon. member who is asking them.

We have always maintained that the Canadian government does not admit any legal responsibility in this matter. In view of the extent of the problems being encountered by some home owners who are sick as a result of having this product installed in their homes, we have decided, on humanitarian grounds, to take action and assist them on the basis of our responsibility for national health. That is why we have budgeted $110 million for the owners of the homes in question.

We would have liked to see the provinces do the same, expecially the province of Quebec, where it is clear that many home owners were taken in by contractors licensed by the provincial authorities to instal the foam, when the work was poorly done because of the lack of effective control by the provincial authorities.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I'm not as stupid as some people—

The minister has told us several times that he was waiting for a board or committee report, that he had asked for an expertise to be made, and that on the basis of this report he would be able to confirm whether the government did or did not have a responsibility.

We know that the federal government approved the product. Whether it was properly installed is another matter. The fact remains that the product was approved by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Today, the minister has agreed to pay a less than adequate part of the costs that home owners are now being forced to incur. With due respect, I simply want to ask the minister where the responsibility of the federal government lies? If he wants to wash his hands of the whole thing, let him come right out and say so.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member reads the legislation we pass in Parliament, he would realize that there is such a thing as the Hazardous Products Act and under that act—

Mr. La Salle: Is the government responsible, yes or no?

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member is getting a little upset. I may remind him that under the Harzardous Products Act, when the government declares a product to be hazardous, the manufacturers of the product have the right to appeal the decision. And that is what they did.

As the hon. member is probably aware, we set up a review board under this act, and the board is working on a report that it should be bringing in shortly.

Mr. La Salle: Are you responsible or are you not?

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member wants to know whether we think we are responsible or not. We have always said that we were not responsible, but nevertheless, we have offered up to $5,000 per owner of a home affected by this product, irrespective of the fact whether the government is responsible or not. I think the government is already doing quite a bit for these people.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

PROGRAMS TO AID LAID-OFF WORKERS IN NIAGARA PENINSULA

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and it follows on an answer which he gave yesterday with regard to the job-creation program. In Ontario there are approximately six out of ten jobs which are related to the automotive industry. In addition to the programs which are already under way, could the minister tell us if there are any programs specifically to alleviate the position of automotive workers in the Niagara Peninsula?

An hon. Member: That is a good question!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am awfully glad that the hon. member did not send me a letter.

Let me point out that in the Niagara Peninsula there are several programs which are helpful to laid-off workers. Perhaps the most important one is the announcement which was made just a few weeks ago by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the designation of the auto parts industry for assistance under the ILAP program. That program provides an extensive number of investment credits to those communities that are hard hit, as well as outlines a number of labour adjustment measures we are prepared to apply in that area.

In addition, the hon. member will perhaps have noted that we have spent close to $3 million of job-creation funds in the Niagara Peninsula over the past year, and that we have added substantial dollars to those communities that are hard hit by the lay-off situation. We will try to provide as much service as we can, and we hope to stay in close contact with the hon. member so that he can help his constituents.

MEDICAL CARE

REQUEST MINISTER WITHHOLD FUNDS FROM PROVINCES DEVIATING FROM NATIONAL STANDARDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister knows that medicare is in trouble. Last week she claimed to be looking for allies to save it. I hope that she has more luck in her own caucus when it comes to saving medicare than she seems to be having when it comes to saving the Canadian economy.

The minister has often lamented that she is in an all or nothing position—having either to tolerate the erosion of medicare or to withdraw federal funding altogether, a move which might have risky consequences.

Would the minister consider amending the appropriate legislation, to provide for a graduated withholding of federal funds from delinquent provinces according to the degree in which they deviated from national standards, as recommended by the Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Madam Speaker, the work of the Breau committee was particularly interesting. My department has examined its report and has taken it into account when preparing the document which will be submitted to my provincial counterparts, as I had promised at our very first meeting, to clarify the present financing of medicare. I am afraid that the hon. member did not understand my reply last week as to whether I can or refuse to do anything at present. Fiscal arrangements for medicare mention five basic conditions, including universality or accessibility to everyone, but we now have to clarify these conditions in the next five-year agreement so as to strengthen medicare.

[English]

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the minister has not answered my question. I asked her whether in the upcoming fiscal arrangements she would consider a mechanism for the graduated withholding of federal funding, so that she would not be in the position that it seems to me she often hides behind, that is to say, that she must either withdraw all the money or do nothing about medicare. What is her position on the suggestion of the task force that there be a mechanism for graduated withholding? That is the question to which I want an answer.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member has just inquired about my position on the Breau report recommendations. As I have just told him, we have read this report with interest and it contains some excellent suggestions. What the hon. member has just mentioned is one of the recommendations which we are now considering in preparing the document that will be submitted to the provinces.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES TO STIMULATE EXPORTS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As the fall of the Canadian dollar from par with the United States dollar to 92.5 cents American in 1962 was the beginning of ten years of great prosperity and high employment, because exports were stimulated in a great many products that we had been buying from outside that began to be produced in Canada, I ask the Prime Minister if he would seriously, very seriously, consider doing two things, for the good of the country? The first is to lower interest rates to an acceptable level; and second, to use the resultant drop in the value of the Canadian dollar to stimulate the Canadian economy in the same very effective manner that has been done in the past. If he would like it, I would be very glad to explain to him later just exactly how that was done, in the hope that it might be repeated now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is correct to a degree when he refers to the fall in the dollar in the early 1960s having been the cause of the surge in our export successes. I think he is perhaps overly modest when he neglects to mention another factor which had a say in that success: it was that the hon. member was then the minister responsible for trade and exports.

I certainly am prepared to take advice from an expert, Madam Speaker. I just want to point out to him that the current situation has produced somewhat the same result. As he knows, the fall in the Canadian dollar has resulted in one of our largest trade surpluses last year. That, I would think, is explicable by the same two factors. We have a lower dollar which encourages exports, and we have a very good trade minister. In so far as how we could use those advantages now and in the future is concerned, I am certainly anxious to entertain any suggestions from the hon. member on how we could improve the situation.

I must briefly point out, Madam Speaker, that I doubt whether deliberately devaluing the Canadian dollar further would have the added advantages that he suggests. The Canadian dollar is devalued now compared to the American. I think the incentive for export is there, and I think we would all welcome am even greater success in the export field than we registered last year under the present minister of commerce. I am sure he and I would be very anxious to entertain suggestions from the hon. member.

SMALL BUSINESS

TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE ALLOWANCES FOR AUTOMOBILES

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. From coast to coast across the land there are legions of employees who have had their paycheques attacked by the November 12 budget levy increase of 250 per cent on the standby allowance for personal use of cars. Could the minister tell us what he has done to have this threshold returned to a more realistic level which can be managed within the practical limits of business without increasing the paper burden upon the Canadian community?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, as members of the opposition usually do, the hon. member is singling out a specific proposal in the November 12 budget to indicate that millions of Canadians have suffered a cut in their paycheques because of the tax on company cars. The hon. member should go further and consider the impact, for instance, of the lower marginal tax rate on the paycheques of every Canadian. He would then realize that most paycheques were higher in January than at the end of 1981.

[English]

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISION

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, the minister totally fails to realize that what was a pre-budget deduction of $90 is now a post-budget deduction of $225, and that this can only be covered by increasing and grossing up the income of these employees, which will put them into higher taxation brackets. Thus, what he says is not completely true. What has happened to the minister's attack on paper burden? Would the minister not agree that this item alone in the November 12 budget wipes out five years of magnificent effort on the part of the paper burden committee of his department?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member is suggesting that I do not understand what impact the increases proposed in the last budget are having and that they are putting taxpayers in higher tax brackets, it is because he does not understand himself the impact of a lower marginal tax rate. As for a decrease in the paper burden, I share the concern of the hon. member, and with what is left of my staff in the Small Businesses secretariat, I continue to monitor any increase or decrease in the government paper burden, to examine the forms issued by other departments and even, in some cases, to have some of them eliminated or simplified.

COMMUNICATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON DOMESTIC SATELLITES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Reagan administration indicated that it approves of the decision made by the FCC in October to allow Canadian and American domestic satellites to be used for transporter communications. Also it indicated that all it is awaiting is the Government of Canada to make up its mind. What is the government's policy?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Reagan administration, through the department of the Secretary of State, informed us on January 8 of this year, a few weeks ago, of the decision of the FCC. Of course we have been aware of the decision of the FCC through published reports in the press. If there will be transporter use of satellite facilities, we want to ensure that these facilities are used by Canadian telecommunication carriers that will be assured, as a result of negotiations with the Americans, that they obtain a fair share of the traffic on those facilities and a fair share of the revenues resulting therefrom.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, is the minister anticipating that the government will be able to reach an agreement with the United States government which would allow the two governments to go jointly before Intelsat at its meeting this fall? That would require a decision being made by early summer.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I point out to the hon. member that there already is an excellent system of telecommunications between Canada and the United States which meets the needs and requirements of the users and was negotiated basically by the private sector on both sides of the border, that is, the telephone companies themselves. The ideal situation is that telecommunication carriers will be able to come to terms with their counterparts in the United States. We prefer as an initial step that an agreement be reached at this level instead of having the government intervene.

FINANCE

ADVANTAGES FOR QUEBEC RELATED TO NEW FISCAL TRANSFERS

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Recently, especially since the last federal-provincial conference, it seems that the Quebec government has been saying that it will lose $675 million on fiscal transfers. Perhaps the minister could inform us whether these figures are accurate and if not, what the real situation is with respect to fiscal transfers to the province of Quebec, and also whether it is true, and I think it is, that the province will benefit from the new fiscal transfers under the five-year plan ending in 1986?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, very briefly, I should like to point out to the hon. member that when Premier Lévesque was adding up his figures, he forgot a major component of federal participation in financing established programs, namely, tax point transfers. I may add that if the hon. member compares the five-year period that has just ended with the next five years, he will see that Quebec will be receiving $13.5 billion more in terms of equalization payments and financing of established programs. With $13.5 billion over five years, the province of Quebec will be doing very nicely.

CONFIDENTIAL CABINET DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister shown or discussed the contents of any confidential cabinet documents with any members of the Liberal caucus who are not sworn of the Privy Council?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, certainly not, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Clark: I thank the minister for putting that on the public record, where it will stand.

INQUIRY RESPECTING NEW JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Can he confirm or deny information which has been circulated by his Quebec colleagues that the government is considering a new job-creation program which was not announced, contained, or provided for in his budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I stated in my speech in Toronto a couple of weeks ago, and as I stated in the House, the government is prepared to consider targeted and innovative projects which are intended to produce growth and investment. That is the extent to which I will go at the present time.

INFORMATION CIRCULATED BY QUEBEC MEMBERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister either deliberately or accidentally missed the specific point of the question. He will know there has been information circulated by his Quebec colleagues that a specific program relating to job creation is under consideration by his ministry now. Will he confirm or deny that information?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member means by a specific program. If he uses the word in its proper sense, the answer is no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

IMMIGRATION

SECURITY CERTIFICATE BANNING REFUGEE FROM EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the minister knows, he has found Victor Manuel Regalado Brito to be a refugee from El Salvador according to the Geneva Convention on Protection of Refugees, but in fact the minister and the Solicitor General previously issued a security certificate prohibiting Mr. Regalado from staying in Canada on the basis of accusations and evidence withheld from Mr. Regalado. Since this may be the first use of a security certificate based upon secret evidence to bar a refugee from Canada, will the minister consider either withdrawing the certificate or releasing the evidence on which it rests?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the use of a Section 39 certificate is a very serious and very important matter which is not undertaken lightly. It is based upon evidence supplied to myself and to the Solicitor General concerning the activities of individuals which are detrimental to the security and best interests of this country. We have only used that certificate in very rare occurrences over the past several years. We must, in these circumstances, obviously protect the source of that information as it is really essential to the security of the country.

As I have indicated in the case of Mr. Regalado, he also undertook application as a refugee and he has been found as such. I have indicated to him—and I will be writing to the people who are advocating his case—that in the circumstances we will give him some time to find an alternative refuge or haven in a third country, so that he will not be required to return to El Salvador. But we feel that it is not in the best interests of the country that he stay in Canada, and I think we would want to maintain that decision in the best interests of all Canadians.

POSSIBILITY OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, this might be a new type of case. There may be legal questions to be resolved and, as the minister has said, we are under an obligation not to deport Mr. Regalado to a country where his life would be in danger, or to another country that would send him back to El Salvador. Therefore, is the minister willing to give Mr. Regalado time before being sent away to pursue any legal remedies that be open to him through the courts?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I have just told the hon. member that because of the circumstances of this case we have indicated that we would not send Mr. Regalado back to El Salvador, or even to the United States, which has a policy of not accepting refugees from that country and of sending them back. We have indicated that we would give him third country access and Mr. Regalado would have the opportunity to secure an alternative place to go, and that we would delay the impending deportation order to accomplish this.

I should point out that, to the best of my information, the hearing on the deportation was not to be held until today, but because of the application of the Section 39 certificate it is virtually an automatic decision. However, we have indicated to Mr. Regalado, through his lawyers and others, that he will have that opportunity, and I think, under the circumstances, and considering Mr. Regalado's behaviour is not in the best interests of this country, that we are being very fair to him in this situation.

MR. BOSLEY—DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BUDGET

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present a petition on behalf of hundreds of my constituents and others. The purpose of the petition is to persuade the government that the budget is regressive and will lead to total economic disaster. The nature of the petition, signed by 1,268 taxpayers, is to demand that the budget be completely withdrawn and that a new Minister of Finance be appointed. The petitioners hope in your examination of this petition that you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea and allow its reading in the House.

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Introduction of Bills.

February 5, 1982—The Minister of State (Finance)—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds".

Madam Speaker: Does the House give the hon. minister leave to introduce the bill?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice yesterday, as you will recall, that I would raise a point of order respecting the bill for which ways and means motions had just been passed at that point.

I rise now before the Chair is even seized with the bill by reason of the existence of a previous ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux which indicated, on a point of order very similar to the one that I intend to raise, that the proper time for raising the point was not at second reading but at first reading.

It is very difficult for the Chair to follow my point of order unless the Chair is seized with the bill. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux's ruling is capable of two interpretations, the first being that it would be more appropriate to raise the point after first reading and before second reading. The other interpretation is that Mr. Speaker Lamoureux meant the point must be raised at first reading, which is exactly the point we are at now.

I would suggest, in order that the Chair is seized with the bill and can follow a rather complex but important argument in terms of the future consideration of legislation by the House, that the bill be seized by the Chair, and if it is necessary to go to first reading for that purpose, then we will do that. If necessary, we could go to first reading for that purpose, subject to the caveat that when the Chair is seized with the bill and when I explain my point of order, should the decision be reached that it should have been raised prior to first reading, then the argument will be applicable at that point in time.

Madam Speaker: We can accept that suggestion if the House agrees. I am aware of some rulings even of Mr. Speaker Jerome where he did say that certain points of order would have been better heard at first reading rather than at second reading. However, it all depends on what the point of order is. I cannot judge at this point whether I should hear it now or later. I expect the House would agree that the point of order be raised. At any rate, the hon. member can get up at any time and raise a point of order. I believe the hon. member is suggesting that we go to first reading and then he would submit a point of order. Is that my understanding of what the hon. member has just said?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, that is correct, Madam Speaker, subject to the understanding—and undoubtedly the Chair would want to take the point that I raised under consideration before ruling—that the Chair accepts the submission of the point of order as though it had been made prior to actual first reading.

I might for the sake of the record read Journals for January 26, 1971. On page 285 the Speaker on that occasion was referring to a similar argument, and said:

When those bills came before the House for first reading I entered a caveat about them and gave hon. members an opportunity of expressing their views.

At any rate, some of these bills were refused by the Chair. I think it is trite to suggest that the Chair enter that caveat that I suggest here in this particular instance.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, whether we agree or not, you have the discretion to decide either way, and if my learned friend feels that he must raise his point of order now in view of a previous ruling of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, he should do so. We cannot anticipate what his point of order is going to be, and so our consent is irrelevant. If he feels he has a good case, he should argue it now, and if he does not, we should proceed with other business.

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member is referring to a ruling by one of my predecessors, which could not be made until the Chair had read the bill in question. I assume that the point of order to be raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would require me to read the bill first. Obviously, at this stage it is impossible for me to have read the bill. However, as I said earlier, it all depends on the point of order he intends to raise. I cannot in advance say yes, I give you permission to raise a point of order if it is inappropriate. But if I have to read the bill, I can understand why he is entering this caveat on the approval of the bill at first reading.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-93, to amend the Statute Law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authorities for the raising of funds.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

● (1510)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it would be helpful if the Chair were to be provided with a copy of the bill as I go through my submission.

The title of the bill is "An act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds". Having looked at the bill, Madam Speaker, I would submit it is offensive to the rights of the House. Further, I believe the groundwork is being steadily laid for the removal, without the permission of the House and without any rule changes, of substantial House debating rights. We regard these developments with the greatest of alarm and look to the Chair for protection of our long established rights in this connection.

The bill, Madam Speaker, actually contains three separate legislative proposals. If the Chair will refer to the bill, Part I is the borrowing authority 1982-83. There are two additional parts to the bill. Part II consists of amendments to the Excise Tax Act, and Part III is the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, which is really an amendment to Bill C-57 of this session, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas.

As much as I might wish that the House have the opportunity to discuss three separate bills, I do not wish to argue that Parts II and III, both relating to the Excise Tax Act, could not be considered in one bill. I do contend very strongly, however, that the lumping in of the borrowing bill which is not, like the other two, a Ways and Means bill, is a very substantial invasion of our rights and removes opportunities for debate and consideration that were formerly open to us.

I do not wish to be unreasonable in my argument, and I will not argue that a Ways and Means motion can never be combined in a bill with other types of legislative enactments related consequentially to it. However, in this case the linkage between the parts is extremely slight, and the ability of some draftsmen to write a long title which seems to emphasize vague similarities between the parts cannot, in my submission, be allowed to over-rule every other procedural consideration.

I hope you will note in passing, Madam Speaker, that the long title of this bill does not even refer to the excise tax, and a similar title in future could be used to include every single bill arising from a budget. In fact, I believe a marked contraction of debating opportunities through the use of omnibus bills is a specific part of this government's legislative strategy and I have direct evidence of this, which I will come to.

The budget, Madam Speaker, generally produces a series of budget bills which have been subject to some consolidation. The Income Tax Act amendments and the income tax application rules amendments arise from separate ways and means motions and no one objects to a combined bill. The Excise Act and Excise Tax Act are combined along with taxes essentially of an excise tax nature. There is nothing wrong with that. The Customs Tariff Act amendments have generally stood alone. It sometimes happens that a tax bill includes consequential amendments to other statutes, and I will come to that.

The important point is that even with these acceptable consolidations we have always had three set budget bills, to which a fourth has now been added. We can debate the Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act, the Excise Act and the Customs Tariff bill. The fourth has been the borrowing bill which, in these days of deficit financing, has given the House the opportunity to focus on the government's borrowing policy as a critical element of the government's economic policies.

I want to note briefly the evolution of the borrowing bill as a separate item of legislation. As members know, it was traditionally part of a supply bill but in 1975 the Speaker accepted objections to the borrowing clause being inserted in the supply bill because that bill could no longer be debated. By agreement in subsequent years the clause was left in the supply bill with the proviso that a day's debate be allowed in Committee of the Whole to enable the borrowing clause to be debated. This was done in the 1976-77 session and in 1977-78, although in one case, the 1977-78 session, the borrowing clause was made into a part of the income tax bill, C-11. It should be noted that this slipped through without any comment, but it is a very doubtful precedent because the practice was not confirmed by a ruling, was not accepted as a definite precedent in your ruling, Madam Speaker, of January 19, 1981, and, most important, has been superseded by the practice subsequently adopted in the last three administrations.

For the session 1978-79, there was a separate borrowing authority bill, Bill C-7. In 1979, there was a separate borrowing authority bill, Bill C-10. So far this session there have been two borrowing authority bills, C-30 and C-59. However significant some members opposite might feel the income tax bill, C-22, from five years ago to be, I hope Madam Speaker will keep in mind there are four times as many precedents for a separate bill.

In each of these four cases in which a separate borrowing bill was introduced, the bill was not dealt with in the Committee of the Whole but was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. This has enabled us to call witnesses and hear evidence respecting government debt financing policies. If we combine the borrowing bill with the excise bill, we will lose either the right to discuss borrowing in the standing committee, or the right to deal with excise taxes in the Committee of the Whole. I contend that it is an abuse of procedure to combine bills in such a way as to give the House an either/or choice between two established rights.

I would like to turn to the question of combining Ways and Means bills with bills introduced in the normal way. Although this can cause difficulties in deciding on the type of committee treatment the bill receives, there can be no reasonable objection to the practice if the one part is consequentially linked to the other. It would clearly be a waste of time to go through the entire legislative process for a second bill if the principle and details it contains have been specifically dealt with in the main legislation.

I believe this view is founded on the same principles as those implicit in your ruling of last January 19. After ruling that the borrowing aspects of Bill C-54 had to be struck from the bill because of inadequate notice, Your Honour said:

> I should make clear to members that I have no quarrel with the practice of combining in the same bill taxation matters based on Ways and Means motions with other matters, provided that the provisions of Standing Order 42(1) are fulfilled and notice properly given. Precedents to that effect can be found at page 42 of the Journals for October 20, 1978, relating to Bill C-10, and page 114 of the Journals for 1976 relating to Bill C-22.

Madam Speaker, this comment was made in reply to some of the arguments raised concerning Bill C-54, and did not say that Bill C-54 was acceptable in every fashion except the question of notice. It said that it was not an acceptable argument to say that Ways and Means bills could never be combined with others. In fact, I have examined both the bills cited by Your Honour on January 11, and I believe that the nature of the bills supports my contention that consequential combinations are natural and acceptable, but that it does not follow that any combination is acceptable no matter what the diversity of objective or the difference in traditional treatment.

Bill C-10 of the 1978-79 session introduced the child tax credit. Part I, consisting of amendments to the Income Tax Act, set out in detail the provisions of the new child tax credit. Part II, an amendment to the Family Allowances Act, made provisions for amounts to be paid under the act during 1979. It was a purely transitional amendment and it would have been absurd to put it in a separate bill.

The other example cited by Your Honour was Bill C-22 of the 1976-77 session. The main part of the bill was an amendment to the Income Tax Act. It ran to 77 clauses. The income tax application rules took in a further seven clauses. A third section, Part III, was titled "Other Acts and Consequential Amendments" and consisted of three clauses relating to the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act. The schedule contained other acts consequentially affected.

These reasonable instances of a combination of Ways and Means bills with consequential amendments to other statutes cannot be taken, in my submission, to support the proposition that any one of the traditional tax bills, derived exclusively from Ways and Means motions, as they are supposed to be, can be combined with any other type of government legislation. This must lead to a confusion of debate, a curtailment of long-established rights and an elimination of opportunities given under the rules of hearings in standing committees.

As an opposition we are frequently told that if we want new opportunities to argue or amend, we will have to work to change the rules. I think of petitions and motions under Standing Order 43, for example. The same must apply to the government. If our rights are to be encroached upon in the name of streamlining Parliament, it must be after the adoption by the House of new rules, not by a steady rolling back of the right of debate and inquiry without the slightest recourse to precedent, practice or custom.

What we have here is a continuation of the government's practice of surreptitiously closing off and guillotining debate, not through the open invocation of Standing Order 75 or pure closure, but by means of a constant testing of the House and of the Chair with new legislative combinations. If one step works, then the government goes a little further the next time. We are moving with slow and steady stealth in a direction the government dares not openly avow or openly pursue.

The House knows that the problem of omnibus bills has arisen before. Thus far, Speakers have expressed doubts but have been reluctant to say that the point of confrontation has been reached. In 1971, on January 26, at page 285 of the Journals, Speaker Lamoureux said:

> However, where do we stop? Where is the point of no return? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West, said that we might reach the point where we would have only one bill, a bill at the start of the session for the improvement of the quality of life in Canada which would include every single proposed piece of legislation for the session. That would be an omnibus bill with a capital "O" and a capital "B". But would it be acceptable legislation? There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

A moment afterwards, in that same ruling, Speaker Lamoureux said:

> At the same point it is much easier for the government to go back to the legislative mill to where bills are prepared, to the judicial luminaries of the Department of Justice for the consideration of Parliament. If I may say so, I think that even those very learned gentlemen should take into account that this is an aspect of a matter that is of interest to all hon. members, of interest I am sure to the government, and certainly of interest to the Chair, namely that there must be a point where an omnibus bill becomes more than an omnibus bill and is not acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

Where do we stop, Madam Speaker? I suggest that the time to stop is now. In this instance, we have the potential loss of a major economic debate, simply through the casual combination of two measures. We have a long title which could easily encompass every budget bill that is ever put forward; one big bill instead of three or four.

Hon. members might be tempted to think that too much is being made of this point. I would like to close my remarks on this point of order by citing a remark from the debate on the point of order on Bill C-54 last January. I always take the government House leader at his word, and I have no doubt of his sincerity on that occasion. On January 16, 1981, as reported at page 6281 of Hansard, he said:

> —I believe that, in practice, the members of the House are far from being penalized by this procedure. First of all, they were given reasonable notice, second, they will have time to debate this matter, and third, which should please everyone, this will avoid the need for the House to consider separate bills which can be dealt with together, which is not irregular or abnormal and which could perhaps become a more usual practice in the future for combining related provisions.

The House is here for the exact purpose of considering separate legislative items through a process of three readings. The government would have us look more and more at unholy and illogical combinations to enable it to exercise more control over hon. members' right of debate, amendment and committee consideration. We will resist this planned elimination of hard-won rights with all of our strength. We appeal to the Chair for an exercise of your authority, Madam Speaker, on behalf of those rights, and on behalf of all hon. members who collectively possess those rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there is nothing new in the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I think that each time an omnibus bill has been introduced by the government in this House, a member of the opposition has raised a point of order to complain about this practice and to try to do away with a custom, a practice and a right which are well-established and well-recognized.

The same grounds are consistently put forth, whether to the effect that this infringes on the rights of hon. members to discuss separate bills or that certain members would prefer considering a bill in a standing committee of the House rather than in Committee of the Whole, and the opinions expressed in this regard vary according to those who argue these points of order. Some of the members maintain that a more comprehensive examination is possible in Committee of the Whole because each clause is analysed on the floor of the House and the members have every opportunity to discuss not just the various parts of the bill, but also all of the clauses successively. In any case, as the government House leader, I have no alternative, Madam Speaker, but to refer to this well-established practice which I mentioned a few moments ago and with which you are certainly quite familiar. If I may, I will simply identify various well-known bills of the past 25 years which included different provisions and constituted omnibus bills and which were accepted as valid by the Speaker of the House after they had been discussed under points of order.

The House will recall the National Defence Act of 1953, the Criminal Code amendments of 1968-69, the Government Organization Bill of 1970-71, the Western Grain Stabilization Act of 1971, the Crimes of Violence Bill of 1976 and the Arms Control Bill of 1977, to mention just a few. Your predecessors, Madam Speaker, namely, Mr. Speaker Jerome and Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, were asked to consider the arguments raised by members of the opposition and they studied the matter in depth and recognized in each instance that until a formal parliamentary reform has been completed, they had their hands tied by what must bind this institution, namely, the Standing Orders, parliamentary practice and precedents. In this case, I respectfully submit that my learned colleague has put forth absolutely no new argument that could justify a reversal of this very stringent jurisprudence, this well-established practice, to force the government to break up legislation, supposedly to allow the opposition to debate certain bills separately and make a more detailed study of such bills. I submit that this is not a valid point anyway, because for the detailed discussion of either an omnibus or a separate bill, opposition members under the Standing Orders are under no time limit unless the government requests clause by clause discussion in Committee of the Whole. Therefore, Madam Speaker, the legislation that has just been introduced includes an aspect allowing the government to borrow certain sums of money and other measures to levy imposts or taxes. The connection between the three measures is that they are all tax measures, which justifies their being linked and combined together. With that obvious connection it seems to me that there is no basis either in our Standing Orders, practices or precedents, for the hon. member opposite to suggest that this legislation or any future one should be divided, because everyone knows that a bill will be introduced shortly on energy security, and I wonder if the aim is not to prepare the ground for fighting that other legislation dealing with energy measures. I can refer to it because there has been a draft bill published on the issue. If they want to raise this point anew, they will be true to norm, Madam Speaker, they will be consistent with themselves, because to my knowledge, it very seldom happens that an omnibus bill is not met by points of order. But this will not improve their case as long as there is no proper change in our rules.

Madam Speaker, I mentioned earlier Mr. Speaker Lamoureux and Mr. Speaker Jerome. I would like to refer you to an omnibus bill on which Mr. Speaker Jerome had to analyse a similar point of order and he based his decision on a previous one by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux. This means that with one quote I can bring the views of both Speakers and spare you a list or accumulation of the numerous precedents in which those Speakers were involved and where they favoured the government's view. But first let me respond to the point of fact raised by my learned colleague from Yukon, who argued in particular that if you do not separate this legislation we would be penalized and would not be able to go before the Standing Committee of this House on the borrowing authority aspect, since the other provisions implied the levy of taxes and would therefore be studied in Committee of the Whole.

That argument cannot stand, Madam Speaker, for the mere reason that since 1953 the borrowing authority bill has always included a clause dealing with income tax and in the last 25 years, this bill has never been deferred to a standing committee of the House. Such an argument is not justified because indeed what is called the borrowing authority bill or the legislation authorizing the government to borrow a certain sum has always included a note or a clause dealing with income tax making it necessary to deal with it in Committee of the Whole and consequently this practice is not something new since it has existed for well over 25 years and there is no more substance in this argument than in the others. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux' quotation is taken from the House of Commons Debates of May 11, 1977, on page 5,522. It is interesting to note that the bill about which a point of order was raised was an omnibus bill entitled:

● (1530)

[English]

Bill C-51, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

It was asked at that time that the bill be divided because it was an omnibus bill. Here is what Speaker Jerome said about that bill, referring to Speaker Lamoureux. The Speaker noted that "the same situation has arisen several times in the past with all the same arguments having been made". He referred to two rulings by his predecessor, the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux, one on January 26, 1971, having to do with the government reorganization bill, and the second on January 23, 1969, which dealt again with an omnibus bill relating to the Criminal Code. These rulings were discussed earlier; I mentioned them.

Referring to the decision of former Speaker Lamoureux, Mr. Jerome stated:

His decision is crystal clear, and there can be no doubt that a motion containing two or more substantive provisions is quite distinct from a procedural motion or a motion which is generally described as having only the effect of dealing with the progress of a bill. The practice in respect of substantive motions has never been extended to those motions which relate to the progress of a bill. The use of the omnibus amending bill is well enshrined in our practices, and I really can find no reason to set aside my predecessor's very clear and sound reasoning, or the practice. Nor can I find any authority which would support an order of the Chair at this second reading stage that the bill be divided.

I should emphasize as well that the remedy sought by the hon. member is not to divide the bill according to the separate statutes to be amended but by subject matter.

He then goes into the specifics of the matter raised at that time. I think, Madam Speaker, that you had those precedents and that parliamentary practice in mind the last time you had to rule on a bill which this government attempted to introduce in the House of Commons, which included borrowing authority for the government plus certain taxation bills and which you did not accept at that time for procedural reasons. At the time you said that the government ought to have given a different notice for the borrowing authority aspect of the bill. I remember that very well. We had to divide the bill for the specific reason of default of notice.

I am sure once again, Madam Speaker, that you had all the practice clearly in mind when you stated in Hansard on January 19, 1981, as reported at page 6319:

I should make clear to members that I have no quarrel with the practice of combining in the same bill taxation matters based on Ways and Means motions with other matters, provided that the provisions of Standing Order 42(1) are fulfilled and notice properly given. Precedents to that effect can be found at page 42—

End of quotation.

Madam Speaker, when you stated that at this same time last year you had no misgiving and that you wanted it to be quite clear to members on both sides of the House that you saw no difficulty whatsoever in authorizing the introduction of income tax measures within a bill dealing with any other matter, hence within a bill providing authority to borrow certain sums, in my opinion, there is no doubt that you were quite aware of that parliamentary practice and I entirely agree with you for the sake of consistency and coherence in rulings as well as in the development of parliamentary practice, and I feel that it would be quite strange, not to say shocking, that we should break away from that well-established practice. It would be inconsistent with any rule, practice and precedent. Once again, I listened closely to what the hon. member for Yukon was saying, but there were no new facts, no new arguments concerning similar points of order raised in the past which would allow you to depart from a principle which you explicitly stated on January 19, 1981, and consequently from such a compelling and obvious parliamentary practice.

I am not sure, but I think at one point I heard the hon. member for Yukon refer to the parliamentary practice in use in the United Kingdom. If he did not refer to it, I will. The practice followed in the United Kingdom is very likely to support what we are doing here, because over there only one bill combining all budget measures is introduced, and it is a time-honoured tradition which is also supportive of what we are doing, if my hon. colleague wants to base his argument on the practice in Westminster. In conclusion, Madam Speaker, the legal aspect of the matter having been discussed, debated and presented in a way which I feel is quite clear, based on precedents, and the facts mentioned by the hon. member being quite simple, I should like to add this in support of my views: there is a justification for this practice which the government does not abuse, although it could, and therefore it is not contrary to our own Standing Orders and parliamentary practice. The fact is that we are now in 1982 and the number of bills is increasing day after day, week after week, month after month, and I suggest that when we can reasonably combine a number of measures deriving from the same principle, dealing with the same issue, in doing so we are not in any way limiting the freedom of expression of hon. members, because this bill, I repeat, will go through all three stages: second reading where the principle of the bill will be examined; then, clause by clause consideration of the bill in committee, as provided under our Standing Orders, where all hon. members will be able to express their views; and, finally, third reading, where an amendment may be moved for a further reference of the subject matter of the bill to the committee. Those are so many opportunities under our Standing Orders where hon. members may fully express their views concerning a legislative measure.

Now, it is recognized that when a debate has been going on for too long, the government has a political decision to make by setting a limit to the duration of the debate pursuant to SO 75A, 75B or 75C, as it has been compelled to do in the past, because of the parties' inability to come to an agreement. The government demonstrates its wisdom by allowing more or less time depending on the complexity of legislation and whether it is controversial in nature. Therefore, without abdicating our responsibilities, and when circumstances make it necessary to limit debate on any bill, including this one, I say that if the measure is more substantial and complicated, the government may decide to assume the political consequences of its action, and if there is a filibuster by the opposition, they in turn will have to accept the consequences of their action as well. But the principle, the rules, the opportunities for debate do exist. Parliamentary practice does not require the government to divide the bill concerned. In this day and age, when there is a proliferation of bills because of the evolution of our society, Parliament has to study many bills. To my mind, this procedure is logical, and there is no justification for doing away with it; it has existed for years. The government has never abused it. Under those circumstances, Madam Speaker, and we shall probably plead in the same vein when we introduce the bill on energy security, we feel the opposition has neither the reasons nor the right to oppose a procedure that is in perfect agreement with parliamentary spirit and practice.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I have never seen a House leader trying to hold up the House to ridicule as was the case just now. We have heard a speech in which we were served a systematic mixture of apples, oranges and lemons. To begin with, I will give all references to the British practice under which the rules allow the presentation of a finance bill. But that is not allowed under our current rules. Standing Order 60(11) reads as follows:

(11) The adoption of a Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

Fair enough. We have before us, and I refer hon. members to pages 109 and 117, notices of Ways and Means motions tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on the evening of November 12. Those are two notices of motions to amend the Excise Tax Act, but neither refers to the borrowing authority. Madam Speaker, you were kind enough to recognize me two days ago. At that time I put two questions to the minister about delaying the effective date of motion No. 2. It was supposed to become effective on July 1, 1982, but since representations had been made by the industry and other groups, which the minister did acknowledge, he stated that he would be prepared to hear them and postpone until January 1, 1983, the implementation of the excise tax and the changes to the assessment base. Now the government leader has the nerve to say that we will have an opportunity to examine the question in Committee of the Whole. To whom are we going to put our questions, to him or to the Minister of State? Surely we are not going to get the answers from them. We need to question government officials and spokesmen for the industry. The amendments in those two motions amount to basic reforms. They are now part and parcel of the bill, but a totally unacceptable band-aid measure has been tacked on, Madam Speaker, because you have ruled that a bill may not go beyond the scope of the Ways and Means motion.

There must not be any difference in principle in the main provisions and quite often in the past—I am saying this for the benefit of new members—we sent some bills back because the government had tried to make certain changes which were not in accordance with the Ways and Means motions. I was a member of the committee with the Hon. Donald Macdonald who was then the government House leader and who said that any motion derived from the budget would go through the notice of ways and means procedure, then the motion would be adopted without debate and the bill introduced; after that there would be second reading debate, a debate in Committee of the Whole House, unless there was an order of the House to refer the bill to a committee of the House. The Committee of the Whole did that last year. But this time the borrowing authority does not flow from a Ways and Means motion, it is quite simply a financial issue which has nothing at all to do with the proposal to change the excise tax.

It is amazing that the government House leader should say that because there is the levying of taxes and the borrowing of money, this is finance and we can put it all in the same stew pot.

The government House leader made reference to how the Chair has treated omnibus bills in the past. On a number of occasions in the past the Chair has eaten itself through its illogicality, and on those occasions I have said so to the occupant of the chair. The Criminal Code bill which did away with capital punishment was an omnibus bill an inch and a half thick. My colleague, the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), proposed an amendment with regard to the form of punishment for capital crime. Capital punishment was part of the principle—or was the principle—of the bill. The bill did much to amend the Criminal Code. Mr. Speaker Jerome had the—I do not know what I should call it—to say that the bill having been passed at second reading, no amendment to derogate from the principle of the bill could be accepted. I had never heard of such a performance.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not know exactly what the hon. member is referring to, but he is referring to a principle. I think I could approve the principle that no amendment should go beyond the scope of a bill. I think that is a principle which has been accepted and which has been basic and fundamental to most of the rulings in this House I have studied. I urge the hon. member to speak about the subject we are debating. This is a very complicated question. Hon. members may refer to rulings previously made, but some of the remarks made by the hon. member reflect on rulings, and I warn him against continuing in that vein.

Mr. Lambert: Madam Speaker, if you had been listening, I think you would have noted that I was not arguing against what you are talking about, an amendment going beyond the principle of a bill. That is correct; amendments cannot do that. However, I challenge the Chair to determine what is the principle of an omnibus Criminal Code bill if it is not to amend the Criminal Code of Canada. I cite that as an example of an odd position into which the Chair can push itself when reaching for the wrong reasons, and the government House leader is inviting Your Honour to do precisely that.

In this particular matter we have two Ways and Means motions. Among our Standing Orders is Standing Order 60(11), which the British House does not have but which the Chair has ruled must be interpreted strictly. There are two reasons for that. Budget bills are to be debated in Committee of the Whole within this House, but not a borrowing authority bill. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) took us back 25 years and referred to some entirely different rules. On two occasions Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled—on points of order I raised about borrowing authority being tacked on to appropriation bills—that the change in rules in 1968-69 precluded any debate on an appropriation bill, and there was no way of debating the borrowing authority. It was a clear attempt to bootleg a subject matter beyond the principle of an appropriation bill, because borrowing is not appropriation under any circumstance. There is no way; the two things are totally apart. Appropriation is a supply matter; borrowing is something quite different. The government did have to come in then with separate borrowing authority bills. The government is attempting to hide this borrowing authority by tacking it on to excise Ways and Means motions.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) should live up to the answer he gave me the other day that he would be prepared to hold public hearings. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) says that is not so. This bill relates to certain taxes and those taxes are excise taxes. They are Motions Nos. 1 and 2, unless the minister is able to find some other ways and means motions relating to excise taxes. Or can the minister specify what other taxes? And there he will run afoul of Standing Order 60(11), because the bill brought in must be in conformity with the Ways and Means motion. We cannot bring in all these other bits.

The minister may say that that is fine, that the bill is bringing in only those matters contained in the ways and means motion dealing with excise tax. But then we are adding another part, creating an omnibus bill by including a borrowing authority bill. Immediately the Chair faces the problem. A borrowing authority bill should go to the standing committee, according to the Standing Orders, it is not a budget bill, whereas the excise tax bills must stay in the House unless the House decides to do otherwise.

They cannot have it both ways. It is my view that of all the bills cited by the President of the Privy Council there was not one budget bill included in that list of omnibus bills. They all dealt with other things—gun legislation, the Criminal Code, other things, but not one budget bill. It is very clear why—because he would be hoist with his own petard, knowing that they do not apply. Omnibus bills do not apply to budget bills. On that basis, I want to support the point raised by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

I invite the Chair to reflect very carefully, for instance, to determine in answer what would be the principle of a bill "to amend certain excise taxes or the basis of valuation for certain excise taxes and the authority to borrow." What is the relationship between the two? That is the problem right there. I invite the Chair to rule that the bill that is being brought forward does not conform with Standing Order 60, Paragraph 11, and therefore should be withdrawn.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the Chair's attention a couple of points that do not repeat in any way the points raised in the excellent argument prepared by my colleague, my House leader, the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

I would like to point out first that a borrowing authority bill standing on its own is referred to standing committee. I would refer the Chair to Hansard of 1979, page 1197, where Bill C-10, a borrowing authority bill, was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Also in this session, 1980-81, this extra long session, on pages 2068-69, Bill C-30, the borrowing authority bill, was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Also, Bill C-59, a similar one, was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, as recorded at page 7326 of Hansard.

I would point out that that is in fact what happens with a borrowing authority bill and should happen with a borrowing authority bill. This bill we are considering now, C-93, is an act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes, and is amending the excise tax. Then, attached to that, is the phrase "and to provide other authority for the raising of funds". It describes what, as a result of excellent rulings by previous Speakers and the precedents here, has been in fact treated as a separate bill. What we have here is a subject matter which should be treated as a separate bill, but has been quite improperly lumped in with the amending portion.

The government House leader, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), used as what I think he would consider a strong part of his argument in defending the appropriateness of this bill a ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome with respect to Bill C-51, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act. He indeed quoted from that ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome this passage:

The use of the omnibus amending bill is well enshrined in our practices—

He says "omnibus amending bill". Throughout this entire judgment of Mr. Speaker Jerome, he referred to "an omnibus amending bill" as being something that was part of our practices; never to an "omnibus bill" being part of our practices, but an "omnibus amending bill" being part of our practices. That is a very fundamental and important difference, Madam Speaker.

The government House leader read a list of omnibus bills that have been passed, amending bills. He missed one. We passed one last summer that had to do with pensions. It amended a number of pension acts relating to war veterans, returning prisoners of war, former war veterans and civilians. I cannot recall the various acts that were amended by that one amending bill. The subject matter was clear; it was pensions for people who, either in their capacity as civilians or prisoners of war or combatants, were having their pensions adjusted. There was a series of statutes impinging on that, so there was one amending bill, an omnibus amending bill amending various statutes. That has been accepted pratice and that was what was happening with Bill C-51, in the ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome referred to by the government House leader.

Most significantly, I would also underline from Mr. Speaker Jerome's statement that he went on to say:

> I really can find no reason to set aside my predecessor's very clear and sound reasoning, or the practice. Nor can I find any authority which would support an order of the Chair at this second reading stage—

That is very important, because what he was adjudicating at that time was a second reading stage amendment. It was a point of order raised by the member for New Westminster, then Mr. Leggatt, seeking an order of the Chair to divide the bill at second reading.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, in a judgment in 1971, made it very clear that the appropriate time to deal with this subject matter was first reading, that second reading was inappropriate, and that there is no ability under any precedent or Standing Order or rule for the Chair or the House to divide the bill on second reading. But most certainly there is on first reading. So what Mr. Speaker Jerome said was that at second reading stage he could not accept the point of order put forward by the member for New Westminster. He did not say that in fact the order was inappropriate on first reading. Mr. Speaker Jerome then went on to say in this judgment, as reported at page 5522 of Hansard for May 11, 1977:

> This still leaves, as it has in the past every time this kind of argument has been put forward, some very deep concern about whether our practices in respect of bills do in fact provide a remedy for the very legitimate complaint of the hon. member that a bill of this kind gives the government, under our practices, the right to demand one decision on a number of quite different, although related, subjects.

Then he goes on after some "hear, hears", presumably from our side of the House:

> I think an hon. member of the House ought to have the right to compel the House to vote on each separate question.

That is absolutely clear, Madam Speaker. He says he thinks an hon. member of the House ought to have the right to compel the House to vote on each separate question. Then he went on to say:

• (1610)

> —it has been suggested that motions by way of an instruction to the committee, once the bill is in the standing committee, that the bill be divided, might be applicable. This is a practice . . . in the British House—

He went on to say that it does not apply here. Further on he said:

> It has been said that at the report stage hon. members can isolate clauses by tabling, with the appropriate notice, motions to amend, but even there it seems to me the point is not answered, as equally it is not answered by the suggestion that at third reading stage hon. members can put down motions to refer the bill back to the committee for reconsideration of certain clauses. I say that those two remedies do not answer the point fully because it may very well be that an hon. member might take the position that the law is fine the way it is and that he ought not to be put under the burden of contriving some kind of amendment or seeking further study when in fact he does not want further study. What he really wants to express is that the law is fine the way it is and that it ought to be left alone. It seems to me that he ought to be entitled to put that point at least at some stage in our proceedings, and furthermore, to require other people to come to a vote on that proposition.

In other words, fundamental to Mr. Speaker Jerome's ruling and equally to Mr. Speaker Lamoureux's earlier rulings was that there must be an ability of the House to have a recorded vote on every aspect of the bill.

Legislation arising out of Ways and Means motions is referred to Committee of the Whole. The Ways and Means motion itself allows division of the House in respect of the nature of the item. When other bills not preceded by such a motion go to Committee of the Whole, that ability is unavailable. To emphasize that point, Mr. Speaker Jerome went on to point out:

> Therefore, I think that in the past when attention has been directed to these remedies, not enough has been said about one device which does rest in the hands of hon. members, at least in my opinion, and that is a motion to delete pursuant to Standing Order 75(5).

Then he went on to point out that under Standing Order 75(5) there is the ability to delete a clause which, therefore, allows every hon. member in fact to demand a standing vote on the alternatives they look at. But here is the rub—Standing Order 75(5) reads:

> If, not later than 24 hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a bill, it shall be printed on a notice paper.

However, Standing Order 75(4) reads:

> The consideration of the report stage of a bill from a Committee of the Whole shall be received and forthwith disposed of, without amendment or debate.

In other words, the remedy which Mr. Speaker Jerome raised in his ruling of May 11, 1977, is not available in this case because of the nature of this borrowing authority. I humbly suggest that this ruling which the government House leader brought to the attention of the Chair, if examined, in fact is a precedent, and that the ruling directs one to the inescapable conclusion that indeed this is an inappropriate mingling of amendments to the Excise Tax Act and a separate act to provide authority to borrow sums of money.

I know this is a complicated issue which has been debated many times in the past and that the Chair will want to give it consideration. Apparently the bill will not be coming up tomorrow or on Friday, but perhaps some time next week. I humbly request that consideration be given to the points raised by the hon. member for Yukon and mine as well. Also I humbly suggest that those points lead to the conclusion that it is an inappropriate omnibus bill; it is not the kind of omnibus amending bill which has been allowed, based on past practices.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, unfortunately I was not in the chamber so I do not know whether the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) made the submission that since this measure is not the order of business for today, tomorrow or Friday, the Chair has ample time to consider the matter and perhaps to render a ruling at the time the government calls the bill for second reading.

Madam Speaker: The point of order of which I received notice brought forth many points that I had not anticipated. Taking into account that presentations on both sides of the House were extremely complete and very well documented, I should certainly like to look at those references so as to judge the question because I know the ruling will be important to the House.

Mr. John Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,232, 3,315, 3,442, 3,529 and 3,555.

TICKET SALES AT CN STATION AT WOODSTOCK, ONT.

Question No. 2,232—Mr. Halliday:

What was the total amount of ticket sales made at the CN railway station in Woodstock, Ontario in each of the past five years?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. advises as follows: The information requested is of a proprietary nature and VIA Rail Canada Inc. believes it should not be made public for competitive reasons.

MOVEMENT OF BARGE

Question No. 3,315—Mr. Nickerson:

1. Does the Canadian Transport Commission prevent a barge, owned by a company other than the Northern Transportation Company and located in the lower Mackenzie or Beaufort Sea, from loading freight for a return voyage after being repaired at Hay River, Northwest Territories and, if so, does the barge have to be pushed back empty to its original location?

2. (a) Do the towing fees for a 1000-ton barge going from Tuktoyaktuk to Hay River and return total approximately $100,000 (b) is there any chance of recovering revenues by hauling freight on the return trip and, if not (i) for what reason would such a regulation exist which results in lost economy and is detrimental to the Slave Lake ship-repairing industry (ii) will the government consider rescinding the pertinent regulation?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. No. The water transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission issues yearly licences to carriers on the Mackenzie River. Since these licences do not contain restrictions which limit carrier operations to one way movements, the CTC does not prevent a barge from loading freight for a return voyage after being repaired at Hay River.

2. (a) As fees depend on various factors, including tow configurations, it is not possible to identify a generally applicable fee for a given route.

(b) See answer to 1 above.

(i) and (ii) See answer to 1 above.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 3,442—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is there a summer employment program for students to work in cabinet ministers' offices and (a) if not, is such a program contemplated (b) if so, what was the scope of the program in (i) 1979 (ii) 1980 (iii) 1981?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): A student summer employment program for ministers' offices was established in 1981.

(a) Not applicable.

(b) (i) Not applicable.

(ii) Not applicable.

(iii) Responsibilities of participants in the program varied in each office. Generally, their duties ranged from clerical assistance to research.

PREPARATION OF CMHC AD

Question No. 3,529—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were employees of Graphic Artists, Studio S&B, 400 St. Antoine St. West, Montreal sworn to secrecy in connection with the details of housing provisions contained in the 1981 Budget and, if so (a) what were their names (b) on what date were they sworn to secrecy (c) were specific tasks performed by each individual for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and, if so, what were they (d) at what time and on what date was information turned over to any one of the employees by the corporation or by anyone else in the government?

2. Was all the work performed by the company done in Montreal?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. The employees of Graphic Artists, Studio S & B, 400 St. Antoine Street West, Montreal, were not working on "details of housing provisions contained in the 1981 Budget". They were asked to undertake some preparatory work based on proposals which had been made to address the mortgage renewal problem resulting from high interest rates.

2. Yes.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 3,555—Mr. Blenkarn:

Did the Minister of State for Science and Technology issue a booklet entitled "Limited Partnership Investment, Opportunities for Financing R & D in Canada" and, if so (a) is it the position of the government that people who invest in limited partnerships are entitled to take the financial advantage of limited partnership investment and so reduce their taxable income (b) is it the intention of the government to allow individuals to borrow so as to invest in limited partnerships for financing R & D projects (c) is it the intention of the government to promote, as a tax loophole, the financing of R & D by limited partnerships?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Minister of State for Science and Technology is concerned: yes, but the correct title is "Limited Partnerships: Investment Opportunities for Financing R & D in Canada".

(a) The book explains that individuals could under certain circumstances take advantage of the tax incentives offered by the federal government on R & D.

(b) Individuals may if they wish borrow to invest in a limited partnership.

(c) It is the intention of the government to encourage investment in R & D through tax incentives. The booklet explains how these incentives may apply to limited partnerships.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Government Orders:

January 28, 1982—Second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-90, an act to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal certain acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning Bill C-90. This bill arises out of a Ways and Means motion dealing with the Customs tariff. I should like to include in my point of order a question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières), but first I should like to explain how it arises. Paragraphs Nos. 20, 21 and 22 repeal The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, 1932 and The New Zealand Trade Agreement (Amendment) Act, 1970-71-72. Then paragraph 22 reads as follows:

That any enactment founded upon paragraphs 1 to 21 inclusive and Schedules I, II and III to this motion will be deemed to have come into force on the 13th day of November, 1981, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said paragraphs and Schedules imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day—

This deals with a trade agreement with New Zealand but, with the greatest respect, there is no appearance of that trade agreement. The terms of it are not before the House. We know—but not through the government—that the agreement was signed in September, 1981, but we know not the terms of it. At this moment the House is not in a position to debate fully this bill. There is no way of determining what is contained in that New Zealand trade agreement. The House is entitled to have that agreement before it. After all, do we know what notice of default has to be given, when default occurs, or whether there are dates for changes? Can notice be given by one contracting country to another for certain amendments either for elimination of some goods or the inclusion of other goods at certain levels? At the moment we are faced with surreptitiously bootlegging into the Customs Tariff the New Zealand Trade Agreement Act.

It is not that this House can by vote amend any of the tariffs of such an agreement between two contracting parties. This we know. It is one of the anomalies of the duties of the House that we are presented in many instances with tax agreements between countries. The finance committee has to consider the tax agreement but it is not allowed to change one dot or uncross one "t". That is the exclusive preserve of the department of the government negotiating with a third party.

Therefore, the House is reduced to swallowing the pill without asking any questions. Whether it is in the Committee of the Whole or whether it is in the standing committee, the parliamentary secretary knows whereof I speak, that on tax treaties there is not one thing that Members of Parliament can change. Members of Parliament can comment, but they cannot change. In this particular instance, we cannot even ask questions because the agreement is not here. There is no agreement appended to Bill C-90 either.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Lambert: Where is the agreement? Is it in somebody's heart? Or in somebody's head? Does it sit up in the trade department on some shelf? Where is it? That is the question. Is the minister prepared to table that agreement so that this debate will have some semblance of sense? I have a number of colleagues who wish to comment if they can see the agreement.

The Minister of State for Finance in shaking his head cannot under any circumstances say that The New Zealand Trade Agreement Act, having been repealed and the amendment act being repealed, has not been replaced by some agreement. There is sufficient knowledge about because I have a note that the bill gives effect to the new Canada-New Zealand agreement on trade and economic co-operation signed September, 1981, which repeals the old agreements and implements the terms of the new agreement in a Ways and Means motion.

I raise the point again. How can there be intelligent debate? Perhaps the Chair will consider that there need not be intelligent debate in this House.

Mr. Laniel: The rules say nothing about that.

Mr. Lambert: Government members are not interested in intelligent debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: It does not alter the fact that government backbenchers are not interested in intelligent debate.

If the information is not provided to this House with regard to a bill, then I say this method, ingenious as it may be, is subverting the purposes of this House in considering these amendments. There is nothing before us, just a list. The minister cannot even interpret the list of the items dealing with New Zealand unless there is an agreement, to which he may have access but to which I do not have access. Therefore, it is my view that the debate on this particular bill should be suspended until the government is prepared to table a copy of the New Zealand-Canada trade agreement of September, 1981, or whatever its date may have been. The one which served to repeal the two legislative enactments is referred to in Sections 20 and 21 of the Ways and Means motion and also referred to in the bill again as Clauses 20 and 21 found on page 10.

Strangely enough, there is a very interesting aspect to this particular bill which I shall call into question. Several of my colleagues have done so, and I will do it for them. In Clause 22 we read:

This act shall be deemed to have come into force on the 13th day of November, 1981 and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Does that apply only to the goods coming from New Zealand, or does it apply to all the other changes made with regard to Third World countries where there are generous easings of tariff rates in so far as Canada is concerned?

Those are the questions that I raise as a point of order. My point of order is, once again, that we should not proceed until the government produces the New Zealand-Canada trade agreement.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the hon. member that his point of order is not well taken because, having had a closer look at the provisions of the bill, he will notice that its first clauses define or describe whatever changes are to be brought to the Customs Tariff as a result of the trade agreement signed between New Zealand and the Government of Canada. I should also like to point out to him that trade agreements signed during a given year are cyclically and regularly made public by the Department of External Affairs. I cannot say, however, if this one has been made public yet. If it can be of any assistance to the hon. member during the forthcoming discussions, I shall be pleased to table a copy of the trade agreement with New Zealand.

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in support of the case made by my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I think it important to point out that in some respects Bill C-90 suffers from the same defect the other bill which was introduced has attached to it and about which the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) spoke.

Mr. Bussières: No.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Excuse me, may I be permitted to continue? It stems in a way from the budget papers. There is no question about that. In the budget papers of November 12, at page 121, we have the provisions that are herein contained. There is no indication by the provision of the actual trade agreement that was concluded between Canada and New Zealand that this particular matter had to come into force on November 12, 1981. Perhaps it would lapse when the required law was brought forward. The whole tenor of this bill is related to that trade agreement.

● (1630)

Mr. Bussières: No.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Well, if it is not related to the whole agreement, then we are in the position of having an omnibus bill. I think it would be very important to set aside consideration of this bill until that particular matter was cleared up in the sense indicated by the hon. member for Yukon in connection with the other bill. The implementation, Mr. Speaker, of a trade agreement—and it may very well require implementation—should not be done through a budget proposal. If the minister himself is clear on this point, I do hope he will be able to clarify it for the rest of us.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member causes us to become aware of his ignorance. First of all, he surely has not read the bill. Second, he certainly knows nothing about the trade and economic co-operation agreement signed with New Zealand because, had he read the very first clause of the bill, if indeed he can read and understands something about the Customs Tariff, he would know the clause states specifically what changes will be made in the Customs Tariff as a result of that co-operative trading agreement. Obviously, the hon. member is talking through his hat and knows nothing about the subject. Let us stop wasting time and get on with the job!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Since the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) has offered to table the trade agreement with New Zealand, I wonder if we might seek the unanimous consent of the House to do that. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered.

On the point of order raised, I would indicate to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) that the Chair is not aware of grounds which would lead to the same argument as was made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) with respect to Bill C-93. It seems to me the issue we are faced with is exactly the point of order raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in which, while he has been in possession of the original international trade agreement with New Zealand, he indicates the possibility the bill itself is not necessarily totally explanatory of the new trade agreement. The difficulty, therefore, is that possibly he cannot be as well informed as he ought to be in order to deal with this bill.

I have some sympathy with that argument in the sense an hon. member may feel there is a gap in his information. However, no argument has been placed and no citations have been put forward. I have been in the House on previous occasions when the same argument was brought up. I cannot recollect the citations, but I do clearly recollect that the absence of the trade agreement on the floor of the House at the time of debate has never hindered a bill from going forward.

So I appreciate the point made and understand and sympathize with the hon. member's feeling that he would like to have better access to information. However, no citations have been mentioned and the Chair has not been offered any argument based on a precedent which might allow the Chair to rule in that regard. Hon. members will have noted that I consulted with the officers of the Table, and the ruling of the Chair has to be that the bill can go forward.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-90, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal certains acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill we intend to consider today will make a number of major changes in the Customs tariff and will also bring in further changes of a more technical or administrative nature, all of which were presented in the Notice of Ways and Means motion tabled on November 12 by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

Before going any further, and before discussing the details of this bill, I would like to go over these changes quickly, if I may. In fact, the bill could conveniently be divided into five sections, each referring to specific objectives or items that are part of the general discussion on tariffs. First of all, the bill provides for significant changes in the general preferential tariff concerning goods imported from developing countries, and includes additional tariff improvements for the least developed countries. Second, the bill establishes a new tariff item under which goods designed for the use of disabled persons are admitted duty free. Third, there are a number of tariff changes including a new list in which tariffs have been either reduced or removed altogether on a vast range of products used by dentists or dental laboratories. Fourth, the bill repeals a number of existing tariff measures which were part of the trade agreement mentioned earlier, namely, the agreement signed by Canada and New Zealand in 1932. This agreement has now ended and its provisions have been replaced by new tariff measures which take into account the new agreement on trade and economic co-operation entered into recently by Canada and New Zealand. As I mentioned earlier, these tariff measures are an extension of the agreement and are clearly set forth in the initial sections of the bill, as we shall see later on. Finally, the fifth aspect of the bill is that it introduces a provision allowing the government to start, in an orderly fashion—and I stress the word orderly to avoid ruffling any feathers on the opposite side—the conversion of certain tariff items to the metric system. I know, some people are up in arms as soon as you mention the word metric. The first point I shall discuss is the general preferential tariff.

An hon. Member: Not all industries use it!

Mr. Bussières: No, but the textile industry does. So as far as the general preferential tariff is concerned, more familiarly known as GPT, let me explain briefly that it provides preferential rates of duty for a vast range of goods imported from developing countries. The GPT was introduced on July 1, 1974, as part of a concerted effort internationally to help developing countries increase their exports of manufactured goods to developing countries. This is a major Canadian initiative aimed at strengthening the economy of those countries in the spirit of the North-South dialogue.

In July, 1980, the House will recall that the Minister of Finance asked the Tariff Board to examine and report on the possible impact on Canadian production of including new products in the general preferential tariff, and also the impact of duty-free entry of goods that were subject to duty under the same system. At that time the Minister of Finance also announced that new mechanisms would be set up to enable Canadian producers to approach the Tariff Board and ask it to consider requests for the withdrawal of advantages under the general preferential tariff, in cases where imports benefiting from the GPT rates are thought to be harming Canadian production. The first part of the Tariff Board report on this matter, which is called the Report on Reference No. 158, was tabled in Parliament on May 20, 1981, and it recommended a number of improvements to the GPT concerning food products, fish, and certain textile and metal products.

This bill puts most of these recommendations into effect. In addition, I would like to note that a provision of this bill concerns the establishment of tariff rate quotas, to assure, in certain cases, that the goods are not imported at GPT rates, and especially in quantities which could harm Canadian production of the same goods. The Tariff Board and the parliamentary task force on the North-South dialogue recommended that special action be taken to help the least developed developing countries. During the United Nations conference on the least developed developing countries held in Paris last September, the government announced that it would take action to provide for the duty-free entry of certain goods subject to the general preferential tariff and imported from countries designated by the governor in council as a least developed developing country. The bill now under consideration introduces this important tariff change.

I would also like to note that the bill makes the rules concerning the country of origin more flexible so that goods processed in one or more than one least developed developing country can benefit from duty-free entry. The first purpose of these rules is to ensure that only the beneficiary countries receive the benefits of the GPT and therefore that the goods produced to a great extent in a developed country do not benefit from the preferential treatment under the pretext that they are shipped from a beneficiary country or were slightly processed in such a country. The bill also brings a great many technical changes to the general preferential tariff. These changes are aimed essentially at improving and simplifying existing tariff lists, which will make them easier to understand and thus to amend in the future.

The main change concerns the introduction of a new column of general preferential tariff rates in the Customs tariff. This change means that when new tariff rates are established by Parliament under the GPT, they will be added to the new column and not to a separate list set out in Section 3.1 of the Tariff, as is now the case. This list was getting cumbersome and increasingly complex because of the number of additions made to it since its introduction in 1974. I would now like to deal briefly with another aspect of this bill, namely, the provisions concerning devices for the handicapped. As hon. members will recall, the special committee of the House of Commons which examined the problems of invalids and the handicapped recommended essentially in its excellent report entitled "Obstacles", which is now well known to the Canadian public, that the federal government eliminate the tariff on devices designed for the handicapped. They will also recall that this committee, which was presided over by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), recommended these changes in recommendations 49 and 50 of its report "Obstacles", if I am not mistaken.

The Customs tariff already provides for duty-free entry of most goods designed for the use of disabled persons that are not available from Canadian sources.

The Canadian tariff policy in that area has always been to exempt from duty new products designed for the use of disabled persons if unavailable from Canadian producers. However, the exemption process is relatively slow, since new products designed for the use of disabled persons are usually subject to duty as long as no provision is made in a budget for their duty-free entry. In order to reduce the impact of that delay and also to grant applications for tariff duty reduction in respect of such goods, as pointed out in the report "Obstacles", the bill proposes to establish a new tariff item under which the governor in council would be empowered to designate for duty-free entry particular groups of goods specially designed for the use of disabled persons. This procedure would make for a more flexible and faster tariff treatment of equipment intended for the disabled.

I would like to point out that such equipment will be designated for duty-free entry only when similar products are not available from Canadian producers. The bill also proposes the duty-free entry of electronic devices that are designed to help people with speech problems, and also control equipment designed to enable disabled persons to energize and control various household, industrial and office equipment.

Another aspect of the bill concerns dental goods that are used either by dentists or by technicians preparing prostheses for use by dentists. The legislation therefore establishes a new list of dental goods that now groups in one place in the Customs Tariff all dental goods used by dentists and dental laboratories.

Under this change, a number of goods that are not made in Canada and are not likely to be will be exempted, while reductions in tariffs will apply to another range of goods to be used by dentists or dental technicians. This measure follows from representations made by both dental goods manufacturers and dentists as well as Members of Parliament, following changes made in the Customs Tariff in the October 28, 1980, budget. It will be remembered that during the debate on Bill C-50 at that time, representations had been made in this House, in committee and in the other place in respect of those imported dental goods.

Those provisions excluded certain dental goods from the duty-free entry provisions of tariff item 47810-1. I would emphasize that the impact of such changes will not be significant, since the cost of materials used by dentists in reconstructive surgery constitutes a fraction of the over-all cost of dental care. However, the proposed changes will allow dentists and dental laboratories to control their costs, will simplify customs clearance, as well as reduce the unavoidable paper burden.

Now I should like to mention some of the aspects of other tariff amendments. The bill eliminates the tariffs on a number of products such as unexposed instant films for hospitals, certain components for radio operators, and religious printed matter. Before we proceeded with second reading of the bill, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised a point of order about the New Zealand-Canada trade agreement which I tabled in the House a few minutes ago with unanimous consent. With respect to that New Zealand-Canada trade agreement, most of the tariff amendments related to its renewal are of a technical nature and will have little or no appreciable effect on the general tariff policy. As I said earlier, the new agreement signed by Canada and New Zealand replaces the 1932 New Zealand-Canada trade agreement. Under this new agreement, the special tariff rates granted to New Zealand—and I say that again for the benefit of the hon. member who stood offended a moment ago and who had not read the bill—under the terms of the former agreement are maintained and presented in the Customs Tariff under a new form. The original provisions concerning products imported from New Zealand are changed so as to make sure that only those products which are made almost entirely in New Zealand will benefit from the preferential tariff.

With respect to metric conversion, hon. members know that a good many of the provisions of the Customs tariff involve imperial measures. The bill will grant the governor in council the authority to convert those measures to metric by way of orders in council. This will enable the government to begin the conversion of the Customs tariff to the metric system in an orderly and systematic manner, and especially to give priority in this conversion process to the industrial sectors where metric measurements are already in use, particularly the textile industry. The legislative provisions of the bill have been drafted with great care so as to limit the authority to strictly technical conversions and to avoid causing an administrative nightmare. We will endeavour instead to iron out the difficulties for those industries which are already using the metric system. That is meaningless for the hon. member who does not know anything, but it is an urgent measure for those people who conduct their businesses in metric measurements. A few technical tariff changes are also brought about in the Customs tariff. One relates to canned fish and is aimed at reinstating the tariff rates which were in force prior to an amendment to the interpretation of the tariff; other changes are designed to improve the tariff nomenclature so as to make its application easier. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendments to the Customs Tariff proposed in this bill will benefit handicapped people, consumers, importers and, of course, Canadian manufacturers.

The improvements to the GPT, particularly those related to imports from underprivileged nations, reaffirm Canada's commitment to help the underdeveloped countries upgrade and strengthen their economies. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat that this government is determined to see that bill and the principles involved passed as quickly as possible. I therefore ask the members of this House to extend their usual co-operation so that we may undertake with dispatch the consideration of the various stages of the bill and, to do so, Mr. Speaker, the support and understanding of all members are essential. I am sure that in committee we will have a chance to examine more extensively the clauses of the bill and that our proceedings will be more than fruitful in the interests of Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank somebody in the department for providing me with a copy of the minister's speech so I could follow him line by line in the English version. It still does not answer the questions which I raised in my point of order with regard to the New Zealand trade agreement.

If we look at the bill, what is being done is deleting New Zealand from the British preferential tariff listed in the annex to the Customs tariff which, incidentally, those who are in visual reach of this can see how thick it is. Subsection 3(2) lists some 60 countries, plus or minus, throughout the world which, after this bill goes into effect, will enjoy the British preferential tariff. Neither England nor Ireland and now New Zealand will enjoy the BP.

I wish the minister would pay particular attention here because a better procedure will have to be adopted in the future when Canada negotiates more bilateral agreements with countries of the Commonwealth to which British preferential tariff rates will no longer apply and which will have their own specific rates.

This agreement is being incorporated into the Customs tariff by those items covered by the agreement. New Zealand is withdrawn and there is a special category called "New Zealand". I suppose if our friends the Australians are the next ones, we will have a section in the Customs tariff listing Australia. How about Malawi, Kenya, Trinidad and Tobago, the more important of the Caribbean Islands, Jamaica, and all of those? Are they going to be subject to these special agreements?

Are we going to see the same sort of procedure adopted in amending the Customs tariff so that nowhere in a statute book one could, as one could hitherto, see what is a New Zealand-Canada trade agreement? I do not know who is being more clever by half in trying to think that they can get away from a debate on a bill that Parliament is required to pass to incorporate and give legal sanction to such a trade agreement.

I suppose some smart-alec says that the passing of Bill C-90 to amend the Customs Tariff Act will mean that Parliament will adopt this Canada-New Zealand trade agreement. That is nonsense. The agreement has a number of provisions which do not come under the Customs tariff listings. For instance, the notice of default which I mentioned earlier is one of those provisions. What about the requirements for changes? I have a press release which was issued by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) and his opposite number in the New Zealand government. It is the usual joint communiqué which is issued by ministers. This release was issued in September and indicates that the trade agreement is supposed to provide more flexible ways of dealing with trade problems. The release states:

> Mr. Lumley indicated that the federal government had consulted closely with Canadian industry and provinces prior to the renegotiation of the agreement and that there was widespread support for the continuation of preferential trade arrangements with New Zealand. "I am confident that the new agreement will constitute a positive framework within which Canadian businessmen can pursue the many opportunities for trade and investment in the New Zealand market," Mr. Lumley said.

Balderdash. How do we know that? There is no opportunity to question the minister on this agreement or its provisions. This agreement is important to Canada.

What about an agreement with Australia? Will that again be bootlegged under the table? That is improper.

The bill before us is destined to remain in the House and be discussed in the Committee of the Whole. There is no opportunity to question businessmen or, for that matter, the minister—no opportunity for anyone to testify before the committee. In other words, everything is being kept under wraps. No information is being given out. Oh, I will have a copy of the trade agreement because the minister apparently tabled one.

Mr. Bussières: Go and get one.

Mr. Lambert: We will have to get it in the usual way, from the Journals.

At any rate, this is a ridiculous way of carrying on. No one can understand it. No lawyer who is acting on behalf of a province, for example, can look up in the Statutes of Canada to see what the trade agreement with New Zealand is. This should be made possible with all agreements.

However, according to the government, the end always justifies the means. There is an agreement, and it has been done quietly. Why is it done in this way? I presume that the government wanted that much less debate about it. There would not be, as there was, an opportunity for members from western Canada to examine individuals about meat quotas. Hon. members will recall the fuss which occurred a few years ago in western Canada over the importation of cut beef from the Pacific Rim countries, including New Zealand, which passed through Canadian quotas to the United States and which resulted in punitive action being taken by the Americans against Canadian beef producers. Such questions are germane to the examination of these agreements.

I am satisfied that the New Zealand government does not want to be part of any cover-up, but the procedure which was followed for this agreement is a total cover-up because there is no way to question the minister about its provisions. I can see the cabinet ministers laughing. They could not care less. That is the gang who knows. But the minister is not prepared to discuss the agreement with me.

Mr. Bussières: Get a copy.

Mr. Lambert: I have not got a copy because I cannot—

Mr. Bussières: Here, have mine.

Mr. Lambert: All right. The minister can provide one. But it is only because he has been hauled kicking and screaming to the floor of the House that he can produce one. It was not his intention to produce one at any time and this is the point I am trying to make. Why should the agreement not be appended to the bill? Other people besides members are entitled to this information. But will the government put it with the bill? Not in a thousand years, not the government.

I hope that our trade relations with New Zealand will improve over their past record, which has been shameful. It has been much less outgoing, and this goes back 20 years. I think Canada had an opportunity much earlier to take the lead in developing stronger ties with Australia and New Zealand, but the government was preoccupied with other things. I do not know what they were. I suppose they did not speak French out there—that is the problem with the lot of them.

[Translation]

—it can well be said, no doubt it is because French is not spoken in New Zealand and in Australia, and consequently they have been neglected.

[English]

The changes in the Customs Tariff Act are not overly exciting for anyone. As the minister said, they would accept the importation of certain commodities for the handicapped.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am quite disappointed when I hear the hon. member suggest that our international relations are based on the language spoken in the recipient country. He knows quite well that New Zealand, Australia and the other Commonwealth countries have always been our friends and his comments are absolutely unfounded and irresponsible.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, having travelled in the countries involved and being acquainted with their representatives for over 20 years, therefore longer than the hon. member has, having known their servicemen during the war and having maintained relations with Australia and New Zealand, it is not for the minister to lecture me on my views about the relations of Canada with those two countries. It is quite simple. Frankly, as usual he is peeved for the wrong reasons.

[English]

I thank the minister for sending me a letter some time ago which outlined the changes which were proposed in the budget with regard to certain dental materials and prostheses. However, there was one very significant exception, and I think the minister realizes it. It came to my mind the other day. The dentist I frequent here in Ottawa has a new office. He is a young dentist, and precisely the equipment I had in mind is installed in his office. It is not made in Canada. Very little of that equipment is made in Canada. My dentist does not have one of those antiquated chairs to which lights are attached. The lights in my dentist's office are in the ceiling; they are operating room lights. There are also special lights which descend. They can be controlled either by foot or by hand. I am hopeful that in his answer the minister will give me an explanation. He will recall the discussion we had and the fact that this matter was under examination. I think an awfully long time has been taken to examine this question, and this would have been a wonderful opportunity to remove the duty on this particular equipment because, frankly, it does a great deal to increase dental costs in this country and, goodness only knows, they are high.

• (1710)

Mr. Waddell: Give him your tooth; maybe he will put it under his pillow.

Mr. Lambert: I hope the minister will give me an answer.

Some of my colleagues will talk about metrication and the authority needed by order in council to convert pounds to kilograms and yards and feet to whatever the measurement in metric is. There will be some flak about this. I am sure some hon. members will come forward and say that there should be a total revised Customs tariff schedule in the new terms authorized by an act.

Without going into the question of metrication, I can quite well understand the concern of people in this country that so much metrication is taking place merely by bureaucratic ukase. In other words, somebody at the Metric Commission can issue a directive that, effective January 1 of such and such a year, a thing will have to be handled on the metric basis. The public has no way of countering that. Is the commission sure the people are accepting it? After all, the people of this country have a right to determine what standards of length, weight and others they are going to use. We may think some people are prejudiced because there is one way or another. Those among hon. members in the House who are older may find it very difficult to adjust to metric. All right, we have adjusted before; however, hon. members are going to talk about this, and I am sure some views about the powers of government through order in council or regulation will be expressed. There is far too much government by regulation, and this may also be a matter which will be raised.

The last point I want to make with regard to this bill concerns something not included in the bill. I have before me a communiqué issued by the ambassador of Japan to Canada dealing with measures to be introduced in Japan to improve trade with its trading partners. We might have considered certain measures in the past to be non-tariff barriers, but Canada and other countries wishing to sell goods to the Japanese have run into testing procedures, measurements and all sorts of things which would absolutely baffle anyone. On December 16, 1981, it was decided that an effort would be made to put together a package of special measures for the improvement of import testing procedures by the end of January, 1982. I will not go through all the measures, but I have written to the Japanese ambassador thanking him for this information and saying I hope this is just the first step his country is taking to remove the hundreds and thousands of what we might call non-tariff import barriers. Japan was notorious for that. We know that commercial traffic was almost only one way. Manufactured goods left Japan by the fleetload. Raw materials went in by the same boats, but those who benefited most from that trade were the Japanese, to the detriment of many of us in many parts of Canada.

In certain areas I do not think there ever will be any cure for difficulties in industrial capacity and production in this country. With respect to the manufacture of shoes in Canada, I frankly think it is almost beyond the ken of man to resolve the difficulties in that industry to the satisfaction of everyone. The customer wants the most modern looking footwear. The customer wants a great variety of style and diverse materials at the lowest possible cost. If we open the door to imports of shoes of that nature, I am afraid most of the Canadian shoe industry would disappear. For one thing, there could not be any economies of scale in production and all that goes with that. The same goes for textiles. There are 25 million people in Canada. We do not have a big textile industry here. As a matter of fact, the market in Canada represents an end run of less than 10 per cent of American production in cotton and general artificial fibres and other textiles. Certainly on other types, yes, Canada can meet the market, but basically we would have one very difficult time. We cannot open our markets. As a matter of fact, even low cost countries like India, Singapore, Taiwan and Korea have some very serious restrictions on the import of foreign textiles other than, shall we say, some almost raw materials such as woven materials. The situation is the same with respect to shoes. Furniture is another one. There are difficulties around the world in relation to those items. Now we are having difficulty with regard to automobiles. Every country wants to manufacture automobiles and to keep others out, but we want the other man's style and the other man's price. It is not just that simple. I am hoping, though, that we are taking a step in the right direction. We now have Canadian banks operating in Japan. True enough, Japanese banks are operating regularly here now. They were not previously operating regularly as such. We are normalizing our trade in a much better way.

I do not like the way it is done, and I never will like the fact that we get bilateral trade agreements incorporated merely by slipping in changes into the tariff. I would commend to the minister to come clean. I have a copy of the trade agreement here. If this had been appended to the bill so that we had it for information, it would be in the Statutes of Canada, although I must admit that having a trade agreement under a bill which amends the Customs tariff is an odd place, but at least it would be there. Now it is not there. As a matter of fact, it does not even appear in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the permission of the House, before I sit down at this moment, that this trade agreement be appended as part of today's Hansard. Outside of that, I think the Customs tariff bill is not that bad.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First of all, I should like to emphasize that this trade agreement between Canada and New Zealand which the hon. member has referred to is a public document which has been available ever since a press release announced its signature by both parties. This means that any Canadian and, for that matter, any hon. member who would want to have a look at this agreement could obtain a copy upon request from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This is a public document which any Canadians may obtain upon request.

I do not see why some hon. members are making such a big fuss about this and why they seem to imply that this is a secret document. We were not trying to hide anything. This is a public document, like any other trade agreement and it is available to anyone who wants to see it.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in this public document, or what purports to be a document, dated August 14, 1981, presents what is generally a rather nice agreement between two states, New Zealand and Canada. It does not refer to any reduction or changes in favour of Canada in the agreement. It talks about co-operation in trade, it talks about provisions for anti-dumping and so on, but nowhere does it set out Canada's offer to reduce tariffs to New Zealand, nor does it set out New Zealand's offer to reduce tariffs to Canada. So I presume at least that the document filed by the minister is not the complete document. I wonder if the minister would follow his clear demonstration of wanting to come clean with the House and make things public, and would perhaps file the schedules that in fact were negotiated between the two states, so that we would have some indication of what we received in exchange for these tariff reductions.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rise on the same point of order?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a point of order, but seeking to be recognized as the next speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I believe there are other matters being debated at the moment and I will recognize the hon. members when we come to deal with them.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, virtually, because there happens to be a coincidence here. I am sure it is more than coincidental. In the coming into force of this particular agreement between New Zealand and Canada, in article 13, there is a requirement that "the agreement shall enter into force on a date to be agreed in an exchange of notes between the contracting parties and shall thereupon supersede—" etc.

It so happens that by the bill before us we are told that the old New Zealand trade agreement is repealed, two of them, and that this act now before us, Bill C-90, shall be deemed to have come into force on November 13, 1981. I am wondering whether the exchange of notes between Canada and New Zealand stipulated that the agreement would come into force on November 13, 1981, and whether that just happened to coincide with the day after the presentation of the budget. I think that it would be useful to have the exchange of notes as well as the agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has some difficulty. Hon. members will have noticed that I was out of the chamber for a moment. On my return I got the impression that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had proposed a motion, but I am not sure that he did. I understood that the issue under consideration by the hon. member for Edmonton West was the possibility that the agreement with New Zealand might be appended to today's Hansard. At this point I am not entirely clear whether the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) is raising a point of order.

It does not sound to the Chair like a point of order, because it simply seeks to determine whether or not the hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) might add even further information.

The Chair will be pleased to assist the House in whatever way the House wishes. We are running out of direction. Is there some hon. member who would care to enter the debate, or move the House in a particular direction, or raise a point of order that seeks a decision by the Chair? I recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West moved that the trade agreement be appended to today's Hansard. My suggestion, in amplification of that, was that the exchange of notes between Canada and New Zealand, bringing this particular agreement into force, should also be appended, because of the coincidence, the apparent coincidence between the coming into force of this agreement and the provisions of the bill before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I recognize the hon. Minister of State for Finance?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that some people are tripping over flowers in the carpet, as Xavier used to say. The government was asked to table a document, namely, a trade agreement between Canada and another country. This document is a public document which everybody knew about, and which has been tabled. Anybody who wants a copy of it can obtain one. This is a public and not a secret document. I am afraid that someone is tripping over flowers in the carpet and that we would be wasting the Canadian taxpayers' money if we had it printed as an annex to today's Debates. I do not understand at all the meaning of this discussion which has nothing to do either with points of order or information, because this is all public information.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) wish to speak on the same point of order?

The Chair would like to determine whether or not there is a motion in front of the House. That would help.

Does the hon. member for Edmonton West put a motion that the trade agreement with New Zealand be appended to today's Hansard?

• (1730)

Mr. Lambert: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Edmonton West is entitled to move that motion, duly seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Now I recognize the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I will speak on the motion at the same time. I asked the Minister of State for Finance before why he does not file the whole trade agreement, but he has not yet answered. If this is the whole agreement then why are we dealing with amendments to tariffs in favour of New Zealand? The bill declares that they are part of the agreement, but somewhere along the line we were not given the entire story. I am speaking to the motion, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State volunteered to supply an agreement, but he has not supplied the whole agreement. There is nothing in the agreement with respect to the reduction of Canadian tariffs, and there is nothing in it with respect to the reduction of New Zealand tariffs. Yet, the bill deals with a reduction of tariffs or a change of tariffs. Where is the agreement? Will the minister of state tell us?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I see the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) seeking the floor. Is it to comment further on the same point of order?

Mr. Taylor: No, Mr. Speaker; I am rising on the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair must advise the hon. member for Bow River that we should take these matters in order. Let us begin with the motion which asks to append to today's Hansard a copy of the trade agreement with New Zealand.

Mr. Lambert: As tabled by the minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The difficulty is that there is now a motion on the floor of the House, the one dealing with Bill C-90. In order to have the trade agreement vis-à-vis New Zealand appended to today's Hansard, the Chair requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That unanimous consent may or may not exist. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lambert: It does not require unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Edmonton West states that he feels it is not necessary to have unanimous consent, although there is another motion on the floor of the House. The Chair will take a couple of minutes to consult in that regard, but I do not think the hon. member is correct. My view is that there is one motion on the floor of the House at the moment and that another one cannot be entertained until such time—

Mr. Lambert: That is mine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): No, it is not the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West which is on the floor at this time. It is the motion of the Minister of State for Finance that is on the floor at this point. If hon. members want to raise points of order, the Chair will hear them, but first I will take a couple of minutes to assure myself that I am correct in my interpretation in respect of the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West. I think we ought not to have debate on a motion which has not yet been accepted by the Chair and about which, frankly, the Chair has serious doubt. If the hon. member is now seeking the floor on a point of order, I will hear it.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who has had vast experience knows that we cannot have two motions on the floor but that we can amend the motion which is on the floor. I understood that the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West was amending the motion—

Mr. Lambert: No.

Mr. Taylor: —by requesting that the agreement be appended to Hansard. I do not see anything wrong with this. The agreement has been tabled and made public. Why should there be objection to other members having a copy of the agreement?

Mr. Pinard: Then ask for copies. It is tabled, it is public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Apparently the matter is becoming more complex. I am aware that the Minister of State for Finance tabled the agreement with New Zealand. Now the hon. member for Bow River is asking whether or not it is available. Of course it is available. It has been tabled and is available to every hon. member of the House. Now, that matter is out of the way.

I should like to turn to the issue raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He did not put to the Chair a motion to amend the bill, which he might have done. He put a motion to the House asking that this particular agreement be appended to Hansard. It is not a motion to amend the bill; it is a motion seeking the unanimous consent of the House to append the agreement to Hansard. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the appending of that trade agreement to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert: They do not know what they are talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Therefore it will not be appended to Hansard.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting with bated breath to participate in this exciting debate on Bill C-90, an act to amend the Customs tariff and to repeal certain acts in consequence thereof. If anyone in the country reads a copy of today's proceedings in Hansard or happens to view these proceedings on television, it will become very clear why the popularity of and esteem for politicians are so abysmally low. Bill C-90 deals with some very important matters in terms of imports and exports, but it is bogged down in parliamentary procedure and wrangling. I do not only cast my critical comments on my colleagues on my right but on those across the aisle as well. We listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) read from a prepared text some straightforward, rather simplistic comments about the bill.

Mr. Laniel: They were very interesting and to the point.

Mr. Riis: They were very interesting, but there was nothing new. Then the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised the issue that there were documents we should have received to make the debate meaningful. In listening to the Minister of State for Finance, I do not think his contribution was particularly meaningful. This is no reflection upon him, necessarily; it is just the way things operate. In listening to the previous speaker, I was not particularly moved by any insight into the importance of the document. To put it simply, we have not had time or the necessary documentation in order to prepare. It almost begs the question as to why we go through this routine and whether or not it is an appropriate process. I think it is clear that it is not. I think we should get this bill into committee very quickly where we can identify clause by clause some of the concerns of hon. members.

At this point I should like to make a couple of general comments. I recognize Mr. Speaker's generosity in providing an opportunity to the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) to be in the chair. We are always pleased to have a very objective individual in the chair, and Mr. Speaker could not have picked a more objective individual from the House this afternoon.

We are looking at some very positive tariff changes on imported goods to assist the disabled. While one's first response is to laud this as a very generous move on the part of the government, as indeed it is, I find it somewhat hypocritical. Not many weeks ago we debated in the House a bill to amend the Excise Act by placing an excise tax on paraphernalia for the disabled. At that time we raised questions as to why a special tax would be placed upon back braces, leg braces and items thereof, at a time when we had just received a report on the disabled. Hon. members opposite indicated that they would study the matter, report back to the House and perhaps bring in changes to the legislation. We on this side sincerely hope that that is in process now. We welcome this particular move. I think it is a very progressive and positive step in the right direction. I would make the same comments with regard to the whole topic of dental materials.

I want to focus on a point which the Minister of State for Finance indicated. These goods are being allowed into the country duty free because they are not produced in our country. Therefore, they will not be challenging domestic manufacturing or industries, which is indeed the case. It makes one wonder how often we welcome foreign products into Canada duty free or at preferential rates. There is no comparable manufacturer in Canada because the market is essentially being overrun by foreign products.

We should look very carefully at this whole matter, and I think it is important that we get this topic into committee as quickly as possible so that we can see it within some context of the development of our own domestic industry and our willingness to assist our friends from across the way.

When we see a bill similar to Bill C-90, we have to wonder in what context this bill was introduced. When we decide that we are going to reduce the tariff on a whole number of goods, in what context are we making that decision? Since unquestionably we do lack a comprehensive industrial strategy for Canada, it cannot then be placed in a comprehensive context for Canada. Then we look at the lesser developed countries or those countries listed in the bill designated by the United Nations as being nations developing least. We are interested in assisting these nations and that is why we are reducing the tariffs and changing the quotas; that is why we are dismantling these tariff walls. Has enough thought been given to determining what effect these imports into Canada have on a particular developing country? We note with interest from the background notes which the minister kindly provided us that some of the main trading partners of the least developing nations are Bangladesh, Guinea, Haiti and Tanzania. From those countries we import green coffee, bauxite and jute products duty free and we make the assumption that it is in those countries' best interests to import them duty free. I wonder if that is necessarily always the case.

When you look at a bauxite mine and the conditions under which the ore is being mined, or when you look at the nation that is moving into a cash crop such as coffee and ask who is benefiting from these exports of coffee you find it is a select elite minority in that Third World country. Are they using productive agricultural land for the sake of growing a cash crop, such as coffee? That is a question I think we must ask ourselves as we go ahead and take what we perceive as being very positive steps in terms of reducing our trade barriers and welcoming more goods, particularly from developing countries.

In what context do we make this evaluation? I feel that is an important component and one that can be dealt with seriously only in committee, not in the House. We are able to ask specialists in committee whether it is in the best interest of Guinea and Tanzania to be importing these products, or whether there are other products we should be importing in lieu of these.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I understood what the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said, he said he hoped that we would move into committee to call in experts to discuss this matter. I would like to have verification on this point if I am wrong, but I believe this bill is going to be discussed in Committee of the Whole on the floor of this House. Am I not correct, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member is correct. That is the motion before the House, that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole. Perhaps the House ought to appreciate the hon. member's point, and the Chair ought to indicate that really it is not a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention, and while it was my understanding that we were moving into Committee of the Whole, the reason for my interjection was to question that particular action. When you consider the business that ought to be before this House, and particularly the borrowing authority act which is coming up in a few days and the kind of intense analysis it must receive in the Committee of the Whole, is this the kind of bill with which we want to take up the precious time of this House? I would question that. I would also encourage hon. members to reconsider spending the time of this House going over Bill C-90 clause by clause and looking into the various aspects of our tariffs on goods for the disabled, dental products, general commodities of agriculture and others. This is a very technical bill. It is not the kind of bill that lends itself to this kind of discussion.

With those few comments I will close and encourage hon. members of the House to recognize that important legislation is pending, much more serious than this bill in terms of a comprehensive and over-all discussion, and to get this bill to committee as quickly as possible, Consideration should be given to sending it to the standing committee instead of, as proposed, to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-90 covers a number of things. I want to deal with the various items one by one. Prior to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) speaking on the bill, he said that he would table the New Zealand agreement. I think all members should take a look at that tabled document. Nowhere in the document does it call for Canada to reduce any tariffs, nor does it call for New Zealand to reduce any tariffs. It is a sweetheart deal. It has very lovely language. There is a desire to strengthen friendly relations for the promotion, encouragement and expansion of bilateral trade. It recognizes the desirability, it is mindful of the importance, and it is determined. It goes on and on. Nowhere does it say that the government of New Zealand will reduce tariffs in New Zealand, nor does it say that the Government of Canada will reduce any tariffs. It talks about the consultative process, the sharing of technological information and that type of thing. But that is not what this bill deals with. Part of this bill deals with certain tariff changes that extend to New Zealand.

Looking at those tariff changes and the whole purpose and scope of this type of bill, I want to say to the House that in my view we in Canada are losing all sorts of potential trade because we do not pay real attention to two countries in the world that should be our most complete trading partners. I am referring to Australia and New Zealand.

It is probably nice and balmy in New Zealand today. I am sure people are on the beach, because it is holiday season. It is mid-summer. The same applies to Australia. While we wade around in two or three feet of snow and suffer in very cold temperatures, Australia and New Zealand are enjoying summer. While they do not get winter like we get winter, except perhaps in Tasmania and to some extent the south island of New Zealand, their seasons are the exact opposite to ours.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the combined population of Australia and New Zealand is about 17 million people. They live not very much differently from us. Their hopes, their aspirations for their children, their housing, the way they speak, think and work are not much different from us. They represent for Canada a perfect market for our goods and expertise, and we represent the same thing to them.

Now, Sir, I have had some experience in the manufacturing business. One of the companies I am associated with maintains an Australian subsidiary where we sell a great deal of our products. Indeed, in one product line we have some 40 per cent of the Australian market. We would have a larger share of the New Zealand market if there had been negotiations in this trade deal with New Zealand to remove some of the import restrictions that exist there. It is a good market for us largely because what we manufacture for our spring season are the same type of goods sold for Christmas in New Zeland and Australia. So in our trade with that part of the world we are able to get nearly two months more production using the same machinery and production lines that we use for our Canadian trade. That makes our plants very much more efficient and it means we can sell in Canada for less. Of course, the same thing applies to the manufacturers and processors in those two countries.

Any country the size of Canada, New Zealand or Australia needs a large home market so as to develop a good, profitable production run. If we were able to combine the Canadian market of 24 million people with the 17 million of Australia and New Zealand, we could eliminate this "small home market" attitude which exists in all three countries. Yet we do not seem to be prepared to get down to brass tacks with those countries. We continue to have little trade agreements, tariffs, and we do not make general agreements for an open and free trade arrangement in that market.

I say to you, Sir, that market is valuable to us. A bathing suit manufacturer in Australia or Canada—and they make good bathing suits in Australia; I have one—has an open market in the other country in his off-season. This applies equally to lawn furniture, barbecues, a whole host of things we produce here and they produce there. If we were as a nation looking at the possibility of expanding our world trade, we would enter into a common market agreement with Australia and New Zealand. We have everything going for us and could do it if we wanted to, instead of niggling back and forth with a system which contains an unbelievable number of different tariffs.

We have, Mr. Speaker, the British preference, most favoured nation, the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, and the general preferred tariff. Then of course we have the "free" situation and the U.K. and Ireland situation and now, presumably, as we negotiate these bilateral agreements while still maintaining the tariff structure, we have the New Zealand tariff structure, which will presumably form another chapter in the general tariff book, a bible of unbelievable complexity.

We are not looking to our responsibilities in this field correctly, and I want to bring to the attention of the House a situation concerning New Zealand. Our trade with them is not a big deal. In 1979 we exported to them some $90 million worth of goods and imported $135 million worth of goods. The reason our imports in 1979 were so high is that a great deal of New Zealand meat was coming into Canada for trans-shipment to the United States. When I first saw that I wondered why, and so I inquired of L.N. Reynolds Co., Ltd., perhaps Canada's largest meat brokers, and that is what they told me.

However, in looking at our total trade with New Zealand, we find that our exports to them represent only 2.3 per cent of their imports. There is no reason why we should have such a small amount, no reason at all. Now it is quite true that their closest trading partner is Australia, but our own analysis indicates we could have a far larger trade with New Zealand if we did something about it. I want to read from page 19 of the departmental analysis. Speaking of the new energy and mineral resources in that country, it says:

Expansion is expected to take place in the mining of ironsands to satisfy the rising demands of domestic steel producers, as well as in the mining of molybdenite, lead, zinc and copper.

All of this should be of benefit to Canadian producers of mining machinery and other related equipment. Similar opportunities are expected in the exploration for new natural gas deposits, its extraction, treatment and transportation.

We have that expertise here, we have that ability here. I would call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN VALUATION DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas, when valuation day, December 31, 1971, was set, land in western Canada was selling at prices four, five and six times lower than it is today—consequently a farmer who wishes to retire now must pay capital gains on the inflation of the past 11 years, and whereas lawyers, doctors, cabinet ministers, or MPs will not accept 1971 values for their fees or remuneration, but farmers are penalized by this outdated law in spite of the fact that their costs have increased and their income has declined, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House urges the government to be fair to the farmers who have spent their lifetime on a farm by changing the valuation day to December 31, 1981.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

THE BUDGET

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It comes as no surprise that once again a provision of the MacEachen budget has been exposed for its unthinkingly negative impact on small business. The federal sales tax will now have to be calculated, collected, and remitted by more than 100,000 wholesalers, who are primarily small businesses that have not the staff nor experience to deal with yet more government paper burden. This extra work will inevitably lead to higher costs to consumers, and therefore more inflation. I would move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to withdraw this regrettable provision or, better still, withdraw the whole sorry shambles his budget has been revealed to be.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—SUGGESTED MEETING OF PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the subcommittee on the Northern Canada Power Commission, under a reference from this House, conducted public studies into the commission during the summer of 1981; and whereas the affairs of the commission seem to be going from bad to worse as witnessed, for example, by the Field, British Columbia, affair and the imposition of low water surcharges in the Northwest Territories; and whereas the government has failed to call a meeting of the subcommittee—with one exception—since October last; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the subcommittee on the NCPC be required to meet forthwith in order to finalize its report and recommendations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ARMS RACE

CONDEMNATION OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas, on this Monday past, President Reagan set the stage for the resumption of production of new chemical weapons, stating in a letter to Congress that new lethal nerve gas munitions are

"essential to the national interest"; and whereas the production of chemical and biological weapons is abhorrent to mankind and, furthermore, banned by international treaty in 1925; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House direct the Government of Canada to protest to President Reagan this latest destabilizing move in the arms race and call upon both the U.S. and the Soviet Union to cease immediately production of and destroy all stockpiles of any such weapons.

SOUTH AFRICA—COMMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG ASSINIBOINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Because members of this House cannot allow remarks by one of its members to go unchallenged when to do so could in any way appear to ignore or condone the evils of racism and discrimination, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly):

That this House expresses its shock, dismay and condemnation of the views stated and reiterated by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine to the effect that blacks in South Africa lack morals, breed at an irresponsible rate, can't keep up with whites intellectually and are still too primitive for self-rule, and that this House reaffirms our commitment to call for the abolition of racist laws and censorship in South Africa, and our determination to combat the dangers of prejudice and racism at home and abroad.

TRADE

SALE OF CANDU REACTORS TO SOUTH KOREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That a major effort be mounted to negotiate in a serious way with our ally, South Korea, to establish a mutually satisfactory route for two-way trade which will ultimately lead to an agreement for the South Koreans to purchase additional Candu reactors, greatly boosting our ailing nuclear sector, and further pave the way for Canada's promotion as a leader in the field of exportable high technology.

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the performance of federal cabinet ministers on national television is important to the credibility of all hon. members of this House. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That if he ever appears on "Canada AM" again to debate the Ontario minister of education, the Secretary of State be better prepared, better rested, and have better figures in order to avoid the complete annihilation he suffered this morning.

RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS REQUESTED FOR DEFENCE OF MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Liberal colleagues pressured the RCMP to get involved in probing separatism in Quebec by either legal or illegal means, even though the RCMP wanted nothing to do with it, and whereas it is becoming apparent that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is refusing to release documentation, simply to cover up this Liberal government's illegal activities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That this House instruct the Solicitor General to release immediately the 33 documents the RCMP defence counsel has requested, which are essential for a fair trial of the 17 officers charged.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN REGULATIONS APPLICABLE TO LAY-OFFS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that partial lay-offs hit younger, low-seniority employees first; in view of the fact that these employees often face heavy mortgages and other payments and are unable to get by on unemployment insurance; and in view of the fact that some older employees with higher seniority could better afford a lay-off and would be willing to take a lay-off if they did not thereby forfeit their rights under unemployment insurance and their seniority rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the government amend UIC regulations to permit higher seniority employees the option of being laid off in place of lower seniority employees during a partial and temporary lay-off.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED RETENTION OF PENALTIES FOR USE OF MARIJUANA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that medical research has compiled overwhelming evidence that smoking marijuana is extremely dangerous, often damaging the lungs, brain, reproductive tissues and cellular metabolism, and given the fact that relaxing penalties for marijuana has been proven beyond a doubt to lead directly to dramatic increases in the amount consumed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff):

That the government give its assurances not to soften the present legislation on marijuana which could easily be misconstrued as condoning or encouraging the use of this very dangerous drug.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

CUTBACKS IN TRANSFER OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, on February 3 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) indicated to this House that she would be increasing the $4.6 billion she transfers to provincial governments for health concerns by 13.4 per cent. Yesterday the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) indicated he would be increasing the transfers of $1.825 billion to the provinces for post-secondary education by at least 12 per cent. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That the Minister of Finance on motions today explain to this House from what appropriations he is cutting transfers to the provinces, by his own admission in the amount of $3.2 billion over the next five years, and, by the provinces' calculations, $4.5 billion, with respect to the financing of the established programs.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Parent: —seconded by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail):

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

COMMENTS MADE BY MINISTER OF STATE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. He will know that his colleague, the Minister of State for Quebec, noting that there had been a significant deterioration in economic conditions in Canada since the budget was prepared has said, and I quote:

—it becomes necessary to take concrete steps to curb inflation.

[English]

May I ask the Minister of Finance if the Minister of State was speaking for the government when he expressed that position?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the comments of the Minister of State were quite in line with comments I made myself to the effect that we are committed not simply to minimizing the consequences of unemployment for those looking for work, but to training the labour force which we will need for major resource development and high technology projects in the next few years. These and other innovative measures to strengthen the economy can and will be promoted within the current framework. Therefore, when the Minister of State speaks about concrete measures he is quite in accordance with the statement I made, which was an effort to relate what it might be possible to do within the over-all framework of restraint. Certainly that is the policy, and will continue to be the policy.

QUERY RESPECTING PROPOSALS TO INCREASE DEFICIT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has succeeded in compounding the continuing mystery as to just what is the real version of the budget that he brought down, changed once, and now indicates he will change significantly more. He talked about the current framework. He said yesterday in relation to what that framework is, and I quote from The Globe and Mail:

"I have talked about major fiscal stimulus, and I am not in favour of that.... When I talk about major stimulus, I'm talking about very big sums—five to ten billion dollars".

That clearly leaves the implication that the minister regards his current framework of restraint as involving increasing the deficit by up to $5 billion. May I ask the Prime Minister if the Minister of Finance is expressing the position of the government when he proposes to increase the deficit by up to $5 billion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that would be an unfortunate implication, because I can state quite categorically that it is not my intention to accept any proposals that would increase the deficit by $5 billion. I stated in reply to the earlier question that any measures that I would support or that could be taken by the government would be in the over-all framework of restraint. That means the underlying objective to control the deficit would have to be observed. It could not be abandoned. Certainly an expenditure of $5 billion would, in my view, abandon entirely the fiscal restraints which I am supporting.

MINISTER'S VIEWS ON EXPENDITURE LEVELS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can we have today's version of the limits which the minister is prepared to contemplate? Yesterday he indicated it might be $5 billion. Today he says it is not. What is the limit?

• (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I say again that in no way did I say yesterday that I was contemplating an expenditure of $5 billion. I was attempting to indicate what I considered to be a sum which might be regarded as a major stimulus to the economy either through the tax system or some other means. To make the conclusion that I was prepared to expend $5 billion is quite unwarranted.

The fiscal framework must be observed, and the cost of any particular proposal would have to be measured in terms of the over-all objective of the government. I will not put a particular figure on that today or tomorrow.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGES IN BUDGET

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance says that the fiscal framework must be respected, but he will not tell the House what it is. We have the Minister of Employment and Immigration proposing an expensive program, the Minister of State proposing an expensive new program, the now absent—perhaps permanently absent—Minister of National Health and Welfare—here she is now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I apologize for being premature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of National Health and Welfare is proposing an expensive new program.

Individual Canadians have to make their plans based upon some certainty as to what is in the budget. We keep getting new versions every day of how deep the deficit will be, and about what new programs will be involved. Will the minister give us an undertaking that he will come to the House, either this week or very early next week, and spell out publicly those changes which he is contemplating so that Canadians will know just what budget we are dealing with?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, Canadians are dealing with a budget which was approved twice by the House of Commons on non-confidence votes which were moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: It was revised since.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the budget, and that is the fiscal framework. If any particular measures are adopted by cabinet, they will then be announced to the House of Commons—

Mr. Crosbie: By whom?

Mr. MacEachen: —and the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to decide to what extent they will have affected the underlying restraint theme of the budget.

PLANS UNDER REVIEW BY DEPARTMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. We have the unseemly charade of a number of ministers proposing plans in an attempt to be seen as doing something. Yesterday, the minister said that he did not have any other plans under review in his department. Would he confirm that to the House today? Is he saying that there are no other plans under review in his department?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, during question period yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked me if I would reply to his concern about a specific program related to job creation which was under consideration by the ministry.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: I said no to that question. The answer is correct. I would remind the hon. member that it is not the practice for ministers either to discuss or disclose in the House the proceedings of cabinet or decisions made by cabinet.

Miss MacDonald: You are doing it every day.

Mr. MacEachen: That is well understood. I do not intend to respond by telling the hon. member that a specific program or a number of programs are under review, because these are matters which are the business of cabinet and therefore secret. In a general way I will tell the hon. member that we are constantly monitoring various proposals that have been brought forward. We introduced a number of specific programs in the budget, and we are continuing to monitor programs. When the cabinet reaches decisions they will be announced in the House in the usual manner.

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, what we are trying to do here today is to avoid another debacle similar to what we had on November 12. If we can learn from the minister what proposals are under review in the ivory tower of his department so they can be discussed in the open with the people whom they will affect in Canada, then we can have a proper understanding of what might happen.

● (1425)

Specifically, is the minister considering any change in the capital cost allowance to make it applicable in a different way so that job creation can take place in the first half of the year? The proposal in place now will leave investment to later in the year and push off the creation of jobs to the last part of this year, but we need them right now.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not under consideration at all to remove or eliminate the proposed changes to the capital cost allowance. If the hon. member wishes a specific answer, that is the answer to that question.

There have been a number of representations made by various groups with respect to the application of the capital cost allowance to their situations. Obviously these matters will be under consideration. I hope they will be under consideration by members of the House of Commons as they consider tax measures. We have spent considerable time in the standing committee in the course of this session considering various tax proposals and, indeed, there was a number of changes adopted. I expect that process will continue because it is a good and healthy process.

REQUEST THAT BANK RATE BE STABILIZED

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Virtually everyone in Canada has now asked that interest rates be lowered. This includes the premiers, members of this House and, in fact, members of the Prime Minister's own party.

The Prime Minister will admit that he is responsible for the policies of this government and how they are carried out. I think the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday revealed that he has lost touch with what is happening. He said that the difference between the bank rate and the rate of inflation has traditionally been the same as it is now. That is not so. In 1976 the rates were about even. The bank rate of 14.87 per cent announced today is almost three percentage points higher than the rate of inflation. If the Prime Minister really believes that the margin should be the traditional margin and still is, will he then lower the bank rate to 12.1 per cent, and stop stick handling with the future of the Canadian people? Will he lock that rate in at 12 per cent for the next year so that Canadians can at least plan their future with some certainty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that was an unfortunate metaphor about stick handling. I think members of the hon. member's party showed last night that they were not very adept at that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Too many left wingers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member suggests that everyone in Canada wants interest rates to come down. He is perhaps right. That certainly includes people on this side of the House. We would like to see interest rates come down. The question is how to go about that. Do we do it by ordering the banks to bring interest rates down, or by attacking the cause of inflation? In so far as the position of the various parties is concerned, I merely remind the hon. member that he is now publicly disagreeing with the position put forward by several premiers last week. One of them specifically advocated that Canadian interest rates should be one point higher than American interest rates.

Mr. Broadbent: Tell us which one.

Mr. Trudeau: That was a position put forward publicly and supported by several premiers. Obviously there is a desire on the part of everyone to see interest rates come down, with the exception of those who have money to lend, whether they be private individuals, governments, or money markets. As I said yesterday, when inflation is running at about 12 per cent, people want to lend their money at a few percentage points above 12 per cent so that when they get their money back, it will be worth the money put in. That is the problem.

The way to bring interest rates down is to bring inflation down. Therefore, if inflation is brought down to 8 per cent or 6 per cent, I could guarantee the hon. member that Canadians could see lower interest rates—unless they prefer to have a higher dollar, which would be a choice they could then express. That is the reality of the situation.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATE SPREAD BE FIXED

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, stick handling is a problem with the government across the floor because it is that policy that got us into so much trouble over the past few years. I think it is up to the government to state some policy. The other thing that really concerns Canadians is the point spread between which deposit—

Madam Speaker: Order. The question requires no such type of explanation. The hon. member's first question was very long, and we have all agreed we should shorten our questions. I should like the hon. member to co-operate.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, the point spread had traditionally been about 2 per cent until 1979. Now we are being robbed, almost, with a point spread of 4 per cent or greater, which means hundreds of millions of dollars. Will the Prime Minister enact or give the banks guidance on how to lock in their point spread, which is a position with which the Canadian Bankers' Association has stated it would agree. If it were locked in at 2 per cent then Canadians could better analyse what is happening in banking circles.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do recognize that the government has jurisdiction over the banks but, as I pointed out to the premiers, and to the House a few days ago, and several times in a row, general authority over prices, wages, salaries, and profits comes under provincial jurisdiction. I want to put it to the hon. member that if he really wants interest rates to come down, we should all be co-operating to bring inflation down. One way of bringing inflation down and making the country a better place in which to invest dollars and to create jobs, would be to bring inflation down. One way of doing it is to get co-operation from the provinces—an agreement that we all restrain our expenditures in so far as they concern wages to the public sector. It would only be effective, of course, if the private sector were prepared to follow that example. There again, that is under provincial jurisdiction.

I am very happy to reopen talks with the hon. member, with his party, or with the premiers, if they want to co-operate in giving leadership to this economy in areas of their jurisdiction to bring inflation down. That would then bring interest rates down.

PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, one way to get a grip on inflation is to control some of the profits, and I think when the chartered banks make 37.7 per cent—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member knows he is arguing the point rather than asking a question.

Mr. Anguish: My question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, Madam Speaker, is on whether he would think it more just to have a higher taxation rate on the banks. The taxation rate this year for the two banks we have figures available for, is 17 per cent. That is a rate lower than that which bank tellers have to pay. I think that is unreasonable. Those are things that he should be looking at in order to get inflation under control.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting that one way of doing it is by controlling some of the profits. I would put it to him that the way of doing it is perhaps by controlling not only the profits but also the prices, including prices for money. Most of that, I repeat, except in the latter example, is in the area of provincial jurisdiction. The provinces do not want to delegate that authority to us. We do not have it under the Constitution. We cannot control wages, prices and profits in the private sector. I wish the hon. member and his party would get that into their heads, and then perhaps put pressure on the provincial governments where they have some influence, so that there would be co-operation to keep prices down. They can do that in co-operation with each other.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED CARS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, two days ago the Canadian automotive industry held an emergency meeting in Toronto at which the keynote speaker was to have been the Hon. Herb Gray but he backed out just hours before the meeting. I suggest to the minister that he hang his head in shame.

In view of the fact that one out of seven jobs in Canada, not just Ontario but in Canada, is associated with the automotive industry, and because the meeting in Toronto concluded, as stated by the president of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada, that the present arrangement of Japanese voluntary restraints or any similar new one that Ottawa may negotiate will not create a single job in Canada, will the minister now take the one crucial and necessary step that may save the auto industry and the thousands of job associated with it in this country? Will he negotiate, demand, or, if need be, legislate a fair Canadian parts content in Japanese cars sold in Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all I want to say that my hon. friend is quite inaccurate when he says that I backed out of giving a speech at the auto parts meeting. I had to take part in a very important cabinet committee meeting. The speech I would have given was delivered on my behalf by my very capable parliamentary secretary. He put before the meeting exactly the same message that I would have presented had I been there.

I think my hon. friend is unjustly denigrating and running down the capacities of Canadian workers and Canadian automotive and auto parts manufacturers. He is suggesting that there is nothing they can do, beyond narrow protectionist measures, to become more competitive and efficient and to win back the support of Canadian and North American consumers.

I happen to have more confidence in the ability of Canadian workers and Canadian manufacturers than he does. At the same time, we have already begun discussing with the Japanese what they should be doing with respect to a further period of restraint of exports. The kinds of concerns that I have mentioned, and that he has just now begun to echo, have been brought very forcefully to the attention of the Japanese.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT TO INCREASE CANADIAN CONTENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, may I say that the minister is not giving the Canadian worker the opportunity to have their fair share of the marketplace because of the inability or inaction of this government regarding the auto parts sector. There are 600,000 jobs still left in the auto industry in Canada. The auto industry concluded at its meeting two days ago that the only way to save these jobs is to increase the number of parts in Japanese imports.

I repeat my question. Why does the minister not take the necessary action, by legislation if need be, to require the Japanese to increase substantially from the present one half of 1 per cent the Canadian content in Japanese cars sold in this country, perhaps in return for lower tariffs which then would create jobs in Canada and not increase the price of Japanese cars sold here? Why is the minister not doing this? Can he explain that?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is in his usual dream world. He completely overlooks the grave weakness in the major market for Canadian made vehicles and parts, the weakness in the United States market which takes some 80 per cent of our production. That is a major factor which affects the wellbeing of our workers and companies, over which we obviously, and unfortunately, cannot have any control.

At the same time I repeat what I have said before, and that is that, as far as I am concerned, I should like to think that the agreement we negotiated with the Volkswagen company, whereby in return for duty-free entry they committed themselves to Canadian content of some 85 per cent, a Canadian content much higher than is required from automotive assemblers here and which involves substantial purchases from independent Canadian companies, and which will result in the creation of some 1,500 jobs, will serve as a harbinger and example for other companies, including Japanese companies. We are actively pursuing efforts in that direction.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DELAY IN PAYMENTS TO LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport will know that, as a result of the VIA Rail cutbacks last year, a number of CN employees were laid off. Those CN employees have not yet received their severance pay or any of the benefits that were due to them as of last August. Could the minister tell me when these employees might get their pay?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I could not give an exact date. I did not have time to check since my return from the west but I will do so this afternoon. The last time I inquired, which was three or four days ago, procedures were in motion. A decision had to be made by the pension board and that has not taken place yet. The workers knew about the delays that would normally take place, so there is no substantial problem as far as I am informed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAY INCREASES FOR GENERAL SERVICE WORKERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I have a brief supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. He will know that the general service workers of the Public Service settled their agreement with the government last December for two years, and yet they have not seen that increase in their regular pay. I am not talking about the back pay. I am talking only about the regular increases for 1981 and 1982. They have seen none of it yet. Could the minister tell us when that will happen?

● (1440)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that they have not seen their increases yet, but I will certainly look into the matter.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EXTRATERRITORIAL APPLICATION OF PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the government's commitment to Canadianization of the Canadian petroleum industry by 1990, and our strong objection in the past to American law applying to Canadian subsidiaries of American companies doing business in Canada, what action is the government taking to respond to press reports that a new American law, which has already been passed in the House of Representatives, would block the takeover of American oil companies not only in the United States but also of subsidiaries doing business in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, indeed this bill has passed the House of Representatives. The Government of Canada, through its embassy in Washington, made representations by drawing to the attention of the United States administration that the bill, as drafted, would imply extraterritorial application of United States legislation, a matter to which Canada and other countries have always very strongly objected. We were advised that many people in the administration believe that the bill was rather poorly drafted. We will see whether the bill will make any progress at all in the United States Senate. We are monitoring the situation very carefully, and we have already drawn our objections to the attention of the United States government.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the manpower minister's announcement yesterday that he would take another $100 million out of the unemployment insurance fund to put into job creation, when in fact job creation should have come directly out of the budget. With over a million Canadians out of work and desperately needing unemployment insurance benefits, how does the minister rationalize this theft of funds from the insurance program when it is government economic policy which caused the loss of jobs in the first place?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. member that the minister's announcement that money would be drawn from the unemployment insurance fund was simply meant as an explanation of the department's internal policy which is to distribute money to offset unemployment throughout the country. Of course, those payments will in no way reduce the funds available to compensate unemployment insurance claimants, nor will they otherwise affect those funds.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure what the hon. member had to say about it, but I will check the "blues".

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON PREMIUM RATES AND WORKERS' BENEFITS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. By taking this money from the workers' insurance fund instead of out of government revenues, and at the same time following an economic policy which puts 3,000 Canadian workers on the street every day, the insurance fund will be quickly eaten up and the workers will be asked to pay for the shortage in the fund by an increase in premiums. Does the Minister of Finance dispute this fact, or will he now assure the House that as long as the government pursues a monetarist policy there will be no increase in premium rates and no reduction in workers' benefits?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member will recall, in the budget I announced a decrease in the contribution rates for Canadian workers. I think the hon. member may misunderstand the use which is being made of the provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act to which the Minister of Employment and Immigration referred yesterday. As I understand the program recently announced by the minister, it was to employ several thousand forestry workers in northern Ontario. It was under the provision of this particular act by which unemployed workers would be given jobs. Surely that is the type of activity all of us want to encourage.

I hope the Minister of Employment and Immigration will continue to explore with provinces and with employers how the provision of the act could be used to take unemployed workers now receiving benefits and put them into gainful employment. That is really a good objective.

AIRPORTS

CHARLOTTETOWN TERMINAL AND CONTROL TOWER

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns a new terminal and control tower for the Charlottetown airport which was approved in 1977 and postponed many times since. The minister was to meet with the provincial premier on January 22, 1982, to confirm the details of this expansion to start in the summer or fall of 1982. However, the minister suddenly cancelled this meeting. Could he inform the House whether this was because he is shelving the airport expansion and, if not, when does he intend to call tenders and get on with the job?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am really not aware of the meeting I was supposed to have with the Premier of Prince Edward Island. I have had numerous meetings with the ministers of transport of that province, both the former and the new one. On the subject of the Charlottetown airport, everybody agrees that there have been uncalled-for delays, if one wants to put it this way. But the reasons are simply that under a new Treasury Board system, before one builds an airport one must be sure that the carriers, for example, will accept the plans and pay the necessary rentals. I regret very much that it took such a long time to conclude, but I will send a letter to my friend giving him the agenda for coming developments.

CUSTOMS INSPECTION FACILITIES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, the carriers agreed to the payments last August. At a time when the Prince Edward Island construction industry is flat on its back and badly needs this project, I am wondering when the minister will get on with the job. In a letter to me on August 12, 1981, the minister committed himself to include customs inspection facilities in the new terminal. Are the customs inspection facilities still in the plans?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Charlottetown airport is on my mind all the time, with the Crow at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: But I have not really been able to memorize the work agenda for each of Canada's one thousand airports, so I beg permission to send my friend a detailed analysis of every step in the coming hours.

Mr. Gass: When?

Mr. Pepin: Immediately, this afternoon at four o'clock!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF TWO EXECUTIVE JET AIRCRAFT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister explain why the Department of National Defence is purchasing two executive jets at a cost of $27 million, to add to its current fleet, when it is unable to find sufficient funds to pay reserve forces for the training they want to do?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Department of National Defence is not buying what has been referred to as uniquely VIP aircraft. We are buying two new Challenger aircraft.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: They will be delivered next year. They will be appropriated for the 412 Communications Squadron which is involved in the training of our crews and is an element of the over-all transportation responsibility of the Department of National Defence in case of emergency or in case of war. They will be part of the 412 Squadron; they will not be uniquely for the transport of VIPs.

COST OF CANCELLED CHALLENGER AIRCRAFT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I understood the Minister of Transport had already bought two Challengers, and I thought they might serve the same purpose. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could he inform the House how much research and development money and other funds went into the stretched version of the Challenger jet before the project was cancelled with a loss of some $500 million worth of orders?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to obtain that information and provide it to my hon. friend as soon as possible.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CONSTRUCTION OF MONUMENT IN ALGERIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. How much is it costing the country through the Export Development Corporation to expedite the construction of a monument in Algeria, which is reported to cost over $100 million, in time for the anniversary of the country's revolution in July? Could he tell us something about the terms and what the real cost to Canadians will be for this rather unusual utilization of this agency to help a Third World country, which I thought would better have been for agricultural and humanitarian purposes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, this is not at all unusual. It is an ordinary export financing operation of the EDC.

● (1450)

Mr. MacGuigan: The purpose of it is to help Canadian exporters to compete in the world, as the hon. gentleman well knows. The original arrangement was for the EDC to loan 85 per cent of the amount in question, I believe, some $47 million.

Miss MacDonald: It has escalated.

An hon. Member: At 6 per cent?

Mr. MacGuigan: The increases projected are now under reconsideration. I want to emphasize that the purpose of this financing is to provide jobs in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

USE OF CORPORATION RESOURCES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, it appears that Algeria has an edifice complex.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: I ask my question in all seriousness Madam Speaker. I wonder if this is a responsible way for our Export Development Corporation to use the resources provided to help a Third World country. It is not for agriculture, not for medical purposes, but simply to glorify a revolution.

An hon. Member: It is not CIDA.

Mr. MacKay: Is this something to do with the fact the Prime Minister had to return there twice when he missed the boat at Austria?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The boat at Austria? That is the best. There is no sea at Austria.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the complexes revealed by the hon. member are much worse than any others I know of. I repeat, this is not aid, it is an ordinary form of export financing.

An hon. Member: What is the interest rate?

Mr. MacGuigan: I have a quotation from the Hatch report, which resulted from hearing from, among others, 17 private sector representatives:

> If government subsidy of EDC is necessary to achieve and maintain international competitiveness in financing services, such subsidy should be given.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: I believe, Madam Speaker, that the Hatch report met with approval from the opposition benches as well as from this side of the House.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFIT ALLOWANCES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. A northern nightmare lasting longer than the proverbial six months' northern night will descend upon Canada's remote resource communities and mining industry as certainly as night follows day if the minister does not act soon to extend the tax moratorium on northern benefit allowances. In recent months at least one finance department official plus a senior direct political representative of the minister himself have told Steelworkers' Union officials to make up the miners' tax losses by getting the additional money at the bargaining table. To paraphrase their advice, they said: "The mining companies get lots of help—"

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please get to his question?

Mr. Kristiansen: There are just three words to go, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I did ask the hon. member to go straight to his question. That means he must not finish his paragraph.

Mr. Kristiansen: Considering that some of these miners will now have to pay up to $7,000 more in taxes and will have to demand and obtain an extra $14,000 per year in wages, which is a $7 per hour increase, will the minister inform the House whether or not he stands by his staff and the advice given by them to the USWA? If the minister does not, what advice does he have for the isolated workers from whom he is grabbing up to $7,000 a year each in additional taxes?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kristiansen: If the minister does, how can he square suggestions of immediate wage increases of $7 per hour with his appeals for restraint and the threat of wage controls?

Mr. Lawrence: Yes or no.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You will have to reread the question.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, in the budget I extended the remission for another year and said that it was my intention to develop within that period an expenditure program that would deal with the problem we have up to the present time dealt with through the tax system. All the dire comments made by the hon. member are quite unjustified in view of the forthcoming attitude which I took on this subject in the budget.

QUERY RESPECTING DISMANTLING OF COMPANY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The decision made last week by Canadian National Railways to lay off 1,800 employees comes after the minister himself approved drastic reductions in VIA Rail passenger service and also drastic reductions in CN Express offices across the country. Will the minister inform the House whether he has received a mandate from the Prime Minister to preside over the dissolution of Canadian National, especially in eastern Canada, or is the minister dismantling Canadian National on his own initiative?

Mr. McKnight: It's a make-work program.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think that most people in Canada realize that the needs of transportation in this country are so great that there is not enough of what we call new money around to take care of it all. Most people agree that the recycling of old money, as I call it, is a necessary exercise. I think most Canadians will want the government to make the best use of their taxes. That is what we are doing in the case of CN Express and in the case of VIA Rail.

While I am on my feet, Madam Speaker, I now have my note about the airport in Charlottetown. Agreement has been reached with the carriers, a Treasury Board submission is being prepared, design work is being done, tenders will be called in 1982, and construction will begin in 1983.

TIMING OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. He talks about the need for more money to make possible railway expansion. Can the minister explain why the 1,800 lay-offs which have come at the same time as Canadian National has reported a net profit of $400 million over the last two years? These lay-offs also come at a time when the private carrier, Canadian Pacific, has made no such plans for lay-offs. Will the minister explain that anomaly? How does the minister justify that anomaly in light of the fact that Canadian National's own advertising claims that CN is more than a business, that it is also a public responsibility? Where is the public responsibility in that equation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this debate has been going on for a great number of years as to the responsibilities of Crown corporations. I think, generally speaking, that members of the House and the public accept the idea that Crown companies are not created for the purposes of losing money or for the purposes of keeping employees whom they do not need. I think this is accepted as a general proposition. If it were not so, CN would not have the profits to which my hon. friend refers.

VIA RAIL

LATE TRAIN ARRIVALS IN WINNIPEG

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, can the minister explain why, on the day CN was laying off 1,800 workers across the country, the vice-president of VIA Rail West was saying that VIA Rail in Winnipeg was short of workers? Trains were running as much as eight hours behind arriving in Winnipeg. Why is it that 1,800 people are being laid off and yet on the same day it is being said that we do not have enough workers in the same operation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am intrigued by the hon. member's statement. If my hon. friend does not mind, I will check to see whether it is correct. This is the obvious thing to do, because I would not pass comment on something that I have not heard myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: On the general proposition of activities in railway transportation in the west, I have to report that there is a good atmosphere of enthusiasm in the west now in view of the announcement that we made in Winnipeg last Monday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That's a lot of Crow.

Mr. Pepin: The decision of the Minister of Finance to grant a special allocation of $1.35 billion in the next four years to western rail transportation will mean a great boost to the economy of the west.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The people in Saskatchewan do not believe that.

AIR CANADA

MANDATORY RETIREMENT AGE—REQUEST THAT PILOT BE REINSTATED

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As stated yesterday in my motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled unanimously that Ontario municipalities cannot impose a mandatory retirement age of 60 on their firefighters even though that had been negotiated into their collective agreement. In view of the fact that this case is almost identical to the case of my constituent, Captain Ross Stevenson, an Air Canada pilot, who was forced to retire because of the collective agreement between the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association and Air Canada, would the minister introduce an order in council ordering Air Canada to reinstate Captain Ross Stevenson to his original position of airline pilot and, if not, on what grounds does the minister refuse to bring in such an order in council?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I want to say that I have the greatest respect for my hon. friend's campaign on this subject.

An hon. Member: Write a letter.

Mr. Pepin: I really think that he is entitled to uphold his case.

Miss MacDonald: It will be the last one.

Mr. Pepin: With respect to the particular point, the Stevenson case is now before the appeals court and the Human Rights Commission, so it would not be right for me to comment at this time. Consequently I have to hold to the law as it is now, and the question of deciding at what age a pilot retires from a Canadian air carrier is a decision to be made by the union and the companies, not by the Minister of Transport.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by some hon. members on Wednesday, February 10, 1982, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the government House leader the usual Thursday question. He has already indicated what the business this week is going to be; will he tell us as far as he can into next week what the business of the House will be?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, next Monday the House of Commons will study Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. On Tuesday we will start debating Bill C-93 to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. Today, I hope we will be able to refer to committee Bill C-89 to amend the National Housing Act and, considering the urgency of Bill C-78, we will debate it tomorrow. The opposition day which was scheduled for tomorrow will be postponed until Friday next week.

What prompts me to postpone the opposition day scheduled for tomorrow and to serve notice of that now is the fact that there was to be a meeting of House leaders this morning. That had been confirmed last night but at the last minute this morning—I appreciate that my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party may have had excellent reasons—one of my assistants was advised that unfortunately the meeting could not be held. Under the circumstances, I was unable to review this matter this morning with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Considering the urgency, we have decided to proceed with the report stage of Bill C-78 tomorrow. The opposition day slated for tomorrow is postponed until Friday next week.

In any event, that should enable the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party to reach agreement as to which party will move the motion on the next allotted day. I raised that question earlier with my colleague the hon. member for Yukon in the presence of the NDP House leader, but neither was in a position to tell us the subject or the mover of the next opposition motion. I trust we will be able to agree next week so that we may dispose in an orderly manner of the questions of public interest.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am absolutely astounded by this move by the government House leader. He knows very well that under the Standing Orders there is no necessity for Her Majesty's loyal opposition to reach agreement with anyone with respect to the opposition day. He knows full well that under Standing Order 58 the notice of an allotted day need not be given until six o'clock on this day—24 hours' notice. He knows full well he is not entitled to knowledge of the subject matter of that motion until six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: That is right.

Mr. Nielsen: So the reasons he gives are entirely irrelevant. Had he asked me today, I would have told him that notice of the allotted day has already been filed, and he would have had knowledge of the contents at six o'clock in the usual course.

My colleague, the House leader for the New Democratic Party, was fully aware of that action; indeed, we had been discussing the matter right up until about quarter to three. For the government House leader to now withdraw from the opposition an allotted day which he told us last Thursday we would have, which he reconfirmed last Friday, last Tuesday and, I believe Monday, displays a deplorable cowardice and a deplorable lack of courage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Having said that, Madam Speaker, I put it to the Chair that the Chair has an obligation to protect the rights of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If you want a fight, you are going to get it.

Mr. Nielsen: A very brief examination of the record will show the three or four times since last Thursday the government House leader confirmed that tomorrow would be our opposition day. Now, I would point out to the Chair that on today's order paper, at page XI there appears this item:

Notices of Supply Proceedings Pursuant to Standing Order 58(4)(a)

Note: Friday, February 12, 1982—Third allotted day for the Supply period ending March 26, 1982.

It is on the Order Paper.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It has been ordered.

Mr. Nielsen: And for him to now try to take it off the Order Paper, I submit, is not possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Contempt of Parliament.

Mr. Nielsen: We are calling upon the Chair to protect our rights by insisting that we proceed with that item tomorrow.

However, our case need not rest there. It is further supported by the fact that I filed notice of that allotted day, pursuant to that item on the Order Paper, at 12 minutes past one today, anticipating the sneaky move—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —that the government House leader is trying to pull.

Miss MacDonald: Who do you think you are?

Mr. Nielsen: That notice, Madam Speaker, was filed with the Clerk, and I am sure he has informed you of that, at 12 minutes past one today. My submission is that the filing of that notice, if it was not perfected by the mere appearance on the Order Paper of the designation of tomorrow as the third allotted day, perfects that order, and the government is now bound to proceed tomorrow as they themselves, on four different occasions, said they would; as the Order Paper said they would; as the notice which was filed today insists they should.

I call upon you once again, Madam Speaker, to protect the rights of the opposition and insist that that be the order tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am flabbergasted by the deplorable outburst of the hon. member for Yukon. I think that he is losing his self-control over a completely indefensible case. He will recall that before 1968, every evening at ten o'clock the House Leader would announce in the House the order of business for the next day. As a gesture of courtesy, we have made it a practice to hold weekly meetings of the House leaders to inform the opposition of coming business. I extended this courtesy further to my colleague this morning. Yesterday I invited him to a meeting in my office this morning, and he agreed to come as did the House leader for the NDP. A few minutes before the meeting which had been scheduled for 9.30 this morning, as I said earlier, one of his assistants called a member of my staff to explain that neither the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the hon. member for Yukon, nor the deputy House leader of his party nor any other member of his party could attend the weekly meeting of House leaders.

As I mentioned earlier, Madam Speaker, I intended at that meeting to inform the hon. member for Yukon about the intentions of the government concerning the schedule of business, as the government is responsible for determining the order of business, including allotted days, under Standing Order 18(2). I wanted to discuss the matter with him at that time, but I learned too late that he could not come, probably for very valid reasons. He cannot therefore blame me for that. I had the courtesy to invite him to discuss this matter long before that. This was not possible since he had other meetings to attend, but he could have told me so earlier. Madam Speaker, the determination of the order of business is the responsibility of the government. An allotted day is a day when the opposition introduces a motion, but as for the rest, it still comes under government orders as provided by our Standing Orders and parliamentary practice, and the determination of the order of business is our responsibility.

The hon. member for Yukon is now saying that he filed notice with the Clerk at a few minutes past one o'clock of the motion which he intended to introduce tomorrow. Yet, Madam Speaker, when I asked him at 2.15 or 2.10 in the presence of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, the House leader of the New Democratic Party, whether tomorrow would be an opposition day for his party or the NDP, he did not have the courage or the courtesy to give me an answer and he told me that the matter had not yet been decided and that he was still discussing it with his colleague. If he had really wanted to act in good faith, he would not have taken it upon himself to play hide and seek and he would have told me: Mr. Pinard, I have filed notice with the Speaker and you will learn the substance of this notice at six o'clock; it will be our allotted day. Instead of giving me a frank answer, he missed the meeting of House leaders this morning, which the House leader of the NDP attended, and he refused to indicate whether the motion to be introduced tomorrow would be a Progressive Conservative or an NDP motion. I did not want to know the substance of this motion before six o'clock, but for reasons of courtesy, I wanted to know who would move the motion on the next allotted day.

Moreover, when I learned from the New Democratic Party that they had also filed notice concerning a different subject for the same allotted day tomorrow, I concluded that the Progressive Conservatives had not been able to come to an agreement with the NDP and that Your Honour would have to decide which of these motions should be heard tomorrow, and if one of these motions calls for a non-confidence vote, we should have to wait until you decided which motion should be heard to know where we are, and we have no indication that you will make a decision later today or tomorrow at noon. Under the circumstances, in view of such uncertainty and lack of planning on the part of hon. members opposite and since we are faced with so many intrigues and so little good faith, the government has no other alternative than to take its responsibilities and try to respect the rights of the opposition. I can assure the opposition members that they will have all the allotted days to which they are entitled under the Standing Orders between now and March 26, but the next allotted day will not be tomorrow. It will probably be Friday of next week and tomorrow we shall call Bill C-78.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the government House leader knows that when I put the question to him at the beginning of this session as to whether or not we would hold regular weekly House leaders' meetings, he said that it had not been the practice in the past. He said it would be done only if necessary. He was not going to commit himself to regular House leaders' meetings. Also, on several occasions in the past he has agreed to House leaders' meetings which he himself has cancelled. There is nothing strange in cancelling attendance at House leaders' meetings if something important arises.

When government members start criticizing us, I would ask them: when they were in opposition, how many House leaders' meetings did their House leader go to when we called him? How many House leaders' meetings did the present Minister of Finance go to when we called him? Talk about co-operation! Nil! Zilch!

This is the first House leaders' meeting which he has called that I have unavoidably missed. The House leader for the New Democratic Party knows full well that the option was open to him to have the motion, which is now filed, standing in the name of his leader, if they so chose. They did not choose to do that. I learned that at about 1.30 p.m., although I knew the leaning of his leader well before that time. He also knows the subject matter of that motion. We on this side are not obliged to advise the government of the subject matter of an opposition day! We have no such obligation.

An hon. Member: Nobody asked you.

Miss MacDonald: He did!

Mr. Nielsen: The real reason is that they have a yellow streak down their backs! They are afraid of this motion!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You've got the yellow head!

Mr. Nielsen: I am surprised, and I would ask Your Honour to check with the Table, because if I heard him correctly, and I may have misheard him on this point, he seemed to imply that he knew that if the NDP were to have the day, they would raise another subject matter. I would be surprised if anyone in the NDP informed the government of any intended subject matter that they would raise if it were their motion. There is no obligation to do that, either.

The other point I want to make concerns ordering the business of the House. The government informed us last Thursday what the order would be today. The government reiterated that on Friday, again on Monday and again on Tuesday, if my recollection serves me correctly. Now, all of a sudden, the government withdraws the day. The government House leader could have called me on the telephone yesterday

if he thought that Bill C-78, or whatever other bill he plans to raise Friday, was so danged urgent that he was going to take our allotted day away from us! I received no such phone call. I do not think anyone in the New Democratic Party received any such phone call. I received no such phone call from him today. The first we learned of it was this announcement, based on the assertion that we somehow have some obligation under the Standing Orders to bare our souls to the government concerning the subject matter of the debate. I do not believe another notice has been filed, if that was the implication which was being left by the government House leader. If another such notice has been filed, then I suggest that Your Honour has a decision to make under Standing Order 58(4)(b), I believe it is. Certainly—

An hon. Member: Take your time.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, I will take my time, indeed, Standing Order 58(4)(b) is the citation, Madam Speaker.

I do not know whether two notices have been filed, but perhaps the government House leader does. However, if there have been two notices filed, then the Speaker has an obligation under that Standing Order to make a decision as to which motion to accept. If there has been another notice filed, I want to speak to it before Your Honour exercises that discretion. However, in the meantime, I submit to your Honour that if there ever was a time when Your Honour had an obligation to protect the rights of the opposition, that time is now, and you must!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: In my view, if Your Honour is to exercise that protection of the rights of the opposition, you must be compelled to the overwhelming viewpoint that Friday will be an allotted day, as the notice paper says it will be, as perfected by the filing of our notice at 12 minutes past one o'clock today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: What I do want to say at this particular point—and I hope hon. members will allow me to say something definite on this particular point which is being discussed—is that I think these kinds of discussions would be best held in meetings between the House leaders.

Mr. Beatty: Exactly.

An hon. Member: They were not.

Madam Speaker: Government business should be discussed at those meetings and not on the floor of the House because the Speaker could obviously be drawn into the debate and could be asked to try to determine which point of view concerning which government business should be put forward or should prevail.

I am afraid that too many hon. members have asked me to do just that, and they know, of course, that in accordance with the Standing Order, the Speaker does not get involved in deciding what the government business will be. This has been traditionally, and in our Standing Orders, the responsibility of the government. I do not suppose I need quote the Standing Order which very clearly states that government orders shall be called and considered in sequence as the government determines. That is clear to everyone. The Standing Order is there. The government is entitled to call government business, and usually does.

Some government business has been called and withdrawn by the government. I submit to hon. members that this is done very often. It is not contrary to the way in which the government has the responsibility to call the government orders. The opposition day which had been called for Friday is not cancelled; it is simply postponed. I wish hon. members would not put it in terms that I should be protecting the right of the opposition to have opposition days. I would like to protect that right, and I would protect that right if it had been suppressed or challenged in any way.

The opposition day is not cancelled. It is simply postponed. The President of the Privy Council did say it would take place, until further notice, next Friday. Therefore, it is quite clear to me that I cannot intervene. I can understand the indignation and the frustration of hon. members, but I cannot take it upon myself to determine that government business will be—

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Before you rule—

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, before you rule—

Mr. Nielsen: Before you rule, Madam Speaker, I have another point I have not yet brought up.

Mr. McGrath: Why don't you hear argument?

Madam Speaker: I have heard argument.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Madam Speaker: Would the right hon. Leader of the Opposition please resume his seat?

Mr. Clark: No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: There is a point that has not been made.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Madam Speaker: I do want to extend to hon. members—

Some hon. Members: We want to be heard.

Mr. Nielsen: There is a point that has not been made.

Mr. Lewis: We want to be heard.

Madam Speaker: I must explain to hon. members that while the Speaker is speaking, I do not think a point of order can be brought up. I will hear hon. members when I finish saying what I have begun to say.

Mr. Clark: Are you going to rule?

Madam Speaker: I have not ruled yet. I think at this point I have heard sufficient argument and the Standing Orders are sufficiently—

Mr. Clark: No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: There is a point that has not been made. We have a right.

Mr. Clark: That is precisely the point I wish to address.

Madam Speaker: I am very sorry, but hon. members should understand that at any rate this whole debate should not have taken place in the House. I have heard arguments, twice on this side and once on the other side, and the Standing Orders are quite clear.

Mr. Nielsen: Twice on the other side.

Madam Speaker: I did not hear the minister twice, I only heard him once. At any rate, it is clear to me that I cannot be brought in to determine what is going to be the order of the day for next Friday. The government House leader has now determined what the order of the day will be for Friday, and that simply has to stand.

The notice on the Order Paper is just simply a notice. It is not an order. I heard shouts from the floor that this was an order. It was not an order, but simply a notice. Therefore, it is with regret—

An hon. Member: But you are.

Madam Speaker: If there had been two motions—

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, before you rule. Before you rule. Before you rule I have the right to be heard. Before you rule. I have the right to make an argument and be heard before you rule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order. I will be grateful if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will let me finish what I have to say.

Mr. Clark: Is it a ruling? Is it a ruling?

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I would like to finish what I have to say.

Mr. Clark: I have the right to be heard before you rule. Before you rule.

Madam Speaker: I have started my ruling. I cannot retreat on that. It is quite clear to me that I cannot intervene in determining what the order of the day will be for next Friday. I recognize the right of the House leader of the government to determine the order of business for next Friday.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I sought your attention. I sought it in my capacity as the Leader of the Opposition and as an officer of this House of Commons to present to Your Honour a most relevant argument prior to Your Honour coming to a judgment. I regret that you chose not to allow the Leader of the Opposition, an officer of the House of Commons, to present an argument that had not been heard by the Chair prior to the Chair coming to the ruling. I am prepared to regard that as inadvertent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am consequently prepared to assume that Madam Speaker will consider the relevant point that I want to make before she treats with finality the statement that she has just made from the Chair.

The point I wish to make is the following. There was a guarantee given—frequently, repeatedly—by the government House leader.

Mr. Pinard: Order. He is questioning your ruling, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Clark: That undertaking led to the publishing in the orders of the day of the order of business for tomorrow as being an allotted day. Acting on that understanding, the House leader of the official opposition filed a notice which perfected and completed the action set in train by the statements of the government House leader and by the publication in Hansard today. That was done, Madam Speaker. That action was completed, that consummation of the ordinance of tomorrow as an opposition day. That was done before the government House leader rose in the House of Commons to indicate that he had changed his mind.

The simple fact for Your Honour to consider is that the government House leader rose to indicate he had changed his mind too late because the notice was filed by the opposition House leader at 1.12 p.m. today, nearly two hours before the government House leader rose. That was a consummation of the act which he set in place by his guarantees, and which he cannot now unilaterally change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: He gave us an undertaking. That undertaking was confirmed by the publication in Hansard. On the basis of that undertaking, we acted. We acted before he changed his mind. I submit to you, Your Honour, that you have no alternative but to protect the rights of the official opposition, which indeed are the rights of Parliament and of the people of Canada themselves.

• (1530)

Mr. Clark: To accept what the government House leader is asking the Chair to do is to undo an act which had already been carried through to completion by the filing of the notice well in advance of the change of view, for whatever reason, of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I would just like to correct one thing for the record. I had already risen and was certainly at least three quarters through what I had to say when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition rose to ask for the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton was rising and I decided at that point that I would rule on this particular question for the reason which I gave, that these debates should take place among the House leaders of the different parties.

As hon. members can see, there is a danger in dragging the Speaker into those discussions.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has brought forth some arguments—of course, I cannot go back on my own ruling or comment on my own ruling—but they do not change the situation in any way—

Mr. Clark: Of course they do.

Madam Speaker: I do maintain what I have said.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would not want it to remain on the record that I was raising this very serious matter on the basis of what should have been taking place in meetings of House leaders. I raised a valid point of order based on the Order Paper itself, based on the appearance of the notice—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nielsen: —based on the timing of the filing and, indeed, I quoted the Standing Orders. That was one of the most serious points of order that has been raised so far in this session.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nielsen: It is not the subject matter of meetings of House leaders. The subject matter here is the protection of the rights of the opposition to which it is entitled under the Standing Orders. That was the question.

Madam Speaker: That is quite clear. The hon. member raised a point with regard to Standing Orders and that is why I ruled on it. Otherwise, I would not have ruled on what might have taken place among the House leaders.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I listened carefully to what the government House leader said and, I think, more important, to what the Leader of the Opposition had to say about the rights of the opposition in Parliament. Before I continue with a few observations about the point of order, all I want to say is that there are not only the rights of the opposition in the Parliament of Canada, there are also the rights of the minority in opposition in the Parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I notice some members of the Conservative party agreeing with that.

It was my hope that your ruling, Madam Speaker, would be accepted because you are the Speaker of the House. You have interpreted the rules strictly, as I certainly understand them, but I want to speak to the point of order in question which was raised since your ruling.

An hon. Member: It has already been ruled on.

Mr. Broadbent: I would say very clearly that it is indeed the right of the official opposition to decide on the allocation of opposition days. However, the House leader of the Conservative party knows very well that throughout the existence of opposition days, the tradition has been that when days are allotted to the NDP—and this was the clear understanding of the New Democratic Party—there is no attempt by the official opposition subsequently to change that.

I will not elaborate on that in great detail, Madam Speaker, but I had direct conversations with the Leader of the Official Opposition and he knows that as of last night my clear understanding was that the name of the New Democratic Party would be on the opposition motion moved on Friday. Subsequent to that time, the official opposition has talked nobly about the rights of the opposition. I can only say that it has tried to deny the right of the minority by withdrawing, for the first time in Parliamentary history, the minority's right to have a motion in its name.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: Why do you not cross the floor?

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the House leader has made much of the news that they filed a motion at 1.12 p.m. I can say that they were informed before then that we were going ahead as an opposition party to file an important motion on the Crow rate in Canada. They knew that would be the subject matter. They knew we were going to do it, but they went ahead and proceeded with their own motion, trying to deny us our rights, and are now raising what I regard as a highly spurious battle in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Jelinek: Cross the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, if those braying donkeys, as the Prime Minister is wont to call members in the back benches of the Liberal party, would stop their braying, I might answer two or three points which were raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

His House leader knows that last Friday I informed him that the allotted day scheduled for this Friday would be the New Democratic Party's day, subject to the approval of my caucus.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I see the House leader of the New Democratic Party nodding his head in agreement. It was very clear. The matter was taken to my caucus yesterday and, because of intervening events, I did not get that approval. I conveyed that message to the House leader of the New Democratic Party, and I am sure he will agree with that. That is the fact. I was not privy to any conversation which took place between the leader of the New Democratic Party and my own leader.

An hon. Member: Talk to Joe.

Mr. Broadbent: Ask him.

Mr. Nielsen: There may have been a breakdown in communication between the leader of the New Democratic Party and his House leader, and similarly here, but certainly the understanding between myself and his House leader was very clear.

An hon. Member: Address the Chair.

Mr. Epp: There is no Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: There are still four allotted days, and now five by virtue of the Chair's ruling, left in this semester. Ordinarily, the fair share of those days would provide two to the New Democratic Party. I can assure the leader of the New Democratic Party, as I did assure his House leader just before three o'clock, that it was our intention that they should have that fair share of those days remaining. It is fully our intention to supply them with those days, as they are entitled to a fair share of the 13 allotted days between March 27 and June 30. I can assure the leader of the New Democratic Party that his party will get the fair share of those days. However, for him to suggest that there has been a usurpation of the rights of the minority party in opposition is not fair at all. There has been no usurpation.

An hon. Member: You try to dictate what they are.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an interjection from a member of the NDP that he does not like to be dictated to with respect to allotted days. The fact of the matter is that the Standing Orders placed the obligation for the utilization of those allotted days in each of the semesters to Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Under the Standing Orders, there is no obligation to allot either allotted days or votes attached to the New Democratic Party, and indeed it was the practice of previous House leaders for the opposition not to allow any votes to the NDP. But as the NDP grew in number, we thought it fair that they should have a fair share, and that is now the practice. That will continue to be the practice. There is no point in complaining they are not getting their fair share, because they are. Those are the facts of the matter.

• (1540)

There is one other point to which the Leader of the New Democratic Party alluded. He suggested I somehow had knowledge that his party intended to file a motion. I had no such knowledge from his House leader or from any other member of the New Democratic Party that there was such an intention. I had been advised that the leader of the New Democratic Party was very strongly of the view that we should go to a particular subject matter. I will not mention the subject matter. I do not think that would be proper. But I was informed that he felt very strongly that on behalf of his party he wanted to go to a subject matter which was different. However, I was informed of that by his House leader just before we came to the end of the question period between two and three o'clock. I had no such foreknowledge, as he suggests, and I hope he will accept that because I know it would be confirmed by his own House leader.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I hope we can conclude this debate. This is the first time I have chaired—despite my wish to do so—a meeting of House leaders. I can only reflect on how wise it is that the Chair does not preside at House leaders' meetings. I have never understood so well the meaning of that custom. If the Chair were presiding at such meetings, there would be no possibility for negotiations, and I think we all understand that it is necessary to negotiate these things. If the Chair were to preside at those meetings and have the final word, the only thing that could happen would be that there would be a strict application of rules. Sometimes negotiations are beneficial before we go to the strict application of rules.

I allowed this discussion because I felt the House needed to air this problem at this particular time. I hope now that negotiations can go on—that we can proceed to the business of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: There will be none. There can't be.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise on two questions. One might well be a question of privilege relating to my rights as the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. The other is a question to the Chair.

I wonder if the Chair would advise the House whether the attention of the Chair had been drawn either to the filing of the notice at 1.12 p.m. this afternoon by the opposition House leader or to the contents of the motion filed.

My second question, which may well have to do with the rights of the Leader of the Opposition, has to do with the fact that I rose while you were speaking at the first mention you made of delivering a ruling. Until that time it had been my impression that you were going to make some other comments which would fall short of a ruling, because you had heard interventions by representatives of only two parties and not of the three parties in the House and because you knew that there were others, including the former House leader of this party, the House leader when this party was in government, who wished to make a point. I assumed when you began to speak that you were not going to rule, but I rose at that time only because I would not have wanted you to make a ruling before you heard all the evidence.

The question that arises has to do with the rights of the Leader of the Opposition as an officer of the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: You are not a leader.

Mr. Clark: I have attempted to exercise my responsibilities to this Parliament both as prime minister and as Leader of the Opposition with the utmost of respect for the institution of Parliament and also with restraint. I cannot recall a time in the nearly ten years I have been a member of the House when the Chair has declined to hear an argument by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I cannot recall that having occurred in my relatively brief time here, and colleagues of mine who have been here longer tell me it has never occurred before, until today.

The question on which I am seeking clarification—and I suppose in relation to which I am giving the Chair notice that I may well want to file a subsequent question of privilege—has to do with my right, as an officer of this House and as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, to rise and be heard on procedural questions. That is a matter I regret I have to raise, but I believe that in the circumstances I have no alternative.

I should draw the attention of the Chair again to the earlier question I asked. We would naturally be interested in knowing whether the content and the timing of the filing of that notice had been drawn to the attention of the Chair prior to the statement by the government House leader, but the other matter, in view of the long-standing practices of Parliament, is perhaps of more importance.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I should like to reply to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition because——I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition deserves an answer and deserves to understand what I was doing. I was applying the rule whereby no member of the House—and, I regret to say, not even the Leader of the Opposition—may rise when the Speaker of the House is on her feet and speaking. That is the only rule I was applying when I did not want to cede the floor to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. That is strictly what I was doing, and nothing more than that. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will understand that I have to do what Speakers are supposed to do in those circumstances. It was no reflection on the role of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in the House, his numerous qualities and all the rights he has, along with other members, to intervene in debate.

Mr. Nielsen: There is a distinction.

Madam Speaker: Of course. I said the Leader of the Opposition and all the others. I was simply applying that simple rule, and I just stood and asked to be allowed to finish what I was about to say. I was ruling, and no one from the New Democratic Party had asked for the floor at that time. If someone from the New Democratic Party had risen at that time, I probably would have heard him in order to hear at least one representative from each of the various parties. However, no one rose at that time. I had already heard two interventions from the opposition side and one from the other side. I think that will clarify that question.

As to whether I knew a motion had been filed, I learned during the question period that two motions had been filed, one by the New Democratic Party and one by the Conservative Party, but I did not know what the subject matters of those two motions were. I was informed then that I might be called upon at some later time to determine which of those two motions—since the parties did not agree between themselves—would be debated on Friday. I was informed that I might be called upon to determine which one of the two should have priority.

Those are exactly the facts as I know them.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are two matters I want to place before you. One pertains to the explanation you have just completed. I did, in fact, rise. It may be that you did not see me, and I accept that, but there are people who will acknowledge that I did. However, that is neither here nor there. That is not really important in this argument.

I want to clear up a matter which may well be important for the purposes of future relationships. The matter of the notification to the official opposition of the intention of the New Democratic Party to file a motion is not in dispute. The leader of the New Democratic Party called the office of the Leader of the Official Opposition at 11.42 a.m. this morning and informed that office that it was his intention and the intention of this party to file a notice for a discussion similar, if not identical, to the notice we subsequently filed. As the House leader for the official opposition indicates, sometimes there are communication problems. I suspect they exist everywhere much of the time.

While I am on my feet, I want to make one further point. With regard to the dispute before the Chair—and I think Your Honour put it rather well—it would have been much better could we have resolved it at a meeting. I recognize that. In fact, I think it was the House leader of the official opposition who, not long after I was appointed to serve in the capacity of acting House leader of the New Democratic Party, rose in his place and made it clear that he found it abhorrent that we should conduct negotiations on the floor of the House. I agree with that, and I think it is unfortunate that we are conducting negotiations on the floor of the House today. However, the ruling that you made with regard to the appropriateness of the government House leader calling the business of the House in whatever order he sees fit is quite clearly set out in the rules. Much though I would like to argue that, I cannot find an argument that would be sustainable.

The other side of the question is that in a dispute such as this it is always very difficult to determine just how much of what one hears is absolutely correct in the minds of all the parties taking part in the discussion. I would concede to the House leader of the official opposition that he did indeed indicate to me that the Friday next—that being tomorrow—would be an opposition day for the NDP, subject to caucus approval. That has always been the case. In fact, any time I have had dealings with either of the House leaders there has been, from time to time, the necessity to make an agreement, subject to it being checked out with either the leader of a party or with the caucus of the member that is represented. That is not out of the ordinary.

The reason we came to the conclusion, however, that tomorrow was to be our opposition day was a conversation between my leader and the Leader of the Official Opposition yesterday afternoon after the Conservative caucus had met. At that point, if I understand the gist of the conversation correctly, what was said was that we had examined the possibility of a particular motion and had decided we were not disposed to commit ourselves to dealing with it. We had looked at another motion and suggested that we felt better about that one, given that we felt on balance that it was more substantive. We were therefore prepared to go ahead with the opposition day on one of the two motions.

My understanding of the conversation as it was related to me was that no objection was made at that time, so we assumed and I think correctly, that we were going to proceed. I am sure the dispute is one that we will resolve at House leaders' meetings; it is not a dispute that I think can be resolved by the Chair. I think it is unfortunate, but probably necessary, that we have further meetings, and I hope we will be able to deal with our motion when this particular matter is called again next week.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, are we still on House business?

Madam Speaker: Yes, we are.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have a question for the government House leader. On December 8, 1981 I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board which dealt with House business. I asked whether it was his intention to introduce for consideration of the House a bill that has the unanimous approval of members of the public accounts committee. It is a bill permitting the Auditor General to present his reports more frequently and on other than an emergency basis. His colleague indicated at that time that the government would be consulting, I presume with the government House leader, who would then advise the House. Has that consultation taken place, and does the government intend to introduce that bill?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we are not in a position to introduce this bill now. I suggest that my hon. colleague put his question to the President of the Treasury Board who is in a better position than I to give more detail on this.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council, in view of what has happened today, if we can ever believe a word he says from now on?

Mr. Clark: I guess the answer is no.

PETITION

MR. WISE—CHANGES IN TAXATION OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the responsibility to table today for the second time in this session, a petition signed by many citizens of the city of St. Thomas in the county of Elgin.

This petition reflects the strong protest of Elgin constituents regarding the changes in the taxation of life insurance policies as stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in the November 12 budget. This petition reflects the disappointment and the hostility of life insurance companies, sales representatives and thousands of policyholders across Canada.

I sincerely hope that the Minister of Finance will recognize this blunder and have the courage to withdraw these provisions immediately.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,682, 3,248, 3,249, 3,311 and 3,521.

RECOMMENDATIONS RELATING TO PRIVACY

1. What individual or which bodies within the government currently have responsibility for making recommendations to the government relating to privacy and, in each case (a) who is the individual or member of the body involved and for which department or agency does he/she work (b) to whom are reports made (c) on what date was the responsibility for privacy first given to that individual or body and on what date does his/her mandate expire (d) what reports or recommendations have been made to date and on what date were they made?

2. Was action taken as a result of the recommendations and, if so, what action and on what date?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): The Department of Justice advises:

1. (a) The Information Law and Privacy Section of the Department of Justice is responsible for advising the Minister of Justice on matters relating to privacy. The Minister of Justice is responsible for making recommendations to the government on this subject.

(b) The Minister of Justice.

(c) The section was established in March, 1981. No date has been set for this mandate to expire.

(d) No reports or recommendations have been made to date.

2. Not applicable.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission advises:

1. (a) Inger Hansen, QC, Privacy Commissioner appointed in accordance with the Canadian Human Rights Act, is responsible for making recommendations to government departments and institutions subject to Part IV of the act.

(b) To the responsible minister for the department or institution concerned.

(c) The Privacy Commissioner was appointed on October 1, 1977. She was reappointed on October 1, 1981 for a four-year term.

(d) See the annual reports of the Privacy Commissioner submitted to Parliament pursuant to Section 60 of the Canadian Human Rights Act for the years 1978, 1979 and 1980.

2. The actions taken by government departments and institutions as a result of the recommendations are reported in the annual reports of the Privacy Commissioner.

The Privacy Commissioner appeared as a witness before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in respect of their study of Bill C-43, an act to enact the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, to amend the Federal Court Act and the Canada Evidence Act, and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof, on March 10, 1981.

INFLOW OF FOREIGN CAPITAL

Question No. 3,248—Mr. Cossitt:

Does the government have an estimate of the inflow of foreign capital as a result of the applications approved by the Foreign Investment Review Agency since its establishment and, if so, what is the amount?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

The Foreign Investment Review Agency does not approve or disapprove applications received under the Foreign Investment Review Act. This is a function of the governor in council. Investments are financed in diverse ways, only some of which may have an impact on capital flows. For example, in cases of indirect acquisitions, there may be no separate consideration paid for the Canadian business. In addition, many acquisition and new business proposals are financed through the Canadian banking system. However, the value of assets acquired in the 1,504 allowed acquisition applications (from April 9, 1974 to September 30, 1981) was $8.4 billion, and the value of planned investment in the 1,461 allowed new business applications (from October 15, 1975 to September 30, 1981) was $2.4 billion.

CRITERIA USED BY FIRA WHEN MAKING DECISIONS

Question No. 3,249—Mr. Cossitt:

What are all the criteria used by the Foreign Investment Review Agency when making decisions on applications?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

The Foreign Investment Review Agency does not make decisions on whether to allow or disallow applications received under the Foreign Investment Review Act. This is a function of the governor in council. The criteria taken into account in the decision by the governor in council, to the extent they are relevant, are set out in subsection 2(2) of the act as follows:

(a) the effect of the acquisition or establishment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the effect on employment, on resource processing, on the utilization of parts, components and services produced in Canada, and on exports from Canada;

(b) the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or would form a part;

(c) the effect of the acquisition or establishment on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada;

(d) the effect of the acquisition or establishment on competition within any industry or industries in Canada; and

(e) the compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the government or legislature of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment.

GANNETT CO. INC.

Question No. 3,311—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Foreign Investment Review Agency approve an application by the Gannett Company Incorporated of the United States only after two refusals and only after the American company was forced to make certain commitments to the government and, if so, did such commitments include a pledge by the company to use Canadian newsprint for an American national newspaper and does the government have the right to insist on certain things being done in another country?

2. Is it government policy to impose commitments on foreign companies seeking to invest in Canada before applications will be approved by the agency?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

1. The Foreign Investment Review Agency does not approve or disapprove applications under the Foreign Investment Review Act. This is a function of the governor in council. A third application by Gannett Co. Inc. to acquire Mediacom Industries Inc., Mediacom Inc. and C.D. Maintenance Services Ltd. was allowed on October 30, 1981. Two previous proposals had been disallowed. Among the various improvements and additional undertakings submitted in the third, successful, application by Gannett was a commitment to purchase from Canadian suppliers for a period of three years the bulk of the newsprint required by a new U.S. national newspaper, assuming that its development proves feasible and successful. This, as is the case with all of the other undertakings, was offered by Gannett in support of its proposal. They were, in turn, accepted by the government as a condition of allowance.

2. It is government policy to allow all applications which offer significant benefit to Canada according to the factors set out in Subsection 2(2) of the Foreign Investment Review Act. Prior to an assessment of whether or not their proposals offer significant benefit to Canada, foreign investors are asked to identify any plans they may have with respect to employment, resource processing, sourcing, exports, Canadian participation, productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation, product variety and any other relevant matters. However, it is entirely up to foreign investors to choose their own means to demonstrate that their proposals will be of significant benefit to Canada. In this regard, foreign investors frequently offer undertakings in support of their proposals. The undertakings, in turn, are accepted by the government as a condition of allowance.

MAINTENANCE OF SCHEFFERVILLE AIRPORT

Question No. 3,521—Mr. Ellis:

1. Which company was awarded the contract to maintain and manage the Schefferville airport?

2. What is the fee paid to the company for their services and is the amount paid on a cost plus basis or is it a simple contract agreement at a fixed amount?

3. Will tenders again be called for managing the airport and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Quebecair, Montreal International Airport.

2. The contract is based on tendered hourly rates for actual hours of work plus a fixed tendered amount for other expenses associated with fringe benefits, overtime and travel, etc.

Fees are paid to the contractor as follows:

	1980/81	1981/82	1982/83 (option year)
Salaries	$ 96,053 (est.)	$ 96,053 (est.)	$ 96,053 (est.)
Other Expenses	$ 56,691 (fixed)	$ 56,691 (fixed)	$ 56,691 (fixed)
	$152,744 (est.)	$152,744 (est.)	$152,744 (est.)

3. The contract was awarded to Quebecair from June, 1977 to June, 1980. TB 771922 gave authority to amend the contract with Quebecair for a two-year period, plus an optional one-year period. Depending on whether both parties agree to extend the contract for the option year, public tenders may be called in May, 1982, or May, 1983.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, on February 3, an extraordinary letter was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and was also released to the press gallery. It came from ten Liberal members of Parliament, including two Liberal cabinet ministers from Quebec. In that letter it was brought to the attention of the Prime Minister that there is a very serious and growing economic crisis in this country which needs to be addressed at the earliest opportunity by the government.

The letter made two recommendations. The first was for urgent action to stimulate the housing industry in Canada. The writers recognized that if we are to do something about unemployment in Canada, perhaps the most direct way is to ensure that Canadians can again see stimulation in the housing industry, that more housing is built, that the shortfall in housing units does not continue and that housing again becomes affordable.

The second action that was recommended was a special program to provide some assistance, particularly to young Canadians who find themselves unemployed today.

That letter was extraordinary for a couple of reasons, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it was extraordinary that ten members of the government caucus would have so lost confidence in the government's policies that they felt it necessary to lobby the government by issuing a public letter to the Prime Minister, calling upon him to reject the policies outlined in the federal budget.

The second thing, and it was even more extraordinary, was the fact that two members of cabinet chose to make a public break with their Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and dissociate themselves from the policies he had enunciated. They called upon the minister to bring in new policies to correct problems he had caused.

If members of the Liberal caucus were concerned on February 3 about the effect of government policies upon unemployment and housing in Canada, those fears were borne out two days later when, last Friday, Statistics Canada issued new statistics which showed that well over one million Canadians cannot find jobs. Statistics Canada told Canadians on February 5 that in January of this year some 1,096,000 Canadians found themselves without jobs. There were fully 117,000 fewer Canadians working in January, 1982, than had been working in the previous January. This indicates that the crisis caused by the budget of the Minister of Finance is deepening dramatically and that the fears expressed by ten Liberal Members of Parliament were dramatically borne out when Statistics Canada released those figures on Friday.

The crisis in Canada today, which is being deepened so remarkably by the failure of leadership on the part of the Minister of Finance and his obstinate refusal to recognize the damage being done by his budget, has placed all Members of Parliament in a very difficult situation. But no Member of Parliament finds himself in a more difficult spot than members of the Liberal caucus. As they are confronted with this legislation before them today, the choice is very simple. Are they representatives of their constituencies in Ottawa, or are they representatives of Ottawa in their constituencies? Is it their job to go to Ottawa and express the concerns of their constituents who are suffering at the hand of the government's scorched-earth economic policies, or is it their job to sit mute and be silently complacent when government policies are wreaking so much havoc upon Canadians today?

Ten Liberal members of caucus felt that it was their job to express the points of view of their constituents, but many others have remained silent. When budgetary bills such as the one before us today have been called, many of them have said one thing to their constituents about how concerned they were, but when they stood in the House of Commons to vote, they made it clear that they put their party before their constituents. If there is to be any hope of redressing the serious economic crisis of today, Liberal Members of Parliament should be prepared to show the courage to put the country first and to recognize that they are here to do a job on behalf of their constituents.

The Minister of Finance, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) and some other ministers have recognized the fact that there is a serious housing crisis. Between 1980 and 1982 government projections show that there will likely be a shortfall of 143,000 housing units. We have a situation where housing is increasingly becoming unaffordable and in many centres is becoming totally unavailable.

The government's figures were last published in October, 1981. I should like to take a look at what they show in terms of vacancy rates faced by Canadian families who need accommodation in urban centres. In the Kitchener area the Liberal Member of Parliament is being called upon by his constituents to speak out. In October of last year the vacancy rate in Kitchener was 0.7 per cent. Most experts believe that the vacancy rate should be at least 3 per cent. This is why the constituents of the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) are calling upon him to show some leadership. Liberal Members of Parliament from Toronto should be aware of the fact that their community had a vacancy rate of 0.3 per cent. In Oshawa, the constituency of the leader of the NDP, the vacancy rate in October was zero. In Vancouver and in Victoria the vacancy rates were running at 0.1 per cent last October. We have a growing crisis in the affordability and availability of accommodation in Canada. It is essential that the government recognize this fact today and be prepared to bring new measures before Parliament which will address the problem and begin to correct the difficulties which were caused by its misguided budget.

Even where there is available housing, there is a second concern that housing is rapidly becoming unaffordable. In the Liberal constituency of Kitchener, an average house sold for $58,746 last year. In the Liberal constituency of Guelph, an average house sold for $57,402 last year. In Toronto, an average house sold for $100,373. We are finding that affordable housing is being taken away from Canadians, and that the dream of many Canadian families of owning their own homes is becoming a forgotten dream because of government policy.

No one who looks at the bill which was put before us by the minister responsible for housing could make a claim in any honesty that it will address the problem. It presents a band-aid or a palliative which mitigates against some of the worst effects of the policies of the Minister of Finance, but it does not give the dramatic stimulus that is necessary if we are to make housing affordable and available to all Canadians.

Mr. Kelly: That is not so.

Mr. Beatty: This fact was recognized by the ten Liberal Members of Parliament who sent that open letter to the Prime Minister. They knew what was in the bill. It is striking that the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly), who just spoke out, did not have the courage to speak out on behalf of his constituents. The members from Montreal were left to do so by themselves.

Mr. Kelly: Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Beatty: The hon. member is asking whether we will vote against band-aids. No, we will not vote against band-aids, but what we will do—and what the constituents of the hon. member asked him to do—is to speak up for people by saying that it is time for housing to be made affordable and that the policies of the government which are directly designed to cost ordinary Canadians their homes must be stopped and changed. His constituents are calling upon him to say that ordinary Canadians are finding their businesses are being taken away from them because of the policies of the Minister of Finance. They are calling upon him to speak up and represent them. Also they are saying that an unprecedented number of working Canadians are having their jobs taken away from them, with tremendous economic and social consequences for all Canada. It is time that the hon. member for Scarborough Centre spoke up instead of remaining silently complicit in the government's scorched-earth economic policies. Also they are saying that it is essential, when ordinary Canadians find their farms being taken away from them by the policies supported by the minister for housing and the hon. member for Scarborough Centre for new policies to be designed so that farming in Canada be made possible in the future and that family farms do not cease to exist.

What is in the budget or in the bill before us today that offers hope to Canadians? The answer is, very little. I should like to take a look at the specific provisions in the bill. On budget night the Minister of Finance gave an estimate to the House of the number of Canadians whose mortgages would be coming up for renewal over the course of one year. He pointed out that there were appoximately five million home owners in Canada. According to the Minister of Finance and his budget papers, over the course of the last half of last year and this year, which is essentially the period covered by the budget, some 920,000 Canadians will be put in the position of renegotiating their mortgages. Anyone who has had the experience of renegotiating a mortgage under the present economic conditions set by the high interest rate policy of the government knows the serious problem it poses for many ordinary Canadian families. How many of them will be helped? How many families whose mortgages are coming up for renewal will be helped by the proposition before us today?

I ask the hon. member for Scarborough Centre and the minister for housing for their attention. When the minister spoke the other day, I followed his remarks very carefully. He did not mention how many Canadian families would be helped by the band-aids he put forward.

Mr. Cosgrove: All those with over 30 per cent.

Mr. Beatty: I ask the minister to correct me if I am wrong, that the number of Canadians who will be helped by this provision, in terms of assistance for them with their mortgages, will amount to approximately 50,000 of the 920,000 Canadians whose mortgages are coming up for renewal this year. It will amount to 12,500 Canadian families who will receive up to a maximum of $3,000 in assistance, and it will amount to another 37,500 Canadian families who will be allowed to defer interest. Let us make very clear what the minister is proposing. Is he proposing direct assistance to 37,500 Canadians? Is he proposing some relief which will subsidize interest rates? No, he is not. He is proposing that their indebtedness should increase, and next year they will find themselves with higher debt loads than they had this year. This is what the minister is proposing, and this is his idea of assistance for people in dire straits.

The minister has the responsibility, when he is proposing this legislation, to be honest with Canadians and to indicate that he recognizes it is simply a band-aid and will not address the serious problem which the ten Liberal members from Montreal felt the government needed to deal with urgently, without any further delay. Yet the government presents palliatives as a means of distracting the attention of Canadians and as a means of trying to convince them that the government takes the problem seriously and is prepared to show some leadership in this serious economic crisis of today.

Over the course of the Christmas recess I had a chance to talk with my constituents. There was one message which they gave me time and time again. It was the same message I heard when I was in the Liberal constituencies of Guelph and Kitchener, that the government's policies are taking us on a road to economic disaster, and that increasing numbers of small businesses, family farmers and home owners are being forced to suffer as a result of government policy. When members of the Liberal caucus come forward with measures such as the one before us today and say that it is satisfactory to deal with the housing crisis, then they are guilty of complicity as Canadians have their homes taken away from them. When Liberal members of caucus vote to support the Minister of Finance on his budget, they are complicitous. As farming Canadians find that a family farm can be taken away from them, Liberal members are complicitous. As ordinary Canadians have their jobs taken away from them by the policies of the Minister of Finance, Liberal members are complicitous. As more small-business men in record numbers find themselves being forced out of business, Liberal members are complicitous.

The crisis which is facing Canadians today is a crisis which confronts the members of the Liberal caucus directly because the choice is theirs. They can use their majority to prop up and sustain policies that are wreaking havoc in their own constituencies, or they can exercise courage and independence and they can do the job they were sent down here to do, that is, to speak out on behalf of their constituents, to call upon the Minister of Finance to change that disastrous budget and to recognize the serious crisis in Canada today.

I do not think anyone who has had the opportunity of looking at the state of Canada's economy today can be anything but concerned. Certainly members on this side of the House are deeply concerned. We are today in the most serious economic crisis since the Great Depression. Every sign that we get from the government is that it has no answer. The government has no plans. What the Minister of Finance has done in his budget is to plan for higher unemployment, to plan for continuing high interest rates and to plan for continuing high inflation. He has not shown any leadership in coming to grips with the serious problems facing Canadians. This is why there is such an economic malaise in our country today. This is why business is increasingly saying to each of us that if they are expected to make investment in the future, they have to have some long-term assurance as to what the government's plans will be. Business has to have some assurance that if it invests in this country, the economy will be soundly managed and that business will get a fair return on its investment. Business does not have that assurance today. Growing numbers of Canadian businessmen are voting with their dollar and saying they have a lack of confidence in this government's management of the economy.

This is a concern to me because I am worried about the future of young Canadians in Canada. What will the prospects be for them with unemployment running this year over one million? What will be the prospects for young families who want to have a home of their own? The prospect is very bleak indeed at the present time. One of the reasons that since prior to confederation millions of people left their homes in other countries to come to Canada is that they felt there was an opportunity in this country to own their own home and to build a future for themselves and their families. It was for that reason that I proposed at this time last year that the government's constitutional resolution be amended to recognize the rights of Canadians to own property. Initially, the government indicated it was prepared to support that. But under pressure from the NDP, the government withdrew that support and broke the promise it had made.

What we are finding today is that the government is going a step further. Not only is it not prepared to guarantee the right of Canadians to own property, but because of the government's policies, increasing numbers of Canadians, ordinary working families, are having their hopes and their dreams dashed. They are having their homes and their dreams taken away from them. What more cruel policy could there be on the part of any government to inflict that sort of consequence upon every Canadian?

Not every Canadian is in jeopardy today of losing his home. Some Canadians will be able to manage even in spite of the government's management of the economy and the new policies being brought down in the budget. But an ominous note was sounded in some of the material which was tabled with the budget. The minister responsible for housing again did not address this particular issue when he made his speech a couple of days ago in support of this bill. When the Minister of Finance made his budget speech, he decided that he would take a look at tax expenditures. He decided to take a look at what potential revenues could be gained for the government if the government closed what he keeps referring to as loopholes, which ordinary Canadians consider essential to their survival. One of those loopholes which he identified was that by charging an imputed rent to ordinary Canadians who live in their own homes and own their own homes, the government will be able to achieve a saving of a further $4.5 billion for its tax revenue. That was based on the fiscal year 1979. According to the Minister of Finance, if the government chose to charge that imputed rent, that $4.5 billion would have resulted in a tax increase of an average of $458 per tax filer in Canada.

Liberal members opposite say that the minister talked about it, he had it in his discussion paper. He did computations to see how much revenue he could gain if he chose to charge that imputed rent and tax it, but he decided not to do it this year. On the strength of this government's track record, Canadian home owners and families have good cause for concern that the trial balloon that was floated by the Minister of Finance in November, 1981, may very well turn out to be the reality in the coming budget.

What we found in this budget was a massive tax grab which hits the ordinary Canadian and taxes benefits that he receives at his place of work. For example, dental plans will be taxed under the budget of the Minister of Finance. How much further is there to go if he wants more revenue than for him to seek that further $458 per tax filer in Canada and to charge that imputed rent that he was talking about in the budget papers that were tabled in the House of Commons on budget night?

Can ordinary Canadians feel that their investment in their houses are safe, and that the Minister of Finance will not see this as an opportunity to attack them? I invite them to read the document and to see the words of the Minister of Finance as he talked about the inequities that were caused by the tax expenditures. Canadians should ask themselves where the logic of the Minister of Finance will lead the Liberal caucus and the Liberal Party come next budget.

What the government has done by its policies is to strike directly against the middle class in Canada. The government has struck directly against the dream of Canadian families to own a home of their own. In so doing, what it has done is to destroy the viability of our whole economic and political system in many instances. The government has created a feeling of unrest and uncertainty in the country. The government has seriously damaged the national unity on which the Prime Minsiter said in 1968 that he would run to protect it. The government has created feelings of bitterness throughout the country and feelings of alienation on the part of ordinary Canadians who want very much to work for this country and to build a future for themselves and their families.

What could be done by the government if it were prepared to show some leadership? The most obvious thing that could have been done if the party opposite had not obstructed the proposal which my party made in government for a tax credit for ordinary Canadian families in 1979.

A family who is paying some $5,000 interest this year, if the Liberal caucus had not filibustered that measure and refused to allow the bill to go through, would have had some $1,250 benefit as a result of the plan. That is this year.

The ordinary families in my constituency are facing this massive tax grab by the Liberal government today.

Mr. Cosgrove: What about renters?

Mr. Beatty: I hear the minister responsible for housing shouting out "What about renters?" I might ask the minister responsible for housing what he has done for renters. What has the minister done when there is a vacancy rate throughout the country that is so low that it is often impossible for ordinary Canadians to find accommodation for themselves that is affordable? What has the minister done for renters? What has the minister done for ordinary Canadians who are home owners? What has the minister done to act on the promise that was made by the Liberal Party when it was in opposition and opposed the mortgage interest and property tax credit? The Liberals said they opposed it because they wanted something which they felt would be better, and that was assistance for all housing in the way of a shelter grant which would apply to apartment dwellers as well. What has the minister responsible for housing done to keep his word on that shelter grant? Has he done anything? He has done nothing. It is yet another broken promise.

Mr. Evans: Do you have a spare $3 billion lying around?

Mr. Beatty: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) asks whether we have a spare billion lying around.

Mr. Evans: Three billion dollars.

Mr. Beatty: He says $3 billion. There we are. The parliamentary secretary asks whether we have a further $3 billion lying around. Maybe if it would cost $3 billion, you should not have made the commitment for the shelter grant in the first place. If you could not afford it, you should not have been deluding Canadians and making false promises to them at election time.

This is the sort of cynicism we get from the Liberal Party. The present Prime Minister said "Say anything, do anything, as long as you can get and maintain power." That is the Liberal Party's principle. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance flees the House because he recognizes that that is the case. Yet in instance after instance what we have found is that promises made by the Liberal Party during the election campaign are broken. What about cheap gas? I remember that one, and so do the people in my constituency. What about promises for a shelter grant? I remember that one. Those promises have been broken, and ordinary Canadians know it.

What we have had instead is a massive tax grab on the part of the Minister of Finance, unprecedented in the history of Canada. We have had policies being put in place which penalize ordinary working Canadians, cost them their jobs, their homes, businesses and farms. And the members opposite sit silently complicitous. They go back to their constituents, shake their heads and say, "We are concerned too because we recognize your problems and we will go and talk quietly behind closed doors to the minister, try to get him to listen to reason and to change his policies."

Ten Liberal members, Mr. Speaker, within the past week have said they cannot do it behind closed doors any more; the only hope they have to get the government to change its disastrous policies is by putting pressure directly and publicly on the Prime Minister through this letter they released to the press. They recognize that quiet persuasion will not work; it is impossible to persuade the Minister of Finance to listen to reason.

Well, if the minister is confident his policies are serving Canadians well and they support them, I invite him to come to my constituency. Or, if he prefers, let him come to two Liberal constituencies. Let him come with me to Guelph and talk to ordinary working people there and explain his policies. Let him come to Kitchener and explain the effect of his policies on the life insurance industry, which is so important to the economy of Kitchener. Let him explain whether or not his policies were justified, and let him try to convince Canadians who are suffering at his hands that he understands their problems and is providing the sort of leadership so desperately needed by Canadians today.

Mr. Kelly: What are your policies?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I started by pointing out the fact that there is a serious crisis confronting every Liberal member today. Will they remain silently complicitous like the hon. member for Scarborough Centre, or will they have the courage to speak out on behalf of their constituents? Will they, for example, propose the mortgage interest tax credit we proposed and they opposed, or will they sit quietly while their constituents have their homes taken away from them? Will they do anything about the energy tax credit?

You will remember complaints by government members about the 18 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline which they said was punitive. The Liberal candidate in my constituency stood on Highway 10 every morning with a sign saying, "Vote against 18 cents a gallon more". What has happened, Mr. Speaker, to gas prices since the Liberal Party returned to office?

Mr. Mayer: Eighty cents a gallon, that is what happened to it.

Mr. Beatty: What happened to the energy tax credit which was going to give relief under the Crosbie budget? Again, they are quietly complicitous on the government's policy. Did they speak out when the government imposed a tax upon heating oil which was exempt under the Crosbie budget? Did they speak out when my constituents were hit by that?

Mr. Kelly: We are not subsidizing oil.

Mr. Beatty: They remained silently complicitous again.

Mr. Mayer: Duplicity, not complicity.

Mr. Beatty: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre again shrugs it off and says, well, this is not his concern. He is not prepared to subsidize that. Well, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that ordinary Canadians are concerned. They find the policies of this government are hitting them in their home, their place of work, and they are threatening to challenge the Canadian dream: The ability of Canadian families to own a home of their own.

Mr. Mayer: That is right, Liberals have no principles.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the choice confronting the hon. member for Scarborough Centre today, the choice confronting all members of the Liberal side, is: Are they Canadians first? Are they prepared to put the interests of their constituents first, or are they members of the Liberal Party first? Will they speak out on behalf of their constituents, or will they serve only as the government's representatives to their constituencies, to try to apologize for what the Minister of Finance has done and to try to explain the inexplicable, to try to explain that it is in the national interest that jobs should be lost, that Canadians should give up their homes, businesses and farms? Which will they do?

The member who spoke before asked whether we were going to vote against the bill. The answer is no, we are not opposed to band-aids but we say they are not adequate. The hon. member knows that this bill provides a perfect opportunity for him to speak out on behalf of his constituents because there is no threat. At other times they say, "I cannot speak out because if I do it will threaten the survival of the government. If I speak out on the effects of this government's policies, that could be considered a vote of non-confidence and the government could be defeated." They know this bill will be passed, and it will be passed relatively expeditiously. Do they have the courage to stand up and say on behalf of their constituents, "This is not enough. What the government is doing is offering palliatives instead of solutions to the pressing problems of Canadians." Or will they again sell their constituents short? Will they again refuse to speak on their behalf?

That is the choice which confronts the members of the Liberal caucus today, Mr. Speaker. We will see over the course of this day and this debate whether they are prepared to speak up on behalf of their constituents. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, like other members I am pleased to participate in debate on Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, but I hasten to add that my pleasure is not derived in any way from any sense that this is a quality bill. If the government has, in some fashion, come up with this as a piece of legislation which will answer the serious question of the dire straits in which Canadians everywhere find themselves in regard to housing, then this bill is a pathetic one. It is a pathetic response to a housing crisis by a pathetic minister in a do-nothing government.

The bill sets out to do a number of things. First, it purports to provide legislative authority for a mortgage interest deferral plan as outlined in the budget. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the plan allows individuals faced with higher mortgage payments to borrow money from financial institutions to meet those higher payments. It is not an innovative program, it is nothing new, bold or imaginative. It is nothing less than a poor cousin to, or variation of plans, already operated by the major banks such as the Royal Bank or the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. The government has stolen an idea from the banks, and in some respects the banks are part of the problem, not part of the solution.

This provision in Bill C-89 is wholly inadequate in a crisis which is causing hundreds and thousands of Canadians great hardship. In the case of the government's proposal, Mr. Speaker, as distinct from the bank's parallel program, an individual now faced with mortgage payments in excess of 30 per cent of his gross income can defer the excess amount for a time. The difference between the 35 per cent or 45 per cent of gross income he is paying on his mortgage and the 30 per cent which the government defines as the appropriate amount can be deferred with some government help. However, it is not a handout, a gift or a subvention from the treasury to help these people. It is, rather, a way of simply adding to the principal of the mortgage at the end of its term. It postpones the day of reckoning and causes Canadians, already over their heads because of this government's policies, to go deeper and deeper into debt. When the final hurt comes, it will be much worse than it would have been had this government done nothing.

The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Speaker, is going to provide the necessary insurance or security for the loan. It is simply a loan to be piled on top of the other loans these mortgage holders have. What a sham. What a stingy and miserly and inadequate measure at a time when Canadians from all walks of life are expecting leadership from the minister responsible for housing in particular, and from the government as a whole. The minister should hang his head in shame. He should be so embarrassed at the inadequacy of his program, which he heralds as the great avenue in solving people's problems, that he should not show his face in the House. Rather than give much needed help to home owners, the minister offers home owners more debt. The minister, in his fancy news release on February 8, here in the nation's capital, said the government's policy was "to help achieve a smooth transition to a more normal state of affairs and to see that no one suffers unduly in the process".

Can anyone imagine any minister of the Crown saying that this proposal will provide a smooth transition to higher interest rates for Canadians burdened by mortgage payments they cannot afford and that no one will suffer because of the government's lack of response to the crisis? He talks about a smooth transition. He says that no one will suffer and that assistance will be provided. Instead, we have a slippery pathway to more suffering, more debt and more hardship for Canadians who are already overburdened.

The government's idea of housing policy and rental policy is to encourage people to set back the date of their own executions, but they will be executed anyway. The government is simply saying that instead of doing it on March 15, we will do it on April 15.

Mr. Kelly: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the hon. member seeking the floor on a point of order?

Mr. Kelly: Yes. The hon. gentleman has addressed himself to one half of the program, and I am wondering whether he would address himself to the other half of the program if he knows it.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on! He has been speaking for seven minutes, Kelly. That is cheap!

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I am seven minutes into my speech, and whether the hon. member had risen or not, I fully intended to deal with all of the inadequacies of this program. I am grateful for the invitation to deal with the other inadequacies, of which there are many.

Mr. Lewis: The biggest inadequacy is him!

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible for housing has come into the House with a program which is embarrassingly inadequate.

Mr. Lewis: All Scarborough is embarrassed for you.

Mr. McMillan: Through his stinginess and his parsimony, this minister responsible for housing makes Ebenezer Scrooge look like Santa Claus.

Mr. Waddell: That is an original line!

Mr. McMillan: The hon. member who just interrupted me invited me to deal with other inadequacies.

Mr. Kelly: The other half is—

Mr. McMillan: May I be allowed to continue without the rude interruptions of the hon. member?

The bill also provides legislative authority for interest free loans of up to $7,500 per unit to landlords constructing new buildings as outlined, however poorly, in the budget. This measure will supposedly encourage construction of rental accommodation. It is supposedly the government's response to the rental crisis. It would seem that the government's response to the residential home ownership crisis, if anything, is even worse. Once again the minister has taken out his change purse and has thrown a brass farthing in the wishing well. That is what it is, a brass farthing in the wishing well in comparison with the real need for a vigorous, imaginative, involved and well-financed response to the rental crisis.

Canada needs 220,000 new housing units each year to meet demand. For example, as young married couples come into the market, new housing must be available so they can have homes. CMHC and other experts estimate that to meet national requirements every year, we need something like 220,000 new units in the market. In 1980, under this government and largely under this minister, only 159,000 units were built. In 1981, 178,000 units were built, which was again much lower than the required 220,000. Experts, such as CMHC and the Conference Board of Canada, are projecting that only 180,000 units will be constructed in 1982.

In the last three years, 143,000 fewer homes than required have been produced in Canada. The government's high interest rate policy has virtually brought construction to a halt. Let us not make any bones about the fact that this has been the result of the callous, insensitive and brutal policy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), his colleague, the minister responsible for housing, this whole cabinet, and the trained seals behind them. They are responsible for the high interest rate policy in this country which is crippling the construction industry and is denying Canadians the homes they require. Worse still, it is denying most Canadians their precious dream of ever owning a home.

The government itself and others have demonstrated that investors, landlords and other people in the industry cannot turn a profit on rental accommodation because of the government's high interest rate policy. In Ontario, investors and landlords must charge an average of $800 a month for a typical one bedroom apartment. I come from a part of the country outside of Ontario. I come from Prince Edward Island, which is one of the Atlantic provinces. At first, one can see that a corresponding apartment in Prince Edward Island would cost somewhat less than the $800 figure, but incomes are lower as well. Certainly, investors in my home city of Charlottetown have told me that they must charge somewhere in the neighbourhood of $800 per month for new rental accommodation in order to break even, without even considering profit.

People are being dissuaded from investing in the rental accommodation industry because of high interest rates. They cannot turn the honest and legitimate profit required to justify this sort of investment. Therefore, what do we have? We have a situation where rental accommodation is not being built. We have a situation where young families and other individuals are looking for rental accommodation which is not being built, and existing accommodation is already full.

It is almost impossible to find an adequate apartment in Toronto or in Ottawa. It is difficult to find good, decent, liveable accommodation in the city of Charlottetown. In Vancouver, the situation is critical. In Canada, the average vacancy rate was 1.2 per cent in 1981. That figure fell from 2.8 per cent in 1980. In the city of Halifax, Nova Scotia, which is pretty close to my home, the vacancy rate is 0.5 per cent, well below the national average of 1.2 per cent. Under such circumstances, young couples find that the odds are against them when looking for rental accommodation. There are no apartments to rent, no homes, no townhouses. People cannot afford to own a home because of this government's tight money policy. In the absence of owning a home, they cannot rent accommodation.

The government's policies are literally throwing people onto the streets. That fact should be on the conscience of every Liberal Member of Parliament in the House. It should weigh very heavily on their conscience. It is they, especially the trained seals behind the cabinet, who are endorsing and clapping for every inane justification and rationale for those measures from the Minister of Finance and the minister in charge of housing. It should be on the conscience of the trained seals, the Liberal backbenchers. You see them every day in question period flapping their flippers at every inane justification provided by the cabinet for this callous policy, every answer given in this House in response to our queries, every answer provided by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance, the minister of housing, no matter who. You can always count on the trained seals on the Liberal backbenches to clap wildly and endorse what they say.

Economists say that a vacancy rate below 3 per cent constitutes a crisis in the rental accommodation area. As I said, in Halifax it is 0.5 per cent. If 3 per cent is a crisis, what is 0.5 per cent? It is a catastrophe. The minister of housing comes into the House all smiles, promising $7,500 in the form of a loan to lower, marginally I would argue, the $800 that has to be charged by investors in rent every month just to break even.

That $7,500 loan per unit up to a maximum that is stipulated in the bill will not do more than pay for the toilets in most of those units. The minister promises a housing policy. Instead he comes up with a toilet policy. The minister's policy should be flushed down the toilet. I would argue that most Canadians would not regret it if the minister followed very closely behind.

It is bad enough that Canadians are being given a stingy, parsimonious rental policy and a stingy housing policy. The government is also going to take away one of the few genuinely sound problems in place to stimulate rental accommodation. I refer to the fact that we have in place, and have had for some time, the multiple unit residential buildings plan, MURBs. It is a tax incentive to encourage investors to construct rental accommodation. In its wisdom, the government realized in the past that investors need a certain amount of encouragement to invest in rental accommodation rather than in safe debentures or financial returns of a different sort. Rather than have their money in banks drawing high interest, the government introduced MURBs to encourage them to make that money work for Canadians, creating jobs in the construction industry and providing much needed accommodation for Canadians from all walks of life right across the country.

Under MURBs, building owners, landlords if you will, were allowed to deduct from their personnal income for tax purposes so-called soft costs of construction. I refer to legal fees, architect fees and designer fees. Those kinds of soft costs were allowed to be deducted from their income for income tax purposes in the first year of construction. I am told by people in the industry who know a lot more about the details than I do that these soft costs constitute approximately 10 per cent of the total cost of construction of most buildings.

In addition to that provision to which I have made reference, owners could also deduct 5 per cent of the cost of the building every year as depreciation up to a maximum of 20 years. The first year they could deduct 5 per cent of the cost of the building, the next year they could deduct 5 per cent of the remaining amount, and so on for a maximum of 20 years. It was a tax break, an incentive if you will. It recognized that buildings do in fact depreciate just as any product or property does. Of course, operating costs could be deducted. That goes without saying.

MURBs were not perfect. Nobody suggested they were. In some respects they were inadequate. Public policy rarely is perfect. However, it was an effort, a fairly imaginative and helpful response to the housing situation as it then was. Now what do we have? We have the federal government introducing a wholly inadequate new policy on the one hand and on the other hand removing what little there was in place to help create jobs, stimulate the construction industry and provided rental accommodation for Canadians.

The government estimates—and this is their estimate and not mine—that the $7,500 policy will stimulate construction of 15,000 new units at most. It is giving 15,000 units and taking away 25,000. Experts have established that MURBs stimulate construction of approximately 25,000 new units a year. The government is introducing a policy that will at most create 15,000 new units and take away 25,000 a year. That is not robbing Peter to pay Paul; it is robbing everyone to pay nobody. The minister is Merlin the magician. Now you see a housing policy, now you don't. With one stroke of the legislative pen, the minister makes 10,000 rental accommodations vanish.

The hon. member who preceded me described the housing situation in Canada as a crisis. That language is not too strong. The housing situation in Canada is critical. It is a national emergency. The minister gets into his ambulance and emerges with a finger band-aid. That is the response of the minister of housing to an emergency. It is a most inadequate rental and home ownership policy. Johnson and Johnson band-aids never looked more inadequate to the task.

At this time we do not have a Johnson and Johnson, policy; we have a Cosgrove and Cosgrove policy, band-aids for housing and band-aids for rental accommodation. This is a national emergency, no doubt about it. Mine is not hollow rhetoric. The average price of a home in Canada in 1981 was $77,900. If we assume, as we must, that the average family which is buying a home today makes a down payment of approximately 10 per cent and that the average property taxes are $1,000—this may vary and be higher in Toronto and Vancouver and lower in other parts of the country—the total payments on principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 30 per cent of gross income. That is the rule of thumb that the government uses. Therefore, an average family income of $44,500 is now needed to afford an average-priced home in Canada. If you take the average price of a home in Canada today at $77,900, the average income required to afford that home would be $44,500. How many Canadians can afford the average home? I am not talking about a Taj Mahal, a palace or a 16-room mansion. I am talking about a simple bungalow in Etobicoke or a simple three-bedroom house in Sherwood, Prince Edward Island. The average income required to buy such a home is in excess of $44,000.

I would be the first to admit that the average price of a home in my province of Prince Edward Island is not $77,900. It is more in the area of $60,000, according to the Prince Edward Island Corporation. But that still is a lot of money, especially considering that people in Prince Edward Island make much less money than those in Toronto or Vancouver.

According to the information I have obtained from my research, most families in Prince Edward Island pay approximately $200 per month for utilities. These utilities can be broadly defined as electricity, heat, lighting, telephone and so on. The cost of these utilities amounts to approximately $2,400, yearly.

Using Prince Edward Island as an example to which there are many parallels across the country, the average family income is $18,800. If we use the rule of thumb once again, 30 per cent of that—which the government says is the figure home owners should be tolerating as a proporation of one's income as an expenditure on a home—amounts to $470 per month. The average net monthly income of Islanders based on $18,800 a year is $1,100. Of that $1,100, a family must pay $670 for mortgage and utilities. That is comprised of $470 for mortgage payments and $200 for utilities. Therefore, the average family is left with $430 per month to live on. This is not taking into account any expenditures for house maintenance; it is just the basic cost of owning a home. The remaining sum of $430 per month to live on is for a father, mother and an average of two children. What can they do with $430 when the government is plunging the country deeper and deeper into recession? How much food will that buy? How much clothing will $430 buy for the average family on Prince Edward Island? These families also have to pay medical and dental bills. These calculations do not even take into account the astronomical costs of home maintenance for such things as plumbing and electrical fixtures.

How would the minister responsible for housing enjoy trying to survive on $430 a month? That is approximately $100 a week, a little over $13 a day. I suspect that the minister spends that much on taxis. I do not know whether you think I am being unduly harsh with the minister responsible for housing, Mr. Speaker, but I think you would be the first to agree, as would most Canadians, that, if anything, I am being charitable to the minister.

Mr. and Mrs. Gallant who live just outside of Charlottetown in my riding would agree that I am being charitable to the minister. They wrote to me on October 29, 1981 to indicate their frustration. Incidentally, my mail bag is full of letters such as this, and the same is true for other members of the House. They are swamped with letters such as this. I will read the letter so hon. members may share the pain, hurt and sorrow of Mr. and Mrs. Gallant. They say:

> I am writing to you in order to express to you my deepest concern over the present government policy of high interest rates which I am afraid may soon lead to the loss of my home. At the present time my husband is recuperating with a broken ankle and is drawing medical benefits from the CEIC of $572 per month. Of this $572 we must pay out $304.13 for our mortgage payment to the P.E.I. Housing Authority for our Co-op home which we built in 1975.

That is a direct quote, Mr. Speaker. They have had their home for seven years. The letter goes on to say:

> Our present government states that those who are spending 35 per cent of their income for shelter are in "dire straits" so as you can see from the above figures we are in a disastrous situation as we pay 53.2 per cent and my fears of losing my home are well founded. This figure of $304.13 represents an increase in payment of $150.66 from our original monthly payment when we signed our mortgage in 1975.

These are typical people, Mr. Speaker, not atypical. They bought a home in good faith and had the same reasonable expectation that any Canadian, including bankers, would share that their interest payments would remain in the vicinity of what they were paying seven years ago when they bought their home. In this case the family has suffered some adversity because the husband had developed medical problems, but the letter goes on to say that even if that had not occurred, the high interest rate policy of the government has forced them into paying several times more for their mortgage than what they could have reasonably expected. The increase is 53 per cent, and though their income may well have increased a little since 1975, I venture to say that it has not increased by 53 per cent. As a result, the Gallants and many like them right across the country stand to lose their homes.

I understand I have about five minutes left, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McMillan: If I may conclude, I and other members in the House invited the minister to respond to critical situations like that of the Gallants. He promised in the House two weeks ago—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps I could explain to the hon. member that we have private member's hour this evening, which begins at five o'clock.

Mr. McMillan: Is my time up?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sure the House would agree to give the hon. member a moment or two to complete his remarks.

Mr. McMillan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I express my appreciation also to hon. members of the House.

When the Clark government was in power, interest rates were not above 14 per cent.

Mr. Waddell: It was your policy to have high interest rates too.

Mr. McMillan: The Liberal Party lamented, cried and attacked the Clark government for its so-called high interest rate policy. We have seen interest rates in this country rise to 20 per cent, 21 per cent and 22 per cent, and even now, although they have declined a bit, it looks very much as though by the spring we will be on a course of record high interest rates again.

This government has been callous and heartless. It has forced a tight money policy on the country as a whole, and to address the problem it has come up with a pathetic and mealy-mouthed policy which should be the shame of the minister responsible for housing. It should be cause for embarrassment for every Liberal member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: They are beyond embarrassment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Dubois)—Finance—Advantages for Quebec related to new fiscal transfers; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Fisheries—(a) Task force decision not to hold public hearings. (b) Fishermen's representation.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

There being no items on the Order Paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

EXCHANGES CONCERNING DAYCARE CENTRES BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND ONTARIO

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, telegrams, minutes of meetings and other communications during the last year between the government and the province of Ontario relating to construction and health standards for daycare centres.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first I want to express my appreciation to my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He has seconded the motion in order to give me the opportunity to speak on this subject. Of course, he is not aware of what I am going to say in my remarks, so he can accept no responsibility for the comments I am going to make.

I am very pleased this afternoon to be able to discuss a subject in which I have taken a considerable amount of interest. Some may say I have taken a little too much interest in this subject. Be that as it may, I am the father of three children and a grandfather of two children. All my children and grandchildren have been through kindergarten, which we now term daycare centres. Fortunately, our family was in a position to be able to pay the cost, but nevertheless we were very pleased that such kindergartens or daycare centres were available. I sincerely hope such facilities eventually will be available to all children from coast to coast in this country.

I would like to set the tone for my remarks and state the reason I first put this motion on the Order Paper. Last spring I had the opportunity, as a member of the fiscal transfer payments committee, to cross this country and discuss with representatives of the governments of the provinces—some of the prime ministers, many ministers including ministers of education and health and ministers responsible for social services—problems in the three areas of health, post-secondary education and social services. While in the various provinces we also listened to representations from groups from those three sectors. We spoke with many groups in the health sector. We heard from groups of doctors and nurses and groups representing hospital administrations. We spoke to university teachers and university administration groups, and we also spoke to a large number of groups responsible for social services in this country.

It occurred to me and became clear through questioning that many of our social service groups were working somewhat in the dark. When we asked them questions about their operations, they knew what they were doing, but they had no certainty that the provincial administrations were necessarily aware either of their operations or of the useful part they were playing and, of course, they were never aware for how long they would be able to continue to receive funding.

I discussed with several of these social service groups the Canada Assistance Plan, the cost of which, as hon. members are aware, the federal government shares with provincial governments on a fifty-fifty basis in relation to certain social services. In fact, the federal government transfers some $2 billion to the provincial governments for that purpose. The groups were most interested in the agreements signed between the federal government and the provincial governments. However, those agreements were not available to the public and therefore were not available to the social service groups.

When I returned from that trip across Canada, I asked if these documents could be produced. I was told by officials in the Ministry of National Health and Welfare that these documents were not to be released, at the specific request of certain of the provincial governments, so I took the only initiative I could at that time and put a motion on the Order Paper. My first motion was to obtain a copy of the agreement signed between the federal government and the province of Ontario. I rose in the House a couple of times to ask what was happening to this motion, and eventually the document was produced. It is a voluminous document. Of course, once this agreement has been tabled, it is available to the public at large, so I decided at that time to put some further motions on the Order Paper, and hon. members will note that even at the present time there remain several motions calling for the agreements signed between the federal government and the other nine provinces. These documents have still to be produced, although I was assured as late as this week that they will be forthcoming. I want to see them because I want the various groups in the social service field to know that they are available and that they can be perused by them.

It is not difficult to understand why the provincial governments were not anxious to make these documents public. In fact, a reading of certain minutes indicates that it has been stated on more than one occasion that making these documents public might lead to some comparisons between provinces. It might lead to some bargaining between social service groups. It might not necessarily be good for the provincial governments because there might be pressure brought to bear on provincial governments to provide services provided in other provinces or to provide services on an equal basis throughout certain provinces. I do not like this approach to social services, Mr. Speaker. I am absolutely convinced that in the field of social service there should be equal opportunity and equal accessibility to all persons in all provinces.

You will note from a reading of the minutes of the meetings of the committee that examined fiscal transfer payments, that in one province there is only one daycare centre. You will also note that the federal government, on a per capita basis, puts 2.5 times as much money into one province as into another. Let me hasten to say that this is not the choice of the federal government. Of course, the Department of National Health and Welfare receives a bill from the provincial government and, in effect, all the federal government does is to see that the general standards of the programs are conformed to, and then it signs the cheque.

Last week the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was proud to announce that the federal government had increased the spending on social services this year by 19 per cent. That pleases me, but it also indicates to me that, first of all, it was not our choice to spend 19 per cent more as we are just paying the bill. Also, there is apparently greater need in the country, otherwise the provinces would not have increased their spending by a similar amount.

In June last year the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) issued a news release in which it was stated that he approved a program to facilitate the operation of pilot daycare centres in federally owned or leased buildings. I should like to quote from that news release as follows:

> These projects are designed to permit employees with young children to fulfil their combined roles of employees and parents.

It goes on to say:

> The management of these centres will be the responsibility of parent-users, who will form a legal corporation and assume complete administrative and financial responsibility for their operation. In order to facilitate this undertaking, the departments will provide the required space and maintenance.

So far so good, but that led me to recall that during the nine years or so that I have been a member of this House, three of the secretaries employed in my office have been single parents inasmuch as they have been responsible for bringing up young children, and, of course, as they live alone, they have been obliged to go to work. The circumstances of the three ladies were different. One was a widow, but in all three cases the women were obliged to find daycare centres or kindergartens in which to leave their children between the hours of approximately 8.30 a.m. and 5.30 p.m. Each approached the problem from a different point of view. In one case, because a mother lived nearby she was able to leave the children there. Another left the children with a neighbour, and the third put her children into a daycare centre. Of course, not everyone has a mother or mother-in-law available and it is not always easy to find a kind neighbour.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, in this day and age I think we have to recognize that the working mother—or for that matter a working father whose wife must of necessity go to work—should have access to controlled facilities on an equal basis. When I say an equal basis, that is because what is happening at the present time—and this is the reason I brought the motion forward—is that the government has indicated its willingness to provide space and maintenance, and then it has indicated that it is going to wash its hands of the operation. I do not believe that the government is going to be able to do exactly that.

When I put this motion on the Order Paper, I asked for communications dealing with construction standards and health standards. The first thing the government will have to do is to make sure that it conforms to the construction standards that apply in the various provinces. In order to do that, it should be aware of what those standards are.

At the present time the Department of Public Works has under construction a daycare centre in the city of Ottawa which I understand is listed as costing some $250,000. Rumour has it that the department is likely to spend in excess of $350,000 to build it and, in fact, one person who should know indicated to me yesterday that it might cost in excess of $400,000. At that point the facility is to be turned over to a corporation which is to run it on a self-supporting basis. In other words, the daycare centre is to be a self-supporting facility.

The implication and the philosophy is that the daycare centres are to be provided for those who can afford to pay and for those who are willing to pay. If no federal moneys were involved, we might accept that approach. However, if the government is prepared to put $200,000, $300,000 or $400,000 into a daycare centre for some 40 children, then the government is financially involved and is, in fact, subsidizing the children who use it.

Under these circumstances we have no choice—at least I hope we have no choice—but to ensure that these facilities, financed out of the public purse, shall be available to all children on an equal basis. I will go further and suggest that they shall be available to the children of the parents who have the greatest need. That means, of course, the parents who cannot afford high fees for a daycare centre.

All I know about the charges at the present time is that the figure $75 per week is being bandied about. One can translate that into a cost of $650 per month for two children. I have to ask myself if there is a bus driver on the hill or a secretary living alone or, for that matter, anyone working in the cafeterias or anyone in the public service in Ottawa at that level who can afford that kind of fee for children in a daycare centre.

What I am saying is that if the federal government intends to venture into this field, then it has to be with full subsidization; otherwise there must be no federal financial involvement whatsoever. In my opinion it makes no sense that we should spend huge sums of money to provide the facilities unless we carry through and provide to the parents who do not have the means themselves, the necessary grants to ensure that every child has an equal opportunity to share the facilities.

I feel very strongly on the subject, Mr. Speaker. As a parent I feel that I have had the privilege of seeing my children brought through the kindergarten system. In fact, I was able to see my daughter, who will be ten years old next week, take her first grade in a private kindergarten. Now she is one year ahead of the other girls in her particular class. I would like that opportunity to be available to every child. I suggest that the government must very seriously reconsider its approach. The President of the Treasury Board issued his news release in June. Hopefully he will issue another news release indicating that from here on in we intend, as a federal government, to ensure that daycare facilities in the public service will be built and available on an equal basis for all children.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) provides us with an opportunity not only to deal with the specifics of his request for documents relating to daycare centres, but it allows us to discuss in a more general way the subject of daycare which has risen to serious eminence in Canada over the past decade.

My association with daycare goes back to the late 1960s when, in the city of Halifax, the governors of an institution which was previously known as St. Joseph's Orphanage realized and recognized the changing times and the need to provide a different form of child care beyond the old tradition of the orphanage. Those forwardminded persons developed an institution which became known as St. Joseph's Day Care Centre. I believe it was one of the first substantial institutions of that kind in the area, although other nursery schools and institutions which might have been called daycare centres had been previously established. But it was the first effort of which I am aware to establish a substantial institution based upon developing principles which are now very much a part of the daycare system.

I was involved as a member of the board of directors of that institution. I was very pleased to be a part of the developing concept which we were able to implement and bring to life in the new daycare centre.

Also I was equally pleased, at the time I served as legislative counsel for the province of Nova Scotia, to be involved as a draftsman in what I believe was one of the first pieces of daycare legislation enacted in Canada. In 1971, the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia enacted the daycare services act, the purpose and principle of which was to give daycare a legislative base from which standards, methods of providing financial aid through public funds and similar matters to enhance the development of daycare facilities across the province could be developed.

In this respect I should pay tribute to my colleague from the city of Halifax who is now the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) because he, as premier of the province at the time, took an interest in the subject when it was presented to him by people like myself and other persons interested in daycare. Through the efforts of his government we were able to provide this legislative base for daycare.

Since 1970 daycare has developed not only in Nova Scotia but across the nation as the means of dealing with a very serious difficulty which arises in some family situations; that is, the situation in which parents of a child or, in the case where a child has no parents, those responsible for the custodial care of the child are unable on a day to day basis to provide proper care for the child. As I indicated, the old tradition was to allow such a child to be boarded in an orphanage with other children beset with similar difficulties. But the developing concept of daycare allowed us to replace that institution which lacked the kind of real life experience that any child requires in order to develop, progress and become a successful adult in modern society.

It is with great appreciation of the need and necessity for proper daycare facilities across Canada that I now rise to address some remarks on this subject. Let me conclude my references to Nova Scotia by recording the fact that some years later, in 1978, another daycare act was provided, which indicates and records the evolutionary process that even today is evolving with respect to daycare. For the record, daycare is defined in the statutes of the province of Nova Scotia—and I suspect it is similar in legislatures elsewhere—as the providing of services pertinent to a child's physical, social, emotional and intellectual development apart from the child's parents or guardian. The whole concept of daycare is to provide for the child's needs in a home away from home type of environment. What has developed over a period of time and is more or less established is that the kind of environment which will give a child the same benefits and advantages of a parent in the home upbringing has become very costly. Indeed the costs have grown to the extent where it is almost essential that some form of public assistance be provided if we are to have proper daycare facilities across Canada. In some cases those facilities can be provided without public expenditure by corporations for their employees. In other similar situations, universities and educational institutions have tended to pioneer in the provision of daycare facilities for staff persons and employees. But it is not everyone who is in the situation where they can look to an employer or an institution such as a university to assist them with the provision of daycare for their children. The hon. member was quite right when he underlined the need for government involvement in the matter of daycare, both at the provincial level, which has the primary responsibility, and at the federal level, particularly with respect to public servants.

Let me review very briefly the kinds of situations in which daycare is often required; that is, in most cases the situation of a single parent who must work to maintain herself or himself and at the same time has responsibility for the upbringing of a child or children. For this reason, the provision of daycare has become mostly involved with the quest for equal rights for women. I think all hon. members of the House of both sexes appreciate the very particular problem of women in this situation, although it is certainly a problem which can be experienced by a male person as well.

The point I want to make is that if we are to talk meaningfully of women's rights which are now enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we must implement this concern in practical ways. The implementation of a daycare program is one of the many ways in which legislators in the Parliament of Canada and in provincial legislatures across the land can really give effect to their good intentions with respect to equality for women. It is those kinds of programs which allow women to take their place in society when they are in family situations and have the responsibility to maintain a child or children, as well as themselves. It is natural that in the forefront of the movement for proper daycare facilities have been many women who experience on a day to day basis the difficulties and traumas which occur when persons are prevented, for financial and other reasons, from providing direct care for their children. If we are to have a meaningful attitude toward the entrenchment of equal rights for women, we are required and forced to examine concepts such as daycare. It is not the only one, but it is very important to the implementation of women's rights in this country.

There are other areas at which we ought to look when we consider daycare. One in particular is the provisions of the Income Tax Act respecting child care expenses. Without going into detail, the Income Tax Act provides for a single person's exemption, it provides for a married and equivalent exemption and it provides for exemptions for children. But beyond those exemptions there is a provision for deducting the expenses incurred for child care outside the home, with a relative or in the circumstances spelled out in the Income Tax Act and regulations. But the limit on those expenses is $1,000 per child to a maximum of $4,000 for four or more children.

We know that the kinds of facilities and the kinds of services that ought to be provided in a daycare centre involve costs well beyond those amounts. That is to say, there is no way that suitable daycare can be provided for a child at an annual cost of $1,000. In fact, you are talking about amounts that go beyond that and in some cases are as high as $5,000 or $6,000. Again, if we were really to try to implement programs such as daycare, we would have to provide the financial capability to utilize those programs. One of the backup provisions is the provision in the Income Tax Act that will provide a tax benefit for child care expenses.

I have pointed out in the House and in other places time and time again that the deduction currently provided is totally inadequate. In no way can it reflect the actual costs of maintaining a child. Do not forget, Mr. Speaker, it is very easy for people to say that the wife or the husband should stay in the home and look after the child. Certainly that is the ideal situation and one that we would all like to see in every Canadian home, but in many cases economics make it impossible. Beyond that, there is also the element of free choice that is involved. It simply comes down to the fact that, in this day and age, many women and many men do not wish to stay in the home to assist in providing child care on a full-time basis. They prefer to seek and to pursue careers. We cannot in the House, or in any other legislature, interfere with that freedom of choice, namely, the right to pursue a person's interest in the way he or she wants. Whether the reason is economic or whether it is simply a matter of choice, many poeple are not in a position to care for children in the home in the traditional way. It is not sufficient, even if it is the opinion of some—it is not mine—to condemn such persons because at the same time you have to recognize that the real concern is the child.

We are providing these facilities and we are constructing these programs, not to benefit in all cases the parent or the person responsible for caring for the child, but to ensure that the child has the benefit of proper care. Whatever philosophy you apply to the situation, you are left with the practical fact that there are great numbers of children in Canada who are not cared for in the home. The only way that they can be properly cared for is in a daycare centre, with the appropriate facilities to provide the proper services.

As I have indicated, and it is worth underlining, all this costs money. The hon. member for Vaudreuil mentioned the Canada Assistance Plan and the kind of social services that are available under that plan. As I understand it, and I am not up to date on the matter, the Canada Assistance Plan does permit provinces to assist persons in the financing of daycare as one of the services to which the Canada Assistance Plan can be applied. I know that in my province of Nova Scotia the Canada Assistance Plan has been used for this purpose. Formulae and methods have been established for assistance to people who use daycare facilities. Again, as we have all seen, costs escalate time and time again to the point where even the relatively small portion of the cost that may be required to be borne by the parents becomes too great a financial burden. I know from my own experience in St. Joseph's Day Care Centre that once we constructed the formula and put it into operation that many people whose income levels exceeded those at which assistance was available could not, in fact, pay the amounts required to maintain the child in the daycare centre. Again, if a person's financial ability is not properly assessed, with the result that a person presumed to have sufficient funds but cannot maintain a child in daycare facilities, the child is the one who suffers. It is not enough to examine the circumstances of the parent and determine that in your view or in the view of the legislature they can maintain a child in a daycare facility if, in fact, they believe they cannot, because the child is left in circumstances which are not conducive to the social wellbeing and mental health of the child.

Child care is the problem area. Our concern ought to be and should be for the care of children, and think of nothing else; if we reject the concept that people are entitled in certain circumstances to help or assistance, and the idea of maintaining children in places other than the home with care provided by parents of the child, we will still have to face the problem of children who are not receiving adequate care.

That problem exists in Canada as it does throughout the world. As it happens, daycare centres have been a very successful method of dealing with that problem. As I have said, they are the modern version of the orphanage; they represent tremendous improvements on the concept of maintaining a child in an orphanage. It is not that many of the orphanages established in Canada and elsewhere did not do an excellent job of caring for children, but we now know that it is most important for a child to be placed in a situation as close to normal as possible. An institution like an orphanage is not the kind of place that will allow a child to develop in the normal way, developing his or her own capabilities and capacities.

With the rising costs and the strain of finances on single parents and many working parents, we have to consider what the role is of government and what provision must be made to ensure that the children of those parents receive care.

I think by bringing this matter before the House, the hon. member at least calls to public attention the fact that these problems exist, that there are methods for dealing with them and that there may be a role for government to play in providing the facilities and the services required by Canadian children.

Let me again just refer to the fact that we have included in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms a special provision for women. I want to underline again the association of daycare with the women's rights movement. If we are not prepared as a government, and if we are not prepared as a legislating body to ensure that women can maintain their traditional role as parents and as the persons primarily responsible for the provision of child care—in some cases it is the single working mother who is the only person who bears that responsibility—and at the same time pursue a career which allows them to maintain financial independence, then we are not serious about women's rights. That is a matter that ought to be recognized and underlined; the granting of these rights is meaningless unless we are prepared and willing to provide the support programs, like daycare, that give real effect to those rights.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak today not only about daycare but about Canada's children in general and the very urgent need for major action on behalf of all levels of government for children. I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), and I share what I think is his underlying philosophy that we must have good quality universal daycare in every centre in Canada, affordable daycare for every family that needs it.

Now, unfortunately, it is that member's government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), indeed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who have refused to take any action in this area. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the International Year of the Child occurred close to three years ago, and many projects funded partly by the federal government demonstrated the need for services and action for children. Last year recommendations were brought to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs from the Commission for the International Year of the Child, and we spent many weeks seriously considering the needs of children and made some very tough recommendations. They were rushed through, came back to the committee in order to be tabled in the House last July, and what has happened? Before this House adjourned for the summer it was intended that major action be taken. Nothing at all has happened. I checked with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and found that the report has not even been taken to cabinet. Judging from some of the remarks made by the minister, I am quite sure she has hardly read it, and I will elaborate on that later. The groups across this country who have worked so hard to do things for children have been completely ignored. This is a disgrace when you think of the situation in Canada today and the needs of our younger generation, and the damage that can be and is being done to millions of children, particularly those caught up in poverty.

So I would like to use my time, Mr. Speaker, to speak, of couse, on daycare and child care services generally, but also to read into the record some of the recommendations from a report the NDP presented to that committee and the recommendations we feel should have been acted upon.

Major economic and social forces have, over a long time, brought major changes to Canada's families. We are really in a new era today with respect to what is happening to families and its implications for social policy. Inflation and the growth of women's career demands have resulted in a very large proportion of two-worker families. Where just a generation ago barely 25 per cent of married women with school age children worked outside the home, it is now more than double that number and rapidly rising. Stress on domestic tranquillity and changing values in society have resulted in an increasing number of divorces. Two out of three marriages are likely to end in divorce today. We also see the new phenomenon of a constantly changing family situation, changing partners, indeed changing family combinations.

The growth in the number of single-parent families has given rise to a number of new problems for society. Recent estimates indicate that nearly half of the children born during the 1970s will be raised at least partially in a one-parent family home, usually the mother. In 1977, 44 per cent of Canada's families headed by women were living in poverty. We have runaway inflation and massive unemployment taking their toll on today's families with a major impact on Canada's children. As previous speakers have mentioned, the lack of supervised daycare has made it very difficult for many women, and many men as well, who are badly in need of a second income, to get needed daycare. High mobility, isolation, and the distance from other family members, also make it very difficult to get support when needed. I think of many of the families in rural communities who do not have daycare centres or services. We think we are badly off in the cities, but I can tell you that in many communities in Canada there are no services at all.

Many children, particularly in western Canada where the families have moved and left their relatives behind, grow up without having their grandparents close by. This is really a sad commentary when you compare it to our generation's family life. The challenge of the 1980s is to find new ways of supporting families while enriching the experiences of growing children. New concepts in education and child development are needed to encourage self-reliance in children. They have to be able to adapt to a very mobile and changing society. We want to encourage creativity and adaptability so that children will be able to face the many changes that are coming.

Of course, of top priority are daycare and other child care programs for preschoolers, the most important age in a person's life. We need a range of child care services and supports, particularly for parents of young children. Affordable, quality daycare centres must be there in every community, not only to help meet the needs of working parents but to stimulate a child's development and provide backup support for communities. A guaranteed annual income is also basic to mitigating the effects of widening gaps between wages and prices and to substantially reducing poverty, and I will have something more to say about that in a moment.

We have presented in summary form a number of national priorities. We picked the most serious areas of concern affecting our children and pressed, through the health and welfare committee, for government action in these areas. Our national goals for children must include adequate family incomes and the opportunity for children and young people to develop their full potential in a rapidly changing world. Protection from poverty, abuse and neglect, the strengthening of families and a whole range of community support are priorities. We looked at it from the point of view of federal departments and chose just one area where we could and should take immediate action for children.

From the point of view of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), we urged income support programs above the poverty line for families with young children. This meant increasing the child tax credit substantially and, hopefully, taking steps to move as soon as we can toward a guaranteed income system. To the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) we said there must be emergency action for native children, and I wish I had time to elaborate on that. It is probably the most desperate problem in Canada, for they are the poorest of the poor, and this is a national disgrace.

We wanted preventive help for young children and families through the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the minister has done nothing about these recommendations. Through the same minister we wanted a national child care act and subsidies for comprehensive daycare. We want to extend job opportunities by providing training for youth through the Department of Employment and Immigration and the recognition of children's rights by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien).

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to concentrate particularly on those recommendations having to do with daycare and poverty as it affects young children. Let us look at some of the statistics which again prove how urgent the need is for good daycare across Canada. We know that 88 per cent of Canada's children are under the age of six. That is a large number of children, many of whom are born of adolescent mothers. If anyone needs adequate care, it is those children. Many mothers are in the labour force and are left with no choice but unlicensed child care arrangements. The state of baby-sitting is quite unreliable. Sometimes daycare services are not available or affordable, and children are actually being damaged. How tragic this is for mothers as well as for their children! Out of 531,000 children between the ages of two and six whose parents are working, only 15.7 per cent are enrolled in daycare. Out of 229,000 children under the age of two whose parents are working, only 3.8 per cent receive daycare. In my community in the province of British Columbia, there is no daycare service for children under the age of three, with the exception of private care. That means that a working mother must shop around in several places in an attempt to find satisfactory baby-sitting arrangements if she has children of different ages. There is no problem in proving the need for daycare.

Referring back to our special report on action for Canada's children, we recommended that there be a national childcare act and subsidies which would allow Canadians to have a comprehensive daycare program across the country. In many countries where family policy has been carefully and comprehensively planned, government-sponsored child care programs are provided as a matter of course. For instance, in Scandinavian countries, daycare is integrated with the school system. Every community and every family has available daycare for preschoolers which is very close to home, and it is good, high quality daycare. However, in Canada, while we call ourselves civilized, only 12 per cent of young children of working mothers were in government-approved child care programs in 1979. As I have said, over 600,000 children under the age of seven have no access to licensed care.

In addition, of course, there is a very great problem for children over the age of five, and this is also related to the field of daycare. We find that there are approximately one million latchkey children, as they say in the trade, who have no licensed care at all. These are children between the ages of six and 12 who come home to empty homes and must look after themselves or go on the streets, as they have no one who can really provide the kind of supervision and care they need. That is another area of urgent need.

What should the federal government do about the problem? We feel, first of all, that there must be federal action to legislate a national child care act. We know that health and welfare services are largely under provincial jurisdiction; however, as the Commission on the International Year of the Child stated, it is also the responsibility of senior governments to ensure that all of Canada's children are provided with good care.

We feel that a national child care act, effected by agreement with the provinces, would spell out national standards for a broad range of child care services which would be available to families in all communities and provinces. Second, we would redefine eligibility for the Canada Assistance Plan. This was mentioned by other hon. members. Here again, the Canada Assistance Plan is in need of major revision so that more emphasis is placed on prevention of neglect. The Canada Assistance Plan usually provides money for services in cases of extreme neglect where children must be removed from their homes. We feel there should be greater emphasis on support services, such as daycare, and family services to go along with daycare, so that more emphasis is placed on prevention of neglect. These kinds of services should be available to a broader range of people.

Third, we would revise the Income Tax Act and provide an extended child care tax credit. I think that both men and women workers who need daycare for their children, regardless of income, should be able to deduct child care expenses from their income tax. This would help to support daycare centres financially. Fourth, we would provide start-up and capital funds for additional non-profit child care facilities.

I would like to stress that the essential funds should be provided for the non-profit daycare and child care facilities. It is extremely important to realize that because of free enterprise trends in our country, there is presently a movement toward commercial daycare centres into the field. There are many chain daycare centres which are trying to move in, just as the McDonald's hamburger chain has taken over our country. These commercial chains are moving up from the United States, particularly in this part of Canada, I understand, where they are providing daycare centres based on a profit motive. They provide no guarantee of adequate standards, and no guarantee that they will provide adequate staff. They exploit their child care workers and teachers by paying low salaries. These centres do not consider child development to be their main concern. We do not want daycare to be a profit-motivated, free enterprise business. We want it to be a very important and essential service, one which is part of our whole educational system for children.

Concerning the question of facilities, I would also like to mention that we feel the federal government should be providing much more in the way of start-up funds so that all communities, and particularly rural communities, can utilize some of the school classrooms which are now empty by converting them into daycare centres. This could be done with churches as well where there are facilities. However, the communities need funds to fix up the facilities in order to get the daycare centres licensed. The federal government has a real responsibility to help in this area.

We also feel that the government should provide work-based child care programs and nine months of paid child care leave for federal government employees, as we have mentioned a number of times in the House. This should be an example to private industry. Two years ago in the House, I pressed for daycare here on the Hill to demonstrate that good daycare in the workplace is essential. It should not be provided only on the Hill but also in all federal departments and in private industry throughout the country. This is not, of course, the only kind of daycare. I think daycare close to home is often the preferred type of daycare for many families.

We would like to introduce amendments to the Canada Pension Plan to incorporate pension credits for those who are charged with the care of children under the age of seven. Once again, it is mainly women who are working in low-paid jobs in this most important field; women who not only do not receive adequate salaries for their efforts to keep daycare centres open while struggling with inadequate working conditions, but who do not receive pension credits either. Again, they will be the victims of the system. When they reach a later stage in life, they will find themselves poverty-ridden and seeking welfare because they will not have adequate pensions.

I mentioned earlier that income support programs to bring people above the poverty line are essential. I see that my time in which to speak has almost expired, so I will refer anyone who is interested to this report for further details. I would simply like to say that the high cost of living and continuing unemployment are having a drastic impact on the living conditions of Canadian families and children. Native children are suffering physically as well as emotionally, and this has been caused by the irresponsible federal government which is actually practising neglect in its lack of concern for native children. Provisions for licensed child care lag far behind most industrialized countries. We would like to see preventive services, and we proposed a program similar to New Horizons which would help to start many kinds of daycare and family support programs because preventive services are lacking and must be expanded and promoted.

Finally, the rights of children must be identified and protected. The recommendation of the health and welfare committee was that a children's bureau be established under the federal government which would give priority to children's needs. We wanted a minister responsible for children, and we wanted a major conference to negotiate with the provinces for ways and means to implement these recommendations immediately. This has not happened, and the Liberal government is directly responsible for this failure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) seeks the floor, with the consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House, this debate will continue on another occasion for an additional 30 minutes or so. We do have many comments to make on this very important subject, and, with Your Honour's permission, I would like to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT
CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak in the debate on Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. At the beginning, it is important that we recognize housing as one of the basic factors of human life. The kind of housing we provide says a great deal about the kind of people we are, and a great deal about the kind of people we hope to be.

Housing is a kind of touchstone. If we visit a new city or strange country, when we come back we want to talk about the kind of housing we have seen. We might talk about some of the grand mansions in some cities or we might talk about the shantytowns on the edges of those cities. Housing says something about the way we are as a people and how we see ourselves in relation to our world.

Consider, for example, pre-European west coast Indian housing. This housing blended very uniquely into its environment. It emphasized the total community of the Indian people with their surroundings. We can contrast that with the kind of Indian housing that was developed in Father William Duncan's mission village of Metlakatla. There are pictures of long rows of bleak identical looking frame buildings that stand out on the landscape. They symbolize European attempts to make

Indian life conform to a European concept of order and harmony. Father Duncan was one of the greatest missionaries to the Indian people. Perhaps if he had been less confident in his own ability and was less convinced of the superiority of his own culture, he could have helped to match some of the European technology with some of the aesthetic sense of the Indian people and come up with a much better housing situation than what we see in the pictures of early Metlakatla.

It is important as we begin a discussion of this bill that we recognize the importance of housing not just to provide shelter but in the total context of human life. I would like to consider the kind of housing policy that is essential to meet the challenge of the eighties.

There are at least four components that have to be brought together in such a housing policy. First, there is the question of our need for housing. Second, we have to look at the technology and the materials that we can use to provide housing. Third, we want to look at the question of aesthetics. Fourth, we have to look at the social dimension, how our housing stock fits into the community.

First let us look at the question of need. An absolute number of houses are needed. A few years ago it was estimated that we need to build 234,000 housing units per year. If we look at the housing starts over the last few years we see that in 1980 there were 158,000 housing starts. In 1981, we had 178,000. There are approximately 165,000 planned for 1982. We are falling behind our much needed housing requirements by 50,000 to70,000 every year. We can look at the need for low cost housing in the various sectors of our population. We need to consider the change which has occurred in the makeup of our families such as the growing number of single parent families and the increasing number of senior citizens.

While reviewing housing needs, perhaps we need to reconsider the whole concept of suburbia. Suburbia is a concept which has run its course and perhaps it is time we recognized that we can no longer afford two and three-car houses because of the economic problems. Greater emphasis will have to be put on housing in the mid-town area where we must preserve the present stock of housing that exists there.

If one reviews what CMHC has done to assist this housing situation, one would find that in 1975 it made loans of $900 million and in 1980, it made loans of $300 million. Five years later it was making one third of the loans and this does not take into account the inflation factor.

While we consider the need for housing, it is important that we move away from the concept of housing as an investment, a hedge against inflation, or a nest egg, and start considering housing as a basic human right. The idea of housing as an investment has acted in a most detrimental way to Canadians. People who thought they had made a good investment in housing are now unable to meet mortgage payments. There are Canadians who own homes in one part of the country and have been transferred elsewhere but are unable to accept the transfer because the cost of housing has risen more sharply in the new area. People who thought their investment value in their homes was rising are now faced with increased assessments which make it difficult for them to pay their taxes. Our concept of housing as an investment, rather than a human right and necessisty, is no longer valid.

We must also consider the need for affordable rental units within our housing policy. Housing which was built under the previous MURB programs was very costly in many cases and we should now put money into low-cost rental units.

Another factor which must be considered is the technology and availability of materials to be used for our housing. A housing policy must be integrated with energy needs. In this regard a great deal more research should be conducted with respect to such areas as solar heating and conservation. It is interesting to note that a recent Gallup poll indicated that people preferred moving toward solar energy rather than nuclear energy by a ratio of nine to one. However, the government is spending our money on nuclear energy. The government should be assisting those home owners who have solar heating so that solar heating installations do not increase the assessment on their property taxes. There should not be a tax policy which works against an intelligent housing policy. There should be a housing policy which has land assembly plans. There is nothing to that effect in the bill. Land costs are one of the highest factors in housing, along with interest rates.

There is still too much construction on agricultural lands. We need more money to develop sewage treatment programs to meet the needs of the 1980s so that we will not continue to dump sewage and primary processed sewage into our rivers and oceans. For example, there are no public beaches for two million Montrealers because of the lack of adequate programs for treating sewage.

A housing policy which will take into account modern technology and the availability of materials will stimulate Canadian industry. As we begin to meet our housing needs we will stimulate the plywood and lumber industry, the cement industry, and other housing-related industries.

A modern housing policy should not just take into account the bare minimum requirement for shelter from the elements. It should also provide a sense of aesthestics in this modern industrial society with its stresses and strains. Although houses are needed, people need homes to which they have a sense of belonging.

Mr. Nickerson: We know where you belong.

Mr. Manly: Pardon me?

Mr. Nickerson: I said that we know where you belong.

Mr. Manly: I belong here to try to speak to an intelligent housing policy which we are not getting from the government. If the hon. member is satisfied with the government's housing policy, good for him.

There should be a housing policy which will allow people to live in homes they can be proud of. If the members to my right do not agree with that, that is too bad.

Mr. Crosby: Have you been to Scarborough lately?

Mr. Manly: I believe that a housing policy must avoid the sterility of mass uniformity in urban areas.

Mr. Crosby: That is it; that is Scarborough.

Mr. Manly: You can mention some of your suburbs in Ontario. I can think of similar areas in British Columbia which can be greatly improved upon. Different regions can afford different housing styles.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is a need when planning our housing to take into consideration the social aspects of our society. Our houses must not be planned as a series of isolated dwelling units but must take into consideration other policies of the government such as energy, transportation, daycare, education, recreation and culture. It must consider the changing patterns of family life, employment and age.

It is within that framework of a complete housing policy that I would like to point out some of the problems regarding Indian and native housing. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has delegated some of its responsibility for Indian housing to CMHC. However, CMHC has not been very helpful to the Indian people in meeting their problems. There is the danger in considering the problem of native housing that we might ignore the fact that some Indian people have built very nice homes for themselves in which they take a great deal of pride. When we make reference to the fact that Indian housing is a national disgrace, we do not mean that all Indian homes are shacks. That implication would be grossly unfair to the Indian people. Many homes on Indian reserves are spacious and others are modest but attractive and well maintained. It is also a fact that too many Indian homes are inadequate because of poor heating, poor ventilation, inadequate sanitation and safety facilities.

A survey put out by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on Indian conditions in 1980 detailed the major health problems encountered by Indians. The survey said:

● (2020)

> The major causes of Indian deaths and illnesses appear to be associated with poor housing and living conditions and a rural life style.

In a report on Indian health, Mr. Justice Tom Berger makes the same point. He says:

> So many of the causes of Indian ill health lie beyond the fact of illness itself . . . Indians are usually poor. Their homes are crowded. One third, at least, of their houses are unfit for human habitation. There is a lack of clean water, and inadequate sewage and garbage disposal. The prevalence of respiratory illness among Indians is, of course, aggravated by the absence of central heating in a cold country.

During a survey of housing on a reserve near my constituency two years ago houses with four and five bedrooms and 16 and 18 people crowded into them were still found. In 1977 across Canada 14.8 per cent of all Indian homes housed two families; another 4 per cent housed three or more families. This is the kind of crowding conditions in which Indian people have had to live. Fewer than 50 per cent of all Indian homes across Canada have water or sewage hookups. In 1975 fewer than 35 per cent of Indian reserves had adequate fire protection. This, combined with overcrowding and inadequate heating, explains why Indian people have had a death rate resulting from house fires seven times that of non-Indians.

There is a backlog of some 11,000 homes to be built and another 11,000 homes which need to be renovated and brought up to date. At present there is supposed to be a major review of Indian housing by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and CMHC. We are still waiting for it, and the two departments seem to have a great deal of difficulty getting together and coming up with some proposal which, in consultation with the Indian people, will be acceptable.

The use of CMHC funds is helpful on some reserves, but on many others it is not of very much help. It creates all kinds of additional problems for the Indian people. For example, there is the difficulty of making payments when people have a welfare-type economy. When these housing programs no longer have any labour component we really do not have good Indian housing policy at all.

A discussion paper put out on October 28, 1981, by the department talks about some of the problems. It says:

> In order to access housing effectively, bands must go to DIAND, CMHC, in some cases the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission (CEIC), approved lenders, their own resources, etc. Even when bands seek funds from all these sources, they are often not able to raise the full amount needed for their housing.
> Almost invariably these labour funds come on stream at the wrong time of year for house construction on Indian reserves. Worse still, bands often do not know whether programs funded in one year will even be available at all the following year. For example, labour funds in support of house construction on Indian reserves in 1977 were made available through CEIC's Canada Works Program. Then through their Local Employment Assistance Program (LEAP) and laterally through their Canada Community Development Projects (CCDP). This last program for 1981-82 was not announced until the end of the summer for implementation in October. Bands could not plan for it but will try to take up as much money from this program as they can, despite its coming on stream at the wrong time of the year—

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has recognized the backlog of 11,000 homes which need to be built, but is not able to come up with programs which will meet that backlog. The 1980-81 report of the department points out the following:

> The on-reserve housing target remained the same in 1980-81 as they were for 1979-80: 2,400 new houses and 3,000 renovations to existing structures . . . There remains a shortage of approximately 11,000 housing units on reserve and a backlog again of 11,000 units in need of repairs.
> The on-reserve housing backlog increased steadily from 1963 to 1971. From 1971 onwards, the backlog has remained relatively stable due to the fact that the target of 2,400 new housing units remains sufficient to satisfy current demand in terms of accommodating new families—

In other words, the department is just barely able to keep up with the growing population. It is not doing anything about the continuing problems of overcrowding mentioned earlier.

When we look at the situation of off-reserve Indians, we find it to be similarly desperate. If we look at our small towns across Canada, often we will find across the river or on the other side of the railroad tracks small communities derisively called "Tepee Town", "Moccasin Flats" or "Apache Pass', depending on the locality. This is where many native people have to go because they do not have access to anywhere else. They have been forced off reserves, and there is a lack of adequate low-cost housing in our towns.

In the annual report of the department we find this very interesting statement:

—the number of applications for off-reserve housing units declined. This was due to economic factors such as high interest rates for first mortgages, which have pushed up housing costs.

In other words, fewer off-reserve Indian people are applying for help because, no matter what kind of help is offered by the department, it is not enough to offset the disastrous interest rate policy of this government. The budget for rural and native housing between 1976 and 1981 was cut from $178 million to $115 million by the CMHC. That indicates how seriously this government is taking the problem.

When we look at Bill C-89, we see that it falls far short of what our country needs in terms of a housing policy. In many respects it runs directly counter to those needs. I would like to point, for example, to the mortgage interest deferment plan. As has been pointed out many times by speakers from our party, this is a cruel hoax. It is the kind of arrangement which gave mortgages a bad name during the thirties and the early years of this century. People pay and pay and pay on their mortgages, but they never own what they are paying for. Like the ill-fated AHOP, it is a financial time bomb. Mortgage holders under this plan will owe more at the end of the year than they do at the beginning. It is no real help at all to people who face the high mortgage interest rates which are the result of this government's policies.

Another disastrous feature of this bill eliminates the requirement that housing co-operatives must be non-profit. Again, this opens the way for speculators to move into the co-operative area. Instead of doing this, we should be expanding the whole co-op sector. But if we look at figures for 1976 to 1981, we find that the amount of money available for co-op housing was reduced from $51 million to less than $1 million.

In conclusion, I urge the government to recognize the inadequacies of this bill. I urge it to recognize that the short-term measures in it do not help. They do not help even in the short term. I urge the government to bring in a national housing policy which would begin to meet the needs of the 1980s; a policy planned for the whole nation but involving community planning in detail; a policy which would allow for orientation toward community needs.

What we need is a plan that will recognize the changes in the Canadian population, a plan that will recognize the needs of the Indian people, the elderly, single parents, and the poor. We need a plan that includes a place for public co-op and low rental housing as well as for affordable single units. I urge the government to introduce a plan that brings together the needs of our people for housing, the skills of our people in designing building and renovating homes, a plan that uses the wealth of our nation which, until now, has been siphoned off to the banks in high interest rates.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to address the House on this bill, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. I should like to remind hon. members that on Monday, January 25, 1982, the House passed a unanimous motion under Standing Order 43 expressing our condolences to the family and relatives of nine Canadians who died in a fire in Spanish, Ontario.

Some people may wonder what that fire has to do with Bill C-89. The fire, the deaths, the surrounding human tragedy symbolizes the grief that the Liberal Party is bringing to hundreds of thousands of Canadians daily. What connection does this fire have with this bill? The fire, the deaths, the human tragedy and suffering might not have happened if this government had moved sooner, with more conviction, with more passion, with more compassion and more understanding to assist Canadians suffering under the Liberal high interest rate policy. Members of the Vincent family who perished in the fire were forced to move from their home in Spanish, Ontario, a single family residence, because they could not maintain their mortgage payments. Perhaps if the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) had been more forceful in persuading his Liberal colleagues to work toward adequate assistance sooner, that tragedy might not have happened. On the concession roads of this country, in village after village, town after town, city after city, Canadians are losing their homes daily because the Liberal government has failed to act to assist home owners.

I should like to read to the House some excerpts from an article which appeared in the Midland Free Press on January 29, 1982. The article begins:

Like so many thousands of Canadians, Jim Pelletier is the victim of the growing economic shudders felt nationwide.

Pelletier lost his three-bedroom bungalow in Port McNicoll last summer when mortgage and interest rates reached the 20 per cent point.

The loss of his home, plus the break-up of his family combined to put Pelletier into hospital for depression.

The article states that his monthly payments jumped from $330 to $530. The article goes on:

It made me feel terrible, like we were working for nothing, Pelletier said from his Midland Bay Street apartment . . . We worked hard for that house for five years. I put my blood and guts into it . . . Losing it hurt.

That story is being repeated in the riding of Simcoe North just as it is across the country.

For 22 months the Liberal Party has talked about monitoring the situation. In the Speech from the Throne in April, 1980, the government stated:

In particular, my government recognizes the need to protect those Canadians most affected by unacceptably high interest rates. My government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided.

What an empty promise, Mr. Speaker. This government does not even understand that lending institutions and private lenders no longer use foreclosure as the main legal remedy.

Foreclosure is a legal remedy whereby, upon default, the mortgagee enters into a lengthy legal procedure of nine to 12 months designed to secure title to the property for the lender. All of the equity is transferred to the lender. That legal procedure is unpopular and expensive and, therefore, is no longer used extensively by lending institutions.

In Ontario, at least, people have switched to power of sale proceedings. When a mortgage goes into default, the mortgagee simply sends a formal notice to the home owner advising him or her to bring the mortgage into good standing within a prescribed period or the home will be sold. In this case the lending institution only gets the amount of the mortgage upon completion of the sale. The difference between the sale price and the mortgage goes to the home owner—after expenses, of course.

Home owners in difficulty in Ontario and in all provinces are being forced to sell at distress prices by the lending institutions. The lending institution which controls the sale is only interested in getting the mortgage principal out of the deal. The home owner's equity means nothing to it. Consequently, thousands of Canadians are losing their homes, thanks to the Liberal Party's high interest rate policy. Reference to rising or falling foreclosure rates is empty rhetoric since that legal remedy is no longer in popular use.

We cannot measure the effects of sale proceedings, nor can we measure the human suffering, but there are some causes that we can examine and there are some solutions we can suggest. There are two main causes of the problems of Canadian home owners. The first occurs as a result of the Liberal Party's high interest rate policy and the second is the failure of the Liberal government to address the problem. The present government is responsible for the highest mortgage interest rates in Canada's history.

In 1980, the year the Liberal Party lied to the Canadian people in order to gain re-election and promised to protect them from the spectre of foreclosure, mortgage interest rates rose from a low of 13 per cent to a high of 17 per cent. In 1981, the second year of the promise to do something, the rates ranged from a low of 15 per cent to a high of 21.5 per cent. I would remind the House that this is the rate being charged in Toronto and the other large cities. It is certainly not the rate that is available to Canadian home owners in the riding of Simcoe North and the rural areas of this country. Canadians have suffered the highest mortgage interest rates in history, since the Liberal Party took office. In 1982 this government continues to do nothing to control soaring interest rates.

During the past two years all hon. members have received complaints from home owners faced with horrendous increases in mortgage payments as a result of this government's policies. There is no way that people can handle the unconscionable increases in payments. I am sure all members, no matter on which side of the House, will agree with me that there is nothing so frustrating for a Member of Parliament as listening to home owner after home owner tell of the hardship the high interest rate policy is forcing upon them. We on this side do not want to monitor the situation; we want to offer the people action. At least we can say that we did offer them action. The people have had it, Mr. Speaker; they have had it up to here with what they are having to pay.

Coupled with these high interest rates is a social problem, the extent of which we cannot gauge at this time, but it is out there. Until the mid-1960s the long-term mortgage was the rule—20 or 25-year terms. Home owners knew that their monthly payments were fixed at something they could afford for a substantial period of time. Then in the mid-1960s lending institutions moved to the five-year mortgage. Perhaps it was not as good, but it was a substantial time-frame within which to plan one's future with a reasonable sense of stability. Now Canadians are faced with one and two-year terms, even six months in some cases. The stability of having one's amount of payment fixed for five years is gone. I do not pretend to be a social scientist, but common sense tells me that this will place a terrific strain upon many hundreds of thousands of Canadian families.

What does the bill do? The much-touted Canada mortgage renewal plan is little more than government stalling tactics which force Canadians already faced with financial difficulties further into debt. It will not help anyone who faced the Liberal high interest rates before September 1, 1982, or anyone after November 12, 1982. A leaked document prepared in the autumn of 1981 predicted that more than 100,000 Canadian households would be faced with mortgage payments exceeding 30 per cent of their gross income. The bill proposes to give an interest deferral guarantee of up to $3,000 to borrowers who have some equity in their homes. The government estimates that 37,500 home owners will qualify for this deferral guarantee. This is nothing more than an encouragement to Canadians to increase their debt load. Canadians are mortgaging their future because the government has absolutely no imagination, except to suggest that Canadians borrow more against what little equity they have. Approximately 12,500 home owners with only 5 per cent equity will receive an outright grant of $3,000. That grant is tantamount to AHOP revisited, the program brought in by the Liberal government which led so many Canadian home owners to disaster. Of the 920,000 Canadians who will be renewing their mortgages in 1982, the government proposes to assist 50,000 home owners.

If the Progressive Conservative mortgage interest and property tax credit plan had been adopted, every Canadian home owner would have received assistance with his mortgage; not just the 920,000 renewing their mortgages this year, but every Canadian home owner with a mortgage. They would have received a credit of up to $1,500 a year, amounting to $125 per month. This would have considerably addressed the problem with which Canadian home owners are faced as a result of the Liberal high interest rate policy. The Liberal Party voted against that proposal, the NDP voted against it as well. We invite the Canadian public to compare the paltry provisions of the bill before the House with the Progressive Conservative mortgage interest and realty tax credit plan we introduced in the House against which the Liberals and members of the NDP voted, defeating it. It has often been suggested that we in the Conservative Party have no alternatives, but that alternative would have provided an incentive for Canadians to own homes. We on this side feel that those expenses should be legitimate deductions from income and that this was positive action to address the problem. The minister of housing has thrown a papier maché life ring to drowning Canadian home owners.

I should like to draw to the attention of the House the minister's remark when he introduced the bill on February 8, 1982, as reported on page 14760 of Hansard. He said:

I would like to add that these 15,000 new units would mean not only affordable homes for 15,000 more families, but also an estimated 35,000 additional jobs for people involved in the construction industry and associated businesses.

In the past I was spokesman for housing on this side. The highest multiplier we could find to which experts referred that related housing starts to jobs—and I checked this information this afternoon—was 1.75. If I take the 15,000 housing starts and multiply them by 1.75, I come up with 26,250 jobs. I suggest that either the minister is guilty of his usual accuracy or, if the figures are true, he is guilty of his usual inaccuracy.

I should like now to deal with the minister's actions as minister responsible for housing when the budget was presented and the bill was introduced. When we look at the attitude of government in regard to the bill, we must also look at the attitude of the minister to government and to the House of Commons. In the week preceding the budget, on November 13, 1981, the minister's officials were busily calling selected Canadian home owners and telling them to hold on until Thursday night, that there would be something in the budget to help them. The criteria for calling was never disclosed to the House, although we asked for it. Some Canadian home owners were called, others were not, but everyone had some hope. Then the bill was presented and everyone lost hope.

Subsequently the minister announced to the House that he had personally signed in excess of 10,000 letters directed to Canadian home owners. To think of a minister of the Crown sitting down to sign personally 10,000 form letters boggles the minds of everyone on this side of the House. Then the budget was brought down, and everyone laughed when the minister of housing made his comments. Then after 19 months of monitoring, Bill C-89 was the piteous and paltry answer. Lo and behold, the next day advertisements appeared in newspapers inviting people to contact CMHC about its new plan. We on this side found it passing strange that the ad had been placed so quickly on Friday by a minister who had advised us on Tuesday that he had no idea what would happen on Thursday. Then we obtained the answer. The officials had worked through Thursday night and, as a result of hard work, produced a cameraready ad in Ottawa which was then taken to Montreal for shooting and delivered to newspapers such as the Brockville Recorder and Times in time to be printed on Friday. At a later date it was determined that the ad in fact was produced on the Monday night prior to the budget, that is the Monday night prior to the Tuesday when he told us he had no idea what would be in the budget on Thursday. There are two schools of thought on this side of the House in that regard. One believes that the minister deliberately misled the House; the other believes that the minister was misled by his officials. In either case the minister became the laughingstock of the House, the media and the country.

I should like now to turn to the area of housing starts. Under Liberal government housing policies, Canadians are facing an accommodation crisis. In 1980, we required 222,000 housing starts to adequately shelter Canadians, and Liberal government policies resulted in 159,000 starts. They improved in 1981, at which time we required 222,000 housing starts to adequately shelter Canadians, and Liberal government policies resulted in 178,000. This is government by shortfall; housing policy by shortfall! In 1982, again we required 222,000 housing starts to adequately shelter Canadians, and the figures released this week show that we will achieve 148,000 housing starts.

The housing start figures indicate that both the single family residential market and the multiple dwelling rental accomodation market are facing serious shortfalls. In fact, the single family residential market has become completely unattractive because of mortgage interest rates and present economic difficulties. For the same reason it is unattractive to build rental accommodation.

During the past two years the national vacancy rate for rental dwellings has dropped from an accessible 2.3 per 1,000 units to an intolerable 1.4 vacancies per 1,000 units. The Liberal high interest rate policy has played a significant role in discouraging the building of rental housing.

One of the devices that was still providing some rental accommodation was the multiple unit residential building program. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) eliminated the MURB program on November 12, 1981. In doing so, the Minister of Finance eliminated projects which were in process at that date. Thousands of Canadians were thrown out of work by the actions of the Minister of Finance.

Within a week the Minister of Finance backtracked and reinstated the MURB program, provided the footings or other base supports were in place by December 31, 1981, or where arrangements for construction were made in writing and substantially advanced by November 13, 1981 and the footings were in place by May 31, 1982.

I am not here to debate at length the value of MURBs. There is a school of thought that says they are a legitimate device to stimulate the production of rental accommodation. There is a school of thought that says they are nothing but a tax dodge for the rich. But, in any event, that device will disappear on May 31, 1982.

In the House of Commons we have to ask ourselves how the Minister of Finance could have been so out of touch with reality to forget about the provisions to phase in this elimination of MURBs. Why could the minister forget to phase it in and leave all of those people trying to provide rental accommodation out in the cold? Then he backtracked.

What did the government do having done all that? What did the government do to stimulate the building of rental accommodation? How did the government react to this crisis? The government cancelled the MURB program which it estimated produced 25,000 housing starts per annum and replaced it with a program designed to loan $7,500 per unit, interest free, to builders of up to 15,000 units. The net effect was that we lost 10,000 rental units. That is a terrific way to approach a vacancy rate crisis.

Furthermore, the government has totally abandoned the law of supply and demand in favour of bureaucratic action. Whatever the inadequacies of the MURB program at least we knew the market would dictate where they were built. These units would be built where the demand existed. Now we know these units will be built where the bureaucrats designate. These are the same bureaucrats who brought us the budget of November 12 and they are now going to allocate the interest-free loans. They are the ones who will do it. In Oshawa, which has a zero vacancy rate, what will be done about the 232 units they presently have under administration which are vacant. Those are the same bureaucrats who want to allocate rental accommodation for Canadians.

Given the budget's lack of reality, is there any Canadian who thinks that those loans are going to be allocated properly? Given this government's past actions, are there any Canadians who think that those rental units and loans are going to be allocated fairly?

In my riding of Simcoe North, we are facing a crisis vacancy rate. There is a vacancy crisis in Orillia and Midland. What guarantee do we have from the minister that some of those interest-free loans will be allocated to interested developers in the smaller communities of Canada? Quite frankly, I am not worried about Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. I am worried about my riding. The people of my riding sent me here. How many units will the government allocate to the riding of Simcoe North?

Mr. Kelly: What do you need?

Mr. Lewis: Let us find out what we need. We need some help from the government.

Mr. Kelly: Give us a number.

Mr. Lewis: We need some of those loans.

Mr. Kelly: Give us a number.

Mr. Lewis: I hear an interjection from the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly). Since he is connected with a constituent of mine, and without reading out the name of the constituent, I would like to make one comment just to set the record straight.

An hon. Member: Name him.

Mr. Lewis: This is what my constituent says about the government represented by the hon. member for Scarborough Centre:

> In the past, we have had our ups and downs, but I never really worried about the future. Right now though, I am worried as I just cannot see any future.

That is what the government of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre has done for his brother. I am sorry, I will get back to my text. I was a little bit thrown off there.

Mr. Beatty: Suddenly there is silence on the other side.

Mr. Lewis: I would like to suggest something to the minister and I do this with all sincerity. I have practised law in a small town, and I was in business before that. Prior to 1971 when the government allowed losses on rental accommodation ventures, they were deductible against other income. As a result, multiple unit dwellings were not owned exclusively by doctors, dentists and the occasional lawyer as a tax dodge. They were owned by mechanics, farmers and by service station owners. These are the people who own, bought and built the triplexes, the duplexes and the sixplexes all across Canada. They applied any loss they incurred against other income, and they provided rental accommodation. But, when this government wiped out that ability to balance off income losses on rental properties against other income, the rental accommodation was wiped out.

I suggest very sincerely to the government that it take a hard look at bringing that incentive back, because it has gone. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is a tragedy at a time when Canadians are renewing their mortgages at the horrendous rates advocated, supported and propogated by this government. I suggest that the Liberal government has brought forward the weakest solution imaginable.

Mr. Beatty: Paul Cosgrove.

Mr. Lewis: The government completely ignores the stated housing policy of the Progressive Conservative Party to see that every Canadian has a right to accessibility to decent affordable housing.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand there was a delay in the reprinting of Bill C-78 which resulted in some members not being able to give notice of amendments.

Pursuant to Standing Order 75(5), and in order to be fair to all members, since this bill will be called tomorrow, would the House give leave to extend the deadline for giving notice to proposed amendments to Bill C-78 until ten o'clock tonight for tomorrow's consideration and until five o'clock Friday for consideration Monday or thereafter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I see two hon. members rising. Are they both standing on the same point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker. I cannot see any difficulty with that but I would like to have the opportunity to discuss the matter with my House leader. I can do that within the next ten minutes and get back to the hon. member. This is the first notice we have had of the offer. We would have appreciated some advance warning but we find that this is the way the government operates. We can appreciate that it is part of the pattern. I will get back to the hon. member immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has been apprised that there will be a few moments today while the proposal put forward by the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) is considered.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are hurting. This nation is crying. The Canadian people are crying in frustration, anger, fear and, unfortunately, in too many cases with despondency. According to a Gallup poll, one of the most basic desires of about 95 per cent of us, we in this House and the people we represent, is that we, at some time, in some way, in our lifetime, might be able to have a detached house, standing strong and independent on a good sized lot. That is what the dream is. That is in fact a reality for almost 60 per cent of Canadians, but the dream has been shattered for the other 40 per cent who have come to expect that if they do not own the roof over their heads right now, the opportunity has gone and the dream will never be fulfilled. That applies to just the 40 per cent who do not own homes now, but who would like to.

However, they are not in as bad shape, Mr. Speaker, as the 1,200,000 Canadians who thought they had realized their dream and now find, as a result of mortgage renewals, that it has become a nightmare of lost savings, lost equity, and mortgage payments they cannot possibly meet.

In 1965 one out of every two Canadians could afford to buy a house and carry the mortgage for 30 per cent of their income. I was fortunate in 1965 to be one of those, but what about the 1,200,000 who bought in the last one, two, or three years? Well, that has now changed. Instead of one out of two, right now in Vancouver only one out of 43 tenants who want to or could have afforded to buy a home can qualify. That is a drop from one out of two down to one out of 43; in other words, almost none, Mr. Speaker. Those are people who have had their dreams dashed.

When you think about those few who can qualify, you might wonder why they would want to, because having qualified they would find out, if it was in the lower mainland of British Columbia, their gas rates would have increased by an average of 95 per cent this year. Their taxes would have doubled along with their assessments.

I live in the fastest growing part of Canada and I represent that suburban fringe where those one, two and three-year mortgage renewals are coming due. A lot of those 1,200,000 people are in my riding. I know about the problems because I hear about them from my constituents. These are the people who are really in trouble. Many of these people are not just in dire straits. As a result of the government's policies they are far beyond that, to the point of giving up.

Let me give you a typical example. Eighteen months ago a family in the greater Vancouver area earning $42,000 saved $30,000. That is not easy to do, Mr. Speaker. The average person must have a down payment of at least $30,000 to get into the average home in Vancouver. The person could make that down payment on a medium-priced house for which he would pay $150,000. Eighteen months ago he could get a mortgage at 12 per cent, resulting in mortgage payments of $1,300. That is a pretty heavy payment. It took all his savings to make the down payment and in fact the wife had to work in order to make that payment of $1,300. Perhaps, they had a little help from their parents and they planned to do without holidays for the next few years. This spring, on renewal of the two-year mortgage, the payment will jump from $1,300 to $2,100. They will have to find $800 a month, Mr. Speaker, to keep their home. Is there any member of this House who can pull $800 a month out of his salary? Perhaps Mr. MacEachen could, but we could not, and our salaries are a lot better than the $42,000 this man is making. This is sad, it is terribly tragic when you are in that position. There are hundreds of people like that and I am going to read you some of their letters in a minute.

To add insult to injury, the same house 18 months later is only worth $120,000. Their savings of $30,000 is gone and what do they have in exchange? They have a payment which has gone from $1,300 a month to $2,100 a month, which they cannot possibly pay. They have a 95 per cent increase in their gas rates, taxes are up, the cost of living is up and inflation is 12 per cent. Where are they? They are lost because they cannot keep up, and they do not know what to do.

You might say: Well, sell your house. They have no equity left, and they cannot sell at a loss. Even if they could sell no one can qualify to buy the house. Suppose they could sell it, where are they going to live? In Langley, in my riding, people come to my office who cannot find a place to stay. There is a zero vacancy rate—not next year, Mr. Speaker, but right now. We have a zero vacancy rate and everything is at a standstill. We have land, we have space, area for growth and we have sewers in place. Now small businesses are going bankrupt at the rate of 2,500 a month. They cannot afford to go to the bank at 20 per cent, 24 per cent or 26 per cent to build a house. As a result there are no small builders building houses. They cannot afford the risks involved, assuming they have the credit to borrow at 20 per cent, because they do not want to lose everything they have.

The people in my riding, Mr. Speaker, are not statistics. These 1,200,000 people renewing their mortgages are human beings; they are you, me, our brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, cousins—they are our constituents.

An hon. Member: Flesh and blood.

Mr. Wenman: The people who wrote me these letters are real people, educated people, and they are very serious letters. This letter thanks the minister responsible for housing for his marvellous response, and it says:

> In your letter, you indicate that the government is committed to budgetary restraint and therefore can not subsidize mortgage rates. We are pleased to hear that the government is trying to reduce non-productive spending, however, your government did not follow this policy for a number of years and we taxpayers are now obliged to pay off the national debt and suffer high interest rates. Until the government is prepared to balance its budget, we see no hope of combating inflation.

You suggested that we draw on our savings accounts to pay the increase in our mortgage interest; when we purchased our home last year, the rate was 13¾ per cent and our mortgage payment was so high that we could not afford to save. In fact, we have savings of less than $1,000. We do not have any assets that can be liquidated other than our wedding rings.

We feel that housing is a necessity as is food and the mortgage payment should be exempt from income tax. The loss of revenue to the government should be compensated for by cutting down on frills in government such as the $27,000 fuel bill to fly 3 aircraft to Manitoba when the 3 officials involved could have taken scheduled flights at a cost of $1,500. We also feel that Mr. Trudeau's decorating bills and high living should not be paid with taxpayers' money.

You see, they know about that.

● (2110)

The letter continues:

Perhaps you should review the latest Canada Council grants and weigh them against the plight of the Canadian home owner.

If the high interest rate is not lowered and stabilized, CMHC will be faced with a flood of foreclosures; many of your mortgages are 95 per cent advanced on equity. Our local house prices have dropped by 25 per cent since January. Should you have to foreclose, there will not be sufficient equity to pay off the debts owing against the homes that were purchased at market peak.

We will struggle to hold on to our home and expect your government to work toward a solution to this difficult problem.

The government works toward a solution, all right! What a solution!

Another one of my constituents writes:

I have not, and will not sign the renewal of my mortgage. How can the banks be allowed to administer such injustices? Do the people in government positions really know the misery and desperation of the average Canadian?

Mr. Deans: I think that an excess profits tax would be a good thing.

Mr. Wenman: The letter continues:

We read in newspapers and books about some highly paid child-psychiatrist who wonders why most of our children are depressed, rebellious, and suicidal. What do we expect? Most of our kids are brought up in apartments which are borderline on slum, starting in the range of $550-$600 monthly. Can you imagine the frustrations of parents every day of their lives just to pay rent or mortgage and eat Kraft dinner three times a week?

I have to retain possession of my home. My children will be left without channels for proper education (university), proper dental care, opportunities for the future and the mental stability required to lead a good life. If I don't leave anything for their future, they will end up on the streets like so many others.

My place of employment, Panco Poultry Cargill Ltd., the largest poultry processor in B.C., closes its doors February 1, 1982, leaving another 400 people on the unemployment line.

What hope is there for that mother? These people are not uneducated, unthoughtful people. They are writing intelligent letters. One can tell by the state of the letter that this is an intelligent Canadian who has written with logic. Can hon. members hear?

I received another letter from one of my constituents which states:

I have never written a letter to my MP before, so I will try to be short and not misinterpreted. I have tried to understand both sides of the story from Ottawa, inflation or high interest rates. Understanding does not put food on my table.

I have nowhere to turn now, and I hope you will show me the courtesy to read on.

The mortgage on my house is now being renewed. The rate has risen in two years from 11¾ per cent to 20¼ per cent. So far, I am the same as the general populace. Here is where my dilemma begins.

I have two children, 15 years and 11 years. I have raised them on my own for nine years. During that time we did without, literally. After seven years, I invested every cent I had saved into the down payment on a little house. I knew this was the only way I was to have anything of value for the future.

This summer I was diagnosed as having melanoma cancer, which has penetrated the lymph nodes. Every day I get a little wearier, which is a factor of this type of cancer. Because of this, I cannot take another job after my eight hours are over at work. Now, what to do? We pay $438 monthly now and that's to be doubled. I have to borrow sometimes to pay the mortgage now.

What will the government do with my kids when the house is foreclosed upon and I am gone from the cancer?

In summary, I will not leave my home. We will have to be bodily removed, and even then I will protect my home and children with whatever physical means are available. That is my right.

It is the government's obligation to do something about this woman's problem, but it has done nothing. This letter reflects a real case. I have spoken with this woman and her family and I feel sick for them. I feel for this family because of what the government is doing to them, and hon. members should, too. All this woman gets is a busy tone at the other end of the phone and an answer that she should somehow cut back, perhaps on her holidays, or perhaps save a little bit. What kind of a minister is this? What kind of a government is this? They should meet that woman and talk to her, and do something in the name of humanity.

These are average people, about whom I care. I know hon. members care about them. Hear them! They are crying! The whole nation is crying, yet the government sits there and does nothing. Is this only one woman? I gave an extreme example to make a point, to make hon. members care and listen. I gave other examples which were average cases. Do not smile! It is not worth smiling about. Do not smile over there! Cry for them! That is the way I feel.

Mr. Kelly: It is not the subject, it is the delivery.

Mr. Wenman: I am sorry, Sir, but that is the way I feel. When the hon. member starts feeling that way, maybe he will vote against the government and do something about the problems, instead of smiling there in the Liberal backbench. These people are not alone. She is not alone.

I surveyed my riding by questionnaire. One question asked: Has your mortgage put you in dire straits? Forty-eight per cent answered "yes", or almost half the population. I asked: Have rising mortgage rates seriously affected your plans to purchase a home? Fifty-nine per cent answered "yes". I asked: Should mortgage interest rates be made tax-deductible? Obviously, 83 per cent answered "yes".

Mr. Kelly: Of course.

Mr. Wenman: Do my constituents support that Conservative proposal? Yes, they do. Should it be implemented? The answer is yes.

Mr. Kelly: What about the renter?

Mr. Wenman: I spoke about the renter. No one is building rental units. We now have a little push on MURB because we are trying to get in under that deadline, and that might help for two months.

Mr. Cosgrove: How about the bill in front of you?

Mr. Wenman: If the minister destroys everyone's aspirations for homes, if everyone gives up, there will be no upward movement of people moving into homes and moving out of apartment accomodation, and so on. There is no hope for the renters, either. There is a zero rental vacancy rate, and renters are paying $550 or $600 for an apartment in suburban Vancouver, 38 miles from downtown Vancouver. Yes, what about the renters? I agree, that is a question which must be answered. Stand up and tell me what the government will do about them?

Mr. Cosgrove: We are providing $350 million more than in your plan.

Mr. Kelly: Do not confuse him with the facts.

Mr. Wenman: I will admit what the government is doing is successful when I see someone in the construction industry start to pound a nail and when I see plans for construction. Plans are not coming in because the government does not have the right attitudes.

Mr. Cosgrove: First, pass the bill.

Mr. Wenman: Does the minister really think this bill will do something for Canadians?

Mr. Cosgrove: Not while you talk.

Mr. Wenman: The minister does not even believe it. He knows how pathetic this vehicle is.

Mr. Beatty: It is as plain as the hair on his head.

Mr. Deans: That was cruel.

Mr. Lewis: So is the minister.

Mr. Wenman: In my riding, in Surrey, British Columbia, I put up a notice for a meeting. On October 8, several hundred lower mainland residents came out and gathered in Surrey to talk about their problems. They signed a petition. I wanted to give them some hope at that stage because I, too, felt there might be some hope. I said to the people, "Your government can help you. Your Member of Parliament can stand up on this floor and speak. I can take petitions. Before the government brings down that budget, let us petition and let it know that we have this many people who care. Let us let the government know." We signed a petition, and I brought it to the House of Commons. What happened when I brought it here? I stood in my place as a responsible member and I tried to read the petition, but was stopped. I asked, "Can I just put the petition in? Will Your Honour receive it?" Madam Speaker said, "We will receive it". She received it.

The next day I said, "Madam Speaker, ask everyone in this House if we can now hear the petition? Can it be read in this House so hon. members can hear the desires of hundreds of thousands of people who have signed their names to similar petitions? Can we hear this direct representation?" The Liberal backbenchers, as the record and anyone who was in this House will bear out, said, "No, we do not want to hear their petition. Do not read it. You cannot read it in this House." I asked Madam Speaker, "Will the House then give permission to pass it on to committee to study and maybe get some action?" There was no way. I tried again and again and again. They did not want to hear the people of Canada. They would not even let me read their simple petition.

What do they want? They want interest rates to be reduced, adequate affordable housing to be recognized as a major government principle and objective, mortgage payments to be made tax deductions or tax credits, and limits placed on mortgage interest increases upon renewal. That is what they are asking. I have read this in the House of Commons, and I ask the minister of housing, did it hurt to have that petition read in the House of Commons? Why would you not let me read it in the House?

An hon. Member: Read it now.

Mr. Wenman: I just read it. I do not know why they were afraid, unless they knew how much it would hurt. Why will the minister not take those petitions to the committee? He can do that. He has the petitions. He can appoint the committee. Let us have some hearings about this. Let us go across this country and see how people are hurting. I know the minister went across the country. I hope he had some bodyguards with him.

I am concerned that my petitioners have not been heard on the floor of this House through direct representation. It is time the government reformed that aspect of these House proceedings.

Mr. Cosgrove: I answered 10,000 petitioners.

Mr. Wenman: What was the answer you gave them? I have it here. This is the answer the minister gave. I will read it:

> As you know, the government is committed to budgetary restraint, and for this reason, we are not contemplating an across-the-board program of home owner subsidies. In fact, many Canadians are drawing on their savings or are changing their spending habits to help them meet increased housing costs.

That is what the minister's letter told them. What help is that to the people? Do you want their gold wedding rings, the gold in their teeth to be picked out before you do something? Is that what you want?

Mr. Cosgrove: Read on.

Mr. Wenman: I will read on. You gave them a promise about a budget that is coming; the budget came and offered them nothing.

The people who came to this meeting, those who came to Ottawa to protest, were not big businessmen, or professional lobbyists. They represented all political parties. They are the working class—that's the picture—who generate the Canadian economy and the tax base that is so often wasted by this government. That is the kind of people they are.

Some of this group came to Ottawa. What were they met with? They were met with riot sticks. These ordinary working Canadians were shocked at the state of the democracy, the state of this economy, as I and every member of this House is shocked. They stood at that meeting and demanded that the government do something. They cried. Grown men stood and cried in front of these microphones. There was no one in that room who did not see those tears. Worst of all, many sat despondent in silence, without hope, knowwing that signing the petition probably would not work. Some of them would not even bother.

Sitting in that group were Dennis and Ruth Tkach. They signed the petition. They went out and gathered more names on the petition. They wrote to the minister. They tried to get him on the free line, but could not get through. They held their breath waiting for the budget, waiting for hope, waiting for a promise of help that never came. Their house is up for sale. They hope it will sell before it is foreclosed. They have lost. It seems to me I heard someone in this chamber say that no one was going to lose. Now it has happened.

Mr. Gauthier: That's not parliamentary.

Mr. Wenman: It is not parliamentary, but I hope it has some effect on you.

Mr. Gauthier: Complete your speech.

Mr. Wenman: I am making my speech. I am sorry it is not important to you. What did the people who came to that meeting think? What did they say about the budget? What do the professionals say? I asked the Fraser Valley Real Estate Board what it will do. I asked it to look at the new proposals the minister had come out with and tell me whether they would provide more housing. What did the professionals in this area say? They said:

> The budget proposals will have a negative effect on both the supply of rental properties and the quality of existing rental accommodation, thereby adding additional pressure to this area of housing.
> The budget proposals may not increase tax revenues; in fact a decreased volume of activity in new construction and resale markets may actually reduce the amount of income which will be taxed.
> The budget proposals will likely cause increased ownership of Canadian real estate by foreign investors—

I thought the minister was concerned about that.

> —as well as wealthy corporations and individuals.
> The budget proposals will increase unemployment in the construction and real estate related industries.
> Internal asset reorganizations on a roll-over basis have been made virtually impossible if real estate inventory is involved.

That is what the professionals are saying, those in the field. The minister says that something will be done about rentals. Well, that is what the professionals say his program does.

The government brings in this bill in order to give help, but what kind of help? When the bill first came in, I thought maybe it would provide some help. Then I looked at the qualifications. You have to spend over 30 per cent of your income and you must have a minimum percentage of equity. Who is going to be helped? I suggest almost no one.

The people who will be helped are those who are already on their way down. They have no incentive to stay in the house anyway. Why should they stay in that house, pay their taxes and so forth after they have lost their investment? That just amounts to high-priced rent, so why stay? Why accept this theoretical goodie? This is too late, for the wrong people at the wrong time.

This program is a "time buying" program. That is what they are hoping. Let us see what is going to happen in time. The bank rate announced today tells us what is happening. The Bank rate this week is 14.87 per cent, up from last week. The rate on six-month treasury bills was 15.44 per cent, up again in six months. The rate on one-year bills is 16.26 per cent. In other words, this is buying time at a higher interest rate. That is the way it will go unless this government does something about it.

Could mortgage interest deductibility work. That would drop interest rates in a specific area to 14 per cent or 15 per cent. Could this be done? It was proposed in a budget. The Conservative budget made it possible. The Conservatives put it in a budgetary process that would have been brought forward but for the socialists, the NDP, who defeated that proposal of mortgage interest deductibility in this House of Commons.

Mr. Deans: The public defeated it.

Mr. Wenman: Instead we have the bill that is now before us. That is their choice. My petitioners asked for lower interest rates. Can interest rates be lowered? First we had the excuse that we had to keep pace with United States rates. Then the interest rate went to a four to six point spread. We have had 4 to 6 point spreads before. We can lower interest rates if we want. If we were to lower the interest rate a little bit, even if the dollar dropped, not only would it help housing, it would help unemployment and our export industry. It is true we would have to accept some inflation, but the way the nation is hurting today, that is the only alternative.

Mr. Kelly: How much is some—2 per cent, 5 per cent?

Mr. Wenman: To start out with we have to make housing affordable; it must be lowered to that point of affordability. Affordability is the point at which people can qualify. I said we can do it in the housing program through mortgage interest deductibility. If the government does not want to go all the way it can start with one program. It will not know the market reaction until it tries it, and it is about time the government did try it. I think it would be healthy to have a lower interest rate and to drop the dollar at this moment. I think it would help British Columbia in particular.

Mr. Kelly: Give us some figures.

Mr. Wenman: Perhaps it could be tried for a fixed term of a five-year minimum. We have had fixed terms before. It is true that we might have to adjust two or three other related monetary instruments but we have had five-year, as well as 20-year and 25-year mortgages before. They still have those five year mortgages in the same money market in the United States. I have an offer in hand on a mortgage in the United States, a remortgage of 14 per cent this week. That is what their remortgages are, 14 per cent. I can show you the offer in the U.S. It is a remortgage on an investment property of 14 per cent and that same mortgage here would be 20 per cent. If they can do it in the United States, in the same market, surely the government can do it here. If they can have the kind of deductibility—

Mr. Cosgrove: That is why they are building half as many houses as we are.

Mr. Deans: They are building half as many as we need.

Mr. Wenman: You can still remortgage a house in the United States. When he can match the American program I will be satisfied. When he can make housing as affordable in Canada as it is in the United States the minister will have done something. Then he can stand up. Until he does, he better just sit there and listen.

How about some innovative ideas? How about considering subsidized interest rates for first-time buyers? We should try to get some first-time buyers involved. We should give these rates for the first three years to give them a stake in the country.

Mr. Kelly: How much would that cost?

Mr. Wenman: it would cost a lot less than the mortgage interest deductibility which was proposed in our program. What I am saying is that if you cannot provide interest deductibility for the whole group, why not do it for first-time buyers? Why not help first-time buyers?

Mr. Kelly: How much would it cost? Give me a figure.

Mr. Wenman: Our heckler from the Liberal side was not here for the Conservative budget. He came in after the Conservative budget which his party defeated. Unfortunately, he will not be here to hear the Conservative budget after the next election because he does not understand these things.

Mr. Kelly: I came in because of the Conservative budget.

Mr. Lewis: Where are you going because of the Liberal budget?

Mr. Wenman: I would suggest that consideration of interest subsidy for first-time buyers, say for the first three years, would be an innovative idea. Perhaps a home acquisition grant such as some of the provinces tried to give for first-time buyers would help give them a start. Give people such as the young people working in this building and across Canada a first-time start.

Mr. Kelly: How much would it cost?

Mr. Deans: I will move you to the other end if you do not be quiet.

Mr. Kelly: I have learned from you.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, this Liberal has no innovative ideas of his own, but I appreciate his heckling so I can explain mine. He asks how much it would cost. It would cost less than the Conservative proposal in the last budget which was fiscally possible and would have reduced Canada's deficit as well.

Mr. Deans: Oh, come on now. You were doing well until you started that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wenman: The Liberals sit there and laugh. Ours was a real budget. They should be crying like the rest of Canadians. Instead of some innovative programs the government comes in with some half-baked ideas which will not help anyone except perhaps a small minority of Canadians. This country is hurting and every backbench Liberal knows it. They are trying to tell the minister and the government but they cannot hear. That chicken member over there would not have signed the letter; I know that. Those backbenchers are trying to tell them that the nation is hurting and that the country is crying. I hear them, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the government begins to hear them too.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in this debate this evening. Tonight I rise with a feeling almost of frustration and, I was tempted to say, righteous anger. When I hear the appeals being made in the House for some evidence of concern and compassion, then listen to the interjections and silly remarks of some of the Liberal members, I have to come to the conclusion that it is an absolute impossibility to impress upon the Liberal backbenchers, as well as others, the fact that there are needs in this country which they should be concerned about instead of laughing and sneering, as they are doing tonight. However, I will venture to make a few comments in connection with this measure which proposes to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act.

In his introductory remarks, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) stated:

> —the bill before the House for second reading is a response to the serious difficulty which many Canadians are now facing in finding and maintaining good housing at affordable cost.

The minister indicated as well that the bill:

> —provides the necessary legislative authority to put into effect the Canada mortgage renewal plan.

Notice, Mr. Speaker, the "renewal plan". He goes on to say:

—it enables the government to act more effectively in stimulating production of rental housing, and makes possible new kinds of assistance for young families who are buying for the first time.

Those are very optimistic words. However, we are getting used to hearing optimistic declarations from the government. Unfortunately, time usually proves that that optimism is ill-founded.

I remember years ago—I have been around here a little while—the response of the government to the inflationary problem was that it was going to wrestle inflation to the ground. Those are noble words, Mr. Speaker; a ringing clarion call to challenge the forces that were driving prices up and causing such havoc in the country. I think just about every budget that has been brought in since that time echoes the same words—perhaps different words but the same sentiments.

We also heard the statement made that we were overcoming the problem of unemployment. Once again, every Liberal budget that has been brought in since that statement of many years ago has reiterated this statement, that the government will bring this demon of unemployment under control. We heard the assertions that the government will assist the farmers in riding out the critical financial problems they are currently facing. We know what has happened. I suggest there have been many other similar declarations which have indicated the same determination and same direction, but, in the final analysis, nothing has happened. Instead of getting better, things get worse, and we all know where inflation stands today. We all know the level of unemployment in Canada today. We know the situation in which the farming community and small businesses are finding themselves today. Instead of getting better, the situation is worse. Yet hon. members on the government side sit and laugh, sneer and joke. They are at it again now. I do not know what it will take to shake them loose and make them show at least some compassion and understanding of the problems Canadians are facing at the present time.

There are three basic needs of mankind; food, clothing and shelter and when we consider the climatic conditions in Canada, we know that shelter certainly is without question basic to our survival. Shelter or housing, is a right, but unfortunately this is not one of the rights enshrined in the charter, thanks to the insistence of members of the New Democratic Party who, it appears, made its deletion a condition of support for the government's constitutional package. The government backed up and said it would not guarantee the right to own a home or property.

Mr. Cosgrove: It is the provinces which have jurisdiction.

Mr. Patterson: Although the government has declined, no doubt for political purposes, to guarantee the right to own property in the charter, the ownership of homes has been a dream of most Canadians throughout past generations and is today the objective to which a great many still aspire. This was one of the magnets which many years ago drew my parents from the old country to this land of promise. There was an opportunity to own better property, to make a living, to raise a family and to contribute to society. I suggest that hundreds of thousands of others from all over the world were drawn to Canada for the very same reason. Now people are in danger of being deprived of that.

According to another report, consideration is to be given to penalizing thrift, initiative, and sacrifice on the part of home owners by deeming the rental value of their homes as taxable income in order to increase government revenues. This would be a blatantly reprehensible act. It would erode the desires and dreams of would-be home owners. It would destroy the dreams they have had and undermine and destroy the fruits of their labours toward building and achieving stability in their home circumstances. These two factors the refusal to guarantee the right to own property and the possible imposition of taxation of imputed rent on owner-occupied homes could bring the present government's commitment to home ownership—I was going to say into question, but it goes far beyond that.

These ideas show how hypocritical the government is. Hon. members opposite talk about doing things for people and helping them to own homes but then say they will not guarantee that Canadians can own homes and that if they do own homes, the government is considering taxing their rental value. The government is considering making people pay tax on money they have saved, slaved and sacrificed to get in order to build up equity. People will be taxed because they own homes and do not have to rent.

The writer of an article which appeared in a newspaper a short time ago suggested that the principle of home ownership is becoming obsolete. I think I heard a reference to that tonight. Apparently someone else read that article. I believe home ownership is still a desirable and legitimate aspiration and, instead of being undermined, eroded and destroyed, it should be encouraged and nurtured. I believe the ownership of a home promotes a sense of achievement. It brings a measure of satisfaction and contentment. After all, what is life without a feeling of achievement, without satisfaction and without contentment? Instead of that, people are living in fear and agony because what they have achieved is about to be taken from them, and they will be set back years and years to the position from where they started.

While I have little confidence that the measures proposed in this bill will be as effective as the minister implies, I suppose any help is better than none. My lack of enthusiasm is based on the fact that the basic direction of government policy as laid out in the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is having an extremely detrimental effect upon the housing picture and will more than offset any possible benefit which might be brought about under the provisions of this measure.

Reference has been made in this debate to the fact that there are two basic considerations in the matter of housing policy and the provision of housing, and the first is the availability of housing. We are told that Canada needs 220,-

000 new housing units each year. In 1980 only 159,000 units were built, and in 1981 only 178,000 housing units were built. The latest Conference Board forecast of November, 1981, predicts that only 180,000 units will be built in 1982. This means that there will be a shortage of approximately 143,000 units over a three-year period.

When we look at the national vacancy rate, we see that it fell from 2.8 per cent in April, 1980, to 1.2 per cent in October, 1981. Centres with serious shortages include Oshawa, with a vacancy rate of zero; Edmonton, 1.1 per cent; Halifax, 0.5 per cent; Hamilton, 0.7 per cent; Kitchener, the same; Ottawa, 0.6 per cent; Regina, 0.3 per cent; Vancouver, 0.1 per cent; and the same for Victoria, British Columbia. There are projections that the vacancy rate will be down to just about zero universally in 1982. That does not paint a very bright picture for those who are seeking a place of shelter. There are those who have to rent, and even now it is almost impossible to rent. If there is an available house, the rent is so high that a great many families find it absolutely impossible to pay under present circumstances.

There is a very serious situation in Canada regarding the availability of housing, Mr. Speaker. Unless something is done in the very near future a great many people will reach the point of desperation. They see no way through the problem, no way around it, no way over it; they are up against the wall and do not know what to do.

The question of affordability of housing has been mentioned a number of times. The horrendous increase in interest rates is largely responsible for the unconscionable increases in housing costs today. While there has been a slight decrease from the high levels of a few months ago, the indications are that another surge will take place in the near future.

I should like to refer hon. members to an article by Paula McLaughlin which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on February 6, 1982. She writes that the days of the 14 per cent mortgage are gone forever and that home owners should brace themselves for more increases in the cost of mortgage money later in the year. Her authority for this statement is a spokesman for the national realtor, A. E. Lepage Limited. Apparently the manager of mortgage services for that company said that rates this summer and fall may approach last year's record of 22 per cent.

The article states that this spokesman believes that home ownership remains within reach of many first-time buyers. I am not so sure about that, Mr. Speaker. It goes on to say that last year at this time the interest mortgage rate was 14.5 per cent. It shot up to 22 per cent in the late summer then dipped to the current level of 17 per cent to 18 per cent. This spokesman seems to feel that unless something happens in the United States which has a drastic effect on Canadian interest rates, a similar trend could be followed next year.

The situation has been deplorable, Mr. Speaker, and the future is bleak indeed. That is why I cannot understand the attitude of those who are in positions of responsibility in this country, and by that I mean the Government of Canada. I cannot understand the determination that has been indicated by the Minister of Finance when he says that no changes will be made and that the policy will be maintained. That is an incredible attitude for the government to take.

Statistics show that on a $50,000 mortgage at 10 per cent the monthly payment is $447; at 12 per cent it is $516; at 14 per cent $587; at 16 per cent $660; at 18 per cent $733 and at 20 per cent $807. This is the terrible situation in which people who have to renew mortages find themselves.

We are told that approximately 1,200,000 Canadian families will have to renew their mortgages within the next two years. If there are any 10 per cent mortgages left, their owners will face a monthly increase of 41 per cent in their payments. According to CMHC, 40,000 Canadians will lose their homes as a result of high interest rates. What a dismal picture that is, Mr. Speaker, but it is what a great many Canadians face. Is this affordable housing? I say it is not.

On the question of shortage of funds, an article in the Financial Times of January 11, 1982, states that mortgage funds are drying up and that this, coupled with the palliatives offered by the government, puts an almost insurmountable obstacle in the way of home owners and prospective home owners.

In light of what the recent budget is going to do to the insurance industry, I do not think there will be a line-up of officials from insurance companies wanting to provide mortgage money. As far as affordability is concerned, I just do not see that the situation has been improved at all.

The problem of the cost of housing has been discussed a number of times in this House and I will not take time to repeat the arguments tonight, but what happens when houses increase phenomenally in value? The home owner is then faced with another horrendous increase in taxes.

An article in the Abbotsford, Sumas & Matsqui News, which is published in my riding, on January 27, 1982, carried the heading "Assessment revolt taxes appeal court". One sentence in the article that followed reads as follows:

> A spokesman for the assessor's office said at last count some 2,400 appeals had been filed. The usual annual load is about 300 appeals.

Later the article goes on to say:

> Property owners in this area have been hit by assessments as high as 60 per cent over last year. The minimum hike is about 30 per cent.
> Area property owners have been caught by assessment values reflecting inflated real estate prices of a year ago.

On top of all those other obstacles that will inhibit the ownership and maintenance of homes, people are facing another substantial hike in taxes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am most reluctant to interrupt the hon. member, and I hope he will forgive me, but about an hour ago or less, the government whip rose and proposed a request for unanimous consent to permit the submission of amendments to Bill C-78 in order that they might be submitted after the hour that is normally agreed upon. I do not want to arrive at ten o'clock without a decision having been made. I raise the matter realizing that this party, and perhaps the official opposition, might have amendments which they would otherwise not be able to put in. I wonder if we could seek an opinion from the government and from the official opposition in order to determine whether unanimous consent is being sought and is forthcoming.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion was that we give leave to extend the deadline for giving notice of proposed amendments to Bill C-78 until 10 p.m. tonight for tomorrow's consideration, and until 5 p.m. Friday for consideration or later if necessary. Does the hon. House leader of the opposition agree?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, as the deputy House leader of the official opposition stated, this was sprung upon us about 45 minutes ago. We cannot get in touch with our labour critic; we have tried. We do not know whether we have amendments. I asked the government whip in a brief conversation a few moments ago whether the government had amendments. He informed me that he did not know. It seems to me that it is not possible to give consent under those circumstances.

If I might comment upon the matter, it also seems to me, if the government considers Bill C-78 so all-fired important that it must be debated tomorrow in place of the allotted day, that it should have been ready with the bill. Obviously it is not, because it is requesting an extension of time. Under the circumstances I think that consent cannot be forthcoming, the matter having been sprung upon us, but I would suggest that tomorrow, after having allowed us time to get in touch with our labour critic, the matter might be raised again. If not, then some other order could be called tomorrow and we could proceed with the consideration of Bill C-78 on Monday.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to mislead the House leader of the Official Opposition. I should advise him that we have given notice of amendments.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member does not follow me. I know that because I inquired at the Table. Those amendments were filed, as is required by the Standing Orders, prior to six o'clock today. But when I asked the government whip whether the government had any further amendments, he told me that he did not know. That was the possible amendment area about which I was speaking.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—ADVANTAGES FOR QUEBEC RELATED TO NEW FISCAL TRANSFERS

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on February 10, I asked a question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) concerning fiscal transfers to Quebec and the gains or losses for this province in terms of the amounts that will accrue to Quebec. The minister confirmed certain figures very briefly. That is why I am asking this evening for further information concerning the impending war of figures, to all appearances, because since the federal-provincial conference, the PQ government, as usual, would have the people of Quebec believe that the federal government is to blame for all the economic ills and problems in Quebec. The PQ government had the media broadcast last weekend that the cabinet would meet in conclave to assess Quebec's financial position, because following the last federal-provincial conference, Quebec stands to lose, according to them, $675 million. I am shocked, Mr. Speaker, at this attitude of the separatist government, which is trying to make the people forget its own mismanagement by passing the buck to the federal government and by saying: You have 74 Liberal Members of Parliament in Ottawa who do not protect your interests, who do nothing. It is the same old story that is being trotted out, this time about the fiscal transfers, and that is why I put the question to the minister on February 10.

Mr. Speaker, when I see all this, I am reminded of all the measures implemented by the separatist PQ government in Quebec, such as its very generous announcement on November 17 of an increase in the gasoline tax, because of which we, Quebecers, can now say we have the highest gasoline prices in Canada. This government also gave us a 16 per cent increase in electricity rates in January. It also took away from the farmers the letter N on their licence plates. It also allowed cutbacks for the drainage of farmland and the use of heavy machinery. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I refer to an article in the newspaper La Presse last fall against the right of Quebecers to be overtaxed. And then, the Quebec government tells us that it does not take part in federal-provincial conferences because it was isolated following a certain well-remembered constitutional conference. Following that article against the right of Quebecers to be overtaxed, we are told by the Quebec government that the province will lose $675 million, even though that famous federal-provincial conference on the economy has not even been held yet, even though the figures quoted are those of last fall and even though the Quebec government taxes at a rate of 40.53 per cent a $12,061 income.

And a province with less revenue perhaps, and smaller in size such as Prince Edward Island, for instance, taxes its citizens as Canadians at a rate of 32.03 per cent. Mr. Speaker, in discussing that situation, I could go on describing this hoax about fiscal transfers. He even killed a program called OSE. Of course, many people will say he did not lose much, because the cut was on advertising. This hoax, Mr. Speaker, consists in consistently trying to delude Quebecers into believing they still are a good government. They boast about being a good government. They want to be, so they say, a government that will improve things by boycotting federal-provincial conferences. Mr. Speaker, we know about the Quebec government boycotts. We have seen, for instance, officials from the department of agriculture refusing to attend a symposium organized with the provinces here in Ottawa. They say they are a good government that will bring money to the province of Quebec for the benefit of Quebecers. But when the time comes to discuss such issues, they fail to attend.

We have seen a Quebec government boycott at the Vancouver conference on the Status of Women. Again we have seen how the province of Quebec boycotted the federal-provincial conference of the ministers of justice. They also boycotted the federal-provincial conference on tourism, again saying they were a good government, and wanted to represent Quebecers. They are told that there might be big money to be had in Ottawa, because someone says: "Bring them in." However, when the time comes to defend the rights of Quebecers they definitely refuse to come. They do not want to promote the rights of Quebecers. This is why I asked a question concerning that masquerade of erroneous data, the presentation of a five-year plan schedule of fiscal transfers which contained data for the year 1982-83 alone. But even for Mr. Lévesque and his associates, a five-year plan remains a five-year plan. Yet, they would like us to believe that this is only a one-year plan. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I had to speak up and ask the minister what was really the situation, as far as Quebec and the new fiscal transfers are concerned.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to thank the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) for the sincere interest he is demonstrating in the wellbeing of all Quebecers by raising this issue which is so germane to the Canadian political reality of today. As all other hon. members of the House, I was quite surprised when I heard separatist Premier René Lévesque state during last week's first ministers' conference that Quebec stood to lose in the fiscal year 1982-83 under the new fiscal arrangements.

This is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, when it is a well-known fact that Quebec will receive $5,326 million in 1982-83 under the new arrangements proposed by the Federal Government, while it only received $4,987 million in 1981-82. According to my computation, Quebec will clearly be getting $339 million more in 1982-83 than in 1981-82. As a matter of fact, the transfers from the federal treasury to the Quebec government under the new fiscal arrangements will increase by nearly 7 per cent in 1982-83. Over the next five years, that is 1982-83 to 1986-87, the transfers to Quebec will go up by an average of 12.2 per cent annually and reach $8.4 billion in 1986-87. Some $8.4 billion in 1986-87, Mr. Speaker, that is an awful lot of money which the Government of Canada will give to Quebecers directly from taxes paid by all Canadian taxpayers. To understand the figures quoted by Premier Lévesque we would have to know what was the basis for his computation to arrive at the conclusion that Quebec was a loser when in fact the figures prove the contrary. First, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lévesque starts off by assuming that the equalization system scheduled to end on March 31, 1982, will continue beyond that date. It so happens that his own finance minister, Mr. Parizeau, had discarded that possibility. Here is a statement made by Mr. Parizeau at Laval University on September 17, 1981, and I quote:

> In fact, the rapidly increasing wealth of Alberta has been a factor in raising the national average, so much so that Ontario has fallen below that level and should therefore be considered as a poor province. According to the federal government this is a ridiculous situation and the formula has to be reviewed. We agree.

Mr. Parizeau agrees that the formula must be reviewed so that all Canadians will be treated more equitably. In addition, and this is very significant, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lévesque and Mr. Parizeau fail to take into consideration the value of the tax points transferred to Quebec, whereas indeed a major portion of those federal transfers to the provinces are made that way. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said at the closing session of the conference, those fiscal transfers must be taken into consideration. I quote:

> The data used by Mr. Lévesque simply do not take into account the tax points which are transferred.

If I may, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

FISHERIES—(A) TASK FORCE DECISION NOT TO HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS
(B) FISHERMEN'S REPRESENTATION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I had the opportunity to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) questions about the task force appointed to investigate the situation on the Atlantic coast with respect to the dire straits within which present circumstances have placed the fishing industry. As everyone knows, the government and the minister are absolutely lacking any kind of answers, having ignored the evidence which has been available for many months. They have also gone through the motions of indicating that there would be a cabinet document in January which would address the problems of the east coast fishery, and, apparently as a result of no one being able to come up with any answers in that document, the government has appointed a task force headed by the second senior public servant, Mr. Michael Kirby.

What I asked the hon. minister, Mr. Speaker, was this. Why are there no representatives from the fishermen of the Atlantic coast on that particular task force? It was very interesting to hear the minister's reply. He said, this is not a Royal commission. He said he was satisfied that Mr. Kirby would hold discussions with many people. He even went on to say that he understood Mr. Kirby had approached some representatives of the fishermen and perhaps there was a possibility that some or one of them would serve on the task force.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the House that I and others have recently been on a visit to New Brunswick during which we spoke with many of the fishermen who are and will be involved in whatever deliberations Mr. Kirby undertakes. They made it very plain to us that they do not know what Mr. Kirby is doing. They do not know who is advising Mr. Kirby. They do not know who is on this task force which will decide what is to happen to them. They want representation, because without it, even with the best will in the world, Mr. Kirby will only get half of what he needs to know in order to present a report which could bail out the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who has obviously bailed out of his responsibility concerning this situation.

It was extremely interesting to note that, while the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans told me there was no need for fishermen on the task force, only a few minutes later the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) rose in her seat—she is a Liberal member—and picked up on the very point I had been raising because she understands that the fishermen in her riding are involved in the Atlantic coast fishery. She said, in part: "I suggest that there has to be someone there from the inshore fishery," and she suggested an advisory group. I would go beyond that suggestion and say that there must be someone from the offshore fishery there as well.

However, it was extraordinarily interesting that, within the compass of a few minutes of the time the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans battered down my request to have fishermen represented on the task force, he paid attention when a Liberal member got up, and said: "Just a minute," and the implication was that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) had a point. She then reinforced that point I was making and the minister thought it was very interesting. He then had a very different answer. In answer to the suggestion of the hon. member for South West Nova that, if there could not be someone there as part of the task force, there should at least be an advisory group representing the actual people who did the fishing, the minister said; "I think the hon. member's idea of an advisory committee is a perfectly valid one."

I would like an answer from whoever will answer for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, unless, of course, someone has been sent down here to answer for Mr. Kirby, because we are now in great doubt as to whether the minister or Mr. Kirby is in charge. We do not know just who is in charge. In any event, I would like to know whether the suggestion which I initiated, and which the hon. member for South West Nova supported, will be accepted. The hon. member is a well-respected hon. member, and she is well known to me. Will there be an advisory committee representing the people who actually do the fishing on the Atlantic coast?

I might also say that I wonder about the whole tenor of the Kirby task force. Why are no public hearings being held? Why is it that Mr. Kirby started off with the incredible bungle of saying: "I can reject the notion that provincial governments are the best judges of what is good for their constituents?" He then went on to insult the very people he will have to deal with by saying: "I am not a believer in the town council theory of government." This is the man we have sent down to the Atlantic coast to solve the problems of the fishermen.

Then again, I must point out to the House that this government has made an egregious mistake by announcing in advance that Mr. Kirby will be the deputy minister of fisheries. I ask Your Honour, and all hon. members, how will Mr. Kirby get the truth from departmental people if they know that they are talking to someone who holds their very future in his hands?

I have raised a number of points. I would like to have some answers. I certainly did not get them from the Minister of Fisheries the other day.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when he announced the appointment of a special task force on the Atlantic fisheries just over a month ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that in carrying out its work, the task force would consult with all those who have a role to play in the fishing industry. The task force is to recommend how to achieve and maintain a viable Atlantic fishing industry, with due consideration for the over-all economic and social development of Canada's eastern provinces.

The hon. member has attempted to create an issue over the fact that the task force does not plan to operate in the mould of a royal commission, with formal public hearings. I want to tell him that this small group of highly experienced individuals will ensure that every sector of the industry is heard from, that every aspect of the industry's fundamental problems is examined, and that the views of anyone who wishes to make a meaningful contribution to the search for long-term solutions will be most welcome, and will be given full consideration. You do not need a series of town hall meetings for that.

The Atlantic fishery includes a large number of interest groups: part-time fishermen, full-time fishermen, inshore fishermen, offshore fishermen, labour organizations, large processing companies, small processing companies, financial institutions, to enumerate only the obvious ones. As well, there are provincial governments which also have a role to play in the future of the fishing industry. The task force is aware of the many different voices that this encompasses, and its members will do their utmost to make certain that all are heard, and this will be done in a totally businesslike, but somewhat less formal structure than a royal commission.

Members of the task force are actively considering all possible mechanisms of consultation, so that the complete magnitude of the fishery's inherent problems are accurately understood, and that every viable option and alternative for long-term economic health is explored.

One of these mechanisms could take the form of some type of advisory committee with representation from each of the five eastern provinces, as was suggested in the House the other day by the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell).

I want to deal with another of the mistaken impressions of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). He has complained to the House with righteous indignation that there is no one on the task force serving as co-chairman to represent fishermen. He based that complaint on his incorrect assumption that Mr. Peter John Nicholson, an economist who recently resigned his position as an executive of a large processing company, is serving as a co-chairman representing the corporate sector. There is no co-chairman of the task force. Furthermore, no one on the task force has been engaged to act as a lobbyist or represent the vested interests of any single group.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 10.23 p.m., the motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 10.23 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE ECONOMY

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN LETTER SIGNED BY GOVERNMENT MINISTERS AND SUPPORTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the permission of the House to move a motion on a subject of urgent and pressing necessity. It relates to the necessity that the government immediately implement the recommendations contained in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), dated February 3, 1982, signed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) and certain Members of Parliament, which urged the government to proceed with the immediate creation of two new programs to create employment in key sectors of the economy, by stimulating domestic housing construction and by launching a program to enable private enterprise to hire young Canadians.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the House strongly endorse the position of the authors of the Bégin-Joyal letter when they wrote: "Mr. Prime Minister, we urge you to adopt these measures as soon as possible because we are convinced that they are necessary right now."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION TAKEN BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY RELATIVE TO GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the New Democratic Party stand condemned for once again saving the Liberal government, including the ugly spectacle of the NDP leader consulting with the Liberals behind the curtain before saving them, and that all Canadians who are being hurt by the government know, beyond any shadow of a doubt, that the NDP saved the budget and the Liberals. Let Canadians beware!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGING OF ANNOUNCED OPPOSITION DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, yesterday, a day which shall live in infamy, the party to my left and the Liberal government connived in a reprehensible action which denied my party the right to our allotted day.

Mr. Waddell: It was our allotted day!

Mr. Fretz: Moreover, their despicable deed denied the right of the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) and eight of his Liberal colleagues to speak to our proposed motion, which urged the immediate creation of job programs for young Canadians and the stimulation of the housing industry, an idea favoured by another group of Liberal members and ministers.

In light of this denial of rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House censure the President of the Privy Council for his deplorable lack of courage in not allowing the Progressive Conservative Party to have today as an opposition day, in clear contravention of the Standing Orders.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

SOUTH AFRICA—CALL FOR RELEASE OF PERSONS DETAINED WITHOUT LAYING OF CHARGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Recently Dr. Neil Agget died while being held by South African police. His so-called offence was simply that of organizing workers to obtain humane wages and working conditions. He was the forty-sixth person to die in detention since 1963, the most prominent recent example being that of Steve Biko in 1978. There are hundreds now being held without charge by South African police.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the government urge upon the South African government the immediate release of all those held without charge under various repressive laws in South Africa.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGING OF ANNOUNCED OPPOSITION DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, whereas yesterday hon. members of all parties in this House were the victims of a new form of cabinet-invented closure, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That this House condemn the government House leader who denied the people of Canada, through their elected Members of Parliament, the opportunity to express their confidence, or lack of it, in the Minister of Finance and his budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTION MINISTERS URGE CHANGES IN BUDGET PROVISIONS AFFECTING REAL ESTATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Real Estate Association has stated that the budget discourages take-back mortgages thereby discriminating against the small Canadian investor. The shift in Canadian real estate ownership will be toward large corporations which have pools of capital, or toward foreign investors who may apply interest expense against income in their own countries. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of State urge the Minister of Finance to introduce further amendments to the budget as it affects real estate, and thereby make it more attractive to the small Canadian investor, both as an investment and as a provision for retirement years.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MINES AND MINING

TRAINING COURSES FOR YOUNG MINERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the Mining Association of Canada and many other experts have predicted that by 1985 there will be a severe shortage of several thousand skilled mine workers which will largely arise because of the major coal and oil sands projects slated for western Canada. However, Canadian mining companies are presently laying off hundreds of their youngest employees who are low on the seniority scale because of the current economic depression. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the Minister of State for Mines, in collaboration with her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, be requested to implement immediately an emergency training program so that, instead of sitting around with nothing to do, young mine workers might be placed in accelerated skills-training courses under the supervision of experienced mine workers at their present places of employment, and that UIC benefits normally payable to those young persons be used to finance the cost of such training.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN AS SENATORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of importance under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that February 14 is the fifty-second anniversary of the appointment of the first woman to the Senate, Mrs. Cairine Wilson, appointed February 14, 1930, and in view of the fact that only 18 other women have been appointed since then, or 2.7 per cent of the 702 Senators who have been summoned to the Red Chamber since confederation, I move, I am sure seconded by all female members of this House:

That this House urge the Prime Minister to fill as many of the 14 vacancies in the other place as possible with women appointees.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, democracy has fled the Liberal government along with the right to speak out on behalf of constituents. It is now a Trudeau state. Trudeau has placed a zipper on the mouth of every Liberal Member of Parliament. Each is now forbidden to say anything that displeases Trudeau or he will not give them a reward which he pays for with taxpayers' money. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That Canadians rise up and take action before this country is forever lost to this would-be emperor dictator.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLISHING

CONDEMNATION OF PROJECT TO PUBLISH MEMOIRS OF CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and public importance, and hope that in view of the comments of the Solicitor General we might have unanimous consent. All Canada views with disgust and dismay the announcement by mass murderer Clifford Olson that the sensibilities of Canadians may soon again be abused by his demented memoirs in book and serial form, the object of which would be to further enrich this mass murderer and rapist for his crimes at the expense of the people of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That while this House will and must always uphold the principle of freedom of the press, we unanimously urge all Canadian book, magazine and newspaper publishers to act in accordance with their commensurate responsibility to the people of Canada and not engage in any publication or distribution of commercial material which would serve to further enrich Olson or his estate and indirectly encourage similar crimes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Soviet Jewish dissident Anatoly Shcharansky has been unjustly held for over six months in solitary confinement and on low rations by the Soviet authorities in direct contravention of basic human rights and of Soviet obligations under the Helsinki Accord to respect the fundamental freedoms of conscience and religion. In view of this injustice and the plea of Mr. Shcharansky's wife that politicians in the west take up her husband's cause, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House call on the Soviet Union to live up to its obligation under the Helsinki Accord and immediately release Anatoly Shcharansky from detention.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS REQUESTED FOR DEFENCE OF MEMBERS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In putting the question to the Prime Minister, I refer to an article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal. Will the Prime Minister give consideration to instructing his Solicitor General to release immediately the 33 documents which the RCMP defence counsel have requested and which are essential for a fair and full trial for the 17 officers who are charged in the Quebec courts?

● (1115)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the documents to which the hon. member is referring. I will take notice of the question.

Oral Questions

INCOME TAX

FILING OF RETURNS BY QUEBEC RESIDENTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue and, failing him, the Prime Minister.

I have been informed that there are a large number of people from the province of Quebec who are failing to file their federal income tax returns. It would appear that it is part of a strategy to avoid paying taxes, or a Parti Québécois strategy to embarrass the central government. Can the Minister of National Revenue advise the House what the extent of this problem is and what he proposes to do about it?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the problem. The tax system in this country is a voluntary tax system. People are expected to pay their taxes. Nobody particularly likes to do it, but everybody must. I am not aware of any specific problems along the lines that the hon. member has indicated.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, this is broadly known information. In view of the fact that the province of Quebec collects its own income tax separate from the rest of the provinces and the federal government, would the minister undertake to investigate this problem and report back to the House with a statement?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I will certainly take notice of the hon. member's question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOBILIZATION PLANNING TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In March, 1981, the minister said, "The mobilization planning task force is expected to report later this year"—that is, later in 1981. In November, 1981, the minister said, "The work of the mobilization plan task force is not yet finalized."

At the January, 1982, Conference of the Defence Associations the minister referred to the mobilization plan and said, "... a number of options and possibilities have been examined, and they are being examined even now, as I speak."

Would the minister tell the House exactly when Canadians can expect to see some results from this drawn-out, procrastinating process?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): As the hon. member for Victoria has just pointed out, Madam Speaker, the whole question of mobilization in Canada has been under review for about a year and a half now. A task force is still carrying out this study in an attempt to reach a conclusion. There are several options, of course, as the hon. member said. Whatever they may be there is a price tag on all those options and for the time being we are trying to refine upon—if I may use the word—the conclusions with respect to a mobilization plan which should be ready within a few weeks.

[English]

SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the problem is that the minister is using the lack of a mobilization plan as the reason for turning down every other initiative which is put to him.

The report of the Senate Sub-committee on National Defence which was tabled yesterday contained among its recommendations that the government begin production immediately of a new white paper on defence, that the number of regular force personnel be increased to 92,000 by 1987, and that the Canadian forces CAST commitment be reviewed. When will the government do anything about any of these recommendations?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, we are taking into consideration all proposals from the various well-known and respected groups, such as, of course, the Senate. We have taken some action on some of the resolutions which were made during the last Canadian Defence Association convention. Last year, the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on External Affairs and National Defence made several proposals on mobilization, unification, and the reserves. We have taken action on all these proposals. I can give the hon. member information on what has been done as a result of these recommendations, what has been implemented to date, and what will be implemented in the future.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON PROJECTS TO INCREASE GROWTH

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Today is the third anniversary of the November 12 budget. In the past 90 days more than 168,000 Canadians have been laid off. During that same period of time Canadians representing every region of the country and virtually every occupation, and indeed finally Canadians in the back benches of the Liberal Party, have called for changes in the government's financial direction.

On Wednesday the minister indicated that he was prepared to consider "innovative projects intended to produce growth." Will the minister now tell us what those projects are?

• (1120)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this subject. Obviously members of the House are concerned about unemployment levels and lay-offs. I have stated in the House that within the current fiscal framework the government will undertake specific projects, and I have replied to the Leader of the Opposition that when any decisions are taken on this matter I will ensure that the decisions are announced, but decisions have not yet been taken.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, 33 per cent of the forestry workers in British Columbia are out of work. Fifty thousand auto workers are out of work. More than 480,000 young Canadians are out of work. How much longer do the people of this country—cumulatively almost a million and a half unemployed Canadians—have to wait before this government demonstrates some concern by bringing in new programs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member believes a number of specific new programs would solve the problems of these particular groups. I believe he is misleading them into that belief because it is my view that unless we succeed in bringing down the level of prices in this country we will not be able to solve the problem of unemployment. That is why I believe we must assume a firm anti-inflationary posture in order to create the conditions for renewed growth and for employment creation in the country. That is the basic thrust of the budget, and that is the basic policy of the government.

REASONS FOR POSITION TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in the past the minister has been fond of drawing our attention to the international situation. I point out to him that even a conservative administration like that of Ronald Reagan in the United States indicated last week that it is no longer preoccupied with the level of budget deficits. In Europe some time ago the government of France, and just some ten days ago the government of West Germany, announced major new initiatives to stimulate their economies because they are concerned about the people in their countries. They will not stand back and watch millions more become unemployed.

Does the failure of the Government of Canada to act at this point really demonstrate that, in terms of its ideas, it is either intellectually bankrupt or, in terms of its concerns about the people of Canada, morally indifferent? Or, frankly, is it both?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, just to comment on the hon. member's reference to the policy of the United States government, what is causing great concern in the United States and elsewhere is the projected level of the deficit in that country. Everybody seems to understand that if that deficit is maintained and grows larger, it will limit or remove any possibility of bringing down interest rates in the United States. Why have short-term interest rates gone up in the United States in the last week? It is partly because of the concerns which have been expressed about the projected level of the budget deficit in the United States.

If the hon. member is serious about creating jobs in Canada he will be as dedicated as I am to doing everything possible to bring down interest rates. He ignores that problem in all his questions because he seems to believe we can reach solutions in Canada and forget about rising prices and rising inflation.

The hon. member talked about West Germany. I remind him that even with the recent changes made by the West German government it is still maintaining a firm anti-inflation policy—

Mr. Broadbent: And stimulating the economy.

Mr. MacEachen: —and a restrictive fiscal policy. I would remind the hon. member that unemployment in West Germany, now at 8.2 per cent, is much higher than it has ever been in comparison with historical levels in that country. Their unemployment problem is very deep, greater than it ever has been, and greater than Canada's current unemployment based on historical levels.

• (1125)

The hon. member has talked about action taken by the West German government. I have looked at that very carefully and I do not believe it represents any basic change in their current fiscal policy. The things we are doing in Canada, I think, if added together, would create as much of an impression, fiscally, as what is being done by the West German government.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTER'S MEETINGS WITH LIBERAL MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday a second significant fissure in the Liberal caucus was disclosed by the hon. member for Kitchener, who gave an interview to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record in which he disclosed that he had received some 1,000 letters from his constituents complaining about the government's budget and economic policies. In the interview he stated that he was a member of a group of seven or eight Liberal MPs who had been meeting with the Minister of Finance to urge him to change his policies.

Can the Minister of Finance confirm the statement of the hon. member for Kitchener that he has been meeting with a group of seven or eight Liberal MPs of whom the hon. member for Kitchener is one, and that they have counselled the minister to change his policies along the lines of a short-term drop in the dollar, a short-term loosening of the money supply, greater long-term foreign investment, and a slowdown in the Canadianization program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I meet frequently with members of the Liberal caucus and I intend to continue to meet with members of the Liberal caucus. I do not believe the affairs of the Liberal caucus are a matter for questioning at this particular time, however. That is a matter for the Liberal caucus. It is not a matter of government administration which is the normal subject of questioning on the orders of the day.

PROPOSALS PUT FORWARD BY MEMBERS OF LIBERAL CAUCUS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister will be giving the same instructions to the hon. member for Kitchener as he gave to the rest of his colleagues earlier in the week.

I want to indicate to the minister that this was a public interview given by the member for Kitchener to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. May I ask the minister whether, as a matter of government policy, he is prepared to consider representations from members of caucus calling for a short-term drop in the dollar, the loosening of the money supply, a slowdown on the Canadianization policy, and greater long-term foreign investment, as was indicated by the hon. member for Kitchener?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): If the hon. member really wants to know what is happening in our caucus, I invite him to join. It is a very happy place to be.

QUERY RESPECTING PROPOSALS MADE BY CABINET MINISTERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is not necessary to join that caucus. We need only read the newspapers and the letters that the Minister of National Health and Welfare sends.

The matter raised by my colleague indicates a second group of Liberal MPs have made public their disagreement with the government's economic policy. That explains why the Liberals and New Democratic Party yesterday ran away from the opportunity for Members of Parliament to vote on the budget in this House of Commons.

The minister has said he will not discuss representations he is receiving from backbenchers because his Prime Minister regards them as mere nobodies. Perhaps he would accept the distinction relating to representations from cabinet ministers. Is the Minister of Finance now considering any specific proposals from any colleagues in cabinet for change in the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the answer to that specific question is no.

SPECIFIC PROPOSAL INQUIRY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, since the Minister of Finance is unsure whether he is the Minister of Finance, perhaps I should have directed the question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Let me put my question in a different way. Has the Minister of Finance received any specific proposals for change in the budget from any of his colleagues in cabinet?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

LETTER SENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did she suffer severe indigestion when she swallowed her letter of recommendation to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Cousineau: Be serious.

Mr. Clark: To put it in a more serious vein, the Minister of Finance has now denied receiving a letter which the Minister of National Health and Welfare had said publicly that she sent. How does the Minister of National Health and Welfare explain the difference between her word, given and published, and the word just given by the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as far as I understood the question, and in reply to the first part of it concerning indigestion, the answer is no, I never suffered from anything like that. The second part of the question had to do with the problem with the postal situation. I did not quite understand what letter to what minister he was talking about.

EXPLANATION SOUGHT OF LETTER'S FATE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we are all aware of the problems with the postal system. The Minister of National Health and Welfare showed temporary courage and acquired temporary notoriety when she deliberately published a letter to the Prime Minister containing recommendations to be considered by the Minister of Finance for changes in the budget. Since the Minister of Finance has now said that he has not received the recommendation, or indeed any recommendation for any change from any minister, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare explain to the House of Commons just what happened to her letter?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would be pleased to explain for the umpteenth time to the hon. Leader of the Opposition the work method we used, namely a letter which is, shall we say, public, easy to read, short and written by the ten members of east central Montreal who meet once a week to express the concerns of their respective ridings. The subject of this letter or of the topic selected is normally piloted by two members or one, depending on who is in charge. This one was indeed sponsored by two members. We all sign. In the future, of course, the two ministers will not sign! The group will continue its work and will select the mechanism of representation it deems the most appropriate.

Next Monday we will be in the port of Montreal but instead of writing a letter we will call a press conference after a public meeting. If the hon. member wants to see what east central Montreal is all about he is invited for a visit. In our caucus we do not muzzle people. I think that what matters is that the members expressed some concerns over an issue which perhaps happened to have national implications.

ENERGY

OWNERSHIP OF NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell the House why the government was not prepared to set aside its claim to the offshore and so instruct its representatives before the Federal Court, in order not to jeopardize the negotiations presently under way with the government of Newfoundland, and to create the proper climate for these negotiations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member is showing a misunderstanding of our position. For some 14 years now we have been setting aside the question of ownership and not referring the matter to the Supreme Court because we hoped to reach a political, negotiated solution which would be to the advantage of the people of Newfoundland and of the people of Canada. This has been our position since I have been in office, but years go by and the offshore is in a state of uncertainty as to the regulations which prevail. There was a case brought before the courts by the Seafarers' International Union. Apparently Newfoundland is still unable to reach a decision to negotiate with us in good faith while the ownership question is held in abeyance. This has been the situation for 12 or 14 years. The hon. member should not ask why we are not prepared to set ownership aside. We have done nothing but that in order to try to reach a negotiated agreement.

Sometime last July I wrote to the Premier of Newfoundland saying, "We cannot wait any longer, beyond the next six months, but let us try to reach a negotiated agreement by the end of February. I am just telling you that if we cannot, we will certainly take a reference on our own. We have been trying for years to obtain a negotiated agreement with you or, alternatively, to obtain a joint reference. You have been unable to do either. Newfoundland did not want to join the other maritime provinces when we signed an agreement in 1977. Please let us try to do it before the end of February."

Now, three weeks before the deadline, Premier Peckford is apparently waking up to I do not know what new reality, but he sent a telegram which indicated what I have been saying for 14 years—let us reach an agreement without going to the courts. I am not saying that it is a matter that the courts will never determine. It may be determined, for all we know, in the SIU case. What we are saying is that if we negotiate in good faith we can reach an agreement without knowing who really is owner under the Constitution, because the courts will not have decided by the end of February.

REQUEST THAT COURT ACTION BE DELAYED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that a political settlement is a much better settlement in the spirit of confederation than a judicial one. Accordingly, I ask him why his government did not agree to delay these proceedings while the negotiations were under way, even if it meant laying aside for the time being the federal government's claim to the offshore? He knows full well that as long as the decision is hanging over these negotiations obviously they cannot be conducted in a spirit of good will.

Mr. Lalonde: It is not our choice.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the special SIU case, it was not taken by the federal government. It was a case taken as a result of a decision by a board of the Newfoundland government, which the SIU is contesting. We have no influence on whether or not that case should be pursued. I understand that even the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources gave instructions to his lawyers not to make any point when the delay was requested by Newfoundland.

But returning to the main substance of the matter, we have been saying for 14 years what the hon. member said we should be saying—a political settlement is better. I have tried dozens of times in meetings with the premiers and through negotiations by ministers to reach a negotiated settlement, but obviously Newfoundland does not want to play that game. Newfoundland wants to drag out this thing forever, not realizing that it is against the interests of the people of Newfoundland since the offshore will not be developed as long as there is uncertainty as to the administrative problems there.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF ELIMINATING QUEBEC DENTAL CARE PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN IN SPITE OF FEDERAL FIFTY PER CENT CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister tell the House whether her Quebec counterpart sought her advice about the possibility of doing away with the dental care plan for young Quebecers and can she also tell us what the Canadian government contribution is to that Quebec health plan?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, no unfortunately, of course I was neither consulted nor informed by my counterpart, Minister Pierre-Marc Johnson, about the possible suppression of the dental care plan. As a Quebecer, I find it most unfortunate because all children in Quebec under age 15 are now provided with dental care under the medicare program. Now, the monthly medicare payments transferred by the Canadian government to the province of Quebec—I apologize, I will later give the hon. member the exact figure—are, for the current year a little over $2 billion and this amount is slightly less than 50 per cent of all health costs in Quebec including, by the way, dental care for children. Unfortunately, we cannot tell the provinces, because this is their entire responsibility, how to spend those funds and I feel that the public should of course be involved in this debate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—SANCTIONS CONTEMPLATED TO PROTEST IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. From the news this morning I take it the minister is contemplating recommending to cabinet that there be sanctions imposed against Poland. Could the minister say what form these sanctions will take and, particularly, whether they will be accompanied by any positive action to help the people of Poland? I am thinking particularly about the matter of overcoming food shortages. For example, will the minister contemplate having Canada make up some of the corn feed which was formerly supplied by the United States and is absolutely essential to prevent the loss of the poultry industry in Poland?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that I made any statement about what my recommendation to cabinet would be. I merely said that we would be considering the matter in the near future.

Canada has been doing a great deal to help the people of Poland. We are the principal suppliers of grains to Poland on a per capita basis, and shall continue doing that. We are not considering sanctions of that kind under foreseeable circumstances which would make it difficult for the people of Poland to maintain the minimum standards of life.

CORN FEED SANCTION IMPOSED BY UNITED STATES

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I would like the minister to answer specifically the question whether or not we contemplate making up the very serious shortfall caused by American action. I would be glad if the minister would do that. As the sanctions that are going to be imposed will most likely be diplomatic sanctions rather than economic sanctions, can the minister tell the House whether the government is also contemplating diplomatic sanctions or comparable sanctions against other countries which have repressive regimes that deny trade union rights and which often have a form of martial law? Are we contemplating sanctions against Chile, Turkey, the Philippines, South Africa?

An hon. Member: Be consistent over there.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not hidden our opinion of repression wherever it occurs in the world.

With respect to the question of making up shortfalls of grains to Poland, I would remind the hon. member that we have a long-term arrangement with Poland to supply grains during this year, and I am sure that the Canadian Wheat Board will supply that grain as rapidly as it is requested and as rapidly as we are able to make the supplies available.

Mr. Jarvis: What about corn feed?

Mr. MacGuigan: I do not know whether that is a feed, Madam Speaker. That is not under my responsibility. It comes under the aegis of the Canadian Wheat Board. I assume that most grains do. I am sure that the Canadian Wheat Board will do its best to make available all the grains we have and which the Polish government wants.

FINANCE

TRANSFER OF SALES TAX FROM MANUFACTURING TO WHOLESALE LEVEL

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his reply today to questions posed by the leader of the New Democratic Party, he mentioned that measures in the budget would bring down unemployment and interest rates. What about bringing down taxes? I call to the minister's attention a report that the raising of manufacturers' sales tax to the level imposed on wholesalers will add from 2 per cent to 6 per cent to the cost of living over and above the 12 per cent we are already experiencing. Will the minister now agree to hold back any actions in this regard until a white paper can be delivered on the subject and fully explored, so that the people of Canada will realize the tremendous implications of this tax grab?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is absolutely no tax grab suggested by the change in the sales tax. There is absolutely no increased revenue from that particular change. There is absolutely no additional revenue coming to the treasury. I can assure the hon. member of that.

Mr. Jarvis: You should read your own budget then.

Mr. MacEachen: With respect to the draft legislation, it will be made public, along with explanatory material, to give the public and interested parties ample opportunity to comment on the details of the proposed changes.

COST TO WHOLESALERS OF COLLECTING TAX

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, that is a remarkable answer. The increased level of sales tax will mean an automatic increase of 6 per cent in the first year alone. We have facts and figures from a number of reputable wholesalers to prove that. Inasmuch as there are 20,000 wholesalers that will now have to set up staffs and systems at great cost just to monitor the tax as well as having to remit it, how can the minister explain the fact that the cost to Canadians will not be dramatically increased? There will be a tax revenue generation of at least another 25 per cent plus the cost of collection, which will be passed on to the consumers and all subject to normal dealer-type mark-ups. This will raise the actual 77-cent tax increase on a $10 item to $1.02. In other words, 25 per cent more than the tax increase itself will be the added cost burden of administration and mark-up.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. member's conclusions at all. The sales tax changes are intended to have an entirely neutral effect on revenues. Obviously as business grows in the country there will be increases in the tax collections but these will not result from any change in the tax. In fact it is intended to decrease the level of tax from 9 per cent to 8 per cent.

Mr. Jarvis: You are going to grab millions.

Mr. MacEachen: The over-all effect in my view will neither be inflationary nor will it add to the cost of living.

As the hon. member may have noticed, I have replied to some comments in The Globe and Mail wherein I argued that case in some detail.

Mr. Clark: Monique understands it better.

Oral Questions

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PROPOSAL TO DELAY PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. There is a report today of a letter sent to the provincial deputy attorneys general requesting the federal government to drop Bill C-43 on freedom of information and to negotiate with the provinces a uniform freedom of information statute covering all governments. Is there any proposal that comes to the minister's mind that he can think of that could slow the process of freedom of information more than the one put forward by the Attorney General of Ontario, aided and abetted by the Attorney General of Saskatchewan? Will the minister tell the House now what his attitude is toward that ridiculous dinosaur-like proposal from the provincial attorneys general?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, this is a proposal that was embodied in a letter sent to me by the Attorney General of Ontario, Mr. Roy McMurtry. It is also a proposal that was discussed at the official level at a recent meeting of deputy attorneys general. Obviously, if there were a uniform approach and this approach could be dealt with quickly and the provinces and the federal governments could come to terms with a uniform approach then all people in this country who are interested in greater access to information from governments at all levels will benefit and the whole process of access to information will be the winner.

I am waiting now for replies from the other provinces to see whether or not this is a proposal they would endorse. As I indicated to the hon. gentleman earlier, it would then be my intention to go back to my cabinet colleagues with the various comments and recommendations made to me by the attorneys general of just about all the provinces.

CROWN PRIVILEGE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, it is clear from the answer that my hon. friend has abandoned the determination with respect to freedom of information on the federal level.

An hon. Member: Cut and run.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think we ought to inquire what else the minister has abandoned. The bill contains a provision with respect to doing away with Crown privilege. It contains a privilege with respect to independent judicial review which the minister said he was adopting, endorsing and clutching to his bosom. Is he going to throw that away too?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think it is indicated quite clearly that that was the position adopted by the government in Bill C-43. However, we did have a request addressed to us by the attorneys general of the provinces. The request came, as the hon. member knows, from the Attorney General of Saskatchewan who endorsed completely the position of the Attorney General of Ontario. Subsequently, that position received general support from all of the attorneys general with the possible exception of the Attorney General of Manitoba. They have asked us to sit down with them to try to iron out some of the difficulties which they foresaw with our legislation. I think the hon. member will agree with me that when you have a group of responsible people, such as the attorneys general of the various provinces, we should do our utmost to try to come to terms with the very real concerns in their minds which they have raised with us.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Don't get sucked in; that is all.

Mr. Fox: It seems to me that if we were simply to turn down a unanimous request from all of the attorneys general of the various provinces, the hon. member would be on his feet telling me that I was not acting in a way compatible with the true spirit of working federalism.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, he would not.

An hon. Member: McMurtry doesn't scare us.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

DEFICIT IN AUTO PARTS TRADE WITH JAPAN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his answer I sincerely hope he will not put pious diplomatic platitudes above Canadian jobs. My question has to do with the $4.35 billion trade deficit in auto parts, a great deal of which is attributed to our imbalance in trade in auto parts with Japan.

● (1150)

In view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce just broke off talks with the Japanese because they were not bargaining in good faith, and in view of the fact that the Japanese will flood the Canadian market between now and March 1, when the present agreement expires, what will the Secretary of State do to ensure that these talks get back on track quickly before this calamitous situation develops any further?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has a version of the facts which I do not possess.

Mr. Deans: He is probably right.

Mr. MacGuigan: Conversations with the Japanese on the question of restraints for the new automotive year have been progressing. They have not yet come to completion, but we are satisfied with the talks at this stage, and we plan to continue them with the Japanese.

I would remind the hon. member that these talks take place in the context of trade with Japan, in which Canada has a heavy surplus with Japan.

CANADIAN CONTENT IN JAPANESE MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs is aware of the fact that this deficit in auto parts with Japan has cost Canada 10,000 jobs in the auto industry. In view of that, I would like to ask the Secretary of State if he will bring all possible pressures to bear on these negotiations to guarantee that Japan will allow 85 per cent Canadian content in Japanese automobiles sold in Canada, which is similar to the agreement between Canada and Germany with respect to Volkswagen Canada Limited.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have a policy of allowing automotive companies from other countries to take advantage of certain tariff reductions in order to obtain the kind of arrangement about which the hon. gentleman speaks concerning Volkswagen. That arrangement is also open to the Japanese, and we are certainly in the process of encouraging them to take advantage of it. We will certainly be continuing talks with them to try to ensure the best possible arrangement for Canadians.

Mr. Deans: What is stopping them from taking advantage?

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON DENTAL CARE PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, one of the sad things about the budget is that the Minister of Finance does not seem to understand the implications of his tax measures as they affect real people. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether she is persuaded that the tax provisions relating to dental care and extended health care benefits are bad news for Canadians who want to protect their health. If she is persuaded that children will not get the same kind of dental care because of the added expense; is she taking steps to inform the Minister of Finance about this negative effect and, if so, could she tell us what steps she is taking?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the question of taxing contributions to dental and health care plans must be viewed in the context of equity. Most Canadians, whose employers do not offer to contribute to a dental care group plan or to an additional health plan, such as those providing for private or semi-private rooms, are not allowed to deduct their contributions to their private insurance plan for income tax purposes.

In his November budget, the Minister of Finance applied this general rule to those whose employers offered group insurance and who had enjoyed special taxation privileges for a very long time. As far as I am concerned, this is only fair.

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, could the Minister of National Health and Welfare explain to the House why she is concerned about the withdrawal of funds for dental care provided for children under the age of 15 in the province of Quebec, as she mentioned earlier, but she is not concerned that many millions of Canadians from all provinces will lose their dental care insurance provisions for children? Why is she concerned about the one situation and yet not concerned about the other?

Mr. Siddon: How about the whole country?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I believe that the hon. member, who is my official critic and who has not until now asked me very many questions, would have found it useful to be briefed by my department. I would be happy to organize such a briefing to explain to him how health care operates in Canada.

The Quebec health minister is now trying to do away with the public dental care program for all Quebec children under 15. This is what he is trying to do. This plan is paid for by all the taxpayers. The Canadian taxpayers pay about 50 per cent of the costs. This is unacceptable in view of the importance of dental health in one province, while on the other hand, in the proposals contained in the November budget, the Minister of Finance is correcting an injustice which allowed a few Canadians to deduct from their income tax the contributions paid by their employers to a group dental insurance plan. The two matters are not at all related. The other Canadians who could not join such a plan have had to pay the full cost. They will still have to pay the full cost. Nothing much will change in the health care system of Canada. This is a matter of equity.

PRESS REPORT ON JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who has undoubtedly noticed in his briefing book that the Canadian Press has been informed by one of his cabinet colleagues that the government is considering certain job-creation programs which could cost as much as $1 billion and may involve 100,000 jobs, and that his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has confirmed that a wide range of possibilities are being considered, which the Minister of State for Mines has also confirmed. Would the Minister of Finance inform the House if this is correct? Is it true that such job-creation programs of a new nature are being considered by the government and, in particular, by his department; if so, when may we hear some details?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, earlier yesterday, I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition that when any decisions were made, they would be announced. I have also indicated that I am not prepared to disclose what is going on—

Mr. Clark: That is not what you said.

Mr. MacEachen: —in the government. It is not customary to disclose the proceedings of the cabinet anywhere.

Mr. Clark: That is not what you said.

CONSIDERATION OF NEW PROGRAMS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I am sure that upon reflection the Minister of Finance will realize that that is not exactly what he said earlier. Would he answer the simple question: is he considering new programs as a result of requests made by one or more of his cabinet colleagues?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): The answer to that question is absolutely no. I have been listening to hon. members of the House of Commons, both here and in my own caucus, concerning various proposals. Obviously all of these ideas and possibilities are examined as a matter of course. Inasmuch as the hon. member has referred to the letter signed by a number of colleagues, I must say that so far as I am concerned, the letter is quite supportive—

• (1200)

Mr. Stevens: You better read it again.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, when the letter was first drawn to my attention I noticed that the members stated they were totally supportive of the necessity of overcoming price increases or the high level of prices in order to restore jobs and growth in the economy. That was the central thrust of the budget.

They also went on to say that they were not asking for excessive stimulus to the economy at the present time—

Mr. Nielsen: They said now.

Mr. MacEachen: —and to suggest a number of specific programs which might be considered. I thought it was fully in accordance with the statement I made in Toronto at the Canadian Club, and I must say I have never been able to get myself excited as others have about this letter and its alleged difference with government policy.

Mr. Clark: Why did you run away from the vote?

Mr. MacEachen: That is my answer to the letter and the hon. member's question. In my statements I have always held out—

Mr. Epp: Is that what Pierre said in caucus?

Mr. MacEachen: —the situation that specific targeted programs had been and would continue to be launched by the Government of Canada. That is the policy before the letter, since the letter, and the policy that I will follow.

CHANGING OF ANNOUNCED OPPOSITION DAY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, if that explanation is to be accepted seriously by members of this House, can the Minister of Finance on behalf of the government inform members why the government did not allow today's opposition day to proceed, which day was centred on the subject matter of that letter and which would have tested confidence in the government?

An hon. Member: Because the NDP did not want it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is nice to be slipping back for even a moment into my former job as House leader. I must say that if the hon. member believes that opposition day was postponed because we on this side thought we would lose support, that is absolutely wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Prove it, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: Any time you want to bring on a non-confidence motion it will be defeated, as the two non-confidence motions against the budget were defeated in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. members opposite had learned to run the House as we have learned, they would not be in the opposition today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid on the Table the 180th report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) on Thursday, February 11, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. GIMAÏEL—REFERENCE IN HOUSE TO MEMBERS BY NAME

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, it is with all due humility that I appeal to you on a point of order. During the presentation of motions under the provisions of Standing Order 43 at noon, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) used the name Trudeau when referring to the Prime Minister of Canada. Citation 319(1) on page 104 of Beauchesne clearly states the following:

319. (1) It is the custom in the House that no member should refer to another by name.

I shall go even further, Madam Speaker. I find it increasingly disturbing to hear this designation or words such as "dictator" in motions introduced in the House by the opposition. This is simply part of a plot by people such as Mr. McDermott, from western unions and by opposition parties to try to put the blame for all the problems in Canada on the shoulders of one person.

I believe, Madam Speaker, that it is only fitting that I should point out to you that the Canadian people elected Pierre Elliott Trudeau Prime Minister of Canada, and that, as members of this House, we should therefore refer to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada by stating the title the Canadian people have chosen to give him. He is the Prime Minister of our country. He is working for the welfare of Canadians, and I find it unacceptable for people whether they were elected or not, to break the rules of this assembly in an effort to criticize, discredit and misrepresent the Prime Minister. Madam Speaker, if such people want to break the rules of the House by calling the Prime Minister a "dictator", as Mr. McDermott and others in Canada are doing, they should do so outside this honourable assembly, which is governed by well-established rules.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that it is not just the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who is responsible for bringing wrack and ruin on this country; it is all those members who are supporting that government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: All of them! Particularly the ones who will not speak out on behalf of their own constituents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: They are afraid of their constituents, they are afraid of the electorate—

Mr. Cousineau: Order!

Mr. Nielsen: —and now they are afraid to test the confidence in their own Prime Minister and government in the House.

Mr. Cousineau: Order!

Some hon. Members: Go get them, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't let those sinners cast the first stone—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —because I have heard those members over there launch organized attacks on the leadership of this party ever since the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker was that leader, and I have been here and listened to it since that time. Indeed, on one occasion the members across the way were audibly hissing and the right hon. gentleman stood up at the time and said, "There are only three species of the animal kingdom that I know can hiss,"—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Nielsen: —"geese, snakes and lizards. Will the hon. gentlemen please stand up and identify themselves?"

The point of order, Madam Speaker, has no merit whatsoever. We endeavour to stay within the rules in referring to the right hon. gentleman. I only wish that hon. members across the way would do the same thing when the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Clark) stands to be heard in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is quite right when he says that members of this House should be referred to in a certain way and not by their name. Things go so fast when a motion under Standing Order 43 is introduced that I was clearly under the impression that the hon. member used the word "Trudeau" as an adjective, such as in "the Trudeau administration" or "the Trudeau period." This is why I let it pass, but the comment of the hon. member has been acknowledged.

[English]

MR. HAWKES—DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF HANSARD COPIES TO CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, earlier today when motions under Standing Order 43 were being made, I rose and expressed my feeling that the procedure employed by the government House leader yesterday had in fact been a new form of closure which denied all members of the House the opportunity to express their views of the cabinet, that small group of members of the House who are in fact the executive branch. I intended today, either on a point of order or question of privilege, after I had the opportunity to read Hansard, to see whether or not that argument could be advanced based on the record as we were to find it in Hansard.

I am wondering, in view of the fact we do not have Hansard today, if you might commit yourself to investigating and perhaps reporting later today to the House why, after a normal Thursday sitting, we do not have Hansard available to enable us to pursue this argument with the necessary vigour, in light of the importance it has for democracy, so that all members, may express themselves as to their confidence in cabinet and its management of the financial affairs of the country.

Madam Speaker: Well, the hon. member poses a few problems for me. I do not know whether he rises on a point of order or question of privilege. At any rate, I want to tell him that Hansard has been printed on time this morning, it seems.

Mr. Clark: No, no.

An hon. Member: Here it is.

Madam Speaker: I will have to find out why some hon. members have not received it, but it seems that it was ready because I was able to consult it myself. However, if the hon. member wishes to bring up a question of privilege, I will hear him if he gives me notice. If, after he has consulted Hansard, he feels he has a question of privilege, he can present it.

• (1210)

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I saw that members on the other side had Hansard. The page just brought me one. I will proceed to look and see if I can find it. My original request was to examine why we did not receive it on time. If it was on the other side and not on this side, I wonder if you might look into that as well.

Madam Speaker: I will certainly inquire into that. We usually distribute Hansard to everyone at the same time. I will see why the hon. member did not receive it.

MR. NIELSEN—PRINTING IN ORDER PAPER OF FILED OPPOSITION MOTION—CHANGES TO ORDER PAPER MADE BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a very serious point of order. Before laying it before the Chair, let me say that I was seriously impeded in my preparation for this point of order by not having received Hansard for yesterday's proceedings. Obviously members on the government side have received it but it is not in my—the parliamentary secretary held up his copy. Mine is not here. Obviously there is a delay.

As the Chair knows, there has been an effort made by the government House leader, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on behalf of his party and by me to seek a meeting with the Chair to discuss this very subject because it is the observation of many of us that new stresses and strains and tensions are being imposed on Hansard and it has reached a very serious point in a deterioration of the morale. These tensions may have something to do with Hansard appearing late, so I would urge that that meeting be brought about as early as possible.

The point of order that I wish to raise concerns the official publications of the House and the treatment of the items that are placed in those publications for consideration as the business of the House. In order to present it in a logical fashion, I believe it would be of assistance if we were to backtrack for one week.

First, the business for the consideration of the House was announced a week ago last Thursday, February 4, by the government House leader. At that time he announced that Friday, February 12 would be set aside—designated, as the Standing Orders say—for the consideration of an allotted day.

Let me say at this stage that it may well be that during the presentation of the argument on this point, I may inadvertently reflect on part or parts of the ruling which you made yesterday, which I have not had the opportunity of reading in Hansard because I do not have Hansard. Let me assure you that it is not my intention in any manner whatsoever to reflect on the ruling of the Chair of yesterday, should I unintentionally transgress on that ground.

Let me read now the Order Paper following upon the announcement Thursday by the government House leader, the Order Paper and Notices for Friday, February 5, 1982. At page 2 the Chair will note that Friday, February 12, has been designated as (Allotted Day—Supply). That is in italics and in brackets. It follows the item Government Orders which in turn follows the item Questions on the Order Paper. In the same Order Paper and Notices for that date there appears at page VII the following entry:

58(4)(a)

Note: Friday, February 12, 1982—Third allotted day for the supply period ending March 26, 1982.

I submit that from that moment on an opposition member could have filed a notice of motion under Standing Order 58.

The Order Paper for Monday, February 8, 1982 is exactly the same, save for the exception that the item "Friday, February 12, Questions on the Order Paper, Government Orders (Allotted Day—Supply)" has moved up one notch because, of course, Friday has disappeared, the business of that day having been disposed of. Again in that Order Paper of Monday, February 8, we find at page III at the back of the Order Paper the same notice given under 58(4)(a) under supply.

Again the next day of that week, Tuesday, February 9, 1982, the Order Paper carries the item on page 2, again having moved up one slot, the business of Monday having been disposed of. Again the designation (Allotted Day—Supply) appears there. Again on that Order Paper for Tuesday, February 9, at page V, we find the same notice of supply proceedings designating the allotted day for the following Friday.

On Wednesday, February 10, the Order Paper and Notices again carries the item on page 2. Again it has moved up one slot, but still it is there, designated as an allotted day. At page IX of the Order Paper for February 10, the same notice as has appeared on the preceding Order Papers appears again.

On Thursday, February 11, yesterday, on page 2 of the Order Paper we see that the top item, because the item has moved up day by day until it is at the top of the Order Paper for Thursday, reads, "Friday, February 12, Questions on the Order Paper, Government Orders", and the next item in brackets and italics, is (Allotted Day—Supply).

Again at page XI there appears, and I will read it again because at this stage it becomes critical to my point of order:

NOTICES OF SUPPLY PROCEEDINGS

Note: Friday, February 12, 1982—Third allotted day for the supply period ending March 26, 1982.

I want to emphasize and underline the fact that that notice, which has been carried throughout the week and the preceding Friday, stipulated, following the word "Note", the date Friday, February 12, 1982. I underscore that.

As the Chair appreciates, under our Standing Orders there must be 24 hours' notice filed in order to set the allotted day down for debate. It is past history that notice of that motion was set down at 1.12 in the afternoon of Thursday, February 11. The motion that was set down first, I point out, bore no date. It was as follows:

NOTICE OF MOTION PURSUANT
58(9)

That in the opinion of this House the government should immediately implement the recommendations contained in a letter to the Prime Minister, dated February 3, 1982, signed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) and certain Members of Parliament, which urged the government to proceed with the "immediate creation" of two new programs to create employment in key sectors of the economy by stimulating domestic housing construction and by launching a program to enable private enterprise to hire young Canadians, and the House strongly endorses the position of the authors of the said letter when they wrote:

"Mr. Prime Minister, we urge you to adopt these measures as soon as possible, because we are convinced that they are necessary right now . . ."

I underscore that that motion was set down by notice at 1.12 p.m. on Thursday, February 11, well within the time required by the Standing Orders to set it down. I should also add that I did place on the motion a restriction as to its release. I placed a restriction that it was to be released at 6 p.m. yesterday. However, that release does not stop the mechanics of the House of Commons from operating.

As I am sure the Chair appreciates, the motion is then normally passed to Journals where copies are no doubt made for the translators, the typists and whatever other procedures there are which require copies. My point is that the machinery is immediately set in motion so that the motion can appear on the next day's Order Paper, as indeed is the long-established practice and custom of the House of Commons.

I would now point out that on today's Order Paper—incidentally, I did receive today's Order Paper early this morning as well as the Votes and Proceedings, but not Hansard—we see a change on page 2, the last item, "Friday, February 19". It is no longer Friday, February 12. Then there is Questions on Order Paper. Government Orders is the next item, and the next item in italics is (Allotted Day—Supply).

At the back of the Order Paper on page XXXV we see this notice, "Notices of Supply Proceedings Pursuant to Standing Order 58(4)(a). Note: Friday, February 19, 1982—Third allotted day for the supply period ending March 26, 1982." Again, a change from February 12 to February 19.

At this point may I depart in support of my submission to you, Madam Speaker, that that change is not in accordance with proper practice and indeed with past practice. The example of this Order Paper which I will deal with has been repeated all the way back in the treatment of allotted days since they first came into practice in the House, which I believe was in 1969 or 1970. For example, in the Order Paper for Monday, January 25, 1982, there appears on page 2 at the top of the order for Tuesday, January 26, the following day, Questions on Order Paper, Government Orders and then the next order, (Allotted Day—Supply). At the back of the Order Paper for January 25, 1982, there appears the standard form of notice, "Notices of Supply Proceedings Pursuant to Standing Order 58(4)(a). Note: Tuesday, January 26, 1982—First allotted day for the supply period ending March 26, 1982."

Now, the next day's Order Paper for Tuesday, January 26, 1982, sets out at page 2 the next week's business. But the important part to be observed in the Order Paper for January 26 is that at the back of it where notices normally appear we see at page XXV:

58(4)(a)

Business of Supply—First no-confidence motion for the supply period ending March 26, 1982.

January 25, 1982—That in the opinion of this House the opposition of Canadians from all walks of life, as expressed to the Members of Parliament of all three parties, proves conclusively that the budget of November 12, as amended by the statement in this House by the Minister of Finance on December 18, should be withdrawn and immediately replaced by a new budget.—The Leader of the Opposition.

Note: Not later than 9.45 o'clock p.m, every question necessary to dispose of proceedings shall be put forthwith in accordance with Standing Order 58(9).

January 25 is the date that has been placed on it by the Table. My point here is that the Order Paper contained a verbatim text of the motion that was filed. Here is where there has been a departure. I looked at today's Order Paper when I received it in my office and found that the text of the motion which I filed yesterday did not appear.

Now, I did not withdraw it. I did not give any indication that I was going to withdraw the motion that was standing in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I fully expected to see that motion on the Order Paper, but it is absent. I submit that the proper practice would have been to print, verbatim, the text of that motion. To be fair to the Table officers, it may well have been assumed that, as a result of yesterday's proceedings, I wanted to leave the door open for changing or substituting a different motion. However, with great respect to the professionalism of the Table officers, they were not entitled to make that assumption. I submit that our Standing Orders and practices require that the text of that motion should have been printed today and that it was indeed an innocent oversight in not having it so printed. Indeed, it might be my selection on the advice of my colleagues that I want the motion to remain there, now that it is public, for consideration on the allotted day that the government has altered to next Friday. There is nothing to prevent me, or any other opposition member, as soon as the notice appears in the back of the Order Paper, from filing with the Table a notice of motion immediately following the first appearance of that notice on the Order Paper.

For instance, in the case of this allotted day, it started appearing on the Order Paper a week ago today. On that Friday, any opposition member could have filed a notice of motion with the Table, and it seems to me our past practices would have compelled the printing of that motion on the following Monday, and on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Naturally, it is not printed the day before. Normal circumstances are that notice of the text of the motion on an allotted day is filed some time the day before, sometimes at noon or two o'clock or three o'clock, but as soon as it is filed, it is sent down and it appears on the next day's Order Paper.

I believe that the verbatim text of that motion was omitted, and it should be the ruling of the Chair, together with an order of the Chair, that it be printed until I choose to withdraw it, if I so choose between now and next Friday.

There is a further associated point to this whole matter. It relates to the Order Paper. That is, the right of the government, merely by verbal announcement, to alter an item appearing on the Order Paper.

In this case the government House leader made an announcement yesterday that today would not be an allotted day because there was more important legislation to be considered and that Bill C-78 was so important and urgent it had to replace our allotted day. By that announcement, today's Order Paper reflects two changes. It reflects a change on page 2 where the item of business is given a different date, and it is changed at the back of the Order Paper where notices normally appear, again changing the date.

I submit that the government has no right to take that unilateral action, and I submit again—with my own personal respect for the professional capabilities of the Table—that the Table has no right unilaterally to substitute one date for another. I say that with respect, but indeed that is what has happened.

In order to found my argument that neither the government House leader nor the Table has that right I will have to refer to the standing orders. The Chair referred to one of the Standing Orders yesterday, namely Standing Order 18. It reads:

All items standing on the orders of the day, except government orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the Order Paper.

That is the purpose, of course, of having page 2 of the Order Paper set the business out day by day and under each day setting it out item by item. Standing Order 18(2) provides:

Government orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

I underscore the words "government orders". The government is only entitled to call in such sequence as the government determines government orders. The government is not entitled to apply that Standing Order to any other order of business.

I refer now to Beauchesne's fifth edition as it deals with the business of supply at page 167 Under "The Business of Supply" Citation 475 states:

The business of supply consists of the consideration of main, or supplementary estimates, including motions to restore or reinstate any item in the estimates, interim supply, the passage at all stages of any bill based thereon, and opposition motions considered on allotted days.

Citation 476 reads:

The action taken by the House of Commons, upon the request for aids and supply for the public service made in the Speech from the Throne, is for the appointment, pursuant to S.O. 58(1), of a continuing order of the day for the consideration of the business of supply.

Citation 477:

The estimates of a department or agency of the government are referred to and considered in the various standing committees, where the members have an opportunity to agree to, negative, withdraw, reduce or supersede each vote of the estimates.

Let me submit at this point of my argument that if the House has received the report of estimates from committee, notice of concurrence normally appears at the back of the Order Paper in the same place that allotted days appear. Once received, they stand there day after day after day until concurrence is moved by a member. Then they drop off the Order Paper. That again is in support of my contention that notice is there. An allotted day should be treated in a similar fashion. More important, Citation 478(1) at page 167 of Beauchesne states:

Under the terms of SO 58(5), twenty-five days are allotted to the business of supply in each year. Although technically the business under discussion is government business, motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition to the government.

Here appears the important sentence:

To this extent, there is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business with respect to SO 18.

There is a clear distinction. This perhaps comes close to touching on the ruling of the Chair yesterday, but I am focusing my argument on my right as an opposition member in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to have that motion on the Order Paper.

Citation 478 goes on to spell out, in subparagraph (2), the supply periods and the limitation of the number of votes on the allotted days during each supply period. Subparagraph (3) is irrelevant for the purposes of my argument. Citation 479(1) is relevant. It reads:

The choice of subjects to be raised on allotted days rests with the opposition; hence, the interchangeable terminology "allotted" or "opposition" day.

Citation 479(2) reads:

The opposition prerogative is very broad in the use of the allotted day and ought not to be interfered with except on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds.

The authority for that is cited as Journals, November 14, 1975 at pages 861 to 862. I advance that citation in support of my argument that no one has the right to refuse to publish in the orders of the day the text of the motion filed yesterday, and certainly not on the mere oral fiat of the government House leader. It must not be interfered with "except on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds." If there were clear and certain procedural grounds as to why the text of that motion did not appear on the Order Paper, I would have thought that not only would I have been extended the courtesy of an explanation why it was not there, by telephone or otherwise, but also that some kind of explanation would have been forthcoming as to what kind of clear and certain procedural grounds justified the elimination of the printing of the text of that motion.

Citation 480 reads:

On an opposition day, when a non-confidence motion may be proposed on a subject to be chosen by the mover, the Speaker should not intervene to prevent debate unless the motion is clearly and undoubtedly irregular. When the procedural aspect is open to reasonable argument, it is the duty of the Speaker to accept the motion and to allow the House to make a decision on the question of confidence.

A Journals citation appears as authority.

There follows Citation 481, which is not relevant.

Citation 482 reads:

On an allotted day, during consideration of the business of Supply, an amendment must not provide the basis for an entirely different debate than that proposed in the original motion.

That does not apply either.

The substance of the argument I am advancing for the retention on the Order Paper of the text of the motion filed yesterday in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition applies equally, in my submission, to the text of the motion filed during question period yesterday by a member of the New Democratic Party. I am not aware of the name of the hon. member in whose name that motion stands, but, in my submission, that too should appear subsequent to—since it was filed subsequently—the text of the motion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition on the back of the Order Paper. The importance of that rests in Standing Order 58(4)(b) where an onus arises that must be discharged by the Chair. I will just read that for the record:

● (1240)

(b) When notice has been given of two or more motions by members in opposition to the government for consideration on an allotted day, Mr. Speaker shall have power to select which of the proposed motions shall have precedence in that sitting.

If my contention is correct, I strongly urge it upon the Chair that the text of those motions should have appeared on today's Order Paper, and then it would be at the election of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), or myself, on the advice of our respective leaders or of caucus members, to see that it remains there and is dealt with next Friday. That is our decision; it is not the decision of the government House leader or of the Table. Then that onus rests on your Honour which must be discharged by you in selecting which of the motions will be debated next Friday, assuming, of course, that the government House leader does not change his mind again and put the allotted day somewhere else.

That brings me to the last point that I want to make. Because the Standing Orders are silent on this point and because of the uniqueness of yesterday's occurrence—I cannot recall an instance in my time here when the government has, at the eleventh hour, as it were, changed the allotted day. That course was followed and then the question arises of what is the proper method of doing that. It is my submission that logically our practices and procedures here would dictate that before a notice standing on the Order Paper can be altered in any respect—and this is a very important respect, namely the change in the date—and before any addition or omission to the Order Paper in the order of business can be made, if for no other reason because of the citation in Beauchesne's in support of the opposition having this right, a motion has to be made by the government if it intends to change the Order Paper.

Once that allotted day is designated, past practices indicate that the date does not change. The question has never arisen before. I suggest to the Chair, however, that on the proper action of the government under Standing Order 32(1)(p) relating to the conduct of the business of the House, the motion could have been made to change the date in the item that normally appears on page 2 of the Order Paper and to change the date at the back of the Order Paper where it logically and traditionally appears.

There is one further submission in support of which is Citation 478(1) of Beauchesne's fifth edition which appears at page 167 and reads as follows:

> To this extent, there is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business with respect to SO 18.

That is the Standing Order which permits the government, in its discretion, to alter the sequence of the consideration of government business. If that distinction did not exist and if it had not been recognized all this time, then we would not see on page 2 of the Order Paper in every single instance, in my submission, although I have not checked them all, the order of business set out as it regularly has been. For instance, on January 25, 1982, the first item set out was "Questions on the Order Paper"; the second item was "Government Orders", and indeed the next item appears in italics. Simply because the item appears in italics does not afford it the kind of distinction that Beauchesne is talking about and that our Standing Orders are talking about. My submission is that there appears (Allotted Day—Supply) on a separate line. That is because it is a separate item and not because it is part of government orders, which I submit it is not. That is in support of my argument that the text must appear on the Order Paper, not wishing to reflect upon your ruling of yesterday.

I have already pointed out that there is no date on the motion that was filed. I want to cite one more Standing Order for your consideration before taking my seat. This may well give rise to another point that I may wish to make later today or perhaps on Monday. Standing Order 58(12) reads as follows:

> On any day or days appointed for the consideration of any business under the provisions of this Standing Order,—

The words "any day or days appointed for the consideration of any business under the provisions of this Standing Order" deal with the whole spectrum of supply, Madam Speaker. It goes on:

> —that order of business shall have precedence over all other government business in such sitting or sittings.

Nothing could be more explicit; nothing could be clearer than Standing Order 58(12).

I say that, Madam Speaker, because it bears on a point of order or a question of privilege which I intend to raise if not today, then certainly on Monday. Thank you for your patience in hearing me out, Madam Speaker. The argument has necessarily been long because of its complexity and because yesterday was the first time this has happened. It is of crucial importance to the House that this kind of procedure be cleared up in a way that is fair to all members of the House, but particularly to all members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Just before I hear other members who want to speak on the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) could I ask him to help me with a question which came to my mind as he was giving his references and developing his argument. I refer to page 167 of Beauchesne, Citation 478(1) where the following appears:

> Although technically the business under discussion is government business, motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition—

That explains that usually government business is brought in by the government, and technically this is government business, but members of the opposition may move the motion. It goes on to say, and this is the quotation which the hon. member emphasized to me, as follows: "To this extent, there is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business—." Does the hon. member take the words "To this extent" to apply to more than the fact that "motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition."? "To this extent" to me explains "motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition to the government." Could the hon. member answer that question for me?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, I see the point that you raise, Madam Speaker. I do not believe the interpretation of that sentence should be limited to its application only to the right of opposition members to move under supply. There is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business in Standing Order 18. Citation 478(1) reads as follows:

> Under the terms of Standing Order 58(5) twenty-five days are allotted to the business of supply in each year. Although technically the business under discussion is government business—

Why "technically?" It is because supply is government business. Why "technically?" Because technically the government can deal with the item under supply. It is my submission that this is the very reason for the existence of Standing Order 58(2), which reads:

For the purposes of this order, the business of supply shall consist of motions to concur in interim supply, main estimates and supplementary or final estimates; motions to restore or reinstate any item in the estimates; motions to introduce or pass at all stages any bill or bills based thereon; and opposition motions that under this order may be considered on allotted days.

The only reason that sentence is there is to permit the opposition to test the government on its supply, to the extent there is a distinction between the business of supply, which is government business, and Standing Order 18. That is the distinction, as I see it. It is not limited, it is not there for the purposes of saying that government members cannot move motions on allotted days; that is not its purpose. The purpose is to distinguish it from the government business of supply, in my submission.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a couple of brief observations to the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). First, I point out that in opening his argument he made repeated references to the fact that on the notice paper for the last few days reference had been made to today as being an allotted day. It is important to remember that while the notice paper is appended to the Order Paper for the sake of convenience, we are still talking about notice. Something which is notice is not an order, it is not a motion, and because of this it can be removed without a motion or does not require consent since the House is not yet seized of it. There is no obligation to proceed with a notice.

I thank the hon. member for his frequent references to Citation 478 of Beauchesne's on page 167, which reads:

Although technically the business under discussion is government business—

It is government business. Once it is government business, it falls under the purview of Standing Order 18(2), which reads:

Government orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

As to the sequence of events which led up to the events of yesterday, it is interesting to read Hansard and the version given by the hon. member for Yukon. Also it is interesting to read the version of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Members are free to make their choice as to whichever version they prefer. But I do not think anything that has been said about the sequence of events gets away from the fact that we are still talking about a day of government business and that it is up to the government to call it, when it sees fit, pursuant to Standing Order 18(2).

There were also some references to the professionalism of the Table with regard to that. I am sure the hon. member for Yukon was not implying that there was a leak of the subject matter prior to the hour. If there was, certainly I am not aware of it. I do not think he was implying that, but if he was not I am not quite sure why there were so many frequent references to it.

The only other point I should like to make is in regard to whether or not the wording of the motion should have been placed on the notice paper. On that point I have some sympathy with the hon. member for Yukon. I would not agree with him if the notice had been dated, but he advised the House, if I understood him correctly, that it was not dated. I do not know whether or not the notice filed by the New Democratic Party was dated. If it was not dated then I, for one, think he has a valid point and I do not dispute anything he said with regard to that item.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief because I think much of the ground which can be covered has been covered. I begin by saying that I see the issue as two distinctly different matters. In the first instance we are dealing with whether or not the motions as filed should have appeared on the notice paper. If it were to be Madam Speaker's decision that the key question was the matter of dating or not dating, then it is my recollection with regard to the motion we put down for debate today that in fact we dated it. If that were to be key to Your Honour's decision, then of course we dated it for today's discussion and I would submit that by dating it we, therefore, priorized it. In so doing, had the question of the opposition allotted day not arisen yesterday, by virtue of the fact that we dated our motion for today, and by virtue of the fact that the official opposition motion was undated, our motion would have, could have and should have taken precedence.

However, given that that may not be a factor, I want to say—and I think the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) put it well—that it is entirely appropriate to have on the notice paper more than one motion for debate on a particular allotted day, and that it is entirely appropriate to have the motion filed immediately after the allotted day has been designated. Thus we could have quite easily filed our motion, as could the official opposition have filed its motion, some four or five days prior to yesterday. Therefore, that would have necessitated those motions appearing on the notice paper. If one were to look at it from a purely technical point of view, which I think is important and imperative in making a decision such as this, I think it is true that the motions filed should have appeared on today's notice paper, albeit today, as it turned out, is not to be an allotted day. That is really not a factor to be taken into consideration.

Now I want to turn to my second point concerning the argument that once the opposition has been given notice of the decision to allot a day for consideration of an opposition motion, the allotted day cannot be altered without a motion. While I would like to support the argument, I find great difficulty in doing so since the practice, as I understand it, and having had an opportunity to review it during the discourse of the hon. member for Yukon, has always been that allotted days are not put down by motion but simply announced. Therefore, the announcement of the government House leader that there would be an allotted day was acceptable, and the announcement of the government House leader that there would not be an allotted day must also be acceptable.

If we are to change the Standing Orders and make it necessary to have a motion put, then we should have that discussion at another time. It may well be that we in this party would want to have a motion in future which ties down the allotted day and which sets out quite clearly by motion of the House that a particular day has been agreed upon as an allotted day and therefore is to stand subject only to any amendment which may subsequently be offered and accepted by the House. But this would be a departure from the practice we have used up to this point.

May I call it one o'clock?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I will not be too long, I just want to finalize the remarks I began to make just before we broke for lunch.

As I see it what you have before you, Madam Speaker, are two questions. One is whether or not the text of a proposed motion to be dealt with on an allotted day should appear on the Order Paper and Notices. I think there is sufficient argument before you now to enable you to make a decision on that without too much difficulty.

The second question is probably more important, both in terms of the immediate problem which has confronted us over the past two days, but also in terms of how we might deal with matters such as this in the future. I think it requires a considerable amount of thought. I know you will do that, and I hope other members will do likewise because this question is of vital importance.

As I see it, having thought about the matter over lunch, the question is whether an allotted day is in fact government business and therefore subject to the normal ordering of government business within the latitude given to the House leader for the government or whether the House leader has to deal technically in a different way with the calling of House business for an allotted day than he would for any other day.

I would submit there is no question that an allotted day is different from a normal government business day. The primary difference is the difference which my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon indicated, about which he was questioned by you. In other words, the difference is simply that an opposition member on that particular day is given the primary responsibility for moving a motion, but on all other counts the day remains a government day.

I want to say to you that what my wishes might be are of little consequence. How I might like it to be does not matter very much. It is how it is that makes the difference in a situation such as this, and whether we want to change it.

It is quite clear, if one looks at issues of Order Paper and Notices going back as far as one might want to look, that even an allotted day appears under government orders. I would suggest, by virtue of that and given the references in Beauchesne to allotted days—albeit allotted days are referred to in the technical sense as a government order—it would appear historically that they have been treated as a government order for the purpose of ordering business of the House. Therefore, it must be decided whether the government has to do anything specific in order to change the government orders.

I looked very carefully at that over lunch and I came to the conclusion that, although I would prefer the government being required to move motions to alter the orders of the day as it would want to alter them from time to time—and I want to differentiate between orders of the day as they are set out in the Standing Orders and the orders to be called within any specific order—by virtue of that fact, orders to be called within any specific order are at the discretion of the government House leader and that the government House leader may, if he wishes, or may not if he so desires, call any order that appears legitimately on the Order Paper and Notices.

Therefore, I come to the conclusion somewhat reluctantly that the method of determining whether an allotted day would be called or set off to another time remains within the purview of the government House leader.

What does not remain within the purview of the government House leader is whether there will be allotted days. That is quite clear. It is set out in the Standing Orders that there will be a certain number of allotted days to be called during a specific period of the sittings of the House, and that can be altered only with unanimous consent.

So I suggest that on the one hand we have it quite clearly before us that allotted days in the specified number must be made available to the opposition, but the determination of which days will be allotted remains the purview of the government. If it is to be considered that the allocation of that allotted day is government business, then the government House leader can either call that on the day he designates or he can change the day. In this instance I think he chose the latter, for whatever reason, and however much I would like to argue he cannot, I think he can and I know he did.

Therefore, I submit that on the first question, yes, I agree wholeheartedly with the House leader for the official opposition, the motion should have appeared with the one caveat mentioned earlier, that is, whether or not the dating of the motion is to be given consideration. I would urge that it not be found to be of importance in terms of whether the motion should appear on the Order Paper, but by the same token I would argue that for the balance, undesirable though the procedure might be, it would appear to me to be consistent with practice and with the laws as they pertain to the running of Parliament.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the NDP House leader in what I take to be some support for the position taken by the government House leader yesterday. I think it exemplifies some things which have bothered me, as a new Member of Parliament, about the functioning of Parliament and a certain lack of precision, and the possibilities arising out of that for the philosophy we hold to sort of take over and take us to a particular perspective.

I think the counterargument to the NDP House leader is really found in pages 3 to 7 of Beauchesne where it clearly tells us that the rules of the House are to protect us from the tyranny of a majority. We have used that phrase on many occasions in debate related to orders, but yesterday we faced a government decision to change the orders of the day, and there has been some argument presented in relation to that. However, the perspective presented by the NDP House leader, and I think by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) relates to the use of Standing Order 18(2), which says that:

> Government orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, on first reading that looks like a fairly precise paragraph, but its interpretation hinges on the word "determines." If we consider that the cabinet has an untrammelled right, then it is conceivable the government House leader can rise on a point of order in the middle of a debate and change the orders of the day, and move abruptly from debate for which members have prepared themselves to one for which they have not. That is the principle upon which the government and NDP House leaders have essentially based their argument, that a small group of people in cabinet have an untrammelled right to step on the remaining 250 members' rights to advance their arguments.

Yesterday, Madam Speaker, the government acted on that principle, that they had the right to take away an allotted day, not a day given to an opposition party, but in principle a day which had been determined in advance by the government as being available to any and all members who were or might be opposed to government policies, or who might like the opportunity to indicate whether or not they were so opposed.

Members of this House who had arranged their schedules, put their notes together and had their arguments ready were denied by that move the opportunity to express their collective will. As a member of the Conservative Party of Canada standing here today, Madam Speaker, I would have liked that allotted day to have occurred, I would have liked to have had at five o'clock that vote in which the government, the 30 or 35 members of cabinet, sought the approval of the House for their economic policy, and I would have liked those who were opposed to have had the opportunity to stand up and so indicate. If the government had fallen, Madam Speaker, we would have been in a general election and the voters of this country could have determined whether or not they were in accord with government policy.

Madam Speaker: I would like to ask the hon. member to keep to the point of order brought up by the hon. member for Yukon. Some of the points he is now discussing have been dealt with, and he is also arguing a point as if the debate had been allowed to take place. I urge him to speak to the point of order. I think when we listen to points of order, relevance has to be observed.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I read that part of the rules about relevance this morning and I am sorry if I have strayed a bit. The point of order which the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raises is based on the very nature of our rules of order in which there is some imprecision, and when faced with that imprecision it is then the job of the Speaker of the House to rule on its interpretation. We have the opportunity, when allowed, to stand in this chamber and try to provide you with our sense of wisdom about how you should rule in such cases.

My support for the hon. member for Yukon, my intervention, is essentially based on what I think are the principles which should guide you in making those very close decisions. I suggest the point of order raised by the hon. member is one of those close decisions where the rules are somewhat imprecise and are, to some extent, in conflict, as different speakers have indicated, and therefore that very difficult decision falls on your shoulders.

I would like to indicate that what we are dealing with here is the power of ordinary members of the House, those 250 who do not serve in cabinet, to hold that cabinet accountable to this chamber. I said I would like a result which led to a general election, but that was never likely. Possible, but not likely. What was more realistic and more likely was that government members who normally supported that cabinet were to be given an opportunity, in the 24 hours preceding that vote, to indicate to the government that unless it changed those things of importance to them which would have been in the motion, they might withhold their support.

Mr. Smith: You are dreaming.

Mr. Hawkes: They could have made the government change the policy in a manner which should be obvious to everyone, in a manner the Canadian people and the majority of the hon. members in the chamber would want.

Mr. Smith: Dream on.

Mr. Hawkes: That is why these opportunities exist in our rules. That is what lies behind the principle of a vote of confidence, and that is what lies behind the need for hon. members to be aware, some time in advance, of the existence of such a day so that they can arrange their affairs on behalf of the people they represent, so that they can be here in this chamber at that allotted time, on that allotted day, to fulfil their obligation to the people who sent them to this chamber.

When we consider the right of government to determine the order of business to be untramelled in its ultimate sense, and if we take it to its logical conclusion, the government could determine an order of business every five minutes, an order which was different than the order five minutes before.

Mr. Smith: Wrong.

Mr. Hawkes: The decision must rest on Your Honour's shoulders, and you must indicate to us, as clearly as you can, your sense of the words "government determines" in the Standing Orders. When has the government determined? At what point in time can there be any sense of certitude felt by any hon. member in this chamber that the order of business is determined? When can we be sure of that so that we can fulfil our obligations to the people who sent us to this chamber? I respectfully suggest that perhaps the word "determines" is a more important word, and the criterion which makes that known to us is more important when it relates to the business of supply, particularly to the business of supply which is handed over those few days each year to those who oppose the government's method of supply. The determination of that should not be the untramelled right of a cabinet or a small group in this chamber comprising some 30 people out of 282. The 250 hon. members must fulfil their obligation to hold that group of 30 accountable to the taxpayers and voters of this nation.

I suggest to Your Honour that the lack of precision in the direction we were moving yesterday was a serious violation of the responsibility of hon. members to hold the government and the cabinet accountable to the Canadian people for their actions and to force the cabinet to change some things. I am sure cabinet ministers would not do things out of malice; however, the job of cabinet ministers is different from that of ordinary hon. members. Perhaps they have more to do. They meet with different people. They have less time to spend in their ridings, and they have less time in which to experience what is happening to ordinary Canadians as a consequence of the policies they propose.

If we do not have a system in this chamber and if we do not alter the nuances of rulings toward favouring the 250 backbenchers and their job of holding the government accountable, then I think we run the long-term risk of making the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada much less than it could be and may be some day, and it will be insufficient for the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I want to say a few words about this particular problem. I should say that I am somewhat surprised that the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) spoke at such length about the ruling which was given by Your Honour yesterday, but he did perhaps bring in a new element with which I would like to deal in a moment.

I am grateful to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for bringing this matter to our attention, because I think he made a point, to some degree, concerning the question of the Order Paper. It would be my view that the hon. member for Yukon is correct in stating that there has been an oversight with respect to the motion which was laid down yesterday by the official opposition. The hon. member for Yukon assures us that that motion was undated and could, therefore, have no application to a supply day which was originally designated for today.

With respect to the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I would submit that because the motion he put down was specifically dated for February 12, it was then superseded by the actions of the government House leader yesterday when he redesignated the orders of the day and redesignated the supply day for some time next week. Therefore, the Hansard staff were quite within their right in not showing this on the Order Paper.

Mr. Nielsen: Journals staff.

Mr. Collenette: I am sorry, the Journals staff. The question as to which motion would have been recognized is really irrelevant, and that would have been Your Honour's decision, had February 12 indeed been an allotted day. However, I think the point has been well taken by the hon. member for Yukon. Perhaps Your Honour could look into the matter to ensure that this kind of oversight does not occur again because it could be misleading. In summary, because the motion laid down in the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was supposedly undated, I would think it has applicability to the supply day which has been redesignated to February 19.

In terms of the other aspect of the hon. member's point, I welcome the chance to comment, because we do not have these kinds of discussions very often. With respect, I think that the hon. member for Yukon has been inadvertantly misleading the House in his interpretation of those sections of Beauchesne relating to the question of allotted days. Indeed, I noted that Your Honour sought clarification before the recess as to the interpretation of Citation 478(1) given by the hon. member for Yukon. In the second sentence of that citation it is clear that the business of supply is the business of the government. It very boldly states:

> Although technically the business under discussion is government business, motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition to the government.

The fact that an opposition motion is attached to the vehicle of supply in no way makes that business, that supply day, any less then government business. It is government business. I suppose we could go back to Erskine May who outlined this at page 285 when he discussed the supply period. As Your Honour stated, you questioned the hon. member with regard to the last sentence of Beauchesne's Citation 478(1), which reads:

> To this extent, there is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business with respect to SO 18.

It goes only to this extent, the extent being that the opposition has the right to append the motion to a particular allotted supply day, but the government does not.

The other point which I think bears some discussion relates to Beauchesne's Citation 479(2). We agree that subsection (1) states that the choice of subjects is the opposition's choice, and it is the prerogative of the opposition to raise such subjects. Perhaps I should read Citation 479(2), which states:

The opposition prerogative is very broad in the use of the allotted day and ought not to be interfered with except on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds.

I draw attention to the words "on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds." I am not referring to the substance of the motion at all. If the Speaker has a right to make any decision changing the allotted day, the change cannot deal with the procedure but must really deal with the substance of that particular motion, unless the procedural grounds are extremely severe, perhaps involving the form of the motion.

I remember a case a number of years ago involving a supply motion which anticipated some other business than that which was before the House, and this raised a question. There was the prerogative of the Speaker to clarify the situation. I submit that in the case of Beauchesne Citation 479(2) the only thing the Speaker can do is perhaps to interfere on very extreme grounds. I do not think the case can be made that the Speaker has interfered with the right of the opposition to proceed with the supply motion today.

● (1430)

Mr. Nielsen: Will the hon. member permit an interjection at this point? I think I can assist him.

Mr. Collenette: Perhaps at the end, Madam Speaker, I will leave that up to Madam Speaker. I would like a minute.

Madam Speaker: Yes. We are on a point of order. We cannot have a point of order on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I just thought I could assist the hon. member.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member will not permit a question at this time, will he?

Mr. Collenette: If you will permit a question after I have finished, Madam Speaker, that is your decision. I am in your hands. As hon. members know, I am very obliging. I would not want to not help the opposition.

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member want to accept a question?

Mr. Collenette: No, Madam Speaker, I have just about finished.

It is my contention, when we talk about allotted days, that these are indeed government days. The only difference is that a motion is attached to supply days which is designated by the opposition. There is no hesitation there.

On the question of the hon. member for Calgary West, the point I really wanted to make was that he was suggesting that the government could, in some way, arbitrarily, in the middle of debate, cut off that debate. Subject to correction, the only way that could be done and the only way to change the order of the day would be with consent. I perhaps could be advised as to whether you could move Standing Order 24 to move the orders of the day when indeed orders of the day were in the process of being debated. The fact is that any order of the day is a motion. I believe that Standing Order 24 says that a motion for reaching the orders of the day shall have preference over any motion before the House.

That is really a side point here. We should not mislead the public into thinking that, just because the government has the right to set the agenda for Parliament, it can arbitrarily play with Members of Parliament and stop and change the subjects in mid-course without taking a very extreme step. Those are the points I wanted to make. I think it is a subject that is well worth examining. It is a question that really has not been examined too often.

In summary, I would say that the reading of Beauchesne's Citation 479(2) by the hon. member for Yukon is perhaps causing misapprehension, or his reading of that citation is misleading the House.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon on a short point.

Mr. Nielsen: If I might, Madam Speaker. I recall the incident that the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) adverted to. It might be of some assistance to the Chair. I believe it was in 1973 when, standing on the notice paper section of the Order Paper, there were two motions to concur in government estimates. An allotted day was also on the same notice paper. The question arose as to whether the two items standing as motions to concur in estimates or the allotted day was to take precedence.

The example cited is a clear case in support of my submission because on that occasion the Speaker held that the allotted day took precedence under Standing Order 58(12) over the two items of government business. It also bears out my submission with respect to the distinction in Citation 478 and my interpretation of it in response to the question put by you, Madam Speaker. That precedent is indeed extremely valuable.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, it seems that what you have to determine from the arguments you have heard is whether an allotted day is, in the strict sense of the word, government business. Up to a point I can agree with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), but only up to a point.

Once there is agreement by the three House leaders as to when the allotted day will occur and once that is followed up by the notice required under the Standing Order on the Order Paper, from that moment it ceases to be government business. It is from that moment out of the control of the government. The opposition determines what the subject matter of the debate will be and, pursuant to the provision of the Standing Order, notice of the motion is filed on the day prior to the debate taking place at specifically 6 p.m.

It is my submission that once the agreement has been reached by the House leaders and the notice has appeared on the Order Paper, as it did yesterday, and the motion has been filed as it was yesterday—it was filed at 1.12 p.m. yesterday—that triggered off a procedure which at that point could not be stopped. It could only be stopped, in my submission, by unanimous consent. That speaks to the further point which I do not want to dwell on. It is the other part of the question, that the motion could only be removed from the Order Paper with unanimous consent. Of course, there was not unanimous consent.

It is well to put this debate into the context of what the House intended by allotted days. It is important to bear in mind what exactly the Standing Order had intended by these allotted days. Anyone who was here prior to 1965 when these Standing Orders were brought in on a provisional basis will know that we had at that time the committee of supply. The committee of supply was a committee of the whole House before which all the estimates were examined without regard to time. The estimates were brought before the committee of supply, the committee of the whole House, and it was the opposition which determined when the estimates would be passed by the committee of supply and returned back to the House.

I agree that was not an entirely satisfactory procedure because it sometimes caused serious problems. I remember one occasion when it resulted in the government not being able to meet the public service payroll and having to resort to Governor General's warrants. Everybody realized something had to be done to replace that procedure.

The procedure which replaced it, allotted days under the provision of Standing Order 58, is not entirely satisfactory. It is well for the House and the Chair to note that these Standing Orders we are now operating under were in fact passed by the invocation of closure in 1968. The reason the government had to invoke closure to bring in these Standing Orders in 1968 was that many members of the House at that time were very concerned with what would happen to the right of the House to hold the government accountable, particularly on the way it managed the budget.

If you look at Standing Order 58(14), you will find, I think, that it makes the point very well which I am trying to make. All estimates are now referred to a committee. Standing Order 58(14) says:

> Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

That is why these 25 allotted days are critically important to the House. The 25 days were not picked out of a hat. It was based upon the experience of the House and the number of days that the committee of supply dealt with estimates. In other words, in place of the estimates being referred to the Committee of the Whole House, we were given the 25 allotted days.

Of course, within the 25 allotted days, provision was made for a number of these days to be used for non-confidence motions. These non-confidence motions replaced the motions that were brought in previously under the old supply procedure whereby no notice was required and no notice was given. When the opposition stood up to bring in a motion under supply which was non-confidence in the government, all the ministers had to sit there wondering which one would be the target of that particular motion. That was the procedure. There was some dissatisfaction and the government felt that it was not really the way to run the House. There was agreement that there had to be another procedure to replace that one.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) said it is worth examining this whole question. I also think it is worth examining. I think, Madam Speaker, that you would be well advised to urge the government House leader to convene a meeting or make a reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization so that the House can be officially seized of this question and thereby enable us to examine the Standing Orders in the context of the experience that we have had since the present Standing Orders were adopted.

I repeat that it is my submission that agreement was reached on the allocation of an allotted day, and once agreement was reached, that allotted day would be a votable motion, one of the motions of non-confidence provided for in the 25 allotted days, and once the motion in accordance with our agreement was tabled, it then ceased to be government business. At that point in time it was out of the control of the government. It could only be changed by unaninous consent of the House.

I respectfully submit to you that that is the crux of the argument. The government House leader stood in his place yesterday at three o'clock and unilaterally did what he did not have the right to do under the Standing Orders: to change what had been unanimously agreed to by his colleagues. The process was already in play by virtue of the required notice appearing on the Order Paper and the motion, which should have been the subject of debate today, already having been filed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I think I can be very brief in speaking to this point of order. There are one or two matters which have been raised and require some response.

If I understood the position being put forward by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader correctly, part of his argument, which was technical and perhaps not central to what he was arguing, was that since the references to allotted days appeared in the Order Paper section known as notices, that made it somehow less compelling than if it had appeared elsewhere in the Order Paper. I am sure it was only momentarily overlooked by the parliamentary secretary but I think it is important that the House understand and recall that motions for concurrence on estimates are also listed in the same place and stay in their same place until they are called. That part of the Order Paper is an integral part of the Order Paper.

If that suggestion was indeed made by the parliamentary secretary, that the language relating to the allotted day on that part of the Order Paper might be somewhat less compelling than if it had appeared elsewhere, I would contest that. That part of the Order Paper is unquestionably an integral part of the Order Paper. It is there to fulfil the requirements of the Standing Orders which require notice in matters relating to supply, whether it has to do with a motion for concurrence in estimates or whether it has to do with acts related to allotted days.

The second matter to which I want to turn my attention deals with the very alarming precedent which we may be establishing here. The events of the last two days, the matter which was raised yesterday and the matter which was raised by my colleague today, create a very real danger of censorship, which is something that runs against the very grain of the rights of an opposition, and consequently, the rights of Parliament. One serious result of a continuation of the events that occurred yesterday would be that once a government became aware of the nature of a notice that had been filed for an allotted day, if it took exception to that particular notice or was fearful of not being able to carry the House on a motion of that kind—which we suspect was the case yesterday—it could be in a position to act in a way which would deny the opposition the right that had been established for it to proceed with that motion or action. That is clearly censorship and an addition to the limitations put upon the capacity of the whole Parliament generally and specifically of the official opposition, of other opposition parties and any other Members of Parliament who might disagree with a particular item of government business. This is another limitation upon the capacity of members of the House of Commons to control the actions and decisions of the government. As these limitations continue to accumulate, we will have no parliamentary system left in any honest sense of the word.

The point which was raised by my seatmate and colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), again speaks to the question of potential censorship. If the practice which occurred today, which was probably inadvertent, continues, not only is there the capacity of censorship on the right of an opposition to raise a question, there is the censorship of the very right of that opposition to have the language of the motions that it intends to have introduced stand on the Order Paper of the House of Commons.

The more important matter which I would like to deal with was raised explicitly by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette). He raised the critical and fundamental question freshly today in the argument of this point of order and it concerns the question of to whom the allotted days belong. Do they belong to the government? Are they subject to absolute control by the government, or do they belong to the official opposition whose primary responsibility is to keep control of the government and stop it from excess? I noted what the hon. member for York East said, and if I heard him correctly, I believe he said that allotted days "are indeed government days." The hon. member nods that that is his view. I disagree with that view strenuously. Not only does it run against all the traditions and understanding we have had in the House, it very clearly runs against what is spelled out in Beauchesne and what is spelled out in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. To accept the view that allotted days are indeed government days is to extend even more the control of the government of the day over the House of Commons.

All of us who have been students of this place and believe in the importance of parliamentary democracy know that one of the grave dangers which has developed over the years is that the power of individual Members of Parliament has diminished and the power of the government has increased. We now have virtually no means to control a government which is pursuing a policy which is unpopular with the majority of members of the House and bad for the country. Powers which used to exist here and used to reside with oppositions here have been stripped away one by one. As my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has indicated, one of the most dramatic changes in the powers of individual Members of Parliament was enforced by closure, because Parliament would not willingly have accepted that. The extraordinary recourse to closure had to be used. We may very well be on the brink of even one more major limitation upon the capacity of Parliament to do our basic job, which is to control, in the name of the people of Canada, the executive members of the government.

My colleague, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), made a very important point. It was not simply members on the opposition side of the House of Commons who were interested in being heard on the matter which would have been debated today. Undoubtedly there were members on the government side who wanted to be heard, some of whom may well have wanted to vote with the opposition against the government. Indeed, I believe it was for that reason the matter was withdrawn.

However, the point is not limited to what was denied Parliament today. The point has to do with what might be denied Parliament permanently, and what might be denied Parliament permanently is the opportunity to use this instrument to assert control of the executive by individual members of the House of Commons on any side of the House and of any party.

The hon. member for York East has quoted Beauchesne Citation 478(1). He quoted it for a third time. The relevant part is the following:

> Although technically the business under discussion is government business, motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition to the government. To this extent, there is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business with respect to S.O. 18.

The important word here is "technically", and what the language of Citation 478(1) makes abundantly clear is that for a technical reason it might be grouped under government business, but the reality is that it belongs not to the government but to the opposition. That is why the word "technically" is there. There is no other explanation for the presence of that word, and the use of the word "technically" is designed explicitly to underline the fact that the control of allotted days rests not with the government, which controls everything else, but with the opposition, which controls little more than this ability to hold the government to account through the use of allotted days.

Your Honour will be aware of Standing Order 58(12), which reads as follows:

On any day or days appointed for the consideration of any business under the provisions of this Standing Order, that order of business shall have precedence over all other government business in such sitting or sittings.

There can be no doubt that today had been appointed. The argument has been put that not only was the day appointed, but also that by the filing of the notice it was consummated. There can be no question about that. There can be no question of the meaning of Standing Order 58(12), but the matter I wanted to address directly had to do with the question of to whom does an allotted day belong. Does it belong to the opposition, as all our practices and Beauchesne make clear, or does it belong to the government to be dismissed at the government's whim?

I will repeat myself in closing. The word "technically" makes it abundantly clear that while for some small technical reason it might be grouped under the heading of government business, the clear purport and the clear reason for having the provision here at all is to provide the opposition with an instrument to control the government, and if that were to be denied, that would be one more stripping away of the powers of the opposition and one more reduction of the ability of the people of Canada through their Parliament to control the government.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I have already heard the parliamentary secretary. Unless his point is a short one like the one I allowed the hon. member for Yukon to make, I do not want to listen to it. It is not usual to allow hon. members to speak twice on a point of order.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, my point is just a short one. I think a regrettable inference could be drawn from the remarks of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark)—and I think it is important to clarify it—and that is that if anyone is under the mistaken impression that the government was informed of the substance of the motion which was filed by the Conservative Party, I want to assure the House it was not. I think everyone can reasonably conclude there was a fair bit of speculation as to what it might be, but we should be fair to the Table officers. Certain conclusions might be drawn if one were to drag the argument about government censorship to its logical conclusion, but I think it is very important to clarify that the government was not informed of the substance of the Conservative motion.

Mr. McGrath: Why did you change the date?

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, after that intervention I am compelled to say on behalf of all members of the official opposition that we have the utmost confidence in the Table officers, and I assure the parliamentary secretary that we are absolutely convinced the government did not become aware of our motion through the Table officers.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It is obvious that what we are entering into here and what we are concerned with is something which is considered very valuable and important not just to the opposition but to all Members of Parliament in terms of our ability to make Parliament function in a manner which would allow it to pass good legislation. We are involved in a very fine balance. That balance is made up of both government members and opposition members, and anything that would detract from that balance may well have a very serious effect on the ability of Parliament to function.

I think it is important that we look at a few of the things which relate to this particular issue and particularly the one we are talking about here, the orders of the day. I refer to Citation 275 of Beauchesne at page 89 which talks about the Order Paper and Notices. It says this:

The paper known as Order Paper and Notices is the official agenda printed on the responsibility of the Clerk of the House, containing all the proposed questions set out in accordance with the Standing Orders. All the proposed proceedings of the House are recorded in abbreviated form in that paper. To add to, or suppress from it, any proposal which the House has ordered would constitute a serious infringement on the priveleges of the House of Commons.

I think that is a large part of what we are concerned about here today. Perhaps, in fact, what is happening is that the opposition is losing its ability to participate in a particular opportunity which has, by precedent and by history, been provided to it.

Our concern is that if we cannot work within this particular framework and have this type of opportunity made available to us, we will end up with a serious loss of our opportunity to serve this House and our constituents as well.

In order to look at that breach of privilege referred to in Beauchesne one must look back at the very foundation of privilege, and again I refer to Beauchesne. According to Beauchesne, the privileges of Parliament are rights which are absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers, and they are enjoyed by individual members because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members. We can see that the balance I referred to earlier is a fine balance based on the privileges of the House. It is based on the format the House has laid out for itself and the rules and guidelines under which it must perform. We obviously feel that balance was changed yesterday by an unusual procedure employed by the government House leader.

The final point that I want to make was raised earlier by my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who talked about the principles of parliamentary law. These are set out on page 3 of Beauchesne's fifth edition in part as follows:

To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every Member to express his opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum—

That sets out the guidelines, certain rules and regulations that are designed to allow Parliament and Members of Parliament to function in a real and positive way.

When we have such things as allotted days set out on the Order Paper, it is for a certain purpose, that purpose being that the opposition can organize its debate, its methods, and its approach to various levels of government business. It is a very serious and important opportunity for the opposition to criticize the government.

In regard to this point of order I think it is essential that we look at how important these provisions are and how necessary they are to the opposition and, in fact, to all members of the House of Commons in order that they may perform their duties and make certain that the laws and legislation passed by the House are passed in accordance with certain procedures and forms.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I should like to add a word or two in response to the remarks of the acting House leader for the New Democratic Party and my colleague the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). It has been the practice in this House for the government House leader to announce the business of the House for some period of time and for that to be recorded in the orders of the day. Yesterday we came to something which was unprecedented, a change made in the orders of the day by the government House leader.

I would ask you to address yourself, Madam Speaker, to the way in which the orders of the day were changed—not that they were changed but the way in which they were changed. I would like to refer you to page 89 of Beauchesne's fifth edition, Citation 276 which reads as follows:

A motion to proceed to another government order may be moved only by the government House leader (or a member acting on his behalf).

Yesterday an unprecedented change in government business was made by the government because of a certain fear of a vote. That change was not made by any motion offered by the government House leader or anyone acting on his behalf, but simply by the government House leader making the comment that he was changing it.

I think what we on this side are after is some finality. People ask us how we conduct the business of government, what we do day in, day out, how we organize our weeks and our months. We have to be able to tell the people who send us here that there is some certainty in this House. The certainty that we on this side are looking for is the certainty of government orders.

When government orders which have already been set into the orders of the day by the government House leader, by his statement—and until now we have taken his word for it—those words are set in stone, set in the Journals or set in Hansard, and surely we are owed the courtesy of a motion which is part of the business of the House, rather than an offhand comment such as we got yesterday from the government House leader, if there is to be a change.

Citation 276 of Beauchesne's says "A motion to proceed to another government order may be moved—," and it seems to me that infers that there will be a motion to change the business of the day; something which can be considered, which is in writing, which has formality to it and would be voted upon. Perhaps we would not have won the vote on the motion, but at least it should have been moved by the government House leader or by the deputy government House leader. Neither of those events occurred, Madam Speaker.

In your ruling, Madam Speaker, I would ask you to address the question of whether it was done properly by just announcing it in an offhand manner and whether, when we reach government orders today or any other day, we are to be subjected to such a comment in the middle of the business of the day. When the government House leader has set the business for the day, is he going to be forced—and I say, forced—by the rules which govern this House, forced by tradition, by Beauchesne, by the Standing Orders and orders of the day, to bring in a motion. It is like any motion and the mover and seconder lose control over it once it is within the purview of the House. I suggest that when the orders of the day come within the purview of the House, then a motion must be introduced, seconded and debated.

Madam Speaker: Just before I tell the House that I will reserve on this point of order and examine all the presentations that have been made, for which I thank hon. members, and that I will rule on it later, I want to reply to the hon. member for Yukon concerning a meeting which was requested between the House leaders and myself. All of my agenda was open to the House leaders and the reason the meeting has not taken place until now is that I could not get the three House leaders to agree on the same day. My agenda is still open and anytime they can agree on the same day I will slash out anything on my agenda in order to accommodate them.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, your situation and mine are exactly the same. I will make time, at any time to hold this meeting because of the seriousness of the situation.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF BILL C-78

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, this is a different point of order not related in any way to the point we have been discussing for some time.

It is my understanding that when we get to the orders of the day it is the intention of the government House leader or the person acting on his behalf, to call Bill C-78. You are probably not aware that the bill was not available to anyone prior to five o'clock last evening; in fact, we had to go and get a copy that had not yet been filed for distribution purposes, in order to see what was contained in the bill that was to be reported back from the committee for consideration under the order for report stage.

As a result of that dilemma we were unable to file the amendments we wished to file with the Journals branch since we had not seen the bill in advance of six o'clock last evening. As a result the amendments could not appear as notice on the Order Paper. That creates a dilemma, Madam Speaker.

We consider the amendments that we wished to file to be of extreme importance. I personally asked the government whip last evening if the government would be prepared to give unanimous consent for the hour for filing to be extended until some time today so that we could file our proposed amendments—we thought there could be an extension until five o'clock today—for consideration on Monday next. Unfortunately at that point unanimous consent was not forthcoming, although it may well be forthcoming now.

In the circumstances, the only opportunity for anyone in the House to move amendments to the clauses of the bill that will ultimately be debated at both report stage and third reading, is right now. Since there is no other opportunity to move and debate those amendments, I suggest one of two things might occur.

First, I would ask whether the government House leader or the acting government House leader might consider requesting the unanimous consent of the House to do what was requested yesterday; that we should file the amendments up to and including five o'clock this evening for consideration on Monday. Failing that, would the government House leader consider not proceeding with that order, given that we would only have 40 or 45 minutes today to deal with it, in order that we could file within the Standing Orders today, for Monday's consideration. This is not a trivial matter; it is of vital importance and speaks to the concerns of large numbers of employees all across the country. We assumed that we would be able to fulfil the responsibility of placing important amendments before the House.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, with regard to the first point of the House leader of the NDP, we are prepared to agree to a House order which would extend the time for filing amendments to five o'clock today. Rather than becoming involved in a debate as to what we do if we cannot obtain such agreement, perhaps we could first determine whether or not the agreement is forthcoming from all parties. We are agreeable to it.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, this is beyond belief.

Some hon. Members: That is correct.

Mr. Nielsen: We have had the spectacle of the government House leader rising in his place yesterday and saying, as reported on page 14896 of Hansard which I now have:

—considering the urgency of Bill C-78, we will debate it tomorrow.

Further on he is reported as saying:

Considering the urgency, we have decided to proceed with the report stage of Bill C-78 tomorrow.

Bill C-78 was so urgent at three o'clock yesterday that we did not even have a printed copy of it available. Indeed, it was not even in the mail to hon. members until this morning. Our critic received it this morning. What shallow deception, considering the urgency of Bill C-78 which had not even been printed. Under the circumstances I think the government would be well advised to move a motion that the time for filing amendments be extended, in all fairness to the disposition of this day, to when the bill comes up on Monday, if it is so urgent that it might come up on Monday. I would support such a motion.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I have one point. I must confess that I am not particularly worried whether we do it by unanimous consent, by motion or by any other means. My concern simply is that we have urgent amendments and we would like an opportunity to file them this afternoon. They are already there; we simply have to give Journals authorization to have them printed for Monday.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, ordinarily we would have no hesitation in giving unanimous consent, but we want to point out dramatically the hypocrisy and downright deception of the government. On two separate occasions yesterday, the government House leader said that the bill was so urgent it had to be proceeded with today, a bill which was not even printed. The government should bring in a motion to extend the time. We would be very happy to support it, to focus the spotlight on their hypocrisy, where it belongs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, one could be left to draw the conclusion that somehow there is a conspiracy on the part of the government to deny hon. members of the opposition a copy of the bill as amended in committee. It should be pointed out that printing of the bill is not the responsibility of the government. It is the responsibility of the law clerk. If the Conservative Party had members at the committee, they would have followed the amendments made in committee and would have all necessary information in order to file amendments, and perhaps might have required line changes when it came out. If in fact there was a problem in getting the reprinted version to members as quickly as possible, it had nothing to do with the government; it is the responsibility of the law clerk.

If we look at Standing Order 75(3), it is quite clear that we have complied with what is necessary in order for report stage of any bill to be reported by a standing committee. It indicates that it "shall not be taken into consideration prior to 48 hours following the presentation of the said report, unless otherwise ordered by the House". It was several days ago, in excess of 48 hours, that in fact it was reported. It should be pointed out that the House leader of the NDP requested this last night and that this side was agreeable. I think the House leader of the Conservative Party wished to consult with his critic, the hon.

member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), before making a decision. He has certainly had that opportunity now. In the spirit of accommodating the NDP, because I believe that party wishes to move amendments, we will agree to a unanimous order extending the deadline to five o'clock. I think it is quite unreasonable if the official opposition is not prepared to go along with the spirit of co-operation.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this becomes more bizarre with every utterance of spokesmen of the government. Since the parliamentary secretary is not accepting responsibility himself or for the government for the failure of the bill to be printed—he is blaming it on the printers, the premiers, the provinces, the weather or someone else—is he telling us that at the moment the government House leader rose yesterday at three o'clock to declare the urgency of the bill, he did not even know whether or not the bill was printed? Is he telling us that not only did he mislead the House on the question of urgency, but that the government House leader did not know the matter which he declared was so urgent had not even been printed? Is that what he is telling us?

Mr. Smith: If Madam Speaker wishes me to take that as a question, I am in your hands. I am not blaming anybody. I am simply pointing out what are the facts. The facts are that responsibility for printing of a bill after it has gone to committee and returned is in the hands of the law clerk. Certainly the government knows what took place at committee, because government members were on the committee and were familiar with what in fact took place. Any party which is on its toes certainly would have its members at committee and would in fact know what occurred. It would not need the latest version to draw whatever amendments it felt were necessary, because it would have the original version and its members would have been at committee to know what in fact took place there. We are prepared to co-operate with members of the NDP and to accommodate them because they wish in good faith to move amendments to the bill. We will agree to an order extending the deadline to five o'clock today.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have a short interjection which I think relates to the previous argument in the sense that each of us in the house is equal and that independents, and perhaps even government backbenchers, would like to move amendments to the bill. Under the Standing Orders of the House they would have the right, but if in fact they received copies of the bill this morning and the filing deadline for amendments was five o'clock last evening, surely the government is acting in a manner which is totally inconsistent with the ability of members of the House to meet their responsibilities to the electorate. If all hon. members of the House have not seen the bill before the deadline for filing, surely it is a misuse of the Standing Orders of the House; surely it is a misuse.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I cannot sit here and allow the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) to say that the government is not responsible. The government is responsible for every aspect of presenting a bill, right from the beginning to the end. If the government is not responsible, who is? Is it the opposition? We had nothing to do with it. The man is in such a jam that he is ignoring things which are elementary. It is elementary that government has responsibility for every phase of a bill. This is the practice in every parliament throughout the British Empire. The government is responsible for ensuring that those matters are co-ordinated. The truth of the matter is that the government was in such ungodly haste yesterday to ensure it cancelled the opposition day for its own purposes that it simply blundered everything. It did not even take the time to see if the bill was printed. This is a mockery of Parliament. The government should be thrown out.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order and in response to the comments of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Individual members on the government side have the opportunity, the right and the privilege to bring in amendments. We had that right in the standing committee, just as individual members of the official opposition had the right in committee. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and other hon. members of the Conservative Party brought in excellent amendments which improved the bill. Hon. members from the New Democratic Party brought in excellent amendments. We have a very strong bill because of all of these amendments. It is a bill with these amendments that I am sure all three parties want passed as quickly as possible. We should not waste time with this kind of nonsense. Let us get on with the business of the House.

Mr. Clark: Try martial law first.

Madam Speaker: Hon. members cannot speak twice on the same point of order. I will put the question to the House. I am in the hands of the House. I do have to inform the House that there were delays in the printing of the bill. I have all the details of the route sheet of the bill. I do not think I need spell it out to the House. There were delays. The parliamentary secretary mentioned that members had a working copy of the bill but they did not have the final text until some time late this morning or last night. At any rate, I am in the hands of the House. I will put the question to the House. Does the House give unanimous consent to waive the hour at which amendments ought to have been brought in for them to be included in the debate? Is there unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the government should have known, given the urgency it attached to the bill yesterday at three o'clock, that the bill was not even printed yesterday at three o'clock. Under those circumstances, because its actions betray its hyprocrisy, we insist the government bring in a motion to extend the time, which we will support.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I have a labour constituency. I am not a member of that particular committee. Surely as a member of this House I should have a right to see this bill and have time to think about it to see if there are any amendments that I might wish to make. My constituents are just as important as the constituents of members who sit on that committee. This is the most hypocritical thing I have ever seen in parliament.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a different point of order. I am now seeking guidance, since unanimous consent appears not to be forthcoming. I do not care who moves the motion. I want your guidance. Does it require a motion from the government or can we have unanimous consent to have the motion moved by someone else, and I will move it?

Mr. Nielsen: It has to be the government.

Mr. Deans: Can I ask for unanimous consent to move the motion in order that the amendments that we consider to be vital to the bill be put before the House. I am asking the House for that unanimous consent, and I will move an appropriate motion at the right time.

Madam Speaker: In answer to the hon. member, I cannot force anyone in this House to move a motion.

Mr. Smith: I move that the hour be extended to five o'clock for the filing of amendments.

An hon. Member: It has to be in writing.

Mr. Deans: This has to be done under motions.

Madam Speaker: I need the motion in writing and I need unanimous consent to move it without notice. Do I have the unanimous consent of the House to have a motion moved with notice?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the government has dug itself into its own pit. Before the government can assauge its friends in the New Democratic Party, as the government is obviously very eager to do, we insist that it bring forward a motion pursuant to the Standing Orders of this House, and we will be very glad to support it in the proper way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 32(1)(p)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 32(1)(p), seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That in the opinion of this House, the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority and the management of its business, require that once an allotted day has been designated by the government House leader, and the House has entered upon the notice period preceding the allotted day, the designated allotted day must be proceeded with Standing Order 32(1)(p) is a rule that is not used all that much in this House, but it takes away from the necessity which Standing Order 26 brings to the floor of the House. Under Standing Order 26 we have to have an emergency. We have to demonstrate to you, the Chair, that we have an emergency situation. We also have to give the government two hours notice prior to the sitting of the House that a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 26 will be moved. We have found recently that the government never gives us much notice. Therefore, rather than moving a motion under Standing Order 26 we decided to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 32 which allows us, under Citation 300 of Beauchesne, to deal with the business of the House. I would draw your attention to page 98, Citation 300(2) which reads:

Examples of motions which come under SO 32(1)(p) and are debatable are motions:

(a) relating to the time of sitting—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I interrupt the hon. member now that I have looked into the Standing Orders under which he is presenting this motion.

First, the hon. member is already debating the motion. It is debatable but he cannot debate it at this time. It is a substantive motion and I would need a notice of that motion. Therefore, I cannot accept it at this time.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to seek the ruling of the Chair to raise a matter regarding which I would have given the required notice had Hansard been available. It relates directly to the exchanges that occurred yesterday in the House of Commons, in particular, I regret to say, Madam Speaker, between yourself and myself, having to do most particularly with the right of any Member of Parliament—although I was the one who raised the issue—to adduce arguments to a case before Your Honour has made a ruling. I now have Hansard at hand. At page 14,900, the following is found:

MADAM SPEAKER: I must explain to hon. members that while the Speaker is speaking, I do not think a point of order can be brought up. I will hear hon. members when I finish saying what I have begun to say.

MR. CLARK: Are you going to rule?

MADAM SPEAKER: I have not ruled yet. I think at this point I have heard sufficient argument and the Standing Orders are sufficiently—

MR. CLARK: No, Madam Speaker.

MR. NIELSEN: There is a point that has not been made. We have a right.

MR. CLARK: That is precisely the point I wish to address.

The debate carried on. Then we find the following:

MADAM SPEAKER: Order. I will be grateful if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will let me finish what I have to say.

MR. CLARK: Is it a ruling? Is it a ruling?

MADAM SPEAKER: I am sorry, I would like to finish what I have to say.

MR. CLARK: I have the right to be heard—

Motion—S.O. 32(1)(p)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could I interrupt the hon. member? He is doing everything he can to confuse me. I do not really know for what reason he is rising. We have just dealt with a motion put forward by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) with which I have dealt. Now the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is not telling me whether he is rising on a point of order or a question of privilege or just to read Hansard to me. Just before the right hon. member gets up again, I might indicate to him that I have read Hansard also. I was applying the rule, as I told him yesterday, that when the Speaker is standing and speaking the Speaker cannot accept any points of order or have anyone else interrupt the Speaker. That was the rule I was applying.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I rise to move:

That in the opinion of this House the observance of the proprieties of the House and the management of its business require that before interrupting a procedural argument for the purpose of giving a ruling, the Speaker announce to the House that a ruling will be given unless further relevant arguments are placed before the Chair.

I move that motion pursuant to Standing Order 32(1)(p). You have just indicated that there is a requirement of notice to move a motion. I would prefer to proceed with it immediately. Indeed, if the government's spokesman is prepared to waive notice in this case, given the fundamental urgency and importance of the matter I am raising, I will proceed with argument on it now. If not, I wanted to take the first available opportunity to indicate that I think a very dangerous precedent has been established here and I seek to argue that. If you rule me out of order at this time, then I now, by the words I have just uttered in this House, give you notice of my intention to raise this matter 24 hours hence.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, not three minutes ago the opposition refused to waive the requirement for notice. I see no reason why we should do so. It is going to be tit for tat. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) can raise it as a question of privilege, and if he does I will be happy to argue it right now.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the government deputy House leader. He just stated that the opposition refused unanimous consent. Unless you poll the whole House he has no right to make that statement.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I hope the tit for tat will not continue any longer so that we might get this done. I would hope I can get unanimous consent to waive the customary requirement for notice and to move, notwithstanding any Standing Order, that the time for accepting amendments to Bill C-78—

Madam Speaker: Order. We already have another motion which was proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and has not been disposed of. I can hear another motion but not at the same time.

Now, the Leader of the Opposition has expressed his intention of proposing a motion, but, of course, under the section under which he proposes it he needs to give notice but that notice can be waived if the consent of the House is given. I know the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) has indicated what he would say, but I do have to put the question to the House. Does the Leader of the Opposition have the unanimous consent—

Mr. Smith: No.

Madam Speaker: He does not.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, as I began to say, please let us stop the feud for five minutes. I have a few amendments I would like to see placed before the House if and when Bill C-78 is called. Unfortunately, circumstances beyond anyone's control, at least at the moment, have made it impossible for those amendments to be placed. They were given to the Journals office last evening a few minutes after six. They quite appropriately refused to accept them because they had to be there a few minutes before six.

However, I would ask the House, in the interests of the many people affected by this bill, that we stop feuding on this for five minutes—we can go back to it if you want—and waive the necessity for notice in order that I can move a motion. If that necessity for notice is waived, I would move, notwithstanding any Standing Order, that the time for accepting amendments to Bill C-78 be extended to 5 p.m., Friday, February 12, 1982.

Madam Speaker: Well, we have just disposed of a quite similar question, but I will again put the question to the House. Does the House give its unanimous consent to waive the requirement of a notice for this motion to be put before the House?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, our answer is still the same. The government House leader urged upon us yesterday the urgency of Bill C-78 which he did not even know was not printed. In order to focus attention on this shallow hypocrisy of the government in their haste, tripping over their heels, to duck a test of confidence by stealing an allotted day from us, by in effect politically mugging us, they are going to have to suffer the consequences of bringing in a motion in the regular way, a motion to extend the time to bring in amendments, a motion which we will support.

GRANTS TO REDUCE RACIAL TENSIONS

Question No. 2,807 (Revised)—Mr. Flis:

1. From 1976 to date, were moneys made available by departments to reduce racial tensions and, if so, which departments?

2. In each case, what was the amount and to whom was it given?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State and Multiculturalism Canada as follows:

1 and 2. Grants and contribution records are not presently kept in such a way as to allow us to provide a complete list of grants and contributions given for the purpose of reducing of racial tensions. However, following is a list of contracts entered into by the Department of the Secretary of State since 1976, which relate to projects aimed at addressing racial tensions:

Program Services March, 1976 $13,250—Dennis Adair and Janet Rosenstock. To produce a written report and tapes of classroom discussion on racism and discrimination in consultation with voluntary groups working in the area of human rights in Ontario and with the ministry of education.

Group Understanding and Human Rights

April, 1976—Consultant Fees:

$1,150—Edward D. Parnell

$300—Noel Kinsella

$625—Thomas Symons

$325—Tom McMillan

$575—Errol Young

$680—John W. Kehoe

$300—Seymour Tregeir

For consultation to explore new measures for implementation to forward the objectives of the Decade for Action to combat Racism and Racial Discrimination along the lines of the measures suggested in the United Nations Decade program itself.

May, 1976 $4,090—Dr. John W. Kehoe. To conduct a two-day workshop in various schools located in the three western provinces. The purpose of the workshop was to provide specific attitude-change and values-education strategies designed to improve group understanding.

Citizens' Participation Program

July, 1977 $25,000—Dr. Frances Henry. To write a report on "The Dynamics of Racism in Toronto", published February, 1978.

September, 1977

$400—Fred Dunbar

$400—Paul Robinson

$125—Fred E. Whitworth

For consultation on Human Rights and Education.

Multiculturalism Canada:

1 and 2. Since the inception of the multiculturalism program a great number of projects have been funded that promote better understanding, greater tolerance and acceptance of all ethnocultural groups and thus reduce racial tensions. It is difficult to categorize and analyse the many projects which would fit within this broad parameter but it is possible to give details of specific new initiatives.

In 1980, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism initiated a joint pilot project with metropolitan Toronto specifically aimed at reducing racial tensions in that municipality. A budget of $100,000 was allotted. Under the over-all scheme of the pilot project the following groups were funded:

Black Community Advisory Board	—$16,000
Scarborough Ad Hoc Coalition Committee on Intercultural Initiative	—$24,500
YMCA of Metro Toronto	—$10,020
YMCA of Metro Toronto North York	—$14,940
West End Coalition on Youth Employment	—$34,000

On June 10, 1981, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism announced three new initiatives within the Multiculturalism Directorate specifically designated to combat racism and reduce racial tensions, with an additional budget of $1.5 million for the balance of this fiscal year:

(a) A national symposium to investigate legal solutions to problems on race relations in Canada. This symposium will be designed to seek recommendations of ways in which the legal framework of Canada can be made more responsive to incidents of racial discrimination.

(b) Research unit. Responsible for collecting and reviewing information on research already undertaken on the subject of racism in Canada, the U.S.A., and other countries. The findings will lead to the implementation of programs designed to deal with the problem areas identified.

(c) Public awareness. An integrated media campaign involving majority radio, television and press, a direct mail campaign, and resource kits for teachers, police and other front-line community workers will be developed to reflect the positive contributions which Canada's many cultural minorities have made to our society. Developmental and financial assistance will be made available for seminars on race relations organized by community groups, service clubs, religious organizations, unions, businesses and educational institutions.

Note: Applications have already been received from various groups.

PURCHASE OF CAR BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Question No. 3,063—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare recently purchase a new car from public funds in Montreal and, if so (a) what type of car was it (b) what was the total cost, including a list of all "extras" (c) what was the name and address of the automobile dealer from which the car was purchased and the constituency in which his/her business is located (d) was the minister accompanied by her government chauffeur at the time of purchase and was a trade-in made towards the new vehicle?

2. (a) Did the minister's previous government car have Ontario licence plates (b) does her new car have Quebec licence plates and, if so, was the reason for the change that the minister did not want Ontario licence plates?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

(a) 1981 Oldsmobile 98 Regency.

(b) The car was a demonstrator available at $15,750.
No extras were ordered.

(c) Park Avenue,
Chevrolet Inc.,
5000 Jean Talon East,
Montreal, Quebec
Constituency: St. Léonard-Anjou

(d) Yes.
No.

2. (a) No.

(b) Yes.

The rest of the question is not applicable.

PROVEN RESERVES IN SYDNEY, N.S. COALFIELD

Question No. 3,137—Mr. Murphy:

1. What are the present known "proven" reserves in the Sydney, Nova Scotia coal field and what are the "indicated" reserves up to a five mile limit?

2. What are the "proven" reserves for the (a) Lingan, Nova Scotia Colliery (b) Prince Mine working (c) Donkin mine?

3. What are the "proven" reserves for the (a) No. 26 Colliery (b) No. 26 Colliery working?

4. What was the average wage of the coal miners when the Cape Breton Development Corporation (Devco) took over the mines in parts 2 and 3 (a) in 1968 (b) as of 1980 expressed in (i) money wages (ii) real wage terms corrected for inflation as measured by the consumer price index?

5. What was the pithead cost of a ton of coal in (a) 1968 (b) 1980?

6. What was the price received for one ton of "steam coal" sold by Devco in (a) 1968 (b) 1980?

7. What was the price received by Devco for one ton of "coking coal" in (a) 1968 (b) 1980?

8. What was the average age of the coal mine employee in 1968 and what is the average age at present?

9. What amount was put into capital expenditures at the No. 26 mine per annum since 1976 and what was the corresponding output per mine shaft?

10. What amount was put into improvements in the coal cleaning in Victoria Junction since 1978 and what increase in productivity resulted?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I am informed by the Cape Breton Development Corporation as follows:

1. The corporation does not itemize coal under the "proven" category. The most frequently used nomenclature is "demonstrated". Similarly, the extent to which demonstrated reserves are measured is to a point where the seam reaches to 4,000 feet below sea level; this is not necessarily the five-mile offshore limit. The demonstrated "in situ" reserve for the Sydney, Nova Scotia coalfield is 2,366,000,000 tons.

2. The demonstrated "in situ" reserves at (a) Lingan are estimated as 66 million tons, (b) at Prince Mine as 69 million tons (c) at Donkin as 1,314,000,000 tons.

3. (a) and (b) The demonstrated reserve for No. 26 Colliery is estimated as 75 million tons.

4. The average wage for coal miners in the Cape Breton Development Corporation (a) in 1968 was $19.71 per shift (b) (i) and (ii) this wage adjusted for inflation by the consumer price index in 1980 was $47.78. The actual wage in 1980 was $73.42.

5. The pithead cost of a ton of coal in (a) 1968 was $16.89 and (b) 1980 was $54.14.

6. The price received for a ton of steam coal in (a) 1968 was $11.17 and (b) 1980 was $43.05.

7. The price received for a ton of coking coal in (a) 1968—we did not produce or sell coking coal and (b) 1980 was $58.51.

8. The average age for a coal mine employee is not obtainable for 1968. However for 1967 the average age was 45.5 years. The average age at present is 39.4 years.

9. The amount put into capital expenditures at No. 26 Colliery since 1976 is shown below. The output per mine shaft is not a normal method of measurement, and the output per mine is shown next to the capital expenditures in each year. Another method of measuring productivity is in output per manshift (OMS) and these figures are also included.

No. 26	Capital	Output, Net Tons	OMS
1976	$ 2,459,254	741,492	2.8 tons
1977	1,318,387	740,451	2.9 tons
1978	14,903,619	764,134	3.2 tons
1979	4,417,775	675,061	2.9 tons
1980	3,689,626	909,177	4.0 tons

10. The amount put into improvements in the coal cleaning at Victoria Junction since 1978 and the saleable product in net tons is shown below.

Victoria Junction	Capital	Saleable Product, Net Tons
1978	$217,569	1,666,566
1979	783,803	1,531,195
1980	305,034	1,608,618

STEREO SYSTEM FOR MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Question No. 3,301—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a stereo system ordered by the Millhaven Institution near Kingston on July 30, 1981 at a cost of $600 from Amesbury Distributors Limited, 1611 Liverpool Court, Ottawa and, if so (a) did the demand issue voucher ordering this unit state that it was required for educational purposes and for a music course (b) is there a music course given to the inmates at Millhaven and, if not, for what reason was the unit ordered?

2. Did Mr. C. W. Greaves sign the voucher as the originator and did he also sign in a second place under the heading "authorized signature" and is the unit now installed in his office?

3. Did the signature of Mr. D. Hart dated August 5, 1981 also appear on the form under the heading "fund committed by" and, if so, what is Mr. Hart's connection with this matter?

4. What is a complete record of the employment in the government of Mr. C. W. Greaves and Mr. D. Hart?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. Yes, the Education and Training Division of Millhaven Institution ordered by demand issue voucher and has received from Amesbury Distributors Limited, 1611 Liverpool Court, Ottawa, Ontario, the following stereo system costing $469.00:

1 Radio System, Technics—SA-203

2 Speakers, Technics—SBL-30

(a) Yes.

(b) The equipment was to be and will be used with regard to a non-credit music course which the institutional school department had planned and is planning to implement. Its initial implementation has been postponed due to the sudden resignation of the teacher. A high school "credit" course in music has also been planned for the near future.

2. Mr. C. W. Greaves is the supervisor of academic education. Since March, 1981, he has been appointed to the acting position of assistant warden, education and training. As assistant warden, he is the budget manager for the education and training division hence authorizes all expenditures. As supervisor of academic education he is the originator of the demand issue voucher. This accounts for his two signatures on the demand issue voucher.

The unit is currently being stored in the container as received in the office of the assistant warden, education and training. It is not and has never been out of its container.

3. Mrs. D. Hart is the funds control officer in the institution's finance department. Her signature indicated that there were sufficient funds to cover the purchase of the item and as of that date those funds were committed toward that purchase.

4. Mr. C. W. Greaves has been employed by the government for 16½ years. His record of employment with CSC is as follows:

6 years, 6 months—Teacher at Collins Bay Institution

1 year—Teacher at Millhaven Institution

8 years, 4 months—Supervisor of academic education at Millhaven Institution

8 months—Acting assistant warden, education and training, Millhaven Institution

Mrs. D. Hart has been employed by the government for six years.

Her record of employment with CSC is as follows:

6 months—Finance clerk at Collins Bay Institution

4 months—Clerk, inmate pay at regional headquarters, Ontario

2 months—Audit clerk at regional headquarters, Ontario

5 years—Funds control officer at Millhaven Institution

USE OF SIN NUMBERS BY PETRO-CANADA

Question No. 3,378—Mr. Beatty:

1. Does Petro-Canada require social insurance numbers on applications for its credit cards and, if so, for what reason?

2. Is the government concerned about the proliferation of the use of SINs by departments?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Justice and Petro-Canada as follows:

1. No. Petro-Canada is presently revising its application forms for credit cards and will not require that social insurance numbers be supplied by applicants.

2. In response to public concern about the use of the social insurance number within the federal government, the Minister of Justice, on May 23, 1980, extended the terms of reference of a study into the use of the social insurance number, being conducted by the Privacy Commissioner, to include the use of the number by those federal government departments and institutions which are subject to the provisions of Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act. This includes all departments and 62 agencies of the federal government.

The Privacy Commissioner's report on the use of the social insurance number in Canada, tabled in the House of Commons on March 31, 1981, by the Minister of Justice, thoroughly documents the use of the number by the federal government. The report indicates that the SIN is used most often by departments and agencies when there is a legal requirement to provide it, such as under the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Canada Pension Plan and the Income Tax Act. It is also used to identify individuals involved in financial assistance programs administered by the federal government and as an employee identification number.

While the report indicates that there is fairly widespread use of the SIN by federal government departments and agencies, it concludes that this is not a matter which should cause concern. This conclusion is based on the primary finding of the report: that the use of the social insurance number does not, in and of itself, pose a threat to the privacy of individuals. The major perceived problem associated with widespread use of the social insurance number is its potential for use as a data-linkage device. The Privacy Commissioner found no evidence that the SIN has been misused as a data-linkage device. Moreover, as data-linkage can now be accomplished by the use of other identifiers, such as name, address and birth date, reducing the use of the SIN would not be an effective method of combating the problems associated with this practice.

Finally, the report points out that there are positive factors associated with the use of a single identifying number. These are primarily related to cost and efficiency. Therefore, while restricting the use of the number within the federal government would do nothing to increase protection for the privacy of individuals, it would result in considerable additional costs to the government.

CONSOLIDATION OF FOREIGN SERVICE

Was the decision to transfer foreign service officers of the Department of Employment and Immigration from that jurisdiction to the jurisdiction of the Department of External Affairs made primarily by the Prime Minister and, if so (a) was it discussed and approved by cabinet and, if not, for what reason (b) what were all the reasons that justified such a decision?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The transfer of foreign service officers from the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission to the Department of External Affairs was made as part of the consolidation of the foreign service, which was announced on March 21, 1980. Providing advice to the Crown on the allocation of responsibilities to ministers is a constitutional responsibility of the Prime Minister. The reasons for consolidation were outlined in the Prime Minister's press release on March 21, 1980, announcing the decision.

PURCHASE OF GLOVES FOR CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 3,546—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a contract awarded by the Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of National Defence to Louis Fischl Glove Co. Ltd. of Prescott, Ontario in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville for the purchase of gloves for the Canadian Armed Forces in excess of $20,000 and, if so (a) what was the exact amount of the contract (b) on what date was it awarded (c) what are the names of all those tendering and the amounts of the tenders?

2. (a) Were tenders called by public advertisement and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, what are all the details (b) were tenders invited and, if so, what is a list of all those invited and on what basis was this list arrived at?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The replies to part 1, (a), (b) and (c) (see appendices C, E, K, L) and 2, (a) (i), (ii) are answered as part of question No. 3,547 tabled this day.

2. (b) Bids are solicited from all manufacturers considered capable of manufacturing and supplying a particular item. A list of all firms capable of manufacturing and supplying an item is established by the Food, Drug and Textile Products Centre in conjunction with the industry and federal government customer departments that have the requirement. A facility evaluation is conducted by the federal government customer departments for all new companies that express an interest to do business with the government. At that time, the company's technical and financial capabilities are reviewed and government needs are matched up with the company's capabilities. The company's name is then added to a source list and the company has the opportunity to bid on all government requirements for which they have been pre-qualified.

QUOTAS FOR IMPORTATION OF CARS

Question No. 3,569—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. For each year 1980 to 1982, what quotas were established for the importation of cars from Japan (a) globally (b) by make (c) by model (passenger, pick-up, 4x4, station wagon)?

2. For each year 1978 to 1981, how many cars were imported from Japan by (a) make (b) model?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. No quotas were established by Canada on the importation of motor vehicles in the years 1980-1982.

The Japanese government announced on June 4, 1981, that exports of passenger cars to Canada would not exceed 174,213 in the period April 1, 1981, to March 31, 1982. Any arrangement with respect to make and models was between the Japanese government and the vehicle producers.

2. Import data is not available by make and model.

Imports of Passenger Cars from Japan

1978	—129,308
1979	— 61,459
1980	—150,616
1981 (11 months)	—190,917

SUPPLY OF PARTS FOR AURORA AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,699—Mr. Howie:

Will cancellation of the P-3C Orion aircraft by the government of the United States and the shutdown of the Lockheed assembly plant affect the supply of parts for the Aurora aircraft which is operated by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The United States government has cancelled its plan to terminate production of the Lockheed built P-3C Orion patrol plane, of which the Canadian CP-140 is a variant.

We have received confirmation that the U.S. Secretary of Defense has decided to request procurement of six P-3Cs in 1983 and at least five annually thereafter until 1989. This together with orders from other Allied countries will assure us of the continued supply of spare parts necessary to maintain our aircraft.

In addition, since the U.S. Navy P-3 fleet will be operational for a number of years, Lockheed is obliged to provide the required logistics support to navy operations.

With the announcement of the cancellation of the P-3C, Canada as well as a number of other Allied countries, it is reported, advised the U.S. government of their concerns. We consider that as a result of these representations, the U.S. government reconsidered its decision to terminate.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he could tell me when I can expect an answer to question No. 2,096 which was placed on the Order Paper on February 11, a year ago. The question dealt with the allocation of 17 metric tons of ordinary squid to the Japanese.

I also, Madam Speaker, have question No. 2,464 which was placed on the Order Paper May 12 dealing with information regarding the government's decision to approve urea formaldehyde foam insulation under the government's CHIP program. These are starred questions and should be treated with a little more urgency than the ordinary questions on the Order Paper. Also, Madam Speaker, question No. 2,466, again dealing with urea formaldehyde foam insulation, and question No. 3,274 dealing with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and question No. 3,548 on December 14, dealing with the same matter. Those questions have not been answered and I hope the parliamentary secretary will take notice of these questions, especially those which have been standing on the Order Paper now for a year and are starred questions and should have been answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not have in front of me any specifics with regard to what stage the answers have reached, but I want to assure the hon. member that up until today the government has answered 2,759 questions on the Order Paper, and that I will make inquiries with regard to each and every one of these questions to see if we can expedite the answers he has requested.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in a similar vein, I would like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to a much lower numbered question than those previously cited this afternoon. Starred question No. 849 was presented to the House on May 8, not 1981, but May 8, 1980, almost two years ago. This is a very important series of questions dealing with one Peter Moss, chairman of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, and has to do with the possibility that he was improperly paid for consulting services and that perhaps the government provided an apartment for Mr. Moss here in Ottawa for a number of months without due authority from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc).

I might say, Madam Speaker, that minister provided me with a draft reply to these questions many months ago, but for some unusual reason the government has not chosen to properly register and record the correct answers. I have to speculate as to the possibility that the draft is not correct or accurate, and I therefore would urge the parliamentary secretary to consult his records. I am sure if he would go back to questions numbered below 1,000 there ought to be a very clear and obvious explanation why the government has not chosen to bring these answers forward. I would respectfully request, Madam Speaker, that the government and the parliamentary secretary be urged to give, as this is a starred question, a full and oral presentation of the answer to question 849 today or at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, again, I do not have the particulars in front of me as to the progress of answers being prepared to those questions. I wish to tell the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) that if he is under the delusion that there are any ulterior motives—

Mr. Siddon: No, I would not be under that delusion.

Mr. Smith: —which would prevent the information coming forward, I can assure him that that would not be the case.

Mr. Siddon: Of course not.

Mr. Smith: I will make every possible inquiry to expedite the filing of these answers.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 3,547 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled forthwith.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 3,547 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LOUIS FISCHL GLOVE CO. LTD.

Question No. 3,547—Mr. Cossitt:

How many contracts were awarded by the Department of Supply and Services to the Louis Fischl Glove Co. Ltd. in Prescott, Ontario in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville since the department came into existence or as far back as records exist and what are all the details of such contracts including amounts, goods furnished, methods of calling tenders, names and amounts of all those who tendered in each case?

Return tabled.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion to Adjourn

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam speaker, you can appreciate the difficulty that I face. I have tried everything I possibly could to avoid missing out on the opportunity to place what I consider to be vital amendments before the House. I have come to the ultimate conclusion that I am faced with only one final course. I therefore move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. McGrath: He gets curiouser and curiouser!

Mr. Nielsen: Do you not want to debate C-78?

Mr. Siddon: Do you have the support of your friends over there, your bedmates?

Mr. Lewis: I am absolutely astonished!

Mr. Deans: You are astonished?

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

Mr. Taylor: We want to work!

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the members.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to change the automatic deduction of one hundred dollars for medical expenses and charitable donations, to an automatic deduction of one hundred dollars for medical expenses, with all charitable donations being deductible from the total income on which tax payable is calculated.

He said: Madam Speaker, if there is one thing I can be thankful for to the NDP today, all five of them, it is that they have brought, by their motion and through the efforts of the opposition and government whips, members into the House to listen to this debate which is of some considerable importance. I want to thank hon. members for staying. This is a moment which shall live in my memory as a parliamentarian. Having said that, they have my permission to leave if they wish, since it is Friday afternoon. This is private members' hour and one knows what usually happens to private members' motions. I think it is very important that we advance private members' motions from time to time.

This is a motion which hopefully is designed to improve the lot of the great army of volunteers in Canada who perhaps do not even know how influential they are, how important they are and what a force for good they are. Thefore, I hope this motion is accepted at least for consideration by the government.

● (1610)

As did the earlier motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche)—which I had the honour to second—I hope this motion will centre public attention on the importance of the recognition government ought to give to the volunteer sector.

I said this is a great army of volunteers, and it is. These unsung heroes service the needs of the country. They might belong to service clubs such as Kiwanis, Rotary or Kinsmen. The men and women in those organizations are all brothers and sisters under the sun. They are the people who go from door to door for the Cancer Society, the Heart Association and other charities. The United Way and the people who contribute to it are a force for good, and they are a mighty force.

In a labour force survey released in January of 1981, Statistics Canada noted that 2.7 million adults worked as volunteers in Canada in the year ending February, 1980. Total volunteer hours worked during that year numbered over 373 million, equivalent to approximately 281,000 person-years of volunteer labour. The then secretary of state and now Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) noted in a speech to the Committee of National Voluntary Organizations in January, 1981, that this labour is equivalent to 75 per cent of the entire federal public service and that if the labour was compensated at the average industrial wage, it would represent a value of $3.5 billion in forgone wages by Canadian volunteers. That is the extent of the work.

Volunteers and the organizations they support are active in virtually every facet of Canadian life. Our 47,000 registered charities provide the vehicles through which a tremendous percentage of our cultural, spiritual, educational and social services are developed and delivered. Hospitals, universities, the Stratford Festival, the YMCA, the Red Cross, UNICEF, the National Ballet and the United Way are all registered charities. The whole concept of universal social and health services was developed by the volunteer sector many years before it was adopted by governments.

Without exception, the cultural and educational institutions we take for granted in this country and elsewhere were started by a few small groups of dedicated volunteers. More importantly, no matter how big they have grown, all these organizations are still run by volunteer boards of directors which raise the funds necessary to keep them going, make the policies that animate their activities and keep them accountable to the communities they serve.

The problem is, however, like everything else in this world, these services have been growing rapidly, and the costs of providing them have been growing even more rapidly. In response to rising costs, voluntary organizations are becoming even more imaginative in terms of searching for ways to raise the additional and necessary funds. Unfortunately, all their efforts have not been successful, and that is why we hear from time to time of the precarious state of, for example, the Winnipeg Symphony. We hear concerns about United Way campaigns getting over the top, and sometimes they do not. We hear about cutbacks in services at the Sick Children's Hospital in Toronto and in the services of many other necessary organizations.

Mr. Evans: The cardiac unit.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): My friend, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), mentions the cardiac unit at the Ottawa Civic Hospital. We face almost a crisis in some of those areas, and we must think about this very carefully and find some answers.

Solutions must be found, but without relying primarily on government grants because sometimes the views of governments on particular activities do not coincide with the views of the leaders and members of voluntary organizations. I think we need a new approach, and if government has a role to play in all this, its role is to create an atmosphere in which people will be enticed to give and support volunteer organizations. I think government has the role of providing incentive for people to give. If this was done, I believe certain things would happen. There would be greater self-reliance on the part of voluntary organizations. There would be enhanced sensitivity and accountability on the part of voluntary organizations to the constituencies they serve. There would be greater participation by citizens in voluntary organizations because, as all of us who are in politics know, the fact of the matter is that a donation from someone usually means a commitment from that person to participate as well. There would be an increase in the number and capacity of voluntary organizations to provide social and economic support to worth-while activities. There would be a diversified financial base.

Given the fact that it is a Friday afternoon, I suggest to the government as kindly as I can, that perhaps once again in the budget we missed a great opportunity to do what this motion would do or what the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South would have done. Either one of those propositions would be acceptable to me. One would be less expensive to the government than the other, but the basic proposition is to do away with the automatic charitable donation of $100, which does not entice people to give to voluntary organizations, but in fact serves the administrative process more than anything else. It is a matter of the pen claiming the deduction rather than the pen writing the contribution cheque.

The contribution cheque is the purpose behind this motion, and it was the purpose behind the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South. This would be an encouragement the government could give. I know that the parliamentary secretary or whoever will be speaking today has figures to indicate the costs of my motion and, likely, the cost to the government of the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South. I do not say this proposal would not cost the government revenue. It would cost the government a tremendous amount of revenue, but this would be a donation by government through a change in the statute. The government would provide an incentive to give. If people do not give, they cannot claim the deduction. Under this proposal the government would ally itself, in terms of the over-all delivery of social services, with volunteer organizations of all kinds, which would be strengthened and enhanced both in terms of the things they could engage in and in terms of their nature. It is in a real way the give and take system.

I think this House should consider this proposal. I hope at the end of this day this motion will be considered by the House not as a direction to government to act, because it is not framed that way, but as a direction to government to consider this proposal as well as the proposal of the hon. member for Edmonton South, which I had the privilege to second.

I have never found anyone in government or in any political party who disagrees in principle with this motion and the idea behind it. Everyone agrees that the current system is inequitable and provides virtually no incentive to people to be generous. The current system causes, at the same time, a considerable expenditure of public funds, because many of the services voluntary organizations cannot provide, but which are necessary, must be provided. I believe the problem is lack of political will to act. It was with that idea of generating that will that the government under the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), when he was prime minister, proposed a parliamentary task force, as it is called today, or a select committee on the voluntary sector. That proposal stood in my name as the then president of the Privy Council. I was very proud that it happened that way. It would have permitted a committee of the House, as was done in the case of the disabled and in so many other cases, to focus public attention on the requirements of the voluntary sector of the community.

If this debate today will simulate the same desire on the part of the government to propose that kind of special task force, as they like to call it, under the auspices of this Parliament where the voluntary sector and those in the community who depend on it can come and tell us what is required and we can urge the government to make the changes, then I would be very happy. I promise that I will not accuse the government of stealing our idea; I would applaud it for that! I would applaud it for its wisdom in the circumstances and, to the extent it was possible for me to do so, I would applaud it from one end of the country to the other.

I think it is important that we not forget, in a period of restraint when government is drawing back and services are being cut back, that there are still needs that have to be served and people who are disadvantaged in the community. There are still groups that are socially and culturally disadvantaged. If the job of government is anything at all, it is to instil in people the will to do public good. If by changes in the tax system we can remove the disincentive to giving to charities rather than merely claiming the exemption, then I think we will have advanced the cause of humanity in the country and the delivery of social services. If I may say so, we will have done a service by enhancing and helping the government as it moves into this difficult time of restraint.

There is a large army of volunteers out there, Mr. Speaker. It is an army for good. Its will, its sense of what is right, its sense of what is needed should be harnessed. It is within the hands of the government to do that. All of us agree that something should be done now.

The national volunteer organizations and their constituent members would be delighted to see agreement with this motion and the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South. They would be delighted to see some action by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Indeed, they would be very pleased if we should begin an examination of their importance and their place in society.

If that is the result of the work of the hon. member for Edmonton South and the public consideration of this motion, I will be very pleased. I will support and applaud the government if it will only consider this from the point of view of the appointment of what it calls a parliamentary task force. The need is there and we must create the will and the understanding in the community. We must give those National Voluntary Organizations in the community not just a voice here, but a place here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has indicated, the charitable organizations in our country do a fantastic job of serving a need that could never be served by government at any economic cost. They meet the requirements of a large body of Canadians who require services in social and economic areas. We are in the debt of the voluntary sector for the services it provides.

The motion put forward by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and an earlier motion by the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) are somewhat different. I would like to go into some of the concerns that I have with these motions.

The National Voluntary Organization has been making representations to government for some time to modify the existing provisions that apply to charitable donations in order to enhance the incentive for people to give. They have put forward a somewhat different proposal than those put forward by the two members opposite.

Earlier last year in my role as parliamentary secretary to the minister I was asked to examine the possibility of pulling together the diverse interests and recommendations made with regard to charitable giving to see how we could enhance them within the fiscal restraints of the government so that there could be some resolution of the differences that have existed among members of Parliament and the volunteer community.

We worked with other parliamentarians in a small group and with people from the voluntary sector to try to come to grips with this question. At the moment I understand that this issue is in the hands of the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) who is putting together a final proposal to be presented either as a white paper or as proposals for legislation in the not too distant future.

This is the second time in this session that we have had a motion dealing with tax deductions for charitable donations. Certainly we all recognize that it is a very important area and one which should be dealt with at the earliest possible moment. There is great interest in and concern about the subject, and this is reflected in the motion we are debating today and in the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton South which was debated on June 9, 1980. These interests and concerns are shared by the government and there has been an ongoing review of the whole question of government initiative for charitable giving, and of the most appropriate form that this incentive could take. There is general agreement that some form of incentive is necessary and justifiable but there are different views on the nature and extent of the incentive and how it should be provided. Today I should like to review some of the considerations that must be taken into account and to look at some of the approaches that might be taken to resolve this issue.

First of all, there are several key principles that must be taken into account in any consideration. One involves equity, which is particularly important in our tax system. Any incentive that we provide through the tax system should seek to deal equitably among taxpayers and this principle, of course, was put forward rather forcefully in the recent budget.

In addition, the incentive should be as effective as possible in relation to its cost to the treasury. In other words, we should try to ensure that the money being put forward in the form of a tax expenditure—that is, dollars not collected by the treasury, that money forgone by the treasury that is naturally picked up by other taxpayers—is allocated in the most efficient manner possible to the charitable organizations in the country.

Another important consideration is that we continue to respect the pluralistic nature of our society. The great variety of our voluntary agencies is important to our social fabric and we should seek to give free rein to this aspect of charitable organizations.

A further consideration that we should bear in mind is the administrative costs and convenience of the approach that we select. There are differences in approach. Some individuals would say that the federal government or a level of government should enter into a direct expenditure program to fund charitable organizations. That is one of the options that have been put forward. Another would be through the tax system, while others could be to use a method similar to the one we have now with an automatic deduction in the tax system to avoid the administrative costs of providing tax receipts for every donation. On the other hand, it would mean that certain individuals may claim deductions for which no charitable donations were given in the first place.

If we look carefully at the standard $100 deduction which is in place now, we realize that it is actually a disincentive to giving, because an individual who gives nothing has a tax reduction of some amount depending on his marginal tax rate. If his marginal tax rate is 25 per cent, by not giving anything and simply claiming the $100 deduction, he is $25 ahead of the game. Therefore, the first dollar given to a charitable organization reduces that $25. In the first $25 the individual is losing twice; he is giving $1 to a charitable organization and is giving up $1 of tax saving. It is actually a disincentive. I am quite concerned that a standard deduction, which does not require substantiation in the form of a receipt, is actually a disincentive to giving. We would probably see a higher level of charitable donations if we simply eliminated the $100 deduction altogether.

The other question raised by the hon. member's motion suggests that we should have a $100 deduction for medical expenses. There is a slight problem here because the standard rule in the tax law now is that the $100 deduction is for medical expenses and charitable donations. This deduction was really included for administrative purposes, so that people would not have to attach $1 or $2 receipts to their tax forms and send them in. In that event Revenue Canada people would be required to go through the various receipts. We said that the first $100 was automatic whether one gave anything or not. Given that we now have a computerized system which is becoming more sophisticated all the time, it is not beyond my imagination to ask why we could not have standard receipts that are machine readable. This would eliminate a great deal of administrative bother. Employees of Revenue Canada would actually be able to check the individual receipts as they came in, and it would eliminate the disincentive to which I referred earlier.

I have some problems with regard to the medical deduction. As I said, the standard in the present tax system is that an individual can claim medical expenses over and above 3 per cent of his income. The reason for this is that we have one of the finest medical insurance systems in the world, in the form of our hospitalization or medicare. As a result it was thought that only those expenses over and above relatively small expenditures for medical care should be deductible from tax, and that it should be greater than 3 per cent of income. If the first $100 deduction was allowed for medical expenses, we would have a double standard. The first $100 would be deductible, and everything between $100 and 3 per cent of income would not be deductible, and everything over 3 per cent, substantiated by receipts, would be deductible. Given the fact that we have such a very effective medical insurance and medical security system in the country, quite frankly I see no reason for leaving the standard deduction of $100 for medical purposes. If a person has legitimate medical expenses, that is one thing, but if he has good health and no legitimate medical expenses during the year, why should he be able to write off $100 just because it is in the tax system? I am of the opinion that we should eliminate the $100 deduction altogether, and then in Parliament or in committee we could look at the question as to whether there should be additional incentives to charitable giving over and above the fact that charitable donations are deductible from income for tax purposes.

Then of course the question arises as to whether it is adequate incentive or whether we should become involved in an incentive program such as the one put forward by NVO. That organization argues that the present system is an inequitable method of rewarding charitable givings. The suggestion is that a person in the 25 per cent marginal tax bracket receives the benefit of a $25 tax saving, whereas a person in the 50 per cent tax bracket receives a $50 savings. The notion of equity has been called into question in terms of different individuals with different tax brackets receiving different incentives from the public purse for charitable donations. As a result NVO indicated that instead of using a deduction system, it would prefer to see a tax credit whereby, for example, an individual would receive a 50 per cent tax credit. If he donated $100, then he could deduct $50 from his tax payable at the end of the year. This would mean that everyone would receive exactly the same benefit from the contribution, whether their marginal tax rate was 10 per cent or 50 per cent, which is now the top bracket.

Clearly this raises some problems because the top marginal tax rate in the present system is 50 per cent and the average marginal tax rate is less than that. For any given level of donation, obviously the contribution in the form of tax revenue forgone would be much higher under a 50 per cent tax credit than in the present situation. As I understand the current situation, the revenue forgone from the personal and corporate tax system was somewhere in the range of $425 million for the year 1980. Therefore, if we used a 50 per cent tax credit it would not only increase the value of donations given now, it would probably be a substantial incentive to increase donations, and the cost to the treasury could be well in excess of $1 million, although this is only a guesstimate on my part.

For example, if the average marginal tax rate of Canadians was 30 per cent and the tax credit becomes 50 per cent, there is an automatic 40 per cent increase in cost. Of course 40 per cent of $425 million is almost another $200 million, so there is $625 million. If there was an additional incentive effect it would be between $625 million and $1 billion, somewhere in that range. I am not sure how much it would be, but certainly it would be a substantial increase.

At a time of fiscal restraint the government is reluctant to undertake any major program, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) indicated on a number of occasions in answer to questions posed over the last couple of weeks. Requests were put forward to increase expenditures over and above the level of the envelopes now, such as to increase the expenditures for job creation and to increase assistance for home owners, farmers, fishermen and so on. The minister has indicated that he is not prepared to do this outside the present structure and fiscal plan and, as a result, I think he would be quite reluctant to move to a tax credit scheme or some similar scheme which would involve major increases in expenditures from revenue.

It is a very important point which we as parliamentarians should consider. I have raised in the House before that the notion of tax expenditures is an extremely important concept for us to deal with, because we have an expenditure plan which must be financed. If we make conscious decisions not to collect revenue from someone, then someone else or everyone else is required to pay higher taxes than they would otherwise pay to fund the expenditure plan. This is because someone is not paying as much as he would without that tax expenditure being in place. Every time we put a tax expenditure in place we are causing other Canadians to carry a heavier burden than otherwise. It is a very important concept. I tend to think of tax expenditures as just another form of direct expenditures. In one case the government spends taxpayers' money, in the other case the government decides not to collect from some taxpayers. From my perspective the effect is the same in terms of the burden on the taxpayers.

With that said, I would suggest to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton that it is a very worthy cause he has put forward. I can tell him that the government is actively developing policies in this particular area right now. Proposals will come forward to deal with the voluntary organization question. I am sure as parliamentarians we can come to a resolution of this problem that will be satisfactory not only to the voluntary organizations but satisfactory from the point of view of the taxpayer in that we will be providing the assistance that all Canadians wish to provide to the voluntary sector in the most effecient and effective way possible.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in support of the general direction of this proposal for a bookkeeping improvement in the way that charitable donations are handled. While we are considering the subject, we should be willing to give the whole matter of charitable donations a very thorough rethinking.

As times have changed the role of charitable donations should also change. It is now possible that low-income people who are almost by definition the object of charitable giving can do a great deal for themselves. In some ways they can do it better than can be done by those who are the traditional source of charity. We have developed all kinds of techniques for co-operatives. For example, co-operative joint self-education in poor communities and various kinds of mutual help in neighbourhoods, for which a certain amount of financial assistance would be most useful. The question is who controls this? If these local self-help organizations have to be controlled by outside do-gooders, by ladies bountiful, men or women, whatever sex, or by academics who are primarily interested in doing research, the benefit to them is very questionable.

I live in the Kensington area of Toronto which, according to a former member of the provincial legislature, Allan Gross-man, has been studied probably more than any other part of Canada.

Mr. Nickerson: Except my constituency.

Mr. Heap: The Kensington area is just about a mile from the University of Toronto. Every first-year student of sociology, economics, politics, etc., are told to study the Kensington area. It would be cheating to use the study done the previous year or 20 years ago, so people are always coming around to ask us questions. At first there seems to be ready help for local groups and things such as community centres, but students are required to use this practical experience to advance their credits. They are not really able to give free voluntary help to a local group.

Low-income people who need this help have shown a great deal of ability to govern their own organization if allowed to. It would be very useful to have the tax system changed so as to allow them to control the charities that serve them rather than having the charities be instruments by which people of middle and upper-income control the lower-income people.

One way of doing this would be first to make sure that basic services are not treated as matters of charity. The basic services are funded on the tax base or within a particular service, institution or charitable activity. A certain base is funded on the tax base and perhaps extras then are funded by additional charitable donations.

There are many groups which do not yet have adequate funding from the tax base. They have to go cap in hand every year for another grant from the municipal council and another grant from the provincial government and another grant from the federal government. These people spend a large part of their year just trying to make sure that they will still be in business in the future. I am thinking of rape crisis centres which have demonstrated that they are necessary but have great difficulty getting funding. Hostels for battered wives, with or without their battered children, exist. They have proven their worth by the number of people they have to turn away. Yet these hostels are still extremely short of funds. Those that do exist are in a most precarious financial state.

In our large cities we need youth drop-in centres to give youth, who, for whatever reason are perhaps alienated from their homes, if they have homes, some kind of social group around which to orient. This type of thing is desperately needed. It should be provided on a secure basis so that the director and the volunteer board of such a group does not always have to be skewing its work in order to be able to go to a government and show they have such and such a case load and such and such a success rate on a short-term basis which makes basic and long-term work very difficult to do. It would be much better if the work of these groups was accountable in a broad way on the tax base rather than the groups being treated as either strictly private charities or as hybrid outfits who have to beg money from private sources or beg money by annual or semi-annual grants from all levels of government.

The second way that we should make this change is by using a tax credit instead of a tax deduction. The tax credit would give recognition and appropriate reward to low-income people who give to these things instead of making this a traditional tax haven only for high-income people. Let them have dollar for dollar credit for what they give. If the high-income people wish to give more then they will be credited accordingly. But the low-income people, especially those who do not have enough income to enjoy the privilege of paying income tax, cannot get anything from a tax deduction. But they should be recognized through the system of tax credit.

Finally, and the most important change that would have to be made, would be in the charitable organizations legislation. It must be recognized in order to include clearly and positively the concept of an advocacy group. It should include advocacy groups dedicated and openly committed to trying to produce social changes. We may not all agree on what kinds of social changes are wanted, but we could agree that any organization that seriously tries to put forward a social goal and works toward that goal should be able to solicit donations on the basis of an advocacy group as a charitable organization.

That is already done for three well-known advocacy groups who do not agree about the kind of change they want in this country. I belong to one called the New Democratic Party. My colleagues to the right belong to another and my colleagues opposite, if any of them had stayed around, belong to another. We do not agree exactly about what kinds of changes we want. We are all recognized as being members of a kind of advocacy group. We all have tax credits as a basis for raising our donations. This should not be limited to people running for public office federally or provincially. It should be extended to people who are going to do the other kinds of very necessary work for changing our society.

I am thinking of, for example, consumer organizations and groups such as native friendship centres which have been directly threatened by the loss of their charitable status if they dare to suggest that the Department of Indian Affairs does not always do things right, whether it be the federal or provincial department. They should not be threatened and hampered in carrying out their mandate on behalf of the native peoples of Canada by being faulted as charitable organizations for doing something for which political parties praise themselves, namely, trying to change the laws of this country.

Community centres in Toronto have often been attacked in the same way. They have been told they cannot get political. If the supporters of a community centre do not wish to give money because they do not like the activities of that centre, then the centre will fold. But it should not be in the power of government to say, because your community centre opposed the expressway that the city government happened to like, we do not think you should have your charitable status. That has not been said explicitly, so far, but it has been at times hinted at and we should revise the act so as to make clear that any social group in the neighbourhood should have the right to advocate the things the neighbourhood needs without having to fear for their charitable status.

There are many kinds of poor people's organizations. Many of them have not registered as charities, not only because it takes a little money, a little legal advice, and a little organization for which some poor people do not have the training; but also because of the nature of what they are trying to do, trying to change life for poor people, and for some in this country that is an unsatisfactory goal. They do not want the lives of the poor changed. They are able to organize their own charities in many cases, and the poor should be able to organize theirs.

For example, I am thinking, even of such middle groups as the Children's Aid in certain areas which, although it is a traditional group, has often entered into advocacy work, for example in Toronto, by advocating that we need better and more low-income housing, yet they have been criticized for "getting political". Who is it that criticizes them? The politicians.

Some politicians do not like someone encroaching on their monopoly so they say to Children's Aid, you are supposed to rescue the victims of bad housing but you are not supposed to say it is bad housing that made victims of them. They should be enabled to defend the people for whom they are charged as social guardians. They should be able to speak up and say what are the causes of so many broken families, so many disoriented children in our big cities. The chief reason the Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto pointed its finger was the unnecessary shortage of low-income housing in Metro Toronto. They were very much criticized for getting into that.

Tenants' organizations should be able to defend themselves. They should be able to fund themselves as charitable organizations, provided their books, like those of any other charitable organization, are open and their goals are open. Those organizations that I know of are quite willing to do that. They have nothing to hide. It is the landlords who like to keep their books secret.

There are all kinds of ethnic groups and interpreter services who would like to speak for and defend the interests of the immigrant groups they serve. However, they are hampered and hindered by the fear that if they speak up on behalf of those people, many of them low-income and disadvantaged people, they might lose their grants and be unable to continue the service. Of course, we have the interesting situation, which I believe has already been noted here some months past, where an educational publication has been attacked by the government and deprived, at least temporarily, of its charitable status on the grounds that it represents a certain biased point of view. I refer to a magazine called Dimension. On the other hand, an outfit like the Fraser Institute, which is equally biased—

Mrs. Mitchell: And hardly charitable.

Mr. Heap: Yes, as my colleague says, hardly charitable in the ordinary sense of the word. That institute can get tax benefits. Then there is an organization which purports to be religious and gets tax deductions for that reason, and carries on its main public activity by trying to destroy certain trustees in our educational system around Metro Toronto. I speak of Renaissance. That organization funds vicious and misleading, in fact outright lying propaganda from time to time with money given as charitable donations and recognized as such.

So, in fact we do recognize advocacy, whether it is by political parties, certain religious groups, or certain conservative minded educational groups. Why not be consistent and let the poor also have their advocacy groups and have the same chance to move this country ahead; the same chance that is given to certain other and much more well-heeled groups which would hold this country back. I would hope when this is considered further we will really try to revise the whole concept of the charitable donation system in our tax laws and make it as available to low-income people as it is now to upper-income people.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the proposal before the House is essentially the same as that submitted in March, 1978, in a paper from the National Voluntary Organizations, an umbrella organization representing charitable societies. There are some differences, as my hon. friend has mentioned, and I will not go into them, yet the proposal from the NVO and an earlier submission in 1977 from the National Advisory Council on Voluntary Action, have generated broad public interest in this issue. They have led to consultations and detailed study by the Department of Finance on the whole question of the nature and extent of government support and tax incentives for charitable giving.

I think all members would welcome the opportunity provided by this notice of motion to debate this question. I do not think we are in disagreement on the broad parameters of the program and proposals of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What about a parliamentary task force?

Mr. MacLellan: A parliamentary task force is one consideration which could be given to this whole question, Mr. Speaker, and we all certainly are agreed on the importance and value of the contribution these organizations make to our society. I do not think any of us here would want to see the voluntary sector stifled and its incentives diminished as a result of anything we may propose in the House. However, the issue is, in what way and to what extent should governments be assisting this effort through provisions of the Income Tax Act. The extent of such governmental assistance through the tax system is already substantial.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES' RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Within the past two months two committees of Parliament, one from this House and one from the other place, presented separate reports on the status of Canada's regular and reserve military forces. Both reports provided in some detail the need to strengthen and improve immediately the military, which is undermanned, ill-equipped, underfunded, and lacking in planning and direction. In light of the fact that the decline of the military over past years is the direct result of deliberate neglect by this government, and that both reports urge the government to give priority attention to our defence forces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Prime Minister order the Minister of National Defence to prepare and table a new white paper on defence as soon as possible and that the Prime Minister publicly and immediately announce his commitment to the enhancement of the status, capability and role of the regular and reserve forces in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE HONOURABLE MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

CONGRATULATIONS ON CONVALESCENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I am moving a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 that I hope and assume will be agreed to by members on all sides. Considering that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is well on the road to recovery and today, for the first time in months, is able to watch the proceedings of the House of Commons from his home, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House congratulates Stanley Knowles on his remarkable recuperative abilities and wishes him a speedy return to his seat in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DEMAND FOR REVERSAL OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas there is an immediate need in Canada for a quarter of a million new housing units, and whereas the outlook for 1982 is the worst in 20 years, with starts of only 150,000 being forecast, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House demands an immediate reversal of the Liberal government's policy of forcing Canadians to go homeless while workers in the construction and forest industries go unemployed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER" DRILLING RIG OFF NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of great tragedy to the people of Newfoundland. It is not yet known if there are survivors from the Ocean Ranger drilling rig operating off the coast of Newfoundland. However, I have been assured by the authorities in charge that all rescue efforts that can be undertaken are presently being carried out. I am certain that all hon. members will want to support the following resolution. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House extend its deepest sympathy to the families and friends of those who lost their lives on the Ocean Ranger drill rig operating off the coast of Newfoundland, and assure them that our thoughts and prayers are with them in this time of deep personal tragedy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EFFECT OF BUDGET PROVISION ON RENTAL CLOTHING INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the garment clothing rental industry employs approximately 10,000 Canadians across Canada. One feature in the recent budget hits the industry especially hard by forcing it to depreciate its rental clothing over a two-year rather than one-year period which it is doing at present. The industry experience is that rental clothing is extinguished or worn out after a year. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the government reconsider the employment consequences of the tax measure in issue for an important industry before putting it into law.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OPERATION TAX RIDE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, protests against the federal budget have sprung up all over the country and have taken many forms, even the form of a letter signed by two ministers of the Crown. This afternoon another protest will take place here in Ottawa and this one will take a particularly appropriate form. Taxes due to the government for this month will be delivered personally to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) from the back of a donkey. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House indicate its support for the business people and citizens involved with Operation Tax Ride for demonstrating today their disgust with the federal budget—a disaster for business and the ordinary citizen alike.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PARLIAMENT

NEED FOR REPRESENTATION REFORM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House the totally unnecessary exercise which has now commenced and which will increase the total membership of this House by 30 members to 312 by the general election at the end of this present decade. Projecting the present formula, we could well have 345 members by 1991, 382 members by 2001, 423 by 2011, 468 by 2021, 518 by 2031, and so on to infinity. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the members of the government and, indeed, all members of this House indulge in sober second thought over decennial redistribution and the need for it and instead turn their attention to complete electoral and representation reform which would include freezing the present membership of the House of Commons at 282 and at the same time explore ways and means whereby an elected Senate could be more representative and thereby more effective.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

PEARSE REPORT—CALL FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in light of the almost unanimous opposition to most of the recommendations in the Pearse report on the Pacific fisheries industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

That this House provide a reference to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to enable that committee to examine that report and to call witnesses in connection with it.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTE OVER OFFSHORE RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is sadly ironic that only a few days after the breakdown of Newfoundland-Ottawa negotiations over the management, control and jurisdiction of Hibernia offshore oil, we now see tragedy in the apparent sinking of the Mobil Oil rig Ocean Ranger in cruel seas 175 miles east of St. John's, Newfoundland. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That in order for people not to be at risk because of government jurisdictional disputes, and in order not to repeat the economic consequences of another Alberta-Ottawa type delay, and in view of the fact that the same problem has recently heated up on the west coast off British Columbia, this House urge an early meeting of Premiers Peckford, Buchanan and Bennett with the Prime Minister to negotiate in the spirit of co-operative federalism and end this dangerous dispute.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER" DRILLING RIG OFF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I have given the Minister of Transport notice of my question. Would the minister please give us an up-to-date status report on the Hibernia tragedy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the news I have is as of eleven o'clock this morning. The situation was that there was no sign of the rig. Eighty-four persons were not accounted for. Some were seen, apparently, in the water, but it is not known if they are still alive. On the scene there is an Aurora aircraft and two offshore supply vessels. Two other vessels are on the way, and so on. One coastguard ship, the Humphrey Gilbert, is there. Two national defence helicopters are operating from adjacent drill rigs. Two lifeboats have been spotted, one capsized and one submerged, and one partially collapsed life raft has been seen. That was the situation as of eleven o'clock.

An investigation is already under way. A fact-finding preliminary inquiry team is there. It is made up of officials from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and Transport Canada. Jointly this afternoon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I will be announcing a formal commission of inquiry into this very sad matter.

REFUSAL TO BUILD HELICOPTER PAD

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for that information, tragic though it is. In view of the last part of his answer perhaps the minister would confirm that as part of the investigation and the formal inquiry it will be determined why the Virgin Rocks project, submitted over two years ago by the regional managers and the coast guard director of Newfoundland, for the establishment of a safety fuelled light station, a heli-pad and a medical supply station, was turned down by the minister's department because it was too "futuristic", notwithstanding the fact that there is such a safety heli-pad in the North Sea?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when an accident like this takes place, there is a lot of hindsight. I will look into this particular matter. Each time there is an inquiry, such an inquiry leads to a number of recommendations and, as far as the Department of Transport is concerned, there is a formal response to each recommendation made. If the matter raised by my hon. friend was the object of a recommendation from an inquiry, judge or otherwise, I am sure a response was provided at that time. I will look into this and make sure the hon. member is made aware of the reasons why action along the line he has indicated was not taken.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON REASONS FOR REFUSAL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, just so that we are very clear, there has never been a formal inquiry on the Virgin Rocks project. The project emanated from within the department. There was a recommendation from the Newfoundland Coast Guard to officials in Ottawa, and I am informed the recommendation was turned down by the ministry on October 2, 1980.

Would the minister please report back to the House even before there is some official inquiry into this tragedy as to the reasons why this recommendation for a heli-pad and medical supply station on the Virgin Rocks, which is half way between St. John's and the Hibernia—and recommended just for the prevention of loss from such a tragedy as this—was in fact turned down?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I will do so, Madam Speaker. I was just trying to make the point that every time there is an accident of this kind—we all truly regret it—people have ideas about what should have been done to prevent it. These ideas are studied, and answers are provided. There are budget considerations, and some ideas are not considered acceptable, again from that point of view. I will look into this and make sure my hon. friend receives the full explanation he is seeking.

ALARM SOUNDED ONE WEEK PRIOR TO SINKING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. There are press reports today that the alarm on the Ocean Ranger was sounded last week because the rig was listing 15 degrees. Indeed, the order was given to abandon ship. In view of the tragic loss of life and the fact that the "unsinkable" Ocean Ranger has in fact sunk, has the minister's department investigated that alarm and its cause, and is he now able to report to the House?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am informed that an inspector from the Canada Oil and Gas Act land administration did inspect the platform in the last two weeks. I do not have a copy of that report and I cannot give any particular information in that respect.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, although the minister did not give an undertaking, I presume he will report to the House.

POSSIBLE DEPLOYMENT OF FIXED WING AIRCRAFT IN NEWFOUNDLAND BY DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Whilst it is too early to come to any conclusions on this tragedy, which we all regret very much, nevertheless I must avail myself of this opportunity to remind the minister that he has recommendations from within his department for greater deployment of fixed wing aircraft within the Atlantic provinces, and specifically that they be based in Gander in order to respond to situations that may develop in the offshore. I am not in a position to say whether that was a factor or not. I merely want to ask the minister if the government has made any decision with respect to the deployment of fixed wing aircraft in the northwest Atlantic, specifically Newfoundland, so that they can respond with minimum lead time and effect rescue which would, of course, ultimately be carried out by helicopter.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am well aware of the recommendations mentioned by the hon. member and we have taken them into consideration. No decision has been made yet on the question of positioning fixed wing aircraft in Newfoundland. I know the hon. member's concern about what has just happened and what could happen in Newfoundland coastal waters.

I was aware of this accident very early this morning and I would like to stress the fact that there is no question of a lack of resources in this case. We must take into consideration that this happened about 200 kilometres from the coast, in 50-foot seas, and in weather conditions that meant that even our best aircraft and our best resources could not be of help.

I will take the comments of the hon. member into consideration and see what we can do in the future.

JURISDICTIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour which pertains to the same subject. As the minister is aware, early this morning the drill rig Ocean Ranger was heavily damaged in a storm, with an unknown number of lives being lost. This afternoon we have heard a jurisdictional dispute over the responsibility of various departments.

Could the minister tell the House whether the drill rig fell under the jurisdiction of the federal or provincial government in terms of occupational health and safety, and could he tell us specifically if federal inspectors regularly visit these rigs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: Where is the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Lalonde: The responsibility in this regard belongs to the federal government, the federal Parliament. Indeed, as I indicated previously, an inspector visited that rig recently.

Mr. Benjamin: Which department?

INQUIRY RESPECTING SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, we had an accident at Christmastime which is under investigation. Now we have another serious accident. I think it is time this House was told where the jurisdiction lies. We are talking about the lives of individual workers.

I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources what department has jurisdiction and what kind of safety regulations are in place to ensure that lives are not lost at sea.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is great concern about an incident like this—indeed, a tragedy like this. I should like to refer my friend to the Canada Oil and Gas drilling regulations that are in effect at the present time. When Bill C-48 is proclaimed the responsibilities provided by that act will be fully applied.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—STAFFING LEVELS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it relates to one of the government's white elephants, namely, Mirabel International Airport. Mirabel has three times as many employees as Calgary International Airport, yet Mirabel handles only one third the number of passengers that Calgary does. Could the minister tell us whether Mirabel is overstaffed or whether Calgary International Airport is understaffed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have not made a study of that question in depth. I am quite sure that Mirabel has justification for the number of staff employed there. I am quite sure that Calgary is in a similar situation. Again, I have not done an in-depth analysis of the factors.

• (1425)

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF SERVICES FROM DORVAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my brief supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is an announcement about transferring any air services in the near future from Dorval to Mirabel contemplated soon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, indeed this question is being studied at the moment.

RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport respecting the circumstances surrounding the resignation of Robert Bandeen as president of CNR. Mr. Bandeen's sudden departure has resulted in speculation about the reasons; some say that there was a dispute with the board of directors of CNR. Does the minister know the real reason for Dr. Bandeen's resignation? Was it related to his endorsement of the $50 million investment in the ill-fated CAST shipping group, which is now in financial difficulty? Will the minister tell the House why such a high profile public servant would quit so unexpectedly?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when Dr. Bandeen resigned he issued a communiqué—and I will be glad to send a copy to my hon. friend—in which he explained that after some seven or eight years directing CN he was looking for other challenges. I have no reason to doubt that this was the reason.

ASSISTANCE TO CAST SHIPPING GROUP

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I asked the minister whether he knew the real reason, not simply the ones which have been stated. I want to ask him about the CAST shipping group and what has been happening in the last few weeks with respect to that ill-fated company. The minister must know that CAST has been refused credit by CNR and is now appealing for help from international bankers. He certainly knows that $50 million in public funds has been invested in this organization through the Canadian National Railways, notwithstanding that it was characterized as a "James Bond" type of operation. Will the government and CNR continue to support the CAST shipping group and to provide assistance, since I understand that Dr. Bandeen and other officers of CNR are now in Europe investigating the possibility of providing further financial assistance to this organization?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): No, Madam Speaker. Indeed there are difficulties related in the press with respect to the CAST company. As my hon. friend has said, CN has an interest in the company. At the moment the board of CN is fully in charge of the matter, is treating it as a commercial one, and is trying to protect or safeguard its interests and investment in CAST and also the benefits which Canada as a whole and CN in particular have gathered from their association with CAST.

INDUSTRY

DEFICIT IN MANUFACTURING TRADE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister of State for Economic Development said some time ago that if a country comes to Canada wanting to buy iron, we do not try to sell that country steel. Another bit of economic wisdom was uttered on the weekend by the same minister when he said that the Liberal government is no longer concerned that Canadians are seen as "hewers of wood and drawers of water". In this context he said that the Liberals will continue to try to sell off our resources. Considering that there was a deficit of $21 billion in our manufacturing trade last year, representing some 200,000 Canadian jobs if the manufacturing had been done here, will the minister now confirm that Senator Olson has replaced his, the minister's industrial strategy, with the old Liberal policy of resource sell-offs?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I understand it is Senator Olson's view that the quotations attributed to him in recent press reports were incomplete and taken out of context.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: As our economic development framework document tabled last November made clear, industrial development continues to be one of our very important priorities, both with respect to building our industrial strength on our resource strength and to developing international competitiveness in other areas of manufacturing activity where we are already achieving or have the capacity to achieve world leadership.

• (1430)

DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCE MEGAPROJECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his recorded announcement, but let him tell that to the 230,000 workers who have been laid off in the manufacturing sector in recent months.

Considering that the cost of creating one job in resource megaprojects is ten times higher than the creation of one job in manufacturing, and that the Prime Minister has always been critical of suggestions coming from this side of the House as being quick-fix solutions, would the minister answer the following question? Considering these megaprojects produce only temporary construction jobs but do ensure the rapid depletion of our resources, will he admit that the federal government is now trying to bail itself out of a serious balance of payments situation by a quick-fix resource sellout?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I certainly do not accept or agree with the premise of my hon. friend's question. We are certainly trying and in fact we are successfully working to build up our exports in many areas of high technology. For example, the aerospace sector has exports in the area of 90 per cent of our production of over $3 billion in an industry with 42,000 people. At the same time resource projects offer tremendous opportunities for manufacturing activities. For example, equipment, machinery and engineering involve tens of thousands of jobs in manufacturing in our existing industrial base in areas like Ontario and Quebec, as well as in many other parts of Canada.

Mr. Siddon: It has not happened over the last ten years.

Mr. Gray: Through our program of ensuring the maximum competitive opportunity from these industrial spin-offs, we want to make sure that Canadians in fact have the benefits in manufacturing through resource development. Resource development is very much a building block for industrial development according to our own policy, approach and action.

MANUFACTURE OF MINING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for the recorded announcement, part two. The minister has said, and I listened with care, that the government is taking steps to ensure that we get the manufacturing benefits relating to our resource sales. Everyone who has studied the situation knows that this is totally false. Canada is the third largest producer of minerals in the world, yet in this sector we have a $1.3 billion deficit in mining machinery which is costing us 13,000 manufacturing jobs. If we were producing the machinery here in Canada to do the work in our mines, we would have those jobs. Instead of going the old route, the quick-fix route of selling off our resources in these megaprojects, why does the government not use a little imagination to ensure that these manufacturing jobs to build mining equipment are kept here in Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has identified a problem.

An hon. Member: You.

Mr. Gray: As usual, he has no solution. On the other hand we have been working not simply to identify the problem but to develop practical solutions. Last year when we brought together the major mining companies and Canadian manufacturers through the "opportunities in mining conference" we began a process to produce much more of the mining equipment here in Canada. In addition, through the office of industrial and regional benefits and its connected policy, we will do more than we have done in the past—

Mr. Nielsen: I hope so.

Mr. Gray: —to ensure that the mining equipment is made in Canada by Canadian workers for our own resource projects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: In addition, we are already taking tangible and practical steps to improve our resource upgrading.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: For example, there was the announcement last fall of federal support making possible the building of the zinc smelter in New Brunswick.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: That was a recorded announcement.

Mr. Benjamin: That is a 1979 speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATOR HOLD PUBLIC MEETINGS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Indications in the press are to the effect that the hearings on the Crow rate chaired by Dr. Gilson will be held in camera. The minister must be aware that the Crow rate issue is the most important issue that producers in western Canada have faced in their entire history. If these hearings are held in camera and the public is not entitled to hear the representations of the railway companies, the elevator companies, farm organizations and others, this will cast a cloud of suspicion over the whole process.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope so.

Mr. Neil: Will the minister undertake to ensure that these hearings to be chaired by Dr. Gilson will be held in public?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the reason why the discussions that Mr. Gilson will have—

Mr. Epp: Dr. Gilson.

Mr. Pepin: Sorry, Dr. Gilson. The reason the discussions that Dr. Gilson will have with the farm leaders will be in camera is simply that the discussions on western transportation and the Crowsnest Pass rate, in particular, have been held in public for many years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: It is the unanimous view of people consulted on this subject that the time has come now—

Mr. Epp: Not of Dr. Gilson.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member does not agree with me, but, I repeat, it is the nearly unanimous view that the time has come now for "negotiation on the subject".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: This is what members of the different pools have been voting on for some time now. The pool representatives have said that if the government is willing to express its view on a number of subjects, they would negotiate with the government. The time has come now—and this is nearly a unanimous view—to negotiate, and this is what Dr. Gilson is going to do.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATOR'S TERMS OF REFERENCE BE TABLED

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the minister that the negotiations are vital to the producers of western Canada. It is important that they know what representations are being made by the government and by all the other organizations. It is vital that there be no cloud of suspicion over these hearings. However, is the minister prepared at this time to table the terms of reference under which Dr. Gilson will be operating?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, each gentleman or lady who will be at the negotiating table will be elected by the group he or she represents. I do not intend to debate with them the democratic process exercised in farm communities or organizations. Each one of them is elected and the process is very democratic.

As to the hon. member's question as to whether I will table the terms of reference, yes, Madam Speaker, I will as soon as I can.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS REQUESTED FOR DEFENCE OF MEMBERS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to repeat a question of which he took notice on Friday, and now address it to the Solicitor General. In my question I referred to an article that appeared in the Edmonton Journal on February 4, filed by the Edmonton Journal's Ottawa correspondent, Paul Jackson. Will the Solicitor General release immediately the documentation the RCMP defence counsel requested which is essential for a fair and full trial for the 17 RCMP officers who are charged in the Quebec courts?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have personally reviewed all the documents for which requests had been made. These documents were all available to the McDonald commission under the terms of reference of its order in council. The procedure being followed by me in relation to them is that all of the documents that were made public during the course of that commission, or in its report, on the grounds that national security would not be affected by their release, are being made public. Those that were not so declassified will be the subject of my direction that they not be made public before a judicial proceeding on the grounds of national security.

REASONS FOR REFUSAL TO RELEASE DOCUMENTS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I must say that I do have some sympathy for the present minister since he was not directly involved at the time when the RCMP were instructed to investigate separatism in Quebec. However, in view of the fact that two former RCMP security service officers have indicated they were pressured to get involved in probing separatism in Quebec by his Liberal government, is the reason for the Solicitor General's refusal to release the documentation simply a cover-up for his government's illegal activity; and, secondly, would the Solicitor General indicate whether the two former security service chiefs are correct in their accusations that they were instructed directly by the Prime Minister, or his ministerial colleagues, to get more involved in probing Quebec separatism, whether by legal or illegal means?

• (1440)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Hon. members are aware that the McDonald commission was established specifically to deal with allegations of that sort and it had a wide-ranging and very lengthy period of investigation in which unprecedented access was given to it by this government and the Clark government to review all Privy Council minutes, documents in the possession of the RCMP, to examine witnesses, and ask questions, subject to their terms of reference. An investigation was conducted and a report prepared.

Now, the hon. member has made allegations about illegal acts committed by the government. No such acts were found to have been committed by members of the government, in the findings of the McDonald commission. References were made to certain acts which should be referred to the attorneys general, including the Attorney General of Quebec, for investigation and possible laying of charges. Charges have been laid and documents which the commission released and made public will be submitted to the court, but others which are irrelevant, which deal with confidences of the cabinet and matters of national security, and which were accessible to the McDonald commission, will not be made public for the purposes of this court procedure.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WAIVE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, out of a sense of decency would the Solicitor General waive Section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, it is not a matter of a sense of decency; it is a matter of the contents of these documents and the possible prejudice which could result to the national security of Canada by making such documents public.

MEDICAL CARE

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO PROVINCES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if she continues to support the federal budget, whether or not she thinks the health care of Canadians will get better or worse in light of the cutback of $4.5 billion in funding to the provinces? Does she think that will help or hurt health care in Canada?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to confirm to the hon. member that I am very pleased with the budget attributed by the Minister of Finance to medicare. Over each of the next five years this will increase on average by, I think, 13.4 per cent, which is in excess of inflation. Because of that I am not going to have to negotiate financial payments to the provinces and I will be able to concentrate on strengthening medicare. As I said, we will be paying to Alberta, like every other province, sums of money which will increase on average by about 13 per cent year over year, which is excellent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, if accessibility to the health care system is adversely affected, either through the creation of longer waiting lists for things like heart bypasses, or through the intrusion of major user fees, will the minister join with us in opposing the budget at that point, or will she be prepared to resign in protest over the real effect of this budget on the health care of Canadians?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I must say I would regret it very much if some provincial governments were to punish the health of Canadians by cutting funds from their provincial health budgets. There is no way they can blame selection of their own provincial priorities on the federal health payments they receive. As I explained, the moneys we pay for health care, which will increase over each of the next five years as they have in the past, must go to health. Our new technique of block funding has the advantage of respecting local priorities, and I hope it will not have the disadvantage of provinces decreasing their share of the health budget.

IMMIGRATION

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECURITY APPEAL COMMISSION

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

Considering the case of Salvadoran journalist Victor Manuel Regalado, who is now under detention in Montreal after a security certificate, signed by the minister and his colleague at Immigration and leading to deportation from Canada, was issued under Section 39 of the Immigration Act, while neither Mr. Regalado, nor his lawyer, nor the adjudicators of the Department of Immigration are aware of the charge, which considerably reduces his chances of defending himself, could the minister inform the House whether he intends to implement soon one of the recommendations made by the McDonald commission, namely, to create a security appeal commission that would automatically review all security certificates issued under Section 39 of the Immigration Act?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I regret there is not at the present time a system for reviewing decisions made in this area, and that I hope soon to be tabling in the House, after discussion in cabinet, a system for external control and review of decisions made with respect to national security.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF CANADIAN WATER SUPPLIES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if I can catch his attention for a second. In light of the fact that there is absolutely no action being taken now in the Niagara area of upstate New York on the Love Canal, Hyde Park, the 102nd Street dump or the S site dump of Hooker Chemical, and in view of the fact that such dangerous chemicals as mirex, PCBs and dioxin are entering our water supplies because of American inaction, and since the minister and his department have on ten separate occasions in recent months exchanged diplomatic notes with the U.S. State Department in this regard with absolutely no effect, will the minister inform this House that he will arrange a meeting with the U.S. Secretary of State on this matter and make not only the conclusions of such meeting public but also his proposals?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the hon. gentleman's question indicates, this is a matter in which the facts are somewhat complicated and the degree of co-operation we have been receiving is somewhat less than we want. We are of course meeting with the EPA and trying to arrange meetings with the appropriate American officials. I do not believe at the present time the Secretary of State would be the appropriate American official, but I want to assure the hon. member that this is a matter we take very seriously and we will be pressing it with the American authorities.

NATURE OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, the minister's observations are interesting to hear in light of a 70 per cent cut in the EPA budget, and the minister has yet to appoint a Canadian chairman to the IJC. The Minister of the Environment has refused to meet with the New York State assemblymen, although we met with them last week and were the first Canadian politicians to do so.

Dr. Beverly Paigen of the New York State Health Department said yesterday that the release of chemicals from the Hooker chemical dumps and others into the Niagara River is in fact endangering Canadian lives now. In light of that, will the minister at least consider asking the U.S. Secretary of State, General Haig, to involve the U.S. military in this matter, since 50 per cent of the scientists in the United States work for the U.S. military? Will he at least ask General Haig, as this may be an area where he has some influence, at least to go into Niagara and to contain those sites which are now, today, endangering Canadian water supplies?

• (1450)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman knows that the work of the IJC has not been hampered by the fact that we do not as yet have a permanent chairman on the Canadian side. We have an acting chairman, and the work of that committee is proceeding in the normal way. We have asked the American government not to allow any more pollutants to proceed into the Niagara River until such time as the sewage treatment plant is repaired. I want to assure the hon. member again that we will continue and broaden our representations.

LOTTERIES

EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS TO ESTABLISH SPORTS POOL

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who is responsible for amateur sports. Last December the minister asked committee to approve expenditures of over half a million dollars in order to set up his betting program on sports games. At that time he promised to give a breakdown of how that money was spent. He was once again reminded in January, but we still have not received it. When can we expect a breakdown on how he spent that half million dollars in setting up his betting program?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I presume that the hon. member, by mentioning a betting program, is referring to the proposed sports pool, for which I hope legislation will be introduced in the not distant future, here in the House.

An hon. Member: Is that like the wheat pool?

Mr. Epp: It is not betting?

Mr. Regan: The hon. member opposite says, "It is not betting, Gerry".

Mr. Epp: Is it not?

Mr. Regan: I want to respond to what the hon. member says by pointing out that it is quite a different matter to buy a sports pool ticket, such as a soccer pool ticket in England, where one uses one's knowledge of the sport to indicate the exact scores of a great number of games.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: That is quite a different matter from betting on one individual game, particularly when the amount of money involved is $1. However, coming back to the hon. member's question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: —the funds which have been advanced have been used in determining the form of the Crown corporation which will operate the sports pool, and in the general preparations. I would suggest to the hon. member that it would be appropriate to give him a breakdown of those funds at the time the legislation comes before the House, which should be in the immediate future.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF EXPENDITURE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, we were examining estimates at the time. I think that a breakdown of those estimates should be given as a matter of courtesy, and it is the responsibility of the minister to give them. I want to ask the minister what is he trying to hide. Where is he spending that money? Obviously, if he is asking for approval, he should be telling us where he is spending that money. What is the minister trying to hide?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is hard up for a question today. I am not trying to hide anything at all.

Mr. McDermid: You promised to get it for me for two months!

Mr. Regan: However, I will attempt to remedy the concern of the hon. member by giving him the statistics now, and in advance of the consideration of the bill, if he so wishes.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

RENEWAL OF MORTGAGES ON PREMISES INSULATED WITH UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question through you to the minister responsible for CMHC. I would ask him to confirm press reports which state that CMHC will, in fact, renew any mortgages which it may hold on premises which have been insulated with the UFFI-type insulation.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity to confirm that statement on an earlier occasion in this House. Of course CMHC, as the manager for the insurer of the mortgage holders, stands behind to insure those holders who provide insurance in the cases which the hon. gentleman has just mentioned.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, that answer is as ambigious or as lacking in definition as the press announcement which I read, and that is why I asked the question. The other day a constituent of mine approached me and stated that his friendly bank would not renew his mortgage. He asked how he could come under the CMHC mortgage system.

Will the government advise us what progress it has made in negotiations with other financial institutions which do undertake mortgages? Will the CMHC add, to its state of guarantees, those mortgages of other institutions which are related to houses containing UFFI? Would the government not consider this to be a responsible move with regard to those householders who have now used a government-authorized material to build sickness chambers for themselves?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, apart from the message in the last part of the question, I must admit that I do not follow the hon. gentleman's original question. He has some difficulty with the press release. If he would like some specifics on the position of the CMHC—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's what he is asking for.

Mr. Cosgrove: —with regard to the press release, I would be happy to meet with the hon. gentlemen to explain it.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): The question is very simple, Madam Speaker. Will CMHC continue to guarantee its mortgages on premises which have been insulated with UFFI? Has the government had any success, and has it tried to have success when dealing with other financial institutions which may have mortgages on UFFI premises? Does the government feel it has any responsibility whatsoever with regard to this matter, either through the Crown corporation or by exerting pressure upon private financial institutions?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Simple. Now try it!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I believe that I answered the first part of the question in direct response to the first question asked. Concerning the last question, the government has indicated its position through the position adopted by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, although the government has no legal responsibility. The government, in a humane way, has taken the responsibility on behalf of taxpayers of Canada, and has set aside over $100 million to respond to the predicament of Canadians who are concerned about UFFI insulation in their homes.

DETAILS OF GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, following up on my colleague's line of questioning, I would like to ask the minister responsible for housing a question. Where institutions other than CMHC have mortgaged premises with UFFI, we are concerned that our constituents are now finding that these lending institutions will not renew their mortgages. Therefore, Canadians who relied on the CMHC guarantee of this product now find that they cannot refinance their mortgages with the same institutions. Has the government taken any action to help these constituents, these mortgagors, who now find they cannot renew their mortages?

Mr. McDermid: Now do you understand?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member, the former housing critic for the official opposition in this chamber, must know, without my telling him, that CMHC is not in the business of direct insurance or direct lending.

An hon. Member: That's not the question.

Mr. Cosgrove: It is in the business of insuring other lenders who provide other money. As I have indicated, some lenders do provide mortgage funds, and some do not.

An hon. Member: What about penalty?

Mr. Cosgrove: We have taken advantage of suggesting companies to those people who have not been able to find available funds. We have given the names of other companies which are providing mortgage funds.

Madam Speaker: A single question for the hon. member for Regina East.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF NEW FUNDING AGREEMENT ON FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. As the minister knows, the Native Friendship Centres which operate in many cities across Canada comprise one of the most successful programs of Indian and Metis people. Funding for the centres is arranged, in part, through a five-year agreement with the federal government. I want to ask the minister why he has so far refused, since becoming the Secretary of State, to meet with representatives from the National Association of Friendship Centres. I would like to know if he is willing to meet with them and to begin the negotiations for a new agreement.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I want to express my agreement with the hon. member that the Friendship Centres have provided very, very important assistance to native people moving into our urban areas, and that the program of the government in support of those Friendship Centres over the past five years, on the whole, has been one of our most successful programs. I only want to say to the hon. member that my department is reviewing the program in relation to any way there could be improvements in any succeeding programs. When we come to conclusions as a result of that study, we will certainly be communicating a proposed course of action to representatives of the native people so we can hear their comments in advance of taking any firm decision.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—INVESTIGATION OF BALLAST PROBLEM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I understand that inspectors from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources visited the Ocean Ranger twice in the last month to investigate a ballast problem. Will the minister indicate whether that is the case? If it was the case, will he indicate to the House what those inspectors reported?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm whether there was a visit twice in the last two months. As I indicated, I am informed that an inspector was there in the last two weeks. I will certainly inquire as to the content of the report, if there was a written report or a report of any kind. I will be very happy to inform the Leader of the Opposition.

MR. WADDELL—SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising out of the question period. The minister half announced an inquiry into the Hibernia disaster. I say half announced because he said he would announce an inquiry at a press conference. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that there may be a report with respect to a federal inspection of the Ocean Ranger.

My question of privilege is twofold. First, the announcement of an inquiry should be made in this House. It is our privilege to hear that announcement and to comment on it, rather than have it announced at a press conference. Second—

Madam Speaker: Order. That point does not constitute a question of privilege. If the hon. member wants to debate the question, that is perfectly legitimate, but he cannot do it after the question period by asking to be recognized on a question of privilege.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order on virtually the same subject. What could be happening here today is contributing to disorder. There is provision made in our Standing Orders for ministerial statements. Today we were given a half commitment that there will be an inquiry announced into the tragedy surrounding the sinking of the Ocean Ranger and that this inquiry will be announced outside the House at a press conference. That creates disorder—not privilege, disorder.

I do not know, Madam Speaker, if you would permit me to do so, but if you would I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) whether they intend to announce, under the provisions of that part of the Standing Orders dealing with statements by ministers, that there is to be an inquiry into this tragedy, and what are the terms of the inquiry.

Madam Speaker: I would like to allow the hon. member to ask all of these questions if the rules allowed, but the matter of making a statement is the prerogative of the minister. It is his decision. Even though the Chair might like to, it cannot force a minister to make a statement. The point of order has been expressed. The minister may take it into account or not. That is his privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I put a question to the government House leader on House business? On Thursday last, as reported at page 14896 of Hansard, the government House leader indicated that today we would be considering Bill C-78, amendments to the Canada Labour Code, that on Tuesday we would start debating Bill C-93, the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, and that the opposition day which had been scheduled for last Friday, February 12, would be postponed until "Friday of next week", which is this coming Friday, February 19.

May I ask the government House leader whether there have been any changes or are there any intended changes with respect to those items forecast for this week's business. At the same time could he indicate what the business for Wednesday and Thursday will be?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as far as the business for today is concerned, we shall be considering Bill C-78. Tomorrow we shall proceed with the borrowing authority bill. I believe the bill is referred to in Hansard as Bill C-91, but I have been told this should be C-93. In any case, a description of the bill was given last week, and the bill to be considered tomorrow is the bill giving the government authority to borrow certain sums of money. We are, of course, waiting for your ruling, and we assume it will be handed down in due time. Otherwise, we shall advise the House accordingly. For the remainder of the week, we intend to continue with Bill C-93, and Friday will be an official opposition day, unless otherwise stated.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure you will have been informed that, pursuant to the notice standing on today's Order Paper designating next Friday as our allotted day, I have again filed a notice of motion in the precise terms as notice was filed last Thursday. I hope it will be published on tomorrow's Order Paper. It was again absent this morning, I assume because the Chair's ruling is outstanding. I express the hope that all of the government members and all of the New Democratic members will be here for that allotted day next Friday and will vote on the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I just said, Friday will be an official opposition day, unless otherwise indicated. Now, as my colleague has said that he hopes to see as many members as possible in the House, we could accommodate him by shifting the opposition day to Wednesday or Thursday. I shall advise him if there is a possibility of doing so.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I would like to say to the Conservative House leader that provided they keep their act together and we know clearly in whose name the opposition day is, there will be no problem at all in having the New Democratic members turn out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It is obvious the party to my right had problems counting numbers to maintain a government. Let us see if they have the same problem counting numbers to bring one down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Are you running for the Science Council?

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BROADBENT—SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning a very serious accident off the coast of Newfoundland. As Your Honour knows, by unanimous agreement the House can revert to questions for one question that has been raised by a member of the Conservative Party and by a member of the New Democratic Party.

If we can get unanimous agreement now, we would like the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to tell us whether there is to be an announcement this afternoon establishing a formal inquiry and whether the terms of that inquiry will be laid out. More specifically, if that is the case, will he tell us why he is not making that announcement in the House of Commons?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, if I understood correctly, we would be happy to support the proposal that we revert at any time today by consent to allow the minister to make a statement on motions so that that information could be given to the House first.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has just told me there will be no announcement today. Under the circumstances, there is no problem.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to questions?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I should like to make it clear that everything that had to be said on the subject has been said in the House today, so that there is no need for us to agree with the request made by the official opposition.

Madam Speaker: If I understand correctly, there is not unanimous consent.

• (1510)

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) saying that there will not be a statement made outside the House by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) before there is a statement in the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I said quite clearly that there was nothing more to add to what has been said in the House. I think my answer speaks for itself. It can be readily understood.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am sorry; this speaks directly to the rights of the House of Commons to be the place in which public policy is announced, and I am afraid that what the President of the Privy Council has said has left some ambiguity, whether intentional or not. When a statement is made by a minister with respect to a public inquiry, will that statement be made in the House of Commons or will it be made outside the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows perfectly well that when statements are to be made in the House at the time set for statements by ministers, we always have the common courtesy to inform the opposition in advance, and where feasible, and this has practically always been the rule, a copy of the statement is given to opposition parties. Since we have not advised them of our intention of making a statement on the subject in the House today, in addition to what has already been said, it is therefore clear that we do not intend to do so today, and it seems to me one could hardly be more specific than that.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, on a separate point of order, at the end of the question period the hon. Leader of the Opposition put a very pertinent question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with reference to the federal inspectors' report on the very rig that sank, a report that was supposed to be made a short time ago. After listening to the minister's answer. I thought he was about to announce to the House that he would at least make that report public, but it was unclear as to when he would do that. I do not have the blues, so I wonder if I might ask on the point of order whether the government intends to announce this.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is not possible to do this on a point of order. The hon. member knows that he is simply prolonging the question period. The question period is finished. I cannot allow questions of that nature.

Mr. Parker: Madam Speaker, I would also like to follow that up on a point of order, because I do not believe that we have identified this afternoon who is responsible for the health and safety of these workers. The minister has not yet clarified whether it is his government. Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources telling hon. members on this side of the House that, as far as energy is concerned, it has responsibility over health and safety—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating the question again. I cannot hear that.

MR. NIELSEN—PRINTING IN ORDER PAPER OF FILED OPPOSITION MOTION—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule on the point of order which was brought up last Friday by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). His point of order was that the notice filed by him in the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) pursuant to Standing Order 58(4)(a) did not appear on the notice paper of Friday, February 12, 1982.

Before dealing with this point, I should like to clarify certain references made to the Order Paper by the hon. member in his submission on Friday last. The hon. member alleges that the government, merely by verbal announcement, has altered an item appearing on the Order Paper. I respectfully submit to the hon. member that the government does not alter the Order Paper. Only decisions by the House can have that effect. On the other hand, the notice paper is made up of notices given by members of the House in accordance with the Standing Orders. The production of these papers is under the direction of the Clerk of the House.

Reference was made to page 2 of the Order Paper which is entitled "Projected Weekly Order of Business". Although it is not an official part of the Order Paper, it is inserted for the information and the convenience of hon. members. The same is true of the notes projecting dates for allotted days when announced or a note placed under a particular government order or private member's item of business. They are there for the guidance of hon. members. In this instance, the note projecting the third allotted day in this supply period was changed following the decision of the Chair on Thursday last.

The other point I would like to deal with is the allegation of the hon. member that the notice filed in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should have been printed on Friday's notice paper, since Friday, February 12, had been designated as an allotted day. As hon. members are aware, the government House leader indicated that February 12 would not be an allotted day and that instead Friday, February 19, would be the third allotted day in this supply period.

I need not remind hon. members of the discussion that took place on Thursday on this particular matter when I indicated to the House that, in accordance with Standing Order 18(2), government orders are called and considered as the government determines. Consequently, Friday, February 12 not being an allotted day, the notice paper did not reflect the text of the right hon. member's motion, nor the text of another motion received from the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

In his argument, the hon. member for Yukon suggested that, since the notice had not been withdrawn, the text of the motion should have been printed on the notice paper. I am in full agreement with the hon. member that the text of both notices, despite the fact that one was dated and one was not, should have appeared on the notice paper under the appropriate heading and I have directed the Clerk of the House to see to it that they are indeed printed on tomorrow's notice paper.

AIRPORT VEHICLE PARKING FEES

Question No. 2,795—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Were the airport vehicle parking fees regulations amended to increase the tariff rates for automobile parking effective July 1, 1981 at the (a) Calgary (b) Ottawa (c) Regina (d) Saskatoon (e) Gander (f) Halifax (g) Toronto (h) Vancouver (i) Edmonton (j) Winnipeg (k) Quebec (l) Charlottetown (m) Mirabel (n) Dorval airports?

2. In each case, for each airport (a) what is the anticipated revenue from the vehicle parking tariffs for (i) July 1 to December 31, 1981 (ii) 1982 (b) what was the (i) anticipated (ii) actual revenue accruing from the fees for each year from 1978 to June 30, 1981?

3. What is the average rate of increase of the parking fees (a) across the board (b) for each category of fees set in the regulations?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Airport Vehicle Parking Fees Regulations were amended to increase the tariff rates for parking, effective July 1, 1981, at Calgary, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Quebec and Dorval airports. Tariff rates were not increased at Ottawa, Gander, Halifax, Toronto, Charlottetown and Mirabel airports.

2(a), (i) and (ii) For each airport, the anticipated revenue in thousands of dollars is as follows:

	July 1—Dec. 31, 1981	FY 1981/82
Charlottetown	15.4	30.8
Halifax	303.3	583.4
Gander	6.6	11.5

Vancouver	2048.2	2323.6	2757.0	3196.7	731.7

\+ This forecast was overestimated.

* The forecast was estimated on the basis of passenger volume only.

The actual revenue was lower than 1979/80 due to lower passenger volume and new competition from off-airport operations (park and fly).

3. The average rate of increase of the parking fees (a) across the board is 24.4 per cent and (b) for (i) metered parking is 8.7 per cent, (ii) short-term parking lot is 20 per cent, (iii) an unattended lot controlled by automatic devices is 46.1 per cent, (iv) at a parking structure of building at which the services of an attendant are provided is 33.6 per cent, and (vi) an area designated by the Department of Transport as a remote public parking lot is 30 per cent.

NUCLEAR RADIATION RESEARCH

Question No. 3,027—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the government intend to carry out experiments with nuclear radiation on dogs that would induce retching and vomiting and, if so (a) what are all the reasons for the experiments and what is the name and job designation of the highest-ranking person authorizing the experiments (b) will the treatment result in the dogs dying an agonizing death?

2. Does the government have a policy of humane treatment to animals and, if so, how does it justify the experiments?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. See response to question No. 3,273 answered on December 17, 1981, and published in Hansard No. 279, page 14,164.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS TO CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 3,215—Mr. Beatty:

Did any cabinet minister, while holding a portfolio, directly or indirectly receive loans from the Farm Credit Corporation and, if so, in each case (a) what was his/her name (b) what was the value of the loan (c) on what date was the loan (i) made (ii) repaid?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Farm Credit Corporation advises that since the opening of the first session of the Thirtieth Parliament:

(a), (b), (c), (i), (ii) None. Records on loans are retained for the duration of each loan plus an additional five-year period.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, December 14, 1981, consideration of Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Madam Speaker: As the hon. members are aware, there are on the Order Paper 23 motions at the report stage of Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. I have examined the first ten motions and I plan on grouping them as follows. Motions numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 10 should be grouped for debate with a vote on motion No. 1 disposing of motions numbered 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8. Motion No. 10 should be voted on separately. Motions numbered 3 and 4 should be debated together but voted on separately. Motion No. 9 should be debated and voted upon separately. If hon. members are agreeable the Chair will now proceed to propose to the House motions numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 10.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 29 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"Board may, by order, desig-".

Motion No. 2

February 12, 1982—That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 33 and 34 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"ally pursuant to subsection (1) if the Board is statisfied that".

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 9 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"subsection (1) if the Board is".

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 24 and 25 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"the period so specified, the Board makes a continuation order continu-".

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 36 and 37 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"before the expiry of that one year, the Board makes a continuation order".

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 41 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(7) Where the Board has".

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 4

(a) by striking out lines 13 to 15 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) One member of the Board shall be appointed after consultation with such organizations representative of employees as the minister deems appropriate and shall be a representative of employees and another member of the Board shall be appointed after consultation with such organizations representative of employers as the minister deems appropriate and shall be a representative of employers."; and (c) by renumbering the subsequent subclauses accordingly.

He said: Madam Speaker, I should like to report that this bill—the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act—has received careful and detailed scrutiny in the committee, and there has been very active participation on the part of all interested members. In fact, Members of Parliament from all sides of the House co-operated in suggesting ways by which the bill could be improved and, indeed, many suggestions have been incorporated into the current legislative proposal before us today.

At it stands now, the bill will be even more effective in alleviating hardships experienced by all workers affected by lay-offs in industries and communities designated under the industrial labour adjustment program. For instance, I should like to thank the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) for his suggestion that the definition of industrial restructuring include technological change. I also appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that we should amend Clause 4 to ensure that the five members of the Labour Adjustment Review Board include one member from labour and one from management. I also welcome the recommendation that the Labour Adjustment Review Board should not have the power to impose penalties on people who make false or misleading statements in order to meet the eligibility requirements for benefits. This is an eminently reasonable suggestion. A penalty should only be imposed by a court, and therefore the committee removed this power from Section 18.

While the board retains the power under Section 18 to revoke an employee's certification for benefits, the fairness of the provision is strengthened now that it allows the employee 30 days to appeal against the revocation of a certificate.

Another change of the utmost importance is the amendments to Clause 23. This clause authorizes an officer of the board to enter premises to inspect in order to determine a firm's eligibility. The recommendation draws a clear distinction between a private dwelling and other buildings so as to restrict inspections to commercial and industrial locations and to ensure that an officer can enter only with the authorization of the minister on a case by case basis. I thank the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) for raising this issue.

[Translation]

Further on, Mr. Speaker, in order to tighten responsibility for administering the act, Clause 30 has been amended to provide that the minister shall report to Parliament on a quarterly instead of an annual basis.

The role of joint planning committees has been expanded in an amendment to Clause 31. The objective of those committees is now to eliminate the need for terminating employment instead of merely minimizing the consequences.

In addition to the changes made in committee, there are further amendments I should like to consider with you today. Five are aimed at improving the French version of the bill. There is Clause 3, and then paragraph 3 of Clause 12 and Clause 18.

[English]

There are also amendments intended to improve the English version—two in Clause 4, one in Clause 25, and a proposal to improve the syntax of an amendment accepted in committee is suggested for Clause 29.

Others are of more substance. One amendment proposed by committee members is a clarification of Clause 16 which will ensure that the pre-retirement benefit under the bill is over and above worker compensation benefits or other disability payments. In other words, no such deductions will be made from benefits. I am particularly grateful to the hon. member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for his having forcefully raised this point in committee.

A second important amendment will provide that where for good cause, such as absence or worker's compensation, an employee has not obtained the full minimum of 1,000 hours of work in any year, he or she may still be deemed to be in compliance with the requirement and will be eligible for the benefit. Here I am particularly grateful for the brief submitted by people from the eastern townships and to several members of the committee, including the hon. member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance), the hon. member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois).

The committee also expressed a concern that people currently receiving adjustment assistance benefits should continue to receive the same level of benefits under the proposed legislation they are receiving now. I understand their concern and fully support the principle. Therefore, I recommend the draft amendment to Clause 34, which reflects in good part the interventions made by the hon. member for Lotbinière and the hon. member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

I also recognize the concern of hon. members that the bill provide for retroactive designations, and so propose that Clause 4 be amended accordingly.

[Translation]

In concluding, I am most appreciative of the work done by the members of this committee, who have given so generously of their time and attention and have helped to improve this very urgent and necessary legislation.

[English]

I thank hon. members of all parties and seek their support for the speedy passage of this needed legislation.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, as everyone in this House will agree, it comes as a bit of a surprise that we are addressing ourselves to Bill C-78 today. It is a bill which will provide some measure of support to laid-off workers and, goodness knows, under the conditions which exist today any help is better than what most of them are receiving presently.

● (1530)

This bill was given first reading on June 29, 1981, second reading on November 6, 1981, and two weeks ago was still in committee. All of a sudden it has assumed great importance and, goodness knows, any bill which relates to over one million unemployed is worthy of urgent consideration. But that situation has existed for some time, Mr. Speaker. No matter that the announcement was made that the printed copies of the amended bill were not available, no matter that there was no previous notice of the consideration that must be given to this bill so that members could take it back to their constituents and the people affected, the bill has come forward to take the place of a regularly and duly allotted day. In order to avoid embarrassment, established rules of procedure were thwarted and, with over one million people unemployed, this would be the bill that would justify another of the government's highly questionable tactics.

By showing such contempt for the parliamentary system, such little regard for the right of members to know in advance the subject matter of debate and by resorting to arbitrary and even underhanded methods in altering the agreed upon agenda of this House, the government is showing a disregard for the thoughts, feelings and opinions of the Canadian people.

In these days of plant closings and record high unemployment, this is an important bill, a serious bill, a bill that acknowledges, even if it does not remedy, the grave unemployment situation that exists in the country. Surely with over one million people unemployed the government might have wished to have every effort brought to bear on improving Bill C-78 so that it could be the best possible bill as it relates to what is happening in our labour market today. Surely such a bill should not be the object of a political football game.

Obviously the government had no wish or desire to listen. It was politically expedient to introduce the bill today. If the government has no respect for the opposition and is going to deny the opposition an opportunity to do its homework and consult with constituents in order to prepare for debate, then this House and our system of government has no place in the scheme of things. The people of Canada, I can assure you, will think otherwise. Bill C-78 is a very serious and important bill.

I am sorry that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) is not in the House to listen to the official response to this bill, Mr. Speaker. During committee consideration of the bill he did show some degree of flexibility and inclination to accept and adopt recommendations from members of the opposition. He spoke of the necessity for progressive labour legislation, and because of this was prepared to accept some of the changes that are now proposed. He, too, must have some regrets that Bill C-78 is treated in such a cavalier, shoddy fashion. I rather suspect, unless I have completely misjudged the minister, that he is aware that Bill C-78 is not going to receive the thoughtful consideration it deserves.

The minister introduced some important amendments but these have been available for consideration for less than two weeks. The amendments warrant further consideration. We want to assure the minister of speedy passage but would point out that further co-operation and flexibility will be necessary. That opportunity has been denied by the minister and the government and this will be to the detriment of the bill and the laid-off workers it is intended to serve.

The riding of St. Catharines—a city I am proud to represent in this House—is particularly affected by this legislation. Just today the largest employer in the community, General Motors, announced a further lay-off of 2,400 or 2,600 workers. The economic effect of that lay-off is serious enough, but the social and human impact is tragic. It is simply one of a series of such lay-offs that have been going on for several months. Over all, on a percentage basis, the St. Catharines-Niagara region leads the country in unemployment. Literally tens of thousands of workers left the area in 1981 to find jobs elsewhere.

While there is no question that the group hardest hit by unemployment is the youth of this country, with other members of this House I am deeply concerned by the growing numbers of people over the age of 50 who, for the first time in their lives, are suddenly out of work. These people have lived in the community, shared its economic and social benefits and woes, have established family units, and now what are these more senior among us to do?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. It has just been brought to my attention that the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) made reference to the fact that I was not in the House a few moments ago. I left for a couple of minutes and I should like to bring to his attention that I am back.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I noticed the return of the hon. minister after the comment was made.

I had just mentioned that thousands of the people on lay-off have established themselves in their communities and are now over 50 years of age. What are these senior people to do? Most available jobs—and they are few—are not for those over 50. Retraining is not attractive to them and is barely available even if it were attractive.

I want to bring to the attention of the House another instance in my community. For some months I have been trying to assist employees of Lightning Fastener Company in the city of St. Catharines. The plant was closed and employment terminated. The employees have not only had to endure the loss of a job but have encountered red tape and problem after problem when trying to find alternate employment before their unemployment insurance or severance pay ran out. For some, all this has been compounded by the November 12 budget which swooped down and taxed severance pay. They, and members on this side of the House, are continuing to fight that proposal.

I could cite further examples but the point is that we are not only faced with an unemployment problem, but for the first time since the thirties, that other depression, we are seeing the unemployment problem catch up with the more senior employee, the person over 50 years of age.

Bill C-78 is a limited though welcome response to this growing problem. I should like to outline briefly how this proposed legislation would work and offer some comments on how it could be improved.

One of our greatest concerns is that the bill will become bogged down in bureaucracy. This must be guarded against if the plan is to work at all. When a worker is laid off, the normal procedure is for him or her to apply for unemployment insurance benefits.

May I digress for just a moment, Mr. Speaker. The inability of the different departments of government to cope with the process is becoming evident again. The biggest boner of all was the move of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Prince Edward Island and the insistence that the Pension Commission go along with it. As everyone in the house knows, that has resulted in unconscionable delays in the processing of veterans' claims.

Lay-offs continue in great numbers and in industries which the government was able to forecast. Again I use the automobile industry as an example. Applications for unemployment insurance are being processed through local unemployment insurance offices and then forwarded to Belleville for card clearance entitlement. Unemployment insurance officials are already working overtime, not only during weekdays but on weekends as well. Some of them are publicly complaining about continued stress and pressure in the system, but the important point is that the commission is not geared, as it should be, to process claims of unemployed people with any degree of reasonable efficiency or expediency. Cards of entitlement have not yet been received in the community of St. Catharines for lay-offs which occurred as late as January 10, and thousands more workers have been laid off since that date. A backlog of hardship and suffering is being borne by terminated and unemployed workers whom the Unemployment Insurance Commission is supposed to assist.

I should like to return to the problems which in my view exist in the bill. If an unemployed worker qualifies for insurance, it becomes a mutual problem between him and the government, through the unemployment insurance agency, to find new employment. Apart from simply finding the worker a new job, the Unemployment Insurance Commission now has the responsibility, as it should have had before, to try three additional avenues—retraining, mobility grants and/or a portable wage structure arrangement. Should all these avenues fail to produce new employment, individuals are faced with the prospect of unemployment insurance benefits expiring and of no other income being available except welfare. Indeed it is frightening; it is even a humiliating experience for a senior person to endure. It is not the fault of the worker. He is not responsible for the government's high interest rate policy or its disastrous budget. It is not the fault of the worker that the government has failed to do what the nation expected it to do—to provide some forward planning and to develop an industrial strategy which would keep people working.

Bill C-78 recognizes this deficiency in government by taking into account an additional avenue of approach. After all else has failed, the worker will be given an early retirement. In order to accomplish this, the legislation proposes the establishment of a Labour Adjustment Review Board which has all the appearances of being totally unnecessary and unjustified. With a little more refinement and time, the board might have been eliminated from the bill, but it is still with us. Its chore will be to investigate lay-offs which the Unemployment Insurance Commission went through earlier and to determine whether or not unemployed workers qualify under the provisions of Bill C-78, with which I will deal in a minute. As the unemployed person reaches the end of his or her unemployment insurance benefits and is still without job prospect, the commission would draw the case to the attention of the board which would then decide whether or not the lay-off is within an industry designated under the provisions of the act and whether the individual qualifies for benefits under the act.

Let us assume that the lay-off and the individual both qualify. The board would then recommend that the individual be placed on early retirement, and it would be up to the UIC to implement the decision or investigate further. Assuming all goes well, the individual would be placed on early retirement and paid a pension up to a maximum amount of $210 per week, indexed to the consumer price index, which pension would continue as long as the employee is under age 65.

From time to time my daughter accuses me of being less than clear when explaining how bureaucracy works. Despite my deliberate efforts to set out clearly and specifically how the program will work, it is obvious that it is mired in red tape and bureaucracy, which of necessity reduces its effectiveness. Under the legislation an applicant must be 54 years of age and have worked for at least ten of the last 15 years and for at least 1,000 hours in each of the ten years.

I listened to the presentation of the minister a few moments ago. He indicated that there will be some flexibility. This arose only as a result of representations made in committee. Such flexibility in terms of 1,000 hours per year is a necessity. A 54-year-old person with a family and with such a record of service should not be subjected to endless applications, interviews and investigations, to satisfy the government's unrepentant obsession with red tape and bureaucracy. He has already endured a tragedy—the loss of his job. He has already spent a frustrating year or more under the guidance of UIC attempting to find an alternate form of employment and going through the alternative avenues to which he is now subjected. Once that is done, with cap in hand he goes to another bureaucrat in some other commission or board to ask for further assistance, whether he qualifies under the act or will receive welfare. We submit that this is a totally unnecessary and degrading step which the bill could eliminate without any loss of substance.

We raised this point in committee and we were assured by the Minister of Labour and his deputy minister that our fears were groundless. They said that it will not be bureaucratic, that it will work as smoothly and efficiently as they promised. Time will tell on that score, but as the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) pointed out a number of times, as Members of Parliament we will be very busy explaining how the program will work and writing letters to the UIC, to the board and to the minister showing where the system will bog down in bureaucracy. With lay-offs of over 2,000 at a time becoming all too common, there will be many letters and telephone calls.

I should like to return to the many "ifs" which I raised earlier and to start with the first step. What happens to a laid-off worker when he or she has finally made it through the red tape involved in obtaining unemployment insurance? Earlier this week two representatives of the senior citizens, "Action Now" association met with a number of Conservative Members of Parliament. They stated flatly that if one was over 45 years of age, one should not go to the Unemployment Insurance Commission for assistance. One representative pointed out that she was told not to bother, and she was over 45 years of age. In view of this, how can we treat seriously the ability of UIC to find answers? Even if Manpower was prepared to assist, what older worker with a home would be prepared to take advantage of the mobility grant? Homes are virtually unsaleable. The renting of a new home is impractical. Mobility is fine for those free to move.

Therefore, avenue number one; that is, Manpower finding a person a job, is a pretty remote possibility. Avenue number two is a mobility grant; that is impractical. Avenue number three, which is retraining, is just as elusive. What job retraining is there, Mr. Speaker? In St. Catharines and across Canada the task force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s reported that training programs are merely stopgap measures to get people off the unemployment rolls. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) himself admitted that the courses and curriculum offered under the adult occupational training programs have become "increasingly irrelevant to the job demands in Canada". That being the case, why dangle the opportunity before these senior citizens? It is time the government became aware of the fact that we have a skilled labour crisis on our hands. The minister's speeches and press releases will be of little comfort in the next election. He will not be in this House, so we can tell him "We told you so".

The last avenue, and I will be very brief about this, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think the Chair is obligated to seek the unanimous consent of other hon. members. The time for the hon. member for St. Catharines expired a few minutes ago. Would hon. members give unanimous consent so that the hon. member may conclude his speech in the next two minutes or so?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I want to thank my colleagues for granting me this extension of time. A further avenue which this bill addresses is that of the portable wage subsidy. However, I want to draw to the attention of hon. members that as of December 31, 1981, only 318 job vouchers were issued and that, in the face of the great number of lay-offs with which we have confronted ourselves, is a very small number.

Step two of the bill comes after the unemployment commission has gone through the alternate avenues, which is part of its responsibility. Then the case of the unemployed senior citizen is referred to the Labour Adjustment Review Board. This board is made up of five members, all appointed by the minister. This board again investigates the lay-off of the individual and questions the qualifications and what the individual has done. Not only that, the individual must be one of 50. I sometimes question why a senior citizen should be one of 50, or 10 per cent of the work force, before he is entitled to this kind of assistance. If I am out of a job and over the age limit, surely the benefits of this bill should be made available to me as well as to a larger group force by a bigger employer.

The significant economic adjustment must be by reason of either import competition or industrial restructuring pursuant to the provisions of the act. Import competition is clear but the act does not make clear what industrial restructuring is because the qualifier is that this must be pursuant to a policy or a program of the government. Industrial restructuring includes technological change, but how is one to discern between a technological change undertaken for strictly business purposes or that undertaken because of a government program or policy that encourages such change?

Although I have a number of complaints and questions with respect to this bill, I want to confine my concluding remarks to the flexibility to which the minister referred and which becomes necessary in the qualifications of a worker for the benefits of this bill. I have already referred to the rigidity of the 1,000 hours per year requirement. This, I anticipate, will be altered. At first glance it seems reasonable enough but there are too many other contingencies involved. The second one has to do with the length of time, namely, the ten of 15 years that one must be in the work force. The Canadian Labour Congress pointed out that the average job tenure in Canada is between seven and eight years, not ten. Some change or alteration might be made to this provision as well.

My third point is related to pensions. We still have a pension system in this country which runs the gamut from an old medieval system to a progressive one. This legislation brings out the worst in both. There is no protection to the senior citizen's pension, whether or not he has to pay into it in the future, whether he is entitled to what he has received, or indeed what pension protection he might get under the bill.

Finally, we have to recognize the limitations of Bill C-78. In committee the Minister of Labour told us that Bill C-78 was limited in scope and in application. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association told us that Bill C-78 was largely impractical. The United Steelworkers of America told us it was not adequate. There can be no question about this when the government's program over the next three years is to allocate funds up to $10.4 million for laid-off workers. But the federal government will spend an equivalent amount in amenities and entertainment over the same period.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I participate in the report stage of Bill C-78. Not all of my comments will be laudatory. My colleagues and myself see a number of grave failings, particularly in the first half of the bill which deals with the benefits and restrictions and to whom those very limited benefits will be paid.

First, I want to thank other members who served on the committee. I want to thank the minister for the degree of flexibility shown during the consideration of a number of amendments. Of course, we did not get anything like what we wanted, but some progress was achieved. I have been told by other colleagues of mine who have been in this place longer than I that the procedures, easy exchanges and some of the positive results that took place in the committee, if not without precedent, were at least of a nature not seen all that often within the committee structure. In a number of instances, I found the committee exchanges to be an extremely satisfying experience. For the first time in my two years in this House I felt that a positive and actually perceivable contribution was made. I see the government has left in the bill some of the changes that were made in committee and has not tampered with them. For that I am very thankful.

Having said that, I must address some of the bills' obvious limitations. In many of the minister's answers, both at second reading and in committee, he made it clear that the bill itself is very limited. On January 28 in committee the minister said to the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) that there was a failure to realize that this bill is not a bill to create jobs but to provide a certain minimum of income to older workers in certain communities. What we have, apart from the amendments to the Canada Labour Code, which is the latter half of the bill, is a bill to provide benefits to some categories of people in some areas of Canada, and those areas of Canada will be chosen strictly at the discretion of the minister within the rather too narrowly defined limits proposed in the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with over one million unemployed at last count, and while we welcome benefits for relatively few of them, especially some older Canadians who may benefit in a concrete way from the provisions in this bill, we are profoundly disturbed at the further balkanization of the unemployment insurance system which will be an inevitable result of this legislation. When we alter a program which was initially universal in its application, simply depending on whether or not someone had been unemployed for a period of time and had contributed to the work force, there is a concern that the divisions this may cause will split region from region, industry from industry, resource areas from manufacturing areas, and the young from the old. Slowly but surely we see in the first half of this bill the dismantling of the national unemployment insurance system and its replacement with a patchwork of individual schemes which, while they are fine in themselves, when taken in isolation, will play off one group of workers against another, and one region of Canada against another.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, and I think I speak for almost all members, we have had enough of that kind of emotion and division without giving more room for those suspicions to grow. As a member from a resource area of western Canada—and many of my caucus colleagues are also from resource areas—I feel those very real attitudes among some of our constituents very strongly and hesitate to see anything else take place which will add to those suspicions and add fuel to the flames. Perhaps "flames" is too strong a word; I think "sparks" is probably a better description at this stage; but we should take them seriously in an attempt to avoid further fanning of them when we can do so without great difficulty.

These suspicions may arise particularly when the designations will be chosen politically by the minister alone. Of course, we would never suggest that a minister of the Crown would be partisan in his designation of these areas.

An hon. Member: You wouldn't?

Mr. Kristiansen: I would be the last person to suggest that of the new Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) who is so conscientious. However, we live in a political system and many people will be very suspicious of a bill containing so many grounds to believe that may be done. It has been said that the designated areas which will fall within the ambit of this bill are, with one sole exception, within a constituency represented by the governing party. Now, maybe that is simply an accident, that the Liberal party represents those areas of the country which have failed economically more than many others. Perhaps there is a message in that somewhere, because I do not know which comes first, the chicken or the egg.

How many people, Mr. Speaker, will actually benefit and where will they be? When this concept first arose approximately a year ago there were five areas considered for designation. It then became eight, and I believe it may now be ten. How many people within even those designated areas are actually going to benefit? We have a submission from both the United Steelworkers and the regional development council from eastern Quebec that in the area of Schefferville, Sept-Îles and Port Cartier only 35 out of over 900 people were actually receiving benefits and would be covered retroactively, I assume, by this legislation. While we realize this is limited, I wonder whether people will realize how limited it is intended to be.

In so far as the age restrictions are concerned, Mr. Speaker, employees must be 54 years old or over in order to receive what is sometimes referred to as the early retirement benefit, with ten years employment. While that is understandable for people who are engaged particularly in heavy manufacturing and resource industries, anyone who is unemployed regardless of whether he or she lives in a designated region or not, it is just as much a crisis for a person in that category to be unemployed, regardless of the nature of his or her work. Setting this restriction in place in the legislation makes us wonder whether or not family allowances and old age pensions are one day going to be decided by area designation. Where does the principle of balkanization stop once you begin to put it into practice? Again, we regret that the unemployment insurance system, which was designed and improved significantly over the years, is now beginning, perhaps for the best of motives, to break down the principle of universality through the balkanization of social and economic services provided by the federal government.

There is reference within this bill, industry by industry, to the designation of an area due to problems arising from import competition. When we think of that, Mr. Speaker, especially with hearings taking place next month in Portland, Oregon, and the possibility that tariffs may be imposed against one of our major industries, the forest industry, why can this bill not be reworded in such a way that industries facing dislocation, if that is the term, as a result of export competition can be helped in the same way as those in the manufacturing sector?

There are a number of issues related to that which I and my colleagues will raise in clause by clause consideration, but I should like to say a few words now about the Labour Code amendments in the second half of the bill. It is here, Mr. Speaker, I think I feel the greatest sense of accomplishment, not only for myself but for my colleagues, as to what was achieved in committee. I do not say that in a partisan way because I believe it applies to members of all parties. We were able to achieve some changes so that at least some of the structures, such as the joint committees established under this legislation, having been given warning of the change to 16 weeks for advance notice, will be able to do a more effective job. I say this because we eliminated from the original bill some of the provisions which would have prevented those committees from looking a little beyond trying to find new jobs for people to see if something could not be done to review the initial decision to close down, lay off or terminate. By this I mean using the time afforded by this more adequate notice in order to put new mechanisms and initiatives in place so that those lay-offs and terminations may in fact need not take place. In committee we eliminated those sections which restricted the joint committees from even considering that option. We then put positive amendments in place which suggested that they do look at those more positive options for saving the jobs or altering the form of the jobs.

We hope that during the amendment process the House will correct one of the weaknesses which we still see remaining. We do have one amendment which will deal with it. We suggest that those joint committees and the officials working in conjunction with them be allowed access to the information required in order to carry out the duties with which they are charged under the legislation. What is the point of telling people that they can review a decision, that they can develop adjustment programs to change that decision, and that they can create new jobs or maintain jobs, if we do not even allow them to get into the area of asking for, not to mention demanding, the financial and economic information from the employer, whether public or private, which anyone would need in order to make a rational judgment of what should follow? Once we have accepted one premise, we must surely consider the other, and we must seriously consider it.

We have a number of amendments, comprising 13 in all, I believe. They are standing in my name on behalf of my colleagues. I would ask that the minister and the House give careful consideration to all of them. One in particular arose from the brief submitted by the Regional Development Council from eastern Quebec. I believe it was also raised within the steelworkers' brief, and perhaps one or two others. It dealt with the averaging of hours rather than insisting that there be a definite minimum of 1,000 paid hours per year. We have not chosen to alter the current wording within the bill to denote averaging.

I do not believe it was ever the intent of hon. members of the House or the intent of the minister that people who have lost some of their 1,000 hours in a given year should be disregarded. These people may have been on disability insurance, on workmen's compensation, on sick benefits, or some type of leave of absence which was authorized by their employers. We do not believe it was ever the intent that anyone in that category should be disregarded simply because they did not have what could be narrowly defined as 1,000 paid hours. If the House and the government would seriously consider that amendment, I believe we would find that all hon. members of goodwill would resolve one of the questions which was raised by a number of the delegations before the committee.

In concluding, I would say we have mixed feelings about the bill, but that is the case concerning any human endeavour. I do want to say again that within the committee we did feel there was a genuine attempt on the part of all parties to come to some kind of an agreement. Whether we end up with the unanimous opinion of this House or not when we get to the end of the road on this piece of legislation, I believe there will have been a positive contribution by all parties. I hope that consideration of the amendments put forward by our party and the government will be equally generous and understanding. Again, regardless of the final outcome of our various decisions, I hope we will produce what will be of maximum benefit to the maximum number of people. I hope there will be flexibility so that whoever may comprise the Government of Canada in the course of time may be able to bring the maximum amount of justice to the maximum number of Canadians.

Mr. Lewis: We undertake to do that.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code.

On December 14 of last year, the House ordered Bill C-78 referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, whose meetings I had the honour of chairing. I should like to thank my committee colleagues who showed their co-operation throughout consideration of the bill and with whose support the committee was able to establish a working schedule under which all interested groups were able to appear before the committee. I also wish to thank all witnesses, groups and associations that appeared before the committee. To their credit, committee members sat through long sessions during which they questioned witnesses, absorbed the information provided and obtained a better understanding of the implications of the bill before the committee. All my colleagues, I am sure, found the representations made by witnesses appearing before the committee very useful. In fact, a number of recommendations made before the committee were instrumental in bringing about vital changes in the initial bill. Thus, the bill before the House today has been improved as a result of amendments made and passed in committee.

Congratulations should, of course, go to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), who has shown that his main concern is to provide fair treatment for all persons affected by the bill. He collaborated with us on several occasions when a decision had to be made on amendments proposed by various members of the committee. The minister promised us that certain amendments that committee members could not move in committee would be moved by the minister at the report stage. He has kept his word, I am happy to say, and I also note that major changes were made in Clause 12(b) with respect to qualification for benefits. A brief submitted by the eastern townships regional development board drew the attention of committee members to a major shortcoming in the present definition of Bill C-78 with respect to qualification for benefits.

I believe previous speakers also raised the problem regarding the annual average of 1,000 hours of employment, which would mean that an employee who during the last ten years had worked 1,000 hours per year, totalling 10,000 hours in the industry, could qualify for benefits, but an employee who had worked an average 2,000 hours per year during the last ten years and, for reasons beyond his control, had been unable to work during one of those years, would not qualify, although he had worked a total of 18,000 hours during those ten years. Fortunately, the minister accepted the representations made to him in committee. Today, he is bringing in an amendment to correct this deficiency in the bill, and the committee certainly deserves much of the credit for this major change.

In committee, there was some concern about people who were already drawing benefits under an existing program also included in the bill. These are former workers in the textile and footwear industries. The benefits they are receiving would not be indexed as provided in the bill until benefit recipients under the new program were receiving the same amount. This section of the bill was discussed at length in committee, and if I understood the minister correctly, he was to change clause 34 so as to remove this inequity. I therefore share the concern shown by several committee members with respect to those already receiving benefits and, once more, I am pleased to see that the minister is making the required changes.

The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program is only one aspect of the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program which is available to communities and cabinet-designated industrial sectors, and which offers various labour adjustment measures and industrial incentives. In addition, the government paid particular attention to those industries which are experiencing economic difficulties—textiles, for instance—and among other things created the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission also implements a whole series of labour adjustment measures with respect to mobility, increased proficiency and job creation.

The program will help workers aged 54 to 65 who can hardly be expected to relocate and who are not directly concerned by other labour adjustment measures. Generally speaking, those people are not highly qualified and not in great demand, not to mention the fact that they do find it hard to get back into the labour force. In cases of serious difficulties, people over 50 who have worked very long years in the sector involved may be entitled to benefits.

Some hon. members seem to fear that anyone receiving benefits will have no incentive to return to work. Well, since only 60 cents will be deducted from the benefits for each dollar earned during the implementation of this program, those people can continue to work without fear of having their benefits cut off. In addition, should they hold a permanent job during the implementation of the program they do not lose their entitlement to adjustment benefits. Finally, every six months the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission will review employment opportunities with the recipients. Mr. Speaker, so far no one can be accused of dragging his feet with respect to the adoption of this bill and I hope the House will pass it soon so that the many workers now experiencing hardships will be able to benefit from this worth-while measure.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the report stage of Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. May I say at the outset that I thoroughly enjoyed my work on the committee. My colleague from Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and other colleagues participated in the work of the committee which was very beneficial.

I was concerned when the committee met last December. A few members of the government wished to ram this bill through in the remaining three or four days before the Christmas recess. After a great deal of discussion among members from all sides of the House, including the chairman who just participated in this debate, it was decided it would only be fair to allow those interested to make representations and suggestions to the committee with regard to the bill. Of course, this came about.

I must say that we had some spirited meetings. I am sure the minister and all those who participated will agree it was a very worth-while exercise. There were some tremendous representations from many interested groups, labour unions, employer groups and individuals interested in the bill.

This is an important bill. The problem is that it affects so few people. Once this bill passes, if my figures are correct, it will probably affect only some 800 people in Canada. That is all we are talking about at the present time.

I gather from what my colleague in the New Democratic Party stated that all designated areas under this bill so far are Liberal ridings, with the exception of one. That riding belongs to the NDP. I have no criticism of that. I feel that every area designated to date is indeed in need of this type of help; there is no question about that. The only criticism I might have is the political taste of the people who live in those designated areas. They might look at another political party the next time around, one which will hopefully get this economy going again and provide meaningful jobs that will last for a long period of time.

The 800 people who will benefit from this act must be over the age of 54, have no hope whatsoever of finding employment and meet other criteria, which I will not go into in great detail today. I would, however, like to discuss a couple of matters which still concern me about this bill.

In one of the motions we are debating today, the NDP suggests that it should be the labour adjustment board which designates industries. We do not support that amendment. If an area is to be designated, it should be designated by the politician who is directly answerable to the people. A board hidden somewhere in the bureaucracy should not make those designations because it is answerable only to the minister. If the government makes these decisions, it is answerable to the people. Therefore, we feel very strongly that that amendment should not be approved by the House. The power should remain with cabinet to designate those areas and industries. The accountability is to Parliament and the people of Canada. The other motions we are debating are primarily motions by the NDP with regard to changing the responsibility for designation from cabinet to the Labour Adjustment Review Board.

There is something which concerns me about this bill that I have expressed many times. The minister and deputy minister assure me that it is not going to happen, but I am still not convinced. My concern is that the bureaucracy is involved in this. We have a cabinet which makes a decision as to what area or industry is designated so that the individuals who qualify will get the benefit of this bill. A board has been established. Its members are appointed by the minister. We assume he will take care of some of his Liberal friends. We were told in committee that the board will be made up of public servants. There has been an amendment to provide for an employee and employer representative. I congratulate the government on that; it is very important. The other three will be appointed by the minister.

We are assured that this will be a board of public servants and that it will not cost the taxpayer any money. We know that is not true. When a board is set up, no matter whether it is composed of public servants or not, the men or women on that board receive some remuneration. Therefore, it will cost the taxpayer something. To say it will not is a fallacy. The people should not be misled on that point.

The board then makes certain decisions or designations. It decides whether this or that person or this or that industry qualifies. It goes through the application and makes its decision. It then goes to the Unemployment Insurance Commission which goes through the application, decides whether the person qualifies or not and how the benefits will be doled out.

I hope a little later on someone on the government side will give a clear explanation of the need for that board and, once the designation is made by cabinet, why the work cannot be done by bureaucrats within the Unemployment Insurance Commission, thereby eliminating that separate body. To me, it sounds like a tremendous amount of bureaucracy which in my opinion is not required. We must remember that we are talking about an individual who is over the age of 54 and has exhausted his unemployment insurance benefits. He has no hope of obtaining employment and is concerned about how he will live. He has paid for his home and would like to stay there, he could not sell it anyway because his town is a one-industry town and no one is moving in there. Therefore, the real estate market is depressed.

He will now have to make all these other applications. It is fine that the union can apply on his behalf so he will not have to do this individually, as the minister would say, but it is still another layer of bureaucracy, another set of applications and papers which I personally feel is unnecessary. I suggest that all this could be amalgamated with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The deputy minister and the minister have assured me in committee that it is not a bureaucratic mess and will work fine. I have heard this said many times and that I should not worry about it. Despite the assurance of the minister I am still fearful of the bureaucracy that is involved.

We on this side will be supporting many of the government amendments, including the retroactivity of the application of the act. Presently there is a great concern for those people living in these designated areas who do not have very bright prospects of moving to new jobs or finding employment in their designated area.

We are concerned about the New Democratic Party amendments which would broaden the powers of the Labour Adjustment Reviews Board. These amendments will give it powers which are outside its jurisdiction. The NDP would like the board to have the authority to conduct investigations and require employers to open their books on demand. Of course, this is an indication of more government involvement which we feel is unnecessary. We will oppose that type of amendment.

We have not yet decided upon our reaction to Motion No. 14 respecting Clause 12, which deals with eligibility requirements and what constitutes 1,000 work hours per year. The suggestion is that if the employee is absent due to illness, a leave of absence with employer consent during the year that illness occurs would still be considered as an average work year. I will be interested to hear what my colleagues, the NDP and the government have to say on this subject. The government has indicated that the terminology used in their amendment concerning exceptions and special circumstances might satisfy the NDP amendment and make it unnecessary. However, we will have to study this particular question carefully.

This is a very important bill, Mr. Speaker, and we do not want to delay it unduly. Although it affects only 800 Canadians at the present time, with the advent of lay-offs and industry shut-downs in Canada it is obvious there will be other designated areas and other designated industries to be considered.

The minister in the other place stated at a Liberal gathering out west on the weekend that the government will give up on certain industries and pay special attention to the resource and high technology industries. It will forget about some of the other industries, specifically the textile and footwear industry which he mentioned. We have already seen what the government has done to the footwear industry. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) takes pride in saying that he gets great support from that industry, but I note that the footwear industry will have representatives in town on Thursday to demonstrate and discuss with many Members of Parliament their concerns over the latest actions of the government affecting that industry.

If what the Minister of State for Economic Development said on the weekend is factual—you have to wonder because you cannot believe who is saying what at times and people contradict each other—I am sure we will find more areas designated. There will be a great number of people who will qualify under this particular bill.

The minister and deputy minister were not able to give us accurate figures in committee on what these additional benefits will cost. They mentioned approximately $10 million up until this fiscal year, but I suggest that figure is an underestimate because more designated areas will arise much faster than expected due to the terrible economic conditions in Canada today.

We urge quick passage of this bill so that the benefits, which are meagre and only touch a very few people, will help those people most in need. We will work toward that end in order to pass this bill as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in this debate. At the report stage there are a few comments I should like to make on Bill C-78, the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act. Basically, this bill is a humanitarian measure aimed at helping workers who are suffering the adverse effects of a rapidly changing economy, and who are faced with the consequences of decisions that are often beyond their control, especially at the national level.

The proposed legislation on labour adjustment benefits is part of a special three-year industry and labour adjustment program which was announced last January and given a budget of $350 million. Hon. members will probably recall that under the program, the Ministers of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and Labour (Mr. Caccia) have already designated four communities that are in financial difficulty, namely, Port Cartier and Sept-Îles in Quebec, Sydney in Nova Scotia, Tracy and Sorel in Quebec, and Windsor in Ontario. These communities are having to cope with widespread industrial disruption caused by import competition or by industrial restructuring made necessary as a result of changes in the economy. Whatever the cause, the result is almost always a severe reduction in manpower. The number of lay-offs in the sectors most seriously affected in these communities indicates that they are faced with some of the worst adjustment problems in Canada.

The industrial restructuring encouraged by the industry adjustment program is essential to a sound economy. However, it does cause a number of serious social problems. That is why Bill C-78 is a necessary complement to this program, and there are two major reasons: first, because it provides benefits for older workers who have been permanently laid off, and also because it proposes amendments to Part III of the Canada Labour Code that are aimed at lessening the harsh consequences of loss of employment.

First of all, the labour adjustment benefits program provides financial assistance to older, laid-off workers when they have exhausted all other sources of financial aid. They must be at least 54 years old and have been permanently laid off in one of the designated industries. They must have been employed for at least ten years in the industry during the 15 years previous to lay-off. Benefits are the equivalent of 60 per cent of average insurable earnings before lay-off. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for the establishment of a labour adjustment review board that will certify the eligibility of laid-off workers to apply for benefits. The House will note that the bill also covers adjustment assistance benefits programs already being offered by the Department of Labour to workers in the textile, clothing and footwear industries.

The primary objective of the program is thus to provide relief for older workers with many years of seniority, who have been laid off, either by helping them find employment in other locations or by enabling them to take advantage of early retirement benefits.

The second part of Bill C-78 consists of amendments to Part III of the Canada Labour Code, which would lessen individual problems caused by loss of employment and increase the entitlements and benefits of workers affected by massive lay-offs in industries under federal jurisdiction. We all know that lay-offs have been made necessary by a reduction in demand for manpower in industries that are undergoing restructuring. However, the impact of lay-offs on employees is often very serious, and the bill we are considering today tries to remedy the situation by improving conditions for payment of severance pay and by increasing the period of time required for giving notice of termination of employment.

From now on, when employers foresee a reduction in their work force, they will have to plan ahead and give workers earlier notice of any mass lay-offs. The minister and unions representing redundant employees must be sent notice in writing of the employer's intention at least sixteen weeks before the date of termination of employment. Employers will also have to establish a labour-management committee, whose members will be responsible for setting up a plan for minimizing the impact of termination of employment. Finally, severance pay conditions will be more generous. Workers will be entitled to severance pay after one year of service instead of five, as is the case at the present time. Employees will still receive two days' wages for each year of service, but the bill provides for a minimum of five days' wages and the present maximum of forty days' wages will be abolished.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that although industrial restructuring is necessary in our economy, the fact remains that it can have very harsh consequences for redundant employees. Society and especially government and employers have an obligation to balance the impact of these adjustments.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I shall be voting for Bill C-78, and I hope that this bill, which has a very human dimension, will receive the approval of the House.

[English]

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, not having been a member of the committee, I feel some reluctance in making the presentation I am about to make, but nonetheless I wish to bring forward a point of view on Bill C-78 which I have not yet heard expressed this afternoon in this chamber and which I think is rather pertinent.

It is well and good to help older folk who have worked many years—perhaps 20 or 30 years—in our work force avoid the trauma of unemployment when an industry town goes down or when there is a major dislocation due either to technological or economic restructuring, but I want to say this afternoon that one of my most serious concerns relates to the fact that there is no dignity associated with people who are forced to go into early retirement. In the case of an industry where the whole plant is not shut down, it seems rather ludicrous that we should place the employer in the position of being able to push older, more experienced and more skilled people out the back door in order to make room for young people who perhaps do not yet have the necessary skills and developed abilities and who might very well be in much demand in other sectors of our economy.

It bothers me that this bill seems to make it easy to go into early retirement and to draw a pension prematurely—amounting to some 60 per cent of average insurable earnings—from age 54 or, in some cases, from age 50 until a person reaches normal retirement age. I believe this reflects adversely on the general state of our economy, and it is not adequate for governments to continue this preoccupation with programs, programs and still more programs which are not in fact working because they are not getting to the heart of the problem.

These programs and make-work projects are in a sense only aspirins for a terminal illness, and the government opposite has not chosen to address that terminal illness. Palliatives cannot substitute for the important policy choices and decisions which must be made if we are to restore the state of health and prosperity to our economy we once knew and, in fact, knew up until only a few short years ago.

I want to say something about five subjects in particular. First, Bill C-78 does not seem to bear any relationship to an over-all comprehensive industrial development plan which is so important to our nation.

The philosophy is wrong because it encourages people at the prime of their lives, when they have all the experience and knowledge in the world, to go into early retirement while other, younger people are brought into those jobs when perhaps in many cases they could be retrained and, with the whole concept of mobility, redirected into new technological disciplines and new challenging work.

Third, as other speakers have pointed out this afternoon, we see more layers of bureaucracy being added. It is the typical NDP socialist approach that we can add more bureaucratic jobs, and that at the same time we have to be peering constantly over people's shoulders, checking up on them and threatening them with penalties if they violate the rules, and then establish layer upon layer of rules and regulations with all the additional meetings, boards, expense accounts and paper shuffling that will entail. Once again we see that this emphasis on a new layer of bureaucracy—and in particular as represented by the Labour Adjustment Review Board—is part of the problem. The whole philosophy of more boards, programs and gimmicks is part of the problem and comes nowhere near to providing a solution.

As my colleague the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) pointed out, the funding provided for this program is totally inadequate. It does not at all provide the kind of relief that would be fair and equitable. If we want to provide equity, we should do so for all workers beyond age 50 or age 54 instead of a select group which happens to live in certain depressed rural areas of Canada. We should not be laying off other workers—for example, in the aerospace industry or the automotive industry—in areas such as Brampton and southwestern Ontario or parts of Quebec, and saying: "Well, because you live near Montreal or Toronto, you will not be eligible for this program." The amount of funding is paltry and totally inadequate in terms of being able to provide the assistance that would be needed if we wanted to do justice, given the premise on which this program is based, to all those who have contributed for many years to our work force.

This program is an illusion of action, Mr. Speaker, because it only adds to Canada's declining productivity. It takes the most skilled, the most experienced, the most knowledgeable and toughened people who have been in the work force for 20 or 30 years, and puts them out to pasture. What we really need is to get our young people reoriented into new skills and keep the older people working. They want to work, Mr. Speaker, and as a matter of human dignity they should be entitled to and be given every opportunity to work. Instead, their employers are being encouraged to put them out to pasture, albeit in a very mediocre way through this program.

At the most, the program will help some 1,000 employees over the age of 50 go into a leisurely form of early retirement. One thousand persons per year really only represents .1 per cent of all of the unemployed people in Canada. That is the measly amount of assistance that the program purports to give. I think that is an astonishing and appalling condemnation of the over-all policies of the government which have led the country to its knees, economically speaking.

The program will only benefit .01 per cent of our total work force and .05 per cent of the total work force in the age group 50 to 54. Or only one person out of 16,000 or 17,000 people in the work force would qualify for the benefits extended by this bill. As I said before, the program presents the illusion of action and it is most unfair to the other thousands and thousands of Canadian workers who will not be eligible for its benefits.

Finally, no accountability is shown by the governor in council for the basis on which the designated areas are selected, so the situation is wide open to abuse through political patronage. We do not want to see that happen, but if past experience is any indication it certainly will and that is most regrettable.

There must be more accountability, Mr. Speaker, and the provisions on reporting should be tightened. The quarterly report submitted to this House should include detail on the amount of information that is available as the basis for the position taken—

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to take it at the end of my 20 minutes.

As I have said, there is no evidence that this program is part of an over-all industrial development plan. This is like prescribing an aspirin for a terminal illness. Until this government comes to grips with the need for an over-all development plan, the statistics on unemployment will continue to escalate. We need a plan that stresses opportunities for our young people and training for the unemployed and the unemployable.

Clause 16 will encourage people to moonlight or go into other types of marginal business by allowing them to keep 40 cents on every dollar earned in those pursuits. If they should take retraining, they will have to deduct the compensation received for taking the retraining program from any benefit received under the labour adjustment benefit plan. In fact, this proposal encourages people in their senior years to earn income on the side and not to upgrade their skills to keep up with the technological structuring that we are all concerned about these days.

We need to provide an industrial development plan which will put the focus on secondary industry and upgrade the extent to which we extract value from our natural resources. It must put emphasis on getting the megaprojects going. This ties in to taxation policy and the attitude of the government with respect to foreign investment. We must stop this attack on foreign investment and realize that people who come to Canada and take some risks by investing in capital and plant will produce jobs for Canadians. Many of us would rather see people coming here and investing in the future of the country than have them lending money to Canada at preferred rates of interest without taking any risk in the future of the country. The attack on investment from outside Canada must stop.

The attack on the small business sector, especially as reflected in the job-destroying budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)—as it was called by one columnist—and the whole thrust of the government intervening, regulating and overbearing on the private sector must stop. Changes in policy must be made in these areas before we can talk about bringing justice to those who have worked for decades. These people seek dignity. They want to go off every day with their lunch bucket, earn a living for their family and pay their income tax cheerfully. In this way they can feel they have a stake in the country and can make the choices that are in their own best interests.

It is obvious that there is not a shred of evidence that this program will be properly integrated with a long-range survey aimed at increasing and improving our productivity. It does not reflect any sense of the human worth of people who have been trained and who have worked hard and long in order to build this country to the height of prosperity and affluence which we enjoyed until a year or two ago.

There are some in this House, Mr. Speaker, who believe that robots and technology will take work away from humankind. We often hear the statement that in future we will only have to work ten or 20 hours a week. If we ever reach the point where everyone can work for government shuffling paper, and there are machines for making all the paper and all the products, then we will be in a state of stagnation. It is only human effort and ingenuity which will allow us to grow and develop as human persons and expand the opportunities and demands for trades and manual skills.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, the demand for trades and human vocational skills will be with us for centuries. If the human spirit is to be preserved, men and women must have something constructive and creative to do. They must feel free to enjoy the rewards of their efforts. Those who say that computers and technology will take over are wrong. In fact, we cannot take solace in more programs, more bureaucracies and regulations as substitutes for real employment. Real employment is the production of goods that Canadians need; but, more important, if this is to be a healthy and growing economy it must produce more of the goods that are needed by the rest of the world.

This proposal flies in the face of entrenching the productivity of the nation. It merely reflects the government's total lack of competence to determine what the real goals of a nation which our potential ought to be. Instead, a three-layered bureaucracy is proposed which would have people apply for benefits either through their employers, their unions or directly to the Labour Adjustment Review Board as set out in Clause 4 of the bill. They may have to wait for many months until their application is processed by a board of five people. Some of the criteria applied to their application will be, for example, whether they were laid off from a designated industry and whether the work force was reduced by 10 per cent or 50 employees. That is the task of the board, Mr. Speaker. It seems elementary. Why do we need a board to decide whether people have been laid off in designated industries? Contrary to the hopes of the NDP, the designation will not be made by the board; it will be made by order in council on the basis of political considerations. Why do we need a board to decide whether or not the work force has been reduced by 10 per cent or 50 employees in a designated industry or region? It makes no sense.

Once the board has judged upon applications by employees, it will decide whether or not they shall have leave to submit applications. I have been to the Soviet Union, and that is the way it works there—every bureaucrat is backchecked by another bureaucrat; every board is backchecked by another board; one must obtain permission in order to apply for benefits which the government allows. Bill C-78 is advocating that employees must first go before the Labour Adjustment Review Board. If they have the stamina and the patience to wade through mounds of paper, applications and criteria then the board might give them leave to apply for permission to receive benefits from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. Then, of course, they must submit other applications, after all this bureaucratic rigmarole, to the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

Now, what does the commission want to determine? First, it wants to determine whether an employee is a Canadian citizen; that should take approximately 30 seconds. Then it wants to know whether he or she is less than 54 years of age but not more than age 64; that should take another 30 seconds. It wants to know whether or not the employee has exhausted his or her UIC benefits; the office and the records are there, so it should take about 10 minutes. Then it must determine whether or not there are prospects for alternative employment. At that point, 50-plus-year-old men and women are sent down to line up and apply for other jobs. This is the illusion of the entire program. In fact there is a paltry $10 million maximum to help some 1,000 senior employees at the most. The greatest number of applicants, after going through this rigmarole and applying to the commission, will be sent to line up and file applications for employment. If the commission cannot decide on the relative merits of a particular application, the bill provides that it can be referred to a board of referees.

As well, in the amendments to the Canada Labour Code the bill provides for the establishment of a joint planning committee to analyse the criteria under which the adjustment program shoulds be initiated, and how many and what type of employees should benefit. Thus there will be four separate boards, bodies and commissions involved in spending $10 million. My estimate is that a good third of this amount will be spent on paper work and bureaucracy. It will be a further waste of taxation resources that can only be earned by the production of products which the country can sell and the people need. Bureaucracies, boards and commissions handing out government money and taking productive people out of the work force run totally contrary to what we are trying to achieve in the country.

I should like to refer to a couple of inventories of recent applications for unemployment insurance. In 1981, in my riding applications for unemployment insurance benefits rose from 7,900 to 8,900, or a total of 1,000. In the last month alone, the Employment and Immigration Commission office staff in my riding had to work overtime and on weekends. Approximately 30 additional staff members were required because unemployment insurance applications rose from 1,100 in January, 1981, to 1,400 in January, 1982. Also I should point out that applications rose from 1,200 in December, 1980, to 1,600 in December, 1981. The proposed legislation does little to solve the escalation of unemployment, caused primarily by the policies of government. There have been over 2,000 lay-offs in the mining industry since the November 12 budget, and we expect another 5,600 by the beginning of summer, for a total of 8,000 mine workers being laid off permanently or taking early retirement. In many cases they do not want to go on early retirement because it is contrary to their sense of dignity; they want to work. What is the point of going on early retirement in a community such as Sudbury? What can one do? Why are we letting young people sit around drawing unemployment insurance benefits? Why are we not retraining them, upgrading their skills and redirecting them into new and challenging forms of employment? Instead the government talks about removing the most productive segment of the work force. I cannot understand it. It is a condemnation of government that all it comes up with is alphabet soup gimmicks as solutions to very grave and serious problems confronting the nation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Communications—Reception of television signals from CanCom satellite; the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—Metric Conversion—(a) Forced implementation. (b) Prime Minister's views; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Airports—Calling of tenders for advertising concession.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and Motions Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8 (Mr. Kristiansen) and Motion No. 10 (Mr. Caccia).

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-78. First I should like to say to the government member, who mentioned this was a humanitarian bill, that if the government brings before the House a bill which will create employment, then it could be called a humanitarian bill.

During discussions at committee stage there were representations from the Canadian Labour Congress, the United Steelworkers of America, the Canadian Trucking Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and The Railway Association of Canada. Virtually every one of them condemned the provisions of the bill. In fact, the CLC went so far as to indicate that the government is not offering medicare but a death benefit.

Bill C-78 is to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, but I should like to add the words, "in designated areas where the government sees fit". Basically this is what the bill identifies. We in the NDP have put forward 13 amendments to the bill at committee stage and on the floor of the House; the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) has put forward approximately ten. This clearly indicates that the bill was very poorly drafted and has not had the benefit of consultations with labour, management and other related groups.

The qualifications for receipt of benefits are very stringent. In order to qualify a person must first be a Canadian citizen or permanent resident; this sounds logical. Also he must have been laid off as a result of non-cyclical factors, where the total lay-off equals 10 per cent of employees or 50 employees. Can one imagine the discrimination in the bill? If it is not 10 per cent or 50 employees, some residents in that designated area could receive those kinds of benefits and yet others could not. What about those who have been employed for ten years out of the past 15 years working for 1,000 hours each year? One employee could be sick during one of those ten years and not complete his 1,000 hours of work. We in the New Democratic Party suggested an amendment that instead of 1,000 hours per year, there should be an average of 1,000 hours per year for ten years. That amendment could not be accepted because the minister and the committee chairman indicated that it was a money matter and was not something we could discuss. This is without doubt a discriminatory clause. I do not see why one of two workers working in the same industry for the same amount of time and who happened to be off work for one year out of the ten should be disqualified. I ask hon. members whether that is humanitarian. What about exhausted unemployment insurance benefits?

• (1710)

Mr. Caccia: Would the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have completed my speech, I will be prepared to answer questions.

Mr. Caccia: Read Motion 13.

Mr. Parker: What about a person having exhausted unemployment insurance benefits with no prospect of employment or one who is able to find only a low-paying job? In addition to all of these restrictions surrounding qualifications, the procedure for applying benefits seems needlessly bureaucratic.

Mr. McDermid: You want to make it more bureaucratic.

Mr. Parker: First, an application must be inspected by the Labour Adjustment Review Board. Second, if cleared, the application is then sent to the Employment and Immigration Commission, which may conduct its own investigation. Finally, a third investigation might take place if the commission deems it necessary to refer the application or any question arising to the board of referees. What a horribly complex system to impose upon Canadian workers denied the right to a job!

Mr. Siddon: Typically NDP.

Mr. Parker: I have asked the chairman of the committee and the minister how much money is going to be set aside so that these things can be carried out. I have not yet received an answer. Is the amount $10,000; $10 million; $20 million; or $30 million over the next three years? I have not been able to get that answer.

For immediate release on January 19, 1981, we found the announcement that a $350 million special industry and labour adjustment program would go into effect. In the body of that release we find the following:

> The designation of communities, for the community-based portion of the special adjustment, will be made by cabinet with the first designations within the next few weeks. Communities will be designated for one year with a maximum of two six-month extensions. It is estimated that at any point in time five or six community designations would be in place.

Since that time we have not heard of extra allotments to this program. The answer given by the minister was that times have changed and we are going to designate larger areas.

The Canadian Labour Congress, the steelworkers and various delegations put forward very clearly that communities have asked for full corporate disclosures of all information and data relevant to the decision by a company to shut down its operation. That is not too much to ask, is it? Is it too much to ask of a company that has been established for many years in a community? Is it too much to ask for a corporation or company to relay why it is shutting down and why the reasons should not be investigated? Those are some of the concerns that came forward.

I want to talk for a moment about the representations made by the trucking association. I asked them about their hours of work. I realized they could not answer in hours per day or hours per week, but surely to goodness an industry as large as that serving all of Canada should be able to identify a monthly scale. I was told by representatives of the trucking industry that truckers could work as much as 260 hours a month and that they could ask for extensions on top of that. The railways are doing a similar thing. Workers are required to work 11 hours a day and yet we have over one million people unemployed. At the same time industries are allowed under the Labour Code to let workers work excessive hours. If the Minister of Labour is really concerned about employment and if he really wants to do something humanitarian, he should meet with companies and unions to find a way to solve this dilemma. Workers should be working hours of work that are in the 1980s, not those worked in the 1890s.

That is something productive that could happen. In my riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke, 200 IWA workers were laid off in the Canadian forest industry by Crows Nest Forest Products Ltd. Right next door construction is going on by Crows Nest Resources. Do you think that the parent company has made an attempt to give the long-term employees an opportunity to work within the resource sector of the company? To this date the unions, Canada Manpower, management and myself, as a Member of Parliament, have been calling upon the parent company to try to relocate lumber workers in the mining areas. They are qualified to run machinery. I am sure they are qualified to carry on those kinds of jobs. But what is the Minister of Labour doing? He is bringing in amendments to the Canada Labour Code and bringing forward extensions to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will provide mobility for people to move from province to province. But what about people in a province who have homes, are unemployed and looking for work? They want work, not benefits. That is the message we were getting loud and clear from the various groups.

The steelworkers talked about Uranium City and its problem. Before Christmas our members in Uranium City were told without prior indication or warning that Eldorado Limited would be permanently closing its Beaverlodge mining operations as of June, 1982. For the work force of 850 this meant that their jobs, homes and the whole community would be written off. Not only was there no prior indication of the shut-down, but some 45 new miners and their families had just moved into Uranium City and were still in a company orientation program. Those kinds of things are going on. We are not having the kind of consultation that should occur in order to ensure that we have an industrial strategy which will keep workers employed in the future.

The union together with the community have asked for full corpporate disclosure of all information and data relevant to the decision by the company to shut down its operations. On the basis of his public statement, the president of Eldorado is apparently of the view that his simple figures of $60 in production costs and $25 in current quoted prices per pound of product is sufficient information for the people. Anything more can wait for the publication of the company's annual report. We on this side do not feel that is sufficient.

The Sydney steel mill, Sysco, has suffered chronic problems ever since it was abandoned by Dosco in 1967, its previous irresponsible owners, and the mill has suffered long-term job losses as well as short-term lay-offs and recalls. Part of the reason has been loss of markets and part technical change. The government is well aware of the problems of Sydney steel. It has been aware of them. It knows about the expenditures that must be made. But the government is now coming in with patchwork policies to try to cover up for the mistakes it has been making over and over again.

● (1720)

With regard to the railways, it seemed odd to me that the government would be bringing about the same kind of talks as the trade unions, management groups and workers; but the conclusions of The Railway Association of Canada were that it understands the conflicting recommendations made to legislators as they attempt to maintain realistic labour standards. Legislated improvements which are not the result of real productivity improvements, however, will come at the expense of the employees. Rather than benefit the terminated employee, the proposed Labour Adjustment Benefits Act may ultimately lead to further erosion of the employees's wellbeing. The Railway Association goes on:

> It is for these reasons that The Railway Association of Canada remains convinced that the proper role for government is to create an economic environment where business can grow and prosper.

That was typical of the comments of virtually every delegation which came before us.

There was one personal representative from Sept-Îles. It was a pathetic thing to see that worker come before the committee and talk about the unemployment there, the loss of homes, and the attitude of the government in offering them programs such as this which are only stop-gap measures against a very serious unemployment problem. The Canadian Labour Congress offered some adjustment programs which put forward the following points, and I think the minister should take a look at them. They said:

> One year advance notice of plant closures and major lay-offs and six months for lay-offs of less than 50 employees.

Is that so much to ask for on a major shutdown?

> Major lay-offs and plant closures must be justified in hearings before a job protection board. A single member board, appointed by the government after consultation with the parties affected, would have powers under the Inquiries Act to examine the reasons for the full or partial closure.

Is that too much to ask? Surely to goodness, when people have worked long hours and years for a company, it is not too much to ask a board under the Inquiries Act to examine the reasons. The next recommendation reads:

> Compensation payments to communities affected by lay-offs payable out of a special fund financed through employer contributions. The job protection board would make recommendations concerning payments out of the community adjustment fund. The rules governing the establishment and administration of the fund and respecting entitlement for assistance would be made by regulation.

Is that too much to ask in a community where the workers have worked long and diligently, invested their money, their lifestyle and their youth in those communities, only then to be told by the government that this is a humanitarian bill; that if they take their pension a little bit early, and if they happen to work over 1,000 hours every year for the past ten years, they could qualify if they can pass all of these various provisions. The recommendations go on:

In addition to proceedings before the job protection board, no lay-offs may occur until negotiations take place between the employer and the union or, where there is no union, a committee of employees, to discuss ways of avoiding a loss of jobs. During such consultations, the employer shall make available all relevant financial information concerning the lay-off.

Again, is that too much to ask? Why should the government come in with programs to bail them out when they have not even identified why the lay-offs are taking place?

Where lay-offs cannot be prevented, an agreement must be signed between the employer and the union or committee of employees covering all terms of the lay-off before terminations may proceed. The Minister of Labour shall make regulations setting out minimum amounts to be paid to terminated employees as relocation allowances.

In cases where employees are on strike or locked out at the time the employer announces his intention to lay off, the above-mentioned negotiations remain mandatory before any action can be taken.

Standard hours of work must be lowered through collective bargaining; to facilitate this, the Canada Labour Code must be amended to provide that all overtime work is voluntary and to increase overtime pay to 2½ times the regular rate.

Is it too much to ask of a company, if they insist on the overtime, that they must pay two and a half times the rate? Not only do we lose out on overtime hours, but that employee is only paying his contribution to the unemployment insurance fund. If extra jobs are created, extra funding would come into the program.

Some more recommendations are:

Severance pay of at least one week per year of service, or portion of a week's pay for each portion of a year worked, with no service requirement.

A levy-grant system to ensure that all employers contribute to the cost of retraining workers.

Changes in pension legislation to improve vesting rights and ensure portability of pensions.

Those are constructive suggestions which the minister should look at very seriously.

The approach to the adjustment assistance bill taken in C-78, supplemented by the illusory employment measures announced recently by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), falls far short of what is needed in this country. Those were the comments made by the Canadian Labour Congress. On and on it goes. I want to say that I thought the committee put a very constructive effort into improving the bill, but it is not good enough. I am recommending to our party that we do not support this legislation because it is limited, discriminatory and not in the best interests of Canadian workers.

Labour Adjustment Benefits

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part at the report stage in the debate on Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees in times of undue economic difficulties in a designated industry; that is, when an industry is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature by reason of import competition or by reason of industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada to encourage such restructuring, or when the economic adjustment is resulting in a significant loss of employment in the industry in Canada generally.

[English]

Since my hon. colleagues have already addressed themselves to the portion of the bill concerned with the payment of benefits to laid-off employees, I will restrict my comments to that part of the proposed legislation concerned with the amendments to the Canada Labour Code. Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of hon. members to Clause 31, which proposes the repeal of Section 60 of the Canada Labour Code. The earlier legislation states that:

Any employer who terminates, either simultaneously or within any period not exceeding four weeks, the employment of a group of fifty or more employees employed by him within a particular industrial establishment, or of such lesser number of employees as is prescribed by a regulation made under paragraph 60.2 (b) that is applicable to the employer, shall, in addition to any notice required to be given by him under Section 60.4, give notice to the minister in writing of his intention to do so at least

(a) eight weeks before the date of termination of the employment of the employee in the group whose employment is first terminated where the group of employees whose employment is to be terminated does not exceed one hundred;

(b) twelve weeks before the date mentioned in paragraph (a) where the group exceeds one hundred but does not exceed three hundred; and

(c) sixteen weeks before the date mentioned in paragraph (a) where the group exceeds three hundred.

(2) A copy of any notice given to the minister under subsection (1) shall be given forthwith by the employer to the Department of Manpower and Immigration and to any trade union certified to represent any employee in the group of employees whose employment is to be terminated or recognized by the employer as bargaining agent for any such employee; and where any employee in such group is not represented by a trade union, a copy of such notice shall be given to him or posted forthwith by the employer in a conspicuous place within the industrial establishment in which that employee is employed.

Section 60.1 states:

An employer who gives notice to the minister under section 60 and any trade union to which a copy of such a notice is given shall provide to the Department of Manpower and Immigration any information requested by it for the purpose of assisting employees to whom the notice relates and shall co-operate with that department to facilitate the re-establishment in employment of those employees.

These actions of the Code require amendment because they are no longer adequate to cope with contemporary industrial needs. In the past it has been implicitly assumed in government policy that the Canadian economy is able to accommodate and adjust to disruptions, dislocations and costs caused by closures and relocations of enterprise. Unprecedented numbers of plant closures and large scale permanent lay-offs of workers have recently focused public attention on this issue and have brought into question the serious burdens placed on workers in such situations. Owing to his growing concern with this matter, on March 9, 1978, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) appointed the commission of inquiry on redundancies and lay-offs under the chairmanship of A.W.R. Carrothers to study these problems. His recommendations, published under the date of April 5, 1979, laid the basis of the proposed legislation before Your Honour today.

I would like to give a rough summary of the Carrothers recommendations. First, there was a recommendation that, through legislation, redundancy management be recognized as a shared responsibility and that "effective joint consultation" be required. The commission argued that the right to be consulted should be applicable to both uionized and non-unionized employees. In the case of non-union operators, it was recognized that a mechanism to provide employee representation would have to be established.

Second, on the matter of notice, the commission proposed that a "notice of intent to introduce a change" should be required. At this time, the manpower consultative services of Employment and Immigration Canada would be available to assist the parties. The purpose was to ensure consultation before a fixed plan of lay-offs was established. Under present provisions in the Canada Labour Code, this is not the case. If "notice of intent" were established, the commission proposed that present notice requirements be reduced.

Third, the employers and employees should be prepared to resolve the impasse with respect to lay-offs or face third-party intervention. The commission chose not to recommend processes for the resolution of impasses in the belief that prescribed procedures would inhibit consultation, and that ad hoc intervention should be in reserve.

Fourth, employer and unions, or a committee of employees created for the purpose, should establish standing "work councils" to meet on a regular basis for continuous joint manpower planning. It was not proposed that this be a legislated requirement.

The government, when considering the precise form which the legislation should take, took the recommendations of Mr. Carrothers one step further. The government realizes that there is a problem when one employee is laid off; but whether such a laid-off employee is one of 50 or 300, the government proposes in the new Section 60(1) of the Canada Labour Code that all lay-offs involving 50 or more employees will be treated equally; that is to say, the employer shall give notice to the minister, in writing, of his intention to terminate employment at least 16 weeks before the date of termination of employment of the employee in the group whose employment is first terminated. Subsection (2) provides that written notice of termination be given to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the trade union representing any redundant employee.

Implementing Carrothers' previously summarized recommendation of notice through Section 60.1(1) will ensure that the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission will have access to the information requested for it to be of assistance to laid-off employees since it requires that:

> An employer who gives notice to the minister under section 60 and any trade union to which a copy of such notice is given shall give the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission any information requested by it for the purpose of assisting any redundant employee and shall co-operate with the Commission to facilitate the re-establishment in employment of that employee.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the time is insufficient to enter into the thorough discussion merited by Sections 60.1(2) through 60.3. I recommend them for the hon. members' perusal with the thought that they go a long way to effecting the recommendations made by the Carrothers commission and will prove to be a great boon to the workers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, after so many days of committee hearings, it was a pleasure to be able to return to the chamber, not to discuss a bill which may not be an important bill, and I will make a case for that as time progresses today but, rather, to discuss what is certainly an important problem. I believe we have a piece of legislation which is still far from adequate, but perhaps somewhat better after the committee's examination of it. For those who may be listening to us today and have an interest in this problem of lay-offs, the transcripts which were largely generated by the witnesses who appeared before us should be of considerable interest. Obviously, they are obtainable from the Clerk of the House of Commons upon request.

Some weeks ago, I stood in this chamber and asked, first, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) what he thought of the impact of the massive lay-offs on the health of Canadians. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stood in his place and told me that I was off on some sort of wild goose chase and that lay-offs did not lead to health problems which should be of concern to him and his government. That flew in the face of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce comes from Windsor, Ontario; and if he had simply read his daily newspapers over the last year and a half, he would have seen that a special mayor's committee laid out in the public domain the fact that social agencies and health agencies in Windsor had experienced a tremendous increase in the volume of requests for their services.

An hon. Member: He can't read!

Mr. Hawkes: Someone from across the chamber shouts, "He cannot read!" I do not know if that is correct or not, but certainly the minister does not seem to read his local newspapers. He does not seem to understand his own constituency and the difficulties for human beings which have been caused in that Windsor area by massive lay-offs.

• (1740)

Later that same day was the first opportunity that I had to speak in this chamber about the issues which Bill C-78 brings to our attention. In Hansard for that day we find the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) making an interjection in the middle of my presentation to this chamber. That interjection is very simple. He said: "Nonsense, sheer nonsense". That is what the Minister of Labour said in this chamber on that day. That interjection was in response to a part of my presentation to this chamber in which I was indicating some of the statistics available to the public related to the social service costs and health costs of massive lay-offs.

In committee I brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour the fact that the statistics I was using on that occasion had come from the Carrothers report. That report, mentioned just a few minutes ago by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Yanakis), underlies the piece of legislation which we are exploring here today. It behooves me to take a minute or two to read from page 39 of that report so that the public record shows clearly and unequivocally what is contained in at least one page of that report.

Quoting from that report, they tell us that when unemployment goes up 1.4 per cent—and we have seen that kind of rise in Canada in the last year—there is an increase in suicides of 5.7 per cent. Admissions to mental hospitals increase 4.7 per cent for each 1.4 rise in the unemployment rate. Admissions to prisons go up 5.6 per cent with that same rise in unemployment. There is a rise in homicides or murders of 8 per cent for every 1.4 per cent rise in unemployment. The mortality rate as a result of cirrhosis of the liver goes up 2.7 per cent, and the mortality rate as a result of cardiovascular renal disease will go up 2.7 per cent. The total mortality rate on average will go up 2.7 per cent from a 1.4 per cent increase in unemployment.

If those are the figures which we can expect to find in a nation, these rises of 3 per cent to 8 per cent from some of the indicators of social stress and distress, we will find the same, only magnified, in those communities which experience sudden massive lay-offs.

If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce were here to listen to this debate, or if he takes the time to read Hansard, or if he has read his local newspapers in the city of Windsor where there have been so many unfortunate Canadians laid off in the automobile plants, he would find that these effects are real and significant. They not only cause harm to people, but lead to increased mortality rates. More people die in those kinds of circumstances than would normally die if those circumstances were not present.

The importance of that in this piece of legislation before us lies in what the legislation does not deal with. As we look at the legislation, there are two principles which are enunciated. One deals with the fact that there shall be benefits for designated people who have been laid off. These benefits shall be of a financial nature. I guess it is easiest to think of them as an early retirement. There shall be for older workers some kind of security provided. That is a step forward.

The victims of government policy and an economy which is not allowed to perform the way it should by a government that does not seem to know what it is doing or the harm it is causing should have something from society on which to fall back in order that they can buy adequate food, have adequate shelter and live a life of dignity.

I do not think any member of this chamber could seriously argue with the principle of this bill. It is a valid principle, one which I hope all members will support. If we had seen a bill dealing with a desire to help in that way, pure and simple, I suspect it would have had rather quick passage in this chamber and in committee. The witnesses we heard did not quarrel with the need for Canadian society to help these kinds of victims.

Instead, we got a different kind of omnibus bill. We have provisions in this bill which we cannot separate. Members of this chamber will have to vote on both principles, and we only get one vote. It is the second principle which causes me difficulty. It is the second principle on which we heard a great deal of testimony.

In this country today there are in excess of one million people unemployed. We have been told by Statistics Canada that over the last year 400,000 people have been lost to the work force. They have given up looking for work. They know there is no work to be found in their communities.

In summary, we have skilled, caring Canadians who are not allowed to make a contribution to society because we do not have an economic system in place which encourages their participation. If you say to yourself with a great deal of clarity that what this country needs is a bigger pie with more jobs, more opportunity for young, old and middle-aged people, and you look at the first part of Bill C-78 which talks about the responsibility of employers in relation to lay-offs, you have to ask yourself some questions.

Whether you are a labour union leader, a member of this chamber, employed by a business subjected to lay-offs or an employer, you have to ask yourself whether there is a cost involved if society adopts this bill. The answer should come very quickly. Yes, there is a cost involved. You then have to ask yourself who pays the cost. That is where it starts to become a little unglued, a little less clear than it might be. The early retirement benefits or labour adjustment benefits are to be picked up in large part in the long term by society in general. But in the short term, a specific employer must give notice and pay full salary for a period of time, be it ten, 16 or 20 weeks. Therefore, it must be considered by that employer as a cost of doing business.

This might sound reasonable, as it is in many cases, but it also has a down side. The minister said in committee that he did not care or was not concerned about this. I was disturbed even more when he said that. This down side can be illustrated within the following context: ask yourself if there is any employer or owner of a business who would willingly lay off employees rather than expanding his business and hiring new employees. The reason a businessman can expand is because his business is strong and whatever he produces is in demand and being used by society. As his commodities become more popular, he has to produce more and therefore hire more people to make these items. This is what the business climate in Canada should be. A business which is growing, expanding and providing more jobs for more people is what any businessman would like to have.

Let us contrast this with the situation of an employer who must reach the difficult decision to begin laying off people. Why would he decide to lay off people rather than hire new employees? Of course, the reason is that business is poor. He has to make this decision after carefully studying the situation and realize that if he continues to pay people to do a job which does not need doing, if he has to pay employees money for 16 or 20 weeks for doing nothing, it may well be the straw which breaks the camel's back. That increased expenditure may drive the firm into bankruptcy, and no one in that firm will have a job. That is the cost of doing business.

Are we putting forward a piece of legislation which will increase the bankruptcy rate and thereby increase the unemployment rate? If there is even a threat of doing that in these present economic circumstances, we should be very, very cautious.

There is another hidden cost which is perhaps somewhat more difficult to understand. This involves a businessman deciding upon whether he wants to build a new business in Maine or Massachusetts, for example, or in southern Ontario or Montreal. He wants to employ 100 people but must reach a business decision on behalf of the shareholders as to whether he should build in Maine or Montreal. Knowledgeable businessmen will consider the business climate in which they will be and consider the costs involved. If they find that the Canadian government has gone out of its way to make it more expensive to produce goods in the long term than they can be produced south of the border, they will decide to build the factory and thereby create jobs in Maine or Massachusetts instead of Canada. That is the reality.

Perhaps I speak with some passion on this issue because during the past year and a half I have seen people become the victims of an overnight change in federal government policy. Since October, 1980, when the National Energy Program was introduced I have seen people who started a small welding shop with 20 employees, or someone in an oil-related business, or pensioners who invested in an oil rig become victimized by an overnight change in policy. The experienced people in those businesses who knew the results of the government policy started laying off people immediately because they knew that if they did not cut their expenses rapidly they would be facing bankruptcy.

As I travelled through my riding today, I found that those people who reacted quickly may only have half of the employees they had a year and a half ago, but they are still in business and still have jobs for some people. On the other hand, those less experienced businessmen who failed to react quickly, went bankrupt and have no employees.

I urge the Minister of Labour to consider carefully the weight of my argument before we enshrine into law the principle which may cost us jobs at a time when the government is being criticized because not enough jobs are being created. Over a million people in Canada are unemployed, and we should be careful about passing any piece of legislation which may make it more difficult for them to obtain employment.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the debate this afternoon, with the exception of the two members of the NDP and a couple of Conservatives who have spoken, I could not help being struck by the fact that this legislation does not even address the problem of unemployment in Canada. If it does, it is only so marginally that it is almost embarrassing that the government would even want to bring this legislation forward. There does not even seem to be any provision to enhance the bill in such a way as to remove the very causes of unemployment in our society.

When I hear the minister responsible for economic development, who, I assume, speaks for the government, say that it is the government's policy that there is nothing very much wrong with Canadians continuing as the hewers of wood and drawers of water and it has to phase out even further established Canadian industries, which provide by far the best employment opportunities in Canada—not the resource sector—I cannot help wondering if any member of the government realizes that the unemployment problem is simply not being addressed.

I would like to make specific reference to the inadequacies of this particular measure at eight o'clock. May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has been asked to advise hon. members that other amendments pursuant to Bill C-78 have now been considered by the Speaker.

Madam Speaker has ruled as follows; she examined the remaining motions in amendment to Bill C-78 and wishes to inform the House of her decision concerning the grouping and voting of these motions.

Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) causes the Chair some difficulty in that it appears to be going beyond the scope of the bill when it calls upon the board "to investigate the expected social and economic impact of intended termination of employment". Beauchesne's Citation 773(1) states that an amendment is out of order if it is beyond the scope of the bill. Therefore, on that basis one would presume that the motion may be out of order, but subject to the usual consideration that the hon. member may wish to argue the case.

● (1800)

Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West appears to relax conditions and qualifications respecting the receipt of benefits. In this regard it appears to go beyond the royal recommendation as referred to in Beauchesne's Citation 773(7).

The Chair would be prepared to hear argument on the acceptability of these two motions at the appropriate time.

Motions Nos. 13 and 14 should be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 should be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 20 and 21 should be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 22 and 23 should be debated and voted on separately.

I think it might be a courtesy to hon. members if at eight o'clock this evening the Table had an adequate supply of copies of this ruling for hon. members to have in hand.

Pursuant to the suggestion of the hon. member, I will call it six o'clock. Accordingly, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.01 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 6 p.m. this evening, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) had the floor.

[English]

Miss Jewett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are debating Bill C-78 which is an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. It sounds pretty good, particularly the first part—an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees. Yet when one looks at it closely one sees that this year it will benefit at the most, from my estimate, 350 and not 850 employees. This, in a society where, in January, 1982, 1,096,000 Canadians were unemployed, or 9.5 per cent of the labour force. If you add to that the hidden unemployed which in January, 1982, is estimated at 745,000, you will find that the number of unemployed constituted 15 per cent of the Canadian labour force. When you look at lay-offs—and I wonder if members of the government were really looking at lay-offs when they introduced a measure like this which is supposed to benefit those who are laid off—you will see that in 1978 there were 75,000 lay-offs and that since then the numbers have increased both in quantity and severity, until in 1980 there were 183,000 lay-offs. Then, between September, 1981, and January, 1982, the number increased to 277,000, and in the last month alone, December, 1981, to January, 1982, there were 89,000 lay-offs. That is about 3,000 lay-offs per day in this country.

In British Columbia the unemployment and lay-off situation is far more serious than I think the government realizes—perhaps because it has no members from that province. In January, 1982, the number of unemployed totalled 129,000 and the unadjusted unemployed rate was, therefore, 9.8 per cent, which is 0.3 per cent higher than the Canadian average.

If one includes the 63,000 not included in the official figures, the unemployment rate in British Columbia jumped to 13.9 per cent, just below the national average of 15 per cent. The IWA estimates that in January, 1982, 30.6 per cent of its members in British Columbia were unemployed. This figure contrasts sharply with the IWA estimate for October, 1982, of 17.5 per cent. On the coast, 37.8 per cent of members are unemployed, and in the interior the figure is 17.8 per cent.

In terms of lay-offs, the situation is equally, if not even more, serious. In my constituency of New Westminster-Coquitlam, British Columbia Forest Products laid off over 250 employees. MacMillan Bloedel, in its Jardine division, laid off 80 employees in September, 60 of them indefinitely, while its sawmill division laid off 400 employees last year. Lamford Cedar also laid off 110 employees in September for an indefinite period of time. This is the magnitude of lay-offs in the one federal constituency of New Westminster-Coquitlam.

At the same time we find that the consumer price index increased to 14.3 per cent in 1981 in Vancouver, the highest increase of any urban area in Canada. In the more general situation, costs for non-food items such as housing, transportation and energy, have risen much higher than the average consumer price index. The average industrial wage in British Columbia has increased to 12.2 per cent, while the CPI increased to 15.5 per cent last year. As a result, workers have suffered a loss of purchasing power amounting to $581 per year.

The economic circumstances in British Columbia, and in Canada as a whole, are extremely serious and demand attention on the part of the government. This is where Bill C-78 comes in. Perhaps it was not intended to address the overwhelming unemployment problem, but it does not even effectively address the question of lay-offs and of providing benefits to laid-off workers. It is intended to provide assistance to laid-off workers who are 54 years of age and older. As I said, by its title it sounds as if it may do a great deal, but in fact Bill C-78 applies only to a very few laid-off workers in a very few industries in a very few regions. Actually, it does not apply in British Columbia at all. Another subject which concerns me very deeply is that it does not touch, or barely touches, women in the labour force who are 54 years of age or over.

Let us look at the numbers. There are the designated areas in Quebec of Sept-Îles, Port-Cartier and Schefferville where the unemployment and lay-off problem is extremely serious. Of 566 laid-off workers in Sept-Îles, ten are between the ages of 54 and 65 and are, therefore, eligible for benefits under Bill C-78. In Schefferville, 16 of 286 laid off workers are eligible, and nine of the 109 management personnel laid off are eligible. In total, only 35 out of 961 are eligible for benefits under Bill C-78.

The total number of people across the country who will be eligible to receive benefits were estimated this afternoon at only 850. It would appear to me—and certainly I stand to be corrected—that 500 of those 850 are already receiving benefits because labour adjustment benefits are at present being paid to a few textile and clothing workers and to footwear and tanning workers under separate regulations. According to the Department of Labour, the base figure for the number of people receiving benefits under these two programs is 500, less the number of new people who will be receiving benefits under the program in 1982, the figure will be 350. This is in a society where there are 1,096,000 unemployed and where lay-offs are taking place at the rate of 3,000 per day—350 individuals 54 years of age and older will receive benefits from the program. It seems absolutely ridiculous that the government would embarrass itself by bringing forward such a piece of legislation. It must be an embarrassment to the government. Furthermore, the benefits under the present programs for textile and clothing workers and for footwear and tanning workers are 66 per cent, whereas under the new legislation they will be 60 per cent. Even these workers will receive less.

Not only are the numbers extremely tiny of those who will benefit from the program, but there will not be any of them in British Columbia because the act is quite explicit that an industry may be designated only if it is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature—and presumably this would not affect the major industry of British Columbia—or by reason of import competition or industrial restructuring implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada. That is to say, the Government of Canada has already to have initiated some program to assist in industrial restructuring. Since there is no Government of Canada program which affects the British Columbia lumber industry, no one in British Columbia 54 years of age and over and involved in that industry will benefit from the program should it be enlarged in numbers. When only 350 will receive benefits, it is almost too silly to talk about. In any event, should the numbers be enlarged, no one in British Columbia, the way it is presently worded, will benefit from the program. Furthermore, women will not benefit from the program. This is one of its great inequities. It is no wonder that "he" is referred to throughout. As I read it, very few women will benefit.

For example, one is required to have been in an industry for ten of the previous 15 years in order to qualify. This is very unlikely for large numbers of women. Furthermore, one is required to have worked 1,000 hours in every one of the years. This knocks out immediately a woman who has taken off some time to have a child. I do not think the government even thinks or realizes that 40 per cent of the work force is women and that over half of them are women with children. It does not even realize that they are in the economy and of course are suffering as much as men from unemployment.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Miss Jewett: I will be glad to accept a question at the end of my remarks. The government does not realize that women are suffering as much from unemployment, particularly if we take into consideration the number of hidden unemployed. The bill barely touches upon women in the labour force.

My colleagues have and will continue to enumerate further serious limitations in the bill, but it would seem to me that if the government were really serious about the increasing number of lay-offs, it would extend the bill far more broadly than what I estimate to be the 350 laid-off people it will cover this year. Also it would make the regulations sufficiently flexible, particularly on the 1,000 hour regulation, so that women will at least be eligible. Also it would take a serious look at the resource sector—particularly the forest industry in British Columbia and elsewhere—which has not had the benefit of any special government planning. It would look at the 30 per cent unemployment rate there and at the incredibly high number of lay-offs, and would adapt the bill to suit other parts of the country and other sectors of the economy. If the government does not do something along these lines, the bill will remain what it is at this very moment—not even a band-aid but a laughingstock. That is how it strikes those of us in this corner, and that is how it will strike all Canadians who learn about it.

• (2020)

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. lady entertain a question?

Miss Jewett: Certainly.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, in examining the bill we find it provides benefits for persons aged 54 who have worked 1,000 hours—

Miss Jewett: Every year.

Mr. Berger: —in ten out of the past 15 years. The hon. member indicated, and I would note, that 1,000 hours a year, I believe, is five months and that this would disqualify many women who might have had to leave the labour force in order to give birth. How many women does the hon. member know who give birth after the age of 45?

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty silly question, but the answer is quite a few.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being able to speak at report stage of this bill. It gives me an opportunity to deal with some of the matters that were dealt with in committee. It might be useful if I tried to focus for a moment on the philosophy of the bill. From the many speeches that I have heard from the far end of the House one would have thought that what was being dealt with here was a large bill dealing with industrial strategy.

Mr. Orlikow: That is what we need.

Mr. Crombie: It may well be what the hon. member says we need, but there are certain specifics that can be done for people who are disturbed as a consequence of economic dislocation. This bill helps them do that.

In the Dodge report that dealt with labour markets in the 1980s there is a rather significant statement. I think it is worth putting on the record. I hope it will do two things: First, that it will remind the government that that is the philosophy behind the bill and therefore urge the government to do more; and second, that it will remind those who are not going to support the bill that there is something being done today, however small it might be.

The Dodge report reads:

> Throughout the 1980s a decade already bearing the mark of uncertainty, there will be a need to focus more heavily on measures to facilitate the process of adjustment so that expanding industries in areas have access to the labour, including the skilled labour they require and so that workers in declining industries and areas do not bear undue costs. The benefits of adjustment are considerable and they accrue to society as a whole. Governments should therefore not be reticent about providing compensation to those individuals who are adversely affected by the process.

That is what this bill is about. It is a very small specific practical thing that it does, but that is the philosophy behind it. I might say that the committee itself was able to broaden the bill. I gather other speakers have mentioned this already, but it was one of the few times in a long time that I, as a Member of Parliament, bave been able to provide some argument for changes that indeed, if not accepted initially, were accepted before the bill came back into the House for report stage. It may well be, as the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) says, that it does not help very many people, some 850. It may not be important to that member, but if you happen to be one of the 850, it is very important. But more than that, we are hoping that the government, by receiving support, is going to designate more areas and more industries as they get hurt in terms of dislocation over the 1980s and 1990s, and therefore more people will be helped.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this bill should be understood at two levels. It is the first attempt in any significant way that I know of that the government has understood the necessity of the 1980s and 1990s in relation to who should pay for the technological change that we hope we will experience. Second, it at least gives some specific compensation to people who are already hurt now. That is important.

On this side we were very concerned at the outset with the definition of industrial restructuring. How is a community or an industry designated for industrial restructuring? In our view, it is important that industrial restructuring be understood to include technological change. It was the view of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), his deputy minister and staff, that industrial restructuring implied technological change. But all representations that dealt with the question of industrial restructuring were uniform. They did not see clearly that industrial restructuring included technological change. There is a change in Clause 2 of the bill under the heading "Interpretation" which reads:

> "industrial restrucuturing" includes technological change;

That is an advance, not for today's delivery but for other people to understand what the philosophy of the bill is and therefore be able to argue later on that because the bill is that broad, there is other legislation to be brought forward based on that bill and the acceptance of the philosophy.

Labour Adjustment Benefits

A second area with which we concerned ourselves was the establishment of the labour boards. In our view, and it is still our view—and we were not successful about this—that it would be easier and better had the implementation of the administration of the program been carried out by the Canadian employment commission. That would seem to me to have put the people applying for the benefit through one process rather than two. Indeed, it was clear from the remarks made by the deputy minister of labour that the only reason we have two systems is that someone over there decided to put the job definition with labour rather than with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I am sure that you know, Mr. Speaker, that the people who will get support and help from the bill do not care if it is done by the Supreme Court. They would like it done efficiently, clearly, quickly and understandably.

I hear the Minister of Labour saying if we had amended it, it would go to the Supreme Court, and we probably would not have had it accepted. We hope that our fears are wrong, but as the Minister of Labour has pointed out time and again, it will be simpler and it will make it easier. If that is true, it will be the first time in the history of the federal government in this century that adding yet one more board, commission or special purpose body will make it easier for people to get the benefits.

The approach that says "Hello, I am from the government and I am here to help" is increasingly being met with skepticism. It seems to me that that would have been one change on which we could have insisted. We believe very strongly that what we have here is going to be an administrative problem that will not be of benefit to the recipients of the adjustments.

We also dealt with an amendment offered by the New Democratic Party, which we supported in the committee, with respect to a change in the 1,000-hour requirement. It seems to us unnecessary to stick rigidly to 1,000 hours per year. We think the average is appropriate.

We also dealt with the question of reports to Parliament. Anyone who attended the committee hearings would know that everybody agreed there is great difficulty with the various programs being offered by the various departments of government. We could find ourselves lost in a sea of paper with no one remembering who helped whom last. It is important that we have a more rapid reporting system that would impose some discipline on those who are administering the various programs so they could have some coherence about what they are doing and we would not get mixed up with three different programs from two different departments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were four or five changes, not the least of which was a motion which was accepted to broaden the representative nature of the Labour Adjustment Review Board to include employer and employee representatives. That is a good change; we supported it in committee and will now. We also had a good discussion in committee on the broadening of responsibility of the joint planning committee, which we support. That change was very significant in my view and, I think, in the view of all members of the committee, Mr. Speaker, because it allows the joint planning committee not only to deal with the question of looking for ways in which to cushion the shock of unemployment, but also to look at programs which could obviate the necessity of lay-offs in the first place. That was a good advance and it was carried by the committee unanimously.

We are also pleased that the minister is bringing forward the suggestion made by my friend from Montreal that we should include the CPP deductibility in terms of the calculation. That is a good change. I could go on with two or three others, Mr. Speaker, but what we wanted to say is clearly this. The government's efforts in this bill, which is essentially an early retirement bill, are welcomed by those of us in this party because we recognize the government is trying to take its first—however small and timed—step into a field which is going to be very important for technological change and its consequences, which takes us into the twenty-first century.

I spent a considerable part of my remarks on second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, chastising the government for not understanding it. I would like to change that in one connection. The Minister of Labour understands it but I am not so sure—all right, I will be kind. Clearly, though, the Minister of Labour demonstrated in committee that he understands what he is about. We wish the bill could have provided bigger and broader benefits for more people, but to reject the bill on the basis that it does not do everything you want is, I think, irresponsible. So, speaking for my party, Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), and the reason his party proposes to support this bill is that it is a small step in the right direction. Mr. Speaker, this country is facing tremendous problems. We have over a million unemployed; thousands of jobs in Ontario and Quebec, the manufacturing heartland of this country, are being lost every week. Instead of a modern antibiotic to deal with the epidemic, the government proposes to use a small mustard plaster.

Almost half of our one million unemployed, Mr. Speaker, are people between the ages of 15 and 24. What makes the situation serious is that unemployment is no longer confined, as it was for so many years, to the traditional slow growth areas of Canada such as Atlantic Canada and eastern Quebec where, unfortunately, people have become used to having large scale unemployment for years. It now cuts a wide swath right across our manufacturing industry. In the last year we have lost 240,000 jobs, and, according to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in the next six months we are going to lose 100,000 to 150,000 more jobs. Does the government have any employment policy? If they have, they certainly have not shown it to us.

I am sorry the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is leaving because just a couple of days ago the Minister of State for Economic Development made a speech in Victoria and it was recorded in The Globe and Mail as follows: "Ottawa is going to stop propping up manufacturing industries that have not been able to make a go of it". Then he went on to illustrate the kind of industry he meant: Textiles, clothing, footwear and a number of others. There are probably 300,000 workers in those industries, most of them in Ontario and Quebec, so the minister joins some of the theorists working for the Economic Council of Canada in saying that those industries have to go, but he does not give any indication at all that the government has devised any plans for alternate work for those people. Many of those workers live and work in one-industry towns in which industry closures will mean economic suicide.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have already seen the beginning of this. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) announced new quotas for the footwear industry, which means it will go the way of our radio and television industry. What we have is a government which has adopted, quietly and without admitting it, Reaganomics. The most important problem in their view is to deal with inflation, and the way to do that is to keep interest rates high. The fact that we have had that for five or six years and we have restricted the money supply, and all we have had is higher inflation and more unemployment, has not cut any ice with the government. So they will continue these policies. Dealing with inflation is more important to them than trying to do something about unemployment. They will keep interest rates high and keep government expenditures down, and that, Mr. Speaker, is precisely what President Reagan is doing in the United States.

So we have that policy from the Liberal government, and what do we hear from the Conservatives? Well, here is the finance critic for that party, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), making a speech in Toronto a couple of days ago where he said he supports the economic policies in the United States such as free enterprise, a greater reliance on the private sector and government cutbacks. These are important programs, he says, and the Conservative Party should be following them. It is something we would do, he says, if we were the government. Well, Mr. Speaker, let me just put on the record a couple of paragraphs about what Reaganomics has done to the United States. We know that it means they have more unemployed in the United States than they have had since the Great Depression. We know President Reagan has predicted a $90-billion deficit. What we have not talked so much about is what his cutbacks in social programs means to the American people. According to a study by the North Carolina Senior Citizens Federation:

> —reduced aid to the elderly will result in "hundreds of deaths, and thousands of people suffering severe hardship, and irreparable physical or mental damage." This is because, under President Reagan, the federal government is reneging on many decades-old commitments to older Americans and because the budget cuts destroy or weaken the so-called safety-net programs critical to their very lives: social security, medicaid, food stamps, housing, energy assistance, and social services. Indeed, these cuts mean—together with the termination of the Community Services Administration—that there is no "safety-net" and no guarantee that the needs of 6 million elderly poor will be met.

It continues to state:

—programs that directly aid children have been cut with special severity: nutrition, education, and health programs. Child nutrition programs—including School Lunch, School Breakfast, Summer Food, and the Child Care Food Program—have been cut from $4.3 billion to $2.8 billion or 34.9 per cent.

I would like to know if those are the kinds of programs the Conservative Party is supporting. Our members in the committee which dealt with this bill in detail co-operated in the discussions and moved some amendments. A few amendments, the less important ones, were even accepted by the government. Of course, we tried, as did the Conservative members, to make it a better bill.

Mr. McDermid: I thought they were all important.

Mr. Orlikow: However, the fact is that this bill will deal with such a small percentage of the people who are really in need that, in our opinion, the bill is, to a large extent, a fake. It is a camouflage. It is an attempt by this government, as Liberal governments have done so often in the past, to give the appearance that it is doing something when, in fact, it is doing virtually nothing for the hundreds of thousands of people who have lost their jobs and the tens of thousands more who are likely to lose their jobs in the next year or so.

Let me deal with just a few of the shortcomings of the bill. The bill, for example, does not deal with the unemployed workers who have been laid off because of a recession. At the present time, they comprise the bulk of the unemployed people. Thousands of workers in the automobile industry have been laid off in the city of Windsor, which is represented by three cabinet ministers.

Mr. Waddell: Only until the next election!

Mr. Orlikow: I hope the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is right in saying that those three ministers are only here until the next election. Thousands of auto workers have been laid off, and the possibility that they will be coming back to work in the auto industry in the near future is very slim. They have been laid off because the automobile industry is in a recession. A large part of the reason the automobile industry is in such difficulty is the high interest rate policy of this government, which means that Canadians who are working cannot afford to buy cars because they cannot afford to finance the purchases. That is one of the problems.

Let me illustrate another problem. In order to qualify for assistance, a worker must work in a designated industry. The decision as to which industries will be designated, of course, is left entirely to the government. The reasons the government would designate an industry are not quite clear. However, even if a worker works in a designated industry, in order to qualify he must have worked for ten of the last 15 years and must be 54 years old. Studies have indicated that the turnover rates in industry show an average job tenure of seven to eight years. This means that most workers who work in Canadian industry would not qualify because they have not worked for ten of the last 15 years in the industry. We suggest that that is too restrictive. However, again, the government wants to keep the numbers of those who will qualify small.

I would like to discuss benefit levels proposed in the bill. As the hon. member for Rosedale said, we are making a start for the first time. What kind of a start are we making? The benefit levels of the few people who qualify are limited to 60 per cent of the insurable earnings, according to the unemployment insurance regulations. I think the steelworkers' union has made a very reasonable suggestion that the benefits should not be 60 per cent, but 75 per cent, and not just 60 per cent of the unemployment insurable benefits, but 75 per cent of the actual earnings.

There is another important reason we feel this bill does not meet the bill. We say that the termination notice is too short. All across the country, there are companies for which workers have worked many years, and these workers are being laid off on very short notice. Some of these workers are miners who have worked in Sept-Îles and Schefferville, Thompson, Leaf Rapids and Uranium City. Because the ore body is worked out, or because of the recession, or because of a slowdown in the economy, the worker loses his job. We do not believe that a termination notice of four to 16 weeks is sufficient. We believe that the termination notice in these kinds of cases should be at least six months.

When a worker in a one-industry town loses his job, his difficulties are infinitely greater than those of the worker who lives in one of Canada's cities, because that worker may find another job in the same industry. If he cannot find another job in the same industry, he will at least be able to move to another city or to another area where there is more economic activity and where he can find a job. He can usually sell his home. For most Canadian workers, the equity they have in their homes is the only equity which they have ever been able to accumulate. What is happening in towns like Thompson and Leaf Rapids in Manitoba, towns like Sept-Îles and Schefferville in Quebec, towns like Uranium City in Saskatchewan, and towns like Sudbury in Ontario? The workers are losing their jobs. They are from these one-industry towns. They are not likely to get their jobs back. They are finding that they have to move. They are finding that they cannot sell their homes. They are having to start all over after years of living in one city or in one town and years of working for one company, through no fault of their own.

We say that the company has usually been able to look after itself. Over a period of years, the company has, quite properly, been using our tax laws to get back, through depreciation allowances, the investment which it put into establishing the mine; not so the worker. The worker is left completely helpless. He is left with nothing. We say that if we are serious, if the government meant to do something real for the workers for whom it claims to have a concern, the termination notice would be at least six months.

The minister and the government have made a great deal of the fact that under this bill, for the first time, we will have established joint labour management committees, as the government calls them, joint planning committees, which will be able to give some thought and consideration toward planning how to help the workers relocate. That is a worthy objective. However, we have looked at the bill and the unions have looked at the bill and they see that the joint planning committees have no real power. There is no adjustment fund from which the workers could draw benefits until they could make the transition.

We felt that if the committees were to do the job, they should have the right to complete disclosure of the finances and assets of a company. When I had the temerity to move that kind of amendment, it was greeted with shock and pain by all the Liberal and Conservative members. They could not believe that anyone would make that kind of suggestion. If we are serious, and if we really want the workers to feel that they have some rights and that they have been given some consideration, why should workers not have the right to know everything about the financial situation of a company?

Yesterday's and today's news tells us that the United Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Company have reached an historic agreement in their contract negotiations. The companies, beset by fallen sales, buffeted by competition from foreign cars, have called on the workers to take quite substantial reductions in their hourly pay rates and other benefits. Cognizant of the fact that tens of thousands of their members are now unemployed, the unions have had to give serious consideration to the proposals of the Ford Motor Company. We do not know the details of the agreement. We do know that in its recent agreement with the company, the union has been able to get the right to look at the financial structure and the assets and to get information about the future plans of the Ford Motor Company. I understand that Ford has made the commitment that it will not move any of its existing operations, such as engine parts or anything else now being produced in the United States, to another country, as has happened in recent years. That is real planning, real joint labour-management discussions and negotiations. As far as we can tell, the joint planning committees proposed under this bill will have no real power.

We have heard from unions which represent the workers in some of these cities which have been designated. Sept-Îles and Schefferville have been designated to benefit under the ILAP program.

Because of the recession, the iron ore mines in Quebec and Labrador are not selling the same tonnage as they did years ago. Thousands of workers have been laid off. This is a one-industry area. Not only do the workers not have jobs, they cannot sell their homes. The area has been designated under the ILAP program for which $350 million is supposedly being appropriated. The union tells us that the committee which has been established has made a number of recommendations, most of which have been ignored by the government.

Sydney, Nova Scotia, and the steel mill there have been designated to be helped. Sysco has had persistent major layoffs since 1967. There is little evidence that the provisions of this bill will help Sydney. The steel mill is the major employer in the area. It needs an infusion of capital of major proportions in order to be competitive and to continue to operate. There is no indication from the government that it proposes to do that. Many older workers are retiring, and the younger workers are leaving because they cannot find permanent employment. The town continues to decline.

Windsor is facing major problems. We can go over this city by city. Even when this bill passes, it will provide very little help. The hon. member for Rosedale admitted that this bill will provide some assistance for the tens of thousands of people who have lost their jobs and the thousands who will lose their jobs in the next year or two. It is a step in the right direction. However, as I said earlier, it is so small and so hesitant a step that we believe we ought not to vote for the bill because, when passed, it will create an impression which would be false, namely, that much will be accomplished when, in fact, very little will be accomplished.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to make some remarks on this bill in particular and unemployment in general as, I am told, this bill tries to address the problem of unemployment. The hon. member who spoke last and the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) before him mentioned that the bill takes a small step in the right direction. If anybody should know about small steps, I suggest it is the hon. member for Rosedale and I because we take small steps every day.

While the hon. member for Rosedale may be happy with this small step, I am not. As pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) at this time with one million unemployed, this bill is a disgrace. At a time when 500,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 are unemployed, this bill is a disgrace. At a time of unemployment in the maritimes and Atlantic Canada of over 16 per cent, this bill is a disgrace. At a time when a portion of the forest industry of British Columbia is out of work and a time when numerous auto workers are out of work because of a lack of government policy and other reasons, this bill is a disgrace.

How can one vote for a bill that does so little to address a really big unemployment problem in this country? People know that every day in the House of Commons the members of the NDP are always complaining and asking questions about jobs. They ask what we would do. That is a question that demands an answer. Instead of bringing in a bill like this to help a small proportion of the unemployed, dealing with the problem in a small way, we would deal with it in a big way and really tackle the unemployment problem.

It is not that difficult. It is really a political question. It is a question of will. Do you really want to tackle unemployment or not? The one-party system in this country, the Liberal government which has been in office far too long, decided some time ago and has continued with the policy—at least it has been straightforward and consistent—to govern the country in a way which basically consists of being hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Senator Olson told the students at the University of Victoria exactly that the other day. He was not misquoted. He told them that the Liberal policy is, basically, to sell our unprocessed resources, that in the long run that is our best hope for a healthy economy.

You can have an economy that works in such a way. You can get prosperity for some people. You will have ups and downs in the world market. When the world market is up, you have a good percentage of the population working. However, there will always be an unemployment problem in Canada. This will always be a colony. We will never be masters in our own houses if we do that. It takes political will to make a change in the system.

I have asked myself what can be done. I would like to answer that. We have to stimulate the economy now. The government could bring in a bill to do that. It could force our banks and other lending institutions by law to lower interest rates immediately on consumer loans. That could be done. Second, we could fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Gerald Bouey, whom the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) calls Bouey XVI, whose policies do not take into account the interests of the people of Canada. We could fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada and increase the rate of growth in the money supply. Third, we could apply an excess profit tax on chartered banks and roll back their marginal tax rate from 16.1 per cent registered last year to 55 per cent collected in 1970. The extra federal revenues could then be taken and pumped into housing. Fourth, we could significantly lower personal income tax for low and middle-income Canadians in order to stimulate consumer spending. We could then increase corporate taxes for many large corporations but drop the rate for companies in selective growth industries. That would be an industrial strategy. It is different from the strategy of the megaprojects and the continued sell-out of raw resources.

We could then allow the Canadian dollar to fall slightly in relation to the United States currency to help our export industries and allow a general lowering of interest rates. In this way we could have a made-in-Canada interest policy which would be different from the present Liberal policy.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder if you could address yourself to the question of whether the hon. member is speaking to the bill.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, this bill deals with unemployment. It is the government's answer for jobs, and I am indicating how generally inadequate this bill is. That is what I am speaking to, and if the minister would listen to some of our proposals he could change government policy and bring about real jobs in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Come on. Shame.

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member need not yell out. I will come to them in a moment.

The Liberal policy is a monetarist policy with a few sops, as in this bill, to provide some jobs. It is a high interest rate policy. It is a follow-the-U.S. policy.

The Conservative policy as enunciated by the member for St. John's (Mr. Crosbie), the former finance critic, and the policy as enunciated recently by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) are exactly the same. They advocate high interest rates, following the Americans and continuing an economy with substantially high unemployment. The monetarists say that to squeeze out inflation you have to bring the economy into a recession. They will squeeze out recession in the United States on the backs of the black people and poor people in the ghettos, and so on, and they will do it in Canada on the backs of the unemployed. That is the government policy, make no mistake about that, Mr. Speaker. That is what this government intends to do, and that is what the opposition would do as well. It is hypocrisy for the opposition to say anything different in this debate.

The government should also introduce a guaranteed annual income to protect pensioners and workers who are living on fixed incomes from the ravages of inflation. What does this bill do? I approve of the measure which provides assistance to people in the work force who are over 54, because they need assistance. However, what about the 500,000 people between the ages of 15 and 24 who are unemployed? I am told that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) is very compassionate, so why does he not bring in a bill to deal with that?

There is another direction from which we could approach this matter.

Mr. Berger: Why do you not deal with this bill?

Mr. Waddell: The hon. member asks why we do not deal with this bill. The fact is that we will never get to what we are proposing. We will never get to a full employment strategy. That is what this bill should deal with and that is the difference in Canada right now between the Liberal Party, the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party. The New Democratic Party proposes a full employment strategy and would not bring in a bill such as this which takes such small steps. We would take bigger steps. As a matter of fact, it would not be a radical proposition to take bigger steps through a bill such as this. I offer this example to the hon. member for Rosedale to consider. In the American Congress some years ago there was a joint effort between the late Senator Humphrey and Representative Hawkins to introduce a bill which took a radical, new attitude for those days. This Humphrey-Hawkins bill, as it became known, stated that people would have a right to a job. This would be clause one in any employment bill: "You have a right to a job." That was a radical strategy; that a person had a right to a job and the government was to find him a job. This was a full-employment strategy. This can be done. I can see hon. members laughing at this but it would be a clear industrial strategy in Canada to start with the premise that everyone is entitled to a job. If a young person said he was unemployed and needed a job, he would be given a job. Why do we not bring legislation such as that Humphrey-Hawkins bill of the late sixties which was never brought in?

I would like to deal with other aspects of the bill. With respect to the measure concerning those over the age of 54, it is needed because there is a problem in Canada of older workers being laid off. I appreciate the fact that the minister is in the House tonight, and although we cannot deal with it at this time I would like to suggest one possible amendment. In my constituency office I hear of many problems of workers in that age group who have injuries and never receive a pension for which they have applied. I have argued some of these cases myself and found it to be a Catch 22 situation. These people cannot work, but the pension board says they are capable of doing some kind of minor job. But there are no minor jobs for them. I thought the minister would like to know that when considering further amendments.

One possibility we may consider is to guarantee a minimum wage at retirement or for those over 55.

Finally, the government is asking Canadians, businessmen and workers, to show restraint in order to provide more jobs and ultimately beat inflation. I have received many letters from my constituents on this matter, and I want to take this opportunity to say that we perhaps were not wise in Parliament recently when we voted ourselves a salary increase. I would like to say for the record that I think we should reconsider our future takes. I do not know how we can justify telling Canadians to show restraint while we do not show it. I intend to write to my constituents and personally forgo any increases for the balance of this Parliament. It is a small contribution but one which I think all members can make. I do not believe we can call upon labour or business to exercise restraint if we are not prepared to do it. It would be hypocritical to do otherwise.

As I have said and as the hon. member for Winnipeg North has said, it would be hypocritical for us to support a bill that does so little to help the advancement of the unemployed in this country.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, come on.

Mr. Waddell: The Conservative members say, "Come on". I have offered seven concrete steps toward a full employment strategy.

Mr. McDermid: Except to say where the money would come from.

Mr. Waddell: I said where the money would come from if the hon. member had listened. It is a complete program which we are offering to the Canadian people. Unlike the legislation before us, it will meet the problem of unemployment among younger Canadians. We in the House should not be asking why we cannot solve the problem of unemployment. We should be saying how we can solve the problem. I have proposed specific suggestions while the government has introduced a piece of legislation which does nothing. It is a minor piece of legislation which does not deal with the problem of a million unemployed, half of whom are young people. I recommend to the Minister of Labour that he read my speech tomorrow and bring in a bill which would incorporate these suggestions and tackle unemployment in the proper way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I remind hon. members that pursuant to a ruling made by Madam Speaker earlier today, a number of motions have been grouped. Accordingly, I will be putting the question on Motion No. 1. In accordance with the manner in which hon. members want to deal with that motion, Motions Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8 will be dealt with as a result of the handling of Motion No. 1. The question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

• (2110)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Deans: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion lost, and that disposes of Motions Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8.

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8 (Mr. Kristiansen) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will now put the question on Motion No. 10, in accordance with Madam Speaker's ruling erlier today. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. Caccia) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Again pursuant to the grouping of motions made earlier, Motions Nos. 3 and 4, which are to be debated together but voted on separately, will be put before the House.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 39 and 40 at page 2 and lines 1 and 2 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"trial restructuring; and".

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 3 of the French version by striking out line 42 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"de l'importation, soit d'une restructuration indus-".

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address some comments to Motion No. 3. Our amendment, Motion No. 3, would amend Clause 3 of this bill by striking out lines 39 and 40 at page two and lines one and two at page three and substituting the following therefor: "Trial restructuring; and". Clause 3(2) reads in part as follows:

An industry may be designated generally pursuant to Subsection (1) if the governor in council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in Canada generally is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature by reason of import competition or by reason of industrial restructuring—

All Motion No. 3 would do would be to remove from the subclause the words:

—implemented pursuant to a policy or program of the Government of Canada to encourage such restructuring—

In committee, reasons for this change were put forward. The example of the forest industry was given. Certain restructuring is taking place in various parts of Canada. If we were to leave the bill as it is before us, we might bring about gross discrimination against the industry in one part of Canada as opposed to another. Under the forest industry modernization program, the federal government and provincial governments are giving hundreds of millions of dollars to companies in the pulp and paper industry in Atlantic Canada, in the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario. That is clearly a policy of the Government of Canada and would be seen to be so according to the text of this bill. In relation to the pulp and paper industry in western Canada, the private sector has said that this is the private sector's job, that it does not need the government to tell the industry in western Canada to do what should be its job, and that it would rather have the government spend its money looking after its business, which is to improve stock and forest resources so that those companies will have something to work with. One is not necessarily superior to the other. It is just that the industry in western Canada has taken a different point of view as to what its proper role is.

This bill stipulates the policy of the Government of Canada. It would be grossly unfair to discriminate against an entire region of the country simply because the industry in the west has a view of its own obligations and duties different from that of the central and eastern part of the country.

As the bill reads now, for there to be a general designation of an industry, there must be a significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature, which already tends to make worse many of the major upheavals within the resource industries of the country. Some would say this provision is a further discrimination against western Canada, or, when it states "by reason of import competition", why only import competition? Many people will have even more cause for suspicion of regional discrimination if import competition, industrial restructuring or industrial chaos as a result of import competition is the cause of government assistance. However, if there is restructuring because of export competition, which can happen suddenly as a result of a policy of a government far removed from North America, or perhaps the government to the south of us, we might see gross disruptions and upheavals in the economy and in plants and operations from one end of the country to the other. If that should happen—and it may well happen if the Americans are silly enough at their hearing in Portland next month to put tariffs on the import of Canadian lumber—this legislation would be powerless to come to the assistance generally of the Canadian forest industry simply because of this wording.

Some hon. members may say this matter can be resolved because the bill says, "by reason of industrial restructuring". If that was all it said, they would be correct, but there is a limitation in the bill because it says industrial restructuring only if it is "implemented pursuant to a policy or a program of the Government of Canada". The minister has argued that somehow it would be an amputation if we were to imply that if it is not a policy of the government the government could not go ahead. But how can something be considered an amputation if it extends to the minister authority he does not have within the confines of this bill? It allows him to exercise more flexibility in recognizing a serious situation with which he, the government, and all of us may well want to deal. However, the minister would have his hands tied in terms of general designations under the bill.

It is interesting to note that Clause 3(3) dealing with regional designations, reads as follows:

An industry may be designated with respect to any region of Canada pursuant to Subsection (1) if the governor in council is satisfied that

(a) the industry in that region is undergoing significant economic adjustment of a non-cyclical nature;

That clause does not mention whether it must be in line with the policy of the Government of Canada. If the minister is able to exercise flexibility and his right of political choice to designate an individual region without showing the restructuring flowing from the policy of the government, why can he not do that in the case of an industry? When there is a difference in the two clauses, we must ask why that is so. In the absence of a clear and definitive answer, the peoples' imaginations will soar. We have not been given a logical reason. If government policy is not necessary in a regional sense, why is it necessary in a national sense? This will allow the government and the minister the necessary flexibility to provide assistance whenever and wherever it is needed in the country, where circumstances warrant. We hope that the minister and the government will think again and not get hung up on pride and will seriously consider supporting the amendment which my colleagues and I have placed before them.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, while I am sympathetic to the motives of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) and to the sincerity of his argument, the proposal he is making to delete the last two lines on page 2 would make of the designation of industry, a policy without a government in charge of it. For that reason it should be rejected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay!

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11), the vote stands deferred.

The question is on motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Caccia) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question before the House is on Motion No. 9.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended

(a) by adding immediately after line 9 at page 4 the following:

"4. (1) Subject to subsection (2), the governor in council may, in any order under Section 3, declare

(a) that the designation of the industry in the order is retroactive in effect and applies as of such day, before the date of the order, as is specified in the order; and

(b) that this act applies in respect of lay-offs from a Canadian establishment in the industry designated in the order occurring on or after the day specified pursuant to paragraph (a).

(2) The governor in council may not specify pursuant to paragraph (1)(a) a day that is more than forty-eight months before the day this section comes into force."; and

(b) by renumbering the subsequent clauses accordingly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Caccia) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question before the House is on Motion No. 11. I would remind hon. members that earlier today the Speaker indicated that the motion might not be in order pursuant to Beauchesne, Citation 773(1) which states that an amendment is out of order if it is beyond the scope of the bill. Does the hon. member for Kootenay West wish to present argument?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Motion No. 11, we would ask to stand this motion until we have time to present further argument, although I shall make some comments now. According to page 25 of the bill, it is clear that a subsidiary body to the commission referred to in Motion No. 11, a lesser body, a committee rather than the board referred to in the motion, would have, by the nature of its existence and duties, exactly the kind of requirement and authority which, it is suggested here, go beyond the scope of the bill. On page 25 the bill reads as follows:

60.13 (1) It is the object of a joint planning committee to develop an adjustment program to eliminate the necessity for the termination of employment or to minimize the impact of such termination on the redundant employees and to assist those employees in obtaining other employment.

(2) Subject to Subsection (3), in attaining its object under Subsection (1), a joint planning committee may, unless the members of the committee agree otherwise, deal only with such matters as are normally the subject-matter of collective agreement—

That is, unless they agree otherwise. That clearly gives them the power, by mutual agreement, to go beyond those items most often found in collective agreements.

The next subclause reads as follows:

(3) The members of a joint planning committee shall co-operate and make every reasonable effort to develop an adjustment program as expeditiously as possible.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in committee a clause was deleted from the bill which had provided that a joint planning committee would not be allowed to look at some of these questions. If we deleted that clause, which said we could not do what this amendment covers, and if we have already put in, through Clause 60.13 (1), a provision which by its very nature necessitates the investigation of the expected social and economic impact of the intended termination, then if a subsidiary body to the board is given that power and that authority, surely it is not going beyond the scope of the bill to suggest that the board should have similar authority, similar scope and similar powers. I do not argue that, if this were not the case, Her Honour would be correct in reaching the conclusion she has, but with all deference I think that the bill has been misread or misinterpreted. The clear implication of the bill would require exactly the kind of provision that is mentioned in our amendment.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, we submit that Motion No. 11 goes so far beyond the principle of the bill that it is quite unacceptable to us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Kootenay West has sought leave of the House to present written argument to the Speaker, presumably tonight or tomorrow. Does the hon. member have the consent of all hon. members to do so?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caccia: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will have to examine the argument made by the hon. member and the citations from Beauchesne.

While that is being done, perhaps the hon. member would like to make some representation on Motion No. 12, where again a caveat has been entered by Madam Speaker today with respect to the admissibility of the motion.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, we are prepared to accept the Speaker's ruling on Motion No. 12.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As I understand it, the hon. member for Kootenay West accepts the Speaker's ruling on Motion No. 12?

Mr. Kristiansen: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is left with a ruling to be made on Motion No. 11. I would ask the consent of the House to defer that ruling for a few moments while I check the authorities. I would then seek permission to revert to Motion No. 11 and deal with it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2130)

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that we are grouping Motions Nos. 13 and 14 for debate.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 12

(a) by striking out line 25 at page 8 of the French version and substituting the following therefor:

"vités désigné dont l'établissement canadien d'où il";

(b) by adding immediately after line 29 at page 9 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding Subsection (1), where an employee certified under Section 10 would be qualified under Subsection (1) to receive labour adjustment benefits but for the requirement set out in paragraph (1)(b), the commission may determine that the employee is qualified to receive labour adjustment benefits if he shows that he is in substantial compliance with the requirement and that he does not meet such requirement by reason only of illness, disability, lay-off or any other good cause whatever.";

(c) by renumbering the subsequent subclauses accordingly; and

(d) by striking out lines 6 to 10 at page 10 of the French version and substituting the following therefor:

"d'un employé admissible, suspendre ou modifier, si elle estime que les circonstances le justifient, l'exigence prévue au paragraphe (5)."

Standing Order 75(6)

Labour Adjustment Benefits

Recommendation

His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons that Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, presently before the House, be amended in Clause 12

(a) by striking out line 25 on page 8 of the French version and substituting the following:

"vités désigné dont l'établissement canadien d'où il";

(b) by adding, immediately after line 29 on page 9, the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding Subsection (1), where an employee certified under Section 10 would be qualified under Subsection (1) to receive labour adjustment benefits but for the requirement set out in paragraph (1)(b), the commission may determine that the employee is qualified to receive labour adjustment benefits if he shows that he is in substantial compliance with the requirement and that he does not meet such requirement by reason only of illness, disability, lay-off or any other good cause whatever.";

(c) by renumbering the subsequent subclauses and any cross references accordingly; and

(d) by striking out lines 6 to 10 on page 10 of the French version and substituting the following:

"d'un employé admissible, suspendre ou modifier, si elle estime que les circonstances le justifient, l'exigence prévue au paragraphe (5)."

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West) moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 29 at page 8 the following:

"(c) an employee shall be considered to have worked 1,000 hours in a year in each year for which he failed to work 1,000 hours because he was in receipt of a disability pension, sick benefits, workers compensation or was on leave of absence with the consent of the employer."

and that the following paragraphs be renumbered accordingly.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak specifically to Motion No. 13, if I may.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Motion No. 13 stands in the name of the Minister of Labour. I should like to draw that fact to the attention of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I see no problem in that regard. Earlier today the Speaker ruled that Motions Nos. 13 and 14 could be debated together but voted on separately.

Mr. Deans: In fact I was quite prepared to concede that it stood in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia); I would not want to claim credit for it. I should like to draw to the attention of the minister paragraph (b)(3) of Motion No. 13, which reads:

Notwithstanding Subsection (1), where an employee certified under Section 10 would be qualified under Subsection (1) to receive labour adjustment benefits but for the requirement set out in paragraph (1)(b), the commission may determine—

The word "may" is the word which concerns me. I should like the minister to think for a moment about the possible consequences of "may", given the qualification which is then set out in the clause. It continues:

—that the employee is qualified to receive labour adjustment benefits if he shows that he is in substantial compliance with the requirement and that he does not meet such requirement by reason only of illness, disability, lay-off or any other good cause whatsoever.

I suggest the minister should listen; I am not rising to speak because I like to listen to myself at 9.32 p.m.

Mr. McDermid: That is a change.

Mr. Deans: I am rising to speak because I happen to think, despite the fact the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is intervening from his newfound front seat, which no doubt is temporary, that the minister might consider the consequences of the word "may". If an employee goes before the board and is able to prove that he would normally meet the requirements of the act for benefit, and if he were able to show that the only reason he was disentitled from receiving benefit was illness, disability or lay-off during the period under consideration, or any other good cause whatsoever, I contend that the word "may" ought not to be there. Surely the board shall find, in cases where it is proven to the satisfaction of the board that the employee would otherwise be entitled, except for illness, lay-off, disability or another cause which the board determines is a good cause, in favour of the employee. I think the employee is being put in double jeopardy. He must go before the board to try to prove, on the one hand, that there is good and justifiable reason why he should be eligible. On the other hand, having once proven it even to the satisfaction of the board, he must then await the board's determination as to whether or not it will accept the circumstances. There is far too much latitude involved.

If I appeared before the board as an employee, and if I were to show that I complied with the employment requirements of the act, that I was employed for the appropriate length of time to qualify for benefit but that as a result of having been disabled, ill or laid off, in a technical sense, the time of my employment would be reduced to a point where I might otherwise not be eligible; if the board, having heard my argument, were to accept that I was legitimately laid off, ill, disentitled by way of injury or for any other good reason, then it ought not to be a decision of the board whether it may or may not decide to give me the benefit. Surely, having once accepted that I have given justifiable reason and therefore would otherwise be eligible, the board shall grant the entitlement under the bill.

I suggest that it is a simple word change, but if the board were given the authority to make a decision with regard to the evidence I placed before it, there must be a concurrent responsibility on the board to find in my favour, if my argument is sustained, not simply to say in the end, "Yes, we agree with your argument; yes, I think you should be getting the money; however I have decided, since it is discretionary on the part of the board, not to give it".

Mr. McDermid: Can it work the other way?

Mr. Deans: No, it cannot work the other way. Unfortunately it cannot because the requirement on the employee is to give proof. The trouble is that it indicates that the employee is qualified to receive labour adjustment benefits, if he shows that he is in substantial compliance with the requirement and that he does not meet such requirement by reason only of illness, disability, lay-off or any other good cause whatsoever. The onus is placed quite squarely on the shoulders of the employee to prove the good cause. Having once proven that, surely the entitlement should be automatic, not discretionary.

I know the minister is both listening and talking at the same time. I realize ministers develop that rather unique talent immediately after being appointed. However, I suggest that this kind of discretion vested in the board can only cause great hardship in the future. It will cause decisions to be made which cannot be used as precedents because the board will always have discretionary power. For example, it is not inconceivable that in one case an employee could argue that he was disabled but in receipt of workmen's compensation benefits and therefore technically still in the employ of the employer. In so doing, if he could prove to the board that he has a period of employment which would otherwise qualify him for entitlement under the act, he could win because the board might, in exercising its jurisdiction, say, "Yes, I accept it and therefore grant the payment". However, another employee appearing before a differently-structured board with different members could not really use that argument to sustain his case, because the discretion is solely the discretion of the board and the board may or may not grant entitlement.

My argument simply is that that is bad legislation. It does not deal adequately with the concerns of the House of Commons. If it is to set out the criterion under which an employee will receive benefits, once the employee has met the criterion, the benefits should be automatic. I see a head or two on the government side of the House nodding in the affirmative. It should not be discretionary on the part of the board.

Therefore, I ask the Minister of Labour if he would accept that very small word change which would clear up the amendment to the satisfaction of the House of Commons and, in addition, would make it much better in terms of dealing with employees in the future. Will the minister accept the change from "may" to shall?

● (2140)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member was making such kind remarks about the behaviour of the Minister of Labour, he was listening to him as well as to some good advice coming from my colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead).

Mr. Deans: I agree.

Mr. Caccia: I listened very carefully to the representations made by the hon. member. But I would like to draw to his attention that Clause 12 begins with:

The commission may determine—

And the paragraph carries all subparagraphs further down on the same page. But the major point in reply to the hon. member is that the word "may" following the words "The commission" gives the commission the full scope to carry out an inquiry without being preconditioned in one direction or another. It is good drafting. Clause 12 is carried with the word "may". It is a way of carrying out the principle into the legislation in the interests of all those concerned. Therefore, I cannot accept the hon. member's proposal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of clarification which I think falls within a point of order. I can well understand the meaning of the word "may" in the operative Sub-Clause 1, that "The commission may determine". But when you get down to a clause which deals specifically with a set of circumstances which must be placed before the board, in that set of circumstances the word "may" is not the appropriate operative word. It is quite clear that the clause reads:

> The commission may determine that an employee who has been certified under Section 9 is qualified to receive labour adjustment benefits if
> (a) he is a Canadian citizen resident in Canada—

My concern with it is that an employee could meet every single one of those qualifications as set out in Clause 12(1)(a) through (f). Therefore, Clause 12(1)(a) to (f) could be met in its entirety, except that the employee might not, in the sense that it is set out, be technically employed through that period as a result of illness and whatever else, the other conditions that are set out in the amendment proposed by the minister. It is an amendment, incidentally, which is not one that we find obnoxious or unacceptable. But if you put in two "mays", you are putting those people in double jeopardy. On the one hand, if in the first section the board may find it subject to these conditions and then you go on to say that additional consideration should be given to a specific set of conditions, then I would suggest to the commissioner that the appropriate operative word in the second part is "shall". In the first case, I can appreciate that that you must meet all of those conditions. But having met all those conditions and still having a question as to the appropriateness of the acceptability of the length of time of employment, if the employee can prove that he does qualify under all other terms, then the operative word should be "shall" and not "may".

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with this particular point. I had experience with the workers' compensation act in Alberta several years ago. The interpretation act said that "may" means "shall" and "shall" means "may". In making representations on behalf of an employee, I found that "may" did not mean "shall", and "shall" did not mean "may", when it came to actual administration. The board rejected this particular claim. When I wanted to know why, the board said that it had the discretion. I agreed they had the discretion, but the man was injured in industry, and I asked whether they recognized that. The man had a disability. The doctors claimed that and I asked whether the board recognized that. I asked why they denied him the benefits. They answered that they had the discretion because the act said "may". We fought that and eventually won the case. I would point out to the minister that administrative boards sometimes bring in other factors that are really irrelevant. This man I have in mind was an obnoxious fellow. People did not like him, but that should not deny him the right to compensation when he was injured. Therefore, when every condition is met in this particular requirement, surely the board must accept that and pay a claim. Consequently, why does the minister not want to put in the word "shall" and make it mandatory? The words "may" and "shall" do not mean the same thing. "May" is permissive, "shall" is mandatory.

If the individual meets every requirement, then the word should be "shall". Why is the government going to deny the benefit to an employee because of some irrelevant material? That is what we will do if we leave in the word "may" and not put in the word "shall".

I support the amendment.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I want to say that when he makes his comments he is really not aware of the background of this amendment. He did not participate in the committee hearings.

Mr. Deans: What does that have to do with it?

Mr. Berger: I would like to point out to him that there is a basic requirement under Clause 12, to which the hon. member referred, that an employee work 1,000 hours during a period of ten years.

[Translation]

The Eastern Townships Regional Development Council—

[English]

—which suggests that this be replaced by the word "average". In other words, an average 1,000 hours per year over the ten years in the case of somebody who is sick, laid off or disabled for a certain period of time.

The minister, to his credit, listened to the representations made by all sides in the committee. He has come up with an excellent amendment, which the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain grudgingly concedes.

Mr. Deans: What are you talking about?

Mr. Berger: In this amendment he is giving discretion to the commission to say that notwithstanding the fact that an employee might not have worked 1,000 hours in any one of those years, the commission may determine that the employee is qualified to receive these benefits if he shows that he did not need it because of illness, disability, lay-off or any other good cause whatever. That expression "any other good cause whatever" is extremely broad. I suggest that the word "may" is necessary in order to go along with that broad expression "any other good cause whatever."

The word "may" is extremely fitting when taken in the context of that last phrase.

In addition to that, I would like to point out to the hon. member and to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that there is a rule in administrative law that a commission that exercises discretion must exercise that discretion reasonably. I would suggest that their concerns are entirely unfounded—

Mr. Deans: Come on.

Mr. Berger: —that if a person was able to demonstrate that because of illness or disability he was not able to meet that 1,000-hour requirement and if the commission turned him down, he would be able to appeal that decision before an administrative tribunal in this country and that he would win his appeal. Therefore, in light of principles of administrative law—

• (2150)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Berger: Certainly.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The hon. member has referred to an alleged duty of reasonableness on the part of administrative tribunals, and to the possibility that an individual affected by an adverse decision of such a tribunal may appeal. Would the hon. member indicate what his authority is for this suggestion that there is a reasonableness requirement on administrative tribunals? Secondly, would he indicate to whom this rather nebulous appeal would take place?

Mr. Berger: I would suggest this is not a nebulous principle, it is a firm principle of administrative law.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Established where?

Mr. Berger: I would suggest further that an appeal against an unreasonable decision could be directed to one of the courts of the land.

Mr. Deans: Oh, come on. Why do you write ambiguity into the law?

Mr. Berger: Furthermore, I would suggest that the principles we are trying to ascribe to the Constitution of this country by virtue of the charter of rights—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Berger: —would tend to enhance such an appeal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House earlier gave its consent to a delay by the Chair in ruling on Motion no. 11. It is approaching ten o'clock and perhaps what we might do is to dispose of Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

The Chair has had the benefit of consultation with the Table and examined the provisions of the bill, in particular Clauses 4 through 7. Under those clauses, the Labour Adjustment Review Board is created, the head office established and the powers of the board are set forth. The motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West provides, under Clause 8, for a rather considerable extension of the powers of the board and involves, as referred to in the Speaker's tentative ruling earlier today, a power to investigate the expected social and economic impact of intended termination of employment.

The motion is faithful to that general principle and discharges upon the board various rights that seem to the Chair, after consultation, to be extensively in excess of the rights conferred on the board under the bill proposed by the minister. Accordingly, the Chair finds, after due consideration, the motion goes beyond the scope of the bill and is out of order.

Now, hon. members may wish to continue the debate on Motions Nos. 13 and 14 which are now on the floor, and for that purpose I will recognize the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I could not help being amused, although it is not a laughing matter, at the comments a few moments ago of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). If he or any member of the House were to visit with working people who have ever had contact with, for example, the Workmen's Compensation Board and suggest to them there is a practice in Canadian law that suggests if a question may go this way or that way, that it go in favour of the victim, he would be lucky to simply be laughed out. In fact, he would be lucky to get out with his head. With the possible exception of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, in which very few Canadian workers would suggest that principle is operative, Workmen's Compensation Board is perhaps the most hated establishment in this land, because it is widely believed that its practice is exactly the opposite, in terms of administration, to that which the member suggested a few moments ago.

On the positive side, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister and drafters of the amendments for going a long, long way toward meeting the objections and suggestions raised not only by myself but by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), two or three of the Liberal members of the committee, my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), and others.

While the amendments do not directly deal with the question of the 1,000 hours and whether it should be averaged or required, neither does our own amendment, but it does get around the problem of employees who may find themselves laid off or on sick benefits. In that same spirit I would ask the minister once again to consider the proposal put forward by my House leader a few moments ago, that the word "shall" replace the word "may" in order to make it operative.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), Mr. Speaker, is new in that position. This is the first bill he has piloted through the House as minister, and he will soon be dealing with major amendments to the Canada Labour Code, both Part IV and Part V, and it will be necessary for him to have the understanding and sympathy of working people across the country in order to help resolve some of the conflicts which happen in labour relations from time to time. Almost everyone, especially blue collar workers, has had experience with grievance procedures, with the law and with commissions, which is perfectly in line with the principles of British common law that property rights always take precedence over human rights unless the law is so clear and so exact that there is no room for anyone to rule in favour of property and against the individual. Unless it is crystal clear, then the worker will believe, as his experience dictates, that he will lose because that is the principle upon which our laws have been based. Hopefully, our charter of rights will start us in slightly another direction in order to balance the ledger. However, it is vitally important for the minister, in order to have credibility with the labour force, to make it clear that he understands that attitude and feeling which exists amongst hundreds of thousands of people in the Canadian work force.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am not hung up on wording, and the minister has shown before that neither is he if we believe we can solve the problem. With the exception of that one little word I quite agree that the wording as presented by the government is preferable to that submitted by my own party. However, it is important to make it crystal clear to those administering this law that they should follow the intent, and if people are in fact absent and short of that 1,000 hours by virtue of sickness, injury, disability, any good cause whatesoever, they shall be considered to have worked that 1,000 hours, if that is the reason they are short, and be provided with the benefits which this bill provides.

I will conclude with one last and recent example, Mr. Speaker. Just this past year there was a clause in the Canada Labour Code which said in effect—and said it much more clearly than this bill—that if a supervisor refused to work simply because he refused to cross a picket line, he could not be disciplined or lose his job because of that. The Canada Labour Code was crystal clear and it took many months to get justice for those who had lost their jobs, their income, and had their lives disrupted. That was crystal clear. We hope that people in this unfortunate situation will not have to suffer those kinds of delays because of pride and one little word.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair recognizes that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) is standing in his place and presumably wishes to continue the debate, but it is now ten o'clock and accordingly I conclude that the House does not wish to have Motions Nos. 13 and 14 put before it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

COMMUNICATIONS—RECEPTION OF TELEVISION SIGNALS FROM CANCOM SATELLITE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 24, I put a question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) concerning the reception of American satellite television signals by local cable television systems in northern Canada. A number of applications are before the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission at the present time to provide local cable television service to many northern communities using the CanCom satellite. The unfortunate part of that whole system is that only four Canadian independent television stations will be received on that system.

My question to the minister was to inquire whether those local cable television systems being established in many northern communities will be able to continue to receive the signals from the American TV satellites, such as the superstations in Chicago and Atlanta and the home box office TV stations.

My reason for putting this question to the minister is that a number of communities in northern Canada have been receiving these American satellite signals in the past, and they have established a cable system and are distributing them to Canadian viewers. Most of them have not been prosecuted in the past, and of course it would be ridiculous for the government to move and do that at the present time, when these communities have no other television available to them. I think the problem will be that when these applications which are before the CRTC at the present time are reviewed, we will find that the installation charge and the monthly service fee will be so high that, without the additional American stations being provided to this cable system, they just will not be able to make a go of it.

It seems to me that if the minister does not change the policy and clarify it in the very near future, there will simply be rank discrimination against the northern communities.

We now have the policy in southern Canada for all of the major cities such as Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Vancouver and so on, under which they are allowed to receive the three American networks plus the PBS system from the United States on the three plus one formula; but in northern Canada, there is no such provision. There could be rank discrimination against the cable operators in the northern communities and, beyond that, this would just make the situation impossible for most of these cable operators who have applied to have a package which is appealing enough to sell to these small communities. For instance, there are applications before the CRTC for four communities along the north shore of Lake Huron; that is, Iron Bridge, Spanish, Massey and Nairn Centre. The Northern Cable Services is requiring an installation fee of $200, and a monthly service charge of $15 per month. That will not provide any American channels, whereas, in the south, most cable operators provide the three plus one formula.

I hope the minister will clarify this arrangement and provide the same kind of service to northern communities; that is,

American stations as well as the Canadian independents that are on the CanCom satellite. He should rectify this situation which is wholly unfair and, in my view, not workable as it is now established. I hope the parliamentary secretary who responds tonight will state that the government will be able to remove this impediment to the provision of much better television service to many of the communities in northern Ontario and many other northern areas of our country.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question raised by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), I would like to explain the international understandings which have a bearing on the direct reception in Canada of television signals from U.S. domestic communications satellites.

Both Canada and the United States, as members of the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization, are obliged to consult with IntelSat if they should wish to use their domestic satellite systems to carry communications traffic to or from points in the other country. The two countries would have to demonstrate that any use of non-IntelSat facilities for international telecommunications services would not cause significant economic harm to the IntelSat global satellite system which was established specifically to carry international traffic.

The other arrangement is the 1972 exchange of letters between Canada and the United States under which the two countries have agreed to restrict the use of their domestic satellites for traffic between the two countries only to special circumstances, such as a major technical failure or a temporary shortage of domestic satellite facilities.

It should be noted that all current Canadian and U.S. commercial satellites are classified under regulations of the International Telecommunications Union as constituting fixed satellite services in which radio communication is carried between earth stations at specific fixed points. These are not broadcasting satellites which by definition carry signals intended for direct reception by the general public.

However, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) has made it clear on several occasions that the federal government's major concern is to solve the underlying problem which is giving rise to the unauthorized reception in Canada of U.S. satellite TV signals.

Over the last year very substantial progress has been made in developing a multichannel television service on our ANIK satellite system to meet the basic viewing needs of rural and remote residents who lack the access to television that most Canadians take for granted. Of course, I am referring to CanCom.

CanCom offers a very wide variety of North American programming, both Canadian and U.S. Concerning the wider question of access to U.S. channels, the minister has indicated in the House that it is in the interest of all Canadians that there should be an equalization of viewing opportunities across the country. CanCom is only the first step in this process. The minister has received many requests to open negotiations with the United States to allow reception of certain U.S. signals in rural and remote communities. This matter is being given very careful consideration within the context of an over-all broadcast strategy currently being developed by the federal government. The objective of the government is definitely to improve service for underserved Canadians in a way that contributes to a healthy environment for the future of the Canadian broadcasting system and serves those communities best.

METRIC CONVERSION—(A) FORCED IMPLEMENTATION (B) PRIME MINISTER'S VIEWS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to bring to the attention of this House and the people of Canada that they are being misled by the government in many of the statements pertaining to the implementation of metric in the retail food stores of this nation.

First, I would like to point out that the acting executive director of the Metric Commission has made the statement over national television that no stores in Peterborough were closed while it was a pilot centre during the implementation of metric. That is clearly not the case. Stores were forced out of business because they would not buy metric weigh scales.

Second, I would like to point out that it has been circulated through the Metric Commission, with the knowledge of the ministry, that 68 per cent of the Canadian people support the implementation of metric in the retail food stores. That is clearly not the case. Ministers also go to press conferences and say that the majority of Canadians support metric. We know from a Gallup poll which was taken in November of 1981, which the same Metric Commission is suppressing, that the majority of Canadians are opposed to forced metric in the retail food stores. This Gallup poll which came to my attention clearly documents that fact.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who is also the minister responsible for the Metric Commission, when asked a question on January 14, 1981, if there would be fines, confiscation of equipment and imprisonment, answered, as reported in Hansard of January 14, 1981:

> we shall not resort to the methods the hon. member would have us use.

In other words, there would be no fines, no confiscation of equipment and no imprisonment. Later I will go on to prove that that is not the case as it applies today.

On April 23, 1980, I asked the same question of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe); if he intended to sit idly by while the government forced metrication on the people of Canada. The minister replied as reported in Hansard on April 23, 1980 that:

> The government has no intention of imposing the metric system manu militari and that it has always been the policy of the Liberal party and government of taking care of the people first, not regulations.

To put the record straight, I would point out an article that appeared in The Calgary Herald. The headline read, "Merchants given metric warning". The article quoted an official of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Calgary as saying:

"We won't come down like a ton of bricks on the first day (but) there might be a couple of prosecutions to wake people up," said Mac Cooper, Calgary operations supervisor for the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Weights and Measures.

I would like to read from the Winnipeg Free Press dated January 9, 1982. the headline on the editorial page read, "Misleading on metric". The article went on to say:

The Metric Commission, with the backing of the federal government has the unquestioned power to dictate to Canadians that they will henceforth measure their groceries in kilograms rather than in pounds.

Moving on to The Globe and Mail of February 4, 1982, the headline read, "Civil Servant is suspended after protest". Imagine, Mr. Speaker; a civil servant who spoke out against metric in the city of Kingston lost four days pay and an additional ten days pay because he persisted in the principle of freedom of speech and spoke out against forced metric in the city of Kingston.

Let us review some of the businesses. In Kamloops, British Columbia, Gary Cooper said that it will cost him $60,000 to convert the scales in his six stores in British Columbia. An article in the Kamloops News dated December 9, 1981, quoted Cooper as saying:

"There's no turning back now because we're talking about the law of the land"

The article went on:

Cooper said metrication is always something that is imposed from above. "Even Napoleon was unable to get his people to accept metric. He had to impose it."

Another article appearing in the Hamilton Spectator referred to the forced implementation of metric. This particular grocer had been in business for many years. The article stated:

But now, with no sign of reprieve and only weeks remaining before metric conversion becomes law, the aging couple stands a millimetre away from closing their store.

Another article describes a merchant who was willing to face jail. Mac Tackaberry in Kingston is determined he will not be bullied by the federal government and he is prepared to pay the $1,000 fine if necessary and serve the jail sentence that goes along with it. At least there are people in Canada who feel this issue needs full parliamentary debate and should not be handled through regulations that are passed through an order in council without the opportunity for Members of Parliament to debate this method of implementation.

An article appeared in the Daily Mercury dated January 21, 1981, with respect to a merchant in Fergus, Ontario, under the headline "Metric conversion forces retailer to close his doors early". The article states in part:

● (2215)

The move to metric will force a local meat market out of business.

We in the city of Peterborough have lost our only independent dairy. It employed some 40 people. It has been in business for 67 years. The proprietors said:

We invested in the future of our dairy until the metric system came into effect. This made our equipment obsolete, our cartons and glass bottles were no longer of any use.

As of March 1, 1980, when metric was forced on the city of Peterborough this dairy closed its doors and is no longer in business. This was a small family business. The letter from which I have just read was signed by Harold Moncrief, John Moncrief and Gord Moncrief of Moncrief Dairy.

I am a little tired of the government telling the people of Canada that there shall be no force. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has made that statement, as has the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism.

When will this government start telling the people of Canada the truth? There is no voluntary movement to metric in the grocery stores of this nation. This is forced metric against the will of the people, and it is forced without a consensus of Parliament and contrary to the wishes of the people. If the government would release the secret Gallup poll taken for the government in November of 1981, we would see that the poll clearly documented that the people of Canada do not wish metric. Why is that the case? They do not wish metric because they do not wish it by force. They do not mind it by choice, but there is a great difference in metric by force and metric by the choice of the people.

The United States has decided not to force metric on the people of the United States. The Americans have abandoned their metric board. They fired all its members by act of Congress to be effective September, 1982. Britain is totally back to miles an hour on the highway and pounds in the grocery store. The British are back to Fahrenheit at the weather bureaus of their nation. Let us not have any of this nonsense about the whole world going metric. The fact of the matter is that the whole world is not going metric, unless by choice.

Only Canada is going metric. Canada is a free country—we think—but the people have lost the right to choose. The Metric Commission is dictating to the Government of Canada the implementation time-frame against the will of the people and without a consensus, and the government will not even release the results of a Gallup pool paid for by the people of Canada which indicated that the people do not wish metric at this time.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like very briefly once again to address the concerns of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) with regard to the enforcement of regulations made under the Weights and Measures Act for metric conversion of individually measured foods and scale conversion.

As the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has already informed the hon. member, the enforcement of these regulations will be conducted in a decent and appropriate manner, and we shall not resort to the methods the hon. member has suggested at various and sundry times in the House.

I can tell the hon. member that it will be the responsibility of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada to enforce regulations made under the Weights and Measures Act in exactly the same manner as all other such regulations are enforced.

Our well-established inspection practice in all instances involves first informing non-complying retailers of their obligations under the law, in this case to advertise and sell individually-measured foods as required by these regulations. Then we encourage the retailers to take whatever action is necessary to comply with the regulations. Should a retailer not take action to comply with the regulations, then he would be advised in writing that continued non-compliance would result in the initiation of prosecution action.

Mr. Domm: That is force.

Mr. McCauley: Should a retailer be prosecuted for non-compliance with these regulations, I might point out that the highest penalty that could be imposed in such cases would be a maximum fine of $1,000 for each offence. I might also point out that devices would only be seized in those instances where that would be required in the gathering of evidence for enforcement action.

I would also like to assure the hon. member that we do not anticipate that extensive enforcement action will be required to ensure compliance with these regulations. Unlike him, we have every confidence that retailers of individually measured foods will convert to metric as required. Surely, the hon. member realizes that Canadian retailers are good corporate citizens who will obey the law.

AIRPORTS—CALLING OF TENDERS FOR ADVERTISING CONCESSION

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, fair and proper tendering procedures are very important in this country, not only to the government but to business and consumers. On December 17 when I raised with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) the issue of the failure to institute proper or any tendering procedures for advertising in airports, he gave me an answer which I thought was rather unsatisfactory. We spoke about tendering for advertising concessions and in the course of our dialogue we also discussed duty-free procedures which are obviously very important in terms of the policy of the department.

There are many incongruities here, Mr. Speaker. I will deal first with the specific question of the Toronto International Airport where over $200,000 per month was lost for two and a half years because FIRA—the misbegotten agency of federal government which has done so much to discourage investment in this country—took that long to decide what should be done with the people who were awarded the duty-free franchise at that airport.

Finally, in disgust, I understand, Duty Free Shopping Group Ltd. of Honolulu, threw up its hands because of the delays. That is amazing when one realizes that Mr. Robert Campeau's organization was able to sell the Harbour Castle Hotel to Hong Kong interests in ten days. It would be nice if FIRA and the Department of Transport got together and did something even remotely like that to settle the duty-free agency at the Toronto International Airport. If they had, they could have saved the taxpayers over $5 million. I suppose it depends on who you are.

Since the minister raised the issue of Sky Shops, I want to refer to what is going on at Dorval Airport. As I understand it, it is long-standing department policy that when someone tenders for a concession—in this case a duty-free one in the Dorval Airport—it is enforced by the Department of Transport. The company is then supposed to pay the greater of a minimum guarantee or of a percentage of sales. I understand that business is such that this is not being done; the company is merely paying a percentage of sales, which is less than the minimum guarantee. Obviously, that particular concession to Thomcor should be terminated. That company is the successor to Sky Shops which, as a matter of passing interest, Mr. Speaker, once sued me for $500,000 for pointing out that one could buy things cheaper on the street than in their duty-free shops. They were pleased to withdraw that suit, with costs. That is in the past, however.

I want to point out again that there is something very wrong in the administration of the Department of Transport. I want to know who authorized this departure from departmental policy whereby a contract, which is tendered on the basis of payment of either the greater of the minimum guarantee or the percentage of sales, is wilfully disregarded. I believe that is also true of the Quebec restaurants and probably of other concessions as well.

If the parliamentary secretary does not have an answer for me tonight, I hope he can find out who authorized this departure from a clearly set out policy designed for the benefit of consumers and in the interests of fairness to the people who tender.

On the subject of Dorval, I have a very great interest in seeing that the concessions in that airport are operating in a healthy and respectable state and, indeed, that the airport is maintained in its present condition. I think it would be a travesty to close this well-used and successful airport, which is making money, for the sake of transferring a lot of these operations to that white elephant, Mirabel, which is costing the Canadian taxpayer about $1 million per month in operational cost deficits alone. But I am wandering off the subject and I apologize for that.

I should like to ask my hon. friend opposite if he can assure me tonight that the government and the Department of Transport will get off their proverbial seats and do something about getting a proper tendering procedure instituted for airport advertising. At the same time, they should take a hard look at what is going on in terms of altering—unilaterally, I suspect—a policy that is very clearly understood and is designed to bring in revenue and ensure fairness when it comes to honouring the contracts awarded by tender. There may be good reason why the Thomcor company cannot pay—perhaps business is bad. If it is an impoverished organization, it is clear the contract should be revoked and that the concession should be awarded to the next highest bidder or, failing that, it should be retendered. But allowing these irregularities to perpetuate themselves, in defiance of fairness and established policy, does not do the government, the Department of Transport or the Canadian public any good. I would urge the minister to take a very close look at these procedures and report to the House as soon as possible.

• (2225)

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member, Duty Free Shops Limited definitely decided not to take up its contract. The present concessionaire is to continue on an interim basis until a new concessionaire is selected by a new tender call which is expected to be placed in the very near future.

Prior to 1969, very little advertising was sold at airports, revenues were minimal, and there were no standards regarding size and quality of displays or rates to be charged for advertising space. Because the department had very little background in advertising, it was decided to develop this medium through the expertise of an advertising concessionaire. In 1969, the Department of Transport called for tenders for the right to sell advertising at ten Canadian airports.

The concessionaire began operating on January 1, 1970, with a five-year agreement which was renewable for a further five years. The renewal was granted in 1975. During the term of the agreement, the concessionaire was granted additional rights to sell advertising at smaller airports, if he could show that the revenues generated by the company exceeded those which could have been achieved by the department. Within the ten-year period, from 1970 to 1980, the company sold advertising at 13 additional airports in Canada. The company has been granted two extensions of short duration to the original contract. The second extension expires on June 30 of this year. The main reason for the extension was to permit the Department of Transport time to develop linguistic requirements for advertising at airports and to include these requirements in the specifications for the next tender call.

Linguistic requirements have been completed and a public tender for the concessionaire will be announced in the newspapers on February 26 and February 27, 1982. We expect the award to be determined on or about May 1.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FOOD AND DRUGS

WARNING ON USE OF ASPIRIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the United States Centre for Disease Control has issued a strong warning that aspirin, also known as ASA—acetylsalicylic acid—should not be given to children with chicken pox or for any influenza-like illness, because such medication can cause Reye's Syndrome, a disease which can be fatal to young children, or leave them mentally retarded, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Department of National Health and Welfare take all necessary steps to alert the public and the medical profession about this very serious problem.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TELEVISION

INTERVIEW GIVEN BY PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was interviewed by David Frost for a forthcoming television program which will be called "Frost Over Canada". In view of the Prime Minister's 13 years of mismanagement of Canada's affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House recommend to Mr. Frost that the program be renamed "Snow Job on Canada".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ADVICE TO MEMBERS OF LIBERAL PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, Liberal government policies are full of contradictions.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Taylor: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tells the working people to tighten their belts and not to ask for increases, and then increases the salary of the president of Canada Post to over $100,000 after only five months on the job. The government brags about free speech in the charter of rights, and then the Prime Minister puts zippers on the mouths of Liberal Members of Parliament. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) talks glibly about restraint and then wastes $47 million on statues in Algiers, etc., etc. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House urges Liberal card carriers in Ontario and Quebec to tear up their membership cards and send the shreds to the Prime Minister.

If several thousand do this, the Prime Minister might be frightened into withdrawing the budget or, better still, into resigning.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOLIDAYS ACT

RECOGNITION OF HERITAGE DAY AS NATIONAL HOLIDAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has annually moved for the recognition of Heritage Day and, in his absence—which I now assume will be of a very short duration—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House recognizes the third Monday in February as Heritage Day, congratulates all those who celebrated this occasion, and expresses its earnest hope that the government will soon recognize the importance of this day and declare it a national holiday.

THE ECONOMY

PROGRAMS TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, given that the rate of unemployment in the regional municipality of Niagara is a shocking 15.6 per cent, nearly double the national average, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House urges the Prime Minister to proceed with the immediate creation of two new programs to create employment in key sectors of the economy by stimulating domestic housing construction and by launching a program to enable private enterprise to hire young Canadians so that these deplorably and tragically high rates of unemployment can be brought to a more reasonable level.

METRIC CONVERSION

CONDEMNATION OF COMMISSION'S EDUCATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent and pressing matter. It is urgent, because every day that goes by means more waste of money. The education department of the province of British Columbia has conducted a massive test of over 90,000 British Columbia school children in grades four, eight and twelve, and has determined that their knowledge of metric is sadly lacking. Indeed, the grade four students, who have been taught nothing but metric, still indicated, by a 60 per cent majority, a preference for imperial measures. Therefore I propose, seconded by—who else?—the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That this House condemns the public education program of the Metric Commission and demands its recall for further consideration, as it has proved to be expensive, ineffectual and completely discredited.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG-ASSINIBOINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion related to an urgent and important question which, I feel confident, will gain the support of the House, particularly of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

For the second time in ten days, we have heard the Leader of the Opposition repudiate the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) who is waging war against bilingualism just as he had against democracy in South Africa. Considering that the Leader of the Opposition claims to support the bilingualism policy and to have the Progressive Conservative caucus under control, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart):

That the House urge the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to stop uttering fine words and act immediately by asking for the resignation of that hon. member whose anti-French bias is already well known, just as his predecessor, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, had done in a similar case, namely that of the former mayor of Moncton.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE JUDICIARY

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in our 115 years of existence as a country no woman has ever been appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada, even though qualified women have served with distinction in the superior and supreme courts of the provinces since 1969. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That in filling the vacancy that now exists in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government redress the imbalance of 115 years of Canadian history by appointing a qualified woman to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ECONOMIC POLICY OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning statements made by the finance critic for the Conservative Party during the weekend in Toronto and yesterday in Montreal, in which he praised the discredited and heartless economic doctrine known as Reaganomics as "something that we would be doing if we were a government", and agreed with the high interest rate policy of the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House thank the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre for finally clarifying his party's stand on this important issue, even though it contradicts his leader's call for expanded government programs, such as housing, and urges his colleagues to take note of this clarified position and drop their hypocritical opposition to MacEachenomics which is really just a made-up-in-Canada form of Reaganomics.

Mr. Clark: Where were you for the vote?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

INCREASE IN CHARGES FOR USE OF MAIL BOXES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, my motion is on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity and is proposed under Standing Order 43. Many persons living in towns and not eligible, by Post Office regulation, to have the benefit of home mail delivery, are now being subjected to a 200 per cent increase in the charge they must pay for the use of a convenience box to pick up their mail at the post office. I therefore move:

That the Post Office be instructed to discontinue forthwith the usurious charge for not having a postman, and further, that the Post Office cease immediately the obligatory charge for a change of address card for persons like myself who have lived in the same house on the same street in the same town for the last thirty-five years.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

REGULATIONS GOVERNING SERVICE TO HEARING-IMPAIRED TELEVISION VIEWERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) promised a year ago that CRTC regulations would be amended quickly to allow Canadian cable television companies to substitute simultaneously an American signal for a Canadian signal where circumstances warranted it in order that hearing-impaired Canadians could enjoy closed captioned programs broadcast by U.S. stations, and whereas these amendments have still not been passed and many Canadians continue to be deprived of this unique and useful communications aid, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That this House direct the Minister of Communications to expedite promised amendments to the broadcast regulations so that hearing-impaired Canadians may soon be able to enjoy television and the benefits of closed captioned programming which are presently available on a widespread basis in the United States.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CENTRALIZATION OF DEPARTMENT'S LABORATORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Last week several of my colleagues and I inspected some of the chemical waste dumps in Niagara, New York, that are already responsible for pollution in Lake Ontario. If that is not enough of a scandal, the senior management committee of Environment Canada has accepted in principle a plan to curtail drastically the technical ability of its four testing laboratories by centralizing their work in Burlington, Ontario. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House condemn the creeping Reaganism in the Department of the Environment and that this House urge the minister to reject this proposal that will diminish the effectiveness of the department to work with regional universities and to respond to regional problems and conditions.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—QUERY RESPECTING MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL OF OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As the tragedy of the Ocean Ranger and the tragic loss of lives unfolds, there is obvious confusion over jurisdiction between the federal, provincial and United States governments. Would the minister agree that this accentuates the need for responsible ministers in these three jurisdictions to sit down now and work out a de facto management system for control and safety of offshore drilling activity, to prevent any further loss of lives?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this is exactly what the government has been trying to achieve with the government of Newfoundland for several months. I would argue, however, that the third jurisdiction, the United States government, should not be a party to the discussions relating to the management of the Canadian offshore. I agree with the hon. member it is important that we arrive at a negotiated agreement on the management of resources and revenue sharing.

UNITED STATES ROLE IN SAFETY CERTIFICATION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, if the United States government will not be involved in a meaningful de facto way in the operations of offshore drilling rigs in waters which may not be territorial but have been claimed for us under our economic management zones, why was an American coastguard inspection team going to the rig to try to update a certificate of safety which had a two-year validity period and evidently was two months overdue? If there is not some part for them also, what are we supposed to be doing in relation to the safety of oil rigs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. member that beyond our 12-mile limit, our territorial waters, we are in international waters, and that Canada has a responsibility for fisheries and the management of resources, and the countries in which the ships or drilling rigs are registered also have responsibility under the Canada Shipping Act and under international conventions with regard to the flag of registry of those installations, whether they are ships or drilling rigs. Thus, there is a United States involvement because this particular drilling rig was under the American flag.

DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is really directed to the Minister of Transport. Without arguing the point of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the fact there is a third jurisdiction involved outside territorial waters, the government of the United States, I direct my question to the minister concerning apparent confusion of jurisdiction within departments. I should like the minister to explain just what is his responsibility as Minister of Transport for the safe operation of drilling rigs in Canadian waters, especially in view of the fact that a recent report on the evaluation of search and rescue, dated February 1, 1982, made no mention of offshore drilling activity and highlighted jurisdictional problems within departments. At page 21, referring to departmental responsibility, it reads:

> The resultant split in the functional responsibilities for safety within the CCG does not appear to the team—

That is the study team.

> —to be an effective way to use resources.

At page 30 it indicates even more directly:

> Finally, in the absence of a convincing demonstration that current marine response capability is inadequate and that better marine postures are not feasible—

And I interject here that the whole tenor of this is marine response for pleasure craft and fishermen, and not a word about offshore activity.

> —the team would give lowest priority to the provision of new resources for marine response.

In view of this current report which is being studied and is supposed to go to cabinet on March 17, 1982, will the minister start to exercise some responsibility, so that deaths in the future are prevented and that someone takes control to save Canadian lives and starts to direct attention to the reality out there, rather than worrying about offshore pleasure craft and/or just fishermen?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, under the Canada Shipping Act my department has no jurisdiction over foreign-registered ships past the 12-mile zone; that is pretty fundamental. Thus, as Minister of Transport, I cannot go and inspect rigs or ships in that area.

• (1420)

With respect to seaworthiness of ships or rigs, a general principle in marine transportation, as well as in air transportation, is to accept the system of the foreign country involved. If my hon. friend wants to read the Dubin report, for example, Mr. Justice Dubin repeatedly recommended that we should not try to second-guess the system of another country, particularly if it is one that is as evolved as the United States of America is in this matter. The principle of reciprocity applies here in matters of marine transportation as well as in matters of air transportation.

CANADIAN JURISDICTION AND RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what we are speaking about here is the loss of Canadian lives. The principle here is that there must be some Canadian jurisdiction exercised over a situation that involves the loss of Canadian lives. It was known that a U.S. coast guard commander, who inspected the Ocean Ranger two years ago, is quoted as saying that another routine inspection was two months overdue. My question to whichever minister is accepting responsibility is: why was it two months overdue? What was the Government of Canada doing to ensure the safety of Canadian lives?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there are at least ten different inspection certificates for a rig such as this. Most of those certificates are issued by the American Bureau of Shipping. These certificates deal with safety of construction, the international load line, and a number of other subjects. According to certain reports it appears that the certificate of the inspection that is carried out by the U.S. coast guard had not been renewed before the expiry of the previous one. No doubt this is a matter the commission of inquiry, which the government has announced it will create, will want to examine. At the present time I have no information to provide the hon. member other than what is already public.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what the minister has confirmed is that the Government of Canada has been exercising no jurisdiction, nor official interest, over the safety of Canadian lives, 83 or 84 of which have been lost. That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said.

DEPARTMENTAL JURISDICTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. I refer to the document cited by my colleague, a report on an evaluation of search and rescue. Not to get confused here about a conflict of jurisdiction between governments, on the basis of this report there is clearly a very serious confusion within the federal government itself. Will the Minister of Transport give us an assurance now that this confusion will not continue to put more Canadian lives at risk?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on the subject of inspection, that is not what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said. There has been inspection by his department on that rig.

Mr. Lalonde: Every two weeks.

Mr. Pepin: Every two weeks, I am informed.

On the subject of division of responsibility between departments, I think there is an inevitability about it. The only alternative would be to put everything under the jurisdiction of a single department of government.

There will always be a division of labour between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Transport on matters of transportation. The implication should not be that there will come a day when everything can be put in one department. The question is really, is the co-ordination among different departments, good enough? Between the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Transport on the matter of search and rescue there is a good working relationship. That it can still be improved is beyond doubt, and efforts are made to that effect.

The report which has been leaked by a dedicated civil servant, who felt the world was waiting for his brown envelope—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Very funny.

Mr. Pepin: —at a certain hour last night, indicates only—no, no, this is not funny—that efforts are made to improve that co-ordination. The group in question in the Secretariat of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and National Defence came up with ideas on the subject that are being reviewed now, and departments and ministers will soon be made acquainted with these views.

SAFETY INSPECTOR'S REPORTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I trust the minister did not intend to joke about a situation which has cost—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: No, no.

Mr. Lawrence: Well, what was he doing, then, if he was not joking?

Mr. Clark: I say this seriously. I trust the minister did not intend to joke about a situation which has resulted in the loss of 84 lives. I hope the minister will deal directly with the urgency of ensuring that confusion within the federal government, which may have led to this loss of life, will be stopped before it leads to the loss of any lives in the future.

Let me ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whose inspectors were there for a limited purpose. In answer to a question I asked yesterday about inspection into ballast problems, the minister indicated that he would inform me about the contents of the reports on the inspections which had been carried out. I would like to have that information, but I would also like to know whether the safety inspector from his department was only on the Ocean Ranger to assess the safety of the drill hole and was not there to inspect the safety or seaworthiness of the drilling rig.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Leader of the Opposition asked me for information yesterday. I have that particular information, the two reports of the safety inspections which took place in the last month. An inspection takes place every two weeks. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to read these reports I would be happy to table them when we come to tabling of documents.

He will discover that those reports cover a number of issues of a general nature such as equipment, operations—

Mr. Nielsen: What about seaworthiness?

Mr. Lalonde: —covering a wide aspect. The certificates of seaworthiness are issued by international organizations so recognized by the International Maritime Council Organization, IMCO. In this particular instance they were issued by the American Bureau of Shipping, an internationally recognized organization which is responsible for certifying the seaworthiness of ships or shipping installations carrying the American flag.

SAFETY TRAINING AND REGULATIONS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday he indicated to the House that the safety of workers on ocean rigs fell under federal jurisdiction and was exercised under the Canada Oil and Gas Act. He indicated that he was satisfied with the work carried out under that act. Surely, then, the federal government must also have been aware that in June, 1980, organized labour in Newfoundland issued a report which said that most workers on oil rigs had no right to negotiate safety issues, and which called for much stronger health and safety regulations, inspection and training on the oil rigs, and also called for the workers to be placed under the protection of the health and safety legislation of Newfoundland.

In view of these problems which have been public for two years, and the recent tragedy, could the minister tell the House what steps he has taken to ensure adequate safety inspections and training, and will he table in the House relevant sections of the agreements with the oil companies dealing with safety, as well as safety training manuals used, and reports indicating what sort of inspections were done and what was found?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first of all the hon. member raises the question of the unionization of those workers. Obviously that is a decision for the workers to take under the laws of Canada, or the laws of Newfoundland if those laws apply. As the hon. member knows, this matter is before the courts at the present time and I cannot prejudge the conclusions of the court.

We have taken the view, as the federal government, that we have the responsibility and jurisdiction, and we have acted accordingly. Whether the courts will confirm this is not for me to decide at the present time.

• (1430)

As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, for the time being I will merely refer him to Section 8 of the Canada oil and gas drilling regulations which go very extensively into all the requirements which are exacted from applicants who want to go ahead with a drilling program. There he will find all the questions which the one who proposes to drill is required to answer.

Concerning the details the hon. member is requesting, I suggest to him that this would more properly be a matter which should be examined by the commission of inquiry which the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport announced yesterday.

Mr. Parker: I was not referring to the unionization of these people. I was referring to a report presented by the Newfoundland and Labrador Federation of Labour, dated June 2, 1980, describing their concerns.

INVESTIGATION OF DRILLING RIG OWNERS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated in the House yesterday and today that he was satisfied that safety laws were adequate in the case of the Ocean Ranger and that inspections were adequate, and given the fact that it is unlikely that the minister would try to shift the blame for the tragedy onto the unfortunate crew members, could the minister tell the House if he is prepared to urge that a criminal investigation be undertaken to determine the possibility of criminal negligence on the part of the owners of the vessel with respect to their handling of maintenance, design and training, and to pursue charges if negligence is suspected?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is attributing statements to me which are not quite correct, and I suggest that he look back to the record of yesterday. I indicated that we, as the federal government, had responsibility for the inspection, and that to my knowledge inspections had been carried on regularly and according to the rules. I can confirm today that those inspections were indeed carried out, and today I have the last two reports.

Mr. Nowlan: Not for seaworthiness.

Mr. Lalonde: Concerning the point raised by the hon. member, we have indicated that there will be a full-scale inquiry into this particular tragedy, and out of that inquiry I am sure that conclusions will be reached. If there is critical liability or criminal liability which might be involved, I assume that this will be the subject of a conclusion by that commission of inquiry. At the present time I would not want to prejudge who is responsible or liable in a particular instance. I think it would be very premature to attribute blame to any particular party.

Mr. Parker: I would like to thank the minister for his assurance that he will pursue it and do it with an open mind.

REQUEST THAT ONE MINISTER BE DESIGNATED RESPONSIBLE FOR SAFETY OF WORKERS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I feel it is necessary to go to the Prime Minister since so many of his ministers are involved in this tragedy through conflicting jurisdiction.

The Prime Minister is aware that in late December seven men died on the St. Lawrence River because of—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am afraid that the hon. member is going into questions which are too lengthy. He has asked two lengthy questions, and I allowed him to do that because he wanted to quote a report, but he must understand it was a tolerance on my part. However, at this particular point, on his third question, he must be brief.

Mr. Parker: Madam Speaker, I will then go directly to the question. Could the Prime Minister tell this House when he will finally take the recommendations of the labour movement and an NDP safety committee which has travelled this country for the last year, and even the recommendations of his own former minister of labour, and bring forth legislation which will make health and safety the responsibility of one minister, dealing with one piece of legislation, with an adequate inspectorate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I was discussing that matter this very day with the Minister of Labour. I have indicated to him that the provisions of the draft Canada Labour Code would be studied with a view to achieving the end that the hon. member mentions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURED IN JAPAN

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport will be aware that he recently participated in the decision to buy Japanese equipment for Ridley Island, despite the fact that the Canadian bid was $1 million lower and could provide better delivery and better guarantee, and it is the only company in the world, to date, which has built a 60-metre boom. Will the minister table the three memos on which the decision was made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is referring, I presume, to the purchase of a piece of equipment called a stacker reclaimer, by the National Harbours Board for the coal development at the port of Prince Rupert. Am I right? As the hon. member well knows, because he has been watching me for at least three days with regard to that matter, this was the object of great preoccupation on the part of the Minister of Transport. I did my best to ensure that the offer made by a company in his riding, called Stephens-Adamson, was fully considered by the National Harbours Board and the consultants of the National Harbours Board. I think he will pay me tribute for having done that.

The decision was based on technology and timing considerations. I have arranged that the consultant and the National Harbours Board would meet with the company to give a full explanation of the decision. Therefore the choice of a Mitsubishi piece of equipment in the case of the port of Prince Rupert is not a reflection on a Canadian firm; far from it. The Canadian firm still sells in Canada and abroad. What happened to the drilling rig off the coast of Newfoundland is not a reflection on the quality of Mitsubishi equipment, either.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MEMORANDA

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I did not mention any reflection on the firm with regard to the rig which just went down. It happens that they are made by the same company. The fact is that 300,000 man-days of work will not be used in Canada because the National Harbours Board, in conjunction with the minister, made a decision to buy Japanese equipment over Canadian equipment.

The minister says there was a technical disagreement. I again ask him will he not give us the memos upon which the agreement was reached? The management from Stephens-Adamson went to the west coast, and they were not told a single thing.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I can only repeat what I have said.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Be forthcoming!

Mr. Pepin: This was a decision of the National Harbours Board on the basis of recommendations made by their consultant. The timing in this matter is of particular essence, because if the port facilities are not built on time in Prince Rupert, my hon. friend will not take the blame for it; I will be blamed for it. Therefore, in view of that, I decided to follow the advice of the National Harbours Board on this subject.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Give him the memos. That's what he wants.

Mr. Pepin: I made sure that full explanation was being given. I also made sure that the Canadian content in that particular project was very high, and it is 80 per cent at this time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Three hundred thousand man-days?

Mr. Pepin: Through agreement with Mitsubishi, 53 per cent of the piece of equipment in question will be built in Canada. I extended myself fully, short of second-guessing the National Harbours Board, and I will not do that, particularly in view of the importance of the timing factor.

Mr. Ellis: Show me the memos.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT IN MANUFACTURE OF MINING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is related to a question asked a moment ago, and it is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister knows that Canadian manufacturers of mining equipment have been quickly losing ground to foreign competitors in supplying our rapidly growing demand for mining equipment. In fact he knows that between 1970 and 1980 the percentage of Canadian-manufactured mining equipment dropped from over 70 per cent to a mere 29 per cent, giving rise to a $167 million trade deficit in 1980, compared to only a $48 million trade deficit a decade earlier.

Will the minister explain why his government has allowed the Canadian content in mining equipment to slip to rock bottom levels over the past ten years? Instead of speaking in pompous platitudes, as he did yesterday, what specific plans is he prepared to announce today in this House in order to rectify the kind of problem we heard about a few moments ago and to substantially increase the manufacture of mining equipment here in Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, it is true that in 1980 Canada produced $342 million worth of mining equipment and imported $372.4 million worth. When you look at the exports of $205 million, you come up with the figure my hon. friend mentioned. The over-all picture is somewhat more positive than he suggested in light of these statistics.

At the same time, jurisdiction over most mining projects is in the provinces in which they are found. Therefore, we have to work in a way which takes that into account in achieving our objective of having a much higher production in Canada of the equipment used by our mines. A recognition of this development problem, as I said yesterday, is why we convened the Opportunities in Mining Conference in Vancouver last year to begin a process whereby Canadian mining companies can become more aware of Canadian capacities and so there will be much higher purchases of Canadian equipment.

Second, one of the objectives of the office of industrial regional benefits, working with respect to projects on the Canada Lands, and voluntarily with the provinces, and with respect to projects there, would be to achieve a much higher level of Canadian content in mining equipment. This is our objective. I think we are making progress.

CONTRACT AWARDED TO JAPANESE COMPANY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, platitudes, programs and conferences do not solve problems. In fact the minister has not responded to my question. Why was the situation allowed to deteriorate over the past ten years to the extent that less than one third of our mining equipment is manufactured in Canada? Does the minister condone the kind of contract award that his seatmate just announced whereby the Mitsubishi company of Japan will take a contract away from a Canadian company which was actually the low bidder? Does he condone that? Where are his specific proposals?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the equipment my hon. friend is talking about, if I am not mistaken, is not, strictly speaking, mining equipment but equipment to enable the loading of coal on ships which take it abroad. At the same time, this is the kind of equipment we want to see built and used in Canada to the extent it is technologically sufficient and available within the time required. We have been working with the National Harbours Board to make sure full attention is given to Canadian capacities.

I might add that my hon. friend's reference to this example does not support his contention that only one third of the content comes from Canada. The Minister of Transport said that over 50 per cent of the content of this equipment comes from our country. We have to do better, and that is what we are working to achieve.

TRANSFER BETWEEN DORVAL AND MIRABEL—DATE OF MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

At a meeting last year with the members for Duvernay, Laval, Terrebonne, Labelle, the Minister of Communications representing Blainville-Deux-Montagnes and our mayors and councillors, the minister said that an expression of political will would be necessary if there were to be a transfer of activities between Dorval and Mirabel.

Can the minister inform us today, since we have 33 mayors and some 80 councillors from the area north of Montreal, whether that in itself constitutes an expression of political will and, if so, could he inform us when a decision will be forthcoming from his department?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would be the first person to admit that will plays a very important role, but it is also important to understand the subject. What I mean is that regarding the future of Mirabel we now have two highly contradictory views, one of which is represented, and I would say remarkably well, by the mayors in our visitors' gallery. Next week, I shall probably have as many or more mayors who represent a different point of view. Thus, the Mirabel issue is not a cut and dried case.

I put the problem to my colleagues a few months ago, and I intend to do so again in even more specific terms within the next few days. I can assure our present and future visitors that a decision will be made within the next two or three months, since a consensus has been reached on the need for a decision.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CLOTHING, TEXTILES AND FOOTWEAR INDUSTRIES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Recently Senator Olson stated, and I quote:

> We're going to stop propping up mature industries that will never be competitive in this generation, like clothing, textiles, footwear and a number of others.

It appears that our minister responsible for economic development is unaware that there are approximately 300,000 Canadians working in these industries, many of them in the province of Quebec. From all reports some Liberal MPs know and are concerned that we have more than 1.2 million Canadians already searching for jobs that do not exist. Is it government policy to disregard the pleas within its own caucus and the plight of these Canadians and, instead of creating jobs for the people who desperately need them, to start spelling out who is next on its lay-off hit list?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is showing a little bit of misunderstanding of the policy announced by the government in recent months in the areas of textile, clothing and the shoe industries. Rather than force workers out of work, as the hon. member seems to suggest, we have continued the protection to these industries. At the same time, rather than having the reactionary approach which is so typical in many things of the NDP, we have created a Canadian Industrial Renewal Board to ensure that in an industry where workers are generally paid far below the Canadian industrial average, that industry is reinforced and strengthened in some areas and, in those areas where it is not competitive, that new industries are brought in which would be technologically more advanced and which would provide for higher wages. Something less than $300 million has been allocated to that board, composed of industries and eminent businessmen from the private sector in several provinces, including Quebec, so that this joint task, government working hand in hand with the industry, management, and workers, would provide a much better future for the workers presently employed in those industries.

Mr. Blackburn: I gather from the Prime Minister's answer we can look forward to a very rosy future in those three industries, footwear, textile and clothing. I hope that comes true.

TRADE

BILATERAL DISCUSSIONS—INQUIRY RESPECTING CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the past few months 20,000 workers have lost their jobs in the clothing and textile industries and countless others have had their jobs reduced to part time. On Thursday, Canadian negotiators are leaving for Hong Kong to start a new round of bilateral trade discussions. Will the minister assure this House that the mandate of these negotiators is not to weaken further the position of these industries in Canada, but to protect their workers by requiring that our negotiators bargain for the maintenance of actual import levels of 1981, or the restoration of the import quotas of 1979, whichever is the lower?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is not customary to reveal the exact mandate of negotiators for the Canadian government before negotiations take place, but I can certainly assure the hon. gentleman that the purpose of those negotiators will be to protect the interest of Canadians and Canadian jobs.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF DECISION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, considering the presence today in our visitors' gallery of a delegation of mayors who are, of course, interested in air transport. The minister has confirmed that he is expecting another delegation next week. More importantly, Madam Speaker, the minister has just told us today, on television in front of thousands of Canadians, that a decision is to be made within two or three months. Can the minister give us the assurance that the decision will be made public not later than June 1?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have been doing some mental arithmetic. Let us take today's date, which is February 16, and add two or three months, and the answer is obvious: April or May. So I can confirm that what I said earlier was indeed what was implied in the question put by the member for Joliette.

INQUIRY WHETHER FUTURE OF MIRABEL WILL BE KNOWN BY JUNE 1

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, considering the fact that in the case of Nordair, for instance, there were a number of extensions, and I see that three months from today would be May 16, I want to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can give the House the assurance, before the group of concerned citizens here today and the group that is expected to come next week, that it will be told what is to be done with Mirabel and Dorval on June 1?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend, who was himself a minister for a few weeks, knows perfectly well that I cannot give him the physical assurance that this will be the case, because it obviously depends on a number of my colleagues who may decide otherwise. As far as I am concerned, and I think I can commit the cabinet as well—assuming that the important thing is to have a decision, and the mayors are going to let me know in a few minutes—I believe I can give the hon. member the assurance that I shall do my utmost to provide an answer within the next two or three months, as I just said.

FINANCE

BANK FUNDING FOR SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance but, in his absence, I will direct it either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of State for Finance. While the November 12 budget seriously eroded the effectiveness of the Small Business Development Bond, it at least gave some hope to owners of small businesses and farmers that there might be some relief from high interest rates. Could the minister explain why it is that while that budget provision is now in effect, the banks of Canada have cut off all funds for Small Business Development Bonds?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is making very serious allegations when he says that Canadian banks have definitely cut off all funds for Small Business Development Bonds. I think that the situation should be monitored very closely and the Minister of Finance will get in touch with representatives of the banking institutions to check these allegations, and should they turn out to be true, find out the reason for such behaviour.

[English]

REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I wish those allegations would be checked. If the Minister of State for Finance checks with the banks he will find that, for instance, as of February 10 the Royal Bank withdrew those funds. Canadians have gone to some expense. They have retained accountants to find out whether they are eligible for Small Business Development Bonds. Time has been spent but, more important, this is another aspect of the budget which has just gone by the boards. It is another discredit to the Minister of Finance.

When will we have an answer? Is the Small Business Development Bond in effect? Is there funding and, if there is not, will the government give Canadians an answer tomorrow? Is there money for Small Business Development Bonds?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member who claims to be well informed, seems to forget that by its very nature this bond requires the involvement of our financial institutions through our taxation system. As I said, we will check whether funds are still available and encourage banks to help us maintain in operation the Small Business Development Bond program.

MONTREAL—ESTABLISHMENT OF ENLARGED ADMINISTRATIVE AIRPORT ZONE

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the plans for Montreal International Airport at Mirabel. There will be an impact on the economy, not only of the North Shore but of the entire province. We must know when the decision will be made, so that the mayors will be able to plan accordingly. My question is as follows: Would the government consider creating an administrative area that would cover the airports of Dorval, St-Hubert and Mirabel in order to avoid this political conflict between two areas, since the economic impact will affect the entire province?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, no proposal of this kind is under consideration, but I can assure the hon. member that the problem only concerns Mirabel and Dorval, and that St-Hubert is not in the picture. I am told that things are running smoothly in St-Hubert and that there are no plans for any transfer to Dorval, if a new division of activities between Dorval and Mirabel is put through. In other words, I am told that St-Hubert is not a problem in the present situation, where we are considering the feasibility of transferring certain routes from Dorval to Mirabel.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—NATURE OF GUARANTEES SOUGHT FROM RAILWAY COMPANIES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Now that the minister has announced his intention to upgrade the Crow rate, what iron-clad guarantees has he received from the railways that they will maintain service, rail lines and rolling stock adequate to meet the requirements of grain growers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in the announcement I made in Winnipeg the other day it was specifically indicated that the guarantees that the railways would have to give in return for a more compensatory rate would be defined by the "Gilson exercise", as I call it.

Second, these guarantees would be part of the statute that would be passed in this House—next fall, I hope—to replace the present statutory rate. In other words, the obligation of the railways to provide guarantees of service would be in the law which would replace the statute we now have.

ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, since the railways have made profits from hauling grain for at least the last 75 or 85 years and have left many rail lines abandoned without adequate maintenance and without adequate rolling stock, I would like to ask the minister whether the Canadian Wheat Board will be using farmers' money to contribute to buying rolling stock, and what clout does the minister have now that he did not have up until now, to force the railways to provide this necessary service?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have not found too many people in the west who will not accept the proposition that at the moment and in recent years the railways have not been properly compensated. There is agreement on that. People may disagree as to who should pay the difference between what they should receive and what they now receive. The first point is generally accepted.

In the announcement I made on behalf of the government last week, I indicated that the program for branch line rehabilitation would continue at the expense of the Government of Canada as a sort of compensation for what the railways have lost in the past and cannot recover now or in the future.

With respect to hopper cars, I did make a commitment on behalf of the government that a first purchase of 1,280 hopper cars will be made very, very soon. These are the different ways in which the government is moving in an effort to rebalance the contribution the government, farmers and the railways will make to grain transportation.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the concern of all members of this House, can the minister tell the House when a commission of inquiry will be set up to look into the tragic loss of lives and the sinking of the Ocean Ranger off the coast of Newfoundland yesterday morning?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we are in the process of finalizing the terms of reference for that commission of inquiry, but I am pleased to announce to the House that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, the hon. Alex Hickman, has agreed to chair that commission. I am sure all members of this House will want to express their appreciation to the Chief Justice for having accepted this very important task.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ABSENCE OF DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns the government's response to the recommendations in the McDonald commission report which was tabled last August. Since the first revelations of RCMP wrongdoing in 1977, not a single disciplinary action has been taken or prosecution commenced by the federal government, making a mockery of the rule of law in Canada. Will the Solicitor General now confirm that the RCMP commissioner received some time ago the reports of former judges Culliton and Potvin on possible disciplinary action, and will he explain why his colleague, the Attorney General of Canada, has taken no proceedings whatsoever on violations of federal law and why, apparently, the RCMP commissioner has now decided not to take any disciplinary action at this time?

• (1500)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I accepted the recommendations of the McDonald commission and referred matters to attorneys general, federal and provincial, and to the commissioner, to consider whether, in their prosecutorial discretion charges should be laid and, in the case of the commissioner, whether disciplinary proceedings should be embarked upon. The commissioner has not yet reported to me on the question of disciplinary proceedings, but he has not yet got the results of the decisions made by attorneys general, federal and provincial, on the question of whether charges will be laid. I am in no way critical of the commissioner nor do I consider him dilatory in not responding yet to the recommendation that he consider disciplinary charges.

The attorneys general have their own responsibilities; they are not accountable to me. It was my duty to bring matters to their attention and I did so. I suggest that if the hon. member has concerns about the way they are performing their responsibilities, provincial or federal, he should ask them.

IMPLEMENTATION OF FILE-DESTRUCTION POLICY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, apparently there is one rule in Canada for the postal workers and another for the RCMP, an attitude which was just condemned by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association.

In view of the fact that one of the most serious revelations of the McDonald commission was the fact that the RCMP holds files on over 800,000 Canadians, many of which should never have been opened, when is the minister going to keep the promises he has made on many occasions, to implement a file-destruction policy and put an immediate end to this gross violation of the privacy of thousands of innocent Canadians?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that I consider 800,000 individual files an excessive number to be held by the security service of the RCMP and that many of those files should be destroyed. However, with the prospect of prosecutions or disciplinary proceedings that may well involve matters contained in those files for all I know, and defences may be raised that require production of those files, I felt it in order to postpone any file-destruction policy which I fully intend to implement in due course. I consider it proper to postpone that destruction until the possibilities of prosecution and discipline are dealt with. Considering that hon. members opposite must surely want fair trials to be available to those who become defendants, I think those files should be preserved until then.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HAWKES—DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF "HANSARD" COPIES TO CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS—STATEMENT BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I should also like to give the result of the inquiry I made into the request of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) for information about the delay in publishing Hansard the other day. My information is that a computer broke down in the Printing Bureau when printing French Hansard and consequently, according to our practice, the distribution of English Hansard was delayed. The Hansard was ready at 11.25 a.m. and some copies were put at the doors of the House of Commons. Usually the pages deliver copies to the leaders of the parties in the House and also to members who request them. Eventually we ran out of copies and only some 25 members were able to get a copy of Hansard for the question period.

We apologize, but the delay was due to a breakdown in the computer in the Printing Bureau. We hope that will not happen too often.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WADDELL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER" OIL RIG

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice that I wished to raise a question of privilege with respect to the statements made in the House yesterday by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), as reported at pages 14996-7 of Hansard, and a subsequent press release dated February 15, 1982 under the authority of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

Yesterday in the House, as reported at page 14996 of Hansard, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) raised a point of order because an announcement was to be made that afternoon establishing a formal inquiry into the Hibernia matter and was not being made properly, that is, in the House of Commons, giving hon. members an opportunity for reply.

At page 14997 of Hansard, after an intervention by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the President of the Privy Council said:

> —Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has just told me there will be no announcement today. Under the circumstances, there is no problem.

Later yesterday afternoon, after a press conference, Members of Parliament received a copy of a press release which reads as follows:

> Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin and Energy Minister Marc Lalonde today announced that the federal government will hold a formal inquiry to investigate all aspects of the loss of the drilling rig Ocean Ranger off Newfoundland early today.

I raise this question of privilege in a reluctant way, Madam Speaker, because in my short experience in the House I have found the President of the Privy Council to be an honest, straightforward, honourable member. Nevertheless, I take the opportunity to raise this question of privilege so that he can clarify his statement to the House. His statement was clearly misleading: it clearly said that there would be no announcement. Then suddenly, two hours later, there was an announcement. I will send it up to you so that you can see it for yourself.

My question is that I and perhaps other hon. members, perhaps inadvertently, have been misled by the statement made by the President of the Privy Council.

Madam Speaker: Unless the hon. member tells the House that he was intentionally misled by the House he does not have a question of privilege. If he feels that he might have been misled inadvertently, then of course he knows that there is no foundation for a question of privilege. If the press release, in his view, was not in conformity with statements made in the House, that is a debatable question and, of course, he may debate it. Even if the hon. member wanted me to look at all of these statements to determine whether there were discrepancies in them, it is not for the Chair to establish discrepancies.

If these statements, in the mind of the hon. member, do not seem to conform with what was said in the House, unless he is prepared to tell me that the minister has intentionally misled him—and he has not done that—I cannot find the basis for a question of privilege.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I do not know why the hon. member always rises when I make a ruling on a question. He has to accept the ruling. Once in a while I may allow that he may have a point of order, but the hon. member is in the habit of rising every time I make a ruling.

This is the ruling; there is no question of privilege. I do not see what we can add to that discussion.

Mr. Waddell: A point of order, Madam Speaker. I understood from what you were saying that you were not making your formal ruling but were asking me if I was saying that the minister perhaps had—

Madam Speaker: No, I was not saying that. It was quite clear that I was ruling.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FULTON—INQUIRY RESPECTING MOTIONS FOR PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my point of order is really a question for the Parliament Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). On June 19, 1981, I placed on the Order Paper Motions Nos. 62, 63 and 64 for the production of documents related to the Amax project. It is eight months since I requested this material yet it has been released to people who are not members of this House, members of the general public. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could tell me when these documents are likely to be tabled, since the motion has been on the Order Paper for some eight months.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I will look into the question. I recall that last week and, I think, the week before, we were prepared to deal with one of the items standing in the name of the hon. member on the day scheduled for the production of papers. He was not here so we did not proceed. I shall have to inquire whether that is the one he refers to. I will look into the matter.

TABLING OF INSPECTION REPORTS ON "OCEAN RANGER" DRILLING RIG

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I should like to table two safety inspection reports on offshore drilling operations that were referred to in the House yesterday and today. Unfortunately I have only the English text, but I understand that hon. members want to have this urgently. I would be willing to attach a translation to this text, if the House agrees, as soon as we can get a translation done.

Madam Speaker: Shall it be tabled in one language only?

• (1510)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker that is agreeable, and we thank the minister. Could he tell us whether these constitute the entire number of inspection reports on the Ocean Ranger?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, in the House yesterday there was reference to two inspections last month. There is an inspection every two weeks. There is a pile of inspection records on all drill ships which have operated off the east coast. I suggest that all other reports should be referred to the commission of inquiry, which has been set up today, and be the subject of evidence, if the commission counsel and the chairman of the commission wish to have access to those documents.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I agree with this procedure on the condition that the French translation is appended to today's Votes and Proceedings and that not only the English version is published today.

Madam Speaker: The House has agreed that the documents be tabled in English only with the assurance that as soon as they are available—but no one said that it would be today. I would agree to have this done today, but the assurance has been given that these texts would be translated into French.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, we do not intend to publish these papers but simply to table them, and I undertake to have a translation available as soon as possible. The thing is to have them translated as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOTION RESPECTING AUTHORITY OF SUBCOMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, I seek unanimous consent of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That four members of the subcommittee on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be authorized to travel before March 1, 1982, to Mexico and El Salvador, and that the necessary staff accompany the members.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,250 and 3,007.

[Text]

GESTAPO AND NAZI PARTY MEMBERS

Question No. 2,250—Mr. Blackburn:

1. How many (a) former (b) suspected SS, SD, Gestapo and Nazi party members (i) entered Canada after World War II (ii) took up permanent residence?

2. Were former SS, SD, Gestapo or German Nazi party members arrested, charged or deported from Canada since 1945 and, if so, how many and what were their names?

3. Are attempts being made to track down and/or prosecute former SS, SD, Gestapo or German Nazi party members living or suspected of living in Canada?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Justice Canada and Employment and Immigration Canada as follows:

1. Canada did not admit for permanent residence any person who admitted or was suspected of having an affiliation with the organizations mentioned. There is no way to determine the number of persons who may have been admitted to Canada without knowledge of such an affiliation.

2. No.

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Government Orders:

February 10, 1982—Second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

Madam Speaker: On Wednesday, February 10, 1982, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raised a point of order in relation to Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. The hon. member expressed concern that the bill contained matters based on ways and means motions and other matters of substance, namely, the authority to borrow money. The hon. member claimed that for that reason the bill is an omnibus bill. It was further argued that each of the two features of the bill calls for two different modes of proceeding through the legislative process.

As hon. members will recall, the practice prior to 1969 was to include a provision for borrowing authority in supply bills. Such bills were discussed under a different supply procedure, giving hon. members ample opportunity to debate all aspects of those bills. This procedure was changed with the adoption of the new supply procedures currently in effect which introduced certain limitations into that process. It was for this reason that my predecessor ruled in favour of removing the borrowing provisions from supply bills.

The same limitations in debate do not prevail under the ways and means procedures. Recently the borrowing provisions were included in bills based on ways and means motions, which I do not find objectionable. As I indicated to the House on January 19, 1981, I have no quarrel with the practice of combining in the same bill taxation matters based on ways and means motion with the borrowing authority, provided the notice provision was respected. In the case of Bill C-93, this requirement has been met, I can find no objection to the bill being proceeded with, and I so rule.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Madam Speaker, this bill implements a number of commitments which had been made to the energy producing provinces. The bill also provides for several technical changes in the federal excise tax system and, as you just said, its purpose is also to obtain new borrowing powers for the fiscal year 1982-83.

Hon. members will recall that last fall, the Government of Canada entered into agreements with Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia on the pricing of oil and natural gas and the sharing of revenue from those resources. The five-year agreements established a price scale for oil and natural gas and provided a sound basis for achieving Canada's energy goals. The bill before the House today consists of three parts. In the first part, the government is seeking borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1982-83. Part II amends the Excise Tax Act by implementing several changes resulting from the energy agreements, as well as technical changes in the federal sales tax system. Part III of the bill amends the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act according to the agreement concluded by the Government of Canada and the oil producing provinces.

Thus, in the first part, the government is seeking borrowing authority for $6.6 billion. Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that all unused borrowing authority, granted under the Borrowing Authority Act, 1981-82 and in excess of $3 billion, will lapse on March 31, 1982. Without new borrowing powers, the government will be unable to obtain the necessary funds to meet its financial requirements for 1982-83. The new borrowing authority for $6.6 billion will cover budgetary and non-budgetary financial requirements for 1982-83 as estimated in the budget tabled in the House last November. We are seeking borrowing powers now so as to have the authority when the new fiscal year starts on April 1, 1982.

Since this borrowing authority bill is directly connected with the budget, I think it would be useful to review the budget's main objectives in light of the economic situation and thus provide a background for evaluating the merits of the bill. The budget's main theme, as hon. members will recall, was that rapidly rising inflation was the main problem in our economy. Inflation tends to push up interest rates, destroy investor confidence and generally slow down economic activity. This in turn leads to a number of problems: rising unemployment, erosion of real income and borrowers saddled with the burden of ever-increasing interest rates. This has indeed been confirmed by the phenomena we have been seeing in Canada; during the past years inflation has accelerated while labour market conditions have failed to improve. To cope with these problems, the government decided to adopt its present policy of waging a persistent battle against inflation. We must reduce inflation if we want our country to realize its growth potential.

The budget has stressed the need for gradually and substantially reducing the government's deficit. With a lower deficit, the government will be able to cut back its demands on the capital markets and leave more room for other borrowers, while relieving pressure on interest rates. The next tax and expenditure control measures set forth in the budget will prevent the deficit from rising to intolerable levels, thus reflecting the government's commitment to fiscal restraint. I recall, Mr. Speaker, that the government has been able to reduce its cash requirements while at the same time providing tax cuts for the vast majority of Canadian citizens. A substantial drop in marginal income tax rates, changes in the federal tax rebate system and continued indexation of individual income tax—all these measures have resulted in lower taxes for most Canadians. Of course, Canadians who have benefited from various tax exemptions, especially those in the higher income bracket, and also some of the large corporations will be paying more taxes as a result of the budget. However, some tax increases were necessary, and they are mostly affecting those Canadians who are best able to absorb them.

The government has also made an effort to restrict growth of government expenditures. It is always difficult to apply such restrictions, especially at a time when the economy is flagging, since government programs tend to meet a wide range of both social and economic needs which are all equally important. Thus, while keeping its expenditures within reasonable limits, the government did not want to make indiscriminate cuts in its budget. The need for a firm but fair policy to fight against inflation, like the one adopted by the government, has become even more apparent in the light of the events that have taken place since the budget was tabled in this House. Inflation rates similar to those experienced last year are keeping interest rates at high levels and causing a pronounced slump in economic activity. Other countries are having to cope with the same problems, and the recession has also affected the United States, Great Britain, Germany, France and Japan. Like Canada, and almost without exception, these countries have admitted that inflation was at the root of their problems, and they have maintained anti-inflationary tax and monetary policies.

In the United States, where the impact of energy prices has been cushioned more quickly than in Canada, inflation has already started to slow down. Of course, this means that with a higher rate of inflation in Canada, our industry is beginning to be less competitive than American companies. We must therefore make every effort to check inflation, otherwise the Canadian industry will lose some of its export markets for good, all the more as further energy price increases are expected in Canada.

Because of higher unemployment in recent months, certain critics have asked the government to provide massive economic incentives. However, they take no heed of the lessons of the recent past which show that there is no quick answer to such basic problems as inflation. These critics would have the government show substantial deficits, unmindful of the consequences that this would have on inflation and on already excessive interest rates. This would mean that the government would have to borrow more money on capital markets, which would create additional upward pressures on interest rates. These same critics reply that this would not necessarily occur since the Bank of Canada can increase the money supply and devaluate the Canadian dollar. However, the government believes, as we have often repeated, that such a policy is shortsighted. It would lead inevitably to a much higher rate of inflation, to higher interest rates and to worse unemployment than is now the case.

The reasonable solution is the one we have chosen. We must not only look at today's figures, but we must also lay the foundations of tomorrow's economy. As I have stated, Mr. Speaker, budgetary and non-budgetary financial requirements for 1982-83 amount to a total of $6.6 billion. In addition to forecast financial requirements, we shall need as usual some margin for contingencies resulting for instance, from exchange operations. In the last few years, this contingency fund has fluctuated around the figure of $3 billion and has normally been added to the total borrowing authority requested. This year, however, these $3 billion or what remains of the borrowing authority for 1981-82 if the difference is lower than $3 billion will not lapse automatically at the end of the fiscal year and may therefore be carried forward. The amount carried forward will therefore represent the contingency margin required for the 1982-83 fiscal year.

The provision to the effect that the government may borrow and repay amounts in a foreign currency is of a technical nature. It was included in the last four borrowing authority bills. Throughout the years, Canada has borrowed and repaid amounts in a number of foreign currencies. This provision was, however, added in the last few years to confirm the right of Canada to borrow any amount in foreign currencies. The government intends to introduce in the near future a bill to amend the Financial Administration Act, including a provision to define the power of the government to borrow and repay any amount in foreign currencies.

Once the amendment has been introduced and passed by Parliament, there will be no need for that kind of provision.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on government borrowing operations since the beginning of the current fiscal year, and the extent of borrowing authorities that have been used. The act that granted borrowing authority for 1981-82 brought new borrowing authority for $14 billion. Hon. members will recall that it was given royal assent on April 8, 1981. From April 8, 1981 to February 1, 1982, the government raised a total of $9,700 million in new funds on the domestic markets. Of that total, $9,600 million came from Canada Savings Bonds and $2 billion from marketable bonds, while net redemptions of treasury bonds lowered by $1,900 million the amounts borrowed that I have just been referring to.

The government raised $300 million on foreign markets through private placement of an issue with the Saudi Arabian monetary authority. Drawings had been made earlier in the year on our renewable line of credit with Canadian banks, but they were all repaid. There is currently no drawing in process on that line of credit nor those opened with U.S. and international banks. Taking into account the bond issue in foreign currencies, by February 1, the government will have used $10,100 million of borrowing authority, leaving an unused balance of $3,900 million. This summary of borrowing operations of the current balance of borrowing authorities should provide hon. members with the information needed for their assessment of this first part of the legislation. Clearly we will have an opportunity, during later discussions, to answer more precise questions and supply further data on these various operations, as called for in the Standing Orders, at a later stage of our proceedings.

Part II of the legislation, as I said in my opening remarks, implements the first ways and means motion, dealing with the Excise Tax Act, which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought down in his budget on November 12, 1981. It provides for three technical amendments concerning the federal sales tax, and also proposes changes to the natural gas and natural gas liquids tax. The hon. members and the public had an opportunity to hear wide discussion of the principles underlying the energy policy of the government of Canada. They are also aware that, thanks to the remarkable work of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), the Canadian government reached an agreement with the main oil producing provinces. The agreements and understandings required certain amendments to the oil and gas taxes, and further to the income tax on oil revenues.

In the bill, federal tax on natural gas exports has been removed, except on natural gas from Canada lands. The zero rate will be in effect during the period from October 1, 1981, until December 31, 1986; in other words, for the duration of the agreements concluded with the producing provinces. The bill also provides for refunding tax on ethane exported during that period. The tax on domestic sales of natural gas will be set in such a way that the wholesale price including tax and cost of transportation to wholesalers in Toronto is about 65 per cent of the average price paid for crude oil by refiners in Toronto. This will be a strong incentive for conversion to natural gas, while consumers already using natural gas will continue to enjoy substantial benefits.

As of January 1, 1982, the tax rate was 42 cents per gigajoule, and it was raised to 63 cents per gigajoule on February 1, 1982. The legislation as it stands now provides for a rate of 56 cents per gigajoule for the entire year. Thus, the rate will largely depend on the blended oil price, which in turn varies according to the international price of oil. The following technical changes have been made in the sales tax system. First of all, the excise tax rate has been lowered on wines of all kinds containing not more than 1.2 per cent absolute ethyl alcohol by volume. Small manufacturers can apply for refunds of sales tax paid on machines and equipment purchased for use in their manufacturing operations.

Finally, the penalty on default of payment of federal sales and excise tax will be raised from 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent per month. Hon. members will recall that in his last budget, the Minister of Finance announced a major change in the sales tax system, namely, that the tax would be applied at the wholesale instead of at the manufacturer's level. This change in the Canadian sales tax system will be considered by hon. members at a later date. In fact, last week, the Minister of Finance said that when the bill was tabled we would have an opportunity to discuss in greater detail all the aspects of this major change in the application of the federal tax. Part III of the bill amends the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. The tax on oil and gas production revenue which was introduced in the National Energy Program on October 28, 1980, will, or rather has been raised from 8 per cent to 16 per cent as of January 1, 1982. However, taxpayers will be able to take advantage of a new resource deduction on all oil and gas production revenue subject to this tax.

The bill also contains a provision allowing for reduction of tax on synthetic oil production projects during the initial years of production. The bill also provides for a tax on incremental oil revenue, which will be applied to production of oil found before 1981. As of January, 1982, this tax will be 50 per cent of incremental revenue, after deduction of related Crown royalties. Incremental revenue occurs because prices for old oil are higher than the prices established in the National Energy Program announced in 1980. Revenue thus taxed will be exempt from income tax. In addition the same tax will be reduced with respect to wells producing less than 20 barrels per month. This reduction, also known as the adjustment for low productivity wells, will be of substantial benefit to producers in Saskatchewan, where many such wells exist.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also includes several minor technical changes designed to lessen the impact of the tax on oil and natural gas revenue. Although removal of the export tax on natural gas will reduce revenue drawn from this resource, all changes included in the energy agreements concluded with the producing provinces will increase revenue received under the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. Thus, the net effect of all these changes will be to reduce the government's financial requirements in the future. The bill will also help bring about a more equitable distribution of the revenue generated by oil and gas production and will provide the industry with sufficient liquid assets while removing the uncertainty that existed before the energy agreements with the provinces were finalized.

In the final instance, Mr. Speaker, the bill constitutes a major component of the government's long-term financial plan, and one of its major aspects as it relates to the energy agreements signed with the producing provinces. I believe that this bill, which implements a number of fiscal changes that have been approved by the provinces and whose purpose is also to seek borrowing authority for the next fiscal year, is fully deserving of the support of this House.

• (1540)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, today I have carefully listened to the minister discuss the direction that this borrowing authority should take, and some of its other, more technical, aspects. Before the minister breaks his arm while patting himself on the back, I just want to ask him to reflect on a few things which are related to this bill and the budget out of which the bill arises.

The budget has put thousands of people out of work. The interest rate policy has been caused over the years by runaway spending and massive deficits. It has forced thousands of people to be laid off and has forced bankruptcies of farmers, fishermen and small-business men. It has caused individual home owners to suffer huge increases in the interest rates on their mortgages. It has caused disruption of their personal budgets as they try to find $200, $300 or $400 to meet their payments. The anger, frustration and anxiety this has caused in the country should be enough to show the minister that he has no grounds whatsoever to justify this display of self-congratulation and self-righteousness. He thinks this is a good bill.

The bill contains the same mistruths as those contained in the budget, the mistruths which do not address the fact that spending is up by 22 per cent. The minister repeated the same statements, the same mistruths which are in the budget, when he said that this is a budget of restraint and that the government has tried to hold back spending. Surely, a 22 per cent increase in government spending while the national economy of a country is growing at a rate of 14 per cent or 15 per cent per annum shows no sign of restraint. The government has been making the same attempt to mislead Canadians by repeating again and again that 12 million Canadians will pay less taxes. Surely by now, all Canadians know that is not true, as people are paying hundreds of dollars more each year through energy taxes, and those are the taxes which they cannot avoid paying. The minister continues to repeat this, even after we have shown his boss, the great deceiver, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), that Canadians do not believe and will not accept those mistruths.

Mr. Deans: How about interest rates?

Mr. Wilson: I will come to interest rates in a few minutes, so do not leave the House.

Mr. Deans: Don't worry!

Mr. Wilson: Today we are once again hearing words with no substance. The minister has made a totally irresponsible statement because he has not addressed the questions which should be addressed by any minister who comes to the House to ask permission to borrow $6.6 billion worth of taxpayers' money. That is what was missing from the statement given today.

There were many questions left unanswered, and I will pose some of those questions to the minister. I hope that when we reach Committee of the Whole and discuss these matters, there will be answers to the questions that I will pose; because if there are no answers, there will be no passage of this bill in the House.

Let us focus on the need for this borrowing authority. I think the fundamental question all Canadian taxpayers are asking themselves is whether the government is effectively using the taxpayers' money and using it with care. There is no indication in the budget or in the statement the minister has just given that the government has any understanding of what is going on out there in the real world. It does not seem to realize that people are losing jobs and are being forced to cut back this spending at the same time as this government is increasing its spending by 22 per cent.

The reason for the deficit and for the borrowing requirement which the minister has requested today on behalf of the government is because spending is increasing by 22 per cent.

Mr. Evans: That's nonsense.

Mr. Wilson: I will come to that. The reason for this spending increase and the deficit which that causes is that there has been a 31 per cent increase in revenues which places a tremendous burden on all Canadians. It is slowing down the economy.

The parliamentary secretary just raised the question of the 22 per cent increase in spending. Again and again, I say to the minister from Hamilton Mountain—

Mr. Deans: Thank you! Just a member!

Mr. Wilson: I will repeat the reason I use the figure of 22 per cent. The minister uses the figure of 16 per cent. He knows that the national accounts increase is 22 per cent. He will not deny that. That is in the budget papers in black and white. Any economist, and I believe that the parliamentary secretary is an economist, will say that that is the broadest way of measuring the impact of the government on the economy.

Mr. Evans: True.

Mr. Wilson: He will also note that in recent years the government has used the device of pulling tax or government spending out of the normal public accounts and putting the money off into many little ones, such as the petroleum compensation fund, the Canadian ownership fund, the Syncrude charge fund and the unemployment insurance fund, and all these little funds which are off here on the side. They are still financed by taxes which all Canadians pay. It is the amount of spending in all those funds, plus the amount of government spending, which has gone up by 22 per cent.

If the minister likes to use 16.3 per cent, which is the figure for public accounts, I ask him to be fair and honest, if that is possible, with the people of Canada and to compare the two years on a comparable basis. He knows that in the year 1980-81, the figure to finance the costs of the import subsidy was something like $2.3 billion. He also knows that for 1981-82, that has been taken out. He cannot deny that, can he?

Mr. Evans: It was still on the same basis, though. They were put in both ways.

Mr. Wilson: Then if we take out the $2.3 billion from the 1980-81 figures and compare the resultant figure for 1980-81 with the comparable figure for 1981-82, what do we come up with? It amounts to a 22.3 per cent increase. Therefore, either way one looks at it, whether it is on public accounts or national accounts, there is still a 22 per cent increase. I challenge hon. members of the government, as I challenged the minister on a couple of occasions and as I challenged the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Busssières), to deny that figure. That is the figure that Canadians believe because they know it is the right figure, and that is the one we will continue to use.

Part of the reason we have been opposing this figure of 22 per cent is that the size of the national economy has been growing by only 14 per cent in this current year. Therefore, people ask what causes inflation. Clearly, if the government is growing 50 per cent faster than the size of the economy, that is inflationary. That has got to put pressure on the resources of this country.

That is why we say there has to be a cutback in government spending. There must be a cutback into the range the minister has talked about for a number of years now, namely, that we must have government spending growing within the rate of growth of the national economy. When has it ever happened? In 1979 when the Progressive Conservatives were in power. Other years it has been way out of whack.

Miss Bégin: When they wanted to cut family allowances.

Mr. Wilson: We never cut family allowances and we still had a figure inside the rate of growth in the economy. The minister should know better than that, if she can understand figures.

There has been no indication in the budget and no indication in the minister's statement on Bill C-93, the borrowing authority, of any attempt to hold back the growth in the spending of the government. It appears to be business as usual.

The minister says they have control of spending, that certain restraints have been put in. What are those restraints? What are the solid indications that this government has any concern at all as to the inflationary impact of the growth on spending that it introduced for this year? There has been no attempt to cut back. When we get to Committee of the Whole, we will want some indication that there is a degree of concern on the part of the government in this area.

I want to know where the government has cut back in the 1981-82 and 1982-83 figures that it had not anticipated in the 1980 budget projections. I would like to know where the cutbacks have taken place, the total amount of the cutbacks and in which individual departments they have taken place. Then we can judge whether the government means what it says when it says this is a budget of restraint.

I would like to know whether they are embarrassed or worried about the 22 per cent increase. I recall a committee meeting before Christmas when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) was presenting supplementary estimates. He told the sorry story of the Consolidated Computer Company. He came to committee to ask for approval to write off $124 million, the total government involvement in that company. At that meeting I asked the minister who were the people responsible for this loss. I asked him four or five times in different ways. Each time I received fuzzy answers. Finally I said to him, "I guess you do not want to tell me who it was, but let me ask you one question: Did you ask who was responsible? Did you ask who had given the advice which led the government to take this large loss of $124 million?" I had to ask the question four times. Each time I received basically a no answer.

The conclusion I came to was that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could not care less about losing the $124 million. All he was interested in was finding a way of sweeping that loss under the carpet so that he would not have to be embarrassed in front of the committee or the media. That is the attitude of this government, that is the attitude reflected in the 22 per cent increase and it is the attitude of the minister when he presents this request for $6.6 billion. He is not concerned about the spending increases of the government. He is just asking for money so he can throw more money after the money he has already spent.

What are the cash requirements today? I listened carefully to the minister who said we need this money to cover the cash requirements in the budget of something like $6.6 billion. Since that time the minister has indicated that the deficit will be increased. He indicated that the economy is growing more slowly than it was at the time the budget was put together. The minister indicated there would be more payments of unemployment insurance and fewer payments coming in as revenue as a result of the weak economy. The tax will not be there because the profits are not there. What has happened? Do we still only have $6.6 billion worth of cash requirements, or is there a change in that figure? The minister did not address himself to that.

This also bears on the question of established programs funding. Since the budget we have had two mistakes by the government concerning what those numbers are. I thought we might have had an update on those. What are the current figures on the established programs funding?

I also wonder about the post office. Are we looking at the same figures? I am told that the president of the Canada Post Corporation said this morning, "Those are not my figures, they are the figures of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance never asked us what deficits in the post office the government would have to cover." Let us look at what the numbers are before the minister asks us for borrowing authority for that amount of money.

We have seen the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) using a little sleight of hand, taking some money out of the unemployment insurance fund, all legitimate and legal, shifting it from here to put in programs there. What impact will that have on the cash requirements of the government? We have no understanding, no sense of confidence that the government is on top of the cash requirements it has today.

On December 18—I am sure members on the Liberal side will remember this for many, many years—they sat embarrassed listening to the Minister of Finance withdraw 17 or 18 parts of the budget which affected 52 or 53 areas of the ways and means motions. Surely that has an impact.

Mr. Evans: Withdraw?

Mr. Wilson: Withdraw. They were massive changes.

Mr. Evans: How many were withdrawn?

Mr. Wilson: I ask the minister to consider what the impact of those changes was and what the dollar amount was. Does it still mean the same cash requirements or will that increase? From my understanding of some of those changes, there will be a substantial increase in the amount of money.

Mr. Evans: He gave you that in the House?

Mr. Wilson: I am looking for the dollar amount. He did not reply to the question as to what the change was going to be for this current fiscal year or the next fiscal year. That is the question we need answered. It has not been answered.

Mr. Blenkarn: He won't answer.

Mr. Wilson: Let me ask another question. Because of the changes brought about by the weakness in the economy and the December 18 changes, has the government made any other cuts in spending? Has it cut back any programs to reflect the fact that the budget deficit will be higher? I ask the minister to bring those answers to Committee of the Whole when we meet there.

Let me raise another point. At the end of August, 1981, there was an important agreement to which the minister referred in his statement, the oil and gas agreement with the provinces. There has been a considerable rethinking on the part of people in the oil and gas industry as well as international economists as to the state of supply and demand of the oil and gas industry internationally. What happened in the international markets has a very important impact on the revenues coming to the federal government as a result of that agreement. I had hoped the minister would reflect on the current thinking of the government in his comments today. Surely he understands that the OPEC countries are watching very carefully at what prices additional sources of oil and additional sources of alternate energy besides oil and natural gas will be brought on. For that reason we should expect there will be some lower prices than was expected at the time that agreement was signed. That again is going to affect the spending and the revenues of the government.

We have no confidence at all that the deficit—the cash requirement—indicated in the budget of November 12 will hold. We have no confidence because of the flip-flopping of the minister and because of the weakness in the economy which he was not on his toes enough to understand would occur, although it already was occurring right below his very feet. These are the questions which must be answered. It is totally irresponsible of the minister to come to the House today and ask for a borrowing authority of $6.6 billion and give us no answers at all to the questions I have just posed.

When I listen to the minister speak, I do not think there is any understanding on his part of what the government will need to borrow by the end of the next fiscal year. I would like to put the government on notice that there will be no approval for this borrowing authority from this side of the House until we get some answers to these questions.

I do not know where the minister has been. When he comes into the House and ignores the basic questions, it is clear that he has missed the message and the furore which have been the result of the budget. The minister has missed that message totally. Canadians are frustrated and angry and they want answers. To date answers have not been given by the minister. Government spending will increase by 22 per cent at least.

Mr. Thacker: That is before supplementary spending.

Mr. Wilson: That is before supplementary spending. But when we get to the bottom line, Canadians will have to pay 31 per cent more in taxes this year and, over a two-year period, 50 per cent will be the increased tax load on Canadians over all. I refer in this respect to this current fiscal year and the next fiscal year. Canadians want answers. The minister is irresponsible because he has not brought those answers to us today.

Mr. Thacker: Canadians need an election.

Mr. Wilson: Let me quote from the economic and financial outlook of Pitfield MacKay Ross because I think it is an important backdrop to what we are talking about today. Pitfield MacKay Ross say:

> The economy is firmly locked into a very serious recession. In a display of monumental bad timing the Canadian authorities have chosen precisely the wrong time to slam on the fiscal and monetary brakes. In the circumstances we expect the current recession to produce the most severe economic setback of the post-war era.

Mr. Peterson: You want to increase the deficit, do you?

Mr. Wilson: What we are talking about here is the level of confidence in the economy as reflected in that statement and as reflected in the concern of Canadians about the outlook for the economy.

Mr. Evans: Who wrote that?

Mr. Peterson: You want to increase the deficit, do you?

Mr. Wilson: That was written by a firm, the brother of a partner of which is secretary to the Privy Council.

Mr. Evans: McLeod Young Weir?

Mr. Wilson: Pitfield MacKay Ross. Pitfield. The hon. member has heard the name before.

Mr. Cullen: A great Canadian.

Mr. Peterson: Do you subscribe totally to what they are saying?

Mr. Wilson: A question the minister merely touched on but did not really address is the Canada Savings Bonds debacle of last year. We as Canadian taxpayers were asked to support a 19.5 per cent interest rate on Canada Savings Bonds. In October, before the Canada Savings Bonds campaign was well along, we asked in this House whether the rate could be changed. We asked if it could be reduced because, we said, otherwise it would cause tremendous problems. The minister said it could not be reduced. He kept the interest rate at 19.5 per cent. He forced interest rates up and kept them up on other instruments. As a result of that very generous rate, he also sucked an abnormal amount of savings out of the private sector where they would have created jobs and reduced the unemployment level we have today. That money was used for government spending. That decision was very inflationary.

That Canada Savings Bonds move created an enormous debt management nightmare. Canada Savings Bonds were issued in 1978, 1979, 1980 and 1981 and, as a result, the total amount outstanding is now about $20 billion. We had a policy—and this goes back five or six years—of reducing reliance on Canada Savings Bonds in over-all debt management operations because it is effectively demand money, and I believe it was in 1979 that the Conservative government got into a box because of the debt management problem left to it by the Liberal governments of previous years. During the period from, I believe, 1975, the proportion of Canada Savings Bonds to the national debt dropped from 38 per cent to 20 per cent. It got down to a more manageable figure. However, what has happened as a result of the debacle last fall? The proportion of Canada Savings Bonds as a percentage of the over-all debt outstanding is now back up to 38 per cent. We are back to where we started. Canada Savings Bonds are costing us 19.5 per cent and will present to future governments a tremendous debt management problem as they try to manage this great big lump which will have to be renewed each year, year in and year out, at a very substantial cost to the taxpayers of this country. I was hoping the minister would respond to that concern. I thought we might hear some explanation as to whether this is a new policy of the government and whether it is planning to return to the bad old days of a heavy reliance on demand money, but there is complete silence. Why were there no comments on that today?

I wonder whether part of the answer to this is to be found in the section of this bill dealing with the excise tax and the production tax, or the PGRT. I do not think the minister commented on this. I missed part of his comments, but I do not think he even made reference to this. In the excise tax section of Bill C-93 we see that the maximum tax per gigajoule of natural gas is increased from 75 cents to $4. I do not believe the minister gave us an explanation as to why, but the import of this is that that $4 tax will raise $8 billion in taxes from Canadian taxpayers. What is the reason for raising this tax now? I could understand increasing the tax from 75 cents to $1.25 or $1.50 or perhaps even $2. However, at $4 the ceiling clearly is too high, unless the government has something in its hip pocket with which to surprise us. There is no discussion of the reason. There is no explanation to the taxpayers of this country. The minister ignored this matter—or chose to ignore it—and to me that is the height of arrogance. It is the ultimate insult to the Canadian taxpayers to increase this tax and to give absolutely no reason for doing so. That surely is another question which could be discussed by members of the Liberal Party in Committee of the Whole.

In the 1980 budget these two taxes, the excise tax on natural gas and the production tax—the PGRT—were introduced. At that time members of the Conservative Party opposed those taxes. We said they would be very damaging to the future outlook for energy in this country. We said that the energy security of this country would be severely damaged by the extent of those taxes. We fought hard, but we lost because we have a majority government. However, I would like at this time very briefly to review the impact of the national energy policy and those two taxes on the energy industry in the country today.

Drilling completions are down 26 per cent from 1980 to 1981; exploration spending is down 22 per cent from 1980 to 1981; production per day is down a small amount, 100,000 barrels per day. The impact of this lower spending on exploration and drilling will be seen perhaps not this year, but two, three, four or five years from now. Future generations will suffer from the shortcomings of these policies.

The reason for the setback in the development of the industry is that the cash flow of the industry has dropped by 35 per cent. Money that had previously been spent to develop future natural resources has been translated into government spending dollars which have been wasted. It is just throwing good money after bad with this 22 per cent increase in spending.

In principle we support the Canadianization policy but we cannot support the fundamental approach that has been taken by this government because it has scared money out of the country in a serious way. I will come back to this subject later, Mr. Speaker.

There has been a small increase in the amount of Canadian ownership of the industry but it has been at vast cost to Canadians because of the way it was done. I shall also come back to that subject.

The rigs that have left the country represent about $1 billion of investment that has moved quietly from Alberta to Wyoming, Texas or Oklahoma and other states where those rigs are wanted and will be good for that country. They left this country because there is no work here. At the present time, 73 rigs are down and 187 have left the country, making a total of 260 either sold or shut down. That represents 40 per cent of the rigs that were in Canada on the night the National Energy Program was introduced.

In addition, the Cold Lake heavy oil project has been put on the back burner. About a year ago I said it was cancelled but the minister said it was just postponed. It has been effectively cancelled. The Alsands project is hanging in the balance as a result of the heavy tax load and other circumstances that have changed. These are two major projects and would represent about 10 per cent of our national income if they were to go ahead.

The government has frittered these opportunities away and this will cost jobs in Alberta, in Hamilton, in Toronto, in Windsor, Montreal, Ste. Thérèse and other places in eastern Canada. This is important now that so many people have been laid off, and the conclusion is that it has been a tremendous disaster for the whole country.

For years the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have ignored the problem of the deficit. The statements of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about our policies when we formed the government are still ringing in my ears. They said that we had too great a preoccupation with the size of the deficit; that we had a fixation on the size of the deficit; that we spent too much time concerning ourselves about it. They ridiculed the 1979 budget because we were concerned about living within our means and getting the deficit down to a reasonable size.

I think it is clear to all Canadians today why we felt getting that deficit down was so important; it represents a tremendous weight on the economy of the country and for too many years now we have seen it grow. Some time ago the cost of financing the deficit and the accumulated debt was some 10 per cent or 12 per cent of government spending. In the current year the cost of financing the federal government debt is 21 per cent, so one dollar out of five is dead weight money.

Any Canadian who has seen the cost of financing his own debt, whether it is a mortgage, a loan on a car, a Visa account or whatever, knows the problem of debt load and the cost of financing it. Spending on interest provides no satisfaction; it does not put food on the table, a roof over one's head, a car in the garage, clothes on one's back or anything like that. It is dead weight spending. Canadians now understand that one dollar in five is spent by this government on dead weight deficits that have been accumulating over the years.

Canadians all across the country are scrambling to get out of debt. They are paying their debts off, any chance they get. But there is a 22 per cent increase in spending by the government which has not learned what it is like to live in the real world where debt has to be financed without raising taxes.

Let us examine what is going on in the United States where they are terrified at the level of their deficit this year and predict that next year it could be in excess of $100 billion. They are trying to find ways to cut expenditures and keep down the size of the deficit. With the normal ten or 12 to one relationship between the United States and Canada, a $100 billion deficit in that country would mean about a $13 billion deficit in this country. Yet there is no sense of our government trying to find ways to save money. That is why I have asked the minister, and I hope he will listen, if he can demonstrate where efforts are being made to cut spending. All we have are the empty words in his speech and in the speech of the Minister of Finance.

I should also like to refer to the spending growth in the United States because I think that is instructive as well. In 1981 it was 13 per cent and in this country it was 22 per cent; in 1982 it was 10 per cent in the United States and 13 per cent or 14 per cent here; and according to forecasts we may even face higher figures.

The federal government is the largest single entity in the country, the largest borrower. When it has to borrow large sums of money it crowds out individuals, small business, medium-sized business, farmers, fishermen and even big business, and these people become afraid of the situation.

I should like to quote some comments made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I think it is important that we understand why it is necessary to cut back on government borrowing—so that we can free up the resources of the country that the private sector may borrow. The Governor of the bank said that restraint on investment is felt through various channels, one of which is that the fiscal deficit absorbed savings that could otherwise be channelled by financial markets into financing the expansion of plant and equipment. He said that this could militate against the increases in productivity and income that capital formation makes possible.

What he is really saying, Mr. Speaker, is that borrowing by the private sector—individuals, small, medium and large-sized companies—enables those companies to make themselves more competitive, more productive, more able to employ people and more able to create jobs in this country. Surely the government understands the importance of creating jobs when there are 1.1 million people out of work today. Business survives on long-term capital.

We heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) talk about the importance of lower cost and stable capital to the agricultural community. Those same words can be used in respect of any sector of the economy. What has happened in recent years, because huge deficits were built up by the government, is that the stability, availability and cost of long-term capital has been thrown totally out of whack. If businessmen, farmers, fishermen and individuals do not have access to capital, it will make for a very disruptive economy.

In order to draw this down to a level which anyone in the House can understand, today we heard complaints about the fact that mortgage money is not available for 20 or 25-year terms. It is my understanding that there are only three institutions which will make five-year money available in the form of mortgages for the purchase of homes. If Canadians are faced with the possibility of buying homes but not knowing what the mortgage rate will be in one year or two years, it is similar to playing Russian roulette; it is a large crap shoot in Las Vegas. They do not know what will be the cost of their biggest asset.

This is why we must have stability in the financial markets of the country. It is not big business people who suffer in this regard; it is people who borrow to purchase homes, or small businessmen who must finance businesses which provide employment for people. If they do not have the benefit of stable financial markets, it will make a very difficult economic environment within which to operate. The real crunch is on farmers, fishermen, small-business men and home owners. We should be concerned about those people. It is very clear to them why the Conservative Party has stressed the importance of keeping the federal government deficit within the bounds of the financial markets of the country and within its financial capacity. Clearly it has not done so for a number of years.

I should like to talk about one other aspect of federal government deficits, and that is its impact upon future generations. We all know that a deficit is simply a deferral of taxes. The government has expenditures of some $70 billion and it has revenues coming in of $57 billion. Clearly tax revenues are not sufficient to cover spending, thus $13 billion of deficit is borrowed. Is it lost forever? Not on your life! What happens when $13 billion is borrowed this year at 15 per cent per annum? In five years' time, in 1987, it will become $26 billion; by 1992 it will become $52 billion; by 1997 it will become $104 billion. One could apply that calculation to next year's deficit or the deficit of the year after. They pile up one on top of the other. Some of us who are in the House today may not be around in the year 2000 to pay the load of these deferred taxes; it will be our children who will pay. The legacy we are leaving for younger people, who are having a hard enough time finding jobs because of the shortcomings of government policy, is that they will be suffering from the shortcomings of the same policy in 1995, 2005, and so on. This is why we must get on top of the deficits of today.

Again I ask the minister why the government is so casual about its attitude toward deficit and spending control. I looked at the home owner renewal program of the recent budget wherein the government very generously provided a guarantee for a home owner if he does not have sufficient income to pay his mortgage payments because his payments are more than 30 per cent of his income. The government said that it would provide a guarantee so that he could borrow. I think Canadians are too smart for this. They have seen the government doing it year in and year out, and they have seen the impact of a government which now pays $1 in $5 in interest. They know that if they defer some of their interest payments for one, two, three, five or ten years at 15 per cent, 18 per cent or 20 per cent, the same thing will happen to them. But they understand why the government is so casual in presenting such a program; it is the manner in which the government has lived for the last ten years. It encourages the home owner to put himself more and more into debt, as has the government.

I think this is the best illustration we can give to government of why it is wrong to present a bail-out program for individual home owners. Surely it should look no further than at what happened with its own financial position before asking individual home owners to put themselves in the same financial position by deferring debt and expenses for years into the future and by letting them compound at 15 per cent or 20 per cent per annum. It is criminal to ask Canadians to do this. I do not think any home owner will be too anxious to take this snake oil because they know the results.

I should like to talk about some of the problems we are facing and about some of the ways of solving them. We on this side of the House have been asked on a number of occasions what we would do differently or how we would attack the problems of today. I think the difference becomes clearer every day. On many occasions I have referred to increasing attempts by the Liberal government to gain more and more control or power over the big levers of the economy. We have seen how pushing the economy into the dirt, raising interest rates to enormously high levels and forcing cutbacks in the economy have forced people into positions where they must come to the government to ask for help and for programs to tide them over these very difficult times. We do not want to see it done that way. We want to reverse the direction we have been going in recent years. We want to make a change which will return spending power to Canadians and will release the tremendous energy of the free enterprise system. We have confidence in the free enterprise system.

How can we do this? How can we come up with a way which will lead to a reduction in inflation, to an increase in growth in the economy and to more job creation? There are no perfect solutions or comparisons, but I should like to look at what happened in Japan and Germany for some inspiration. During the 1970s, these two countries had the strongest currencies and the lowest levels of inflation of any industrialized country in the world. This is no real surprise because those two factors are mutually supportive. We know that a strong currency is a sign of good government. Canada by contrast has seen its currency drop from a value of $1.03 in 1976 in terms of the United States dollar to 80 cents in the current market. We also saw last year, in contrast to these other currencies, that Canada suffered a massive capital outflow, some six times the levels of the 1970s. I should point out that a large part of that outflow was dynamic equity capital, the capital that creates jobs. It is the entrepreneurial, risk-taking capital that has left the country. To offset that Canada has had to put up interest rates two or three percentage points higher than they should be to attract not the entrepreneurial capital but fixed income. This is passive capital, the capital that does not create jobs anywhere near the extent the risk-taking capital does, the capital that has left the country.

The reason for the outflow of this capital is federal government policy that has been in place for the past two years. We have seen the energy program and what that has done for the country. We have seen the tremendous lack of confidence which investors, businessmen and individuals have in this government on the policies it has been pursuing over the past two years. We have seen the unfriendly attitude of this government toward risk-takers, and capital formation has forced that money out of the country. As a result a tremendous load has been put on all Canadians. Canada has to keep those intest rates two or three percentage points higher than they need be. That is a tremendous burden, not only upon the people who have been forced to take the money out of the country and upon all Canadians who are financing a business or a mortgage, but also upon large companies that are trying to build major projects. The toll is measured in human suffering. It is measured in the loss of a job, bankruptcy or the renewal of a mortgage at ten or more points higher. In addition to this we have the broad slowdown seen in the economy.

Some people have said let the dollar drop. Some people have said let the dollar go and do not worry about the inflationary aspects of doing that. I say that is the wrong way to go. That is the easy way out. It might shield us from those problems for one or two years, but then we will be back to where we started unless we introduce fundamental policies that will get us back on the rails again.

We need those policies today. We should not give ourselves the short-term palliative of letting the dollar drop and letting interest rates drop. If we do that and the dollar drops as low as 75 cents in terms of the U.S. dollar, then we are faced with having to get interest rates back up. What have we changed? We have changed nothing except for a large increase in costs in the imports that are needed in Canada.

We should introduce some policies to restore the level of confidence in the country that will encourage Canadians and foreigners to bring back that money which they took out over the past year or year and a half. We can then revive our dollar, giving us the flexibility to drop interest rates to the level they should be and so they are more consistent with the economic circumstances in this country. That is the direction we should be going. We should take the pressure off our dollar and have our own made-in-Canada interest policy.

How can we do this? First, we have to maximize the involvement of the private sector. The private sector is the sector in this country that creates jobs. If we look at every statistic in Canada we will see that employment growth in the government sector has been pretty well flat over the last ten years. Growth takes place in the private sector. It is in the private sector now where job creation has dropped out of sight as a result of all the lay-offs caused by the interest rate policy of this government. We have to avoid the direct massive spending programs which the New Democratic Party would have us introduce. They will lead only to more inflation in this country. Let us encourage the private sector.

Second, we have to recognize the anti-investment nature of this budget. It will continue to push money out of the country. That direction must be reversed. We have to reintroduce some of the incentives that were taken away by the budget, incentives that have performed a valuable role over the past five or ten years.

How do we do that? Again, I have to keep coming back to the runaway spending that we have in this country. If we can cut back a little on government spending, more money will flow to the private sector where it will create more jobs, not more taxes.

Next we have to get on with megaprojects. These projects are tremendously important to all parts of the country. Let us have a positive attitude on the part of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and get these projects moving. He should not sit back and concern himself too much with legal aspects and the nuts and bolts of negotiations. He should be taking the broader view of what these projects can do for Canada.

We have a crisis in housing. In my view we have to reverse four key budget measures which have done so much damage to the housing industry. We should enhance the capital cost allowance. We have to take a look at the Foreign Investment Review Agency. We should try to change the nature of FIRA. The government is playing a schizophrenic role. We have heard from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance. On the one hand, they say we have tremendous capital requirements in this country. On the other hand, they make statements that scare foreign money away. Let us take a look at what our objectives are with foreign investment. We should get our act together. If we have money coming in from other countries, we should bring it in under our terms and encourage it. We should not be discouraging it through these malicious statements being made by members of the government.

Federal-provincial relations in this country are probably at an all-time low today, if they are not already at that point. I would say that is the single, most important element in the lack of confidence of individual Canadians and foreigners who consider investing their money in Canada. When people see that the Government of Canada and the provincial governments cannot get together and agree on some of the basic requirements of this country, people say "Let's try elsewhere". That is one of the reasons so much money left Canada last year.

We have to recognize the tremendous importance and the potential of research and development in this country. Canadians can compete. We have proven ourselves through companies such as Mitel Corporation, Northern Telecom Limited and Canadian General Electric. These companies have competed worldwide.

Mr. Cullen: What about Petro-Canada?

Mr. Wilson: Petro-Canada has not competed yet with the rest of the world. These other companies have competed and they have proved they can do it. We heard in the special committee on the budget that the environment for risk-taking investment—and we have to recognize that research and development entails a tremendous degree of risk—is poor and the budget has made it worse. We have to reverse the measures in the budget which have had that effect. We have to turn them around. We have to get a positive attitude in that industry so that we can see some growth and development coming from that part of the industry.

I see the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) is in the House. One of the other areas in which we should do better is in trade promotion. I congratulate the Minister of State for International Trade on the efforts he has made in improving the profile of the government in that field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I think the minister will agree with me when I say that the government's profile was dismal prior to May, 1979. We have to recognize that we still have a long way to go in the manufacturing sector. We now have a $23 billion deficit, up from $3 billion ten years ago. That represents a tremendous loss of jobs and development. The same thing is taking place in the United States, Germany, Japan and so on. We have to change that situation.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we can turn the atmosphere around and increase the confidence level through a combination of these policies, Canadians will start believing in their country again and that we have and can build a future in Canada. We can increase productivity and see a higher value Canadian dollar, which will allow us to drop interest rates. That combination of factors will result in lower interest rates, lower inflation and certainly a much more productive economic environment. That is the direction we have to go. We have to get hold of ourselves to go in that direction, and I think the combination of policies I have set out will allow us to reach that potential.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason I believe Bill C-93 and the minister's statement are so disappointing, so irresponsible today, is that the bill does nothing to rebuild that sense of confidence which has been so shattered in recent years and which is so necessary if we are to attain that growth. We have to have a return of confidence if we are to see a return of capital into this country. The return of dynamic job-creating capital to Canada would allow us to reduce these painful lay-offs which have been so damaging to our economic future. I say to you: Is it any wonder that Canadians, faced with this picture and with the statement that has just been made, are asking themselves why the Minister of Finance does not resign?

Tabling of Documents

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Municipal Affairs—Application of grants in lieu of taxes program; the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Education—Federal funding for post-secondary education (b) Level of funding; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—Mines and Mining—Loan to Peru for copper mining venture (b) Creation of jobs in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I tabled two documents which were supposed to be the last two safety inspection reports relating to the Ocean Ranger drilling platform. I inadvertently tabled the report of January 6 rather than January 21. Consultations have taken place with the opposition parties and with your permission I would like to revert to tabling of documents and have the authorization to table this third document.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the minister to revert to tabling of documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DISASTERS

TABLING OF INSPECTION REPORT ON "OCEAN RANGER" DRILLING RIG

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a document dated January 21, 1982, entitled "Safety Inspection Report on Offshore Drilling Operations", to be added to the two documents tabled this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure this afternoon to speak to Bill C-93. I must say that I enjoyed listening to the comments of the lonely cheerleader, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières), as he attempted to pat himself and his party on the back by outlining the positive nature of seeking authority to borrow $6.6 billion. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that while he went on to indicate that the Liberal way of approaching the financial problems facing Canada is the way of reason, I am certain I speak for all members on this side of the House when I say it appears to us that their approach is the way toward economic treason in terms of combating the financial challenges facing us today.

Since this bill, Mr. Speaker, includes three quite separate areas for consideration, and considering the time constraints placed on us, I am going to focus my attention on only one section of the bill, that having to do with the borrowing authority for $6.6 billion. I think anyone who is appreciative of the financial and economic concerns of Canada today, anyone aware of the assumptions which went into the creation of the budget, will recognize that current money supply is certainly inadequate to meet the government's cash requirements for the 1982-83 fiscal year.

There is, Mr. Speaker, an old song we would all recognize which extols the virtue of the west. One of the lines in that song is "Where seldom is heard a discouraging word". Well, I can guarantee, Mr. Speaker, that that no longer applies today in western Canada, eastern Canada, northern and central Canada. Discouraging words are the words of the day. Words of pessimism, disillusionment, unbelief and anger are the kinds of words you hear spoken throughout our country when it comes to discussing, describing and explaining the economic programs of the Liberal government.

I have just returned from four days in my riding, a riding which is famous for its rather frontier-like mentality. By that I mean an atmosphere of enthusiasm, optimism, faith in the future by people who assume that next year will be better than this year, that the lives of their children will be better than their own lives. It is a real and built-in sense of optimism which has prevailed in our part of Canada for many, many years. However, Mr. Speaker, that atmosphere of optimism and hope in the future has been thoroughly dashed by the policies of this government, particularly the November 12 budget.

During the last four days, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to meet with a number of young people in my riding. I want to tell you it was very disappointing to talk with them and hear that they plan to drop out of school, that they see little hope in continuing their formal education because people they see with advanced degrees and professional and technical training are unemployed, and there appears to be little room for optimism over future employment. These people are despondent and thoroughly fed up with the kind of economic and political leadership coming from their leaders throughout the country.

I talked with senior citizens also, Mr. Speaker, and the central theme of their gatherings is people discussing and describing today's conditions as they relate to their memories of the 1930s, that in fact these are depression years. They talk about the eventuality of soup lines, about the loss of farms and homes, the kind of discussion they recall from their youth.

I have spoken with miners, loggers and cattlemen. A level of frustration exists in their area of the country which is quite different from other parts of the country. These people are directly attached to the resources of Canada, the grasslands, the mines and the forests, and they know what potential exists in those resources. The mills are closing, the mines are closing, and the cattlemen are unable to make any decent return from their grassland operations. This has resulted in an incredible level of frustration, anger and bitterness directed at governments and political leaders generally.

I spoke with women and heard their tales of woe concerning their attempts to keep their families from falling apart, how they worked to keep some semblance of a home and family life when the main breadwinner had been thrown out of work, and when their children were disillusioned with their school studies. Women have attempted to assist the economics of their family operation by attempting to find work but have been unable to do so.

Again, the level of family strain was reflected in a report this morning in The Globe and Mail concerning the city of Kamloops. The report described the unbelievable situation concerning crime rates. In the major population centre of Kamloops, the crime rate is now twice the provincial average. Sexual offences have jumped by 71.8 per cent over last year. Weapons offences jumped by 71.4 per cent over last year. Robberies were up in excess of 10 per cent. The local RCMP detachment, which blames the economy for the increase in robberies, solved only about one in four of the more than 10,000 crimes in a city of less than 70,000 folks. The mayor blamed the economic stresses of the Kamloops area for the increase in sexual and violent offences. Again, this kind of straining of the social fabric of Canadian society is a direct result of the economic conditions in which we find ourselves today.

If one meets with the officials in human resources and the CEICD offices, they will outline the difficulties they face while trying to provide for people qualified for unemployment insurance. They are experiencing backlogs of hundreds and hundreds of cases. People are forced to go to the welfare offices when, in fact, they ought to be receiving cheques from the UIC. A strain is placed on the provincial coffers as a result of federal inaction and inactivity. When one speaks with small-business men, one finds that there is no longer any discussion of expansion of small business. There is no more discussion with regard to hiring and moving into new areas or attempts at new entrepreneurial activities. It is really a matter of survival, just hanging on and praying that those interest rates will be dropping in the next few weeks or months. However, these businessmen know full well, from what they read or hear in the media, that interest rates are likely to go even higher in the forthcoming months.

These are direct human responses to the economic challenges and problems facing us. I suppose another aspect which is becoming more interesting all the time is the underground economy, as people work to do an end run around the traditional economy and move away from the recording of transactions into a cash society, again to avoid the tax man and to avoid being part of the regular economy.

Why do people want to avoid paying taxes? Why is it that most popular bestsellers in the bookstores at this time of the year outline ways and means to beat tax men and avoid paying taxes? The reason is that the people of Canada have lost faith in what the government is doing. They have lost faith that the $6.6 billion which is being requested here today will be well spent in the best interest of Canadians. They feel it will be spent in the best interests of a select group of Canadians.

Mr. Evans: Do you think it could be because tax rates are too high?

Mr. Riis: The Liberals wanted a fiscal policy which supported their tight money policy. Indeed, in this budget we have seen a fiscal policy which does compliment the monetarist policy. Their high interest rates deterred investment in housing, and we all know that accommodation is not being built today across Canada. Just this morning, HUDAC indicated another drop in construction of thousands of units over the same period last year, which again was a year in which housing starts were at an all-time low.

What does the budget do? It makes the situation worse. The budget brings in measures to reduce housing starts further by eliminating the deduction for soft costs and the deduction of interest in excess of investment income. In other words, the fiscal policy compliments the monetarist policy by strangling any potential for accommodation construction in Canada.

Mr. Evans: What in the world are you doing down in that corner of the House?

Mr. Riis: We have a monetary policy in our country which results in increased indebtedness to foreigners.

Mr. Evans: What's he doing in the NDP?

Mr. Riis: We have a monetarist policy which makes it attractive for foreigners to come into our country to invest, and the government brings in a budget which makes it attractive for foreigners to come in to purchase small firms and large firms in Canada. The Liberals like to increase the indebtedness of our country for the sake of reducing the indebtedness of the government. They bring in a monetarist policy which results in unfair and inequitable distribution of wealth. Money goes from the borrowers to the lenders. The budget results in a concentration of corporate ownership. Again, one could say that the Liberals prefer to see an increase in inequality in society for the sake of supposedly greater equity in the national income accounts.

Our government's fiscal and monetary policies are absolutely perverse. We have heard from the previous hon. member that incentive for investment has certainly been destroyed in our country. There have been rather cavalier attempts at destroying incentives here and there simply for the sake of curtailing a number of extreme abuses. Again, there was an attempt at tax reform which was certainly introduced in a rather ad hoc way through the November 12 budget.

We see in the policies of this government a real paradox and hyprocisy. The Liberals proudly display their bookkeeping accomplishments, or, in other words, their reduced borrowing requirements, while the same policies which make such reduction possible greatly increase the borrowing requirements and debts of ordinary Canadians. We have seen a massive transfer of debt from the federal sector to the municipal and provincial sectors. I do not think that the wool has been pulled over anyone's eyes.

I listened with great interest to the Tories who spoke on this borrowing authority bill, and I must say that I hear their howls as rather hollow howls—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: —in that just the other day, the finance critic for the Tories said, in a sense, that they support the approach of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), that they support the high interest rates, and that if they had the opportunity to be in government they would make them even higher.

Mr. Blenkarn: He didn't say that at all. You know that is not so.

Mr. Riis: He said that they would cut back even more because they pursue the policies of Ronald Reagan in the United States.

Mr. Blenkarn: He didn't say that, either.

Mr. Riis: I will quote him.

Mr. Blenkarn: Quote the whole thing, now.

Mr. Riis: He said, "What we would be doing, and will do once we are in power, is to follow the policies of Ronald Reagan".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: Shame on you!

Mr. Riis: I think that makes it pretty clear. I think it clarifies what we in the NDP have been saying for a long time. We have been saying there is very little difference in the monetarist policies from across the way and those of our friends here to the right.

Mr. Kaplan: They've just been saying the opposite.

Mr. Riis: I noticed with interest that the Tory finance critic said that we must pray. God knows, we must pray. He said we must pray that Ronald Reagan is successful because, if not, we will have a tough time selling our policies to Canadians. You bet he will, and they will. They will have a tough time selling Reaganomics to Canadians at the rate they are going in the United States. That is an appropriate term—"at the rate they are going in the United States". Most financial analysts and economists are now predicting that interest rates this summer could be as high as 25 per cent in the United States. With the trends that we see across the way and from our colleagues to our right, our rates will be closer to 30 per cent if that is the case.

● (1700)

It is all right to say that we must hang in on those particular policies. That is okay for some folks, but what about the 1.8 million people who are not working today? What about the hundreds of thousands of people on fixed incomes? Are they able to ride out another two or three years of this policy as we experiment with people's lives to see if this economic policy works?

Our monetary policy has been in place in Canada since 1976. It has been in place because we wanted to bring down the rate of inflation. I ask anyone in this House, has the rate of inflation come down during that period? As interest rates have gone up, so has inflation. Surely we are not prepared to continue with this mindless approach to solving our economic problems, as the Liberals suggest we ought and as the Tories suggest we ought to accelerate.

We have a long way to go. Perhaps the best indication of the serious problems facing us when it comes to investor or consumer confidence is that people know the government is not spending their tax dollars wisely. How do they know? They know that from reading the Auditor General's report for the period ending March 31, 1981. The Auditor General makes a number of interesting comments. Let me quote just a few. He said:

> In my view, the accounting policies which the government follows result in a significant overstatement of reported assets and understatement of reported liabilities.

That is why we say that the deficit is increasing. While at this moment we are asking for authority to borrow $6.6 billion, because of this statement we know full well that that figure will be much higher. The Auditor General went on to say:

> —since many government activities are carried out by organizational entities which are not "departments", significant assets, liabilities, revenues and expenditures are excluded from the financial statements.

That was the point being made an hour ago by the finance critic for the Conservative Party. He indicated that a number of the figures that we heard from the government benches in terms of government spending are in fact inaccurate and that government spending is occurring at a rate much higher than they are prepared to admit.

The Auditor General also said no generally accepted accounting principles are appropriate for governments in Canada. He goes on to say his own office has been presenting its estimates in such a way that he was struck immediately by the fact that our stated objective was incomplete and out of date.

What are the objectives of this government? What are its objectives in terms of spending $6.6 billion? We heard the other day that the government felt it was in the best interests of the taxpayers of Canada and the Canadian economy to invest $100 million in a copper mine in Peru. The 1,500 people in the copper industry who have been laid off will find that hard to understand.

Mr. Fulton: It is 4,000 now.

Mr. Riis: Up to 4,000 when you consider the auxiliary areas. It is hard to understand in my own riding, the copper centre of Canada. We have hundreds of people unemployed. There are hiring freezes in all the mines. A number of small mines are looking toward government support to enable them to open their operations. They find that $100 million at 11 per cent is going to help the Peruvians. It is hard to understand the logic behind that; indeed, there probably is no logic at all.

The one area where we in the NDP differ from the other parties is that we have some viable solutions. I want to talk about the most fundamental solution to our economic crisis today. We have heard a great deal about the need for increased confidence in the economy, that we must send a clear signal out to our domestic capital markets as well as foreign markets that Canada is a good place in which to invest. At the moment that is about as far from the truth as it could possibly be. Who has confidence in the next ten years in our country, or even in the next ten weeks? There is so much indecision, instability, unknown factors, a continuously changing economic climate as a result of government policy, that no one is particularly interested in investing in the future of this country right now. Why should anyone be with the returns one can get on their money from Canada Savings Bonds or simply from putting their money in short and long-term deposits? Why take a risk? Why take a chance when you can be guaranteed returns of 15 per cent and 20 per cent?

Mr. Blenkarn: How about 19½ per cent from the government?

Mr. Riis: Or 19½ per cent from the government, as the hon. member indicates. Why take a risk when you can simply put your money into a secure situation and collect that kind of return?

We can be confident that there are solutions and that we can act very quickly. I ask hon. members to consider for a moment that when our country finds itself in a state of war, in a matter of hours we bring into effect a whole set of contingency plans. Things begin to happen overnight. I suggest it is time to declare war on the economic crisis facing this country, and move accordingly.

Something we must do before all else is to clearly map out an economic or industrial statement, strategy or blueprint for our country which has the co-operation of not only the federal government, but of all provincial governments, local governments, industry and labour.

As we sit here today, it is relatively clear in our own minds what that particular economic and industrial strategy ought to include. It must include three key factors. It must include what I like to call a key input industry sector, those industries supplying input into key sectors of our economy. There are three—housing, transportation and food. I choose those three sectors because that is where between 80 and 85 per cent of investment goes—food, housing and transportation. If we were to identify those three critical sectors as sectors where government investment will be taking place alongside private investment, it would send a clear signal out for all people interested in investing in the future of Canada.

My friends to the right claim that we in the NDP are interested in spending money, always taking money and throwing it away. I would like to challenge that. What we are advocating is not a need to spend money but to invest it. There is certainly a difference. We might class $100 million to Peru as spending money, but $100 million invested in the food industry of Canada would be a financial investment, not financial spending. It is not a matter of additional dollars but a reallocation of funds. The money is there now, being used in rather peculiar ways. What we advocate is that that money be reallocated into areas where we are bound to receive a productive return.

• (1710)

A second proposal in terms of a comprehensive economic strategy would be the strengthening of basic "building block" industries. Many are located outside the country, but these industries supply inputs to other industries which supply final products. I refer to the chemical industry, the creation of telecommunications equipment, the creation of industrial machinery and equipment, the forest industry, mining and small scale power generation. We in the New Democratic Party are not convinced that the economic future of Canada depends on megaprojects. The best investment in our energy future is not necessarily a massive influx of both private and public funds into megaprojects at this point. Putting all our eggs into that one basket in these particular times is taking a great risk indeed. With these "building block" industries we could move into a third area; Canadians would be able to specialize and develop export-oriented industries.

We in this country have a number of strategic economic advantages other countries do not have. We can identify areas in the energy sector. We can identify areas in the resource sector. We have financial ability. We have human expertise. There is a number of areas in which Canadians have a natural strategic advantage in terms of developing specialized products which serve not only our domestic market but also markets around the world. We have seen that we can compete in a number of areas. Telecommunications is one of the obvious ones. Transportation is another one. Canadians have been world leaders in relation to both rail and aircraft. With a very clearly articulated strategy which would have the support of industry, labour and the three levels of government, I suspect that would send a clear signal out to investors both within Canada and beyond that this is the place to invest money and that such investment would result in long-term and stable returns.

At the same time we could begin talking about reduced interest rates. The fear of many people is that by reducing interest rates, let us say to one point above the inflation rate, the result would be a mass hemorrhage of capital out of our country. Why is there not a mass hemorrhage of capital out of Japan? Why would anybody invest in Japan where interest rates are in the 6 per cent to 8 per cent range, when they can invest in Canada with our interest rates being what they are?

Mr. Evans: Because their inflation rate is 2 per cent to 4 per cent.

Mr. Riis: One of the reasons, of course, is that when we invest in major manufacturing enterprises in Canada and when we invest in our resources sector, we are investing our money not for two weeks or two years, but for 20 years or 50 years into the future. I say that interest rates are simply one factor in that decision-making process. If we in our country can provide an atmosphere of confidence, if we can provide very clear signals that we have a very well thought out and clearly defined and credible industrial strategy, and if we reduce interest rates to one point above the rate of inflation, I suspect investors will be falling all over themselves to get into Canada, knowing full well the returns they can expect.

There is a need for research and development; that is well known to all of us in this House. Why is it that research and development is not going on at the moment? Is it because Canadians are ill equipped to carry on adequate research and development through to production? In many cases we are because many of our best minds are leaving the country, but I suspect that the real and fundamental reason research and development through to production does not occur in Canada is because we have more foreign ownership here than any other western industrialized nation. Why would a branch plant want to conduct research and development in competition with other plants of its mother company or with the mother company itself? If a person wanted to invest in research and development and could put his funds into his head office in Japan or a branch plant in Canada, where could that research and development be expected to take place? Obviously it would not take place in the branch plant. There is no incentive to do research and development in the branch plant. That plant is there to serve a small market.

As the previous speaker said, we lack the incentive to get out and market our resources and the goods we manufacture. Again I ask why a branch plant would want to market its goods aggressively in competition with its own mother company. As long as Canada maintains its international reputation as a country with more foreign ownership than any other western industrialized nation there will be little incentive for research and development. There will be little incentive to open up new markets for our manufactured products.

Therein, of course, lies a challenge to us. We need to patriate more of our economy, but not along the lines of the national energy policy and the move into the oil industry. The theory is good, but what is happening is impractical. I suspect that the national energy policy is ill conceived.

With a clearly thought out economic strategy and a monetary policy to complement it there would be no need for discussions on foreign control and no need for additional government spending, because government spending would be focused in such a way as to make some sense. I will use the example of tourism in our country. There could be tourist activity in almost every corner of the country. A message should go out to the private sector that the federal government, in co-operation with provincial and local governments, feels that tourism is a priority and a key element in our industrial strategy. The private sector would respond if the federal government were to redirect and reallocate funds to tourism.

At the moment the situation is rather pitiful. We should be reallocating existing funds to tourism. The federal government should do its share, perhaps by way of international marketing or providing low-interest loans to certain kinds of entrepreneurial activities. The provinces should be co-operating within that same framework. All ten provinces plus the territories should agree that if the federal government is going to provide leadership in the development of tourism, they will complement that activity and develop infrastructures—in ski areas, for example. The provinces and territories should assist in the development of beachfront marinas and so forth. Local and regional governments could also participate in this same context. They should agree to participate and assist in developing the necessary infrastructures. Then the private sector would come in with the construction of hotels, ski lodges and whatever. With that kind of co-operation and economic leadership coming from all three levels of government, we could provide a creative environment. The clear message that would be sent out to Canadian and perhaps foreign entrepreneurs would result in a very sophisticated tourist industry of which we could all be very proud.

We should apply the same policy to a number of other sectors, particularly where Canada has some strategic edge in terms of national and international competition. That is the kind of solution we in the New Democratic Party recommend for consideration. When we have our discussion in the Committee of the Whole, I hope the Minister of State for Finance will take into consideration the option I have just laid out.

That is the kind of thing that the federal government should be developing at the moment rather than simply following, in a mindless way, certainly not a very independent way, with the support of its Tory colleagues, the policies of Mr. Reagan in the United States.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that attempts to deal with three totally different measures. It is an omnibus bill and, despite the ruling of Madam Speaker earlier today, I must say in disgust that it is difficult to debate a bill that deals with three principal problems, three types of taxation—borrowing being a form of taxation I suppose—all in one package. I shall attempt to deal first of all with the borrowing authority, then with the excise tax bill and then with the amendments to the Income Tax Act.

If you or I went to our bank or credit union and said we wanted to borrow money, Mr. Speaker, I suspect the manager would ask how we propose to repay it. Yet the minister has come to this House of Commons for the third time this session asking to borrow money, with no plan to pay it back. He came to the House with Bill C-30 and asked for $12 billion; he came to the House with Bill C-59 and asked for $14 billion—and he got it; and today he comes with Bill C-93 and asks for $6.6 billion. That is a total of $32.6 billion in less than two years, and he expects us to give it to him.

It is a disgrace that a government elected in February, 1980, now less than two years into its mandate, should come to the House of Commons to ask for a total of $32.6 billion. Did it tell the people of Canada that when it promised honest, decent, straightforward government? Did it say to the people of Canada that within two years it could be coming to the House of Commons demanding to borrow $32.6 billion? Yet that is what it is doing.

The government brought in a budget which it said was based on equity, restraint and renewal.

Mr. Siddon: Equity for whom?

Mr. Blenkarn: The hon. member asks, equity for whom? For those who make more than $53,000 per year, the tax rate is reduced to a maximum rate of 50 per cent. For the 54 per cent of the people earning $30,000 or less per year, the tax rate is increased. That is Liberal equity!

And what about renewal? Sixty-two members of this party travelled across Canada holding public hearings on the question of renewal. They did not find a single business, business organization, social service agency, trade union or group of any kind anywhere that was prepared to say it was optimistic about Canada, that it would build in Canada or create in Canada because it was enthused about the renewal offered in this budget. The way this government uses the word, "renewal" means renewal of expense, bigger government, more state interference. That is the kind of renewal this government offers. There is nothing to stir the people up, nothing to stir the soul or make people get up and build a country.

I am reminded of what happened in this House of Commons 110 years ago today when a bill was introduced to finance the greatest megaproject this country has ever seen. I refer to the bill to finance the Canadian Pacific Railway. At that time there was a government that had enthusiasm, that was prepared to lead, to offer projects that would build a nation from sea to sea. Today we have a government prepared to ask for another $6.6 billion to put us further into the red, to figure out another move to tax oil and gas wealth—and I shall talk about that later—with its Henry VIII type of tax system. We have a government that has no sense of renewal, no sense of building Canada, no sense of the worth of Canadians. All it does is create an ivory tower for itself.

And what about restraint, Mr. Speaker? In December, 1979, a budget was introduced in this House which indicated in its projections for the year 1981-82 that the Government of Canada would spend, on a national accounts basis, $66.2 billion and would tax from Canadians in the same fiscal year $59.6 billion.

Let us look at the restraint proposed by this government which now asks us for more money. Let us look at what in fact is happening due to the totally inept management of the economy of Canada and the waste and throw-away programs of the government.

The government this year will spend $76.6 billion; this government this year will tax $69.2 billion. But the government of the Right Hon. Joe Clark, the government that had the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) as its minister of finance, would have spent in total $66.2 billion. If we had MacEachen for fund raising and Crosbie for spending, we would not need to borrow any money; we would have a surplus of $3 billion. Instead, what do we have? We have a deficit that gets larger and larger and carries on without any effort being made at restraint at all. The government asks for another $6.6 billion, and if we look at the records we know that it could have a surplus of $3 billion if it exercised the type of restraint that was evident in the budget planning process of two years ago. There is absolutely no reason that this House, at any time, should consider this type of bill.

When you or I go to our banker to borrow money, we normally show need, Mr. Speaker. I decided to look, as we all should every week, at where the money is in Canada. The Government of Canada has on deposit with the chartered banks of Canada $6.947 billion at the present time. The minister can see that in the Bank of Canada statement of February 11, issued last Thursday. The Government of Canada has on deposit with the chartered banks right now nearly $7 billion.

• (1730)

Does the government need to borrow money? The minister said that the spending requirements for the year will be only $6.6 billion. The government has all the money it needs on deposit with chartered banks. What more money does it need? Why does it need more money when it has that kind of money available right now? Let me point out that when the Government of Canada deposits money with chartered banks, it receives on the amount of over $100 million a rate of interest 10 per cent less than the rate of 90 day treasury bills.

The Government of Canada was prepared to pay people 19.5 per cent on Canada Savings Bonds. The same government is prepared to lend money to the banks at 13.4 per cent this week. The government has $7 billion with the banks on which it is prepared to make 13.4 per cent, yet the minister who is supposed to be in charge of financial institutions comes into the House of Commons and says, "I need to borrow $6.6 billion". He does not need to borrow it at all; he has it on deposit at 13.4 per cent. What a travesty, what an error!

This reminds me of the errors in the budget—there have been 25 changes so far, and there are many more to come. Is a $600 million mistake when dealing with the provinces a minor one? The bill is for $6.6 billion, yet the government has nearly $7 billion on deposit in the banks at the same time.

I should like to look at the rationale for giving this government this money. Last year the government came to the House seeking $14 billion. It said it wanted some elbow room or freedom. Out of the $14 billion it still has borrowing authority for $3.9 billion, so it has lots of freedom within which to borrow. It wanted elbow room, so we gave the government more money than it could conceivably need. What did it do? It went out on the market last September and offered Canada Savings Bonds at 19.5 per cent. At the time the government made that offer, all indicators showed that interest rates were dropping rapidly, yet it held the 19.5 per cent offer open for people to lend money to the Government of Canada until November 6. On November 6 it could have borrowed all the money it required, including the cost of borrowing, for approximately 16 per cent. However, this government, which is supposedly careful with our money, entered into a borrowing arrangement to borrow, as the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) indicated, on-demand money at 19.5 per cent. My calculation of the cost of borrowing that money, including the commissions paid for one year, is 20.5 per cent.

In reorganizing its loan, the government increased interest rates on all outstanding Canada Savings Bonds to 19.5 per cent, for a real cost of about 20 per cent. It could have borrowed the money on November 6 for 16 per cent. It cost the Government of Canada, and therefore the people of Canada, 4 per cent extra on $25 billion for a year. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières), the man who is in charge of financial institutions, cost Canadian taxpayers $1 billion in that move alone. Now the Minister of Finance is called, "The billion dollar man". Should we give these people the freedom of financial movement in order to borrow $6.6 billion, when the history of their borrowing is such that they are totally irresponsible in their use of the borrowing authority and paid $1 billion more in interest for a $25 billion debt than should have been paid? It is unconscionable to ask the House to support this portion of the bill.

Let me turn to some of the figures. When the government took power on February 18, 1980, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980, the total amount paid in interest on the Government of Canada debt was $8.6 billion. This year the "glorious" Minister of Finance is saying that the cost of carrying our debt will be $14.7 billion. Did Liberal members promise Canadians during the last election campaign that the result of their inept management would be to increase interest charges in two years by $6.1 billion per year? Is that what they promised? Do Canadians recognize what they have in terms of inept, stupid and incompetent management? Also the minister went on to say that the interest costs will be $16.5 billion next year and nearly $18 billion the following year. Did he tell Canadians in the February, 1980, election campaign that the country owed $67 billion in that year and that we would owe $92 billion as of February 1? Did he tell Canadians that it would cost them borrowings of $25 billion in two years to support the government? Did he tell them that this was restraint and that it was in the budget program of the government?

The government comes to the House of Commons, and we are really its bankers, because we allow it to borrow money on the credit of Canada. When Liberal members sought office, did they tell their bankers that they would run the debt up by $25 billion in two years? There is no justification for this bill.

I should like to deal briefly with the interest rate policy of the government. Actually it is not an interest rate policy. I have difficulty in even suggesting that it is a policy. It is really a mishmash of effort. We all remember when the Governor of the Bank of Canada said that he would allow an increase in the M-1, that is the monetary targets, to be between 4 per cent and 8 per cent. In order to keep up the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar last year, they cut down the increase in the money supply so that, in fact, it was negative. Of course we wondered why there were huge interest rate increases. The reason was that investment confidence was driven out and hot money at the highest rates the country has ever paid was imported. They passed on that cost in order to keep the exchange rate high and, to ensure that it worked, they deferred our monetary policy to an exchange rate policy.

It is not a government of tight money; it is a government of no money for anyone. It is a government which operates with short-term palliatives, which has no sense of where it is going, which struggles from pillar to post, which has driven out long-term markets for financing so that they no longer exist. It is a government that says interest rates shall be determined every Thursday by some sort of phony auction of Government of Canada treasury bills. It is a government that makes sure there is no long-term money in its budget provisions; a government that destroys one of the few long-term sources that are built into our system, namely, the insurance and annuity industry. With the budget the government makes sure that the insurance and annuity industry will be robbed of a long-term investment cash flow of $1.75 billion this year alone. How much more will it be the following year?

It is almost impossible, if not quite impossible, for a person to obtain a five-year mortgage. The kind of loans people get today are those that bear an interest rate that can be changed on three days' notice. We wonder why there is no confidence in the system. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the minister have both said that this is to counter inflation. Let me tell you, Sir, there is no countering of inflation with this kind of monetary policy. This is not a high interest policy. This is no policy. This is a policy of pillar to post. This is a policy of Thursday interest rates. This is a policy where there is no confidence in the supply of money at all.

We do not know what the rate will be this week. It may be higher, it may be lower. We do not know what it will be next week. It depends on what is going on in the United States. Maybe it will be higher or maybe it will be lower. In any event, there is no confidence.

How can a person invest, build a plant, buy equipment and create productivity in the country? I see the minister responsible for housing standing up. I ask, how can a person build or buy a house? You have to be an idiot to buy a house in this market because you cannot get a mortgage for any length of time. If you do, you play Russian roulette. Think of a young couple who buy a house with an 18 per cent mortgage on it. They think they can pay that mortgage, but they do not know what the mortgage rate will be in August when it comes due. Will that mortgage rate be 22 per cent, 30 per cent or 35 per cent? Who would have thought ten years ago that the government would pay 19.5 per cent for the money it borrows itself? Who would have thought that the rates at Household Finance a short time ago would become today's prime rate at the bank?

People have no sense of confidence in the monetary direction of the country. Does this bill give us that? Does this borrowing authority? Does the government's financial policy do the things that are supposed to be done under the financial policy of the government and does it come to grips with this problem? Not at all. The government leaves the unmistakable impression that it does not know where it is going.

Last Saturday I listened to a young Greek lad speak to a policy panel hearing. He dispassionately and rationally talked about what had happened to the Canadian dream. He is a young economist. He mentioned the inflation caused by the Vietnam war, the changes that happened as a result of OPEC and the international problems with the United States essentially losing track of the cost of gold. Then he talked about Canada. He said that, instead of coming to grips with these international problems, we were making things worse; deliberately making things worse. We were not taking advantage of our resources. We were not taking advantage of the entrepreneurial nature of our people. Indeed, we were driving out business. We were turning away ideas. We were preventing research and development. With our budget, our fiscal policy and our interest rate policy, we were making sure that the country would be less successful than it would otherwise be. Without the government at all, we would be better off. The policies of this government make things worse. That is what we must address.

He mentioned that one of the major causes of our problems was the National Energy Program. Part of the national energy policy is in this bill we have before us. It is a bill in connection with the Excise Tax Act to increase the taxes on natural gas. The minister says that the bill has something to do with an agreement between the federal government and the government of Alberta.

This bill ought to have something to do with fairness, with honesty and with where we are going. That is where the problem comes with the bill. The bill sets out the tax rates on natural gas to January 31, 1982. The bill then goes on to create a new paragraph 25.19 (a) through to (e). In order to figure out what happens, you have to turn over to page 8 of the bill. The bill sets out what can be charged per gigajoule for gas, per cubic metre of methane, per cubic metre of propane and per cubic metre of butane. All of a sudden you see what we are getting into with this bill. Whereas the rate for natural gas was 63 cents a gigajoule, there is now the authority to increase the tax on natural gas from 63 cents to $4. Next we come to ethane. We get the authority to increase the tax from $11.65 to $75 a cubic metre. When we get to propane, we get the authority to increase the tax to $105 per cubic metre from $16. For butane we can increase the tax to $115 a cubic metre from $17.85. This is a Machiavellian type of section. It establishes the limits to which the minister can increase the taxes. This is the first time in my experience that I have ever seen a tax law which says that taxes can be anything up to a certain limit that the minister by order would like to make them. That is what it says. The taxes can be anything up to a limit that the minister wants to order them.

For example, the price of ethane goes up a possible total of 543 per cent. In other words, the minister can put his hand in his pocket at any time and say, "I have decided today that ethane is worth more tax and I can increase the taxes 100 per cent, 200 per cent, 300 per cent or whatever I feel like and not come back to Parliament."

• (1750)

Now, how can we as members of the House vote for a bill which would conceivably allow the Minister of Finance to levy any tax he wants up to a maximum level. We have a tax right now where the rate is 63 cents per gigajoule, or $16 per cubic metre, or $17.85 per cubic metre, and then all of a sudden it can be increased, in the case of pipeline gas, to $4 a gigajoule; in the case of ethane, to $75 a cubic metre from $11.65; in the case of propane, from $16 a cubic metre to $105. This can be done without reference to the House. The minister may increase the tax by order in council.

Now, Sir, if King John at Runnymede had proposed that type of arrangement to the barons, I suspect the same thing would have happened to him as happened to Charlie. I suspect, Sir, that even if Henry VIII had suggested this type of tax arrangement to Parliament, the strongest of the Tudors would have lost his throne. However, we have a government which comes in the name of Parliament and democracy and says that we should authorize the government at any time to increase the tax on a product such as ethane by 543 per cent, or 556 per cent for propane, 544 per cent for butane and 534 per cent for natural gas. How can we as Members of Parliament vote for that bill? It does not really matter whether you are a Liberal or a New Democrat. No matter what you are, how can you as a Member of Parliament vote for a bill which would enable a minister of the Crown to increase taxes by ministerial order in any amount and at any time he wants to? Now I want to leave that part of the act for a moment and go to that part which deals with the PGRT.

That, Sir, is probably the most complicated piece of statute work that I have seen for some time. Clearly, it is the type of thing that must drive business right out of the country. We talk about encouraging people to come to explore for gas and oil and that type of thing, but we wind up with the most convoluted and complicated clause of a bill that one has ever seen in Clause 3. We wind up with terms such as "incremental oil revenue", "incremental payouts", "incremental production royalties", "incremental resource royalty". I do not know what an incremental royalty is on incremental production. Presumably "incremental" applies to old oil. I do not know, Sir, whether you have ever seen a jar of old oil and a jar of new oil to determine if there is any difference. Old oil is oil which comes from fields discovered some time ago, or even fields which have not been drilled but were discovered prior to the first of this year.

Now if you drill in those fields and get oil, then you pay the 16 per cent PGRT tax on everything you take out, subject to certain deductions for Crown royalties. In addition to that, if there is any incremental revenue—in other words, the price is higher than it used to be—then you pay 50 per cent of whatever that is. In the name of whatever is holy, there must be some method by which the law officers of the Crown can simplify the law or do something, because this tax, in its computation and application, is so complicated that it can only be of benefit to the accounting profession and those who come from Philadelphia and practise law.

An hon. Member: That lets you out, Don.

Mr. Blenkarn: It sure does. The last thing I want to talk about in the time remaining is the criticism which has been hurled across the floor, all too often: What would you do? Well, in our 1979 budget we clearly set out what we would be doing. We clearly set out where we could restrain government expenditures, and we declared—this is on the public record—that we would have spent no more than $66.2 billion this year.

What would we have done? Well, we would not have got into the mess in the first place, and we would now be working our way out of it. We would be cutting back on the overhead of government. They say, where is that overhead? Well, the Auditor General talked about a measly thing like the $50 million spent on excess photocopy costs. We have the minister of propaganda over there and he spends a $100 million.

However, there is a whole host of other things. We know that in our offices, we know it when we go down to the photocopying room, we know it when we order paper around here. We as Members of Parliament know what goes on just in the House, that these things are nice but do they have to be there? We know it when we go to government offices and see a series of people there reading novels, when we do not hear a typewriter going. I have pointed this out to ministers, I have told them that I have been to their offices and did not hear the sound of a typewriter in a half hour while in the waiting room. There is a lot of fat in this government. There are a lot of things we are doing that could be cut back. That is the first thing we would do.

Second, we would turn the budget around 180 degrees. Instead of discouraging business and driving it out of the country as they have done—at least six times as much money left Canada on average last year as did throughout the 1970s—we would be bringing it back in. We would be giving businessmen something to cheer about, something to get enthusiastic about. We would be operating like the government of Sir John A. Macdonald did 110 years ago when he said to Canada that we can grow, we can build and become a nation from sea to sea. That is how we would operate, with enthusiasm, encouragement, with less government and more trust in Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at six o'clock this evening, the hon. member for Mississaugua South (Mr. Blenkarn) had the floor. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to contribute to the debate this evening because the second reading of Bill C-93 gives me an opportunity to voice my very strong opposition to the economic policies being pursued by the government. I believe it is the same overwhelming opposition expressed by Canadians everywhere, by farmers, small and large businesses, home owners, consumers, economists, opposition parties and, yes, even some government members and Members of Parliament; yet the government continues to hold fast to its position, content to remain unaware of what is going on around it in the real world.

What we have before us is legislation which would further implement a budget which is in no one's interests or continued economic wellbeing and, quite rightly, is opposed by just everyone, as I mentioned earlier, including some members of the federal cabinet. For this reason, this bill to borrow $6.6 billion of taxpayers' money is very hard to accept.

We must ask, what does the government intend to do with this money? Will it raise money to help those Canadians who need help, such as our farmers, our small businesses, our home owners, the poor, the elderly and the unemployed? No, in this budget there is very little evidence of substantive relief being offered to those Canadians who need it most.

We hear constant talk from the government about tight money supply and that we must continue to tough it out regardless of what happens. If things get worse, and surely with the government's economic policies they will, the minister says, "So be it, because sooner or later we will hopefully be better off". This promise is not good enough for us. How long do we have to wait? How long do Canadians have to swallow the same old story and continue to watch their economic livelihood and their future fall to pieces?

Mr. McDermid: 1984, election year!

Mr. Mitges: One would think that after seven or eight years of miscalculated economic and monetarist policies, and a policy of deliberately high interest rates, that the government would finally get the message that its policies are just not working and that they will not work in the future. Everyone except the government is in agreement with this point.

All this talk of economic restraint and belt tightening would be easier to accept if the government practised what it preached. While it increases its spending by 22 per cent, increases the deficit and raises taxes, all in the name of restraint, it is quite willing to punish those Canadians who spend, who wish to invest or take risks or save for the future. This, to me, is a double standard. In other words, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is saying, "Do not do as I do; do as I say, and we will all be better off for it". This is really nonsense. What we do have before us is an economic policy which is a blueprint for recession. As if this were not enough, we have a government which is deliberately bringing the economy to a complete halt. It is deliberately creating a recession. I believe the government is prepared to create such a recession and create unemployment, and it has deliberately raised interest rates in pursuit of an absurd and nonsensical policy. At the very least, if the Minister of Finance is going to stick to this ruinous economic policy, he should be prepared to help those Canadians now who are suffering the most from those policies.

Mr. McDermid: That's right!

Mr. Mitges: Yet the minister has stubbornly chosen to ignore these legitimate concerns and calls for relief. It seems to me that the government is obsessed with only one thing; that is, centralizing economic power and decision-making here in Ottawa and wrestling as much power as possible away from the provinces. The Constitution represented the first stage, the political power grab, and the budget represents the second wave, the economic power grab. The government has failed to keep its election promises to lower interest rates, to wrestle inflation to the ground, to fight unemployment, to ensure cheap energy prices, to lower the budget deficit and to help Canadians suffering from economic hardship. The government has completely failed to even address these problems. When we are asked to look at a bill which seeks to borrow over $6 billion—

Mr. McDermid: Billion dollars!

Mr. Mitges: —we have an obligation to look at the government's over-all economic policies.

• (2010)

It is very clear that the Minister of Finance did not look closely at the policies he introduced on November 12 because on a number of occasions since then he has either withdrawn or revised several measures, realizing the mistakes and miscalculations he tried to push on Canadians. How many changes does it take for the minister to realize the budget is a complete failure?

In spite of what the government may say both inside and outside the House, the November 12 budget introduced a major increase in personal taxation. Canadians can expect no less than an average $1,400 federal tax increase in energy costs per family, such as the increased taxes on gasoline and home heating fuels, for each year over the next five years.

We also have a massive increase in federal spending. Government spending is going up by 22 per cent this year while the deficit will remain at $13 billion, higher than the figures forecast by the government.

Not only will Canadians feel the bite of higher taxes in the energy field, but through a series of underhanded tax changes, Canadians will be taxed on many employment benefits such as private health care and dental plans, daycare, the use of car and travel passes, as well as the immediate taxation on retirement allowance, all in the name of closing tax loopholes.

The insatiable drive for more revenue also extends to life insurance policies and registered retirement savings plans. In the case of RRSPs, Canadians can no longer deduct the interest on loans taken out to buy into the plan, meaning there will be a major drop in savings for retirement, not to mention investment initiatives in the economy.

Tax changes toward annuity contracts and life insurance policies strike at the very heart of the principle of encouraging Canadians to work toward their retirement income and life insurance protection. If this provision is retained, it will put Canada in the embarrassing position of being the only industrialized country that taxes life insurance.

For some strange reason the government seems opposed to the principle of Canadians planning and providing for retirement. This development should concern Canadians all the more because the federal government's own pension plan, the Canada Pension Plan, is in very deep financial trouble.

There are other areas of the federal government's economic policies which have created massive opposition and severe crticism. I am speaking here of the Small Business Development Bond. The government boasts that it has extended the bond program to unincorporated farmers and small-business men. However, the rule changes made this assistance less than what farmers and small-business men had hoped for or what they clearly need.

The bond has been completely emasculated and does not really resemble the previous Small Business Development Bond program before the presentation of the budget. This program has, quite simply, been switched from a development bond to a survival bond, intended only for businesses in desperate financial difficulties. No farmer or small-business man who wants to expand his operation will get a Small Business Development Bond. In fact, he is not eligible for a bond unless and until he is on the verge of bankruptcy.

There is no question that those who face immediate foreclosure need help and need it now, but what about those businesses that are in a position to expand operations and create badly needed jobs? Should they not be encouraged and helped? Not so, says the Minister of Finance. They have been left out in the cold to fend for themselves.

As if these changes were not enough to cause frustration and anguish, it has become clear from what many constituents have said that the banks which administer the Small Business Development Bond are reluctant to process applications because there is considerable confusion on the part of the banks and the government over how the new bond works.

The Minister of Finance has given very little evidence of his willingness to help in solving this problem. A more active intervention here is essential in order to make sure that those who need assistance receive that assistance now. Otherwise we will see more farms and businesses fade into oblivion.

Quite a number of my constituents have expressed to me problems they have encountered with their farm credit applications. While the government has introduced legislation which offers badly needed but very limited financial aid, applications continue in some cases to be processed too slowly. This is very distressing, given the fact that many farmers are in need of immediate financial relief but are going under because of these delays.

The bankruptcy figures speak for themselves. The government's high interest rate policy is driving an ever-growing number of farms and businesses into foreclosure. In the first 11 months of 1981, some 7,261 businesses were forced to close their doors for good, while 258 farming bankruptcies occurred during the same period, an increase of 133 per cent over the first nine months of 1979.

One sector of the farming industry that is particularly hard hit is the beef producer. Rising production costs, increased machinery prices, higher interest rates and depressed beef prices have all combined to force this industry into a depression with very little hope of recovery in the foreseeable future.

With well over 1.2 million Canadians out of work, coupled with thousands of bankruptcies, common sense should indicate that the federal government would see the light and take concrete and positive action to alleviate these hardships. However, the government insists beyond all reason that the road to economic recovery lies in a tight monetary policy so as to bring down inflation and interest rates. But, as I said earlier, this policy simply has not worked. Inflation is over 12 per cent, unemployment continues to rise and interest rates are on their way up again.

On the matter of unemployment, the Minister of Finance refuses to listen to the calls of some of his own cabinet colleagues who ask that the government stimulate the economy and create new jobs. No substantive programs have been announced to help our unemployed.

There is no question the government's economic policies have to be changed to reflect our national and pressing concerns. The budget is already out of date. It was written last fall and placed on the shelf gathering dust until the debate on the constitutional resolution was over. By the Minister of Finance's own admission both inside and outside the House, the figures used are out of date and are therefore inaccurate and misleading.

In conclusion, I urge the Minister of Finance to introduce a new economic policy that more accurately reflects the current economic problems we are now experiencing. Without substantive changes, Canadians will be faced with a detailed blueprint for a depression, a depression as devastating as anything we have seen since the 1930s. I do not think that even this government would like to see that.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak on Bill C-93, an act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for raising funds. This bill combines the more conventional borrowing authority bill with a number of other amendments to the Excise Tax Act arising out of the November 12, 1981, budget, and amendments to the petroleum and gas revenue tax which implement the Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on January 7, 1982. In looking at the bill, I find approximately three pages on the borrowing authority and approximately 30 pages on the rest. This indicates that perhaps the government is trying to sneak something by us. Perhaps this is in keeping with the way this government operates.

• (2020)

Until about five years ago, borrowing bills were introduced mainly as part of supply. Five years ago it was decided that borrowing bills would be introduced separately. Now we find that included in this borrowing bill are two other amendments to acts. I have looked through the bill, and I cannot find one single link between the borrowing part of the bill and the amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the PGRT Act. I wonder why the government decided to include those provisions and borrowing authority in the same bill at the same time.

I will deal just briefly with the Excise Tax Act and the PGRT and finally with the borrowing provision in the bill. An excise tax is a tax on a specific commodity, and in this case the commodity involved is energy, oil and gas. The federal government has agreed with the provinces that it will not tax exported natural gas, but that is only in relation to natural gas taken from provincial lands. The federal government retains the right to tax exports of gas taken from federal lands. I wonder why the federal government wishes to retain that right.

The Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act was implemented by a ways and means motion on January 27, 1982, and one wonders what connection that act has with borrowing authority. The PGRT is basically a tax to increase revenues to the federal government. By this tax the federal government will take in approximately $23.1 billion over the next five years. With that amount of additional revenue coming in, I wonder why the federal government will need to borrow.

By the excise tax alone the government could raise up to $8 billion a year. This bill would raise the tax on natural gas per gigajoule from 57 cents to 63 cents, but the bill provides for a limit of $4. If the government were to increase the tax to the limit of $4, it could raise up to $8 billion a year. The government will not have to come back to Parliament if it wishes to increase this tax over the years.

One wonders whether the government is attempting to sneak some of the provisions in this bill by the House. I understand they will be debated in the Committee of the Whole and not in a standing committee. This means we will be able to question the minister, but we will not be able to call witnesses. We could do that only if the bill were to go to a standing committee.

The three pages of this bill dealing with borrowing authority would provide the government with the authority to raise $6.6 billion in Canadian or foreign funds. As I said in my last speech on a borrowing authority bill, I wonder why the government is interested in borrowing in foreign funds.

The financial critic of the New Democratic Party made an interesting speech today. He questioned the policies of my party and suggested they are similar to those of Mr. Reagan in the United States. We agree with Mr. Reagan in many respects. We agree that deficits must be decreased. We agree that there must be control over government spending. We agree that governments spend too much money and that there must be control. However, I wonder whether the New Democratic Party financial critic thinks it might be better if we agreed with some of his party's friends, such as the Cubans. We all remember that millions of dollars were given to the Cubans a few years ago—

Mr. Blackburn: By John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Wright: —until we found out what was happening to the money.

Mr. Fulton: It was John Diefenbaker who gave them the money.

Mr. Wright: Many members of the New Democratic Party agree with some of the policies of Russia.

An hon. Member: That was Joe Clark.

Mr. Wright: I wonder what would happen if any of the members of the New Democratic Party were to visit Siberia. Perhaps that would be a good place for them to go.

Mr. Fulton: Tell us about Jerusalem.

Mr. Wright: Members of the New Democratic Party are having a difficult time selling their policies. That is why the people will never elect them to govern Canada.

Mr. Fulton: Tell us about Sterling Lyon.

Mr. Wright: Some of their policies and the way they say things remind me of some of the religious cults in Canada.

Mr. Blackburn: Are you afraid of us or of the Liberals?

Mr. Wright: No matter what people say about them, they keep pressing on.

Mr. Kristiansen: What tree did you climb down from?

Mr. Wright: I heard that remark. It certainly was not the same tree from which that individual climbed down. Some of the policies of the New Democratic Party remind me of another socialist party called the National Socialist Party of Germany. We all remember the big lie of Adolf Hitler.

Mr. Blackburn: Now we are fascists.

Mr. Wright: One would not have to look very far to see some similarity of policy, since both parties started out as socialist. The New Democratic Party believes in state ownership, centralized control and more bureaucracy. What more would bureaucracy do to small business? I cannot believe the financial critic of the New Democratic Party would even talk about this; he was the small business critic. Small-business men are shaking their heads about the problems they are having these days with government bureaucracy.

Mr. Fulton: They shake their heads because of mental midgets like you.

Mr. Wright: We must also remember that the New Democratic Party is a party which does not believe in property rights.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. All of us in this place and anyone in political life is used to hearing gibberish from time to time. It often is not meant seriously—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order, would he state it now, please.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, is it appropriate for one member of the House to say of another member what in any court in the land would be considered libel or slander? Is that appropriate language in the House?

• (2030)

Mr. McDermid: If you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is not disposed to give legal advice on what constitutes libel and slander.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is very brief. I should like to point out to hon. members of the Tory party that national socialism has nothing to do—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think it would assist the Chair, if an hon. member wants the floor on a point of order, if he could advise the Chair which Standing Order is relevant.

Mr. McDermid: He doesn't even know where to look.

Mr. Wilson: It is the little green book.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) on a point of order.

Mr. Kristiansen: I am not quoting a particular Standing Order but I would suggest to you that the language being used is as unparliamentary as one could use in the House or in any free society. To imply that someone is a Nazi, when it is the friends of that party who embraced Adolf Hitler and slaughtered the people who were in the party that we represent, is libel. I have as much sense of humour as anybody else. If someone wants to slash the guts out of somebody—go outside, that is enough of that.

An hon. Member: What is the matter, you Commie?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair promises to pay a great deal of attention to the hon. member's speech which seems to be having considerable effect in one part of the House, but there is no point of order.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House, that some men, like wagons, rattle most when there is nothing in them.

I should like now to come to a part of this borrowing bill that mentions what it is for—to spend money for public works and other purposes. It seems odd that in today's issue of The Globe and Mail an article about HUDAC, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, carried the headline, "13 per cent drop in housing starts is forecast". The article states that HUDAC has estimated that the need for housing units in Canada has declined from 220,000 last year to 200,000 and that this is because of the high interest rates that this government has supported.

We must never forget why we have this budget today, Mr. Speaker—it is because the NDP voted to put the Liberals back in power!

Mr. Skelly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Let the record reflect that it was the people of Canada who threw that party out.

An hon. Member: Right on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is not the responsibility of the Chair to comment on an hon. member's speech, but in fairness, if the hon. member keeps on being interrupted by points of order that the Chair cannot really qualify as points of order, then it is very difficult for him. Perhaps this may encourage the hon. member to make further comments.

Mr. Wright: To follow on your comment, Mr. Speaker, speaking closer to the truth might be of more benefit to the hon. member also.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I should like to know whether the present speaker would entertain a question.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to entertain a question at the end of my speech.

The article in The Globe and Mail went on as follows:

> The demand figure has dropped primarily because of continuing high interest rates—many consumers have been frozen out of the market because they simply cannot afford houses at current interest rates.

The article goes on to say that the figure of 177,000 housing starts registered in 1981 was inflated by the MURB program which was rushed to completion at the end of 1981. It states that HUDAC expects huge rent increases because a number of rental projects were built under the federal government's Assisted Rental Program, and that half of them had mortgages in the 10 per cent to 11 per cent range which will now go to the 17 per cent to 18 per cent range.

The bad news continues, Mr. Speaker. HUDAC also predicts that the provisions of the recent federal budget will exert upward pressure on rents. The president has stated that rent increases of up to 60 per cent will be common on many of these units. The article states that the low number of housing starts will add substantially to Canada's high unemployment rate. This is contrary to what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) has stated in the House.

One has to ask why the government needs to borrow $6.6 billion. It has $7 billion in the chartered banks and it has $1 billion in the Bank of Canada. Why does it need $6.6 billion now? Does it have some patronage to look after? We are told that patronage by the Liberal Party amounts to over $2 billion per year—a figure that the Liberals refuse to confirm!

Does the government have some secret loans to cover? Just recently in the House a member asked a question about a loan being made by the Export Development Corporation to Algeria for a tower structure which will contain a restaurant and an observation deck. The middle floor will contain many things, including film clips—I expect even a clip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dancing when he was in Algeria last fall. This loan of $47.25 million will cover 85 per cent of the total construction costs.

It is impossible to get any information on this loan, however. The government will not state the rate of interest, the term of the loan, or the term of repayment. The Export Development Corporation states that Algeria has an unlimited line of credit. In other words, it will not tell us how much money it can lend to Algeria but has stated that if Algeria came to the corporation tomorrow for an additional loan, the government would automatically give it.

That is the type of loan the government is giving out to other countries when there are hundreds of thousands of people without adequate housing in this country, people who cannot renew their mortgages, yet we are prepared to lend $47.25 million to a socialist nation.

● (2040)

What does the Auditor General think of the spending of the national government? In his report dated March 31, 1981, he stated:

> The national debt now stands at $82.8 billion. Servicing the debt in fiscal year 1980-1981 cost more than the total of all corporate income taxes collected. It accounts for more than one-fifth of every tax dollar, and its load burdens all the people of Canada like a huge, high interest mortgage.

It is an albatross around the necks of Canadians. Sometimes it is difficult to put this matter into perspective—and I will return to the Auditor General in a moment—but let us look at a situation wherein average Canadians, without taxes and without the payment of various benefits, could perhaps live on $20,000 per year. I use this as an example only, but when Canadians start paying income taxes, taxes on highways and medical benefits, something different happens. If we look at the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada, we find that out of every dollar spent in Canada all forms of government spend 50 cents. If individual Canadians could live on $20,000 without any benefits and then give half of it to government, we assume that they could still live comfortably because the government would be providing other benefits.

Chapter 9 of the Auditor General's annual report dated March 31, 1979, contained perhaps the most serious evidence of inadequate management of human resources from the standpoint of economy and efficiency by reporting the results of performance measurement tests in levels 1 to 4 of the clerical and regulatory occupational groups which consist of some 50,000 employees across government. The test concluded that government employees operate at 60 per cent efficiency. Thus, to return to my point, if average individuals could live on $10,000 per year and the government collected $10,000 per year, we assume that individuals would be receiving $10,000 in benefits, but in actual fact the Auditor General may be correct when he assumed that we are only receiving 60 per cent efficiency out of the $10,000. This means that we are paying $10,000 to governments to provide certain benefits, and we are only receiving $6,000 in the way of benefits. In effect, 20 per cent of the $20,000 to which I referred is being wasted. It is another example of government inefficiency.

If one looks at government revenues and expenditures, one finds where the money is going and what is happening. One finds that government revenues are 16 per cent less than its expenditures. As the Auditor General stated, the government is not spending money efficiently. This is something to which we must address ourselves over the next number of years. Why do Canadians have to live with high interest rates? The Minister of Finance rose in his place time and again to say that it was due to inflation and that we must reduce inflation. As I have stated previously in the House, there has been a massive outflow of long-term capital over the last two years. If one examines the national accounts balance, one finds there has been an outflow of $17 billion in long-term capital in the last two years. During the same period there has been an inflow of $16 billion in short-term capital, money which will remain in Canada for a period of anywhere from 30 days to one year. In the investment business it is commonly known as hot money. Hot money moves around, based on high interest rates. If our rates are higher than those of other countries, it will flow in; if our rates are lower, it will flow out. In effect the government is hiding the true reasons. It has created conditions whereby investment in Canada has been discouraged and the outflow of capital has been encouraged.

What can the government do? It could encourage investment in the country. The United States was built upon foreign capital, yet it controls its resources at the present time. Canada is a young country and needs foreign capital. Government officials travelling abroad have to defend it and say that Canada really wants foreign capital, but when they come to the House of Commons they fall in behind the government line which says that we want to control our own destiny and to nationalize all energy companies. What else could the government do? It could allow the dollar to float.

The Minister of Finance stated that a decline in the dollar would be inflationary. What does he think high interest rates are if not inflationary? In 1976 the government brought in the current policies, and the Bank of Canada carried them out. The government could reduce interest rates by 3 to 4 percentage points, which we on this side of the House have recommended. The government could encourage the export of various commodities such as natural gas. The province of Alberta estimates that it could export surplus gas of up to $2 billion per year. This would help the western provinces; but since the government does not presently have any seats west of Manitoba—and in the next election it will have none west of Ontario—it decided that it did not want to help western Canada.

At present the Bank of Canada holds approximately 20 million ounces of gold valued at $8 billion. Some of that gold could be sold off to provide support for our dollar. Certainly the situation is not hopeless. One must ask how many more firms must go bankrupt before the government comes to its senses, or how many more farms must fail before the government wakes up.

We do not need a budget that contains a multitude of economic tax changes. We need a budget that is a blueprint for the future, not a maze. There are many fiscal and monetary measures that take time to implement. A decrease in the deficit takes time. While the dollar could decline, it will not decline immediately, it will decline slowly if we implement some of the measures we suggest. There will be a higher cost for imported goods. Everyone understands that. But in addition to that, there will be an increased amount of exports, which would be of benefit to Canadian manufacturing firms. That is understood by many Canadians. Why the Liberals do not understand it, I will never know. It takes time to reduce inflation. We understand that, but we must start to do something. There are things we can do immediately, such as providing a real housing program. The housing program we have now provides nothing.

We need 100,000 rental units next year. The government is providing help for 15,000. We have over 1.2 million people who will be renewing their mortgages over the next two years, and the government is going to help fewer than 50,000 of them; that is very little help. If the government were to provide real incentives for housing we would see higher employment, therefore lower unemployment. The president of HUDAC stated today that because of government policies there will be a loss of jobs this year to the tune of 90,000. That is an astounding figure, and it is shocking that we have to live with higher unemployment in the coming year.

An opinion has been put forth by the government, supported by the NDP, that the banks are responsible for these high interest rates. Let us see who makes the high interest policies. From where do they come? Your interest rates and my interest rates are decided by five people. These five people are the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, two directors of the Bank of Canada and the deputy minister of finance. From where do all these decisions come? They come from the other side of the House. Those are the people who implement these high interest rates.

As we look to the future, the next couple of years do not look very prosperous for Canadians. This government has brought forward a budget that does not help ordinary Canadians. If government has brought forward a borrowing policy of $6.6 billion, and we do not know what it is going to do. If government comes forward with two other pieces of legislation in the bill. Why are these two pieces of legislation joined together when there is no link? Obviously there is something the matter with what the government is presenting. I would be surprised if any legal mind in government employ could find a legal link between these pieces of legislation before us now.

In conclusion, we in the Conservative Party would like to hold out some hope for people that life will not be all downhill. But what we see coming from policies across the floor are higher interest rates, higher unemployment, no growth, more bankruptcies and more farm failures. In the short term it looks like disaster. But we hope at the next election people will decide that they have had enough of this Liberal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I trust that I will be permitted one quick question. If so, I would like to ask a double decker question. Assuming interest rates will rise in the United States, does the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) suggest that he would encourage an upward lift of interest rates?

Mr. Epp: Is this question period, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Riis: Second, would the hon. member change the Governor of the Bank of Canada if he had the opportunity?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member repeat his question, please? I did not hear it.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to repeat the question. If the hon. member had the opportunity, would he change the Governor of the Bank of Canada? Second, assuming the interest rates in the United States increased, would he advocate a drop in the interest rates?

Mr. McDermid: That is four different questions.

An hon. Member: Those are not the same questions at all.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, the question put by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) begs another question. Would be give me the opportunity to do something about this?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, what we have here tonight is recognition, and that is the first step to a cure. It is unfortunate that it came at the end of a speech rather than at the beginning. I think with a little work with our finance critic we could bring the member from Calgary right around.

An hon. Member: The finance critic has left you.

Mr. Skelly: Not so, we have good depth in the caucus and lots of opportunities to bring new talent onstream, which unfortunately is not an option for the fossilized remnants of the former government members, who are not quite as lucky as we are.

Tonight I want to talk about the borrowing authority bill before the House. First I should outline some specific things, which this particular legislation, along with the entire government's financial policy, has meant to people in my riding. They reflect the millions of other Canadians who are not faring well under the present government's economic strategy.

Since February, 1980, we have seen that problems have increased in this country. Unemployment has become more severe. People have lost homes because they can no longer handle high interest rates. The compounded effect of taxation and increased energy rates are wreaking hardship on people. Everything culminated in November when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) presented a budget. The budget relates to borrowing authority. Unfortunately, the budget did not in any way address the real economic needs in this country.

I have had the pleasure of sitting in this House during the time when two other budgets were presented. I felt there were some positive things in those budgets. The over-all thrust of these budgets were criticized, but nevertheless there were items that showed recognition of the problems and suggestions were put forward to address the problems. The last budget of 1981 completely failed to address the needs of Canadians. I think that view is a unanimous one across Canada. I suspect the government acknowledged its failings when it presented the transitional measures. Members of the government caucus recognized the failing when they start writing letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) advocating that some real measures to help Canadians be taken. It is interesting that the government can continue on a tack of self-destruction.

When I look back to the Thirtieth Parliament and what was happening in my area of the country, and I am sure it was happening everywhere, I note that the government thought that the answers to the economic problems of the people of Canada at that time were wage and price controls. Of course, that translated directly into wage controls. That program led to absolute chaos and reduced labour relations to a terrible state. It turned an enormous number of people against the government, and I am surprised—I guess I should not be surprised after watching this happen so many times—that a government could continue the mistakes of the past when everyone in the House, certainly on this side and perhaps some members on the other side, realizes what the outcome of those failed policies is going to be.

Another aspect of this bill is that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) feels that he can grind more out of the working people of this country with these absolutely ridiculous proposals to tax these benefits which are designed to induce people to move to remote areas in order to harvest our natural resources. A complete disaster, Mr. Speaker, for which they will eventually pay the price at the polls.

Looking at their high interest rate policy for a moment—and I will deal with this in more detail later—I find that there are many cases in my riding of individuals who are faced with losing everything they have ever worked for. I know members on that side are receiving mail identical to mine, and I do not understand why there is not more from the backbenches of the government to the effect that we have had enough, it is time we changed the policy. However, for the time being, believe me, they are getting this mail because we are getting copies of it and it is harmful. Those people are experiencing the same problems we are.

But we come tonight, Mr. Speaker, to the borrowing authority and again we find a consistent theme. I am not sure, along with many others, where we are headed. Possibly during this debate we will hear members on the other side come up with some idea of where they think we might be headed. I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is in the House, and perhaps that is as good a place to start as any. He is of course well aware of the events taking place in the Comox-Powell River riding and other areas of British Columbia and, I understand, other areas of Canada. Something like 60 per cent of the forest industry is unemployed in that area. As a result, we have a situation where there has been a tremendous demand on unemployment insurance. The fishing industry has been saddled with tremendously complex regulations and punitive and discriminatory measures taken against fishermen in those regulations. The end result is that there are enormous claims and the offices are not able to deliver unemployment insurance. Because people are required in some cases to wait three to four months for unemployment insurance, the burden has shifted. These individuals have been laid off, their income and savings are gone, they have nothing with which to pay rent, and many of them have nothing with which to buy food. In the end they apply for social assistance. In British Columbia unemployment insurance offices were telling people, "We cannot help you. It will be two to three months before your UIC claim can be processed. Go to the welfare office".

So, Mr. Speaker, essentially what happened is that this minister and his department were incapable of developing a program which the House felt was necessary, and the burden fell squarely on the province of British Columbia to deliver welfare. Unfortunately that burden in those offices was so great that to get a hardship cheque to put food on the table was taking three weeks. I had a man appear at a meeting in Campbell River who said he had not eaten for two days. His wife was in the hospital in Nanaimo and he had to leave his kids with a friend in Port Hardy because, as he said, he was down here in Campbell River sitting on the doorstep of the welfare office to get a cheque to feed his kids. He said, "I have never been out of work before and never collected unemployment insurance".

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to having a chance to evaluate this government's performance by going to the polling stations, you know where he is going to be, and there are people like that in many of the ridings of the members opposite. It is time they did something. However, it is not just the unemployment insurance program. There are many other programs on which we will have to get cracking to see that they have adequate funds for staff resources, proper training, and distribution of those resources so they can serve the people of this country.

Returning to the subject of fishermen, the fishing industry in my riding is one of the basic resources and basic sources of employment. Many of the fishermen have worked at this all their lives; that is the only thing they know. Some are well on their way to the point where they will never be able to work at another task because fishing is all they have ever done. And because of what I would suggest is incompetent management of the fisheries resource, we would have to go back to the plan put in place by Jack Davis as they key to it. They felt they were doing people a favour by reducing overcapitalization of that fleet. In fact, they turned around and created a capitalization nightmare where it cost an enormous amount of money to buy licences. Those were, of course, financed on the assumption that interest rates would not rise beyond all reason. Those people, because of openings and closings and the strategies of the Department of Fisheries were forced to upgrade their equipment; bigger boats, faster motors, greater capacity. Essentially, they had to borrow money to enhance the capability of their vessels. More capitalization, more borrowing in order to stay in an industry that was being managed in a very poor and inefficient manner.

Having done that, the government then decided it was time to jack up fuel costs. Some of those vessels run 400 or 500 miles along the coast of B.C., they are very fuel intensive, if you will, and the cost of that fuel has risen significantly. Their return grows smaller and smaller each year. Then we have the real kicker, namely, interest rates. So what happened, of course, when the market for fish turned down, is that many of the fishermen were faced with foreclosures. The bankers appeared on their doorsteps and said, "We are going to have to foreclose on your vessel". The fishermen knew the banks were not going to get anywhere with that program because no one would buy a fishing vessel off the coast of British Columbia today. If you cannot fish, what is the point of having a high price boat? What the banks could do is to take away their opportunity to earn a living, and many of them are at a point in their lives when they have no other options.

So the banks said, "We will not take away your method of earning a living and we will not foreclose on you if you will put your house up as collateral". Now they have their house and fishing boat. Some of them went so far as to say, "Give us a co-signer, too, a friend with collateral behind you". And the fishermen, in order to stay in business, did it. Well now, there sits the bank with the government's high interest rate policy, with the home, the fishing vessel and the assets of friends and relatives on the line. In fact, the banks have now started to foreclose because the bank has an opportunity to retrieve their investment. People are now losing everything they have ever worked for, their fishing vessels, their homes, and friends and relatives are being badgered to pay outstanding debts. The consequences of that, Mr. Speaker, are going to be very serious. If it keeps on being as bad as it is, I think they will be asking for more than serious consequences at the polling stations.

If there is any doubt, I would suggest that any hon. member opposite, or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), should pick up the phone to call any bailiff who would say what they are doing, straight out. An interesting thing is that many fishermen did not have a good season this year. These fishermen went down to the unemployment office, but the regulations for obtaining unemployment insurance are so complex that one almost needs to be a Philadelphia lawyer to interpret the UIC regulations for fishermen. However, these fishermen are waiting three or four months for unemployment insurance benefits. Many have been put on welfare and many are having great difficulties by being forced into this position. The consequences are extremely serious. A very important resource is being poorly managed and a group of people are being very poorly treated. It is time that the government put up a fund so that these people can be at least protected from losing everything for which they have ever worked. This should be done, whether the government does it through the minister responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission, through the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans or the Minister of Finance.

I would like to speak for a few moments only about some of the things that this borrowing authority, putting aside government spending, could do for Indian communities. In my riding there are 18 basic Indian communities. Again, they face problems much like any of the others. I would select maybe two bands from the coastal Indians as examples to illustrate what the government could be doing instead of what it is doing right now.

It is my understanding that the government has developed an envelope system. The word is that the government has put $26 million into a social affairs envelope and has tried to hold the line on costs. At the other end of the process there is an Indian band at Bella Coola which draws a budget together at the beginning of the year. The band said it needs $1.8 million to run the band, and they are not fooling. That is their basic bottom line cost. That provides basic necessities for people on social assistance, because the government policy is not designed to help Indians create economic development or to put people in those communities to work. That is basically the amount of money required to hold them at the subsistence level. Many bands are budgeting at that level. However, the band at Bella Coola included provision for some economic development and housing development, and they arrived at a budget of $1.8 million. As this budget filtered through the system with no consultation and no real consideration, it joined the district budget in Vancouver with 51 other bands. It then joined the B.C. region, went to Ottawa, and Ottawa said it would chop $25 million off the region, just "bang". "Make it do", is what Ottawa said. When it came back to British Columbia, it went to the region, and the regional manager was stuck with accepting a budget which was $25 million short, and trying to feed people, build houses for them, and provide education for their children. It must keep the regional manager awake every night of the week to try to figure out how he will do that while dealing with human lives and misery. However, then it went down to Bella Coola, and the regional manager and the district manager eventually said to the chief and the 500 people who live at Bella Coola in the band and in the village, "You have to get by with $1.3 million".

What will happen? Most of their population is under 18 years of age, and they will be forming families in the next few years, and the demand for housing will simply skyrocket. Their children have never graduated from high school. It has been a terrible situation. The education system is not acceptable. They have developed a band school, but there is no funding for it. They cannot meet the payroll for the teachers. The teachers will leave and the kids will lose this year.

However, there is another interesting matter for the minister responsible for unemployment insurance. It might pay if he were to take a look into this matter tomorrow morning. In Bella Coola there are many people with pending unemployment insurance claims. The band was counting on the fact that it would not have to pay welfare to those people who did work. However, there are unemployment insurance claims which have been pending for three or four months. This band is roughly 300 miles up the coast of B.C., and those people had to be paid welfare until their UIC claims were processed or until the band ran out of money. Right now, the band can no longer pay welfare, and its budget was to last until the end of the fiscal year. Now they cannot meet the payroll of band officers, and they can no longer pay schoolteachers to educate their children. They cannot even pay welfare to the people who are unemployed. Those people have no income, and in some cases there is nothing left to eat. Part of this situation has been caused by pending unemployment insurance, a matter which could be resolved if someone would pay some attention to that community. Basically, budget costs cannot be cut off at that level.

I know that this borrowing authority is down from last year, and the Minister of Finance is expecting to get pats on the back. But, believe me, if he would get his butt up to Bella Coola and have a look at the reality of what those kinds of cuts are doing to people, then, by gosh, maybe we would have a different kind of borrowing authority before us.

Yes, when you get stuck in the ivory tower here, I think the world appears much different from the reality. Fishermen are now faced with losing everything for which they ever worked. Indian bands in Bella Coola are attempting to pay real, basic costs with money which does not exist. Senior citizens and handicapped people in those communities have the same problems as we do. However, they are told that they will receive $6,500 for all of those support services. If some of those ministers over there would go into those communities, they would come out without their hair, and that is the reality, and I would be there to help them.

An hon. Member: That's what happened to Ron Basford.

Mr. Skelly: It is not really so much worth a giggle as it is worth having a look at, and I am very sincere about that. I know that some of those ministers have gone into those communities, but it would surely pay them to go again to have a look at the effects of their present economic policies.

The next item which might be worth mentioning again is the forestry industry. I would say that roughly 60 per cent of the people in that industry in my riding have been laid off. That is not only true of my riding. Certainly constituents of other hon. members are dependent on the forestry industry. The forestry industry is in a very serious situation. We see a lot of money being produced in a lot of other areas to help out. We are finding that funds are being put up for work-sharing programs, and they are being directed to various communities. However, what we need is a strategy in areas like the one I represent, which will be of assistance to those communities. There is no possibility of work sharing when the mill is shut down and when lumber can no longer be exported.

However, there are other alternatives. The forest industry has upgraded the resource for years. We have carved trees out of river valleys, and now the trees are a long way up in the mountains and are extremely expensive to harvest. There have been fire burns, and disease has ripped through the forests. In those areas, there is a tremendous need for reforestation, and new jobs could certainly be created which would protect and enhance that resource for future generations. If we were to move seriously in that direction, some of the current dislocation in the forest industry could be currently offset by jobs created by federal-provincial co-operation in intensive reforestation and forest management programs.

There are options which are not being considered. This borrowing authority could include funds to provide for those kinds of projects. This would have an immediate impact on small business and communities in those areas.

I would like to indicate briefly how some of the small businesses are fairing in those communities because of the shutdown in the forest industry and because of the inability of fishermen to bring revenue into the communities. The other day, I had an interesting telephone call from an individual, a small-business man, who was attempting to collect overdue debts in one of those communities. His accounts receivable had risen to the point where his cash flow was very seriously affected. To his surprise, the small-business man found out, by phoning around to 20 businesses which owed him money, that none of those businesses were in a position to pay him. As a matter of fact, many of them said, "Forget it. I doubt if I will ever be able to pay you back a nickel because I am facing bankruptcy or receivership. My creditors are on top of me, and I cannot collect my accounts."

This malaise, this disease or disorder, has spread right through the entire economy. It is extremely important that the government become realistic and not fall back on economic theories, I guess, which have been gleaned from the nineteenth century or even earlier. We have been told time and time again that the cure of the disease arising from high interest rates will be certainly far worse than anything we ever expected.

The question of fiscal restraint in the government being applied now is complete foolishness. In some cases the government could create a stimulus or an investment in the community which frees and moves other dollars. The kind of government restraint now in place will not do anything except harm people further. We are back to the old suicide configuration, the wage control package toward which, it seems, the Prime Minister is moving. It should not take anyone with half a brain on the other side of the House to figure out where that will lead both that party and this country.

In those remarks, I hope, I have put forward a positive suggestion or two, or a direction which the government may take that could help many of the individuals and specific groups being harmed.

There is one other area I would like to touch on in the short time remaining. It affects both coasts of this country and the industrialized areas of central Canada. I refer to the whole marine industry. It appears we are looking forward to a period of time in which offshore resources and the development of resources on Canada lands will lead to an enormous potential in the marine industries of Canada, shipbuilding and allied trades.

The Royal Bank of Canada, in its estimate of expenditures between now and the year 2000, states that resource development investment might go as much as a trillion dollars. We had billions projected in the megaprojects task force report. There is general consensus that the amount of money available for Canadian industry, if we plan properly, is enormous. In the marine sector in particular, the building of offshore platforms, supply ships, the infrastructure, the communities, the dredging, there is an enormous amount of money available to Canadian industry and an enormous job potential.

We talked of this for many months when Bill C-48 was before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. At one point, two ministers, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) appeared before the committee. They said they understood the problem, and that, as far as the law goes, they wanted us to leave it totally in their hands. They said they would take care of the problem because they recognized it. In a very candid way at a closed meeting, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce suggested he had it well in hand with a committee of roughly 24 people, which he called the committee of industrial benefits. They were going to capture for Canadians the benefits of our offshore development.

The reality is that it is going to be a colossal failure. Time after time he was in the House when the matter of the ships being built offshore was raised. They are being built in Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Europe and the United States. He agreed they were being built there, but asked us to look at what else the government has done. He was often proud to mention the Burrard drydock in which the government invested so heavily. Unfortunately, the drydock was built in Japan. He mentioned that the same had been done for Dome Petroleum. Of course, some of their vessels are being built in Japan.

A very different view of what Canadians were going to be able to do was given by the oil companies when they appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. They stated that, in reality, Canadians are not ready. They want to move quickly. They have a need for equipment and specialized personnel. They told us that, quite frankly, unless we moved yesterday, we are not going to be able to capture the benefits we would expect.

In Britain and Norway, roughly half a million jobs came out of the development of offshore oil. Half of those jobs were created in the United States. Another quarter were created in the industrial parts of Great Britain. The parts of the country in which the industrial activity or resource activity should have occurred were those areas which had been depressed for years, yet we found that very few jobs were created there.

Now we are looking at development off Atlantic Canada. Within a few years we will probably be looking at it off British Columbia. I say to the government that British Columbians and people in Atlantic Canada are looking for the benefits to accrue to this country. We want our shipbuilding industry to hire Canadians, not import help from offshore. We want those jobs to accrue in our yards. Frankly, this will not be done with 24 people in an industrial benefits office. The British used thousands of people. They used enormous numbers of engineers for evaluation and development of those programs. By the time the project had reached full speed, the British had managed to capture a large number of those jobs. Unfortunately, we do not show any inclination to do that.

In terms of government involvement, borrowing authority and economic programs, this is discouraging more Canadian involvement in our Canadian industry and opportunities for Canadian employment than we are getting. I believe that at the present time the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has created more jobs in the marine industries in Europe, Japan, the Far East and the United States than he has in Canada with the programs he has in place.

There are many other areas in which that particular sector has been held down and depressed for years. My colleagues from the province of Quebec must express concern about the development of the shipbuilding industry in that province because it is an important one. However, it also affects Ontario, the maritimes and the west coast of this country.

For years we have said it is time this country got going on developing its own merchant fleet. We ship offshore enormous amounts of grain. We let the Chinese, Russians, Americans and Europeans haul it away. We do not carry the product.

The United Nations put forward proposals that 40 per cent of a nation's goods should be carried in its own ships. It would give a stable base for that operation. For years we have not seen a move on that. The government has fought it right, left and centre.

A few months ago, during the Grey Cup game, the Canadian Pacific Company, our old friends which have been intimately involved in hauling our goods in and out of the country, placed an ad on television. It showed the Beaverford, an old CP vessel which was an armed cargo ship during World War II. It conveyed goods back and forth across the Atlantic. I believe the Beaverford had two very small guns. That ship was attacked by a German pocket battleship. It managed to hold the German ship for five and a half hours while the rest of the convoy managed to escape. It was a miraculous feat. It was hit by a torpedo and all hands were lost.

Unfortunately, CP capitalized on that. It said this was their tradition in the past, fighting for Canadians. They were trying to link that tradition with their tradition of today. Their tradition today is to have their ships registered in foreign countries. They moved from Bermuda. I guess they were not getting a good enough deal there. They moved their ship registry to Britain and Hong Kong. They sail their ships with foreign crews. Frankly, neither I nor my children are interested in the future that CP has for this country until those ships are registered in this country, are sailed by Canadians, and the returns from those efforts come back to Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is because of the policies of the government you support.

Mr. Skelly: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) says that is because of the policies of the government that we support. Unfortunately we notice that his government committed suicide before it was able to put any good policies in place.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are going to eat those words.

Mr. Skelly: There are a lot of words we may have to eat in this place. At any rate, the one thing on which the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and I agree is that there should be a Canadian merchant fleet. Maybe there is a time in the future when he will be able to assist us to put that policy in place, because this government does not seem too interested. It is not just the CPR but many other Canadian companies that are in the same business. If we were to bring those on side, it is felt that the earnings would more than offset our current deficit in the balance of payments. Why the government does not move would escape anyone—unless it is paying off friends.

• (2130)

Basically, there is room to move. There are policies which could be put in place which would be far more effective and would not cause the kind of human suffering we see in this country. There are opportunities for full employment and fair employment for Canadians. There is a chance for people in this country to own their homes and to live with decent incomes in dignity. Unfortunately, this government has failed to adopt the proper policies and to move on them. Frankly, it is unfortunate it has not resigned.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) would allow one short question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) accept a question?

Mr. Skelly: Of course.

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member spoke with some enthusiasm about the future of the marine industry in Canada and in British Columbia, particularly when it comes to building offshore platforms and energy exploration. I wonder if the hon. member would tell the House whether he supports offshore oil exploration in British Columbia.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, proper studies must be conducted.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes or no.

Mr. Skelly: Yes or no?

Mr. Epp: Are you going to build a platform on a study?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to answer the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Powell River has the floor.

Mr. Skelly: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) has asked a provocative question. However, there are jobs already available upon which we as British Columbians are not being given an opportunity to work. The rim gas project will deliver British Columbia gas to Japan. We are not getting an opportunity to build all those vessels. They are being built in Japan. We did not get a chance to build the Burrard drydock, although we were capable of building it. The Tories gave away that job to the Japanese.

With respect to offshore drilling and oil exploration on the west coast, what we need is some consultation with the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Epp: Are you for it or against it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank God this is not question period.

Mr. Epp: Are you for it or against it?

Mr. Blackburn: Only you simpletons can answer yes or no.

Mr. Skelly: What is needed is proper environmental impact studies, proper social impact studies and an assessment of the proposals which are put forward, and at that point British Columbians would certainly be in a position to make a decision about the advisability of oil and gas exploration.

There is another option for B.C. shipbuilding though. The coast of B.C. is not the only place in the world where these B.C. built marine platforms could be used. They could be used in the Beaufort Sea and the opportunity certainly is there for jobs to be created for British Columbia in those areas.

I thank the hon. member for his question.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with Bill C-93, I wish to deal with Part I, the borrowing authority provision, which grants the government the authority to borrow some $6.6 billion.

Rather than dealing with the various economic theories and putting blame on the government for the record high inflation it caused, the record high interest rates it has caused, the record high government borrowing it has made necessary, the record high government budgetary deficits, the record high government spending, the record high unemployment and record number of bankruptcies, I would like to direct my thrust this evening to the plight of a segment of our society which usually does not get much attention from the House, yet it is the very foundation of our present society and, most certainly, the society of Canada in the future. I am speaking, of course, of the family unit.

As we are all too well aware, the family has had to endure enormous strains in the recent past, and this has brought about extensive changes to its structure. Some are for the better but, unfortunately, a great many of these changes are to its detriment. The changes are continuing, and no one can predict when the situation will stabilize.

The stresses of today stem from many causes, but one prevalent result is family breakdown. There has been an alarming increase in the number of divorces in Canada—a 70 per cent increase, in fact, since 1970—with no sign of a reversal of this trend. The number of single parent families in Canada has been growing, to the point that 10 per cent of all our families are now headed by one parent. Our statisticians tell us it is more than likely that that parent will be a woman, since the heads of eight of ten single parent families of every 100 will be mothers.

In the years between 1969 and 1973, there were close to 150,000 children involved in divorce actions, and the number affected has been rising yearly. These children will most likely be living with their mothers and this, far too often, means living in poverty and, frequently, on welfare.

Although a single father has some of the same problems as his female counterpart, he is not nearly as likely to be subjected to her most serious concern, that of poverty.

Poverty does not present just one problem, but many. The quality of life in general is affected by poverty. Some of those undesirable qualities are instability, alcoholism, mental strain and low educational achievement.

Since poverty is often at the root of these social ills, the lone woman parent is in a precarious position. Facing a heavy load of responsibility, she must continuously bear the pressures of child rearing and, as was pointed out, too often in poverty. These women run the overwhelmingly high risk of being poor.

Statistics show that nearly half of the mothers living alone with their children will find themselves existing below the poverty line, and nearly all of the half—a whopping 98 per cent—on welfare.

Along with the grinding poverty of welfare goes the feeling of inadequacy and the stigma of isolation and discrimination. Certainly this is not the emotional environment that fosters the self-reliant and stable kind of future citizens we want to see our children become.

The reasons for the economic deprivation of such a large proportion of households headed by women are many, and all levels of government and society must share the blame.

Efforts to provide income security and needed services in Canada have involved different kinds of legislation; some exclusively federal, some exclusively provincial and some cost-shared by the two levels of government.

Under the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government shares costs with the provinces of social services provided by the provinces to persons in need. This includes mother's allowance, child welfare maintenance, health care services for the needy and the extension of welfare services in many other general areas.

However, the constitutional division of responsibilities has resulted in this "patchwork quilt" system. This system has succeeded in binding many of the poor, single women so tightly with bureaucratic red tape—with rules and regulations that are counterproductive—that they soon give up hope of ever becoming self-sufficient, contributing members of society.

Since our present economic climate almost necessitates that both parents work outside the home and since it takes two to keep the family solvent, the single mother and her children fare very poorly in such an environment. If she tries to find employment, she discovers that women's wages are considerably lower than men's. In fact, her pay will likely be 50 per cent less than a man's, and she will have little opportunity to upgrade her skills.

The most serious problem facing the single mother who wants to enter the work force—and indeed the major headache for all working parents—is to secure adequate care for children during the hours they are away from the home. The need for substitute child care has increased dramatically, but this need has definitely not been well met at any level.

Practically 90 per cent of working mothers must seek private arrangements for their children's care. These alternatives to a regulated centre have been documented in the book, "The Kin Trade", written by Laura Johnson and Janice Dineen. They say child care conditions in unsupervised homes are often profiteering and unsanitary, and that there is an epidemic of child neglect and widespread abuse. The care substitutes are too often grossly incapable of giving the children adequate care at its most basic levels, let alone any kind of stimulation or nurture which will enrich them.

There are 600,000 children under the age of seven who have no access to daycare. In the few areas where there is excellent daycare, it is available only to the very rich who can afford it, or to the poor whose fees are subsidized. All our children are entitled to the very best possible care that we can give them.

What of the centres that do exist? They are subject to few legal standards to ensure that enough staff is hired or that they have been properly trained and are adequately paid or that the physical environment conditions are suitable for children. We licence and supervise many things in our society. Our hospitals and restaurants come under severe and constant surveillance for the maintenance of sanitary and safety standards. The physical surroundings of our children who must be away from their own homes for many of their waking hours does not seem to matter very much.

We are told by experts in the field of human development that the first few years of life are so crucial, so vital, that the whole of a person's future social development, self-esteem and ability to cope and contribute to society depends on that initial nurturing.

Let us ask ourselves what value we place on that fact. It is as important to our children—perhaps even more important to them—that they have adequate care as it is for them to have an adequate education.

We worship at the knee of higher education, yet ignore the very rock upon which the learning capability of a person is established, the early childhood experience.

Can you see something wrong, something very wrong with our priorities when we give our colleges and universities millions of support dollars and then dole out an absolute pittance to the care facilities of our youngest citizens?

How can we rationalize the monetary-value priority we place on university professors compared to that granted to early childhood educators who themselves must live on the brink of poverty?

Free education through high school is extended to every Canadian, and yet the very crumbs of our money, our interest, our concern and our support, go toward the initial step in the education for living. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that our emphasis is wrong. Not that secondary education is not important, but of what value is it if the students have been neglected in their formative years, with the resulting damage to personality and learning ability?

With the present high cost of child rearing, it is unrealistic to expect parents to manage the full financial responsibility of raising the next generation. To those with the mentality that says, "If they want children, let the parents pay for them", let me say that we need today's children and they are not to blame for having parents priced right out of their homes.

I strongly suggest that this House pay serious attention to the national task force on daycare which has been recommending since April of 1980 that we pass a national daycare act.

This act would stipulate that provincial programs must have adequate child-staff ratios, adequate levels of staff competency and suitable physical environments before they can receive federal money, rather than being eligible for federal cost-sharing regardless of the standards of the daycare supplied.

The National Agenda for Action for Canada's Children, the report of the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child, states that the federal government has an important role to play both in directing more funds to the provinces for building and for the staffing of child care centres in order to improve the quality of those centres.

It recommends that federal funds be made available on a cost-shared basis for the construction and operation of non-profit daycare centres meeting specified acceptable standards set by the provinces. National standards for the acceptance of the centres should be established too. Special grants should be made available to schools and other institutions wishing to adapt their facilities to provide for all-day care programs.

The report also recommends that federal subsidies be provided to the daycare agencies based on a sliding scale whereby the parent pays according to ability to pay.

It suggests also that the Income Tax Act be amended to provide tax incentives for all homes and institutions offering properly supervised, qualified, child care. The Income Tax Act could be amended to allow parents to deduct the full cost of child care up to $3,000 per child and taxable family allowances to be raised to the level suggested by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1970.

The Agenda for Action goes on to state the following:

> At present, child care workers and other care-givers, are chronically underpaid. Child care is important work and those who care for children should be valued accordingly. In addition to the remuneration of care-givers—

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) accept a question?

Mr. Elzinga: In the event that I have any time left at the end of my speech, I will be happy to entertain a question.

The Agenda for Action continues:

> —good child care is dependent upon well-developed programs and services provided by competent, trained personnel working under reasonable conditions.

The report recommends that child care should be available near the home or place of work and easily accessible to public transportation.

I should like to see tax concessions given to businesses and industries that provide on-site care facilities to the children of their employees.

Executives of businesses are beginning to realize that daycare is now a key management issue and is essential if women are to have equal opportunity in the work force.

As well as opportunity, women who must work are entitled to the least amount of physical and emotional strain possible in settling their children into their substitute home environment. At this point, I would like to congratulate several of the governmental departments which have made available such facilities for the children of their employees. May I add a word of personal commendation to Madam Speaker for providing such services for House of Commons employees. It is an enlightened step and one which I hope will be emulated by all government departments.

The wage-earning poor in Canada must be encouraged in every way possible to make it worth their while to work. If it is not, there will come a time when a top-heavy welfare class is going to topple our economic structures. Some serious thought has to go into tackling this problem head-on and some significant solutions must be found.

The welfare mother who works part-time is allowed to keep a very moderate sum of her earnings above her welfare benefits. This is soon eaten up in babysitting costs and, as has just been pointed out, too often in an undesirable environment.

There are transportation and work-related expenses too. She is faced with discouragement every step of the way in trying to lift herself out of the welfare treadmill. Every effort must be made by governments, social agencies and society as a whole, to get her into the mainstream of life again, to be self-sufficient and self-respecting as a contributing individual.

Can there be any greater irony than the fact that a mother's care for her own child is considered to be of less value than that of a surrogate parent? At present, a welfare mother with one child, in Ontario, lives on about $5,000 a year, and yet a foster or group home is paid between almost $7,000 and $13,000 for the care of one child.

Being forced to stay on welfare and out of the work force is not only damaging to a single mother emotionally, but economically, to her and eventually to the country at large. If she cannot enter the work force until her children are older, she too will be older and will find it even more difficult to find productive and rewarding employment. Add to that the endangered position in which she will find herself during her later years if she has not had an opportunity to contribute to a pension plan.

Once again, the public will have to contribute directly to her maintenance. How much better for all concerned if she could have had the opportunity to provide for her later years herself.

There are few financial incentives to part-time employees and to low-wage earners. We realize that a great many of their number is made up of single parents, and the federal and provincial governments could assist them greatly by introducing practical income supplement programs.

A few provinces have taken some positive action in this area, and Saskatchewan is to be commended. Manitoba has begun a child-related income support program. Quebec's work income-supplement program, granting tax credits through the provincial income tax system, has the positive aim of encouraging low-income earners to remain in the labour force and to motivate welfare recipients who are employable to join the labour force.

I hope that consideration will be given by the House to the recommendations of the National Council on Welfare that the federal government set guidelines as a pre-condition for cost sharing, to bring about additional improvements to existing welfare conditions. It would require provincial governments to introduce programs in which there would be a reduction rate of family benefit payments, the rate at which benefits are reduced for earned income. Lone parents would be encouraged to undertake part-time work with such encouragement.

As well as in the work situation, there is another area where single mothers fare badly. When children remain with their mothers after divorce, as most do, it has been found that child support payments are generally inadequate, non-existent or uncollectable. The Law Reform Commission of Canada estimated that 75 per cent of all maintenance orders are not enforced. This means dependants are often pushed back on the welfare rolls, and we know who foots the bill.

The legislation proposed by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) early last year would have dealt directly with this sort of situation. It would have given some much needed rights of enforcement to the courts, making maintenance and other money orders pursuant to the Divorce Act. It is regrettable that Bill C-250 did not receive more serious attention in the chamber.

The province of Manitoba would like to see a central federal registry of all maintenance and custody orders, with Ottawa expanding its role to cover enforcement of these orders. It wants an order issued in one province to be valid, coast to coast, and it calls for a federal-provincial information bank which would be of immeasurable assistance in tracing defaulting spouses. Manitoba has been the spearhead in insisting that family law receive its rightful attention in constitutional talks. Authorities of the province claim that if the divorce law is allowed to come under provincial jurisdiction, there will be ten different divorce laws. This would precipitate the danger of some provinces becoming divorce havens, and enforcement of court orders would be hopelessly tangled with ensuing costly litigation.

The whole area of divorce, separation laws, child custody, maintenance and alimony, needs a complete reorganization. We should give thoughtful consideration to laws governing these situations being federal and enforced by provincially-appointed judges, as is the system now used in the field of criminal law. I urge my fellow members to give their concerned attention to the matter of family law and to the best interests of all Canadians. Canadians should have the right, no matter where they live, to consistency and uniformity in this critical area. Between present federal and provincial avenues of control and legislative jurisdiction, the situation of the divided family has become a hopelessly snarled mess. It is the persons in these families with whom we are dealing, persons who have endured conflict and children whose homes have been broken because of conflict.

The most valuable national product of Canada is not gas or oil, not wheat or fish or minerals; it is the children of the country. Tragically those children and their wellbeing are not a priority as far as the Government of Canada is concerned. Our children are the most important asset we have in Canada. They will be making the decisions for Canada in the future and will be directing Canadian affairs. They need to be carefully nurtured and trained for their role as leaders of the country. They must be given every opportunity to develop into healthy, stable, educated persons with positive self-images. Unfortunately, because of the social upheaval of recent decades, not enough of our children are receiving such an upbringing or that kind of support, direction and encouragement. To our national shame, too many children are being neglected and deprived.

Mrs. Landon Pearson, vice-chairperson of the Canadian Commission on the International Year of the Child, made recommendations to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in February, 1981. I should like to quote some of her remarks before the committee, as they were so relevant, urgent and vital to the present and future well-being of all children. She indicated:

—we can do a great deal better than we are doing with respect to our children. It is a question of priority. The potential is there.

Children will always end up at the bottom of the priority list unless they are a first responsibility to someone, and there is at this stage within the federal government no place where the child is a first responsibility.

She went on to say:

—children are a national responsibility as well as a national resource . . . and the responsibility for safeguarding and developing this resource is something which must be shared for it is a national, as well as a provincial, a community and an individual one.

In making their presentation, Mrs. Pearson and her commission members went on to suggest some recommendations to the federal government as to how best it could exercise its considerable responibility for the welfare of its youngest citizens who cannot speak for themselves. They were concerned about lack of co-ordination and the fragmentation of existing structures of programs at all levels of government which are concerned with children. They pointed out that there is no national focus or federal body which is exclusively responsible for the wellbeing of children.

The Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, upon studying the report, made recommendations which would further the basic goals of a strengthened family. This would help to create a climate of economic and emotional support for children, while promoting justice for them and defending their right to full development.

The committee was impressed with the need for the formation of a central mechanism to which the problems of children could be addressed in a continuing way. It saw a need for liaison among different levels of government and non-governmental organizations. This need would be best met by the formation of a specific structure for a secretariat for children's affairs, adequately funded at the federal level. Therefore it recommended that the government establish, within the mandate of the Minister of Justice and the Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien), a secretariat for children's affairs, and it urged the implementation of these recommendations as soon as possible.

I congratulate the Canadian Commission on the International Year of the Child for its thoughtful and dedicated report to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. One third of our population is comprised of children, children who have no voice in their destiny, no vote, no clout, and whose interests are often ignored. We ignore them at our peril, for our future will be held in their hands, and we wish them as bright a future as we wish for all Canadians.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member, if he agrees. I am wondering whether the hon. member, and government members as well, are aware of the fact that the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, which received reports last year from the Commission on the International Year of the Child, worked for many months to prepare urgent recommendations for government action and presented them last July. Is he aware that the government has done absolutely nothing about the recommendations and that they have not gone to cabinet? Indeed, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) appeared to have hardly read them when I spoke with her about them. If he is aware of these facts, I wonder what action he feels should be taken to awaken the government to the needs of children.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just confirmed her ignorance, because we served together on the committee. Had she listened to my presentation, she would have heard that that is exactly what I encouraged the government to do.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) should go back to sleep as she was before. I do not know why hon. members of the NDP always rise to ask questions. I have the feeling it is because they want to show their constituents that they are participating in the deliberations of the House.

I congratulate the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) for the finest speech given in the House on people who really care for other people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House deemed to have been moved.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS—APPLICATION OF GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES PROGRAM

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, although the questions to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) were asked some time ago, the whole question of grants in lieu of taxes must be in the minds of municipal taxpayers all across the country, especially in areas where there are concentrations of federal government departments and Crown corporations.

I put this matter down for debate tonight because in my own region of Ottawa Carleton which encompasses five municipalities and make up the constituency of Nepean-Carleton, the regional council is just now in the business of striking the regional rate which will impact on every taxpayer in the area whether that taxpayer is a home owner, a farmer, a commercial operator or an industrialist, if he either owns lands or rents property.

To the extent the federal government and Crown corporation properties are not valued for tax purposes in the same way as privately owned properties, the burden for providing municipal services in that area falls to a greater degree on the ordinary municipal taxpayer.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you have read the interesting submission to the federal-municipal grants task force by the city of Kanata in my constituency, supported by the city of Ottawa, wherein it was recognized that a problem exists because the federal government still has an arbitrary right to decide what is fair in its opinion in terms of grants in lieu of taxes. I want to read part of the brief. In part, the second paragraph reads:

> Presently, where there are differences in the evaluation placed on federal property as determined by the provincial assessment commissioner and the federal government, the federal minister has the right to unilaterally decide on the evaluation. It is the position of the City of Kanata, as well as many other municipalities, that federal properties should be valued in the same way as those owned by private individuals. Hence it is essential that there be an appeal procedure whereby an impartial ruling can be made on the value to be used for grant purposes.

I think that is quite a reasonable proposition and I hope the parliamentary secretary will speak to that this evening.

The city of Kanata brief then touched on the difficult problem of business tax, particularly the fact that in that municipality AECL has said it is not bound to pay business tax, although it has made some transitional grants to assist. The city of Kanata took the position that there should be an impartial process to determine whether a Crown corporation is one that is to pay business tax or whether it is not one to pay business tax. This is also a reasonable proposition. Now it is done arbitrarily by government by order in council.

The city of Kanata also raised in its brief the position of Canada Post. In that connection we find the following:

> One further concern is the way in which new Crown corporations will be allocated to a schedule. An example of this is the newly formed Canada Post. It is the city of Kanata's belief that Canada Post, under its new mandate, is the equivalent of a private business corporation. As a result it should be paying payments-in-lieu equivalent to both land, building, and business tax. It is understood that Canada Post has been placed in Schedule 3.

It is therefore not liable for business tax. The paragraph continues:

> If this is the case then there should be some appeal process to determine whether or not that schedule is appropriate.

The proposal in this brief is one way of settling the difficulty that exists. I hope the government will listen to the importance of that.

While I am on the subject, and I have the floor with respect to the problems that affect us here in this area, I want to remind the parliamentary secretary of the immense relocation of government buildings to Hull, Quebec. No one will fault Hull, Quebec, for its good fortune, least of all me. But I want to remind the government of the presence in this area, particularly in the city of Kanata and in the western end of Nepean, of the very important high technology industry in the national capital area. I want to say to the government that when it is considering decentralization of government departments or agencies, the importance of maintaining those government departments and agencies here in an area that can provide appropriate service to those government buildings and agencies should be considered.

● (2205)

I have one thing in mind, and that is a proposal to move the mapping surveys branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to Sherbrooke, Quebec. This is what a constituent of mine wrote to me concerning this. He said:

> As a concerned citizen, and one who is very familiar with this government organization, I very honestly fail to comprehend just how anyone could make such a decision that might eventually cause the relocation from Ottawa to anywhere in Canada for such a high technology government branch.
> As I am sure you know the surveys and mapping branch has the responsibility of producing maps and plans in varying scales for all sectors of Canada, and to carry out their duties they require very sophisticated equipment, in large quantities, in the disciplines of geodesy, photogrammetry and cartography with strong support from computers.

What I am saying, Sir, is that with respect to taxation there be some good reason for relocation. The appeal process proposed by the city of Kanata is a good way to find out really how much is owed both for business taxes and whether or not it is applicable, as well as grants in lieu of taxes. Secondly, I ask the government, when it is considering any relocation, to remind itself that in the city of Nepean and the city of Kanata there are land-use plans available crying out for government agencies, particularly those—although not limited to this—that relate to the high technology field. In those two areas there could be a great benefit to those two cities.

Mr. Raymond Savard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should be pleased to answer the question raised in the House by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on February 20, 1981. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) has managed to solve the problem, and in fact, on December 22, 1981, the Department of Public Works issued a press release which included the following:

> The sum of $34,030,000 has been paid to the city of Ottawa as grants in lieu of taxes for 1980. This was announced today by the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Transport Canada, on behalf of the Hon. Paul Cosgrove, Minister of Public Works Canada.

The amount of the grant, which constitutes an increase of $5,300,000 over 1979, covers all federal property in Ottawa included in the municipal grants program administered by PWC.

When it was announced that the amount of the grant would be increased for 1980, Mr. Pepin said he was pleased that lengthy negotiations by the federal government with the provincial and municipal governments had resulted in an agreement on the status of grants in lieu of taxes in Ottawa. According to the British North America Act, federal and provincial property are exempted from property taxes. However, since 1950, federal legislation has provided for payment of grants in lieu of taxes, in order to reimburse municipalities for provision of local services.

In 1980, Parliament passed new legislation on municipal grants, which introduced major changes in the methods for calculating grants, the result being to increase the amounts being paid by the Government of Canada to more than 2,500 municipalities. The new Municipal Grants Act also expanded eligibility of property for the program. A number of properties formerly not affected by the program are now subject to a grant.

In Ottawa, properties that are now covered by the program include the Parliament Buildings, the National Arts Centre, the National Gallery, the National Museums and the National Library and Public Archives building. The Municipal Grants Division, formerly part of the Department of Finance, was transferred to Public Works in 1980. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I may point out that according to the media, the Mayor of Ottawa was very pleased with this announcement.

EDUCATION—FEDERAL FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION (B) LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on November 12, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) came to this House and said that he was going to radically alter the transfers to the provinces under established programs financing act by removing a portion of money called revenue guarantee from transfers to the provinces. That amount of money was originally represented by the minister to be $2.8 billion. This was subsequently revised by the minister in Halifax to $3.2 billion, and, when the provinces got their figures together, they determined that the reduction to the provinces amounted to $4.5 billion. This money goes toward established programs for health, and health concerns which we treat, I suppose, to be our right as Canadians. It also goes toward assistance for post-secondary education.

The question on February 10, which was directed to the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), was in connection with the post-secondary part of those transfers.

On February 3, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) indicated that there would be no cuts in the transfers she was making. On February 10, I asked the Secretary of State if there would be cuts with respect to post-secondary education. I asked him particularly if the $1.8 billion which he was transferring to the provinces in cash at that time would be increased in the way the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated her transfers would be increased. I was not particularly happy with the answers I received, because the minister refused to come clean. It is my hope that tonight the parliamentary secretary will come clean.

There is no such thing as "revenue guarantee" in the blue book, the estimates filed for Canada. There has not been such a thing at any time, as far as I know, and certainly not under the terms of present established programs financing. Nowhere does "revenue guarantee" appear. The only place it appears, with respect to the whole problem before us, is in the budget of the Minister of Finance. However, the effect has been to drive concerns on the part of provinces, universities, health care institutions, doctors, and the like. The question must be settled. Is there to be a change in the transfers for post-secondary education and for health care?

The question the parliamentary secretary is to answer tonight is with respect to post-secondary education. Will the parliamentary secretary affirm tonight, in no uncertain language, that the funds which amount to $1.845 billion as set out in the current estimates for this fiscal year, in the manner they are presently transferred in the blue book for post-secondary education, will be escalated in accordance with the arrangements under established programs financing, in accordance with a moving average of GNP? The Secretary of State said that next year those transfers would be escalating approximately 12 per cent, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare said they would be escalating 13.4 per cent. In any event, will those transfers next year be escalated in accordance with the terms of the statute so that the transfers will be escalated in accordance with the moving GNP average?

I point out to the parliamentary secretary that the matter was fully considered by the task force on fiscal arrangements, and four members of the Liberal party, two members of this party, and one member of the New Democratic Party came to some pretty unanimous conclusions with respect to the allocation of moneys to the provinces. I point out that the committee dealt with the question of revenue guarantee and how that component was made up in the original calculations of 1976. The task force clearly indicated that revenue guarantee now formed part of the package for post-secondary education and health care. In particular, the task force stated:

> It is our view that there is now ... no fat left in the system—no fat in post-secondary education, no fat in the health system, no excess spending in social assistance, little redundancy in social services. We accept the representations of those who argued before the task force that serious cuts in program funding would cut into muscle and sinew, not fat. Unless one could presume that federal reductions in funding would automatically be matched by corresponding increases in provincial expenditures—a presumption that may not be considered altogether plausible—then in order to maintain present standards, programs would have to be privately financed to a greater extent than at present. In health, this would mean greater appeal to user charges and more extra billing; in education, higher fees. In either case, basic national objectives of equity and equality of access would suffer.

I ask the parliamentary secretary tonight to come clean with the House of Commons, his colleagues on the government side and those on this side on the task force which unanimously recommended to the government that there be no changes in the formulae and that they proceed as they were. These are established programs. They are the programs on which the unity and social services of this country are based. They are based on a contribution by the federal government to post-secondary education, health care, extended health care and a formula in relation to GNP. It is time for the government, not to dance around any longer, but to come clean and tell us if in fact it plans to cut transfers to the provinces or leave them the way they are.

We do not want any gobbledygook about taxes or anything else. We want to know where we stand. Is the government prepared to fulfil the request of the task force, which was unanimous and which was supported by the Economic Council of Canada, or is it going to again dance around and say it is not cutting education, when it is in fact cutting education; not cutting health care, when it is in fact cutting health care; and as it removes certain formulae that it says exist, which in fact do not exist?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is referring to the sum of $1.8 billion and expects us to accept word for word the report by the Task Force on Fiscal Arrangements. That is surprising, since he himself is aware the actual amount is closer to $3.2 billion, since his own task force asked us to continue—

[English]

—to calculate the equalized value of taxes transferred and that these amounts be earmarked for the program areas. We are talking about $3.2 billion. The hon. member must realize that since November 12 there has been a federal-provincial conference. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) offered to continue the present EPF program and give it a 12 per cent increase per year until March 1984. The hon. member may want to call an increase of 12 per cent a cut. I cannot rewrite the dictionary. The Prime Minister has placed an offer on the table. It is there. Discussions are now being held with the provincial ministers of finance. If they can reach an agreement, the 12 per cent will be added to the present amount. EPF, whether it is health care or post-secondary education—

[Translation]

—no cuts will be made. And I am sure the hon. member will agree that a 12 per cent increase, given our present economic situation, is quite reasonable. The condition set by the Right Hon. Prime Minister was that the provinces should do their share as well, instead of slacking on their contributions as they have been doing for a number of years. It is to be hoped that the provincial governments are also going to increase their contributions to post-secondary education, which would help to bring the system up to standard. In fact, the proposal provides for an increase of 12 per cent until 1984, so that negotiations can be continued, provided certain national principles are adopted, with which I am sure the hon. member will agree.

MINES AND MINING—LOAN TO PERU FOR COPPER MINING VENTURE (B) CREATION OF JOBS IN CANADA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from a deal that was struck December 11 between the government and a consortium which I am going to lay before the House tonight. It has been a litany of doubletalk, not only in terms of government policy but what the minister of mines has been telling the general public. The deal was apparently developed by Noranda Mines of Toronto during the past six months. They indicated publicly to at least some bankers that the cost for this deal to break even is about $1 U.S. a pound for the copper to be produced in Peru.

It is interesting that SNC group of Montreal will be supplying the engineering services, the design, the construction and the management for the project which supposedly is going to bring about $100 million of business to Canada, supposedly producing 2,900 person-years of employment. The Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) says 3,000 person-years. The EDC says 2,900 person-years. Neither can demonstrate to the House or to the public what any of those jobs are, even in terms of global categories. Hopefully tonight we will be able to get that from the minister.

The minister says that mine will come into operation in 1987. The EDC and the operators say it will open in about two years, in 1984. That is another discrepancy.

The minister says it will generate about $100 million in Canada, but the real question to which this House has to address itself—and I am sure many mining communities are wondering about this—is why the Government of Canada can lend $100 million to Peru at 11 per cent or less when our mining companies, particularly in the copper industry, from coast to coast are suffering, whether they be in Kamloops, Stewart, Newfoundland, Manitoba or Sudbury, where 850 jobs have just been lost. Those jobs are being lost, because of high interest rates, and because of a lack of capital to carry an inventory of copper or product, or because of a lack of manufacturing, either smelting or secondary processing.

To tie that into general government policy, on February 13 a very interesting government policy was outlined by the economic development minister, Senator Olson. He said:

> From here on the national government will invest its capital in areas of prospective growth in the future—

He also said:

> We're going to stop propping up mature industries that will never be competitive in this generation, like textiles, clothing, footwear and a number of others.

He went on to say:

> We're not going to process every one of our natural resources into the final product. For one thing, we don't have the people. And there are lots of places in the world where they can manufacture products at a much lower cost.

That is this government's policy on economic development. The government says, "Do it somewhere else if you can make more money for somebody else."

On February 3 the Minister of State for Mines responded to a question I raised on this very issue. I pointed out that 4,000 jobs were lost in the copper mining and associated industries between the time of the announcement and the time I asked my question two weeks ago. Supposedly 2,900 person-hours of work will be created. We do not know what they are. Perhaps there will be 3,000, but we do not know what they are. However, we know we have already lost 4,000 jobs since the announcement.

I asked the minister, "with the Canadian sector paying roughly double the foreign Liberal rate for capital, why does the minister believe that this kind of loan to foreign competitors is in the best interest of the Canadian copper mining industry?" The reason I asked that question was that the minister's office had informed me that the minister was opposed to this kind of deal. I certainly hope to hear from the minister tonight because she cannot go to one sector and say she is opposed and say to another sector that she is in favour. In Canadian politics and in politics around the world that is called double-talk. The minister answered and said that the loan, and I quote:

—affects a copper mine which will not come into production until roughly four or five years down the road—

That is not agreed to by the EDC.

—by which time we hope the copper situation will have improved and that the prices will have risen considerably. The fact is that that loan produces jobs in Canada immediately—

I hope to hear from the minister tonight what those immediate jobs are within the Canadian context.

The minister gave a response to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on December 14 regarding this same deal saying:

Exporting the kinds of machinery and engineering techniques which are being exported is precisely what we should be doing in Canada.

I am somewhat puzzled. The Canadian mining machinery sector had a $1.5 billion deficit just last year. When we are already in a deficit position, I wonder whether we have to pay SNC Engineering from Montreal, whether we have to make a special deal for Noranda and whether we have to make all these special deals in order to export machinery. Perhaps the minister could answer very clearly whether she is in favour or opposed to this deal. She cannot have it both ways. What jobs are being created, where and for how long?

What would the situation be if the $250 million had been invested at 11 per cent in the Canadian copper mining industry, either in smelters or in actual ore extraction? What about the 4,000 jobs that have been lost, and the 850 at Sudbury? There have just been some more lay-offs in Stewart, British Columbia today. There have been lay-offs in Manitoba, in the Yukon at Whitehorse Copper, at Bethlehem Copper, Lornex, Granduc, Campbell Resources, Falconbridge, Gaspé, Asarco and Baie Verte. It is a litany. Our copper mining industry is in trouble, and the Government of Canada is sending capital out of the country at half the cost that industry can get it here.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify a few points. I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is playing loose and fast with some figures. First, I would like to reassure the hon. member that the 850 lay-offs he reported to be taking place in Sudbury are indeed not taking place. That figure has been reduced to something like 250 at the moment, and, through close co-operation with a team from the CEIC, the provincial government and the local union we are convinced that number will be reduced to zero.

As to my opposition to this deal, let me assure the hon. member that I was not opposed to it, whatever he heard from my office. Perhaps he misconstrued the questions that I raised about the deal to be opposition. They were not; in fact, they were questions that every responsible member and every responsible minister asked of the EDC.

I should like to clarify the matter of the $250 million for the benefit of the hon. member for Skeena. The $250 million loaned to the government of Peru for the development of a new copper mine in that country is, in fact, to be provided by a group of 11 commercial banks, two of which are Canadian, at normal commercial interest rates, which leaves a balance of $100 million to be provided by the Export Development Corporation. I should like to assure the hon. member that this $100 million will be provided at normal consensus rate guidelines developed by the OECD, so that reduces the loan considerably.

The key purpose of the EDC loan is to generate export business for Canadian manufacturing and service industries from foreign developments that are expected to proceed, regardless of Canadian involvement. I should like to assure the hon. member that whether or not the Canadians he lists were involved in this deal, the deal would go on and the copper would be coming onstream four years from now, I guess. I rather doubt it will be onstream much sooner than that. This is certainly the case with the Tintaya loan.

With respect to jobs created in Canada, SNC Group of Montreal already has Canadians working on the project management, and a number of contracts for Canadian-produced mining equipment are expected to be signed this month. I am sure the hon. member appreciates the fact that these contracts must remain confidential until they are signed. As they become public, let me assure him that I will let him know about them as quickly as I am apprised.

Mining equipment and supplies to be purchased are to come from almost every Canadian province and are expected to create the 2,900 person-years of employment in Canada between now and 1985. Again, I should like to assure the hon. member that only the Canadian content is financed by the EDC—only the Canadian content! Those jobs have to be provided in Canada, or they will not be funded by the EDC.

There may be some confusion on the part of the hon. member for Skeena concerning this loan. The Peruvian copper mine in question will be developed for production by the mid-1980s whether or not Canadian financing is provided. In fact, the Export Development Corporation faced very stiff competition in winning the loan package so as to generate the $100 million in Canadian purchases.

This loan constitutes Canadian government financial and technical assistance and I am sure the hon. member would agree that it is important to provide this kind of technical assistance to Third World nations in support of long-term Canadian policy toward such nations.

METRIC CONVERSION

CALL FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to protest the arrogant manner in which the metric conversion program is being forced on the Canadian consumer. The Metric Commission's own internal Gallup poll, which has been suppressed, clearly shows that a majority of Canadians polled are against metric. To add insult to injury the government is now, by order in council, giving another $3 million to the commission in addition to the $49.3 million already spent. Enough is enough. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the entire matter of metric conversion be referred to the appropriate committee of this House so that members and witnesses from the public sector may have the right to challenge the legality and necessity of metric conversion in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

DUTY-FREE SHOP FRANCHISES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, whereas Canadian firms have lost thousands of dollars over the last two years by reason of government indecision and FIRA-created delays, and whereas the government has lost between $5 million and $6 million, to say nothing of its credibility, because of its inept and unfair handling of the duty-free shop franchise at Toronto International Airport, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Minister of Transport now adopt a serious and Canada-first posture on this debacle and honour forthwith his government's previous commitment that duty-free shops would be operated by Canadian-owned enterprises.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

STATUS OF WOMEN

APPOINTMENTS TO ADVISORY COUNCIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, whereas the minister responsible for the status of women has today announced the appointment of seven new members to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women and two vice-presidents for the eastern and western regional CACSW offices, and whereas estimable though some or all of these appointments may be, none comes from the labour movement, even though women constitute 40 per cent of our labour force, and none comes from consistently disadvantaged groups such as low-income women and native women, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House urges the minister responsible for the status of women, in making further appointments to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, to overcome that Liberal propensity which leads her to ignore women in the labour force, low-income women and native women.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FISHERIES

HERRING AND MACKEREL FISHING LICENCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) recently ruled that in order to qualify for renewal of a herring-mackerel fishing licence a fisherman must produce receipts from within the last three years. However, a large number of fishermen are unable to produce such receipts and therefore face losing their licences. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

S.O. 43

That this House reprimand the minister for making a change without first consulting the fishermen or their associations and that he be directed to rescind this new qualification for the herring-mackerel licence.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

NECESSITY TO HOLD HEARINGS ON PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT VALLEY, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On Monday, Mayor Charles Royer of Seattle came to Vancouver to publicize a combination of gifts and threats in a stepped-up effort to persuade British Columbians to accept the inundation of 5,000 acres of prime recreational land in the Skagit Valley. Whereas government footdragging in appointing a chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission presently deliberating on this issue could result in an environmentally unacceptable Skagit Valley flooding decision while Canada is under-represented on the IJC, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That the government take immediate action to appoint a Canadian chairman to the commission, that the IJC hold full public hearings on the Skagit Valley issue and that the federal government make a detailed presentation at these hearings emphasizing the environmental devastation which will take place if flooding is permitted.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF NATIVE PEOPLE IN NORTHEASTERN ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, while the unemployment rate across Canada has reached the unprecedented level of 9 per cent, the Indians in my riding of Athabasca are experiencing unemployment rates of up to 80 per cent and 90 per cent. The people of the Bigstone Band, the Janvier Band, the Fort Chipewyan Band, the Cold Lake Band, the Fort MacKay Band, the Fort McMurray Band, the Sucker Creek Band, and many, many others continue to live in abject poverty, a situation which is getting progressively worse. Whereas the economic development which has come to this area has passed native peoples by and continues to leave them far behind, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be directed by this House to earmark funds for economic development to allow the native people of northeastern Alberta to participate in and benefit from the economic activity taking place instead of leaving them behind in poverty and despair.

Mr. Jesse P. In view of the fact that the publication News from the Ukraine has entered Canada from the Soviet Union and has attacked the basic human rights of a former member of this House, Mr. Yuri Shymko, the present member of the provincial parliament in Ontario for the riding of High Park-Swansea, and in light of the fact that the July 30, 1981, issue of this publication viciously maligned Mr. Shymko by comparing him to the would-be assassins of the Holy Father Pope John Paul II, and President Ronald Reagan, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie):

That this House express its strong disapproval of the contents of the publication News from the Ukraine.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—CALL FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last week I and a number of my colleagues in the NDP caucus investigated charges from citizen and environmental groups that the Niagara River is being severely polluted by the chemical industry which is discharging waste materials into the river, and we determined that there is every reason for concern, despite the protestations from the Minister of the Environment to the contrary. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House directs the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to establish an all-party subcommittee on persistent toxic substances to investigate the charges of citizen, scientific, legal and environmental groups that the dumping of toxic chemical wastes into the Niagara River is posing a serious hazard to this important water source, to fisheries, and to the health of Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

DEDUCTIBILITY OF INTEREST ON LOANS USED FOR PURCHASE OF REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Thousands of Canadians who borrow money to purchase registered retirement savings plans are very concerned, because the minister proposed in the budget that interest on such loans should not be tax deductible. However, since the budget has undergone a number of changes, several of my constituents now wonder whether this particular measure might be changed as well.

My question is as follows: Does the minister intend to remove their cause for concern and allow Canadians to continue to deduct that interest from their income tax?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to propose any further changes at this stage.

PROVISIONS AFFECTING HEALTH AND INSURANCE PLANS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The minister is aware that there is widespread uncertainty across Canada about payroll deductions with respect to dental and health insurance plans. Some employees are now paying taxes through payroll deductions, and some employers have not yet begun to make deductions. Because of the prevailing confusion will the minister tell us whether or not he is contemplating further changes to the budget in this area?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think I should clarify the situation for the benefit of the hon. member. Quite a number of representations were made following the budget in November and December. As the hon. member knows, on December 18 I made a number of changes which I regarded as necessary and urgent. It is my view that any further changes based upon representations and arguments of hon. members ought to be made when we reach the appropriate stage of the legislative process.

INCOME AVERAGING RULES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Many small business people and farmers sold their farms before November 12, fully intending to buy IAACs before February 28, 1982, as the minister is aware. The minister's various statements, including the one of yesterday, ignored the retroactive impact of the budget in this regard with respect to small business people and farmers. Therefore, will he remove this retroactive feature of the budget by extending the date on which income averaging rules are to be changed, to February 28, 1982?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, where written agreements were in effect prior to the budget, of course these arrangements can proceed. In addition, it is possible for individuals in that particular case to purchase a one-year IAAC and next year to transfer the proceeds from that purchase into a forward-averaging system. It seems to me that these provisions have met the main difficulties and the main concerns. Naturally I am quite prepared, when we go to committee, to hear the views of hon. members on that and on any other subject.

Mr. Wilson: When will that be?

Mr. MacEachen: As soon as possible.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER" DRILLING RIG—QUERY RESPECTING STANDBY VESSEL

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has sort of pre-empted the issue of the Ocean Ranger. The three inspection reports tabled yesterday referred to supply boats and standby vessels. I should like to ask the minister whether there was a standby vessel in the vicinity of the Ocean Ranger. If so, how close was it to the Ocean Ranger? Was there a signal to the standby boat? If not, why not, especially in view of the stringent regulations of Norway after the Norwegian disaster in the North Sea, whereby emergency standby boats are required under the rules and regulations of the Norway government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have been informed that there was at least one standby boat. There may have been more; I believe there were two. With respect to the other questions asked by the hon. member, as to whether a signal was sent and what not, I shall inquire and be happy to report to him.

SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, when the minister is checking that rather basic fact, would he also check to see if whatever regulations we were following for the Ocean Ranger in Canadian waters required that each person on the rig have a survival suit? In the inspection report this was mentioned for the helicopter crew. Could the minister in his reply tell us just what specifications and regulations we do follow for oil rigs in Canadian waters? Are they American regulations, the more stringent Norwegian ones, or do we have any regulations?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first of all the hon. member should note that the Ocean Ranger was not in Canadian waters. It was stationed in international waters. The regulations concerning oil and gas drilling are in print and public. They cover operations offshore. As I indicated in the House yesterday, Section 8 of the regulations elaborates on all the information required to be furnished by operators, with regard to drilling programs.

Mr. Nowlan: On the safety of a rig?

Mr. Lalonde: He will find numerous provisions and requirements that he cannot expect me to read into the record during question period. I will be happy to give the hon. member a copy of the oil and gas drilling regulations if he does not have them already.

Mr. Nowlan: On safety of rigs?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, on safety. There are all kinds of provisions. There are some on support craft and standby craft. There are some provisions concerning anchors, stability of a unit, and on and on. I suggest to the hon. member that he refer to the regulations. With regard to very detailed questions as to the operations and exactly what happened on the platform at a particular time, I have to tell the hon. member right away that I am not in a position to give him that information. We have set up a commission of inquiry under the chairmanship of the Chief Justice of Newfoundland. We expect during the course of the inquiry that all those facts will be fully investigated and all the relevant information will be made available. But I am not in a position, and I do not think the hon. member would expect me to be in a position, to give the type of detail that he is asking for today. I am taking notice of his request and if I can provide the hon. member with additional information I will be very happy to do so.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO CONTROL MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has indicated on numerous occasions, both in the House and to me personally, that he believed the mortgage interest rates currently being charged in this country are too high. He has further stated that the banks should bleed a little and that he would monitor profits. We now see the banks are again leading the way toward even higher interest rates.

An hon. Member: Some bleeding.

Mr. Deans: Traditionally the difference between the consumer price index and the mortgage interest rate charged has been approximately three points, that is from 1970 to 1981. The banks now claim they need a four to six-point spread. Their spread right now is between five and seven points. Today's announcement of even higher interest rates will take that spread up to nine-plus points between the consumer price index and the mortgage interest rate charged on the some 250,000 mortgage renewals that will take place this year.

Will the minister bring in legislation now that will establish a mortgage interest rate that Canadians can afford?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You voted against that.

• (1425)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if it were possible to do it that easily, I assure my hon. friend I would be the first to agree to an easy proposal of that kind. I do not think it is possible in these circumstances simply to bring in a bill establishing a particular rate and expect the necessary funds to flow in at a non-competitive rate or one which is not related to the market. The hon. member knows that, and that is why, when a similar proposal was put forward by the opposition in a non-confidence motion, we voted against it. The effect of supporting it would really be to deny individuals necessary funds at the market rate.

The hon. member has raised the question of the performance of banks, and so on. I have already agreed that it would be useful for members of this House to examine the question of bank profits, and I am quite prepared to have that done when hon. members are ready to pass the reference and get the committee in operation.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GIVE DIRECTION TO BANKS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it is incredible how the minister can dismiss the needs of so many Canadians when it comes to the question of finding affordable housing. To say it is difficult to bring in legislation establishing a mortgage ceiling is to deny that people are entitled to affordable accommodation. I put to the minister, notwithstanding any inquiry we might have, it is quite clear on the record that bank profits have gone up from $672 million in 1977 to $1.6 billion in 1981.

Now, by anyone's admission there are two irrefutable facts. One, we need housing for people at a price they can afford, and we are falling short by some 70,000 units this year alone; and, two, we have unemployed people who could build those houses. Will the minister not undertake to direct that the banks not only accept a mortgage interest rate ceiling that people can afford, but that they put a significant percentage of their investment capital into mortgages in order that we can create the housing that people need, and create jobs for those currently unemployed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is nothing I can add to my earlier answer. I believe it would be useful at this stage, in view of the reference once again by the hon. member to bank profits, to have the matter fully investigated by a parliamentary committee. If that committee can provide recommendations to me on that subject, then I would consider them very seriously. Up to the present I have stated to the House that the reason in my view it is not appropriate at this stage to move on the tax side is because such a move would deny to many borrowers in the community the tax advantages they enjoy from the banks.

Because of existing arrangements, if we put a tax on the banks we would indeed deny a large number of borrowers access to money at much lower rates of interest. That is the reason I have not proposed a tax on the banks as I have been asked to do. I believe it would be self-defeating. If hon. members want to study the matter and can come up with a better answer, then I would be glad to consider it.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I am sure the minister appreciates that if there is to be a study, surely it must be initiated by the government and not by the opposition. I ask the minister to consider that there are two factors in life which are absolutely essential: food and shelter. How can the minister claim it is outside his jurisdiction and power to direct banks and all other financial institutions with regard to interest rates and the amount of their investment capital which must go into affordable housing? I simply ask the minister does the government have no sense of responsibility to ensure that people in Canada can get accommodation at a price they can afford, and to ensure that banks do not gouge the public in the way they have?

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why do you support them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it was in this particular session of the House of Commons, of the Parliament of Canada—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Only had one!

Mr. MacEachen: —that the decennial revision of the Bank Act was undertaken.

Mr. Deans: We tried to get it at fixed interest rates.

Mr. MacEachen: The House of Commons established the rules and regulations governing the banking system, including the possibility of foreign banks coming into Canada in order to increase the competitive character of the banking system. There is no provision in the law which permits the Minister of Finance to establish the rates at which banks—

Mr. Deans: We'll put it in.

Mr. MacEachen: —either borrow or lend money. That ought to be clear to the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: We will put it in!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member has rightly concentrated attention on the problem of home owners. As he knows, we have provided a system by which we believe no home owner in this country will lose a home because of high interest rates. We have appealed to the banks, for example, to roll back some of the interest rate increases last summer. One of the major banks did that with considerable benefit to potential home owners. Other banks would have my support if they undertook similar activity. However, there is no power within the hands of the Minister of Finance to direct the banks as to how to conduct their day to day operations, much as—

Mr. Deans: We will give you the power.

Mr. MacEachen: —at times, I might like to do so.

FINANCE

TAX MEASURE AFFECTING LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. On November 12 the Minister of Finance announced a tax on whole life insurance policies, making Canada the only country in the western world to do so. Since then the minister said he may refer the matter to committee, he may make arrangements with the insurance companies, or he may do nothing. This has caused a great deal of uncertainty, both for the sellers and purchasers of whole life insurance. Will the minister now take the proper course and announce that he is abandoning this foolish tax measure and end the uncertainty?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker.

EFFECT ON WAGE EARNERS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, did the minister know when he introduced his infamous budget on the night of November 12 that 78 per cent of all those who own whole life insurance policies earn under $25,000? That is what the average Canadian earns. How, in the name of equity, could he say that this was a budget which was taxing the rich when the average Canadian is paying tax on his life insurance, while deputy ministers earning $80,000 a year get a $4,500 tax break? Why does he not put an end to this nonsense now and come clean with the Canadian people?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Answer it!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): That's not a question. Get him to ask a question; then I'll answer it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Don't blush, MacEachen!

Mr. Clark: The minister didn't know.

FISHERIES

UNEMPLOYMENT IN LOCKEPORT, N.S.—REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE FISHING LICENCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On September 28, 1981, on December 23, 1981, and on February 3, 1982, I wrote to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans on behalf of the mayor and citizens of Lockeport, Nova Scotia, requesting that action be immediately taken to ease the unemployment situation in the area through a change in fisheries policy.

I now ask the minister, since the granting of fishing licences to three former scallop draggers, namely, the Misty Sea, the Cathy & Susie, and the Terry Doreen, will reactivate the groundfish industry in Lockeport and put most of the unemployed in that area to work, when may I expect some action on my three requests on behalf of the citizens of that area?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Well said.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I sent a letter in answer to the hon. member, which was signed on February 15. In that letter I pointed out that the groundfish quota was fully allocated and that we could not add to that effort. For that reason, I regretfully had to decline his request.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the minister for that answer.

INCREASE IN CATCH ALLOCATION TO POLAND

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, on August 10, 1981, the minister offered Poland an allocation of an additional 8,000 tonnes of fish on top of a previous allocation of some 12,000 tonnes of fish. In light of the economic circumstances in that country, I believe that action was acceptable and necessary.

Today I would like to ask the minister when he will show the same compassion to Canadians who desperately need employment opportunities in Shelburne County, and especially in Lockeport. This is a request which, if granted, will not cost the federal government any money whatsoever and will put three 100-foot deep sea ships back to work, and will actually add to our over-all economy.

Mr. Crombie: Good idea.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have rarely heard such a piece of demagoguery in a few phrases. The reality is—

Mr. Crouse: Give me an answer! Let's cut out your own demagoguery and give me an answer.

Mr. LeBlanc: If the hon. member would listen, he might get some information. The reality is that we allocated to Poland, as we do to other countries, fish which is totally surplus to Canadian need, mainly species in which Canadian fishermen have shown no interest and no desire to catch. What we are referring to here is groundfish in a region of the east coast which is totally and fully exploited. I frankly think that the hon. member knows his geography better than that.

Mr. Crouse: No answer, eh? You should resign, Roméo. Resign! You should resign!

ENERGY

INSPECTION OF MOBIL OIL OFFSHORE DRILLING RIGS

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wonder, considering the circumstances of recent events, if the minister would inform the House as to whether or not the other two rigs of Mobil Oil will be subjected to further inspection. Could the minister advise the House whether he will be instructing further inspection of the other two rigs owned by Mobil Oil?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have had a meeting this morning with the president of Mobil Oil Canada. I have just been advised that Mobil is arranging to have the contractors bring the rigs ashore for total inspection following the recent storm. I must remind the House that those two rigs had also been subjected to a full inspection last fall. The inspection will take place as soon as the weather will permit. At the present time the weather is too rough to allow the rigs to be brought ashore.

AIR SAFETY

AIR TRANSPORT ADMINISTRATION—RELEASE OF DUBIN REPORT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question today relates to the report on the evaluation of search and rescue by the committee of deputy ministers on defence and foreign policy, and I address it to the Minister of Transport. The report raises serious questions about the failures of the Canadian Air Transport administration to aid in prevention of air distress situations. Examples are failure to enforce weather criteria, flight plan practices, and inspections. Given the fact that the government has also accused these same senior officials of doctoring accident reports and suppressing information to protect the department and the minister, would the minister take immediate steps to remove or at least change the management of the air transport administration, and would he immediately release Part III of the Dubin report which is now in his possession?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I must take note because there are at least three questions in the same one. Concerning this subject of a draft paper from a committee of cabinet or subcommittee of cabinet secretariat on search and rescue, I answered the question yesterday. This is a draft which is now being submitted to different departments for comments. In due course the ministers will be seized of the final text. Concerning air transport, the question was what, exactly?

Mr. Skelly: The Dubin report.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, yes. Volume III of the Dubin report is coming out in the coming days. I have every intention of publishing a progress report on Volume II tomorrow. People know that Volume 1, which is on the creation of an independent investigatory board, has already been accepted by the government and that legislation is being prepared on that subject. So, again, I will report on Volume II tomorrow. My expectation is that I will table Volume III next week. So much for air safety.

● (1440)

SEARCH AND RESCUE SERVICES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): "So much for air safety!" I wonder at what point the minister is going to stop protecting those officials who have hung this whole country out to dry. My supplementary is to the same minister. Two years ago the Ministry of Transport and the Department of National Defence both received detailed studies and recommendations on problems and failures in the search and rescue system in this country. The current confidential report that was circulated on the deputy ministers' evaluation is almost identical in its recommendations and analysis. Will the minister commit himself to a full public study of the problems in delivering search and rescue services in Canada and, when those recommendations are forthcoming, will he move immediately to implement them?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with regard to air safety the hon. member will remember that I set up an advisory committee on the Dubin report. The committee worked remarkably well. I repeat, the Volume I recommendations will soon be in legislation. With regard to Volume II, I will report tomorrow on the progress made. I was expecting some compliments from my hon. friend on that subject because I think the performance has been rather good, if I can say so myself.

On the matter of search and rescue, I said yesterday that progress would be made. I agree with that. I have in my hand a report on the improved budget and improved equipment. I can recite what is here, such as the number of vessels on the west coast, on the east coast, improvement of training, and so on. I will gladly report on all that to my hon. friend. A moment ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to the creation of an inquiry into the Ocean Ranger. That inquiry will be as broad as is necessary. There is no doubt that it will be broad enough to include search and rescue capacity on the east coast.

Madam Speaker: Order. We are trying to keep questions and answers equally short.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DEATH OF DR. JIRI SKVOR

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. It relates to the death of Dr. Jiri Skvor. I read a statement some days ago that the Solicitor General said no investigation had taken place. Since that time, after a delay of almost a month, I received a letter from him to the same effect. I should like to ask him if he has any comments to make about the assertion by the son of the deceased, Mr. Paul Skvor of Ottawa, made on February 1 to reporters from the Canadian Press, Southam Press and Toronto Star, to the effect that indeed an investigation had been proceeding late last year. Would he have a word with the security service to ascertain what the purpose was of a visit by two individuals to the Skvor residence in Montreal late last year? Was there any official reason for this, or was it a subterfuge by persons unknown?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I cannot comment on that visit. I do not know whether it took place or who attended it. I did call in the security service and asked them about any investigation that had taken place into the death of Jiri Skvor. I was told that no investigation had taken place and that none will be conducted. Dr. Skvor was a prominent emigre living in Canada, and was an outspoken opponent of oppression in his homeland. That was known to anyone who read about his work and his views. However, simply having strong views and expressing them does not bring a person within the mandate of the security service. Far from it.

INQUIRY RESPECTING MONTREAL AND TORONTO COMPANIES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have another brief question about another Czech matter. Is the minister aware of the existence and activities of a corporation named Omnitrade Ltd., located at 750 McArthur in Montreal, and its three Toronto subsidiaries, Omnitrade Machinery, Vista Industrial, and Pontiac Manufacturing, a corporation controlled from Prague, Czechoslovakia? Can the minister assure the House, the public and the business community, that these four business entities are not engaged in any activities which would be contrary to our national interest? Finally, will the minister inform the House, after checking carefully, about the residence status of the five directors of the corporation, Messrs. Valenta, Machac, and Solomon from Montreal, and Sejbal and Napravnik from Toronto?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I will look into those. I have no comment on them now, and may not after I look into them. I must say that, in my view, it is reprehensible for the hon. member to throw names on the table of companies and individuals, and make no allegations about them whatsoever other than putting their names forward. If he has information against these companies and individuals, I urge him to come and tell me about them or tell the security service about them.

ENERGY

FUTURE OF ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the minister knows, 60,000 to 100,000 jobs across Canada are dependent on the outcome of meetings now taking place to decide the fate of the Alsands project. What assurance can the minister give today that this project will proceed this year?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am in the same position as the hon. member. I am waiting for the conclusion of the meeting that is now taking place. Once that meeting has been concluded, we will see what the conclusions are. The government of Alberta and the Government of Canada will have to decide. I talked with my colleague in Alberta as recently as a couple of days ago. We have concluded that we should wait for the conclusion of today's meeting.

STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Over a year ago the minister said in Cold Lake, "This project will go ahead, if not this year then next year, or the next year or the next year." He also made the statement, "Those who have put their heart and their money into the project won't be disappointed much longer." People have lost their life savings in northeastern Alberta and small businesses are going bankrupt because of the lackadaisical attitude of the minister. Would he care to revise those statements?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Madam Speaker.

THE JUDICIARY

REQUEST THAT WOMAN BE APPOINTED TO SUPREME COURT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who will perhaps recall that last week I asked him about the appointment of a qualified woman to the Supreme Court of Canada. Since that time the federal Minister of Justice has made ten judicial appointments, all of them men, even though there were qualified women available for such appointments. I ask the Prime Minister for an assurance that this ongoing trend of men only to judicial appointments will not be followed in the case of the vacancy in the Supreme Court of Canada, and that a qualified woman will be appointed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am surprised to hear the hon. member talk about the government's record, particularly that of the present Minister of Justice. He has a statistic, which I do not have readily in mind, which indicates that the Liberal government in the past ten or 12 years has progressively increased the number of women on the bench whereas, if my memory is correct, during the Clark government not a single woman judge was appointed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I remind the hon. member that in many areas this government has striven to promote the role of women in the various public bodies. It is this government that first named a woman to a superior court or supreme court in Canada. It is this government that named the first woman deputy minister. It is this government which named the first woman Speaker of the House.

Mr. Clark: Who named the Speaker?

Mr. Trudeau: It is this government which named the first woman as Speaker of the Senate. It was this government which named the first woman lieutenant governor of a province. In every field we have tried to seek out women who could discharge the role with distinction. We found them. However, we do not name women just for the pleasure of naming women. We name them when they are competent. The examples I have given show that they have been very competent.

• (1450)

MINISTERIAL REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. I do not know why the Prime Minister has to be so defensive and be so partisan about a move which I can assure him would have the support of at least 52 per cent of the population of Canada and, I would think, of a great many more.

We know that several public representations have been made by cabinet ministers to the Prime Minister with regard to the budget. Could the Prime Minister tell us what representations have been made with regard to the appointment of a woman to the Supreme Court of Canada by either the minister responsible for the Status of Women or the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have had many and constant representations from members of my cabinet as well as my caucus—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: By letter and otherwise.

Mr. Trudeau: —and from my own staff. I have appointed people particularly to establish a bank of available women for various functions. That is why the Minister of Justice in the past two years has named more women to the bench in Canada than have been named in Canada's history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

DISASTERS

SINKING OF RUSSIAN FREIGHTER—NATURE OF CARGO

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or any other minister who may have information about the sinking of the Russian freighter whose captain waved away Danish rescuers before the ship went down.

Can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or any other informed minister, advise the House whether the government is in possession of any information to suggest that the freighter was carrying any Canadian material or any Canadian processed material and, if so, what was the nature of the material or processed material being carried?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I heard that rumour at about noon. I am having it checked now. I am in no position to confirm or deny it at this time.

What I do know is that indeed the Russian ship may have refused the support of a Danish ship and waited for one of its own sister ships to come to its aid. However, it was too late.

I know that the Sir Humphrey Gilbert, which is a Canadian Coast Guard ship, is in that area now and has 13 bodies and five survivors on board. There is a Russian factory ship, the Dvorsky, in the area which also has seven bodies on board. The remaining crew are missing. If survivors come to Canada they will be interviewed under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, Section 545, and there will be a preliminary inquiry under the "casualty at sea" rule of the act.

URANIUM SHIPMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport referred to rumours. For my supplementary question I would ask the minister whether the rumours he is investigating are those to the effect that the Russian freighter was carrying nuclear material?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, perhaps I can respond and be of some assistance to the right hon. gentleman. There were some assertions that the Russian freighter was carrying some uranium hexafluoride (UF). Twelve containers of that substance were indeed destined to be on the ship to Russia, but since the ship was late, Eldorado Nuclear sent those containers on to Russia by another Soviet vessel.

QUERY RESPECTING NUCLEAR MATERIAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I think the House would like to have full details of the arrangements between Eldorado Nuclear and the Soviet Union regarding the refining or other handling of nuclear material. Would the Minister of Environment, or whichever minister is informed, indicate to us whether the information now given by the Minister of the Environment is to the effect that there was no nuclear material of any kind on the Russian freighter?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, to the best of my knowledge that is the case. I have given the information which I have in my possession. I will pursue the right. hon. gentleman's subsequent question to see if there was any other material. To the best of my knowledge that is not the case.

CANADA POST

DISQUALIFICATION OF CASUAL WORKERS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post. In view of the arbitrary, high-handed and contemptible action of Canada Post officials in Scarborough, Ontario, who have disqualified 55 casual workers, who were successful in a difficult competition to become permanent workers, because of unsubstantiated allegations of cheating by a few of them due to the negligence of these same officials, and in view of the fact that these workers were placed in double jeopardy by being required to take a second test on February 15, despite orders from the executive office of the president of Canada Post that such a test was not to be held at that time, would the minister conduct a full investigation immediately to ensure that the vast majority of the 55 workers who are innocent be immediately requalified, and that the former hiring techniques of Canada Post, which relied heavily on nepotism and star chamber tactics be completely eradicated.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Put the rest of it in a letter.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will accept the representation of the hon. member. I appreciate that the substance of his presentation is very serious. I do not see the opposition taking it as seriously, but I appreciate that it is a serious matter for those who believe that the procedures were not followed properly. I will raise it with the president of the corporation and report back to the hon. member as soon as possible.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF REFUGEE FROM EL SALVADOR—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister will recall that last week he acknowledged that Victor Regalado is a refugee from El Salvador and the United States, who is presently detained in Montreal and likely to be deported following a deportation hearing because of a security certificate issued against him by the minister and the Solicitor General.

The minister will also recall that on Monday of this week the Solicitor General, in answer to the hon. member for Montmorency-Orléans, said that he hoped to be soon tabling in the House, after discussions in cabinet, a system for external control and review of decisions made with respect to national security.

Will the minister defer deportation of Mr. Regalado until his colleague, the Solicitor General, has had the opportunity to table a system for reviewing certificates of security?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the issuance of a deportation order comes from an inquiry held by an adjudicator. It is not an order with which a minister can interfere. What we did indicate to the hon. member and to the solicitors and advisers to Mr. Regalado is that, considering the judgment of his refugee status, we would not undertake to have him deported to El Salvador or any other country which might simply transfer him to El Salvador, but would give him the opportunity to find an alternative third country to which he could go. I think this is a case where we are respecting the judgment that he is a refugee from El Salvador. At the same time, the fact that we issued a Section 39 certificate indicates very clearly that he was in transgression of the laws of Canada and was against the national security interests of Canada and we therefore would want to see that deportation order carried out as the adjudicator so desired.

REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, considering that the minister has indicated he can exercise discretion in the timing of the deportation, will he allow Mr. Regalado to have the benefit of whatever review arrangements his colleague, the Solicitor General, may be providing for other people in the same situation as Mr. Regalado in the future?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should point out—perhaps the Solicitor General can add to the answer—that Mr. Regalado does have available to him, as does anyone who goes through the intitial determination procedures, a redetermination hearing through the Immigration Appeal Board. It is his choice or that of his advisers as to whether he wants to take advantage of that. I say to the hon. member that there are already a number of steps in place which are available to this individual, as they are to other individuals under these circumstances. It is not contingent upon the proposal by the Solicitor General, which I think is a very good one, that he would review the findings of McDonald commission and proceed with those. There is a process which is available to the gentleman.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ORPHANS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has she anything to report on the long struggle to bring an end to the discrimination against orphans under the Family Allowances Act?

● (1500)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, this problem—which I must say has been raised often by the hon. member—was submitted to my colleagues. The principle of future changes to family allowances in relation to orphans and children who may have earned enough money in a year to be disqualified, even though those small sums of money were probably needed by the families involved, has been adopted. Unfortunately, it cannot be accommodated immediately because it involves a minimum sum of $5 million to $6 million a year. We have to postpone this as a priority, but the principle is adopted.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST TEENAGE GIRLS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister would make the respresentation to her colleagues that, in addition to discrimination against orphans, under the present regulations—not the law—there is also discrimination against teenage girls.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the specifics of this, but I will discuss the matter with my officials and with the minister responsible for the status of women.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROUSE—COMMENTS BY MR. LEBLANC DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege related to the answer provided to me a short while ago by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). I now have the letter to which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans referred. The letter is dated February 15, and it indicates that the allocation to Poland, to which I raised no objections whatsoever, was in the amount of 2,000 tonnes of Atlantic cod, 2,000 tonnes of Atlantic redfish and 1,000 tonnes of Atlantic halibut.

The minister may have unitentionally misled this house when he stated that these fish are of a species surplus to Canadian needs and not in demand by Canadian fishermen. That statement is not in keeping with the facts, since the species allocated are three of the most highly desirable species caught in Atlantic Canada. I think the minister should set the record straight.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, of course, recognizes that he is debating the question and that he has no foundation for a question of privilege. I am sorry, but I must ask him to refrain from continuing.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader having to do with House business. Will he assure us that it is still the intention of the government to proceed on Friday with an allotted day, thus giving the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) and eight other Quebec Liberal members—and God knows how many Ontario members—an opportunity to vote on the issue which is the subject matter of that motion now on the Order Paper?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I cannot presume to know what your ruling will be on which motion will be debated on the next allotted day, but if there is any change, I will let my hon. colleague know as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a further question to the government House leader in order to clarify his answer. We all know that there are two motions set for Friday. Does his reply to me mean that the government is prepared to proceed with the allotted day if the Chair rules in favour of the New Democratic Party motion, but that if the Chair rules in favour of the official opposition motion the government will not proceed? Is that what he means?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I do not know which motion will be debated on the next allotted day. There could be further notices given, either by an independent member or by the Tory party, which could change the motion. However, whatever the motion and whatever your decision, Madam Speaker, we intend to have an allotted day on Friday. I indicated to my hon. colleague that if there is any change, I will let him know on time, but it is the prerogative of the Government to establish the order of business. For the time being I have announced Friday as an allotted day, and I do not think we will change our minds, but if we do, I will let my hon. colleague know.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raises an interesting question. I was not aware that the Chair was contemplating making a ruling on which of the two motions was to be debated on Friday. I just assumed ours was the one coming up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PETITION

MR. JELINEK—LACK OF DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN BRONTE MEADOWS, MILTON, ONTARIO

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I have a duty to present a petition on behalf of my constitutents. A subdivision in my riding of Halton in the town of Milton, Ontario—namely, the Bronte Meadows subdivision—has been at a stage of completion and meeting postal regulations since July, 1981. As of today, no door-to-door mail delivery is being made or, I understand, contemplated, despite the unprecedented postal rate increase.

I therefore take this opportunity to present a petition signed by over 100 residents of this subdivision outlining their concern regarding the lack of door-to-door mail delivery. At the same time I would like to give notice that I will take further action should mail delivery in that subdivision not be initiated in the very near future.

MR. DON MARRIOTT

Question No. 2,760—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since his appointment as Director of Restaurants and Catering of the National Arts Centre, what is a complete list of all travelling done by Mr. Don Marriott, when he was reportedly making such trips on National Arts Centre business, including the places visited, the hotels in which he stayed and the restaurants in which he ate?

2. Since his appointment, what was the total amount of expenses charged by Mr. Marriott for business conducted outside the national capital area?

3. Did Mr. Marriott fly first class at any time and, if so, on how many occasions and at what cost to the taxpayer?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows:

1. Over the 27 months since his appointment as Director of Restaurants and Catering of the National Arts Centre, Mr. Marriott travelled to places, stayed at hotels and ate at restaurants, as listed hereunder:

Place	Hotel	Restaurant
Toronto	Royal York	Not specified
Stratford	Not applicable	Church Restaurant
Toronto	Hilton	Not specified

Stratford	Not applicable	Church
Toronto	Royal York	Simpsons
Toronto	Park Plaza	Not specified

The restaurants identified are those recorded on travel expense claims submitted by Mr. Marriott.

2. Over the 27 months since his appointment, the total amount of expenses (including travel, accommodation and meals) charged by Mr. Marriott for business conducted outside the national capital area is $6,695.64.

3. Mr. Marriott did not fly first class at any time while travelling on corporation business.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Question No. 3,270—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government opposed to foreign investment in Canada, if such investment provides jobs and leaves the greater part of its profits for reinvestment in this country?

2. Is the government aware that it has the legislative capacity to nationalize any foreign company operating in Canada that contravenes or disrespects either Canadian laws or the welfare of the Canadian people?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the Department of Justice as follows:

1. It is the declared policy of the Government of Canada to welcome foreign investment that is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada.

2. Federal legislative capacity resides with Parliament. It is subject to the constitutional division of powers between the federal and provincial legislatures. However, the federal Parliament, in its field of jurisdiction, is legislatively supreme and the government is certainly aware of this fact which is a basic principle of the Canadian Constitution.

NUMBER OF LICENCES FOR MANUFACTURE OF FUEL ALCOHOL

Question No. 3,285—Mr. Althouse:

1. Under the National Energy Program, by province and by date, how many applications for licences were received for the manufacture of fuel alcohol?

2. By province, how many plants were brought into production since the program began and how many gallons are produced by the plants?

3. By province, how many methane gas production units are operating and (a) how many are part of (i) agricultural production units (ii) municipal sewage disposal units (b) how many gallons of equivalent gasoline are being produced by the units?

4. What proportion of Canada's portable fuel requirements are made up by alcohol and methane plants?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Energy, Mines and Resources Canada and Revenue Canada as follows:

1. Since the legislation was enacted, July 8, 1981, to the date of this question, no official application had been received. However, to date, two official applications for licences have been received.

2. None.

3. (a) (i) According to Agriculture Canada, there have been two dozen farm scale anaerobic digestors built in Canada but only six are operating. Most of this type of activity has been in Ontario and Quebec.

(ii) According to Environment Canada, there are 136 municipal sewage disposal units in Canada equipped with anaerobic digestors. The breakdown by province is:

Alberta	— 6
British Columbia	— 7
Manitoba	— 4
New Brunswick	— 1
Newfoundland	— 3
Nova Scotia	— 3
Ontario	—90
Prince Edward Island	— 1
Quebec	—19
Saskatchewan	— 2

(b) (i) None.

(ii) None. About half of these produce methane which is used for plant and digestor heating.

4. The proportion of Canada's portable fuel requirements made up by alcohol methane plants is insignificant; less than 0.1 per cent.

MISS FRANCE NADEAU

Question No. 3,526—Mr. Cossitt:

Is a Miss France Nadeau employed or was she employed by the Royal Canadian Mint and, if so (a) what are/were all her duties (b) what was the commencement date of her employment and was it during the time that Mr. Yvon Gariépy was Master of the Mint (c) was she hired by Mr. Gariépy on the recommendation of Miss Claudette Nadeau, former head of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): I am informed by the Royal Canadian Mint as follows: Miss Nadeau is presently employed by the Royal Canadian Mint on a temporary basis.

(a) Miss Nadeau was hired for a summer project as Co-ordinator of Exhibitions. Her duties were the following:

(i) assisted in the preparation of the exhibits for the pavilion at Terre des Hommes, convention and trade fair

(ii) trained six hosts/hostesses—Terre des Hommes

(iii) supervised the operation of the pavilion at Terre des Hommes

(iv) ensured the safekeeping of all exhibits

(v) obtained information and gave verbal responses to queries

(vi) accepted orders for numismatic coins, transmitted all orders to mail order fulfilment

(vii) arranged tour appointments at Terre des Hommes

(viii) recorded daily count of visitors

(ix) ensured projection equipment is in good condition.

At the end of the summer employment, Miss Nadeau was asked to stay on a temporary basis. Her present duties are the following:

(i) keeps sales records, customers' performance evaluation

(ii) ensures distributors and dealers' shipments meet delivery dates

(iii) assists in preparation of quotations

(iv) assists the administrator

(v) participates in coin shows as required

(vi) assists the Manager of Numismatic Products as required.

(b) Miss Nadeau's employment commenced on April 3, 1981, during Mr. Gariépy's tenure as Master of the Mint.

(c) No.

CANADIAN EXPORTS TO AND IMPORTS FROM POLAND

Question No. 3,576—Mr. Cossitt:

In each of the past five years for which figures are available, what was the total value of (a) exports to Poland from Canada (b) imports from Poland to Canada and what are the estimated figures for the current year?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics on Canadian exports to and imports from Poland in each of the past five years are as follows:

Years	(a) Exports ($'000)	(b) Imports ($'000)
1977	156,693	47,868
1978	224,800	73,722
1979	276,226	82,778
1980	357,403	72,159
1981	328,957(p)	73,878(p)

(p): Preliminary.

With regard to estimated figures for the current year, Statistics Canada does not make projections for this type of data.

CANADIAN EXPORTS TO AND IMPORTS FROM U.S.S.R.

Question No. 3,592—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total of Canadian (a) exports to (b) imports from the Soviet Union during each of the past five years for which statistics are available and what are the estimated figures for the current year?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics on Canadian exports to and imports from the U.S.S.R. in each of the past five years are as follows:

Years	(a) Exports	(b) Imports ($'000)
1977	360,044	56,659
1978	567,306	38,460
1979	776,231	64,088
1980	1,540,415	59,290
1981	1,861,089(p)	77,636(p)

(p): Preliminary.

With regard to estimated figures for the current year, Statistics Canada does not make projections for this type of data.

URBAN TRANSIT AUTHORITY IN B.C.

Question No. 3,614—Mr. Herbert:

1. What amount is to be paid in the current fiscal year to the Urban Transit Authority in British Columbia and what is the purpose of the payment?

2. Were any funds already transferred and, if so, on what date and in what amount?

3. What is the total government commitment to the project and is this amount to be transferred in this fiscal year?

4. What will be the estimated percentage completion of the project as at March 31, 1982?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. The federal government may provide $60 million this fiscal year to the Urban Transit Authority of British Columbia. The payment is conditional upon the federal government being satisfied with arrangements concerning Transpo '86, a fair featuring transportation developments, and that the B.C. government will proceed with this exposition. The payment is to be applied: $20 million to a pre-build section (completed mid-1983) and $40 million toward the purchase of 114 vehicles.

2. No funds have been transferred to date.

3. The total of $60 million may be transferred this fiscal year.

4. Estimated percentage completion of the entire advanced light rapid transit project as of March 31, 1982, is less than 2 per cent; this includes some engineering and design work, and some soil testing. Formal ground breaking is planned for February 15, 1982.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 3,722—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of public servants working in the Department of External Affairs in Quebec indicate English as their first official language?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In the Department of External Affairs there are two (6 per cent) public servants out of 34 that are working in Quebec and have English as their first official language.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, may I bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 2,672, which I put on the Order Paper on June 2 of last year, simply inquiring as to what public opinion surveys were commissioned by the government at public expense since the last election. Surely by now he should have been able to obtain the information. When will the House be apprised of that information?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not have that information in front of me, but I will look into the matter on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I put a question on the Order Paper on January 29 regarding the legal authority the government presumes it has for the collection of taxes in advance of the passage of legislation. It seems to me to be a fairly simple question that the government ought to be able to answer at a moment's notice. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary might indicate what it is that is holding up the answer. Is there some plot in the back rooms? Or perhaps the government does not have that authority. I would be interested to know.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will look into the progress being made in answering this question, but I am sure the hon. member knows it is not the policy of the government to release legal opinions.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the parliamentary secretary. On several previous occasions I have asked the parliamentary secretary to expedite answers to my questions on the Order Paper Nos. 3,380 to 3,438. The last time I asked the parliamentary secretary, he indicated that he would actively pursue obtaining answers to those questions from the ministers involved. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary how he is making out in his hot pursuit of those ministers. I hope we will have the answers by the end of this week because if this is hot pursuit, it is little wonder that the people on behalf of whom I am asking these questions are becoming rather concerned.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I have made representations with regard to those inquiries, and I will continue to do so in hot pursuit.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 71 in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)?

[Text]

LEGAL OPINION AND DOCUMENTS RELATIVE TO BILL C-48 AND LAND CLAIM NEGOTIATIONS OR ABORIGINAL RIGHTS OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Motion No. 71—Mr. Fulton:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the legal opinion and any other documents advising the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on the effects that Bill C-48, an act to regulate oil and gas interests in Canada lands and to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, may have on land claim negotiations or the aboriginal rights of native people.

[English]

Mr. Ray Chénier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the documents requested by the hon. member cannot be provided because the motion for production of papers specifically requests government papers or documents which are exempt from production as described in Citation 390 of Beauchesne, which says:

> Legal opinions or advice provided for the use of the government.

I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

● (1510)

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I would ask that motion for the production of papers No. 71 be transferred for debate. The reason I ask is that on June 1, 1981, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) said that he had such an opinion and would provide it to Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Before we proceed to orders of the day, there is a point of order by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty).

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, on the question of Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, I wonder if I might be allowed to bring to the attention of the House and of the parliamentary secretary that Motion No. 731 stands in my name since December 2, 1981. It requests a copy of the results of each public opinion survey commissioned by the government since the last election. When will the government make up its mind about that?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will make inquiries with regard to that matter.

While I have the floor, I would ask that the other notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, as you are aware, Bill C-93 is another attempt by the government to dupe Canadian citizens out of billions of dollars. This time it is $6.6 billion. Last time it was $14 billion. All of that money is to be borrowed.

I stand as a member of the opposition but also as a member who represents citizens who have had enough of this growth of government and who are opposing this wholesale borrowing of money. This money is to be raised in any currency. This means that the government can borrow from any country in the world. This would only exacerbate the problem we already have with our balance of trade. It means that more money will leave this country than comes in. The government can give any form of security that it wants—it could put a mortgage on your house, Mr. Speaker, on my house, and it is certainly putting a mortgage on our future. Therefore, I have no difficulty at all in opposing this bill.

It is clear that we have a government that is totally out of control, and that has been the case since it was returned. I should like to go through the remarks made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) which show that the government has no idea how to run an economy. Our economy is being run by a bunch of people who have never had to meet a payroll and who have never seen the tragedy of people losing their jobs as a result of government inflation.

The minister proudly referred to the fact that the government had signed agreements with Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. He was trying to gather some credit for the government as if all the energy taxes, because they were part of an agreement, somehow gave the federal government legitimacy. That argument will not hold, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what the producing provinces did under the agreement was to get a confirmation that they simply had rights as owners of the assets; all they were putting into the agreement was their right as owners. All of the other taxes that have been imposed upon Canadians and that are in the process of being imposed upon them, are the result of decisions made by the Liberal Party of this country.

We must keep in mind that when a gallon of gas sells in Ontario for $1.67, some 22 cents of that goes to the citizens of Alberta as owners; some 25 cents goes to the Ontario government as a provincial tax it has chosen to levy on its own people, and some 57 cents goes to the federal government by way of a simple tax. It is not necessary for the federal government to raise money that way. There is income tax and sales tax, but rather than increase the income tax, the federal government has chosen to impose this tax on energy. It is another way for the federal government to raise money. Some 63 cents out of that $1.67 goes to the companies, most of which are Canadian, that explore for the oil, that drill for the oil, that will produce it, and then refine it. All of the distribution system, all of the wholesalers and retailers—that huge package of Canadians—shares some 63 cents.

The price of energy is much higher than it needs to be in this country, and the reason for this is taxation by governments and primarily by the government opposite. We must always remember that, Mr. Speaker. The minister said that in the perspective of the government, inflation is the number one problem. It is true that inflation is a serious matter; no one denies that. He said that inflation forces interest rates up and slows investment, and that it must stop. He is absolutely correct, but he never said that there are three strings to the bow of this problem.

The first string is the deficit which the government will not admit it is responsible for. The deficit is over $90 billion. One dollar in five of our revenue goes to service that debt, so the government has lost the flexibility of being able to step in and help other parts of the industry when they need help. It is unable to help citizens who are losing their farms and ranches. But the one dollar in five of federal revenue that services the debt goes into the hands of people who already have wealth. Those are the people in our country and in other countries who have wealth. That is a very bad thing, because it leads to a class society.

So the first string, Mr. Speaker, is the deficit, and it is the one that the government will not admit to—it is too many dollars chasing the available goods that causes inflation. People have the money and they put out more on goods than they need to, and that causes inflation. As a result of inflation we have high interest rates, in order to try to bring it down.

The government says that we need high interest rates to bring inflation down but in truth, Mr. Speaker, the way to bring inflation down quickly and permanently is to get the size of government itself under control, and particularly the government deficit.

From the last financial statement we know that the government has some $7 billion on deposit with the chartered banks today. Yet it comes before us, as elected members responsible to our constituents across the country, and asks permission to borrow an additional $6.6 billion. I do not believe that we should give the cabinet that authority. I believe that the government backbenchers, in response to their own citizens, should deny the government access to this money. It simply does not need it when it already has $7 billion in the till. When that money is gone it can come back to the House when it genuinely needs more and ask for it. If the government takes that $6.6 out of the economy tomorrow, that means it is not available to the private companies and the ordinary citizens who may need it to build the plant and manufacturing capacity that will put Canadians to work. When that $6.6 billion is drawn from the capital market, it is just not available.

The government should not be able to do that to people, and that is why I believe that we need a constitutional amendment to block governments from having deficits. West Germany has this in its constitution. Governments should only be able to go into a deficit situation if there is an emergency or a crisis. Such a provision should be part of our Constitution in order to protect the citizens against the government.

Mr. Benjamin: We have a crisis right now.

Mr. Thacker: Yesterday the Minister of State for Finance talked glowingly about how the government was restraining itself. I believe he is a man of some honour and reputation, a man with a sound educational background, but surely he must find that statement incredible in these tough times when every citizen has to cut back and tighten his belt. On the basis of the public accounts as well as the national accounts, government expenditures are rising 22 per cent. How can he possibly say that this amounts to restraint? If he could parallel this with a rate of inflation of only 11 per cent or 12 per cent, perhaps he could say that it was restraint. But surely increasing government expenditures at twice the rate of inflation must be extravagant and are not restraint.

It is regrettable that history repeats itself. In 1974 when the Anti-Inflation Board was established, the government said to Canadians and to corporations that there had to be restraint. Thus, AIB held down wages of ordinary Canadian workers and held down prices to a lesser extent. Surely the third string in the bull had to be government holding itself down, but it did not. When we look at the record of the AIB we find that government expenditures rose enormously, and finally the controls had to come off. Canadians realized they were tricked, and they are being tricked again. Liberal members made campaign promises to hold down the price of energy and to be a sound government, but the Liberal government got us into deep trouble. Now we are at the point where the government is saying that we must hold back and tighten our belts, but once again it is not holding itself down. The whole system will not work. I say without a shadow of doubt that there will be enormous increases in inflation and high interest rates for many months, because the third string in the bull is not prepared to get itself under control.

Also the minister of state pointed out that all western nations were suffering from inflation. This is true, but most of them are suffering because they have had similar types of social democratic governments which have taken ordinary citizens into deficit positions. They are doing, as nations, what no one can do as an individual. None of us can spend more than we make and survive for more than a few weeks, months or years at the very most. Governments are no different. It is just that the time-frame before they are called to account is much longer, but the pain is always the same. If as an individual I spend more than I make, I am pushed into bankruptcy by my creditors, I declare bankruptcy and I suffer. When nations go into bankruptcy, people suffer. We can always predict who it will be—it will be people on fixed incomes because invariably governments get out of deficits by turning on the printing press. Every Canadian across the country needs to watch the weekly statement of the Bank of Canada. When the printing press is turned on, the nation is flooded with money. It is true that they will be paying back the deficit with 25-cent or 50-cent dollars, but who will suffer? It will be senior citizens on fixed incomes because they have no way of protecting themselves, and all people on welfare today will never get off the rolls. Now it is affecting middle-income Canadians, to the point where one must earn over $50,000 per year to purchase even a modest two-bedroom home.

What kind of a future is this for young people? Why should the government be able to get away with it? The answer is that the government should not get away with it, but it will continue to do so until people realize and vote in governments committed to financial restraint and prepared to bring forward a constitutional amendment which, as a matter of law, the supreme law of the land, prevents governments from doing such things.

Another argument used by the government is that tax rates for some 12 million Canadians will drop. All of this has been exposed for what it really is—a joke and a lie. In order to benefit these 12 million people, the government had to bring in an indexation clause. Because of the indexing, which is part of our law, the government is taking credit for 12 million people receiving a benefit. This is a lie because indexing is part of the law, and the government should not take credit for it any more than it should take credit for personal exemptions.

I suppose the government could say that 14 million Canadians are receiving a tax reduction because of personal exemptions, but it does not make sense. It is technically true that part of the budget will result in a reduction for some Canadians, but we must realize that it is a trick because on 11 separate occasions the government filed Ways and Means motions imposing taxes upon Canadians. I should like to refer to the various notices of Ways and Means motions that have been filed by the government. On Monday, April 21, 1980, a number of Ways and Means motions were filed; on July 11, 1980, the text of a Ways and Means motion was filed; on October 28, 1980, another notice was filed; on December 17, 1980, another was filed; on Thursday, December 18 and on Friday, December 19, 1980, a separate taxing bill was filed; on March 2, 1981, a notice of taxation was filed; and on April 23, 1981, another notice of taxation. These are all notices to impose taxes on Canadian citizens. For the government to stand and say that it reduced taxes on November 12 or December 18 is simply a lie. There was another notice of Ways and Means on June 2, 1981; one on November 12; one on November 27; and one as late as February 1, 1982. There were 11 separate occasions upon which the government imposed taxes on Canadian citizens. In total, 21 notices were filed. For the government to say that it reduced taxes in one provision might be technically correct, but in terms of honesty, equity and fairness to Canadians it is not true.

Why is Canada failing? It is a good question. We can look at our land and see some 24 million people sitting on resources spread across half the continent. We can look at our competitors, Japan and Germany. How would Mr. Speaker like to be one of 114 million Japanese sitting on a rock in the middle of the ocean, with no oil or resources? Its industry is its people. It has a low rate of inflation because the people work, and it has good productivity. It has the benefit of decent, honest government which does not try to fool the people. When we look at Germany, we see the same situation. Germany has a constitutional provision that the government cannot bring the people into a deficit position unless there is an emergency such as war.

Here we are in Canada with a government which is taking us into debt. It is the same situation with Crown corporations. I had a paper prepared by the research department of the Library of Parliament which pointed out all our Crown corporations in Schedule C and Schedule D. Then it listed the subsidiary corporations owned by Crown corporations, and even the subsubsidiary corporations. Government involvement in our lives by virtue of Crown corporations is truly enormous. Indeed, the Liberal way to socialism in Canada is through Crown corporations. Fortunately, Canadians—and particularly university students—are beginning to realize that their futures are bankrupt. A deficit means that those of us who are middle aged will not have to pay the debt, but the next generation will be saddled with a deficit of over $90 billion. This has to be paid back out of the sweat and work of human beings, such as young people who work on oil rigs. It was a tragedy to lose 84 people off the Newfoundland coast. Every year in the western provinces there are 19 or 20 fatal accidents among oil rig workers. These lives are lost at the expense of providing oil for the rest of the country. That is the cost of operating oil rigs. They are very dangerous machines. What about those accidents involving crushed feet and other horrendous things? What about the miners who get black lung disease? All of these people are paying for the deficit. They work by the sweat of their brow. You would think that we would let them decide how to spend their money. But that is not the socialist way. The socialist way is for a government to take away all the money from the individual and decide how it will be spent rather than leave it to the individual to decide. The major difference that is now so clear to many Canadians is the difference between the Liberal-NDP style and our style. We would leave money with millions and millions of individuals and allow them to decide what to do with it. We believe this method leads to a better result for the nation than taxing money away from them and a small group of 36 cabinet ministers and deputy ministers deciding how to spend it.

The next budget will involve some $75 billion or $76 billion. That is about $2 billion for each cabinet minister. That is an incredible amount to me. I have a great suspicion of government. I would not want to see either a Conservative, an NDP or a Liberal government given that kind of power over us. Whenever power concentrates, power corrupts. It is not some pet phrase that power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely. That is the experience of civilizations that have come and gone in the past. That is wisdom that has come to us through the passage of time. To the extent that we permit socialism to concentrate power in the hands of a Liberal government, an NDP government or a Conservative government, it matters not. But we will have to relearn that lesson of history. We will have to fight the French Revolution again. We will have to fight the American Revolution again, and we will have to go back to the year 1215. Unfortunately, it will not be you and I, we will trot along all right, but the next generation coming along, the students in university, our sons, daughters and our grandchildren will be the ones to suffer.

Let us track the Liberal record. It was not always like this. If we take a look at the economic history of Canada, we can see that during the 1950s and the 1960s Canada was doing well. The country was growing at an enormous rate each year vis-à-vis other countries in the world. Canada's standard of living was the second highest in the world. We were the envy of the world. Millions of people immigrated to Canada, but since the Liberals came to power in 1968, we have seen that envious position reversed, even though for a year or two we had balanced budgets. For the most, in the 1950s we did have balanced budgets but since then, we have gone downhill.

Are individual Canadians better off today? Maybe we are but it is only because we have been spending ourselves into a deficit and mortgaging the future of our children and our grandchildren. What has been the federal government debt? In 1968 it was some $30 billion. It is now almost $140 billion. That is gross debt. That is the amount of money that we have spent over what we have taken in. Federal spending has gone from $13 billion in 1968 to about $75 billion the next year when the estimates were filed. Unemployment has risen from just over 300,000 to well over one million. Inflation has risen from 4 per cent to 13 per cent. The value of the Canadian dollar has declined and today it is worth less than 40 cents in terms of its 1968 value.

All the senior citizens who retired in 1968, having worked all their lives for this country from the 1920s to the 1960s, retire on a fixed pension. But the dollar they had in 1968 is now worth only 40 cents in the stores. Yet the price of goods in the stores has risen by an equivalent amount. Is it any wonder that our senior citizens are eating dog food? People have come to my constituency office and have told me that. Farmers have come to my office last week with complaints. One man told me he had come to this country and worked for 20 years building up about a half a million dollar livestock business. He is married and has five children. But today he is being petitioned into bankruptcy by his credit union and the shortfall will be over $100,000. The man sat in my office and cried. He told me that the only way out that he could see was to shoot himself. Once he is released from bankruptcy he can shoot himself and the life insurance will at least give his wife and family a home. That is what that man is contemplating. That is what governments are doing to people.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, you have seen the Auditor General's report wherein it states that the deficit is $9 billion higher than reported. Once governments start to get into huge deficits, they try to shave the edges to make things look a little better than they really are. Thank goodness we have auditors general to audit the books and find out these misnomers.

I spoke earlier about the money supply. Last week the money supply increased some $181 million. Is that the start of things? Is the government starting to turn on the printing presses? If it is, anyone who owns land in this country had better hang onto it because land will be the only protection an individual will have. Anyone who does not have land will simply be a serf. With deficits like this, you get a landed class and a non-landed class. That is a return to the feudalism system of the middle ages. Our ancestors fought to get us out of that dilemma. Why we in Canada would permit ourselves to get into that kind of mess is beyond me. We have experienced this. Governments will lie and people in governments will lie. Therefore, people need to be putting in place mechanisms to keep government under control.

Let me deal now with the gross national product and how it has changed under a Liberal government. Our gross national product in the third quarter is down. Real gross national product is down. Corporate after-tax profits—this is the money that is used to build plants and a manufacturing base for more jobs—in the third quatter have dropped to $20.8 billion. This amount was $25 billion in the second quarter. Therefore, in a short period of three months, as a result of these enormous taxing bills that have been imposed on Canadians, we have $5 billion that will no longer be going into plants and creating jobs. Where is that $5 billion going? It is flowing into the government coffers. Even if the government were using it to reduce the deficit, we could say that there is light at the end of the tunnel and that we will be out of the mess in five years if we are prepared to put up with the situation. But that is not the case. Government spending is up 22 per cent. And this increase in spending is not being used for job creation for our young people.

Merchandise exports in December were down enormously. Merchandise imports were up. Another way of expressing that is that we are exporting less of our manufactured goods that create jobs for Canadians and importing more, meaning all of the jobs are held by people in other countries. We are increasing the export of our raw resources. We might be able to justify that in terms of bringing dollars into the country. But every time a raw resource is exported without any refining, you are really exporting jobs. For instance, coal leaves western Canada for Japan and it is brought back in the form of cars and refrigerators. It means the Japanese have the jobs to build those cars, refrigerators and other things instead of Canadians. The statistics on trucking outfits are quite revealing, if anyone knows how to follow this data. Trucks are invariably used in a work capacity. It means corporations are buying trucks for their employees. Truck output was down 36.3 per cent during this last measurable period.

Most of us in western Canada live and work with the oil industry and know that most of the decline there is a result of the National Energy Program which has, without a shadow of a doubt, taken 187 rigs out of Canada. Each rig that leaves involves about 25 jobs. If 187 rigs had remained in this country with 25 people working on each rig, imagine the number of jobs that could have been saved. Then there are the highly skilled technicians of the service industry who would have been paying income tax and helping to reduce the deficit. Instead of this, the rigs have left. As I understand it, each of those rigs can employ only one Canadian, the balance is left for the Americans. That means Americans are working, getting the benefit of the oil, paying income taxes. What has happened to our people? They have had to come back to Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces and go on social assistance. So we lose tax revenue at the same time we increase our expenditures by way of social assistance. It is all unnecessary. The bitter irony, Mr. Speaker, is that it is not Alberta's students and young people losing those jobs, because there is enough job creation in Alberta to handle its own needs. These are kids from Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces who were taking those jobs.

● (1540)

The same argument applies to the Alsands and Cold Lake projects. Had it not been for the NEP, there is absolutely no doubt that the Alsands plant would have been built. Indeed, Sir, if it had not been for the 1980 election, those plants would have been in place today because we would not have had that loss of business confidence. That is a very difficult concept for people to understand, and absolutely impossible for the NDP to understand because none of their members have ever met a payroll. They do not understand the concept of investment, and that is tragic. Then, Sir, when you lose that confidence not only do international capital market investors take their money out, but so do ordinary Canadians. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, I know of members across the way who have put a portion of their money in the United States in order to protect their financial future. Now, that is Liberal Members of Parliament, and they have told me that personally.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: We don't have any money.

Mr. Thacker: Well, Sir, that is what happens when the government thinks that it can take over and make decisions. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, a small group of politicians sitting in an office in Ottawa with a few bureaucrats around them, who think that they can make decisions better than Canadians who are out in the oil patch or drilling in the Atlantic Ocean. It is so patently impossible that you wonder why they want to do it. The reasons, of course, is power. The more people they can get coming into Ottawa for grants, the more people they can get on social assistance or old age security, the more they become tied to that. And then they have them.

That was the big change in the oil industry. Before that you or I could form a company, Mr. Speaker, decide where you wanted to drill your wells and the cost could be deducted from your income tax. The decisions rested with you. Now, under the existing program, you cannot make those decisions. First of all you have to come in and talk to the bureaucrats here. They will decide whether or not you get a grant. It will depend on how Canadian or how foreign you are, and it will depend on where you want to drill. If you want to drill outside of Brooks, Alberta, you are not going to get much money. However, if you want to go into the far north or offshore, you will get much more. What does that do to those 700 Canadian corporations, most of them in Alberta? We hear about the big five, and it is true they are big, but there are over 700 oil and gas corporations in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and many of them operate on the great plains of western Canada. They now find they cannot get the same type of grants. They do not have the capacity to go into the north, the Beaufort, the Arctic or off our coasts because they are not big enough. They need to work on the great plains. Yet, because so much tax revenue has been taken away from them, they do not have the cash flow. Then, because they have to come in and get grants and those grants are so low, they just cannot operate so they are folding up or moving to the United States.

Now, Sir, this is not some wild opinion of mine; there is hard evidence. We can give you data as to the number who have left. If you ever want to have an interesting holiday, Mr. Speaker, go down to Denver. It is like going into Alberta, because they are all Albertans, Canadians, and they are building highrises and doing other things in the U.S., and they are going to make the United States self-sufficient in energy. And here we are importing energy at an enormous rate.

Well, Sir, the Minister of State for Finance talked about the equity of the budget and how they needed this $6.6 billion to bring equity to Canadians. Again, it is simply untrue because taxes have been imposed on Canadians 11 separate times since 1980. They are all outlined in the Order Paper. In the last budget alone there are over 163 clauses which change the act and put additional taxes on people. Sir, we as Canadians who genuinely believe in equity should be concerned about the form of the taxes because the government leaves the impression that we have a progressive income tax system which means that the rich pay a higher percentage than the poor. To the extent we have an income tax system that is true, but when you look at government revenue, the amount collected from that system as compared to that collected from sales taxes and energy taxes, you realize the income tax portion is small. The bulk of taxes collected in Canada now come from indirect taxes, retail and municipal taxes, licence fees and energy taxes, all of which are regressive. So it means that the poor are genuinely poor and paying a much larger share of their income to government than people with real wealth. So it is not an equitable budget at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government purported to be equitable to the provinces. It continues to claim that it is not cutting back on the provinces, and yet all of the data shows that the amount of transfers to the provinces will be cut in the order of $5 billion. How can we say that is equitable to the provinces? Because, Sir, not only are there rich and poor people, there are rich and poor provinces. The idea of revenue transfers was to use the taxing power of the central government to take more money from the richer areas and less from the poor and redistribute it. What is the government doing? It is backing out, and to the extent that it transfers this $5 billion responsibility on to the shoulders of the provinces, some of them will not be able to handle it. Clearly British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan will be able to cope with it, and some without much problem. But how is Prince Edward Island going to handle it? How will Nova Scotia, with less than a million people, and Newfoundland in a similar boat, handle it? They do not have the fiscal capacity to increase their own taxes. The fiscal strength of Prince Edward Island is really restricted to agriculture, primarily the potato industry. Compare that to Alberta with its huge ranching areas, its irrigated farms and the oil industry. How does it compare with Ontario and its incredible manufacturing infrastructure? Those provinces can handle the burden, but the weak ones cannot. So the government budget, by unilaterally cutting $5 billion, is not equitable in any way to the poorer provinces.

Neither is this budget equitable for students. I am talking about those students planning on going on to university and technical schools. We all know that the technological revolution is sweeping the country and that as a nation we need to be directing our resources into that because, if we do not, we are just going to be whipped by Japan, Germany, France and the U.S. What does the government do? It is now cutting back its contribution of money for post-secondary education. That means that the universities must increase their tuition fees, and that students who until now were able to have access to universities will no longer have access.

An hon. Member: That's not true!

Mr. Thacker: That is absolutely true, and Quebec will be one of the provinces which will be hurt the most. The one dream we had in this country and the one success of the fifties and sixties, during the time of John Diefenbaker and Lester Pearson, was that children from ordinary families of modest income would have the privilege of going to universities and colleges and then could go into all sorts of exciting careers. That will not be so any longer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: I did not realize that 40 minutes could go by quite so quickly.

An hon. Member: It was fast?

Mr. Thacker: I was going to speak about the money outflow from this country, because the hard data on it is incredible. I was going to speak about the federal deficit as shown in The Globe and Mail of February 12. Again, these are sad businesses.

Under the Excise Tax Act, Part II, one will notice that the government, in effect, is admitting failure in ever having coped with inflation because under Part II of the Excise Tax Act, and Section 2, the government sets the rate of default or penalty at 1.5 per cent. That amounts to 18 per cent per year. The government figures that the rate of inflation will be 18 per cent per year. It is even putting it into the form of a statute, because that will be the penalty if one does not pay one's taxes.

I would like to continue, because there are many more things I would like to discuss, but I will leave it to other hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a good deal of pleasure to speak on Bill C-93. I wanted to say, first of all, that we as a nation are inordinately blessed with all sorts of riches, but we have not yet learned how to manage those riches appropriately. I wanted to indicate that in order to overcome our economic ills, we must surely deal with inflation. With inadequate productivity, with technological redundancy and inadequate inadequacy, with regional disparity and government debt and expenditure, the question is how and at what intensity or rate we should deal with inflation.

Today I want to try to be constructive, if I can. I want to say that I am in agreement that reducing inflation is the first priority, and that Canada's interest rate structure must, of necessity, closely follow that of our massive trading partner, the United States of America, on the short term, particularly so until we increase our relative productivity. Nevertheless, I am also convinced that Canada is rapidly approaching the bottom of the recessive cycle and that it is perhaps timely to give serious consideration to a program of selective stimulation of the economy, particularly with the prime objective of job creation.

I believe we must minimize the length of the recession and accelerate the recovery period in any way we can, and we must start pretty soon. However, any regime of selective stimulation of the economy must unreservedly meet at least two conditions on the short term and perhaps on the longer-term basis. The first condition is that any program of selective economic stimulation must be non-inflationary. Some people may have difficulty envisioning programs of this sort; but there are many which can be implemented. The second condition must surely be that such programs must not increase government debt and direct government involvement in the economy through massive public borrowings.

These two conditions are important to be met with regard to any program of selective economic stimulation undertaken at the earliest opportunity. The question is, can it be done? If one anticipates substantive economic recovery in the next two or three years and government debt and expenditures can be held in check, then a basic selective tax policy, using future government tax revenues as an incentive to selectively stimulate the economy today, is an appropriate direction in which to move. The question is, how can it be done? Some of the long-term revenues of government should be used to selectively stimulate the economy today.

Let us examine the construction industry, and particularly the housing sector. Concerning the general industrial and commercial construction industry, surely rapid capital recovery or turnover in this high interest rate climate would be a substantial incentive. Why should the government not give very serious consideration to initiating a rapid, five-year regime or variable capital write-off regime for new construction during the next five years? Such a policy could start at the lower rate of depreciation or write-off in the first year and accelerate by 5 per cent a year to something like a very high rate in the fifth year, permitting capital recovery over a five-year period. This would be for new construction only. This would permit rapid capital recovery for reinvestment but, as it would only apply to new construction, increased construction would tend to increase government revenues rather than decrease them. The construction industry is so depressed today that inflation would hardly be stimulated by such a program. Surely, a more generous and flexible use of the capital cost allowance, principle or incentive is timely today.

Let me look briefly at the housing industry. I have in my hand the report, I believe, of the last federal-provincial ministers conference on housing, which was held in Edmonton from January 31, 1978, to February 1, 1978, and jointly chaired by the current hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and myself. It is an interesting document, and most people should read it today because the predictions are quite accurate.

If governments wish to stimulate the housing construction in today's high interest rate climate, what type of housing should be stimulated? I think that is a very basic question. Should it be done? Should it be social housing? Should it be middle-income housing or should it be high-income housing? How should it be done, and with what incentives?

If job creation is to be the paramount objective, then it must be done without increasing inflation or government outlays. I believe this can be done through the construction of middle and high-income housing rather than low-income or social housing. I will explain this in more detail as I go along.

To build a one-bedroom suite or a senior citizens suite today, under the various government programs, be they federal or provincial, requires some $40,000 to $50,000. To service such a suite economically, with interest rates at 18.5 per cent, and considering taxes and capital recovery, the cost is approximately $10,000 a year, or just under $1,000 a month. Government subsidies for this type of housing vary in one form or another, but they run between 50 per cent and 60 per cent, so that a subsidy for all such housing would be in the order of $6,000 a year supplied by one or another level of government. Building an additional 100,000 units over a period of two years, for example, would involve subsidies by governments amounting to a minimum of $.5 billion.

Some people say "good" when the debt structure of the government, particularly the federal government, is what it is today. If one wanted to increase inflation through government borrowing, one would move rapidly and massively into the area of constructing social housing. However, if the priority were job creation and at the same time minimizing government debt and government involvement in the economy through government debt, what would one do?

First, let me say that our occupancy rate has fallen below three people per dwelling in most locations across this nation. Our housing stock is vastly underutilized. It is related to a period in our growth when we could afford a substantial amount of luxury. What is vitally necessary today are policies and programs to increase the utilization of existing Canadian housing stock.

A partition suite or a basement suite can readily be built today in the order of $4,000 to $5,000 as compared to new suites at $40,000 to $50,000 per unit. Why not allow home owners to partition houses and build basement units? This was a great consideration of the housing ministers across the nation.

Why is it that existing housing stock is so inadequately used? Primarily this is because of municipal government regulation. I am certain that senior levels of government could meet with municipalities at the earliest opportunity to change bylaws and provide additional accommodation by way of more adequate use of existing housing, building basement suites or dividing homes in such a way that the vacancy rates of most of our urban centres would rapidly be increased. We should look seriously at moving in this direction at the earliest opportunity.

Just imagine the energy savings involved. Imagine the savings in reductions of government subsidies. Also, it would provide some degree of job creation without massive capital outlays. A meeting with the Urban Municipalities Association of Canada should be held at the earliest opportunity. If an incentive structure can be set up with small grants being made to the communities to cause them to move in this direction, this will provide a useful direction in the whole area of housing for lower-income people in this country.

Let me get back to the selective economic stimulus of new housing construction. Building a very modest house requires one man-year of direct house construction labour. A medium-sized house will provide two man-years of skilled labour employment and a more spacious dwelling, three to four man-years.

How is the construction of housing for middle and high-income earners to be stimulated so that jobs can be generated today without a massive infusion of government capital? One possible course of action is to provide selective incentives through the tax system, in other words, tax perks that produce new wealth and create jobs. I realize the government has removed most of the tax perks which tend to provide new wealth or jobs.

If the government had the political courage, it could give serious consideration to providing mortgage interest rate cost deductibility above a base figure of 10 per cent or even 8 per cent on new houses built and marketed only in the next two to five years. This would act as an incentive for middle and higher-income people to build more homes and provide job creation.

One could argue this would be subsidies for the rich or middle-income earners. However, if one considers that the intent of the policy would be job creation without inflation and without government borrowings, it might be considered seriously. Why not? What can government lose? Its revenues would increase rather than decrease. Such incentives would automatically disappear when interest rates again drop to reasonable levels. Therefore, the incentives would be of short duration.

With regard to selective stimulation, why can the government not permit borrowing interest costs on the purchase of Canadian-made cars, those with a certain percentage of Canadian content, as income tax deductible items for the next one or two years? Ontario stimulated car sales substantially with a similar program. The federal government would surely end up in the black rather than in the red with such a short-term policy.

Many other examples of selective stimulation for meeting the two conditions I laid down earlier are possible. I hope that a task force can be put together at the earliest opportunity to come forth with a whole series of programs by government for selectively stimulating the Canadian economy and creating jobs without necessarily increasing inflation.

I now want to dwell very briefly on the megaprojects, particularly the Alsands plant north of Fort McMurray and the Cold Lake heavy oil plant. Let me say that megaprojects are rapidly evolving a new form of enterprise. These massive projects require enormous capital and cross literally every level of enterprise; social, economic public and private. They have assumed the characteristics more closely resembling massive utility projects rather than high-risk capital enterprise projects. They are evolving as government and private sector partnerships rather than pure private enterprise partnerships. Government involvement is almost mandatory to reduce political risk on such massive projects and guarantees not only an energy source, but rapid recovery of the massive capital outlay.

I want to indicate that when we first dealt with Syncrude, the extent of capital involvement was nowhere near the level required in an oil sands plant today. We talked about somewhat under a billion dollars. These costs are now reflected in the order of $12 billion to $15 billion. The capital requirements are massive. Therefore, the risks must be minimized in every possible way.

The basic requirement for bringing into reality a project such as the heavy oil plant in Cold Lake or the Alsands plant is government involvement in a minority equity position and massive involvement in building the community infrastructure and transportation facilities. The private sector likes to see the government involved in a minority equity position so that it can reduce its risk and guarantee success of the subject in the longer term.

The second requirement is a guaranteed rate of return on invested capital following normal utilities, in a general way. This would assure product price structures on the short and long term.

The third requirement is rapid capital investment recovery for redeployment of such capital. The fourth requirement is the total remission of all federal government taxes and provincial government royalties during the early life of the projects so as to reduce risks and assure capital recovery and recycling over the shortest possible time-frame. Simply, the government must delay its tax revenues and royalties on plants of this type to the period after investment capital is recovered in order to provide both the spark and inertia to make such plants a reality.

In my opinion, the Alsands project is dying rapidly, and it will take a miracle to revive it. The priorities on the Cold Lake heavy oil project should have been and must be reviewed.

Alsands required a massive new infrastructure and transportation system, most of which is now in place in the Cold Lake facility. The Alsands plant is the third such plant, and the technology is fully commercialized so that new plants can await a more favourable interest rate climate. The Cold Lake plant is the first of its kind. It involves the commercialization of a new technology related to a heavy oil reserve in the order of 40 billion to 50 billion barrels of oil. The environmental consequences are minimal when compared to the Alsands plant. Furthermore, the ability to raise vast capital requirements is enhanced by the very nature of the possible government-industry partnership at Cold Lake.

I remember the early negotiations on the Great Canadian Oilsands plant. I also remember the early discussions and the manner in which Syncrude had to be saved. These projects involved relatively mild capital requirements when compared to both the Cold Lake plant and the Alsands plant. No knowledgeable or experienced industry partnership would invest $13 billion in one area unless it was guaranteed a rate of return on investment and guaranteed a price for its product. It must recover that capital over the shortest possible time-frame. Surely governments can make all their money after the first five or ten years of operation when, in fact, most of the invested capital is recovered. Government should regard these projects as effectively being utility plants providing energy at a reasonable rate of return on investment.

I wrote a letter to the Premier of Alberta and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the fall of 1980 to indicate that the Cold Lake plant was the first of its kind and we were involved in the commercialization of a technology which had not been commercially proven anywhere in the world. The reserves associated with that technology, 50 billion barrels of heavy oil in place, were enough to serve Canada for many years to come. The Cold Lake heavy oil plant must be revived at the earliest opportunity and this can only be done by providing an incentive climate which would minimize the economic risk. I believe that the two governments must get together as soon as possible and develop that climate and provide for the Cold Lake project a total federal crude oil tax and provincial royalty remission until the investment capital is fully recovered. A second necessary requirement is an established product price regime for at least the first ten years of the production cycle, followed by a tracking of world price thereafter. As I have said earlier, inflation and high interest rates have required a somewhat different format from that which made Syncrude a reality. Surely this new format can be negotiated and evolved in Canada's interest.

The failure or indefinite postponement of the Cold Lake heavy oil project is a national disgrace. In my estimation, it is tantamount to a form of national treason. What other nation can look to a reserve of 50 billion barrels of heavy oil? What other nation can look to a developed process which has had a pilot plant running for several years? What other nation can look to having a company which is developing a regime to build a plant in the order of $12 billion to $15 billion to generate 140,000 barrels of oil per day? Throughout our discussions, we have allowed this to fail.

Perhaps I have strayed somewhat from the pertinent aspects of Bill C-93, but the reason I rose to speak today was to indicate that the government should be seriously thinking of entering into a phase of selective economic stimulus. I agree that inflation is our primary problem and it must be reduced at the earliest opportunity. Economic stimulation can be achieved without increasing the government debt or increasing inflation, with the primary concern being job creation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to speak briefly on this matter.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I will begin my remarks on Bill C-93, which contains the statutory provisions for new taxation and increased government borrowing, by underlining a comment made by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) when he explained the bill in the House. He said that Bill C-93 is directly concerned with the infamous budget presented to the House on November 12, 1981. He then reviewed what he called the main objectives of the budget because, he said, this was the background for evaluating the merits of this bill. According to the minister's own words, we must examine the provisions of the budget to evaluate Bill C-93. You will therefore not be surprised that I want to review the most objectionable features of the budget, particularly the onerous tax measures, as well as comment in specific terms on the provisions of Bill C-93.

I briefly will deal with one of the major features of Bill C-93. First, it authorizes additional federal government borrowing to the extent of $6.6 million.

An hon. Member: That is billion dollars.

Mr. Crosby: I am corrected on that. Unfortunately, this $6.6 billion is a mere trifle when it is added to Canada's current gross debt load of $128 billion. It is interesting to note in passing that a one-time prominent member of the Liberal government, C. D. Howe, created a national storm by remarking, in response to an accusation of monetary inaccuracy, "What's a million?". That is what he said at that time. If he were alive today, he would have to say, "What's a billion?" to even draw the slightest attention to monetary maleficence. This is the extent to which successive Liberal governments have inoculated the Canadian public against the disease of financial mismanagement. Canadians have come to expect government financial mismanagement to the extent that million dollar errors no longer shock the public. The $500 million loss at Mirabel, the $600 million debt write-off for the St. Lawrence Seaway, the $450 million to $550 million annual losses in the post office are hardly even newsworthy. What Canada needs is a billion dollar fiasco to attract sufficient public attention. The government is working hard to achieve this objective of a billion dollar fiasco which will draw attention to the financial plight of Canada.

• (1620)

Apart from changes in excise and sales tax of a relatively technical nature, the other major thrust of Bill C-93 is the implementation of a price and tax regime which will now be imposed on energy supplies, particularly oil and natural gas. I do not intend to review the mechanics of these tax measures, but I will consider the energy problem in Canada since it has such a gigantic impact on our financial position and our economic future.

Let me now consider the budget, recognizing that Bill C-93 is part of that ongoing process. What I want to do first is try to reduce the motivation for the 1981 budget to understandable and general terms. In order to do that it is almost necessary to review the 1980 budget which was introduced in the House of Commons on October 28, 1980. In that budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), in explaining the financial plan of the government for that year, commented on the tax structure and said:

> —I turn now to questions of taxation. I have a special responsibility to ensure that our tax system is fair and that it contributes to the achievement of our economic and social objectives. On the whole, our tax system is one of the best in the world. Canada's individual and corporate taxes were lower than in many other industrialized countries, including the United States.

In October of 1980 the Minister of Finance was pleased to speak in glowing terms of Canada's tax system but, strangely enough, just a year and a month later, on November 12, 1981, when he introduced the 1981 version of his budgetary process, he said in his budget speech:

> Many Canadians find our tax system unfair, and I agree with them. They realize that taxes are necessary to pay for important government services, but they feel that rates of tax are too high. They sense that others, the well-advised or the wealthy, very often pay less than their fair share.

What we have in two successive budget speeches is the Minister of Finance contradicting his view of Canada's tax system. On the one hand, in 1980, he said it was one of the best tax systems in the world, and then a year later he said it was unfair and that people had said it was unfair. The Minister of Finance has never stated, in the House or in any other place of which I am aware, who said the tax system was unfair or what was the claim of unfairness in the tax system the Minister of Finance was asked to remedy. If we knew what the claim of unfairness was with respect to the tax system—and I hasten to add that there certainly are measures which are unfair—and if we knew exactly who made the claim of unfairness and what their claim involved, then we could deal with that, but we were not allowed that opportunity. The Minister of Finance simply announced in 1980 that we had a good tax system and in 1981 that we had a tax system which was unfair. This would lead one to believe that the Minister of Finance was simply using the tax system to bring about changes which he had in mind to make; that is to say, he was not responding to any initiative from the public. He was not responding to any thrust from the business world, any thrust from the world of education, any thrust from the world of finance or any thrust from any other of the segments which make up our Canadian society. He was simply engaged in an internal operation of introducing some tax measures, the real result of which was to gain more revenue for the federal Treasury.

What we are faced with in the budget is simply an exercise whereby, under the guise of reform of the tax system, the Minister of Finance is introducing measures which will bring more dollars into the federal treasury.

I ought to answer the question: why does the federal government need more dollars in its Treasury? The answer is very simple. Years of overspending and financial mismanagement have led to a situation in which drastic action must be taken, but unfortunately, the only resource left to tax in Canada is the hard-working people of Canada who engage in enterprise and who work for wages for a living. They are the only resource from which money can be drawn, and that is what the government is doing, but it is doing it under the guise of reforming the tax system.

There are other methods of reforming a tax system, and I ought to deal with the fact that in the past these methods have been reviewed at great length. Over a decade ago the Carter commission examined in great detail the tax system in Canada and came up with very serious recommendations which would perhaps have led to a fairer tax system for all Canadians. But at that time there were members of the government and members of the Liberal Party who rose up and said that those reforms would not come about, that the recommendations of the Carter commission would not be implemented in Canada and that they wanted the tax system we now have in place. That consultative process, which went on over a long period of time and dealt with the Canadian tax system in detail, was simply chucked out the window because of Members of Parliament like Senator Olson, who now resides in the other place and not in the House of Commons. Perhaps it is for that reason he rejected out of hand tax reforms and opted for the system the Minister of Finance now tells us has to be changed in the way he has changed it.

There was another thrust in the 1981 budget which would have gained the support of most people in Canada, and that was the government's promise to reduce the deficit. In his budget speech the Minister of Finance said he would reduce the deficit of the Government of Canada over a period of two or three years by $4 billion to $6 billion. I think he said approximately $5 billion by 1984.

How are the government and the Minister of Finance proposing to reduce that deficit? Their proposal is simply to deprive the provinces of funds in the form of transfer payments, equalization payments and payments made under established programs funding. What the government really proposes in the 1981 budget, in the name of reducing the deficit, is to transfer the deficit to the provinces of Canada. More important, the provinces of Canada to which this deficit will be transferred will be the provinces which can least afford to carry that deficit. They are the provinces which are now required, because of their lack of financial capacity, to seek assistance from the federal government. I am talking primarily about the Atlantic provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, but the province of Quebec also benefits from these programs, as do the western provinces and the province of Ontario with respect to specific programs. These provinces can ill afford to bear the federal deficit. These provinces are already burdened. Nova Scotia has a deficit of about a quarter of a billion dollars which, in terms of population, is very substantial. Hon. members may not be aware that the province of Prince Edward Island, for example, spends more money per capita on providing services within that province than any other province of Canada, approximately $3,000 a year per citizen. The other maritime provinces pay similar amounts. That is because those provinces do not have economic advantages. This is the region that suffers from economic disparity. Because of this, the strain on government is greater. The people need more services and more assistance in terms of social welfare payments, education and all the services government has to provide, particularly in areas where the population cannot provide for itself to the extent it can in other parts of Canada.

The reduction of the deficit is not really a reduction which will benefit the financial situation across Canada or balance the books, so to speak, of government. It will simply transfer that debt to another level of government, a level of government which can least afford to carry the debt, and it will not be able to carry that kind of debt without raising taxes or without reducing services.

There are two main thrusts to the budget—reduction of the deficit and the reform of the tax system. The Economic Council of Canada has confirmed that the claim of reducing the federal deficit is false, that it is simply a matter of refinancing some of the government's assistance to the provinces and, as a result, the deficit will be carried by the provinces.

We know from people who have complained to us directly and in the press that the government's claim of tax reform is false, and that the claim that equity and fairness will be brought into the tax system is also false.

I can explode that myth with some facts and figures, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance told us in this House that under the new tax measures approximately 12 million taxpayers will pay less tax, that 3.5 million will pay the same amount of taxes and that only 800,000 will pay more. Those statistics have been challenged again and again, not just by members of this House but by the Canadian Labour Congress and by tax experts like Mr. Arthur Drache who, in an article, indicated that at least two million Canadians would be paying more tax in the 1982 taxation year.

The almost seven million Canadians who participate in health and dental care programs and receive financial assistance with respect to those programs from their employers will be taxed on the financial contribution made by or allocated to the employer. So as many as seven million Canadians and certainly at least four million Canadians will be facing increased taxes because of that measure.

Another consideration is the provision with respect to the taxation of insurance benefits as they accrue. There are 13 million policyholders across Canada, 40 per cent of whom earn under $25,000 per year and 60 per cent of the policies are for less than $50,000 per year. Pensioners will also have to pay increased taxes because they will lose the $1,000 pension deduction if they are contributing to an RRSP. Approximately 2.3 million senior citizens in Canada receive old age assistance and almost two million receive the guaranteed income supplement. About 2.5 million Canadians over age 65 may be adversely affected by these tax measures. When we complain about the measures contained in the budget, we are not talking about the business community or the high priced executive; we are talking about 2.5 million senior citizens and the seven million Canadians who receive assistance through health and dental plans. In other words, we are talking about the ordinary people that this budget attacks.

These people may not be too aware now of the price they will have to pay but they will know all about it next year when they file their income tax returns and find that they must pay tax on their health and dental plans, and that they cannot deduct the interest on payments made to an RRSP for which they borrowed funds. A year from now pensioners will know that they will not be able to use the $1,000 deduction.

It is our job, in this House, to get the word out to the Canadian people so that they may respond to these measures. That is exactly what we have done, Mr. Speaker. This party had a special committee on the budget and the economy which travelled across Canada. It was a forum at which interested persons could register their complaints and ask questions about the budget and its measures. If Canadians want to protect themselves against these unfair measures they have to act now. We know that they are acting now because they are writing to Members of Parliament on this side and on the government side. I do not think any member on the government side could say that he or she is not receiving complaints from constituents—from pensioners, the ordinary workers and construction workers who will be taxed on housing benefits.

The government is backing off, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) has backed off the measure to tax travel passes issued to transport workers. The budget provided that the passes issued to the 45,000 transport workers of Air Canada and CN would be taxed on their market value. There was such an outcry that the government knew 45,000 votes would be lost, so the minister issued a paper stating that was not what was intended at all, that the passes were not to be taxed at market value but only on a certain percentage. The gobbledygook is all written out in the statement issued by the minister, Mr. Speaker. There are no regulations to back this up but I suppose they will be issued as soon as the minister figures how they can work things out without contradicting the budget proposal.

If the 1.2 million of the 2.5 million pensioners in Canada who face the loss of the $1,000 pension deduction protest, the government will back off that provision as well. I do not know how the transport workers got the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance to issue that paper. Perhaps the pensioners could get in touch with them and find out what is going on.

It appears that the government is willing to back off because it wants to save its political hide. It has to save it or it will lose the next election. This is not like their promise on the energy tax where they told the people to vote for them and then there would be no increase in the price of gasoline. They told people not to worry about the 18 cents.

Mr. Evans: Nobody said that and you know it!

Mr. Crosby: A year later the government put the price up 80 cents, 90 cents, $1.20. But that is different, it seems, because they did not put the 18 cents tax on, just an 80-cent increase. They will not get away with anything like that with income tax, Mr. Speaker, because taxpayers will see that they are to be taxed on their health and dental plans and that they would have been taxed on their transportation passes. I do not want to lead a revolt, Mr. Speaker, but I think taxpayers must make their position known.

I want to speak now of the tremendous problem facing the provincial governments with the transfer of the deficit to their budgets. The less fortunate provinces in the Atlantic area already carry a large debt load. Their expenditures per capita are higher than in the rest of Canada. They cannot effectively increase their public debt because, for one thing, they will lose their credit rating. The provinces of Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are running at maximum debt now and if they are deprived of federal funding or if it is reduced, they will be in greater trouble. We know there is a bottom line involved in this. It is very easy to calculate that the province of Nova Scotia will lose $100 million over a five-year period, or $20 million per year. It has to come up with that amount, but we must remember that it is a small province with 800,000 people. If one divides the $20 million by the 800,000, one will find out what each Nova Scotian will have to come up with.

• (1640)

Mr. Evans: How much?

Mr. Crosby: The parliamentary secretary will be able to do that calculation because he has a pencil. I do not and I have to stand here on my feet, so I cannot make the calculation. In any event, it is on the record for anyone to make. But my point is that in order to meet the difference, the province of Nova Scotia will either have to raise taxes or cut services. The choice is to raise taxes or cut services because the money is not there. Regardless of what hon. members opposite say, it is not there. The minister of finance of Nova Scotia would not lie. He said it was not there. There is $100 million missing, maybe more. What will the province of Nova Scotia do?

The percentages of total government expenditures in Nova Scotia are 22.1 per cent on education and 28.4 per cent on health. I do not need a pencil to add those two figures and come to the conclusion that the province of Nova Scotia is paying 50 per cent of its total revenue on education and health. The figures are much similar for the province of Newfoundland. The Minister of National Revenue had better take note of this. Its percentage of total expenditures on health and education is 45.6 per cent. The figures are similar for the province of New Brunswick as well.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, just to set the record straight. I refer the hon. member to the speech of the president of Memorial University at the last convocation in which he indicated that provincial revenues to post-secondary education in Newfoundland were dropping and that federal contributions were increasing. If the hon. member does not want to take my word for it, I refer him to the convocation speech of the president of the university. The facts of the matter are that there will be a net increase in transfer payments to Newfoundland of $80 million next year, $140 million in the following year, and a 12 per cent average increase for the next ten years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): That is hardly a point of order; perhaps it is a good matter for debate.

Mr. Crosby: I thank the Minister of National Revenue for his comments because it provided me with a chance to look at my documents. I am sorry, I confused the province of Nova Scotia with the province of Prince Edward Island on the list of statistics because of my poor glasses. I will probably be deprived of dental care and health plans, so I will not be able to obtain a new pair of glasses for a while; I will not be able to pay the tax and the cost on my own.

Mr. Rompkey: Will they be rose-coloured?

Mr. Crosby: I should like to change the record. The province of Prince Edward Island pays 50 per cent of its revenue on education and health; the province of Nova Scotia pays 42 per cent; the province of Newfoundland, for the information of the minister, pays 45.6 per cent out of total government expenditures.

Now I should like to deal with the point raised by the Minister of National Revenue. I cannot explain it because it is simply the numbers game. The Government of Canada says, "Here are the numbers"; the provinces say, "Here are the numbers". But what counts is the dollars which flow through to the institutions providing educational services or to the hospitals and persons providing health, hospital and medical services. They are the ones who say that the dollars are not coming through.

Whether one blames the provinces or the federal government, it is just a numbers game. My answer to the minister is that it is a numbers game. But I should like to say something to the president of Memorial University in Newfoundland. In 1982 he will not receive as many dollars as he thinks he should; in 1983 it will be less; and in 1984 it will be even less than 1983. This will be the result of changes in federal government policy. He can blame it on the province of Newfoundland as well. It is up to him. He can work out the numbers, but he will receive fewer dollars.

I am very glad the Minister of National Revenue focused attention on this matter. The president of Memorial University will be faced with some choices—he will have to cut services in the university, raise tuition fees, or find other methods of financing through alumni contributions or funds from the private sector. Those will be his choices. I believe he will have to employ all of them. He will have to cut services at Memorial University, raise student tuition fees, and look for funding from the private sector. He will not be in the same position he would have been in if the federal government had really and truly continued its contributions at the rates provided in the past and had not become involved in cutbacks.

Not just universities, but hospitals and a wide variety of government services will have to cut back or raise taxes. There is no avoiding it. When the dollars flow through, they will not be in the amount they have been traditionally as a result of government policy to reduce its deficit and pass it on to the provinces. It is as simple as the man in advertising who says, "You can pay me now or you can pay me later." I am saying that it will happen. I will have to wait a year or two, but the minister will be forced to admit in the House, that it has happened. The money will not be there. Hospital, medical and educational services will be cut back, and taxes will be raised. I am referring to provinces which cannot carry the deficit.

I do not know about the province of Alberta; it is very ably represented in the House and those members will speak to that problem. But what about the province of Quebec? The Premier of Quebec, René Lévesque, has stood up time and time again and said that it will happen. It will happen, and when it happens hon. members from that province who did not speak out as I am speaking out now will be faced with the problem and fixed with the responsibility. I suspect that is why ten of them signed the letter which outlined the situation in point form. They know it will happen. They know services will be cut in health, education and other social fields. They know taxes will be raised and that educational institutions will be required to seek private funding.

I think I have said enough about the concerns of the provinces and the transfer of deficits as a result of the budget. Now I want to deal with some tax measures which affect individual Canadians. I have already referred to some of them, but first I would like to indicate how I know about this. I was a member of the special committee on the budget and the economy. I was appointed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). It was with great foresight and interest in individual Canadians that he set up this committee, so ably chaired by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). We travelled around the country and talked with people. Members of the committee reached out and said, "What do you think of the budget? Here it is, let us discuss it." We wanted to hear what the people thought and travelled to many places across Canada, and we heard from the people of Canada. It was a new exercise, but it was a very important one. It allowed us to be in contact with the people.

The Minister of National Revenue is not fooling anyone in the House. He has been in touch with people, he knows that they are complaining, and he wants to respond to their concerns. The important point is that we put the concerns on record. People know what is happening, and they knew it before the budget was finalized. They are making their complaints now, and they are timely. The government is starting to withdraw. On December 18 the minister stood in the House and withdrew some provisions and modified others. The Minister of National Revenue, left to his own devices, attempted to achieve some justice within his regulatory power and within the regulatory power of his department. I think he will do more.

I want to detail some particular tax measures respecting pension income deductions which are of great concern. First and foremost, I am interested in senior citizens; I hope to be one some day. Under the law as I understand it, a person in receipt of pension income can deduct $1,000 from his or her total income, which includes pension income. It will be taken away if the person contributes to a registered retirement savings plan. If an executive of a large corporation, such as Imperial Oil or some goliath, retires early, receives pension benefits, a new yacht and everything else, and because of his great wealth continues to contribute to an RRSP, I would not even stand in the House to defend him. Such persons will not be affected. But thousands of retired Armed Forces personnel across the country who retired early because of the pension system in the Armed Forces will be affected. In order to maintain themselves they are forced to seek other employment. There are thousands of public servants in the same position who retired early with small pensions, continued to work, and naturally contributed to registered retirement savings plans. The government has come along and is taxing those persons by taking away their $1,000 deduction simply because some corporate executive will receive the same benefit.

We know that you do not have to hit every pensioner, whether over 65 or not, who continues to work. Why are people doing this? It is being done because people receive a smaller pension at an earlier age, an age when they are still able to work. They know down the line when they reach their senior years that they will not be able to work and they are trying to provide sufficient income for those years. Surely those are not the people who ought to be attacked by the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada. As a parliamentarian, I do not want to be any part of that attack.

Now we come to the registered retirement savings plans. Again the government is coming in with a gun to kill that. Certainly there has been a little abuse of registered retirement savings plans. People who do not need to provide for retirement are involved with them, but the people who borrow money to contribute to a registered retirement savings plan are in the early stages of their activity—for instance, young engineers who hope later on, if they get a job and continue to be employed, they will have enough money to continue to contribute to the plan and pay off the debt. They are the ones who are taking advantage of the interest borrowing advantage, not the corporate executive or the millionaire. They do not need to borrow money to contribute to a registered retirement savings plan. That is a lot of nonsense, Mr. Speaker. The ordinary people are the ones who are borrowing for an RRSP. We wish the government would come to its sense about that.

Then we have life insurance. About 14 million people across Canada have life insurance. Are you telling me, Mr. speaker, that the Minister of Finance really believes that these people are trying to gyp the tax man? Of course not; these people are trying to provide for their families. That is the Canadian tradition. If I had an unfortunate accident, which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) might like to see happen, and I did not have the ability to earn income for my family, I would want some life insurance to take its place. That is perfectly reasonable. I am not trying to avoid taxes, yet the government wants to tax that accrual. Really, who is the government trying to kid? Canadians are not trying to cheat anyone. Canadians are trying to provide for their families and there is no reason for this type of thing to be taxed.

Next there is the health and dental plans. There are four million Canadians covered by health and dental plans. In the private sector alone there are another million who are covered by the employer-employee arrangement that has been worked out through collective bargaining. There are another 500,000 involved with union health plans in the building trades. There are probably another two million people involved with Blue Cross and other non-profit institutions that provide health and dental care. Maybe as many as seven million Canadians and probably 11 million are covered, and the government steps in and says "This is not available to all Canadians; it is a tax dodge. You are trying to give a benefit instead of dollars; therefore, we will tax you." But that is not true. Those plans are there to help people and to see that they get adequate medical care, particularly dental care. If they do not have such plans, they will not get the care. If people have to pay tax, the plans will be endangered because people will say "Give me the money and I will pay for it myself." Then the plans will collapse. That is what the government is doing. The government has to back off from doing this.

Now I shall talk about capital cost allowance. That is in the business field. In my travels I learned that as a result of the change in the capital cost allowance, the first year allowance will be reduced to 50 per cent or one half. For example, this will mean that car rental companies who are used to taking the larger allowance, the faster write-off in the first year will be forced to hold on to a car for another year. They usually hold them for two years; now it will be three years. They purchase 45,000 to 60,000 cars in Canada each year. It will mean a reduction of one third in car purchases if they cannot take up this write-off. What will that do to the automobile industry? It will mean a loss of 15,000 or 20,000 sales. Yet the Government of Canada is contributing to the automobile industry by financing it and trying to keep it afloat. The government is contributing public funds to the automobile industry, and the government is taking away 15,000 to 20,000 sales of cars a year by a tax measure. Who is going forward and backward on that? How ridiculous can you get? We will not let the government get away with that.

Now to the positive side. Let me talk about child care. The government knows that Canadians who have to maintain a child in separate accommodation outside a home have to pay more for that service than the tax system allows, but the government does not do anything about that. I could go on and talk about that but in my last two minutes I want to talk about unemployment.

We can talk about the economy, but the big thing is employment. We have to keep Canadians employed. We have a labour force of over 11 million people, but 1.2 million people are out of work. That is not only an economic problem but a social problem. I read an article by a psychiatrist, Dr. Thomson, who comes from my constituency. He pointed out this problem very graphically. We have to solve these problems on a positive note.

We can beat this economic situation in Canada. All we have to do is get the energy projects going, the offshore projects and the Alberta tar sands. We should take advantage of our strengths and build on them. Our object, however, is to provide jobs for people. That is what people want. If people can get work they will pay their bills. Canadians still have incentive. They still want to work and contribute, but unfortunately it is the Government of Canada that is standing in their way.

Strangely enough, the government is not getting the projects going. The energy projects are stalled. They will take place; the tar sands will be developed some time, but they might as well be developed now. The offshore resources have to be explored. That exploration might as well start now. We are not saving anything. We have the manufacturing components. Let us not let things die because we have economic reversal. We have to create economic activity. We have to create jobs. We have to provide jobs for Canadians. This is no time for economic purism. This is no time for people to say "We have a long-range plan to reduce inflation; that will cause this and this will cause that." How do we know? Because some economist in a tax book says so? We are dealing with people. Canadians are the ones who determine what they want. Canadians are the ones who determine what the government must do. What Canadians want is economic activity; they want job creation. This government ought to give it to them. It is the right thing to do and it will have the best result.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-93 asks for a borrowing authority of some $6.6 billion this year. In the first year I was a Member of Parliament, the government asked for borrowing auhority of some $14 billion. In my second year as a Member of Parliament, that borrowing authority was reduced to some $12 billion. I see this year it is now $6.6 billion. It appears that the government is likely making some progress in reducing its deficit. But the reason the amount has been reduced so dramatically has to do with the responsibility for the debt that has been incurred by the federal government in its policies. It has transferred the responsibility for payment of that debt to the provinces and municipal governments. For instance, the community services contribution program; I think of the transfer of the increased costs of the RCMP and policing services. Many municipalities and provincial governments saw this as a dire hardship.

Another area on which I will dwell at some length is the Crow rate and the government's intention to abolish this statutory and historic rate. The Crowsnest Pass agreement was a continuation of national policy when it was first started. The national policy of which I speak is the banding together of the country from the Pacific to the Atlantic by a ribbon of steel, so to speak, the railway that should have been in place. The major aspect was a publicly subsidized, privately owned transcontinental rail network. In 1897 the only rail line into the mineral rich Kootenay region of B.C. was a branch line of the American Great Northern Railway which had reached Nelson in 1895. This was perceived as a threat to Canadian sovereignty and the region provided Canadian Pacific with sufficient leverage to extract some $3.4 million and 3.7 million acres of land from the federal and British Columbia governments to finance the construction of a 300-mile line from Lethbridge, Alberta, through the Crowsnest Pass to Nelson.

During the same period of time political pressure from the west had brought the federal government to the realization that exorbitant freight rates arising from the monopoly power of the rail companies were working against another goal of national policy, that being the rapid settlement and agricultural development on the prairies which was essential. This realization was reflected in the other half of the Crowsnest Pass agreement whereby Canadian Pacific agreed to reduce certain of its rates, including grain and flour, on commodities moving from the west to the Lakehead, and they were to remain there indefinitely.

During the time from 1903 until about 1918, Mr. Speaker, during which time the War Measures Act was invoked because of World War I, the rates fluctuated drastically but the producers did not really complain a great deal because of the overriding national interest in preserving our freedom during time of war. However, in 1922 the rates were restored under pressure from the west, with opposition by the railway interests, because they had really fluctuated quite wildly during that period of time.

Then in 1925 the rates were fixed by statute and extended to cover shipments to the Lakehead on any line in the west, including those built after 1897. The rates were extended in 1927 to the shipment of grain and flour to west coast ports for export, and to the port of Churchill in 1931. In 1961 raw oilseeds were added to the Crow rate structure which now applied to western rapeseed meal going to Thunder Bay but not Vancouver. Rapeseed oils move at regular rates but western shippers received a federal freight subsidy on shipments to western markets.

The Crow rate has, since its inception, been regarded in the west as a sort of balance, Mr. Speaker, to the benefits that central Canada has always derived at the expense of the rest of the country from the tariff wall protecting its industry. One question which often comes to mind for many of my constituents, Mr. Speaker, is: does the Crow rate really affect the quality of service in grain movement by rail in western Canada? The statutory freight rates have given prairie grain farmers effective protection from a railway monopoly over rate setting. They provide no such protection when it comes to the level of service the railways provide, nor does the Railway Act. In fact, the quality of service has been poor for a very long time. Grain cars have generally been poorly maintained. I stand to be corrected, but I believe the last time CN and CP actually purchased cars for the movement of grain was back in the early 1950s, and they have certainly deteriorated since that time. They are obsolete and in short supply. The track and roadbeds have been allowed to deteriorate, and as a result sales opportunities have been lost. The cars produced lately have been at the expense of either the federal or provincial governments, or the producers themselves.

At the moment the railways cover their grain transportation costs from three different sources of income: the producer, who pays the statutory freight rate; the federal government, which pays the railways a subsidy of about $100 million a year for continued service on uneconomical branch lines; and the balance comes from other sectors, possibly from the transportation of other commodities.

The federal government has in recent years assumed some costs directly, such as the provision of hopper cars, as I mentioned, and also the rehabilitation of branch lines throughout many points in Canada. Nevertheless, the railways still seem to lose some money on carrying grain. Just how much is uncertain, but estimates range from $60 million to $400 million a year. And the quality of service is still inadequate. They cannot say they are putting this money into upgrading the line or the service they are providing.

Furthermore, planned increases in production of grain will require the elimination of a number of bottlenecks in the transportation system, Mr. Speaker, but the railways argue that unless the Crow goes they will not be able to finance these investments. Although the railways may lose some money on the actual movement of grain, if you look at the profit figures of the railway companies you will see that in 1970 CN had a net loss of some $30 million. But if you move up to 1980, one decade later, they have a profit of $193 million. CP Rail had a profit in 1970 of $24 million. A decade later they have a profit of $122 million.

However, the point that particularly bothers some people about CP's profit is that it does not all go into the rail service they are supposedly providing to the Canadian public and producer. It goes into such things as Canadian Pacific Limited, where they have chosen to invest much of the money they should have been investing in the actual railway system which should be part of our economic and industrial strategy. In 1980, Mr. Speaker, Canadian Pacific Limited had a profit of some $583 million. So I find it hard to believe that the railways are hard pressed and losing money.

The situation has led many western grain growers and farm organizations to seek some other method of ensuring that more money goes into improving the railways' performance in moving grain, Mr. Speaker. The following positions have been developed by different organizations in western Canada. For example, the National Farmers Union says that the Crow rate is not negotiable, a position I agree with. It must remain as part of an over-all transportation policy which recognizes the needs of rural communities, and should be extended to other crops and processed products as well. The railways should be compelled to provide adequate service. The railway companies' over-all profits, including their non-rail enterprises, are very high and I have given a few examples. If they refuse to cover the grain transportation shortfalls through internal corporate transfers, then they should be integrated and operated as a public utility to serve the national interest.

Mr. Siddon: They will have to borrow more money.

Mr. Anguish: I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be advisable for some of the hon. members to my right to listen and not heckle. If they listened to the end of the speech and they have the ability to digest the information, they might be able to make the analysis themselves that there is a better way for Canada to work.

An hon. Member: The friends of CPR.

Mr. Anguish: Now, Mr. Speaker, the western agricultural conference says that, subject to a guarantee of railway performance, the farmers' share of future increases in the cost of shipping grain would be negotiable. There is considerable opposition to this position by some of their members, most notably the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool which I do not think really wants to negotiate the Crow rate and have it placed as an extra economic burden upon the producers, especially in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. A third group, which is a spokesman for the producing community, is called the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition. It is made up of such groups as the Palliser Wheat Growers Association plus the western flax, rapeseed and barley producers' organizations. It holds that farmers should pay the railways the full cost of moving grain and they say a Crow benefit would be paid by the federal government to producers to compensate them for the increase. The benefit would be paid on a per acreage basis, and variable rates would be permitted to encourage a more efficient grain handling system. The coalition favours this solution as an ideological doctrine on the grounds of free enterprise, and puts that forth as their position.

They are supported in this by several of the livestock producer organizations, and by the Conservative government of Alberta. This is a position which this party certainly disagrees with. We do not think the Crow rate should be negotiable and opened up on the table to be chopped away at, further reducing what has sometimes been a very small profit margin for the farmers.

Another question which arises quite often is whether the Crow is a barrier to economic development in the west. The western cattle feeders, in particular, see the Crow rate as contributing to the already high cost of feed grains on the prairies which, in turn, puts the prairie livestock industry at a disadvantage relative to its eastern counterparts. I disagree with that. I do not think it stops economic development in the west. However, the reasoning is that the price at which grain growers are willing to sell feed grains on the prairies is closely related to what is called the farm gate price of export grains—for example, the world price of grain in export positions in Vancouver and Thunder Bay, minus the freight charges, actually paid by the grower to get it to the port.

If the grower had to pay the higher rates on the movement of export grain, the effective farm gate price would automatically fall, presumably to an amount equal to the difference between the Crow and the new higher rates. The logical result would be that there would be cheaper feed for prairie cattle and hog producers, and it would encourage oilseed crushing and flour mills in the west. The cheaper food would mean higher incomes for cattlemen, I suppose, but the theory might not work through into the practicality of the situation. There is no guarantee that these increases in cattle prices, which I do not think are there, would offset the disastrous economic effect on the farmers in western Canada.

I think there is an alternative proposal which should be considered as opposed to the position of the federal government at the present time. The government is holding closed sessions across Canada which is a real violation of the democracy of this country in that there should be open and public input into the discussions which are centring around the one-man commission which has been set up by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). An alternative proposal which would get around this problem while retaining the Crow rate included in the recommendation of the Hall commission report and the Grain Handling Transportation Commission of 1977 that subsidized freight rates be applied on the transportation by rail of meat, processed grain and oilseed products from the west to eastern markets. This position is supported by the National Farmers Union and the New Democratic Party. I think this is a good position, it would do much more toward strengthening the ties across Canada and would do a much greater job of helping the producers of western Canada increase their profitability picture somewhat.

In this party we are very fearful that, once the statutory rates are tampered with, there will be talk about variable rates. The current statutory rates are related to distance. It costs the grower half a cent to ship a ton of wheat one mile by rail, no matter to which elevator on the line the wheat is delivered. For the railways, it cost more to handle grain through many low volume elevators on low volume branch lines. In addition to wanting more money for every bushel of grain they carry, the railways would like to have a means of persuading the farmers to truck their grain to a relatively smaller number of high volume, inland terminals on main lines. Variable rates, in other words, would do just that, and we do not want variable rates to come in.

The only way the railways could get the farmers to pay this higher cost of trucking their grain to the inland terminals rather than delivering to the nearest local elevator would be to charge a higher rate per ton mile for serving the local elevator. In effect, variable rates would provide the railways with a device for reorganizing the prairie grain handling system so as to minimize their operating costs without the nuisance of public branch line abandonment hearings. However, efficiency for the railways would be achieved at considerable cost to the other systems that we have in place on the prairies. If there were no grain handling system providing the focal point for the producers, the farming community and the ranching community around small prairie towns, many of those small towns would have a hard time existing. The larger centres would, in fact, grow and flourish, and that is not a way of life that we relish in most of the provinces in western Canada.

The existing prairie branch line network and the country elevator system could quite possibly even disappear. The farmers would be burdened with higher and rapidly increasing trucking costs for hauling longer distances, and elevator companies would likely be stuck with hundreds of elevators abandoned by the producers. Many of the rural communities would lose their principal reason for existence, and the provincial governments would have to absorb an increase in road maintenance costs resulting from much heavier traffic.

Looking back in time, one wonders why the railway companies accepted this Crow rate at the time. I think it was well put in the book "Canadian Transportation Economics" written by A.W. Currie in 1967. In discussing the reason Canadian Pacific accepted the deal in 1897, Mr. Currie stated:

> Sir William Van Horne, then general manager of the Canadian Pacific, has been credited with enormous vision because he saw that low rates would induce new settlement, increase the volume and profitability of the railway's traffic, and enormously enhance the value of the company's extensive holdings of land.

I think that latter comment certainly describes the high priority of Canadian Pacific, because it has certainly utilized those land holdings to its best advantage and not to the advantage of a railway system within this country of ours.

One quite often wonders whether the transportation system would get better if variable rates were removed. If we paid more to the rail companies, would they move our product in a better manner?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Anguish: The answer is no. The potash industry, for example—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair is having just a little difficulty in relating the borrowing authority bill to the railway problems to which the hon. member refers. Perhaps he could tie the two together once in a while to make it more relevant.

Mr. Wilson: Just once.

Mr. Anguish: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect, I think that part of the $6.6 billion which is being borrowed could quite well go into the rail network and into agricultural programs in western Canada. I think my speech is very relevant to the point of this bill we are debating.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense.

Mr. Anguish: The answer that the rates would go up does not necessarily mean that the movement of grain would get better. The potash industry pays six times the Crow rate, but it must buy or lease hopper cars because the railways have not supplied enough cars in that area. Livestock rates are four times the Crow rate by volume and nine times the Crow rate by weight; but the railways are phasing out livestock cars. They reduced the number of cars by 37 per cent between 1973 and 1978.

Concerning the movement of potatoes, potato rates are seven times the Crow rate; but the railways have reduced potato shipments by 75 per cent since 1973.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Anguish: They have been reduced 73 per cent since that period of time.

Mr. Nystrom: Liberals!

Mr. Blais: What is he going to do for his speech on Friday?

Mr. Anguish: The Crowsnest Pass rate is a binding agreement. If the Canadian Pacific wishes to be relieved of its obligations under the agreement, I think it should also relinquish the benefits that it received from the establishment of the Crow rate. A 1917 royal commission determined that Canadian Pacific Railway had received some $279.5 million in identifiable public aid as of June 30, 1916, plus other aid which was not even estimated. Allowing a 5.8 per cent annual increase in value, today's value of those benefits would amount to $10.9 billion. In addition, since 1967 Canadian Pacific Railway has received $770 million in direct subsidies and owes the people of Canada $1.2 billion in deferred income tax.

The total identifiable public aid to Canadian Pacific Limited is $12.8 billion compared with assets listed in its 1980 annual report of $13 billion. There should be no corporate grumbling about its responsibilities. It has been treated very fairly by the producers, by the Canadian government and by the Canadian people. The borrowing capacity and profits from non-rail properties should not be separated from the railways they were intended to finance.

Since Canadian Pacific Limited is asking to be relieved of its railway responsibilities for grain transportation, it should be relieved of its assests as well. If it were relieved of its assets, this money could be put towards the $6.6 billion being asked for in this borrowing authority. The borrowing authority could thus be reduced even more. If we gathered that money, there would be a surplus. That is how my point relates to this bill. I say that not in anger as revenge will not make past wrongs right, but from a sincere belief that these bountiful resources should be put back into the hands of the Canadian people, given back to the Government of Canada for national development.

The revenue problem caused by the Crow rate is recognized to some extent. Grain accounts for about 13 per cent of the loaded freight car miles and therefore for about 13 per cent of the workload and the expense of Canadian railways. The Crow rate earns about 4 per cent of the total railway revenue, leaving a bit of a shortfall there. However, the taxpayers have been meeting a good portion of that gap through such programs as branch line subsidies, rail rehabilitation, and absorbing interest on the cost of hopper cars.

Including these indirect subsidies, grain earns the railway companies about 12 per cent of their total revenue, nearly balancing the grain share of the workload and expense. Therefore, the federal treasury would not have to spend very much more to actually implement the Hall commission report recommendations and pay the railway for their loss in keeping the Crow rate, because it would not cost much more than what they are subsidizing the railways now.

The estimated losses of grain traffic are overstated by the railways which tell us that grain accounts for 21 per cent of the workload of Canadian Pacific and 17 per cent of the workload of Canadian National on the basis of revenue ton miles. This is a convenient statistical exercise which overstates the cost of hauling grain which can be easily and heavily loaded into freight cars, compared to refrigerator cars or cornflakes which are more expensive to haul per ton. Although the Crow rate per ton has not changed over the years, the real revenue per car mile has increased because of the efficient hopper cars given to the railways through provincial governments, the federal government and the producers.

The international price of wheat is actually dropping dramatically. Net farm incomes are expected to fall between 15 per cent and 20 per cent this year, yet farmers are being asked to pay more to ship their grain to market. At this time the federal government claims that the rail companies need this money to build the branch lines in the west and producers must pay their fair share. The producers have paid their fair share out of their pockets and through subsidies from provincial and federal governments. It must be remembered that grain comprises only 21 per cent of the total traffic of CPR and 17 per cent of CNR. That share is expected to fall throughout the 1980s—

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if you could ask members on the government side who find it necessary to chat to go into the lobby rather than speak in the House.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you observe or enforce the rules on two bases, one on the basis of relevance, which would greatly increase the interest of members on this side, and second, the rule that precludes a member from reading his speech, despite his cries of anguish.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): On the first matter of relevance, I have indicated to the hon. member that there is a little difficulty. However, the borrowing bill is so wide by its nature that the member has the option to go into virtually any subject he wants. The only problem is that the Chair sometimes has difficulty following the subject matter to which the hon. member refers, such as the Crowsnest Pass rates, and tying it directly to the bill before the House. That relevance is a problem for the Chair and a very difficult matter to define. All the Chair can do is bring to the attention of hon. members from time to time that it would help if they would try to link the two matters together.

On the other matter of reading speeches, the Chair has taken the view that it would be a great contribution to the workings of the House of Commons if hon. members were prohibited from reading speeches. As soon as hon. members by considerable visible or audible majority inform the Chair that that rule should apply to everybody at all times, then it will be applied.

Mr. Anguish: I thank you for that ruling, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether it is parliamentary or not but I think the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is a jerk.

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is clear that that language is unparliamentary and I ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I hope the Chair has not contributed to the ill-temper in the House. If so, I would ask the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) to take into consideration the Chair's intervention and perhaps not take it out on some other hon. member. I may have to look up the records and the citations, but I have little doubt at the moment that the expression is probably unparliamentary. If the hon. member would be so kind as to withdraw it, he could get on with his speech.

Mr. Anguish: I refuse to withdraw my remark, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it is correct.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have to ask the hon. member a second time to consider the alternatives available to the Chair, which are to examine the precedents and, if necessary, bring to the attention of the hon. member a ruling by the Chair that in fact he is out of order. I hope the hon. member would not ask me to do that. I hope rather that he would take the easier and more courteous course. Perhaps I, in some form, contributed to his difficulty. The easier way would be simply to withdraw the expression. If the hon. member insists, within the next couple of moments I will have a ruling. I presume the hon. member knows the eventual result of being asked to withdraw a remark and refusing to do so.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the remark for the convenience of the Chair. Thank you. The exchange here is very typical of how that bunch on the other side of the House views western Canada, the problems we have in transporting commodities, and part of the deal we had in confederation. Some of the Quebec members should understand that better than anyone. I do not blame some fat cat from Ottawa, who has never understood problems outside the elite within Canada, for not understanding how this ties in with borrowing money, a very important part of our system.

Mr. Nystrom: Fat cat Evans.

Mr. Evans: I have lived all my life in western Canada.

Mr. Anguish: Now that the hon. member has sufficiently disturbed my train of thought on a speech that I at least thought was important to the borrowing bill, I will try to get back to it. The share of the hauling of the grain is expected to drop even more during the 1980s. By the year 1990, the volume of grain hauled on the Canadian rail network is expected to be only between 12 per cent and 14 per cent of their total volume.

The federal government and the railways claim that the Crow rate provides the western grain farmers with a unique advantage, but I do not think it does. In 1980, federal government transport subsidies across Canada totalled some $2.4 billion. Of that total, only $284 million related to the prairie grain movement. In short, transportation subsidies have always been used as an instrument to achieve national goals and objectives within this country. If the Crow rate is eliminated, livestock producers will be in a worse competitive position in western Canada. Do the railways or the federal government seriously suggest that the livestock industry in western Canada will expand at a time when market prices are 30 cents to 40 cents per pound below the cost of production? I do not believe that livestock producers in western Canada will gain any advantage by removing the Crow rate. In fact, with the attitude of this government, I do not know what advantage any Canadian will have.

Let us consider the federal plan. At one time the federal policy was to guarantee statutory protection for the producer because of the monopolistic concept of the railway system. The federal government has now decided to reverse this fundamental principle in the belief that the railways need protection from the farmers.

Second, the plan of the federal government is to eliminate a fixed rate for producers. Just as important as the level of the Crow rate is the fact that it is a rate for the producers which has been guaranteed by statute. It is not a rate which any railway, quasi-judicial body or any order in council can wipe out at will. It is a rate upon which Canadian producers could depend as a fixed figure in helping them plan their future during uncertain times.

As I mentioned earlier, the federal plan provides no protection for the principle of equal rates for equal distance. If this principle is removed it will have disastrous consequences for those rural communities to which the Crow rate applies.

The federal government has indicated that it recognizes the need for railway modernization in western Canada. Modernization is not only needed on the prairies but in British Columbia and other parts of Canada. Instead of giving handouts to the railways from the Canadian taxpayer or at the expense of prairie farmers, our party proposes that the anticipated $2.1 billion in additional capital be provided by the federal government and participating provincial governments jointly in return for equity. In other words, we will build the rail system but we would want some equity in that system as well.

I would like to quote for the record what the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had to say recently. He said:

> If farmers operated under the business principles of the railways, they would stop growing food and invest in shopping centres or oil wells. Were it not for a dedicated farm population taking low—sometimes no—return on their labour and investment, Canada would go hungry.

This could very well be our problem in the future. The government will have to borrow more than $6.6 billion if it continues to erode its economic policies and erode our transporation system which is such an important part of Canada's industrial strategy. We cannot put these debts on the backs of the other governments which have already been given more debts than they should be asked to absorb. If a crisis situation arises in our agricultural industry due to the government's attitude and its policies, we will be borrowing much more than $6.6 billion.

The New Democratic Party believes that 100 per cent improved rail capacity would support even greater borrowing authority to ensure that we had the best rail system in the world to serve all producers. We cannot support a change in the rate unless the government improves the railway system, and not only at the farmers' expense because they are an important part of the whole Canadian economy. The government reaps billions of dollars from the agricultural industry which it uses to reduce part of Canada's trade deficits to other countries. This money not only comes from the producers in the western provinces but from Quebec and rural communities in Ontario, which is a fact that should be emphasized.

There is a contradiction in all this. On the one hand, the government proudly proclaims that Canada's exports will increase substantially to 30 million metric tons by 1985-86. Under the agri-food strategy, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) claims that grain production for the prairies will increase by 77 per cent to 100 per cent in the next 25 years. On the other hand, the government is doing all in its power to discourage the production of grain on the prairies. Any change in the Crow rate will be at the expense of the farmers, it appears, therefore affecting their net income. I do not know of a farmer who will voluntarily grow more grain with the knowledge that each new bushel that he grows will decrease his present net income. It is unfair to ask that of any sector in our economy. Even the Minister of Agriculture must realize that if he makes the farmers pay more to ship their grain he is undermining his whole strategy for increased exports, which we conceivably will not be able to get to the terminals.

I ask members to recognize the economic importance to all Canadians of the statutory Crow rate, which was locked in so many years ago but which is still very relevant. It must not be used as an excuse for the erosion of Canada's transportation system.

My speech may have varied somewhat from the context of the bill but this bill certainly does have financial implications for Canadians. If the government would develop a policy with closer consultation with other members and producers, the loan of $6.6 billion could be reduced even further. However, if the government continues with its present legislation, that $6.6 billion will increase as a result of further economic problems for Canadian agricultural producers.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, once more the House is considering Bill C-93, which authorizes the Canadian government to borrow money in order to meet its obligations for the fiscal year. Canadians probably wonder why Canada is borrowing money, what is going on and especially, why there seems to be some disagreement and debate about the fact that the Canadian government borrows money every year. A good question, because obviously, that money is being borrowed for a purpose. It is supposed to enable the government to meet its obligations to the people of this country. In fact, there is a vast complex of Canadian legislation that obliges the government to spend money, legislation brought in by the Liberal and Progressive Conservative governments, and passed in the House of Commons by Liberal, Progressive Conservative and NDP members, in other words by members of all parties.

So if all present members and their predecessors, who have worked in committee in the House of Commons in order to create laws with a view to better government and the well-being of all Canadians, if they passed these laws, they should know what they involve. So why do we always have a debate whenever the government has to borrow money? Why borrow money? I think that the member who is here to represent his constituency, who knows his job and knows the statutes, is not going to ask "why borrow money" at the end of the year. The Government of Canada has made commitments to the Canadian people and it must meet those commitments. Those commitments were made under legislation passed in this House, at the request of the Canadian people. So why should there be any attempt to have a debate on the question whether a government should or should not borrow? It is both necessary and normal that as a result of presentations or suggestions made by members of the House of Commons, by groups and by individual Canadians, that the government should borrow when its funds are not adequate to meet its commitments. And speaking of commitments, Mr. Speaker, it would perhaps be useful to define more clearly for the people across Canada and the people in our ridings what these obligations are.

Not long ago in Ottawa there was a first ministers' conference on the economy. The Government of Canada was told:

You are causing the problem, you are trying to fight inflation but you are not trying to fight unemployment, you are doing this and you are doing that. In fact, it was the same old story: blame everything on the federal government.

If we look at the facts, we must ask ourselves a few questions. Is the Canadian government really fighting unemployment? I shall take my riding as an example, Mr. Speaker. There are job-creation programs across Canada, and this year, the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean received its first grant of $1.5 million under the Community Development Program. Subsequent increases added $600,000 to that amount, which means that for the current year, Lac-Saint-Jean will receive $2.2 million under this program and I am not including the quarter million for the Opportunities for Youth program this summer, the vast number of policies being implemented by DREE, which is paying 25 per cent of capital investment in new projects, $5,000 per new job created, and so forth. The Canadian government is clearly spending money on job creation. The amounts involved may be fairly high for a single riding—$2 million—but we can certainly not accuse the government of not doing its job and not creating jobs. I challenge any province in Canada to come up with a plan that can compete with what the government is doing, and I would particularly challenge the government of the Province of Quebec, the PQ government, which is bragging about its own job-creation activities.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, 58,000 jobs were created in Quebec by the Canadian government, and whether or not they were temporary, at least people had work. And here is another way the Canadian government spends money in my riding: at the Canada Employment Centre in Alma, and I am not including the centre in Chicoutimi—my riding is so big that it has two centres—in Alma alone, 6,200 unemployed workers are registered with the centre and receive an average of $100 per week each in unemployment insurance benefits. This means that the Government of Canada has invested $600,000 per week in the Alma district, Mr. Speaker, which means $30 million annually. I challenge the government of the province of Quebec, the PQ government, to show me any figures that can disprove that.

Mr. Speaker, to use an example that brings the subject even closer to home and makes us realize what the Canadian government is doing for Canadians, take the average Canadian who gets up to go to work, and who happens to live in the Lac-Saint-Jean area. So everybody gets up in the morning, which is not unusual. You turn on the radio, and if you listen to the CBC, you may not realize this but its annual deficit costs the government $600 million, and the total cost is almost $1 billion. Then at breakfast, if you happen to like cheese or butter on your toast, these products are subsidized by the Canadian government to the tune of $2.60 per hundredweight of milk—$2.66 according to my colleague, the member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet), and she is right. After breakfast, our average Canadian may, if he is a man, use an electric razor, and in some provinces he will probably be using electric power generated by plants the Canadian government helped to set up—not in Quebec, however, where hydro is strictly a provincial matter.

Meanwhile, the heating system, which has been on all night and is on all day, runs on oil, and in eastern Canada this is imported oil which is almost 50 per cent subsidized by the Canadian government. When our average Canadian gets in his car, he may drive to a service station to buy gas with Canadian dollars which cost the government billions of dollars to keep at a reasonable level. The gas is subsidized by the Government of Canada by almost 50 per cent. And I can go on like this all day, merely listing areas where the Canadian government is involved in our daily lives, including recreation, cultural activities, nutrition and health. Because, you know, if that individual is a health or a social worker, 60 per cent of his salary is paid by the Government of Canada. If he works in a post-secondary school or at a university, if he is a support worker in some schools, 58 per cent of his salary is paid by the Government of Canada. We are then asked in the House, Mr. Speaker, why the government has to borrow. Quite simply in order to meet Canadian needs. I know that as far as the Progressive Conservative opposition is concerned, if the government borrowed to wage war, there would be no problem. That is a good idea. There would be no problem either if we wanted to give financial aid to the British government. It has been done in the past and such a move was applauded. However, if economic conditions become more difficult, as our young people seeking jobs have learned during the past ten years, and the government borrows billions to meet their needs, some find it strange. Questions are raised.

All the same, it should be realized, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is the second largest country in the world with only 24 million inhabitants. It is one of the countries endowed with the most resources in the world. Compare countries of equivalent size and their population: India with more than 600 million, China, one billion, Russia, 300 million, the United States, 250 million, Brazil 200 million. They have no more resources than we have. It will be suggested that we should perhaps restrict our social and job-creation policies or reduce our spending because we are only 24 million inhabitants with the greatest wealth for the future. No, Mr. Speaker, I think that this government should take action. The provincial governments are always asking us to do something and, what is more fantastic, so is the opposition, which blames us for borrowing. They urge us to create jobs and use the means at our disposal. One hon. member will say he has this or that project in his riding, another will say that he has such and such a project in his own riding, and so on and so forth. The requests keep on coming from both sides of the House. So I am amazed today when I see these same hon. members stand up in the House and say that the government should stop borrowing. I do not agree with them.

Mr. Speaker, if the government must intervene in these critical times for the economy, it is because year after year it has fought against high inflation and unemployment by increasing productivity. Canada's record between 1970 and 1980 was the best of all industrialized nations. In Canada, we are proud to be able to say that Canada has a better record than any other country on a job-population ratio. How is that? Because the Canadian government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is the government which developed the most projects and which helped put together programs for streamlining the industry. And this, in many ways. And because of this, our industry has not had the time to age. Today, we are having difficulties in a number of areas.

Let us consider the case of the automobile industry. That is an area where we are having difficulties. Why? Quite simply because we do not control this industry. It is clear that our automobile industry is an important element of the North American automobile industry as a whole, and if our industry is lacking in productivity, it is because we do not control enough of the factors to help it develop. And because of the slowing down of the whole automobile industry in North America, we must accept the lot we share with the Americans. But in other areas, Mr. Speaker, in the case for instance of Canadair, we have a fantastic and extraordinary record. My only qualm about the aeronautics industry is that around 1957 or 1958, it reduced its activities, although is was recognized as the best airplane builder in the world. This occurred unfortunately while a progressive government was in power, but we must still live with the consequences. However, a government rose in 1977 which was not afraid to invest money.

Of course, we had to borrow to invest in Canadair but today it has 6,000 people on its payroll as compared to 1,300 hardly four years ago. And now, Mr. Speaker, the case of Bombardier. Who asked the Bombardier company to manufacture something other than snowmobiles? Who asked them to manufacture buses, trains, subway cars and to go into the field of transportation? Who did? I see the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) has just awarded them a contract for trucks. Who has urged them to buy a licence to build jeeps? The Government of Canada has. That is where the government invests the billions of dollars it borrows. Fortunately, those billions of dollars have meant increased revenues for the government in recent years. What for? They have enabled the government to implement aid policies for all Canadians in the field of health and education, and to help idle workers in trying situations. What about manpower training? Here again the government has been the driving force, the major motivation of Canadians to prosper, and above all it has given them the necessary tools. We are entering a new and important phase.

Right now, some of our basic industries such as the one I referred to earlier, the automobile industry, need revamping. Our industries updated their equipment ten years ago and now find that they will have to go through the same process over again. They will have to rebuild and, in that respect, the Government of Canada is already on the move. Was it not the Canadian government that signed agreements with the provinces to modernize the pulp and paper mills and ensure reforestation? Indeed it was. We are building for the future. The $5 billion borrowing authority we are seeking today, those $6.6 billion are earmarked for that future. In what context?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is now negotiating new manpower training agreements with the provinces. We as Canadians—and I mean industrial workers as well as their representatives here or in any other legislature—we Canadians want to be able to continue saying that we are the best workers in the world, the most competent, the most productive, as it has always been our trademark. That is why this government is already spending hundreds of millions of dollars for manpower training. I need only refer to the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program through which millions have been invested in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding. I need only refer to the new policies being implemented with respect to designated areas.

Let us see what has been going on in the regions of Sept-Iles, Tracy-Sorel, Drummondville and, lately, Montmagny. The Government of Canada took the initiative and decided to spend the funds required to retrain workers who are interested in new challenges and want to learn new skills. It also decided to spend money to help update those industries which could be modernized and to support others which could not face the challenge single handed. That is the role of a government. Mr. Speaker, why should the Government of Canada be afraid to borrow when necessary if any Canadian can do so when his needs exceed his capacity to pay? Why should the Government of Canada be expected to act differently than Canadians? Does the Government of Canada represent Russia or the Russian people? No! The Canadian government is like the Canadian people. It is vigorous, it knows its potential and it has confidence in the future. Indeed, to be able to borrow, one must have confidence in the future. And one of the resources of this country for the future is our youth. Of course, the Government of Canada could say tomorrow morning: We shall no longer pay for unemployment insurance. We need to borrow $6.6 billion, but instead, we shall stop paying the $4.8 billion deficit for unemployment insurance. Then, our borrowings would only amount to $1.8 billion instead of $6.6 billion. But what would become of our young people, Mr. Speaker? What about our major resource? What is unemployment insurance in the final analysis if not temporary support for someone with practical employment problems, if not the possibility for people to receive training during a period when they cannot find jobs. That is what it is!

If we were to abandon our young people tomorrow morning, what would become of them? They would do as others have done. They would probably do what my father did when he left his native Lebanon, they would go to another country where they can get a job. We would then have lost part of our major resource. We might have saved 25 cents by refusing them unemployment insurance benefits, but it would have cost us thousands of dollars and the loss of an immeasurable human resource. If this is the type of policy that some want to implement in this country, let them do it. I can assure you that the end result will not be anything like the vision that a Liberal can have of our country.

Mr. Speaker, we know that to support an economy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I know that the members opposite can only laugh. I have been a member of this House for over two years, and during that time I have seen those people laugh at Canadians regularly. They come here as teenagers, as 18-year-old children who only want to create a disturbance and are not interested in seeing Canada develop. I shall go even further. They form coalitions with certain provinces simply to play a political game. They are not interested in the development of Canadians, but simply in keeping their little constituencies, their little jobs as Members of Parliament. Not one of them would be willing tomorrow morning to risk his seat to help a youth in his own riding to develop. I know some members from Alberta and Saskatchewan who come here to complain that everything is wrong in Canada.

Go and see their provinces. Never before has the western economy been doing so well. Never! Thanks to whom? Certainly not to the nine months of Progressive Conservative rule! In nine months, the Progressive Conservatives moved the Canadian embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. In nine months, they almost went to war against Russia. Canadian sales abroad came to a stop. In nine months, they had time to sell Petro-Canada, scuttle Loto Canada and almost get rid of the CBC.

Mr. Speaker, it makes you wonder whether these people are Canadians. As a case in point, last year, when we wanted to call our national holiday Canada Day, they preferred the name Dominion Day. Anything that is called Canada bothers them. Whether it be Labour and Immigration Canada or Unemployment Insurance Canada, or Finance Canada. My impression is, they are much more interested in the development of their personal friends' corporations. And, Mr. Speaker, I seriously ask myself why opposition members come here in this House and ask the government: Why borrow $6.6 billion? The hon. gentlemen all know very well that this stems from legislation they themselves passed for the benefit of Canadians. All they have to do is allow the Government of Canada to go on helping Canadians. For instance, I recently heard the Quebec government referring to a salary for housewives at home. I would like to state, Mr. Speaker, that the only government doing something in that area is the Canadian government, through the child tax credit we are giving them each year, over and above family allowances. This is what the Canadian government is all about, the redistribution of wealth, notwithstanding the Progressive Conservatives and the opposition from the New Democratic Party, or should I say the New Salvadoran Party.

Mr. Speaker, I hope next year we will not have once more to face such an austere debate, to know what are the benefits Canadians derive from their own government. Why does this government work so hard for Canadians, their development in a climate where they will become the most developed citizens in the world, the most productive ones, to the benefit of our whole society and our future in particular, despite reactionary opposition members?

THE ECONOMY

REQUESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF INTEREST RATE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

On Wednesday, October 10, 1979, the House unanimously accepted a motion which reflected the understanding of members of all parties of the impact of high interest rates and inflation on Canadians in all walks of life. The prime rates then were 15 per cent and inflation was 9 per cent. Today prime rates are 17 per cent and inflation is 12 per cent.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the exact same motion proposed on October 10, 1979, by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), and consistent with remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in the House yesterday, February 17, 1982:

That this House immediately order its Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to be set up and that the committee undertake an immediate review of the interest rate policy of this government and of the Bank of Canada, and that for this purpose the governor of the bank and the Minister of Finance appear before it to explain their actions and what they will be doing to solve the problems the governor of the bank himself said interest rates are now causing for individuals and to business.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT IN ST. CATHARINES-NIAGARA AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, in January, 1980, the unemployment rate in St. Catharines-Niagara was 10.1 per cent; in January, 1982, that rate increased to a record high of 15.6 per cent; in February, 1980, the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 7.5 per cent, and in January, 1982, the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 8.3 per cent.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration make a statement on motions accounting for the increase.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

SECOND READING PASSAGE OF CANADA BILL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. Whereas the House of Commons of the United Kingdom yesterday gave overwhelming approval, with the support of all official parties, to second reading of The Canada Bill, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder):

That this House extend its gratitude to the British House of Commons for speedy passage on second reading and for the thoughtful contributions to debate by numerous members; and further, that we look forward to their continued co-operation with regard to the remaining stages of our new constitutional bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF LEATHER SHOES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering that the government's move to lift import quotas on leather footwear is having very negative effects on the footwear industry in this country, and considering that a Quebec work group on footwear made up of labour, business and provincial government representatives, has appealed to the federal government to move to prevent an expected loss of 3,000 jobs in Quebec alone, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House urge the government to accede to the work group's demand by limiting global imports of leather shoes to 40 million pairs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RAILWAYS

DOUBLE TRACKING OF CN MAIN LINE FROM WINNIPEG TO VANCOUVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party promised to double track the entire CN main line from Winnipeg to Vancouver by 1988 for $800 million. It will now take until 1993, at a cost of $2.3 billion. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Transport make a statement on motions accounting for the increased cost and time.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST

INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, on January 1 of this year the rate for mailing a first class letter increased by 76 per cent to 30 cents. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the minister responsible for Canada Post make a statement on motions explaining when, during the last election, the Liberal party told the Canadian people that such a massive increase would be implemented when it was returned to office.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INCREASE IN RATE OF INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, in February, 1980, the inflation rate was 9.4 per cent; in December, 1981, the inflation rate was 12.1 per cent. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make a statement on motions explaining the reason for this horrendous increase.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RESOURCES

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE STATEMENT ON HEATING OIL PRICE INCREASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In February 1980, the price of heating oil per gallon was 69 cents. In December 1981, the price per gallon rose to $1.22. Since new tax measures introduced by the federal government are responsible for 80 per cent of the increase, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) make a statement on motions to indicate exactly when, during the last election campaign, the Liberal Party told Canadians that the price of heating oil would increase by 75 per cent in the two years following re-election of the present government.

Madam Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

STATEMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR ETOBICOKE CENTRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last weekend at a meeting of the PC Metro Association, the hon. member for Etobicoke

Centre (Mr. Wilson) was telling his fellow party members that they should be praying for the success of Reaganomics. Then in a speech to the Canadian Club in Montreal the hon. member was quoted as saying that he agreed with the economic policy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) that lowering interest rates would drive the value of the dollar down and lead to higher inflation. The hon. member went further and said that he did not agree with the provincial premiers, and that there was no quick fix. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson):

That this House congratulate the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre for his effort to publicize the government's common sense monetary policy, and encourage him to preach to his fellow party members the same truth to which he has now become a convert.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT'S INTEREST RATE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Arthur Laffer, the guru and key initiator of President Reagan's high interest rate policy, has now joined the growing ranks of financial and economic pundits advocating the abandonment of Reaganomics' high interest rate policy. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That the House urge the Minister of Finance to follow Laffer's recommendations and take the necessary steps to establish a made-in-Canada interest rate policy and to stop our lemming-like journey to financial and economic suicide.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT ON PROSPECTS FOR OIL SELF-SUFFICIENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, since the introduction of the national energy policy I am informed that oil exploration activity has dropped by 30.4 per cent. In the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the Prime Minister make a statement on motions explaining when during the last election campaign he told the Canadian people that the return of a Liberal government would give such a body blow to the prospects for Canadian oil self-sufficiency.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, on January 12, 1980, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the Liberal Party "will not simply stand by and let the recession come." Indeed it did not; instead it brought in a budget to make the recession come faster. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Prime Minister make a statement on motions stating when he will fulfil his other campaign promise—"Elect me and I'll resign".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

MINISTER OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

DISTRIBUTION OF PHOTOGRAPH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) recently distributed 8 by 10 black and white photographs of himself, with instructions that the handsome portraits be hung on CEIC walls across the country. There are 1.2 million unemployed people in Canada today who would rather look at a board full of job listings than the face of the minister, photogenic though it may be. It was customary in days gone by for pictures of the Queen, the Governor General or the Prime Minister to hang in government buildings. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the minister come out of the closet and inform the House whether this distribution of his photo is in anticipation of his becoming Prime Minister, or of his succeeding the present occupant of Rideau Hall, or has he aspirations to become the Queen of Canada?

[Editor's Note: And the Prime Minister having entered the Chamber.]

THE ECONOMY

MOTION MOVED BY MEMBER FOR BRUCE-GREY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it is hard to look at the smiling faces on the other side and to understand how they can sit there with the blood of all Canadians on their lapels.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: My question is for the Minister of Finance. I point out to him that the motion just put by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey proposing that a reference be made to the standing committee on the whole question of interest rates was the identical motion put by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce when he was finance critic for the Liberal Party a few years ago. At that time interest rates were substantially lower than they are today and those interest rates had done considerably less damage to the economy of the country than the interest rate policy being followed by this government. My question is very simple. Why could the minister not support that motion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member wants us on this side to support motions moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I think it would be wise for him to have his colleagues consult in the usual way so that we can assess whether it is appropriate to give that support.

DECLINE IN VALUE OF DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, that is an absolute cop-out. The minister could understand that motion. He did not need to have any part in negotiations. He knows the damage which has been done, and he should have had the motion accepted. It is as simple as that.

During the 1980 election campaign, the Liberal Party ran on an election platform of lowering interest rates. Clearly this was a gross deception on the Canadian people. In fact this government's policies have led to much higher interest rates because of the need to defend the Canadian dollar as a result of a record flight of capital.

Since we have seen the decline in the value of the Canadian dollar, from 85 cents in terms of the U.S. dollar at the time of the budget to a current level of just over 82 cents, would the minister tell the House today whether this represents a fundamental change in the interest rate policy of the government, or is it simply a reflection of the opinion of most Canadians that the 1981 budget was an absolute disaster?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when it comes to opinion about the budget, the place to test that opinion is in the House of Commons.

Mr. Crombie: What about the country?

Mr. Clark: Answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: On two occasions the budget was tested through non-confidence motions by members of the opposition. On these two occasions the budget was approved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: As hon. members learned in December, 1979, one test is enough. Two is terrific.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I think it will be very clear to the people who are in the galleries that the minister totally avoided answering the question put to him. Let me try another question.

Mr. Dick: You had better keep it simple.

CANADIANIZATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. In the last week of the 1980 election campaign the government announced a package of policies which have proved disastrous. They have resulted in a record flight of capital from Canada, record unemployment, and record interest rates. In order to avoid setting any more records, for which all Canadians are paying very heavily, would the Prime Minister commit himself to the House that there will be no extension of the National Energy Program into other industries, no extension of the Foreign Investment Review Agency as was threatened during that campaign, and no further nationalization of the oil and gas industry during this Parliament? Would the Prime Minister commit himself on that to this House today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we have already been quite explicit in terms of Canadianization. Our objective is to reach 50 per cent of ownership or control by 1990. As for the other items, the foreign investments item and Canadianization generally, the hon. member will find the precise answers in the white paper which was tabled at the time of the budget. As for the other foreign investment items and Canadianization generally, you will find the precise answers in that white paper which was deposited at the time of the budget, which I commend to the hon. member as very worth-while reading if he wants to know—

• (1420)

Mr. Wilson: Make the commitment in this Parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: —how this country can be developed, and in what ways he could assist rather than always being negative.

LEVELS OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN AREAS OF ONTARIO

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, as well. In view of the tragic economic circumstances in this country today, especially in Ontario where we find unemployment of 20,000 in Windsor representing 16.3 per cent of the work force, another 22,000 in the Niagara area which represents over 15 per cent of the work force, and likewise in Kitchener—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stevens: —would the Prime Minister indicate why he permits that type of unemployment in those areas which, by coincidence, happen to be represented by Liberal Members of Parliament? Is he simply counting on the fact that they must sit muted within his caucus and certainly not vote against his government to represent their constituents properly?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in his rather twisted logic I understand the hon. member is suggesting that we should bring particular help to areas represented by Liberals. I think that if we were to do that, he would accuse us of favouritism.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE RESIGNATION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I think the figures are self-evident. The fact is that the worst unemployment areas in Ontario happen to be those represented by Liberal Members of Parliament who do not stand up in this House and speak on behalf of their constituents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, again if I may ask the Prime Minister, surrounded as he is by his colleagues bedecked with their red carnations, would he at least indicate today that he will keep one promise he made during the election campaign, which is that if elected he would resign? When may we expect that resignation, in view of the calamity he has been to the country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, when I feel my support in the Liberal Party has sunk as low as it has for the Tory leader in his party, I will consider it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

HOUSING

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION VACANT UNITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a little difficult to be heard over the hubbub. I want to address a question to the minister responsible for housing. He is aware, I am sure, that the housing and related industries are being seriously crippled by the high interest rates which have been and are now being charged, and that housing starts have dropped significantly below the level that almost every expert believes is necessary in order to meet our housing needs. We have vacancy rates in major metropolitan areas such as Ottawa, Hamilton and Oshawa, of less than 1 per cent, and we now discover that Canada Mortgage and Housing has in excess of 9,000 units sitting empty. I ask the minister how does anyone explain that to people who cannot find affordable housing, who have to go into housing which costs far more than they can reasonably be expected to pay?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deans: That is a question. How does the minister explain to those people that they have to go into housing which they cannot afford while CMHC has those vacant units available in their municipality and refuses to put them on the market for rental purposes?

● (1425)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, one of the difficulties of the hon. gentleman is that he has obviously accepted, at face value, the news report this morning on which he bases his assumptions. The policy of the corporation, indeed, is to rent those units where we are unable to sell in areas, for example, where people are not coming forward to buy that affordable stock of housing. The housing to which we are referring is probably the most affordable housing available to Canadians today. It came into the corporation as the result of the undertaking of the corporation to the Conservative government to sell those properties in return for moneys to assist when there was a large drain on the mortgage insurance fund.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I want to assure the minister that I am not basing my question on the news reports.

REASONS FOR UNITS REMAINING EMPTY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I wonder if the minister would address two particular and quite pointed questions. One concerns the city of Hamilton where there is a vacancy rate of .7 per cent. I personally know of people who cannot find accommodation at a price that they can afford. There are 475 vacant units there under the direction of Canada Mortgage and Housing. In Oshawa there is a vacancy rate of zero per cent.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that I really must call the hon. member back to order. He is asking extremely long questions and I would ask him to make them more brief.

Mr. Deans: Very briefly, in Oshawa there are 309 vacant units. How does the minister explain, to those people who cannot find accommodation, the reason those units are standing empty?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would repeat my earlier answer. If the corporation is unable to find buyers for the affordable housing which has come into the mortgage insurance fund, those units are rented. Indeed, there are over 2,000 such units which are rented in the province of Ontario. However, one of the reasons we are unable to proceed with the provision of adequate, affordable rental accommodation in this country is because the opposition has not given serious concern to the legislation before the House to provide—

Mr. Deans: Nonsense!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: —15,000 units, 5,000 of which are rent geared to income.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ONE-YEAR MORTGAGES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of housing. Last weekend, at a HUDAC conference, the chief economist of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce predicted that three-year to five-year mortgages would be gone very shortly, and that they would be replaced by mortgages of one year or less. Given the fact that it will be impossible for people to try to plan to buy a house or to decide how to refinance a house if the mortgage rate goes up as it has in recent years, every year, and given the fact that housing sales are down by 85 per cent in a city like Winnipeg, have the minister and his department given consideration to the terribly adverse effects which will result from this idea of mortgages lasting only one year or less?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would have to comment on the introductory remarks of the hon. gentleman. Indeed there has been a variety of projections of housing starts for 1982, which range from 145,000 up to a high of 185,000. However, I recall that last year the leader of the party of which the hon. gentleman is a member predicted starts in 1981 of 145,000; in fact, they were closer to 180,000, which was the first time there had been an improvement in housing in the last five years. Therefore I am not as pessimistic as the hon. gentleman in terms of starts.

Mr. Deans: That's absolute nonsense!

Mr. Cosgrove: Second, the legislation before the House of Commons, Bill C-89, contains provisions to assist housing, and I wish the opposition would get off their legislative duffs and pass it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—LABOUR CONDITIONS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Unemployment and Immigration. The minister will know that two years ago we were creating jobs at the rate of 35,000 a month in this country. The minister will also know that as a result of being under his direction for the past two years, we are now losing jobs at the rate of 35,000 a month. Indeed, we are looking at a situation where close to a quarter of a million jobs have been lost in the last seven months alone. As the minister responsible for job creation, how long does he intend to let the situation continue to deteriorate?

● (1430)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Rosedale has been in this House long enough and has certainly listened to enough debates to realize that the kind of economic situation we are in is not the cause of this government or of any one minister, but is in large part the result of circumstances affecting every industrial country in the world. I need only point out that the unemployment rates we are facing, which are very severe and tragic, are also being experienced by every other country in the OECD areas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Those who scoff simply show they do not know. Ignorance is no excuse for that kind of loudness. The fact is there is a serious problem, a problem that we obviously share with many other countries. I would point out to the hon. member that, contrary to his assumption that we are presiding over the elimination of jobs, we have in fact been doing the opposite. We have been using government powers and resources to add to employment.

As I have pointed out in this House before, through our direct employment jobs we have created over 100,000 jobs in 1981-82. That is 100,000 jobs—

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS READY TO REASSESS LEATHER FOOTWEAR POLICY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that a large number of representatives of the footwear industry are in Ottawa today, and considering that the new policy recently announced by the minister entirely fails to offer the protection and assistance this industry needs, could the minister inform us, in anticipation of representations that will very probably be made by government members, since they have been exposed to the same pressures and recommendations as I have, could the minister inform us today whether he is prepared to reassess his decision and include leather footwear in his over-all quota system, so as to prevent the loss of 2,000 more jobs in Quebec alone within three months?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I may point out to the hon. member that the policy we announced is in line with the decisions and report made by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal. We have also set up a special fund of $17 million to help finance the modernization and positive restructuring of this industry. I am therefore very pleased that representatives of the industry have had a very useful meeting with four of my colleagues from the province of Quebec this morning, and I should be happy to receive any suggestions from my colleagues that could help us improve our present policy.

THE ECONOMY

RATE OF INFLATION—GOVERNMENT FORECASTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. When I was first elected to this House two years ago the inflation rate was 9.4 per cent. In December, 1981, the inflation rate was 12.1 per cent, which is corroding the faith of Canadians in the country. When does the minister expect the inflation rate to be back below the 9.4 per cent that it was at when this government was elected?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the most recent forecasts that we have prepared for the inflation rate are contained in the budget.

ENERGY

INCREASED COST OF HOME HEATING FUEL

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that in spite of some efforts by the government, many Canadians today and in the near future will continue to depend on oil for their home heating needs. In February, 1980, the cost of a gallon of heating oil was 69 cents. In December, 1981, it was $1.22 a gallon, a rise of 77 per cent in less than two years. Will the minister confirm to the House that 80 per cent of this increase, which is about 42 cents, is a federal tax that is at the direct expense of all users of home heating oil, including those who are on fixed and low incomes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): No, Madam Speaker, I will not confirm that, but I will confirm the fact that the energy pricing agreement that now exists was entered into between the Government of Canada and the producing provinces of the west. When we were attempting to get a better deal for the Canadian people in that agreement, members of the Conservative Party, like the former minister of finance, were encouraging the western premiers to hang in there so that the prices would be even higher than they are under the agreement which we have succeeded in arranging.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—POSSIBLE CANADIAN ROLE IN OBSERVING ELECTION PROCESS

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Canada, like a large number of other countries, has been invited by El Salvador to send special observers during the period of February 15 to March 30 to witness the process under way there to elect a constituent assembly to prepare a new constitution under which further elections will be held to form a representative government, can the minister indicate if the government has come to any decisions with respect to Canada's role in that election process?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, Canada had indicated a willingness to participate in an international observer force. We did receive an invitation from the El Salvador government to participate in a kind of observer force. However, discussions with representatives of that government have revealed that the kind of force which they are inviting us to participate in and the kind in which we have traditionally participated are very different. What they have in mind is not an international observer group which would monitor or judge their elections, because they would apparently view this as an interference in their internal affairs, but rather one where countries would send reprsentatives to El Salvador to witness and inform themselves.

We continue to believe that elections in that country, imperfect as they may be, are better than none, but the terms of observation which are available to us are not consistent with what we believe to be necessary, nor with our practices of the past.

We will be witnessing the elections through our normal diplomatic observations and through the members of the parliamentary subcommittee who will be visiting that country. I would just add that our considerable interest in the area was indicated last week by my announcement of a tripling of our aid to Central America.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—REGULATIONS GOVERNING OFFSHORE DRILLING RIGS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I congratulate him on his carnation. I believe it was supplied by Tony Merchant.

A couple of days ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told a reporter with respect to the Ocean Ranger, a drilling ship in Hibernia, "We are responsible for these rigs and everything that happens on these rigs". That was a quote from Mr. James Rusk of The Globe and Mail. Does the Prime Minister stand by that statement of his minister of energy and will he explain to the House why there will be two inquiries, one by the Government of Canada and one by the government of Newfoundland? Why not a joint inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to point out to the hon. member that he should learn about the distinction between a rose and a carnation. Then maybe he could distinguish between his razzmatazz and a hole in the ground.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In this case we are talking about holes in the bottom of the sea, and the authority of the minister that he referred to is in verifying the drilling aspect of the rigs. In so far as the concrete suggestion of the hon. member is concerned, it is perhaps not indiscreet to say that that is the course which the minister of energy had preferred. I know that before we announced our inquiry, or before Newfoundland announced its inquiry, he communicated with Mr. Marshall, the responsible minister in Newfoundland, and was hoping to discuss such an eventuality, but the government of Newfoundland chose to go ahead on its own and announced its own inquiry.

SAFETY AND SEAWORTHINESS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister. I was informed this morning from St. John's that on February 6, when the Ocean Ranger rig began to list badly because of ballast problems and an abandon ship alarm was sounded on that day, the rig operator did not know whether the crew was to abandon the ship from the high or the low end of the rig. The crew complained about this at a safety meeting and were told by Mobil officials that they would try to send someone out to the rig two or three weeks later to give the answer.

● (1440)

My supplementary question to the Prime Minister is, has he looked at these documents that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tabled in the House? They are really conservation documents, not health and safety documents at all. How can the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister who has just taken responsibility for what goes on on the rigs, as has the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, let a rig such as this, with almost criminally lax safety precautions and regulations, operate and not have it recalled into port?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, either the member was not in the House when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Transport—

Mr. Waddell: I was here.

Mr. Trudeau: If he was, he should remember that the minister informed the House that there was the matter of international jurisdiction over the high seas, and the seaworthiness of the rig which was established by international bodies and internationally recognized.

The function of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not to testify to the seaworthiness but to testify to its operations as far as seeking energy on the ocean floor is concerned. If the hon. member wants to assert the authority of Canada over vessels on the high seas, he may be indicating a new course of international law. However, I want to put to him that the allegations he is making will, of course, have to be verified and reported on by the commission that we have established. If he has facts of this nature which he wants to put before the commission, of course he should do so.

ENERGY

EFFECT OF TAXES ON PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In February, 1980, a gallon of gas in Toronto cost $1.18. In December of last year a gallon of gasoline cost $1.97. A report states that the federal tax increase on gasoline is 50 cents of that figure. Will the minister confirm that federal taxes have increased the price of gasoline by 50 cents a gallon?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will not confirm that.

Miss MacDonald: How about 75 cents?

Mr. MacEachen: I will confirm that we, as a government, refused to proceed with the 18-cent tax on gasoline which was proposed in the preceding budget.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CREATION OF JOBS IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since the last election, the Atlantic VIA Rail passenger service has been removed, the Canadian Forces Base in Chatham will be closed, over half of the maritime lumber mills are down, and hundreds of CN employees have been laid off. When will the Liberal government start creating more jobs in Atlantic Canada than it destroys?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in the past two years we have taken important steps in the area of job creation in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Clark: They have all been backwards.

Mr. Gray: In the hon. member's own province we have announced the Mitel project which will create over 1,000 jobs in the Buctouche area. We also announced support for a new zinc smelter project which will create hundreds of jobs in the hon. member's province. We also announced support for the expansion of the Saint John, New Brunswick shipyard, and the Halifax shipyard. These are just some examples of what we have been doing in a concrete, meaningful way to create new advanced technology jobs in the Atlantic provinces, and we will continue doing so.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I will address my question to the acting minister. The government has decreed that DREE be eliminated and CFB Chatham is being exterminated by the same government. Is it the intention of the minister to forget about Chatham and, if not, when will he announce what plans the federal government has to secure the future of this very important New Brunswick town?

An hon. Member: Somebody better answer.

Mr. Clark: Nobody speaks for New Brunswick.

RAILWAYS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. During the last federal election the Liberal Party was silent on its plans to make grain farmers pay higher prices for moving their grain to market. Why is the government bringing in such a policy at a time when the net incomes of the producers are predicted to be reduced by 10 per cent to 15 per cent?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the answer is obvious. The reason is to give western Canada the best railway transportation the world has ever seen. For that purpose the Minister of Finance has provided $1.35 billion for the next four years in order to accomplish that objective. The government also felt that in order to realize the full objective, which every westerner wants, it was necessary to rebalance the contribution that the railways, the government, and the farmers make to the transportation of grain. That is the basis for our decision. I dare say, and the hon. member knows it very well, that people from western Canada are quite willing to accept it and generally approve of it. There are a few reactionaries who do not, but I thought that they were all at that end, on my right side. I see there are also a few from Saskatchewan in the Conservative opposition.

AGRICULTURE

COST OF FUEL USED IN PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. During the 1980 election the Liberal Party promised farmers low prices for the fuel they used in the production of food. Since then fuel prices have gone up by 67 per cent. Why has this government not rebated a portion of this gasoline tax to farmers as was proposed by the Clark budget in 1979? For once, will the minister give the House a straight answer and not the usual baloney garnished with manure?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Madam Speaker, I know the hon. member very well. He knows that our food inspection system does not permit bologna to be garnished with any such material whatsoever. He knows that we have one of the safest food inspection systems in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: And I want to tell the hon. member that I know from which end of the bull his statement comes from, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I also want to say to the hon. member that I am sure he realizes that farmers who are taking delivery of diesel fuel and gasoline in certain quantities, according to the regulations, do receive a refund on the federal excise tax. There is some concern for farmers who buy propane and use it to propel their vehicles at the present time. That is not allowed under the present act. We have made representations in the hope that those regulations will be changed so they can get refunds also. I would remind the hon. member that the farmers with whom we compete, namely, those in the United States, pay more for their fuel than we do in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Madam Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity Conception.

Mr. Dave Rooney (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It is his anniversary question.

An hon. Member: Where is your trailer?

Mr. Rooney: I will get to that. Madam Speaker, when I came into my lobby today I was asked if I would wear a rose.

An hon. Member: A carnation.

Mr. Rooney: A rose by any other colour. I feel depressed.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

● (1450)

Mr. Nielsen: Let him speak.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor if he wants to ask a question. If he wants to make a speech, he can choose another time to do so. He is perfectly free to do so, but at this particular time he must ask a question.

Mr. Rooney: Madam Speaker, why are all the Liberals—and there were a couple on the other side—wearing roses when 84 people died on the oil rig off Newfoundland? Who wants to answer? I do not know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Come on, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO NAVAL EXERCISES IN CARIBBEAN

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I am sorry to deprive the Prime Minister of the opportunity to respond, since he is the only one wearing a rose, but I will go ahead with my question, which is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

As the minister will know, NATO is planning to hold its winter naval exercises in the Caribbean Central American region, assembling in the Gulf of Mexico and moving to the Straits of Florida, about a wave away from Cuba. This is the first time NATO has gone into the region for its naval exercises, and I want to ask the minister if he can tell the House why NATO has chosen to do this at this time.

Mr. Rooney: Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam has the floor.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I want to ask the minister why NATO has chosen at this time, for the first time in its history, to hold its winter exercises in the Central American-Caribbean area. Is it to promote American interests in that region, and is the visit of two NATO admirals to Ottawa next week connected with this?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, NATO military exercise decisions are made for military and not political reasons. I can assure the House that there is no political motivation whatsoever attached to this exercise.

As to the visit of some top NATO military officials to Ottawa next week, that is an event which has long been planned by the Minister of National Defence as a routine matter to inform us better on NATO military planning. It has no connection with any other event.

REASONS FOR CHOICE OF EXERCISE AREA

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, it is nevertheless reminiscent, as Walter Gordon was reminding us this morning, of General Norstad's visit 19 years ago.

If there is no political reason for this, why is NATO going contrary to its habitual practice of having these exercises in the Mediterranean? Why is it passing right adjacent to Cuba, and does the minister not think this will be a destabilizing influence in the area? I know the minister himself wants Canadian government policy to be one of promoting stability and avoiding provocation.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, Canada's attitude toward the Caribbean and the Central America area is well known. It is certainly one of co-operation with all the countries in that area, including Cuba, for the advancement of peace. We have frequent discussions with Cuba. We have been having them in the last day or so, and the Cubans are certainly under no illusion that there is any threat in which we are participating. I do not think the hon. member does us any service in suggesting that there is some hidden political motivation in what is a normal military exercise.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY RESPECTING SAFEGUARDS TO PREVENT CONTAMINATION OF CANADIAN FISH STOCKS BY SUNKEN URANIUM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, who yesterday confirmed that 12 containers of uranium hexafluoride were destined to be on the Russian freighter which sank and waved away rescue attempts in mysterious circumstances. We do not know the size of those containers, although I am given to understand they could be very large, perhaps as large as 12 metric tons. Those containers could be lying now on the floor of the Grand Banks where, as a result of corrosion or the impact of sinking, they could cause leakage, which would seriously contaminate Canadian fish stocks. In light of that possibility will the Minister of the Environment tell us what safeguards and standards are in place to stop the potential contamination of Canadian fish stocks off the Grand Banks as a result of the shipping of Canadian processed uranium material to the Soviet Union?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do have some information about the containers. They are specially designed, heavily walled steel cylinders which weigh about 13 tonnes and contain about eight tonnes of uranium. In more than 25 years of transporting thousands of these cylinders around the world, no cylinder has ever been punctured resulting in the release of material during transportation. It would take many hundreds of years before a cylinder could be corroded under water so that the uranium would come into contact with sea water. If and when that happened, the uranium would be dissolved in the water, adding eight tonnes of uranium to the ocean. The amount of uranium estimated to occur naturally in the world's oceans is about four billion tonnes. It would be impossible to detect or estimate the impact of such a release because it would be so small. I do not think the concern expressed by the right hon. gentleman is one which need preoccupy us.

Mr. Clark: In other words, the minister's standard is that he is not worried, so no one else should be.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ENRICHMENT OF URANIUM IN SOVIET UNION—USE OF BYPRODUCT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to whomever reports in the House on behalf of Eldorado. Eldorado has indicated that uranium hexafluoride is enriched in the Soviet Union at the request of Eldorado's customers. That is why we are shipping it to the Soviet Union. Will he confirm that this Russian uranium process produces a byproduct which can be regarded as waste, but which in fact can be used to produce plutonium and to produce weapons? If so, will the minister tell this House of Commons now what are the final destinations of that byproduct?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, this is a practice which has gone on for a considerable number of years, including the time of the right hon. member's government. It has been a continuous commercial process in which countries—often neutral countries as in this case, which I am not at liberty to identify at this stage—

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. MacGuigan: Because it involves a competitive situation in which Eldorado is involved. However, often neutral countries request that we have our uranium hexafluoride enriched, which we are not able to do in this country. My information is that there is exactly the same tonnage out of as into the Soviet Union, and we are satisfied that there is no advantage being given to the Soviet Union by this process. Of course the right hon. member knows that the Soviet Union itself is a producer of uranium and does not need any uranium from us.

DESTINATIONS OF ENRICHED URANIUM

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, what the minister admitted when he said that the same tonnage goes out as goes in is that the Soviet Union is disposing of this byproduct, which could be treated as waste but which also could be used to produce plutonium or to produce weapons. That is what is happening to Canadian uranium in Russian hands; he has just said that. However, he will not tell us which countries are receiving the benefits of this Canadian uranium chanelled through and processed by Russian hands. He has an obligation to tell the people of this country and the House of Commons which countries are benefiting from this Canadian uranium in a way that may allow them to make use of plutonium and may allow them to produce weapons. Which countries are they?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the countries which are the recipients of this uranium are countries with which we have agreements, so we have their guarantee of non-proliferation. I repeat that this is the same practice which has been followed for many years. It is a commercial practice, and it was followed during the time of the right hon. member's government as well.

ESTIMATES

DATE OF TABLING OF MAIN ESTIMATES

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister in a position to tell the House at this time when he will be tabling the 1982-83 main estimates, and if there will be a lockup?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I hope to table the main estimates next Tuesday. Today I sent letters to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party in an effort to work out arrangements that will make sure they are fully briefed. I hope this can be done without a lockup unless, of course, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) insists upon having a lockup. I am sure we would be delighted to lock him up this year!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LIBERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Two years ago during the federal election campaign the Prime Minister promised that the Liberal party would "—get a fair share for Canada of business in the auto industry". I do not have to quote any statistics to remind the Prime Minister and the House that not only did he not keep his promise but that the industry itself has reached an all-time low. I therefore would like to ask the Prime Minister—because it is his remark that I refer to—when he is going to take the necessary action to try to keep at least that one promise that he made to the Canadian public?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Prime Minister promised, we have begun consultations with the United States with a view to getting action on problem areas connected with the auto pact. We will continue these consultations. That work is being carried on by my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, and myself.

In addition, we have taken other important steps aimed at strengthening and upgrading the manufacturing and technology base of our auto industry. The most recent step was the announcement of the $25 million fund to be spent over the next two years to assist auto parts companies in this country take advantage of production opportunities in North America.

We have also taken action to establish in Canada a new Volkswagen project. This will provide 1,500 jobs, 500 of which will be in the plant itself, and 1,000 in the plants of individual Canadian parts manufacturers. Another example I can give is the KHV diesel engine project.

I see you are about to call me to order because of the length of my answer, Madam Speaker, but these are just some examples that will demonstrate the concrete action we have been taking and examples of action that will be taken on behalf of the auto industry.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, since my colleague cannot seem to make up his mind to ask, next week, the business of the House will include consideration of Bill C-78 to improve benefits to laid-off employees and subsequently, Bill C-89 on national housing. Depending on the circumstances of the debate on these two bills, we shall probably have an opposition day on either Thursday or Friday of next week. I shall be advising my colleagues which day it is to be. That will be the order of business for next week.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure that I heard the government House leader correctly. He stated that next week we would deal with Bills C-78 and C-89, I presume on Monday and Tuesday, consecutively—

Mr. Pinard: And Wednesday.

Mr. Nielsen: —and Wednesday, the government House leader interjects—and that there would be another opposition day next week in addition to the allotted day now on the Order Paper for tomorrow. We will be proceeding, I presume, with the allotted day tomorrow, as he has indicated so many times.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if my colleague requires that tomorrow be an allotted day, I am pleased to agree with him. As a matter of fact, tomorrow will be an allotted day as well.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, tomorrow is the allotted day which has been on the notice paper all week. The government House leader is simply confirming that it is there, that he is not going to change his mind again and change tomorrow as an allotted day. Is that a correct understanding of what he said?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, all I can say is that I think we agree. The hon. member expressed a wish that tomorrow not be changed and I said that I am pleased to confirm that it is not my intention to change it; and that, furthermore, there will be another allotted day probably next week on Thursday or Friday, depending on the progress of business at the beginning of the week. If the hon. member now prefers that we change the day tomorrow, I will consider it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I did not want the government House leader to change it last week and we certainly do not want him to change it this week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think it is a bit late to tell me that now. I invited the hon. member to a House leaders' meeting last Thursday morning and he did not come. He could have told me that at that time.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, if, as the government House leader says, he is holding regular House leaders' meetings and he held one last week, I wonder why he did not hold one this week to inform me of what he has just informed me across the aisle.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the answer is very simple: I did not intend to change the allotted day tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Sinking of "Ocean Ranger"

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, could I raise a question of House business with the government House leader? He will remember that he indicated he was opposed to calling concurrence on the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments because the government was actively considering what action it would take as a result of the recommendations of the Task Force on Regulatory Reform and the recommendations made by the Economic Council of Canada to the standing joint committee. He indicated that he would be presenting proposals to Parliament in the near future. May I ask him where those proposals are and when they will be put before Parliament?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks a question that I suggest he take up with his House leader. I should not like to refer to what we have discussed together on the subject of parliamentary reform.

Madam Speaker: Taking into account that we must assume that tomorrow will be an allotted day, I want to inform the House that since there are two motions on the Order Paper, the Standing Orders require me to choose which one will be debated tomorrow. Of course, the deadline for other motions to be presented to the House is six o'clock tonight. In principle, I suppose that I should wait until six o'clock to announce my decision on which motion I choose; however, as a courtesy to the House I could, if the House wishes, announce my decision now so that everyone concerned could be prepared for the debate. If the House wants me to announce that now, there would be the caveat that if another motion were filed before six o'clock I would have to reconsider my decision and come back to the House and announce my choice.

I should like to have an indication whether the House would like me to announce my decision now or later.

Some hon. Members: Now!

Madam Speaker: My decision was not easy because we do not have very many precedents. I looked into the principles which might guide me in choosing which of the two motions would be debated. I considered the fact that the motion in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is from the official opposition and also that it requires the House to come to a decision. Therefore I have decided that the motion in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will be debated tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—OBSERVANCE OF FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, AS DAY OF SYMPATHY

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as the minister responsible for the parliamentary precinct, I should like to advise hon. members that flags will be flown at half mast tomorrow to join in the day of sympathy in Newfoundland and that federal government offices in the province of Newfoundland will be closed tomorrow in order to join with that province in mourning its tragedy.

● (1510)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I take it the statement of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) was in the nature of a statement on motions. I must say in passing that we are pleased to have the tradition re-established in the House of Commons.

In response to the statement on motions of the minister, I should simply like to express our total approval of the action which has been taken and of the opportunity for hon. members of the House of Commons, and all of us associated with the activities of the federal presence across the country, to express our profound sympathy to the families and survivors of those who died in this tragedy at sea. Also I should like to express our great regret at this terrible tragedy and our hope that the survivors and their families find some solace in knowing that the nation joins in their sense of deep loss and great regret.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point raised by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) and by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I should like to join both hon. members in the sentiments expressed. While it is not possible to express adequately the sense one feels at a time like this when such a tragedy occurs, I hope as a result of this we will redouble our efforts to ensure that it will never occur again.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CORBETT—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to reserve a question of privilege for a future date which arises out of my question to the Acting Minister of National Defence in the House today. If I decide there has been a breach of privilege, my position will be based upon the fact that in Monday's Hansard of February 8, 1982, the Acting Ministers of National Defence are given as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), both of whom were present in the House today. The parliamentary secretary was also in the House today, and although the government benches may be in total disarray, surely someone speaks for the Department of National Defence in the House.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member need not give verbal notice of a question of privilege in the House. He should send written notice to my office, as the Standing Orders require. There is no need to take up the time of the House by giving verbal notice of a question of privilege.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point raised by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. I think the hon. member is suffering from a lapse of memory. He asked the same question on February 9—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question of privilege has not yet been raised. If it is raised, the hon. parliamentary secretary will have an opportunity to answer it.

Mr. Corbett: If Madam Speaker did not receive the written notice which I sent with one of the pages, then at least the House should be aware that I gave written notice.

Madam Speaker: I received the notice of the hon. member during question period. I thought it was a notice telling me that he wanted to be recognized at the end of question period on a question of privilege arising out of the deliberations of today. I have the notice; this is why I recognized the hon. member at the end of question period. But I warn the hon. member that his notice was too brief to satisfy the requirements of the Standing Orders. Therefore, if the hon. member has a question of privilege to raise, I would be grateful if he rewrote his notice and sent it to my office.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

Question No. 3,530—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a Mr. Petrie hired by the Royal Canadian Mint and, if so (a) is he the father-in-law of Mr. Yvon Gariépy, former Master of the Mint (b) on what date was he hired and was it during Mr. Gariépy's tenure in office (c) was he classified as a consultant (d) what were his duties?

2. Did he leave such employment and, if so, on what date?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): I am informed by the Royal Canadian Mint as follows:

1. There is no Mr. Petrie at the Royal Canadian Mint. However, we did have a Mr. Robert Pitre.

(a) No.

(b) Mr. Pitre was hired on February 16, 1976, during Mr. Gariépy's tenure in office.

(c) No.

(d) February 16, 1976, to January 1, 1979—Messenger

January 1, 1979 to May 26, 1980, supervisor of tours, Ottawa Plant.

Duties: —supervised tour guides

—scheduled tours as requested

—escorted VIPs on special tours

—supervised operation of the theatre

—supervised sales of numismatic coins to visitors

—co-ordinated all tours with security guards

May 27, 1980 to May 14, 1981—supervisor of tours. Under contract, duties as above.

May 15, 1981 to August 28, 1981, trained new supervisor.

2. Yes. August 28, 1981.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 3,723—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of public servants working in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in Quebec indicate English as their first official language?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The answer is 14.7 per cent.

Question No. 3,728—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of public servants working in the Department of Supply and Services in Quebec indicate English as their first official language?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Data retrieved from the department's personnel administrative and reporting system indicates that out of 5,067 public servants employed in the province of Quebec by Supply and Services Canada for which linguistic data is known, 2,536 or 50.05 per cent indicate their first official language as being English.

Question No. 3,729—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of public servants working in the Department of Transport in Quebec indicate English as their first official language?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Of the public servants working for Transport Canada in Quebec, 7.8 per cent indicate English as their first official language.

PASSPORT GUARANTORS

Question No. 3,734—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Are practicing optometrists not allowed to guarantee passports, when bankers, doctors, postal officials and lawyers are allowed to do this work and, if so, for what reason?

2. Does the government believe optometrists are mentally or emotionally incapable of serving as guarantors on a passport application, despite the fact they carry on professional practices and retain patients' records in a similar manner as medical practitioners?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Practicing optometrists are not on the list of eligible passport guarantors. The approved guarantor list is designed with two objectives in mind: first, to make the list broadly enough based to ensure that all Canadian citizens have ready access to one of the guarantors in their community; and second, to keep the categories to manageable proportions so that the Passport Office can, without disrupting rapid service, carry out the necessary security review and checks of the applicant and the guarantor. It is considered that the present list is broad enough to ensure that Canadians have access to a guarantor and that additions are not required at this time.

2. No.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 1,960 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that question No. 1,960 be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Question No. 1,960—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Which countries have received CIDA loans and, in each case (a) what was the amount of the loan (b) what amount was repaid (c) what amount is outstanding?

2. Which countries are in default on loans made by CIDA?

3. Which countries receiving CIDA aid have nationalized Canadian companies without compensation?

4. What is the cost of the recent CIDA poll on Canadian opinions regarding foreign aid?

5. (a) How many CIDA personnel are engaged in responding to persons who write letters to editors in Canada about Canadian foreign aid (b) is writing such responses their full-time responsibility (c) what are their salaries?

6. (a) How many research fellowships have been granted by the International Development Research Centre in the past three years (b) what are the criteria for the fellowships (c) what is the remuneration?

Return tabled.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, could the parliamentary secretary indicate why question No. 2,042 which I asked on January 29, 1981, has not yet been answered? I feel it is an affront to the House that we are not being told the total cost of the December 1980-January 1981 world tour of the Prime Minister or what percentage of the total cost was actually paid by the taxpayers of Canada. Surely it is an affront to the House.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will make inquiries and endeavour to obtain the answers as soon as possible. As the hon. member knows, answers of that nature have been tabled before, and they will be in the future.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I would not want to disappoint the parliamentary secretary, having raised this matter on approximately 20 previous occasions. In view of the fact that the government has a habit of celebrating unfortunate anniversaries by wearing carnations, and that today is another unfortunate anniversary, I should like to indicate to the parliamentary secretary that five years, eight months and seven days ago today I placed a question on the Order Paper concerning the Canadian Transport Commission. I asked how many passes had been given by Air Canada to members of the commission, to their wives or to any officials of the commission.

The parliamentary secretary has been here for some time, and before that he had predecessors. I have asked every one of them when this question will be answered. There is a grave conflict of interest involved here. The situation is that the Canadian Transport Commission, the group which governs Air Canada, received free passes from Air Canada for wives, employees and various people. What are Benson's boys trying to hide that the government does not want to tell us? I should like to have some sort of answer, rather than the answer I have been given by the parliamentary secretary and every one of his predecessors, namely "soon". Obviously "soon" in terms of the Liberal Party means never. When will I know exactly why, for five years, eight months and seven days, the parliamentary secretary or any of his predecessors have not had enough gumption to rise and give the answer?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, it should be pointed out that that question was on the Order Paper the entire tenure of the Clark government and was not answered. In any event, I do not want to disappoint the hon. member. I assure him that the question will be answered in due course, in the fullness of time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join in this continuing second reading debate on Bill C-93, which is one of those common but regrettably deceptive bills the government has a habit of bringing in. It has a very innocent title— "An act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds." It is an apples and oranges bill consisting of a borrowing authority, which is the apples part, taxes in the form of a natural gas and gas liquids tax and a petroleum gas revenue tax, which is the oranges part. This bill arises out of a budget brought down in October, 1980, almost a year and a half ago.

The borrowing authority provision, we argue should more properly be considered as a separate piece of legislation since it deals with a totally different subject from petroleum taxes. However, we are stuck with the fact that these two mixed items, and I believe inappropriately mixed, are considered in one bill. Therefore, we are forced to debate what amounts to two different subjects on the same occasion and vote on what amounts to quite separate principles. So be it. My colleagues have debated at some length the implications of the borrowing authority. Therefore, I would like to concentrate my remarks primarily on the oranges part of this bill, the petroleum and gas revenue tax and the natural gas and gas liquids tax.

These two taxes arose out of the National Energy Program, which was part of the 1980 budget brought down October 22, at which time these provisions were introduced. Given that fullness of time, it is interesting to look back at the National Energy Program to see what was promised and compare it to what was delivered to see what new nirvana the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), promised us when they introduced the budget in 1980. It is interesting to see what hell has, in fact, ensued as a consequence of this budget and the accompanying national energy policy.

The national energy policy had three goals—security of supply, Canadianization and fairness of revenue sharing. These were magnificent goals, goals that no Canadian could oppose in terms of their objectives. But what has happened? What has this program led to? What is the reality as opposed to those statements of intent?

First let us look at the question of self-sufficiency. The minister of energy informed this House that there would be no question but that Canada would be energy self-sufficient by 1990 because of the extraordinarily good energy policies that he and his colleagues had brought in. What is the reality? There is not a single, knowledgeable individual or organization in this country that believes that assertion by the minister. There is not one, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the National Energy Board, an independent body, after having held months of extensive public hearings across the country, and with the best information available to it, in its report in June, 1981, after looking at various alternatives, reported at page 9:

The board is not forecasting oil self-sufficiency in either of the above cases.

In other words, in terms of any of the alternatives the board looked at and any assumptions it could make, the board could not see oil self-sufficiency. In this connection the board was looking at the year 2000. The National Energy Board says that Canada will not be self-sufficient by the year 2000 based on the government's energy policies. Does that stop the minister of energy? Not at all. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources issues a press release saying that Canada will be self-sufficient. Why will Canada be self-sufficient? Because the minister of energy says so. Is there any evidence to that effect? There is not. The minister of energy says that Canada will be self-sufficient because a combination of the Alsands and Cold Lake projects, together with a conservation program, will make it possible. There are also some heavy upgrade programs that will help in this objective.

Let us look at what has happened. The Cold Lake project is dead. The Alsands project looks like it is dead. It is taking a while to die, but it certainly looks as though it will die. The heavy oil upgrading program of Polysar, which was a big part of the program the minister was trumpeting about in October, is dead. These things which the minister was counting on are dead. But what did the minister say last week when these facts were brought to his attention by a reporter with a good filing system? The minister said, "Well, we do not really need Alsands and Cold Lake anyway; we will be self-sufficient as a result of east coast offshore and Beaufort." If we take a look at what the minister said a year ago, we find that he said, "We are not counting on Beaufort or east coast offshore to make us self-sufficient. We are not counting on that; we will be self-sufficient because of Alsands, Cold Lake and these heavy upgrading programs."

If you were to buy a used car from the minister, Mr. Speaker, you would deserve to buy a lemon. The fact is, that because of the incredible incompetence of this government, self-sufficiency is out the window. We had better all pray that some new equivalent of the Ayatollah Khomeini does not come along. We had better pray that that madman in Syria, Assad, can keep those madder men in the city of Hama, who are trying to impose a Khomeini-type revolution in that country, under control. If anything happens in any Middle East country or in any other of the single-party states around the world upon which we rely for oil, then we will find ourselves in a pretty pickle indeed. But not to worry; by then the minister of energy and his colleagues will be long gone and will not be held accountable or responsible for the situation. We know that they will have no consciences to bother them about the legacy they have left to Canadians of the future.

What about the second part of the program, that of Canadianization? We are going to Canadianize the oil and gas industry. I heard the minister say that. He said that he was going to Canadianize the oil and gas industry by having at least 50 per cent of the industry owned by Canadians by the year 1990.

The minister did not tell the House how he would achieve that. It was not by having the Canadian part grow but by having the foreign part shrink. What we will be doing is making sure the oil and gas industry is such a smaller component than it used to be; the Canadian component of 50 per cent will be 50 per cent, but 50 per cent of a whole lot less than it was. The hypocrisy of the minister is absolutely mind-boggling.

One wonders about the editorial writers at the Ottawa Citizen who rate this minister as an A-1 minister. You wonder if they can read, if they keep records. Do they remember what in fact has been said? As just one example, Mr. Speaker, in July, 1981, the Canadian Development Corporation bought out the shares of Elf Aquitaine, a 75 per cent French-owned company. According to The Globe and Mail, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, in talking about the agreement between the CDC and Elf Aquitaine:

—the agreement was very welcome and demonstrated that the federal government's policy of increasing Canadian ownership of the oil industry is being carried out "expeditiously and effectively".

That is what the minister said; Canadianization is working. Well, Mr. Speaker, on January 30, 1982, the minister was in France, the country that used to own 75 per cent of Elf Aquitaine. Speaking of the France-Canada Chamber of Commerce, it is reported that:

He also made a strong appeal for increased French investment in Canada, particularly in the energy sector, in a speech at a luncheon meeting of the France-Canada Chamber of Commerce.

In July, 1981, he said "Hallelujah, Canadianization is working because we bought out this French-owned company." In January, 1982, he is in France saying, "We would like French money to come over here and invest in the oil and gas industry." He is trying to suck and blow at the same time. But that does not prevent George Radwanski of the Toronto Star saying what a great minister this is, that he is Canadianizing. On this same trip he stopped in Paris en route from Kuwait where he was trying to encourage the Kuwaitis and others in the Middle East to invest in Canadian energy projects. First he announces to great acclaim, fanfare and the singing of "Hallelujah, we are going to Canadianize, buy out these rotten foreigners;" and then announces with great pride and wide smiles, "I have talked the Arabs and French into investing in Canadian energy projects." If you bought a used car from that man, Mr. Speaker, you deserve to have a lemon.

The reality is, Mr. Speaker, that the National Energy Program had nothing to do with self-sufficiency or Canadianization. It was simply gimmicky phrases utilized, effectively I admit, by the government. What that policy was really all about was indicated by the minister in a speech in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on October 22, 1981, when according to the Canadian Press he said:

> —a stronger threat to Canadian unity than Quebec nationalism could soon be posed by the growing wealth of Alberta. The other nine provinces would eventually be at the mercy of Alberta's every fancy, he said, and a wave of Alberta nationalism of unprecedented strength could rise up if the federal government held back now from showing its teeth. "We don't pay enough attention to this threat," Lalonde said, "but it's a real one, it's there."

Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the Alberta provincial riding of Olds-Didsbury we had the result of this minister baring his teeth. For the first time outside the province of Quebec Canadians voted for a separatist because of the policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who says that a bigger threat to Canadian unity than Quebec nationalism is Alberta's wealth. And to that kind of behaviour the Ottawa Citizen says A-1. I hope and pray, Mr. Speaker, that the message the people of Olds-Didsbury were trying to send yesterday will be heeded by some responsible people opposite. Hopefully there are some in that Liberal Party somewhere who will heed that message, who will say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and others who feel they can strengthen national unity by beating on the heads of western Canadians: Stop! We want this whole country to stay together. We do not want Canadians to feel that their national government does not represent them. We do not want Canadians to turn in frustration to separatism because they cannot get the attention of their supposed national government.

This feeling, Mr. Speaker, which exists in Olds-Didsbury and elsewhere, indeed I might say the feeling which exists in knowledgeable people here in central Canada—and there are some—is a reflection of the NEP and what it is doing. Because the fact of the matter is that that program, particularly as exemplified by the taxes in this bill, the petroleum and gas revenue tax and the natural gas and gas liquids tax, is hurting Canadian companies more than it is hurting the foreign multinationals which supposedly are the villains and the ones we are supposed to be hitting.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the NEP hit Canadian-owned companies harder than foreign-owned companies. That is not my opinion, that is not information from a suspect source; that is from the Petroleum Monitoring Agency of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the minister's own department. This report, which came out about six weeks ago, covers the first six months of 1981; in other words, the first six months of full operation under the NEP. It shows that the result of the NEP is that during that time foreign-owned companies suffered a 28.5 per cent income drop in their Canadian operations. In comparison, Canadian-owned companies suffered a revenue drop of 52 per cent. So, Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of Canadianizing the industry we introduce taxes which hit Canadian-owned companies twice as hard as foreign-owned companies.

The NEP, Mr. Speaker, has in fact driven Canadian companies out of Canada. The Petroleum Monitoring Agency report shows that Canadian-controlled junior companies increased their foreign exploration in the first six months of 1981 by 247 per cent as compared with the first six months of 1980. They were driven out of Canada. There was a 247 per cent increase in foreign operations by Canadian companies which were driven out of Canada by a government which says it will Canadianize the oil industry. That was a blatant falsehood, an out and out deception.

The reality is that the minister spoke the truth in Sherbrooke when he said that the object was to put those westerners in their place, to bare their teeth, because wealth in Alberta cannot be tolerated and is a threat to national unity. How effective were they? Again, the Petroleum Monitoring Agency, which obtained its data from StatsCan, showed that during the first six months of 1981 the petroleum industry earned an average return on capital employed of 9.4 per cent. In comparison, the manufacturing industry earned a return on capital of 11 per cent.

Therefore, this mythical, over-wealthy, rapacious beast, this western Canadian oil industry which must be put into its place, whose coffers must be dipped into because it is a threat to national unity, earned 9.4 per cent on capital employed. This was presumably so that the money could be used to benefit companies in Windsor such as Chrysler, or other manufacturing concerns which apparently, according to Statistics Canada, only earned 11 per cent and were in deep trouble. We beat on the heads of the companies which earned 9.4 per cent in order to subsidize the companies which earned 11 per cent. All of this is for national unity. However, the peole of Olds-Didsbury were not fooled by that. What we are doing is Canadianizing the oil and gas industry in the United States.

According to an article in World Oil, which is a highly respected technical journal:

> In addition, political and economic developments in Canada have created apprehension . . . (on the part of) . . . U.S. and Canadian investors. In particular, imposition of price controls and the prospect of impending confiscatory taxes caused petroleum capital to be shifted massively out of Canada and into the United States . . . Of the total drilling forecast for years through 1985, the combination of non-industry equity capital and flight capital from Canada will account for an estimated 9,000 to 10,000 wells per year.

Canada-owned companies which were supposedly to be helped by the National Energy Program have left Canada to the extent that they can expect to drill 9,000 to 10,000 wells in the United States per year for the next several years. In comparison, the whole oil industry will be expected to drill 5,000 wells in Canada in 1982 and 10,000 wells in the United States because of a national energy program designed to Canadianize the oil and gas industry.

The sheep in the backbenches on the other side say, "Aye, aye, that's great! Isn't it wonderful?" Isn't the minister wonderful? Isn't this policy wonderful? It really makes one wonder. If one looks at the chart of drilling activity in Canada over the period 1971 to 1980, one sees an almost steady progression. The number of wells drilled in Canada in 1980 was about 10,000, 75 per cent of which were drilled by Canadian-owned, independent oil and gas companies. Since the National Energy Program, that amount dropped down to 6,800 in 1981, and will drop to about 5,000 in 1982. All of that energy, drive and money will be helping to make the United States self-sufficient, helping to generate jobs in the United States and helping to attract Canadian capital and money to the United States. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussieres) knows full well that that drain of capital from Canada as a result of the National Energy Program is very much at the root of, and is responsible for, the high interest rates we are bearing in Canada now. Because of that drain of capital as a result of Canadians being driven out of Canada by their own government, we have had to maintain interest rates in this country which are higher than those in the United States in order to attract back some of that money so that our dollar does not drop through the floor.

If hon. members opposite think interest rates are too high and would like to bring them down, the quickest and best thing they could do would be simply to erase the National Energy Program and the last budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Then interest rates would go down by at least three or four percentage points. All they have to do is to reverse what they have done and we would have a three or four percentage point drop in interest rates.

I have not spoken of the jobs which have been lost through this National Energy Program. There has been a colossal loss of jobs, tens of thousands of jobs, not just in western Canada but all across this country. According to a study by Foster Research, for every dollar of capital spent in Alberta on oil and gas, only 29 cents is actually spent on products from Alberta; 42 cents of that dollar is spent on products from Ontario; 13 cents is spent on products from Quebec; and 16 cents is spent on products from the rest of Canada. Therefore, because our exploration effort is being cut in half as a result of the National Energy Program, and because Canadians are drilling twice as many wells in the United States as in Canada, the amount of capital which would have been spent in Canada is at least $10 billion a year less than would have been the case under this budget. The number of jobs thereby lost is horrendous.

I wonder how many people know that the industry which purchases the largest number of trucks is the oil industry. I wonder how many of the workers in Ste-Thérèse who were laid off at the truck plant realize they were laid off because of the national energy policy of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wonder how many realize that, in fact, many of the jobs lost in the auto industry are directly as a result of the national energy policy. I am quite certain they were not told that by their Liberal representatives.

There has been a tremendous loss of opportunity to this country in terms of jobs and investment which would have come in. I am speaking about conventional oil and gas development, and I have not spoken about the megaprojects. I am referring to the loss at Cold Lake and the probable loss at Alsands. The Economic Council of Canada, which is not a Progressive Conservative Party organ, stated that the only good thing that the Canadian economy has going for it, heading into the 1980s, is the development of the megaprojects. Where are those megaprojects?

Mr. Waddell: That's a myth, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member says it is a myth. I invite him to read the report of the Economic Council of Canada. The hon. member should accuse it of putting forward myths. However, that is what it states in the report. The reality is that there has been an incredible cost to Canada as a result of the National Energy Program and the taxes which were proposed.

Has the consumer gained? Have we at least protected the consumer? Has the consumer in Canada received cheaper oil and gas as a result of these energy programs? I will read the promise given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 12, 1980. He said, "The Liberal price hike will be less than half what the Tories plan to inflict on you. We will negotiate an increase of less than 14 per cent."

Has that promise been kept? Not according to every single outside observer who has looked at it, not according to the facts, and not according to the people who must buy gasoline and heating oil. They did not impose an 18-cent-a-gallon excise tax on gasoline. They imposed a 20-cent-a-gallon petroleum compensation charge on gasoline and heating oil. We were not going to tax heating oil. Those in Quebec and Atlantic Canada who use heating oil to heat their homes this winter will pay 20 cents a gallon more that would have been the case under a Conservative government. That is the way they keep their promises; no 18-cent tax but a 20-cent tax. They are marvellous promise keepers. You can put that in the same category as no price and wage controls. Consistency in truth is not something that hinders a Liberal very long.

These two taxes, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, were imposed through the National Energy Program. I know the socialists, the Liberal Party west, would recognize and support the rationale given by the minister that it was necessary to impose these taxes because the foreign multinationals were draining the country dry, taking the revenues from our national resources out of the country.

In 1982 and 1983, according to the budget presented by the Minister of Finance on November 12, the petroleum and gas revenue tax will raise $3 billion. The natural gas and gas liquids tax will raise $1.5 billion. Between the two, they will raise $4.5 billion. In the entire period between 1970 and 1980, the sum total of all dividends, interest and profits taken out of Canada by the foreign multinationals did not equal $4.5 billion. Therefore, the government is taking out more in one year than was supposedly taken out over the last decade. That is the rationale given for this policy.

Only the most obtuse, myopic or doctrinaire socialist could accept what has happened without feeling some remorse. Walking in downtown Denver today is like walking in downtown Calgary four or five years ago. There are geologists, engineers, Canadians anxious to get going, to get drilling and anxious to work.

One company alone, not that big a company in terms of the oil business, transferred 70 engineers and geologists out of its Calgary office to Denver. Every one was a Canadian. They had to go there because there was no work in Canada. There was nothing for them to do in terms of employing the skills for which they are trained. They are finders. They want to find oil and gas. That is what they are trained to do and want to do. We have lost them. They have gone.

One engineer or geologist working at his occupation generates 12 other jobs. That is the spin-off. From that one company, we have lost for Canada 8,400 jobs. That company represents less than 2 per cent of the Canadian industry. That is a typical story right across the country, and nobody cares.

There is something else I want to talk about with regard to the natural gas and gas liquids tax in particular. This bill establishes a precedent that I find absolutely incredible. It is something I will want to deal with very extensively before we complete all stages. I refer to the provision "whereas the rate of tax can be set by regulation".

If that is permissible, the next logical step is that the Income Tax Act will say tax rates will be set by regulation, the Excise Tax Act will say that the tax rates will be set by regulation and in fact the Crown will assume to itself the right to set all taxes. The historical rationale behind Parliaments, the reason for the Magna Carta, that the Crown shall not tax without the approval of Parliament, shall have been violated. This is a precedent that should terrify anybody but the most doctrinaire socialist who believes the government should do whatever it wants, whenever it wants, because the government knows all and has all wisdom, intelligence and so on.

This will be a matter that I and my colleagues will want to pursue with some vigour. This House would be committing a tragedy and leaving a legacy for the nation, in terms of this procedent if we allow it to pass, where the Crown by regulation can set tax levels. The power to tax is the power to destroy. To put the power to destroy in the hands of the Crown without a parliamentary check—and there would be none under this precedent—is so extreme that it is almost incomprehensible that something like that would be contemplated.

In conclusion, I hope with the passage of time, the 15 months, there will be enough sincere, concerned Canadians who will look at the National Energy Program objectively, will look at what has happened, at the fact that so many Canadians have been driven out of the country, so many billions of dollars have left, at the jobs we have lost, and say that maybe there is a problem. If for no other reason, they should look at what has happened to world prices. Much of the national energy policy was based on the supposition, admitted reasonably based at the time, that world energy prices would increase at inflation plus 2 per cent.

We now know that was a wrong assumption. That assumption was falsely based. It is quite one thing to have a PGRT and NGGLT at these levels when you have a commodity increasing at inflation plus 2 per cent. However, when you have a commodity decreasing, as is the case today, then these taxation levels are punitive and destructive. The destruction is all about us. Those of us in the west can see it more closely at hand. I can assure the House that people in the rest of the country are suffering as well, albeit second-hand, but many of the unemployed in central Canada are unemployed as a result of that consequence.

As has been recommended by a number of people, including myself in other speeches, let the government declare the national energy policy a victory, let them pat themselves on the back, let the minister keep his A-1 rating in the Ottawa Citizen. Then let us get after changing these dumb parts of the national energy policy and get the country back to work again, because that is really what we have to get after.

• (1600)

I hope more than just a few of us examine this precedent of taxation by order in council. If we allow that to happen, I am afraid one of the most fundamental freedoms in a democracy, freedom from arbitrary taxation levels by the Crown, will have been destroyed. If we are to fulfil our responsibilities as representatives of the people, we must not let that happen.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill C-93. However, I cannot say that in view of the economic difficulties we Canadians find ourselves in today. Our serious economic difficulties are not only a result of a poor budget, probably the worst in Canada's history, but also a result of a national energy policy that has been even more disastrous.

The bill we have before us which proposes changes to the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the petroleum and gas revenue tax, along with the introduction of an incremental oil revenue tax, causes me concern. It is the impact of this bill which particularly concerns me.

For three years and more western Canadians have experienced a boom. However, in the last couple of years the boom has been reversed because of the national energy policy. I would like to deal with that aspect today.

First, I would like to talk about the impact of the budget upon western Canada. It has driven out capital and provided no inspiration for development in any area. The budget has also had a negative impact on farmers and the agricultural industry in general. The national energy policy has caused the greatest impact.

We have sat in the House for several days and witnessed the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought to task over a budget which has been detrimental to our economy. In the last few weeks very little has been said to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who is really responsible for a major cause of Canada's economic crisis today. The first priority for Canada's development should have been energy. Canada has an unequalled amount of natural resources compared to virtually every country in the world. Our country is one with vast opportunities, technology, engineers and production capabilities.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, under the supervision of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government, introduced a national energy policy which literally laid the oil industry in western Canada flat on its back. This message was made clear by the results of the byelection which was held in Alberta yesterday. The government cannot remove $52 billion from an industry in one part of Canada during the next four years and expect people to like it. It cannot place the responsibility of the tax load of the whole country on one industry and expect that industry to continue.

I can illustrate with figures what has happened to the oil industry in western Canada. I live in southern Saskatchewan where the oil fields of Weyburn, Estevan, Radville and Midale have been affected. Oil fields all across Saskatchewan and Alberta have been affected in the same way as a result of the tremendous impact on the economy of Canada.

I will now illustrate some examples of what has happened. The economy in western Canada was buoyant two years ago. In my area of southern Saskatchewan there were 15 oil rigs at work. This is a lot for a small field like Estevan. Today, that number is down to one or two rigs which are drilling. Exploration in western Canada fell substantially during the year, with an estimated 6,650 wells in completion during the year, which is down from 8,938 in the year 1980. Expenditures on exploration and development declined by an estimated 22 per cent. We lost 180 oil rigs as of December 1, 1981, and that has probably climbed to over 200. In Saskatchewan and Alberta there were 454 oil rigs when the government started meddling in the national energy policy. We are now down to less than 250 oil rigs, of which 50 do not have any work today. In other words, more than 40 per cent of the rigs have either moved to the United States or are idle.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) talks about creating jobs for Canadians while at the same time his government brings in a national energy policy which steals jobs from Canadians, robs them of their homes and puts them on the unemployment line. The impact on the oil industry in western Canada can also be related to eastern Canada through the spin-off effects. For example, a small General Motors dealer told me that two years ago he sold 50 GM trucks to the oil industry. He sold four last year. This means that jobs were lost to people in Ontario who worked in the auto industry and industries related to steel. It has cost Canadians a great deal.

In my area people who once had jobs are now unemployed. We did not know what unemployment was in southern Saskatchewan. There always was a job for a farm boy in the oil fields. In fact, the oil companies could not get enough help in southern Saskatchewan. However, there is unemployment there now.

Another impact on all of Canada has been the outflow of capital. The Canadian Petroleum Association has estimated it to be something over $7 billion. This relates directly to the national energy policy. They have lost confidence in Canada, a country which has all the potential of being the greatest in the world in every aspect. But we have an economy which is flat on its back. How did this happen?

I have with me an article entitled "Centralized Power Keeps Economy in Trouble" which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen. It concerns what happened in Russia over 60 years ago when certain people in the government were bent on centralizing power and strength in one area. The result was a sad and dismal record of people in that country lining up to get food because of socialistic, nationalizing policies.

After losing the byelection in Spadina, what did Mr. Coutts, the so-called favourite son of the Prime Minister, have to say when speaking to the Ontario Liberal Association? He said we must do in four or five industries what was done by the national energy policy. Can hon. members imagine what would happen to this country if the people of Canada allowed the government opposite to continue in the direction of nationalizing industries? Mr. Coutts mentioned the farm machinery industry, the auto industry, the forest industry and so forth. I do not have the article before me, but he mentioned five major industries which he thought should go in the same direction of centralized power and control, but that would do nothing but drive capital out of the country.

Today it was said in the House that the Conservatives have no solutions to the high interest rate problems we have today. I say the Conservatives do have some solutions. We would invite capital back into this country. We would bring about investor confidence in the economy of this country. We would see lower interest rates which might be at least as low as those in the United States. We would see a strengthened Canadian dollar. Capital would not flow out of the country, and therefore it would not be necessary to keep interest rates so high. High interest rates are stifling the economy of this country. High interest rates are robbing people of their homes and jobs and all the things young people want to see in the expanding economy we should have. High interest rates have deprived us of these things.

I want to read into the record some figures because it seems that Mr. Trudeau has two fuel pumps.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is the practice of the House to refer to hon. members by their titles or their constituencies.

Mr. Gustafson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems that the Prime Minister has two fuel pumps. He has one fuel pump for an election, the less-than-18-cent-increase fuel pump. The other is the fuel pump from which the people of Canada are taking their fuel now. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is at that pump, and fuel from that pump costs us about 80 cents a gallon more. In Toronto, Ontario the price to the consumer on January 1, 1979, was 99.9 cents. On August 31, 1981—and the price is probably up ten cents since then—the price was $1.728, an increase of 72 cents a gallon. In St. John's, Newfoundland during the same period of time the price went up 83 cents a gallon. In Halifax, Nova Scotia, the price went up 74 cents a gallon. In Saint John, New Brunswick, the price went up 72 cents a gallon. In Charlottetown the price went up 88 cents a gallon; in Montreal, 81 cents; and in Saskatchewan, 72 cents. Do hon. members remember the fuss about the 18-cent increase? Now it is 80 cents a gallon and climbing. That is the result of the national energy policy. I said earlier that the national energy policy will take $52 billion out of western Canada over the next four or five years, and hon. members wonder why there is a reaction like the one yesterday in an Alberta byelection!

I want to say something else about the direction the government is taking toward centralization and nationalization. I come from the province of Saskatchewan where we have what is called the Crow rate. The Minister of Transport is trying to pluck that rate, and we have a very, very serious situation.

Mr. Waddell: More than pluck.

Mr. Gustafson: Our economy is flat on its back now. Farmers are paying the highest fuel prices in the history of farming. The price of diesel fuel is up 65 cents a gallon. That situation is about the same in all provinces. Machine costs have increased 100 per cent over the last three years. The cost of production is the highest it has been in the history of the country, and the Minister of Transport is suggesting that the Crow rate should go and that when farmers are already faced with increased costs they should be asked to pay that added expense.

Mr. Nystrom: Shame. That is as bad as the Tories.

Mr. Gustafson: The farmers cannot do it.

What has brought all this about? Let us take a little history lesson. I hear members of the New Democratic Party shouting down at the other end. I wish they had shouted for a victory for the Tories when the Tories were in power, and had left us there instead of defeating us.

Mr. Nystrom: You would have got rid of the Crow.

Mr. Gustafson: The NDP-Liberal coalition must bear the responsibility for imposing the national energy policy on the people of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: Let us look at the history of the NDP on this matter of a coalition. I was not going to mention this, but because members of the NDP have become so upset, I should just bring this to their attention. Hon. members will recall the debate about the Constitution, although we have not heard much about it lately. However, it is very important to Saskatchewan farmers that they be able to own their farms.

Mr. Nystrom: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: That is a very important part of farming. One headline read: "Property clause must go: NDP".

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Lougheed too.

Mr. Gustafson: The NDP made a deal with the Prime Minister. The NDP could not support the Prime Minister's constitutional proposals unless the right to own property was removed. We must thank the NDP for that. We have much to thank the NDP for, including that coalition. The Liberal-NDP coalition also defeated the Conservative Party.

Mrs. Mitchell: Now, now, be nice.

Mr. Evans: It was the people who defeated the Conservative Party, not the NDP and the Liberals.

Mr. Gustafson: Now a member of the Liberal Party tells us it was the people.

Mr. Evans: It was two years ago today. Do you remember?

Mr. Gustafson: I think the Liberals got 136 votes out in Alberta yesterday.

Mr. Evans: How many did the Tories get?

Mr. Gustafson: I think that is what the Liberals got.

Mr. Taylor: One hundred and thirty.

Mr. Gustafson: Even less, 130.

This Liberal-NDP coalition has brought to an end one of the biggest booms that ever existed in western Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Sterling Lyon.

Mr. Gustafson: That coalition has brought western Canada the national energy policy, an increase of 83 cents a gallon and a tax load increase of $52 billion.

Mr. Nystrom: Tell us about Sterling Lyon.

Mr. Riis: How did the Tories do in that byelection?

Mr. Gustafson: These are the kinds of problems we have when government and power are centralized.

● (1620)

There was a great deal of talk about Canadianization. The Conservative Party believes that Canadians own the resources and that benefits from them should accrue to the Canadian people. But what has been the result of this policy, Mr. Speaker? If you were to go to Williston, North Dakota, you would find that most of the men working in the oil fields are Canadian. Last spring 1,000 loads of oil-related equipment crossed the border at Crosby, North Dakota, within a 24-hour period. The Liberals and the NDP in this House cheer about that.

Just two years ago United States investors were putting their money into Canada; today, Canadians are investing in the United States because they have lost faith in this Liberal administration. They have lost faith in this Liberal-NDP coalition.

It might be well to point out something that is positive, although there is not too much to be positive about in the way the Liberals have been handling things in this country. Our economic situation is the result of a colossal blunder, but the budget promises no hope of recovery and absolutely nothing will happen as a result of the National Energy Program. There must be a complete turnaround in thinking and I hope the Liberal and NDP backbenchers will wake up in time to restore confidence to the people and investors of this country.

Last weekend the NDP made it clear that it did not want to defeat the government. It made it clear that it is the Liberal Party of western Canada. I suggest it is time the people of Canada called for responsibility from the coalition that exists in this House and in the country.

The national energy policy has affected the megaprojects. The Alsands project could have had spin-off benefits amounting to billions of dollars; it could have created jobs in Ontario, Quebec and all across the country in the auto and other industries. But those projects are at a standstill. Nothing is happening and nothing will happen. The same thing holds true with the Cold Lake project; nothing is happening and nothing will happen. What positive approach can we take, Mr. Speaker? We must call on the government to reverse its policies. I realize that a lot of apologies would be called for and that it would have to back off from some of its proposals. Ten backbenchers have started to squirm about jobs.

I believe that there will be jobs. Canada is a country of potential and we should capitalize on that potential. Jobs will be created if we put the oil industry and the manufacturers of eastern Canada back to work; if we allow capital to flow into the country instead of watching it flow out; if we bring interest rates down and operate in a businesslike manner.

A great deal more could be said about this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to make some comments about natural gas. In the short period that this party was in power—and people will never forget it, especially when they see the results of this national energy policy—we recommended the sale of natural gas to the United States and that the proceeds be invested in oil exploration in this country. That would have led to a boom in Canada but the NDP and the Liberals opposed it. As a result, today there are trillions and trillions of cubic feet of natural gas in western Canada; well after well is capped and there is a glut of natural gas. At the same time, we are buying oil from Mexico at the highest price we have ever paid. Just a few weeks ago the Prime Minister tried to sell some of our other commodities to the Mexicans but did not succeed. Is it right that we should spend taxpayers' money buying oil when we already have it in Canada? This keeps men and women, boys and girls, from getting the jobs and the homes that they need so badly.

The chaotic situation of the economy in this country should weigh heavily on the conscience of every Liberal backbencher, Mr. Speaker. It is too bad that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not in the House today so that he could hear some of the recommendations put forward by this party to correct the serious mismanagement of the National Energy Program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks on this budget measure by referring to the speeches of the last two members of the Conservative Party who spoke—the two hon. members from Denver. We heard a lot of rhetoric and very little reality from them except for the suggestion by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), with which I agree, that there is a danger of taxation by order in council. He said that he would raise that matter again when we reach clause by clause consideration of the bill in committee.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre said that this taxation is doctrinaire socialism. Mr. Speaker, when the OPEC countries increased the price of oil from $2 per barrel to $34 per barrel, that was a windfall for them. When the price of oil in Canada is $18 or $19 per barrel and, with the agreement of the producing provinces, particularly Alberta, is to be increased to about $66 per barrel by 1986, someone is going to get a windfall and the consumers will pay for it. It makes sense to split the take—industry receives some, the federal government receives some, and the provincial government receives some. It is not doctrinaire socialism; it is the reality of the situation. The Conservatives would have had to do the same, and were in the process of doing the same thing with the short, beloved Clark government which came to its demise two years ago today. Its demise was not caused by Liberal members or members of the NDP, but by the Canadian people.

• (1630)

Let us not hear this nonsense about the removal of the property clause from the Constitution; I am tired of it. I suspect the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who served on the constitutional committee is tired of hearing it as well. No one in the NDP would say that farmers cannot own their farms. We believe that farmers should own their farms. The property clause was removed because it was a mischievous one. I understand it was removed on the request of some provincial governments which were worried about the use of the clause to stop provincial legislation, such as Prince Edward Island, a great socialist province. Let us not hear any more of that rhetoric or rhetoric about a Liberal-NDP coalition.

Let us look at the facts. As the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) indicated in a motion under Standing Order 43, the Conservative Party has voted with the Liberal Party more than has the NDP. This idea of a coalition is nonsense. I repeat that it was Canadians—pardon the expression—who threw the bums out; it was not the other way around. To say otherwise is really idle rhetoric. I think the Conservative Party is tearing itself apart. The hon. member who spoke, was he pro-Crow or anti-Crow? He was pro-Crow, but the hon. member on my right was anti-Crow. Was he pro-Joe or anti-Joe? I suppose he is not telling. It is rather sad to see the party tearing itself apart when there is so much room for ammunition to throw across the floor.

Another myth is that somehow the boom was ended in western Canada by a coalition of Liberal and NDP ideas. I remind the House that the NDP is not in power in British Columbia, Alberta or Ottawa. A likeminded government is in power in Saskatchewan, and its economy is relatively healthy.

The final myth is the entire Conservative position. What is its position with respect to energy? It is that we should let foreign capital come in and make Canada a big Bermuda. Surely there is a fundamental flaw in the position. If the hon. member listened to his own words, he would see the flaw. The fact is that foreign capital will come in and, when investors do not like it here or find greener pastures elsewhere, they will go to Denver or Indonesia.

Mr. Gustafson: Do you want a banana republic?

Mr. Waddell: As the hon. member is heckling, Canada will then be a banana republic. It is the banana republic strategy; it is no strategy at all.

Mr. Nystrom: It is the Conservative strategy.

Mr. Waddell: That could be. I listened to the comments of the Conservative energy critic and one of his distinguished colleagues who is a member of the energy committee. Its strategy seems to be to solely let foreign capital come in. It is willing to repeat past mistakes and continue that way, but I do not think it will hold up.

I should like to make some reference to the separatist victory in the provincial byelection in Alberta yesterday. As a western Member of Parliament, I should like to make a couple of comments about it. Basically I see it as a collapse of the Social Credit Party in Alberta and as an indication of disappointment and disillusionment with the Lougheed government. It is an attack on the Lougheed government as well as on government in Ottawa. Ottawa has not been listening to the problems of the people of that area. As I deal with the budget provisions in my speech, I hope to show where improvements could be made to those policies. I wish people in eastern Canada would really try to understand some of the problems of western Canada. I understand the difficulty of understanding when one hears idle rhetoric such as the allegations of the last two speakers. If westerners could be faulted at all, I suppose we could be faulted for not articulating our position clearly. The position certainly exists, and the east is not listening.

There are perhaps three traditions in western Canada which are never reflected in the eastern press or in the words of eastern members of the House. There is a sort of wild, anti-Ottawa, populist tradition which fluctuates up and down; perhaps it is somewhat redneck. It was reflected in the byelection.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member clarify what he means by eastern press? Was he referring to the press of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, or was he talking about the press of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am from Vancouver and any press east of Cranbrook is eastern press, such as The Calgary Sun and so on. Perhaps I will give the hon. member an example. Recently an article appeared in the Toronto Star, a very good newspaper, which referred to this nonsense about all the power in Canada suddenly moving to Calgary and that Calgary would surpass Toronto in the near future; it was absolute nonsense. I am glad to see Calgary and the province of Alberta growing, but in the near future it will not surpass the power and influence of Toronto. In my view that is stupid journalism.

I should like to return to what I was saying about traditions in western Canada. The first tradition is that rather odd populist tradition about which I talk. It is reflected in this separatist victory, and I think it is an aberration which will go away. It is not similar to the situation in Quebec which I think is a more fundamental problem.

The second tradition is the Conservative tradition, the legitimate Conservative and private enterprise tradition of the west. This tradition has been reflected in many speeches, sometimes with less rhetoric, by hon. members on my right. Those speeches are worth listening to, although I disagree with them in terms of the Conservative position. It is a legitimate tradition, but it is not the only tradition of the west.

The third tradition is that of socialism and co-operation. It has existed in western Canada for some time and it is a growing tradition. It is reflected in the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and in the opposition of British Columbia. It has a different focus; perhaps it is a little more people-oriented in a different sort of way. It believes that government is not the big bad wolf. It believes in government initiative and direction. It believes in co-operative federalism between federal and provincial governments. It is somewhat populist and anti-Ottawa. It is looking at decentralization and participation in government in different ways. It is looking at reform of existing political structures. I am a member of that tradition because I like to think it is the way of the future. There is a sense of outrage in the west, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) indicated.

There has been a housing crisis in Vancouver for three years. Just last week there were reports in Ottawa that vacancy rates were low and that housing prices were rising; I bet we will now see some government action on housing. Although we yelled and screamed about the housing crisis in British Columbia, the whole crisis was ignored by Ottawa.

We have seen government members rise and dismiss our objections regarding the Crow rate as reactionary. It is easy for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to do that. It sounds good and the whole eastern press—this time east of the Lakehead—picks it up and indicates that it is reactionary. But they have not examined the real situation. Westerners feel that is part of the bargain of confederation. If you change the grain rates, you have to change a lot of other things as well; for instance, some of the bargains that westerners made with the national policy of eastern Canada, the tariffs, the anti-Crow position, and so on. This should not be dismissed so easily.

I want to say something about the National Energy Program. This program is a limited success. It is perhaps the only success of this government. The direction of the program is correct. I said that in this House in June, 1980, before the program was introduced. The public want more. The committee to Canadianize released a poll showing that the public supported public ownership of the oil industry. I think the public is in favour of greater Canadianization. You have to distinguish the vocal critics from the majority of the people of this country. The hon. member from Calgary reflects the oil industry. Of course, Imperial is not very happy about this program. It does not want to give up any of its profits. The crucial point is that oil is a strategic commodity. That is where the National Energy Program and the Conservative Party differ.

This is not putting westerners in their places. The oil is there in the west. The same problem will arise with Newfoundland and with the north when development starts up. Oil is a strategic commodity and has to be developed through public direction. You cannot have a few cowboys being totally free to run the industry. That does not stop private initiative in the industry, but you have to have some overriding direction.

There are problems with the National Energy Program which are not helped by this bill. The program has not attracted small Canadian industry to the frontier. It has attracted big corporations and foreign-owned corporations. The government will have to take another look at that.

Mr. Kelly: What is your evidence?

Mr. Waddell: I suggest to the hon. member that he talk to his own Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and he will get the evidence.

The second problem is the slow rate of Canadianization. We now have an industry which is 60 per cent to 65 per cent foreign controlled. The government has said it is not going any further with Canadianization. The government has stopped the procedure. That is the problem with the Liberals; philosophically, they cannot complete a progressive program. I hope some day there will be a realignment in this country between a conservative group and a progressive group.

Mr. Crosby: There is; it is the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Waddell: Not a Progressive Conservative group. But I think the realignment will come about.

The third problem with the National Energy Program, and I think the hon. member from Saskatchewan who preceded me is right about this, is that the little guys are not being helped. There seems to be evidence that drillers and small companies are not being helped. Perhaps that is the reason the Conservatives did not do very well in the byelection. Premier Lougheed has not protected small drillers, neither has the National Energy Program. The government of Saskatchewan took some steps with respect to royalties. That government is rebating and reducing royalties to help small drillers. That sort of thing should be looked at. I hope members opposite will not call me a doctrinaire free-enterpriser for saying that.

In my opinion, it is a false premise that the National Energy Program will take us to self-sufficiency. Right now we import 20 per cent of our oil. The established remaining reserves of conventional oil in western Canada amount to about five billion barrels. We have about ten years of reserves at the present rate of consumption. The Hibernia reserves are projected to come on stream in 1986, which will bring in an additional 1.5 billion barrels of oil. But there will be delays with this project. Hon. members are aware of what happened the other day and the tragedy that ensued on the oil rig there.

The Beaufort Sea has a potential of about ten billion barrels of oil, but that oil will be hard to extract. We have not yet recovered a drop from there. That Arctic islands, especially the Cisco find offshore Lougheed Island, is very promising. There is a potential five billion barrels in the north. However, we have no way of getting that oil to market. The tar sands projects are delayed. There are technical problems today with both Suncor and Syncrude. The Alsands project is not financeable. That is why the companies are coming to the federal government for welfare. They want both the federal government and the government of Alberta to bail them out and subsidize the program. That is not at all promising. Cold Lake is a better project. Maybe we can get 450,000 barrels from the tar sands by the early 1990s. Drilling for gas has declined in western Canada whereas drilling for oil has increased.

Let us try to deal with the facts, not rhetoric. It seems to me the problem with the National Energy Program is that it concentrates on the supply side. Instead, we should be looking at the demand side and putting some money into the area of conservation and alternate energy. When we reach the energy security legislation I propose to go into greater detail about how we can conserve and move to alternate energy instead of spending $4 billion in PIP grants.

Specifically, I want now to give some of our positions on Bill C-93. First, it deals with offshore. That point has to be addressed. It is a very difficult problem. Hon. members might note that the Ottawa Citizen took me to task in an editorial. It can be found in "Quorum". The Citizen took Premier Pecl-ford and me to task for trying to "exploit" the Hibernia crisis because we complained about overlapping jurisdictions. I think it was a pretty shameful editorial. In fact, I think it was a low blow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I do, and I suspect the hon. member over there agrees with me. He has a right to ask questions about Hibernia and about safety. He has asked questions and so have his colleagues. I have a right to ask questions too.

There are nine conflicting jurisdictions in the federal government. Two inquiries are under way, and with the Americans joining in there will be a third. Both the federal government and the Newfoundland government are trying to shirk responsibility for the accident. What about the American government? Who has jurisdiction? I think that is a legitimate point to raise. I think the editorial in the Ottawa Citizen is pretty disgusting. The editorial is also inconsistent.

When Bill C-48 was being debated, editorials and news reports in the Ottawa Citizen said that we should be looking into all these matters of oil spills, safety and so on. But when we start asking questions about them, the Ottawa Citizen criticizes us. Journalists have every right to criticize us; politicians are fair game. But in this case I think the criticism is wrong and the writers have been inconsistent. I have a perfect right to say that.

Basically, the provinces should have jurisdiction over offshore, but we should have interlocking jurisdiction. Under Section 91 of the British North America Act, the federal government has jurisdiction over navigation, ports, defence, external affairs and fisheries. Unless we amend the Constitution they will remain, no matter which way we decide about the offshore.

I do not agree that we should spend three years on this matter by going to the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and then working up through the Court of Appeal. Let us go now if the governments cannot decide. I would prefer a negotiated settlement, but if the governments cannot decide the matter should be referred immediately to the Supreme Court of Canada. The disaster in Hibernia shows that we have to solve some of these problems. And if the Ottawa Citizen wants to criticize me for this, it can do so.

• (1650)

As a westerner I know how control of our resources has fueled our growth. I think that is something that should be considered soon. Meanwhile I think the minister was right to include in the bill the clause on the offshore because if they are subsequently changed by virtue of agreement with the provinces or by virtue of the Supreme Court decision, it is important that we have them there.

With respect to Clauses 4 and 5, Mr. Speaker, the tax on domestically consumed natural gas, we are happy that the government for once listened to western Canada and did not put a tax on export gas. Western Canadians said, how come they are going to put a tax on the export of our gas and not on electricity from Quebec or Ontario? It was hard to explain that, so the government quite properly, after questions in this House, withdrew that proposal and then proposed a tax on domestically consumed gas.

The problem with that, and I say this to the minister, is that it is a regressive tax. Hon. members recall the Liberals promised in the 1980 election that we would have lower energy prices. In fact, they gave us higher energy prices. They argue that they had to raise prices, but if you do that you should redistribute some of the extra money. If you are going to tax low-income people, the old and the poor, as you do with this tax, you should give them some of it back in the form of a cost of living tax credit. I think that makes sense.

Mr. Evans: We did give it back, Ian.

Mr. Waddell: I do not think it has been given back. Total energy costs, as measured by a component of the CPI, have gone up 46 per cent since 1980 under the Liberals. Natural gas prices went up 28 per cent in 1981. The present cost to consumers for oil and gas will double by 1986. I hear from my riding about increased hydro and gas bills, and I suspect other members from British Columbia are hearing it. It is regressive and is hurting older people and those on fixed incomes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the PGRT, is a very complicated matter but I will try to make it as simple as I can. Simply put, it is a royalty. It has a certain advantage because you put it on at the wellhead and you cannot deduct this tax here or this expense there. The Conservative government was going to put the tax on at the refinery, the infamous 18-cent-a-gallon tax which some commentators said was responsible for our being here today in these particular positions. The problem with the tax is that it seems to be hurting some of the small producers. As I said previously, it may be the obligation of the federal or provincial governments, following Saskatchewan's lead, to alleviate that problem somewhat. Rather than just export our gas, I suggested a gas bank, because we may need it since we have been converting to gas in eastern Canada. In any case, I will have detailed questions on that when we deal with the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have alleged, and it has never been denied, that there has been a windfall gain for the oil companies for one quarter of 1981 in which no higher taxes were levied. What happened was that the government boosted the price by $2.50 a gallon for the three months from October 1 to December 31, 1981, but the taxes did not come in until January 1. So a government which says they talk tough to the oil companies to turn around and give them a windfall creates a bit of a credibility gap. I hope to explore that when we go into the details of the bill. I see the minister nodding, and I will put those questions to him or the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

I would like to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by saying something about the myth of the megaprojects. This great spin-off of jobs, and so on, is a myth. There are a lot more jobs in all kinds of other projects. I was counsel to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline inquiry and used to hear these great stories about all the jobs that a megaproject like a pipeline would create. However, when you got into it and examined the witnesses, you found there were a few construction jobs for basically foreign welders who travel around the world doing that. There were some jobs for small construction companies, and there were a few security jobs after it was built. And you were paying $10 billion to build it.

So we have to have a debate in this House, I hope soon, on what I call the myth of the megaprojects. I know the government likes these projects. I suspect Canadians have bought the myth that we have to get these megaprojects going to produce jobs, but I think it has to be looked at very carefully. The hour for that debate is coming because we are going to look at the Alsands project in some detail.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to warn the government that they are running the risk, in the agreement with Alberta, that the Canadian price of oil may be more than the world price by 1985. There is a glut on the market, world prices are falling, and there is a clause in the agreement that our price be no more than 75 per cent of the world price for old oil, and no more than 100 per cent for new oil. However, that does not include all the special taxes and levies, so it is possible—and this would be most ironic for a Liberal government elected two years ago today partly on a promise of lower energy prices, certainly less than world prices—that they may have put us in a position where we will go beyond world prices. If that happens then there will have to be a renegotiation of the agreement with the producing provinces.

Having given that dire warning, and having dealt, I think, with the many aspects of this bill relating to energy, I will sit down and let the government ponder those allegations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Having been recognized, he might like to defer his opportunity to speak because we are approaching five o'clock and private members' hour. However, if the hon. member wishes to proceed for a moment or so, of course he can.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-93, and I hope the previous speaker will be in the House when I start my speech because I have a few brief comments to make in reply to his remarks.

With that I would like to call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis)—Air Canada—Mandatory retirement age—Request that pilot be reinstated; the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis)—National Harbours Board—Purchase of equipment manufactured in Japan. (b) Request for tabling of memoranda; the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon)—Industry—Canadian content in manufacture of mining equipment. (b) Contract awarded to Japanese company.

• (1700)

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Notices of Motions Nos. 22, 35, 1, 48, 28, 43, 5, 54, 69, 34 and 84 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, memoranda, records of telephone conversations and other communications between the Department of National Health and Welfare and the appropriate ministers of the governments of the provinces relating to the standards for programs and the conditions for federal participation in a revised Canada Assistance Plan.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in this federal government structure there are many sacred cows. Certainly the Canada Assistance Plan is one of those sacred cows. Any suggestion concerning the existing legislation or its administration which might be considered critical is immediately implied to be a criticism of the objectives of the plan itself.

I hope to allay any fears that I am in any way criticizing the objectives of the Canada Assistance Plan. However, the Canada Assistance Plan is financed by the federal government on roughly the basis of 50 per cent of the costs incurred by the provinces. I say "roughly", because the federal government itself imposes the terms and conditions under which it will make the payments. The provincial governments render an invoice, in effect, to the federal government, and the federal government pays according to the amount of invoice submitted. This year, the amount estimated to be paid by the federal government was some $2 billion. However, just last week in the House, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) told us that the amount which was to be paid this year had increased by some 19 per cent, 19 per cent being approximately $400 million. Therefore, the payments this year from the federal treasury will be of the order of $2.4 billion. If one multiplies that by two and then adds some more, the "some more" being the additional amounts paid by the provinces, one can see that we are looking at an expenditure in the social service field considerably in excess of $5 billion.

It is interesting to note that during this year, the Quebec province share of the $2.4 billion which is being paid out of the federal treasury is of the order of $700 million, or, per capita, between $160 and $170. One can compare that with the other provinces. The next highest province is the province of Newfoundland, at $96. One notes that the per capita payment in Ontario is $77. These figures, incidentally, were produced by the department for the benefit of a committee which was looking into the Canada Assistance Plan earlier in 1981.

For the record, I would like to look at the two parts of the program. I will divide it into what I shall term as the social assistance programs, which are payments to persons with no other source of income, such as the disabled, single parents with children, those whose unemployment insurance payments have run out, and so on. The federal government has a very direct interest in these particular social assistance programs because it has a tremendous influence on the need at that level. It does have that influence because of federal programs such as the old age pension at one end of the age scale, and the family allowances program at the other end of the age scale.

I referred earlier in my remarks to sacred cows, and I want to interject at this point to say that one of the sacred cows is the subject of universality. That irritates me somewhat. There seems to be all-party support for universality, but there is certainly nothing universal about the programs as they are presently applied, for example, to the old age pension. The major benefit of the old age pension program goes to those who receive the supplement which, of course, is income tested. In the case of the child tax credit, it goes to those with the greatest need, whereas family allowances, of course, are paid to everyone right across the board.

The point I am making is that universality is an excellent objective and one which I would strongly support; but from all practical points of view, we cannot infer that our programs are universal, for the reasons I have stated. I have often made two suggestions. One may not be popular with all my constituents, but I do not mind as I have made this public. I suggest that we should stop increasing old age pensions and increase the supplement by an additional amount. Thus, if we were to index, we would index only on the supplement plus the old age pension and, of course, we would have some additional funds so that we would be able to increase the amount of the supplement.

At the other end of the scale, I have suggested that we completely eliminate the family allowances scheme and that we fold the total amount of this program into the child tax credit. While I am referring to the child tax credit, one of the urgent things we must do is to substantially reduce the limit up to which a child tax credit is paid.

I shall put on the record what may be a somewhat amusing story, but in a certain sense, I think, it is also critical. I was astonished last year to receive from my accountant, who looks after my individual tax returns, a document under which my wife was able to sign her name and apply for a relatively small refund, but, nevertheless, a refund from the federal government under the child tax credit plan. Of course, Your Honour is aware that I have two children. However, I found it rather ridiculous that I was in the position of receiving a child tax credit. Furthermore, the amount was not very much because I was obviously right at the top of the scale. I do not need to disclose what the salary scale is for Members of Parliament because it is public knowledge. However, because I was at the top of the scale, the child tax credit was quite small. One could imagine my feelings, almost amounting to anger, or my intrigue when from my accountant I received a bill for preparing that return amounting to some $40, which was more than four times the amount of the child tax credit!

Just to complete this little story, the bill which I received from my accountant for the preparation of my tax return was deductible. Therefore, I put it in, and because I paid taxes at approximately 50 per cent, 50 cents on the dollar, I therefore saved $20 out of the federal treasury. Therefore, the federal treasury paid $20, I paid $20, and my wife received $10. That was a pretty good deal, and I have put this story on the record because I think it is time that we looked at the administration of these programs. I think I have made it clear here that I am not criticizing the program itself.

The other part of the Canada Assistance Plan on which I wanted to spend some time is the social service area. This includes the personal services or welfare services, including day care, homemakers, counselling services, child welfare, etc. I have suggested that we should get out of social services and do so by transferring the tax room to the provinces.

Mrs. Mitchell: Never!

Mr. Herbert: I heard the word "never" from the NDP.

Mrs. Mitchell: What happened to health care when you did that?

• (1710)

Mr. Herbert: First of all, this is the position of the Quebec provincial government. They believe that since they administer these programs, they should have full control over them, finance the programs themselves and should not have to go cap-in-hand to the federal government. If you look at these programs in detail, you find that there is a tremendous variation from province to province. The federal government simply says, "Send us the bill and we will pay 50 per cent".

I have already mentioned the amount per capita in Quebec. The split in that province for social assistance programs, is approximately $94 per capita this year. Those are the programs in which the federal government has a tremendous influence, as I have already explained. The payments for social service programs or welfare services over which the federal government exercises no influence whatsoever approximate to $44 per capita in the province of Quebec.

Many of the programs shared under CAP are delivered by non-governmental organizations such as Children's Aid Societies, which are given enforcement responsibility for functions such as the apprehension of children. In some provinces, particularly Ontario, municipalities play a significant role in the delivery of both social assistance and social services.

Many groups maintain that they have insufficient information about what is cost shareable under the CAP. For example, the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled had argued that voluntary organizations and disabled individuals need to be better informed of the potential benefits available through CAP so they can lobby their provincial governments effectively. Municipalities in Ontario, charged with the delivery of general welfare assistance and many social services, complain that they do not know whether the rules governing their funding are provincial or federal.

Municipalities may not even be privy to the contents of the federal-provincial agreements. This is the subject for discussion this afternoon. As a result, they do not know whether the rules regarding services are needed to conform with Canada Assistance Plan requirements or are simply rules established by the provincial government.

Health and Welfare Canada occasionally issues guidelines on what is cost-shareable in terms of dollars and specific criteria. It is these guidelines that present problems of understanding the limits of CAP for the public and social agencies. These guidelines have not generally been made public.

The special committee to examine federal-provincial fiscal transfer payments recommended that, and I quote:

—the Minister of National Health and Welfare have a Canada Assistance Plan manual compiled to include all guidelines, notes and administrative directives, and that this manual be made public, with appropriate provision to respond to questions by the public on its application.

Objections at the provincial government level are based on the totally unacceptable assumption that the release of these documents would facilitate their municipalities in making interprovincial comparisons. It should be noted that even under the proposed freedom of information act, items which could be detrimental to federal-provincial relations can be exempted from release.

I had put a notice of motion for the production of documents on the Order Paper. In November of last year I received a copy of the latest signed agreement between the government and the province of Ontario under the Canada Assistance Plan. It is a very voluminous document. I would suggest that no one rush to get a copy. First, it includes the memorandum of agreement made on March 28, 1967, pursuant to part I of the Canada Assistance Plan. Attached to that document is a listing of amendments. For example, I will refer to the last three in the pile. There is one made October 31, 1979, listed as Amendment No. 34. Amendment No. 35 is dated September 15, 1980, and Amendment No. 36, the last one in the pile that I was given, is dated February 20, 1981.

All these documents provide is a listing taking off certain locations, certain institutions that are no longer to be financed under the Canada Assistance Plan, and adding on other institutions and listings. This is interesting reading. I have no idea whether it is an issue in the respective provinces, but if any provincial social welfare groups have need of this document, I will be very pleased to supply them with a copy. Of course, it is now in the public domain.

I should also advise them that the documents in the other provinces under Motions Nos. 74 to 82, which are the corresponding agreements in the nine provinces, other than the province of Ontario, have been delivered to me. They are in my possession and are available to anyone interested in seeing them. Unfortunately, they do not include the real information, the regulations. These are in the hands of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I would like to read three short extracts from a letter from the Department of National Health and Welfare for the benefit of members of the special committee on federal-provincial fiscal transfer payments to which I referred earlier. I quote:

—shareable welfare services under the plan are being provided in all provinces, to a greater or lesser degree.—

Provincial definitions of "social services" may not necessarily be consistent with CAP's definition of "welfare services".—

Provinces may provide services which are recognized welfare services for cost-sharing purposes under CAP, e.g., daycare, but if CAP requirements are not met, sharing is only partially available or not available at all.

The important sentence reads as follows:

—the provinces are not required to submit detailed information on individual services—

Enough is enough. Whether the members of this House agree with my attitude toward the division of social services and social assistance programs is irrelevant. I accept and recognize that there is unlikely to be any major change in this regard. I put my opinion on the record for what it is worth. However, I believe that the information on the type of programs that are being funded, the extent to which they are being funded, and the criteria under which they are being funded should be available for all members of the public in order that they can compare. The provinces may be somewhat afraid because they realize that this could lead to additional claims. It could lead to pressure from the public to provide in one province the kind of service that is provided in another province.

The reason I have brought this motion forward is that I believe the information should be on top of the table. Whatever we as individuals may desire to do in changing the administration or the legislation, the fact that the program exists means, in my opinion, that the public should have full access to all the information which will enable the public to make maximum use of the program while it is in force and in the fashion in which it is in force.

I have brought this matter forward for debate simply because I recognize that what I am asking for, which is the discussions which are presently under way, is not likely to be provided before the expiry of the period at which time a new agreement has to be signed. It is just as well to allow interested members to express their opinion on what they would like to see in the revised Canada Assistance Plan which will become operative at the start of the next fiscal year.

Canada Assistance Plan

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the motion brought before the House by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) raises two questions of real concern and interest to all members of the House. First, there is the matter of the free flow of information and the need for freedom of information legislation which would allow Members of Parliament, and all Canadians, to have access to any information from the government necessary to make a study, form an opinion or evaluate a government program. I am always willing, as I am sure are many other members, to support the need and desire for freedom of information legislation to allow this information to flow without the need of special or formal steps to be taken within the procedures of Parliament.

As you may know, Mr. Speaker, there is a piece of freedom of information legislation before the House in the form of an access to information and privacy act. However, that bill has been delayed in committee and the minister in charge has indicated that he may withdraw the bill. This is, indeed, unfortunate, because without the freedom of information legislation, which would require the government to produce information which ought to be made available for the study and assessment of government programs, we will have to continue to use these parliamentary devices to obtain that information. There is a general solution available to the problem of government information being unobtainable. That is the channel we should follow in order to obtain information. We cannot do this until legislation is presented and enacted by the House.

The second matter which the motion brings forward is the status of the Canada Assistance Plan. I would like to make some general remarks about the Canada Assistance Plan and the social services program which is based on that legislation.

I worked for some years in provincial government administration and I remember the state of social services legislation which existed in provinces like Nova Scotia, even as late as the early 1950s. At that time, there was a mass of provincial legislation dealing with such programs as mothers' allowance under which support was provided for unwed mothers, mothers who were separated or widowed and those who had no other means of support. There was also the blind persons' allowance and a myriad of provincial legislation which provided necessary welfare benefits.

I know the same was similar in other provinces. During the 1950s, the provincial and federal governments attempted to bring some order to this morass of provincial and federal welfare legislation. What eventually emerged was the Canada Assistance Plan which became a statute of the Parliament of Canada. There was similar legislation under various names in most provinces.

The purpose of this legislation was to codify in a very clear and formal way the base for social services. The Canada Assistance Plan, which was enacted in 1966 or 1967, became the base for our modern and current social service system. Unfortunately, 15 years later that social service system is in jeopardy as a result of the financial policies which were brought forward by the Canadian government in the budget of November, 1981.

I would like briefly to illustrate the effect of the budgetary provisions which were introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). As I have said in the House and elsewhere, the minister has proposed to transfer the federal deficit to the provinces. The result will be that those provinces which are now in a deficit position will simply not have sufficient funds to contribute to those social service programs, educational services and health services. They will not have the financial ability to maintain these services.

I would like to pay particular attention to that fact because it is supported by the Economic Council of Canada. The Economic Council has said that this is the thrust of the budget provisions with respect to the reduction of the federal deficit. The Economic Council of Canada has confirmed that this will flow through to the provinces in the form of cutbacks on the available funds for health, educational and social services. We must be wary of this and bring it to the attention of Canadians.

I would like briefly to talk about those services which are available and will be until March 31, 1982 under the Canada Assistance Plan and supporting provincial legislation. There are a wide variety of services available and I would like to indicate the effect of those services. According to my statistics, which relate to 1978 and 1979—the numbers are probably much higher for the current fiscal year—approximately $1.6 billion was spent under the Canada Assistance Plan. There were 1,547,000 Canadians who received benefits in all the provinces and territories of Canada under programs which were included within the Canada Assistance Plan. These programs constitute a broad range of social service programs under the Canada Assistance Plan. We should not forget that the Canada Assistance Plan and its services are in addition to programs such as old age security and many other programs which are funded through the provinces and the federal government.

The programs we are talking about in relation to the Canada Assistance Plan deal primarily with assistance to persons in need. These programs include welfare services for those needy persons or those likely to become in need, as well as work activity projects.

If we look at what is occurring in our cities, towns, villages and rural areas, we will see people who, for various reasons, cannot provide for their own welfare. In some cases, they may have reached the age where they can no longer work to support themselves, there may be people who are mentally or physically disabled, or there may be cases where there are children whose parents are not able to provide for them. I am sure that all Canadians recognize that there are many people who find themselves in these unfortunate circumstances in our society.

I believe that the role of the Canada Assistance Plan is clearly established. I cannot believe that any Canadian—certainly not any Member of Parliament—would be in favour of abolishing any of the programs which have been proven to be essential and necessary. There should be no question of abolishing or cutting back these programs, but rather how these programs can be rendered more effective and efficient. If there are to be any savings or cutbacks on the use of public funds, they should be used to make these programs more effective and efficient.

It is easy to speak with conviction on these matters when you are from the maritimes and a province like Nova Scotia. The services, which are included in the Canada Assistance Plan and supporting provincial legislation, are absolutely essential although a great drain on the revenues of the government. I have statistics which demonstrate this fact clearly. In Newfoundland, for example, 17.9 per cent of all provincial expenditures are for social service programs. In the province of Nova Scotia, 20 per cent of all government expenditures are on social services. For the province of New Brunswick, the figure is 19 per cent. These provinces also spend a great deal of their available revenue on education and health. In Newfoundland, approximately 46 per cent of total government revenue is spent on education and health. In Nova Scotia, it is 42 per cent.

It does not take a great deal of imagination to realize that the Atlantic provinces spend a vast amount of their available revenue on programs which are related to education, health and social services. At the same time those provinces have to incur deficits which ultimately have to be supported by taxes. If these deficits are increased it is not hard to see that those provinces will be financially unable to continue those services at the level which was enjoyed in the past.

We are at a point in our history when we ought to be improving those services and ensuring all Canadians have a decent way of life and a decent lifestyle. As I have said, we know there are many Canadians who simply cannot do it on their own and need help.

When we talk about social services and programs and the financial ability of provinces to provide those programs to their people so there will be equality across Canada, it is interesting to note how the provinces spend their money. For example, it will surprise no one that the province of Alberta is number one on the list of per capita expenditures. The government of the province of Alberta spends $3,135 per person on government services. It is also interesting to note that the poor little province of Prince Edward Island is next on the list. The province of Prince Edward Island spends $2,618 per person to provide services to the individuals of that province.

Statistics such as these demonstrate graphically that the province of Alberta, with its great wealth and resources, is able to spend $3,135 per person for government services, and it is easy to see how that province can afford that kind of money, but we must ask ourselves how the province of Prince Edward Island, which is next on the list, at $2,618, can afford to maintain those services. Bearing in mind that this province has a budgetary deficit and bearing in mind that it has a permanent government debt, I can tell hon. members that if there is any cutback in transfer payments to that province, it will not be able to maintain the services, and that if this province has the desire to maintain services, it will only do so through increased taxation. This is a very serious situation, and it is not helped—it is rendered more extreme—by the budgetary provisions. The message we as members of the House of Commons have to get out to Canadians is how budgetary provisions and government financial policies affect the services Canadians require.

Let me talk very briefly about the system in use under the Canada Assistance Plan. As I have said, it covers a variety of services which are directed to persons in need, and those persons quite often are senior citizens, disabled persons and the young. The method by which those services are delivered is through provincial social services departments and the municipalities, which maintain departments to provide social services. In most cases there are financial tests which are the bases for administering those services. In some cases the financial tests are quite difficult; that is to say, people who may feel they need government assistance are not able to get it because they do not qualify under the financial test.

This raises a matter which was discussed earlier and referred to as the matter of universality in government programs. It is true that in bringing in old age assistance and many other assistance programs, the federal government established the principle—if we can call it a principle—of universality; that is to say, if there is assistance available to persons of a certain age—in the case of old age assistance the age is 65 and over—it ought to be given to all persons who reach that age and ought to be universally applied and should not be based on any kind of need or means test. Even though universality is a matter of principle which commands broad support, there comes a time in our history when we cannot afford that kind of program; that is to say, our desire to provide assistance to a group of persons without reference to their special financial needs affects our ability to provide effective services to those who really require the services. As has been pointed out, I think it is true that we must review the principle—if we can call it a principle—of universality. We must make sure people are not being deprived of necessary and essential services merely because we are trying to conform to a principle which can no longer be practically applied.

I agree that we ought to examine universality and consider tests and methods which will identify those in our society across Canada who need service at public expense. We ought not to waste our financial capability by providing services to persons who do not really need them.

In my view—and I am sure in the view of most members of the House—there is no way the federal government ought to get out of the field of providing social services. That would be a tremendous danger, not just to the individuals who might be affected but to the whole fabric of Canadian society. In addition, it would contradict the very idea of the constitutional changes which have finally been approved in the House. It would contradict the idea that Canadians right across the country ought to have equal services. The new constitutional provisions indeed indicate that the government ought to direct its attention toward the removal of any causes of regional disparity. It ought to take action which will allow people in the maritime area to enjoy the same level of service and standards as those enjoyed by persons in central Canada and western Canada. If the federal government at this stage of our development were to vacate the field of social services, that would be a disaster. The federal government has that obligation, the obligation has been accepted and this is no time to reject it.

I am afraid there is some truth to the suggestion that the federal government is getting out of social services because I have indicated—and I do not want to repeat it—that it has been demonstrated by this budget that the federal government is in fact reducing its assistance to the provinces in the way of transfer payments and in the way of support for established programs. This indeed could lead to withdrawal of social services and services which are now being provided in the educational and health fields. Again we must be on guard to ensure that the federal government does not go too far down this road because that would have a disastrous effect and would destroy the equality we are trying to achieve in Canada for all Canadians.

I want to touch very briefly on some of the developments in the social assistance field. I am pleased to note that a study was undertaken in the province of Nova Scotia of the plight and of the situation of unwed mothers.

Mrs. Mitchell: What about unwed fathers?

Mr. Crosby: What about unwed fathers? I include unwed fathers too, if they are supporting children, but the point is that when we are speaking about unwed mothers, we are usually speaking about particular situations in which people have become the mothers of children and are not able to care for them. Nobody likes nomenclature which has the effect of casting aspersions on female persons or anybody else in society, but I have important things to say, and I want to communicate them and get a point across. If everybody in the House and across Canada understands what we mean when we say, "an unwed mother", that is good enough for me. When a better terms comes up, I will use it, but right now I am talking about unwed mothers and the fact that services have been provided to them in the past, and I am happy to see that the whole situation is being reviewed and has been reviewed in the province of Nova Scotia. A 325-page study report has been issued entitled "Vulnerable Mothers, Vulnerable Children". I want to point out to my friends to the left in the New Democratic Party, who think they have a monopoly on concern for the people of Canada, that there are other people who are concerned. The government of the province of Nova Scotia is concerned. There are even people in the federal government who are concerned about these problems, and they are doing something about them. They are looking at the situation. As pointed out in that title, "Vulnerable Mothers, Vulnerable Children", we are interested in children. We cannot have children in this country in need and not being helped and assisted because that would simply mean greater problems down the line, not to mention the humane side of it, which is reason enough. I want hon. members in the New Democratic Party to know that we are aware of these situations. We want to see them dealt with.

There is another point I want to make just to indicate how government policies can have an effect on social services. Recently the Government of Canada indicated it might be cutting back on requirements for eligibility for unemployment insurance. This comes up all the time and plays into the hands of reactionaries who say unemployment insurance is regressive, discourages work, encourages fraud on the government and so forth. That may be so. There certainly are people who are abusing the unemployment insurance program in Canada, but let us not cut off the arm just to remove the lump that causes the disease on the arm. Let us deal with the problem. The government should be careful about changing the criteria of eligibility for unemployment insurance, however, because it could mean that more people would need welfare, and it has been indicated very clearly that the provinces do not have the financial capacity to deal with this.

We owe it to the people of Canada to deal with the problems inherent in the Canada Assistance Plan. It is the instrument that is to be used to deal with very serious problems, and so we should examine it very carefully and try to improve it. We cannot improve the welfare of people by cutting back on necessary services, however. That is the message this party wants to get across, Mr. Speaker. It must be realized that these services are essential not only to the people who receive them but to the nation as a whole. For that reason we all ought to support this motion.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the Canada Assistance Plan and how it can be improved to meet the needs of the people. Like my colleague to my right, I should like to challenge the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on what I believe was his statement concerning abolishing the Canada Assistance Plan and the federal responsibility for social services. This would be a very serious mistake. Even changing the method of funding to the block method, as is the case with health care services, would be a mistake because there would be less opportunity for the government to make sure that the system is just and equitable for those people who need the service.

I should like to review some of the background of the Canada Assistance Plan, Mr. Speaker. It was developed in 1966 under a federal-provincial agreement, and it can be terminated by any province on one year's notice. The cost of social services is shared 50 per cent by the federal government and 50 per cent by the provinces. I believe that in some cases a province can bill the municipalities for 25 per cent of their share.

In 1980-81, $2.2 billion was spent on social services funded by the Canada Assistance Plan. This provided services for 2.8 million poor people in the country or about 12.4 per cent of the population. Just the very poor people in Canada qualify for social services, Mr. Speaker. This includes 639,000 poor families, or one out of every ten families in the country. It also includes 826,000 single people. We know, of course, that many of these are elderly and that many of the elderly are women, so about 31.4 per cent of single people are poor. There is a tremendous need for services in the country, Mr. Speaker, and it is growing every day as a result of lay-offs and unemployment.

When we say $2.2 billion, it sounds like a great deal of money, and of course it is, but a lot of it is used for administration programs and personnel in the social service field. The average welfare cheque for a family of two in British Columbia, a parent and child, is $595 per month. Of this, $300 is used for shelter and $295 for food, fuel, clothing and everything else. Shelter for an average family in Vancouver costs in excess of $300 per month, so little is left for food and the other services that are needed by a family. No matter how we look at it, the level of social assistance falls well below subsistence needs in the country today, and as parliamentarians we must come to grips with this problem.

The National Council on Welfare has stated that last year the poverty level for a single person was $5,928 but Mr. Speaker, the actual welfare payment was only $4,500. For a parent and one child the poverty level was $8,595, yet in my province of British Columbia, in many cases the welfare cheque for that family was less than $7,000. The average income for women last year was $10,860, well below the $25,000 for men.

These figures show that there should be a major review of income support and the welfare system and, of course, the Canada Assistance Plan must be upgraded. We need federal leadership in this field and we need a greater investment of the welfare dollar in the programs of prevention.

I should like to summarize several criticisms of the Canada Assistance Plan including some made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). There are major discrepancies in income support levels and in the access to and quality of social services in different provinces. Some provinces receive less benefit from the Canada Assistance Plan in proportion to their needs than others, particularly the Atlantic provinces. Because a province has to spend a dollar in order to receive a federal dollar and some Atlantic provinces do not have that initial dollar to spend, they are unable to extend services to meet the need which, in many cases, is greater than in other provinces. The CAP guidelines are restrictive and some programs are not fully cost-shared. Some provincial governments could do much more under the guidelines if they accepted their full responsibility. There is a lack of control, accountability and responsibility for federal spending on the program.

In a presentation to the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements task force on the Canada Assistance Plan the minister said that CAP was conceived in the sixties—now we are in the eighties—and asked how the plan can better address the social and economic realities of our time. She said that the level of social aid in almost all the provinces does not lift people over the poverty level; that this is unjust and must be corrected. I should like to know what steps the minister has taken in this regard.

She went on to point out the great inequalities between the different levels of services within the provinces and between the provinces and the federal government. She made the important point that usually the working poor have no place in welfare programs; that they are not included in those which we share and which are strictly for the poor—that is for people who, for one reason or another, are unable to work or are outside the work force or earn very little on a regular basis and, of course, are forced to apply for social assistance. On the broader scale, she said that another problem with CAP is that it does not include, in the usual sense of the word, any equalization, any principle of redistribution; the provinces that are poor have difficulty finding the front-end money to start programs in the first place.

That is what the minister said, and I think we should hold her accountable for making some changes in the directions she mentioned. She should do that or else come and join us in this party and continue to be a more aggressive advocate for change.

I should like to give an example of the negative kind of applications of CAP funds which provinces have been known to introduce. I believe that any changes we make to the Canada Assistance Plan should include some kind of veto system to ensure that 50 per cent of the cost of certain programs which have a negative impact on people, should be disallowed. There should be a method of policing this as far as the provinces are concerned.

• (1750)

I should like to refer to an example in my province of British Columbia. In October of last year the categories of employables and unemployables were changed by the minister of human resources. Of course, there has always been a rather judgmental and punitive approach to single people on welfare, but it was extended to include single parents with an infant child or two children over the age of 12 years. It was decided by the minister of welfare that the best way to force these unworthy people off the welfare rolls was to cut back on their payments. Of course, jobs were not available, and there were no jobs suitable for mothers with several children who perhaps had never been in the work force or did not have available daycare. Those considerations were ignored, and the welfare payments to those mothers were reduced by $55 per month or $660 per year. It is a punitive provincial policy. There is no way that the federal government and those of us in Parliament should allow Canada Assistance Plan funds to be used in this manner by provinces.

I should like to refer to another example in British Columbia. Recently the minister of human resources reduced funding for rape centres which are extremely important and much needed in various areas of the province. The reason or the excuse for cutting back on funds and refusing to fund these essential centres was that the centres would not provide the provincial government with specific personal records. In this case the province really breached the whole concept of confidentiality. It is another reason for the federal government's requiring certain standards in general programs across the land which provinces could not treat in a negative way.

Now I should like to look at our concerns respecting how most of the welfare dollar, or the subsidies through the Canada Assistance Plan covering a range of social services, is geared in almost a negative direction. Most of the social services budget in the provinces is used for what I would call hard core social services which are necessary. They are crisis-oriented. They provide band-aids and, of course, essential financial support. They are very costly services. For example, there is basic income support, but a very high proportion of money goes into institutional care because problems have gone on for too long, families have broken up and other serious problems have developed. Also a very high proportion of the child welfare budget is going to remove children from their homes rather than keeping them there, in which event we are required to pay for very expensive institutional group care or payments to foster parents. In the long run, neither of these do very much to help the persons who are involved. The income support system requires an entire review and major change. The whole question of social assistance should be taken out of the human resources field and integrated with unemployment insurance and various computerized cheques which go out to people. Of course, this would only be the first step toward moving into an integrated system which, hopefully, would become an adequate guaranteed income system. If we took the responsibility for cheques from the social welfare system, those workers could become more involved in the area of prevention.

I hope the federal government gives active leadership and takes a look at putting some teeth into CAP regulations, so that there will be more emphasis on prevention, self-help and positive support programs to break the welfare cycle, to prevent poverty, and to help people realize their potential in a more positive manner. There should be a much greater investment in self-help programs in local communities, to develop the potential of people and to assist them in developing their own community services. There should be more investment in training and in paraprofessional service roles. For example, we could use people in the communities, many of whom have experienced poverty. There should be programs to strengthen families and to keep children in their homes. We should think of the number of young teenage mothers at the present time. This number has increased at a critical rate during the past few years. If ever they required help and support from the community, indeed it is now; it is very much a priority. We must become involved while they are young and before their young children are damaged. We should provide support in health and educational opportunities as well as needed job training. Also, we should think about the working poor who are struggling, some of whom have large families, to survive on barely minimum wages. We should provide them with a system wherein they could retain their independence and receive some help with the provision of daycare or supplements to their family income, in order to prevent them from saying that it is much easier to go on welfare than to keep working. It is not easier on welfare, but certainly it is not easy to work at low wages with a family. We must become serious about what I would call social investments, which will prove less costly in the long run.

I should like to refer to a specific example concerning people who live in a public housing neighbourhood in my riding. This is what I would call a community development program. The Canada Assistance Plan has a category for community development, but I challenge someone to show me how many provinces are actually using it. This is the type of thing we must stress. We must build on the strength of people and open up opportunities in local communities. The example to which I refer is a movement started close to ten years ago by some mothers on welfare. They refused to be regarded as victims or second-class citizens. They insisted on their rights, rather than being just passive recipients caught up in the welfare cycle. They organized and participated in a lot of local action activities on behalf of their children. Then they began to think of ways in which they could expand as a co-operative community in order to provide their own services, to train their own people, and to heck with the welfare department. They felt that they had many talents and could do many things themselves, and they soon proved it. First, they organized a food co-operative in which they used a lot of their own people. They trained some of them who gained expertise and developed new skills. Along with some mothers in other housing projects, they convinced the minister of human resources to provide what they called an opportunities allowance of an extra $100 per month to do community work in the interests of their own communities. Also they helped to develop daycare and child-care services. They developed the concept of a co-operative community. They realized that if they could establish a food co-operative, the same could be done for various services. Thus they received a three-year LEAP grant, which is the kind of grant that should be available through the Canada Assistance Plan. In this case they received it from the old Canada manpower department. They trained some of their people in child care and developed daycare centres. Other people were trained in providing services for senior citizens and have gone on to work as homemakers in paid capacities. Eventually they obtained their own building, into which they moved their services. It was operated by a local board and they hired as many people from the community as possible. They introduced special pre-employment training programs, of which quite a number of Indian women who had no job experience took advantage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Collenette): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) rising on a point of order.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I have the unanimous consent of the House to return to tabling of documents?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Transport has asked for unanimous consent for the tabling of documents. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, and I shall be very brief. If it pleases the House to give unanimous consent, I should like to ask the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) why he objects to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) tabling a document in the House, for the purpose of informing Parliament before making a public announcement?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) would require the unanimous consent of the House in order to put a question to the hon. member.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) care to respond to the question?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to give unanimous consent because we feel on this side of the House that perhaps we had been somewhat inadvertently misled in the House the other day when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) stated that there were to be no announcements made on this terrible disaster.

But then the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) announced an inquiry would be established.

I will be finished in a moment, Mr. Speaker.

We wanted an announcement made on motions in the House so there could be reply from the other parties and we could have a better working of Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is clear that the hon. member does not give unanimous consent. In the circumstances, I will recognize the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to comment that I am prepared to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member does give unanimous consent?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In that case there is unanimous consent for the minister to table documents.

DISASTERS

TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL APPOINTING CHIEF JUSTICE HICKMAN

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for giving me unanimous consent.

Pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I am pleased to table two documents. The first is an order in council appointing Chief Justice Hickman under the Inquiries Act as commissioner to inquire into and report upon the loss of the semi-submersible and self-propelled drilling rig Ocean Ranger. His terms of reference are described.

The second is an order in council appointing Chief Justice Hickman as commissioner under Section 548 of the Canada Shipping Act for the same purposes. It reads:

—to be a Commissioner for the purpose of holding a formal investigation into the circumstances attending the loss of the semi-submersible self-propelled drill rig Ocean Ranger on the continental shelf of Canada on or about February 15, 1982 with the loss of all of her crew members.

The government thought that both acts could be used in order to allow the commissioner the broadest possible powers of inquiry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must call to the minister's attention that the rules of the House permit only the tabling of documents. He is not permitted to make a statement under this Standing Order.

Mr. Waddell: He could, on motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House wishes to revert to motions, the minister may make a statement on motions. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AN ACT TO AMEND THE STATUTE LAW RELATING TO CERTAIN TAXES AND TO PROVIDE OTHER AUTHORITY FOR THE RAISING OF FUNDS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-93, to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of replies to make to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who preceded me in this debate. My replies are to his seemingly not too well thought out comments. I think that the episode which just occurred showed that my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway is all show and has very little substance.

Today we witnessed all the Liberal members of the House walking in with red carnations in their lapels. This was the celebration of the second anniversary of the Liberals' coming to power and running Canada and the Canadian economy.

Mr. Wilson: Into the ground.

• (2010)

Mr. Shields: On December 13, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals and the NDP joined together to defeat the Conservative government. I would like to read into the record the motion which was amended and supported fully by the NDP, just to remind people across Canada what the NDP did by throwing out the Conservative Party.

Mr. Deans: We did the country a service.

Mr. Shields: The motion reads:

—this House condemns the Government for its budget which will place an unfair and unnecessary burden of higher gasoline prices, higher fuel oil prices, and higher taxes on middle and lower-income Canadians, and this House unreservedly condemns the government for its outright betrayal of its election promises to lower interest rates, to cut taxes, and to stimulate the growth of the Canadian economy, without a mandate from the Canadian people for such a reversal.

Mr. Deans: Why not move it again? We will support it, it is equally applicable.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from the NDP says to move it again and they will support us.

Mr. Deans: The two of you make a great pair.

Mr. Shields: If I may refresh his memory, it was just last Friday that our House leader approached the NDP House leader with a motion of non-confidence and asked for their full support so that we could attempt to defeat this government. What happened? We in the House know as well as he knows that it was the NDP who went shuffling off to the Liberals and said: "Be careful, they are trying to defeat the government." He knows full well we had an opportunity to defeat the government last Friday with NDP support, but where were they?

Mr. Wilson: They could not face the vote.

Mr. Shields: They looked at the polls, Mr. Speaker, and their pollsters told them, "Do not have an election now because the NDP is down the tube." That is what he found out, so let us hear him scream now. That is exactly what happened, and he knows it. We wanted the NDP's support last Friday and where were they? They could not make it. Their excuse was that the official opposition were going to use that day and take away their rights, because they wanted to debate the Crow rates. I would like to remind the hon. member that the Crow rate and the attack on it would have gone down the tube with the government, but they did not have the guts to put principle before expediency. Political expediency, that is what happened with the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Waddell: How about speaking on energy, Jack?

Mr. Shields: All show and no substance, Mr. Speaker. Let us look at the motion and see where we are on the "unfair and unnecessary burden of high gasoline prices". The price of gasoline has increased by 75 cents. That is what this Liberal government did with the help of the NDP, this party of principle. Higher fuel oil prices is what we have today. Unemployment at an all-time record high is what we have today. All this because the NDP, the party of principle, supported the government in a mealy-mouthed way because they thought they could gain seats. They are a party of principle only if they can gain seats.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about the budget as it relates to the borrowing bill. The money borrowed to run the government affects every area of our economy. It is spent in every department. Let us look at what happens. In 1980 our economy experienced zero growth, the worst performance in 26 years. Productivity fell by 1½ per cent and housing starts fell to their lowest level in 13 years. While the first half of 1981 saw reasonably healthy economic growth, the economy is now in severe recession. Severe recession? It is moving toward a depression of unparalleled proportions, something we in this country have never seen before. What has the government continually been told, Mr. Speaker? In October, Statistics Canada warned as follows:

Signs that a slowdown in economic activity will extend over the second half of 1981 proliferated in July as the Canadian composite leading indicator fell for the second consecutive month, and the weakness that characterized several components in June broadened and intensified in July.

Six days before the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought in his budget, Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada said this on November 6, 1981:

—market slowdown in activity could develop into a recession during the coming months. The sharp decline in indicators of economic activity has already led firms to cut production, and lay-offs have become widespread.

Again on December 7, 1981, Statistics Canada said this:

The third quarter downturn of real GNP will not be reversed in the near future. The index and its components indicate that the negative forces accumulating in the economy continued to spread and intensify. The outlook for all major components of final demand remains dim.

That was when the Minister of Finance was contemplating changes in his anti-growth budget, a budget which was stifling initiative in Canada. Statistics Canada was saying, in other words, that unemployment is going to get worse; bankruptcies are going to become commonplace; farmers are not going to get the prices they need for their commodities and will go under; small businessmen are going to suffer and go out of business; the young people coming out of our universities and technical colleges have absolutely nothing to look forward to in the form of jobs because there are none. All this because of the budget and the national energy policy proposed and implemented by the government. This is what they said as recently as last month:

—the marked slowdown in the economy currently under way will not likely be reversed for the first quarter of 1982.

In other words, there is not a hope unless the government does something by the end of March, 1982. It goes on:

The filtered composite index fell 2.6% in October, one of the largest declines since the 1975 recession. The downturn was generalized among all the components, including those, . . . which have the longest leads in signaling a turning point. . . . the weakness in the manufacturing sector broadened in reaction to the slackening of final demand. . . . the speed of descent will not be substantially attenuated before the end of this quarter.

There is not a great deal of hope that it will be stopped then. Well, I can go on and on. Certainly we know what they have done. They are ruining our economy, a system where men and women could look around and say: "I can do." We in Canada were blessed by God Almighty with an abundance of resources. We have an abundance of fresh water, an abundance of people who have the foresight and drive to go out and do something, to say "I am going to do it." But we have not been blessed with a type of government which recognizes that in the Canadian people. Over the past 14 years, we have not been blessed with a kind of government which recognizes the freedom of the individual, allowing that individual to proceed on his own, allowing him to take the risks, allowing him to work and save, and thereby contribute to the growth of the country. Instead, we have had a government which has very systematically stated, "We will intervene in the economy. We will control the economy. We will do it in such a way." The government then starts using phrases such as, "It is for the people of Canada." Well, are the risk-takers not the people of Canada? Are those who want to go out and build something with their own two hands not the people of Canada? No, no.

It reminds me of the story, which I am sure all hon. members of the House have heard, about the little red hen baking the bread. Finally, after all the interventions and all the government interference, it sits on the fence and crows away. Everyone wonders, why does this little hen not bake any bread now? No one is baking bread. Why? That is what is happening.

Taxation

Today I received a phone call from a gentleman in Grand Centre. Many hon. members may not know where that is. It is in northeastern Alberta, right in the heart of the Imperial Oil project; the Imperial Oil project that was, that hopefully will be, but which is indeed stalled because of a national energy policy brought in by this government. This man listed off small businesses which have gone down the tube and are going down. J & J Drive-In Restaurant was started by two brothers who decided that they would pool their money and work long hours frying hamburgers and French fries to sell to the public. However, they were going to build something for themselves and their children. What are they doing now?

Mr. Waddell: They have a health food restaurant!

Mr. Shields: They have boarded it up. They have shut it down. Oh, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) interjected. I do not know what he said, but he is all wind and no substance anyway, so it is really not important.

Mr. Waddell: I came back to hear you, Jack!

Mr. Shields: Yes, I am sure I pegged the hon. member by saying he is all wind and no substance. He makes the most idiotic statements in the House about his party never having a part to play with the Liberal government, and by propping up that socialist government which goes under the guise of Liberalism.

Mr. Waddell: Hurt a guy! That hurt!

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: The NDP come in and talk about Canadian ownership. I would like to refer back to the energy policy for a moment. It is very clear that Canadians right across the country, from coast to coast, would like to see more Canadian ownership. That is very clear. I do not think that there is a man or a woman across the country who would not agree that a vital industry like the oil industry should be owned by Canadians or that we should encourage every Canadian to go out and get a piece of that action. However, we are not talking about Canadian ownership, ownership by individuals, when we are talking about nationalization. Clearly, the national energy policy was a clear grab and a move on an industry which was healthy, and it was, in effect, nationalizing. The government was saying, "We are going to go in. We will take it over. We will control it." Can one imagine the complexity of developing the Beaufort Sea, the complexity of building islands where there are no islands, and drilling for oil where, hopefully, oil and gas would be found? Can one imagine the bureaucrats and politicians in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources sitting here and trying to direct that activity from Ottawa? It is absolutely ludicrous to think that any hon. member in the House would subscribe to the idea that the bureaucrats sitting in Ottawa can direct these most complicated, clearly innovative developments which are going on in the Beaufort Sea, in the offshore, or indeed the tertiary recovery, the megaprojects in northeastern Alberta or the coal deposits in Alberta and British Columbia.

The more that the government bureaucrats become involved in the day to day operation of these enterprises, the further they go down the tube. However, what do we hear from the New Democratic Party? Hon. members in that party say, "We want more intervention. We do not want you people out there who have the initiative, the drive and the desire to do something or to do anything because big government will do it in the name of the people."

I want to tell Your Honour that I am sure that we would consistently hear the same kind of rhetoric as we hear from the NDP if we were in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Russia or Cuba, because that is the ultimate result of a government, which is hell-bent on an election, going in and taking over what is going on in the country.

Mr. Waddell: Next, Alberta!

Mr. Shields: My NDP friend down there said, "Next, Alberta."

Mr. Riis: How many Tory provinces are there?

Mr. Shields: I think the New Democratic Party should pick up the papers and do a little bit of reading.

Mr. Waddell: Hey, Jack, they are the enemy!

Mr. Shields: Then maybe they would understand a little bit more about Alberta and they would understand that a clear message was being sent to the government, which they support, this government that they are in bed with, this government which is touting Ed Schreyer, the good old NDP premier—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Shields: —to be the next leader of this party.

Mr. Riis: We are not the government; it is those guys over there!

Mr. Shields: The NDP is supporting the government. They say they are not the government. They are the government, as clearly as the government that sits across there, because when the chips are down, the NDP is there to do the pairing. We will see tomorrow night, when the time comes for a vote of confidence in this House, how many of the NDP will conveniently not be in their seats. We will see how many of the NDP will be conveniently out of the House or somewhere else in Canada, and not here voting to destroy the present government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: We will see, because there will be lots of pairing going on. I guarantee that no hon. member from the Conservative Party will be pairing with hon. members opposite. So put your money where your mouth is, boys. Through Your Honour, I would suggest that my hon. friends in the little red rump down there show up tomorrow night for the motion which will be before the House. We will see.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was speaking about the national energy policy and how the government should take over more and should become more involved, and that this government was not going far enough, and so on. I have in my hand a letter from the Chamber of Commerce at Fort St. John. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway may not know where Fort St. John is located. Fort St. John is in northern British Columbia. I do not know if the hon. member has ever taken the trouble to go up and see the pioneering kind of spirit which arises in that community. However, this letter is from the Chamber of Commerce at Fort St. John. Maybe my hon. friend, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, could answer this letter, which states:

Dear Sir:

Northeastern British Columbia is, and apparently will be, one of the areas of Canada hardest hit by the national energy policy.

Since the announcement of this policy last fall, the Fort St. John & District Chamber of Commerce has viewed with concern the decline in drilling activity in this region—

Mr. Waddell: That's what I said in my speech, Jack!

Mr. Shields: It continues:

—and the announced reduction of exploration plans over the next few years.

As the representatives of the business community in this area which up until last fall probably had the most buoyant economy of any place in the nation, we feel that we must bring to the attention of the elected representatives of the entire nation our concern.

Oh, listen to the hon. members squeaking now. Do not squeak, my hon. friends. I would suggest they do not squeak. Why do they not leave the protection of Ottawa? Why not get on a plane, go to Fort St. John and talk to the members of the Chamber of Commerce, those in the community, the rig workers who are today on welfare because of the absolute stupidity of this government?

● (2030)

The NDP supports this government right down the line. I continue the quote:

Our corner may be a small one in relationship to Canada as a whole but our needs and wellbeing are the needs and wellbeing of Canadians.

It is signed by Ivan G. Strome, President. Maybe the hon. member would like to read that. I would be happy to pass it over to him. I would like him to go there and talk to those people.

Mr. Riis: Who signed it?

Mr. Shields: One of the members asks me whose side I am on. I am on the side of the ordinary Canadian.

Mr. Riis: I asked who signed the agreement?

Mr. Shields: The members of the NDP know about signing any form of an agreement with a government hell-bent on an election and taking over and controlling the oil industry. The more we delayed, the more they delayed in Alberta, the more the premier would delay, the worse it would get for every industry in this country. We were pushing this country into a recession. The premier of Alberta, although not satisfied with the type of agreement, did eventually sign. He looked at Canada and realized that we had to get the economic wheels going again. It is my view that he was willing to sacrifice something to get that to happen. However, it did not happen and is not happening. We have unlimited numbers of small businesses in the oil patch, and the western basin going out of business.

The members of the NDP alluded to the separatist vote. We even had one member cross the floor before this evening's session suggesting that we were not doing our job in Alberta because in a provincial byelection we allowed a separatist to be elected. I say to those across the way that we are trying to do our job. However, we cannot do our job and fight Liberals and stupid Liberal policies at the same time.

That is a clear warning. I know some of those people who voted. They would have voted for the Western Canada Concept, not because they do not love their country and not because they do not see the blessings this country has from God Almighty who looked down upon our country, blessed us with resources and gave us people with initiative. These are the people who dirtied their hands. They broke the soil and built something with their own hands so that when they leave this world, they will have something to pass on to their children.

This government with its energy policy and budget is stifling that kind of initiative. It sickens me to sit here and listen to the tripe that we get day by day from the government benches about what they are going to do, how they are going to make the economy go again, how they are going to stimulate the economy and create jobs. My God, all you have to do is to leave people alone, get out of their daily lives, and allow them to do the work they want to do.

I talk daily to men who want to accomplish something. They are willing to work 14, 16, 18 hours a day in order to build something. They are being stifled by the government. How in God's name can someone start a business today with interest rates on borrowed money running around 20 per cent? That is the rate on a normal bank loan. How in God's name can anyone get a Small Business Development Bond? They are only available for businesses in dire straits. Imagine a direct government policy not to help healthy small businesses develop through the Small Business Development Bond. We are not going to help a small enterprise grow and create jobs through this bond. Only those in dire straits, those going belly-up are going to be helped. My goodness, it defies logic.

Today, the second anniversary of their election, the Liberal members walked into this chamber wearing red carnations. Believe me, I would have been happy to wear a red carnation today had this government brought in policies recognizing the need to encourage development of the individual so that by his sweat, tears and dirty hands he can build a business which he can pass on to his children.

I would have been happy to wear a red carnation had I not read in the paper today that housing starts are at an all-time low and, for the first time in Canada in 25 years, people are having to double up. Young people getting married today cannot look to the future in the same way as those who married ten or 15 years ago. They knew that if they worked hard some day they could own their own homes. What is happening now? These young married couples must now live at home with mother and father, they must live with their in-laws. That is no kind of future for our children.

I would have been glad to wear a red carnation today if the unemployment rate were at a tolerable level. We talk about the unemployment rate reaching 9 per cent. There are over a million people unemployed in Canada. There is no need for that with our abundance of resources. We have the technology, understanding and desire to get this country moving.

I would have worn a red carnation today had this government shown that it is willing to cut back on the expenditures it is making daily. The spending of the government is out of hand. It prints money like it is going out of style. The government is growing.

Every time the government makes an announcement, it costs the people of Canada another half a million dollars. What is that with a deficit of $17 billion? A billion dollars staggers me. I have no way of comprehending what it is. All I know is that the people of Canada are carrying this burden on their backs. They are frightened.

People right across this country from British Columbia to Newfoundland are frightened about the erosion in their standard of living, their opportunity to make a living, the future for themselves and their children. Can you imagine that in our Canada which is blessed with an abundance of resources? Our Canada has the kind of people who want to accomplish something.

There is no reason for the situation we are in today. We do not have to track U.S. interest rates. We do not have to confiscate through the national energy policy in the name of so-called Canadianization. All we have to do is to encourage Canadians to go out and buy, work and take over some of the oil industry that is here. Will that Canadianize it? That is not Canadianizing. It is not one man taking steps to become an owner.

It is my hope that my remarks tonight will cause some members to think. I hope it will help some members to talk to their constituents and help encourage members to visit an unemployment insurance office to ask those people who are unemployed the most resounding question which is most often asked—why? They are not blaming anyone; they are just asking why this is happening in Canada, a country with the great wealth and population we have. How can the government allow this to happen? The answer is there, Mr. Speaker, if we are willing to take the time to find it.

I would suggest to the Liberal government that if it allowed members of the House, for even half a day, to participate equally with them in drafting a policy to attack the economy, they would be astounded at the results. I do not believe for one moment that all the talent in the House is in the Conservative ranks. I am sure the New Democratic Party believes that all the talent is in its corner. They do have some talent, and there is considerable talent on the Liberal side. There is all this talent sitting in the House of Commons while the government is being run by a close-knit, select few.

I have participated in committees and I have tried to have some input on the national energy policy when the bill was in committee. I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, because you have been here longer than I, that it is useless. One sits in those committees, which are mainly composed of government members and, in most cases, are chaired by a government member. It is a process whereby if there is any possibility that they might lose a vote in committee, the government members leave the room in order to destroy the quorum so that a vote cannot be taken. Opposition members who go into committee try their best to have the government at least attempt to change legislation and alleviate the impact it might have on people. However, it is an exercise in futility.

During the two years that I have been here, the only committee which I have seen make any progress was the constitutional committee. It was held in the open, in front of television cameras for all Canadians to see. Canadians could see positive suggestions being made and who was making them. It did not matter who was making these suggestions because we were working as a group. This would never have been accomplished had we not fillibustered in the House. What a waste!

I would like to give my opinion on an issue which I feel is very urgent. It is the byelection in Olds-Didsbury in southern Alberta where a member of the Western Canada Concept was elected. To my knowledge, it is the first time that an avowed separatist candidate will be sitting in the Alberta legislature. This alarms me. I am alarmed that people whom I know, including some of my relatives, who live in the Olds-Didsbury area may have voted for the Western Canada Concept. In other words, they are saying that there is no use. They have tried, they have signalled Ottawa time and again that it is not allowing them to do what they want. But the bureaucrats and politicians in Ottawa do not understand what is happening in Alberta, and indeed in western Canada.

I will not get into the argument of whether they have been treated poorly in the past. I will not get into the argument of whether the westerner is being treated badly. All that I am saying is that there is a very clear perception in southern Alberta that, according to the government here in Ottawa, Canada is made up of Quebec and Ontario. When one sees the VIA Rail cuts and the attack on the Crow rate, there is no other conclusion to which they can come.

I believe that we must revise the Senate in order to provide the representation which this country deserves before it is too late. The Senate should be reformed to allow perhaps ten elected senators from each province so that our upper chamber will have an input into our government. We must put a ceiling on the number of members who will come into the House of Commons. We must make provisions which would allow members of the House of Commons to participate more actively in government policy making. As the situation exists now, I am here to represent my constituency of Athabasca, but my job in sitting in the opposition is to oppose everything the government introduces. I am sure if I had some input into the drafting of government legislation—even just to give ideas—we could all work much better and provide a more positive view of Canada and its economic direction.

It is my plea to all members of the House that there is talent on all sides of the House and we must all sit down together to attack the most threatening problem facing Canada today, namely, the state of emergency of our economy, before riots break out in the streets and our country destroys itself.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the member who just spoke, if I have the unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of the fact that the hon. member's time has expired, it would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: I thank members of the House and you, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the hon. member whether he subscribes to the argument that the problem in northeastern British Columbia with respect to gas exploration is that the pre-build of the Alaska Highway Pipeline will now take Alberta gas and destroy those traditional B.C. markets, which would therefore make it pointless to go ahead and increase the drilling in the area which the hon. member spoke about?

Also would he agree, that the real problem is tied into the pre-build of the pipeline and not entirely with the National Energy Program?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the hon. member, by his question, is going on record as supporting the National Energy Program.

Mr. Waddell: That is not what I said.

Mr. Shields: It confirms what I said earlier in my remarks that he is propping up the Liberal Party. There is a coalition; that has now been established.

• (2050)

If the hon. member's allegations were correct, I suggest to him there would be considerable activity in Grande Prairie and in northwestern Alberta generally. There would be considerable activity to develop the Elmsworth natural gas fields. However, as a result of the national energy policy there is virtually no activity in the Elmsworth field. It is absolutely zip. There is no exploration going on to develop the field or to see how large the field is. There are rig workers in Grande Prairie today who are on welfare rolls because they have run out of unemployment insurance benefits. These are healthy and strong individuals who cannot go to the United States to work on the rigs there. Some are on unemployment insurance, and after that they have to go on to the welfare rolls. This is causing untold hardships for those people. Less than two years ago, those men strutted down the street saying, "We are part of a great oil industry in this country." These people are now on welfare, and there are untold hardships for their families and children.

Mr. Cooper: Any more questions?

Mr. Shields: I hope that has answered the hon. member's question.

Mr. Orlikow: I didn't hear the question.

Mr. Shields: It was stupid to imply that the pre-build of the pipeline is causing the delay in northwestern Alberta and the Peace River block because, for the information of the hon. member, the Great Peace River country takes in Dawson Creek and Fort St. John. It is called the Peace River block. Activity has been reduced in the Peace River block, not because of the pre-build but because of the national energy policy.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to set the records straight. In his speech, the previous speaker mentioned the process of pairing which, if I understand the definition of pairing in the political sense, means that when a member of the government is away, a member of another party conveniently is away also. That is an agreement which is made between different parties in the House of Commons from time to time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member please state his point of order.

Mr. Anguish: My point of order is to set the records straight. My party does not participate in any kind of pairing with any other political party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that we will see tomorrow whether they are pairing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, during our debate about the borrowing authority bill now before us, we have heard so much about the energy policies of the government that I decided to say a word about the three aspects of that policy which other members have already taken as their theme today. I speak of energy security or self-sufficiency; second, Canadianization; and third, the policy of fairness which is embodied in the National Energy Program.

Canadians are today self-sufficient in all forms of energy but one. We are self-sufficient in coal, in hydroelectricity, in uranium and in natural gas as well as various renewable forms of energy. The one energy source where Canadians do not enjoy self-sufficiency for the time being is, of course, oil. During the past year, 79.5 per cent of our oil needs were provided from within Canada. During the course of this year, it is estimated that 81 per cent of our oil needs will be met from domestic sources.

The policy of the government with regard to energy security and oil self-sufficiency has two major elements. One is our conservation and substitution program, and the other is supply. With regard to conservation it is, for example, intended that we shall reduce our industrial oil consumption in Canada in the non-transport sectors to 10 per cent of their total energy needs by 1990. I am glad to see that Canadian industry has demonstrated during recent years, and especially during the course of last year, substantial progress toward that goal. The goal of self-sufficiency in oil by 1990, which is some 19 percentage points away from us today, can also be achieved through such conservation measures as the home insulation program, which is now running at some $265 million annually. The total amount disbursed under that program has approached some half a billion dollars. The benefits in terms of reduction in domestic oil consumption are evident everywhere. The manifold benefits are also apparent in the macroeconomic picture in terms of reducing our total consumption of oil in Canada. Equally successful has been the industrial conservation program, a program of co-operation between the private and public sectors—

Mr. Wilson: Quite apparent in Alsands and Cold Lake.

Mr. MacLaren: —in terms of identifying additional methods to reduce the consumption of oil in the manufacturing and service industries. It is evident to anyone who looks at that program that it represents another promising form of co-operation between the government and the private sector and one which holds substantial promise for further reductions in oil consumption.

A third conservation area which I might touch on is that of transport. Under the energy security legislation which will be before the House in a matter of days new automobile consumption standards will be set. They will, over a period of time, accentuate the trend already evident, of reduced consumption of gasoline by automobiles.

Those conservation measures are matched by a range of substitution programs which have also had a significant impact of reducing our demand for oil. COSP, the Canadian Oil Substitution Program, offers grants of up to $800 per household. Within the six months since that program was introduced $50 million has been paid to home owners to convert from scarce oil to more plentiful natural gas, electricity or various renewable forms of energy, depending on which region the recipients live.

The off oil utility program provides assistance to the provinces to devise methods to replace costly oil generation of electricity, particularly in eastern Canada.

Further, gas pipeline extensions are now on their way to ensure that a more plentiful form of hydrocarbon energy is available right across our country. The National Energy Program provides incentives for the substitution of oil with natural gas. There is an incentive price. The cost of natural gas is to be held at two thirds of the domestic price of oil. In addition, the Alberta government has undertaken to offer gas market development incentive payments, which will help to ensure that natural gas in eastern Canada continues to replace oil.

Programs for propane development and for compressed natural gas for use in the automotive industry and especially in fleet operations are already proving to be a substantial success. I do not doubt that we shall see those two fuels used increasingly in transport.

● (2100)

The new Crown corporation Canertech, based in Winnipeg, which was established as part of the National Energy Program, is already active in working with private sector companies in viable research and development projects in the field of renewable energy. Partly as a result of Canertech, all Canadians will have access to various renewable forms of energy as well as more conventional forms.

These and other programs of conservation and substitution have meant that, in contrast to the annual increases in oil consumption during the 1970s, demand for refined petroleum products was reduced in Canada in 1981 by some 4.5 per cent. It is estimated that during 1982, the demand for refined petroleum products will be reduced by another 3.5 per cent. These figures represent significant progress in terms of ensuring our energy security and oil sufficiency by 1990.

On the supply side of the equation, the government has achieved what the previous government was unable to do; that is, it signed agreements with the principal producing province, Alberta, some six months ago, and shortly thereafter with the other producing provinces, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Those agreements put in place a framework which will help to provide a dependable supply of petroleum products in the years ahead. When matched with the conservation and substitution programs that I have already outlined, they will help to ensure self-sufficiency by 1990.

The new oil reference price which is available for all oil coming into production from the introduction of the National Energy Program will be approximately at world level. That will help to ensure that there is a price incentive for Canadian oil companies, and indeed for all oil companies, to search out new sources of oil. In addition, if they are active in the Canada lands, petroleum incentive grants of the federal government, replacing the former depreciation allowances, will also encourage more exploration. This is all happening, Mr. Speaker, and it is evident that the petroleum incentive program, which is part of the forthcoming energy security bill that I have mentioned, will—

Mr. Andre: When?

Mr. MacLaren: I said a few moments ago that it will be within the next few days. This will ensure that exploration in the frontier regions, the most promising regions of Canada, will go forward at an accelerated pace.

Within the Province of Alberta, the Alberta government will provide petroleum incentive grants identical to those offered by the federal government on the Canada lands.

Reference has been made to the Alsands project which is under active discussion at the moment. I am optimistic about the outcome of the discussions with regard to invitations to others to participate in this massive project which I am confident will be undertaken.

Discussions have been pursued with the governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia in an effort to ensure that there will be no hindrance to the development of the promising areas offshore. In that regard, I should like to quote from the letter of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the Premier of Newfoundland on February 12 in which he said:

> I am sure that you share my hope that we shall arrive this month at a settlement which will reflect the interests and responsibilities of both governments. More than that, it must respond to the pressing energy security and economic development needs of Newfoundlanders and all Canadians.
> I am confident that, even with the short time remaining, we can build the framework for co-operation which will ensure the best possible development of our rich offshore oil and gas resources.

That brief quotation sums up the attitude of the federal government to the question of offshore jurisdiction and development. It has been our position that the important thing is to get a regime in place now which is satisfactory to both provincial and federal governments and which would allow early development of those promising new areas of oil exploration.

With regard to the conventional oil lands in western Canada, it has been evident for some time that our current exports of natural gas are well below the amount approved by the National Energy Board. At the present time, less than 60 per cent of the contracts approved by the National Energy Board provide gas to the United States market. In fact, for the past two years or more, the United States market for Canadian natural gas has been soft, and Canadian producers have been unable to find new markets there in competition with domestic suppliers. That situation was evident well before the introduction of the National Energy Program. Indeed, hon. members will recall that before the program was announced in October 1980, the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors had already indicated there was an oversupply in the industry and that the number of drills built was in excess of contemplated needs. In fact, despite that oversupply in the face of the large surplus of natural gas, the number of wells completed in 1981 was less than 1980, but only slightly below the number in 1979.

Mr. Wilson: What about 1974?

Mr. MacLaren: The number was higher than in any other previous year. Today, drilling has again increased in the conventional lands, including Alberta. The level is about 76 per cent of that of a year ago and 80 per cent of the level achieved in 1980.

Mr. Andre: It is what?

Mr. MacLaren: In the past year, a number of Canadian companies that were facing gas surpluses in this country were attracted to the United States in the hope of achieving success in that market. They were encouraged by the rate of success in exploratory wells there and by world level prices. Many of those companies are now returning to Canada, having experienced high interest rates, poor economic conditions and disappointing drilling results. The situation, in short, is rather different today. An extensive report in The Calgary Herald a few days ago noted that many of the companies that had plunged into the United States have begun to return to Canada.

The Canadianization element of the National Energy Program has been discussed today. This element, as any public opinion poll will indicate, has the broad support of the Canadian people. I should like to spend a moment noting the progress that has been made in this area.

Since the National Energy Program was announced in October, 1980, ten Canadian companies have acquired foreign companies worth more than $100 million each. In total, more than $6 billion has been spent in acquiring previously foreign held oil and gas assets. The vast majority of those deals, contrary to what some people have alleged, were private sector deals. They were not government deals, not nationalization but Canadianization. Of course, there were two exceptions—the Petro-Canada acquisition of Petrofina and the 25 per cent share in Suncor acquired by the Ontario government. All the acquisitions since the announcement of the National Energy Program have contributed to increasing Canadian ownership of upstream production revenues by about 6.3 percentage points. According to Petroleum Monitoring Agency data, to which several references have been made today, the level of foreign ownership of production revenues was 72 per cent in 1980. As of the middle of last month, this figure declined to 65.7 per cent. Those statistics indicate the degree to which there has been a marked change of ownership in the petroleum industry within the last 18 months. I am quite confident that we shall achieve our goal of 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry by 1990.

In discussing the success of the Canadianization program, and against the background of allegations that somehow the program was engaged in nationalization as distinct from Canadianization, or was a government take-over as distinct from a private sector venture, I want to note that not only have there been both private and public sector ventures, but the government recently concluded an agreement with co-operatives in Canada to form new oil and gas ventures. The Co-operative Energy Corporation and the Co-operative Energy Development Corporation provide the opportunity for literally millions of Canadians to participate in their own oil industry. This opportunity has been limited to more restricted numbers of Canadians in the past. For the first time, partly through the vehicle of the new Co-operative Energy Corporation, many more Canadians will have the opportunity to participate in an enterprise which has been closed to them in the past.

Additional to the acquisition route and the new venture route upon which I have briefly touched, there is another way in which Canadianization in the petroleum industry is going forward, that is, farm-ins by Canadian companies with foreign-controlled corporations. We have seen a number of such farm-in arrangements in recent months. I refer the House to the Alberta Energy Corporation, the state enterprise of Alberta, which arranged a farm-in of Gulf Canada lands in western Canada. More recently, both Imperial Oil and Texaco have not only agreed upon farm-ins with various Canadian companies but have repeatedly indicated their interest in additional farm-ins, so as to qualify for the higher incentive grant.

We have had some discussion during this debate about the borrowing authority as to energy prices and fairness. It is our contention that, in the first instance, fairness was introduced in the National Energy Program by the grants which are available to all Canadians to participate in conservation. This route was not open before to those who did not have the resources to make necessary changes to their dwellings or in some cases to their vehicles. Now they have the opportunity to gain the benefits of conservation.

Beyond that example of fairness is, of course, the price agreement reached with the government of Alberta under which the refinery cost of crude oil at Toronto in 1984 will be $52 per barrel. Under the budget of the previous government, the price would have been about $58 per barrel, even under a moderate international price increase projection.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member table the background information upon which he made that calculation?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I should be pleased to provide the hon. member with the information. Under the Alberta-Canada agreement, the gasoline price in Toronto in 1984 will be in the range of 62 cents to 66 cents per litre. Under the Conservative budget, it would have been in the range of 73 cents to 86 cents, an average of 25 per cent higher. Equally, heating oil prices in Toronto in 1984 will be in the range of 43 cents to 46 cents per litre. Under the previous government's budget, the price would have been in the range of 48 cents to 58 cents, some 19 per cent higher.

Not only are there those considerations of fairness so that all Canadians share in their petroleum industry, and have the opportunity to conserve petroleum and to substitute it with more plentiful forms of energy, but there is also the sharing of the revenue flowing from the petroleum industry. In recent years we have seen the situation where some 45 per cent of the total revenue of the industry went to provincial governments, some 45 per cent to the industry, and 10 per cent to the federal government. Under the Alberta-Canada Energy Agreement and those subsequently reached with British Columbia and Saskatchewan, the situation is markedly different. For example, some 30 per cent of the revenue will now go to the government of Alberta, some 44 per cent to the industry, and 25 per cent to the federal government. Through the new arrangements and the federal-provincial agreements, all Canadians will have the opportunity to share more fairly and equitably in their own petroleum industry and to benefit from the revenues flowing from the most dynamic sector of our total economy. I do not doubt, with regard to the benefits for the consumer, with regard to energy self-sufficiency, and with regard to Canadianization, that the National Energy Program will go down in history as one of the great achievements of government in Canada since the Second World War.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you on your duties in the chair tonight. It is always pleasing to see the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) in the chair.

Bill C-93 implements a number of commitments made to energy producing provinces, provides several technical changes in the federal excise tax system, and seeks to obtain new borrowing powers for the fiscal year 1982-83. In the first part, the government is seeking borrowing authority for $6.6 billion, and this borrowing authority is directly connected with the budget. In light of the current economic situation, I agree with the minister that a review of the budget's objectives is important to provide a background for evaluating the merits of the bill.

In the budget, the government correctly identified rapidly rising inflation as the main problem in the country. Inflation pushes up interest rates, destroys investor confidence and generally slows down economic activity. In turn, this leads to a number of problems such as rising unemployment, erosion of real income, and borrowers saddled with the burden of ever-increasing interest rates. In Canada this has been marked by a period of stagflation in which the economy has been stagnant but inflation has continued to accelerate. In dealing solely with the problems of inflation, the government has failed to come to grips also with the problem of unemployment. The government appears to have failed to realize that there are two problems facing Canada and that each of them can be addressed at the same time.

To do this we need policies to restore the level of confidence in our country that will encourage Canadians and non-Canadians to invest in Canada. We must create a climate in which creative and courageous men and women may take risks and realize rewards. We must ensure that the public interest shall be preserved and that both the strong and the weak shall have equal opportunities. The great need at the present time is to build a property-owning democracy where not only do conditions encourage the individual to own the home in which he dwells and the farm fields he cultivates, but in addition allow him to save sufficient income to share in the ownership of the social and industrial future of this great country.

We must embark on a national development policy that will strengthen all areas. Canadians of all groups and regions must have equal opportunities to share in the national prosperity.

This involves an investment, not a mere spending, and the distinction between those two elements is one of the basic concepts that has escaped this government and that has been brought to the attention of the government, not only by myself but by one of the speakers on my left who spoke in this debate earlier.

Canada is one of the most beautiful and blessed of nations, and Canadians have the right, the obligation, and should be given the opportunity to create the world's finest society. It is important that the Foreign Investment Review Act and the capital gains tax be re-evaluated in light of our great need to attract investment in our country. By doing so this will revive our dollar and give us the flexibility to drop interest rates to the level they should be so we can get Canada moving forward again.

To do this we have to maximize the involvement of the private sector because small Canadian business employs more Canadians than any other sector of our economy. We have also to get on with the megaprojects and use them as development tools in all parts of our country.

We have a crisis in housing caused by high interest rates. The Clark government program to permit deductions of mortgage interest and property taxes from income tax, which was opposed by the Liberal and New Democratic parties, was then and is now the right measure to stimulate home building and the building materials industries in Canada today.

If ever there was a time when all governments in the country should be moving in the same direction, it is now. At this moment, federal-provincial relations are probably at an all-time low, with the federal government avoiding cost-sharing programs and local expertise and electing to take unilateral action to dissolve the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and to do its own thing in the development of areas that suffer from regional disparity.

The budget failed to recognize the tremendous importance and the potential of research and development in this country. The high technology industries have become the winners in today's economy. Our government has failed to follow the lead of these enlightened corporations. It has not stimulated industrial research nor has it regained lost markets. It has not moved into new ones nor expanded the great export potential of our country, which is so rich in terms of its natural resources and its educated population.

The budget should have allowed a reduction in taxable income by the excess interest that people are paying who have had to renew their mortgages. It should have allowed farmers a tax credit for the interest paid for seed and fertilizer. It should have allowed the small-business man to pay interest only on his long-term borrowings for at least a year. It should have allowed normal depreciation for new purchases or even accelerated the depreciation.

With huge revenues from the oil pricing agreements starting to flow into federal coffers, we have a rare opportunity to attack our deficit position and our accumulating deficit and at the same time to invest in the development of Canada. We have to maximize our benefits from megaprojects, develop our natural resources, such as forestry, fisheries and agriculture. We have to update our creaking transport system and modernize our ports so that we can move more readily into export markets.

Shrinking space availability on ships registered under flags of convenience calls for an urgent evaluation of the merits of a Canadian merchant marine.

Hand in hand with an industrial strategy to bring about the economic recovery of our nation go training programs to enable Canadians to avail themselves of these opportunities.

It was just 24 months ago that the Liberal Party was elected nationally on a platform that higher energy policies were unnecessary and that they could manage the economy better than the Clark government. Now, 60 to 80 cents a gallon later, people are beginning to recall that during the Clark government inflation remained stable, jobs were being created at the rate of 30,000 a month and that purchasing power of wages rose. Under the self-proclaimed economic miracle workers now in office we have seen 30-year record level of unemployment and inflation, a decline in real wages, the biggest tax burden since the war, the gutting of the passenger rail system and proposals to reduce the financial commitment of the Liberal government to equalization, health and post-secondary education.

One of the cruelest things about the current budget is that it penalizes Canadians who are trying to provide for their future and their families. It appears to penalize Canadians who adopt the noble and important concept of providing for the severely disruptive financial burden caused by unexpected dental or medical bills and incapacity due to illness.

It also penalizes the Canadian breadwinner who attempts to provide for himself and his dependants on retirement and after his demise. I am speaking again of the serious retrogressive step being taken by the government in taxing life insurance, dental and medical plans. In my opinion, this is a cruel and merciless tax grab that can cost the government more in social justice payments and unemployment insurance than it can hope to gain from these measures.

I do not often speculate about the future, but I do try to learn from the past. One of the things that I learned early on in Parliament was to read the budget papers that are filed with the budget. The Department of Finance analysis of the federal tax expenditures for individuals, which was tabled as one of the budget papers accompanying the November, 1981 budget, identified provisions of the tax system that in effect exclude certain types of income from tax, and the authors of the paper refer to these as tax expenditures because their economic effect makes them equivalent to spending programs.

In his budget speech of October 28, 1980, the minister noted that tax expenditures are expensive and it is incumbent on government to ensure that the incentives are effective and costs justified. In a prophetic statement, he went on to add that he wondered whether the economy might not be better served by a tax system with lower rates but with fewer and more selective incentives.

The paper tabled in the House describes tax expenditures as being composed of four different types. The first category includes cases where certain kinds of income are excluded. Examples are one half of capital gains, the full gain realized on the sale of principal residences, and various employment benefits, including interest free or low interest loans from employers. In this same category is included imputed rent on owner-occupied dwellings. That is right. The bureaucrats in the ivory towers of finance have identified the fact that Canadians living in the homes which they own pay no rent, and they feel that this is in fact a tax expenditure.

There are others. The second category deals with deduction tax expenditures and includes unemployment insurance contributions, tuition fees, gifts to the Crown, charitable donations, etc. Exemption tax expenditures include such things as married exemption and exemption for wholly dependent children. Tax credits tax expenditures is the final category and it includes refundable income tested child tax credits and tax credits for investment in machinery and equipment and buildings in certain sectors. I have by no means attempted to identify the very large number of tax expenditures which are discussed in the paper, but rather to attempt to identify the subject matter. Why is it important? It is important because it gives us an idea of the thinking of the senior bureaucrats in the finance department who are charged with the responsibility of making tax proposals to their minister. The November 1981 budget affected nine tax expenditures mentioned in this paper.

● (2130)

The paper admits that many of the tax expenditures serve important policy objectives and do so in an effective manner. It goes on to say that while some may wish that the budget had gone further in the direction of removing tax expenditures and lowering tax rates, it has to be recognized that any changes in tax expenditures must be part of an ongoing process of evaluation and review. It takes into account the prevailing economic circumstances and the capacity of the tax system to deal with large-scale changes. The paper admits that the existence of tax expenditures is important, but it also adds that for some purposes the tax system is a legitimate tool with which to address social and economic goals. In my opinion the ownership of one's home free of imputed rent is a worth-while social goal, and so too is the attempt of Canadians to provide for their dependants through life insurance and medical and dental plans. Tax exemptions for wives and children, tax credits to encourage industries to locate and provide jobs in areas that suffer from regional disparity and exemptions for those over 65 are all measures that are worthwhile and have grown up with our tax system.

I have no quarrel with government departments studying these tax expenditures, reviewing and evaluating them. My concern is that we have to be very much aware that many of the things we value highly and have come to take for granted are being examined by many of the people who have already identified some of the measures and convinced their minister to propose their elimination in his recent budget. It was an aroused opposition and an aroused Canadian public that forced the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to change his mind on some of these proposals, and we witnessed the spectacle of his public retreat. We are now witnessing a very significant delay by the minister on some of the other measures which are repugnant to a large number of Canadians.

I have recognized the philosophy reflected in the budget papers, and I believe that my colleagues in all political parties are becoming aware of it. A large number of letters from my constituents, and constituents of all Members of Parliament, have protested these changes and advocated, as I have tonight, a better way to go. I do try to learn from the past, and one of the lessons I learned long ago when I was growing up in New Brunswick, and one I think the minister should consider, is that while the wheels of justice may grind slowly, they grind exceedingly fine. Abraham Lincoln said you can't bring about private prosperity by discouraging thrift. You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong. You cannot help the wage earner by pulling down the wage payer. I hope my message tonight will be seen as a constructive attempt to suggest ways in which the government, by developing our country, can create more taxpayers and thus increase our revenues, reduce our borrowing both in the short and the long term, and eliminate the serious impediment to national growth represented by its high interest rate policy. I have tried to make constructive proposals to move in the direction of attaining that goal.

I hope also that the mandarins will get the message very clearly that this member, and hopefully this Parliament, will not permit the inclusion of imputed rent in any future tax policies or erosion of the noble and important concept that Canadians should be encouraged to provide for themselves and their dependants in so far as they are able, and that the state will treat them with generosity and respect in that worth-while endeavour, and not discourage them with a retrograde tax philosophy.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken on budget bills, particularly borrowing bills, many times in the House and I do not recall, in the nearly ten years I have been here, a borrowing bill on which there were two Conservative speakers in a row who really did not condemn us very strongly for borrowing money. It strikes me as being a very strange phenomenon, and I think perhaps the reason for it is that the money the government is seeking to borrow in the next fiscal year is considerably less than the authority given for the last fiscal year. In the last fiscal year we had authority to borrow something in the order of $14 billion, and of course it must be understood that the authority does not mean you borrow that much. It looks as if we will have borrowed about $12 billion of the $14 billion. This year the authority allows for about $6.6 billion, and given the $2 billion left over, we will be borrowing something less than $9 billion. That is the anticipation. So we can see that the borrowing authority in this bill is for about $5 billion less than last year.

Now I think it is fitting that we periodically have borrowing bills in the House. Usually it is once a year, but it has been more often when the government requires supplementary borrowing. This, of course, is in contrast with the United States where Congress puts an absolute limit on the national debt and the government can borrow up to that limit. In Canada, when we have to borrow additional sums, the government has to come to Parliament for approval. I think that is a worth-while activity and gives us a chance to debate how the money is spent, the merits or demerits of deficits and their size.

I think I would like to deal with two problems which are usually raised by more conservative speakers with regard to government indebtedness, expenditures and so on. The first, of course, is that government spending is wasteful. It is throwing money away and has a negative impact on the economy. The other is that almost all inflation stems from government spending. Those are the two myths which cloud the conservative mind.

First, I would like to deal with the nature of government spending. There are basically two areas where all governments spend their money. One is on the actual operations of government itself. In Canada, this accounts for roughly one third of all federal government expenditures, going for such things as the post office, national defence, and so on. The vast majority, two thirds of government expenditures, is in the area of what would be called transfers. These are transfers to the people in the form of pensions, family allowances, welfare and so forth. These are transfers to the provinces which, in turn, transfer the money to people and also pay their own costs of operation. They are transfers in terms of paying off debts, again to people. I think we should clearly understand the difference between those kinds of expenditures because it is the first expenditure, the cost of operating the government, that actually takes away from the economy of the country. It is the expenditure which takes goods and services out of the economy which could be used, otherwise.

The second category, the transfers, are moneys which are taken from one pocket and put into another pocket, with no net loss in between. The net costs are the costs of providing the service, and that is included in the first category. I think it is good that we understand this and that we look at these two kinds of expenditures.

I would first like to look at the transfer side, because it is a side which provides two thirds of the expenditures of the federal government.

I would particularly like to deal with one very current aspect, and that is the aspect of the transfers to the provinces and, in turn, to the municipalities. This is an area I think we should really consider. The transfers to the provinces in the year 1981-82 will amount to a little over $13 billion. Also, the transfer of tax points, which was done in the last few years, adds up to something a little over $18 billion. That is, almost one third of all the money that the federal government spends goes to the provinces. We should look at the nature of this transfer and the growth of the transfers themselves.

In 1959, the Government of Canada transferred $0.6 billion, or roughly $600 million, to the provinces. The figure which appears in the chart that I have, although it has gone up considerably since then, shows that it rose to $11.8 billion in 1979, which amounted to a 2,000 per cent increase, or 20 times as much. There are all kinds of factors there; but the fact is that the amount of money which was transferred from the federal government to the provinces in that period of time increased by 20 times. If one compares the growth of federal revenues with that of provincial revenues in that period of time, one finds that federal revenues rose from $5.8 billion to $43.5 billion, or an increase by seven and a half times. The transfers from the federal government to the provinces tripled, or grew three times as fast as the revenue of the federal government. Therefore, we see a significant shift from the federal government to the provinces. That is very significant when we talk about federal deficits and about the way we organize things in this country.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) speaks of his concern about the degree of this transfer, of his concern about the amount of money which is going from federal coffers to the provinces, and when he says we must keep this under some control, he is referring to the fact that those transfers have increased at almost three times the rate of the revenue in the federal government.

Let us look at the revenues of the federal government itself and of the provincial governments when we are dealing in terms of these transfers. In 1959, the Government of Canada had received approximately 52 per cent of all revenues in this country. The provinces and the municipalities received 48 per cent, which was very close to half and half. Half the money went to the federal government and half went to the provinces. It was very close.

Let us look at it in 1979, again which reveals the situation. By 1959, the amount of all government revenues had declined from 52 per cent to 33 per cent. It went from one half to one third of all revenues going to governments in this country. The provincial and municipal revenues rose from 48 per cent, again roughly half, to 67 per cent or two thirds. Therefore, we see this tremendous shift. From a point where federal and provincial revenues were almost 50-50, it went to the point where the revenues to the federal government amounted to roughly one third of all government revenues, and the provincial revenues amounted to two thirds.

I am not decrying this situation. There is a lot of logic to it. One of the very substantial reasons that provincial government revenues increased over this period was that we expanded our educational institutions considerably. In the latter part of the period, we expanded our medical and hospital facilities even more. These were two of the very large pieces in the extension of revenue.

It is extremely important that the revenue situation be understood by those who claim the federal government is destroying this country because it is taking so much out. In the beginning, I said that I wanted to speak about the two major classifications of expenditures of the federal government, the one being the expenditures on goods and services, or operations of government itself, and the other being the transfer to people in provinces and so on. I dealt with the second one.

I would like to deal with the first one for just a moment because it is important that we take a look at how extensive this is before we condemn government expenditures as being the great crime of our time. Again, I have a chart which illustrates expenditures from about 1953 to 1979. I would like to deal with what is called government expenditures on goods and services; that is, the operation of the government. This chart deals with the government expenditures as a percentage of the gross national product. We see that all government expenditures, as a percentage of gross national product, in current prices, rose from 1953, when it was about 17 per cent or 18 per cent, to approximately 24 per cent by 1978. There was a substantial increase of the portion of the gross national product. What really counts is what governments take away from the economy for goods and services, not transfers. When we break this down, we see quite a different picture if we consider what the federal government's expenditures were in terms of the gross national product, or goods and services. In 1953, the federal government spent approximately 10 per cent of the gross national product on goods and services. I am talking about the post office, national defence spending, the whole business. By 1978, the federal portion had dropped to about 6 per cent of the gross national product. When I look at these figures, I find it hard to believe that the great enemy of the people, our economy, our growth and what makes Canada work is federal government expenditures. That has not increased. It has decreased in terms of the GNP.

• (2150)

Mr. Nystrom: We have to deal with the Liberal Party.

Mr. McRae: I will deal with that on another occasion when I have time.

I would like to go to the second argument that is made basically by the Conservatives. I certainly do not hear it from the NDP. It goes something like this. Inflation is the great evil. Most inflation, and I have heard some people say all inflation, is caused by wasteful government spending. I want to deal with that. I do not have the figures as neatly put together as I would like. They are not available in a neat form.

I would like to deal with a myth. In Canada today credit is extended to Canadians in terms of mortgages, business debt, inventory debt, private debt, industrial debt. It amounts to roughly $250 billion. I do not know why the members of the NDP are so exercised. I am really making a point on their behalf. In round figures, the debt amounts to about $250 billion. The increase in government borrowing this year, given the $6.6 billion plus the $2 billion from the last authority which was not used, let ust say $9 billion in round figures, is less than 5 per cent of the total amount of credit extended in this country. I do not believe that 5 per cent is the single factor creating all the inflation in this country. It is only 5 per cent of the factor.

It is important that we see this in its true perspective. The major cause of inflation is not government debt. It is one cause, an expensive one, but it is not the major factor which is causing inflation.

In the few minutes remaining tonight, I would like to talk about my concerns in terms of the economy of the future, both the global economy and that of this country. There are many myths. I have dealt with only two.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member who is speaking would table the source of his statistics. I find them particularly interesting. Would he table the source of the figures he is using?

Mr. McRae: I can table some of them. I certainly do not have all the figures with me. I can table two or three of the items. I will try to put them together. I am pleased that people are interested. I think it illustrates some points.

I would now like to deal more in generalities. I believe I have put to rest two myths. One is that government expenditure is terribly wasteful, that the government is throwing money away. The other is that government debt is the cause of all inflation.

There is a more prevalent myth which affects the whole economic world at this point. It is what I call the myth of macroeconomic activity or action, solving problems today the way they were solved in the Keynesian era. I do not think that will work. Those monetary policies will not work. I do not believe a reduction of the money supply, increased rates and so on, are having the effects that we had hoped for. On the other hand, I do not think lower taxes and attempts to increase the fiscal means to meet increased demand will work either. There are all kinds of reasons for this. I do not have time to give them now. I would like to continue the next time this debate resumes.

I think we are all satisfied that the monetary policy is not working well. One reason is the side effects it creates. High interest rates are inflationary. A figure was given to me. I will have to qualify it a bit. If the exchange rate was the same as it was in 1975, the additional cost to this country for imports would be about $12 billion a year. If interest rates were the same as in 1975, the additional cost to this country would be approximately $23 billion a year. That factor creates some difficulties.

Let us go to the other side, the one which the NDP praises. Their notion is that by lowering taxes and thereby circulating more money, demand is increased, which really tends to be inflationary. It would not have the effect it used to have. The money goes into savings, luxury goods from foreign sources rather than creating the desired effects. With deficits of $10 billion to $12 billion a year, we should have solved our problem a long time ago, but it did not happen that way. We have to look away from macroeconomics and look at micro, although I do not like that term. We have to look at inflation in terms of structure, the ingredients and what tends to be inflationary. At one time it may be wages, and at another time, energy. This is what you look at. If you want to cure inflation, you determine the specific inflationary factor and deal with it, but not in a macro way. If I want to stimulate the economy, I would like to create more than that. I do not go to the side that you go to and say, "lower taxes". I say that we should go to a megaproject.

An hon. Member: You are a socialist.

Mr. McRae: If we go to the megaproject, we can easily measure the number of jobs which will be created according to the number of tons of steel required and the miles of pipe required, and so on.

I believe that this is the direction in which we should head. We should provide stimulation which is structural in nature, where a number of projects can be built, thereby creating jobs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR CANADA—(A) MANDATORY RETIREMENT AGE
(B) REQUEST THAT PILOT BE REINSTATED

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being labelled a one-issue member, I again rise on a matter of human rights.

It is now almost two years since I first began protesting and urging the government and members of this House to take all possible action to eliminate the discriminating practices of mandatory retirement which exist in Canada; practices which, needless to say, are denying many Canadians their right to work and contribute to the general wellbeing of our country.

At this point I do point out that, as mentioned, I have already spoken on this troubling concern on several occasions. My views are well recorded in Hansard. However, I will take this opportunity to express some further concerns as a result of my question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on February 11, 1982, regarding an order in council ordering Air Canada to reinstate Captain Ross Stevenson to his original position as an airline pilot.

As numerous members of the House are aware, the Supreme Court of Canada has recently ruled unanimously that Ontario municipalities cannot impose a mandatory retirement age of 60 on their firefighters, even if that had been negotiated into their collective agreement.

Considering this fact and considering the fact that this case is identical to the case of Captain Ross Stevenson, an Air

Canada pilot who was forced to retire because of the collective agreement between the Canadian Airline Pilots Association and Air Canada, there remains no doubt in my mind that the minister should introduce an order in council designed to reinstate Captain Ross Stevenson with Air Canada.

Granted, I can understand the Minister of Transport wanting to leave the decision to the union and the company involved, but I cannot understand how the minister can allow a double standard to exist among different groups of workers. This is clearly a time for leadership and the minister should be leading the way for equality within our system. Are we, as members of the House, to ignore that a discriminatory practice exists? I say no to this practice which denies to the individual a healthy self-image as a result of being actively involved in the work force.

The fundamental problem and main obstacle to equality for federal employees is Section 14(c) of the Canadian Human Rights Act which permits age discrimination and denies some Crown corporation employees the right to work beyond 60 years of age. Why is it not possible for all Canadians to work past 60 if they are capable and want to, especially when some are permitted to? Why should the others be discriminated against?

The Canadian Human Rights Act, Section 14(c), is preventing federal employees of Crown corporations from continuing their employment past what is called the normal retirement age. Why are we, as members of the House, allowing this cruel game of semantics to continue within our legal system? Are we not elected here to serve the Canadian people with equality and without discrimination?

Captain Ross Stevenson is a victim of this "fixed" game and three times now he has gone to court to change the rules of Section 14(c) to remove the discrimination which exists; spending thousands of his retirement dollars. Why should Mr. Stevenson be spending his money to do a job which is our responsibility? That responsibility is providing a non-discriminatory system of social justice. This policy of placing thousands of our productive work force "on the shelf" is not only expensive and wasteful, but extremely unjust.

It is morally wrong to reject efficient and willing workers because of their date of birth. All that is required is to delete Section 14(c) from the Canadian Human Rights Act, as recommended two years ago by both Senator Croll's special senate committee on retirement age policies and by the Canadian Human Rights Commission. It is on this note that I urge the House to bring equality to our system by deleting Section 14(c), and to put an end to the cruel semantics game of "normal retirement age" within our legal system.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first allow me to say that I, like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), have the greatest respect for the support the hon. member has given his constituent, Captain Stevenson, in this particular case. I know the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) is fully cognizant of the facts involved. In a former adjournment debate on November 19, 1981, he referred to previous discussions with the Minister of Transport, stating:

> The minister clearly stated that Transport Canada has no retirement age for pilots . . . Once the pilot has been issued the licence, he can continue to hold and exercise the privilege of licence, provided he can continue to meet the medical standards based on those set by ICAO—

He was referring to the International Civil Aviation Organization.

> —and pass periodic flight testing to demonstrate his competency.

These facts, as the hon. member stated, outline Transport Canada's position in the matter of mandatory retirement.

I also refer to the minister's comments of February 11, 1982, to remind the hon. member and the House that the issue of mandatory retirement is the subject of a collective agreement between Air Canada, the employer, and the Canadian Airline Pilots' Association, which negotiates on behalf of the pilots.

It should be noted that the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada last week does not apply to those employees under federal jurisdiction.

Since the federal Human Rights Commission has the case of Captain Stevenson under investigation and since Captain Stevenson himself is seeking leave to appeal a previous decision before the Supreme Court of Canada, it would not be appropriate to comment further at this time.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—(A) PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURED IN JAPAN (B) REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MEMORANDA

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, it should be interesting to hear what the parliamentary secretary has to say in response to my questions. My question was a very simple one, asking for three memos. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) took part in a decision to give jobs to Japanese and not to Canadians. I do not think that is the policy of this government, but it almost has to be, since that is the only motivation I can see.

The only company in the world which to date has made the type of equipment required for the Ridley Terminals Incorporated stacker-reclaimers at Ridley Island near Prince Rupert is Stephens-Adamson. We understand that company's bid was $1 million lower than that of the Japanese. Its delivery date was two months earlier. The minister says time is of the essence. The delivery could still beat that of the Japanese, even if Stephens-Adamson was given the order today.

Finally, with respect to guarantees in relation to technology and quality, at Westshore Terminals some years ago Stephens-Adamson was asked to guarantee a piece of equipment. The company gave a guarantee. There has been only one fault in that piece of equipment since and that was three years after the five-year guarantee period.

I am asking for three memos. Two are from the National Harbours Board. The first one, frankly, is full of falsehoods, and that is the reason I want to have a look at it, and the second is an internal memo. These memos have to do with the decision by Ridley Terminals to buy this Japanese equipment.

Ridley Terminals was created in December of 1981 after two years of playing around, trying to get this job under way.

● (2210)

I know that a letter of intent was given to the Japanese firm at least a week before the board of Ridley Terminals met to consider this decision. I sounds to me as if the intention was to give the contract to the Japanese from the beginning. I have been putting pressure on the minister for some six weeks about this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest to you it is only because I upset the plans that the letting of the contract was delayed for two and a half to three weeks. I should like to see it delayed even further.

The second item I want to deal with is the point made by the minister in his answer when I put the question regarding the memos. The minister said he had directed that the National Harbours Board should meet with the company to give a full explanation of the decision. That was just not done, Mr. Speaker.

I have a copy of a telex sent to the minister today in which the company says it had been informed of the arrangement to have the meeting, by his office, and had subsequently arranged a meeting in Vancouver on February 8 with the vice-chairman of the National Harbours Board, the acting chairman of Ridley Terminals, and the president of Swan Wooster, which is the engineering consulting company involved, before a full review meeting on February 9. The telex says that they were shocked when the meeting was refused, and more astonishing was that the offer to meet with them was on the condition that they would not use any information to pursue further evaluation. They state that they could not agree to this condition.

All I am looking for is three memos, Mr. Speaker. If the minister or his parliamentary secretary can convince me and Stephens-Adamson that in fact there was a fair evaluation of this contract, then they will hear no more about it—that will be the end of it. But we have not seen the memo, we have not had the meeting and, in fact, we have been stonewalled. The government obviously has something to hide and will not expose the real reason why it gave the contract to the Japanese. It will not explain why hundreds of thousands of man-hours, many many hundreds of days of work, have been given to a Japanese firm rather than to a Canadian firm.

The minister mentioned the percentage of Canadian content. The Japanese will not come anywhere near the 50 per cent content while the Canadian firm would have meant 96 per cent. There is a staff of close to 500 in a plant in Belleville which needs this kind of work. It seems to me that the production of three simple memos to explain to some 500 people why work is being taken from them and given to the Japanese is not too much to ask. If the minister and his parliamentary secretary have nothing to hide, then surely these memos should be made available. If they are not made available, then we must assume that the policy of this government is to give work to other countries.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that a considerable effort has been made to ensure a high degree of Canadian content in the Ridley Island coal terminal project. Of a total estimated cost of $230 million, over 80 per cent will be Canadian manufactured content.

In the particular case referred to by the hon. member, the purchase of two stacker-reclaimers, the winning bidder ensured 53 per cent Canadian content. As the minister indicated in his answer, this should not be taken as a reflection on the excellent reputation of the Canadian bidder Stephens-Adamson of Belleville, Ontario. Stephens-Adamson has had major recent sales in Canada and abroad, in the face of stiff international competition.

The minister accepted the decision of Ridley Terminals on grounds that this was the technical advice he was given. He was, of course, mindful of the critical timing and magnitude of the northeast British Columbia coal project, and hence the importance of having it proceed on schedule.

INDUSTRY—(A) CANADIAN CONTENT IN MANUFACTURE OF MINING EQUIPMENT
(B) CONTRACT AWARDED TO JAPANESE COMPANY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, the questions I raised with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) were supplementary to the ones asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis). They can be found on page 15046 of Hansard for Tuesday, February 16.

The main question I asked was basically why Canadian content of mining equipment for domestic use had fallen from almost 70 per cent in 1970 to a mere 29 per cent in 1980. In fact, if we look at the figures given by the minister two days ago we see that there would be only 27 per cent Canadian content in mining equipment; those are the figures of Statistics Canada for 1980.

There was a $167 million trade deficit in 1980 in mining equipment, and this includes a total importation of some $330 million worth of mining equipment. If we use the minister's figures, $372 million worth of imported mining equipment came into Canada. This is all part of Canada's current balance of trade deficit of $21 billion in manufactured goods, which is having a negative and devasting impact upon the economy and upon employment opportunities for young people in Canada.

There were two basic questions. Why has the Liberal government allowed this deterioration of Canadian content to such a rock-bottom level of only 27 per cent over the past decade? What specific plans does the minister or the government have now to correct this very regrettable situation?

The minister, known as the guru of industrial strategy, has been making promises for nigh on three years in the House now, but he has yet to produce one positive initiative or one shred of evidence that in fact this devastating trend in manufactured products, particularly in the mining sector, is being reversed. Of course we are talking about the kind of equipment which will be in great demand in the next decade as we develop megaprojects in mining, in particular, and in oil sands, coal and various minerals. We are talking about heavy machinery such as the stacker-reclaimers, to which my colleague referred a few moments ago, draglines, bucket wheels, rock drills, ore trucks, compressors, electrolyte cells for processing, crushers, roasters, flotation cells, process control equipment, and various types of conveyers. There is tremendous opportunity here for Canadian enterprise.

We note that our unemployment now exceeds 1.2 million people, that there is an unemployment rate of 17 per cent in the under 25 age group, and that we are experiencing unprecedented lay-offs. These lay-offs have led to massive applications for UIC benefits and claims, thus contributing to the deficit of the Government of Canada.

Since the November 12 budget there have been 2,200 lay-offs in the mining industry, with an anticipated 8,000 by the end of next summer. In British Columbia alone there have been 120,000 lay-offs, 9,000 of them represented by UI applicants in my own riding, and the number is growing at the rate of 1,600 per month. This $372 million worth of imported mining equipment would produce something in the order of 10,000 jobs per year for Canadian workers. When we look at the tremendous unemployment rate and the deterioration of our economy and compare it with future potential, we must conclude that something is basically wrong. The government opposite is absolutely inept, and there is no obvious answer as to why it wants to export jobs.

What does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have to offer besides platitudes? Last year he talked about a mining conference in Vancouver with industrial groups. Such a conference took place a year ago and there has been no progress. He talked about beginning a process; I ask, "Where is the action?" I hope in response the parliamentary secretary will tell the House what specific examples the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce can cite of increased opportunity for Canadian manufacturing to provide the very important machinery required in these industries. For example, I refer to the stacker-reclaimers, about which we heard, and the car dumpers being used in coal handling terminals on the west coast which are now being increasingly imported from offshore—the car dumpers from Britain, I gather, and the stacker-reclaimers from Japanese companies such as Mitsubishi.

Stephens-Adamson in Belleville could produce stacker-reclaimers containing, not 53 per cent Canadian content, but 96 per cent Canadian content and it underbid the Japanese for the Ridley Island stacker-reclaimer by $1 million with a low bid of $19.7 million. That Canadian firm has been denied the opportunity to produce jobs in Canada, specifically in the city of Belleville, Ontario. Instead we are choosing to export those jobs to Japan.

Fednav Com, which is the company set up to operate the terminal, was set up on a non-competitive basis. Its shareholders are well-connected with the Liberal Party in Montreal, I understand. They have no residence in British Columbia. For some reason, which smells of hanky-panky, the contract for this equipment is being let to a Japanese company, and we need to find out why. At Roberts Bank superport, Westshore Terminals, a British Columbia Crown corporation, has just let a contract for $10 million with another company in Japan, IHI, to supply stacker-reclaimers for that project. Here again, what is wrong with Canadians? Why are we dealing Canadian jobs off to the Japanese, and what kind of hanky-panky is going on here?

I understand that of the so-called 53 per cent Canadian content, much of the steel work is to be done in Korea under contract to some Canadian front company. That, Mr. Speaker, is not Canadian content at all.

Finally, I was led to believe that Stephens-Adamson was going to establish a fabrication plant in my riding in Richmond, British Columbia, where the steel and components would be assembled to provide the stacker-reclaimer for Ridley Island. My riding has lost that employment potential, thanks to the regressive policies of the Liberal government opposite. I think the House deserves a thorough and complete explanation of this atrocious situation.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), I am pleased to say that while it is true that Canada has been supplying a smaller share of its domestic market with mining equipment in recent years, this has been compensated to a large extent by growing exports of Canadian-made equipment. Accordingly, consideration of the issue of Canadian content in mining equipment should take into account both the total performance of the Canadian mining equipment industry, including its exports, and the future industrial benefits represented by projected large scale mining developments in Canada.

This trend of increasing exports, offset by rising imports, reflects a process of rationalization and specialization which the industry has been forced to undertake in order to remain competitive in the international environment.

Nevertheless, the rising share of the Canadian mining equipment market being supplied by imports does represent missed opportunities for Canadian equipment suppliers and a significant demand for new mining equipment, which is expected to result from major resource projects, will present many new opportunities for mining machinery companies.

Accordingly, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has undertaken a series of initiatives to assist Canadian manufacturers to seize these new opportunities. In this regard, follow-up initiatives to the Mining Opportunities conference held late last spring in Vancouver have led to more formal linkages between the procurement activities of mining firms and the marketing efforts of suppliers. The department has also established an office of industrial benefits in order to ensure that Canadian firms obtain maximum advantage from large new resource developments. As part of a planned export market strategy, we have assigned a priority position to mining equipment in several key markets of the world. In this regard, the department has provided assistance under our program for export market development—PEMD—to assist the marketing efforts of 13 companies in some 15 different countries.

• (2225)

Finally, we have also been active in assisting equipment firms to develop new products in order to meet the needs of mining firms in both Canada and abroad. Over $5 million in assistance has been provided to ten firms under the Enterprise Development Program, EDP, to develop a variety of advanced equipment ranging from coal slurry pumps to mine utility vehicles.

It is all right to pinpoint, Mr. Speaker, some of the problems this country has in the field of industrial development or the economy, but it is interesting to find out that action is being taken by this government which will be to the future benefit of the economy.

Mr. Siddon: Let's have the specifics.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 10.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INCREASES IN SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT MONEYS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, Indian people living on reserves in northern Manitoba face exceptionally high costs for basic goods and services, yet increases in the federal social development rates are immediately effective for off-reserve Indians living in urban centres but not effective until much later on reserves, especially in the northern part of the province. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government move immediately to ensure that increases in social development moneys become effective at the same time as corresponding increases in provincial welfare funding, and that these increases be made retroactive to December 18, 1981.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RESULTS OF PROVINCIAL BYELECTION IN ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, the Western Canada Concept Party, the Progressive Conservative Party, the Social Credit Party and the New Democratic Party collectively achieved only 9,436 votes in last Wednesday's byelection in the Alberta Olds-Didsbury constituency.

During the past calendar year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spent 36 days in the southern hemisphere and only four days in western Canada. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has bullied resource provinces about their constitutional right to ownership. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) listened to the views of the provinces on the Canadian Constitution only after being directed to do so by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is attempting to impose beef marketing boards when they are unacceptable in western Canada. The Liberals keep talking about a western development fund which does not exist, and double tracking everything except the railways. In view of these facts I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Prime Minister make a statement on motions to share with other political parties the secret of his political magic, that after such a dismal record the Liberals were able to double their vote from the last election to an amazing, unbelievable and overwhelming 130 votes in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury last Wednesday.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ONTARIO LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP ELECTION CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, this side of the House would like to offer its sympathies to the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) on the movement of six federal cabinet ministers to support not his brother but Sheila Kopps in the leadership race of the Ontario Liberals. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That this House express its condolences to the hon. member and his family for this obvious lack of faith in the philosophical beliefs of the family, and express our sincere hope that this move in no way predicts the demise of the ambitions of the hon. member for Willowdale, namely, his running for the leadership of the Liberal Party of Canada, so his world can unfold as it should.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSING

CALL FOR REDUCTION IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the consumer price index indicates today that home ownership costs have risen on an annual basis some 16.9 per cent and that rental costs have risen 7.8 per cent, much, if not all of this, attributable to exorbitant interest rates and a slowdown in home and apartment construction. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the government immediately bring forward legislation which will reduce mortgage interest rates to an affordable level and embark upon a major post-building program, in order to ensure that the projected need of 220,000 housing units will be met in the current year.

ACTION NEEDED TO PROTECT CANADIAN FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that in the last three months more than 6,400 workers lost their jobs in Canadian shoe plants and in related supply companies because of the government's incomprehensive, relaxed quotas on shoe imports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the government take immediate action to change this policy in order to protect this very important Canadian industry from foreign footwear imports, where such companies rely on subsistence wages paid to their employees to produce their products.

NEED TO REVITALIZE INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, today the Canadian housing industry faces an unprecedented crisis as new housing activity grinds to halt, workers are thrown out of jobs, and accommodation of all kinds is becoming increasingly hard to find. Therefore I move, in keeping with the recent call of ten government members, including two ministers of the Crown, and seconded by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling):

That this House urge the government to consider a program of short-term stimulative spending to revitalize this essential industry, and suggest that perhaps the $600 million loan at 10 per cent interest to the Soviet Union, which EDC is presently negotiating, might be a good place to find the money.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

POLAND—CANADIAN RESPONSE TO IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, over 55,000 ordinary Polish citizens felt the weight of martial law in Poland as a result of a recent crackdown of might and authority. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House show its displeasure to the continuation of martial law in Poland by following the lead of, first, the United States of America, then that of the United Kingdom and now that of West Germany, by imposing diplomatic and economic sanctions against that country.

CHALLENGE TO HOLD GENERAL ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The new cost of living figures just released show an 11.4 per cent January-to-January over-all price increase in Canada, with the highest in the country being my home province of British Columbia at 13.4 per cent. The energy component of that increase was up an incredible 24 per cent, and we have yet to face the next increase at the gas pumps on March 2. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That, since the Liberal government's economic policy, especially in housing and in energy, stands indicted as bankrupt and since they do not propose to do anything about it, the House today dare the Prime Minister to call a general election and go to the people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF LIBERAL PARTY'S RETURN TO POWER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Given that two years have passed since the Liberals weaseled their way back into power by promising a recession-free future, cheap energy, low interest rates, restraint in government spending, affordable housing and a reduction in unemployment, and further given that every single one of these promises has been shattered, along with the hopes and dreams of millions of Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That yesterday, February 18, be known as Disinheritage Day and, further, that Canadians fervently pray for the chance to throw those opposite into the political obscurity they so richly deserve.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS FOR BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As a result of the high interest, tight money restraint policies of the Liberal government, the number of unemployed has now ballooned to more than one million and the number of people applying for and drawing unemployment insurance benefits has increased dramatically. Since there has been little, if any, increase in the staff of the unemployment insurance organization servicing unemployment insurance claims, this has led to complaints from many parts of Canada that the time for processing claims has increased substantially. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration be instructed to take steps to increase the staff of the unemployment insurance organization so that claimants can get the quick processing of their claims to which they are entitled.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Ever since the last election the government's policies have been antagonizing the people of Canada. For example, the metric measurement system is being forced on them; the national energy policy is driving millions of investment dollars, vast amounts of equipment and expertise out of the country; the government's high interest rates are bankrupting businesses and farms; the budget is killing initiative and investment, destroying the hopes of farmers and businessmen to look after themselves and their loved ones in their old age and as well a million people are unemployed, etc., etc. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Liberals change their priorities forthwith because their present policies are leading to the break-up of this country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JURISDICTION OVER EAST COAST OFFSHORE RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The focus on offshore exploration on the Atlantic coast of Canada resulting from the disaster on the Ocean Ranger exposes the unfairness of the unilateral imposition by the Government of Canada of an arbitrary deadline for settlement of the federal-provincial dispute on jurisdiction, which has caused even greater rancour and friction. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House direct the Prime Minister to withdraw his deadline for settlement of the Atlantic offshore resources dispute which has precluded development of good faith and rational compromise in the negotiations to the detriment of all parties involved and at great cost to the people of Canada.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Some members of the New Democratic Party have been creating the illusion that they would not change the Crow rate if they were in government. Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan is quoted in the January, 1982, edition of Business Life as follows:

. . . it is very important to distinguish between the current level of the Crow rate and the principle of having a statutory rate. Some people take the position that there ought not to be a rate for the movement of grain set by the Government of Canada . . . We believe that a statutory rate absolutely must be retained.

Therefore, since it is clear that the policy of the NDP is not to keep the Crowsnest Pass rate, but some kind of a statutory rate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the NDP commit itself immediately to full public support of Liberal attempts to change the Crowsnest Pass rate so its public position reflects its real position, which is to abandon the Crow rate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

INDUSTRY

CONSOLIDATED COMPUTER INCORPORATED—REPORT OF INVESTIGATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board who last year indicated he requested his special assistant, Mr. W. A. B. Anderson, to prepare a report with respect to the government's loss of $125 million in Consolidated Computer Inc. Would the minister indicate if he has received the report, is it in any way critical of the government's handling of this matter, and what action may we expect in future?

Has he, for example, specifically asked the law officers of the Crown if any grounds for prosecution exist, and may we have the report tabled if he has already received it?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have indeed received the report. It has been reviewed by my colleagues in Treasury Board who commissioned the report in the first instance. I am bringing forward certain recommendations to my cabinet colleagues, I hope within the next several days, with respect to the report and its disposition.

PROPOSAL TO BUY GOVERNMENT'S SHARES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will put my next question to the Minister of Finance. It deals again with the Anderson report which we have a copy of, and which the minister has just confirmed he has received.

As the Minister of Finance undoubtedly knows, Mr. Anderson pointed out that Department of Finance officials spoke glowingly of the Consolidated Computer Company, and in fact about a year and a half ago Mr. John McDonald-Brown, a known Liberal at all levels in the province of Nova Scotia, became president and chief executive officer of that company at a salary of $110,000 annually. He was also a director and board member of the Enterprise Development Board.

I ask the minister is he aware that Mr. Anderson pointed out in his report that Mr. Brown in turn submitted a formal application, on behalf of himself and some associates, to purchase the government's shares? At that point, therefore, Mr. Brown was simultaneously a member of EDB which controlled the shares being offered for sale, the chairman and president of the company whose shares—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Stevens: —were up for sale, and an applicant to purchase the shares. Is the minister aware of this and how—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Stevens: —can he explain that to the House?

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he should not be elaborating at that length and that he should make his question a bit briefer.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, is the minister aware of the statement made by Mr. Anderson, and has he any explanation of why there was that possible conflict as revealed by Mr. Anderson?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter raised by the hon. member.

INQUIRY OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister if he is aware of the revelations made in the Anderson report and, in view of the fact that the report makes it very clear that there has been gross incompetence on the part of his ministers, has he asked for a full explanation as to why there was such incompetence, and specifically for the resignation of at least the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not yet seen the report. I understand it was only tabled in Treasury Board yesterday and it will take a little time for the ministers to analyse it.

TRUST COMPANY SHARES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who will know that in this mess there were two corporations, one called Financeco, and a subsidiary, where one share was held by the National Trust Company as trustee for three Toronto hospitals. I would ask the minister if he would name the hospitals, and will he tell us if there are any other corporations created by the Enterprise Development Board or any other board wherein hospitals are named as nom de plumes for shares, or where trust companies hold the shares. This is done to avoid proper disclosure in financial statements. It is a ruse and a deceitful method of burying losses and guarantees made by the government for business purposes.

• (1120)

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I think it is unfair and prejudicial to make these kinds of accusations in the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: —on the basis of a report which we commissioned with respect to the affairs of Consolidated Computer because we were interested in getting at the facts to try to determine what went wrong with respect to the business corporation and to ensure that steps were taken to prevent this kind of thing from happening again.

In response to a question in this House some time ago, I indicated the purpose of the investigation. The investigation has now been completed. A report has been tabled in the Treasury Board, as the Prime Minister has indicated, and recommendations will be made to my colleagues. I spoke in this House at an earlier point in response to a question last year. At that time I said that I had no objection to the results of this report being tabled in the House. However, my colleagues will have to look at the report. I hope to make a statement some time in the course of next week, or certainly in the very near future.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTERIAL ACTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my supplemental question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is now entering the chamber.

Mr. Stevens: Aha!

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister will know that he was fully briefed, upon taking his responsibilities as minister in 1980, concerning the problems of Consolidated Computer and, of course, Financeco and Finecomp Inc. He will know that he was advised that the companies were in very serious difficulty and that there was that clear ruse whereby one company was supposedly separate from the other company when in fact they were both managed and controlled by the Enterprise Development Board. The Enterprise Development Board was banker, guarantor and manager of both corporations.

Will he advise this House why he did not immediately order a consolidated balance sheet? Why did he allow the ruse of two separate companies to continue? Why did he continue the deceit? Why did he not immediately terminate the matter and terminate the employees who created this deceitful situation? Why are these employees still working for the Enterprise Development Board despite the advice they have given to the government, and despite the clear conflicts of interest?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, when I became minister I found certain situations in place which had been put there as a result of actions under previous governments. Over the period I was minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —with the assistance of my colleagues I took decisions which have led to the matter being wound up and brought to an end. I think that is the important part.

Mr. Siddon: $100 million worth!

Mr. Gray: As the situation evolved, the matter was brought to an end after study by myself and my colleagues. We are certainly learning from that experience in terms of future action and future re-organization.

Mr. Stevens: Oh, $125 million!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT IMPOSE WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Figures which were released today show that home ownership costs are up by 16.9 per cent; transportation costs are up by 16.9 per cent; and energy costs are up by a whopping 24 per cent. Considering these horrific figures, and also the fact that, for each of the past three years, wage and salary increases of workers in Canada have fallen behind the rate of inflation, will the Prime Minister take this opportunity to state, in clear-cut terms, that the Government of Canada will not impose wage controls in any form on any group of workers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You put them there!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the figures I have indicate that the 12-month rise from January, 1981, stood at 11.4 per cent, which is down from the 12-month rise from—

Mr. Broadbent: Miscalculation!

Mr. Trudeau: —the month before. Therefore I do not think this is great news, but it is not the bad news which the hon.

member is putting forth. The cost of living is coming down. The hon. member should preface his question by stating that.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister would read his briefing book a little more carefully he would find out that there was a slight drop in food prices, because the period of survey which was done—

Mr. Lalonde: For what?

Mr. Broadbent: —for food prices, was very limited. However, I spoke to him about energy prices, transportation prices and housing. Now will he answer the question? The incomes of workers, during each of the past three years, have risen less rapidly than cost increases. Even the Minister of Finance has said in recent weeks that workers have not been causing inflation. Will he take the opportunity to make it clear that the Government of Canada will not impose, on any group of workers, a system of wage controls?

• (1125)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we have no intention of imposing price and wage controls.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO INCREASE HOUSING SUPPLY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I welcome that assurance. Maybe now we can get a commitment from the government to move on prices which are actually affecting Canadians. I refer to housing in particular. Since the cost of home ownership went up almost 17 per cent, and considering that the banks, in spite of a slight decline in interest rates, are still increasing mortgages, and considering there is a great shortage of housing, will the government do two things—force the banks to bring down the level of mortgages, and take steps to increase the supply of housing across Canada, which would put Canadians to work and provide homes for those Canadians who need them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the minister responsible for housing said to the House yesterday—perhaps the hon. member was not listening—one way of increasing the supply of housing would be to put through this House the bill which will increase the supply of housing. I appeal to members opposite to co-operate with us, if they are sincere in saying that this country needs more housing.

AIR CANADA

USE OF FRENCH—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and has to do with the use of French in air navigation.

Notwithstanding an unfavourable judgment by the Superior Court, yesterday, the Minister of Transport announced that Canada would continue to act as though the Deschênes judgment were still valid. To what extent can the minister give us the assurance that the government will maintain yesterday's commitment, and would he go so far as to ask the President of Air Canada to make a similar statement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I find this question somewhat surprising, but I was expecting it and have asked the President of Air Canada to write to me about this. The letter is now under way and as soon as it arrives I shall have a copy of it sent to my honourable colleague.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker.

Considering that the Minister of State for Quebec affairs has maintained that with this judgment, there were two courses of action open to the government, namely, the Attorney General or the Commissioner of Official Languages could bring the matter before the Supreme Court, or Parliament could decide to amend the Official Languages Act, my question is: could the minister inform us today which course of action his government intends to take?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Minister of State): Madam Speaker, in the first eventuality, respondents have 30 days to decide whether to appeal, so they must be allowed this time to decide.

In the case of amendments to the Official Languages Act, the hon. member is probably aware that the Commissioner of Official Languages has proposed a number of changes in the commission's annual reports, and the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House which examines the reports would also have an opportunity to make recommendations which would certainly be considered by the cabinet, and the government would advise the House, as appropriate, of any action it intends to take.

PROPOSED SALE OF CANDU REACTORS TO MEXICO

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Will the Prime Minister advise the House on the progress of Candu sales in Mexico?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, my recollection is that the bids were to be put in by February 1, that Canada has put a bid in and, if my recollection is correct, a decision will be made some time in July or August—I hear the minister saying September. We will hope for the best, and perhaps encourage the hon. member to go there and flaunt the advantages of the Candu system which, as the hon. member knows, is the best in the world. We might even arrange for him to ride a horse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROLE OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): I appreciate the Prime Minister's suggestion. Can the Prime Minister advise the House if the "G.G." is now one of his salesmen for Candu reactors?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know to whom the hon. member is referring.

Mr. Paproski: His Excellency the Governor General, who will be visiting Romania. Is he now one of the salesmen for the Government of Canada, and will he be selling Candu reactors? Is that his job?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I imagine it would be against the rules of the House to draw the monarchy into this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

OIL AND GAS COMPANIES IN RECEIVERSHIP

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This past week four more Lloydminster area oil field service companies have gone into receivership, throwing into jeopardy some 150 jobs. Many others are facing bankruptcy unless there are significant changes to the National Energy Program. Would the minister tell the House what he plans to do about this very serious situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw to the hon. member's attention the fact that the forecast expenditures by the oil and gas companies in Canada during 1982 will be significantly higher than they were last year, and even higher than they were in 1980. It is foreseen that the oil and gas companies' expenditures during the course of this year will increase by over 39 per cent—

Mr. Andre: Would you like to bet on that?

Mr. Lalonde: —while the expenditures for all companies in Canada would be around only 21 per cent. It is again quite clear that the expenditures in the oil and gas field will be leading the industrial sector in this country during 1982.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has refused to answer the question I put to him. That will be noted.

SHUTDOWN OF OIL WELLS IN LLOYDMINSTER AREA

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, could the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House why Husky Oil, which is located in the Lloydminster area, has been forced to take 300 wells out of production since the National Energy Program came into existence, thereby throwing people out of work and jeopardizing our bid to attain oil self-sufficiency? When will the minister realize the harsh impact of the National Energy Program and withdraw it, or change it substantially so we can again move toward achieving self-sufficiency and putting Canadians to work?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that during the course of last year, previous to the agreement which was reached with the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the government of Alberta decided to cut back production significantly. The cutbacks went as high as 120,000 barrels a day. Much of the impact of that cutback fell on the wells like the ones referred to by the hon. member because those wells were producing heavier crude, which was mixed with the light crude—

Mr. Mazankowski: That happens to be in Saskatchewan.

An hon. Member: You have the wrong province.

Mr. Lalonde: —which was mixed with the light crude produced by Alberta.

An hon. Member: You have the wrong province.

Mr. Lalonde: This has resulted in many of those wells not yet being back in production.

Mr. Andre: You know that is not true.

An hon. Member: You have got the wrong province.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lalonde: We expect some of that production to come back as the demand picks up but, as the hon. member also knows, there has been a significant decline in the demand for oil products in the course of the last year, not only in Canada but in all western countries.

Again, I want to draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that expenditures in the oil and gas field during the course of 1982 will be close to 40 per cent higher than they were last year.

Mr. Nielsen: In a pig's ear.

FINANCE

ISSUANCE OF TAX INFORMATION SLIPS BY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has been brought to my attention that a number of life insurance policyholders have received information slips for the 1981 tax year indicating that they must pay tax on interest income earned on their life insurance policies.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have one of those also.

Mr. Burghardt: These policyholders have been informed by their life insurance companies that they are required to pay tax on this income because of the tax changes contained in the November 12 budget. Would the minister please indicate if the budget is indeed the cause of these slips being sent to policyholders?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that there is no provision in the budget which would necessitate sending out taxation slips affecting the year 1981. If that is happening, it is either as a result of a misunderstanding of the impact of the budget by the insurance industry, or a misunderstanding on the part of policyholders.

INDUSTRY

PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN FOOTWEAR PRODUCERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On December 1 last year the government removed the import quotas on leather shoes. I think we all know about the lay-offs and tremendous hardship faced by that industry across the country. We also know about the joint appeal by the trade unionists representing the workers and the industry that we need some kind of protection for the Canadian industry, otherwise we will be at the mercy of offshore prices in a few years. Will the minister tell the House whether or not he will accede to the wishes of the workers and the industry that at least half of the Canadian domestic market be protected for the Canadian producers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the policy which we announced last fall reflected the findings of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal which said that our industry was able to meet competition from developed countries, including state trading countries. These were the sources of most of our imports of leather shoes. Therefore the policy in question indicated that we would not only continue the quota protection we had previously on non-leather footwear, but we would extend that to the kinds of non-leather footwear which had not previously been covered. But as the hon. member pointed out, we would not be continuing the quota system on leather footwear.

An hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Gray: At the same time, we created a $17 million fund to assist in the modernization and increased competitiveness of the total footwear sector to be administered by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. It is certainly our intention to have a modern, stronger footwear sector, with all that means for the workers in that sector.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gray: With respect to representations which were made yesterday, as I said, we certainly will be willing to consider them.

Mr. Nystrom: I simply wanted to know whether the minister will reconsider the position since we are having trouble meeting competition. We have some real problems in that industry.

LEATHER FOOTWEAR IMPORTS

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary question. Three weeks ago, on January 27, the task force on the footwear industry in Quebec, whose members represent labour, the industry and the government of Quebec, sent a telex to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion requesting restrictions on imports of leather footwear. However, the Minister failed to reply. Why?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all, I should point out that the government wants to help the footwear industry and its workers to compete on international markets, not only through our quota system but also through our modernization program. We intend to meet spokesmen for all areas of the industry and to continue the discussions started last December on the aspects of the situation mentioned in the telegram. Only yesterday, several of my cabinet colleagues had a very useful meeting with senior spokesmen for the industry.

EDUCATION

FISCAL AGREEMENTS WITH QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the various statements made by Quebec with respect to fiscal arrangements and post-secondary education, could the Secretary of State tell us exactly what the government's official policy is with respect to renewal of fiscal arrangements and whether it also concerns post-secondary education, and could the minister inform us whether or not the Canadian government intends to get involved in the activities of the Quebec Department of Education at this level, as was said recently by the Quebec Minister of Education?

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada is that we are not totally satisfied with the arrangement which has existed since 1977 for block transfers to the provinces in relation to post-secondary education. At the first ministers' meeting the Prime Minister made an offer to the provinces that, despite that dissatisfaction, we would continue block funding transfers for at least two more years and that we would augment the amount by some 12 per cent a year, if the provinces in turn would agree not to lessen their percentage share of the cost of education further. In no way is that, or the desire to talk about national objectives, which was also expressed by the Prime Minister at that time, an intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. We have no intention and no desire to participate in the actual direction of post-secondary education, and we have totally recognized the traditional primacy of the provinces in that regard.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY RESPECTING INVESTIGATION OF CONVICTED MURDERER CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On July 27 the Surrey RCMP filed a warrant for the arrest of Clifford Olson. On the twenty-eighth Clifford Olson was drinking while driving down King George Highway with another young man in the car and two teenage girls. He did a U-turn on the highway and was apprehended and taken into custody. On the twenty-ninth he was released, even though the original warrant issued two days previously had not been served, and two days later the charges were dropped, even though he had been under surveillance because he had been linked to the murders. Why?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, that question has been asked of the attorney general of British Columbia, and he has given an answer to it which I think should stand. I agree with the answer he gave. I asked the Commissioner of the RCMP to review the investigation of Clifford Robert Olson, and he confirmed for me recently, as I indicated to the House, that he was satisfied with the management of the operation, including that particular aspect.

STATEMENT MADE BY PROSECUTOR

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General wants to be the senior officer for the RCMP, but he does not want to be accountable. He either should give up the responsibility and therefore not be accountable, or do the reverse.

When Clifford Olson appeared in court on July 31 the prosecutor claimed that he knew nothing of the 92 convictions of Clifford Olson or of the outstanding warrants for his arrest. Why did he not know about that?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I was not aware of the statement made by the prosecutor. If the hon. member will give me details of his allegation of what the prosecutor said, I will look into them and try to confirm them.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

ABANDONMENT OF BRANCH LINES—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. While it is based on his announcement of February 8 with respect to proposed changes in the Crow rate, my question is not specifically about that, so I am not looking for a prorated Crow-rated answer.

In light of the fact that there is across the prairies a large number of Canadian Transport Commission hearings into the abandonment of railways, at which the railway companies make their cases primarily on the basis of dollar loss, and in view of the fact that if the minister's intentions respecting changes to the Crow rate are realized the principal evidence upon which the railway companies make their applications for abandonment will no longer apply, will the minister cancel or postpone all CTC announcements with respect to branch line abandonment until after the legislation he is intending to introduce has been dealt with?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not think I should do that. The system is a statutory one. There are a number of branch lines coming up for abandonment or otherwise at the moment. The rate to replace the Crowsnest rate has not been determined yet in specific terms, so I think I should let the system operate as it does normally.

By the way, I do not think one should overdramatize what the hon. member is talking about now because 83 per cent of the whole railway branch line system of western Canada is still in the basic network, guaranteed to the year 2000. We are talking about only 17 per cent. I know this is very important to some individuals, but one should not give the impression of dramatic negative prospects the hon. member has tried to create.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I am sure the minister knows there could be no overdramatizing to the people of those communities who may lose their rail service.

DISMANTLING OF RAILWAY FACILITIES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, if the minister cannot do what I asked in my first question, would he consider, in all those cases in which the CTC does recommend abandonment, issuing instructions to elevator companies and to railway companies not to dismantle any facilities until after the debate on the Crow rate has taken place in Parliament, and will he put in place a right of appeal so that the communities along those lines which were suggested for abandonment can resubmit their cases on the basis of new evidence, where in fact the new arrangement may very well make it such that the railway companies are not losing money? Can that right of appeal be guaranteed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not really think I have to do that because this is part of the system. Every one of these decisions of the CTC is subject to appeal to the minister anyway, but I will look into this because this is a possibility. I am obviously not trying to create drama. I am obviously trying to make people feel as comfortable as possible in these changing circumstances. I will give a lot of attention to the suggestion made by the hon. member this morning.

HANDCUFFING OF PRISONERS TRANSPORTED IN AIRCRAFT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Some time ago I had occasion to travel in an RCMP aircraft which was going around from settlement to settlement picking up prisoners. As the prisoners were put onto the place, they were handcuffed. In one instance this included a 16-year-old girl who had been convicted of a minor liquor offence and could not be considered dangerous at all.

The minister will recall that I spoke to him privately about this, about a year ago. I wonder if he could tell us now whether those handcuffing regulations are still in force on RCMP aircraft, because with normal commercial carriers the policy is the other way around; prisoners are not handcuffed unless absolutely necessary.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I have also travelled on those planes transporting suspects and inmates.

An hon. Member: Handcuffed?

Mr. Kaplan: No, I was not handcuffed, and neither were several of the inmates who were on board. I will look into the particular circumstances of the 16-year-old girl. Obviously I have no knowledge of that, but it is not a standard requirement that all suspects be handcuffed or that all inmates be handcuffed on those trips.

FARM CREDIT ACT

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE APPEAR BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance should know that the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture is presently considering Bill C-88, the amendments to the Farm Credit Act. That is an important bill, and it holds a great deal of potential. However, that potential will not be maximized unless we get certain commitments, not from the Minister of Agriculture but, rather, from the Minister of Finance. In the interest of the agricultural industry, would the Minister of Finance be prepared to make an appearance before the Standing Committee on Agriculture?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the bill is in the competent hands of the Minister of Agriculture, I see no need for going before the committee.

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I am disappointed that the Minister of Finance does not understand the bill, and I am disappointed that the Minister of Finance does not care enough to give an hour to the agricultural industry.

BUDGET PROVISIONS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, there is a second important reason why the minister should make an appearance. In view of the confusion, I wonder if the minister would reconsider his position and appear before the standing committee in an effort to demonstrate that his new forward-averaging provision in the budget fully replaces the income-averaging annuity contracts and the capital gains reserve which were two important measures that were in place prior to his budget.

● (1150)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that is a very good point. I have argued that the new forward-averaging system is, in some cases, more beneficial to farmers than the replaced income-averaging annuity contract. We have been able to make that case to individual farmers and to various groups. When the tax bills go before the committee, then we will have a full opportunity to discuss these matters and to give hon. members all the information so that they can then argue the point.

RAILWAYS

SHORTAGE OF ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the lay-off of 700 employees of a railway car plant in Nova Scotia next month. The transportation law of Canada requires the railroads to provide suitable accommodation for all traffic offered, yet there are not enough cars to ship potatoes, there are not enough cars to ship livestock, there are not enough cars to ship fresh fruit and vegetables, and there are not enough cars to ship grain. Under the authority that he has in the law, will the minister require the railroads to begin systematically placing orders for the railway rolling stock that is now in short supply so that these lay-offs may be prevented?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend has cases that he wants to bring to my attention, even if they are not terribly well documented, I will take them to the railways immediately and try to obtain justification for the lack of car capacity. Without that, I really cannot see what I can do.

With regard to the last part of the member's question which I understood to mean that he wanted some more activity in the car construction industry, I can reassure him on that because the commitment the government made for the purchase of 1,280 hopper cars will be implemented very, very soon.

GOVERNMENT ORDER FOR HOPPER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, very very soon is not soon enough. The minister has been telling us about these 1,280 hopper cars for quite some time but they still have have not been ordered. Will the minister assure the House and the workers scheduled for lay-off in Trenton, Nova Scotia, that the orders for them will be placed forthwith and that orders will be staged for the other 4,000 cars required, so that no one is laid off until all the 5,300 grain hopper cars that are needed are built? Will the minister move on this matter immediately, so that lay-offs do not occur?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is a good reason for the short delay. At the moment we are considering whether to lease the cars, or buy and pay for them now. A good discussion is going on about this and there is justification for it. If we pay for them now, the cost will have to be deducted from the $1.35 billion assigned for the purpose by the Minister of Finance, and so there will be less money for other purposes. It is a good point of debate which we will finish with soon and then make a decision.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL MOBILITY OF LAWYERS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. One of the most crucial issues of concern to the Canadian legal profession is that which deals with the national mobility of lawyers. It has become apparent that a whole new approach is required to allow Canadian lawyers to move with ease from province to province, as is the case with doctors.

Can the Prime Minister advise of any discussions currently under way, or which are planned among the various bar societies, or at the level of law schools, aimed at reciprocity of membership for practising lawyers transferring from one provincial bar to another, or whether a common national examination for graduate law students is under consideration similar to the Canadian Medical Council qualifying examination in medicine, in order to facilitate the mobility of lawyers in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any hard discussions between the various provincial bars or in the Canadian Bar Association itself. I shall have to report the hon. member's concern on this matter to the Minister of Justice.

I would remind the hon. member, however, that when we discussed the constitutional problem with the provinces, one of our concerns was precisely that shared by the hon. member. We insisted on the importance of having a mobility clause in the Constitution with a view to permitting Canadians of different occupations in society to have the mobility within the Canadian union. Of course, we were partly successful and partly unsuccessful. I share the hon. member's concern in general, and I will report the hon. member's question in particular to the Minister of Justice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—POSSIBLE EMBARGO ON SHIPMENT OF URANIUM TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In order to demonstrate Canada's extreme concern regarding the acceleration of the repression of human rights in Poland, will the minister consider the application of sanctions on the export and transfer of uranium hexafluoride and other elements of the nuclear fuel cycle to east bloc nations?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question of sanctions against Poland with respect to the present situation there is under consideration by the cabinet. I hope to be able to make an announcement in due course.

Oral Questions

SAFEGUARDS AGAINST NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION AND ACCIDENTS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's recent condemnation of the Soviet Union I would have expected a simple sanction would be rather obvious.

In view of the implications of last year's United Nations' report on nuclear proliferation and control of the nuclear fuel cycle processes, which suggested that proliferation of potential accidents during transfer was inevitable if strong measures were not implemented immediately, has the minister succeeded in his efforts to ensure that nuclear proliferation or accident in transfer will not occur.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question of spillage during nuclear transfer is a very serious one and a very technical one to which the appropriate bodies of this government address themselves.

As to the political aspect of non-proliferation, that is a foremost concern of the government. We have been active in this field in the last year in particular, trying to ensure the highest possible standards of non-proliferation. I may say that there is no country in the world that has higher standards than Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET UNITED STATES PRESIDENT TO DISCUSS ACID RAIN CONTROLS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In a few days Canada and the United States begin the next series of negotiations toward a bilateral accord on acid rain. There is every indication in Washington that the United States negotiators are not at all interested in bringing those negotiations to an early and successful conclusion. Given the fact that little progress is in sight, will the Prime Minister seek a meeting with the President of the United States to press Canada's case directly with him in this most important area?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is correct in saying that the next phase of negotiations will begin on February 24. The federal government has specific and important proposals to place before the United States administration at that time. I think the next necessary step is to see what reactions those proposals receive.

REASONS FOR MINISTER'S VIEW

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister of the Environment has been giving the House very Pollyanna reports on the state of Canada's negotiations with the United States on acid rain. What is his reason for such optimism, especially in light of the fact that the United States government has slashed the budget of the environmental protection agency, has signalled its intention to emasculate the clean air act in that country, and has appointed lackeys of industry to all of the most important environmental posts? What is the rationale for the optimistic view that the minister continues to present to the House?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has just confused my cheerful personality with Pollyanna. I am neither optimistic nor pessimistic. These are difficult negotiations. We are certainly not optimistic that they will be concluded successfully, but neither are we pessimistic that they will inevitably fail. There are issues of dispute between the two countries in relation to these matters. So far the United States has maintained and committed itself to the negotiating schedule which was originally presented. The negotiations are on track. There are still questions to be resolved. There is no need for excessive pessimism, and there is no reason for excessive optimism.

AN ACT RESPECTING ACCESS TO INFORMATION ON GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-648, respecting access to information on governor in council appointments.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the officers and directors of Crown corporations, boards, commissions and agencies constitute a parallel public service, and the Canadian public has a right to know the salaries and positions these people enjoy. This is especially important when public bodies are established to carry out policies of government, and even more so where the government or a minister is the shareholder. Since there was evidence yesterday before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that it was government policy which was prohibiting the promulgation of that information, I think it is doubly important that the public be provided with the means for easy access to such information which should be within the public domain.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,096, 3,454, 3,514, 3,568 and 3,613.

ALLOCATION OF SQUID CATCH TO JAPAN

Question No. 2,096—Mr. McGrath:

Was there an allocation of 17 metric tons of squid made to Japan last year and, if so (a) for what reason (b) what did Canada receive in return?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes. Japan received 2,250 tonnes of squid from the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization and 14,750 tonnes from Canada for the 1980 season.

(a) Pursuant to treaty obligations and the consensus at the Law of the Sea Conference, Canada is obliged to allow other countries to fish in Canadian waters for fish surplus to Canadian requirements. Our general policy in the distribution of squid which Canadians cannot catch has been to allocate it to countries that consume it, as opposed to giving it to countries that simply compete with Canada on the world squid market. The Japanese are the world's chief squid consumers and Japan is far and away the major importer of squid from Canada. This allocation was supported unanimously by provincial and industry representatives.

(b) In return for the squid allocation to Japan, the Japanese government made undertakings to ensure that a satisfactory trading relationship in squid products would be maintained between the two countries. In 1980, more than 20,000 tonnes of Canadian caught squid was sold to Japanese interests. These sales represented more than 20 per cent of Japan's 1980 squid and cuttlefish imports. Canadian squid sales in 1979 represented only 10 per cent of Japan's imports.

AUDITS OF MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Question No. 3,454—Mr. Cossitt:

Was an examination made or will one be made of demand issue vouchers issued in the past several years at Millhaven Institution near Kingston and, if so, is there any evidence indicating purchases were made with funds taken from categories in which the purchases would not ordinarily belong?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

Yes, the following audits were carried out:

At Millhaven Institution: October, 1978, by the Audit Services Bureau; November, 1981, by the Inspector General's Branch of the Correctional Service of Canada.

At Regional Headquarters, Kingston, Ontario: December, 1980, by the Inspector General's Branch. As Ontario has a centralized accounts payable function, the financial records of all institutions in the region were checked at this time, including Millhaven.

Yes, evidence was found of purchases made through normal budget transfer procedures. No irregularities were found in the system or in the processing of demand issue vouchers.

ACCREDITATION OF PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 3,514—Mr. Friesen:

1. Which penitentiaries have applied for accreditation to the Commission on Accreditation for Corrections and, in each case (a) how many times and on what dates (b) did the Board of Commissioners render a decision and, if so, what was it?

2. Is it the policy of the Solicitor General to make public the report of the auditors who investigated the penitentiary on behalf of the commission?

3. What is the cost to the Correctional Service to seek accreditation for each penitentiary?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. (a)

Commencement Date	Institution
December 5, 1978	Springhill Institution, Springhill, N.S.
December 5, 1978	Dorchester Penitentiary, Dorchester, N.B.
January 11, 1980	Westmorland Institution, Dorchester, N.B.
January 11, 1980	Matsqui Institution, Abbotsford, B.C.
January 11, 1980	Mission Institution, Mission, B.C.

April 6, 1981	Federal Training Centre, Laval, Quebec
April 6, 1981	Rockwood Institution, Stony Mountain, Manitoba
April 6, 1981	Saskatchewan Farm Institution, Prince Albert, Sask.

The initial activities of three of the above institutions were postponed, and they began the preparation of self-evaluation reports again on April 6, 1981. The institutions are:

Prison for Women,
Kingston, Ontario

Ste-Anne-des-Plaines Institution,
Ste-Anne-des-Plaines, Quebec

Westmorland Institution,
Dorchester, N.B.

(b) Yes. Three institutions have thus far reached the final stage of the accreditation process and received accreditation awards. The three facilities are:

Springhill Institution,
Springhill, N.S.
Accredited on September 27, 1979

Dorchester Penitentiary,
Dorchester, N.B.
Accredited on April 18, 1980

Millhaven Institution,
Bath, Ontario
Accredited on May 21, 1981

2. No. It is neither the practice nor the policy of the Commission on Accreditation or its clients to release details of reports as they deal with all procedural aspects, including security and crisis response. However, decisions on accreditation, both positive and negative, are disclosed.

3. The actual cost of auditing an institution is based on $750 (U.S.) per consultant auditor day. To audit an institution, three auditors normally require three days to assess the facility, at a total cost of $6,750 (U.S.). In addition, staff time is required to complete the process in the institution.

CULTURAL AND TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION AGENCY

Question No. 3,568—Mr. Bosley:

1. Was a conference of ministers of culture held in Benin from September 14 to 19, 1981 and, if so, which member countries attended?

2. Was an action program agreed to by the ministers and, if so (a) what was it (b) what commitments did Canada make to it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. Yes, the first conference of ministers of culture of member countries of the Cultural and Technical Co-operation Agency (CTCA) was held at Cotonou, in the People's Republic of Benin between September 14 and 19, 1981. Member countries of the cultural and Technical Co-operation Agency in attendance included: Belgium, Benin, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Comoro Islands, Ivory Coast, Djibouti, Dominica, France, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau, Upper Volta, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Mali, Mauritius, Mauritania, Niger, Rwanda, Sénégal, Seychelles, Chad, Togo, Tunisia, Vanuatu, Vietnam and Zaire.

2. Ministers of culture of member countries of the CTCA met on September 18 and 19, 1981, following expert working sessions held September 14, 15, 16 and 17. The aim of the ministers' meetings was to discuss major current cultural questions, to approve draft resolutions submitted by the experts, and to adopt the Declaration of Cotonou. In their speeches, ministers also made suggestions for activities that might be included by the Cultural and Technical Co-operation Agency secretariat in its regular program for the next two years. Many of the minister's suggestions, including some of those made by Canada's Minister of Communications, were incorporated in the draft of the regular program, submitted by the agency secretariat to the general conference of the Cultural and Technical Co-operation Agency, which is CTCA's supreme decision-making body. The general conference approved the draft program for 1982-83, at Libreville, Gabon in December, 1981.

(a) Not applicable.

(b) Not applicable.

PROGRAM FOR EXPORT MARKET DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 3,613—Mr. Herbert:

1. What amount is included in the 1981-82 main estimates and supplementary estimates for PEMD grants and is it anticipated that the full amount will be expended?

2. What was the total amount spent on the grants in each of the past five years?

3. Are recipients of the grants expected to repay part or all of the amount received and, if so, what is the basis for the repayment and what is the period of time during which the commitment continues?

4. Do the percentages paid on sales go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund and, if so, what amount was received by the fund from the repayment of the grants (a) in the current fiscal year to date (b) in each of the past five years?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. The 1981/82 main estimates and supplementary estimates include a sum of $17,593,000 for PEMD and it is anticipated that the full amount will be expended.

2. Amount spent for the past five years:

1976/77	$ 4,963,000
1977/78	$ 5,664,000
1978/79	$ 7,139,000
1979/80	$10,956,000
1980/81	$ 8,975,000

3. Recipients are required to repay part or all of the amount received provided the PEMD export marketing activity is successful. Terms of repayment, based on the type of activity supported, are as follows:

(i) For bidding on specific projects, repayment in two equal instalments of the department's contribution, the first within six months and the second within 12 months following the signing of the foreign contract; and

(ii) For other sections of the program, repayment of the department's contribution is at the rate of 1 per cent of reported sales resulting from the supported activities for a period of five to seven years from the effective date of the PEMD agreement.

(Note: Effective September, 1981, repayment rate increased to 2 per cent of reported sales and period reduced to three years).

4. Yes.

(a) In current year to January 31, 1982, $630,000.

(b) During the past five years:

1976/77	$ 88,000
1977/78	$255,000
1978/79	$470,000
1979/80	$630,000
1980/81	$456,000

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, yesterday I raised a point of order concerning question No. 30. I think it was the twenty-first point of order I have raised over a period of what was, yesterday, the anniversary of that question being placed on the Order Paper five years, eight months and seven days ago. Today it is eight days, tomorrow it will be nine days and so on, but nothing has happened.

I did not intend to rise again today, except that overnight a person—and I will not identify him for obvious reasons—in the Canadian Transport Commission contacted me and told me the specific reasons the answer is being withheld. Whether or not this is accurate, I cannot say. One reason is that the list would reveal severe conflict of interest between certain people involved in this matter. After all, CTC governs Air Canada, yet Air Canada is distributing passes to the CTC and to some of its associates. Also I was told that another reason the government hesitates to answer is the second part of the question, wherein I asked: Did the wives or personal associates—I am told the words the government does not want to answer are "personal associates"—of any members of the CTC or officials of the CTC hold passes on Air Canada?

I do not know why the government has been trying to hide something for five years, eight months and eight days; there must be something pretty serious. Yesterday I said in jest, "What is the story about Benson and his boys?" Quite frankly, a senior official of the department told me that I might better have said, "What about the girls involved too?"

I think it is time we had an answer. This is getting to the point where I think it is bloody shocking. If they are using government funds to give passes to people who are not government employees and so on—

An hon. Member: Girl friends.

Mr. Cossitt: Girl friends, yes, I will say that too—then I think it is a pretty serious situation. After five years, eight months and eight days, it is time the parliamentary secretary got off his rump, stood up and told us what the devil is going on or why the government does not answer.

I see the President of the Privy Council grinning. Maybe behind that grin, being a high official in government, he knows the answer which the parliamentary secretary does not know. What have they been hiding for this period of time? I should like to know; let us have an answer.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I told the hon. member yesterday that I would look into it. We have a good record in answering questions on the Order Paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: As of today, we have answered 2,785 questions on the Order Paper during this session alone. A very large number of those came from the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. With regard to the rumours to which he referred, I cannot comment on them. I hope he has the courage to repeat them outside the House; he may well end up in court if he does.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, since it is an allotted day, I do not think hon. members opposite would like it if we take up their time. Therefore, I invite the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville to discuss this matter with me outside the House. If he wants, I could bring a few reporters.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I do not intend to take more than 60 seconds, because I know it is an allotted day and I do not want to take up too much time. But in effect the parliamentary secretary threatened me a moment ago. I do not think any member has to take that kind of thing when he rises and asks for legitimate information. In the figures, facts and all the baloney about percentages, they still have not answered why it has been five years, eight months and eight days.

I will be glad to talk to the President of the Privy Council, but he wants to haul in some of the press, some of the Liberal press who will do what he wants. I will talk with him privately any time he wants, and I defy him to give me the reasons this question has not been answered. He knows the reasons, the parliamentary secretary knows the reasons, Edgar Benson knows the reasons, and I know the reasons. Why does the House not know the reasons?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I did not threaten the hon. member, but I happen to think it is an abuse of parliamentary immunity to debate comments about people's reputations, unless one is prepared to do it outside the House where one can take the full consequences of the statements.

Mr. Andre: Release the data!

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should immediately implement the recommendations contained in a letter to the Prime Minister, dated February 3, 1982, signed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) and certain Members of Parliament, which urged the government to proceed with the "immediate creation" of two new programs to create employment in key sectors of the economy by stimulating domestic housing construction and by launching a program to enable private enterprise to hire young Canadians, and the House strongly endorses the position of the authors of the said letter when they wrote:

"Mr. Prime Minister, we urge you to adopt these measures as soon as possible, because we are convinced that they are necessary right now . . ."

He said: Madam Speaker, everyone in the House knows the nature of this motion. It is based upon a letter written by two Liberal ministers and eight other Liberal Members of Parliament, asking the government to act immediately on measures to let Canadians build homes and to create jobs for Canadians. It asks Liberals to approve what Liberals have proposed and, in so doing, it allows all of us in the House to address the fundamental question as to who holds real political power in Canada. Who decides policy? Is it elected Members of Parliament or anonymous bureaucrats in the Department of Finance? This letter was written by ten elected members of the House of Commons. This budget was written by anonymous civil servants who finally found a Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) foolish enough to embrace their theories.

● (1210)

Mr. Nowlan: Gullible Allan.

Mr. Clark: All of us in this House know the damage that has occurred to this country with the bankruptcies, the jobs lost, the homes lost and indeed the suicides. Those suicides, bankruptcies and job losses have all resulted from this budget. This letter tries to help; so do the statements and the actions of members from all parties in this House who say, here is the evidence that this budget is bad for Canada: 117,000 full-time jobs were lost last year, another 35,000 jobs are being lost each month; a 109 per cent increase in farm bankruptcies has occurred over the last two years, and in the province of Quebec alone, from January to January, there has been a five-fold increase in farm bankruptcies and as many as 40,000 Canadians are likely to lose their homes.

Every Member of Parliament who talks to his or her constituents knows that people are angry, hurt and fearful. The evidence is all around us. Members have been telling their constituents, members who I intend to name in the House later, that they would help to change the budget. Today is the day that members can stop talking and start acting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Today is the day when ten Liberals from Montreal and others from Kitchener, Scarborough, Guelph, Niagara Falls, Hamilton, Thunder Bay and other communities across the country can show whether they are sincere and honest in what they say, because it comes down to whether they are sincere and honest in what they say. It is easy to talk, Mr. Speaker, but it takes courage to act. Members throughout this House, and I say this very seriously, will be judged for the rest of their political lives on whether they vote in Ottawa the way they talk at home in their constituencies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The question is basic. We have all noted the decline of Parliament. We have all seen the growth of the power of the bureaucrats. Today is a moment of truth. We have a budget which taxes health contributions, which stops home building and destroys savings. These are measures that no one can defend on their merits. These measures were proposed not by a Liberal caucus but by anonymous bureaucrats who have never had to stand for office and whose theories have no mandate and no support in this country.

Mr. Masters: Talk about your caucus.

Mr. Clark: I am asked to talk about my caucus. I am speaking for my caucus and I ask the hon. member opposite to come here and speak for his people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I know the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), in naming names and ridings, would like to be more accurate. He did refer to Thunder Bay as a riding. I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows that there are two ridings in Thunder Bay, Thunder Bay-Nipigon and Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Look at them scurry!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. please.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that precision. He underlined not only that there are two constituencies in Thunder Bay, but there are two deeply different views on the budget there. The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) has had the courage to stand up and speak for his constituents on this budget. The other hon. member has not yet had that courage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But the hon. member will have that opportunity later today. The point that I underline for Liberals opposite is that this budget was not written by Liberals; this budget was written by anonymous public servants who have no mandate to express their theories in this country, nor any support for their theories here. Yet Liberals who did not propose these measures, many of whom do not support these measures, are being asked to betray their people and to betray their principles and fall meekly into line. If that is allowed to happen, Sir, then Liberal MPs have surrendered all principle and they have wiped any trace of honour from their names.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I notice the Quebec chairman of the Liberal caucus just applauded the fact that his colleagues abandoned their principles. He just did, in the House!

I will return to this letter, Mr. Speaker, but these ten are not the only Liberals who have spoken. There is a comment, even more eloquent, from the young member for Manicouagan, who last week visited his own constituency, where some workers will have their taxes increased by $2,400 next year, and then said; and I quote:

We, Members of Parliament, are like those poor parish priests who had to cope with the problems of their flock. Having said over and over again that the government's economic policy is unacceptable either morally or socially, the answer we get is that Liberal dogma forbids any dispensation from decrees issued by the supreme authorities. Official policy has taken the place of religion.

Our political leaders are acting as though they were the Pope.

Those are the words of one Liberal member. We shall watch how he votes—like a spokesman for his people, or a poor parish priest.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard a number of federal members for Quebec talking while I am speaking, but they never speak for their own constituents here in the House of Commons. Later today they will have a chance to speak and vote for their constituents and against the Liberal budget.

The member for Manicouagan has identified the problem. When members are silent, the people suffer. And in Quebec—where there are more Liberals than anywhere else—there is more suffering, because of this budget. One out of every five young people in Quebec is out of work. Thousands of Quebecers who had jobs have lost them under this Liberal government. At Ste-Thérèse 3,500 workers have been laid off by General Motors.

Admiral laid off 2,500 workers. Pratt & Whitney laid off 610 workers last November in Quebec, and 550 more this month.

The St-Michel sawmill laid off 131 workers. Three thousand Quebecers have been thrown out of work in the shoe industry. Five hundred more workers will be laid off by the CNR in the weeks to come. The story is the same across Quebec. In January, the Lower Saint Lawrence region and in Gaspésie, there were 14,000 fewer people working than there were two years ago. In the Saguenay-Lac St-Jean area, there were 11,000 fewer people working than two years ago. The situation is appealing. Who is going to take up the cause of these people? This motion would create jobs, unlike the budget which is putting people out of work.

If the Liberal members for Quebec care about their people, they will vote to give their people jobs.

● (1220)

[English]

This budget, Mr. Speaker, is not just wrong-headed, it is inept and full of basic errors. The Minister of Finance has tried to bamboozle Canadians with creative accounting methods which, if they were tried by a company listed on any stock exchange, would result in their being delisted immediately.

Let me give a few examples. The minister claimed in this House that 12 million Canadians would pay less tax this year as a result of the budget. That is what he said. The simple fact is, Mr. Speaker, that fewer than 12 million Canadians will pay taxes this year. The minister was wrong on that basic fact. When he was caught on that he said that he meant to say 12 million would be better off because of his largesse in continuing the long-standing principle of indexation. Well, to reach that number, Mr. Speaker, he claimed more than 16 million Canadians will file 1982 tax returns. He still has not explained how he expects an increase of tax filers despite his forecast of lower growth in the labour force.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since this finance minister does not even know how many people pay taxes, how in the world can any of his budget numbers be believed? The minister himself has admitted in this chamber that his revenue forecasts are wrong, that his deficit forecasts are wrong. Indeed, Sir, he must have been the last person in the country to have seen the recession coming in November.

Those are not the only errors in the budget. The minister claims that moving the sales tax from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level and cutting it from 9 per cent to 8 per cent will not increase costs or his revenues. Even without talking about the massive paper burden this will impose on wholesalers, no expert outside the Department of Finance believes there will not be at least a 2 per cent increase in costs to consumers. Again the minister has tried to hide a tax grab. He claims that replacing income-averaging annuity contracts with forward-averaging will not harm taxpayers. Again, no expert outside the tax department believes that. The only way it can be true, and I am quoting the minister's example, is not to earn money. Well, he is certainly making that possible.

That, Mr. Speaker, is also the case in the matter of indexing. The minister claims indexing is a tax cut. It is only a tax cut if income does not increase. The minister will not change his budget just because it is wrong. He says, and I quote his speech in Toronto:

> I believe that we must resist the temptation to veer away from restraint—whether to gain a temporary and minimal increase in jobs, or simply to reap the transitory political benefit.

This minister speaks of restraint, yet his government spends $70 million on government advertising. One day in October last year he and his colleagues spent $27,000 to fly three cabinet ministers in three separate JetStars to the city of Winnipeg, a flight which, had they gone commercial—and let them fly first-class—would have cost the taxpayers only $1,770 for the round trip. This government, as we learned today, is prepared to write off $125 million on Consolidated Computer Inc. This government, Sir, was spending $40 a day to have a Quebec City newspaper flown directly to Ottawa when they could walk over to the Chateau Laurier and buy the same paper for 50 cents. That is restraint for this government. The clumsy and stupid way they handled the Petrofina purchase means that Canadians paid $300 million to $400 million more than was necessary to buy the shares.

The list of extravagances goes on. This government can find plenty of money to increase the pay of senior civil servants; it can find plenty of money to jet ministers around the country, because there is no restraint on ministers or senior civil servants. Restraint is for those 40,000 Canadians who will be forced out of their homes. Restraint is for those 35,000 Canadians who lose their jobs each month. Restraint is for the people that this letter and our motion talk about. What is being proposed by the government is not restraint, it is simple and cruel injustice; and any Liberal with a conscience will tell the Minister of Finance to cut his spending on advertising, to cut his spending on Petrofina shares, to cut his spending on $40 newspapers which he can buy for 50 cents, and to start to care about the people who are suffering in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This particular motion speaks of two kinds of changes concerning jobs and homes. There are other changes being sought by other Members of Parliament for equally legitimate reasons, because this is a bad budget which was drawn up with no understanding of the real world. Let it be clear that if the government is able to force Liberal members into line on this issue, they will try to force them into line on every other issue. The minister has said very clearly that he does not intend to make changes in his budget. He is trying to take the heat off here in the House of Commons and shunt the question off to the committee where he hopes it will be forgotten. He was very clear about that in answering my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), the other day when the minister said:

> Quite a number of representations were made following the budget in November and December. As the hon. member knows, on December 18 I made a number of changes which I regarded as necessary and urgent. It is my view that any further changes based upon representations and arguments of hon. members ought to be made when we reach the appropriate stage of the legislative process.

That means, Mr. Speaker, they ought never to be made. This minister has his pride at stake. He made a mistake, he was taken in by his public servants, but he is not man enough to stand up in the House of Commons and admit he made that mistake.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: He wants the whole country to pay the price. Individual Liberal members opposite will have to decide whether they put their minister's pride ahead of the interests of the people they represent here in the House of Commons.

Just one last thing about committees, Mr. Speaker. Committees take time and most Canadians do not have time. Thirty-five thousand Canadians are losing their jobs each month in this country. By the time the committee starts to sit, another 70,000 Canadians will be out of work. By the time the committee begins to report there will be another 100,000 Canadians out of work. Mr. Speaker, members of this House have an obligation to act now and not wait for another 100,000 or 200,000 Canadians to be forced out of work by the policies of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Canadian people cannot wait any longer, they want action and that is what the ten Montreal Liberals have understood. They said so to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and they went on to publish their views as an official statement of their recommendations. I shall now quote from their letter:

> The message given by our fellow citizens is clear and easy to understand because it conveys a single central preoccupation: the economy. People are deeply concerned about their economic future, and while recognizing the importance of the fight against inflation, they believe the government should deal more directly with the alarming unemployment situation.
> As members of the central-eastern part of Montreal, we realize that a real and lasting improvement (in the long term) of the job situation must necessarily come about through control of the inflation rate. However, we believe that it is possible to create jobs immediately in certain critical sectors without overstimulating the economy.

That was the letter signed by ten members, namely, the members for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Miss Bégin), Laurier (Mr. Berger), Montréal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), Gamelin (Mr. Portelance), Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Joyal), Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens), Montréal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and Bourassa (Mr. Rossi). We shall see today if they vote the way they talk. If these ten members vote against their own recommendations, they will be revealed forever as members who lack the courage of their beliefs.

Some of them are pretending now they didn't realize what they were doing. The Minister of State for Quebec (Mr. Joyal)—he is in the House today—told Mr. Michel Gratton, and I quote:

So you see, I was more interested in what was going on than in reading the letter.

Mr. Speaker, ministers don't have the luxury of not knowing what they're signing. They hold responsible positions. They have to stand by what they say—and what they sign. That is a rule of cabinet. And it is a rule of simple courage for private members to stand by what they say.

If these members vote against this motion, they betray their own signatures. The question for them is clear and inescapable—do they prefer their people or their party?

• (1230)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, it is not only hon. members from Quebec who have spoken against the budget and who will have to prove today whether they will vote in Ottawa the way they speak at home. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead), the chairman of the Ontario Liberal caucus, said that Ontario Liberal members feel just as strongly as the ten Montreal members do, if not more so. The hon. member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has said, "People are saying that the Liberal government must turn the economy around before there is permanent damage." The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), so we believe, the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder), the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain), the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin), the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) and the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield), and perhaps several others, have spoken words designed to be heard just at home, words which have not yet been carried to the national scene. I tell them that their words will be remembered at home and will be repeated here. The only way they can honour their standing and their identities as individuals of principle will be to vote in Ottawa the way they speak at home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: Now we'll see!

Mr. Clark: Yesterday marked the second anniversary of the election of this government. We all know the promises it broke, the way it earns its reputation as a party whose word cannot be trusted anywhere in this country. I do not want to dwell on that. What I want to underline is that its actions since that election raise even deeper questions about whether Liberal ministers or Liberal members have any respect for democracy in Canada. The ministers have imposed major changes on the country, such as abandoning VIA Rail without any public hearings—

Mr. Pepin: Not true!

Mr. Clark: —driving away energy investment, dividing Canada on the Constitution, proposing unilaterally to eliminate the Department of Regional Economical Expansion, taxing health and other employee benefits. The Liberal members have gone quietly along, adding their votes to all of these measures. However, none of these questions was discussed by the Liberals in the election campaign.

The message is very clear. The government has no mandate for these changes. Individual Members of Parliament have no mandate to support them. Most Canadians oppose what the government is doing. However, the government ignores them and individual Members of Parliament will have the opportunity, by their vote today, to indicate whether they will help the citizens who elected them to change a budget which the people do not want, and about which the people of Canada were not warned in the last election campaign.

Let me ask some questions of the House. What Liberal member of this House told his voters that he proposed a tax on accrued interest on new whole life insurance policies?

Mr. McDermid: Not one of them!

Mr. Clark: Did the hon. member for Kitchener? Did the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) or the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner)? Did the hon. member for London-Middlesex indicate that when he sought the support of his electors?

What Liberal member told his voters he was proposing to tax employer contributions to Blue Cross or to reduce the payments mothers could receive under the child tax credit? Did the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who is responsible for the status of women, tell anyone that? Did the Minister of State promise that when she stood for election? Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) or did the hon. member for Scarborough West? Did the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) make that promise when she was being elected? Did she tell people the truth about what she and her government intended to do? What Liberal member told his voters—

Mr. Simmons: How about cutting taxes?

Mr. Clark: —that he was proposing measures—

Mr. Nielsen: In your seat!

Mr. Clark: —which would triple the cost—

Some hon. Members: In your seat!

Mr. Nowlan: Get the Sergeant-at-Arms to throw the jackal out! He has to be in his seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Come on, Simmons, shut up!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Remarks should be addressed to the Chair and not to hon. members. Therefore, I will allow the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to continue.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: He cannot stand the heat!

Mr. Simmons: Tell us about Jerusalem! Where do you stand on Jerusalem?

Mr. Clark: I am sure Your Honour will calculate the amount of time which has been taken from my speech by the various interjections. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo—

Mr. Simmons: Get it right.

Mr. Clark: —who shouts from someone else's seat, has not been heard to speak about the impact upon fish plants and upon unemployment in the province of Newfoundland. If he believed as much in his duty to his constituents as he believes in his blind loyalty to the Liberal Party, he would be standing and voting against that budget!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Go back home!

Mr. Epp: Go home!

Mr. McDermid: You're not representing your people. Go back home!

Some hon. Members: Go, go!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Now that that hon. member has run away, let me ask what Liberal member told his voters that he was proposing measures which would triple the cost for salesmen to operate their cars, or measures to shut down the auto parts industry. Did the hon. member for Niagara Falls promise that? Did the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent), or did the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) or did the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey)? What Liberal MP told his voters that he was proposing to cut the amount of money new Canadians can send to their parents or dependent relatives outside of Canada? Did the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis), or did the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), or did the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher)?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McDermid: Speak in the debates, Simmons! Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. Is the hon. parliamentary secretary seeking the floor on a point of order?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let him make a fool of himself.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I do not need to do that. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is doing that quite adequately by himself. I do not need to help him make a fool of himself.

I have two points on my point of order. First of all, the Leader of the Opposition cannot, even in his enthusiasm, mislead the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: First of all, he indicated that I have done nothing about the fish plant closure. I arranged for 4,000 jobs to be restored.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

• (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. Hon. members may feel they have points of order, but on this occasion the Chair feels that it would be proper to debate when hon. members are recognized to participate in the debate.

Mr. Clark: If the hon. member is interested in creating jobs, as he has just said he is, he has an opportunity tonight. He can vote for the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There is a series of other questions one might want to ask when one looks at the mandate of this government. What Liberal MP ran on a promise to remove the northern benefits? Did the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais), the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras), or the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant)? None of them told their voters—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. parliamentary secretary on a point of order, and it will have to be on a point of order.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I rise to be heard on a question of privilege. The Leader of the Opposition has been in this House for some years. He ought to be aware that as a result of the redistribution which took effect in May, 1979, my riding has since been called Burin-St. George's. I am entitled to have the riding referred to by its correct name.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The Chair has allowed two extra minutes for the Leader of the Opposition because of the interruptions. There will be one minute left for the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Before my minute starts, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to accept the correction from the hon. member. I would certainly want his electors to know who he is. I want them to know what he does when he votes against their interests today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: May I reserve a final moment for the New Democratic Party. This vote would have occurred last week except that the NDP chose to save the government. It was a deliberate decision to act with the Liberals, just as the NDP acts with the Liberals on any basic question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: They were in bed together on the Constitution. They were in bed together against the Crosbie budget. They fled together from the vote last Friday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The Leader of the Opposition may continue only if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The minister nods his head to indicate that there was unanimous consent, but I heard no.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious issue to discuss. It is unfortunate with an issue that is of such prime importance to so many Canadians that instead of a thoughtful and rational approach, we are treated to high comedy and serious tragedy by the House of Commons best replacement for the "Perils of Pauline" that we have seen in many a year.

It is a sad spectacle when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has to come and appeal to Liberals because he knows he will never get support from his own side of the floor. It is a tragic commentary on the state of disrepute that the Conservative caucus has fallen into, that the only solace the poor Leader of the Opposition can find is to appeal to Liberals to support him on his motion. Theirs is a party that once had a proud tradition of independence, a proud tradition of speaking for itself. What we have now is the Leader of the Opposition on bended knee saying "Liberals, please give us a hand."

It is equally sad that the Leader of the Opposition can find as his only source for his resolution good ideas put forward by Liberal members. It is understandable because we know the paucity of ideas among the Conservative caucus. If there is a danger of bankruptcy in Canada, it is the bankruptcy of ingenuity, imagination and creativity of the Conservative caucus. Therefore, what must they do? They must put a resolution forward that simply endorses the kind of creative imagination put forward by Liberal members, as requested by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

Now they say, "let us have a motion of non-confidence." We know it is simply a gimmick on the part of the Leader of the Opposition. He has more gimmicks than a K-Tel advertisement. The whole theory for the policy of the Leader of the Opposition is not deny, keep repeating yourself and maybe someone will believe you. Well, they do not believe him because the record of the Conservative Party shows there is nothing to believe.

A few weeks ago the Leader of the Opposition, standing up in high dungeon, with all that pomposity of which only he is capable, said that 60,000 mothers are going to be denied their child tax credit. Two days later his staff member whispers sotto voce, "I am sorry, it wasn't that number; we had to sort of make it up."

Then we have the brave spokesman, the finance critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) saying on one hand, "put the interest rates down," and then going to the Montreal Canadian Club and saying "leave them the way they are." The problem is they do not know what they believe. They have no credibility because they have no policy.

The only kind of posture they can take in this House and across the country is to try to set up a whole world of mythology and imagery about these anonymous bureaucrats who are making policy. It is not anonymous bureaucrats making policy, it is members of this caucus, members of the treasury benches, members of our constituency associations whom we talk to and consult with. The reason we are in power and they are not is that we endorse the principle that we have a party that is united behind us and for which we speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We are not a party that is fragmented into so many pieces we cannot keep count from day to day because we do not know who is going to be in which chair. We do not know who is a member of the Tory caucus and we cannot keep count without a score card.

It really is a remarkable performance, Mr. Speaker, when you think of what the past record of the Conservative Party is. A statement in the Toronto Star in 1979 quotes the then Prime Minister as saying "We must have higher interest rates because in the short term they are going to have to do some good." Now we have him saying "bring them down." I guess they were all right in 1979, but somehow they are not good enough in 1982. How does he expect people to believe him when something he was prepared to stand on as a matter of principle in 1979 he all of a sudden discovers is no longer of any use?

We hear the remarkable statement of the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, lecturing people on how to be straightforward. If anyone in the House has a record for zigzagging, for repeating his steps and withdrawing statements, it is the Leader of the Opposition. Talk about broken promises, Mr. Speaker!

An hon. Member: Is he from Yellowhead or yellow fever?

Mr. Axworthy: I am reminded by my colleague who asked, what about the zigzagging and the broken promises on Petro-Canada, Jerusalem or other commitments of which the Conservative Party is so proud?

Mr. McMillan: What about wage and price controls?

Mr. Axworthy: Here is the Leader of the Opposition, standing there with all his crocodile tears pouring down his face in great gushes, crying about the high unemployment rate, conveniently forgetting that when he was Prime Minister the unemployment rate in this country was 8.5 per cent, which is .2 per cent higher than it is today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I say this only to point out that if we are going to debate the issue of unemployment, let us debate it on the grounds of serious, thoughtful and creative proposals, not under the mythology or the storm created by the Leader of the Opposition who has offered not one constructive proposal of his own.

An hon. Member: More Liberal deceit.

Mr. Axworthy: Did anyone in the House hear the Leader of the Opposition make one constructive proposal?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Axworthy: Did we hear the Leader of the Opposition make any proposal that would make any difference?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Throw out the Liberals.

Mr. Axworthy: All we heard was an appeal to the Liberals to support him, to steal Liberal ideas and talk about broken promises, for which he set a world record which can never be broken.

An hon. Member: Read the motion.

Mr. Rossi: This government is going to vote against it. His own caucus does not want him. He is trying to fight for a new convention in January. He will not be there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I understand that today is Friday and it is sometimes customary to get a little out of hand. However, it is very difficult for the Hansard reporters and the translators to hear the member who is recognized. I would invite hon. members to respect those who are recognized to take part in the debate. Right now it is the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration who has been recognized.

Mr. Axworthy: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that after listening to the Leader of the Opposition, it reminds me of a statement made by Winston Churchill about another leader of the opposition. He said that the leader of the opposition had only one idea in his life and that was a bad one. I am not sure I can even give this Leader of the Opposition that much credit. It would probably be overly generous in the circumstances.

The fact is that if we are going to debate these serious economic issues, we must look at the reality of what is taking place in Canada. We must talk about the measures being taken to help Canadians. If members opposite want to criticize or make comment on these measures, that is fair game. But I think it does a great disservice and is a serious act of irresponsibility for the Leader of the Opposition to stand up and paint this picture that there is a total absence of policy, when he knows full well the kind of initiatives we have taken to create employment in Canada.

If he does not know, Mr. Speaker, I will take a moment to remind him. I remind the Leader of the Opposition that our government has created over 100,000 jobs in this fiscal year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: We have done this through direct employment measures. Let me remind the Leader of the Opposition that these were programs which we had to reintroduce because his government cancelled them.

An hon. Member: Tell that to the auto workers in Oshawa.

Mr. Axworthy: He asked members of the House what was happening in their ridings. I can tell him that what is happening is that people are being put to work in community development projects to fix wharves and fish ladders; people are being put to work in community centres—

Mr. Shields: How much money are you putting into it?

Mr. Axworthy: I will tell the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) that well over $2 million is going into his riding to create work.

We will be spending close to $400 million this year alone on direct employment which will create over 100,000 jobs, involving over 170,000 Canadians. Furthermore, those programs are targeted to those areas with the most serious needs. There are 7,000 participants under the program for the employment of disadvantaged. There are people working in the crisis and rape centres and day care centres because of community service programs. Students are being employed under the new employment program. This is all part of this government's general commitment to provide direct employment programs.

Furthermore, in December we began to bring in special programs to offer new opportunities for Canadian workers to return to work. As of today we have signed 75 work-sharing agreements which have brought over 4,000 workers who were threatened with lay-offs back to their jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: When the Leader of the Opposition talks about lay-offs, he should also talk about the number of people we are putting back into the work force. We are achieving this with the full co-operation of employers, trade unions and government. This shows that our basic commitment to work together with all Canadians in difficult times is reaping its own success.

What the Leader of the Opposition dismisses as gimmicks are in fact part of a major commitment being undertaken in all parts of Canada. I would point out that even many of his friends, those provincial premiers who he likes to have bask in his friendship, are also responding to the offers we made two weeks ago respecting job-sharing agreements. His own Conservative allies in the province of Ontario have signed an agreement with us to put several thousand workers back to work in the nothern Ontario forests.

The Premier of British Columbia expressed interest in a similar offer last night and said he was prepared to sign the same agreement to put people back to work in British Columbia. We have had similar discussions in Quebec, Manitoba and other provinces. We can use the various benefits which we have introduced to put workers back to work, keep the skilled workers together and maintain the solidarity of those communities.

It is evident that there is no absence of policies. There are direct and creative initiatives to help Canadians find employment again. We would all be a lot better off, Mr. Speaker, if members opposite would stop trying to create false alarms and a sense of foreboding in our country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: —which is what they are doing, and instead go to work in their own constituencies. I ask, how many of those members have spoken to employers in their ridings about work-sharing projects? I suggest they should go back to their constituencies and help people get back to work, rather than coming here to raise false alarms.

Mr. Lambert: Come to speak to employers in my riding.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would welcome an invitation to go to the hon. member's riding. I will be there as soon as he rents a hall.

The fact is that what we are facing today is not Canada's problem alone. The Leader of the Opposition is trying to maintain that the Liberal government alone is responsible. If that is the case, we are also responsible for creating more work than any other country over the last 15 years.

An hon. Member: The jobs only last two weeks.

Mr. Axworthy: Can we take credit for creating jobs at an average of 4 per cent per year starting from the 1960s up to the 1980s? If we are being blamed for the fall-off, we should be given credit for the 18 solid years of continual job enhancement at a rate of 2 per cent to 3 per cent a year. That is the best record of any industrialized country in the world.

An hon. Member: How long do they last?

Mr. Axworthy: We also have the fastest growing labour force at the same time, Mr. Speaker.

It would be much more honest for the members opposite simply to deal with this debate on the facts. The fact is that every country is facing this kind of downturn.

An hon. Member: That is not true!

Mr. Axworthy: It is not true? Look at the United States with its 8.5 per cent unemployment rate. Look at France with close to 9 per cent, and Great Britain. The Tories are following the policies advocated by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, those wonderful Thatcherite Reaganomics, which are resulting in over 12 per cent unemployment in that country.

We admit that we have a problem in Canada. However, we also say that we are proposing answers to those problems. There are answers contained in the budget to decrease inflation. Are we hearing from members of the opposition that they do not want the inflation rate down, that they want to continue a high inflation rate and thereby continue a high interest rates policy? If that is the case, then they are the party of high interest rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[Translation]

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) had the floor.

● (1410)

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Before the luncheon adjournment, Mr. Speaker, we had established that the subject of debate today is of such importance to the country that it should not be the object of charades, playacting or back room manoeuvring and all the other ploys that are being used by the opposition for political advantage. The Canadian people expect more from us than that, Mr. Speaker. They expect and they deserve serious debate about the conditions facing the country and the ways in which we can alleviate the problems of unemployment and, at the same time, stimulate growth in the economy.

I think it is worth talking about the structure of unemployment in Canada, Mr. Speaker. The nature of the problem is often wildly dramatized. Unemployment has some very important characteristics and it is not an experience that is the same for all people. Like most other nations, for a long time we have faced the serious and chronic problem of high unemployment in certain regions of the country and among certain groups of people. Those people are commonly called the structurally unemployed. This means that people in areas of low employment growth or where there is only seasonal employment do not have the opportunities to develop skills that will enable them to become full participants in the work force. Even in times of very high employment in this country there has always been a group of people for whom special measures must be provided to help them deal with the problems they face.

Above and beyond that, Mr. Speaker, a large number of industries in the country are undergoing adjustments. There have been major changes in technology and in the nature of the product that they provide. It does not help for people to stamp their feet, gnash their teeth or bang shoes on the desk and shout, "Do something; throw money at the problem." That is what we often hear from our friends over in the corner. But we must understand the dynamics of a different industrial society, Mr. Speaker. Changes are taking place in the automobile industry and in the forestry industry which require new skills and a whole new generation of Canadians trained to work in those industries.

In the meantime, however, we must provide support for workers dislocated by those changes. We cannot, and should not, stand in the way of progress, but certainly we must help those affected by it.

Some of the unemployment in Canada occurred because industries cannot sell their products and people cannot sell their goods and services. There has been a great deal of discussion about the trouble in the automobile industry, but the fact is that about 80 per cent of the automobiles we produce are sold overseas. If the North American car industry has not been able to adjust to competition, for technical or other reasons, then that is a major problem and the industry is being reorganized to deal with it.

This is not the fault of the government. No advantage is to be gained by pointing the finger or looking for a scapegoat. The unions, businessmen, employers and government must work together to find solutions. We must get away from this confrontationist, conflict-ridden attitude which is fermented by hon. members for their own political reasons and try to build a society that works to find solutions. These are the problems we face as we begin work to change attitudes.

It is important to address the question of how we are trying to come to grips with these issues. The first major contribution was the November budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: The Canadian tragedy.

Mr. Axworthy: Horse laughs usually derive from ignorance and I think that is what we are hearing, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to explain how the budget responded to one of the fundamental economic problems faced by every country, the high rate of inflation. An essential element of the battle is to bring interest rates down and thus create demand. This cannot be done artificially. Hon. members can argue until they are blue in the face but interest rates cannot be brought down by artificial measures. That can only be achieved through the market economy in which we work. The best way to bring interest rates down is by reducing the demand of government borrowing on the capital markets.

We can see an indication of the improvement that is taking place in the declining rate of inflation. For the three-month period ending January 31, 1982, the inflation rate in this country was 8.25 per cent. In other words, the forces of inflation were beginning to ease and, as a result, interest rates were falling. That is a major contribution to a solution of the problem and it is a way to build demand again, rather than through the kind of gimmickry that is being used by hon. members opposite. Government fiscal and monetary powers can be employed to reduce demand.

We have heard a great deal about providing stimulus for the creative, entrepreneurial energies of Canadians, but there is a curious contradiction in the comments of the Conservative Party on this subject. Members of that party like to see themselves as the paragons of free enterprise in Canada. "Let the free market forces flow," they say. That is what the budget did, Mr. Speaker. The reduction in the marginal tax rate put more money in the hands of the risk-takers and entrepreneurs; as well, there is less direction as to where money shall be invested.

If the Leader of the Opposition is saying that he does not believe we should put more cash in the hands of the entrepreneurs, then he had better face his caucus again and have another rendering of conscience. I think a lot of members of his caucus would have to agree with what I have said—that if you give more freedom to the use of cash and capital and let people make their own choices, they will invest in the area that is most productive. That is what the budget sought to attain by bringing the tax rate down and putting more money in people's hands. If hon. members opposite claim that the budget does not stimulate the economy, then they have not read the budget but are relying on their imaginations.

The budget contained several important measures designed to set goals and objectives for economic development. In the budget paper entitled "Economic Strategy for the 80s", the government proposed a number of initiatives to help facilitate the activities of the private sector and the provinces in the creation of jobs. When those reactionaries over in the corner, who love to pretend that they are progressive, rant and rave about the changes in the railway system, they are basically saying that they do not believe in progress. They do not believe in utilizing the rail capacity of western Canada to help sell our goods and create new wealth in the country. They like to put themselves forward as the spokesmen for progressive measures, yet they propose one of the most reactionary, regressive steps that any political party has proposed in the history of this country. They stand in the way of the creative forces in western Canada which would make new products and increase economic growth.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) is so locked into the past that he cannot see the future. He is so frozen in his stratified attitude that he cannot reach out to new forces. It is sad, Mr. Speaker, that a party whose tradition has been one of looking to the future has now become so stuck in its dwindling constituency of supporters that it now says, "We must fight to the end of the trenches." That party is the Maginot line of Canadian politics, Mr. Speaker, and it will pay the price.

We have gone beyond the major stimulus to the economy that I have mentioned to bring in special measures to help workers who face problems of readjustment. Under the industrial labour adjustment program, $167 million has been allocated to designated communities whose economies are suffering. This program is beginning to work. Under that program close to 17,000 workers in four communities have been assisted. When hon. members opposite ask, "What are you doing?", I say, "Talk to those workers who have gained retraining assistance, new counselling, new jobs and new mobility as a result of government initiatives."

ILAP has been particularly designed to deal with industrial adjustment programs. Also we introduced additional programs to deal with workers in the marketplace who face particular problems in obtaining access or opportunities. A year ago we brought in a new program to help train women in non-traditional work, with the recognition that women had been "ghettoized" in their occupations and that they required opportunity to broaden their scope. In this fiscal year alone we added close to 3,500 training places for women in non-traditional work to the program. We did it in co-operation with the private sector and unions. This goes back to our basic commitment to work with other sectors of the economy to bring about improvement.

When we talk about the problems of young people in the country, I should like to indicate that at the same time we provided a number of special initiatives to meet their needs. It may interest hon. members of the House to know that close to 40 per cent of the people who use our employment programs are young people below the age of 24; they are the people who use our training programs. In this particular fiscal year over 119,000 young people are in our manpower training programs, over 35,000 are in our industrial training programs, and we have provided 50,000 direct employment jobs for young people. Also we have provided counselling services for over one million young people and over 300,000 placements through summer youth employment programs. The total comes to almost two million young people who used the services of the federal government this fiscal year to obtain employment assistance. When hon. members opposite say that we are not paying attention to young people, I say that we are making a major effort. I am not saying that it is adequate or that we should not do more. We are trying to do more, but to totally deny there is opportunity and to deny the fact that anything is happening is simply fabrication.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the minister would permit a question.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member can ask his question only if there is unanimous consent, but I distinctly heard a "no".

Mr. Axworthy: I should like to return to one of the most important initiatives we have taken over the past several months to deal with long-term employment problems in Canada. One essential matter we must face is the need for a much more productive work force with the necessary skills for the new jobs of the future. We recognize that close to $900 million spent on training programs oftentimes resulted in people being trained for jobs that were not there. Industry is changing, the economy is changing, but with the help of the parliamentary task force chaired by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), involving hon. members on both sides of the House, we were able to put together a brand new national training program to revamp and reform totally federal initiatives on training and to provide leadership for the provinces and the private sector.

We have a training program which is appropriate for the 1980s. We have provided new incentives for training women in non-traditional work. We have provided incentives for disadvantaged workers. We have begun to shift into the area of high-skilled work through a substantial enhancement of and additions to the critical trade skills program. We have established a brand new planning system in Canada with the involvement and co-operation of provincial governments, unions and the private sector, to work out on an annual basis proper estimates of shortfalls in skills and how to employ our training resources to meet those shortfalls.

We have proposed a major modernization program for training institutions. We are prepared to put millions of dollars into community colleges across Canada, so that they can purchase new equipment, create new laboratories and hire the necessary faculty to develop a new modernized training system to meet job demands of the 1980s and obtain a more productive work force. This is a major initiative—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder whether the minister would entertain a question.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This can be done only with unanimous consent, as the hon. minister has used up all his time, but that unanimous consent is not forthcoming.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House and the people of Canada have known for a long time that in looking at the policies and the attitude of the Liberal government, no government in the history of Canada has been demonstrated to be more intellectually bankrupt and morally indifferent to the concerns of the ordinary people of the land. If we consider what Liberal members promised in the 1980 election campaign and compared it with what happened since then, the evidence is beyond contention.

I should like to refer to a few facts in that regard. Since the 1980 election, what has happened in terms of inflation with which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised to deal? It has risen from 9.4 per cent to 11.4 per cent. At the time of the 1980 election, unemployment was at 13 per cent. Now in real numbers, including all men and women who ought to be included in the official statistics but for technical reasons are excluded, unemployment has risen to 15 per cent. In 1980 mortgage rates were 13.5 per cent. Now they are up to 18.5 per cent and 19 per cent.

I should like to emphasize the need to come to grips with serious structural problems in the Canadian economy. When the Liberals were elected in 1980, there was a deficit in manufactured goods in terms of trade which was $3.6 billion less than the present deficit. In human terms that $3.6 billion increase in the deficit in manufacturing trade represents the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

The reality is that the international economic policies which the Liberal Party has been following for years have resulted in a national disaster in economic terms and a tragedy in human terms in the lives of men and women throughout the country. In the context of the situation with which we are now faced and having lost 235,000 manufacturing jobs between August and the end of December of last year, for years we have lived with a Liberal government that depended entirely upon one fundamental policy for the economic growth of the country.

There were two aspects to the policy. On the one hand, it has said that we are a country with virtually unlimited resources from British Columbia in the west right through to Newfoundland in the east, especially but by no means exclusively in the northern areas of our provinces. The Liberal Party has relied on the selling off of those resources for job creation purposes and for balance of payments purposes. Any serious analysis of Liberal policies from C.D. Howe to the present will not deny this contention. The resource hinterland of Canada, as Liberal members perceived it, was to remain precisely that for the rest of the world. We were to provide resources, they were to manufacture goods, and we were to buy them back.

The other aspect of the Liberal economic policy was that we had to have some manufacturing; even Liberals realized this. After the war Liberal members created, through government initiative but not exclusively in the government sector, a very dynamic Canadian manufacturing economy. Instead of building upon the base of this government wartime initiative, what resulted is what I call the second pillar of Liberal economic policy which goes with resource sell-out, that is, the encouragement of branch plants to come here to establish a manufacturing industry. We know the results of that. I do not want to talk about it just in general terms today; I want to talk about the concrete results of that structure, how it is crumbling, how we see its effects and why we should now be responding to it.

What happened as a result of that fundamental decision after the war? Inefficient branch plants were established. Research and development was not done here. World markets were not sought. No one dominated the domestic market. What has resulted in this our year of economic crisis, the most serious since the great depression? What has resulted in terms of manufacturing? I remind the House that manufacturing is absolutely crucial to jobs. Although the service sector has been growing not only in Canada but in other modern nations disproportionately to the manufacturing sector, the economic reality is that you get growth in service sectors related to the manufacturing sector and if you do not have the manufacturing growth, you do not get the related service sector growth.

Just in this past year we have seen the results of this disastrous economic policy of the Liberals. In the past year we had a $21 billion imbalance in trade in manufactured goods. This means not only hundreds but thousands of dollars per citizen. In human terms it means the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs in manufacturing that should be here in Canada. We should be using our own resources, both human and material to produce jobs here. Last year the over-all deficit in the balance of payments was over $9 billion.

What are the results of this? As I have said already, there are 1.8 million people unemployed. Our Canadian dollar has dropped in value because of the persistent and growing imbalance in our balance of payments. The government's policies have also meant high inflation rates. But more important in terms of structural concerns in the economy, this imbalance has given the Government of Canada almost no leeway in being able to act. Because we are so dependent upon imported goods in manufacturing, in order to stimulate the economy you offer massive tax cuts, which in certain circumstances, including the present, would be appropriate in a well developed industrial economy.

What happens in Canada if those tax cuts are of massive proportion is that some 40 per cent of the money put out in general circulation to the taxpayers will go outside of Canada to buy more imported goods to further exacerbate the balance of payments situation. That is the kind of vicious circle in which Liberal mismanagement of the economy has got us.

Faced with this reality, this genuine concern and I think a sense of realism among the people of Canada, the Government of Canada should level with the people instead of backing away from them, as it did when a little heat was applied respecting the National Energy Program, and it should tell them what the real reason is for our difficulty. What we have is an unbalanced economy, unbalanced in the sense that we are living off our resources, selling them off, and depleting them too rapidly. This we have been doing for years. Canada has to import too many manufactured goods. The government should take the people into its confidence and explain the situation to them in the way the Japanese and virtually every western European nation did after the Second World War, when they set a course for long-range development. I am convinced that if the government did that, Canadians would respond positively. We need now slow growth perhaps, but we need real growth to provide durable jobs not only for our unemployed but for our children and our grandchildren.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: How have the Liberals responded to this crisis? How have the Liberals responded to being locked into Reaganomics? Have the Liberals met the challenge by honestly saying that now is the time for an industrial strategy, the kind that my party has called for in the last two elections and about which Herb Gray has talked? Not at all. Herb Gray has been replaced by that omniscient senator in the other place, Senator Olson.

Instead of moving in the right direction to get more Canadian control over our manufacturing sector, instead of establishing an economy less reliant for its balance of payments situation on export resources, the Government of Canada is moving in the opposite direction.

To quote Senator Olson—and this is a complete giveaway—he said: "When a country comes to you and they are looking for iron ore, you do not try to sell that country steel." Just a matter of days ago he said: "Canadians should not feel bad about being regarded as hewers of wood and drawers of water." I say it is the Liberal Party of Canada that should feel bad about foisting that kind of policy on the people of Canada.

What is the government doing to deal with the present economic crisis? I have just said that the government is not making that shift. I suggested that Senator Olson's direction is different. It certainly is. The Liberals have adopted a new tack. It is no longer merely resources that they are going to sell off; they are promoting megaprojects in the resource sector. That is the new con job. The Liberals are now saying that megaprojects all across our country will get us out of our balance of payments situation and will create jobs. That is the new path to a rich and brighter future.

That is simply wrong, Mr. Speaker. It is a more up-to-date version, a slicker use of terminology, to try to convince the people that megaprojects mean something different from resource sell-offs. But I say to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) that he will not get away with that kind of approach any more than Sterling Lyon got away with that approach in the province of Manitoba.

I also say to the Prime Minister, who has said that he does not want and does not believe in a quick-fix solution, that that is precisely the Liberals' approach to the megaprojects. The megaprojects are to be the quick-fix solution to our balance of payments problem. The quick-fix solutions to the problems of Canada would be to get rid of the Liberal Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We in this party say that now is the time, instead of doing what the official opposition has done and trot out the problems, which we have done in past debates as well, to move in new directions. Now is the time to speak frankly to the people of our land. Now is the time to begin the serious march to recovery that Canadians want and deserve. Now is the time to get rid of the Liberal Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to make one point with particular emphasis and add two or three comments. I have talked about some of the latter points before. When we say that the manufacturing approach is the key, we say it is the key because it has been the key for Scandinavia, West Germany, France, for Japan, and indeed has been the key for success for the development of the United States of America. I as a Canadian who came of age after World War II feel ashamed of Canadian governments which have not had the courage and determination to make this country into the first-rate industrial nation that it ought to be in 1982.

● (1440)

So, Mr. Speaker, we are saying that in addition to the tax cut proposals we have made before of $1 billion for middle and low-income earners to provide some stimulus to the economy and produce jobs, and in addition to the proposals we made to stimulate particularly the housing sector by taxing the banks at a reasonable level, we are now saying that the multinationals who have done very well in Canada and, as a 1973 U.S. Senate study clearly demonstrates, they are here as in other countries precisely because we have a lucrative market—they are not here for our good, they are here for theirs—are getting all the benefits out of this arrangement and not the people of Canada, since we have a $23 billion deficit in manufactured goods. It is time to turn those priorities around.

We are saying that a serious move at this time of economic crisis by the Government of Canada would be to embark on an industrial strategy and say to the multinationals that they must enter into letters of agreement with the government, as has been done in other industrialized nations, committing themselves to a dollar-value production commensurate with the level of consumption of their products in this country. That means that companies, whether in the automotive sector, the electronics sector or communications—you name it—which happen to be multinationals located here could still have world-scale production, but it would also mean that they would start now to put Canadians to work in numbers equivalent to their dollar benefit in this country. With 1.8 million Canadians unemployed, we think that kind of step is long overdue.

A related point, Mr. Speaker, is that not only do we have to move in terms of manufacturing goods here and maximize our own production for domestic markets—and two places to begin producing thousands of jobs in the next couple of years are in the machinery goods industry and transportation industry, but I will not elaborate on that today. There are also sectors where we could start now which would have important consequences soon.

In addition we in this party are saying, as social democratic parties have said and demonstrated elsewhere in the world, that it is not sufficient to gain control and dominance in your own domestic market; you have to pursue international markets. I have visited countries in western Europe and the Caribbean recently where I was told horror stories about the failure of Canadians to sell goods. I will not name them, but two products were identified which would have produced thousands of jobs in Canada. Our product was good, we were price competitive, but because of a lack of imagination in financing we lost the sales. So we are saying in this party, which believes in the dynamics of a mixed economy, that it is time the Government of Canada in its trade policies put together an aggressive approach which not only takes good Canadian products such as steel and others which do exist, but matches them with imaginative financing programs so we can sell abroad. That, too, would produce jobs at home.

Because my time is short, Mr. Speaker, I want now to move an amendment to the motion and speak briefly to it. I move:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto after the word "now" the following:

And that this government be condemned for accepting the advice of the finance critic of the official opposition when he recently urged the government to maintain its high interest rate policy as it affects mortgages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, speaking briefly to that motion, I want to make the following observation. I said earlier that the Liberals by their approach have been proven to be intellectually bankrupt and morally indifferent to the concerns of Canadians. Well, I want to say, in listening to the speech of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) today, that if that can be said of the Liberals, then what one can say honestly of the Tories is that they are morally bankrupt and intellectually indifferent. I say that because they have the nerve to put into words in their main motion a policy which goes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion has been amended as follows: Moved by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the motion be amended by adding thereto after the word "now" the following:

And that this government be condemned for accepting the advice of the finance critic of the official opposition when he recently urged the government to maintain its high interest rate policy as it affects mortgages.

The question is on the amendment. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: I am just going briefly to ask the Chair to rule on the admissibility of that amendment. It goes beyond the motion on the Order Paper, in my submission, and should not be accepted by the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I will take that under advisement at this time and permit the debate to continue. I will make a ruling at a later time after consulting with the Table. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty).

An hon. Member: The minister for housing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair is placed in a difficult situation right now. There was confusion, and I recognized one hon. member. I recognized the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on a point of order, and I did not see the minister rise. We do alternate at all times, but now—

An hon. Member: Don't be foolish.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I do not think the Chair wants to be foolish at any time. I just thought I would seek the advice and co-operation of hon. members. There is the tradition of alternating speakers. I did recognize the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, and I am now in the hands of the House. If the House does not want to continue the tradition of alternating speakers and go to the minister, I will accept its guidance. The Chair will be then free at any time—and I am warning you—to recognize two or three speakers from the opposition or from the government side. If we break with that tradition, it will be broken often, and that is not being foolish, as I heard some hon. member say. The Chair made a mistake and I will recognize an hon. member from the opposition; but, as I say, this is breaking with tradition.

Mr. Beatty: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, just to facilitate the afternoon's proceedings, I would like to indicate that I would be quite prepared to allow the minister responsible for housing to go first. I think he is a very important participant in this debate which centres on the question of housing, and I think all Canadians would be very anxious to hear what he has to say. I would be quite prepared to follow him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the House did not permit the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) to continue his very interesting, if somewhat hypothetical—

Mr. Crosby: You did not let the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) continue.

Mr. Cosgrove: —treatise on his interpretation of the economic malaise and his offered suggestions for cure or remedy this afternoon. It was apparent that the Liberal side of the House was quite content to hear the explanation and support for the amendment that he offered. However, we have not had that advantage.

• (1450)

I did have the advantage of hearing the appeals of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) when he asked for the help of the Liberal members on this side of the House. He should have known that the government's program was supported twice by the whole House in support of the budget of November 12, and that indeed the government has placed before the country and before Parliament its plans for an economic program for the country.

I would like to say at the outset that some people might be interested in knowing what the motion is which is before the House or what subjects of discussion were called for by the opposition, in case they are interested, because this might have been difficult in light of the comments or speeches we have heard thus far. The government is urging that we proceed with the immediate creation of two new programs to create employment in key sectors, one being housing. It is for that reason that I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon.

The government is making a thrust in the area of social programs. It is discharging its social responsibilities. The government has had the responsibility, commencing almost two years ago, the beginning of what we all appreciate as being difficult economic times, to meat its social commitments. It adopted the principle that in difficult economic times we should use our resources in the social area first to help those people who need help the most. I am pleased to have the opportunity to very quickly recount that that is the record of this government, particularly as it affects its responsibility for housing.

As the minister reporting for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to this forum, I invite hon. members to recollect the thrust of the government since it has assumed the new mandate and responsibility. What were those things that we did? What were our first priorities? What is our record in that area? I first draw to mind the fact that we moved to increase the allotment of the government's program, the national program aimed at assisting people of moderate and low income to find housing. These objectives were in our social programs, the co-operative and non-profit programs. We moved to increase those.

Second, we supported those areas of previous government action, such as the assisted housing ownership program and the assisted rental program, past initiatives of the government in assisting people. We moved to bolster these programs. A month after taking on responsibility as minister in this area, the assisted housing ownership program was extended. It was further extended in the budget of November 12, which doubled the amount of subsidy under that program. We have moved to prevent failures in those programs in an attempt to prevent dislocation of many tenants who have found a source of support necessary to them in seeking adequate shelter. Those were movements of this government in its social area.

We expanded the residential rehabilitation assistance program which is directed toward those of modest and low income and toward those people who are handicapped, for example. Referring to the handicapped, in the International Year of the Handicapped we moved to adopt, in a national policy and in all of our social programs, the basic rule that at least 5 per cent of all units constructed must be directed toward provision of housing and shelter for the handicapped. I maintain that was the rationale and thrust of the budget provisions pertaining to the housing and shelter needs of Canadians.

Who can forget the submissions, the representations and the many deputations to Parliament on September 15 on behalf of people impacted by high interest rates? The government moved to respond to the various rates. In the budget document, we introduced a plan to support people impacted by higher rates at roll-over time: we proposed a program which would either provide interest deferral with a government guarantee or an outright grant of $3,000.

However, that is not the main import of my comments this afternoon. It is the other aspect of the budget to which I would like to draw the attention of hon. members. I refer hon. members to the budget paper "The Budget in More Detail", and to the provision of $350 million which would provide accommodation to those Canadians who most desperately want assistance and need rental accommodation. It is directed to those Canadians who would be assisted, for example, under programs which have been time-tested in co-operation with the federal government, Canada Mortgage and Housing, and the provinces under rent geared to income. We have allocated $350 million toward a program which would provide a minimum of 15,000 units with potential for an increase, depending on the response to advertisements of that program.

I want to draw the attention of hon. members to the last paragraph on page 14 of the document to which I have referred. It states:

> Provision has been made for these housing proposals by special allocations of $150 million in 1982-83 and $200 million in 1983-84 to the social affairs envelope. The latter amount is intended to cover potential future year liabilities associated with these measures and to provide—

This is what I would like to underline:

> —within the fiscal framework, a contingent reserve for future measures, should they be required.

We have a commitment to this funding. That commitment was introduced by way of legislation tabled in this House by myself before Christmas. It was supported by legislation introduced in this House by way of a bill. It went through first and second reading, and it awaits the response of this House to a program which could create 70,000 jobs for Canadians looking for work in one of the areas which is most seriously impacted by the downturn in the economy.

What has been the reaction of the House? What has been the response of my critic in the official opposition to my request for speedy passage of that legislation?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Cosgrove: What has been the support of the New Democratic Party, which is asking for jobs, which comes into this House every day saying that we need more jobs in the construction industry and that we need more affordable housing? What has been the response?

An hon. Member: Zilch!

Mr. Kelly: Hypocrites!

Mr. Waddell: Bring in a good bill and we will put it through!

Mr. Cosgrove: Surely this is an important subject. Surely a day has not gone by when we have not been criticized by the opposition, which states that we are doing nothing and requests action!

Mr. Deans: And no wonder! You are a disaster, an absolute disaster!

Mr. Cosgrove: I say to the official opposition, particularly to the members of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deans: Will you guarantee to build 70,000 new units this year?

Mr. Cosgrove: —that if affordable housing and jobs are important, where is your support for such a program? I ask—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I would ask the co-operation of all members to listen to the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Deans: He is not saying anything!

Mr. Crosby: Let him talk sense!

Mr. Pinard: Three days!

Mr. Deans: We will give it to you in five minutes if you will guarantee to build 70,000 units.

Mr. Cosgrove: I will take that offer. The Leader of the Government would put the legislation before the House, and if the House would pass it, we would pass it in five minutes!

Mr. Deans: Okay, 70,000 housing units, then.

Mr. Cosgrove: We should not be debating a bill which is more concerned with the job opportunity of the official leader of the opposition.

Mr. Deans: He is not the "official leader".

Mr. Cosgrove: We should not be dealing with a bill which is more concerned with saving one job in the country than with creating 70,000 jobs.

Mr. Deans: Seventy thousand housing units, 150,000 jobs.

Mr. Althouse: There is a difference.

Mr. Cosgrove: I do have the request of the industry. I do have the support of the industry. At Winnipeg on Sunday, I had the support—

Mr. Deans: Nobody that I heard of; they fell asleep when you were speaking.

Mr. Cosgrove: —of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada. I have the support of the Urban Development Institute, the UDI. We have the support of the people who are charged with the responsibility of delivering and who have delivered housing in great numbers to a wide variety of Canadians in this country in a successful manner.

I wonder, is Mr. McDermid here today to urge us—

Mr. Deans: To listen to you?

Mr. Cosgrove: —to provide the funding and to pass the legislation to give 70,000 jobs to people who want—

Mr. Deans: One hundred and fifty thousand jobs.

Mr. Cosgrove: —employment in that area? Is he here? Do you have his support? Is he supporting the government?

Mr. Deans: He is watching you on television and laughing.

Mr. Cosgrove: I wonder, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Kelly: He is afraid to come.

Mr. Deans: He is watching you on TV and laughing at you. When you spoke at the housing institute, they fell asleep.

• (1500)

Mr. Cosgrove: The new critic for housing for the New Democratic Party has had that responsibility for approximately a couple of weeks. I invite him in all seriousness to take the budget document I referred to, look at the money provided, look at the unit cost, divide the unit cost into money afforded and look at the number of jobs that could be created.

Mr. Deans: It is a pittance compared to the need.

Mr. Cosgrove: You call 70,000 jobs a pittance? Well, the case rests there. Canadians have their answer; 70,000 jobs is not enough.

Mr. Deans: It is not nearly enough.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, would the House leader of the New Democratic Party let the minister speak?

Mr. Deans: Why? Give me one good reason.

Mr. Cullen: The minister is doing well.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, he is not. I want to hear him.

Mr. Cosgrove: I am disappointed today—

Mr. Deans: So are we.

Mr. Cosgrove: —that this day is taken for debate of a motion which it will become obvious to the public is designed in an attempt to play small politics, which I refer to is as parliamentary parlour tricks, with the government. I am extremely disappointed with the debate on this subject which is of such importance to Canadians. Who of the members can doubt that there have been requests by ordinary Canadians that are heartfelt? Since I made my offer to members opposite to assist with individual problems of Canadians, I have received close to 700 requests from members opposite to assist individual Canadians with problems in order to achieve some relief from higher interest rates.

We brought in a program. That program awaits passage. I refer to Bill C-89 which has been in the House for three days for discussion.

Mr. Deans: Three whole days. Isn't that awful?

Mr. Cosgrove: Does anyone in the House need three days to understand that Canadians want that relief? Do they need three days? Do they need three days more?

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Cosgrove: And why can we not bring Bill C-89 to the floor of the House on Monday and give that relief to Canadians?

Mr. Deans: When did you last call it?

Mr. Cosgrove: Why can we not start these programs? Why can we not start the construction of affordable rental accommodation for Canadians?

Mr. Deans: Why don't you rent out the 7,000 units?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Nine thousand.

Mr. Deans: Nine thousand.

Mr. Cosgrove: Why can we not employ Canadians in this program? That is the question. That is the issue raised by the motion before us today. That is the issue the public will have to judge.

The Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition said that Liberals will have to vote today the way in which they speak in their ridings. When I speak in my riding and in any other riding across Canada which I have the privilege to visit I bring the same message. From now on it will be focused on what is happening in Parliament, why housing is not being built and why there is no provision for affordable housing, because I want to provide it.

Mr. Deans: How about the 9,000 units sitting empty? Why don't you rent them out?

Mr. Cosgrove: I began by saying that the thrust of this government in difficult economic times in this area of social responsibility was to adopt the principle that we direct our resources to those who first have to be helped because they need help more than anyone else. I indicated there was a response which would assist thousands, not only in their housing needs but in their need to find meaningful employment. That legislation is before the House. I talked about the mortgage renewal plan, which, by the way, was confirmed by the court in Saskatchewan in a review of legislation by that government. I said that we are on course, that we should be providing inequity assistance to those people most affected. I was very pleased to see that support.

The government has done more than that. We have continued our social commitment. In fact, we have more than continued it. We have increased our commitment to the social needs of Canadians in the housing program. We have undertaken a review of the rural and native program, a program which serves Canadians of modest needs and of particular needs because of geography. These programs are before the government for consideration.

The government has undertaken an extensive study of the shelter allowance issue. It is not an allowance to assist Canadians to find a response to their housing needs through a specific building program, but to give them increased income to make a choice as to where they can find relief with regard to their shelter needs. That program is under study.

There is no simple single response. The response of the government was that, in difficult economic times, we have to respond in an equitable way to those who most demand and who are most deserving of our concerns.

The major point of my intervention in this debate is that Bill C-89 is designed to serve those Canadians who need modest accommodation, accommodation not being provided by any other level of government in this country. The only answer to the needs of Canadians rests squarely with the opposition to this government. That is the point I make. That is the answer I search for. I ask all Canadians in all ridings why this government is being prevented from proceeding with that plan for affordable accommodation and with jobs for Canadians to boot.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): After consultation with the legal advisers, I can inform the House that the amendment to the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is, in fact, acceptable. Therefore, the question is on the amendment which is as follows: Moved by the hon. member for Oshawa, seconded by the hon member for Kamloops-Shuswap:

> That the motion be amended by adding thereto after the words "now" the following:
> "And that this government be condemned for accepting the advice of the finance critic of the official opposition when he recently urged the government to maintain its high rate interest policy as it affects mortgages."

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, some 20 minutes ago when you first recognized me, I agreed to yield the floor to the minister of housing. I felt it was important that members of the House of Commons and all Canadians have a chance to hear the response of the minister of housing to the very serious allegations which were made by ten Members of Parliament in the open letter they sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the government was not doing enough to stimulate the housing industry in Canada.

That response by the minister was disappointing. All that he did was to fall back on the legislation which he has brought forward which deals with the housing component in the budget. All that he did was to pretend that that legislation would have some substantive effect upon employment in Canada and upon the serious housing crisis in Canada today.

Lest any Member of Parliament be deceived by the minister's comments, I remind the minister and the members of the House that that bill was placed on the Order Paper some weeks ago. The measures contained in the bill were announced by the minister on budget night. When those ten Liberal Members of Parliament, including two cabinet ministers, wrote their letter condemning the government's economic policy and calling upon the Prime Minister to bring in new measures to stimulate the construction industry and reduce unemployment, they knew precisely what the content of that bill was. If the minister is asking us whether or not the measures he is proposing will provide substantive relief for Canadians, I ask him not to listen to us but to listen to his own Liberal backbenchers who have said that it is not enough and it is essential that new measures be taken.

I did not expect that this minister, who is the weakest and most ineffectual housing minister in Canadian history, would have announced a major new initiative today. I do believe, however, that he had a responsibility to remind Canadians of the commitment he made last summer when he talked about what he would be saying to Canadians from coast to coast. He stated that he would be fighting for substantive relief in the budget for Canadian home owners. The strong implication of his statements as well as those of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was that unless they were able to get substantive relief for the people for whom they were concerned, they would be prepared to submit their resignations.

The ten Liberal Members of Parliament who signed that open letter to the Prime Minister clearly indicated their opinion of the worth of those budgetary provisions. Is the minister prepared to keep the commitment he has made? Is he prepared to put his job on the line on behalf of Canadians who are in jeopardy of losing their homes? Is he prepared to stand up for those many Canadian families who may never be able to achieve their dream of affordable housing? How does he explain his conduct as minister responsible for housing to his own constituents, quite apart from the commitments he has made across the country? How does he, as minister of housing, relate to his own constituents who find no relief in the budget in their efforts to renew their mortgages?

What does he say to his constituents, particularly the young Canadians who are looking for jobs? Unemployment among young Canadians is running at roughly twice the rate of unemployment among those over the age of 25. What response does he give those whom he represents in Parliament? What has he done for those who are affected by the government's economic policies? How will he vote today when he is called upon to represent his constituents?

For that matter, what has he done for his constituents on McLure Crescent who have radioactive soil in their backyards, aside from trying to sneak the soil somewhere else? He has done nothing for those constituents. What have he and his colleagues done for those constituents in Scarborough who have urea formaldehyde in their homes? Are they satisfied? How does the minister respond to them as their Member of Parliament when they ask him to represent them and speak to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) because they need help?

This debate concerns two issues. The first issue is clearly the question of the Canadian economy. The figures are evident. There are a million Canadians unemployed, and unemployment is particularly rampant among young Canadians. An increasing number of Canadians are being forced to surrender their homes, their businesses and their farms. The economic facts are very clear.

The second issue which the house is being asked to address today is our system of parliamentary democracy. Will members of the government caucus be free to represent their constituents and speak up when the government makes decisions which adversely affect their constituents, and second, will those Members of Parliament, when forced to decide between their constituents and their Prime Minister, put their country and constituents first? That is the issue which will be decided at five o'clock today.

We know what happened when the minister responsible for housing had to decide to either keep his commitment to resign or swallow his words and pretend that there were substantive measures in the budget. We know what the Minister of Agriculture did. We know as well what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) did. When the minister spoke on television during the last election campaign he said he would resign from the Liberal government if they were elected and the interest rates continued to increase. When he was faced with record high interest rates, what did he do? He chose to swallow his words and compromise his integrity.

What will be the position of the Liberal Members of Parliament, such as the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly)? He has been very silent in Ottawa on the issue of the government's treatment of the budget. This intrigued me when I read the Toronto Star on January 7 when reference was made to the member for Scarborough Centre on this matter. The headline read, "Metro's Liberal MPs still upset with budget". It dealt with the hon. member this way:

> MP Norm Kelly (L—Scarborough Centre), who said he got his licks during earlier caucus meetings against some features of the budget, is reserving judgment on whether more changes are needed.
> He's meeting with car salesmen in his riding today. The auto sales industry is claiming that increasing taxes paid by employees provided with company cars will hit hard. The Canadian Automotive Leasing Association says the tax changes on parts could chop production of 150,000 cars and trucks annually.
> Kelly also dislikes fighting inflation with high interest rates.

When has he said that in the House of Commons? When has he participated in the debate? When Liberal members have been asked to stand up and vote, when have we seen an indication from him that he is prepared to say the same thing in Ottawa as he said to the local press? Well, we will know at five o'clock today whether he is prepared to stand up and be counted.

That is the issue, Mr. Speaker. Does he put his constituents first or does he do the bidding of his Prime Minister?

An hon. Member: I thought the issue was jobs.

Mr. Beatty: Liberal backbenchers have been put precisely in that position. The Prime Minister has told them, "When I want your opinion, I will give it to you. Do not bother me otherwise." When the Prime Minister was asked in the House whether he was concerned about the breach of cabinet solidarity when two members of his cabinet wrote an open letter calling upon the government to disavow the policies of the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister said, as quoted in Hansard on February 9 at page 14800:

Madam Speaker, there is a very simple test of cabinet solidarity, and it is the one which Laurier applied. The right hon. member should look at the circumstances described by Laurier in the case he cites. It is that, when a minister disagrees with the cabinet, he resigns from that cabinet.

There was then an interjection, and the Prime Minister continued:

Or she resigns if she disagrees with the position of the budget or of the government on any particular matter; or if he or she is a member of the caucus, he or she does what members in the caucus of the Leader of the Opposition did. He or she resigns from the caucus and gets out.

That is what cabinet solidarity means. In every other circumstance, the ministers and the caucus are holding together, and they are sticking with the government. This does not mean, as I said—

At this point there was an interjection. He continued:

It is really very interesting to see the amount of time we will spend in this question period answering questions by the opposition seeking out a division in this caucus. If there is a division, why don't the members sit as independents?

Why indeed, Mr. Speaker? That is the choice being given to the members of the Liberal caucus by the Prime Minister. In other words, toe the line or get out. They either blindly accept the position taken by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance or they are told to get out. That is the choice which the Liberal caucus will have to make today when they vote on this motion at five o'clock.

Will they put their constituents first or will they swallow their integrity and pride, shirk their responsibility to their constituents and vote complicitly on policies which are inflicting very serious damage on their constituents?

The onus is on Liberal Members of Parliament to put their country first. I believe the constituents of those hon. members opposite are saying the same thing.

I was somewhat concerned when I heard both the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the minister responsible for housing suggest that my leader was calling upon Liberal Members of Parliament to help him today. That is not the case. We do not need their help, nor do we particularly want it. What is being asked is that those Liberal Members of Parliament support their constituents and the people of Canada. That is the issue which they will have to resolve at five o'clock. Will they put their constituents first or are they here to do the bidding of the Prime Minister and blindly follow his instructions?

That is the option which faces the member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) who spoke last week in an interview which appeared in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. He said that he had received over 1,000 letters from his constituents complaining about the effects of the budget on them. How will he vote today? Will he be here to stand up and vote on behalf of his constituents? We will see at five o'clock.

What is the position of other Liberal MPs? What did they hear from their constituents over the Christmas recess?

When Parliament resumed after the Christmas recess, Maclean's magazine called a number of members of the Liberal caucus in an attempt to get some response from them. This is what the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder) is reported to have said:

● (1520)

The budget is another notch in belt-tightening that they just figure is getting too tight," sighs southern Ontario MP Jim Schroder. "And the tenor of many of my letters is, 'Of course this letter won't do any good—' "

We will see today whether those letters have any effect on the hon. member for Guelph.

What did another Liberal member say? This is the way Maclean's dealt with it:

"The budget is only the last straw," admits northern Ontario MP Ron Irwin.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Beatty: It goes on to read:

Constituents say, 'Do something'. They feel there's no control. (To get elected today) I'd have to rely on my record and not my party.

That is a quotation from Maclean's. How will that hon. member vote today at five o'clock?

What have other members said? Under the headline "Barometer Bob registers rage" a reference in The Windsor Star of January 25 to an interview with the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) indicated that the hon. member is very concerned about the effect of the budget upon his constituents. He concluded the interview by strongly implying that it is time for the Prime Minister to resign. The Windsor Star said:

Now the 41-year-old MP comes close to conceding Trudeau—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Beatty: It goes on to read:

—is no longer a saleable commodity and hints he would be doing the party a favour by stepping down soon.

"The decision is going to be made by that man, not me. It would be counterproductive to say he's got to go now."

But Daudlin says it's clear that people no longer feel they can expect new ideas and new approaches under Trudeau's leadership.

"There's a public perception out there as to leadership that can only be altered when somebody new takes the helm."

That is what the Liberal member of caucus for Essex-Kent said. How will he vote today? I think I know how he, the hon. member for Kitchener and the hon. member for Guelph will vote today. I suspect their constituents know as well.

Following that interview, there was a follow-up article in The Windsor Star which dealt with that interview and pointed out the responsibilities the hon. member has to speak out on behalf of his constituents. Under the headline "When you're just a nobody, MPs' platitudes won't keep you warm or fill your stomach" in The Windsor Star of February 9, this is what Georgina Woltz said:

A recent article in The Star by Gord Henderson centred on Essex-Kent Liberal MP Bob Daudlin, who like other Liberal MPs has expressed concern and outrage at what has been happening to their constituents as a result of present economic policies. However, when a recent no confidence vote on the budget was called for in the House of Commons, we heard nothing about any Liberal MP or cabinet minister, including Daudlin, opposing the budget or in any way criticizing Liberal economic policies. Like good little sheep they dutifully voted down the no-confidence motion and its amendment.

To vote against the Liberal hierarchy would be political suicide and it would appear that principles, integrity, the trust given to these elected representatives and the concern of the people they have promised to serve, lead to too high a price to pay for the possibility of losing favour with party leaders. After all, they must look after number one and if they can get by with a few band-aid remedies—a few crumbs to silence the more vocal—well, who knows how long they might survive? Never mind the hurting "nobodies" back home, party loyalty must take precedence.

That is the response of people in the Essex area to the statement made by the hon. member.

What about the hon. member for Guelph? Will he speak out today? Will he vote at five o'clock today to represent his constituents? A very similar article appeared in the Guelph Mercury on January 16, 1982, after the hon. member for Guelph had been receiving representations from his constituents that it was time he spoke up on their behalf. That is what Bruce Laplaunte, a staff writer for the daily Mercury in Guelph said:

If Schroder is the decent man I think he is—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair has been very lenient. The hon. member is quoting from certain newspapers, and he is allowed to do so, but there is a rule we abide by in the House that when hon. members are referred to, they must be referred to by their constituencies and not by their names, and I invite the hon. member to do that.

Mr. Nielsen: Not when you are quoting.

Mr. Beatty: I might pursue that at another time, Mr. Speaker, but I will not now. I will be pleased to abide by your ruling, but I think it is important all hon. members know which constituency my friend is from. It is the constituency of Guelph. This article says that if the hon. member for Guelph is, and I quote:

—the decent man I think he is, he has to know it's time to stop acting like a party lackey, to stand up in the House and tell (the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance) he can't sell his soul for a backbench seat on the government side.

It is not the Liberals who are ruining this country and dashing the dreams and hard work of most of us. It's that damned silly, pointy-headed academic at the helm—and those who play patsy to him.

Please!

And the article refers to the hon. member for Guelph.

—own up to that. Save your soul. And, in the process, your country.

That was the position taken by a columnist, Mr. Bruce Laplaunte, who is with the Guelph daily Mercury, about the hon. member for Guelph. His constituents will be watching today to see how the hon. member for Guelph votes.

Mr. Simmons: They won't be proud of you.

Mr. Beatty: Members of Parliament from other constituencies have also made statements. The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) has called upon the Prime Minister to step aside and has said it is time for a new Liberal leader. He has also attacked the policies of the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Where will he be today at five o'clock? Will he represent his constituents?

What about the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen)? I want to read to hon. members what was said in The Globe and Mail on January 14, 1982. It reads as follows:

Former Liberal cabinet minister—

The article mentions the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

—said there are parts of the federal budget he still does not like.

He said:

—some members of the party who had concerns demanded a meeting with—

The Minister of Finance.

—and 17 changes to the budget have resulted. "It indicates to the public that we are not sheep in there,"—

We will see today whether that is true and whether the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton is a sheep or whether he puts his constituents first.

What about the Minister of Agriculture? What has he said? He has made himself very clear. He gave a speech in London earlier this year. He had written a speech, but ultimately refused to use it. Instead, the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) gave a speech on the minister's behalf in which he was very critical of the budget and said he would press to have it changed. The constituents of the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex will be watching today too. However, the text prepared for release by the Minister of Agriculture said this:

While these anti-inflation measures are necessary medicine for the long-term, I know that some aspects of the budget were unfair and I campaigned to get those things changed. I think that some officials in the finance department didn't quite understand how some of the budget items affect people like farmers.

What will happen today when the Minister of Agriculture is called upon? The London Free Press of January 19 dealt with the minister and said:

Even publicly, Whelan's remarks are unusual for a cabinet minister in their blunt criticism of a fellow minister. He says he sent "several letters" to (the Minister of Finance) after the budget was introduced November 12. Did (the Minister of Agriculture) express concern about the budget's plan to drop the income-averaging tax provisions? "You want to believe I did," he says.

That is what the Minister of Agriculture was quoted as saying, but will he stand up at five o'clock and put the interests of Canadian farmers first, or will he be silently complicitous in budgetary policies which are driving Canadian farmer after Canadian farmer out of business?

My leader mentioned the fact that the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) also called for the budget to be thrown out. This is what the Montreal Gazette of January 23 said about that Ontario member:

Liberal MP—

The article refers to the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

—has called for the rejection of the federal budget after a stormy meeting with his constituents.

"I think we should throw the basic part of this (budget) out and look at applying it to people who pay no tax on very high income,"—

This was after a stormy meeting, so the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan wants the budget thrown out. Will he be here today and vote as he said to his constituents he was prepared to do?

What about other Members of Parliament? Will they speak up on behalf of their constituents? I have already mentioned the hon. member for Scarborough Centre. There are other Toronto Liberals as well who have spoken out. In the article to which I referred previously in the Toronto Star of January 7 the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) was quoted as saying he received hundreds of calls and letters, and he promised he would continue to speak up in caucus and write to the Minister of Finance asking that the budget:

—hit the targeted (high-income) people and not the little people.

That is the issue we will decide today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity, so obligingly provided by the Progressive Conservative Party, to expand on the action taken by the Liberal members from central and eastern Montreal, who certainly did not need the advice of the members opposite to bring to the attention of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the problems existing in their constituencies. As one of the members who signed the letter to the Prime Minister, I feel I should point out that the letter was interpreted in every possible way by the members opposite. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, there is ample proof in Hansard that I supported the budget in a speech before this very House, and that at the beginning of last week, I also spoke out in favour of Bill C-89 on residential housing, an important area that was stressed in our letter. For the benefit of my constituents in Montreal-Mercier, I may remind our Progressive Conservative friends that my colleagues and myself, are aware of the economic problems existing throughout the world, have vigorously supported the proposal in the MacEachen budget.

Only a few months ago, the official opposition and the business world in general agreed that after inflation, the government's main objective should be to bring down the budget deficit. Mr. Speaker, I think the MacEachen budget took a very vigorous approach to this problem, so that within a few years we can expect to restore the balance and reduce the government's debt load. My constituents in Montreal-Mercier, for instance, know perfectly well that if they borrow too much, their budget won't be able to stand the strain, and they will have to cut their expenses. The Canadian government's attempts to reduce the deficit, which was largely caused by oil compensation payments benefiting Quebecers and the rest of eastern Canada have been well received by my constituents. They realize that reducing the deficit will release funds for use as new investments.

The unemployment situation in Canada is not very optimistic. And it gets even worse when we consider the situation in Quebec. According to Statistics Canada, between 1972 and 1976, in other words, during the pre-separation, pre-independence and pre-Lévesque government period, the unemployment rate was 6.2 in Canada and 7.5 in Quebec. Since the Parti Québécois came to power, unemployment in Canada increased by 1.6, that is from 6.2 to 7.8. However, in Quebec, the unemployment rate is now at 10.2, which means an increase of nearly 3 per cent. To a member from Quebec, these figures are alarming, and that is why members from eastern Montreal took their views and their recommendations to the Prime Minister.

Every week young people come to my constituency office, looking for a job, and that is really what convinced me to sign the letter with my colleagues. At the present time, the federal government has a number of job-creation programs, and our purpose was not to throw out the budget but to make suggestions on improving existing programs in various sectors. These programs, Mr. Speaker, include nearly 11 measures aimed at creating jobs which apply to Quebec. In 1981-82, the programs created 50,798 jobs, which represents some $107 million. Mr. Speaker, although 50,000 benefited from these programs, which is quite considerable, these measures have been unable to make a significant dent in the present unemployment rate in Quebec. That is why we believe that the budget envelope administered by the Department of Employment and Immigration, could allow for certain funds to be spent directly on creating jobs for young people in order to help integrate them in the job environment. In the final instance, Mr. Speaker, the emphasis should be on measures to promote this process, because the present labour market situation is very tight, for workers as well as for employers.

It would be impossible to list all the reasons why young people have trouble finding jobs, but there is one that all our colleagues are aware of because of the reports made on the subject in the House, and I am referring to training. Employers today, faced with problems caused by the economic situation in general, can hardly afford to give any sort of priority to this group of workers. Because of wage agreements which do not always provide for a probationary period for young employees, employers demand a fairly high production rate. This creates feeling of dissatisfaction on both sides when the young employee decides to leave and the employer is disappointed once more after investing time and money in training a young employee who will never give him a return on his investment. Mr. Speaker, the members for central and eastern Montreal are therefore in favour of emphasizing programs that promote the integration of young people in the regular labour market, in other words, the private sector, without making undue demands on the finances of these businesses which are presently experiencing very difficult times. We were not as specific in our letter, but today I felt it was important to specify the kind of measures we had in mind when we wrote to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. We are convinced that the members opposite will make the needs of their constituencies known and that this opposition day will be constructive for Canada as a whole.

In this context, we urge our colleagues opposite to speed up current business, as requested earlier by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), including Bill C-89, which will help create 70,000 jobs that will not only be welcome in our constituencies but will also give the impetus needed by the building industry in Quebec. Let us keep in mind that this bill which is now before Parliament was announced in the November budget and that our constituents want to see it implemented as quickly as possible. It provides, for instance, $150 million for 1982-83 and $200 million for 1983-84. I believe that we can expect this bill to be passed in the near future. Thus, the Canadian government will be able to finance 40,000 more rental units in 1982, including 25,000 units under the non-profit and co-operative housing programs, which provide housing for low and medium-income renters. This means accessible housing for the people of the eastern Montreal constituencies as a whole.

Moreover, the Canada Rental Supply Plan will finance an additional 15,000 units to prevent an even greater shortage of rental housing. Bill C-89 will play a major role in providing these 15,000 units by enabling, for instance, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to insure more substantial loans for rental housing. This has become a serious problem and our colleagues opposite can help us to solve this problem in the near future by agreeing to expedite House business.

No one on this side can deny that we are going through one of the most difficult periods since the war. However, all economists, whether Liberal, Conservative or New Democrat, all agree that inflation must be checked if interest rates are to go down. In fact, Statistics Canada figures for this month are encouraging. The cost of living has dropped and the annual average is improving. This is good news for our constituents who have also done their share in improving our economy. However, without being overly optimistic, I venture to think that these are the early signs of an upturn and of the impact of the MacEachen budget, and I hope that the unemployment rate will soon decrease with the implementation of Bill C-89. We must recognize that Quebec and the eastern provinces are more affected by unemployment than the others. As Members of Parliament for Quebec, we have an even bigger job than others if we want to regain the confidence of investors.

The Parti Québécois convention which was held last week can only make matters worse. During that convention, it was decided that the next step for Quebec was independence, and I believe that this period of uncertainty for Quebecers will become more serious, last longer and create problems for investors who have lost confidence in Quebec's future. Moreover, the poor Quebecers are the most heavily taxed in Canada, and even in the world, because if we look at the tax rates in other countries, we can see that Quebec has the sad distinction of holding the record for high taxes, among other records. In my opinion, at this time, instead of creating conflicts by ignoring each other—I believe that it was a good sign this week for the people of the provincial government to come and visit the federal government—we should consolidate our relations with Quebec and initiate a positive dialogue.

As housing comes under provincial jurisdiction, I believe that the role of the Canadian government can only be a regulatory one. It is therefore important to work in harmony with provincial and local agencies. In fact, the hon. members representing the central eastern part of Montreal will meet officials from the various levels of government, including the Urban Community of Montreal, the municipalities and all the economic agents from eastern Montreal, in the near future to discuss the federal programs which are available to them at the present time. We are now at the organizing stage and I am happy to report that my colleagues and I are now taking steps to meet all the people concerned in our area in order to make available to them the funds obtained from the federal government. It is my view, Mr. Speaker, that any member of Parliament has the duty to ensure that information, the benefits of government programs have a positive impact in his or her constituency.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat for the benefit of my colleagues opposite that our concept of the role of a Member of Parliament is much more dynamic and positive than theirs. Members of the opposition are repeatedly suggesting that we never say a word about government policies, but a few minutes ago, the same members also suggested that government policy was to muzzle Members of Parliament. This party includes members who will support it. We are also convinced that it will react positively to the proposals we made to the Prime Minister.

I therefore thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) once again for having given us, members of the Liberal Party, an opportunity to discuss a problem that concerns each and everyone of us. And if he is looking for suggestions for his next motion, Mr. Speaker, we are quite ready to co-operate with him in planning of the forthcoming opposition day. However, the opposition should refrain from telling the Canadian people that it is possible at the same time to reduce inflation, bring down interest rates, maintain the value of the Canadian dollar and not to experience an impact on unemployment. Surely they have economists who can make calculations and projections just as good as ours. It is my view that as responsible Members of Parliament, our friends opposite should as soon as possible take positive action on construction and housing and this is why I join the Minister of Public Works in urging them to pass Bill C-89 without further delay.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has never been questioned by any of the government members. We had healthy discussions with the Minister of Finance, his parliamentary secretary, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and I think it is the role of Members of Parliament to examine the budget and work for the wellbeing of their constituents. This is why, Mr. Speaker, on my behalf and on behalf of my colleagues who also will have an opportunity to express their views, I say that tonight at five o'clock, for the information of the hon. member who spoke before me, I shall vote with the government to allow it to immediately implement the measures provided for in the budget and I hope for a most favourable response within the shortest time to the measures that we have announced.

• (1540)

[English]

I want to reiterate my wish that opposition members support Bill C-89 within a short period of time so that construction can start in the riding of Montreal-Mercier and that it will receive all the benefits of the budget.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I would like to say that the motion before the House today is quite relevant and quite challenging for the majority of members who are anxious to defend the interests of their constituents.

First, I would like to remind the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), whom I have always regarded as being basically honest, that when he refers to the statement of our financial critic to the effect that we support higher interest rates, particularly in housing as he pointed out, he cannot be taken seriously. I suggest he is making a serious mistake in light of our comments and the evidence in support of our position. It has long since been demonstrated that the Progressive Conservative Party was and still is prepared to advocate preferential interest rates in such a sensitive field as housing. I simply had to say this because I have the impression that the leader of the New Democratic Party misinterpreted the comments of our spokesman. I have a few words as well for the minister responsible for housing who, for the second consecutive week, has tried to defend the pitiful performance of his department.

He said that the Canadian people were suffering, so he certainly cannot be accused of falsifying the truth, but of course he failed to add that he has clear-cut responsibilities with respect to such a major industry as housing which is dying. He went on to say that the Canadian people will pass judgment on us. We are quite prepared to let the Canadian people judge the debate and the fight we are having today and which began long ago. For instance, how can we explain why he did not grab this opportunity to endorse openly the recommendations made by the group of ten Liberals? How can we explain that he did not jump at the chance of saying to them: Listen, I do not see how you can possibly support the government today, so in response to a justifiable, urgent and pressing request, we will not hesitate to support you because we readily admit that it is an urgent matter and that a contingency plan is required for the housing sector. He did not say either that yesterday his officials publicly stated that the activities in the housing construction sector will not start before six months and that they will be rather sluggish during the following six months.

His silence about the recommendation made by the group of which I would heartily support can only be interpreted as a categorical refusal. I also heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) tell us a somewhat similar story to that he told us last week and to me it was a sorry spectacle because he was trying once again to make Canadians believe that programs conceived from day to day will help the economy via a similar manner as a fireman is called upon to put out a fire. Therefore he has proven to us that his government has let the situation deteriorate to the point that programs have to be adjusted daily because they can no longer meet the emergency conditions set out in the proposal we are submitting today. The Minister of Employment and Immigration, following the example of his colleagues who first blamed the Americans for the state of our economy and then the Quebec government, as did the previous speaker, the member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), for the economic conditions in that province now accuses unions and management but never the government of being responsible for the situation.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, since 1968 we have witnessed a downturn in economic activity, not to mention other areas, since we are now dealing with the economy. In spite of all the figures quoted today, those to which the Minister of Employment and Immigration referred to, it remains that he omitted to mention the 1,500,000 Canadians unemployed because for every job he creates two are lost. I do not think that this is the way to build a viable country.

Our proposal, Madam Speaker, is nothing more than a minimum requirement to correct on one hand an intolerable situation in view of the problems faced by our young people from 18 to 25 years of age and on the other hand to stimulate the construction industry. That is what we would like to do. Is there anything more noble and more legitimate, than calling out for an emergency program in both these areas? Government members should stop accusing the province of Quebec, or the American government, but have a good look at themselves, Mr. Speaker, and ask what we are doing for this country. This government which enjoyed the confidence of the people for years does no longer deserve it, Mr. Speaker, and it can be felt in the ridings. It is true that my own province is deeply affected as the result of the deplorable performance of the federal government, but my own province is still more affected by a recession for which the government has to accept responsibility.

Two years ago, the Liberals were returned to power. Let my Liberal colleagues tell me at what point during the election campaign they warned the electorate that they would increase fourfold the 18-cent tax which we had proposed. Let them tell me, Mr. Speaker, at what point during the election campaign they warned the voters in Quebec and elsewhere that they would increase 120 per cent the price of fuel oil. Let them tell me, Mr. Speaker, at what point they warned Canadians that they would let the construction industry die as they are doing now. Let them tell me, Mr. Speaker, at what point they warned Canadians that they would refuse to do anything for renters. Let them tell me, Mr. Speaker, at what point they warned that they would torpedo our tax credit scheme which was intended to help home owners keep their houses. When did they warn the Canadian people that they would fight inflation on the backs of the unemployed? Never, Mr. Speaker, did they tell the workers in the traditional industries, the ailing industries in Quebec, that they would have to accept early retirement plans and job training programs because the federal government has clearly demonstrated its determination to ignore the traditional industries?

We receive representations from the shoe and textile industries. I know that the ridings of many hon. members on the government side are very severely affected by the government's carelessness and nearsightedness. They did not say anything about that two years ago. They did not warn the electorate of the decisions this government is making on a day to day basis. The members of this government, in my opinion, are all party to a national treason. And Quebecers who are watching us today are anxious to see how their elected representatives, some six dozens of them, will behave. They are anxious to see whether the opinion of the ten dissenting members, including two ministers, is shared by the majority of the Quebec Liberal caucus, and in case it is, how they will vote tonight considering the lack of response from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), who is in charge of the very sensitive area of housing, as well as the lack of response from the Minister of Employment and Immigration, to their recommendation? Surely, deeds speak louder than words. To represent our fellow citizens and convey their real hopes and wishes to Parliament, in my opinion, is a noble and respectable occupation. How could they claim that they respect this occupation and deserve the confidence their constituents have vested in them if these hon. members do not have the guts to stand behind their signatures?

An hon. Member: Beware of your high blood pressure!

Mr. La Salle: My blood pressure is just fine, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that these hon. members should examine their conscience this afternoon, taking into account the fact that they have an obligation to give the Canadian people an opportunity to elect a party which would be concerned with the interests of all parts of Canada.

I have spoken of national treason, Mr. Speaker. After the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had been brought down, it became clear that in Quebec, as elsewhere, voters had had enough, and could not put up with those measures which are repressive for and condemned by all categories of people and in every field of endeavour in Quebec and everywhere in our Canadian society. My colleagues from Quebec who are fooling around across the way know that perfectly well.

How is it then that only ten of them signed that letter when I know at least 50 felt like doing so? I appeal to their conscience. I appeal to the sense of respect they should have for their signature, and on behalf of millions of Quebecers, Mr. Speaker, I plead with them to meet the expectations and aspirations of their own constituents. How does one explain, Mr. Speaker, that all of a sudden those members should decide to write an open letter to their Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), if not because of the pressures and the helplessness they felt in their ridings?

A while ago, the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier delivered a gracious message and probably spoke on behalf of the ten, trying to justify what they will do this evening, saying she has never condemned the MacEachen budget. What a cop-out, Mr. Speaker! This is not the first time I have seen it either. But what a great disappointment for the Quebecers who thought that surely at some point some group would have the courage to bring the Minister of Finance back to his senses, and also bring the government to be more respectful of the needs of Canada as a whole, and especially Quebec, since there are 74 members sitting opposite whose role is extremely important. It seems increasingly possible, as I speak to you, that Quebecers will once more be disappointed because those members did not have the courage to stick it out to the end, and their last stand will be seen in Quebec as a pitiful performance. And the leader of the rebels, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), I have yet to see in the House today. I wonder if she will show up here tonight after the warning the Prime Minister gave her. The hon. member for Montreal-Mercier did not tell us everything when she said she willingly submitted to the invitation of the chairman of the caucus who chided her, and that of the Prime Minister who gave them a backhander, warning them that the next letter he looks at will be one of resignation. Why did the hon. member for Montreal-Mercier not tell us that?

Everyone knows now who the Prime Minister scolded them and warned them he would not put up with such letters being made public. But today, Mr. Speaker, I feel that for the sake of Canada and Quebec, the matter is much more important. Something is more important and vital. The minister responsible for housing said that Canadians are suffering; yes, it is true, Canadians are suffering. But the Canadian people are victims of an economic doctrine which is inconsistent with their needs and their aims. The tremendous failure of this government became apparent lately and it is being confirmed every day. Those members have a responsibility, Mr. Speaker. How can I appeal to their pride? Is it still possible to plead with them? What can be done to convince them that the Canadian people deserve better than the Minister of Finance's proposals, that they deserve better than a prime minister who ignores the suffering of the people and is indifferent to their plight? What can I do to touch the heart of those men and women who will not stop for one moment to defend the Canadian or the Quebec nation instead of supporting the partisan interests of a political party intent on bringing about the country's ruin? That is the issue today. And I am a Quebecer sitting here.

I will always be blamed for supporting the Quebec government, but if the Quebec government introduces measures designed to stop massive plant closedowns, I will not hesitate to support it or any other government that would do that, Mr. Speaker.

But as long as they look for excuses and blame others for the government's dismal performance, I will have no hesitation but to discharge my duty as a Member of Parliament to severely criticize not only those who will not honour their signature but also the others who have no respect for the confidence put in them by their constituents just two years ago. And of all the members from Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I am the only one who can condemn the government. There are two or three dozen others on that side who would like to, but who once more today do not have the courage to do it. They are afraid of losing their seats. They deserve it because day in and day out they betray the interests of their constituents. Of course, Mr. Speaker, they believe that truth is on their side, but it is beyond understanding how once more this afternoon they are going to follow blindly the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister who are leading this country to bankruptcy. They are aware of it and they are ill at ease in their constituencies and if they do not have enough courage to proudly put the interests of their constituencies ahead of the interests of a party that is hurting the country to such an extent, I hope that their constituents will make all kinds of representations to them over the weekend.

Maybe those people think we are still preaching in the desert. Well, let them think what they will. However, I will waste no opportunity to remind the people of Canada, the people of Quebec that on this side of the House we have people who believe that their first duty is to meet the most cherished aspirations of a nation that wants to survive and that does not want to be driven to ruin and disaster, as has been the case for too long. My view is that Canadians will jump on the first opportunity that arises, hopefully within a short time-frame, to take the country out of this mess and restore pride and the will to live to thousands of people who are now broken-spirited.

There is rising uncertainty in every area right now, Quebec is no exception, and things are even worse there, because of those 74 Liberal members who have been around for the past 15 years. How come Montreal lost its status as the metropolis of Canada with 74 Liberal members for the province and 22 Liberal members out of 22 for the island of Montreal, plus five or six ministers? Because of the poor performance of the people opposite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I now recognize the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate today on the motion introduced by the official opposition. Yesterday, we commemorated in this House the second anniversary of our return to office. This day brings back to me the rout of the Progressive Conservative Party at that time. When I heard those who spoke today, first the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), then his colleague from Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) and, finally, my good friend from Joliette (Mr. La Salle), I said to myself that they were still in a rout. Firstly, their motion is taken directly from a letter written by some Liberal colleagues. Their speeches were almost entirely made up of quotations from Liberal colleagues throughout the country, and everything we heard concerned the Liberal Party. This means, Mr. Speaker, that the official opposition should thank the Canadian people for re-electing us two years ago, because they had nothing to say. The members opposite have gone to the trouble of having a motion put on the Order Paper on behalf of the official opposition so they could speak only about the Liberals. Have we heard any valid solutions today? Have we heard any suggestions? None whatsoever, Mr. Speaker. In the minutes at my disposal, I would like to ask them why they did not take any action in certain areas since they would like the population to believe that they could have done so. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that our government, and especially the Department of Employment and Immigration, have taken and will take action to respond to the present economic situation.

We shall have to face some very important issues in the next few years and we shall have to do what is needed to meet the demand, as concerns both the economy and manpower. Yesterday I read an article in the Montreal Gazette about a conference arranged by the Financial Post and dealing with future technologies. This article pointed out how essential it was for Canada to plan a major catch-up operation in this field. In fact, most other industrialized countries do face the same problem. However, in the case of Canada, at a time when our traditional sources of immigration are becoming more and more depleted and we are considering extensive industrial megaprojects, it is obvious that we have to make additional, and especially concentrated efforts on a national scale.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the importance of the challenge which we shall be facing during the forthcoming decade in the human resources field has been described in various studies mentioned by the minister this morning, and more specifically in that sponsored by our own department and conducted under the leadership of one of our colleagues and dealing with employment prospects for the eighties. In the past 12 months, Mr. Speaker, the government, the private sector and the trade unions have become very concerned with human resources policies. The consultations which led to the recent federal-provincial conference held in Vancouver early in January to deal with job training are now over and we are about to implement a most effective training program for the whole country. This will be a flexible program which will meet today's needs and provide long-term benefit to all Canadians. We are now witnessing a dramatic decrease in supply throughout the country. The average growth rate of the labour force, which had reached 3.5 per cent in the early sixties and seventies, will have fallen to a mere 1.8 per cent by the end of the eighties. In addition, the make-up of the labour force will have undergone radical changes. The number of newcomers on the labour market will decrease during the next decade and two thirds of them will be women. In western Canada the native people will account for over 20 per cent of the population increase. At least one out of every five newcomers on the labour force will be from the native community in that part of Canada. The average age of the workers will substantially increase. This factor alone will affect the labour market and even our daily life.

Mr. Speaker, all members are well aware of the unprecedented changes that will occur in the economy and the labour market during this decade. However, we are faced with an extraordinary paradox. The unemployment figures are high, but the evolution of our economy is causing serious manpower shortages, especially in the specialized fields. In fact, certain jobs cannot be filled in Canada because of a lack of specialized workers, and this is why we have to call on immigrants to fill certain positions.

No later than this week, the president of a big engineering firm in Montreal pointed out, and rightly so, that the country is very short of engineers at this time, and that this shortage will become crucial in the years to come; that it may even harm the megaprojects we are planning to get under way. Similarly in private industries, Mr. De Grandpré, chairman of Northern Telecom spoke recently of the shortage of qualifications in his own company. He predicts that Northern Telecom will have to recruit up to 65,000 engineers and experts over the next ten years, if it wants to keep and strengthen its lead in the key technological fields of electronics and telecommunications. A study of those needs in manpower, and especially skilled labour, and the high rate of unemployment, makes action imperative. There is a pressing need to speed up the process of change in the training system across the land. That is precisely why we had that great conference in early January where the topic of vocational training was debated at length.

Like all my colleagues in the House I witnessed the general outcry on the part of certain provinces which were accusing us of trying to interfere in a field of provincial jurisdiction. Of course they did not take into account the fact that our purpose was to train people who are already out of the education system and on the labour market. We also noticed that the province of Quebec was reluctant to participate in this program. Last year we gave the province of Quebec about $65 million for vocational training.

Mr. Speaker, I was very surprised today when I heard the arguments of our colleagues opposite because they did not even say that those programs exist in the province of Quebec. My colleague from Joliette did say that the members from the province of Quebec were not doing anything in the House of Commons. I would like to remind him that during the constitutional debate the Leader of the Opposition and a few of his colleagues tried to bring pressure to bear on the government of Quebec in an attempt to make certain amendments to our constitutional proposal. Mr. Speaker, they knew full well that it was a sheer waste of time to try to convince an openly separatist party to sit at the bargaining table in Ottawa with a view to amending a proposed constitution. They knew beforehand that it was an exercise in futility.

But in concrete cases such as this vocational training project, where do our friends opposite stand? Did they try again to pressure the Quebec government to sit at the same table with us in an effort to renegotiate that constitutional agreement? Did they? I would like to know. I hope that our friend from Joliette who is telling us that he is just— I am looking forward to the reaction of the Quebec government in that respect to see if indeed they will be able to convince the Quebec government.

We on this side of the House have offered to the government of Quebec a program especially designed to train throughout Canada the skilled labour force we will need to meet our needs in the coming years.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has just announced another very important program, a program he successfully negotiated with the government of Ontario to enable roughly 2,000 forest workers to be actively employed during the short period until they go back to their regular jobs this spring. Under this program, the provinces and Ottawa can sign agreements based on the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, Section 38, which makes it possible to set funds aside for keeping the most severely affected workers gainfully employed.

In addition to their regular work, these workers can make a useful contribution to their community while collecting additional unemployment benefits. In Ontario, the provincial government has contributed up to $60 a week to the salary of these workers in addition to implementing and administering the program. I hope the Conservative friends will help us convince the provincial government to sign these agreements. I am informed that the Quebec government will submit proposals shortly, and I hope that our friends of the Conservative Party, as well as those to my far right, will support the signing of such agreements with the Quebec government in order to keep those Canadians at work.

Mr. Speaker, before going back to the subject of training, I would like to say a few words about the announcement made on December 22 by the Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning a very important program which will provide another $50 million for job creation. A significant part of those $50 million was intended for work sharing. Indeed, under that formula, as of February 16 the Canadian government had earmarked $5 million to help thousands of Canadians workers. Almost 68 agreements have been signed across the land, of which four only in Quebec, and we hope businessmen in my province may take advantage of this program to the same extent as those in other provinces. Under those agreements already reached, 4,144 employees agreed to share the work available with 1,903 others of their colleagues who otherwise would have been laid off. There again, funds are taken from unemployment insurance money as a contribution that almost makes up the money paid for days that are not worked. This keeps more people at work and skilled workers in the industry and certainly helps raise the spirits of those workers.

Mr. Speaker, company presidents told us last week that thanks to that extremely significant program, it had been possible to keep people at work in some industries, so that they can fulfil contracts they may now sign and will be able to sign in one or two months down the road. This program introduced by this government will enable those workers to keep their jobs on a permanent basis, which is quite different from the suggestion heard earlier that we were putting money into temporary jobs exclusively.

I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to come back to what I said earlier and outline the purpose of that famous legislation the Minister of Employment and Immigration will be introducing next spring for manpower training. Since the Adult Vocational Training Act was passed, the federal government has been much involved in institutional training programs which enabled a good number of Canadians to acquire high and medium skilled training. However, that kind of training no longer meets existing market requirements. In the future, adult retraining programs will not be implemented in isolation. Vocational training courses will be more closely related to manpower requirements and the regional and national labour markets. There is no social or economic justice in training Canadians for job opportunities which do not exist.

The government intends to increase its purchase of training units in the specialized trades of national dimension which do not require previous training, such as draftmen and computer programmers, and in the training programs. We intend to focus our efforts on the trades of national dimension and the other labour intensive trades. We intend also to create a professional adaptation and development fund, to provide the necessary sums to build or update training facilities. These facilities, which will be found throughout Canada in the areas where they are needed most, will help people who are compelled to leave their jobs because of the technological revolution, in a quickly changing world, obtain the necessary training to secure employment in other highly specialized trades.

In the area of in-industry training, it is also essential to increase our financial contribution and to gear more precisely the federal government's effort to the trades where the need for specialized workers is greater. The program will be an essential part of the new in-industry program, the purpose of which is to develop the capacity to train 10,000 highly specialized workers every year. Its priority will be to help Canadian workers whose jobs are threatened by the technological revolution.

Both in the in-industry training program and the on-site training programs, women and other disadvantaged groups will be assured of equal opportunities. We shall provide employers with incentives to assist them in training or retraining underprivileged groups and increasing women's training opportunities in traditional occupations. To this end Mr. Speaker, at the Vancouver conference most provincial and the federal governments unanimously decided to urge industry to work in collaboration with the federal and provincial governments toward the setting up of training facilities which are so urgently needed for our manpower. Obviously, industries will benefit from those training opportunities because they will be able, as was indicated earlier, to respond to the technological revolution and rapidly changing working conditions.

To be efficient, any new training system should be flexible enough to adjust in medium and long runs, to imbalances between supply of and demand for highly specialized professions and trades. Most people agree that the present analysis method has been and still is woefully inadequate. Therefore, they proposed the introduction of a system of skilled labour requirement projections in Canada which is the best means available to ascertain the demand levels, over a period of three to ten years, in such professions that require nine months or more of training. The new system will be sufficiently accommodating to allow for the exercise of judgment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for providing me with the opportunity to speak in support of the motion that has been presented to the House by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). The motion contains not only a substantial part dealing with the matter of job creation in Canada now, but it also supports the principles of parliamentary democracy upon which our whole Canadian system is based. I will explain that in a moment.

First let me say what we are trying to do and what the Leader of the Opposition is trying to bring to the attention of the House and the Canadian public is the fact that ten Members of Parliament on the government side have stood up to be counted on the issue of the budget and the tremendously adverse effect it is having on the Canadian economy and, more important, on the Canadian people. That is what this motion is all about. We in the opposition want to band together with those members on the government side who stood up to be counted on this issue. We want to support them. We want them to know that we are here to help them because we are all here to help the people of Canada.

We cannot help the people of Canada if we back off to a government which insists on putting in proposals and programs against the wishes of the people of Canada. That is why the motion involves parliamentary democracy.

We were sent here by people in constituencies right across Canada, in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and British Columbia, to represent them. That is what we must do. That is our purpose for being here. That is what the members who signed that letter, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) and the eight private members who joined together did to make this presentation and proposal.

They are saying to the government and to the people of Canada that they know what Canadians need and want is jobs. They have to go to work. What are we talking about when we talk about unemployment in Canada? We talk about the 1.2 million people officially unemployed in Canada, according to government statistics.

It is worse than that. It has been mentioned several times in this House and other places that those statistics are not accurate. There are many more people unemployed in Canada. Statistics Canada surveys simply scratch the surface. They take into account those people out of work and looking for jobs, of which there are 1.2 million. Unfortunately, there are millions of others in much similar circumstances. There are those who have given up looking for a job. There are at least 250,000 who know that they cannot find work in Canada, no matter how they look. They are in provinces such as Newfoundland.

If you speak to the provincial authorities there, they will tell you that the unemployment rate there, which is officially close to 20 per cent, is even higher because so many people have given up looking for a job. They know they cannot get work.

It is the same in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and I believe all across Canada. There are thousands of Canadians who have given up looking for work. Therefore, it is not just the 1.2 million who are officially unemployed. There are those who know they cannot get jobs and have given up.

It is even worse than that. It is not only those 1.2 million Canadians. There are an additional 1.5 million Canadians with part-time jobs. What are part-time jobs? That is working less than 30 hours a week. Who wants to work less than 30 hours a week? You cannot support yourself and a family with the most menial tasks or low-paying jobs. If you work less than that, you are in poverty. There are 1.5 million of these persons in Canada. The unfortunate part is that 70 per cent of them are women. In many cases these women have to work to support a family. Either their husband has deserted them, they are widowed or they have to provide for themselves. I repeat, 70 per cent of the 1.5 million persons in Canada in that situation are women.

In addition, there are another 250,000 persons who are underemployed. These are people with qualifications for higher level jobs, but they cannot get those jobs. There are teachers working as waitresses in restaurants in order to maintain themselves. There are thousands of them across Canada amounting to a total of 260,000 persons in this situation. People with Master's degrees are working in the post office as mail sorters. You see this everywhere you go.

When you add up all those figures and talk about unemployed persons in Canada, you cannot just take the 1.2 million who are officially unemployed. You have to include the 1.5 million who are in part-time jobs, the 250,000 who have given up looking for jobs and the 260,000 who are unemployed. That comes to a grand total of almost three million Canadians in a situation where they either do not have any work, have given up looking for work, have a part-time job, or are employed at menial tasks much below their qualifications. That is over 10 per cent of the total population. That is the situation in Canada.

The Prime Minister wonders why members from Quebec get together to consider the matter, draw up a letter and send it to him saying, "Mr. Prime Minister, for heaven's sakes, create some jobs in Canada. We have almost three million people either out of work, underemployed, looking for work or giving up and becoming destitute." They are saying that something has to be done. It is as simple as that. We are responding to it. We have a motion before the House supporting those people. We want to know what other members of the government will do about this motion. Will they realize, as did their colleagues who signed this letter, that the situation has gone beyond acceptability to Canadians and support their colleagues? We have to join together and take steps to rectify this.

● (1630)

What will we do about it? The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) supposedly answered the problems of Canada when he introduced his budget on November 12. Did it create jobs or economic programs or a climate which would lead to industrial expansion? No, it went to the other extreme. It provided a great number of disincentives. The solution provided in the budget was to tax the working people more. The Minister of Finance, in his budget, told business that it was gypping the tax man and he would set new rules. The government will move in and examine the businesses and discourage them from further expansion or development. That is the solution to the problem which exists in Canada which was given by the Minister of Finance.

You have to wonder what motivates the minister. Is he blind? Does he never return to his constituency? Do you know what the situation is like in his constituency of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, Mr. Speaker? There is a post office on every corner and parks everywhere. His constituents need the parks because there are no jobs and there is nothing else to do. The minister never provided any jobs in his constituency. The minister provides $2 million, twice a year, toward winter works and student work programs in his constituency. Every other constituency in Nova Scotia receives $100,000 for the same kind of projects. That is how he treats his constituents. The Strait of Canso has the deepest and best port on the Atlantic coast, but there is nothing there. There used to be an oil refinery there, but it has closed down. The common-user dock has been virtually unused. But the Minister of Finance gives them post offices, parks and little projects. That is how he deals with unemployment in his constituency.

Now, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) charges him with the responsibility of dealing with unemployment all across Canada. That surely gives us an indication of the difficulty we are in. The Minister of Finance does not understand the situation. The Peter Principle has set in. He has gone beyond the level of his own competence.

Fortunately, there are members of his own party who realize this problem. Not only do members of the opposition parties, the national press, or most of the economists recognize this, members of his own party realize that he does not know what he is talking about.

The minister has lost control and has brought in insufficient measures to revive the economy. Worst of all, he is misleading Canadians as to what he is doing. The minister has introduced these budgetary provisions and has attempted to tell Parliament and the people of Canada that he is practising restraint. He says that he will cut down on the federal deficit, but he is not fooling the Economic Council of Canada. It realizes that it is not cutting the federal deficit but simply transferring it to the provinces. He is merely flowing the $5 billion from the federal deficit into the provinces. This deficit will be on their books because it is money which comes from transfer payments and payments from established programs. The minister has done nothing about government spending.

The proof magically appeared before me today. I saw an announcement in the Ottawa paper today that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) and the Prime Minister were announcing the construction of a new national museum at a cost of $185 million. The government will spend $185 million on a museum! Earlier today we heard the minister for housing (Mr. Cosgrove) say that he was implementing programs to assist Canadians in their housing needs. The provisions in the budget were to help home owners in dire straits and provide $7,500 per unit for 15,000 units to help people who want to rent houses. The implementation of the proposals which are provided in a bill which he has before the House will cost a total of $350 million. While the government is providing $350 million to help those Canadians with excessive mortgage interest rates and those who need rental accommodation, at a time when occupancy is unavailable in most Canadian cities, it will spend $185 million on a museum. I think Canada's heritage is important, but we must not have home owners losing their homes through foreclosure and have all those social problems which would result. We cannot have Canadians who cannot afford rental accommodation forced to the streets to seek assistance from municipalities while the government builds a museum for $185 million. Where is the heart and soul of the government?

The minister does not understand the needs of Canadians. Why do the Liberal Members of Parliament, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance not travel across Canada to find out what the needs of Canadians are? Have they closed their eyes? They developed a budget which they thought would bring equity into the tax system.

If the government wanted to bring equity to the tax system, they would have conducted a proper investigation and listened to the problems Canadians have with the tax system. They have discussed these problems in order to develop a tax system which would be fair to all Canadians.

When the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker formed the Government of Canada he set up the Carter commission to examine the tax system. It travelled across Canada to discuss Canadians' problems and ultimately came up with proposals for a change in the tax system. These proposals were contained in the Carter commission report. That is the method for bringing equity into a tax system.

However, when the Carter commission report was introduced in 1967, Mr. Bud Olson, who is now a senator and minister of the Crown, stood up and said that "Liberal MPs rejected the Carter tax reform after years of study." Mr. Olson said that he and his colleagues in the Liberal Party totally rejected tax reform. That was in 1967.

Since that time, there has been a Liberal government in Ottawa, except for a short period, which has done nothing about tax reform. The government has never consulted the people of Canada. On November 12, the government produced a document which it said would bring equity to the tax system. The government never indicated that there was not equity in the tax system or who was complaining about it. It just took it upon itself to remedy the whole system.

The equity which it claims to have achieved is accomplished by reaching out to 13 million insurance policy holders who are trying to provide for their families and taxing the benefits under that protection. Canadians buy insurance to protect their families, not to cheat the tax man. There are seven million Canadians who participate in health and dental plans, and the government says that it will tax them and make them pay. It does not care what happens to their children's teeth or if they get adequate medical care. All the government wants is dollars.

The government is correct about one matter. The only resource in this country is the people of Canada. They are the only ones who will pay tax. The oil will stay in the ground, the coal will stay in the mines and the wheat will stay in the fields unless Canadians turn it into wealth. The government is trying to tax that wealth. It is trying to tax the work of the Canadian people, but they have caught on and will not stand for it.

The Minister of Finance has been exposed and everyone knows that he has no knowledge of the tax system. We all know he knows about managing government expenditures. The Minister of Finance is making up for years of extravagant spending. Now he has to go to Canadians and take away the pensioners' $1,000 deductions. He does not care about the business people or insurance companies, they can provide for themselves, but he will tax the seven million workers in the housing construction industry. He will tax transportation for salesmen. How can this help the people of Canada?

The government reaches out to Canadians and attempts to tell them it is bringing equity to the tax system. No one believes that, including their own members. That is why we have put it in a resolution before the House.

● (1640)

Hon. members opposite had better stand up and vote properly because the people of Canada will be watching. They will know what hon. members opposite are doing. The people know what they are saying at home. It is in the newspapers. It is on the record. We are putting it on the record here. Hon. members opposite must realize and recognize that they are going to be counted. The jig is up. Never mind the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. Hon. members opposite are on their own now. The Prime Minister cannot protect them. There is no problem in Mount Royal. Everybody is happy there. The problems are in Amqui, Quebec and in the Matapedia Valley where people are out of work and starving to death.

Mr. Darling: Don't forget Oshawa.

Mr. Crosby: The only reason this government is able to introduce this budget is that hon. members to my left in the New Democratic Party stood up and voted against my party when it was in government. That government was prepared to introduce proper economic measures which were responsible. Members of the New Democratic Party are not off the hook. They are part and parcel—someone said the New Democratic Party is the Liberal party west. The Liberals have no representation from the west, so they haul in a few members of this red rump and bring them into their plans. If members of the New Democratic Party really wanted to defeat the government and if they really were upset with the tax measures in the budget, as we are, they could have voted the government out last Friday. Instead, they got together and called the whole thing off. They want to stay here. I do not blame them. They will never be any more comfortable than they are now because it is going to get worse for them from here on. The people of Canada are on to them. They know what is going on.

As I said, it is every man for himself on the government side. Hon. members opposite must stand up and be counted. The Prime Minister cannot help them. The Minister of Finance cannot help them because he is in trouble himself. The people in his constituency are sick of post offices, parks and little job-creation programs. They want the Strait of Canso developed. They want the oil refinery opened. They do not want the little bits and pieces of things the minister has been sending down. People are sick of this situation. They want Canada to go ahead and be developed, and they want the government to bring in proposals which would allow for that development. They are sick of the present policies. They are sick of being fooled. We have exploded the myth, and now hon. members opposite are going to have to live with it.

I want to end on a positive note. I admire those members of Parliament in the Liberal Party who got together and said, "This is what has to be done, Mr. Prime Minister; this is what you have to do to correct the situation in Canada; we have to have job-creation programs". Young people are out of work. We need jobs for our young people. We have to protect unemployed persons. We have to bring them back into the labour force so that they can provide for their families. If the government does not do that, we will have social disorder in Canada. Everyone is pointing that out. A psychiatrist in my constituency has written an article in which he points out very graphically the ill effects of unemployment and that lack of security for families and people generally leads to all kinds of social ills. We cannot sit here in Parliament with a blind eye to that kind of problem. We have to do something about it, and we have to do something about it now, not next week and not in the next budget. We must do something right now, and hon. members opposite know that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I want to say just one more thing. As representatives of the people in Parliament, we are often asked what our role is here. What is our role here? There was a famous parliamentarian, Edmund Burke, who said he was a delegate of the people. When he was elected to Parliament, he made up his mind and decided what to do. Edmund Burke was elected to Parliament in 1774 from the city of Bristol. At that time people were illiterate. They did not know how to handle national affairs. That is not the situation in Canada today. We do not need any Edmund Burkes. We do not need anyone here passing his opinion on what we should be doing. We want people here who respond to the needs, the wishes and problems of the people of Canada. We are here to represent the people of Canada. I am here to represent the people of Halifax West. The Prime Minister is here to represent the town of Mount Royal. Perhaps the people in the town of Mount Royal do not have problems, but I can tell hon. members that there are problems in Halifax West, in Amqui, in the Matapedia Valley, in Gaspé and all across Canada. The problem is lack of economic activity and unemployment. That is the problem. We need job-creation programs to solve that problem, and that is why we have introduced this motion. That is why we have to stand up and vote on this motion. That is why we are calling upon hon. members opposite to join with us and to forget about the Prime Minister and the town of Mount Royal. Let them forget about that area of Montreal and its mansions, its houses and imported cars. Let them think about the northern regions of Quebec. Let them think about the Gaspé and why a train has to be stopped in the Matapedia Valley to draw attention to these problems.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9).

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:
