The SPRAGUE CHURN!

Important to Farmers and Dairy-men of this Province!

J. L. SPRAGUE,

INVENTOR OF THIS CHURN.

The great filling of this Churn has lately constructed a CHURN which is the NEAREST PERFECTION ever yet conceived, and that is taking the lead wherever it has been introduced.

This Churn contains the best points of all other kinds of study on the proper method of obtaining every particle of butter that cream contains in ten to fifteen minutes, the average time being four minutes.

It has churned eight pounds of butter from six quarts of cream in forty seconds.

It is made of iron with a screw, on a test, in one minute.

It will make better butter, and better than I will stand more working than that made in a common churn, the grain being coarser.

It will make the hardest kind of butter in the hottest days in August.

It works the buttermilk out in one minute, and cleanses it in one minute.

Bumped in at the ends, passes through the cream, and is carried off through a tube in the top of the cover. This process cleanses the cream of all impurities, and brings the oxygen of the air in contact with the oil in the cream which hardens and turns to butter.

It is driven with cogwheels that set these paddles in rapid motion, and makes the labor so light that a child twelve years old can churn with ease.

These Churns are manufactured at Berwick, N. S., and will be kept constantly on hand at order strictly attended to.

KATE ARMOUR.

At the stroke of twelve, one night there was no moon, the door of a large and handsome house, in a pleasant country place, opened softly, and a girl crept out, and looked anxiously about her. She was a pretty young creature, with a soft, foolish young face, and she had an air about her that told of good living, and freedom from all care as to ways and means. Her dress was a handsome one, suitable for travelling, and in her hand she carried a Russia-leather satchel.

Closing the door softly behind her, she hurried down the garden path, and at the gate found her hand clasped by the strong hand of a man—a handsome big fellow, though even in that light one could see that he was not a refined person.

Indeed the man was her mother's own hired servant, with whom she was about to elope. To say why she had been so foolish as to take a fancy to him—to explain the feelings that induced her, young, beautiful, and educated, the daughter of a wealthy woman with a good position in society, to fall in love with a fellow who had nothing but a certain amount of coarse good looks to recommend him, would be to succeed where all the wise men in the world have failed thus far. Who has ever yet been able to give the reasons for a woman's infatuation for her lover? Indeed she has none; so that often in the years that blot her folly out she asks herself—'Why did I love that fellow?' and can find no answer.

A man can generally say, 'She was so pretty,' in the same case. It does not need even that to make a woman an idiot. And so I cannot tell you why Kate Armour left her happy home, her mother, who loved her, her friends, and all her luxuries, for the kisses and praises of that boor of a groom, who had no honest worth to compensate for his lack of education and manners. Go she did, however, and the two were married in the nearest town. Tom Scotchman having no doubt whatever that Mrs. Armour would relent when she heard that her daughter was really married, and that he should tie down in clover for the rest of his days.

He reckoned without his host, however. The mother replied to her daughter's first letter by forbidding her ever to write again. And when the answer came the groom was very angry. However, he was in love in his coarse fashion just then, and after sulking an hour or two, he turned to his wife, and said:

'Well, you're as handsome as a picture any way; and hang the old woman!

Then he took her by both arms, holding her so tightly that he left the marks of his fingers upon them, and kissed her on the neck. A fierce, hot kiss, from which she shrank with a little scream, crying: "Tom, you bite me!" So he had. At least, it was a sort of bite. She did not know what to make of it. Afterward she learns. It was the first lesson he had dared to give her in the difference between the love of a brute and the love of a gentleman. And it was not long before she learned that a passion utterly without sentiment falls like a curse upon a woman's life. Tom had no sentiment. Yet, for a while, her better beauty charmed him, and it was better with them, than it was afterwards; for while it lasted he behaved decently.

He found her suited for him, and did it. He spared her what he could, as he said, 'for finery,' and she, though she began to understand the difference between Miss Armour and Mrs. Tom Scotchman, clung to him as long as he yet told her she was 'the prettiest girl anywhere.' For a year, she was often uncomfortable and very remorseful when she thought of her mother, but she was still blind enough to be happy at times.

Then a little baby lay on her bosom, and she was very delicate, and began to fade, and then Tom came home tipsy once or twice, and she could not tell which were worse, his liquor-frenzied kisses or curses. And then—disenchantment having begun on both sides—a red-cheeked girl, chambermaid at a low tavern, made her jealous. Jealous of Tom Scotchman. And reproaching him with lechery he had had a glass and foolishly twisting him with the fact that she had left wealth and luxury for him, and might have married well, he struck her. So her love ended, and the lowest depth of misery was reached. She saw the man she belonged to for life in his true colors. And now he often told her that she had lost all her good looks, and was nothing but a drag on a young fellow, who could marry 'the prettiest girl going, if he were single.'

'Oh, mother, mother, if you only knew,' the girl often sobbed in ## secret; but she could not go home with Tom Scotchman's baby in her arms.

Indeed, she had not the resolution necessary to enable her to run away. A little, soft, silly thing she was still, and ever would be.

Tom Scotchman, with his habits, lost one place after another, and they moved on and on, living here and living there. Sometimes with plenty to eat, sometimes with half enough, until the child was a year old. Then, one morning, Tom Scotchman having found work in a neighboring town, or so he declared, they travelled together across the country; the wife carrying the baby in her arms and a bundle on her back. Kate Armour had declined to carry the tiniest parcel.

They had come to a spot in the road where a grateful shade fell from some large elm, and here they sat down to eat and drink. Tom was in his best humor, for some reason, and made a joke at which his wife laughed. On that, flattered by her appreciation, he told her that 'my way her teeth were like pearls.'

'Praise is sweet to a woman, and she had heard no compliments for a long time, and she smiled at him again.

'I'd grow good looking again, if we had better times,' said she. 'And there's mother with her great trunk full of money, and no one to spend it on.'

'Why, what do you mean, girl?' said Tom Scotchman. 'Trunk full of money! Her money is in bank, I suppose, like other folks.'

Kate laughed.

'Mother never will put money in banks,' she said. 'She's sure they'll fail. She has it invested in other ways; but she has thousands sometimes in an old red box under her bed. She throws rags and things over on top, and says that is the best way to hide it. I've often worried over it at home.'

'Yes,' said Tom. 'It's foolish, but women is mighty fools.'

'Then he ate his bread and cheese and arose.

'I'll go back to the tavern and get a drink of beer,' he said. 'You sit here—you and the kid.'

Then he stooped down and pinched the boy's cheek.

Not for months had her Orson been so charming. Kate was really comforted. She sat in the grateful shade for a long while, not wondering that he was long in coming back when he had reached so desirable a goal as a tavern; and after a while she fell asleep. It was a long, sweet sleep, and in it she saw her mother and the old house where she was born in a strangely vivid dream. Her mother looked at her in the old loving way; and on her lap lay a little dog that had been a great pet of hers in that sweet long ago. The tiny creature began to whine.

'Lie still,' she said. 'Lie still, what ails you, Pinky?' But Pinky whined louder.

'What can trouble him?' she said again; and then she was broad awake, and it was not her little dog that whined in her arms, but her child, Tom Scotchman's baby, and the sun was sinking, and she was still alive.

Tom was doubtless lying very drunk indeed on the tavern step by this time, she thought. Yet it was not his habit yet to neglect business, and he had said it was needful to reach their place of destination by dark, that he might present himself to the employer the next morning.

Impatiently she waited; but the moon had arisen and still he did not come. All that she could do was to turn back and seek him at the tavern. She had no money—no food. Such as he was, he was her husband, and in a sort her protector. She arose took up the bundle and the baby and trudged back to the tavern.

Tom Scotchman was not there. A man dressed as she described him had drunk there about noon, but had gone the other way; and now Kate began to understand that he had abandoned her. At first going by herself to a spot where no one could see her, she cried over it, and felt very wretched. Then hope filled her heart. Now her mother would relent. Oh, assuredly her mother would relent and take her home! She returned to the tavern, and asked the way to Gypsum. It was nearer than she thought—only fifteen miles away. Towards it she set her face.

Slowly and painfully she toiled on, begged her bread as she went. She slept in barns at times; once in a poor man's garret; once in an old lime kiln. At last the white spire of the church where she was baptised arose from the green distance of dear tree-encircled Gypsum. There she saw an old red barn with which she was familiar, and its farm-house, and the group of hay-making people. The last farm on the road to Gypsum, and now hope gave strength. She would not lag until she met her mother.

walked on more slowly, coming as length into the trim street with its houses half hidden in their fine gardens, in which stood her mother's dwelling place. Yes, she must be forgiven—she must, she would. But what was this? Usually the street was so quiet, now a crowd filled it. People ran to and fro, some shouting, some crying. And the densest of the crowd was about her mother's house.

'What has happened?'
'With her heart beating wildly, Kate clutched the arm of a poor woman who stood near.

'What is the matter?' she asked.
'Why, it's a murder!' said the woman, shivering as she spoke.

'You're a stranger, ain't you? You don't know old Mrs. Armour. She was killed last night for her money. She kept considerable under her bed in a chest. She's all beat to pieces with a hatchet.'

'Oh my God!' screamed Kate. 'Who did it?'

'Well,' said the woman, 'they say a man that used to work for her, and ran off with her daughter, was seen here last night. But maybe that's all talk. Why, how sick you look! You'll drop your baby. Here, help I help! There's a woman in a fit or something.'

'And help came, kindly hands! Did all they could do for the stranger with the lady's face and the beggar's clothes, whom no one recognized; but God had been merciful. She was dead.'

DON'T GIRLS.

Don't think that yards and yards of ribbons, ruffles and lace will add one particle to your value. Don't make a walking milliner's shop out of a wardrobe of yourselves, covering all that is of true merit within you with that which will only attract the shallow, the fop, the dilettante, the uneducated, ignorant of manual labor, or to be ignorant of it. Don't give the subject of matrimony a thought while you are in your teens, except to qualify yourself for the responsible position it places you in; you need all of that time of your life to fit yourselves for it. You need to study books, the laws of life and health; to be well experienced in the culinary art, as perhaps the happiness and health of hundreds are depending on your knowledge of this. Don't give your time and talents to the world, or to seeking the things of time, and sense that perish with their using. God has created you for a nobler purpose, and made you accountable for what he has given you. Don't sell your birth-right for a mess of postage.

INTemperance in JAPAN.—The ruling vice in Japan is undoubtedly drunkenness. It prevails all classes, though it is confined by force of public opinion to the male sex. On a festival of the third month women are indeed allowed great license, and in their harems, from which on that day even their lords are excluded, they may indulge to any extent in the forbidden cup, but a woman of the lower class who may be found drunk at any other time would be exposed to a severe beating from her husband; were she of the higher class, she might die by the sword of her spouse. The only fermented liquor used, it is said, the sake, distilled from rice, and differing from the Chinese tin or shamsun that, while it is weaker, it often contains much of the poisonous oil of distillation. It is taken warm, and the better kind is not disagreeable to the taste. Few Japanese are fit for business in the evening, and in the afternoon many of the streets of Yeddo are rendered unsafe by drunken retainers.

In 1773 a farmer in Cape Elizabeth, Maine, made a will, sealed in an envelope, wrote on it in the direction that it should not be opened within one hundred years, delivered it to the selectmen for safe keeping, and then died. Heirs-at-law took possession of his property, nobody objecting, and after many years the town papers were lost. The sealed will recently came to light, and was found to devise the testator's property to the town, to be used as a charitable institution for vagrants; but it has changed hands many times, and to take it now from the present holders would be a great hardship. Probably the town will not press its claim.

No trait of character is more valuable than the possession of good temper. Home can never be made happy without it. It is like flowers springing up in our pathway, reviving and cheering us. Kind words and looks are the outward demonstration of patience and forbearance are the wealth within.

The finest of all English is called the falconet eye.

Weekly Monitor.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

PROSPECTIVE.

The melting influences of Spring are being felt—"the time of the singing of birds has come"—and the various out-door industries, which were dormant during the frosty months of Winter, are about to be resumed. Before another Autumn shall have succeeded the season of verdure, and the harvest of the husbandmen shall have re-filled empty granaries, and an abundance of human sustenance shall have been drawn from myriads of cultivated fields, there will be much energy and toil put forth in every department of enterprise and activity. On land and sea—in crowded cities and rural regions—in the warehouse, on the farm, and in the factory there will be efforts put forth to increase wealth and realize prosperity. There may, too, be changes in the position and influence of rival statesman; and the condition of nations, both as respects internal arrangements and foreign relations, may have assumed materially changed aspects.—The Empire of Turkey and its outlying Provinces are in a state of ominous turbulence. The youthful king of Spain, there is reason to fear, has neither the administrative ability or experience to calm the troubled elements of popular discontent, which not long ago culminated in a civil war of blood-stained fields, and of protracted continuance. Verily, we live in a world of agitation, and during the remaining months of the present year there will probably transpire events that will add an interesting page to the diversified history of the world.

But perhaps the "Centennial" at Philadelphia will be the most extraordinary event of the year. There will be an immense gathering from every civilized country on the globe. The sevens of the old world will meet and exchange civilities with those of the new. The brightest luminaries in the fields of science, philosophy and literature will impart a brightness to this cosmopolitan effort to bind in world-wide fraternity for a few days at least the representatives of many peoples, coupled with a desire by democratic America to commemorate the birth of nationality, is the idea of an exhibition of marvellous attractiveness. Works of art in variety,—the visible achievements of science, and the prodigious modern improvements in mechanical skill, the richest specimens of mineral wealth,—and indeed all that is great, good, extraordinary or largely utilitarian either in nature or in works of art, or in the widening domains of science will be exhibited to the conglomerate assemblage.

Even our own Province, however small and insignificant it may seem in the eyes of unappreciative foreigners, will send specimens of Nova Scotia's productions. Dr. Honeyman has been delegated to convey thither various curiosities, among which are a few specimens of mineral wealth. Our coal fields and mines of gold are a source of pride to ourselves; but far-off strangers may regard them with stolid indifference, and at the exhibition, where so many other things are "arranged for show," our contributions of these minerals in samples will probably attract but little attention and scant admiration. Nevertheless, there are some things in Nova Scotia worth the seeing. The Centennial will be in full blast in July, and if our Annapolis valley, at that season of the year, could be transported to Philadelphia, it could not but be admired for its fertility and scenic loveliness. But the cost and impracticability of its safe transportation thither preclude the possibility of its exhibition at the Centennial. It has more charms, however, for ourselves and thousands more than any thing that will be admired at the Philadelphia gathering.

But while thus giving expression to our own views, we would not depreciate or undervalue the many wonderful things to be seen at the great exhibition on which we are remarking. Choice specimens of the works of the masters in the art of painting will be exhibited—statuary too, chiselled and polished in the old world, will be gazed upon with admiration in the new. But perhaps the exhibition of modern inventions and improvements in mechanics and in manufactures will elicit the most attention, and be followed by utilitarian results of more importance to the world than all the excellencies attained in the refined arts. Painters and sculptors may administer pleasure to people of high intellectual culture and taste; but they add nothing to the material wealth of the world, and contribute nothing to the physical wants of earth's teeming millions. Philadelphia itself is a locality rich in interesting historical associations. There the chief labors of Franklin's long and brilliant life were performed. His efforts in the fields of journalism, science and politics were there put forth with marvellous vigor and transcendent success. His genius, in its meridian splendor a century ago, imparted a peculiar and undying interest to the "Quaker City." There, too, the first American Congress laid the foundation of a nationality, which has since grown into prodigious dimensions, prosperity and power. The Centennial, we presume, will be the attractive event of the season now opening.

HOW A WOMAN CHEATED THE DEVIL.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

PROSPECTIVE.

A happy couple in Wilshire in humble life, recently had their family enlarged by the addition of twins; but in a few days one of the babies sickened and died, and alarming symptoms forebode the speedy departure of the other. In these distressing circumstances the parents sent for the clergyman of the parish, in order that the dear little ones might be fitted for the kingdom of Heaven. On his arrival a state of things was disclosed. He, of course, soon made the living child "a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of Heaven," but what was to be done with the dead child? The mother's comprehension. The distressed mother first entreated him to let a few drops of the magic water fall upon the dead child's face, but that could not be then as they prayed that as they were both born together, so, in case of the second death, they might both be buried in the same coffin, or, at least, in the same grave. This very natural wish did not harmonize with the theology of the Wilshire parson, and so it was not granted. The second child died, the funeral was arranged, the two coffins were brought forth, but only one of the babies was committed to the earth in "sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life." and when the distressed parents enquired where the other child was to be interred the reply was to the effect that the other child must be buried at night in unconsecrated ground, without service or ceremony, as it had not been baptised. Here, however, a new chapter opened for the mother declared the buried child was the unbaptized one, and that being now committed in "a sure and certain hope" he was safe, while she claimed Christian burial for the other, on the ground of his having been made "a member of Christ," &c. In this dilemma the parson, in no measured terms, denounced the woman as a witch, and charged her with cheating God, cheating the Church, and cheating him also. The reply was a nonplus. "I am very sorry," sobbed the mother, "if I have done wrong, I did not wish to cheat God nor the Church, but I confess I have no scruples about cheating the devil."

THE "LENNIE" MUTINY.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

THE "LENNIE" MUTINY.

Portions of the bodies of the murdered officers washed ashore.

Portions of bodies supposed to be those of the murdered officers of the "Lennie," have been picked up on the sea coast at Rochford, near where the six Greek mutineers went ashore. The English Government having been communicated with on the subject, Constant von Hoydonck, the steward of the "Lennie," accompanied by Superintendent Williamson, of Scotland Yard, has been over to see if he could identify the remains found. The parts washed ashore consisted of three heads, and a naked headless body. The costliest funeral is being planned to be held for the remains, and the remains have been washed away that when the men went to look for the heads where they buried the body they did not find them. The headless body was preserved and shown to the steward. Sixteen stabs, as from a dagger, have been found upon it, one very severe one just above the groin. As it is the body of a tall man, a belief exists that it is the body of the captain. It is, however, much to be regretted that the hand upon which he had been tattooed is gone by decomposition, and that was the only mark by which those who have seen the body could have recognized it, the body remains unrecognised. Every effort is being made by digging along the sands of the French coast in that district to recover the lost heads, but, up to the last information, without any avail. Since Mr. Williamson has been over to the district where the alleged ringleaders in the mutiny were arrested, a large quantity of things taken from the ship, some of which will be evidence against individual prisoners, have been found.

THE LASH IN P. E. ISLAND.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

THE LASH IN P. E. ISLAND.

The unfortunate man, Chappel, flogged in the jail yard, on Friday, by the Deputy Sheriff. Dr. Jenkins was in attendance, by order of the Government, to see that the prisoner should not receive any greater punishment than his strength could bear. When stripped it was seen that he was quite a delicate man. We are informed that he bore the first two or three lashes with tolerable fortitude, but after that he wailed and moaned in a piteous manner. When the sixteenth lash had been inflicted he sank down far as the post to which he was tied permitted, and the doctor after examining him, decided that he could stand no more. He was, consequently, unbound, and led to his cell. Those who had a good opportunity of forming an opinion declare it as their belief that he would have died under the lash if the full punishment—thirty-nine lashes—to which he had been sentenced had been inflicted. The instrument of punishment was a military "cat" sent here some time ago, when the soldiers were on the island, from the Horse Guards. There were from 150 to 200 persons present to witness the flogging. Some of these spectators, it is said, grumbled a good deal because the entertainment did not last longer, and was not sufficiently horrifying. The Deputy Sheriff exhibited a great amount of feeling on the occasion, and was almost as much to be pitied as the criminal himself; but he had a duty to perform, and, painful as it was, he determined to do it without flinching. It may be necessary to flog criminals, but the punishment is a dreadful one. Few have any idea of its severity. It is quite evident that Chappel had no notion of the suffering he was about to undergo. We trust that the lads in this town—and there are by far too many of them—who are walking in his footsteps, will be warned in time. They may rest assured that sooner or later they will, like him, find to their cost that the "way of the transgressor is hard."

THE SEAL FISHERY IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

THE SEAL FISHERY IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

The reports from St. John's, Newfoundland, up to the last of March, were very discouraging in regard to the annual hunt for the white seal, upon which that section largely depends for its revenue. The seal fleet, consisting of eleven steamers, three sailing vessels and 2,440 men, left St. John's, on the 13th of March, the earliest date at which it was permitted to depart, but the start was most unfavorable. A heavy ice pack caught the fleet before it was out of sight of land and held it fast, and this impediment continued for nearly two weeks. The young seals are in the best condition about the 20th of the month and the hunt is now successful before the ice has been regarded as a failure, but not until the 24th of March did the vessel reach the open ocean, with many perils, risks and desperate chances "still to encounter." In less than a month the hunt is expected to be over. The season will be more expensive and more fashionable than ever. We note that four steamers have arrived with small flocks.

ITEMS.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

ITEMS.

Large floating ice-fields are reported in the vicinity of Newfoundland. In time of peace the Turkish forces consist of seven corps d'armes, of an effective of 120,000 men. "Snow a hundred feet deep" is the report from the glaciers of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The New York World describes the Canada Pacific Railway as "a line from a desert through a wilderness to a swamp." Manchester, Eng., is to have a new art gallery, at cost of $500,000, the whole amount of which has been given by a citizen who prefers to have his name remain unknown. The remains of a Roman theatre have been exhumed at Piscolo. It does not appear to have been on a gigantic scale, but its decorations are said to be remarkable for their richness. The inhabitants of Puyeria have built, mainly at their own cost, parapets of dried mud, alternating with granite towers. These entirely surround the town, and outlying villages have been converted into elaborate redoubts. The Maine Central Railroad will run two refrigerator cars between Boston and St. John, N. B., next summer. Strawberries, vegetables and green stuffs will be carried from Boston, and in returning will be sent from St. John cargo of salmon. A meeting was lately held at Augusta, Maine, of parties interested in building a railroad from Quebec down the valley of the Kennebec, to the seaboard of Maine at Wiscasset, which would be the shortest route from that State now lying an untrodden wilderness. Notwithstanding the Centennial the Philadelphia papers contain columns of advertisements for boarders the price when started being from $5 to $10 per week. This includes lodging and three meals per day. People of moderate means will find no difficulty in suiting themselves for the next six months by consulting the advertisements.

SINGULAR DEATH.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

SINGULAR DEATH.

We learn that a boy named Brove, 9 years old, was found on the beach Thursday last. It appears that he had been practising jumping, and had performed quite a feat a few days before by jumping from the wharf upon the beach without sustaining any inconvenience, and it is stated that another boy saw him jump off the "Bluff" on the day on which he was found dead.—Barnack Star.

THE TEMESAL MINES.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

THE TEMESAL MINES.

The Temesal tin mines in San Bernardino County, Cal., are among the richest in the world, but have not been worked much for the last ten years on account of a disputed title but a rich Amsterdam company has effected an arrangement with the various claimants and five hundred miners are to be set at work immediately.

MINING IN CUMBERLAND.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

MINING IN CUMBERLAND.

It is encouraging to observe Halifax capital flowing more freely into mining speculations of Cumberland. The enterprising banker J. M. Hay, Esq., of Amherst, recently purchased a large tract of land, the consideration price of which was $6,000. Mr. Hay is understood to be largely interested in other ventures.—Chignecto Post.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT.

Mr. David Misset, of Montreal, who recently conducted a picture sale in this city, met with a singular and serious accident on the train from St. John for Montreal on Friday last. A car coupling broke or became unfastened, and the bell-rope snapped in the cars pulled, the brass weighted end of the rope whirling back and smashing the window at which Mr. Misset sat, and filling his eyes with fragments of glass. It is not known whether the injury to his eyes will be permanent or not.

WESTERN RAILWAY PROGRESS.

BRIDGETOWN, APRIL 19, 1876.

WESTERN RAILWAY PROGRESS.

We understand that there are only five or six miles of the line between Weymouth and Yarmouth yet to be graded, and not more than a third of the distance between Weymouth and Digby. The railway bridge across Metegan river will be ready for the rails in a few weeks. The four cargoes of rails already landed here this spring, with the other two to arrive from New Orleans, will extend the track from Yarmouth to Weymouth. As soon as the frost laid out and the ground sufficiently settled, track laying will be resumed. The West-Contractors are pushing the work through vigorously, and there is every prospect that the line will be open from Yarmouth to Digby before next Christmas.—Yarmouth Herald.

Poetry.

THE LIGHT OF HOME.

My son, thou wilt dream the world is fair, And thy spirit will sigh to roam, And thou must go—but never when there, Forget the light of home.

The sea of ambition is tempest tossed, And thy hopes may vanish like foam, When sails are shivered and compass lost, Then look to the light of home!

How cold and dim those beams would be, Should life's poor wanderer come— My son, when the world is dark to thee, Then turn to the light of home!

Miscellaneous.

LET THE BABIES DIE IN THE DIRT. We once asked an old Winnebago squaw how it was she cured her sick family by simply covering them everyday with fresh earth, leaving only a breathing spot for their noses, and she said: "Earth, our mother; earth makes me, and earth takes good care to make the papoose strong; squaw mother make the papoose sick; earth mother make the papoose well again; she can't tell white squaw any more."

A STRANGE CAUSE OF DEATH. From the Burlington Hawkeye. About one of the most singular cases of death that ever came within our province to mention is that of Milton W. Blair of Louisiana county, who died last week in California, of the typhoid fever.

THE CROSS. Quaint thought the construction be of the following poem, yet never has the story of the cross been told with more truthful simplicity: Bless they who seek, While in their youth, With the spirit meek, The way of truth.

You and I, as well as Bunyan, have met with Mr. Bends, and Mr. Facing-both ways, and Mr. Talkative, some of us perhaps, may have seen Mr. Nogood and Mr. Liveloose, Mr. Hatelights and Mr. Implacable. All us have at times seen like Mr. Bends, Mr. Facing-both ways, Mr. Talkative, Mr. Hatelights, Mr. Implacable, Mr. Nogood, Mr. Liveloose, Mr. Hatelights and Mr. Implacable.

The German General Staff has published a report on the trials made since 1871 with regard to the employment of balloons for military purposes. All attempts to erect balloons have failed. It is hoped that means for mounting and descending without throwing out ballast or letting out ballast or letting out gas, and for raising and lowering by chemical means, the provision of gas, will shortly be discovered.

An improvement in safety lamps has been suggested by Mr. Bouillon, of Paris. It consists in replacing the lamps usually employed in mines containing fire-damp by others supplied with air outside the mines, and branches are led into all the workings.

HOW TO HAVE GOOD EGGS. There is a vast difference in the flavor of eggs. Hens fed on clear, sound grain, and kept on a clean green run, give much finer flavored eggs than hens that have access to stale and manure heaps, and eat all kinds of filthy food.

THE CLOSING OF THE FRANCONIAN MONASTERY AT SIEBENBRUNNEN, in Germany, having been directed by the authorities everything portable within the building was carried off by the monks, not excepting the stoves. One gigantic stove, however, withstood their efforts, and was purchased at the government sale of the property by Prince Ysenburg-Birstein.

A NEW POSION IN TOBACCO SMOKE. Dr. O. Krause, of Annaberg, has discovered an additional ingredient in tobacco smoke, which is said to account for the praiseworthy effects of the weed that are so apparent to those who do not use it.

A wonderful shower of flies is said to have fallen in the neighborhood of Riviere du Loup covering a space of two acres. The statement that Judge Taschereau has forwarded a number of specimens to Laval University, as well as the fact that Professor Laroche is said to vouch for the story, would appear to leave no doubt of its correctness.

What do young ladies look for when they go to church?—The hymns, (hint.) It is said that some people have what is called "spontaneous," and some haven't; but nobody ever sat down on a piousness, yet without manifesting something surprisingly like it.—Brooklyn Argus.

HIS PRESENT. He said he wanted to deal directly with the proprietor of the jewelry store; times were hard and he must have hard pan prices. He looked at a silver watch, and a gold-headed cane, at a set of jewelry, and finally at a gold watch. Then he said: "I did think of making my wife a Christmas present, but she is in a good-looking room and finding fault, and she'll let me have it."

"Well, about the watch?" "Well, I guess I'll buy the watch and make myself a present. I never had much of anything in my stockings, and I feel that I haven't been used right. What's your lowest figure?" "Two hundred dollars."

"I'll make you this watch for $180, and not one cent less," said the dealer. "I'll take it," though it looks like a big price." "The jeweller jugged the watch in the box, stuffed cotton around it, and he laid it on the show-case, the stranger said: "You ain't kidding?" "No, sir."

HENRY GETS BREAKFAST. Mr. Henry Archibald, of Easton, Pa., was over in Philadelphia, Pa., the other night, and somebody told him about a model house that lived on the hill, and got up every morning at four o'clock and did up the house work and got breakfast for his wife before going to his work; also how he got up extra early on each morning and disposed of the week's washing.

LOVE APPLE.—If you want your tomatoes to be particularly nice, put in a little vinegar while cooking. An old bachelor's palate was so tickled the other day with some sauce of that sort that he immediately made honorable proposals to his landlady. The real name of the tomato, by the way, is "love apple."

FOR damp closets and cupboards which generate mildew, a trayful of quick-lime will be found to absorb the moisture and render the air pure, but of course it is necessary to renew the lime from time to time as it becomes fully slaked. This remedy will be found useful in safes and storerooms; the damp air of which acts frequently most injuriously on the valuable desks and documents which they contain.

A good receipt for apple bread is the following:—Weigh one pound of fresh juicy apples; peel, core, and stew them into pulp, being careful to use a porcelain kettle or a stone jar, place inside a kettle of boiling water; mix the pulp with two pounds of the best flour; put in the same quantity of yeast you would use for common bread, and as much water as will make it a fine, smooth dough; put it into a pan, and place it in a warm place to rise, and let it remain for twelve hours at least. Turn it into a loaf long shaped loaves, and bake in a quick oven.
