IT PAYS

To be cautious in the choice of medicines. Many are trying to experiment with compounds purporting to be blood-purifiers, the principal recommendation being that they do not "cheapen" the blood. Being made up of worthless, though not always harmless, ingredients, they may well be "cheap," but in the end, they are dear. The most reliable medicines are costly, and can be retained at moderate prices only when the manufacturing chemist handles the raw materials in large quantities. It is economy, therefore,

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the valuable compound of which are imported, wholesale, by J. C. Ayer & Co. from the regions where these articles are richest in medicinal properties.
It is a wonder to me that any other than Ayer's Sarsaparilla has a share in the market. If people consulted their own interests, they would never use any other; for it is not only the best, but, on account of its concentrated strength and purity, it is the most economical. James F. Druggist, Washington St., Providence, R. I.

It came about in this way: The chief was a born plunger. Horses, cards, dice —they were all the same to him. He would bet on, or he would bet against, give the odds or take them, but he would. It was all very well as long as he stuck to shilling darts and half-crown rats at whist, or made his little bet upon the regimental cup; but when he took to American railway scrip, and laid out all his savings on 7 per cent. bonds which were selling at 62, he started a game where the odds are all on the bank and the dealer sits somewhere near Wall Street. It was no use telling the old man that Monte Carlo was a sound financial investment in comparison. He held grinily until the inevitable came round.
The line was squelched by a big capitalist, who wished to buy it, and our chief was expelled from the very edge of the bankrup-cy court, uncertain from week to week how long it might be before he would need to send in his papers. He said nothing, for he was as proud as Lucifer; but he looked heavily at the eyes in the morning, and his tonic did not fit him quite as tight as it used to. Of course, we were very sorry for the poor chief, but we were sorry still for his daughter Violet. We were all in love with Violet Lovell, and her grief was a blight to the regiment.
She was fresh and bright and sprightly as an English spring, and so sweet, and good, and sympathetic, that she was just the type of womanhood for all of us. She was one of those girls about whom once you come to know them, you never think whether they are pretty or not. You only know

Selected Literature.

A REGIMENTAL SCANDAL.

It was a very painful business. I don't think that any of us have forgotten it or are at all likely to. The morality of the Third Carabiniers was as loose as their discipline was tight, and if a man rode straight and was keen on soldiering he might work out his private record to his own mind. But still there is a limit to what even such a thorough-going old sportsman as the colonel would stand, and that limit was passed on the instant that there was a breach of suspicion about fair play at the card table.
Take the mess through, they had ridden through the decalogue as gaily as through Anan's gins at Kaeasain. Professionally they had made free with other men's lives. But the unwritten code of honor by which men should be shattered commandments. They were shot and sharp, and woe to the man who transgressed them. Sporting debts must be paid. There was no such thing as a white feather. Above all, a man must play fair. It was a simple code of conduct, but it contained absolute obedience which might have been referred to a more elaborate system.

TRUE HAPPINESS.

What points asked the major.
"Pound a game, as before."
"Pound a trick if you like, suggested the major."
"Very good. A pound a trick." The chief put on his pince-nez and that a questioning glance at his antagonist. The major shuffled and pushed the cards over to be cut.
The first three games were fairly even.
The major held the better cards, but the chief played the finer game. The fourth game and deal had been round to the major again and as he laid the pack down he spread his elbows out so as to screen his hands from us. Austen gave his neighbor a nudge and we all craned our necks. A hand whisked over the pack and Peterkin smiled.
The chief played a knave and the major took it with a queen. As he put forward his hand to pick up the trick the colonel sprang suddenly out of the chair with an oath.
"Lift up your sleeve, sir," he cried;
"by—, you have a card under it!" The major had sprung up also and his chair toppled backwards on to the floor.
We were all on our feet, but neither of the men had thought for us. The colonel leaned forward with his thick red finger upon a card which lay face downward upon the table. The major stood perfectly composed, but a trifle paler than usual.
"I believe that there was a card there, sir," said he, "but surely you do not mean to insinuate that—"
The colonel threw his hand down upon the table.
"It's not the first time," said he.
"Do you imagine that I would take an unfair advantage of you?"
"Why I saw you slip the card from the pack—saw it with my own eyes."
"You should have known me better after 20 years," said Major Errington, gently. "I say, sir, that you should have been ready to come to such a conclusion. I have the honor to wish you good evening, sir." He bowed very gravely and coldly and walked from the room.
But he had hardly moved the door when the curtains at the other end, which separated the card room from the little recess where Miss Lovell was pointing out our coffee, were opened and she stepped through. She had not a thought for any of us, but walked straight up to her father.
"I couldn't help hearing you, dad," said she. "I am sure that you have done me a cruel injustice."
"I have done him no injustice. Captain Austen, you were watching. You will bear me out."
"Yes, sir, I saw the whole affair. I saw you slip the card, but I saw nothing else. It was he who carried it from his hand. It was he who leaned forward and turned up the top card."
"That one thumped the chief," why that is the king of trumps."
"So it is."
"But who in his senses would disard that it is pleasant to hear them, to see their happy faces to hear their voices and to have life made sweeter and more beautiful by their presence. That was how we all felt toward Violet—from the old major to the newly joined subaltern of the Third Carabiniers. It was a grand old man, and he was breathing the life of the old man, and his face clouded over as the shadow of his father's troubles fell upon it, we clouded over also, and the mess of the Carabiniers sank into a state from which even the caterer's Deutz and Gudemann of '81 was unable to rouse it.

The major was the most strict of all I think that he took the whole matter to heart even more than the colonel did, although it had been against his strenuous advice that these cursed boards had been brought. He was an old friend of the chief and he knew that the disgrace of bankruptcy would be the old man's death blow. He was a fonder still of the chief's daughter—none of us ever knew how much so, for he was a silent man and, in his English fashion, he hid away his emotions as though they were shameful sins. Yet with all his care, we got a little peep at his heart if only through his gray eyes when he looked at her, and we knew that he was very fond of his Violet.

THE VALUE OF SINCERITY.

This is often spoken of as an age of deceit. It has become fashionable to deceive, and the man who is strictly honest in all his business transactions is rarely found. There are many "whited sepulchres" covering the sales of respectability, and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr.
Hyde" inhabit every town. In the common affairs and little things of life we are compelled to mistrust those with whom we are daily associated simply because it is fashionable to perjure.
One is frequently advised that "don't pay to always speak the truth, or to let what you seem to be. Small wonder that souls shrivel and droop and moral shipwrecks are on every hand. How like the effluence of the morning is the character of the man or woman in whom sincerity of thought, purpose and word of mouth is a guiding life principle—who would scorn to do low, petty acts or render others unhappy by carrying out selfish ends.
Rev. Phillips Brooks aptly says: "He that is habituated to descriptions and artificialities in trifles will try in vain to be true in matters of importance; for truth is a thing of habit rather than of will. You cannot in any given case by any sudden and single effort will to be true, if the habit of your life has been insincere."
There is no end to the great ends of life, if man is living on the recluse pursuit of them, he may first welcome, and then rejoice to leave behind, the several means which in succession come to offer him their help toward the attainment of those ends, as the traveler whose heart is set upon some distant city refuses when he comes to, and rejects instincts.

A REGIMENTAL SCANDAL.

Well, said he, "If I hadn't seen it with my own eyes I should never have believed it, never! Peterkin, I withdraw what I said yesterday. You were right, By—, to think that any officer of this regiment should stoop so low!"
"It's a bad business," said Peterkin.
"It was only by chance I noticed it." "It's a good thing you did. We must have a public exposure."
"If it's a matter affecting the honor of my fellow in the mess it would surely be best to have Major Errington's opinion, said Harridge.
Austen laughed bitterly. "You follow me as well as to be told," said he. "There's no use in any mystification. Major Errington has, as you may know, been playing high stakes at cards with evening success. He has been seen on two evening occasions, first by Peterkin and then by me, to hide cards and so strengthen his hand after dealing. Yes, yes, you may say what you like, but I tell you I saw it with my own eyes. You know how short sighted the chief is. Erring-ton did it in the most brazen way, when he thought no one was looking. I shall speak to the chief about it. I consider it to be my duty."
"You had better all come to-night," said Peterkin, "but don't sit near the table, nor pretend to be watching. Six witnesses will surely be enough to settle it."
"Sixty wouldn't make me believe it," said Harridge.
Austen shrugged his shoulders. "Well, you must believe your own eyes, I suppose. It's an awkward thing for a subaltern to bring such a charge against a senior major of 20 years' service.
But the chief shall be warned and he may take such steps as he thinks best.
It's being going too long and to-night should finish it for good and all."

TEMPERANCE.

How contagious it is! "I cannot meet Mr.—without getting a gleam of sunshine into my own life," said a friend recently. "How we all need it!
How one cheerful face lights up and brightens a company and changes in the thought of a disheartened party the whole aspect of a congregation! What right has one to look like a thunder cloud and to cross the street to avoid meeting it?
Let that be the peace of mind is destroyed by a brief interview. The clear

HEREDITY.

It is an old saying that drunkards have children like unto themselves. It was Pitarch who said, "Drunkards beget drunkards." Whether we accept these statements or not the fact remains that the descendants of persons who are addicted to strong drink are in greater danger to become drunkards than are those persons whose parents are abstem-ious. From Pitarch to the present, all reputable physicians who have written on this subject, bear testimony to this fact. But let me not be misunderstood.
The children are not born drunkards, but they are born with the tendency to become drunkards. Many a parent would act differently if he knew this fact and believed it. It seems that no one with any feeling such as should belong to a man, a rational creature, could think of bringing such a woe and suffering upon his innocent offspring.

HEREDITY.

Dr. Roach in his "The Abuse of Spiritous Drinks," says: "The children of persons who are given to drink have always a weak constitution or are either delicate and nervous to excess, or heavy and stupid. In the former case they often fall victims to convulsions and die suddenly, or become a prey to water on the brain and later to pulmonary phthisis.
In the latter case they are seized by spotty, and sink into imbecility. In both cases they are exposed to all the various forms of scrofula, rash, and, on reaching maturity, gout.

HEREDITY.

Dr. Figg says: "The brain of the drinker's child is often the miniature of that of his father. Education may do much for him, conscience and self-respect more; yet the germs of those ruin will, in too many instances, defy eradication."
Dr. Edward Barry, in an essay on Woollock, says, "Children born of intemperate parents bear the germs of disease, and are, therefore, exposed to a languid existence, useless to society, deprived and possessed with evil

the king of trumps; what did he exchange? He turned up the card on the table. It was an eight. He whistled and passed his fingers through his hair.
"He weakened his hand," said he.
"What was the meaning of that?"
"The meaning is that he was trying to lose, dad."
"Upon my word, sir, now that I come to think of it I am convinced that Miss Lovell is perfectly correct," said Captain Austen. "That would explain why he suggested high points, why he played such a vile game and why, when he found that he could not help winning, he thought himself justified in getting rid of some of them. For some reason or other he was trying to lose."
"Good Lord!" groaned the colonel.
"What can I say to put matters straightened and made for the door."
And so our little card scandal in the Carabiniers was brought to an honorable ending, for all came out as it had been intended. Ever since the colonel summarily dismissed his comrades though he had been so condescending to him, but finding it absolutely impossible to do it directly he had tried it by means of the card table. Finding his efforts in vain he had broken out his usual calm by his clumsy attempts to weaken himself. However, American millionaire, and the colonel is no longer in any of my man's help. The major forgave him for his mistake and for a time we hoped that Violet would have been the pledge of reconciliation—and no match would have been more popular in the regiment—but she destroyed the symmetry of things by marrying a young Madras staff corps man, home on leave, so our senior major is still a bachelor and likely to remain so.

Dr. Edward Barry, in an essay on Woollock, says, "Children born of intem-
perate parents bear the germs of disease,
existence, useless to society,
instincts."

HEREDITY.

It is an old saying that drunkards have
children like unto themselves. It was
ious. From Pitarch to the present, all
on this subject, bear testimony to this
fact. But let me not be misunderstood.
The children are not born drunkards,
his innocent offspring.

HEREDITY.

Dr. Roach in his "The Abuse of
suddenly, or become a prey to water on
the brain and later to pulmonary phthisis.
reaching maturity, gout.

HEREDITY.

Dr. Figg says: "The brain of the
eradication."
Dr. Edward Barry, in an essay on
perate parents bear

A CALGARY MIRACLE.

THE MOST WONDERFUL CASE EVER RECORDED IN THE NORTHWEST. Miss Lela Cullen is Rescued From What Her Physicians and Friends Thought to be Her Deathbed.

Winipeg Tribune. Calgary, N. W. T. Oct. 20, 1892.—For some time past the residents of this town have been deeply interested in the case of Miss Lela Cullen, a young lady, who had so nearly approached the portals of the great unknown, that her friends despair of her recovery, and who has now, fully, indeed almost miraculously, regained her health and strength.

When your correspondent visited the residence of Mrs. Cullen, the mother of the young lady, he was courteously received, and in reply to his enquiries as to whether she was willing to give the facts of her daughter's wonderful recovery, for publication for the benefit of other sufferers, Mrs. Cullen readily assented.

These Pills are manufactured by Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., and Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper, at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

EXECUTION OF CREAM. LONDON, Nov. 15.—Thomas Neil, the murderer of Matthew Cleave and several other girls, who paid the penalty of his crime at 9 o'clock this morning, left no written confession.

NEWS IN BRIEF. Cholera continues to increase in virulence in St. Petersburg. Eight men, suspected of being nihilists, have been arrested in Sopotnik, Russia.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—Lawyer A. S. Trade, who 11 years ago acted as attorney for Thomas Neil Cream, the prisoner who was hanged in London Tuesday, related the story of Cream and his crimes. He stated that Cream's escape from Joliet was made by the use of money.

THE HALIFAX CONFERENCE.

HALIFAX, Nov. 15.—After being in session for several days, the conference between the members of the Canadian and Newfoundland Governments came to a close to-night, and the report of the proceedings and agreements reached was formally signed.

The conference on questions pending between Newfoundland and Canada terminated at 6 o'clock today. The proceedings throughout were of a harmonious character and it is hoped an expected by the delegates that good results will follow.

From unofficial sources your correspondent learns that the conference agreed upon a united line of action to be pursued in regard to continuing the modus vivendi house and the supply of bait to United States vessels.

THE BORDEN CASE. TATTON, Mass., Nov. 17.—Eavesdroppers have no chance at getting a crumb from the grand jury room where the Borden case is under examination.

WHAT A PROMISING DRUGGIST SAYS. Your correspondent then called upon Mr. J. G. Templeton, the well-known druggist on Stephen avenue.
