"Hold it in this position, dear,
And stand just in this spot;
This always hit or miss with me
If I can see or not.
E'en when my eyes were young and stron
There always came a blur
When I was trying to make out
The likeness there of her!
You say 'th age! Well, res—and tears—
That make it dazzle so;
Sometimes it almost seems to me
The sweet face tries to go;
It plays a kind of hide and seek;
Exactly as did she
When I would sing the old time song,
'Come, gang alang wi' me.'
I'd sing in my old, earnest way,
And then I'd look around;
But, bless my soul, my sweetheart there
Was nowhere to be found!
She was as shy as any deer;
So it's familiar like
To see her picture vanishing
Whene'er the light doth strike.
Just see! The buds pinned near her hear
Are still as red as blood—
In left hand of the garden, there,
The sweet old rose bush stood.
The very year she died, it died!
It seemed as if it said:
Tused to blossom just for you;
I'll stop now you are dead.'
That belt with bright embroidery
And silver buckle, broad,
That belt with bright embroidery
And silver buckle, broad,
That it ever tried to touch
She'd call her 'silver sword'—
Why, I can see the filigree
Upon the chatelaine,
And nearly half a century
In dariness if hath lan!
The beaded guard chain 'round her neck
That dress of purple lawn—
What! must you go so early, dear?
How soon now night comes on!
This saith lining is now fraged;
Morocco case is worn;
But, only think! 'twes bought, my dean,
Ere ever you were born!
There, I have got it hooked at last!
The catch is morn out, too;
But is it any wonder when
'I'm twice as old as you!
Worn out? Oh, everything on earth
Wears out—except the past;
I lasts a lifetime, dear, you know,
Nor is worn out at last!
The catch is morn out, too;
But is it any wonder when
'I'm twice as old as you?

When it hegal in to sing to how one!
The same sweet smile, I'd see
When I'd begin to sing to her
'Come, gang alang w' me.'
She seems to sing it now me!

An eccentric clergymen in Cornwall had been much annoyed by a way the members of his congregation had got into of looking round to take stock of late comers. After enduring the annoyance for some time, he said, on entering the reading desk one day: "Brethren, I regret to see that your attention is called away from your religious duties by your very natural desire to see who comes in behind you. I propose, henceforth, to save you the trouble by naming each person who may enter, and I hope the service will then be allowed to proceed without interruption." He then began: "Dearly beloved," but paused half way to interpolate, "Farmer Stubbins, with his wife and daughter."

Farmer Stubbins looked rather surprised, but the minister, with perfect gravity, resumed his exhortation. Presently he again paused. "Sam Curtis and William Diggle." The abashed congregation kept their eyes studiously bent on their books. The service proceeded in the most orderly manner, the parson interrupting himself every now and then to name some new comer. At last he said, still with the same perfect gravity: "Mrs. Symons, of the Red Lion, in a new bonnet." In a moment he felt his mistake, but it was too late. Every feminine head in the congregation had turned around.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Spoiled by a Habit.

Many of the badly shaped mouths that are the sorrows of the young women of today result from their being permitted when they were children to suck their fingers. One of the prettiest women in New York has coarse, tiest women in New York has coarse, thick lips, that come from having been allowed, when she was going to sleep, to put her thumb in her mouth; while another, whose lips protrude in the center and whose mouth is large, now blames her mother for allowing her to find consolation in her two forefingers.—Herald of Health.

An Enthusiastic Hearer.

"Who shall set bounds to the inventive genius of free America?" shouted the impassioned orator, as he waved his arms aloft and grew purple in the face. "I tell you, my countrymen, the time is coming when men will navigate the air like birds, when eleotricity shall be harnessed to do our plowing and reaping, when it will cost only a quarter of a dollar to travel across the continent, when shoes will be made of indestructible paper for five cents a pair"—

The Wonderful Lemon Feelers Engaged to Their Manufacture in Stelly.

With three strokes of a sharp knife the cutter peels the lemon lengthwise and lets the peel fall into a tul under the chopping block. He then cuts the lemon in two and throws it from the knife into a bucket. He works with wonderful rapidity, and fills from ten to twelve tubs with peel a day, and is paid two and a half pence a tub, weighing seventy-seven pounds. His left hand and right index finger are protected with bands of osnaburgs or feather. The fresh peel is soaked in water fifteen minutes before the essence is extracted. Peel that has stood a day or two remains scaking from thirty to forty minutes, that it may swell and offer a greater resistance to the syonge. The workman holds as sponge in his loft hand, against which he presses each piece of peel two or three times—simple pressure, followed by rotary pressure. The women employed in this work run a piece of cane through their sponges to enable them to hold them more firmly. The outside of the peel is pressed against the sponge, as the oil glands are in the epicarp. The crushing of the oil cells illerates the essence it herein contained. The sponge, when saturated with the essence, is squeezed in the naturated with the essence, is squeezed in the lap.

The peel is not thoroughly squeezed that not a cell escapes. This is ascertained by holding the peel to the fiame of a candle. Should it neither crackle nor diminish the brilliancy of the fiame of a candle. Should it neither crackle nor diminish the brilliancy of the fiame of a candle. Should it neither crackle nor diminish the winds and fectia soon takes place if the vessels are not disturbed; the oil floats on the juice and the dregs fall to the bottom. These three products derived from the peel have no affinity with each other. As the essence rises to the surface it is skimmed off, bottled and left to settle for a few days. It is then drawn off with a plass siphon into copper cans, which are hermetically sealed. After the essence has

The yield of essence is variable. The industry is carried on five months in the year. Immature fruit contains the most oil. From November to Aprilin the province of Messina 1,000 lemons yield about fourteen ounces of essence and seventeens gallons of juice. The essence is so valuable that the workmen are closely watched, for they are most ingenious in secreting it about their person. Six men work up 8,000 lemons a day, two cut off the peel, while four extract the essence and seven pounds of essence. Dealers sometimes adulterate their essences with fixed oils, alcohol or turpentine, but these mixtures may be easily detected. The essence of sour orange mixed with the essence of lemon produces an aroma similar to that of the essence of bergamot.—London Times.

After being a victim to asthma for over ten years, I have hit on a remedy so cheap and simple that I can't help bragging about it. My treatment is to stuff a pillow with yellow pine shavings and to change the stuffing frequently. Since I have substituted shavings for feathers I have been able to sleep eight hours a night, whereas before I could seldom lie down half an hour at a stretch. I used to sympathize with asthmatical victims, but I shan't feel like doing so any more, because the remedy is within the reach of all.—Interview in Globe-Democrat.

Vegetables and Fruit.

People need to be frequently reminded of the fact that if they make a practice of using a variety of vegetables and fruit as a part of their ordinary diet the doctor will not be needed to prescribe for them so frequently. Asparagus is a strong diuretic, and forms part of the cure for rheumatic patients at such health resorts as Aixles-Bains. Paraley is also useful as a diuretic, and those requiring such aid should make free use of it. Carrots are understood by the peasants of Sevoy to be a specific for jaundice, and although they are thought to be hard of digestion, it is only the yellow core that is so. Onions are admitted to be rich in those alkaline elements which counteract the poison of rheumatic gout, and people who are of studious and sedentary habits should make a free use of them, gently stewed and served with other vegetables.

The stalks of the cauliflower if properly cooked also serve a like purpose. Celery has acquired a great reputation as a remedy for rheumatism, and in many cases has proved beneficial. Watercress is prescribed by many medical men as helpful to the liver and lungs. Many other vegetables are useful, not only for their medidnal properties, but as general regulators of the bowels and as correctives, and withal they contain valuable elements of nutrition which should commend them apart from every other consideration.—Queenslander. On the Wrong Side.

An English lady walking down Broadway with her little girl saw a lame old beggar bearing on his hat the legend, "I fought at Waterloo." "Give him some money, for he helped save your countron" said the lady.

What It Is Coming To.

Attorney indignantly—Your honor, this man acknowledges that he sometimes thinks. It is hardly necessary to say that we shall challenge him as a juror in this case.—Chicago Tribune.

Then She Relented.

"Now, George," said the Chicago girl tenderly, "I love you, but I can't marry a poor man. There are no flies on me."

"It wouldn't surprise me if there were, though," replied George. "Flies are fond et sugar."

No, 62 LIGHTNING'S STRANGE FREAKS.

James Craig, a Scottish servant omployed by Elias Rogers, a carpenter, who resides at Allentown, N. J., was the victim of a queer prank of lightning a few years ago. He was sitting in the kitchen broiling a piece of meat over the fire, and a fierce thunder storm was raging without. A flash of lightning struck the house and the electric current ran down the chimney, knocked Craig senseless, and threw the meat and spider into another room. Craig was given up for dead, but in an hour came to and stated that he had not been insensible since the sec-ond when the shock occurred, but had had not been insensible since the second when the shock occurred, but had been unable to move a muscle, although he had heard everything that was going on about him. His left side was badly burned and one of his shoes was torn from his foot and found nearly twenty feet from where he sat when the house was struck.

Two peculiar cases of death by electricity occurred in Asbury Park a few years ago, and the story is oft told there. James Young and Henry Brooke, two house painters, were at work on the exterior of a cottage on Wesley lake when a terrific thunder storm came up. They fled to the interior of the house, and after the storm had passed and the sun was again shining they went back to their scaffold.

Just as each painter touched his brush to the wet woodwork a flash of lightning came, followed quickly by a crash of thunder, and a workman in a nearby house saw both of them fall. Shortly afterward it was discovered that both men were dead, although their bodies bore no marks, save dull black lines about the fingers which held the brushes.

One day a 6-year-old child in a Connecticut town was playing in the garret during a severe thunder storm. A chimney was struck. The bolt ran down the side of the house to the ground. The family were extremely frightened, but unharmed. They missed the golden haired darling of the house, but soon found him, unin-temper was not improved by my telling him that I missed a cabbage and an onion from the cellar, and that the little beds at the foot of the garden

Escaped His Thanks.

The "Listener" in The Boston Transcript reminds us again that there is no misfortune without its compensations. He tells of a venerable and distinguished old gentleman, who, being very hard of hearing, enjoys the deaf man's immunity, and always carries his "silence compelling veto" with him.

The revival of the rage about the shah of Persia has led to a story on the Hon. Fred Winston, of Chicago, who for a short time represented the United States at the Persian court. When he arrived at Teheran he was met outside of the city by the chamberlain of the court, who in the name of the shah presented him with four elephants. Winston, who had never seen an elephant outside of a menagerie, was paralyzed at his situation, but managed to express his thanks for the shah's great kindness. After he had been presented, and had assumed the duties of his office, his greatest official burden was the care of his elephants. Relief came on the second day, when the intimation was politely conveyed that the shah expected a present from him.

"Certainly," said Winston, as a smile wreathed his face. "I have only been waiting to secure one worthy of so great a ruler." thanks.

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard Are sweeter.

says Keats. The smiling "veto" of the deaf old gentleman in this instance put a certain humor into the lines which Keats never meant. been waiting to secure one worthy of so great a ruler."

That afternoon he proceeded in state to the palace and presented the shah with five elephants. The chamber-lain regarded the elephants with suspicion, but oriental politeness prevents the inspection of a gift horse in the mouth, and, anyhow the extra elephant removed all doubt.

"That extra elephant cost me $100," said Winston, in telling the story afterward. "But I consider myself getting out of a bad scrape cheap at that."—St. Louis Republic.

Browning's Striking Personality.

The society of London offers no more striking or interesting figure than that of Robert Browning. It may safely be alleged that no one meeting him for the first time, and unfurnished with a clew, would guess his vocation. He might be a diplomatist, a statesman, a discoverer or a man of science. But whatever were his callings, we must feel that it must be essentially practical. Of the disordered appearance, the unconventional demeanor, the rapt and mystic air, which we assume to be characteristic of the poet, he has absolutely none. And his conversation corresponds to his appearance. It abounds in vigor, in fire, in vivacity. It is always genuinely interesting, and often strikingly eloquent. Yet all the time it is entirely free from mystery, vagueness or technical jargon. It is the crisp, emphatic and powerful discourse of a man of the world, who is comparably better informed than the mass of his congeners.

Mr. Browning is the reediest, the Coffee Test.

The chief analyst of the Dominion department of inland revenue publishes the following directions to his collectors of coffee samples for making their preliminary tests. It is Hagar's method modified: Prepare a saturated solution of common salt. Shake up a small quantity of the coffee to be tested with ten times its bulk of the brine, in a test tube at least three-quarters of an inch in diameter. Repeat the shaking twice, so that the coffee may be thoroughly wetted, and then allow the tube to stand for half an hour. Observe then the color of the brine and the quantity of the sample floating on the surface, as well as the amount deposited in the tube. If the color is a very pale amber, and nearly the whole of the coffee floats, the sample may be assumed to be pure. A decidedly darker or yellow tint indicates admixture of chicory, etc., in which case there is also a larger deposit. This increases, and the color of the brine grows darker with the impurity of the coffee. With 30 per cent. chicory, the brown color is very marked, and with a still larger percentage of adulterant, the brine becomes dark brown.—Boston Herald.

ter informed than the mass of his congeners.

Mr. Browning is the readiest, the blithest and the most forcible of talkers. Like the monsignore in "Lothair," he can "sparkle with anecdote, and blaze with repartee," and when he deals in criticism the edge of his sword is mercilessly whetted against pretension and vanity. The inflection of the voice, the fissh of the eye, the pose of the head, the action of the hand, all lend their special emphasis to the condemnation. "I like religion to be treated seriously," he exclaimed with reference to a recent novel of great renown, "and I don't want to know what this curate or that curate thought about it. No, I don't." Surely the secret thoughts of many hearts found utterance in that emphatic cry.

When an unduly fervent admirer had buttonholed him throughout a long evening, plying him with questions about what he meant by this line, or whom he intended by that character, there was exquisite grace as well as just rebuke in the stress on the words, "But I am monopolizing you," with which the master at last extricated himself from the grasp of the disciple.—New Review.

The Ruling Passion.

The close man is not confined to any latitude; the worshiper of mammon pursues the almighty dollar in every clime. Here are two cases—one from New England and the other from Virginia. A neighbor borrowed the hoe from the close fisted one and returned it at evening with his thanks.

"Guess I sh'll hev tew charge ye bout tew cents if the thoe t'day," said the farmer.

A Washington lady was up in Virginia several summers ago. A neighbor dropped into the house where she was boarding and told of the prolific crop of crab apples which he had.

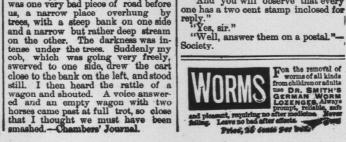

"There are so many," he said, "that I am just going to turn the hogs in to eat them up."

The lady thought it would be a good opportunity to get some cheap for preserving.

"What will you bring me down two bushels for?" she asked. Avarice and a sense of decency wrestled in his mind and avarice won.

"Reckon about $2 a bushel would be about right."—Washington Post.

How the Poetic Youth Was Reminded of the Realities of Life.

They were sitting on the plazza of the hotal at the beach, watching the moon as it slowly rose out of the slumbering sea. Silence was around them, naught being heard save occasionally the faint clatter of dishes in the adjacent restaurant or the musical hum of an aristocratic musquito that was making as vain a search for a blue blooded person as Diogenes did for an honest man. It was the hour for love, sweet, pure, delicious lova. The youth felt it in his soul as he at there by the side of the beautiful maiden, whose silken hair almost touched his shoulder. Suddenly he spoke in low but thrilling and passionate tones:

"To the poetic temperament, to the soul that is capable of feeling the tenderest emotions, that throbe in unison with the harmony of nature, and is susceptible to the influences of the beautiful, there is a peculiar faccination in a scene like this. The balmy air, the rising moon, the twinkling stars, the contiguity of one of the fairest of creation's most perfect work, all unite to awaken in the heart its oftest, tenderest feeling—love. "What were you looking for?"
"Why, I was thinking of going into the milk business. That's my business in St. Louis."
"Do you find it overcrowded?"
"Not exactly overcrowded, although there are enough in it, but I find that there is a law under which milk is imprected."
For this reason, it would be a creat mistake.
