A Life Story.

Above the little sufferer's bed,
With all a mother's grace,
She stroked the curly, throbbing head,
And smoothed the fevered face.
"He does not know my love, my fears,
My toil of heart and hand;
But some day in the after years,
Some day he'll understand;
Some day he'll know
I loved him so,
Some day he'll understand."

A wild lad plays his thoughtless part
As fits his childhood's lot,
And tramples on his mother's heart
Ofttimes and knows it not.

Nor knows his trues treat;
His mother sighs, as still she waits,
"Some day he'll comprehend;
The day will be
When we will see,
Some day he'll comprehend." The strong youth plays his streng His mother waits alone, And soon he finds another heart The mate unto his own.

The mate unto his own.
She gives him up in joy and woe,
He takes his young bride's hand,
Hia mother murmurs, "Will he know
And ever understand?
When will he know
I love him so;
When will he understand?"

The strong man fights his battling days,
The fight is hard and grim,
His mother's plain, old-fashioned ways
Have little charm for him. The dimess falls around her years,
The shadows round her stand,
She mourns in loneliness and tears,
"He'll never understand,
He'll never know

A bearded man of serious years Bends down above the dead, And rains his tribute of his tears He stands the open grave above,
Amid the mourning bands;
And now he knows his mother's love,
And now he understands, Over an old, grey head Now doth he know She loved him so; And now he understand

For Jerry's Sake.

There are still quiet localities along the New England coast, where the old fashioned stage coach is the recognized means of trans-portation between the little seaside village and the nearest railway station. The office of driver of so important a vehiche often develops a peculiarly observant type of character. The man of the reins is, in the country parlance, "no chicken." He has driven to and fro too long and notable a succe of summer visitors, to be unfamiliar with metropolitan marks and manners. The city maiden, with her pretty wiles and graces, no enigma to him, but for the young men o leisure, her partners in the season's game of hearts, he harbors less indulgence. He "sizes up" the wealthy stock-broker or bank president at a glance, but without aw fingers of the stately dowager make her wrinkled hand no fairer to his sight. It is such as these, he would tell you if he ere to speak his mind, who "come with the birds and go with the birds." They are transient, like the life which they represen his own mode of living partakes of the per manency of the scenes among which he Yet the driver is not so independent personage as to be unwilling to entertain and impress the passengers whom, in his se-cret heart, he estimates so patronizingly To this end he dispenses with lavish lips his store of neighborhood tradition and romance. He is the most congenial of gossips, and his enjoyment of the good points of his own stories is not at all diminished by the hunredth telling. Should one chance to bes I myself was, one golden day of June—his olitary fare, it might not be quite amiss to end him a pair of listening ears.

The road, which had been winding for mile or two among the fragrant pine woods, led out suddenly into an open space com-manding a distant glimpse of the sea. But it was not the sight of that shining bit of blue, which drew from me a sudden exclamation of surprise and pleasure. A noble slope of velvet turf at our right was crowned by a building of exquisite proportions, as utterly unlike the plain farmhouses which we had passed, as it, like Aladdin's palace, it had been the magic of a night.

The driver regarded me with ill-concealed "Old Cap'n Jeremiah Parson's place," he

There's the old Cap'n and his wife now, a-He pointed with his whip toward a white haired man, apparently reading aloud from a book to the little woman who rocked gent-

"Some folks think that Mis" Parsons is a little touched here "-he tapped his forehead suggestively—"but if that's so, all I've got to say is, it's a pity more of us couldn't be hit the same way. Ah, well: it's a mighty queer story.

"Won't you tell it to me?" I asked. "The Cap'n's what they call a self-made an. He hadn't anything to begin the world with, not even an education. He came of a sea-farin' race, and the only thing for such a boy to do was to ship before the mast. Plenty of others have done the same thing and stayed there; but Jeremiah Parsons wasn't that kiud. He kept climbin' up gradual, till he got to be master of a vessel. Then he saved and saved, till he bought a ship of his own. It was clear sailin' after that. I've heard my father tell a-many a time how everything he touched just seemed to turn to money. Why, he made a moderate sized fortune on one voyage, when he brought up a cargo of Para rubber, and the price jumped fifty per cent, before he got into port.

"Meantime he married his wife, a good

My father used to say that he believed the Cap'n would 'a' given every cent he had in the world and done it willin', if so be he could 'a' heard a little voice callin' him 'Father!' I've heard him tell how they were drivin one day, and they come to a mis'able cabi where there appeared to be a child's face to every window pane, and the Cap'n drew the horse up short, and said he, sort o' fierce: "How do you make that out, neighbor?"

"There'd always be a Jeremiah in the that folks without much schoolin' wouldn't up to smile in the Cap'n's face.
"There'd always be a Jeremiah in Parsons family, so the boy's name was wait-in' for him; but because it seemed heavy-like for such a mite, Mis' Parsons shortened it up to 'Jerry.' "They'd got everything planned ahead for the boy up to the time when he'd be mangrown. It did seem odd, plain as they'd always lived with all their money, that they should 'a' had such notions about that child. They couldn't 'a' laid out to do more for him, if he'd been a prince of the blood. Granny Perkins was nursin' Mis' Parsons, and she'd hear them talkin' low together, the she never let on she was listenin " So you want another house, Mother?"

"Why, yes, Father!" It was amazin' Granny said, how soon they'd learned to call one another, 'Father' and 'Mother,' and how natural the words seemed to come. To be sure, we'd have been all right in the old one, but with Jerry growin' up everygreat reader, so we shall want a room for books; and he'll be bringin' his mates home with him, so there ought to be a big parlor and plenty of chambers.'

"We'll have everything of the best, Mother. There's money rolling up in the bank, and we couldn't use it better than in gettin' things suitable for our boy. Thank God! we can give him a better chance than ever we had!" "Granny said that somehow the least bit of a cloud went over Mis' Parson's face at that; but, small as it was, the Cap'n sighted it, and says he, gentle-like: " What is it, dear!" "She didn't answer at first, but when he kept on urgin', she colored up and said she:

"The old Cap'n slapped his knee. " 'And a good idea it is, Mother!' says he. Only we'll have to begin right away to get start of the little shaver!" "'And you'll give up seafarin', Father, and stay home with Jerry and me?" "There isn't a ship stout enough to carry me away from you. The boy'll be wantin' a pleasure-boat, maybe. We'll do our sailing

"Well, it went on that way, till the day the baby was three weeks old. Mis' Parsons had been puttin' it to sleep, and just as she was handin' it to Granny to lay down, the old woman gave a scre " What makes him so white?' says she. "An awful look came into Mis' Parson's ace. She snatched the boy back, but he just doubled up limp in her hands. The long and short of it was, the child was dead.

The doctor called it heart disease, and that was all anybody ever knew. "Well, poor Mis' Parsons lay at death' door for days, and, perhaps, 'twas as well for the Cap'n that he had all he could do watchin' her, and couldn't fully sense what had happened.

"When, at last, she did begin to mend it was so slow that one could hardly see the petterment from day to day. But, one afternoon, she woke up out of a long sleep, and one could see that there'd been a chang "Father,' says she, 'I've had a lovely lream. I can't tell it to you; but I've had things showed to me. Father, you know ouse we meant to build, and the books and the piano, and how we were goin' to tudy ourselves, and all that?"

into a long, white robe, which fell over the black one, and down his back hung a large surplice of bright velvet, upon which a gol house those two folks went to readin' and great candles, about a yard long and three inches thick shed a dim light. These were studyin' regular, like children; and if there was anything that Mis' Parsons didn't unthe especial charge of an official who gave lerstand, she'd go and ask the minister "When the time came that Jerry, if he'd After church the worshippers dispersed and many of them did not reach their homes un-

"She and the Cap'n made all sorts

"Then, when Jerry would 'a' had to have been sent away from home, she went around making inquiries about the best boardingschool for boys, and after she'd picked out one that she thought most proper she went with the Cap'n and made acquaintance with the teachers, and had the boys introduced to her, aiming to help along any that were

Boys! why, she had the house swarmcroquet and tennis and hammocks, and swing-poles; and, for the matter of that there were some better things to be learned of her than they could get at any school but that she'd always been ladylike, but there was a difference. She was finer, more understanding. I've heard say that manners are kind of outside dress—some folks have to pad theirs all over to make 'em smooth; but Mis' Parsons's just fitted her! Just her way of listenin' comforted anybody

"Well, the boys that Jerry would 'a' gone to the academy with, got through there and went to college, and Mis' Parsons, she kept ight along with them, looking after then he same as ever. She made up her mind, what society he'd been likely to join, and then what did she do but get the Cap'n to build a house for it—a fraternity house,' I believe they call it. The young fellows all knew her for 'Jerry's mother,' and the wildest of them would have knocked anybody that dared to make game of the little whitehaired woman that went to see them every ent; and they do say that her pleadin' turned back more than one of them that had got a start on the road to ruin.

"The house was full as ever in vacation. Some of the fellows that had sisters brought them along. The Cap'n had bought the re-boat—as neat a craft as you'll see along shore—and he used to take the young folks down the bay, with Mis' Parsons along to do the mothering. It was a pretty sight to see them hangin' around her, and she is so fond and proud of them all.

A young woman, simply dressed in a gown of some light fabric, approached us, driving leisurely in a pony-carriage. Her face, shaded by a broad hat, were an expression of great purity and gentleness. She might have been thirty years old. She bowed pleasantly in response to the driver's re-spectful salutation, and when she was again

It is believed of the old rock since disaster overtook centuries ago. Professor Sibley's plan is to and so get up. If he succeeds, and his plan is thought to be feasible enough, he may find very interesting antiquities. At any rate he will be likely to find out whether the story the Indians tell about the abandoned village is true. The quest excites the immagination and if it succeeds it ought to make some fac

Banhas decided to leave the Carleton Corner proposed corporation at the railway. This we believe is a surprise to both parties, as it was generally supposed that if Carleton's Corner were not included, the line would be drawn at the natural boundary, the river. The district between the river and the railroad takes in property, the three owners of which may all be said to be opposed to the measure of incorporation; and it will surely be most unsatisfactory to them to know that committee appointed for the purpose, have been disestablished, they, who are so strongbeen disestablished, they, who are so strong. Iy opposed to the whole scheme of a civic government, should be included within its jurisdictions when it would have been so easy to have left them out. The fault however lies with the appeal, which, while praying for the repeal of the original boundaries, failed to set up new limitations, thus leaving the commissioner a free hand to trace the line. Of course the over-the-river voters at the poll, but it looks as if the incorpor ationists were to win in the approaching bathand the anti-incorporationists have not yet been able to clearly explain the excellence of the municipal system as applied ists a degree of prejudice against new methand a close ballot will likely result. Ten days notice at least is required before the poll, which will likely not be held before the first of September, and arguments pro and con will be at a premium in the intervening

This exchange of soldiery ought to have a wonderful effect in strengthening the Canadian militia, and fitting it for active service when the occasion arises, and the Hon. Dr. Borden is to be congratulated on his efforts to raise is to be congratulated on his efforts to raise the standard of military equipment and training in the Dominion. Whatever else may be said of the personnel of the government, it must be generally admitted that the worthy radicalism in conducting the affairs of his department, and we believe will prove the right man in the right place.

with Germany and Belguim, in order to accept Canada's offer of preferential trade, the British government has taken a position which can not be mistaken; and which is practical proof of her sincerity in advancing the cause of the consolidation of the empire. Her action also does away with the dispute that arose in the Canadian parliament as to that arose in the Canadian parliament as to with England, Germany and Belguim would not be entitled to like treatment under our tariff regulations. The scheme of a Greater Britain is growing apace and the early years of the twentieth century will surely develop such a federation as will tend to increase an hundred-fold the commerce between colony for defence and offense as will place at the back of each colony, in time of need, the concentrated strength of the mightiest of earth's enpires. —Sometime age the MONITOR called attention to the fact that in spite of hard times the banking institutions were earning big dividends, and the half yearly dividend of three and three and a half per cent, recently declared by the Halifax banks, show that their prosperity is unimpaired, while on the other hand the average business man is experiencing the difficulties attendant upon a congested circulation of currency. The banking corporations are actually making money as his expense. The records show that banks are about the only institutions that are peculiarly adapted to making money as his expense. The records show that banks are about the only institutions that commodity. Who has beard a tale of prosperity in Ireland during the past decade? The Emerald Jale is notorious for its impecuniosity and yet we read of a national bank recently declaring a dividend of nine per cent. It is annoying to listen to the banks.

measure the Dingley bill is, when compared with the Wilson bill, may be gashered from the fact that the total value of articles transferred from the free list to the dutable list is estimated at $101,968,841. On the other hand there were but two changes from the dutiable to the free list and these were unimportant. In spite of the apparent efforts to get the maximum revenue, the personntage on one or two of the schedules has been slightly decreased. Taken as a whole the Dingley bill probably represents the greatest revenue producer and the highest measure of protection ever adopted by the United States. Whether it is a measure identical with the welfare of the majority of the American people is, however, a matter mpon which the thoughts of wage carner and cypitalist must centre and a verdict be promalgated in 1900.

The New Boundaries.

Through the courtssy of Sheriff Gates we have obtained a copy of the report of Joseph A. Bancroft, M. P. P., a commissioner appointed to define the boundaries of the Town of Bridgetown seeking incorporation, which report is confirmed by the Government. The boundaries are as follows: Beginning at he east line of Major Slocomb's land on the bank of the Annapolis river; thence running northerly by said line till it reaches a point opposite the north line of land owned by Gilbert Gibson; thence running west the same course till it reaches the west line of land owned or occupied by L. A. Dickey; thence southerly following said Dickey's west line to the river; thence easterly along the course of said river to a point opposite the east line of lands on the south side of the river owned by Weston A. Fewler; east line till it reaches south boundary line of the Dominion Atlantic Railway land; thence east along the south line of said Dominion Atlantic Railway and until it reaches the Annapolis river and thence across said river and along the east bank of the said Annapolis river by the various courses of said river to the place of beginning. —The schr. Such a state does not necessarily mean a return to protectionism in England until the necessity arises, and then we believe England will be as ready to discriminate in favor of her colonies as she was to solve the difficulty that attended Canada's first advance toward closer trade relations.

Shelburne County Letter.

After a long silence I pen a few items from this section of the province. We have been experiencing what is not very common on this shore i. e., three weeks or more of hot weather. The heat, had it not been tempered by the sea breeze and fog, would have been almost unbearable.

The season has only been fairly prosperous, from the fisherman's standpoint. The cold rough weather during April and May militated against them in the lobster business. A large amount of property was destroyed in the shape of traps and gear.

The factories where the canning business is prosecuted did a good business, because the price for canned lobsters is higher than ever known.

The off-shore fishermen are only meeting with fair success, owing to scarcity of proper batt. The dog-fish is a great enemy of the fishermen, destroying fish and driving them away from the fishing grounds.

The bankers have been very successful this season, returning with full fares and are expected home in a few days with a second fare. If prices were good the business would be a very lucrative one; but the buyers have united in keeping the prices down, while the West Indies market prices are better than for years.

What is needed, in order that the fisher-

What is needed, in order that the fisher-What is needed, in order that the fishermen may be fairly dealt with and receive a fair share of the profits arising from the business, is co-operation. Such a system would give the poor man a chance to live and pay his debts. This business of enriching the few at the sacrifice of the many is barbarous. The persons who attended the formal opening of the Coastal Railway, from Yarmouth to Pubnico, speak in the highest terms of the road. It is first class in all its appointments; its officials are obliging and painstaking. It is earnestly hoped that the promoters of the road will rush it as fast as possible to its destination.

road will rush it as fast as possible to its destination.

A large number of summer visitors and tourists may be expected to visit these shores during the hot season. While our friends across the border have been sweltering with the heat, we have been kept cool by the kindly influence of sea breezes and fog.

Hay crops have been larger this season than for years. Fruit and vegetables are less than an average crop.

I have been a resident of this shore for nearly four years. Have enjoyed my sojourn here very much; it having been my privilege to labor among a kind and appreciative people. I may sever my connection with the church as pastor, Oct 1st., or I may continue

Ontario Letter. PORT BURWELL ONT., Aug. 6th, 1897.

MR. EDITOR,—Since my last communication to you I have received a copy of Calnek and Savary's History of Annapolis County, which is a most excellent work, better than any similar work in the Dominion, and equal to any history of its size in the United States. In the first place as a history: St. Augustine, Fla., was the first place settled on the continent by Europeans, 1565; Annapolis the second, 1604; Jamestown, Va., 1607; Quebec, 1608. So the History under consideration is the second in North America. The volume naturally divides itself into three parts: First, The history, telling of the various settlements and the wars and bloody conflicts between England and France; the massacre of English soldiers by the treacherous French at Bloody Creek in 1711; the forcible ejection of the French out of the province in 1755—the subject of Longfellow's "Evangeline" that has excited so much sympathy for the habitans among the Americans, altho' it is well known that the French settlers would have been left in possession of the back pages and the state pages and the PORT BURWELL, ONT., Aug. 6th, 1897.

pathy for the habitans among the Americans, altho' it is well known that the French settlers would have been left in possession of their homes to this day had they been quiet, peaceable and submissive to the "power that be." Second, The biographies of about sixty members of the House of Assembly or Provincial Parliament from 1759 to the present time; very interesting indeed, but part of them were of Digby, which was included with Annapolis till about 1830. Third, Genealogical sketches of about 140 families of the first settlers of the country; about fifty of them traced to their emigrant ancestors 200 to 300 years back, of which 13 were of German origin, 13 Scotch, 10 Welsh, 10 Irish, 8 French, 6 Dutch, and one each of Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland and Italy, leaving over 70 of English origin.

The volume, as a whole, is rich with sketches and reminiscences of the settlers, particularly those from the United States both before and after the American Revolution, and we advise every householder, farmer, mechanic and tradesman to possess a copy, for it is invaluable to the inhabitants of Annapolis County and very interesting to many in Digby, Kings and other counties. Haying and winter wheat harvest are about done, and many now are knocking out their grain with the steam threshers. Cherries are coming on, and apples, pears, peaches, grapes, etc., will soon be here.

The Baptist camp meeting has just closed, a large number of ministers and others from around and abroad being present.

Respectfully as ever,

WM. E. Chute.

Rambles in Merrie, Merrie England

We have quite a nuber of locks to pass on our journey to Staines. They will add novelty to the trip, especially to the traveller who is accustomed to journeying hundreds of miles on rivers, without ever thinking of locks. About these stopping places, the summer holiday party and guests at the village inn and from the house boats will be lounging around the grassy knolls, or fishing from the walls and dams, just as we see it now at Teddington Lock, to which we are now drawing up. Luscious strawberries are offered from the walls. Nine cents per quart is asked. They are selling for four pence in London. We do not encourage the Teddington enterprise. It is so everywhere, if you want country produce at a low price go to the city for it.

We fortunately have a memo, of all the Locks upon our course to-day. Teddington Lock is eighteen and a half miles from London. It is a first rate stone lock with a fall of about nine feet. There is a smaller lock and also a broad roller for small boats which consists of a sort of sluiceway up over the wall which separates the two bodies of water, inclining each way to the water. On the bottom of the sluice is a framed flooring with rollers, over which the boat is easily moved. We have seen them go over. It is a pictureaque place here at this lock: the locks, the sluice, the rapids over the dam, and the high bridges to the island, which is just here, and a pretty country about.

Teddington village is a place of about 10,000 inhabitants. It is at the eastern extensity of Bushy Park, that grand Chestnut Park, stretching out from Hampton Court. On the wall of the village church over the reading desk is a mural tablet with scrolls, skull and cherubs, which commemorates that famous actress, Peg Waffington, or, as the inscription has it, Margaret Waffington, spinster, who died aged 39 years in 1700.

Moving on we soon come to the historic town of Kingston. Fortunately my fellow traveller knows very much about these places. I learn a little more and so the tale is made up. The first object town of Kingston. Fortunately my fellow traveller knows very much about these places. I learn a little more and so the tale is made up. The first object of interest which meets the eye on nearing Kingston is a fine old five arch stone bridge, across our course, over the Thames. Kingston is prominent in history. Cæsar left his marks, which are seen to-day in fragments of camps and remains of Roman roads. The Great Council of Witenagemot was convened here by King Egbert in S36, which council was attended by his son Athelwolf, and Ceolnothus, archbishop of Canterbury. Upon the coronation stone in the market place, are the names of the kings who were crowned here: names of the kings who were crowned here: Eadweard 901; Edmund 943; Eadwig 955; Edelstan 923; Eadred 946; Eadward 973;

Aedelred 978.

In 1264, Henry III destroyed Kingston Castle, then the property of the Earl of Gloucester. Kingston was the scene of many conflicts during the time of of the cival wars. In 1648 Lord Francis Villiers was killed near this town. It is a bright centre of interest to the holiday seeker, being very pretty and conveniently situated.

Very beautiful gardens and public walks extend along the river side for miles, all adding to the charm of Kingston. We enjoy them vastly, as we skim along past. hem vastly, as we skim along past.

The parish church is dedicated to "All Saints. '' It contains many monuments of nterest. One curious epitaph upon a menterest. One curious epitaph upon a me-norial stone to Thos. Hayward, 1665, reads morial stone to Thos. Hay ware, as follows:

"Earth to earth.
Ashes to ashes lye, on ashes tread,
Ashes engraved these words which ashes read.
Then what poor thing is man when a gust
Can blow his ashes to the elder dust!
More was intended but a wind did rise
And filled with ashes both my mouth and eyes." Kingston is twenty and a half miles from London, has excellent railway communication, and has a population of 33,000 souls. Thames Ditton, on our left, is twenty-two and a half miles from London, is a very pretty village, and was a very popular resort for anglers in the days of Theodore Hook, who made his verse in praise of Swan Inn. made his verse in praise of Swan Inn. The old hostelry is seen from the boat as we pass. The railway now carries the trav-

The House Boat is a Cenerally it is ar The House Boat is a popular institution now upon the Thames. Generally it is an oblong house, floating upon the water. It can be towed at the pleasure of the owner from place to place. They are finished in all conceivable ways and shapes and sizes. Many of them are beautifully decorated, and much artistic taste is displayed in the arrangement of blinds and flowers. The roof much artistic taste is displayed in the arrangement of blinds and flowers. The roof is usually covered with blooming flowers—scarlet geraniums, calcolarias, lobelias, and other bright midsummer bloom. Some of these holiday season homes are much admired by us, as they closely nestle beneath the branches of the overhanging trees. One in Japanese style is of special interest. They do not appear to be all occupied. The sason is hardly on. However, we notice large piles of boxes, hampers, and travellers' luggage, indicating the near arrival of the occupiers. Others are now being set in order for the season. The Jubilee festivities in other quarters kept the interest away from here. These boats have, in some cases, private owners, but some are hired for the sea fishermen.

On further inquiry we find that there are undoubted proofs to hand of there being trout, pike, jack, perch, and chub in this part of the Thames. But, no jack or pike that is not 18 inches long must bite with the intention of being caught; no trout less than 16 inches; no chub less than 10 inches; and no perch less than 8 inches long. So the fisherman may be quite as anxious to prevent a bite as otherwise sometimes. In this case

Englishmen, I think, do not appear so very much superior to Americans. We rarely see men of fairer, nobler bearing than our Professor Sawyer, and Dr. George Hill, late ot St. Pauls, Halifax. No finer types of men have I ever seen from the refined and intellectual point of view, than Oliver Wendell Holmes, Edward Everett Hale, or Professor Elliott of Cambridge.

English women, on the whole, are very beautiful and delightful in their manners, and apparently very good. When in England last year, I was much in the company of several families in Manchester, of means and position, and I thought them, the women in particular, delightful in their homes. So I find them in London now.

We, in getting to Staines, pass five locks in all after leaving Teddington Lock as follows:—

in all after leaving Teddington Lock as 101lows:—
Monsley, 23 miles from London.
Sunbury, 264 miles from London.
Shepperton, 30 miles from London.
Chertsey, 32 miles from London.
Penton, 34 miles from London.
My letter is now sufficiently long, and consequently I think best to reserve my tale of the trip from Hampton Court to Staines for a future article.

We return to London about ten o'clock, after having enjoyed a most delightful day.

Gentlemen:—After testing the Home Comfort thoroughly, am free to say that it is the best cooking apparatus I ever used. Bakes nice, cooks well, furnishes an abundance of heat, lots of hot water, and does not consume more than half the fuel of any former stove I ever used. It is everything it was recommended to be by your salesman. I would net part with my range for any reasonable net part with my range for any reasonable amount of money if I could not get another.

At this season of the year, when so many rs only for a day, a few hints on the best way to overcome some of the difficulties may not come amiss. Good jndgment and forethought are an excellent help, as these enable you to plan your arrangements so that you may have plenty of time for the necessary things that must be done, such checking baggage, buying tickets, securing a seat that will be comfortable and shady, and in choosing a seat it is well to select one near the centre of the car. A lady will find a veil a great protection in travelling, as it keeps cinders from lodging in the eyes and catches much of the dust, while a gentleman will find a straw hat, or cap with a visor, a good protection. If the railroad companies would screen the car windows it would add greatly to the comfort of the passengers. Don't fret about anything when you travel. If you cannot make connections, or lose a train, make the best of it and find some way to employ your time pleasantly and profitably. It is always well to have with you a few interesting books or papers to fill up the waiting moments, but it is not wise to read too steadily when the cars are in motion, as the strain upon the eyes is apt to cause a ing and nibbling on fruit or candy. Try and eat something, if it is only a sandwich, about the time of your regular meals; and if you are quite hungry when you arrive at your hotel or destination, you will feel all the better afterward.

A Permanent Pasture

A subscriber writes to an agricultural paper saying: "I am cleaning up an old pas-ture, cutting bushes, etc. What kinds of grass seed would you recommend? Is there any better than herds grass and clover?"

As we understand it, this is intended for a permanent pasture. The object in sowing so many different kinds is, first: It furnishes a variety of feed for the stock. Cows, especially, crave a variety. It will be noticed where a pasture is nearly all one kind like clover, for instance, and there is a little timothy and blue grass in the corners of the fences, the clover may be allowed to grow up high while the fence corners are gnawed down close. The man who observes this will sometimes say, clover is poor pasture, cows do not like it. But we once had a pasture that which are not inflammatory, the patient was all timothy, except a small piece of clov er. In this instance the clover was eaten close to the ground all summer, while the timothy was allowed to grow up high. Second: The different grasses start and come to maturity at different periods during

The Proper Age for Cycling.

Mr. E. B. Turner, in the British Medica Journal, answers many questions which are constantly being asked as to the limits imposed on cycling by age. In regard to the age at which cycling may properly be learned it may safely be said that no child under seven years old should be permitted to ride children begin to ride great care should be taken to ensure a proper size of saddle, han-dles and length of the crank, and to prevent all hill climbing and excessive speed. The great test after a ride is the condition of the child the next day. As to mothers riding, there seems no objection to it whatever if they are free from organic local disease. When a person has been accustomed to cycling and has regularly kept up his condition by practice there is no reason why advancing years should make him give it up. A habitual rider may be allowed to use his wheel a long as nature will allow him, especially if he uses it regularly. Whether a man over sixty-five or seventy may begin to learn is another matter. Bones are more brittle and in which quite old men have taken to the cycle with advantage, but each such case must be judged on its merits.

Many have a great fondness for pansies, nd it need not be wondered at. There is an attractive quaintness about them which although they are to be found in every cottage garden it is nevertheless true that in or-der to get a first-class strain great care and culture are necessary. Now is the season when all lovers of pansies should make sure of saving their own seed, for I know of no when all lovers of pansies should make sure of saving their own seed, for I know of no better way to insure success in the cultivation of a first-class strain than to save one's own seed. The hired man's wearing your bloomers,

O, mother, dear mother, come home!

FAMILY SCENE WHICH HAS VERY MANY Mrs. Cobwigger-Here's the man with the cost a quarter extra if we have him put it up. utes work! Well, I guess not! In hard times like these a man owes it to his family to economize. Tell him I'll put the shade up myself. (Takes off coat.) Now, my dear, bring in the stepladder, while I hunt up the hammer and screwdriver.

Mrs. Cobwigger—You'll find them down in the cellar, my dear. Cobwigger-Well, you women beat everything I ever heard of. That's a nice place

Mrs. Cobwigger-Why, I never laid hands you were advised to sow your spring seeds, or if you think it better, sow in shallow boxes you got angry with the cat you fired them at her as she was running down the cellar

Cobwigger-And they have been down there getting rusty all this time? Mrs. Cobwigger—Certainly. You didn't expect the cat to bring them to you, so you could throw them at her again, did you? Cobwigger—Now, don't make a fool of yourself, and think you're funny. Have that stepladder here by the time I come up from

Mrs. Cobwigger (aside)-How different Henry was before we were married. Then, he wouldn't let me carry even my music roll. Cobwigger (returning)—A nice hunt I had neck for taking them down there. Now, I'll show you how to hang a shade. Mrs. Cobwigger (after a while)-Why, Henry, what are you swearing about? Cobwigger-Darn these screws. You should have known better than to have bought such trash. The heads come off be fore they are half way in. (Whir-r-burr-r-r!) Now what have you done?

Mrs. Cobwigger-It must be the spring run down. Cobwigger-Blank! blankety! blank! Why weren't you holding the ladder in of monkeying with the shade? Now you'll have to wind the thing up. Turn that whatyou get it tight I'll shove in the thingumbul

Mrs. Cobwigger—I can't turn it any my dear. Now, quick. (Whir-r-burr-r!) Cobwigger-Give it here and go in the A lady was a sufferer from dyspepsia and I'll finish this job myself. (After she goes) her doctor ordered an ice cream diet. She -Ah, there it is at last. I hope these fixtures are not too far apart. By gee! they're just right. There is nothing like having good eye for anything of this kind. Now, will the thing run up and down all right? (Tries it.) A little tight, but that will be all right in a day or so. (Gives a tug and down comes the shade.) Mrs. Cobwigger—(running in)—Was that you, love? No, it was my pretty shade. Henry, I could sit right down and cry. You have made two big creases in it, and it looks too horrid for anything. I'd rather not have any shade at all to the window than hange up such a thing as this.

Cobwigger—I thought I was hanging up this shade! Mrs. Cobwigger-It looks as if you were. Cobwigger-See here, if you have any urperfluous sarcasm, please save it up for the times your mother comes here. Now, steady the ladder and I'll drive in a nail where that screw came out. (Bang! bang!)
Drat that nail! The blamed thing's bent.

(Bang! bang! smash!)
Mrs. Cobwigger—Oh, Henry, the hamme went through the pane of glass!

Cobwigger—Don't you think I know that as well as you? If you hadn't been here the it for about an hour. After this let the water cool, and the fat will harden on it. Remove it in a cake, melt it out in a spider, do about the glass? The janitor told me the panes cost $1.75. Cobwigger-Any one but a woman could pane. I'm going to the glazier's.

Mrs. Cobwigger—Oh, I thought you might try to put it in yourself. While you're out you might as well stop at the other place and get a new shade, and (calls after him), say,

Henry, you'd better have them send the man to put it up, don't you think?

THE RESIDENT ONLY CALLED WHEN FUNER-It is often very difficult for new-comers in a community, especially if the community is a small one, to understand the local ideas of social requirements, for etiquette—a ticklis local usage.

A Mrs. Cathcart, who had gone from large city to live in a small village on Long Island, was a woman of strong social instincts, and soon after she was comfortably settled, she set about getting acquainted with her
