OFFICIAL REPORT

OF THE DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA

FIFTH SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT

---

5 GEORGE V., 1915

VOL. CXIX.

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FOURTH DAY OF FEBRUARY TO THE ELEVENTH DAY OF MARCH, INCLUSIVE.

Publications gouvernementales
Bibliothèque Champlain
Université de Moncton
Moncton, N.-B., CANADA

OTTAWA
PRINTED BY J. DE L. TACHÉ, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY 1915.

MEMBERS OF THE GOVERNMENT

OF THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE SIR ROBERT LAIRD BORDEN

G.C.M.G., P.C., K.C., LL.D.

AT THE OPENING OF THE

FIFTH SESSION OF THE TWELFTH PARLIAMENT

1915

THE CABINET

FORMED OCTOBER 10, 1911

President of the Privy Council and Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs (Prime Minister)	Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, G.C.M.G., P.C., K.C., LL.D.
Minister of Trade and Commerce	Hon. Sir George Eulas Foster, B.A., D.C.L., LL.D., K.C.M.G.
Without Portfolio	Hon. Sir George Halsey Perley, B.A., K.C.M.G.
Minister of the Interior and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs	Hon. William James Roche, M.D., LL.D.
Minister of Public Works	Hon. Robert Rogers.
Minister of Railways and Canals	Hon. Francis Cochrane.
Minister of Finance	Hon. William Thomas White, B.A.
Postmaster General	Hon. Th. Chase Casgrain, LL.D., K.C.
Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Minister of the Naval Service	Hon. John Douglas Hazen, B.A., B.C.L., K.C.
Minister of Justice	Hon. Charles Joseph Doherty, K.C., D.C.L., LL.D.
Minister of Militia and Defence	Major General Sam. Hughes.
Secretary of State and Minister of Mines	Hon. Louis Coderre, LL.B., K.C.
Minister of Labour	Hon. Thomas Wilson Crothers, B.A., K.C.
Minister of Inland Revenue	Hon. Pierre Edouard Blondin., N.P.
Minister of Customs	Hon. John Dowsley Reid, M.D.
Without Portfolio	Hon. Albert Edward Kemp.
Without Portfolio	Hon. James Alexander Lougheed, K.C., Senator.
Minister of Agriculture	Hon. Martin Burrell.

NOT OF THE CABINET

Solicitor General	Hon. Arthur Meighen, B.A., K.C.

Clerk of the Privy Council ..... R. Boudreau.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Speaker ..... Hon. THOMAS SIMPSON SPROULE, M.D.

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees.... ALBERT SEVIGNY, ESQ.

Clerk of the House ..... THOS. B. FLINT, M.A., LL.B., D.C.L.

Sergeant-at-Arms ..... Lieut.-Col. HENRY R. SMITH, C.M.G., I.S.O., J.P., A.D.C.

Editor of Debates ..... ALBERT HORTON.

Associate Editor of Debates and Reporter ..... THOS. P. OWENS.

Reporters of Debates :—

English : A. C. Campbell, George Simpson, Robert C. Dunbar, C. S. Blue, F. W. S. Galbraith, Earl C. Young, H. E. Oliver (substitute).

French : J. O. Marceau, Alphonse Desjardins.

Secretary of Debates Branch : C. W. Boyce.

Select Committee on Official Report of Debates.

Messieurs Burnham, Descarries, Devlin, Sir George E. Foster, Gray, Hanna, L. A. Lapointe, Lavallée, Lemieux, Marcil, Sir George Perley, Rainville, Jas. Reid, Schaffner and Taylor.

Chairman : Jas. D. Taylor, Esq.

ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

FIFTH SESSION, TWELFTH PARLIAMENT.

1915

ACHIM, HONORÉ—Labelle.
AIKINS, SIR JAMES ALBERT MANNING—Brandon.
ALGUIRE, DUNCAN ORESTES—Stormont.
AMES, HERBERT BROWN—Montreal, St. Antoine.
ARMSTRONG, J. A. MACDONALD—York, Ont., N. Riding.
ARMSTRONG, JOSEPH E. —Lambton, E. Riding.
ARTHURS, JAMES—Parry Sound.

BAKER, GEORGE HAROLD—Brome.
BALL, R. J.—Grey, S. Riding.
BARKER, HON. SAMUEL—Hamilton East.
BARNARD, GEORGE HENRY—Victoria, B.C.
BARRETTE, JOSEPH ARTHUR—Berthier.
BÉLAND, Hon. HENRI SÉVÉRIN—Beauce.
BELLEMARE, A.—Maskinongé.
BENNETT, RICHARD BEDFORD—Calgary.
BENNETT, WILLIAM H.—Simcoe, E. Riding.
BEST, JOHN A.—Dufferin.
BICKERDIKE, ROBERT—Montreal, St. Lawrence.
BLAIN, RICHARD—Peel.
BLONDIN, Hon. PIERRE EDOUARD—Champlain.
BOIVIN, GEORGE HENRY——Shefford.
BORDEN, RT. HON. SIR ROBERT LAIRD—Halifax.
BOULAY, HERMÉNÉGILDE—Rimouski.
BOURASSA, J. BOUTIN—Lévis.
BOWMAN, JAMES—Huron, E. Riding.
BOYCE, ARTHUR CYRIL—Algoma West.
BOYER, GUSTAVE—Vaudreuil.
BOYS, W. A.—South Simcoe.
BRABAZON, GERALD H.—Pontiac.
BRADBURY, GEORGE HENRY—Selkirk.
BRISTOL, EDMUND—Toronto Centre.
BRODER, ANDREW—Dundas.
BROUILLARD, OVIDE—Drummond and Arthabaska.
BUCHANAN, WILLIAM ASHBURY—Medicine Hat.
BUREAU, JACQUES—Three Rivers and St. Maurice.
BURNHAM, JOHN H.—Peterborough, W. Riding.
BURRELL, HON. MARTIN—Yale-Cariboo.

CARDIN, PIERRE JOSEPH ARTHUR—Richelieu.
CARRICK, JOHN JAMES—Thunder Bay and Rainy Riv.
CARROLL, W. F.—Cape Breton, South.
CARVELL, FRANK BROADSTREET—Carleton, N.B.
CASGRAIN, HON. THOMAS CHASE—Quebec County.
CASH, EDWARD L.—Mackenzie.
CHABOT, JOHN LEO—Ottawa.
CHAMPAGNE, ALBERT—Battleford.
CHARLTON, WILLIAM ANDREW—Norfolk.
CHISHOLM, ALEXANDER W.—Inverness.
CHISHOLM, WILLIAM—Antigonish.
CLARK, HUGH—Bruce, N. Riding.
CLARK, MICHAEL—Red Deer.
CLARKE, ALFRED HENRY—Essex, S. Riding.
CLARKE, W. A.—Wellington, N. Riding.
CLEMENTS, HERBERT SYLVESTER—Comox-Atlin.
COCHRANE, HON. FRANCIS—Nipissing.
COCKSHUTT, WILLIAM FOSTER—Brantford.
CODERRE, LOUIS—Hochelaga.
COPP, ARTHUR BLISS—Westmorland.
CROMWELL, FREDERICK ROBERT—Compton.
CROTHERS, HON. THOMAS WILSON—Elgin, W Riding.
CRUISE, ROBERT—Dauphin.
CURRIE, JOHN ALLISTER—Simcoe, N. Riding.

DAVIDSON, AVARD L.—Annapolis.
DELISLE, MICHEL SIMÉON—Portneuf.
DEMERS, MARIE JOSEPH—St. John and Iberville.
DESCARRIES, JOSEPH A.—Jacques Cartier.
DEVLIN, EMMANUEL B.—Wright.
DOHERTY, HON. CHARLES JOSEPH—Montreal, St. Anne.
DONALDSON, SAMUEL J.—Prince Albert.
DOUGLAS, JAMES M.—Strathcona.

EDWARDS, JOHN WESLEY—Frontenac.
ELLIOTT, GEORGE A.—Middlesex, N. Riding.
ETHIER, JOSEPH ARTHUR CALIXTE—Two Mountains.

FISHER, JOHN HENRY—Brant.
FORGET, SIR RODOLPHE—Charlevoix & Montmorency.
FORTIER, EDMOND—Lotbinière.
FOSTER, ARTHUR DE WITT, Kings, N.S.
FOSTER, HON. SIR GEORGE EULAS—Toronto North.
FOWLER, GEORGE WILLIAM—Kings and Albert.
FRIPP, ALFRED ERNEST—Ottawa.

GARLAND, W. F.—Carleton, Ont.

GAUTHIER, LOUIS JOSEPH. St. Hyacinthe.
GAUTHIER, LOUIS PHILIPPE—Gaspé.
GAUVREAU, CHARLES ARTHUR—Témiscouata.
GERMAN, WILLIAM MANLEY—Welland.
GIRARD, JOSEPH—Chicoutimi and Saguenay.
GLASS, S. FRANCIS—Middlesex, E. Riding.
GORDON, DAVID ALEXANDER—Kent, E. Riding.
GRAHAM, HON. GEORGE P.—Renfrew, S. Riding.
GRAY, WILLIAM—London.
GREEN, R. F.—Kootenay.
GUILBAULT, JOSEPH PIERRE OCTAVE—Joliette.
GUTHRIE, HUGH—Wellington, S. Riding.

HANNA, A. E.—Lanark, S. Riding.
HARTT, THOMAS A.—Charlotte.
HAZEN, HON. JOHN DOUGLAS—St. John City and County.
HENDERSON, DAVID—Halton.
HEPBURN, BERNARD RICKART—Prince Edward.
HUGHES, JAMES JOSEPH—Kings, P.E.I.
HUGHES, HON. SAM.—Victoria, Ont.

JAMESON, CLARENCE—Digby.

KAY, WILLIAM FREDERICK—Missisquoi.
KEMP, HON. ALBERT EDWARD—Toronto East.
KNOWLES, WILLIAM ERSKINE—Moosejaw.
KYTE, GEORGE W.—Richmond, N.S.

LACHANCE, ARTHUR—Quebec Centre.
LAFORTUNE, DAVID A.—Montcalm.
LALOR, FRANCIS RAMSAY—Haldimand.
LAMARCHE, PAUL EMILE—Nicolet.
LANCASTER, EDWARD A.—Lincoln and Niagara.
LANCTÔT, ROCH—Laprairie-Napierville.
LAPOINTE, ERNEST—Kamouraska.
LAPOINTE, LOUIS A.—Montreal, St. James.
LAURIER, RT. HON. SIR WILFRID—Quebec East, Soulanges.
LAVALLÉE, JOSEPH OCTAVE—Bellechasse.
LAW, BOWMAN BROWN—Yarmouth.
LEMIEUX, HON. RODOLPHE—Rouville.
LESPERANCE, DAVID OVIDE—Montmagny.
LEWIS, EDWARD NORMAN—Huron, W. Riding.
LOGGIE, WILLIAM STEWART—Northumberland, N.B.
LOVELL, CHARLES HENRY—Stanstead.

MACDONALD, EDWARD MORTIMER—Pictou.
MACDONELL, ANGUS CLAUDE—Toronto South.
MACLEAN, ALEXANDER K.—Halifax.
MACLEAN, WILLIAM FINDLAY—York, Ont., S. Riding.
MACNUTT, THOMAS—Saltcoats.
MCCOIG, ARCHIBALD BLAKE—Kent, W. Riding.
MCCRANEY, GEORGE E.—Saskatoon.
MCCREA, FRANCIS N.—Sherbrooke.
MCCURDY, FLEMING BLANCHARD—Shelburne and Queens.
MCKENZIE, DANIEL D.—Cape Breton, N.
MCLEAN, ANGUS A.—Queens, P.E.I.
MCLEAN, HUGH HAVELOCK—Sunbury and Queens.
MCLEOD, HARRY F.—York N.B.
MCMILLAN, JOHN ANGUS—Glengarry.
MARCIL, HON. CHARLES—Bonaventure.
MARCILE, JOSEPH EDMOND—Bagot.
MARSHALL, DAVID—Elgin, E. Riding.
MARTIN, MÉDERIC—Montreal, St. Mary's.
MARTIN, WILLIAM MELVILLE—Regina.
MEIGHEN, HON, ARTHUR—Portage la Prairie.
MERNER, JONATHAN JOSEPH—Huron, S. Riding.
MICHAUD, PIUS—Victoria, N.B.
MIDDLEBRO, WILLIAM SORA—Grey, N. Riding.
MOLLOY, JOHN PATRICK—Provencher.
MONDOU, A. A.—Yamaska.
MORPHY, H. B.—Perth, N. Riding.
MORRIS, JAMES—Châteauguay.
MORRISON, A.—Macdonald.
MUNSON, CHARLES ARTHUR—Northumberland, Ont., W. Riding.
MURPHY, HON. CHARLES—Russell.

NEELY, DAVIS BRADLEY—Humboldt.
NESBITT, EDWARD WALTER—Oxford, N. Riding.
NICHOLSON, DONALD—Queens, P.E.I.
NICKLE, WILLIAM FOLGER—Kingston.
NORTHRUP, WILLIAM BARTON—Hastings, E. Riding.

OLIVER, HON. FRANK—Edmonton.
OSLER, SIR EDMUND BOYD—Toronto West.

PACAUD, LUCIEN TURCOTTE—Megantic.
PAPINEAU, LOUIS J.—Beauharnois.
PAQUET, EUGÈNE—L'Islet.
PARDEE, FREDERICK FORSYTH—Lambton, W. Riding.
PAUL, WILLIAM JAMES—Lennox and Addington.
PELLETIER, HON. LOUIS PHILIPPE—Quebec County.
PERLEY, HON. GEORGE HALSEY—Argenteuil.
PORTER, EDWARD GUSS—Hastings, W. Riding.
POWER, WILLIAM—Quebec West.
PROULX, EDMOND—Prescott.
PUGSLEY, HON. WILLIAM—St. John City.

RAINVILLE, JOSEPH HORMISDAS—Chambly and Verchéres.
REID, JAMES—Restigouche.
REID, HON. JOHN D.—Grenville.
RHODES, EDGAR N.—Cumberland.
RICHARDS, JAMES W.—Prince, P.E.I.
ROBB, JAMES ALEXANDER—Huntingdon.
ROBIDOUX, FERDINAND JOSEPH—Kent, N. B.
ROCHE, HON. WILLIAM JAMES—Marquette.
ROCHON, GÉDÉON—Terrebonne.
ROGERS, HON. ROBERT—Winnipeg.
ROSS, DUNCAN CAMPBELL—Middlesex, W. Riding.

SCHAFFNER, FREDERICK LAURENCE—Souris.
SCOTT, FRANK STEWART—South Waterloo.
SEGUIN, PAUL ARTHUR—L'Assomption.
SEVIGNY, ALBERT—Dorchester.
SEXSMITH, JOHN A.—Peterborough, E. Riding.
SHARPE, SAMUEL—Ontario, N. Riding.
SHARPE, WILLIAM HENRY—Lisgar.
SHEPHERD, FRANCIS HENRY—Nanaimo.
SINCLAIR, JOHN H.—Guysborough.
SMITH, WILLIAM—Ontario, S. Riding.
SMYTH, WILLIAM ROSS—Algoma, E. Riding.
SPROULE, HON. THOMAS SIMPSON—Grey, E. Riding

STANFIELD, JOHN—Colchester.
STEELE, MICHAEL—Perth, S. Riding.
STEVENS, HENRY HERBERT—Vancouver.
STEWART, DUGALD—Lunenburg.
STEWART, THOMAS JOSEPH—Hamilton West.
SUTHERLAND, DONALD—Oxford, S. Riding.

TAYLOR, JAMES DAVIS—New Westminster.
THOBURN, WILLIAM—Lanark, N. Riding.
THOMPSON, ALFRED—Yukon Territory.
THOMSON, LEVI—Qu'Appelle.
THORNTON, CHARLES JONAS—Durham.
TOBIN, EDMUND WILLIAM—Richmond and Wolfe.
TREMAIN, HADLEY B.—Hants.
TRUAX, REUBEN E.—Bruce, S. Riding.
TURGEON, ONÉSIPHORE—Gloucester.
TURRIFF, JOHN GILLANDERS—Assiniboia.

VERVILLE, ALPHONSE—Maisonneuve.

WALKER, HENRY JOSEPH—Northumberland, Ont., E. Riding.
WALLACE, THOMAS GEORGE—York, Ont., Centre.
WARNOCK, DAVID—Macleod.
WEBSTER, JOHN—Brockville.
WEICHEL, WILLIAM GEORGE—Waterloo, N. Riding.
WHITE, GERALD VERNER—Renfrew, N. Riding.
WHITE, WILLIAM HENRY—Victoria, Alta.
WHITE, HON. WILLIAM THOMAS—Leeds.
WILCOX, OLIVER J.—Essex, N. Riding.
WILSON, CHARLES AVILA—Laval.
WILSON, GORDON CROOKS—Wentworth.
WRIGHT, WILLIAM—Muskoka.

ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

CONSTITUENCIES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

FIFTH SESSION, TWELFTH PARLIAMENT

1915

ALGOMA, EAST—William Ross Smyth.
ALGOMA, WEST—Arthur Cyril Boyce.
ANNAPOLIS—Avard L. Davidson.
ANTIGONISH—William Chisholm.
ARGENTEUIL—Hon. George Halsey Perley.
ASSINIBOIA—John Gillanders Turriff.

BAGOT—Joseph Edmond Marcile.
BATTLEFORD—Albert Champagne.
BEAUCE—Hon. Henri Sévérin Béland.
BEAUHARNOIS—Louis J. Papineau.
BELLECHASSE—Joseph Octave Lavallée.
BERTHIER—J. A. Barrette.
BONAVENTURE—Hon. Charles Marcil.
BRANDON—Sir James A. M. Aikins.
BRANT—John Henry Fisher.
BRANTFORD—William F. Cockshutt.
BROCKVILLE—John Webster.
BROME—George H. Baker.
BRUCE, N. RIDING—Hugh Clark.
BRUCE, S. RIDING—Reuben E. Truax.

CALGARY—R. B. Bennett.
CAPE BRETON NORTH AND VICTORIA—Daniel D. McKenzie.
CAPE BRETON, SOUTH—W. F. Carroll.
CARLETON, N.B.—Frank Broadstreet Carvell.
CARLETON, ONT.—W. F. Garland.
CHAMBLY AND VERCHÈRES—J. H. Rainville.
CHAMPLAIN—Hon. Pierre Edouard Blondin.
CHARLEVOIX—Sir Rodolphe Forget.
CHARLOTTE—Thomas A. Hartt.
CHATEAUGUAY—James Morris.
CHICOUTIMI AND SAGUENAY—Joseph Girard.
COLCHESTER—John Stanfield.
COMOX-ATLIN—H. S. Clements.
COMPTON—F. R. Cromwell.
CUMBERLAND—Edgar N. Rhodes.

DAUPHIN—Robert Cruise.
DIGBY—Clarence Jameson.
DORCHESTER—Albert Sevigny.
DRUMMOND AND ARTHABASKA—Ovide Brouillard.
DUFFERIN—John A. Best.
DUNDAS—Andrew Broder.
DURHAM—Charles Jonas Thornton.

EDMONTON—Hon. Frank Oliver.
ELGIN, E. RIDING—David Marshall.
ELGIN, W. RIDING—Hon. Thomas Wilson Crothers.
ESSEX, N. RIDING—Oliver J. Wilcox.
ESSEX, S. RIDING—Alfred H. Clarke.

FRONTENAC—John Wesley Edwards.

GASPÉ—Louis Philippe Gauthier.
GLENGARRY—John Angus McMillan.
GLOUCESTER—Onésiphore Turgeon.
GRENVILLE—Hon. John Dowsley Reid.
GREY, E. RIDING—Hon. Thomas Simpson Sproule.
GREY, N. RIDING—William Sora Middlebro.
GREY, S. RIDING—R. J. Ball.
GUYSBOROUGH—J. H. Sinclair.

HALDIMAND—Francis Ramsay Lalor.
HALIFAX—Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden. A. K. Maclean.
HALTON—David Henderson.
HAMILTON EAST—Hon. Samuel Barker.
HAMILTON WEST—Thomas Joseph Stewart.
HANTS—Hadley B. Tremain.
HASTINGS, E. RIDING—William B. Northrup.
HASTINGS, W. RIDING—Edward Guss Porter.
HOCHELAGA—Louis Coderre.
HUMBOLDT—David Bradley Neely.
HUNTINGDON—James Alexander Robb.
HURON, E. RIDING—James Bowman.
HURON, S. RIDING—J. J. Merner.
HURON, W. RIDING—Edward Norman Lewis.

INVERNESS—Alexander W. Chisholm.

JACQUES CARTIER—Joseph A. Descarries.
JOLIETTE—J. P. O. Guilbault.

KAMOURASKA—Ernest Lapointe.
KENT, N.B.—F. J. Robidoux.
KENT, ONT., E. RIDING—David Alexander Gordon.
KENT, ONT., W. RIDING—Archibald Blake McCoig.
KINGS AND ALBERT, N B.—George W. Fowler.
KINGS, N.S.—Arthur De Witt Foster.
KINGS, P.E.I.—James J. Hughes.
KINGSTON—Wm. F. Nickle.
KOOTENAY—R. F. Green.

LABELLE—Honoré Achim.
LAMBTON, E. RIDING—Joseph E. Armstrong.
LAMBTON, W. RIDING—Frederick Forsyth Pardee.
LANARK, N. RIDING—William Thoburn.
LANARK, S. RIDING—Adelbert E. Hanna.
LAPRAIRIE-NAPIERVILLE—Roch Lanctôt.
L'ASSOMPTION—Paul Arthur Seguin.
LAVAL—Charles Avila Wilson.
LEEDS—Hon. Wm. T. White.
LENNOX AND ADDINGTON—Wm. J. Paul.
LÉVIS—J. B. Bourassa.
LINCOLN—Edward Arthur Lancaster.
LISGAR—William Henry Sharpe.
L'ISLET—Eugène Paquet.
LONDON—William Gray.
LOTBINIÈRE—Edmond Fortier.
LUNENBURG—Dougald Stewart.

MACDONALD—Alexander Morrison.
MACKENZIE—E. L. Cash.
MACLEOD—David Warnock.
MAISONNEUVE—Alphonse Verville.
MARQUETTE—Hon. William James Roche.
MASKINONGÉ—A. Bellemare.
MEDICINE HAT—Wm. A. Buchanan.
MÉGANTIC—L. T. Pacaud.
MIDDLESEX, E. RIDING—S. Francis Glass.
MIDDLESEX, N. RIDING—George A. Elliott.
MIDDLESEX, W. RIDING—Duncan Campbell Ross.
MISSISQUOI—Wm. F. Kay.
MONTCALM—David A. Lafortune.
MONTMAGNY—D. O. Lesperance.
MONTMORENCY—Sir Rodolphe Forget.
MONTREAL, ST. ANNE—Hon. Charles J. Doherty.
MONTREAL, ST. ANTOINE—Herbert B. Ames.
MONTREAL, ST. JAMES—Louis A. Lapointe.
MONTREAL, ST. LAWRENCE—Robert Bickerdike.
MONTREAL, St. MARY—Méderic Martin.
MOOSEJAW—William Erskine Knowles.
MUSKOKA—William Wright.

NANAIMO—Francis H. Shepherd.
NEW WESTMINSTER—James Davis Taylor.
NICOLET—Paul E. Lamarche.
NIPISSING—Hon. Francis Cochrane.
NORFOLK—Wm. A. Charlton.
NORTHUMBERLAND, N.B.—William Stewart Loggie.
NORTHUMBERLAND, ONT., E.R.—Henry Joseph Walker
NORTHUMBERLAND, ONT., W.R.—Charles A. Munson.

ONTARIO, N. RIDING—Samuel S. Sharpe.
ONTARIO, S. RIDING—William Smith.
OTTAWA CITY { Alfred E. Fripp. / John Leo Chabot.
OXFORD, N. RIDING—Edward Walter Nesbitt.
OXFORD, S. RIDING—Donald Sutherland.

PARRY SOUND—James Arthurs.
PEEL—Richard Blain.
PERTH, N. RIDING—H. B. Morphy.
PERTH, S. RIDING—Michael Steele.
PETERBOROUGH, E. RIDING—John A. Sexsmith.
PETERBOROUGH, W. RIDING—John H. Burnham.
PICTOU—Edward Mortimer Macdonald.
PONTIAC—Gerald H. Brabazon.
PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE—Hon. Arthur Meighen.
PORTNEUF—Michel Siméon Delisle.
PRESCOTT—Edmond Proulx.
PRINCE ALBERT—Samuel J. Donaldson.
PRINCE—James W. Richards.
PRINCE EDWARD—Bernard R. Hepburn.
PROVENCHER—John Patrick Molloy.

QU'APPELLE—Levi Thomson.
QUEBEC CENTRE—Arthur Lachance.
QUEBEC EAST—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.
QUEBEC WEST—William Power.
QUEBEC County—Hon. Th. Chase Casgrain.
QUEENS, P.E.I. — { Angus A. McLean. / Donald Nicholson.

RED DEER—Michael Clark.
REGINA—William Melville Martin.
RENFREW, N. RIDING—Gerald Verner White.
RENFREW, S. RIDING—Hon. George Perry Graham.
RESTIGOUCHE—James Reid.
RICHELIEU—P. J. A. Cardin.
RICHMOND N.S.—George W. Kyte.
RICHMOND AND WOLFE—Edmund William Tobin.
RIMOUSKI—Herménégilde Boulay.
ROUVILLE—Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux.
RUSSELL—Hon. Charles Murphy.

ST. HYACINTHE—Louis J. Gauthier.
ST. JOHN CITY—Hon. Wm. Pugsley.
ST. JOHN CITY AND COUNTY—Hon. J. Douglas Hazen.
ST. JOHNS AND IBERVILLE—M. Joseph Demers.
SALTCOATS—Thomas MacNutt.
SASKATOON—George Ewan McCraney.
SELKIRK—George H. Bradbury.
SHEFFORD—George Henry Boivin.
SHELBURNE AND QUEENS—Fleming B. McCurdy.
SHERBROOKE—Francis McCrea.
SIMCOE, E. RIDING—William Henry Bennett.
SIMCOE, N. RIDING—John Allister Currie
SIMCOE, S. RIDING—W. A. Boys.
SOULANGES—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.
SOURIS—Frederick Laurence Schaffner.
STANSTEAD—Charles Henry Lovell.
STORMONT—Duncan O. Alguire.
STRATHCONA—James M. Douglas.
SUNBURY AND QUEENS, N.B.—Hugh H. McLean.

TEMISCOUATA—Charles Arthur Gauvreau.
TERREBONNE—Gédéon Rochon.
THREE RIVERS AND ST. MAURICE—Jacques Bureau.
THUNDER BAY AND RAINY RIVER—John James Carrick.
TORONTO CENTRE—Edmund Bristol.
TORONTO EAST—Hon. Albert E. Kemp.
TORONTO NORTH—Hon. Sir George Eulas Foster.
TORONTO SOUTH—Angus Claude Macdonell.
TORONTO WEST—Sir Edmund Boyd Osler.
TWO MOUNTAINS—Joseph Arthur C. Ethier.

VANCOUVER CITY—Henry Herbert Stevens.
VAUDREUIL—Gustave Boyer.
VICTORIA, ALTA.—William Henry White.
VICTORIA CITY—Geo. Henry Barnard.
VICTORIA, N.B.—Pius Michaud.
VICTORIA, ONT.—Hon. Sam. Hughes.

WATERLOO, N. RIDING—William George Weichel.
WATERLOO, S. RIDING—Frank Stewart Scott.
WELLAND—William Manley German.
WELLINGTON, N. RIDING—W. A. Clarke.
WELLINGTON, S. RIDING—Hugh Guthrie.
WENTWORTH—Gordon C. Wilson.
WESTMORLAND—Arthur Bliss Copp.
WINNIPEG—Hon. Robert Rogers.
WRIGHT—Emmanuel B. Devlin.

YALE-CARIBOO—Hon. Martin Burrell.
YAMASKA—A. A. Mondou.
YARMOUTH—Bowman Brown Law.
YORK, N.B.—Harry F. McLeod.
YORK, ONT., C. RIDING—Thomas George Wallace.
YORK, ONT., N. RIDING—J. A. Macdonald Armstrong.
YORK, ONT., S. RIDING—William Findlay Maclean YUKON TERRITORY—Alfred Thompson.

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—REVISED EDITION.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Speaker: HON. THOMAS SIMPSON SPROULE.

Thursday, February 4, 1915.

The Parliament which had been prorogued from time to time to the 4th day of February, 1915, met this day at Ottawa for the despatch of business.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER read a communication from the Governor General's Secretary announcing that His Royal Highness would proceed to the Senate Chamber at 3 p. m. on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the Dominion Parliament.

A message was delivered by Major Ernest J. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Royal Highness the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And the House being returned to the Commons Chamber:

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that the House having attended His Royal Highness in the Senate Chamber, His Royal Highness was pleased to deliver a Speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

During the months which have elapsed since the outbreak of war, the people of Canada have given most abundant and convincing evidence of their firm loyalty to our Sovereign and of their profound devotion to the institutions of the British Empire.

Since I last addressed you, a Canadian Expeditionary Force of more than thirty thousand men has been safely despatched across the Atlantic, and after arriving in the British Islands has been engaged in completing the necessary training before proceeding to the front. Notwithstanding the unusually severe weather conditions which have prevailed in the British Islands, the training has proceeded satisfactorily and it is anticipated that the force will very shortly take its place in the field of action.

The earnest and resolute spirit of patriotism which animates the whole Dominion has evoked a magnificent response to the call for service beyond the seas. Large additional forces have been organized from which further contingents are ready to be despatched as soon as the necessary arrangements for receiving them and completing their training can be consummated.

Notwithstanding the inevitable disturbance of trade which was created by the outbreak of war on so vast a scale, the financial and business conditions of the Dominion have shown great stability, and on the whole the country has adapted itself to the new conditions in a very effective way.

My advisers will submit for your consideration measures rendered necessary by the participation of this Dominion in the great task which our empire has undertaken in this war.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts for the last fiscal year will be laid before you immediately and the estimates for the next fiscal year will be submitted without delay. You will be asked to make the necessary financial provision for effective aid in the conduct of the war.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The strong unity of purpose which inspires His Majesty's Dominions gives us the firm assurance that the cause for which this war has been undertaken will be maintained to an honourable and successful issue. I commend to your favourable consideration the measures which will be submitted to you for aiding that great purpose, and I pray that the Divine blessing may be vouchsafed to your deliberations.

On motion of Sir George Foster it was ordered that the Speech of His Royal Highness the Governor General to both Houses of Parliament be taken into consideration on Monday next, and that this order have precedence over all otner business except introduction of Bills until disposed of.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: In the absence of the First Minister, I beg to move:

That a special committee be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed lists of members to compose the Select Standing Committees of this House under Rule 10; said committee to be composed of Sir Robert Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Messrs. Reid (Grenville), Casgrain, Pugsley, Stanfield and Pardee.

Motion agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 1, respecting the Administration of Oaths of Office.—Sir George Foster.

VACANCIES.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that during the recess I received communications from several members notifying me that the following vacancies had occurred in the representation, viz.:

Of Hon. Louis Philippe Pelletier, member for the Electoral District of Quebec County, by resignation.

Of Pierre Edouard Blondin, Esq., member for the Electoral District of Champlain, consequent upon his acceptance of an office of emolument, to wit: Minister of Inland Revenue.

Of Hon. Wilfrid Bruno Nantel, member for the Electoral District of Terrebonne, consequent upon his appointment as a member and deputy chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Of James McKay, Esq., member for the Electoral District of Prince Albert, consequent upon his appointment as a judge of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan.

Of Thomas Beattie, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of London, by decease.

Of George A. Clare, member for the Electoral District of South Waterloo, by decease.

I accordingly issued my several warrants to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts respectively.

[Sir G. E. Foster.]

NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that during the recess the Clerk of the House received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificates of the election and return of the following members:

Of Hon. Pierre Edouard Blondin, member for the Electoral District of Champlain.

Of Hon. Thomas Chase Casgrain, for the Electoral District of Quebec county.

Of William Gray, Esq., for the Electoral District of London.

Of Frank Stewart Scott, Esq., for the Electoral District of South Waterloo.

Of Joseph A. Descaries, Esq., for the Electoral District of Jacques Cartier.

Of Arthur Bliss Copp, Esq., for the Electoral District of Westmorland.

MEMBERS INTRODUCED.

Hon. Pierre Edouard Blondin, for the Electoral District of Champlain, introduced by Sir George Foster and Hon. C. J. Doherty.

Hon. Thomas Chase Casgrain, for the Electoral District of Quebec county, introduced by Sir George Foster and Hon. C. J. Doherty.

Frank Stewart Scott, Esq., for the Electoral District of South Waterloo, introduced by Sir George Foster and Mr. W. G. Weichel.

On motion of Sir George Foster, the House adjourned at 3.35 p.m. until Monday next.

Monday, February 8, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificates of the election and return of Samuel James Donaldson, Esq., member for the Electoral District of Prince Albert.

INTRODUCTION OF MEMBERS.

William Gray, Esq., for the Electoral District of London, introduced by Hon. T. W. Crothers and Mr. J. E. Armstrong.

Arthur Bliss Copp, Esq., for the Electoral District of Westmorland, introduced by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. F. B. Carvell.

Samuel James Donaldson, Esq., for the Electoral District of Prince Albert, introduced by Hon. Robert Rogers and Hon. W. J. Roche.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Report of R. A. Pringle, K.C., Commissioner appointed to investigate into the payment of subsidies to the Southampton Railway Company, together with the evidence, etc., taken before the Commissioner. —Hon. Frank Cochrane.

Report of the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway, for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. Frank Cochrane.

Report of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, for the year ending March 31, 1914.—Hon. Frank Cochrane.

Report of the Postmaster General for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. T. Chase Casgrain.

Report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. Martin Burrell.

Report of the Department of the Naval Service for the year ended March 31, 1914. —Hon. J. D. Hazen.

Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for the year 1913-1914.—Hon. J. D. Hazen.

Fifth Census of Canada, 1911—Agriculture, vol. IV.—Sir George Foster.

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the year ended March 31, 1914—Parts I, II, III.—Sir George Foster.

Report of the Department of Labour for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. T. W. Crothers.

Report of the Registrar of Boards of Conciliation and Investigation for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. T. W. Crothers.

Report of the Department of Public Works, Vol. I, for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. Robert Rogers.

Copies of Orders in Council as follows:

P. C.. No. 2175, dated August 21, 1914, re extra rates of pay for service in submarine vessels.

P. C. No. 2251, re rates of pay and allowances for petty officers and men volunteering for war service.

P. C. No. 2960, re scheme of separation allowance for the dependents of those serving in H.M.C. ships.

Radiotelegraph regulation 106 concerning the wave length for use by Canadian licensed ship stations during the period of hostilities.

Amendments to the radiotelegraph regulations, Nos. 103 and 104.

P. C. No. 260, re establishment of rank of mate in the Royal Canadian Navy.—Hon. J. D. Hazen.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN presented an approved Minute of Council appointing Hon. W. J. Roche, Hon. J. D. Reid, Hon. A. E. Kemp, and Hon. T. C. Casgrain a committee to act with the Speaker of the House as a commission under the provisions of the 11th chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, an Act respecting the House of Commons.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. GEORGE BRADBURY (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 5, respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters. He said: The Bill is similar to the one I have had before the House during the last two sessions, excepting that I have made a small amendment with a view to meeting some of the objections that were raised by hon. gentlemen from different parts of Canada. By the Bill as now presented the Government will have power to take any water—river, stream or lake—out of the operation of the Bill when they see fit to do so. Otherwise the Bill is the same as the one I introduced last year.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXPORTATION OF NICKEL.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to regulate the exportation of nickel, etc. He said: The object of the Bill is to regulate the export of nickel and so to control the supply as to prevent the enemy from getting any of it in a time of war like this. It is drafted very much on the same lines as the Bill introduced some years ago to control the export of natural gas and electrical power.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not sure that a Bill of this character would not require a previous resolution, but that would be a matter for the consideration of Your Honour. But, so far as the general subject of the Bill is concerned, it has received the very careful and prolonged consideration of the Government. The arrangements which have been made with regard to the exportation of nickel have received the unqualified and absolute approval of the British authorities, and especially of the committee which has been formed in Great Britain for the purpose of dealing with the exportation of any materials or supplies which might be of use to the enemy.

Mr. SPEAKER: I judge that this Bill would so affect trade as to come under rule 50, which provides:

No Bill relating to trade, or the alteration of the laws concerning trade, is to be brought into this House until the proposition shall have been first considered in a Committee of the Whole House, and agreed unto by the House.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: The Bill to regulate the export of natural gas and electrical power was introduced without any previous resolution by Sir Charles Fitzpatrick in 1906. It did not get through, and was reintroduced by Sir Allen Aylesworth at the next session. In both cases the Bill was given its first reading without any preceding resolution, so that the procedure of the House bears me out absolutely. As this Bill is exactly on the same lines as the Bills introduced by the two former Ministers of Justice, I think I am quite within my rights in moving the first reading; but if Your Honour decides that I must proceed by way of resolution, I shall certainly bow to your decision, but in that case we shall be changing the procedure of the House.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The matter might stand, so that Mr. Speaker may look into it.

Motion stands.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

ADDRESS-IN-REPLY.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the Speech of His Royal Highness the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mr. W. G. WEICHEL (North Waterloo) rose to move that an Address be presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General offering the humble thanks of this House to His Royal Highness for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament. He said:

Mr. Speaker, it would be folly on my part not to admit that I am to a certain extent embarrassed to-day in trying to perform the task that has been assigned to me. I fully appreciate the courtesy, the broad-minded spirit of British fair play, which accompanies this honour, yet I realize that the same is not to myself, but to the constituency I have the honour to represent in this House, to the worthy, frugal, energetic and industrious citizens of North Waterloo. On behalf of my constituents, I desire to express to the right hon. the Prime Minister my deep appreciation of the generous impulse which prompted him at this momentous period of our country's history to confer on my humble self this great honour, an honour I can assure you that is highly prized and doubly appreciated.

Before proceeding with my remarks allow me to convey to His Royal Highness the Governor General and his estimable consort our deepest feelings of respect and gratitude for the kindly courtesy and good will they have on each and every occasion exhibited towards the Canadian people. The untiring zeal and activity displayed by His Royal Highness in connection with the mobilization and departure of the first expeditionary force, and the kindly interest he has displayed in the welfare of the militia generally, as evidenced by the sacrifices he has made to travel long distances to inspect and encourage them, have been highly appreciated by a grateful nation. His presence in Canada during this critical period is highly desirable, and his advice to the Canadian Government has been of inestimable value.

The thanks of the Canadian people are due to Her Royal Highness for the keen interest she has shown in Red Cross work for the Canadian forces, and for her generous assistance towards the Belgian relief funds. Her kindly Christmas gift to each officer and man of the expeditionary force consisting of a card of greetings and a block of maple sugar, was highly appreciated. Apart altogether from the pleasure afforded to the Canadian troops, and the realization that this gift meant that the highest lady in the land had not forgotten them in their uncomfortable surroundings at Salisbury, this presentation of one of the native products of the Dominion has had a very great effect, in that it has called the attention of the British people to one of the most delicious of our native products and will serve to encourage an industry heretofore too much neglected.

Ruthlessly awakened from our long slumber of false security, we are called upon to-day to desert for a time at least the doctrine of peace that has taken firm root amongst all peace-loving people throughout the world, and to devote our energies towards the adoption of measures to tide us over the present existing crisis—one that not only affects our own Dominion of Canada, but will have a tendency to cement the bonds of imperial unity throughout the whole Empire. Certain measures to meet the existing situation will be introduced in this House by the Government this session. We are confronted with a situation that demands the co-operation of every member occupying a seat in this chamber, that demands courage of a high order, a courage born of conviction that we are in the right, and that to falter and hesitate would be fatal to the country's and the Empire's best interests. All eyes to-day are focused on Europe. As the awful drama of war unfolds itself from day to day, bringing us tidings of the terrible conflict that is being waged by the contending forces in the field, of the destruction, the havoc, and the suffering that are caused by this Armageddon of the nations, we can scarcely believe it possible that we are living in the twentieth century, a century that was ushered in under the most auspicious circumstances, and that gave promise of being an era of peace on earth, and good will towards men.

It is a stupendous struggle, a struggle that will undoubtedly change the map of Europe, that has cast its blight and shadow on millions of happy homes, that is causing untold misery and suffering to those who are least able to bear it, that has practically ruined one country, exposing its citizens to untold privations and miseries, and may be the cause of ruination and disaster to others before the war is over. Never has the world witnessed such a catastrophe, such awful carnage, such ruthless disregard of the rights of others.

The anxiety felt by the Canadian people is intense, as our very existence is at stake. Newspapers are eagerly sought after, bulletin boards are surrounded day and night by innumerable numbers eagerly reading the news from the front announcing in short, concise sentences the daily progress of the tremendous struggle that is going on in far-off Europe.

For years we trusted in arbitration; peace societies throughout the world worked harmoniously one with the other, and men who did not know the situation as it really existed claimed that there was no cause for alarm; the warnings of those who knew were held up to ridicule, and the possibilities of such a stupendous struggle were absolutely discounted. When the blow fell on that memorable day last August, people respected as they never respected before the late Lord Roberts' prophetic words prior to the war, when in ringing tones that could be heard from one end of England to the other, he warned the nation of the impending struggle, and they now realize that he was right and that they have lost in him through death one of the great and illustrious men of the British Empire.

They were pleased beyond conception, however, that Lord Kitchener was given absolute command of the Empire's forces —his very presence at the helm inspires confidence—that General French took command in the field—and he has since demonstrated to a thankful people that the trust confided in him was not misplaced—and a sigh of relief went up from the whole nation when at the outbreak of hostilities the First Lord of the Admiralty with confidence stated that the bulwark of the nation—the British Navy—was ready. And was it a vain boast? The silent victory on the seas is the answer—commerce uninterrupted—business as usual—with the enemy's navy bottled up, and her commerce practically at a standstill.

Never before in the Empire's history has the truth that "the strength of the nation lies in its sea power" been better exemplified than during the last five months; and British subjects throughout the world have every reason to be thankful to those men who had the courage of their convictions, who saw that trouble was bound to come, and who were ready and prepared for it when it did come.

This is a war that was not desired by Great Britain. The causes that brought it about are familiar to all of you and need not be discussed to-day. But from the evidence produced we are assured that the statesmen of England tried by every means in their power to avoid an armed conflict. Every art known to diplomacy, to bring about a better understanding, and to preserve the peace, was exercised, but to no avail. And now that the die is cast, feeling and knowing that we have a just cause, there will be no hesitation on the part of the people living within the Empire, who are determined to at once and forever take issue with those who proclaim the doctrine that might is right, and who favour military autocracy, as against the doctrine of true democracy.

As we value our self-respect let us face the responsibility with proper seriousness, courage and high resolve, and at the same time let us not be deceived regarding the importance of the task we have undertaken, nor be misled by vain glory into underestimating the strain it will be on our powers.

The war has to a certain extent created a situation throughout the whole world which is not very desirable. Pessimists to-day are having their innings and are talking about business depression and hard times. True, there is a tightness in the money market,and it would be folly for me to say that Canada along with all other countries of the world is not feeling the pinch as well. A great deal of blame for the present conditions has been credited to the war. War or no war, a readjustment and a necessary one, was bound to come; in fact, it was already under way before there were real signs of the impending catastrophe. Prosperity reigned supreme for many years, and men believed that depression and hard times were permanently done away with, men lost their heads and recklessness in business matters took the place of good, sound common sense.

Then some men wise in their generation, who can see ahead of the times, realize that the pace is too fast, and that prosperity has made the nation extravagant, and they begin to doubt. Discounts are refused, and men start to hoard money and speculation receives a check; panic follows; and in trying to extricate themselves during this transition period the people learn by hard experience that the situation created is an awkward one.

The war simply hastened readjustment; but it did something else besides. For a while it shut up the world's stock exchanges, which, to a certain extent, saved the situation, it made big national banks stagger, made business and commerce nearly stand still, shipping was demoralized and insurance took a place as a high priced luxury. The so-called credit machine of the world was broken, and men realized as they never did before how much after all the different nations depend on one another. Depending largely on British capital this upheaval in the world's money markets naturally had its effect on Canada.

Thanks to the energy and wisdom exercised by our Finance Minister and the Government, however, working in co-operation with the Canadian banking system, and keeping in close communication with the British authorities, panic and disaster were averted in this country. Eight important measures were put into force which no doubt you are familiar with, and which had a marked effect in steadying the position in the Dominion.

One of the most gratifying features in Canada to-day is the agricultural position. Although the western harvest was not so large as in the previous year, the increased price obtained will more than offset the difference in the yield. Crops and other farm products were excellent, and prices very satisfactory. Considering the war it is reasonable to expect a heavy demand for grains and foodstuffs in 1915.

Europe is not in a position to produce her regular crop during the coming year, owing to much of the land formerly used for productive purposes being now used as battlefields, and naturally extraordinary demands will be made on Canada. The wise farmer is he who has increased his acreage, as prices will probably remain high for another crop year.

We must recognize that some of the main business interests of the country are vitally affected by present conditions. We have built railroads and developed the country, knowing for a certainty that the soil would have to produce what was necessary to pay interest and principal on these vast loans. The age of construction of large works of importance in Canada helped to create the prosperous times of the past few years, but the production from the soil and natural resources, which after all is where all wealth is drawn from, was not sufficient, and did not keep pace with the other. Production is what we need from our natural resources, and let us hope that the farmer will take full advantage of the situation created; and the stimulation of agricultural production should help materially to solve the problem of the high cost of living, the overcrowding of cities, and consequent unemployment.

Considering the enormous expenditures involved in this country, and the difficulties we have had to cope with owing to the war, it is surprising that Canada has stood the strain so well. In fact, I believe I am not overestimating when I state that we have weathered the storm almost better than any other country in the world.

A great deal has been said recently regarding the wholesome general tone of Canadian affairs, based not so much on what we might call tangible facts as on the prevailing public confidence throughout our Dominion in the natural resources regarding the production of the soil, mines, forests and waters, and in the ability of our citizens to deal intelligently and successfully with the immediate or any other emergency.

Considering the great strain to which the financial fabric was subjected, our monetary institutions, banks and trust companies are stronger to-day than before the war broke out, and have come through the strenuous situation practically unscathed. The balance of trade which formerly was against the Dominion, and heavily so, is now being steadily reversed. The ablest business authorities in Canada are now advocating production, and more production, as the surest and speediest means of assurance of industrial independence. We have here at home all the resources essential to our welfare, and our first economic duty is to develop our own opportunities.

We are anxious for the war to cease—anxious that peace may be restored, and many are the opinions and theories that have been advanced regarding it. But, Sir, theories and opinions, as a writer recently stated, will not end the war; it will be determined by the strength of British arms, funds and confidence. Once rid of the craze for armaments and relieved of this curse that has held Europe in thraldom for years, business will naturally receive a new impetus by directing money formerly used for armament purposes into regular business channels.

What we need now in Canada is mutual confidence. We are to-day richer in all those things that satisfy human wants than ever before in our history. Confidence must be restored, extravagance must be lessened, the pace we have been going must be curbed, and the lessons learned by hard experience will no doubt be of mutual benefit to us all.

The one great remedy for present conditions is: buy goods made in Canada. If you cannot buy what you want here, then buy Empire-made goods. Loyalty and patriotism as applied to goods made in Canada and the production of our Canadian resources are the two things needful for the country at the present time. Why should we buy goods of American and European manufacture when Canadian workmen to-day are producing goods that are a credit to the Canadian people? What an opportunity for the Canadian shoppers to show their loyalty to their own country in times like these. Proud should we be of the excellent quality of our farm products, of the splendid workmanship of goods of Canadian manufacture; and every citizen who has the best interests of the country at heart should make new resolutions from this day forth—should instil into the minds of the men, women and children, that patriotism and loyalty are as much needed to-day in these things as they are in the graver issues which are being decided by force of arms. I have listened on several occasions to the Minister of Trade and Commerce delivering addresses along this line. He is enthused with the idea of "made in Canada" and "buy in Canada," and his advice on one occasion that labour and capital, the maker and the consumer, should co-operate, is one that will appeal to all men of good judgment.

So let us not forget in the future when we go shopping to insist upon it that we receive goods of home manufacture, that we buy Canadian clothes, made by Canadian workmen, that we insist on Canadian-made shoes, that we do not wear anything but Canadian underwear, that we buy shirts and collars made in a Canadian factory, that we furnish our homes with furniture made in Canada, that we use Canadian machinery; in short, that we be patriotic and loyal by buying Canadian-made goods, and that now and at all times in the future we shall uphold the industries of Canada, so as to give our workmen employment. The results of this policy will after a few months be apparent to all. The Minister of Trade and Commerce aptly described the position of Canadian industries some time ago, when delivering an address to the Toronto Board of Trade, when he stated that our ports and our transport systems and our factories were well equipped, wisely built, and efficient, and that all we have to do now is to keep them going. Orders for army equipment from the Canadian, English, French and Russian Governments have immensely supported the industrial position in this country, and have proven to be a great stimulus to lagging trade.

I am sure that the business men of Canada appreciate the ardour of the Government in securing for Canadian industries the large orders which have been placed indiscriminately throughout Canada, and in such a way that all classes of people have been highly benefited, and the business situation throughout the country greatly improved.

With the seas cleared of the enemy and commerce again reinstated; with the sign hanging out, "Business as usual"; with the markets of England, France and other nations offering avenues for unprecedented business owing to the war, the Canadian manufacturer and the Canadian farmer should be in a position to increase their export trade, as the opportunities for such to-day are in my estimation better and greater than ever before in our history. I am a firm believer in getting after export business, but I am a stronger believer than ever in getting after the home market in our midst. Nothing can be gained by our standing idle and being pessimists. Let us do our best to meet the unique situation of the present, and there will be good reason for congratulation in after years. As a writer recently stated, "such action means the maintenance of the national workshop, national credit, and national satisfaction." Let us be optimistic, even more so now than ever before in our lives.

Think of poor, unhappy, heroic little Belgium; a few months ago a prosperous, thriving community, secure in the belief that her neutrality would not be violated; to-day her homes destroyed, her priceless works of art ruined, her historic buildings demolished beyond repair, and her people stretching forth their hands in mute appeal to us for help. Think of the unhappy homes in England, France, Russia and Germany; think of the wives and mothers who weep because the husband and son will never return; think of the little children made orphans by the cruel hand of war; and then let us thank God that we live in Canada, and that peace virtually exists on our shores, even though the Empire is at war.

I, for my part, Sir, feel that I am fortunate to live under the protection of the Union Jack. Its silken folds remind me of the freedom that I am enjoying in this country under British institutions—and I know what it means to be a British subject. I am proud of the fact that I was born in Canada, and that I have the same opportunities as all others to make the best of my citizenship in this country of unrivalled resources. To be a British subject is in my estimation a great asset, and I consider it a great privilege to be a conscious fibre of that compacted force.

Although born in Canada, I am of German origin; and, needless to say, along with many hundred thousand other people living here at the present time, I feel keenly the situation that developed five months or so ago in Europe. For a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the members of this House about our German-Canadian fellow-citizens—knowing as I do that I am going to touch on a delicate subject, but also aware of the fact that I am speaking to broad-minded men who desire above everything else the unification of all races throughout Canada to-day into one harmonious whole. For many years you have had in your midst a great many people of German origin, thirfty and frugal in their habits, possessed of energies and business abilities that have aroused the admiration of all classes in Canada. They have always been looked upon as desirable citizens, thousands of them have settled in this fair country along with immigrants from every other part of the globe, and very few of them would leave Canada to-day for any other country of the world should opportunity offer. Since the outbreak of hostilities a few—a very few—newspapers in Canada have been trying to discredit and cast suspicion on the German-Canadians of this country, but, be it said to the credit of the great majority of the Canadian people and of the press of Canada, these insinuations have not carried any weight, and the spirit of British fair play and justice is just as much alive to-day in the hearts of the English, the Scotch, and the Irish, as it was during the days of peace.

Mr. Speaker, I am not here to-day to make any apology for the German-Canadians in Canada; but this I do say, and am pleased to say it with all the energy that I can command at the present moment, that the people of German origin in this country are loyal to their King and loyal to the Empire, and that they have since the outbreak of hostilities given ample evidence to this effect, and evidence of such a nature as cannot be denied. True it is that in certain isolated cases some have been indiscreet, and naturally have had to suffer for their indiscretion; but the rank and file of the German-Canadians in Canada to-day are as true as steel, and, as I stated, are daily giving evidences of their loyalty to the flag and to the Crown. The liberties possessed by those of English, Irish, Scotch, and French descent are theirs as well, and they appreciate to the fullest extent British laws and institutions which guarantee to them freedom of speech and liberty of conscience. Should the German-Canadian, in Canada, be asked to forget the land of his forefathers, its traditions and past history? Let me ask him of Scotch descent, will he ever forget the land of the heather and the rugged scenery of the highlands immortalized in song and poetry by the beloved Scotch poet Burns? Does not the heart of him who boasts of Irish blood beat faster when he thinks of the land of the Shamrock, the "Emerald Isle," with its hallowed associations and pleasant memories? Would it not be too much to ask the French-Canadian to forget the history and glorious traditions of old France? Would an Englishman ever think for one moment of renouncing the land of Shakespeare, Milton and Bacon?

Sir, I would not give a snap of the fingers for the man who denies his ancestry and who is ashamed of the name his father and mother gave to him.

German-Canadians are proud of the race from which they spring; proud of the progress that country has made in science, in art, in music, in literature, in philosophy, in chemistry; gratefully remembering the splendid literary works of Schiller and Goethe; proud of the wonderful compositions of Mendelssohn, Mozart, Haydn, Bach, Liszt and Wagner. But, Sir, they are not proud of the violation of the neutrality of Belgium, of the burning of Louvain, nor of the destruction of the Rheims cathedral. German art, German music, German science, is one thing; but Prussian militarism is another; and the reason why so many people of German origin have left their old fatherland was to escape military domination; and to-day they are just as eager and anxious as you are for the obliteration of this curse which has been weighing so heavily on Europe for so many years.

Sir, it is easy to understand why Canadians of British breed answer the call. The French-Canadian to-day is a natural participant in the present conflict, and besides is grateful for liberty of religion and customs under British rule. But, Sir, is there not a fuller meaning in this spectacle of men going from the German communities of Waterloo, Huron, Bruce and Perth? For them the call is not of the blood; it is duty that calls, and gratitude to the mother country for the many blessings they have enjoyed for so many years in this the land of their adoption. Shoulder to shoulder with all other Canadians, no matter of what nationality they may be, they will do their duty, realizing to the fullest extent that this is a fight for liberty and for future existence—and, let us hope, for the eradication of militarism from the world.

A few weeks ago, Sir, when the twin cities of Berlin and Waterloo responded so nobly to the Canadian patriotic fund, they esteemed it a high privilege to engage in a cause so just and praiseworthy. With them patriotism meant duty in the highest sense. At the same time, they felt keenly the privilege to do that duty, and by the inspiration of it they stand stronger to-day than ever before for the country's unity.

Imperial sentiment has been diffused amongst the people of the mother country during the past quarter of a century to a remarkable degree. Wherever the Union Jack floats security and justice prevail. Peace, order, security and liberty are safe as long as love of country burns in the hearts of the people. A great statesman once said that liberty is responsibility, and responsibility is duty, and that duty is to preserve the exceptional liberty we enjoy with the law, for the law, and by the law. India has made wonderful progress under British rule, and order, peace, and progress have been firmly established in that country. There is, thank God, no servitude under the Flag, and the native of Africa is guaranteed justice and security for his own person and for everything that he may have in his possession. Pillars of strength are Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, and in this crisis during the past five months, our far-flung Empire has been welded together with bands of steels as never before.

When the call came the nation rose as one man. What mattered it whether differences of opinion about other issues existed? They realized that this was a battle of right against might, and all other questions of minor importance were laid aside, and perfect unity and harmony prevailed from one end of the Empire to the other.

Can the unity of the British Empire be better described than by the spectacle that is presented to us in South Africa to-day; only a few years ago our bitterest enemies, to-day joining hands with all the other parts of the Empire in maintaining that freedom under British institutions which they have been privileged to enjoy, and which has not been found wanting? General Botha is honoured to-day by all men who love to pay tribute to greatness, and his name will be recorded in history along with the many other illustrious names that have added to the Empire's prestige.

Sir, what would be our fate should France be beaten, Belgium put out of existence, and perhaps Holland and Denmark erased from the map? What stirred England to action? It was the moral issue that appealed to the British people, and they would not go back on their word to defend the neutrality of Belgium. As Prime Minister Asquith stated, "It was only when we were confronted with the choice between keeping and breaking solemn obligations—the discharging of a binding trust—that we threw away the scabbard; bound were we by obligations that we could not decline." The preservation of Belgium's national life was the object for which we strove; and how nobly the little kingdom acquitted herself will never be forgotten by the Allies who owe a great debt of gratitude to the heroic nation which can never be paid in its entirety.

Liberties that we have prized and that have been handed down from generation to generation will have to give way to a new doctrine that might is right should the teachings of Nietsche, Treitschke and Bernhardi prevail; the very existence of the democratic institutions which we have learned to revere and love would be threatened. Mr. Bonar Law, the Opposition leader in the British House of Commons, spoke true words when he said: "We are fighting for our nation's existence—for everything which nations have always held dear. But we are fighting for something more: we are fighting for the moral forces of humanity; we are fighting for the respect of public law and for the right of public justice, which are the foundations of civilization; we are fighting for right against might." Frenzied armamentism and militarism cannot and should not not have a place in the civilized world to-day. The tension in a country like Europe must be terrible, and the financial burden almost overpowering.

All right-thinking people regret that we are placed in this position to-day, and we shudder at the consequences entailed. The task, however, which we are called upon to perform is great and noble, and is intimately connected with the progress, prosperity and morality of mankind. One thing we are certain of: that the guilt for this war does not lie at England's door. She stands to-day for freedom, for the rights of small states and for the sanctity of treaties. Yet I realize that in the distant future a great change will come over the nations of the world when the great principles for which we are fighting, liberty and true democracy, emerge victorious. Germany and all other countries in Europe, loosed from the galling yoke of militarism, will then be free to turn their thoughts to higher things than armaments and the principle that might is right. The whole world will long for peace, and woe to the man or nation that harbours thoughts of conquest. Sick and tired will the world be of the whole wretched business—of the slaughter of the bravest and best of its young men, and of the demolition and destruction of beautiful buildings and works of art that have been prized for centuries. The twentieth century should be devoted to the higher things of life. The whole world should be brought to the conception that war is an unnecessary evil, that it blights and destroys nations instead of building them up, and that we should foster the ideals of liberty and justice in the highest sense, that we should work and struggle for the elevation of the human race, and for the betterment of conditions of the masses of the people, this fulfilling the Master's message of peace on earth, good will towards men.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my sorrow—and I am sure all the members of this Parliament will join me—in the loss we have sustained through the death of several of our esteemed members.

Yonder is a seat which for years was occupied by one of Canada's prominent business men. He was, like myself, of German descent, but a Canadian among Canadians, proud of his ancestry and prouder still of his own country. Optimistic regarding Canada's future, and a great admirer of British institutions, George A. Clare will be missed in this chamber—missed by his colleagues and friends, irrespective of party. Of him it may be truly said, in the words of Lessing: "The most agreeable of all companions is a simple, frank man, without any high pretentions to an oppressive greatness; one who loves life and understands the use of it, obliging alike at all times; above all of a golden temper and steadfast as an anchor. For such a one we gladly exchange the greatest genius, the most brilliant wit, the profoundest thinker."

We mourn the loss of London's former representative, the kindly-disposed, genial and whole-souled Major Thomas Beattie. To know him was a pleasure, and his memory will always remain green in the hearts of his friends who knew him best.

Our friends of the Opposition, in the death of the late member for Westmorland, the Hon. Mr. Emmerson, have lost a valuable and honoured associate and the House one of its most faithful members. To them our sympathies are extended.

Canada is grateful to her soldiers who are to-day so valiantly upholding the honour of our country in far-off Europe, and also to those who are preparing to go in the near future. What an object lesson it is to those who predicted the disintegration of the Empire. The thanks of the Canadian people are due the men who gave their time in training and equipping over thirty thousand troops and despatching them to Salisbury Plain in such a short space of time. It was no sinecure, no easy matter, and it reflects great credit on all who with devotion to duty performed their part of the great work. All honour to the members of this House who have enlisted. The hopes and prayers of the Canadian people are with them all in their struggle for right and liberty, and may a kind Providence bring them back again to the land of the Maple Leaf, to their loved ones at home, and to their own firesides, with the knowledge and conviction so beautifully expressed by a Canadian poetess:

> We wear no haughty tyrant's chain,
> We bend no servile knee.
> When to the mistress of the main
> We pledge our fealty.
>
> She binds us with the cords of love,
> All others we disown;
> The rights we owe to God above,
> We yield to Him alone.
>
> May He our future course direct
> By His unerring hand,
> Our laws and liberty protect,
> And bless our native land.

Mr. H. ACHIM (Labelle) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, had I been inclined to-day to indulge in lengthy considerations, the very conciseness of the speech from the Throne, the tone of which strikingly recalls that of a military oration, would have reminded me that this is the time for deeds, not for words.

However, it seems difficult to abstain from glancing back somewhat wistfully at the programmes of former sessions of this Parliament replete with measures of a nature to stimulate our economic progress, measures which in several cases have been carried out, while others necessarily must await the coming of better days. Our beloved country which was striding at a young giant's pace along the highway of progress, has been checked, it must be admitted, in its ascending march. But thank God, though at rest it is not dead by any means; for a moment at a standstill, it may be compared to the fighter who, with every muscle strained, takes in the situation and gathers his whole strength to overcome the obstacle. The obstacle which confronts us in the shape of the most unjust of wars, we shall overcome or destroy.

That staunch faith in our future, is inspired in me, Mr. Speaker, by the admirable way in which our people have undergone the strain of those six months of warfare. Of the various countries engaged in this war, is it not our own that has been the less affected from the economic standpoint?

The country districts in my province—and if my information be correct, the fact repeats itself elsewhere—have not given way under the impact, and it is certainly in such places that the motto: "Business as usual" is most thoroughly adhered to. Our country folk bear the brunt of recent developments with a serene face; they are not fearful of the present and look to the future with that assurance imparted by a conscience of youth and vigour.

"It's an ill wind that blows no good," and the increased demand for cereals and foodstuffs consequent on the war has brought about a rise in prices beneficial to them; while at the same time, by fostering the peaceful arts in the midst of bloody warfare, they are preparing to meet future demands by increased production in 1915.

The mechanic, the city workman, who is not so secure against temporary stringency as is the small farmer or capitalist, naturally were harder hit, but they hail with joy the rise of new industries, the necessary outcome of the new order of things. While factories have closed down, others have been started. The "Made in Canada" campaign, so energetically pushed on by this Government will no doubt cause other industries to spring into existence and instil patriotism into business ventures.

Those orders for supplies which have been directed our way through the skill of our representative in London and his business agents sent by this Government to the countries adversely affected in their industries, have determined, and will continue to determine an influx of capital beneficial to the workingman.

Am I warranted in hoping that this condition of things in the country districts as well as in the manufacturing centres, will have the effect of rendering bolder Canadian capital, of instilling optimism into the management of our banks, and of getting us out of that period of stagnation which might have been fatal to us?

Our banks have been spared the risk of being subjected to a run at the opening of the war, through the wise policy adopted by the hon. Minister of Finance dispensing them of the obligation of exchanging their notes for gold; and while congratulating the hon. minister on a measure which assuredly has safeguarded the credit of Canadian institutions, I shall take occasion of it to invite our financial instutions to show greater liberality in their dealings with the public.

I happened to pass shortly in front of the monument which the gratitude of a whole people has dedicated to Cartier, and noticing that the pedestal was still without the bust of that great man, and meditating over that fine work interrupted by the war, the thought suggested itself to me that this great work of Confederation which he has bequeathed to us with the co-operation of his illustrious colleague, Sir John Macdonald, was also when the war broke out on the point of receiving its finishing touch in the full bloom of that national prosperity of which Cartier had laid the foundations as with the hand of a sublime architect.

However, even though the monument be unfinished, it is not broken for all that: the triumphant form of the great man will be seen and honoured on the slopes of Mount Royal; in the same way the work of building up this country is merely interrupted, and nothing will prevent the twentieth century from being the century of Canada.

And now, Sir, however, appropriate it may be to praise the man behind the plough or the man handling the tool, and though it behooves us to glory in those who remain at home and ensure the continuity of our economic life, is there a single hon. gentleman whose first thought is not for those who have left or who are about to leave for this great war; for those who have spilt or are ready to spill their blood, so as to enable those remaining to carry on their labours safely.

From every quarter our boys have answered the bugler's call; from the shores of the Pacific to those of the Atlantic, from the valley of the St. Lawrence to that of the Red river, they have taken their place under the folds of the Union Jack. All have answered: Present. With pride we have seen them depart, and presently we shall witness the departure of others. Happy to live under a monarchy which combines a greater measure of liberty than the freest republic, with the stability of monarchial institutions, they have said to themselves that if the Empire is worth while living in, it must perforce be worth while defending.

Accordingly, the appeal to arms could not be left without an answer in the precincts of this House, and the vacant seats which I see near by inspire me with greater pride than grief; for I realize that their occupants of yesterday, exchanging the gown for the sword, have courageously assumed command of their regiments. So that we have nothing to envy to countries older than ours; it is not only in London, in Paris or in Brussels that members of Parliament are willing to affront death on behalf of a great cause. Honour then to the representatives of Simcoe, of York, of Thunder Bay and of Brome. If the warm remembrance of their colleagues can be a solace to them in the performing of their tedious daily tasks, and uphold their courage in action, let me tell them that we are proud of them.

But it is not only around me that war has made vacant seats, and not far from the hon. leader of the Opposition, on the front row, I do not see any longer the hon. member for Beauce. The declaration of war found him in the enjoyment of perfect bliss, unwilling to depart from that country of Belgium so dear to his heart, and I cannot but admire the ease with which he passed from the realm of romance to that of warfare. Accustomed as he was to be on the firing line of his party, he was incapable of changing, and he remained in the front rank; and I fancy he must be there, with a smiling face and a sharp tongue, wage war in laces as it were. He has received the baptism of fire, possibly that of blood, and I feel proud of it for my province.

Not a single one of these men has thought of arguing over his rights or his duties; not one of them has endeavoured to find out a clause of the constitution behind which he might find refuge. They all of them have thought with the civilized world that the allies were on the side of right and justice; they applied for powder and ammunition, and I cannot blame the Government for having given them what they pay for so generously with their blood.

Let us pay a tribute, in passing, to that distinguished regiment which is fighting for its lady and its King, the Patricias, whose blood has already reddened the soil of France, and whose war cry "for Canada and the Empire" has already caused the enemy to tremble.

Neither have those remaining here shown indifference. Departing soldiers had left to our charge their beloved ones; it would have been intolerable that the latter should have been made to suffer on account of the patriotism of their natural protectors. Accordingly, contributions were in order, and money poured into the patriotic funds to such an extent that to-day those who have gone to the front need not any longer worry about those intrusted to their care whom they have left at home. In this connection as well, our people have done their duty.

On the other hand, the youthful volunteer has not been forgotten, and on his behalf there has been organized associations of women and girls, workshops wherein under the inspiration of patriotism, persons recruited from all classes of society work together in the accomplishment of a common task. The shop girl is there cooperating with the society woman, and while their hands are busily engaged, their lips, I surmise, utter prayers for the success of our arms. May I be allowed to do homage to the graceful fingers handling the needles as well as to the sunburnt hand which holds the rifle: both are inspired with the same patriotism. Free contributions by individuals and by this Government, such is the nature of our interference in the present conflict. Though our little country is not in immediate danger, should we wait until it has been invaded to rise to its defence? Is there any one of us, in this deadly struggle, who has not lived through the hours of the drive on Paris as mournfully as if the German hordes had been overrunning our own soil? Once the enemy is victorious on the continent, and is master of the British Isles, it will be too late to take up arms for the defence of the country.

We realized that Canada could not remain indifferent to the dangers threatening the Empire, and it may not be out of place to quote here the words uttered by the hon. member for Kingston at the opening of the session of 1912-13 when, referring to the stand taken by the right hon. Prime Minister concerning the relation of the colonies with the mother country, he said: "There is, however, one view which he clearly expressed and it was that if Canada assumed some responsibilities, it would be under the condition of being consulted by the leaders of the nation." What form shall that consultation take it is not incumbent on me to say. However, the reiterated statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister, as well as those of a more recent date from the mouth of the hon. Minister of Justice, seemed to justify the belief that it will be a consultation of the representatives of the nation who are responsible to the people. If we are to assume any constitutional obligation involving our participation in the wars of the Empire, the policy advocated by the right hon. the Prime Minister, is the only one in accord with the principle of representation. But should there not be made a distinction between this war and all previous wars in which the Empire was engaged? Current events plainly show that our people know what use they should make of their liberty towards promoting the welfare of the Empire whenever circumstances warrant it. And that war having no parallel in history, cannot, according to my view, constitute a precedent involving a change in our political status, an alteration of the constitution.

I suggested a moment ago that defending the Empire under present conditions was equivalent to defending our own territory. But since every country is made up of its soil and its inhabitants as well, there is another force, invisible that one, and wholly moral, which is necessary to its maintenance, I mean the traditions of the people.

All that we have learned to love, all that we have learned to respect is found within the folds of the Union Jack and the Tricolour. Our tongue, our civilization are threatened simultaneously with those of England and France: we are defending them and a French-Canadian cannot witness without a thrill the alliance of those two nations, to one of which we owe our wholesome political institutions, while from the other we have received those characteristics of the Latin races which we deem second to none.

While France defends her territory, England defends the treaties, and being unable to continue the part of peace-maker which she had assumed in Europe, she shows that while preferring peace to war, she has not forgotten how to carry on the latter.

4 p.m.

And in connection with the part of peace-maker assumed by Great Britain, was it not Mr. Barthou, an eminent French statesman, who, a few years ago, stated that at the time of the Agadir incident, had it not been for the diplomatic intervention of England, France would have been forced into a war with Germany.

This time, having failed in her effort to avoid such a misfortune, the mother country will not at any rate have it said that force takes precedence of right, and the stand taken by that strong and inviolate nation in extending her hand to the wounded and mutilated Belgium is one of the finest deeds recorded in human history.

May I be allowed, Sir, to halt for one moment before that country and to express to its people and to its King how highly they are esteemed and admired in this country of ours? The impartial historian will state no doubt that it was this nation of 7,000,000 people, by rising in opposition to the German colossus, gave the Allies time to get ready.

It is not my intention to recall here the opening war operations; but the whole world has witnessed that entrancing event: the German army started on its way to Paris, and nothing seemed capable of stopping it; when suddenly a man appears, a knightly King backed up by his whole people, both of whom, the Sovereign and his people, are inspired by the love of country and the sense of honour. At this unexpected juncture: a sovereign who in this twentieth century keeps faith with treaties, Germany hesitates, the Belgians strike out, Germany wavers. In vain, later on, having recovered from their surprise will the Germans dash forward, in vain will they destroy fortresses and burn down unprotected cities, the heroic defensive of the Belgians has brought out to the knowledge of the world the weak points of the German war machine. France and England have mobilized their troops and the triumphal drive of the invader will slow down, and bye and bye be turned into a retreat which closely resembles a riot.

Belgium with its citadels, Belgium with the bravery of its noble children has been a surprise to the world, possibly it has saved Europe. A large proportion of civilians have taken refuge in London where they have been most cordially received, but, if I am allowed to express a wish, my desire would be that Canada extend a helping hand to those unfortunate people.

All are aware that previous to taking their place in the military annals of the world, that small people ranked high in the economic scale. No doubt, and it is my hope as well as theirs, many of them will be desirous of rebuilding their homes and of returning to the spot where their ancestors have tilled for centuries past. Others, I am told, are thinking of settling in Canada. I understand the province of Ontario has started a movement towards promoting their settlement here; Quebec will not lag behind, neither should the Dominion Government leave anything undone to help the provinces in their immigration work.

It so happens that I have in my county a settlement by the name of Namur where a number of Belgians have been living and prospering for some twenty-five years. The soil of that township is not of the richest to be found in my constituency, but that small community, through the application of scientific methods of culture and good management, has accomplished marvels. The whole northern part of my province and some other provinces, would offer to those immigrants numberless opportunities, and their presence here, their good example, would be a precious boon.

A country where co-operative credit and other associations are flourishing, a country where intensive farming is carried on, Belgium having become an exporter, has scored great successes in the markets of the world, and the cash balance in its favour fills its coffers with gold. Belgium is to-day a money lender which has $100,000,000 in Russia as against $10,000,000 here. Should a few of its people immigrate to this country, would they not draw to the Dominion some of that capital of which we are so much in need?

Our past policy of immigration has not always escaped warranted criticism in the past, and I do not propose deploring very much its forced interruption; but I think sound public opinion in this country would rejoice at seeing a current of Belgian immigration directed towards our borders. By favouring such a move this Government would be doing something helpful to Canada; while at the same time fulfilling its duty towards those people to whom only peoples of antiquity can furnish a parallel.

While extending a friendly welcome to all those who are disposed to come here, I wish to proclaim to the whole nation that we are just as anxious as they are themselves to see the day when her soil will be rid of the German hordes and when Belgium, bleeding and mutilated, but by no means conquered, shall once more lift her head, made younger by the consciousness of her glorious and immortal deeds.

That expected triumph, the termination of that war which we are longing for, will in a large measure no doubt, be due to our land forces, but even in a greater degree to the allied fleets of France and England. As new developments come to light, it is more and more apparent that the main factor in the final result will be the navy.

As a matter of fact, all strategists, all economists agree that the final result will not depend on particularly striking and brilliant achievements, but on the power of holding out possessed by the armies in presence, a quality which is inseparable from the possession of large means of revictualling.

Of course, I am not unmindful of the brilliant victories of the British fleet off the coast of South America or in the North sea; but I say that the greatest service our seamen did in that war was in ridding the seas of the German ships which infested them, and in carrying out with lightning rapidity that blockade which, by isolating Germany, has secured for us a new ally, famine, which will decimate the enemy more effectively than the sword or the gun.

That is why I see in the navy a token of victory, and let every British subject cry out with pride and confidence: "Britannia (still) rules the waves."

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, in common with every member of this House, I certainly commend very highly the tone of the addresses to which it has been our privilege to listen from the members for Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) and Labelle (Mr. Achim). I concur in every word that has been said in grateful tribute to their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, in the trying times in which we are living. Certainly the conduct of both their Royal Highnesses has been such as to gain our admiration for their devotion to the Empire and to Canada.

I wish to associate myself with the mover of the address (Mr. Weichel) in his touching tribute to our colleagues who have been called away by death, Messrs. Emmerson, Clare and Beattie. They were men whose memories will be green in this House for many years to come.

The hon. member for Labelle supplied what I am sure had been an omission on the part of the hon. member for Waterloo by referring to the absence from this House of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland). We all regret his absence from this House, but we are sure that he is fulfilling a great duty at the seat of war. Reference was also made to the absence of other members who are to-day at the front, fighting for their country, and whom we hope to see in their seats again at no distant date, with the tokens of victory.

But, Sir, to my mind the one thing remarkable in the debate to-day is that the motion for an Address in reply to a speech from the Throne devoted altogether to the proposition that the war must be continued, should come from one of His Majesty's subjects of German origin. If there be anything significant, anything which justifies the very eloquent periods of my hon. friend from North Waterloo, it is the very fact that he, a British subject of German origin, should speak as he speaks and occupy the place which he does. There could be no better justification, if justification were needed, of British institutions. In the trying times in which we live the situation of our German fellow-citizens must certainly be a trying and painful one. "Blood is thicker than water," is an English proverb of universal application, and people of British origin certainly apply it to others as they claim it for themselves. No one in this country would think of claiming from our fellow-subjects of German origin the same measure of sacrifice which we expect from others; but all that could be expected from our German fellow-citizens towards the end which we all have at heart has been done by them, and well done and cheerfully done.

It is some six months since His Royal Highness called the Canadian Parliament in extra session in order to consider and to enact such legislation as might be required on account of the terrible war which had just broken out in Europe, and the effect of which is felt to-day over the whole world. Again we meet, this time according to a process ordered by the constitution, to transact the regular business of the country; but unfortunately the regular business of the country is far outweighed by the necessities and terrible responsibilities of the war. Although we can rejoice that the terrible movement of the German army which was in progress while we were here in the month of August last has been baffled and most victoriously repulsed—that movement, the object of which was the occupation of Paris and the crushing of France—still, notwithstanding this early triumph, we must recognize that the horizon is still dark and very much clouded, and unfortunately we cannot see any sign on the horizon which would lead us to hope for an early return of peace. At the outset of the hostilities one man there was who had a clear vision of what was impending, and that man was Lord Kitchener when he stated that the war must be a long protracted struggle, and that perhaps three years would not see the end of it. Many there perhaps were at the time who were inclined to think that this was a pessimistic view, and who believed and hoped that the events would falsify it. And, considering the weapons, the terrible engines of destruction which the application of the discoveries of modern science has added to the art of war—if I may degrade so far the word art—and considering also that European militarism has forced millions of men into armies, perhaps the supposition was not unnatural that, whichever side might win, the struggle must be short and decisive, as it had been in 1866 in the war between Prussia and Austria, and as it had been in the war of 1870 between Prussia and her allies and France. Such was undoubtedly the view of the Kaiser and the German staff, and if they gave any heed to the defence which was forecasted by the word of Lord Kitchener, they evidently felt they could afford to ignore it, supposing they could win before such a defence could be successfully organized. This was the first mistake of the Kaiser, and the first time that Lord Kitchener showed his prescience. It is a historical fact that, when the German armies were mobilized at the end of July last, there was not a man in those armies, from the Kaiser and the German staff down to the lowest corporal and the youngest private, who was not convinced that in four weeks at most they would be in Paris, and France would lay prostrate at their feet. They came within sight of the citadels of Paris, within hearing of their bells, when the sudden movement of the armies under Generals Joffre and French threw them back upon the Marne and from the Marne to the Aisne. The Germans were thrown back to the Aisne; but—let us be sincere with ourselves—though defeated, they were neither routed nor crushed. That was in the early days of September and from that time to this the German armies have been unable to penetrate the lines of the Allies, unable to reach the new goal they had set for themselves after they were driven back from Paris: Calais, on the English channel. The most famous regiments of the Prussian army were in vain thrown against the lines of the Allies, and the flower and pride of the German army were sacrificed, I will not say wantonly, although that might be justified. But let us be frank with ourselves. Though, since the month of September the Germans have been unable to pierce the allied lines, yet the Allies have not yet been able to drive the Germans out of France and Belgium and back across the Rhine. The prognostications of Lord Kitchener seem to be verified. It seems probable that the war will become a process of attrition, and that the sacrifice of human lives to this Moloch of war of which we have a daily account, will go on for weeks and months, and the months may lengthen into years. On both sides there have been successes and reverses, and on both sides the blood of men has flowed in torrents. If this were an ordinary war, the very circumstances to which I have just referred would justify the hope of an early opening for peace. If this were an ordinary war, I repeat, some friendly mediator might step in between the combatants and ask them to desist, to listen to the voice of peace. But this is not an ordinary war.

It is useless at this time to argue about the war; but we can never forget that the struggle which has been going on in Europe for the last six months is a contest between two principles: the principle of liberty and the principle of dominance. If there ever was any doubt upon this point in the mind of anybody, that doubt has been removed by the German professors, German publicists, and German journalists, who have attempted to lay before the civilized world the causes of the war. Though they pretended that Germany was not the aggressor, they plainly showed that the thought at the back of the head of the Emperor of Germany and, I am afraid, in the minds of the people of Germany themselves, was that Germany was superior to all the rest of the world, that it was her destiny to rule, and rule, as they imagined, for the benefit of mankind. They have made it abundantly clear that if the Allies should be defeated in this war the result would be the annihilation of Belgium as an independent nation, the dismemberment of France, the degradation of England to the rank of a second-rate power, the absorption of Holland, and the dominance of Europe by a military despotism. The full significance of the struggle has been more than once declared by the Kaiser himself in this formula: "There is no will but my will, there is no law but my law—the law which I myself lay down." This means that if Germany were to be victorious in this war, a setback for years and perhaps for centuries would be given to the conquests for freedom, for progress, for the advance of democracy, for the elevation of the race, which have been won by the practical good sense of England and by the idealism of France.

If any proof were needed of those conquests, the proof is supplied by the conduct of the dominions, the colonies and the dependencies all over the world which acknowledge British sovereignty. It is a well-known fact that German publicists and German military writers have prophesied that whenever a continental war should come England would be powerless to take part in it; that the moment the first shot was fired England would be torn by internecine factions; her possessions beyond the seas would sever their connection. We must not be surprised at this conclusion of those who believe that the only rule of government is force. But German publicists have yet to learn that there is a greater force than force, and that the British Empire, resting upon the basis of freedom is more durable than the German Empire resting upon the basis of blood and iron. If anything could open their eyes it would be the spectacle of British colonists from all over the world taking their places behind England in the struggle in which she is now engaged. Such a spectacle is well calculated to cause wonder and surprise to the apostles of German "Kultur" and to give hope and joy to those who believe that our system, for which men die, is not a system under which a man, no matter who he be, can say, "There is no will but my will, there is no law but my law—the law which I lay down." It is a system under which the law is laid down by the joint action of the King and the people—the law to which the King himself is subject as much as the lowest of his subjects. Such is the spectacle which has been presented to the world in this war, and it is in many respects a spectacle which gives us British subjects a just right to feel proud.

During the recess my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and some of his colleagues have expressed the view, not in a way to which I take exception, that the British system as it exists to-day ought to be altered so as to give the Dominions a voice in all questions of peace and war. If I mention the matter to-day it is not because I intend here and now to enter into any controversy upon it, though the subject be highly controversial first, from the point of view of the Imperial authorities, who have more than once in recent times stated that in their opinion such an assumption would be perilous, and also in the view of the Dominions, who, if they were to assume such a power, must assume also very heavy burdens in time of peace as well as in time of war. But, I repeat, I do not intend at this moment to enter into any controversy. The task which is weighing upon us is heavy enough not to increase it by the introduction of subjects which may be not only controversial but which at the time may not be practical. The time will come when peace will be restored, and then will be the time to discuss these and many other problems which will have to be taken up by all British peoples. In the meantime, for my part, I hardly believe that any system that can be devised, or that can be reduced by legislation to any complete form applicable to the daughter nations of the Empire, can ever have the same inspiring grandeur, or the same patriotic efficiency, as the action of the Dominions all over the world—the voluntary, spontaneous action of all those Dominions—in lining themselves up behind England in the hour of her trial.

Conscription has never met with any favour in the British Isles. It has never been consistent with the genius of the British people to use the strong arm of the law to fill up the ranks of her army. England is the least military of the nations of Europe. She has long given up the mania for conquest which has been the bane of so many strong nations, and which may yet prove the undoing of Germany. She has not been engaged in any aggressive war since the Seven-Years War, and while the great nations of the continent were devoting their strength, wealth and energy to armaments and military preparations, while they were taking the largest portion of the youth of the country as it came to manhood from productive labour and placing it in camps and barracks, England never forced a single one of her subjects into the army. She kept all her people busy producing and accumulating, with the result that when she was forced into war—forced, I say, and I say advisedly—though her armies were not numerous in comparison with continental armies their prowess in the field never caused her to regret that she had kept to the voluntary system. She was able, out of her wealth, to finance the whole of Europe in the most gigantic struggles, even in that against Napoleon himself, with the result that generally she came out victorious. There is reason to suppose that compulsion against communities will have the same result as compulsion against individuals, and there is further reason to hope that when the victory has been won—for we have no doubt as to the ultimate victory in the war—there will be a movement amongst all civilized peoples to put an end to armaments and to ensure a lasting era of peace. Let me repeat that it is a struggle between freedom and domination. Into this struggle our people have thrust themselves with all the energy at their command, and all subjects of the King in this country have done, as I believe, their share, and are prepared to do more if need be to attain the end.

The speech from the Throne is confined altogether to the question of the war. Nothing else is mentioned in it. The speech simply says that:

> My advisers will submit for your consideration measures rendered necessary by the participation of this Dominion in the great task which our Empire has undertaken in this war.

Already there is on the Order Paper a motion by the Prime Minister to provide something like $100,000,000 to that end. Let me say at once that we who sit on this side of the House and who represent His Majesty's Loyal Opposition took our course at the outset of hostilities when we declared that we would support the Government in their war policy. We conceived that it was our duty to do nothing to embarrass the Government, but on the contrary, to do everything in our power to facilitate the task, the heavy task, which had been placed in the hands of those to whom, for the time being, the Canadian people had entrusted their fortunes. We have acted upon this principle all along, and again we are prepared to act accordingly. We meet the summons of His Royal Highness in the same spirit to-day, in the month of February, as we met it in the month of August last. We are prepared to give to the Government, to those who for the moment have the confidence of the Canadian people under our constitutional system, the support to which they are entitled for the attainment of the great end which we all have in mind.

But whilst we are prepared to do nothing more than, perhaps, we should do, at the same time we are entitled to have from the Government a full statement of the expenditures which they have made out of the $50,000,000 which was placed at their disposal last August. The Canadian people have been generous with their money; they continue to be generous with it; but whilst we are prepared to believe, as indeed we do believe, that mistakes have been made in the manner in which the money has been expended, that errors of judgment have been committed, of those mistakes and of those errors of judgment we are not disposed to be critical.

It would be hardly possible to expect that in the case of the expenditure of some fifty million dollars no mistakes would arise; it is perhaps more than we can expect from human nature; but we cannot close our eyes to the fact that not only have mistakes been made, but frauds have been committed which have resulted in injury to the health of our troops, and impairment of their efficiency. These frauds have been regarded as so gross and so criminal that the Minister of Militia himself, not more than two or three weeks ago, stated, not once but three or four times at different places in the country, that if he knew the man who supplied the boots, which have been the cause of so much disease, and sickness, and suffering to our soldiers on the plains of Salisbury, that man would deserve to be shot. The honour of the minister is at stake, and so is the credit of the country. It is not impossible to discover the responsible parties. Up to the present the minister is responsible, and it is for him to take the necessary measures to vindicate himself. We have been told that a commission of three members has been appointed by the Government to investigate this particular matter, and not later than ten or twelve days ago it was stated that the minister himself, not satisfied with this inquiry, had instituted a departmental investigation to ascertain the true facts. I do not know if this is all that is intended to be done by the Government; but let me say that the fullest light should be thrown upon this matter, so that the people of Canada may know where the responsibility lies. No member on this side of the House intends to be critical, and for my part I certainly have no such intention; but assuredly we are all gravely concerned that the health and comfort of those brave men who are risking their lives in the cause of the Empire shall have every protection that we can afford. I would say to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, were he in his seat, that in certain quarters the blame is cast upon him. It is said that the fact that the boots which were supplied to the troops were not what they ought to have been; is not the fault of the workmanship or of the material supplied, but the fault of the specifications furnished to the manufacturers. The Shoe and Leather Journal, which is a semi-monthly trade journal published in Toronto, in its issue of the 1st of January, states:

> Practical shoe manufacturers give credit to the firms who already have executed Government orders. They say that the shoes were made according to specifications, broadly speaking, and in the case of the supplies for the first contingent, under the most trying circumstances. But the specifications are generally not thought to be those for the 'fighting' shoe. The sole is not heavy enough, and it is not hobnailed or quilted, nor is the heel reinforced by a steel plate. The shank is too narrow and not strong enough to stand spade work. The uppers are not heavy enough in all cases, though sometimes they are sufficiently heavy, but not pliable. In short, the specifications are for a shoe that does very well for use in Canada for parade or training purposes, but which does not answer for wear in England, much less in Europe.

In the same issue of the Shoe and Leather Journal is an interview with Mr. W. V. Matthews, manager of the manufacturing department of the well-known firm of Ames-Holden-MacCready, in which he says:

> 'Those shoes were never meant for foreign service,' said Mr. Matthews, 'as the Government well knew that their specifications called for shoes that did not at all resemble the standard army patterns generally endorsed by Great Britain and European nations. It was not the intention of the Government to set a new style in army footwear for nations that had learned by practical experience what was best suited for war use.
>
> 'There is an army shoe,' said Mr. Matthews, picking up an English army model, real service style, 'which is the only make that will stand the wear and tear of actual service conditions. A pair of them weight 65 ounces. The shoes supplied to the Canadian Government would not weight more than 38 ounces, which is about 18 ounces to 20 ounces more than the weight of an ordinary pair of men's welts. You cannot observe both shoes and say they were meant to give the same service. It is ridiculous.
>
> 'The shoes supplied members of the first contingent were meant to be used by the soldiers while in training to accustom their feet to heavier footwear. The immediate change from light welts to shoes of the army patterns as used in Europe would have crippled most of the volunteers in a week. Knowing that it would be months before the Canadian force went to the firing line, the Government saw fit to specify shoes such as were ordered, and, speaking generally, they received good value from the Canadian manufacturers who shared in the business. Speaking for our firm, we received an order for 62,500 pairs, or about one-fourth of the entire quantity. Not one pair has been returned or complained about. It is quite possible that some manufacturers may not have been so fortunate.'

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that for my part I am not altogether satisfied with the statements made in this interview. Neither am I prepared, upon that statement, to condemn the Government. There are in it assertions which seem to be somewhat contradictory. I cannot think, for example, that the shoes which were ordered by the Government were not intended for use on foreign service, and were only intended to accustom the feet of the men to the use of the heavier boot of the English soldier. Until I get further information on the subject I am disposed to doubt this statement. I am not prepared, as I say, at the present moment to condemn the Government; but I do say that this is a matter which ought to be thoroughly inquired into, and upon which the fullest information should be given to the Canadian people. The atmosphere is filled with various assertions to the effect that the men who were sent to the front were not properly equipped. But I will not refer now to anything but the defect in the boots, which has been so widely discussed in the press of Canada and of England that it cannot be passed over in silence. I say again that I refer to the matter now, not for any party purpose, but in order that we may have the truth and the whole truth about it, so that we may know upon whose shoulders to place the responsibility, and thus guard against the recurrence of such mistakes or offences. I refer to the matter now in order that our men who are already at the front—and some of whom have already given up their lives on the fields of France for the Empire—may be enabled to give their whole energy and vigour to the noble cause they are fighting to uphold.

I do not say this in any carping spirit. I do not want to make any political capital out of it. I am as much a party man as any man in this House, but I should despise myself if I were to attempt to make political capital when the country is in such danger as it is in at the present time. The desire is simply to have everything done that can be done in order that the men whom we send to the front may discharge their duties with the greatest credit to themselves and the greatest benefit to the country and to the whole Empire. This is the spirit which animates those who sit around me here. As I stated a moment ago, so I repeat, we ask for nothing but information, and we hope that upon this and all points the information to which we are entitled will be abundantly afforded.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to associate myself with what has been so well and so eloquently said by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), with regard to the great service rendered by His Royal Highness the Governor General to this country and to the whole Empire by his presence in Canada, by his occupancy of that high position and by the very keen, unfailing, indefatigable interest which he has taken in everything that concerns Canada's part in this war, the proper equipment of our troops and their despatch to the front under proper conditions. I have more reason and better opportunity to know of the interest which His Royal Highness the Governor General has thus taken than have most hon. members of this House, and it was with peculiar pleasure that I listened to the observations of my right hon. friend as well as to the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) in that regard.

I desire also to associate myself with what my right hon. friend has said as to the speeches delivered by the mover and seconder of the motion now under consideration. The presence of these gentlemen in this Assembly and the duty they have been called upon to discharge to-day, and which they have so worthily and eloquently discharged, is at once an exemplification of the principles upon which our Empire is based and of the appreciation of those principles by those in whose countries they are applied. The fact that we have listened to such eloquent and patriotic speeches as those of the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Achim) is of itself a great tribute to those principles. My hon. friend from North Waterloo has spoken of the part which has been taken by the citizens of German descent in the upbuilding of this Empire and particularly in the upbuilding of this Dominion. We have had good reason to know and understand, especially since the outbreak of this war, the patriotism, the loyalty, the devotion of the citizens of German origin to this country. As my hon. friend has well said their position was not free from embarrassment, but their appreciation of the land from which they came, of its institutions and of all it represents in the world, has been wholly consistent with their loyalty to the land of their adoption and the institutions of our Empire. We have those in Canada who although of German descent, were born in Canada and are Canadians as we are ourselves, understanding as we do with perfect appreciation the liberties which are ours of right. We have also in this country those who were born in Germany or in Austria-Hungary, who have been asked to come to Canada as immigrants and to join with us in the task of upbuilding this Dominion. So far as the first-named are concerned, not a word need be said; the earnestness and the zeal with which they have joined in all that appertains to the welfare of the Dominion and of the Empire in this war speak for themselves. So far as the others are concerned, I repeat what I said in August last when we were considering matters connected with the war, that those of German birth and those born in the Empire of Austria-Hungary who have come to this country to be citizens of Canada have with very few exceptions borne themselves worthily and well. I believe that I can speak with peculiar knowledge as to this because it has been part of my public duty to make myself acquainted with their sentiments and with the part which they are taking at this juncture of our affairs.

5 p.m.

My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Achim) represents here a race which was the pioneer race in this Dominion, a race which has shown a perfect understanding and appreciation of the principles of liberty upon which this Empire is based. My hon. friend's presence here to-day and the eloquent speech from him to which we have listened are in a like manner a tribute to the appreciation by that race in Canada of the liberties which all the citizens of Canada enjoy regardless of creed or of race.

My hon. friends have spoken, and so has my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, of the loss which the members of this House have sustained in the death of those who have passed away. The late Mr. Emmerson had a long career in public life and took a very prominent part in the debates of this House, where his industry and his earnestness in all that he undertook were very notable. I join with my hon. friends in extending to the relatives whom he has left behind the sympathy of all the members of this House which I am sure is freely extended. My good friends, George Clare and Major Thomas Beattie, have also passed away since we last met. They did not take an active or prominent part in the debates of this House, but they were men who had a long experience in public affairs. I have already expressed appreciation of my association with them in public life and of the fine qualities which they made manifest as members of this assembly. They did not often speak, but when they did address the House it was with a knowledge and an earnestness which commended all that they had to say to the consideration of every member.

I have not one word to say in criticism of the observations which my right hon. friend has made to this House with regard to certain matters upon which he felt it desirable to make comments. So far as my own observations during the recess are concerned, I did not discuss the subject to which he has called attention otherwise than by alluding to the probable influence which the events of the past six months may bring to bear upon that question when it does come to be considered. I am very much of the same opinion as my right hon. friend in a good deal of what he has said to-day in that respect. I for one am the last man in this House who would be disposed to favour or to advocate any system which would deprive the self-governing dominions of the Empire of the rights and liberties which they possess in respect of the control of their own affairs. As to what I have said in the past in that respect, I do not think that I ever went beyond what my right hon. friend himself said some eighteen years ago, when, on the other side of the ocean, he declared to those who held the reins of power in the United Kingdom: If you desire our aid, call us to your councils. That very shortly expressed an idea in his own mind at that time—and, I daresay, still in his own mind—and beyond that I do not think I have ever gone in any of my utterances regarding this question.

My right hon. friend has also spoken of the expenditure by the Government of the sum of money voted for war purposes. I agree at once that it is the undoubted right of this House to have the fullest information as to that expenditure, and, if any mistakes or errors in judgment have occurred, to learn of them in order that they shall not be repeated in the future. My right hon. friend has spoken of rumors in the press with regard to the boots which were furnished to the first Canadian contingent, and, I dare say, to those who have been enlisted for service beyond the seas required. So far as I am aware, those boots were ordered in the very early stages of the war upon specifications which were prepared in the Department of Militia many years ago and which have been the authorized specifications of that Department ever since. It may be that if time had permitted it would have been desirable to adopt a stouter type of boot, but I should like to tell my right hon. friend that I have it upon the authority of a man who should know whereof he speaks that in the South African campaign the type of boot used in the British army which has been so highly commended to my right hon. friend, was not found specially suitable for the Canadian forces engaged in that war. I have taken a keen interest in this question of boots and have discussed the matter with a great many persons who were supposed to know what was the best type of boot for such a purpose. I found that there was a great difference of opinion as to what was the best type of boot. Many different specifications have been presented to us and many different types have been considered. The French and British types of boots were placed before me, and I had it pointed out to me in a very forcible way—and in a way that commended itself very much to my judgment—that the type of boot used in the French army might, for the purposes of our men going to the front, be worthy of consideration as possessing certain qualities which would make it more useful than the British boot to which my right hon. friend has referred. For many weeks a committee has been considering the best type of boot to be used, and I understand that one has been decided upon which will prove very serviceable.

My hon. friend speaks of illness or disease having been occasioned on Salisbury Plain by the use of the boots which were supplied. I am bound to say that I have no information of that kind, and if my right hon. friend possesses information to that effect I shall be very glad indeed to have him furnish it to the Government. Every one knows that the weather conditions which during the past few months have prevailed throughout the British Isles, and particularly on Salisbury Plain, have been of an unusually severe character, and I doubt very much indeed whether the type of boot supplied to the British army, to the French army, or to any other army, would have withstood the effects of the conditions to which our men were necessarily but unfortunately subjected during their sojourn upon Salisbury Plain. However, as I have said, my right hon. friend is quite within his rights when he desires and insists upon having full information as to the expenditures which we have made and as to any mistakes or errors in judgment, if any such have occurred; and I for one will most heartily concur in any effort which he may direct to that very worthy end.

My right hon. friend and those who have preceded me in this debate have alluded to the appalling war which has raged in Europe for the last six months or more, and it is not necessary or desirable at this moment that I should refer, except in a general way, to the causes which brought it about. Germany has appealed to the civilized world for judgment as to the causes of the war, and the world has already given judgment against her. John Bright said in the British Parliament many years ago that the moral law was not written for men alone in their individual character, but was written as well for nations. The war has been brought about through the violation of that principle by the military autocracy of Prussia, in so far as they desired to impose upon the rest of their world their ideas of militarism, their lack of regard for weaker nationalities, and the principle, openly avowed, that treaties are binding only in so far as the necessities of any State may permit, and that the State itself, in exercising its military power, shall be the sole judge of that necessity.

One observation which I desire to make in connection with the causes of the war is this. Germany's ally, Italy, did not join in the war because it was a war not of defence, but of aggression; thus is Germany answered by her own ally. The ex-Prime Minister of Italy not long ago in the Italian Parliament made it very clear not only that Italy regarded the war as a war of aggression, but that the war itself was contemplated and planned by Austria and by Germany as far back as 1913. I desire to place upon the pages of "Hansard" three or four lines which make that to my mind absolutely plain. He said:

> I answered Marquis Di San Biuliano thus: 'If Austria goes against Servia a 'casus foederis' evidently does not exist. It is an action she accomplishes on her own account. It is not defensive, because nobody thinks of attacking her. It is necessary to declare this to Austria in the most formal manner hoping that Germany will act to dissuade Austria from a very dangerous adventure.

That adventure was not carried out in 1913, but was carried out in 1914, and those of us who have sought to make ourselves acquainted with the trend of events during the six months which preceded this war will have learned, as I certainly have learned, that every indication in financial circles, every indication by which men throughout the world form their judgment as to the stability or otherwise of peaceful conditions, everything that transpired during the six months that preceded this war pointed to the fact that some great event was coming in the immediate future; and the testimony that that event had been planned back as far as July 1, 1913, comes, as I have said, from Italy, the ally of Austria. I know that every hon. gentleman in this House had made himself acquainted with the Yellow Book which has been issued by the French Government and in which is set forth a copy of a most remarkable secret report obtained by the French ambassador at Berlin and transmitted by him to his own Government as far back as November, 1913. Some of the passages of that secret report, very brief passages, may usefully be quoted in order that we may understand this also, that the war which did come in August last was a war which Germany and Austria intended to force if the other nations of Europe were not prepared to submit to their domination. From this secret report to the German Government I quote the following:—

> It is our sacred duty to sharpen the sword which has been placed in our hand, and to hold it ready for our defence as well as to strike our enemy. The idea that our armaments are a reply to the armaments and policy of the French must be instilled into the people. The people must be accustomed to think that an offensive war on our part is a necessity if we are to combat the adversary's provocations. We must act with prudence in order to arouse no suspicion, and so as to avoid the crises which might damage our economic life. Things must be so managed that under the weighty impression of powerful armaments, of considerable sacrifices, and of political tension, the outbreak of war (Losschlagen) shall be considered as a deliverance, because after it would come decades of peace and of prosperity, such as those which followed 1870. The war must be prepared for from a financial point of view. There is much to be done in this direction. The distrust of our financiers must not be aroused, but nevertheless there are many things which it will be impossible to hide.

I gather from the press that the German Government have denied that any such report was made; but having read it carefully, those who have made themselves acquainted with the tendency of thought in Prussia and throughout Germany during recent years, might seem to find upon its face a veritable hall-mark of authenticity.

The attempt has been made in the German propaganda throughout the world and especially in the United States of America to make it appear that Belgium and Great Britain had already violated the neutrality of Belgium before the German army invaded that country. What are the facts? The facts are that a certain conversation took place between British officers and Belgian officers which was of so informal a character that no note of it, as Sir Edward Grey has declared, remains or ever was in the British foreign office. What was the conversation? To what did it relate? It related simply to the part that Great Britain should take and must in honour take if Belgium should be first invaded by Germany. And the German propaganda, sent out to the world, and especially to this continent, declares that the neutrality of Belgium was thus violated. Suppose a burglar had broken into a house, clubbed the inmate into insensibility and robbed him, and was caught redhanded in the act; suppose that afterwards he raised a plea of self-defence and to support that plea of self-defence produced a letter found upon his victim in which a neighbour had said that if an attack were made upon the house he and his sons would come to the rescue. That is the plea which Germany puts forward to-day. It is absurd on the face of it and it would be laughable if it were not associated with so grave a tragedy as that which has been before the world during the past six months.

I have spoken before of the aims and ideals of Prussian militarism. Germany's action in forcing this awful war has received the condemnation of the world and no less severe is the condemnation of the methods by which her forces have carried it on. Prussian militarism has taught its armies to employ means and methods, relentless and remorseless, which seem to have been designed to deprive the nations with whom they are contending not only of their material but of their intellectual and moral resources. Cities, towns, villages, hamlets without number destroyed; thousands of houses looted and fired to conceal the crime; non-combatants slaughtered without cause and without provocation; ancient cathedrals, historic churches, renowned seats of learning, works of art, all destroyed without cause apparently, and without provocation; hostages selected whose lives were forfeited upon the least fault committed by those over whom they could have no control—all this has been made apparent to the world, and the world has pronounced judgment upon it.

I have spoken of France and Belgium, but some of our own kinsmen across the sea have had a taste of these methods of warfare. What of the women and children mangled and slain at Scarborough, Hartlepool and Whitby? It is well for Canadians, when estimating the causes that have led us to take part in this war, to remember that but for the protection of the British navy, men and women born under our fair Canadian skies, non-combatants, might have been torn and mangled by shells from German ships, inspired by the same motives of hate and of frenzied revenge. Those prompt and ready to shower shells upon unfortified towns and helpless non-combatants did lately meet a British squadron in the North Sea, and we are proud indeed to remember that the men of the navy acquitted themselves well and worthily, and in accordance with the ancient traditions of the fleet, so that the enemy ships intending to repeat the ravages occasioned by the first raid, quickly turned their prows to the shelter of their mine-fields.

But a more extraordinary development of the spirit of terrorism has recently startled the world. Apparently by the latest pronouncement of the German Government, we must understand that merchant ships are to be sunk by submarines without an opportunity for the crew to escape. It has been announced that Germany's proposals extend to all waters surrounding the British Islands, and that merchant ships with noncombatants on board may be sunk by submarines in direct violation of all recognized usages in warfare and of every instinct and dictate of humanity. It has been a rule of war upon the sea that a captured merchant ship should be taken into port and condemned by due process of law. The practice of the nations has not been uniform as to exceptions to that rule. Some have established an exception by reason of convenience, and others by reason only of necessity. No criticism has been made of the action of German ships in the Atlantic or in the Pacific which have sunk British merchant ships, because as Germany has no nearby port, there was no opportunity to take those ships into port to have them condemned by forms of law. But I am not aware that any civilized nation has ever before established or adopted the principle that a merchant ship with noncombatants on board might be sunk without giving them an opportunity to escape. That proposal strikes the world in a startling way. And not less startling is an incident which came to our attention through the press not long ago, that in the British channel a torpedo was fired at a hospital ship, so marked and designated that there could be no failure to know that it was a ship used solely for hospital purposes. I venture to think that the Government of Germany, in adopting measures of this character, is in fact, as has been very well said by one of the great journals of the United States, waging war not against Great Britain, but against the world, and the world I hope will know how to deal with a policy and with measures of that character.

My right hon. friend has said, and said truly, that this war is a conflict of ideals. On the one hand there is the ideal of liberty and justice, the ideal of respect for the sacred obligation of treaties, the ideal of regard for the rights of the smaller nations, the ideal of modern democracy; and on the other hand, there is the doctrine that force is above all right, and indeed constitutes the highest right; that the power of the nation must be expressed and asserted in militarism and used for further extension of territory, wealth, and influence; the conception that the Prussian militarism, and the German culture which it dominates, shall also dominate the world. There cannot be any doubt as to the issue of such a conflict.

In August last we decided that Canada should take her proper part in this war. Thirty-one thousand men are to-day in the British Isles or in France; one thousand are at Bermuda; and nearly ten thousand are doing garrison duty in Canada. Nearly fifty thousand men have been enlisted in order that they may in the first place stand as an armed force for the protection of this country and of our people, and secondly, that they may go forward from time to time, as there shall be need, to the end that this war shall be brought to an honourable and triumphant issue. Our proposal, which has been disclosed to the country since the last session of Parliament, was this; that in addition to the men who had gone forward from Valcartier to Salisbury Plain, 30,000 men should be enlisted and put in training, and that from that force there should go forward from time to time as the British authorities might be prepared to receive them, further expeditionary forces; and that upon the despatch of any such further expeditionary force men should be enlisted here in Canada to take their place. The number was subsequently increased to fifty thousand, and I am glad to inform the House that the response to the demand for men to perform this noble and patriotic duty has been all that any of us could have desired or hoped. Our achievement in that regard is only to be limited by the need, and we feel assured—we have good cause to be assured by what has already taken place in France—that these men when they go to the front will do their duty, will stand with the other troops of the Empire and with our Allies in a determined and patriotic endeavour to bring the struggle to a victorious issue.

The unity of purpose which has inspired, not only this Dominion, but the whole Empire, speaks for itself. I had the opportunity some few weeks ago of reading a debate which took place in the Council of India. It was upon a motion proposed by one of the native members of the Council, and I invite all hon. gentlemen in this House who have the opportunity, to read that debate. I venture to say that, having read it, they will agree with me that in its sentiment, its strong and earnest patriotism, and its excellence of diction, it will compare favourably with any debate whether in the Imperial Parliament or in the parliament of any of the dominions. You say that India regarded participation in this war as a duty? India put her case on a much higher plane. India asserted her right to take part in this war and was proud that she possessed that right. And throughout the King's dominions, every race, every tribe, the smallest possession, the remotest island, have all tendered their aid. So far as the whole Empire is concerned, the situation was well summed up by the late Admiral Mahon in a letter which he wrote in October last to a friend in England shortly before his death. In it he says:

> But the testimony to the uprightness and the efficiency of her imperial rule, given by the strong adhesion and support of India and the Dominions, is a glory exceeding that of pitched battle and overwhelming victory.

In the path of Germany's ambition to dominate the world has stood our Empire, and the chief bulwark of the British Empire is the British Navy. I repeat that it has done its work worthily and well. I am sure that none of us can appreciate all that has been involved and is still involved in that silent winter vigil in the North Sea. No deeds of the Vikings ever surpassed the courage and endurance of these sailor heroes.

As my right hon. friend has well said, be under no misapprehension as to the character of this war. The struggle is formidable and the task tremendous. Germany's military power has amazed the world. On the one frontier and on the other she has held back the forces of the allied nations. She strove to make her military power commensurate with her ambition of world-wide dominance. We have but held our own for many months. When our armies now being organized take the field we may hope with confidence for greater things. In that connection it is appropriate that I should read to the House a despatch which I have just received from Mr. Harcourt, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and which is in these words:

[From Mr. Harcourt to the Governor General.]

London, February 5, 1915.

Nearly four months have now passed since the first Canadian contingent arrived in the United Kingdom. It was recognized on its arrival that Canada had sent a fine body of men constituting a most valuable addition to the Crown's fighting forces. Training has been continued in the time that has since elapsed and is now practically completed under unprecedented conditions of climate, which have involved discomfort in spite of every effort on the part of His Majesty's government to alleviate the hardships which have been borne by the contingent with a cheerful resolve that augurs well for their endurance of the arduous conditions of actual active service.

The contingent was inspected by His Majesty the King on Thursday last, and His Majesty was much gratified at the marked general improvement since he last inspected them, and at the spirit of eagerness and loyal enthusiasm which fills all ranks. The contingent will shortly join their Canadian comrades of the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry at the front. These are acquitting themselves in a manner worthy of the great Dominion to which they belong, and some of them have already given their lives for the great cause for which the Empire is now fighting.

Six months ago Great Britain declared war on Germany, taking her place besides the allies in the greatest war ever yet waged.

The object of Germany was to dominate first Europe, and eventually the world. This result she hoped to achieve firstly, by overwhelming and crushing France by a rapid advance through Belgium, whose neutrality she shamefully violated, and then by dealing with Russia at her own leisure. She was to have the assistance of Austria against Russia after the former had crushed Servia out of existence.

This programme for which Germany had made the most elaborate preparations, she proceeded to more or less successfully carry out, until her armies in France arrived at the line of the Marne river; here, however, the tide of invasion reached its high water mark, and it has since been driven back to the line of the river Ainse. The battle front now extends from Ostend in a line due south to Soissons, and thence southeast to the Swiss frontier at Basle. On the western frontier this line has remained stationary for several months. In the eastern theatre of war Germany has met with no greater success and the Russians everywhere more than hold their own. The great effort essential to the success of Germany has been foiled, and except for one success in East Prussia she has gained no single victory, she has lost two and a quarter millions of her best and bravest soldiers, and any fresh effort will now have to be made with greatly inferior and disheartened troops. Thanks to the work of our navy, Germany is now feeling economic pressure in many ways. In Austria there are still considerable forces in the field but her troops have suffered severe reverses both from Servia and Russia, and she can no longer be counted upon by Germany as a really powerful ally. Of even less account is Turkey, who has suffered severe defeats from Russian forces, and results have been the same for her as regards British forces in Mesopotamia and on the Suez Canal within the last few days. In a far different position are Great Britain and her allies. The soldiers of France and Belgium, fully confident in the justice of our cause, are burning to clear the soil of their native countries of the hated invaders. Russia, whose troops have throughout fought with indomitable courage, is preparing herself for further great efforts. At sea the British navy is supreme and has recently inflicted a severe defeat upon the German navy. Aided by our gallant Japanese allies, most of the German colonies have already been captured. The power of Great Britain and her allies increases daily in strength, whereas the power of their enemies is distinctly on the wane. The existing situation has been brought about without the vast resources of the British Empire having yet been called into play.

The splendid contingents from our overseas dominions, from Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Newfoundland, etc.,—in fact from every quarter of the globe—have not yet with the exception of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, been engaged.

The above with the new armies now perfecting their training in England should exercise a preponderating influence on the ultimate decision.

(Signed) Harcourt.

It is only just in connection with that to pay a tribute to the valour of the British army in France and to that of all the allied forces. I had the opportunity of reading a very intimate account of the retreat from Mons, and I venture to say that no successful retreat was ever conducted under greater difficulties or in the face of more overwhelming odds. The greatest victory ever won shed no more splendid lustre on the British army than the valour, the heroism and the endurance displayed during that retreat.

The Princess Patricia regiment now at the front has acquitted itself with credit, and we remember that one who is very dear to a member of this House is serving in that regiment. We hope and pray that our colleague (Mr. Michael Clark) will always have good news of his son. The first Canadian Expeditionary force will soon be at the front. We believe, indeed we are sure that they will so bear themselves that Canada will have just cause to be proud. Some have already given their lives, as Mr. Harcourt has said, for the cause of freedom and justice, and I am reminded of some lines that were written by an Englishman, who for many years has lived in Canada, during the South African war, when news came that some of our men had fallen.

Half mast your flags? Nay, hoist them to the head,
You reap the harvest where you sowed the corn.
See, from the far graves of your gallant dead,
An Empire born.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

As has been said, there are vacant seats in this House—seats of those who have gone forth to fight for the Dominion and Empire. The absence of these men in that cause speaks more eloquently than any words I could utter. God grant that we may see them once more with us when victory has been attained. I have had occasion during the last three or four months to write letters to my good friend, Dr. Beland—I hope they have reached him, although I do not know—congratulating him on the service which he has given in Belgium; and I have had some communications which I had the pleasure of transferring to my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and which sets forth the hope that he may be released and may have his freedom at no distant date.

A great Belgian prelate has spoken in eloquent terms of the ordeal through which his country has passed and of the spirit of patriotism which thereupon swept over that country in strong tide. The words are so splendid and eloquent that I think it not amiss to give them to the House. I am alluding to the pastoral letter of Cardinal Mercier which has been published already in part in this country:

"God will save Belgium, my brethren, you cannot doubt it; nay, rather, He is saving her. Across the smoke of conflagration, across the stream of blood, have you not glimpses, do you not perceive signs, of His love for us? Is there a patriot among us who does not know that Belgium has grown great? Nay, which of us would have the heart to cancel this last page shattered nation? When in her throes she exult in the brightness of the glory of this shattered nation? When in her throes she brings forth heroes, our Mother Country gives her own energy to the blood of those sons of hers. Let us acknowledge that we needed a lesson in patriotism. There were Belgians, and many such, who wasted their time and their talents in futile quarrels of class with class, of race with race, of passion with personal passion.

Yet when, on the second of August, a mighty foreign power, confident in its own strength and defiant of the faith of treaties, dared to threaten us in our independence, then did all Belgians, without difference of party, or of condition, or of origin, rise up as one man, close-ranged about their own king, and their own government, and cry to the invader: 'Thou shalt not go through!'

At once, instantly, we were conscious of our own patriotism. For down within us all is something deeper than personal interests, than personal kinships, than party feeling, and this is the need and the will to devote ourselves to that more general interest which Rome termed the public thing, 'Res publica.' And this profound will within us is patriotism."

When the spirit of Canada was searched by the thrill of the first great call to defend our Empire, we also were conscious of an influence and an emotion infinitely more commanding and compelling than that of the material interests which had so closely absorbed our attention. Wherever the peril was most truly realized there the response to the call was most clearly manifest.

We happily have been spared the tempest of death and fire and destruction which has devastated Belgium, but we have seen and we shall still see our best and bravest go forth to battle in a righteous cause for which some shall yield up their lives. With the searching of spirit which has come to us in these solemn days we have seen and felt the soul of the nation profoundly moved; stirred as never before in all our history.

The events of the past six months mark a new stage in our nationhood; a new chapter in the book of our destiny has been opened. The strength of our Empire bound by the ties of liberty and autonomous self-government, has been tested and it has held firm and true. In no respect have the expectations of the Prussian autocracy been more utterly disappointed and falsified than in this. From these great Dominions have gone and will still go forth the free manhood of a great Empire to fight for a cause which involves not alone our institutions, our freedom and our destiny, but those of the world. Fighting in such a cause we do not, we dare not, doubt the issue.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to keep the House for any lengthy period in debating the Address; but if I abstain from lengthy speech it is not because I consider that the Empire being in a state of war at all puts upon Parliament the duty of abdicating its proper functions. The duty of Parliament in regard to the Address is to debate that Address with a view to helpfulness in the matters to which it refers, and I should think myself lacking in my duty if I left unsaid anything I ought to say because the Empire is in a state of war.

I wish to endorse very emphatically the remark made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to the effect that in the fact that the Address has been moved by a member of German extraction and seconded by a member of French extraction we have a remarkable evidence of the greatness of the flag under which we live and of all that flag stands for. I wish that the fact of what has happened in this House this afternoon could be brought to the attention and careful thought of those who dictate the policies of the great German Empire. I certainly believe that if the thinkers of that nation brought unbiased minds to the consideration of the facts it would shed a flood of light upon them which probably they will not get from any other source until the Allies have finished the lesson they are giving them along rather different lines.

I wish also to join in the congratulations offered by my right hon. friends on both sides of the House to the mover and the seconder of the Address. If I dwell particularly upon the speech of the mover, it is because I am more familiar with the language in which he spoke than with the language of the seconder. My hon. friend from Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) discharged a task of very great delicacy and difficulty with very great ability. I wish to congratulate him upon the courage and the adroitness with which he discharged that task. He need not have apologized, I am sure, in a free country such as this, for anything that he said. He seems to feel it a little, having to speak in favour of the great German people from whom he derives his origin. Well, for his encouragement, I would like to tell him that the men I most admire in the last hundred years of British politics are men who opposed their nation when at war, even speaking from within that nation. The greatest men in British politics within that period, in my opinion, were Richard Cobden and John Bright, and I think the events of the present war go far to justify my opinion. It is the happy position of our Empire today that we are engaged in a war in which there is practically no difference of opinion throughout the whole length and breadth of that Empire. It is no small part of our strength that we know and believe we are right and that the whole moral and material force of the Empire is behind the army and navy of His Majesty King George. There have been wars in which that was by no means the state of things even in the old land. One of these wars was the Crimean and it seems to me to be not only a legitimate but a most helpful advantage to be derived from a debate such as this, and from a condition of war such as we find ourselves in, that we can learn the lessons that the past has to teach us. When the Crimean war was fought there were only three or four men of prominence in England who had the courage to oppose that war. The Crimean war was fought to bolster up what every one knows to-day is past bolstering up, to bolster up the rottenest thing that exists on the face of the earth—rottener even than German Imperialism—the Turkish Empire. We fought Russia to keep up Turkey. There is nobody talking of fighting Russia to keep up Turkey to-day. The fact is, the Russian bear and the British lion are both concentrated on that old bird, and when the two animals have finished with it there will not be very much of the old bird left. Let me point out that the wise men of Crimean days were Richard Cobden and John Bright, who said then that Turkey was rotten, and lost their seats in Parliament for saying it—but did not lose any of their greatness or of the lasting admiration of their countrymen. I lived a few years later to waken one fine morning and read the speech of the late Lord Salisbury in which he said, in his large, cynical way, that we now find that in the Crimean we "had put our money on the wrong horse." Everybody, of course, is in favour of the bag-and-baggage policy in regard to Turkey to-day; but when Mr. Gladstone introduced that phrase it was not safe for him to walk along the streets of London, and he had his windows broken in Harley street—because of the tremendous need of bolstering up the Turkish Empire. I offer these historical observations to encourage my hon. friend from Waterloo to get, if the need ever should arise, an even larger degree of courage than that for which we admire him.

There are a few observations in his speech which I am sure he will forgive me for adverting to. He referred to those who knew that this war was coming. Well, the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) did not know it, for he told us last summer that the war had come upon us with such alarming suddenness that it had taken all of us by surprise. No one in the British Government knew it was coming, for Mr. Lloyd George has told us since the war broke out that Germany and England were on better terms than they had been for fifteen years before, that no member of the Cabinet expected war, and that he himself had been about to go away on a holiday. So, those who knew that the war was coming were really mortals of such insignificance that their opinions did not count, and we never heard of them until my hon. friend referred to them to-day in the somewhat vague way which I have indicated.

I wish to endorse what the hon. gentleman has said as to the greatness and importance of the work done by the British navy. His words of admiration were so strong that the work of the navy would seem to have been something of a surprise to him. Well, it was not a surprise to some of us. I am one of those who never particularly admired Germany from some points of view. Neither did I ever fear her, nor did I ever doubt what would happen to her navy if she ventured it against the British navy. The difficulty is our navy has not enough to do: its difficulty is in finding the German navy. I hope I am not trenching on dangerous ground; I fear I am not as adroit as my hon. friend, but come more directly to my subject; but if he talked navy to this extent, I shall not be breaking any truce in following his example.

My hon. friend showed wonderful independence of mind, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance did in his speeches throughout the country, in adopting a very large portion of the teachings of one of the men whom I have already mentioned here this evening; I mean the teachings of Richard Cobden. If he reads Cobden's speeches my hon. friend will find that he dwelt continuously upon the need of a country in the following of a wise economic policy seeing to its production. Well, as a very humble follower of that great man, I must claim not any originality but faithfulness to my teacher in having preached for years this doctrine of more production being needed for Canada, and you can understand that when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance takes up the tale in the country and my hon. friend the hon. member for North Waterloo takes it up in this House, my heart rejoices that at last Cobden has come into, at least, some of his own. And I have no doubt that in the case of such very young men as my two friends opposite, he will come into more of his own, because they are both very good learners, and in this matter they are certainly following a very great teacher. Of course, there is this about it, the hon. member for North Waterloo has to go a great deal farther in his study of Cobden than he has yet gone, because after talking in a way that filled me with hope about increase of production, he went on to say a word or two about the "made in Canada" campaign. That was most disappointing to me. I do not think he has chosen a hopeful time to introduce that phrase into Parliament, any more than the Government in their documents have done so for I think the phrase is hinted at in some of the documents that have been put out in recent times by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I think, I say, that he has not chosen a hopeful time for introducing this phrase into Parliament. In the first place, it savours of the phrase "made in Germany," and I am a sufficiently good subject of the British Empire not to want to copy any of Germany's ideas at the present moment. I do not want to copy her fiscal ideas, anyhow; I do not want to copy her phrases. Let it be remembered, Sir, that this "made in Germany" idea takes you to the root of the whole matter; it takes you to the very defect in the German character which it is costing the world a good deal of trouble to correct. Of recent years Germany has not only been frightening off the goods of foreign nations; she has actually been trying to teach her people not to use the words of foreign nations; she has been cleansing her dictionaries of all foreign words. Facilis descensus Averni—get rid of foreign words, Germany said; keep out foreign goods. There is your pan-Germanism; there is the wrong spirit which has been instilled into the German people. I want to call attention to the fact that in the very document which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister quoted, the French Yellow Paper, in so many words the privileges conferred upon the Yunkers by protection in Germany are referred to, as at least one of the contributory causes of this war. That will be found by careful students of this French Yellow document. I do not know what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance thinks about this cry of " Made in Canada." It is not a very good method of raising revenue and I am sure my hon. friend must be giving a great deal of thought to the raising of revenue in these times. If there is one thing that is now exercising the mind of the Minister of Finance night and day, whenever he is awake, it is the question of raising revenue. If we go too far with the policy of my hon. friend the hon. member for North Waterloo, whatever is my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to do? only one course is open to him—but we will touch upon this matter, perhaps, in the debate on the Budget. If we get everything made in Canada, what is my hon. friend going to do for revenue from the tariff? Even at the present time it is not expanding as he would like to see it expand, and I think it was very wrong on the part of the mover of the Address to put these obstacles in the way of my hon. friend the Finance Minister at this particular time. Having regard to the subsequent portions of the debate, I think that the last thing I should have mentioned as an article that could be made in Canada would have been boots; I would not have said anything about boots and shoes at that moment anyhow. I do not, however, want to go further into that question. It appears that protection is a very delicate institution; its shoes may be all right for times of peace, but protection cannot stand the strain of war. I always thought protection to be a pretty seedy thing, and the light the war is throwing upon it is not improving its appearance.

There is one part of the mover's address upon which I wish to congratulate him heartily, because he spoke very sincerely, from the fullness of his heart, and I am sure that a very large number of people will be speaking in the same way before this war is over. He referred to one of the tasks in front of the Allies as the eradication of militarism. Here again he is a most hopeful disciple of Cobden. I congratulate him, and I congratulate Cobden, so long gone, upon the increase of his following. I was glad to hear that opinion endorsed by my right hon. friend and leader. I was much interested in the passage between my two right hon. friends on this question of our participation in the affairs of Empire in this very connection. I think that most certainly one of the results of this war will be that a large portion of the civilized world will seek above all other things a way past these gigantic armaments which have been and which are to-day the curse of the world. There is an old friend amongst our Latin proverbs to which there cannot be any harm in referring in this connection; the point was raised by my hon. friend anyhow. No one to-day, I think, who has any regard for his own reputation will rise before any serious body of his fellow-countrymen and say that there is any sense left in the old Latin doctrine: to be prepared for war is the best way to maintain peace. If there had been anything in that, Mr. Speaker, we had surely arrived at the millennium just before this war broke out. The fact of the matter is that this is one of the most important lessons that we can learn from the war. We on this continent of all men ought to take our share in teaching this lesson as one of the lessons of the war.. We are in the happy position of being the citizens of one great nation to the north of the forty-ninth parallel, having another great nation to the south of us. If armaments were the way to keep the peace, the three thousand-mile boundary line between these two great nations should be studded with fortresses from end to end, but we have not a fortress on the whole of that line, and we are just about to celebrate one hundred years of peace between these two great nations. We have a right, therefore, to point to that condition of affairs and to say to the backward nations of Europe: we have arrived at a better condition of civilization upon this continent and it is for you to come up to our platform and live in the more enlightened society which you can find on this side of the Atlantic.

The little dispute between my two right hon. friends might very well be left as they left it; but I was very much interested, as one who has studied the question of Imperial federation, in what I venture to call that little dispute. I was struck, when I read the Prime Minister's speeches, with his reference to the fact, by way of a very mild prophecy, that he was still hankering after a closer connection, by Imperial legislation or arrangement, with the mother country. I must say that the answer of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition this afternoon was perfect in argument and perfect in form in every way. The defence of the Prime Minister for having made his remark was very good, so far as a tu quoque defence can ever be. He defended the remark, which, after all, was a very harmless one, by stating that my right hon. friend and leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had made a similar remark eighteen years ago. I reflected that it is just possible that a successor of my right hon. friend's might make that remark eighteen years from now, and if that is all that ever comes from this scheme I cannot see, from such harmless remarks at such long intervals, any great chance of a gigantic scheme of Imperial federation being evolved. I have, on previous occasions, dwelt on this question at considerable length, and do not propose referring to it further.

There was so little of a debatable nature either in the address or in the speeches which we have heard this afternoon that, as I said to begin with, I did not rise to make any lengthy remarks. There are, however, one or two plain things that as a plain man I may be allowed to say. In my judgment, as in the war session last summer and in the interval that has elapsed from that session until now, so now, there is one paramount duty before Parliament and the country, and that paramount duty is to get behind the men in the trenches and to keep behind them. That I think to be the paramount duty of Parliament and the country. If we wanted any encouragement along these lines, we should find it by looking at what is going on in the Imperial Parliament. If we needed further stimulation along these lines we should certainly find it in the people of the old land and of the whole Empire, and we should find it in the remotest hamlets of this Dominion of Canada. I am pleased to testify, as coming from the West, that if you call a meeting anywhere there you find but one spirit at the present time: whether the meeting be for the support of the Belgian relief fund, the Patriotic fund or the Red Cross, we find every man, woman and child in arms impressed with this thought, that we are in the presence of a gigantic task and that nothing must be allowed to distract our attention from that task.

There is one rule of conduct which, as far as I am concerned as a member of this Opposition, I have laid down for myself, and that is to do nothing and say nothing that will interfere with our presenting a united front to the common foe. That is the primary duty of the Opposition as it is the primary duty of Parliament and of the country. There are, however, subsidiary duties which lead up to the discharge of the main duty, and I take it that the Address raises these subsidiary duties in a very acute form. The first of these duties is one which we shall discuss more fully upon the Budget itself: It is that of raising money; and the second is the duty, which devolves more particularly upon the Government, of expending money. With regard to the amount that the Government proposes to raise, I think I can say for the gentlemen on this side of the House that no challenge will be offered to their policy. Whatever they ask for, whatever is necessary for carrying out Canada's share in the great war in which we are engaged, we, of the Opposition, shall offer no objection. If wrong methods, according to our views, are used to raise the money, as I said to begin with, I do not conceive that war leads Parliament to abdicate any of its functions, and certainly we shall not be debarred from offering reasonable and I would hope helpful criticism of the methods of the Government in raising the money where we conceive them to be wrong.

In regard to the spending of the money, my right hon. leader hinted this afternoon that a very large sum has disappeared since last summer and that the Opposition and the country are entitled to all information which can be given with prudence by the Government as to how that money has been spent and how it has been husbanded. We cannot forego our right of reasonable criticism upon any acknowledged facts of the spending of the money; to forego such criticism would be to share the responsibility for the spending of it, and that responsibility we must absolutely decline. We are at one with the Government in the policy of spending; but if there has been waste, if there has been misappropriation, which is vastly worse than waste, we decline all responsibility. In that connection the Government alone are responsible, and at the proper time they will be brought into judgment by the people and the Parliament of Canada for any proved waste or misappropriation. I think that if one is engaged in putting out a burning building, to use a homely illustration, and gets some help to do it, one would not be too critical, if plenty of water were going on the building, if a little escaped to one side; but if some one comes along who is responsible for the putting out of the fire in the building and diverts some of the water that should be putting out the fire into his own garden plot, then that will be a case for criticism, that will be a case which the Government should look into and remedy at the earliest possible moment. However, at this juncture, having stated our position, that we decline the slightest responsibility for any such proceeding, I woud personally deprecate anything on the part of the Opposition in the way of partisan strife or the very appearance of partisan strife.

But let me say, and say very strongly, in this connection that the Government have very distinct duties as well as the Opposition. The Government must so conduct their business at this time, whether in or out of Parliament, whether in discussion or in organization, as not to provoke partisan strife or partisan criticism on the part of the Opposition. It is no use blinking our eyes to certain facts. Parliament has not been in session for six or seven months, and I do not propose to blink my eyes to some happenings to which I think it necessary in the public interest that reference should be made. The most violent form of partisan strife that can possibly be initiated in any country is a general election. I think everybody will agree that partisan discussion is at its best in a general election—or at its worst. Perhaps I ought to correct that: Perhaps it finds a lower level still in the literature that is issued prior to an election. With regard to party literature, I want to claim before this House and the country that we on this side have an absolutely clean sheet. From the moment that war broke out the bureau was closed. So far as I am concerned, I have never seen a document emanate from it since that time, of a party nature or of any other nature. Where is the laugh of my hon. friends now?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. CLARK: Can they produce a leaflet or a document? Not a single one. And I should be wanting in common manliness if I did not assert it. I am going to state something else now that is of a very different nature. When I was coming down on the train to this session of Parliament, there was handed to me a bunch an inch and a quarter thick of literature that had emanated from another bureau. I was surprised beyond measure, for I had seen nothing of it to that moment. It was handed to me with the statement that it had gone out in bunches in the fall of last year. Now, I want to say very plainly that to send such literature out in the fall of the year was simply to provoke party strife, and I trust there will be no need to make another complaint of this kind. I was amazed at the size of the full line of documents, which was entirely out of keeping with what I conceived to be the duty of the hour. A very remarkable thing is that the date of those documents synchronized with the irresponsible cries of certain shallowbrains in Toronto and elsewhere, that we ought to have another general election. I want to tell this House very plainly that, so far as I have been able to observe, at least eighty per cent of the business and common-sense people of this country were disgusted with the whole procedure. I do not know what there was in it. I do not believe for a moment that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister had any cognizance of that literature, or that he ever dreamt of a general election. I decline to believe it. How could I believe it in the presence of such an address as we had from him this afternoon, breathing the highest patriotism, the utmost sympathy with the men at the front?

And I have another reason for not believing that. For my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers) went up to Toronto about that time, and in an interview on this question stated, if the papers correctly reported him, that the idea of a general election had never entered the head of the Prime Minister. So that in declining to believe this of the Prime Minister I am well supported by the declaration of the Minister of Public Works. I notice that, with that rugged honesty which we all admire in him, he did not say anything about what had entered his own mind. He went bond for the Prime Minister, but he did not go bond for himself, and it was just himself that we should have liked to hear from. For I want to point out to him in perfect good nature that he is a little suspect in these matters, and naturally he is suspect since his confession in the House that however humble his gifts might be, it would certainly be admitted that he knew something about winning an election. I do not want to probe the matter any further, or to ask whether the idea of a general election ever entered his own mind. I think a great deal of that talk existed purely in the yellow journals of his party. Perhaps they respected my hon. friend on account of this reputation, and perhaps they had regard to the fact that that reputation received a little bit of a shock in Manitoba last summer. I do not know, but I am clear in my own mind that all that talk is mischievous and detrimental to the best interests of the country and of the Empire, and I trust we shall hear no more of it. The very talk of an election is a distraction from the single duty that ought to present itself to every citizen of the British Empire. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance knows that the business interests of this country do not require an election at the present time, and he ought to have curbed any tendency to issue such literature. I know he knows, because there was a period about a year and a half ago when he read a lecture to my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition for mentioning the very word general election at a time when the business of the country was in such a state that it could not stand a general election. With his long parliamentary experience the Minister of Finance chided my erring and youthful right hon. friend for mentioning such a matter. Are the affairs of this country better now than they were then? Would the Minister of Finance say so? I think not, and if he would not there is all the more need to repeat the lecture to the people who are responsible for his party's literature last autumn. The fact is that all this talk was most distracting and most hurtful to the common interest. The whole question of defence and of our Imperial connection, the whole question of Canada's future in regard to these questions of peace and war, is necessarily put in the melting pot by the war itself. We shall all of us be wiser to deal with these questions when we have the events of the war fully before us. For this reason alone, all partisan political strife should be laid on one side. Just think of a man talking of a general election who has any common sense of responsibility, and knows anything about our western country, who knows what a number of Germans have just come from Germany and settled in the West. The canvassing which would be done among these people in the event of a general election would be most hurtful to this nation and to the interests of the great Empire to which we belong.

I want to quote a single sentence from a speech of the very highest ability which was made by my hon. friend the Solicitor General before the Canadian Club of Winnipeg the other day, and I think I may leave it as a text not only for every member of this House, but for the thought of every citizen of Canada at this time. In a speech in which the whole question of the war was dealt with in a masterly fashion, and which it was my pleasure to read and to reread, this sentence occurred:

> For the balance of our lives the best measure of our worth will be how we behaved in this war.

That is an admirable sentiment, admirably expressed. I could conceive no greater duty than for my young friend, for whom I have the profoundest respect, to take that as a text for his speeches wherever he goes, and as a text for repetition. It is just to the extent we live up to that doctrine that we shall discharge our duties as citizens of the greatest Empire the world has even seen. The people of Canada today know they are living in an Empire of brave men, and they want to be ruled by a brave government. They want to be ruled by a government who sees its one duty and allows nothing to distract it from that duty. We with our Allies have pledged our honour, our blood, and our money to put the expatriated people of Belgium back upon their native soil. We have given pledges and hostages that we shall restore the sacredness of international treaties, that we shall put in honourable position the pledged word of peoples. Is this task not big enough for us? I take it that it is a task worthy of our Empire, and one that will tax all its resources. It is worthy of the Government of this Dominion and of the Dominion itself, and so long as the Government is true to the task it will have the strong and undivided support of hon. gentlemen who sit on this side of the House.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I do not know whether a private member should venture into this discussion, especially after the experience I had this afternoon. I was answered almost before I had stated fully the case, and then was sent to the guillotine. But, nevertheless, I do intend to say that it is my purpose, both on my own account and on account of the constituency that I represent, to do anything and everything I can to uphold the hands of the Government in acting on behalf of Canada, while backing up the Mother Country in this great struggle and that we are prepared to do anything and everything possible to secure, first of all, the rights of ourselves and the rights of the Allies, and then to bring about peace. In that connection I intend to look into the situation from a somewhat different angle, perhaps from the angle of Canada and the angle of America rather than from the angle from which most of us have been looking at it, and that is the situation in Europe. What is the supreme danger in this situation as far as we as a community on this American continent are concerned? It is this, that if Germany were to triumph, if we were to neglect our duty or to fail to play our part in this fight, we would be in danger of losing our parliamentary institutions. Just for a moment I want to trace the history of the parliamentary or democratic government that we enjoy in the Mother Country and in America.

Three hundred years ago, almost to this very year, England began to feel the misgovernment that came from an irresponsible and arbitrary sovereign, and while he at first experienced no great trouble resulting from his arbitrary conduct, still the people of England finally rose against him and the movement for responsible parliamentary government was begun. His son lost the confidence of the people of England, and was executed, and on the day that Cromwell came to power parliamentary government was established in England and great progress was made. Then there was a revulsion, a backward movement for a time, but after the interregnum there was an Act passed by Parliament, called the Act of Succession, and the important point about that is that for the first time the King of England was given a parliamentary title to his Crown. Various measures of progress were made in the next and the last century which eventuated in this that we had parliamentary government in which the voice of the people ruled, we had a wider distribution of political authority amongst the constituencies, and up to a short time ago we had almost complete parliamentary government with one thing lacking, and that has been accomplished by this present parliament in the Mother Country. Now the House of Commons is supreme and the irresponsible House of Lords has been made to respect the voice of the people as expressed in the House of Commons. To-day, for the first time in three hundred years, we have absolute and unlimited parliamentary control in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the people rule.

Gradually that principle has been extended to the Dominions beyond the seas, to Canada, to Australia, and to South Africa. We have now practically a free constitution, free parliamentary government, and the rule of the people prevails in almost all portions of the Empire, certainly within the Dominions, and nowhere in any greater degree than in the Mother Country. All that has taken three hundred years to accomplish, and the final result has only been attained within the life of the present Parliament sitting in Great Britain. We have parliamentary government with a King whose title is from Parliament, from a House of Commons that is directed by the people, by the democracy, and a House of Lords that must bow to the will of the people as expressed in the House of Commons. For the first time in the history of the world full and unlimited parliamentary government exists in the old land. We have extended that system to the Dominions; we have it here. Perhaps we will have a responsible Senate in this country before long, and when we have we will have complete parliamentary government in Canada.

Passing from that, I wish to look at this question from the point of view of the American continent. Our neighbours to the south of us, one hundred and fifty years ago almost, began to work out a democratic government or a parliamentary government, in their country, and they succeeded largely in doing so. They have democratic institutions there. They have a constitution and while it is limited it is based largely on the principle of parliamentary government and of the popular will being carried out. But just to show how it is connected up with this situation, and to make my point clearer, I want to bring the attention of the people of Canada and the United States to the menace that the military system of Germany is to these democratic institutions that we have on this continent, that we have in Canada, and to make my point I am going to read just a few sentences from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg speech delivered in 1863:

> Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.
>
> Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure.

After four score years' experience of democratic government in the United States, Abraham Lincoln said that it was a question whether these institutions could long endure because of the dissension that existed within the Union at that time. If they were in danger then from an internal dissension I say they are in greater danger to-day in view of this menace from Germany. The last sentence of that speech—and it is the greatest little short political speech in history, it is a classic, it is a cameo in the way in which it is cut—is in these words:

> From these honoured dead we take increased devotion to that cause, for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

If that menace threatened the great American Republic almost fifty years ago, if government of the people, by the people, for the people, was menaced then through internal disorders, much more so is that system of popular government menaced to-day if the Germans should succeed, because they are against government by the people, for the people. They are in favour of a government that is irresponsible. They are in favour of a parliament made up largely of landowners and noblemen not responsible to the people and if Germany should succeed in this attack that she is making on England and the Allies, she intends to turn the world upside down with respect to government, and to substitute an aristocratic government, an irresponsible king and an irresponsible chamber, even though it be called a House of Commons, composed of landowners and the nobility. It is this which not only menaces Europe, but menaces the democracy of the United States; it is one of the menaces that Lincoln foresaw when he made that prophecy in 1863. I avail myself of the opportunity of my position in this House to appeal to those who speak our language, living to the south of us, to remember that they are as much concerned in maintaining democratic institutions and parliamentary government as we are, and that the great menace to them, as well as to us, lies in the military autocracy that the Germans are preaching. I believe it is our duty as public men to point out that the great democratic people of America should be upholding with us the idea of parliamentary government. And, Sir, I appeal not only to the Americans, but even to the German people themselves. They have been threatening since this war began to impose German "Kultur" and the German military system on us. Suppose we meet that by saying: We will try and help to get you free parliamentary institutions; and, if Germany had free parliamentary institutions and democratic government as we have, there would be no menace such as to-day beclouds the entire world. We ought to try and impress upon these missionaries who are now in the United States preaching the German "Kultur" system, that the only honourable thing for Germany to do is to adopt parliamentary democratic government and abolish the autocratic system. There it is where peace lies, and it is from that angle we should seek for a way to appeal to the great mass of the German people, and to tell them that permanent peace will only come when the parliamentary system prevails in Germany as it does in Great Britain and the United States. That is the duty of the hour; that is the duty of every public man. I regret that we have not made as much as we should have made of that appeal, and I regret also that our friends in the British Parliament have failed to see the great importance of it. There is now opportunity for us all to embark in this missionary work, and to endeavour to educate the Germans along these lines. The speech of my hon. friend from Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) to-day was along that line, and the Germans of the Fatherland must be impressed when they hear the Germans of Canada saying that they value above all things parliamentary government such as we have it in this country. The glory of England to-day is that after a struggle of three hundred years parliamentary government has been established, although it is perhaps right to say that it has only seen its full fruition in very recent years.

I believe that our friends in the United States are sympathetic with us; I believe that the great majority of them are with the Allies, although sometimes people think they should have declared themselves a little more emphatically on this struggle than they have done heretofore. The President of the United States seems to take the position that they should be strictly neutral; but let me point to a certain document, bearing on the history of the United States, which I have been reading very carefully of late, and which is interesting in view of the present situation. The most significant thing in this publication of the historical documents of the United States, apart from the Gettysburg speech, is this resolution, which was passed in Congress in 1898:

9 p.m.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battleship, with two hundred and sixty-six of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbour of Havana, and can no longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April eleventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, upon which the action of Congress was invited, therefore,

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, first, that the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second, that it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Suppose that were paraphrased to read: Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than six months in Belgium have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to civilization and should no longer endure, be it resolved that it is the duty of the United States to demand and it does demand that Germany at once relinquish its government and authority in the Kingdom of Belgium, would not that be a grand stroke for democracy and civilization? I am making no charge against our neighbours to the south of us, and I want specially to avoid that, but I believe, in view of their past record, it would not have been out of place if the American people through their Government had already expressed their dissidence from what is taking place in Belgium, and their condemnation of the abhorrent conditions that have prevailed in that country since the war started. I believe, Sir, before the war is over, the United States will have to join with the Allies, and Canada, and Australia, and South Africa, and the whole English-speaking world, in asserting the principle that whatever is abhorrent to parliamentary government will not be permitted to continue in any country, whether in Europe or America, because of the danger there is in it to free parliamentary institutions.

When I have said that, I have said practically all that I have to say to the House to-night. If we wish to help the cause of peace, if we wish to stop war, to prevent it being again the menace it has been in the past, I believe we must seek to make more prevalent parliamentary institutions and democratic government. The great military systems that have been built up since nations first existed have been built up by autocratic rulers and irresponsible assemblies associated with them. Where there is democratic government, especially where there is parliamentary government in its fullest sense, such military systems are impossible. England is the world's leader in parliamentary government, and there is no menace there to human rights. That is the whole case. We may talk of the war, and of how we are to uphold the men in the trenches—and we must do everything in that direction that is necessary and in that we shall be supported I am sure by the Canadian people—but to abolish war we must extend democratic and parliamentary government. And we ought to make it clear in some way that we expect that our neighbours to the south will help us in attaining this end. They did intervene in Cuba, and with good results. They have helped to clean up things in other portions of the American continent, their action being based largely upon the assertion of democratic government and the rights of the people. And the voice of America is yet to be heard, and will be heard at its loudest and strongest in that direction. And we can appeal also to Germans in the United States, and especially to Germans in our own country, to find a way to convey to the German people the glad tidings of democracy and parliamentary government. And I believe that when the German people come to see the mistake of the political system under which they have lived and of following the Kaiser and his irresponsible associates,they will look for the cure in the establishment of complete parliamentary government. I should like to see this phase of the matter discussed in this House with a view to making some impression on the German people in the direction I have indicated.

Now, having made that statement and that appeal with a view to finding a ground upon which the people of America can stand together in upholding free institutions, I only wish to say further that I believe that this House ought to support the Government to the fullest extent in carrying on this war, even to the spending of our last dollar in upholding the cause which we all have at heart. For that cause is the cause of freedom, of Christianity, of humanity, of human uplift. We must be ready to lose everything rather than to lose our self-respect, our belief in our own ideals. And I believe the people of Canada will sustain the Government in everything they shall do in that direction. But, as has been said, we must have careful administration. We do not care what the cost is, but we want absolute efficiency. The country will back up the Government in seeking efficiency, and Canada will give her last dollar and her last man to uphold the cause of parliamentary government and democratic institutions.

[Mr. W. F. Maclean.]

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to continue the debate at length but rather to take advantage of the opportunity afforded under the rules of the House to mention one or two matters that it seems advisable to discuss at this time. I am sure every member of this House has felt more deeply within the last six or seven months the responsibility resting upon him as a representative of the people of this country. That sense of responsibility is deepened by our coming together in this Parliament at this juncture in our history. And I am sure that the addresses of the right hon. gentlemen who lead the two great parties in this House have been of such a character as to appeal to us with especial force at this time.

I desire to thank the right hon. gentleman who leads this House for the kindly reference he has made to the occupant of the vacant seat next to my own, one of my closest friends in the House, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Beland). And I am glad to know that while that hon. member has been in communication with some of us, the Prime Minister had him in mind and has been taking steps to relieve him in the position in which he has been placed in Belgium. We have to-day members of this House who are at the front, but there is only one member of the Canadian Parliament who up to this time has been wounded in the cause of liberty. It will be recalled that Dr. Beland quite voluntarily entered upon the service, which came to him in connection with his profession, of treating the wounded in the hospitals in Antwerp. In the course of that occupation he was wounded, but fortunately, not seriously. And while we sit here to-night, calmly and peacefully deliberating on what we should do to play our part in this Empire war, our friend and comrade is in the stricken city of Antwerp, perchance a prisoner of the Germans and in any case in such a position that those of us who have been his friends—and indeed all the members of the House are his friends—realize very seriously indeed, if they have never realized before, how closely this war has come home to us.

In that connection, I am glad that the consensus of opinion in this House to what has been expressed by the right hon. gentlemen who have spoken on either side—that whatever the amount may be that is sought by the Government in order to carry out our responsibilities to the Empire, that amount will be furnished by this Parliament without regard to party or to any differences of opinion on political matters in Canada. And I was pleased that the Prime Minister very frankly said that the House and the country were entitled to the fullest possible information with regard to the expenditures already made. I should regard it as most unfortunate if anything should occur in the administration of the country's funds in connection with the war which would in any way tend to lower the high ideals which we would like to see maintained by every Canadian from one end of this land to the other. Nothing would so retard the recruiting of men for the war and lessen the enthusiasm of our people as the knowledge that there was partisanship in the awarding of contracts or improprieties in the purchase of supplies. If Canada has the high ideals on this question which, I am sure, every one of us would like to see her entertain, could anything be more debasing, could anything more surely bring down the tone of our people in this serious juncture in our history, than the knowledge that partisanship was dominating the public expenditure instead of the governing motive being the considerations of the country's best interest and our duty to the common cause? I trust that hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches who have the responsibility for this matter will see that its importance is impressed upon the subordinates in the various departments.

My hon. friend and leader referred to the expenses in connection with the purchase of boots for the soldiers, and repeated the assertions which have been made in that regard in the public press of the country. I should like to call my right hon. friend's attention to the circumstances in connection with the purchase of horses. It is asserted broadly throughout the country that horses which were procured in the Maritime provinces and taken to Valcartier were found unsuitable and unfit for service; so much so that many were turned loose in the fields and were not taken on board the vessels and shipped to the other side. If that assertion is true, the country should know of it. As it is, the facts in regard to the purchase of horses and of boots are of the greatest possible importance, and I trust that the fullest information in regard to them will be brought down. I make this reference not in any partisan sense, but merely for the purpose of calling the attention of the Government to the assertions which are being made throughout the country in regard to these matters.

There is another matter to which I wish particularly to call the attention of the Government. In addition to the expenditures which are being made directly by the Government in this country, it is well understood that a very large amount of money is being spent among the various industries of Canada in the purchase of war supplies of different kinds. It is said that these purchases are being made under the direction of a special committee of council, under whose control the whole matter is placed. As a matter of fact, large orders for supplies and munitions of war have been given to various industries in Canada and are being manufactured here, and orders amounting to millions of dollars have been placed in the United States. It is well understood that the prices paid for these articles are not parsimonious prices. It is well understood that the Government—whether the home Government or the foreign governments who desired these munitions—have not quibbled about the actual cost of the articles so long as they obtained them. In all contracts let by the Canadian Government for supplies required to be manufactured, there is, under our law, what is known as the "fair wage" clause, which controls the wages paid to the men who construct or manufacture these articles or supplies. But in regard to a great many of the articles which are being manufactured for the old land and for other governments—I refer more particularly to those which have been purchased for the British Government, such as munitions of war—there is a necessity for the Government's taking steps, if the conditions which exist in connection with several industries in the Maritime provinces are any indication of the situation in other portions of the country, to see that the fair wage clause is imposed upon contractors at the time the contracts are let. I should like to call the attention of the House to a resolution which is the basis of what is known as the fair wage clause in Government contracts. It was passed in the year 1900 on the motion of Sir William Mulock, then Postmaster General, and is as follows:

> That it be resolved, that all Government contracts should contain such additions as will prevent abuses which may arise from the subletting of such contracts, and that every effort should be made to secure the payment of such wages as are generally accepted as current in each trade for competent workmen in the district where the work is carried out, and that this House cordially concurs in such policy, and deems it the duty of the Government to take immediate steps to give effect thereto. It is hereby declared that the work to which the foregoing policy shall apply includes not only work undertaken by the Government itself, but also all works aided by grant of Dominion public funds.

I turn to the report of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour for the year 1914, where I find the following with reference to these contracts:

In most of the contracts to which this policy applies, the minimum wage rates to be observed are specified in the contract. In other cases a general clause is inserted that all mechanics, labourers, or other persons employed in connection therewith shall be paid 'such wages as are generally accepted as current for competent workmen in the district, and if there is no current rate in the district, then a fair and reasonable rate, and shall not be required to work for longer hours than those fixed by the custom of the trade in the district where the work is carried on except for the protection of life or property, or in the case of other emergencies. The policy of the Government in respect of the insertion of the fair wage schedule or general fair wages clause is followed in the construction of public works of many different kinds in all parts of Canada, and also in the manufacture of certain classes of Government supplies, the operations covered by this policy amounting in the aggregate to many millions of dollars.'

Then it goes on to say:

In addition to the preparation of fair wage clauses for Government contracts, the Department of Labour has been called upon to furnish fair wage conditions for insertion in contracts for railway construction to which Parliament has granted financial aid either in the form of subsidy or guarantee.

So that these contracts for munitions of war and other supplies, if let directly by the Government of Canada, would contain the fair wage clause to which I refer. But it has been said—and this matter has been discussed in the country—that to contracts which have been let not by the Dominion Government directly, but by the committee of Council acting for foreign governments, the fair wage clause does not apply, the contracts not being let directly by the Government of Canada. Having regard to the fact that these are British Government contracts, I wish to point out in this connection that a resolution was passed on February 13, 1891, in the Imperial House of Commons under which it was provided that the fair wage clause should be included in all their contracts. The resolution was in the following terms:

That in the opinion of this House, it is the duty of the Government, in all government contracts, to make provision against the evils recently disclosed before the Sweating Committee, to insert such conditions as may prevent the abuse arising from sub-letting, and to make every effort to secure the payment of such wages as are generally accepted as current in each trade for competent workmen.

I submit, therefore, that it is open to the Committee of Council or to any other committee appointed by the Government to deal with supplies or munitions required by other governments, and particularly by the Imperial Government, and to insert in each contract a fair wage clause similar to that inserted in Dominion Government contracts, thus protecting the workingmen of Canada at this juncture and securing for them fair hours and reasonable wages.

I do not wish to go into the details of this matter further than to say that cases have come to my knowledge where industries engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war have reduced the wages of their employees as much as twenty-five per cent. This may have been due to other causes arising from the depression existing before the war began, but I submit that any contractor carrying out a contract for supplies for the Imperial Government should be asked by council to submit to the same fair wage schedule to which he would be subject if he were working for the Dominion Government.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: To what munitions of war does my hon. friend refer?

Mr. MACDONALD: Shells, more particularly.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not think the Committee of Council deals with that; the matter is controlled by a committee constituted altogether outside this Government, which is acting for the British Government in that respect.

Mr. MACDONALD: That may be so, but it is understood that the principal committee to which I refer, that is, the one concerned with the manufacture of shells, was nominated by this Government.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Nominated, I think, in the first instance, by the Minister of Militia.

Mr. MACDONALD: I brought the question up for the purpose of asking the Government to see that by either the Committee of Council that is to deal with the matter or by any other committee that has been selected by them to overlook or deal with Imperial contracts, the fair wage clause, which would be placed in a contract if it were placed by the Imperial Government for work to be constructed in England or by the Canadian Government for work to be constructed in Canada, would be inserted in these contracts for the protection of the employees.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not very familiar with the work of the committee which consists of a number of business men throughout the country who undertook to ascertain whether or not these articles could be manufactured in Canada; the only way in which the matter has come to my knowledge is that with respect to, I think, one firm representations were made on behalf of labour interests, to the effect that the rate of wage was not quite adequate. I think there are about 60 firms or companies engaged in this work. So far as I remember, there were complaints in regard to only one, and that was not in the Maritime provinces. The representations that were received were communicated to the chairman of the committee, and he was asked to give consideration to them and to get into touch with the particular firm or company with reference to which complaint had been made.

Mr. MACDONALD: I am glad to know that my right hon. friend is in a position to deal with these cases when they arise. If a formal request with reference to a particular case is necessary in order to enable my right hon. friend to remove the difficulty, I can supply that by correspondence. My object would be attained if I had assurance from my right hon. friend that he will see that the request I have made in regard to this matter is carried out and the fair wage schedule is observed by those various committees just as if they were contracts with the Federal Government.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not quite sure as to our power to insert the fair wage clause in such contracts; the principals for whom we are acting would have to be consulted. Any representations that are made will be given the best consideration in our power.

Mr. MACDONALD: There is a fair wage schedule in regard to Imperial Government contracts, which was, in fact, the basis of the fair wage schedule in Canada; so between the two the difficulty ought to be avoided, and it ought to be possible to guarantee the employees of these various industries of the country a continuation of their employment at reasonable wages and without an increase in the number of hours.

I was very glad to see, in an address delivered in the Maritime provinces, that my eloquent friend Mr. Rowell, leader of the Opposition in Ontario, whose activity in his public addresses upon the subject of the war has been most worthy of comment and whose ability in dealing with the various phases of this question has been attracting the attention of the Canadian public, had ventured to say that he hoped that one result of this war in the after days, when the readjustments would necessarily take place and peace would come after victory had perched upon our banners, would be the inclusion of the colony of Newfoundland in the Dominion of Canada. In 1866 and in 1867 the fathers of Confederation saw the importance and desirability of including the whole of British North America in the federation which was then formed and which has existed without that colony during the ensuing years. The machinery for the inclusion of that colony is provided in the British North America Act. One does not need to enter into a discussion as to why it was never perfected. In 1884 an occasion arose when Newfoundland came to the Government of that day; and I may say, speaking without any partisanship, that hon. gentlemen on both sides and the press of this country have agreed that it was a most regrettable fact that the Government of that day was so parsimonious in dealing with the older colony that they prevented Newfoundland from entering into Confederation at that time. Conditions, it would seem as days go by, would point to the probability of the whole federation being rounded out within a short time by the inclusion of Newfoundland. When one contemplates the ambitions and ideals of the fathers of this Dominion and when one realizes that this most ancient colony within the Empire is but the outpost of this Dominion, that it stands as a sentry almost guarding the great St. Lawrence; that here in Canada, in order to ensure safety of navigation on the St. Lawrence in summer and from Nova Scotia in the winter, we have to maintain in this colony, which has no rights in this Dominion, our life-saving stations and lighthouses and all the provisions necessary for safe navigation; that we have there a colony with very great wealth in minerals and timber and fisheries; and that, having regard to that unity and nationality within the Empire which will become all the more necessary and all the more important when one views the position of this war and its consequences, I would like to impress upon the House and the country the suggestion made by Mr. Rowell, and to say to the Prime Minister that if it is feasible under existing conditions, or conditions which may be imminent within a very short time, to negotiate with that ancient colony, he should not be niggardly in dealing with it; and I am quite sure that those of us on this side of the House would regard my right hon. friend as doing that which was eminently proper and right if he dealt generously with the people of the colony when an opportunity to bring it into Confederation arose. I regard the duty of Canada in that respect as one not merely of importance to Canada as a whole, but of the utmost importance to the Empire, having regard to its permanence and perpetuity in the days yet to come.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I wish to make a correction of a statement I made a few moments ago. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour tells me that representations did come to him with respect to one of the firms or companies in the Maritime provinces. I also understand that arrangements are likely to be made for such a clause as my hon. friend alludes to being included in any contract if necessary.

Motion agreed to.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the said Address be engrossed and presented to His Royal Highness the Governor General by such members of this House as are of the Honourable the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to.

ESTIMATES FOR 1915-16.

A message from His Royal Highness the Governor General transmitting estimates for the year ending March 31, 1916, was presented by Hon. W. T. White, read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and, on motion of Mr. White, referred to the Committee of Supply.

THE BUDGET.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Finance Minister): I beg to announce that it is my intention to bring down the Budget on Thursday. If my right hon. friend desires the adjournment of the debate on that day, we shall be very glad to meet his wishes.

Mr. WILLIAM PUGSLEY: Matters are evidently going to move pretty rapidly in the way of getting into the Estimates, and if my right hon. friend has no objection I should like to have laid on the table of the House before the Estimates are considered the names of the agents or subagents or assistants who have been appointed on the recommendation of this Government or of any minister to make purchases for the British Government of ammunition and other war supplies both in the United States and Canada. If I were to move for this information in the ordinary way, I should probably not get it until too late to be made use of. I have information that agents appeared in the city of New York representing the British and Canadian Governments—the same gentlemen in each case—and made purchases for the British Government of war supplies in very large quantities, and I think it is highly desirable that the Government should submit the names of the agents. I may also say in this connection that a communication has appeared, emanating ostensibly from the Government, claiming that certain persons falsely represented themselves as agents. The whole matter is one of very considerable interest, and I should be very glad if my hon. friend would consider giving the House the names of these agents without my having to make a motion in the ordinary way.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I have no recollection of our having appointed agents to purchase for the British Government. So far as I recollect, they appointed their own agents; but I will make inquiries on the subject, and if there are any names to be mentioned I will submit them to the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I shall be very glad if my right hon. friend will do so, and I shall be pleased to give him the information I have on the subject. Certain gentlemen undoubtedly did represent themselves to be agents of the British Government, and the same gentlemen were also agents of the Canadian Government in other purchases, and induced manufacturers to deal with them as representing both the Canadian and the British Governments. I understand that vast quantities of ammunition were purchased through these gentlemen.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Does the Minister of Finance propose to give shortly a statement of any sums advanced by the Treasury under the legislation passed in the special session of August, enabling the Government to make advances on securities?

Mr. WHITE: Under the Finance Act of last session advances may be made to banks on approved security. Is that the legislation my hon. friend refers to?

Mr. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. WHITE: I shall consider whether we shall lay upon the table particulars respecting advances so made to banks, but if my hon. friend would like to inform himself as to the particulars in the meantime, I shall be very glad to give him any information available. What I have in mind was whether I shall bring down full information. I believe it was not done before.

Mr. MACLEAN: I would like to inquire further if when the Minister delivers his financial statement on Thursday, or before that, he proposes to give to Parliament some statement generally, or with some particularity, showing the war expenditures under the vote of $50,000,000 made last year. I understood the Prime Minister to say this afternoon that he would give Parliament that information, and it will be necessary that we should have it some time soon. Possibly the Minister proposes to make that statement in his Budget. If not, we should have it shortly.

Mr. WHITE: It is not my intention to give details of war expenditure in the Budget. That would be quite an undertaking, but my right hon. friend the Prime Minister this afternoon promised to bring down the information, as I understood, and no doubt he will have it in charge.

Mr. MACLEAN: We would like to know whether the full amount of the $50,000,000 is expended.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, the full amount has not been expended, and I may say that further information in regard to it will be laid on the table of the House within a day or two in printed form.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

Tuesday, February 9, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Joseph Adelard Descarries, Esq., for the Electoral District of Jacques Cartier, introduced by the Hon. T. Chase Casgrain and Hon. Louis Coderre.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

The Civil Service List of Canada, 1914.—Hon. Louis Coderre.

Report of the Secretary of State of Canada for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. Louis Coderre.

Statement of Governor General's Warrants issued since the last session of Parliament on account of 1914-1915.—Hon. W. T. White.

Statement of Expenditure on account of Unforeseen Expenses, from August 18, 1914, to February 4, 1915.—Hon. W. T White.

Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. W. T. White.

Report of the Ottawa Improvement Commission for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. W. T. White.

Statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Royal Society of Canada for the year ended April 30, 1914.—Hon. W. T. White.

Statement of Civil Service Superannuation and Retiring allowances for the year ended December 31, 1914.—Hon. W. T. White.

Shareholders in Chartered Banks as of date December 31, 1913.—Hon. W. T. White.

Public Accounts of Canada for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. W. T. White.

ELECTION OF DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That Albert Sevigny, Esq., member representing the electoral district of Dorchester, be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

He said: Mr. Sevigny is a young member of this House, and young also in years. Since his entrance into the House he has displayed qualities which admirably adapt him to fill the important position for which he is now proposed. He combines a perfect knowledge of that language which is his mother tongue with an excellent command of English, and it is with every confidence that I submit his name to the House as the selection for Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not rise with any intention at all of opposing the election of the hon. member for Dorchester to the chairmanship of the Committee of the Whole House. I am prepared to agree that Mr. Sevigny is a young member well qualified in many ways to fill that position. But what will the electors of Dorchester say when they hear that Mr. Sevigny is no longer to champion the policy he was elected upon? Like yourself, Sir, Mr. Sevigny when elected will be an arbiter between the two parties in this House. The moment he takes the Chair to preside over the deliberations of this House he is supposed—and I hope the supposition will not be a vain one—to be absolutely without politics.

It is said that he will not be able to take part in any political fight. In this I hope he will not follow in the footsteps of his predecessor, who did not scruple to take part in any political fight although occupying the position that the hon. member for Dorchester is going to occupy. But I believe that, if the electors of Dorchester are in the same frame of mind that they were in at the time of the general elections in 1911, they will be very much aggrieved when they hear that the young man to whom they gave their entire confidence then, and who was pledged to obtain in this Parliament the repeal of the Naval Service Act, will henceforth make no effort in that direction. Henceforth not a word will be heard from the hon. member for Dorchester against the Naval Service Act.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What will the Government do without him?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not know, however, that the position which he is about to occupy will change his attitude very much in this respect because the hon. member for Dorchester is entitled to the compliment that the moment he came into this House where he happened to sit upon the side of the Government, his views on the Naval Service Act underwent a very severe change. If my memory serves me, one of the first things the hon. gentleman did after he entered this House was to give notice of a Bill to repeal the Naval Service Act; but I am not aware that he ever presented such a Bill. I think he made one inquiry, whether it was the intention of the Government to repeal the Act or not, but as yet they have not done it. Be this as it may, whatever the change of heart of my hon. friend may be, it is apparent that henceforth he is to allow the Naval Service Act to be applied without being able to utter a word against it. I give credit to my hon. friend for having had a change of heart in this respect, and if he again goes before the electors of Dorchester he will understand that after all the straight path is the best, and that it is better in Opposition as well as in Government to do the best that is to be done for the country.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I entirely agree with one of my right hon. friend's observations, namely, that the electors of Dorchester on any future occasion will be very much of the same mind as they were in 1911, and I think—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Good-bye to the Naval Act, then.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That it may be said of my hon. friend from Dorchester that he has at least made as much progress in accomplishing the repeal of the Naval Service Act as my right hon. friend did after 1896 in destroying that protection against which he made so many vows. If my right hon. friend has seen fit to introduce the subject of changes of opinion upon public questions, I can only say that my hon. friend from Dorchester has a long record to fill up before he shall be able to emulate my right hon. friend.

Motion agreed to.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (St. Lawrence, Montreal): moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Criminal Code. He said: I want to say that capital punishment is murder, and that it is morally indefensible in any Christian land. It is a relic of the dark, pestilential days of Nero.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is starting on a course that will take him away from the well-understood rule of the House that a simple explanation only is in order at this stage.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I was just coming to that, Sir. I think I am safe in saying that the time has arrived when it is the bounden duty of this Government and Parliament to give consideration to this grave question, which is daily growing in importance all over the world—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Not just now.

Mr. BICKERDIKE:—especially in the Christian nations. The purpose of the Bill is to abolish capital punishment in the Dominion of Canada and to substitute life imprisonment for the different crimes for which capital punishment is provided under our present Criminal Code. The opinion has gained ground very rapidly of recent years that the death penalty is nothing more or less than legalized, brutal murder. I am aware that there are a number of members of this House who look upon capital punishment as a deterrent. I hope that I shall be able to prove, when the Bill comes up for its second reading, that it is not a deterrent. If we were honest in saying that it is a deterrent, then all executions should be made as public as possible; and if they are to be regarded as an object lesson to the community, then we should have a hanging bee in the public square. If capital punishment is to be regarded as an object lesson, then we had better have this exhibition where every man, woman and child will be able to see all the ghastly proceedings. I trust that every hon. member of this House who votes against my amendment will feel a sense of personal guilt if Canada continues to stand before the world as a barbarous country.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not confining himself to an explanation of the Bill.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Any further remarks I have to offer, with your permission, I will defer until such time as the second reading is called.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member, it appears, has not a copy of his Bill at hand, and therefore it will be obliged to stand.

Motion allowed to stand.

STEAMBOAT RATES BILL.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 3, to amend the Railway Act. He said: The Bill is very similar to the one I introduced last year requiring steamship companies to file their rates of toll and tariff arrangements with the Railway Board. At the present time steamships run in connection with railways are required to file with the Board of Railway Commissioners their rates, tolls and tariff arrangements, while all other steamboats, of which we have 8,500 in Canada, are allowed to make use of our inland waters and to charge the producers, manufacturers and shippers whatever tolls they wish.

They are perfectly free to call at any port, or at no port, as they choose. One clause of this Bill brings the steamships under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board. Another clause gives the Railway Board control over privileges granted by railway companies to shippers and manufacturers. Certain privileges are granted to speculators, such as enabling a man buying 25,000 bushels of grain at Winnipeg and shipping it, to hold it up in transport at Port Arthur or elsewhere, thus monopolizing the rolling stock of the railway and interfering with transportation. Certain privileges are also granted to municipalities immediately outside some of our large cities, where railway men are directly interested in real estate, and where they are apt to have the trains stop. The Bill provides that matters of this kind shall be placed under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, so that a remedy may be applied.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXPORTATION OF NICKEL BILL.

MR. SPEAKER'S RULING.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Bill on the Order Paper to regulate the exportation of nickel was reserved yesterday for my ruling. After a careful consideration of the Rules of the British House of Commons and of the Canadian House of Commons, I have reached the conclusion that this Bill is of such character that it should come under Rule 50, which provides:

> No Bill relating to trade, or the alteration of the laws concerning trade, is to be brought into this House, until the proposition shall have been first considered in a Committee of the Whole House and agreed unto by the House.

It appears to me quite clear that a Bill to regulate or restrict the export of nickel is a Bill relating to trade within the meaning of this rule (Bourinot, p. 633). Mr. Speaker Cockburn held that the term 'trade' included exporting goods, and in 1911, upon the question of the introduction of the Bill to amend the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, Mr. Speaker Marcil held that it was a Bill relating to trade within the meaning of Rule 50, and must be introduced upon resolution, and last year the Bill relating to the exportation of petroleum was introduced upon resolution (Journals of the House of Commons, volume 46, page 125, and Journals of the House of Commons, volume 49, page 157).

It is true that the Bill to regulate the export of electric power and natural gas, chapter 16 of the Statutes of 1907, was introduced, in 1906, by Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, and in 1907 by Sir Allen Aylesworth, without a resolution, but in both instances this would seem to have been the result of inadvertence, and no exception was taken to what I conceive to have been an irregularity.

I would also point out that in the session of 1911 the House decided that it was necessary with respect to three Bills—one relating to the importation, etc., of white phosphorus matches, one relating to the importation, etc., of explosives, and the other to the importation, etc., of opium—that they must be introduced upon resolution.

HORN EXTRADITION CASE.

Mr. P. MICHAUD (Victoria, N.B.): I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the following, which is published in the Ottawa Citizen of this morning:

Machias, Me., Feb. 8.—Werner Horn, who maintains that his recent attempt to blow up the Canadian end of the international railway bridge near Vanceboro was an act of war, tonight retained Daniel T. O'Connell, of Boston, as counsel. The attorney will look after Horn's interests in connection with the effort of the Canadian Government to obtain the extradition to the Dominion of the man who claims that he was formerly an officer in the German army.

Horn is now serving a sentence of thirty days in the county jail here for damage to property on the American side of the border caused by the explosion.

Does the Prime Minister know anything about this serious incident, and has he taken any steps in the matter?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Government of course has information of the incident. The Department of Justice has the matter in hand, and has taken the necessary measures with regard to extradition.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

TRANSCONTINENTAL INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What was the total expenditure in connection with the Transcontinental Investigation Commission?

2. How much was paid to F. P. Gutelius for his services in connection with the said investigation, including travel and outlay?

3. What was the date of his appointment to the said commission, and how many days was he employed in connection with the sittings of said commission?

4. Was the said F. P. Gutelius in the employ of the Intercolonial railway during any part of the time that he was acting on the said commission? If so, did he receive any remuneration during that time from the Intercolonial railway, and how much?

5. What is the gross amount that has been paid to the said F. P. Gutelius for his services in connection with the said commission, and also as general manager of the Intercolonial railway since the date of his appointment to December 31, 1914?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $65,668.18.

2. Services, $25,870. Travel and outlay, $1,595.48.

3. (a) January 29, 1912; (b) 398 days.

4. No.

5. (a) $27,465.48, gross amount; (b) amount paid Mr. Gutelius for services by the Intercolonial Railway, between May 1, 1913, and December 31, 1914, $33,303.33.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—GUYSBOROUGH BRANCH.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Did the Department of Railways and Canals survey a branch railway in Guysborough county during 1914?

2. Has the survey been completed?

3. Has a report been made to the minister?

4. What is the name and post office address of the engineer who had charge of the work, and what are the names and post office addresses of the members of his staff, and the daily or monthly wages paid to each?

5. How many men were employed on said survey, and what are their names, post office addresses and rate of wages?

6. What is the total cost of said survey to date?

7. What is the maximum grade between the town of Guysborough and the Straits of Canso, as ascertained by said survey?

8. What is the maximum grade between Sunny Brae and the town of Guysborough?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Four location engineers: J. M. Millar, Halifax; D. J. Bergin, Moncton, in charge reconnaissance engineer; J. H. Congdon, Dartmouth; H. S. Clarke, St. Catharines, Ont. Rate, $150 per month. There were employed on the staffs of these engineers from time to time at the rates mentioned per month:

J. A. Rankins, Port Hawkesbury, N.S.	$ 90
H. L. Currie, Fredericton Jct., N.B.	75
R. R. Beebe, Moncton, N.B.	90
G. R. McGrane, Montreal, P.Q.	45
H. Taylor, Fredericton, N.B.	45
F. G. McLellan, Moncton, N.B.	50
H. McAnn, Moncton, N.B.	35
J. M. Wortman, Salisbury, N.B.	45

Ernest McCully, Hawkesbury, N.S.	$ 35
H. N. Bradley, Montreal, P.Q.	75
F. H. Rowe, Moncton, N.B.	60
F. N. Chadwick, Ottawa, Ont.	60
S. W. Kennedy, Toronto, Ont.	90
R. L. Waycott, Hawkesbury, N.S.	90
C. A. McNearny, Halifax, N.S.	75
P. Buteau, Montreal, P.Q.	60
L. A. Johnson, Westmount, P.Q.	50
C. G. Reade, Teddington, Eng.	50
S. S. Jones, Montreal, P.Q.	45
L. W. W. Sass, Montreal West, P.Q.	45
W. M. Killally, Montreal, P.Q.	35
J. O. Leblanc, College Bridge, N.B.	30
W. O. Hearn, Moncton, N.B.	35
C. H. Patterson, Salisbury, N.B.	50
Geo. Bishop, Dorchester, N.B.	45
W. H. Crandall, Moncton, N.B.	50
F. Boileau, Moncton, N.B.	50
A. W. Fraser, Halifax, N.S.	50
Geo. E. Dowling, Aspen, N.S.	75
John A. Jackson, Chatham, N.B.	50
H. W. Humphrey, Moncton, N.B.	30
R. B. Herrington, Salisbury, N.B.	45
V. H. Carruthers, Grand Falls, N.B.	60
A. A. Burke, Lo, Moncton, N.B.	45
R. D. Huddart, New Glasgow, N.S.	50
J. H. Hart, Hawkesbury, N.S.	45
R. E. Wortman, Salisbury, N.B.	35
J. McNeil and team, Hawkesbury, N.S.	100
Angus McDonald, Hawkesbury, N.S	35
Bruno Desserault, Ste. Geneviève de Batiscan	60
E. Hart, Hawkesbury, N.S.	30
W. Yorke, Parrsboro, N.S.	35
Alex. O'Brien, Antigonish, N.S.	35
W. Nevin, Halifax, N.S.	30
B. Belliveau, College Bridge, N.S.	40
F. Wheaton, Parrsboro, N.S.	60
D. McWhirter, Moncton, N.B.	30
B. Hart, Hawkesbury, N.S.	35
J. Duff, Hawkesbury, N.S.	35
W. Cunningham and team, Boylston, N.S.	125
J. R. McDonald and team,, Guysborough Co., N.S.	125
G. W. Torry and team, Guysborough Co., N.S.	125
D. R. McDonald, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
N. Hattie, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
W. Cummins, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
J. Kirke, Pictou, N.S.	40
A. Hudson, Pictou Co., N.S.	40
C. Smith, Pictou Co., N.S.	35
T. McKean and team, Guysborough Co., N.S.	125
G. Scranton, Guysborough Co., N.S.	35
N. McMullen, Pictou Co., N.S.	40
J. Fraser, Pictou Co., N.S.	40
A. W. Cameron, Pictou Co., N.S.	40
E. B. Cameron, Pictou, Co., N.S.	40
G. Tait, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
E. McKeen, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
F. Mills, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
N. Gunn and team, Pictou Co., N.S.	125
A. Mason, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
B. Gunn, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
E. McDonald, Guysborough Co., N.S.	40
H. McIsaac, Guysborough Co., N.S.	30
Allan Grant, Hawkesbury, N.S.	35

5. Seventy-seven men, including the four location engineers. See No. 4, for names and rate of wages.

6. $20,553.60 to January 31, 1915.

7. Six-tenths per cent.

8. Six-tenths per cent.

H.M.C. SHIPS NIOBE AND RAINBOW.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Referring to the following statement on page eight of the report of the Department of Naval Service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1914, viz.:

'Owing to the decision of the Government not to continue H.M.C. ships Niobe and Rainbow in full commission, the course of exercises and training for these ships has been discontinued, and they are at present manned by nucleus crews.'

At what date was the decision referred to in the above paragraph arrived at?

2. Was the said decision expressed in an order in council, or other written document or memorandum?

3. If so, will the full text of the said decision be laid before Parliament?

Mr. HAZEN: No formal action or decision of this sort was taken and no order in council in reference thereto was passed, but owing to the gradually decreasing number of men on these vessels it was found necessary to take the ships out of full commission and place them on a nucleus basis.

CLOSE SEASON FOR LOBSTERS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What reply was given by the Government to the application of the lobster packers of the Maritime provinces, asking for the close season for lobster packing during the year 1915?

2. Was the question submitted to the Fisheries Advisory Board?

3. Has a decision been reached? If so, what is the decision?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. That before it would be feasible to consider such an application it would be necessary for the department to have before it a a practically unanimous request from the canners and fishermen as well in favour of the proposal.

2. No.

3. Yes. That lobster fishing will not be prevented and that lobster canneries will be licensed as usual.

CANADA SHIPPING REGISTRY.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. How many vessels of all kinds were withdrawn from the Canadian Shipping Registry since July 1, 1914?

2. What is the gross tonnage of such vessels?

3. What are the countries to the registry of which such vessels were transferred?

4. What is the number and tonnage of all vessels added to the Canadian Shipping Registry since July 1, 1914?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Twenty-two vessels of all kinds.

2. Gross tonnage 28,791.

3. Three to Newfoundland; three to Barbados; one to France; fourteen to United States of America; one to Spain.

4. One hundred and twenty-seven steamers of 45,026 gr. tons; 67 sailing of 20,816 gr. tons; total 194 vessels of 65,842 gr. tons.

ST. JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Is the Intercolonial railway operating any portion of the Valley railway, so called, in New Brunswick? If so, between what stations?

2. Is the said railway being operated by the Intercolonial railway between Fredericton and Gagetown? If not, why not?

3. Is not the railway completed between Fredericton and Gagetown for a distance of about thirty miles?

4. Is the present operation under the statutes and leases made in 1912?

5. What proportion of the gross receipts, under present arrangements, goes to the railway company and the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes; between Fredericton and Centreville.

2. No; not required under the statutes.

3. Not completed to statute requirements.

4. No.

5. The gross receipts are not proportioned between the railway and the province.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BATHURST HARBOUR SPUR LINE.

Mr. TURGEON:

Is it the intention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to build a spur from the Intercolonial railway at Bathurst to the harbour at the earliest practical moment?

Mr. COCHRANE: The matter is under consideration.

BATHURST HARBOUR DREDGING.

Mr. TURGEON:

1. What is the lowest depth of water at low tide at present in Bathurst harbour?

2. Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to proceed further with dredging in Bathurst harbour during next season?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. There is a depth of 14 feet, at low water, in that portion of the channel which has been worked over.

2. It is not customary to give such information until the Estimates are submitted to Parliament.

Mr. TURGEON:

What was the amount of dredging by cubic yard done by the contractors in Bathurst harbour during the months of May, June, July, August, September, October and November, 1914, and what amount of money was paid to them for each month?

Mr. ROGERS: The Northern Dredging and Construction Company in 1914:

	Removed cubic yards.	Paid.
May	8,154	$ 1,908 04
June	56,841	13,300 79
July	78,972	18,479 45
August	66,505	26,646 13
September	70,543	19,703 42
October	65,682	*12,000 00
November	43,751	.....
		$92,037 83

* On account.

Mr. TURGEON:

What is the amount of dredging by cubic yard done in Bathurst harbour by the Government dredge Restigouche during the summer of 1914?

Mr. ROGERS: The Government dredge Restigouche removed 87,407 cubic yards during the summer of 1914.

MIZONNETTE LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. TURGEON:

1. To whom was the contract awarded for the building of the lighthouse at Mizonnette, Gloucester county, N.B., and what was the price of contract?

2. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Samuel Gammon, carpenter and builder, of Bathurst, N.B., $2,700.

2. Yes.

ANTIGONISH-SHERBROOKE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. WILLIAM CHISHOLM:

1. Has the contract for the mail service between Antigonish and Sherbrooke, N.S., been awarded? If so, to whom and at what figure?

2. When were tenders called, and up to what date were they received?

3. Who were the persons tendering for said service and at what figures respectively?

4. If the contract has not been awarded, why not?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Tenders were invited and were due at the department on the 11th December last. Seven out of a total of nine tenderers asked permission to withdraw their tenders. In these circumstances the department considered it in the public interest to invite tenders again, and instructions have been given to that effect.

MAIL BAG LOCKS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. How many padlocks for mail bags have been ordered by the Post Office Department from the 1st of January, 1914, to the 1st January, 1915?

2. What is the name of the firm to which said contract was awarded and the price paid?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. No order for locks for mail bags was given by the Post Office Department from the 1st January, 1914, to the 1st January, 1915. Ten thousand locks were ordered during the previous year, 1913, but as they were not satisfactory they were rejected and returned to the contractor, who was requested to replace these locks by locks that would meet with the approval of the department. These locks have been delivered during the period above mentioned.

2. The Ontario Equipment Company, of Ottawa, and the price paid was seventy-five cents per lock and eighteen cents for each key.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Sinclair.—For a copy of all correspondence, petitions, departmental recommendations and other papers and documents in the Department of Marine and Fisheries relating to the definition of a 'coasting voyage,' as defined in the Canada Shipping Act since the revision of the Statutes in 1886.

Mr. Turgeon.—For a copy of all accounts of the transfer of the storm signal at Shippigan, N.B., from its former position on land to the public wharf, showing the total cost of said transfer during the months of October and November in 1911.

Mr. Lemieux.—For a copy of all papers, petitions, letters and telegrams exchanged between the Quebec Board of Trade and the Department of Railways and Canals concerning the circulation of trains on that section of the National Transcontinental railway between Cochrane and Quebec city.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden the House adjourned at 3.45 p.m.

Wednesday, February 10, 1915.

The House met at Two o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 4, respecting The Alberta Central Railway Company.—Mr. Michael Clark.

Bill No. 5, respecting The Athabasca and Grand Prairie Railway Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 6, respecting the Brantford and Hamilton Electric Railway Company.—Mr. Barker.

Bill No. 7, respecting the British Columbia and White River Railway Company.—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 8, respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 9, respecting the Essex Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Wilcox.

Bill No. 10, respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. E. M. Macdonald.

Bill No. 11, respecting the Hudson Bay, Peace River and Pacific Railway Company, and to change its name to 'Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company.'—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

Bill No. 12, to amend The Independent Order of Foresters Consolidated Act.—Mr. Glass.

Bill No. 13, respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill No. 14, to ratify and confirm a certain agreement between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill No. 15, respecting certain patents of Duncan Donald McBean.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 16, respecting The Title and Trust Company, and to change its name to 'Chartered Trust and Executor Company.'—Mr. Nesbitt.

Bill No. 17, respecting The Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL.

Bill No. 18, to amend the Criminal Code—Mr. Robert Bickerdike (St. Lawrence, Montreal)—introduced and read the first time.

TITLE TO REAL ESTATE BILL.

Mr. GEO. E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 19, to amend the Criminal Code. He said: The Bill is to protect purchasers of real estate who have paid in full for lands and are unable to get title. It is intended to apply particularly to cases where the person selling has bought under an agreement of sale and still owes money on the lands which he has sold and has no title except the agreement. It frequently happens that such a vendor does not use the money which he receives from his sale in getting title, but uses it for some other purpose. For this reason the man to whom he has sold and who has paid the purchase money cannot get title to the land nor can he get back the money which he has paid for it. It is obvious that, until such a vendor has himself acquired title, the moneys which he receives, unless devoted to that purpose, should be treated as trust moneys. The purpose of the Bill is to fix them with that character. It is an accepted principle of law that a person who has title to lands, sells them under contract, and has received the purchase money, holds the lands in trust for the purchaser until he gives title. The Bill would require him to hold the moneys in trust for the buyer if he could not give title. The Bill proposes to add a subsection to section 390 of the Criminal Code respecting criminal breaches of trust, as follows:

Every one who contracts to sell real property and has not in himself the title which he has contracted to give to the purchaser, shall hold any moneys received by him on account of the purchase price, in trust for the purchaser, unless such moneys have been paid by the vendor in acquiring such title. Any violation of this subsection shall be deemed a criminal breach of trust within the meaning of this section.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

WAR CONTRACTS—PURCHASE OF BOOTS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. From what firms have the boots supplied by the Militia Department for the first expeditionary force been purchased?
2. By whom have they been reported upon?
3. What is the price to be paid for them?

Major General HUGHES:

1. From Ames, Holden, McCready Ltd., Montreal, $3.85 per pair; Tetrault Mfg. Co., Montreal, $3.85 per pair; The Slater Shoe Co., Montreal, $3.85 per pair; Louis Gauthier Co., Quebec, $3.85 per pair; John Macpherson Co., Hamilton, $3.85 per pair; Hartt Boot and Shoe Co,. Fredericton, $3.66 2-3 per pair; Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., N.S., $3.80 per pair.

2. The boots were inspected as follows: Those of Ames, Holden, McCready and Slater Shoe Co., by J. Prenter and W. Wilson; those of Tetrault Mfg. Co., by W. Silver and A. E. Baldwin; those of L. Gauthier Co., by W. Jacques. This inspection was made in the contractors' factories. Boots made by the John Macpherson Co,. Hartt Boot and Shoe Co. and Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., were sent direct to Valcartier camp without previous inspection at the factory.

3. Answered by 1.

[Mr. McCraney.]

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Has an investigation been made regarding the quality of the boots supplied to the Department of Militia and Defence for the use of the Canadian volunteers?
2. If so, who made this investigation and has the inquiry been closed?
3. Will the results of the inquiry be laid before Parliament?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Yes.

2. Board appointed by the Minister of Militia. The inquiry has been closed.

3. Yes.

REGISTRATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

How many aliens were enrolled at the various Government offices opened for that purpose since the 4th of August, 1914?

Major General HUGHES: Quebec, 8,845; Ontario, 7,571; New Brunswick, 52; Nova Scotia, 1,300; Manitoba, 5,521; Saskatchewan, 1,416; Alberta, 2,350; British Columbia, 1,310; Yukon Territory, 55; total, 28,420. Internments, 1904. Grand total, 30,324.

INSPECTION OF PICKLED FISH.

Mr. HAZEN:

1. What are the names, addresses and salaries of officers appointed in Nova Scotia under chapter 45, 4-5 George V, 'An Act to provide for the Inspection and Branding of Pickled Fish?'
2. How many barrels and packages of fish were inspected during the year 1914?
3. Have rules and regulations been prescribed for the carrying out of the provisions of the said Act?
4. Will the Minister of Marine and Fisheries attach a copy to the replies to the foregoing?

1. None have been appointed up to the present.

2. None, as the Act does not come into operation until May 1, 1915.

3. Yes.

4. Copy of regulations filed with clerk of the House.

ALBERTA OIL LEASES.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. What was the total amount received by the Dominion Government for oil leases in Alberta during the years 1913 and 1914?

Mr. ROCHE: 1. The total amount received by the Dominion Government for oil leases in Alberta during the years 1913 and 1914 was $1,445,130, made up as follows: During 1913, on Dominion lands, $266,838.48; on school lands, $22,216.40. During 1914, on Dominion lands, $1,052,669.35; on school lands, $103,405.77.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Buchanan: For a return showing how much money was spent amongst the merchants of the city of Medicine Hat for government relief, to whom payments were made, and the total amount in each case.

Mr. Buchanan: For a return showing the quantity of coal imported into Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, respectively, from the United States in 1914, and the amount of duty collected in each province for coal imported during 1914.

SEED GRAIN FOR WESTERN FARMERS.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina) asked for leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the question of supplying seed grain to the farmers of the western provinces.

And leave having been granted,

He said: I have no apology to offer for bringing this question to the attention of the House at this early stage in the session. That the matter is of great importance and urgency cannot be disputed. It has been the policy of all governments in Canada to supply seed grain to the farmers of the West in case of need. That has been done on two or three occasions during my residence in western Canada. In 1908 and on previous occasions seed grain was supplied to farmers on unpatented lands, under certain restrictions. The Government, however, proceeded on the assumption that men who had not yet got their patents for their homesteads were really wards of the Dominion, and for that reason no question whatever was raised as to the proper policy to be pursued by the Dominion Government, no matter which party was in power. I desire to put before the House briefly some of the facts in connection with the conditions at present obtaining in western Canada, in order to show to the Government, to the House, and to the country, that the supply of seed grain, not only to men who reside on unpatented lands, but to men who reside on patented lands, is necessary for the development of the province of Saskatchewan in the year 1915.

It is a well-known fact that a large portion of the province of Saskatchewan—I refer particularly to the southwest portion—was drouth-stricken during the year 1914, with the result that very little crop over a large area of that part of the province was harvested. During last summer, before we held our short session of Parliament in the month of August, I went through the western part of Saskatchewan from Swift Current, southwest and then east from almost the Alberta boundary, and the whole country for at least a hundred miles had the appearance of a desert. The wind that blew off that portion of the country felt almost like the wind from a desert. There was practically no crop there at all. This condition of affairs was known to the provincial governments of western Canada and also to the Dominion Government as early as the month of October, 1914, and certain steps very properly were taken by the Dominion Government and by the provincial governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta to relieve the need that existed among the farmers of that drouth-stricken area. There is no question to-day that certain relief has been given by the provincial governments and that certain precautions have been taken by the Dominion Government for the purpose of supplying seed grain to that drouth-stricken area; but a difficulty has arisen with respect to farmers who reside outside that drouth-stricken area or on patented land. In addition to the large area which I call the drouth-stricken area, there are other portions of the province of Saskatchewan, smaller in extent, which require assistance by way of seed grain during this year. There are portions of the country not very many miles from the city of Regina in which I reside. Only the day I left Regina to come down to this session of Parliament I had two requests in my mail for seed grain, one from a group of farmers who reside within twenty miles of the city of Regina and the other from a group of farmers who reside within forty miles of that city. I mention these instances only to show that the drouth-stricken area is not the only portion of Saskatchewan which requires seed during the present year. There is a great demand for seed grain throughout Saskatchewan outside of this drouth-stricken area.

Yesterday I received a letter addressed to myself from an organization of rural municipalities with headquarters in the city of Saskatoon. I have no doubt that other hon. members on both sides of the House from western Canada have received similar letters. The letter reads as follows:

At a meeting of representatives of the following municipalities, namely, 374, 343, 310, 280, 345, 375, 373, 313, 252 and 344, of district No. 5, Saskatchewan Association Rural Municipalities held in Saskatoon, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

'That this representative meeting of municipal officers strongly urge on the Dominion Government to supply seed grain to all farmers, in need of same, for seeding season of 1915.

That letter has to do with a large territory. There are, I think, ten municipalities mentioned, which would cover an acreage of about 2,073,600 acres of land. Each municipality in the province of Saskatchewan consists of nine townships so that there are ninety townships represented by that letter, and the need apparently is great in that locality. I find also that only yesterday or the day before a delegation of three or four members of the Regina Board of Trade waited upon the Dominion Government with a view to urging upon it the necessity of taking some immediate action on this question. Seed time will be upon us in a few weeks; the people are anxious as to what will be done; some farmers are without seed grain at the present time, and immediate action is necessary to relieve the doubt that exists and to give the farmers in that section seed grain in order that they may properly produce and harvest a crop in 1915.

I am informed—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that the Department of the Interior has on record over 6,000 applications for seed grain from the province of Saskatchewan outside of this drouth-stricken area altogether. That number does not include applications for seed grain from the province of Alberta and Manitoba; and if my information is correct, the number is very much in excess of 6,000.

The worst feature of the situation as it exists in the province of Saskatchewan to-day is that the farmers from north to south and from east to west outside the drought-stricken area have been deceived with regard to the attitude of the Dominion Government in respect to this matter of supplying seed grain. It may be an open question whether that is the case or not; but I have only to say that since the month of October the people in the district in which I reside, and I believe the people throughout the length and breadth of the province of Saskatchewan, believed that the Government were going to supply grain to farmers on patented and unpatented lands without the drouth-stricken area. That belief was strengthened by official information sent out by men high in the employ of the Dominion Government. I have here a copy of a letter which, in the month of October, 1914, was sent broadcast throughout the province of Saskatchewan from the office of the Commissioner of Immigration of the city of Winnipeg. In this particular letter no exception is made whether a farmer resides in the drouth-stricken area or not, or whether on patented or unpatented land. The letter is as follows:

In answer to your letter of recent date, asking for an advance of seed grain, I have to inform you that this department is making arrangements to supply bona fide settlers, who have lost their crop this year and are unable to obtain seed, with good clean seed next spring, delivery to start about the middle of February. This seed will be furnished at cost, cleaned and sacked, and thoroughly inspected by inspectors of the Department of Agriculture, and security therefor taken by a lien on the unpatented land of the settler.

Here is the important part of it:

In the case of the settler having only patented land, a note must be given for the amount so advanced.

Therefore the Government during the months of October, November and December of last year was satisfied with the notes of farmers who had patented land. The Government were particularly generous at that time.

Lien or notes will be repayable on or about January 1, 1916, with interest at five per cent per annum.

The farmer during those months thought he was getting a square deal from the Dominion Government.

When making application give correct description of your land, state whether it is unpatented, homestead, pre-emption, purchased homestead or script. Should you have only patented land, say so and give exact location of same, state also how much encumbrance against the land, if any. Wheat, oats and barley are the only grains which will be distributed and in sufficient quantities to sow land you have under cultivation and ready for seed.

No limitation put upon the quantity.

I am enclosing you herewith an application form, which, if you will carefully fill out and return to me, will have due consideration.

What I wish the House to note is that the Government in that letter of October, 1914, says that it will supply seed grain for the year 1915 without any limitation whatever. It also states that in cases of patented lands where the Dominion Government would not have control of the title could not exercise the right of lien as provided for by the Dominion Lands Act, an ordinary note would be taken with interest at five per cent per annum, such note payable January 1, 1916.

The last point in the letter is that all that any settler, whether on patented or unpatented lands and whether inside or outside the drouth-stricken area, had to do in order to secure seed grain, was to send in his application to the Dominion Lands Office in Winnipeg. With that letter in circulation throughout the province of Saskatchewan, it was a fair assumption for the agriculturist in that country to go upon that he would get seed grain from the Government. The result of that is this—that many farmers, being pressed by wholesalers, machine companies and ordinary creditors, sold their seed, and so have not a bushel to-day. I live in Regina, and for three months, when any person asked me if he was going to get seed grain, I said: Of course, the Dominion Government is going to supply seed to all bona-fide settlers who have lost their crops,. for statements to that effect have been published in their party newspapers throughout western Canada, and in official documents. No exception at all has been made; and even though you have been farming in the West for twenty-five years, and have got a section of land, you are going to get seed grain. So, as I have said, many have sold their seed and have not a bushel to-day. And they have been put in that position by these letters sent out from the Winnipeg office of the Department of Immigration. I have here quotations from newspapers that circulate largely in the province of Saskatchewan. I find that in the minds of the people who were doing business for this Government, and in the minds of the editors of party newspapers, and also in conversations that took place amongst ordinary men, there was never any doubt, until the 11th of January, 1915, that the present Dominion Government was going to supply seed grain this year to every person in the province of Saskatchewan who required it. First, let me quote from the Saskatoon Star of the 24th of November last. This appears in large type at the top of the column and on the first page:

Now is the time to put in demands for seed grain from government for next year.

M. A. MacInnes, Dominion Lands Agent, issued a statement yesterday, asking all farmers in need of seed grain in this district not to delay their application. The flow of grain is passing through Saskatoon very heavily now, he stated, and while the heaviest movement was in full swing was the best time for the purchase of seed grain by the government; it was desirable that all applications be forwarded as early as possible in order that the government might be able to find out how much seed grain it will be necessary for them to secure. This is the advice also handed out by Mr. Lindsay, the government's chief buyer.

Applications hitherto received at the Dominion Lands office have been numerous and each day shows an increase. The stream of applications was materially heavier towards the end of last week than at any previous time during the present season.

The last statement on the subject in this issue of the Star is the following:

'Whoever has an application to make', said Mr. MacInnes, 'tell them to make it right away, so that the government will know how much to provide.'

There can be no doubt about that statement. As late as November 21, I find a long statement in the Saskatoon Star, in the same kind of type and at the head of the column on the front page, as follows:

Seed grain supplied by Dominion Government alone; stock is ready. Considerable misapprehension on the part of many people throughout the province resulting in delay.

Some have been applying to the provincial authorities, which is wrong and wastes time. Applications should be made to lands office.

Let me read a paragraph or two of this article:

Many of the farmers of Saskatchewan are losing much valuable time owing to a misapprehension which seems to have arisen. They have been led by some means to believe that the Provincial Government is handling the supply of seed grain to the farmers who need it. This is an entire error. The Saskatchewan Government has nothing to do with it, and all applications or communications with regard to the supply of seed or feed should be addressed to the proper representatives of the Dominion Government. Farmers should direct their inquiries and applications to the agent of the Dominion Lands in their particular land office district.

Mr. M. A. MacInnes, Saskatoon Dominion Land agent, showed by his correspondence yesterday that the needy farmers, or many of them, are losing time, because of the fact that they have been addressing their inquiries and applications to Premier Scott and other members of the Saskatchewan Government. One farmer in particular wrote asking Premier Scott if the Provincial Government intended to supply seed grain to the northern part of the province, as well as to the southern. As a matter of fact, the Provincial Government is not handling the purchase or distribution of seed grain in any way, and the only thing that the members of that government can do is to turn the letters over to the Dominion Lands offices and notify the farmers that they have done so. This is all a waste of much time which could be saved, and the business of arranging for supplies of seed grain could be greatly facilitated if the farmers would address their inquiries and applications to representatives of the Dominion Government, who are authorized to handle the matter.

And a little further on is this statement:

Thus far the local Dominion Lands office has on file thousands of letters touching the seed grain question, and in totalling up the amount applied for up to the present, it was announced that approximately a quarter million bushels of all grains is needed in the Saskatoon land office district. The Dominion Government is not only helping with regard to the land which failed to produce a crop last season, but is anxious to see that every farmer gets grain enough to seed every acre he can possibly get under crop for the coming year.

I do not mean to argue that the Government is responsible for every item that appears in one of its party newspapers. But it is responsible for the letter sent out by its commissioner in Winnipeg on which these articles are largely based and by reason of which the people have been led to believe that they were going to get seed grain.

It came as a shock when, on January 11, a letter was circulated throughout the province of Saskatchewan, sent out by the Commissioner of Immigration in Winnipeg, in which he withdraws altogether, in meaning if not in direct terms, the letter of October 14. We were led to believe, in October, November and December, and even up to the middle of January, that we were going to obtain seed grain in abundance, whether we were on patented or unpatented lands, and whether inside or outside the drouth-stricken area. Here is the letter, which, as I have said, was a shock to the people:

Arrangements have been made to supply seed grain to all who have lost their crop, whether on unpatented or patented land, in the following area:

Then it describes the drouth-stricken area as described by the Department of the Interior. At any rate, for three months the position was taken by every person in Saskatchewan, including the Dominion Government officials, that seed grain would be supplied, and I say we had a right to go on that assumption. If the man occupying the position of Commissioner of Immigration in Winnipeg sends out statements which the people of the province or others cannot rely upon, where are we to look for correct information? The Government cannot urge such an excuse. This letter which, as I say, came as a shock to the people, said that the supply of seed grain would be confined to the people in the drouth-stricken area. I have copies of letters here addressed to applicants by the Commissioner of Immigration, in reply, apparently, to requests sent in by men outside the drouth-stricken area. The first is a letter dated January 12, addressed to Mr. J. W. Whittaker, Salvador. This gentleman is within the drouth-stricken area, but, unfortunately for him, is on patented land. The letter says:

In answer to your letter to the Department of Agriculture, Regina, I have to state that this department is only making an advance of seed grain to needy homesteaders on unpatented land and who lost their crop through some calamity. All others will require to look to their local municipality or to their Provincial Government for assistance in the matter of seed grain.

That contains a mis-statement of fact, because the letter referred to says that: "the department is only making an advance of seed grain to needy homesteaders on unpatented land, and who lost their crop through some calamity." So far as the drouth-stricken area is concerned, that is not correct, because they were then supplying seed grain in the drouth-stricken area to the holders of both patented and unpatented lands.

I have another letter here of the 19th of January, from the Commissioner of Immigration to Mr. D. B. Martin:

Referring to your application for an advance of seed grain, I have to inform you that this department is only making an advance of seed grain to those in your district who are on unpatented land.

I note from your application that you only hold patented land, and it is with regret, therefore, I have to inform you that your application cannot receive consideration. You will require to look to your local municipality or to your Provincial Government for assistance in the matter of seed grain.

The position in certain parts of that province to-day, owing to the people having been misled, is one of confusion, even of chaos. The records of the department and the records of the Department of Agriculture at Regina and Edmonton would indicate that there are thousands of applications from farmers outside the drouth-stricken area in both provinces for seed grain, perhaps more in Saskatchewan than in Alberta. These men have all been led to believe that they would get seed grain. They have gone on that assumption, and to-day I say they are entitled to seed grain.

I have here a book which I obtained since coming to Ottawa a few days ago, published by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, called "Patriotism and Production." It is a very admirable publication and contains many statements of value to the people of Canada, whether members of the agricultural population or otherwise. In looking over that book I find, over the signature of the Minister of Agriculture, this statement:

Should the war continue into the summer of this year the food production in Europe cannot approach that of normal years. Looking at the situation in even its most favourable light there will be a demand for food that the world will find great difficulty in supplying. Canada is responding promptly to the call of the motherland for men and equipment. Britain needs more than men, she must have food,—food this year and food next year. We are sending of our surplus now. We should prepare for a larger surplus this year and next year. The government is strongly impressed with the desirability of increasing the crop acreage in Canada. The Canadian farmer, earnestly bending all his energies to increase the food supply for the Britisher at home and the British soldiers at the front, is doing his share in this gigantic struggle of the Empire.

I would urge the farmers to do their share in helping to assist the people of Great Britain, who for many years have borne the burden of a heavy tax for the maintenance of a great navy, in preventing them from suffering want or privation.

From the standpoint of whether it is proper agricultural policy to encourage men to put in grain on all land, irrespective of whether it has been summer-fallowed or not, I shall say nothing as I am not a farmer. The fact remains that the Dominion Government and the provincial Governments, during the six months since the commencement of this terrible war, have been urging the farmers throughout Canada, especially western farmers, to increase their production. With what result? The Commissioner of Immigration in Winnipeg, Mr. Bruce Walker, whose letter I have referred to, has said that in western Canada there will be 40 per cent more land ready for crops this spring than in any other year in the history of western Canada. I think his figures are exaggerated. My information is that there will be 10 per cent or 12 per cent more land ready for cultivation when the spring ploughing is done for 1915 than was under crop in any other year in Canada. That is in Saskatchewan. Providence last fall favoured the farmers of western Canada with climatic conditions conducive to getting land ready for crops. Any person who had any available land has it ready for the spring of 1915. The work has been done by the farmers of western Canada, they have not credit with the banks to borrow money to buy seed, they are looking to the Government to supply seed, and, without raising any question of party politics, as I have no desire to do anything of that kind, I earnestly entreat the Dominion Government to take this question up and to act on it at once. Seeding time will be on us in six weeks or two months. It may be a question whether the Government can readily obtain seed in western Canada; but an effort should be made right away. We have been priding ourselves in Canada during the last ten years on being the greatest wheat-producing colony in the Empire. We pride ourselves on our great production of wheat and other grains and say that we are the greatest agricultural colony in the Empire. The farmers of western Canada and of all Canada have done the work; they have acted on the suggestion made by the Dominion and Provincial Agricultural Departments, they have made all the land they possibly could available for crops for the season of 1915. Now give them the seed they are entitled to, the seed you promised them in October and November; and give them an opportunity to show in 1915 that we are worthy of the title we have taken to ourselves during the last number of years, namely that of being the bread basket of the British Empire.

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Minister of the Interior): Being a western man myself, I can sympathize with the farmers in the West, more especially in what is known as the drouth-stricken area in the southern portions of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. I sympathize with the hon. gentleman, who, as a representative of the province of Saskatchewan, in his efforts to secure, in so far as we can possibly concede the legitimate demands of these farmers, the seed grain which is necessary to seed down land which is already prepared for crops. The hon. gentleman has referred to the history of the seed grain question in years gone by. It is true that this Government has been in the habit of looking more especially after the homesteaders, inasmuch as we have regarded them in the light of wards, and we have been in the habit, to a limited extent, where they have had crop failures, of advancing seed grain to them, taking a lien against the homestead, which, of course, was good security, as we had the title to the land in our possession. In 1908 the question assumed much larger proportions, and, as a result of negotiations between the then Minister of the Interior and the provincial governments of the West, very much larger demands were made on the Dominion Government. At that time the provincial governments desired the Dominion to advance money, not only in the case of lands not patented, but also on lands that were patented. The then Minister of the Interior took the position, and quite properly so, that this Government had nothing to do with land that had already been patented, and that the subject came under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Government. The Provincial Government rather reluctantly submitted to that decision, and undertook the distribution of seed grain to those who were the owners of those lands. It was done in this way: the Dominion Government loaned Saskatchewan and Alberta, at 5 per cent, the money necessary to supply seed for the farmers residing on patented lands. The system adopted in the two provinces differed. The province of Saskatchewan took a lien against the land, and passed legislation at the following session of the legislature by which that lien was given priority over any existing mortgages. The Provincial Government alone could do this, the Dominion could not. As a result of that legislation, I understand, they took a lien, not only upon the land, which would be a first lien, but also upon the crops and upon any other personal property of the person owning the land. But in Alberta not only did they do that, but they levied and collected the money by way of taxes, with the result that up to about the first of this year the province of Alberta had repaid the Dominion all but about $3,000 of what they had borrowed for that purpose. It seems to be the best manner in which they could possibly collect money by taxation. To be sure, Alberta had not borrowed nearly the amount that Saskatchewan had. The province of Saskatchewan, on the other hand, had not undertaken to collect it by way of taxes, and I think, as a matter of fact, the practice was that they have collected only when there was a transfer of land, with the result that at the first of this year Saskatchewan, out of the advances we made to them—I think it was in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000—still owes us between $300,000 and $400,000.

Their method of collecting was therefore not nearly so effective as that of the province of Alberta. I perfectly understand the position. It is only natural that the Government should not want to be put in the position of a landlord; for many people thinking that the Government would not be harsh in its method of collection would take advantage of it. This has actually been done. The result is that these delinquents have not paid to the province of Saskatchewan, and the province of Saskatchewan has not paid to us, the moneys we advanced in 1908, nearly seven years ago.

The hon. gentleman has referred to a conference held last summer between some members of this Government and representatives of the Provincial Government of Saskatchewan. I first heard of this conference in the latter part of December, and therefore cannot vouch for what took place there. But I understand that the Provincial Government made the proposal that they would look after both homesteaders and non-homesteaders, and give them relief in the shape of road work. They drew up a plan under which a single man would receive about $60, and a married man about $100. They did not limit this assistance to those who were not owners of their lands. Assistance was to be given to both owners and non-owners, but was confined entirely to those in the drouth-stricken area. There is prima facie evidence that the conference referred to the drouth-stricken area only, and I am informed that that was what my colleagues had in mind when they entered into this arrangement with the Provincial Government. The Government of Saskatchewan had in mind at that time the farmers of the drouth-stricken area only. My information is that this area was set aside after consultation with the Mounted Police and members of the Provincial Government. Our assistance has been given mainly to the farmers of that area because we were informed that they had practically no crops whatever, though undoubtedly odd farmers here and there have had fair crops.

It is true that a great many applications have been made to the Government since then outside of that area. Perhaps the farmers were prompted to ask for assistance by certain articles in the press. It may be that Mr. Walker's letter of October last was not as definite as it should have been. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) interpreted it to mean any farmer could get seed grain from the Government, whether the owner of his land or not, and whether within or without the drouth-stricken area. That, I maintain, was not the idea in Mr. Walker's mind when he wrote the letter. I admit that his letter did not specifically mention that the assistance was to be confined to the farmers in the drouth-stricken area, but on the other hand it did not say that assistance would be given to those outside that particular area; and since our assistance has been practically confined to the farmers within that area, I think it is only fair to assume that it was those in that area only who were to be assisted. I know that there have been applications from farmers living outside that area, not only from Saskatchewan and Alberta, but from Manitoba as well. The province of Manitoba is looking after farmers who own their land and had no crop last year. I also understand that the Government of Saskatchewan some years ago passed a Municipal Seed Grain Act by means of which municipalities were empowered to advance seed grain to needy farmers. It is stated that municipalities and private individuals cannot get any credit from the banks this year. That may be true, particularly as regards private individuals. Applications for assistance have come in from Manitoba, perhaps in consequence of the difficulty of getting credit, but my reply has invariably been that the intention of the Government is to assist only the farmers of the drouth-stricken area. It was never intended to distribute seed grain promiscuously. If we had done that farmers who had had a good crop would have been applying to the Government for a loan at a cheap rate of interest. We should have been flooded with applications.

Manitoba has had for years a law empowering municipalities to advance seed grain to needy settlers within the municipal bounds. That Act is to be enlarged this year, so the papers say, so 3 p.m. that not only will the municipalities be able to make such advances, but the Provincial Government will get behind the municipalities and advance the money. We feel that Manitoba is acting wisely. The Provincial Government there is looking after its own people, and our efforts are confined to the homesteaders between the two lakes where a number of people are located who have not yet patents for their land. Up to the 25th of January we had received some 6,000 applications from people who reside outside the drouth-stricken area, and I am informed that many of these have done just as the hon. member for Regina says: taking advantage of the high prices they sold their grain, and now are applying to the Government to supply them with seed grain. Just to get a little ready money they sold their grain. It matters not whether they had a poor crop or not. Undoubtedly some of the farmers applying for assistance had fair crops, some of them very good crops. Some who have applied for seed have frankly stated that they had as much as 1,500 acres of land prepared for seed. Fancy the owner of three sections being unable to finance the seed for that land! I cannot believe it myself. I know that the banks have been very cautious in the past in advancing farmers money for that purpose, but I also know that my colleague the Finance Minister has been in touch with the head offices of our Canadian banks. He asked them to loosen up, to let the farmers have more credit. As a result of this intercession by the Finance Minister, the presidents of our Canadian banks instructed their western branch managers to meet all legitimate demands. The head offices in the East state they are quite willing to advance money on fair security.

Then, as to the delay in coming to a decision how far this relief should be extended. I may say, in the first place, that I have had an interview with Hon. George Bell, provincial treasurer for the province of Saskatchewan, as to the security we should receive for any advances we might make. We expected advances on patented lands to be secured in the same way that the Provincial Government was secured by their legislation of 1908. In justice to the Provincial Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan, I must say that they have given us their written consent to give our lien, in the case of such advances, priority over all other existing encumbrances.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: Do I understand that the position taken by the Dominion Government was that they should have a first lien upon patented lands, with priority over all existing encumbrances and mortgages, for the amount of seed grain supplied to each farmer?

Mr. ROCHE: That is the position. That was the position of the Provincial Government in 1908. I have in my possession letters and telegrams received from the Provincial Governments. I might as well read one I received from the Premier of Alberta last evening. We sent out an agreement to be signed by the respective governments asking not only for preferential legislation in favor of our liens for our seed grain advancement, but also to include the relief which we had been giving destitute settlers. Mr. Sifton replies:

> Agreement received; provision as to payment of expenses satisfactory; perfectly satisfactory as to seed grain. If words 'relief other than seed grain' confined to feed for horses putting in crop, that also will be satisfactory.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Regina is in sympathy with our liens being given preferential treatment but this government of his friends in Saskatchewan and Alberta have signified their willingness to pass that legislation. The question resolves itself into this: Are we to enlarge the area; are we to go outside of the drouth-stricken area, or are we going to pass upon every application from every man, every farmer, who has sold his grain and now applies to the Government for aid? That is rather a large proposition. Already our expenditures under this head have amounted to a large amount. Up to the 31st March this year our estimates for seed grain and relief amount to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $5,800,000 which amount will be supplemented next financial year for relief to the extent of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. The expenditures, if we were to act upon the applications that are being made to us at the present time, would amount to in the neighbourhood of $11,000,000. That is a pretty serious expenditure for this Government to assume especially during a time of financial stringency. We do not think it is a reasonable request to be called upon to satisfy all these applications to share in the distribution of seed grain, but I have instructed Mr. Bruce Walker that we would advance seed grain within the drouth-stricken area on patented lands as well as unpatented lands and that as far as applications outside of that area are concerned we would give them close scrutiny and investigation and where it was found that farmers are in much the same position as those in the drouth stricken district and have no crop we would be perfectly willing to advance seed grain to them. Close scrutiny has been given to this matter within the last fortnight or more. I think we will be able to meet all the legitimate demands that are being made upon this Government, but we certainly cannot be expected to meet the demand where men who own two, three or four sections of land, have sold their grain and now apply to the Government to advance them money for seed grain.

We have had to supply not only seed grain but also provisions to keep a number of these people alive during the winter months, such as groceries, the necessaries of life and fuel and for relief of this kind we have expended $2,500,000 which is included in the $5,800,000. In addition to that the farmers say: What is the use of giving us money to purchase seed grain, or giving us seed grain unless we have our stock in condition to put that grain in? We recognize the validity of that argument and we shall supply them with feed for stock during the months in which they will be engaged in putting in their crop. I think that we have been dealing very generously and very reasonably with the requests that have been made to this Government. I believe that I have touched upon all the points that the hon. member for Regina has brought up, but if there is any other question that any hon. gentleman would desire to ask I will be perfectly willing to answer it. We all recognized that this is a very frightful condition of affairs in western Canada, that they have had during this past year an area some five hundred miles north by south and one hundred and fifty miles east by west within which there have been practically no crops at all. It has been quite a setback to that country and it has been represented to us that unless we can meet the demands of the farmers there, a great many of whom have prepared their land in anticipation of having a large crop this year, the responsibility will rest upon the Dominion Government. We are quite willing to assume the responsibility that we think properly belongs to us but we are keeping this assistance within the drouth-stricken area except as before explained and in doing that I think we are assuming a pretty large obligation. But notwithstanding that, we are willing to go farther and, if after close investigation, applications that have been sent in are found to be just as deserving, if the people have had no crops last year, if they have no money to secure seed grain and have no credit to secure the money, we are quite willing to treat those people with the very same consideration as that with which we are treating those within the restricted area.

Mr. GEO. E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon): This question of the supply of seed grain is not a question of a gift from the Dominion Government to the farmers in the West, nor is it a question of a gift from the Provincial Government. It is a question as to which credit shall be used for the purpose of getting the grain, whether it shall be the credit of the Dominion, or the Provincial Governments. In either case there will be security for the advance made. At this date in the month of February it is rather more a question of time, of opportunity to purchase, than it is a question as to whether the Provincial Government or the Dominion Government shall take security from the farmers upon making the advance. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche) has spoken as though there was a misunderstanding between the members of the government of Saskatchewan and of this Government as to the area that would be supplied with seed grain. I think I am safe in saying that if there has been any misunderstanding, there has been no misunderstanding in the province of Saskatchewan in relation to it. There has been no member of the Provincial Government who believes that the assistance of the Dominion Government was to be restricted to the area in the south-western part of the province. There has been no misunderstanding in the minds of the people at large throughout the province on that point and there has been no misunderstanding in the minds of those who are closest to this Government and who belong to the Conservative party. My hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin) has quoted articles published in the Saskatoon Star, which is the Conservative organ of the district. The city of Saskatoon and that district are not within this area of drouth so that any observations which that paper made editorially or by way of news could not have reference to the drouth area but were addressed to those who live outside of it. The Saskatoon Star of the 3rd of December, 1914, has an editorial showing the sort of invitation which was sent out by this Conservative organ to the farmers of the Saskatoon district, and you will notice that there is no restriction in it as to whether those who require seed grain live on patented or on unpatented land:

> The Government's Prompt Aid.—There will be general appreciation of the fact that the Dominion Government is rising to the occasion in the matter of extending aid to the western farmers who lost their crops in the drouth of last summer.

A further editorial appearing in the Star, as late as the 30th of December last, contained this statement:

> At the big storage elevator at the edge of this city, hundreds of thousands of bushels of seed grain are being accumulated, and no man who files his application for a supply for spring seeding need be short. Farmers who are without seed grain and who may not have the means of procuring any should at once make their wants known. Application should be made at as early a date as possible and every farmer should sow every available acre of land. Grain prices are sure to be high next fall.

This shows the character of the appeals made by the organ of the Conservative party to the people.

The Conservative candidate in the last election in the riding of Saskatoon was Mr. Donald Maclean, a gentleman who has received the Conservative nomination for the next election whenever it will be held. His understanding of the matter is apparently the same as that which has been put forward by the Saskatoon Star. On the 8th of January last Mr. Maclean addressed a meeting of Conservatives in the city of Saskatoon and his explanation of the delay in supplying seed grain was, that it was due to difficulty on the part of the Dominion Government in getting assurances from the provincial Government that the Dominion Government would be given satisfactory security for the advances made. Mr. Maclean's statement would go to show, however, that the distribution of seed grain would be general, and that it would be made both within and without the drouth area and on either patented or unpatented lands. In that speech which was published in the Saskatoon Star, Mr. Maclean said:

> Overtures were then made to the provincial governments of this province and Alberta, and they were told that if they would guarantee to legislate so that the Dominion Government could take liens upon patented lands as security for the advances, the Dominion Government would undertake the supplying of all seed grain that the farmers needed.

There is a general statement made by Mr. Maclean without any restriction whatever, and apparently any question as to security to be provided to the Dominion has been removed. According to the statement of the minister, the Dominion Government is to be given a first lien on the land, which I think is quite fair, and it removes the only difficulty which seemed to arise in Mr. Maclean's mind at that time, in the way of the Government carrying out what he believed to be its policy as to the distribution of seed grain which Mr. Maclean must have been informed of by the friends of the Government. Later on, Mr. Maclean gave an interview in the city of Saskatoon, which was quoted in the Winnipeg Free Fress of February 2nd last. He had evidently found out in the meantime that the Government had changed its policy, and that they wanted to restrict the supply of seed grain to the drouth area. This is the statement of Mr. Maclean, who as I say, is now the accepted candidate of the Conservative party in the Saskatoon electoral district, and who retains the view, which had evidently been impressed upon him, before the change of policy on the part of the Government. Mr. Maclean said in part:

The problem now is a financial one. It is not a question of which government is willing or which government is unwilling, but which government is able. Obviously, the Dominion Government is in a better position to borrow the large sum needed to supply feed and seed than provincial governments. The municipalities are helpless and the banks are doing nothing. Consequently, the Dominion Government is being bombarded from all sides to come to the rescue. It is a question of finding the money and the grain. It may not be the business of the Dominion Government to supply the seed and feed, but it looks as if no one else can do it.

This matter has also been dealt with by the Saskatoon Board of Trade. On the 6th of January the Saskatoon Board of Trade sent the following telegram to the Department of the Interior:

It is stated by Walker of Winnipeg that only those on unpatented homesteads will be given seed or feed grain. Surely this is incorrect. Wire immediately so that we may contradict.

There is a letter confirming that telegram, which I need not read, and the answer of Mr. Cory, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, is quoted in the letter of the 15th of January written by the Board of Trade to Mr. Cory. Mr. Cory's answer was dated the 12th of January and is as follows:

Your wires 6th and 7th and letter 6th. Arrangements being made whereby it will be possible to advance seed grain and relief to needy settlers who own their lands.

This despatch from Mr. Cory on the 12th of January, places no restriction as to area, on patented or unpatented lands. On the 21st of January the Saskatoon Board of Trade wired Mr. Cory:

Bruce Walker's letter to farmers, dated 13th, emphatically states seed will only be given to those on unpatented lands who lost crop and that all others must look to their municipalities or provincial governments. This flatly contradicts your wire dated the 12th. Such conflictions causing serious general unrest. Please wire us something to publish that will finally remove all uncertainty.

This telegram is quoted in the Phoenix of January 30, 1915, and up to that time no reply had been received. Notwithstanding the attitude of the Saskatoon Star and its statements to the public that there was no use sending a delegation to the provincial Government, on the 4th of February, 1915, the Star came out with an article headed: 'How the provincial Government is dealing with the seed grain question; Mr. McNab's letter,' and then it says a circular letter signed by Mr. McNab showing how the provincial Government is dodging the question of assisting in supplying seed grain in the case of needy farmers, is being sent around. It will be noticed that from having been most positive that there was no use applying to the provincial government for seed grain, the Saskatoon Star, which is one of the culprits in the whole matter, turns around and tries to make out that it is the provincial Government that is dodging the issue, and when as a matter of fact if there is any dodging it is being done by the Ottawa Government.

As I said a little while ago, it is not a question of the Dominion Government or of the provincial Government or of the municipalities giving so much money to the West; it is a question which government will lend the farmers so much money, for which it will have ample security. The important point to-day is not that, but the opportunity to buy seed grain at the present time as compared with several months ago. It will cost to-day at least fifty per cent more to buy seed grain, in consequence of this policy of uncertainty and delay on the part of the Dominion Government in dealing with this question than it would have cost if the seed grain had been purchased some months ago. If the provincial government had understood three months ago that they were to take hold of this question, the necessary grain could have been purchased much more cheaply and supplies of grain would have been available which are not available to-day. Like my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin), I have received telegrams asking me to use my influence in having certainty instead of uncertainty with reference to this question.

This discussion has come up at an opportune moment. I wish that the statement of the minister had been more satisfactory than it is, because his own friends have produced the situation. He has said that some will be dealt with who have patented lands outside of the area, but there is a discrimination which gives no certainty to any one who may desire to rely upon the promise of this Government to make advances of seed grain.

Mr. W. A. BUCHANAN (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am in a position to complain or not, because if the statement of the Minister of the Interior is carried out, my district will be satisfied. Unfortunately for me, I represent a district that is almost entirely within the drouth-stricken area of the province of Alberta. The farmers there have been carried through this winter by the assistance of the Dominion Government. I am prepared to pay tribute to the Dominion Government for the assistance which they have given to the settlers in my district. I am not prepared to go the length of saying that this assistance has been administered in the fairest possible manner to the people of that country; but at the same time I think the Government deserve credit for having come to the assistance of the people and for providing means whereby they can exist and remain in the country. If I understand the Minister of the Interior aright, the people of that district are to be provided with seed grain no matter whether they are on unpatented land or on rented land or even on land which has been purchased, because in many cases where land has been purchased, the farmer is in just as bad a position as the man who is on homesteaded land whether patented or unpatented.

There seems to be an impression throughout Eastern Canada that that district is worthless; that it is not worth while paying attention to on account of there being such a severe crop failure. I desire to remove that impression, and to say that during the time I have lived in the southern part of Alberta that district has produced splendid and profitable crops; but, owing to conditions of pioneering in a new country, lack of transportation facilities and difficulties due to commencing farming with very little capital, the prosperity of the people has been impaired, and they were not in a position to finance themselves through a complete crop failure. There are parts of that district, which I consider to be within the drouth-stricken area, where farmers to-day are told that they cannot get seed grain. I have a letter in my possession from Diamond City, a place northwest of the city of Lethbridge, in the drouth-stricken area, a point from which no grain was shipped last fall, and the writer informs me that he was refused a supply of seed grain whereas other farmers surrounding him are receiving seed grain. I intend to hand this letter to the Minister of the Interior, because I think this case should be investigated, and this particular farmer is certainly entitled to seed grain. Any farmer in the constituency of Medicine Hat who asks for seed grain, unless he has accumulated some wealth, is entitled to seed grain, because the entire district is within the drouth-stricken area,

The inability of many farmers to receive seed grain this year is due to some of the banks of this country. I want to be candid in saying that some of the banks in this country, since the war commenced and since this depression came upon us, have been of no assistance whatever to farmers who have securities which they could offer to these banks. In that way many men who anticipated that they could secure seed grain through their own resources, have been unable to do so on account of the fact that they could not get any advances whatever from the banks. I have been told this by men who have assured me that they could offer gilt-edged security. If I remember aright, the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) made a similar statement in that city. It is on account of this fact that the demand is now coming in to the Government for advances of seed grain from people who, I believe, ordinarily would not seek advances, because out of their own resources they cannot secure assistance which they could have secured in other years. It is the duty of the Government under such circumstances to look after those people, no matter whether they are in the drouth-stricken area or not. In my own district I am satisfied that there is at least a ten per cent increase in the land under cultivation for crops next year. That is in a district which did not have any crops last year, where the people were absolutely discouraged and down-hearted; but at the same time they have cultivated more land than they had last year and are prepared to raise a crop this year, and, from the conditions that exist in southern Alberta, I believe we have never had better prospects for a crop than we have at the present time. If we get a crop, with the prevailing prices, all the obligations the farmers have undertaken with the Government of the Dominion of Canada will be met, provided that the machinery companies, the banks and others do not get after the farmers first and take everything.

Now, I desire to add one observation with regard to this area which I represent and within which I reside. I would like to mention the question of feed for stock. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) has been an advocate of mixed farming in western Canada. Others have given those farmers the same advice. The farmers have followed that advice to a very large extent, and in my district there has been a large increase in live stock during recent years. But on account of the drouth there has been no feed whatever for that stock. In October last I communicated with the Commissioner of Immigration in Winnipeg in regard to the matter, and he intimated that he had forwarded the following wire to the Superintendents of Relief:

> The Government will provide baled hay for farm stock only where it is necessary and in moderate quantities.

Now, this is entirely satisfactory; but that promise is not being carried out, and as a result farm stock is being lost, especially cows. As farmers are not able to purchase feed or get it from the Government their farm stock is being destroyed. It is most important for the cause of mixed farming that the Government should carry out the promise made by the Commissioner of Immigration in October last which led the farmers to believe that they should have feed for their stock. I hope the Minister of the Interior will see to it that the necessary instructions are given to furnish feed until the farmers can provide it themselves.

As to the prospects of that country, I am satisfied there is more optimism among the farmers in the drouth-stricken area than can be found in many communities that had good crops last year. Many of these farmers come from states in the American Union where they had to face adverse conditions in the early stages of agricultural development. They believe in the future of that district; they believe the district will come out all right. I am satisfied if the Government come to the assistance of these farmers this year with a supply of seed grain, then, with prospects—which were never better—for a good crop and for high prices, the farmers will establish themselves on a firm footing which will make them satisfied with their new homes in western Canada.

Mr. LEVI THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): My hon. friend who has last spoken (Mr. Buchanan) comes from a constituency entirely within the drouth-stricken area. I come from a constituency no part of which is within the drouth-stricken area. I have a few words to say with regard to the remarks of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche). Like the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney), I am not entirely satisfied with the statement made by the hon. minister, for it seemed to me to consist mostly of qualification. I should like to have some definite statement made. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin) in introducing the motion, referred to the fact that some farmers who now wanted seed had sold grain. The Minister of the Interior makes quite a point of that. Had my hon. friend from Regina been a farmer, he would probably have explained the matter a little differently. I know men who are wanting seed grain, not in the drouth-stricken area but in other parts of the country, who, though they have grain, have not grain fit for seed. In the locality in which I live, where we were not drouth-stricken though our crop was a little light, none of the people are asking for seed grain, but we will have difficulty in finding amongst us seed oats that will grow. That will, perhaps, explain the position with regard to the farmers who have sold oats and still want seed. The same is true with regard to wheat. These people who are so badly drouth-stricken may yet have a little wheat, but it is not fit for seed. The case is not quite so bad with wheat as with oats. Rather poor wheat will grow, but it is madness to sow very poor oats. I hope the Minister of the Interior will bear these points in mind when he is considering this question. In the constituency of Qu'Appelle there are only two localities of which I have information as to the need of seed. In one of these, a very small district, the people have a little grain, but none fit for seed. They may have sold a few bushels, but in doing so they did not sell seed grain. Of course, if they had creditors, those creditors would not be willing to remain unpaid if these people had grain to sell.

I desire to draw the attention of the Minister to another matter. In most of the places where seed grain is required, the demand arises on account of drouth. But in one locality in my own constituency, the trouble arises through a complete destruction by hail. I grant you that in cases of this kind it has not been usual to give seed grain, but I think that the Minister of the Interior, in considering this question, must not entirely ignore the localities in which the destruction is due to hail. It is true that when grain is destroyed by hail, the destruction is generally confined to a narrow strip of territory. In the locality to which I refer, one block was hailed out.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Do not you have provincial hail insurance?

Mr. THOMSON: Yes, we have provincial hail insurance where the law is adopted by the municipality. In these particular localities there is no hail insurance in force; the men of whom I speak have received nothing at all. I grant you, under ordinary circumstances they could procure their own seed grain, but under present circumstances, I do not think they can. The same thing would apply to municipalities. Under ordinary circumstances, municipalities might supply the seed grain required, but under present circumstances they cannot do so. I am not here to blame the banks; I think the situation they have to face is a serious one. I understand, however, that the banks are refusing to supply money to municipalities for such purposes as this. I am not sure that we can blame the banks for that, they have a heavy load to carry. I do not think the argument of the Minister of the Interior is good when he seeks to show from the action of the Saskatchewan Government that it was not their intention to supply grain to any except those in the drouth-stricken area. It may be true that public works which went on in that province were only carried on in the drouth-stricken area, and it is also true, I presume, that the Government here have not received requests for ordinary relief of the people except in the drouth-stricken area. That, however, has no application to the question of seed grain, especially as matters stand now in regard to finances. And I think the minister must consider the financial situation. He is bound to consider all these things, and considering these things, I think he must come to the conclusion that, though the demands may be very great, he will have to very freely interpret the promise made here to-day in order to fulfil his duty. There are many localities outside the drouth-stricken area in which, if he fulfils his duty as a minister, he will supply the requirements so far as seed grain is concerned. I shall be pleased to furnish him with information as to localities in my constituency that I think require seed, and I trust he will give them favourable consideration, as I trust he will give favourable consideration to all localities requiring seed, remembering that the financial situation is not such as ordinarily faces us, but that men who, under ordinary conditions could get seed on their own credit cannot get it now.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to learn that the Government have decided to limit the area in which they propose to give help in the matter of seed grain to the settlers of the West. I remember that during the months of November and October of last year a number of my constituents who are not in what is understood as the drouth-stricken district of Saskatchewan, wrote to me with respect to the question of getting seed grain for the coming year and I immediately laid their communications before the Commissioner of Immigration at Winnipeg, Mr. J. Bruce Walker. I have not his reply at hand, but I remember very well that in every instance Mr. Walker directed that these settlers should communicate with him directly and should give full particulars as to whether they resided on patented or unpatented land, as to the amount and nature of seed they would require, etc. Copies of his reply to these settlers came to me, and therefore my memory is sufficiently clear for me to speak plainly and absolutely on the point. It appears that the Government changed their mind and are now going to limit the aid proposed to be given in all areas except certain prescribed areas known as the drouth-stricken districts of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. If the Government carry on this policy it certainly will have the effect of leaving a great many settlers in various parts of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, outside of what is known as the drouth-stricken district, without any provision for seed grain this coming spring. While in certain areas of Saskatchewan there was practically a complete crop failure, there were many other limited areas, a number of them in my own constituency, where, while there was not a complete crop failure, the amount and quality of the crop were so poor that the settlers in those instances find themselves quite without any provision for furnishing themselves with seed for the coming spring. If the Government propose to be parsimonious in dealing with the settlers in these scattered and more or less limited districts, then I say there will be dozens and scores of settlers in various parts of Saskatchewan, outside the drouth-stricken area, who will, in the coming spring, be unable to seed their ground. This is a serious situation and requires heroic treatment by the Government. It certainly is not a time when this Government or this country can afford, through the lack of seed grain for the farmers of the western prairies, to have a shortage in our grain crop. I am sure that every member in the House will agree with me in that statement. It is in the interests not only of the farmers on the plains but of the whole of Canada and of the British Empire, that every acre of land in Canada, from east to west, that can be put under cultivation, that can be made to produce a good crop during the present season, should be under crop. I have received numbers of communications from the heads of municipalities to which this matter has been referred by the provincial Government of my province in which they say that, notwithstanding all the efforts that they may put forth to relieve the needy settlers in those municipalities, they find themselves quite unable to cope with the situation and unless either the Dominion or provincial Government come to the assistance of these settlers, as one telegram which I have received within the last two or three days states, 'there will be many thousands of acres of well-prepared land which will lie idle.' That, Sir, is a situation too serious to contemplate and no consideration of a few isolated cases throughout these provinces where, by a more generous policy on the part of this Government, men would obtain seed grain who were not deserving of that consideration and assistance, should lead this Government or any government, at this crisis in our country's history, to restrict the policy of generous aid to any needy settler who, without that aid, will not be able to grow a crop during the coming season.

I was not in the House to hear all the explanations of the situation given by the Minister of the Interior in reply to the hon. member for Regina. I did not hear him give any adequate explanation of the reason why the Government have changed their attitude and their policy on this seed grain question since it first came under their consideration last August and September. I have no desire to give any reason or suggest any motive for this change of mind, but I would like the Minister to tell us frankly why the Government's policy was so generous last October and is now so parsimonious. I have before me a copy of the Saskatoon Star, dated Tuesday, October 13. We are used to unofficial reports these days, and this is one of them. Though not official, it is given a prominent place on the front page under the heading 'Dominion Elections, November 19.' That is to say, whether the people of this country were well advised or not, there seems to have been a suspicion in the minds of some editors in the West, and I presume in the East, of the possibility of an occurrence in this country which we generally describe as a general election. I do not suggest that the Government's generous policy of last October had anything to do with this widespread suspicion in the minds of the people that a general election was impending, but I fail to see why, if a generous policy was necessary in the interests not only of the western settler but of Canada and the whole Empire in October last, there should be any change of policy between that time and now. The western farmer who is unable to purchase seed grain this year is in a more unfortunate position than a farmer similarly situated in any previous year. It is a well-known fact that the banks of western Canada are not treating the farmers generously this year. In days gone by the farmer who had a good name and needed ready money could go to his bank and secure an advance to purchase seed grain, but in the present crisis he cannot do so. Nor are our municipalities in a position to obtain money by the sale of debentures at the present time; and unless this Government can relieve the situation I see no prospect of many farmers in different districts in Saskatchewan and Alberta getting any crop this year.

The Minister of the Interior stated that it would take some $11,000,000 to meet all the demands that have come in for seed grain. As I understand it, we are to be asked to vote this session $100,000,000 for war purposes, and I am sure that no man on either side of the House will demur at voting such an amount, no matter what the present financial stringency may be. But what better aid could be given in this crisis of our Empire's history than for the Government to see that every farmer who is unable to purchase his own seed grain shall be in a position to grow grain which will help feed the armies of the Allies in Europe. If $11,000,000 is necessary for that purpose, the money could not be better spent; and if this were done the Government would be helping not only the settler who needs aid, but Canada and the whole Empire, and the cause for which our soldiers are fighting so faithfully at the present time. How could the money be better spent than in supplying the multitudes who to-day are unable to purchase bread, with bread produced on the many hundreds of thousands of acres of land that are ready for crop on our western prairies, but will not be put in crop unless this Government furnishes the seed.

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (Minister of Public Works): I do not propose to occupy the attention of the House beyond a moment or two, but I wish to correct a wrong impression that appears to prevail among hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Neely) is apparently anxious to know why the Government should have changed the policy they adopted last August. Let me say that we have not changed that policy in any respect, except to extend it in a most generous and reasonable manner. Perhaps I can best correct my hon. friend by reading a letter of instruction to Mr. Bruce Walker, written after this matter had been fully considered by certain members of the Government and Mr. Perry of the N.W.M.P. We had Mr. Perry here, and certain other gentlemen from Saskatchewan and Alberta, as far back as the middle of August, 1914, to discuss what measures of relief should be taken. After the matter had been fully considered, the following letter was directed to Mr. Bruce Walker, and made public in the press of western Canada in order that every settler in the West should understand the true position, exactly what the Government had in mind in coming to the relief of the drouth-stricken area.

4 p.m.

Dear Mr. Walker,—After my consultation with you the other day and our representatives residing in the district which this year has been so seriously affected by drouth, it has been decided that it would be well to divide this territory into five districts, said districts to correspond as closely as possible with the present land agency districts of Moosejaw, Swift Current, Maple Creek, Medicine Hat and Lethbridge. Where it is found that the area affected extends further north than is contained in the land districts above outlined such areas shall be included within the district immediately south for the purposes of carrying out our policy of relieving the suffering and destitute settlers. A supervisor shall be appointed for each of these districts who will have authority to take charge under yourself of the disposition of the supplies to be furnished by the department and to take general charge of all questions as they arise from time to time in the particular district for which he has been appointed. In case of necessity it may be advisable to appoint an assistant to the supervisor in order that there may be every expedition in the carrying out of our policy. This will probably be necessary in the cases of Medicine Hat and Maple Creek, which districts are particularly affected at the present juncture. Under these supervisors the officers of the North West Mounted Police, the agents of Dominion Lands, sub-land agents and homestead inspectors will have authority to inquire into cases and to make the necessary arrangements to relieve the suffering and destitute in their respective districts.

Further, it has been decided that orders for goods shall be confined to the merchants doing business in the said districts and in all cases purchases should be made as far as possible from the merchants that the settler has been doing business with in the past. Of course it will be the duty of the supervisors and their assistants to see that all merchants shall treat the settlers fairly in regard to prices, and that in any case or cases where any merchant is charging or attempting to charge more than legitimate prices no further orders will be placed at his disposal. It is hoped that by this method there will be no discrimination in favour of any particular individual merchant and the usual channels of trade will not be interfered with in any manner or form.

In your instructions to the supervisors, care should be taken to designate the particular class of goods that will be placed at the disposal of the settlers as well as pointing out clearly to them the necessity of outlining to the recipients the exact nature of the assistance rendered. The supplies to be furnished should be confined exclusively to provisions for the family, feed for hogs and poultry, and fuel. The same arrangements at present in force with respect to seed grain shall obtain with reference to advances of goods of the nature above suggested, and must be considered as a lien upon the holdings of the settler.

I think this answers the hon. member for Regina who endeavoured to raise the point that last year we were willing to take a note and that now we were taking a lien upon everything they possess. This is the public position as represented by the Government and as laid down for the people of the West in dealing with the matter.

All deserving settlers in destitute circumstances are to receive relief, and it is not considered necessary that they must be bona fide possessors of homestead or pre-emptions in order that assistance shall be rendered to them. This should be clearly pointed out to each recipient so that there may be no misunderstanding as to the nature of the assistance rendered by the Government. Furthermore, it should be clearly understood that only cases of absolute necessity are to be favourably considered by our officers and every care should be taken that the action of the department shall be protected in this regard.

Action is to be taken immediately. Please make all requisite arrangements at once.

That was the letter of instructions given to Mr. Bruce Walker as far back as August 19, 1914, and no change has taken place in so far as I am aware in respect to that letter save and except what has been stated here by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to-day with regard to the manner in which he proposes, under a certain arrangement, to extend this assistance in some individual cases outside of the stricken area. But I cannot understand how hon. gentlemen opposite should have the idea that there was any misgiving in respect to the instructions issued by the department for dealing with this question.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: How does the minister explain the letter that was sent broadcast throughout the West in October, November and December, 1914, two months after the letter which he has just read, and which letter has nothing to do with anything at all except the question of relief in the drouth-stricken area?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not understand my hon. friend's question. That letter is entirely in keeping with the letter of instructions I have just read. It was dealing entirely with this drouth-stricken area and with no other part.

Mr. MARTIN: How does the minister explain the letter of October, 1914, which was sent broadcast throughout the West, in which Mr. Bruce Walker, Commissioner of Immigration, stated in as plain English as he could that an advance would be made if applied for in any place in Saskatchewan and that in the case of a man who had patented land all the security that would be required would be a promissory note with interest at five per cent?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not read such a letter myself, I never heard of it before and I do not think such a letter exists because Mr. Bruce Walker was dealing with the district he was appointed to deal with as laid down when he received the letter of the 19th August, 1914. Another statement was made by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney) to the effect that the member of the provincial Government had no such understanding as that which appears to exist in the minds of the members of the Dominion Government in respect to this distribution of seed grain and assistance to the settlers in the drouth district. Shortly after this letter of instruction was issued to Mr. Bruce Walker we had a visit from Hon. Walter Scott, Premier of Saskatchewan, and Mr. Bell the provincial treasurer, who came to us to discuss this and various other matters at that particular time. I am going to quote you what Mr. Scott had to say to the press after our interview and it was taken by Mr. Dafoe and sent out and published in the press of western Canada. It is as follows and is dated September 2:

> Premier Scott of, Saskatchewan, and Hon. G. Bell, Provincial Treasurer, were in Ottawa to-day conferring with members of the Government regarding the supplying of seed grain to farmers in a portion of the southwestern section of the province, whose crop this season had been almost a complete failure. They asked that the Government advance these men seed grain in order to tide them over in their failure.
>
> 'Every man who has land ready for seed next spring,' said Premier Scott at the conclusion of the conference to-night, 'can be assured that he will have seed provided to put in crop.'

I think that makes very clear the distinct and definite understanding which Mr. Scott and Mr. Bell had. There was no question about it. There was no consideration of any other district save and except the one which was laid down on the map which was before us for our consideration. We have had mention to-day of a circular letter issued by Mr. McNab, Minister of Agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan, and I must confess that I am surprised at the contents of Mr. McNab's letter because he could very easily have got correct information from his leader, Hon. Walter Scott, if he had taken the trouble to consult him in respect to his understanding of the matter after his visit to Ottawa in this connection. In regard to the districts outside of the stricken area, Mr. McNab says and properly so, that the Government of Saskatchewan, following the example of the Government of Manitoba, had adopted legislation whereby power was vested in the different municipalities to render assistance in individual or general cases as they might see fit with respect to seed grain. What I am surprised at in Mr. McNab's letter is that he did not consult his leader and obtain a better understanding of the true facts and the real position of the question of the assistance that it was proposed to render and that was suggested and discussed with Mr. Scott and Mr. Bell when they were here. Then there would have been no misunderstanding; there should be no misunderstanding. We all agree, we all desire to render the greatest possible assistance within our power, and the Minister of the Interior today has undoubtedly made a very generous statement as to how far we are going to carry out this policy with a view of assisting the settlers. When we were visited by Mr. Scott and Mr. Bell, the amount that would have been necessary to supply seed grain was estimated at something like a million and a half or two million dollars. To-day you have the statement of the Minister of the Interior that this is going up now to eight or ten million dollars, or even eleven million dollars, and I think that proves the very contrary of the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Neely), and it shows that we undoubtedly are a great deal more generous to-day than we ever thought of being when we discussed the matter in the autumn of last year. However, that is immaterial. I for one, as a western man, with my other western colleagues in the Government, have been pressing that the fullest possible relief in the power of the Government should be given to the western farmers. I think it ought to be admitted in all fairness that the statement of the Minister of the Interior makes it abundantly clear that we are endeavouring to carry out a policy which will be of great advantage to the people of western Canada and to the entire satisfaction of every reasonable-minded man in that portion of the Dominion.

Mr. D. WARNOCK (Macleod): For the past three months I have been among the farmers of Southern Alberta, meeting them individually in their homes and collectively in their association meetings, and I am in a position to give the House some first-hand information in regard to the seed grain question, especially as it effects Southern Alberta. Since the outbreak of war, the farmers have been deluged with literature and lectures, urging them to go in for increased production. There is not a farmer in Southern Alberta who does not wish to increase his production; there is not a farmer who does not realize that increased agricultural production would in this crisis be a splendid thing for the Empire, and not only for the Empire, but for Canada and the farmers themselves. It is not lectures or advice that the farmers require at this time; it is financial assistance, and the greatest problem that the farmers in the drouth-stricken district have is to find ways and means of procuring seed for this coming spring. And, Sir, notwithstanding the long explanation of the Minister of Public Works, it is very evident that some one has blundered in this matter. The indecision of those entrusted with formulating a policy of seed grain assistance has led to a great deal of disappointment and much valuable time has been wasted. As the member for Saskatoon pointed out, the price of seed grain has materially increased and is getting higher every day, and unless prompt steps are taken by the Government this grain will be at an almost prohibitory price. In October last it was understood that every farmer in the drouth-stricken area would be provided with seed grain. There were letters written which led farmers to expect that assistance. In the month of January the deputy relief commissioner visited the farmers in my own district and led them to understand that all would be assisted, and many applications for seed grain were handed to him. A little later, the farmers were notified by letter that only those living on unpatented lands would be assisted. Here is a sample of these letters over the signature of J. Bruce Walker, Commissioner, and it is dated Winnipeg, January 25, 1915:

Re Seed Grain.

Sir,—Replying to your application for an advance of seed grain, I have to inform you that this government is only making advances of seed grain to those in your district who are on unpatented land. I note from your application that you only hold patented land and it is with regret that I have to inform you that your application cannot receive favourable consideration. You will require to look to your local municipality or to your provincial government for assistance in the matter of seed grain.

Your obedient servant,

J. Bruce Walker,
Commissioner.

The Deputy Seed Grain Commissioner had visited the district in which the gentleman who received this letter lived, and I think that district is within the prescribed area, it being in the Macleod district, which would be included in the Lethbridge land district. The Deputy Seed Grain Commissioner had visited that area in January and had received these applications, and had led the farmers of that district to expect assistance. I may say that this was not the first crop failure the farmers of that district had met with. In 1913 they suffered severely from hail, and last year their crop was almost a total failure. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that so far as I know not one farmer now asking for assistance in that district sold grain; they had no grain to sell.

As to holders of patents not receiving assistance, I would like to explain to the House that in my opinion patentees are in a worse position than homesteaders. It has been customary for homesteaders, as soon as they receive their patents, to at once apply to a loan company and borrow every dollar procurable. They do this so that they may reimburse the storekeepers and others who had carried them while they were fulfilling the homestead regulations. They also purchased horses and equipment to go on breaking more land, and so these patentees are often really in a worse position than the homesteaders who have not received their patents. I was pleased to hear the Minister of the Interior say that he had discussed with his colleague the Minister of Finance the question of the banks advancing money, and that the Minister of Finance had taken the matter up with the bank presidents who had communicated with their western managers requesting them to give settlers every assistance in their power. But I want to say that the western banks will change their methods very much indeed if they grant any assistance to a farmer who has already secured a loan from a loan company, and has given that company a first mortgage. It is utterly impossible for any man in that position to get a loan from a western bank at the present time. If the Minister of Finance can make these banks more generous, or compel them to change their methods, he will confer a very great boon on that western country. I think every one will admit that the time has come when the prosperity of every city, town, and village; every railway and every industry, is absolutely dependent upon the prosperity of our rural population. The time has come when the prosperity of our country is dependent upon the permanent development of agriculture. The manufacturers of the East realized that. We had the unique spectacle in November last of representatives of the manufacturers journeying to Winnipeg to meet representatives of the western farmers. The manufacturers wished the co-operation of the western farmers in putting before the Government a scheme to bring under cultivation another million acres of raw land. They proposed that they should ask the Federal Government to advance fifty million dollars for that purpose. A joint committee of representatives of the farmers and of the manufacturers was formed. That committee on visiting Ottawa had a conference with the Prime Minister and his colleagues, and were informed that the matter would be given consideration. I believe they were promised that a commission would be appointed to investigate agricultural conditions, but so far as I know nothing more has been done up to the present time.

The prevailing opinion among all classes of business men in the West, irrespective of their political affiliations, is that until the province of Alberta, for which I am speaking on this occasion, is given control of its natural resources, it is the duty of the Federal Government to assist in developing agriculture in that province. A great deal is heard of the 'back to the land' movement; and if we are going to try to bring the people back to the land, the best method is to improve the conditions under which men and women in the rural districts are living to-day. If we have better agricultural conditions, there will be less talk of rural depopulation. No finer opportunity was ever presented to any government than the opportunity now presented to the Federal Government to assist in building up and developing agriculture. Soil conditions never were better. A very large area is prepared for seeding in the spring. We have had an unusual amount of moisture; the ground is thoroughly saturated; and if the Government of Canada will assist these farmers with seed grain, I am sure the benefit will be prompt and, I hope, lasting. If these farmers are assisted now it will put them on their feet and enable them to go on and succeed. I wish to say earnestly that, if these men on patented lands in particular are not assisted this coming spring, instead of their having an increased area under crop, the area in many districts, including my own, will be decreased. It is the bounden duty of the Federal Government to advance seed grain to the farmers and to give them every encouragement. What if it does take $11,000,000 ? We have given $45,000,000 to a railway company; we have been handing out millions of dollars in other ways, and I feel sure that we shall get prompt returns from the farmers if they are provided with seed grain this year. I would ask the Government to take prompt steps to provide that seed grain, even if it costs twice eleven million dollars.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton): It must be impressed very strongly on the minds of hon. members the tremendous nature of the task that confronts the Government, and the necessity of going forward with that task with the intention of seeing it through to substantial success. It is satisfactory to have the explanations of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche) and of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers). In the face of their explanations, it might be said that there was no good ground for the uncertainty that has prevailed in the minds of the people of the West who are particularly interested in this matter. The very fact, however, that the Commissioner of Immigration in January sends out a circular letter which contradicts specifically the terms of his letter of October, gives substantial grounds for the question as to how far the Government is going to implement its promise of October. It is an officer of the Government who has raised the question in the minds of the people, and it is for the members of the Government in this House on this occasion to set at rest that question.

The Minister of Public Works specifically stated that from the beginning it was the intention to restrict the area of assistance to certain land districts which he mentioned, and such adjoining territory as might properly be included. To show again that there was ground for misunderstanding, the Saskatoon land district is not one of those which the minister mentioned. The southern part of that district adjoins the districts which he mentioned; but it is quite evident from what appeared in the public press, and from the statements of the gentleman who was chosen to represent the Government, that in that district it was the general understanding of the people that their requirements would be met as well as those in the districts to the south.

Now, it is not because we desire to question the good faith of the Government that this matter has been brought forward today; it is for the purpose of being assured that the matter will be dealt with fully and completely as circumstances will permit. My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Warnock) and other hon. gentlemen have stated, in terms that I think cannot be improved upon, how important the question is, and the good results that will flow from dealing with it in a satisfactory manner. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior used expressions which did not restrict the aid to be given to a certain specified area; when he said that the Government would consider the granting of aid to the holders of patented lands outside of the drouth-stricken area. Then the question came up at once—and this is the point which it is very desirable should be settled beyond any question and at the earliest possible moment—how far does the Government intend to go in that connection? It has been said that the banks will come to the rescue; that the municipalities have the responsibility, or that the Provincial Government must take care of these matters under certain conditions. If it is to be the banks, if it is to be the municipalities, if it is to be the provincial governments, the limit to which this Government will go, or the limit to which these different authorities will have to go in order to relieve the situation, should be specifically laid down. There should not be any question of doubt about it. If arrangements are made with Provincial Governments, with the banks, with the municipalities, or with any other authority, and if there is to be a division of authority and responsibility, that division should be made without delay. If there is to be no such division of authority, if the Dominion Government is not to expect the banks, the municipalities, or the Provincial Governments to take part in this matter, then it is for the Dominion Government to say so and to live up to its promises.

We do not wish to raise this question in any spirit of criticism or with any desire to hamper the Government, but to impress upon Parliament how important the question is from a national standpoint that the details of the matter should be worked out so that justice shall be done to all parties concerned, and that no part of the country and no section of the people shall fail of the assistance required because of lack of understanding between the different authorities concerned or in regard to the exercise of authority by this Government. And, I repeat, if a misunderstanding has existed, or exists up to the present time, it is because of the Government itself and not because of its critics.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): I do not intervene to find the slightest fault with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche). I should like to offer to him and to the Government my sympathy; and I would extend that sympathy to the people of the West. I offer to the Government my sympathy in their having to deal with a problem of such magnitude at a time when money is so scarce and the nation is taken up, as we all know, with an affair of overpowering size and importance outside our own boundaries. I have risen for the purpose of making one or two observations which I think may convey practical suggestions to the minister which he might find useful to consider and possibly to act upon. I have the good fortune to represent a constituency which is inhabited by a very large number of highly intelligent settlers. They have shown their intelligence by coming to a part of the country where, in the thirteen years that I have known it, no large portion of the community has suffered by either hail or drought. I could mention other ways in which they have shown their intelligence, but refrain for the present. I have had, nevertheless, a couple of letters from limited areas in my constituency. One of these refers to a fact to which my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) alluded—that some people are in difficulties at the moment through having been hailed out and not being insured. The other letter pointed out what is very well known to us all who live in the West, that it was a very dry year all over the western provinces. The drouth affected one limited portion, at any rate, of even the Red Deer constituency, favourable though its location. Now, in the presence of these facts which I do not think can be gainsaid, I hope the Government has not followed too arbitrarily the line in defining what they understand to be the drouth-stricken area. If I followed the hon. Minister of the Interior correctly, he seemed to confine his promises to an area exclusively within the southern limits of Alberta, for example. That is what I understand him to mean by drouth-stricken area. I would therefore ask the minister in all sincerity to remember that there are isolated cases outside Southern Alberta of people who have been affected by the drouth, and there would appear to be no good reason why they should be arbitrarily excluded from the Minister's careful and, I trust, favourable consideration. I offer that suggestion sincerely and somewhat hopefully. As a matter of fact, while we may regard this question from the point of view of the settler with whom we all sympathize, yet in this House we ought to regard it very largely from the point of view of the results which are likely to be obtained. And I should like to point out to the minister that he would have a better guarantee of results for grain advanced in an area so generally successful in its crop as that which I have the honour to represent than he would in the southern district, where, I am afraid, drouth is rather frequent. I was reassured by the statement of my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Buchanan) on that subject, but I have heard others say that the hot winds there are so prevalent, that a crop in four years is all that they can look for. I would suggest to the Minister that it might be a bad investment for a nation to put seed grain into that region. At any rate, I would suggest that it might be possible to make inquiries of the individual settlers who are being relieved to find how often they have been stricken by drouth. I sometimes have had a doubt whether the policy of what I might call pushing settlement, has not been carried too far in southern Alberta. I have often wondered whether it would not have been better if large areas in that region had been left to be ranged by cattle. However that may be, I think it would be well worth the Minister's consideration whether he could not, through his numerous agents, institute inquiries in each case of relief, if possible, as to how far he is likely to get results from advancing seed grain in specific cases and how often the people he is helping to put seed into the ground have been stricken with drouth in the years immediately past. To keep a man putting seed into an area that will only grow grain once in four years is of very questionable benefit either to the man or to the country.

That is one suggestion I should like to make. Then, I should like to be allowed to press the idea with which I opened—that the Minister might extend his idea of the drouth-stricken area, somewhat anyhow. I sympathize with him in the difficulties of the situation; they are very great. The price of grain is a tremendous aggravation of the case and increases very much the difficulties of the Administration. Nevertheless, with a view to the results, I would press upon the Minister that he should not close his mind absolutely to isolated cases outside of what he appears to have regarded as the drouth-stricken area. If he opens his mind to this extent and wants to know where he can help some people outside of southern Alberta with the utmost certainty of good results, I shall be glad to tell him of one or two limited localities in the riding I have the honour to represent.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Solicitor General): One would not be a loyal representative of any constituency of western Canada who did not feel very deeply concerned as to the situation of that country in regard to seed grain. Nor, indeed, could one endowed at all with human sympathy, no matter from what part he came, be doing his duty if he did not exercise it to the full in the extension of relief.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat has made remarks which we on this side of the House cannot but appreciate. We feel perhaps more keenly and directly than they the responsibility of the situation, particularly the financial difficulty involved. I rise not to add anything to what the Minister responsible has said or to the Government policy, but only because the hon. member who has just sat down and hon. members who preceded him did not seem to fully comprehend the effect of the Minister's statement. But I fear that, in the matters in which they were astray, if the Minister was not explicit it is impossible for me to be more so. The occasion is fraught with unusual difficulty from several causes. In the first place the year before last in our country was not an auspicious year. The crops on the whole were bountiful, but only ordinarily so, in the districts most affected by the drouth of 1914; but the prices received were not proportionate to the cost involved. The prices were not equal to those received in previous years and this year. Following that a season of excessive drouth prevailed, extending from our own older province of Manitoba westerly to the Rockies, and most pronounced in the southern portions of Alberta and Saskatchewan. That was, of course, the initial, the foundation cause of the trouble. But upon that there was heaped this situation that at a time of financial depression caused not only by the war but by other conditions and intense indeed before the war commenced, the banks assumed an attitude that added indeed to the difficulties of the settlers; the banks assumed such an attitude, whether justifiably or not I cannot inquire, which has resulted in their not being of the assistance to the farmers that they have been in previous years and not being, in the opinion of a very great many, of the assistance that they ought to have been last year. The duties or responsibilities of the Government were great on account of both these conditions. However, in the province of Manitoba, from which I come, even this unusual situation was not such as to involve extraordinary responsibility upon this Government. It is a matter of congratulation to us from that province—and in this I am sure that I shall be joined by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Cruise) and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Molloy)—that even although we had suffered to a considerable extent from last year's drouth and although, as a result of that, there are large areas in that province to which assistance must undoubtedly be extended, an appeal to the Dominion Government is not yet essential in regard to patented lands. As to the two other provinces the situation is different. A similar situation arose there once before. As the minister has pointed out a drouth, although not to the same extent, occurred in 1908. That was met by the Government of the day by advances to the provinces, the provinces supplying the grain to the settlers and becoming responsible to this Government. But so great and so fraught with difficulty was the situation this year that the remedy of 1908 could not be applied and it became necessary for this Government to extend the line further and to decide to what limit it could go, because it was determined to go to the utmost limit in the power of the Government in meeting the demands of the western settler. The Minister of the Interior has defined the line between the responsibilities of the Federal Government and the responsibilities of provincial governments and municipalities in those two provinces and I believe that we, representing the western provinces, should be grateful to the representatives on both sides of the House from all the provinces of Canada because no criticism has been made of the very liberal extension of the responsibilities assumed by this Government as compared with the responsibilities assumed by the Dominion Government in years gone by. We from the West believe, and I am sure that in this I shall be joined by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), that the Government of the day has gone far and assumed a very great responsibility in carrying the line of demarcation as far as it has in regard to relief to the western settlers. Now how far has the line been carried? It is pointed out that when the situation first arose the Government of the day determined that there were certain areas that were so deeply involved and were so striken that to those areas at least relief must be extended not only in the way of seed grain but in the way of supplies of the necessaries of life. Those areas were taken care of first, the unpatented lands and the patented lands, the unpatented, of course, being those for which this Government would be more directly responsible. But later on, as evidenced by a letter read by the hon. member for Regina, the Commissioner of Immigration at Winnipeg declared that the Government had decided to go further, to go beyond that stricken area. In this connection I have some fault to find with the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Martin), and I include in my complaint the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely). I think I have discovered in the remarks of both these gentlemen one cause and a very great cause, for the added difficulties the Government is in, difficulties for which they are not responsible, but for which I am not so sure the hon. member for Regina is not responsible. The letter of the Commissioner of Immigration of October 21, that has been so much discussed, is not worded, perhaps, as a lawyer would word it; but at all events its meaning is reasonably clear and its meaning in regard to the points referred to by the hon. member for Regina is perfectly clear. It will be remembered that the hon. member for Regina said that after reading that letter, after having had it shown to him by various farmers in his constituency, he assured them that in it no distinction was drawn and that, without respect to person, or area, the Government would give seed grain to any man who asked it. He assured them that they would be quite justified in selling their wheat because the Government of Canada had undertaken to be responsible for seed grain if they did not have it. Was he justified in giving that assurance to his constituents? What is there in the letter to justify it? Was he acting fairly with the Government of Canada or with his constituents? Does the letter say that the Government of this country would be responsible for seed grain to any man who was without it, whether on patented or unpatented lands? It says nothing of the kind. The letter is written after the Government has been catering to the necessities of those who have lost their crop by drouth within certain specified areas. Under those circumstances the letter says:

> In answer to your letter of recent date, asking for an advance of seed grain, I have to inform you that this department is making arrangements to supply bona fide settlers, who have lost their crop this year and are unable to obtain seed, with good clean seed next spring, delivery to start about the middle of February.

Then he goes on to say in a subsequent paragraph that the applicant should state in his letter whether his land is unpatented or patented, and if patented the encumbrances upon it. The hon. member for Regina went on to say that the Government was in an exceedingly generous mood at that time, and that they offered to advance this man seed grain no matter where he came from and what his condition, so long as he asked for it, and so long as he gave his note at 5 per cent. But did the Government offer there to give it to any man who had not seed grain? 5 p.m. He had first to be a bona fide settler; secondly, he had to be in the position that he had lost his crop in 1914, that he had not sold his crop; thirdly, he had to be in the position that he could not obtain seed grain elsewhere.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: I did not say that I had ever advised any man to sell his grain. I said that by reason of this letter men had sold their grain, and that a reasonable interpretation of the letter was that the Government was supplying seed grain to any man in the prorvinces who had lost his crop, whether on patented or unpatented land and whether within the stricken area or not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am only too glad to receive the correction of the hon. member, because I recognize that his statement needed correction, and very badly needed it. The hon. member for Regina did say that many had come to him and said that they had sold their grain, and that he justified them in selling their grain and pointed to the Government's letter as making good to them the grain they had so sold. I say to the hon. member that he had no mandate and no warrant in that letter to make such a statement. The hon. member for Regina goes further. He says that the generosity of the Government was evidenced by the fact that they were willing to supply seed grain and to take nothing but an oath. Now, I draw his attention to the fact that Mr. Bruce Walker in the latter part of his letter states that the applicants must in their application state whether their land, if patented, is encumbered—it could not be encumbered if unpatented—and if encumbered, what encumbrances are against it. I ask the hon. member what would be the use of that information if we were not going to take a lien on the land?

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: How does the hon. gentleman explain the statement, that as far as patented lands are concerned the only security asked for in the application is the promissory note at 5 per cent payable on a certain date?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I answer, that is not in the letter. It does not say that that will be the only security asked for. It says, that will be asked for, and then says, tell us what encumbrances are against your land. I do not need to observe to the House that the hon. member for Regina has not yet answered my question as to what value to the commissioner the information would be as to whether the land was encumbered or not if they did not intend to have anything to do with the land. I earnestly hope that the hon. member for Regina was not joined by too many of his colleagues on that side of the House in interpreting the contents of that letter to their constituents. It is a fact that, as a result of something, the applications for seed grain have come in very late and very precipitously. It is a fact that taking what care the Government could and making all investigations within its power, and, as the result of that care and those investigations, having procured such a supply of seed grain at a very moderate price as they felt would be sufficient, Notwithstanding that, later on and right up to the end of January, 1915, large numbers of applications poured in. I believe the Minister of the Interior said some 9,000. It may be there is some explanation of that. It may be that because of an industrious circulation of a wrong interpretation of the letter of October 21st, men in the province who had never hoped to look to the Government for assistance were induced to look for assistance at that late date, and that in consequence all these applications came in.

However, the main question now is what is the Government doing, where does the Government's responsibility end and where does the responsibility of others begin? The hon. minister has stated—and it did not seem to be caught at all by the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely)—that the Government was in no way restricting its responsibility geographically within those provinces. That is to say that the relief of the Government, in the way of seed grain and for feed for horses for putting in the seed, extended to places beyond the stricken area. The minister also stated the conditions under which that relief would be extended; that in cases beyond the stricken area where the farmer had suffered the previous year as the farmer in the drouth-stricken area had suffered, and where, as a result, he could not procure seed grain elsewhere, the Government was prepared in those cases to mete out to him the same relief as to the farmer of the stricken area. That is, wherever the farmer could place himself in the same position as to causes and conditions as the farmer in the stricken area, then he placed himself in the same position as to remedy. I do not know that a fairer policy could be agreed upon. I do not think the hon. member for Red Deer or the hon. member for Edmonton will say that the line could possibly be drawn, having regard to the responsibility of precedent, more generously than it has been done. There is not a definition of locality; but the causes must be the same, the conditions must be the same as to the possiblity of getting relief elsewhere, and, being the same, the farmer is in the same position as to remedy I do not wish to be understood as arguing that beyond the pale of the relief so extended there will not be many deserving cases, many cases such as those described by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, where the farmer though he may have had some remnant of a crop in 1914, had not grain of such a quality that he would dare to use it as seed in 1915. There may be some cases such as that which are deserving cases; possibly just as deserving as those to which relief must be granted, but the line must be drawn somewhere and there are responsibilities upon other institutions, upon other governments, upon municipalities and units as well as upon this Government. And I believe all will agree that under the very unusual and overpowering circumstances of the time, when the calls upon the treasury of Canada are unprecedented, the Government has met the situation in a generous spirit, and in a spirit that every reasonable man should accept.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia): It was not my intention to say anything on this debate, because fortunately in my part of the province of Saskatchewan we had a fair crop. Up to the present I have not received a single letter from a constituent on the subject of seed grain. But it seems to me at this stage of the debate that there is some uncertainty about the position of the Government. The Solicitor General has explained it pretty well. We all know that he has a wonderful faculty of drawing nice distinctions in law or in anything else, but will the ordinary farmer who has not seed for his next crop be able to follow the nice distinctions in this letter that my hon. friend draws? Mr. Walker stated absolutely that those who were on patented lands would be asked for a note. I do not think it is worth arguing about whether, in addition to that, they give security on their land or not. If the Government want additional security, well and good; I think they are quite entitled to it. Here is the position: Farmers want seed grain; they were all led to believe by this letter of Mr. Walker's that they would get seed grain. I have a copy of Mr. Walker's letter, and there is absolutely nothing said in it about a restricted area. There is nothing said to the effect that it will be confined to farmers who are living on homesteads the patents for which have not been issued. According to this letter any farmer on earth would be justified in saying that if he had lost his crop last year he could get seed grain from the Government. The Solicitor General says that the municipalities and the provincial governments must assume responsibility in the matter of seed grain. It is no time now to come forward and say that the municipalities and the provincial governments must assume responsibility for seed grain.

After the members of the provincial Government in Saskatchewan came down here last fall and had an interview with the members of this Government, they went home with the understanding, which was perfectly satisfactory to them, that they would attend to a certain amount of relief in the stricken area in the province of Saskatchewan, and they have expended over a million and a quarter of dollars in carrying out that work. They understood absolutely that the Dominion Government would attend to all matters of seed grain, and that they were not going to be called upon in that connection. Members of this Government asked the members of the provincial Government if they would pass certain legislation which would give this Government the right to a first security for the amount of any seed grain that they advanced to the settlers. The Saskatchewan Government said they would be pleased to pass the necessary legislation; they are quite willing to do that to-day and will do it.

To come forward now and say that the provinces and municipalities must assume responsibility in connection with this seed grain is altogether unfair. Had the Governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta known last August, September or October that they were going to be called upon to provide seed grain, or if the municipalities had known that they would be required to assume this responsibility, it would have been an easy matter then to have secured the seed grain. To-day, I doubt if it is an easy matter. On the other hand, it would be a most difficult matter for these authorities to secure the necessary seed grain. We ought to have a straight and definite statement from this Government that in all deserving cases it will undertake to supply seed grain. It is not a gift; it is only a loan of the money. I know it is a large sum, and I know that the Government have a falling revenue and tremendous expenses to meet otherwise, but if they want to follow up the argument that they have been putting forward for the last six months in favour of increasing production, let me ask how they are going to increase production if they allow two or three million acres to go without seed. Seed must be procured in order that we may get the benefit of next year's crop. Where is the seed to come from? Taking into consideration this letter, copies of which Mr. Bruce Walker sent out by the thousand all over the country in October last, it is up to the Government to supply every deserving case, and I would like to have a statement from the Minister of the Interior as to whether they will do so. I understand the Solicitor General, acquiesced in by the Minister of the Interior, to say that outside of the restricted area, throughout Saskatchewan, Alberta or Manitoba, if there is any farmer in the position of a farmer in the stricken area, his case will be examined into, and if it is found that he lost his crop last year he will get seed grain. That is satisfactory as far as it goes but there will be many cases, such as were mentioned by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson), where they have had a certain amount of crop but where the grain is absolutely unfit for seed. If it was absolutely unfit for seed the revenue that the farmer got from the crop will not enable him to buy good seed especially now when, I do not suppose, wheat could be delivered to the farmer under $2 a bushel, or perhaps $1.75, or $1.80.

I think the Minister of the Interior should give us a definite statement that they will not throw this responsibility on the municipalities or on the provincial governments. They are not in a position at the present time to secure millions of dollars to get the necessary seed grain to give to the farmers. They have no organization for that purpose. The Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Agriculture have an organization already handling this very subject. Why then divide the responsibility? The responsibility cannot be divided and have any success in handling this question. What is done has to be done by this Government. They have the organization, they are in shape to do it and if they have not the money they can get it much more easily than the provincial governments or the municipalities can.

I say again that this letter of Mr. Walker led every farmer in the country to believe that if he had not seed grain to sow the land that he had ready he could get it from the Government. It may be that, technically speaking, as was pointed out by the Solicitor General, there are some loopholes to enable you to place another interpretation upon this letter. But this Government have led the farmers to believe that they were going to give them seed grain if they did not have it. Take security for it if you like, take a lien on the land and get the necessary guarantee from the provincial government to give your lien priority over all other encumbrances on the land—take or get that if you want to, but give the farmer the seed. If you do not give it to him he is not going to be able to get any seed grain. You have led him to believe that he would get it and if he does not get it the responsibility is on this Government and there will be the loss of many millions of dollars if we have not a good crop next year. It will be a severe loss because the price next fall, whether the war stops to-morrow or goes on a year or two, will be high. It is the duty of this Government to give seed grain to every farmer who has not got it otherwise, charge him the price of it and take the necessary security. This Government will not lose a dollar. They get their money back with five per cent interest. We heard the Minister of the Interior say what the banks were going to do. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Buchanan) that if they do what the Minister said they might do there will be a tremendous change in their policy. I doubt if they will do very much in advancing money to farmers. They have never done it in the past, and I think it would be a poor reed for the farmer who has no seed grain to rely upon. I do not think they will all get it if that is the case. This is a serious matter. The Government has spent millions of dollars on this question as it is and all we ask is that they may go a little farther and carry out exactly what everybody will naturally take to be the meaning of this letter that Mr. Bruce Walker sent out broadcast over the whole country—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta—in which no distinction was made with reference to the restricted area. Take the security if you wish, but do not have divided responsibility, for it will not work, and it is too late if it did work. If you are going to make a success of this, the Federal Government will have to deal with the whole question of seed grain and if this Government does not take action in the light of this letter, they will be held responsible by the people who are not able to get seed.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT (Calgary): I rise in the first place to express my appreciation of the attitude on this question taken by the members who come from the older provinces. Prima facie there is no duty on the Federal Government to supply seed grain for patented land in any province of Canada. That is clear. In the province of Ontario this Government is not asked to supply seed grain, nor yet is it asked to do so in the province of Quebec. For once I am entirely in accord with my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) when he says that this Government has approached this problem as one of great magnitude, recognizing that it is a question that must be dealt with in the very best possible way, having regard to the conditions that exist and to the precedents by which it is more or less bound.

Unfortunately, owing to causes about which it would not now be proper to inquire, the western provinces do not own their natural resources, and have, in my judgment, parted with them for a very insufficient compensation. Having regard to these conditions, the Federal Government having assumed responsibility for the administration of the public domain in these provinces, feels that in accordance with the precedent adopted in days gone by it should meet the existing situation and deal with it. That being so, the question as to what should be done in this particular case is a matter for consideration, and I am bound to say that I am very much reassured by the statement of the Minister of the Interior this afternoon. I did at one time feel owing to the documents to which attention has been directed this afternoon, that possibly some one had been misled or that there had been a change of policy on the part of the Administration. Such I now know is not the case. After all, it is no longer a theory but a condition that confronts us, and the question is as to how the Government is going to discharge the duty it has taken upon itself, in the light of the circular sent out to the settlers and which indicated that in so far as seed grain was concerned, the Administration proposed to supply seed grain solely within the stricken area, whether the settlers lived on patented or unpatented land. At first it was only supposed to be on unpatented land, their duty being only to homesteaders. But, in order that their might not be divided authority within that area, the Government very properly assumed the duty of dealing with those who live on patented and unpatented land. I think they are dealing with the situation fairly, especially since the Minister of the Interior has announced that he was prepared to extend the same treatment to those who are similarly situated beyond that stricken area. I think he went as far as he possibly could, and I would like to adopt the language of the member for Red Deer to this extent, that I hope the minister will not be too censorious or critical, but that where he finds areas that have been devastated by drouth or hail, he will extend to them the same treatment as he has to that area which is represented in this House by the hon. member for Lethbridge.

The condition is really a very serious one. Sometimes I think the members of this House who represent eastern constituencies little realize the conditions brought about in some parts of western Canada. In some districts the land has been swept as clean as a floor, and where once there was vegetation there is now nothing but the driest dust. It is even true that the children of the farmers in some instances have been suffering from the pangs of hunger, almost starvation, and under these circumstances the Government relief is absolutely needed to encourage the settlers within that area and to enable them to have their land bear crops next year. As the hon. gentleman from Macleod has said, we have had more snow and moisture this winter than we have had for many years, and I have every reason to believe that next year we will reap abundant harvests within that very area where in the past succeeding crop failures have occurred. Even if the Government should expend several millions more than was anticipated at first, it seems to me that this duty devolves upon them fairly. I think we in the West have every reason to feel grateful for the spirit of toleration with which hon. gentlemen who come from other provinces have dealt with this question in this time of great stress in the West.

Motion negatived.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 5.35 p.m.

Thursday, February 11, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

[Mr. R. B. Bennett.]

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister) presented the following report of the special committee appointed to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the Select Standing Committees of the House during the present session:

No. 1.

ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Messieurs

Aikins (Sir James),
Barker,
Barnard,
Bennett (Calgary),
Bennett (Simcoe),
Blondin,
Borden (Sir Robert),
Boys,
Bristol,
Bureau,
Carvell,
Charlton,
Chisholm (Antigonish),
Coderre,
Crothers,
Demers,
Descarries,
Devlin,
Doherty,
Fripp,
German,
Kay,
Lafortune,
Lamarche,
Lancaster,
Lapointe (Kamouraska),
Lemieux,
Maclean (Halifax),
Marcile (Bagot),
Munson,
Nickle,
Northrup,
Porter,
Rainville,
Robidoux,
Ross,
Sévigny,
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Tremain, and
Wilson (Laval).—40.

No. 2.

ON RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES.

Messieurs

Achim,
Aikins (Sir James),
Armstrong (Lambton),
Arthurs,
Baker,
Barker,
Barnard,
Barrette,
Béland,
Bellemare,
Bennett (Calgary),
Bennett (Simcoe),
Bickerdike,
Blain,
Boivin,
Boyce,
Boyer,
Boys,
Brabazon,
Bradbury,
Bristol,
Buchanan,
Bureau,
Carroll,
Cash,
Chabot,
Charlton,
Clark (Red Deer),
Clements,
Cochrane,
Cockshutt,
Copp,
Cruise,
Currie,
Delisle,
Descarries,
Devlin,
Donaldson,
Douglas,
Edwards,
Elliot,
Ethier,
Fisher,
Forget (Sir Rodolphe),
Fowler,
Fripp,
Gauthier (Gaspé),
Gauvreau,
German,
Girard,
Gordon,
Graham,
Green,
Guilbault,
Guthrie,
Hartt,
Henderson,
Hepburn,
Jameson,
Kemp,
Knowles,
Lachance,
Lalor,
Lamarche,
Lancaster,
Lanctôt,
Lapointe (Kamouraska),

Lapointe (Montreal, St. J.), Law, Lemieux, L'Espérance, Macdonald, Macdonell, Maclean (York, O.), MacNutt, McCraney, McCrea, McCurdy, McKenzie, McLean (Queens, P.E.I.), McLean (Sunbury), McLeod, Marshall, Martin, (Regina), Middlebro, Molloy, Morphy, Murphy, Neely, Nesbitt, Nickle, Northrup, Oliver, Paquet, Pardee, Porter, Pugsley, Rhodes, Schaffner, Sharpe (Lisgar), Sharpe (Ontario), Smith, Smyth, Stanfield, Stevens, Sutherland, Taylor, Thomson (Qu'Appelle), Thornton, Tobin, Tremain, Turgeon, Turriff, Wallace, Weichel, White (Renfrew), White (Victoria,Alta.), Wilson (Laval), Wilson (Wentworth), and Wright.—117.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of twenty-five members.

No. 3.

ON MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS.

Messieurs

Ames, Armstrong (York, O), Ball, Blondin, Boulay, Bourassa, Boyce, Boyer, Boys, Broder, Bureau, Burnham, Carrick, Carvell, Chisholm (Antigonish), Clarke (Wellington), Davidson, Devlin, Ethier, Forget (Sir Rodolphe), Fripp, Gauthier (St. Hyacinthe), Gauvreau, Girard, Glass, Gordon, Guthrie, Hepburn, Hughes (Victoria), Jameson, Kemp, Knowles, Lachance, Lamarche, Lavallée, Macdonell, McLean (Sunbury), McLeod, McMillan, Marcil (Bonaventure), Martin (Montreal, Ste.M.), Mondou, Morris, Morrison, Murphy, Pacaud, Papineau, Paul, Perley (Sir George), Porter, Proulx, Reid, (Grenville), Robb, Ross, Scott, Sharpe (Ontario), Shepherd, Steele, Stewart (Hamilton), Thoburn, Tobin, Turriff, Walker and White (Renfrew).

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of ten members.

No. 4.

ON STANDING ORDERS.

Messieurs

Achim, Alguire, Armstrong (Lambton), Barrette, Best, Boulay, Burrell, Chabot, Cromwell, Doherty, Fortier, Hazen, Knowles, Kyte, Maclean (York, O.), MacNutt, McCoig, McCraney, Marcile (Bagot), Michaud, Morris, Paquet, Paul, Reid (Ristigouche), Rhodes, Roche, Scott, Seguin, Sharpe (Lisgar), Stanfield, Turgeon, Verville, and White (Leeds).—33.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of seven members.

No. 5.

ON PRINTING.

Messieurs

Bickerdike, Bowman, Brabazon, Brouillard, Cardin, Chabot, Clark (Bruce), Clarke (Wellington), Currie, Douglas, Elliot, Graham, Gray, Lavallée, L'Espérance, Martin (Montreal, Ste. M), Middlebro, Murphy, Nicholson, Roche, Stevens, Verville, White (Victoria, Alta.), and Wilson (Wentworth).—24.

No. 6.

ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Messieurs

Aikins (Sir James), Baker, Bennett (Simcoe), Blain, Boys, Carvell, Casgrain, Chisholm (Antigonish), Chisholm (Inverness), Clarke (Essex), Clarke (Wellington), Clements, Crothers, Davidson, Edwards, Fisher, Foster (Kings, N.S.), Fowler, Fripp, Garland, German, Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.) Kyte, Lalor, Lancaster, Maclean (Halifax), McCoig, McCraney, McCrea, McKenzie, McLeod, Marshall, Martin (Montreal, Ste. M.), Martin, (Regina), Meighen, Merner, Michaud, Middlebro, Molloy, Mondou, Morphy, Morrison, Murphy, Neely, Nicholson, Nickle, Northrup, Pardee, Proulx, Pugsley, Reid (Restigouche), Rhodes, Robidoux, Rogers,

Sinclair,
Smyth,
Stanfield,
Stewart (Lunenburg),
Tobin,
Tremain,
Truax,
White (Leeds), and
Wilcox.—63.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of twenty-one members.

No. 7.

ON BANKING AND COMMERCE.

Messieurs

Aikins (Sir James),
Ames,
Armstrong (Lambton),
Armstrong (York, O),
Baker,
Ball,
Barker,
Barnard,
Bellemare,
Bennett (Calgary),
Best,
Bickerdike,
Boivin,
Boyce,
Bristol,
Broder,
Buchanan,
Burnham,
Cardin,
Carrick,
Carvell,
Charlton,
Clark (Bruce),
Clark (Red Deer),
Cockshutt,
Copp,
Currie,
Demers,
Edwards,
Fisher,
Forget (Sir Rodolphe),
Fortier
Foster (Kings, N.S.),
Foster (Sir George),
Fowler,
Gauthier (St. Hyacinthe),
Glass,
Graham,
Gray,
Guthrie,
Hanna,
Henderson,
Hughes (Kings P.E.I.)
Hughes (Victoria),
Jameson,
Kay,
Kemp,
Knowles,
Law,
Lemieux,
L'Espérance,
Loggie,
Macdonald,
Macdonell,
Maclean (Halifax),
Maclean (York, O.),
McCraney,
McCurdy,
McLean (Sunbury),
McLeod,
McMillan,
Marshall,
Martin (Rgina),
Meighen,
Middlebro,
Nesbitt,
Nickle,
Northrup,
Osler (Sir Edmund),
Pacaud,
Papineau,
Pardee,
Perley (Sir George),
Porter,
Power,
Pugsley,
Rainville,
Rhodes,
Robb,
Roche,
Ross,
Sexsmith,
Sharpe (Lisgar),
Sharpe (Ontario),
Sinclair,
Steele,
Stewart, (Hamilton),
Stewart (Lunenburg),
Sutherland,
Thompson (Yukon),
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Thornton,
Tobin,
Turriff,
Verville,
Warnock,
Webster,
Weichel and White (Leeds).

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of twenty-one members.

No. 8.

ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION.

Messieurs

Achim,
Alguire,
Armstrong (Lambton),
Armstrong (York, O.),
Arthurs,
Ball,
Best,
Boivin,
Bourassa,
Bowman,
Broder,
Brouillard,
Buchanan,
Burrell,
Cash,
Champagne,
Chisholm (Antigonish),
Chisholm (Inverness),
Clark (Red Deer),
Clarke (Wellington),
Cromwell,
Cruise,
Currie,
Delisle,
Donaldson,
Douglas,
Edwards,
Elliot,
Fortier,
Foster (Kings, N.S.),
Garland,
Gauthier (Gaspé),
Gauvreau,
Girard,
Glass,
Gordon,
Graham,
Guilbault,
Hanna,
Hartt,
Henderson,
Hughes (Victoria),
Kay,
Lanctôt,
Lewis,
Lovell,
MacNutt, McCoig,
McCrea,
McLean (Queens. P.E.I.),
McMillan,
Marcile (Bagot),
Marshall,
Meighen,
Merner,
Molloy,
Morphy,
Morris,
Morrison,
Munson,
Neely,
Oliver,
Pacaud,
Paquet,
Paul,
Proulx,
Richards,
Robb,
Roche,
Ross,
Schaffner,
Scott,
Seguin,
Sexsmith,
Sharpe (Lisgar),
Sharpe (Ontario),
Sinclair,
Smith,
Steele,
Stewart (Lunenburg),
Sutherland,
Taylor,
Thoburn,
Thompson (Yukon),
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Thornton,
Truax,
Turriff,
Walker,
Wallace,
Warnock,
Webster,
Weichel,
White (Renfrew),
Wilcox,
Wilson (Laval),
Wilson (Wentworth), and Wright.—98.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of twelve members.

No. 9.

ON MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Messieurs

Alguire,
Barnard,
Boulay,
Bradbury,
Cardin,
Casgrain,

Chisholm (Inverness), Clarke (Essex), Clements, Copp, Fowler, Gauthier, (Gaspé), Hazen, Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.), Jameson, Kyte, Lafortune, Lapointe (Montreal, St. J.), Loggie, McCurdy, McKenzie, McLean (Queens, P.E.I.), Morrison, Nicholson, Pardee, Power, Robidoux, Shepherd, Sinclair, Stevens, Stewart (Lunenburg), Taylor, Truax, Turgeon, Wallace, and Wilcox.—36.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of ten members.

No. 10.

ON MINES AND MINERALS.

Messieurs

Arthurs, Carrick, Carroll, Chisholm (Antigonish), Cochrane, Cockshutt, Devlin, Douglas, Foster (Kings, N.S.), Garland, Green, Guilbault, Hartt, Hepburn, Lalor, Law, Lemieux, Lewis, Loggie, Lovell, Macdonald, McMillan, Marcil (Bonaventure), Merner, Mondou, Nesbitt, Osler (Sir Edmund), Richards, Sexsmith, Shepherd, Smith, Smyth, Thompson (Yukon), Turriff, and Walker.—35.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of ten members.

No. 11.

ON FORESTS, WATERWAYS AND WATER-POWERS.

Messieurs

Ames, Barrette, Béland, Bellemare, Blain, Bourassa, Bowman, Brabazon, Champagne, Charlton, Cochrane, Coderre, Cromwell, Cruise, Davidson, Donaldson, Ethier, Green, Henderson, Michaud, Munson, Osler (Sir Edmund), Perley (Sir George), Richards, Rogers, Stewart (Hamilton), Thoburn, Warnock, Webster, White (Victoria, Alta.), Wilson (Laval), and Wright—32.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of ten members.

No. 12.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Messieurs

Burnham, Descarries, Devlin, Foster (Sir George), Gray, Hanna, Lapointe (Montreal, St. J.), Lavallée, Lemieux, Marcil (Bonaventure), Perley (Sir George), Rainville, Reid (Restigouche), Schaffner, and Taylor.—15.

And that the quorum of the said committee do consist of five members.

No. 13.

ON THE LIBRARY.

Messieurs

Béland, Borden (Sir Robert), Boyer, Broder, Casgrain, Clark (Bruce), Copp, Crothers, Doherty, Foster (Sir George), Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lemieux, Lewis, Meighen, Pardee, Pugsley, and Sévigny.—17.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the report was concurred in.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the Select Standing Committees of this House shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records, with the exception of the Committee on Debates and that on the Library of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House will unite with them in the formation of a Joint Committee of both Houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament, and that the members of the Select Standing Committee on Printing, viz.: Messrs. Bickerdike, Bowman, Brabazon, Brouillard, Cardin, Chabot, Clark (Bruce), Clarke (Wellington), Currie, Douglas, Elliot, Graham, Gray, Lavallée, Lespérance, Martin (Montreal, St. Mary's), Middlebro, Murphy, Nicholson, Roche, Stevens, Verville, White (Victoria, Alta.), and Wilson (Wentworth), will act as members, on the part of this House, on the said Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to inform their Honours that this House has appointed Messrs. Béland, Borden (Sir Robert),

Boyer, Broder, Casgrain, Copp, Clark (Bruce), Crothers, Doherty, Foster (Sir George), Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lemieux, Lewis, Meighen, Pardee, Pugsley and Sévigny a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of the House of Commons are concerned, and to act on behalf of the House of Commons as members of a Joint Committee on the Library.

Motion agreed to.

THE PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That Messrs. Fripp, Pardee, Ross and Stanfield be appointed to assist Mr. Speaker in the direction of the restaurant, as far as the interests of the Commons are concerned, and to act as members of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the restaurant, and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours therewith.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Correspondence respecting the control of the export of nickel.—Sir Robert Borden.

Memorandum respecting the work of the Department of Militia in respect to the European war.—Major General Hughes.

Report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. W. J. Roche.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 20, respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Bradbury.

Bill No. 21, respecting The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Blain.

Bill No. 22, respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Mr. Guilbault.

Bill No. 23, respecting the James Bay and Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

Bill No. 24, respecting The Ottawa and New York Railway Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 25, respecting The South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Smith.

Bill No. 26, respecting The Southern Central Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 27, respecting The St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 28, respecting The Toronto Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Smith.

Bill No. 29, respecting The Van Buren Bridge Company.—Mr. Michaud.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 30 to amend the Railway Act.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

He said: I ask leave to introduce this Bill in view of the fact that it does not appear to be the intention of the Government, so far as we know, to introduce this session, the excellent Bill which they brought forward last year to amend the Railway Act. I propose to take two of the clauses of that Bill in the hope of having them made law this session. One relates to the capitalization of railways and will have the effect of giving control of such capitalization to the Railway Commission. The other provision gives municipalities the right to associate themselves with railway companies in the construction of bridges, so that the public may have a right of way for ordinary traffic over the bridge in addition to its use for railway purposes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

EXPORTS OF NICKEL.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN:

1. What were the exports of nickel, month by month, from July 1, 1914 to end of that year or any portion thereof; also the countries of destination.

Mr. REID:

1. The exports of 'Nickel, fine, contained in ore, matte or speiss', that is, the actual weight and value of metallic nickel contained in ore, etc., the produce of Canada, each month from July 1, 1914, to December 31, 1914, and countries of destination, were as follows:

	Lb.	Value.
To United Kingdom:
July	1,037,603	$ 155,263
August	421,838	64,273
September	1,937,351	283,308
October	1,144,477	156,139
November	628,871	93,587
December	791,351	118,996
To Germany:
July	48,121	$ 6,737
To United States:
July	4,007,593	$ 400,759
August	3,130,100	313,010
September	1,242,940	124,359
October	1,523,297	152,328
November	2,104,495	210,540
December	2,343,128	234,307

ROSTHERN, SASK., CUSTOMS.

Mr. McCRANEY:

What are the average monthly receipts of the subcollector of Customs at Rosthern, Saskatchewan, during the present fiscal year?

Mr. REID: $204.23.

SASKATOON CUSTOMS COLLECTOR.

Mr. McCRANEY:

Who is collector of Customs at Saskatoon and when was he appointed?

Mr. REID: Allan Sproat, Acting Collector; employed January 4, 1915.

HORN EXTRADITION CASE.

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. Is the Government or the Department of Militia aware that an international bridge over the St. Croix River has been partially destroyed by dynamite by a German subject?

2. If so, what proceedings have been taken against him by the Canadian Government?

Mr. DOHERTY:

1. The Government is informed that the bridge has been partially destroyed by an explosive—whether by dynamite is not known. The Government is further informed that the individual named Horn who caused the explosion claims to be a German subject.

2. Extradition proceedings charging the offence under Sec. 510 (c) of the Criminal Code.

I.C.R. ICE CONTRACTS.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. How many persons or companies have tendered to furnish the Intercolonial Railway with ice at Lévis and Campbellton?

2. What are their names and residences?

3. What is the amount of the tender in each case and the point of delivery of such ice?

4. Who obtained the contracts?

5. For what amounts were such contracts awarded?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Nine.

For the ice required at Levis, offers were received from the following:

J. A. Boulay, and E. Levesque, Sayabec, P.Q., 95c. per net ton delivered and packed in ice house; 75c. per net ton freight charges not paid. J. A. Couture and E. Bolduc, Levis, P.Q., 97c per net ton delivered and packed in ice house; 64c. per net ton freight charges not paid. P. Paquet, Fils, St. Romuald, P.Q., 75c. per net ton freight not paid and transportation for men to be furnished by railway. Ulric Begin, Levis, P.Q., 70c. per net ton freight charges not paid and transportation for men to be furnished by railway. Ed. Bernatchez, Montmagny, P.Q., 70c. per net ton packed in ice house, but railway to haul ice free of charge from Montmagny. Xavier Emond, Fils, St. Romuald, P.Q., 65c. packed in ice house, but railway to haul ice free of charge from St. Romuald.

For the ice required at Campbellton, offers were received from the following:

H. Pritchard, Campbellton, N.B., $1.45 per net ton delivered at Campbellton station. W. J. Price, Campbellton, N.B., $1.24 per net ton, delivered and stored in ice house. Thos. Ellsworth, Campbellton, N. B., $1.05 per net ton delivered and stored in ice house.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. For Levis the award was originally made to J. A. Couture and E. Bolduc at 64c. per ton, but, as these parties desired to supply ice from a point in the St. Lawrence river which the District Superintendent refused to approve, the same not being considered wholesome, they declined to award; and the contract was re-awarded to the next lowest tenderers, Xavier Emond, Fils, of St. Romuald, P.Q., at 65c. per net ton.

For Campbellton the award was made to Thos. Ellsworth at $1.05 per ton.

5. Answered by No. 4.

LAKE TEMISCOUATA POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

What are the reasons alleged by the Postmaster General for refusing to open a post office on the northeast shore of Lake Temiscouata, and to grant a subsidy to a new company which has been organized for the purpose of establishing communications between the two shores of said lake, thereby aiding to develop this important district of Lake Temiscouata and Des Squatecks, in support of which two requests are said to have been made to the Postmaster General by Dr. Dubé and F. X. Bélanger of Notre Dame du Lac, and Fraserville?

Mr. CASGRAIN: If the inquiry has reference to a request for the establishment of a post office under the name of 'Saint Dominique du Lac,' two miles northeast of Notre Dame du Lac, on the opposite side of Lake Temiscouata, the department has been unable to see its way to authorize the cost of service, considering the estimate of $150 a year to be excessive for a tri-weekly service from Notre Dame du Lac post office, which is only two miles away. Moreover, it is estimated that the revenue of the proposed office would amount to only $50 a year.

However, in an endeavour to obtain a reasonable offer, the department is inviting tenders for the service.

I.C.R.—FISH TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

How many refrigerator cars containing shipments of fresh fish only were transported from Mulgrave, N.S., to Montreal, attached to the regular daily express train running between said points, known as The Maritime Express, during the months of November and December, 1914, and January, 1915?

Mr. COCHRANE: Fourteen cars were carried on the Maritime Express during the months of November and December, 1914, and none in January, 1915.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. E. M. Macdonald: A return showing if any official statement was given on behalf of the management of the I.C.R. to the effect that wages would be paid in their absence to the employees of the railway who volunteered for active service; if so, when and by whom. If any order has been made by the Railway Department providing for such payment, and if so, when the said order was made.

Mr. C. A. Wilson: For a return showing: 1. How many persons have been made prisoners of war since the declaration of war between the Allies, Germany and Austria? 2. Where have they been kept captive? 3. The name of each place of detention, and the name of the officer in charge of such place of detention?

Mr. Buchanan: For a return showing: 1. How much money has spent amongst the merchants of the city of Medicine Hat for government relief? 2. To whom payments were made and the total amount in each case?

Mr. Chisholm (Antigonish): For a copy of all petitions, letters, telegrams and correspondence regarding a proposed daily mail service between Lower South River and South Side Harbour, Antigonish County, and improved postal accommodation for the residents of the last named district.

Mr. Lemieux: For a copy of all papers, letters telegrams, etc., concerning the purchase of the property known as the Carslake Hotel, in Montreal, for post office purposes.

Mr. Maclean (Halifax): For a copy of all correspondence which has passed between the Auditor General and the Militia Department, or any other department of the Government service, in regard to the expenditure under the war appropriation Act.

Mr. Chisholm (Antigonish): For a return showing the names and addresses of all persons in Antigonish county to whom the bounty under the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act has been paid; the names and addresses of all persons from said county whose applications have been rejected, and a list giving names and addresses of all applications from said county whose applications have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. Buchanan: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, Orders in Council, petitions and any other documents in connections with the removal of Edward N. Higinbothan from the position of postmaster at Lethbridge, Alberta.

Mr. Buchanan: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, accounts, Orders in Council and other documents in connection with the distribution of relief to the settlers in the drouth affected districts of Alberta.

Mr. Proulx: For a copy of the petition, papers, documents and letters in connection with the incorporation of the Dominion Trust Company, incorporated by Special Act of the Parliament of Canada in 1912, being Chapter 89 of 2 George V.

Mr. Proulx: For a copy of all the correspondence exchanged between the Department of Justice and the Government of the province of British Columbia, or any of its members, with regard to a certain Act passed by the Legislature of the said province in 1913, being Chapter 89 of 3 George V., entitled: "An Act respecting the Dominion Trust Company."

Mr. Turgeon: For a copy of all tenders received by the Post Office Department for the mail service between Caraquet and Tracadie, Gloucester County, N.B., on the 15th day of January last, with the names of the tenderers, the respective amounts of the tenders, and the name of the new contractor.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: For a copy of all petitions memoranda from commercial bodies or other parties in relation to the immediate construction of the Georgian Bay Canal, and of all correspondence in connection with the same since September 21, 1911.

Mr. Turriff: For a copy of all invoices, accounts, statements, letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents in connection with the purchase of drugs, bandages, medical supplies and other goods purchased by the Government or any department of the Government, from J. E. Powell, or from the Carleton county drug store of Hintonburg.

THE BUDGET.

PROPOSED WAR TAXATION.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance) moved.

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of ways and means.

He said: In the Budget speech of August last I dealt with the commercial and monetary conditions resulting from the outbreak of war then prevailing and their probable effect upon the finances of the Dominion. With respect to the latter, I stated at the time that I put forth my views with much diffidence because it was not possible to make a forecast with any measurable degree of certainty. In presenting my statement of to-day I shall deal first with the subject of our revenues and expenditures, actual and estimated, for the current fiscal year which ends on March 31 next. In August I pointed out that we were certain to experience a sharp decline in revenue due to decreased importations attributable to the shutting-off of our trade with the enemy, the interruption and increased risk of ocean traffic, and above all the cessation of Canadian borrowings abroad and its effect upon our purchasing power as a community.

This forecast has been realized in ampler degree than was at the time expected. Taking the ten months of the year which have already elapsed, that is to say from April 1, 1914, to January 31, 1915, the Dominion's revenue from all sources has totalled, in round figures, $109,500,000. This compares with $139,000,000 for the corresponding period of the last fiscal year, a decline of nearly thirty millions. Entering into details we find that of this heavy loss in revenue the falling-off in customs accounts for nearly twenty-eight millions; in excise two hundred thousand and in miscellaneous items a million and a half. Since the outbreak of the war the contraction in customs revenue has been fairly constant in monthly amount representing about one-third of the returns for the corresponding period of the previous year. As regards excise the additional duties imposed by the August Budget have had the effect of counteracting the heavy losses which would otherwise have been experienced.

Upon the basis of these figures for the ten months' period and having regard to the present action of the revenue-producing services, we estimate that the revenue of the Dominion for the fiscal year ending March 31 next, computed upon the present basis of duties, would amount to $130,000,000. The figures for the previous year having been $163,000,000, this year's loss of revenue would reach a total of thirty-three millions.

So far as the expenditures of the year are concerned, I stated in August that it would be the policy of the Government, in the interest of employment, to maintain as far as possible the programme of public works then under construction, but that new works would not be undertaken until the financial outlook became clearer and we should have in view the source of funds from which to meet the expenditure. This policy we have endeavoured to carry out. For the ten months ended January 31, the current expenditure has reached $102,000,000 and the capital and special $37,000,000. These figures compare with $93,000,000 and $47,000,000, the outlays under the headings in question respectively for the same period of the previous year. The drop in capital and special expenditure is due to the fact that railway subsidy payments have been much less during the present year. For public works and undertakings, our disbursements have been greater than they were last year.

For the whole of the present fiscal year we estimate our current expenditure will be $140,000,000 and our capital and special expenditure $50,000,000. Summarizing the estimated results we have the out-turn of the year, stated concisely, as follows:

Current expenditure	$140,000,000
Capital and special (other than war) expenditure..	50,000,000
Total	$190,000,000

Our revenue on the present basis being estimated, as I have stated, at $130,000,000, we should have to meet for this year a deficit of ten million dollars on current account plus the entire amount of our capital and special expenditure, a substantial part of which we have in the past been able to defray out of current revenue, a balance only having been provided by borrowing. Included in our ordinary expenditure is an amount of $2,500,000 which will be required this year for the relief of distress in the drouth-stricken districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta. In addition we are making provision for about seven and a half millions or more to be expended in the purchase of seed-grain.

I have still to deal with the expenditure representing the cost of organizing, training, equipping, transporting and maintaining our forces enlisted for active service in defence of the Empire. In connection with the War Appropriation Bill presented by him at the August session, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister presented an estimate of $30,000,000 covering expenditure until March 31 next for the mobilization, equipment, transport and maintenance of an overseas contingent of 25,000 men and pay of detachments of troops on active home service. Such was the patriotic spirit and enthusiasm with which the call to arms was received throughout the Dominion and such the vigour and expedition with which the mobilization, organization and training of the troops was conducted by the Militia Department that within six weeks after the close of the session Canada had despatched a contingent of 33,000 men fully armed and equipped as her first contribution in this war to the ranks of the Empire's army. To-day there are nearly 50,000 troops in active training throughout Canada, their number being increased daily by enlistment. From this body as a permanent nucleus, constantly replenished by recruitment, further contingents will be sent forward from time to time as practicable. The estimate of expenditure presented in August was of course inadequate to meet the enlarged programme, and the special war expenditure during the present fiscal year will probably reach the total amount of the appropriation, viz., $50,000,000. The expenditure to date has been $38,000,000.

Taking all the foregoing into consideration, the increase of Canada's national debt for the year would probably aggregate $110,000,000. In this I am, of course, including our expenditure for war.

In addition to the expenditures to which I have referred, the Dominion has made advances on investment account under statutory authority and has met its sinking fund obligations as usual, the funds required to be found for these purposes aggregating $5,000,000. We also provided for the retirement of £1,700,000, or $8,500,000 in currency, of yearling Treasury Bills which matured in November last.

The House will from the statements I have made gather that the task of finding money for our requirements as outlined has been somewhat onerous. For four or more months after the outbreak of war international money markets were closed to new issues. By December, after the successful flotation of the British war loan, an easier tone prevailed and it became possible to obtain short date money in limited amounts at fairly reasonable rates. Capital was still, however, averse to permanent investment, although evidence was not wanting of improvement in that regard. Any prospect of general resumption in this respect in Great Britain was, however, terminated by the announcement by the British Treasury authorities on January 18, that owing to the necessity of conserving the financial resources of the country during the war, fresh issues should thereafter be made only with their approval. Issues for undertakings outside the British Empire were prohibited. Issues for undertakings within the United Kingdom are to be allowed only if considered advisable in the national interest; those for undertakings in the British Empire overseas only where urgent necessity and special circumstances exist.

To meet our financial requirements since the August session the following steps have been taken:

We arranged with the Imperial Government for advances from September until March 31 of £12,000,000, or say $60,000,000, of which we have received to date £8,000,000, or $40,000,000.

We issued for Dominion purposes Dominion notes to an amount of ten million dollars in excess of the additional issue of $15,000,000 authorized by Parliament at its last session. For this I am introducing special legislation confirmatory of our action.

We borrowed five million dollars from the Bank of Montreal.

We issued after the successful flotation of the British war loan £3,000,000 of six months Treasury Bills negotiated at 4½ and 4¼ per cent and maturing in June next.

We sold at a net price of 94½ £1,300,000 ($6,500,000) of our 1940-60 stock to meet the private requirements of our investing clientele in London.

By these means we have arranged our finances until the end of March of the present fiscal year. At present we have substantial balances to our credit both here and in London.

So far as floating indebtedness is concerned, we shall therefore enter upon the new fiscal year with £3,000,000 of Treasury Bills maturing in June and a bank indebtedness of $5,000,000. Apart from these we have no maturing loans to meet until the year 1919, a most satisfactory situation which I am disposed to attribute to the policy hitherto followed by the Dominion of financing by selling its permanent stock at such prices as could from time to time be obtained rather than by issuing short date loans in the hope of more favourable conditions developing later.

As regards our borrowings from the Imperial Government, our arrangements are that we shall pay interest at the same rate as is paid by the Imperial Treasury upon its war loans, from the proceeds of which advances are to be made to us. At such time or times in the future as may be agreed upon between the British Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Canadian Minister of Finance, a Canadian war loan or loans will be issued and the borrowings from the Imperial Government repaid. It seems to me that no fairer terms could be named than those so generously accorded us by the Imperial authorities.

Revenue and Expenditure, 1915-16.

In approaching the question of our finances for the coming fiscal year beginning April 1st next it will be advisable to give preliminary consideration to prevailing trade conditions, because upon such conditions will depend the amount of revenue which will be derived from all sources and particularly from customs, which is our principal mainstay in the matter of income. Since the outbreak of war there has of course been a most serious interruption of our international trade. Commercial dealings with enemy nations have been automatically shut off. The increased risk of ocean traffic and higher freights have had their influence. The demoralization of the rates of exchange, which are now happily becoming normal, was for several months a serious detriment to international transactions.

In addition, our import and export trade was for a considerable time and is still in some degree adversely affected by the interruption of our merchant marine service through the chartering of so many steamships for the transport of our troops and the engagement of a part of our shipping by the Imperial authorities. The falling-off of immigration, the departure from Canada of reservists and of our own contingent have also had their effect. But by far the most important factor has been the curtailment of our borrowings abroad. This has been the outstanding feature of the economic effect of the war upon Canada. Canada has been borrowing at the rate of from two to three hundred million dollars annually for some years past. For the six months preceding the war our loans abroad and principally in Great Britain aggregated two hundred million dollars, or over a million dollars a day. These borrowings represented the sale of securities by the Federal and provincial Governments, by municipalities and by railway, public utility, industrial and financial corporations. For the most part the purpose of loans so effected was to provide funds for the construction of public undertakings, works and services, railways and industrial and other plants and establishments. The war at once cut off this stream of borrowed money, and only recently have there been evidences of its resumption upon a greatly reduced scale. Until the war is over and for a considerable period afterwards it is not probable that monetary conditions will permit of the issue of securities even of the highest character other than for war purposes in any such volume as that to which we have been accustomed in the past. This interruption of the influx of capital has necessarily meant marked curtailment of expenditure upon undertakings, works and buildings in all parts of Canada with consequent reaction upon the industries, trades and businesses furnishing material and supplies therefor. The result has been a material slackening of general constructional activity, considerable unemployment and attendant diminished buying power on the part of the community. Commercial houses are exercising prudence in commitments and the public generally are practising economy, that is to say they are buying less both of domestic and imported produce. The result of all this has been a rapid change in the volume of our imports and exports. For the nine months ended December 31 of the present fiscal year our total exports (merchandise only) amounted to $353,000,000 as compared with $380,000,000 for the corresponding period of the previous year, a decrease of $27,000,000. For the same nine months of the present year our imports (merchandise only) have been $391,000,000, a decline of $112,000,000 over those for the corresponding period of the previous year. Thus the ratio of decrease in our exports has been much less than in the case of our imports. The total trade for the first nine months of the present and last fiscal years was $745,000,000 and $885,000,000 respectively. In 1912 the so-called adverse balance of trade against Canada was $225,000,000; in 1913, $300,000,000; in 1914, $180,000,000. From present indications it would appear that we shall to a large degree overtake this balance. In view of the decrease in our borrowings which have accounted in large measure for our excess of imports, this condition is what we should naturally expect. Our exports will, it is to be hoped, so increase as to enable us with such borrowings as may be obtained outside of Canada, to pay any trade balance against us together with our interest maturing abroad without resort to gold exports.

From what I have stated it is apparent that with the war still continuing we may expect for the year 1915-16 diminishing imports and consequently reduced revenue as compared with the present year in which there have been four ante-bellum months. Upon the present basis of duties of customs and excise we estimate that our revenue from all sources for the coming year would not exceed $120,000,000. So far as expenditures are concerned the policy we enunciated in August we shall continue. Our estimates contain no new items and as to items which they include we shall proceed with works not already under contract only as we feel justified having regard to the financial situation. Dealing with what we may call uncontrollable expenditure, that is to say expenditure necessary for the conduct of civil government and required to meet interest and other obligations of the Dominion, we cannot look forward to any reduction over the past year. The Dominion has large undertakings under contract for construction. Chief among these may be mentioned terminal and harbour works and improvements in our larger port cities, the completion of the National Transcontinental railway and the Quebec bridge, the Hudson Bay railway, and the Welland canal.

We must calculate upon a Consolidated Fund expenditure of $140,000,000 and of capital and special expenditure of at least $40,000,000, making a total of $180,000,000. For investments authorized by statute we shall have to provide $4,000,000 additional. It will be necessary also to raise funds to meet the outstanding Treasury Bills to which I have referred. Our special war expenditure may reach $100,000,000 for which a special appropriation Bill will be passed at this session. Our interest charges will, of course, greatly increase from this forward. Our outlay for this year on this account will exceed sixteen millions. In next year's estimates they appear at twenty-one and one-half millions. We must also look forward to a large and increasing pension-list expenditure.

It is apparent in these conditions that we must obtain additional revenue to a very substantial amount. Assuming that our total cash requirements for all purposes whatsoever, including our war expenditure, will amount during the coming year to over $300,000,000 while our revenue on the present basis would yield only $120,000,000 we are faced with the problem of raising by additional taxation and borrowing, a sum in excess of $180,000,000. My proposals for meeting the situation are as follows.

So far as concerns our special war expenditures which may reach one hundred million dollars I should be disposed, if we had not such heavy and uncontrollable capital expenditure to meet, to recommend that we should pay at least a part of it from current revenue. But it is obvious upon a consideration of the figures which I have submitted that we shall not by any reasonable supplemental taxation measures be able to close the gap between revenue and expenditure much less to pay a portion of the principal of our special war outlay. In the circumstances I have no hesitation in proposing to the House that we shall borrow the full amount required under this heading. Canadian Governments have always justified public borrowing for capital account on the principle that expenditure upon enterprises, permanent in their nature, enures to the benefit and advantage of future generations who may therefore fairly be asked to pay interest upon the debt contracted in respect of them. If this theory is correct, and so far as I know it has never been seriously challenged, then we need have no reluctance in borrowing to meet the expense of this war, because such borrowing is for the purpose of accomplishing for future generations that which is infinitely more precious than material undertakings, namely, the preservation of our national and individual liberty and the constitutional freedom won by our forefathers during centuries of struggle, enjoyed by us to-day and destined, we believe, to be ours for all time. It is therefore the intention of the Government to negotiate for a continuance of the arrangement which I have mentioned with the Imperial Government for the purpose of procuring the funds necessary to meet our special war expenditure.

Assuming that this can be accomplished, and I have reason to believe it can, we have still to deal with the problem of so increasing our revenue as to meet our current expenditure and at least a part, and I should hope a substantial part, of our capital expenditure. I express this hope because we shall be obliged to borrow heavily for military purposes and our interest charges upon the vast amount which will be required on this and capital accounts will mount up rapidly in terms of millions by way of fixed charge to be provided yearly.

Many suggestions for supplementing our revenue have been put forward by members of the community and in the public press throughout the country; some quite impracticable, others worthy of consideration and adoption, but, speaking generally, wholly lacking in adequacy to meet the situation which the war has so suddenly brought upon us. It is not a question of raising a few millions by stamp taxes, by income tax or other minor means of supplementing revenue. We must endeavour to raise additional revenue to an amount of at least thirty million dollars, and when we have accomplished this we shall still be obliged to borrow heavily over the next fourteen months, that is to say, between now and March 31, 1916, to meet expenditure for purposes other than for war. We feel that the situation with which we are confronted should be resolutely met, and the finances of the country placed upon a basis which will enable us to go forward prepared to face whatever may lie before us until this war is concluded, and concluded as we would wish. In making this statement I am convinced I am but expressing the sentiments of the whole Canadian people, who will, I know, be eager to make whatever of sacrifice may be required from them during this supreme crisis in the Empire's history.

The chief source and mainstay of our revenue is the tariff, and it is to this we must look principally for relief of our present financial conditions. Taxation imposed by increased customs duties bears upon all classes, because all are consumers, and in paying additional taxation each member of the community will feel that he is to that extent contributing to the cost of the war and the defence of his country. As an auxiliary means of raising revenue we shall resort to certain special taxes, the burden of which will fall more particularly upon those members of the community who are best able to sustain it.

To supplement our revenues to the minimum amount regarded by the Government as necessary, I shall later introduce to the House a Bill intituled 'The War Revenue Act, 1915.'

Its provisions will cover a levy of special and general taxation as follows:

Special Taxes.

Upon all banks to which the Bank Act applies, a yearly sum equal to one per cent upon the note circulation, to be computed and paid quarterly. From this taxation we shall realize approximately one million dollars.

Upon every trust and loan company incorporated under any legislative authority and carrying on business in Canada, a yearly sum equal to one per cent of its gross income derived in Canada, payable quarterly.

Upon every insurance corporation, society, association, firm or partnership carrying on the business of insurance, other than life, fraternal benefit and marine insurance, a sum of one per cent upon all net premiums received by it in Canada. Payments to be made quarterly.

The provisions of the Bill will apply to businesses of the respective banks, trust and loan and insurance companies transacted after January 1, 1915, and the first receipts therefrom will reach Consolidated Revenue Fund about May 1.

In addition the following special taxation will be provided for:

Upon every cable and telegraph company using telegraphic cables or wires within the jurisdiction of Canada, a sum equal to one cent upon each despatch or message originating in Canada for which a charge of fifteen cents or more is imposed. Returns to be made quarterly. The company is authorized to charge the additional toll and collect the same from the person sending the message.

Upon every purchaser of a railway or steamboat ticket in Canada for any point in Canada, Newfoundland, the West Indian Colonies or the United States, the sum of five cents in respect of a ticket costing over one dollar and not more than five dollars, and

The railway or steamboat company or fractional part of five dollars which the ticket costs.

Upon every purchaser of a berth in a sleeping car or seat in a parlor car, the sum of ten cents in respect of each berth bought, and five cents in respect of each seat bought in Canada.

The railway or steamboat company or person selling the railway, sleeping car and parlor car tickets referred to are required to collect the taxes imposed and transmit to the Government.

4 p.m.

Upon every person, firm or company carrying passengers by vessel to ports or places other than ports or places in Canada, Newfoundland, the British West Indian Colonies and the United States, in respect of each passenger the sum of one dollar if the amount chargeable for the passage exceeds ten dollars, the sum of three dollars if such amount exceeds thirty dollars, and the sum of five dollars if the amount exceeds sixty dollars. The company is authorized to collect the tax from the passenger and is required to account therefor to the Government.

In addition to the above, the following stamp taxes:

Upon all cheques, receipts to banks by depositors and upon bills of exchange passing through a bank, a stamp tax of the value of two cents.

Upon all express and post office money orders, a stamp tax of the value of two cents, and upon postal notes a stamp tax of one cent.

Upon every letter and postal card posted in Canada, a war stamp tax of one cent.

Upon every bill of lading, a stamp tax of two cents.

Upon proprietary or patent medicines and perfumery sold in Canada, the retail price for each bottle or package of which is ten cents or less, one cent, and in addition for each ten cents of retail price, one cent.

Upon wine non-sparkling, sold in Canada, for every bottle or package containing one quart or less, five cents, and for each additional quart, five cents.

Upon champagne and sparkling wine—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE: I knew that a proposal to tax its favourite beverage would appeal to the House. Upon champagne and sparkling wine sold in Canada, every bottle containing one pint or less, twenty-five cents, and for each additional pint twenty-five cents.

The special taxation to which I have referred other than that levied upon banks, trust and loan and insurance companies, will come into force at a date to be fixed in the Act. I am making an exception to this in the case of wines and champagnes, the stamp taxation upon which will become effectual at once.

From all these special taxes we expect to raise a sum approximating $8,000,000, although there is no means of accurate calculation; my own view is from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000—I should think more likely $8,000,000 than $10,000,000. It will be observed that I have in these special taxes omitted income tax upon individuals, about which there has been some discussion since the outbreak of the war. The matter has had the consideration of the Government and it appears clear to us that such a tax is not expedient, at all events for the present. Under the British North America Act, while the Dominion may impose direct or indirect taxation, the Provinces are restricted to the former. At present under legislation existing in certain of the provinces income is subject to taxation by municipalities, and in two instances by the provinces themselves. In other provinces no income tax exists, although in some of these a business tax in lieu thereof is levied upon incorporated companies. In order to bring into force an income tax the Government would be obliged to create machinery for assessment, revision and collection. This would involve a heavy expense as compared with the amount which would be realized. Taking the income tax of the United States as a basis it would appear that Canada could hardly expect to derive from a similar tax a sum in excess of two million dollars, from which would have to be deducted the heavy expense connected with its administration. My chief objection, however, to an income tax is the fact that the several provinces are also likely to be obliged to resort to measures for raising additional revenue, and I am of the view that the Dominion should not enter upon the domain to which they are confined to a greater degree than is necessary in the national interest. There is another feature of income tax which makes it unsatisfactory for the purpose of Dominion finance. I refer to the length of period which must elapse before it becomes productive. In Britain, where the tax is the chief source of revenue to the Imperial Government, there is no municipal taxation upon incomes. There is also the important difference that in Britain taxable incomes are derived largely from investments. They have therefore a settled and permanent character, are ascertainable with fair accuracy and are capable of being levied upon at their source. With us this is not the case.

Tariff Taxation.

As our main revenue measure we propose with certain exceptions (numerous exceptions, I may say a general horizontal increase in the customs duties upon all goods and commodities imported into or taken out of bonded warehouse in Canada. The list includes all articles hitherto dutiable or on the free list, and whether raw material or finished or partly-finished product. The increase we propose is seven and a half per cent ad valorem to the general and intermediate tariffs and five per cent ad valorem to the British preferential. In the case of iron ore, for reasons I shall give in Committee, the added duty is specific and not ad valorem. In determining the list of exceptions, regard has been had to our trade convention with France and the obligations of our agrement with certain of the British West India colonies. By reason of the convention with France the increased customs duties will not apply to silk fabrics, velvets, ribbons, embroideries and certain other goods. The exceptions to the tariff increases I have mentioned include wheat, flour, tea, anthracite coal, fish from Newfoundland, salt for curing fish, lines, twines, nets and hooks for the fisheries, reapers, mowers, binders, harvesters, binder-twine, traction ditching machines, sugar, tobacco (dealt with in August), news-printing paper, newspaper printing presses, typesetting and typecasting machines and a number of other items of lesser consequence. The tariff upon the articles exempted from the increased duties will remain as at present. So far as concerns the duty upon raw materials it is to be pointed out that in accordance with regulations made under the provisions of the Customs Act manufacturers are entitled to a drawback of 99 per cent upon all duties paid upon imported materials used, wrought into or attached to articles manufactured in Canada and exported therefrom. In addition to making the increases mentioned for the purpose of increasing revenue, we propose to alter the existing tariff by adding squid and nicotine sulphate to the free list. Squid is used as bait by the fishermen while nicotine sulphate is a spraying material used by fruit-growers for destroying insect pests. These two items have for some time past been noted for change.

The revenue obtained from the proposed tariff changes will be separately shown in the Trade and Navigation returns of the Department of Customs. By this we shall know the precise amount collected through the customs under the provisions of the War Revenue Act.

Upon the basis of importations for the current year and having regard to conditions which I have described as likely to prevail during the coming year we expect to realize from our proposed customs tariff legislation from twenty to twenty-five million dollars.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the proposals of the Government, having as their object the raising of additional revenue rendered necessary by the war and our participation therein as a belligerent. We are not unmindful that they will entail a considerable financial burden upon the community. We believe however that to adopt measures less comprehensive in their scope would be but to temporize with a situation with which it is our duty to adequately cope. That the people will cheerfully respond to the demands made upon their patriotism goes without saying. At the outbreak of the war it would have been premature to have brought forward measures which to-day have been long foreseen by public opinion to be necessary and indeed inevitable. It would also have been most inopportune and inexpedient by reason of the profound dislocation and disorganization of business caused by the war and the shock to financial stability which the Dominion was so suddenly called upon to withstand.

We believe the tariff increases which we propose will be not only effectual in producing greater revenue but will be strongly efficacious in stimulating Canadian industry and agricuture and in relieving unemployment. In order to initiate the legislation necessary to give effect to the proposals I have laid before the House I beg to give notice that when the House goes into Committee I shall move the following resolutions:

Resolved that it is expedient to provide:

1. That each bank to which the Bank Act applies, exclusive of banks in the course of winding-up, shall pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund quarterly a tax equal to one-fourth of one per cent upon the average amount of the notes of the bank in circulation during the three months preceding, the greatest amount of notes in circulation at any time during each of the three months being the basis of the average, provided, however, that where the greatest amount of notes in circulation exceeds the amount of the paid-up capital, then an amount equal to the paid-up capital shall be the basis used in calculating the average;

2. That every loan and trust company incorporated under any legislative authority, including the banks subject to the Quebec Savings Banks Act, 1913, shall pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund a tax of one per cent upon the gross amount of

(a) interest, the property of the company, from loans and investments in Canada, and

(b) income, other than interest, on business transacted within Canada, received by the company on and after the first day of January, 1915;

3. That every insurance company other than life and marine companies and fraternal benefit societies shall pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund a tax of one per cent upon the net premiums received by the company in Canada on and after the first day of January, 1915;

4. That every cable and telegraph company shall pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund a sum equal to one cent upon each despatch or message originating at the offices of the company in Canada and transmitted thence over the company's lines for which a charge of fifteen cents or more was imposed, the company having the right to charge the one cent to and collect the same from the person paying or liable to pay the regular charges for the transmission of the despatch or message;

5. That every purchaser of

(a) a railway passenger ticket or right to transportation over a railway to any place in or outside of Canada,

(b) a steamboat passenger ticket or right to transportation by steamboat between ports or places in Canada or from a port or place in Canada to a port or place in Newfoundland, the West Indian colonies or the United States,

(c) a ticket or right entitling the passenger transportation over a railway and by steamboat to a port or place in Canada, Newfoundland, the West Indian colonies or the United States, whether such transportation be by railway and steamboat or by steamboat and railway or by railway, steamboat and railway, shall pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund, in addition to the regular charge for the ticket or right, in respect of a ticket or right costing—

(i) over one dollar and not more than five dollars.. .. .. 5 cents.

(ii) over five dollars—for each five dollars and in addition for any fractional part of five dollars.. 5 cents;

6. That every purchaser of a berth in a sleeping car or seat in a parlour car shall, in addition to the regular charge for the berth or seat, pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund—

(a) ten cents in respect of each berth bought,

(b) five cents in respect of each seat bought;

7. That every company carrying passengers by vessel from any port or place in Canada to any port or place outside of Canada, except Newfoundland, the West Indian colonies and the United States, shall pay for Consolidated Revenue Fund in respect of each passenger carried—

(a) the sum of one dollar if the amount chargeable for the passage exceeds ten dollars;

(b) the sum of three dollars if the amount chargeable for the passage exceeds thirty dollars;

(c) the sum of five dollars if the amount chargeable for the passage exceeds sixty dollars, and that the company may charge to the passenger and may collect from him the sum so payable;

8. That no person shall issue a cheque payable at or by a bank and no person shall negotiate a bill of exchange through a bank or deliver a bill of exchange to a bank for collection unless he affixes thereto a stamp of the value of two cents; that a cheque or other bill of exchange made or drawn out of Canada in the possession of a bank in Canada shall before payment or presentment for payment have affixed thereto a stamp of the value of two cents, and the value of the stamp shall be chargeable to the person entitled to the proceeds of the cheque or bill;

9. That every customer of a bank shall affix to a receipt for money paid to him by the bank and chargeable against a deposit to his credit in the bank a stamp of the value of two cents;

10. That every express company carrying on business in Canada shall, before the issue of a money order or traveller's cheque, affix thereto a stamp of the value of two cents chargeable to the purchaser of the order or cheque or to the payee thereof;

11. That no money order or postal note shall be issued under the provisions of the Post Office Act until there is affixed thereto a postage stamp of the value of two cents and one cent respectively, to be paid for by the purchaser of the order or postal note, and upon such stamp there may be printed or impressed the words 'war tax';

12. That on every letter and post card for transmission by post a tax of one cent shall be levied and collected, such tax to be payable by affixing to the letter or card a postage stamp of that denomination, upon which there may be printed or impressed the words 'war tax';

13. That every person by whom goods are received—

(a) to be exported or carried coastwise, or

(b) to be transported by railway, shall attach to the bill of lading or other evidence of receipt a stamp to be furnished by the shipper or consignor of the value of two cents;

14. That every bottle or package containing—

(a) a proprietary or patent medicine,

(b) perfumery,

(c) wine, non-sparkling,

(d) champagne and sparkling wine, shall be subject to the payment of the stamp duties hereinafter set out :

Article.	Stamp of the Value of.
(a) A proprietary or patent medicine,
(b) Perfumery, the retail price for each bottle or package thereof being—
Ten cents or less..	One cent.
More than ten cents—
For each ten cents and in addition for any fractional part of ten cents..	One cent.
(c) Wine, non-sparkling, each bottle or package containing—
One quart or less..	Five cents.
A quantity greater than one quart—
For each quart and in addition for any fractional part of a quart..	Five cents.
(d) Champagne and sparkling wine, each bottle or package containing—
One pint or less..	25 cents.
A quantity greater than one pint—
For each pint and in addition for any fractional part of a pint	25 cents;

15. That the provisions of any Act founded on these resolutions, in so far as such provisions relate to wine, non-sparkling, champagne and sparkling wine, shall be deemed to have come into force on the twelfth day of February, 1915, and to have applied to all such articles—

(a) imported or taken out of customs warehouse for consumption on and after that day and to have also applied to such articles previously imported for which no customs entry was made before that day,

(b) owned by or in the possession of the manufacturer or producer thereof,

(c) owned by or in the possession of the wholesale or retail dealer therein.

1. Resolved that it is expedient to amend

Schedule A of the Customs Tariff, 1907, and to strike thereout tariff item 329 and the enumeration of goods set opposite said item, and to provide that the following items, enumerations and rates of duties, if any, be inserted in said Schedule A:

	British Preferential Tariff.	Intermediate Tariff.	General Tariff.
118a. Squid	Free.	Free.	Free.
209b. Nicotine sulphate	Free.	Free.	Free.
329. Ores of metals, n.o.p.	Free.	Free.	Free.
329a. Iron ore ..per ton.	6 cents.	8 cents.	8 cents.

2. Resolved that it is expedient to amend The Customs Tariff, 1907, by providing that:

(1) There shall, in addition to the duties of Customs otherwise established by Schedule A to The Customs Tariff, 1907, and Orders in Council amending Schedule A, be levied, collected and paid upon all goods enumerated, or referred to as not enumerated, in Schedule A, except as hereinafter provided, when imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, the several rates of duties of Customs herein specified:

British Preferential Tariff, 5 p.c.
Intermediate Tariff, 7½ p.c.
General Tariff, 7½ p.c.

(2) There shall be levied, collected and paid upon all goods enumerated as being free of duty in Schedule A and in Orders in Council amending Schedule A, except as hereinafter provided, when imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, the several rates of duties of Customs herein specified:

British Preferential Tariff, 5 p.c.
Intermediate Tariff, 7½ p.c.
General Tariff, 7½ p.c.

Provided, however, that the following goods shall be exempt from the foregoing provisions:

(a) goods admitted into Canada free of Customs duty under the provisions of Sections 8 and 9 of the Customs Tariff, 1907;

(b) goods enumerated in Schedule C of the French Convention Act, 1908;

(c) goods imported to be used in the manufeature of mowing machines, harvesters, self-binding or without binders, binding attachments, reapers, and complete parts thereof, under regulations by the Minister of Customs;

(d) goods imported to be used in the manufacture of binder twine for harvest binders, under regulations by the Minister of Customs;

(e) articles imported to be used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in Tariff Item 682 in Schedule A, under regulations by the Minister of Customs;

(f) anthracite coal and anthracite coal dust;

(g) bacteriological products or serum for subcutaneous injection;

(h) vaccine and ivory vaccine points;

(i) pressed felt, elastic webbing and hollow blocks of wood imported to be used in the manufacture of artificial limbs;

(j) steel imported to be used in manufacturing rough unfinished parts of rifles, when such parts are to be used in rifles to be made for the Government of Canada;

(k) fabrics of which silk is the component material of chief value imported to be used in the manufacture of neckties;

(l) goods enumerated in the following Tariff Items in Schedule A: 1, 2, 3, 19, 20, 20a, 21, 22, 23, 28a, 29a, 39b, 40, 55, 60, 61, 66, 77a, 101a, 118a, 129, 132, 134, 135, 142, 143, 144, 145, 153, 164, 169, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 178a, 180a, 184, 196, 201, 209b, 329, 329a, 348a, 352a, 359, 360, 369, 373, 441, 443, 445, 445a, 446a, 464, 466, 466a, 470, 483, 544, 544a, 576, 595, 596, 676, 682, 688, 689, 689a, 690, 690a, 691, 692, 692a, 693, 694, 695a, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708 and 709.

Provided, further, that the duties of Customs collected and paid under the provisions of this Section shall not be subject to drawback under Schedule B.

3. Resolved that any enactment founded on the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the twelfth day of February, 1915, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing resolutions, imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that day, and to have also applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. GERMAN: Are the materials for the manufacture of binder twine subject to an increased duty, or are they left as now?

Mr. WHITE: Binder twine is free and the material of which it is made is free.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Will the minister please state the effect of these changes upon sugar?

Mr. MACDONALD: And upon tea.

Mr. WHITE: Tea, sugar and tobacco are left precisely as they are to-day.

Mr. MACDONALD: What is the article 682 of schedule A, referred to in section (e) of resolution 2?

Mr. WHITE: Fish-hooks for deep-sea or lake fishing and a line of articles of cognate character.

Mr. MACDONALD: As to section (f), anthracite coal, that is free now, is it not?

Mr. WHITE: It is free now and remains free; the additional duty is imposed upon bituminous.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it may be fitting that I should say something as to general economic conditions, actual and prospective. On the whole, having regard to the vast dislocation of finance and commerce occasioned by the war, the Dominion has withstood the shock exceedingly well. When we consider the immense distance we have traversed since August last in improved tone, confidence and commercial and financial outlook there is abundant cause for gratification and thankfulness. Readjustment has necessarily been a painful process for many of our industries, but it must be considered as having proceeded and as proceeding satisfactorily. The consequences of the interruption of our borrowings abroad for purposes to which I have alluded in the course of my remarks have been shown in a slackening of activity in many trades. On the other hand production in various lines has been greatly quickened and stimulated by orders on a very large scale for clothing, munitions and other equipment and material placed in Canada not only by the Canadian Government but by Britain and her Allies as well. Expenditure for supplies of this character must appreciably assist in counteracting the adverse factors of which I have spoken. It will also exert a most favourable influence upon the important problem of international exchange, with which is involved the question of gold export. It is apparent that throughout the Dominion strong efforts have been and will continue to be made to increase production. The enhanced prices of grains and other products will be a great inducement to exceptional exertion along this line. The returns as to fall ploughing and general condition of land are most favourable for a record crop production next year. The intervening period we shall bridge successfully in proportion to the courage and energy displayed by our citizens in their several callings. During war-time it is the duty as well as the interest of all to multiply effort, to increase to the utmost their production, in order that wastage may be repaired and the nation kept strong for the struggle. Our farmers, tradesmen and manufacturers will no doubt more keenly study their problems and expand wherever possible the scope of their enterprise.

While one hesitates to attempt a forecast in conditions so variable and subject to sudden and violent change, it would appear that accumulations of funds with accompanying easier interest rates and increasing confidence on the part of investors will result in a gradual resumption of the sale abroad and at home of securities for needed expenditures on the part of our Provinces, municipalities, railways and industries. Such expenditures, even on a greatly reduced scale, together with war outlays in Canada should go a long way towards the restoration of such of our trade and industry as have suffered from the effects of the war. Above all will our commercial improvement and, for that matter, commercial improvement throughout the world, follow upon the continuing success of the Allies. With such continuance legitimate business throughout the world must improve during the remaining period of the war. Should the progress of that success be interrupted, international trade and commerce must receive a further setback. To put it another way: If the exchanges of the world were in operation as before the war any notable success on the part of the Allies would cause securities everywhere to rise; with any notable success on the part of the enemy they would fall. Happily we have no cause to be apprehensive as to the continued favourable progress and the certain ultimate triumph of the arms of the Empire and her Allies. So far as any war can be said to go well, we have every reason to make the statement as to this the most terrible of all wars. As to its duration, it would be idle to hazard even a guess. But one thing is certain that be it long or be it short, the Empire and every part of it is determined that its conclusion must be upon such terms that the ensuing peace will be not a transient truce, not an armed and arming armistice, but a real and lasting settlement with securities amply guaranteeing the world against a recrudescence of the militarist ambition, the aggrandizing spirit, the greed of possession, the lust of conquest, which have brought about almost a subversion of our civilization.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: In accordance with the arrangement made a few days ago, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate. I did propose suggesting the resumption of the debate on Tuesday next, but it has been suggested to me by some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that Thursday would be preferable, owing to the fact that the previous day, Wednesday next, is a holiday. However, I suppose it would be satisfactory for the moment simply to move the adjournment of the debate, and the exact date of its resumption can be arranged later.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What my hon. friend suggests is quite satisfactory. I shall be glad to confer with him with regard to the date.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

EUROPEAN WAR CREDIT, $100,000,000.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

1. That it is expedient to provide that a sum not exceeding one hundred million dollars ($100,000,000) be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the Governor in Council during the year ending 31st day of March, 1916, for:

(a) The defence and security of Canada;

(b) The conduct of naval or military operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) Promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or otherwise; and

(d) The carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the Governor in Council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

2. That the Governor in Council be empowered to raise by way of loan, temporary or otherwise, such sums of money as are required for the purpose of making any payment authorized by any Act founded on these resolutions.

3. That the principal raised by way of loan under this Act and under the War Appropriation Act, 1914, and the interest thereon shall be chargeable on the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to the fact that some days ago I asked him if he would, without a motion, lay upon the table of the House the names of the gentlemen who have been acting, or who to the knowledge of the Government or any minister thereof have been professing to act, either for the Canadian Government or for the Government of Great Britain in the purchase of supplies and munitions of war.

My right hon. friend has not yet done that, and I would like to see that done before I for one would be in a position to discuss this vote and consider, as it is the duty of the members to consider, the expenditures which have been made of the $50,000,000 voted by Parliament in the war session in August. This information ought to be furnished. There appeared in the press supporting the Government, at the end of January last, this despatch from Ottawa:

Ottawa, Jan. 15, 1915.—As a consequence of the misrepresentations that have been made to business firms in the United States and Canada by persons who have fraudulently styled themselves agents of the British and French governments, it has been considered advisable by the Government to publish the following list of purchasing agents for military purposes of the allied governments.

British—Col. A. G. Barton and F. W. Stobart, Ritz Carlton Hotel, Montreal.

French—Hudson Bay Co., Montreal; Capt. Lafoulloux, Hotel Brévort, New York; Direction de l'Intendence, Bordeaux, France; M. de La Chaune, 28 Broadway, London.

Russian—Messrs. S. Ruperti and Alexsieff, care of the Russian Embassy, Washington, D.C.

When I inform you that I have information, which I think is of a most reliable character, that gentlemen went to New York not many months ago, took apartments at one of the leading hotels in that city, sent letters or circulars to leading manufacturers of ammunition informing them that they were appointed to represent the Canadian and British Governments and gave orders for vast quantities of ammunition on behalf ostensibly of the Canadian and the British Governments, you will see how important it is that those members of the House who wish to examine into and ascertain the facts with regard to purchases which have been made on behalf of the Canadian and the British Governments should be informed as to those gentlemen whom the Government had in mind when they issued this notice, if it was issued, as I presume it was. There is no immediate hurry, it seems to me, for entering upon the consideration of this motion. Parliament has already voted $50,000,000 which it has been stated by the Prime Minister will last to the close of the present fiscal year. This vote of $100,000,000 is not to take effect till after the 31st of March. It, therefore, does seem to me that we ought not to be rushed along unduly with the consideration of a vote of this magnitude until we have been furnished with information to which Parliament has a right about the expenditures which have been made for war purposes. I do not at present desire to charge, it is far from my wish to charge the Government or any member of the Government with any wrong-doing in connection with the letting of various contracts; but my information is that, whereas the price of a certain kind of ammunition (the fair price even one month after the breaking out of the war) was only some $25 per thousand rounds, these gentlemen representing or professing to represent the Government gave the order and made contracts under which this Government and the British Government paid the large sum of $33 per thousand rounds; that these orders were not confined to millions of rounds but ran into hundreds of millions of rounds. That is the information I have. I may say that in the city of New York this is current talk among members of that splendid Canadian colony who, by their enterprise and interest in Canadian affairs, are a credit to the land of their birth. Many of them hang their heads in shame at the revelations which have been given to them. They say that the Canadian Government and the British Government have been called upon to pay vastly larger sums for ammunition and other war supplies than ought to have been paid. My object and my sole object in bringing the matter to the attention of the House to-day is that the Prime Minister may have this information before him and look into this matter. All that he has to do is to send proper representatives to the city of New York and he will have no difficulty whatever in ascertaining what has taken place there, if the information I have is correct. It may not be correct, it may be that these rumours are unfounded; but they have wide circulation amongst the members of the Canadian colony in New York; they are generally talked about, gentlemen there claim to have absolute knowledge of the truth of what I am stating. I wish to give one illustration which is to be found at pages 38 and 41 of the paper laid on the table of the House by the Minister of Militia. We find that whereas ammunition was supplied by the Dominion Cartridge Company, a Canadian concern, for the price of $31 a thousand rounds, which was a high price, for identically the same ammunition, to be delivered at the same place in the city of Quebec, there was paid in the United States $33 per thousand rounds. This may or may not be confirmatory of the truth of the statements which are made in New York. At all events it is a singular fact, and one worthy of the attention of the Government, that a larger price was paid for ammunition in New York, namely, $33 per thousand rounds, than was paid to a Canadian company, which furnished identically the same ammunition delivered to the same place at $31 per thousand. But my information is that a fair market price for this kind of ammunition in the United States, when these gentlemen, representing or pretending to represent the Governments of Canada and Great Britain, appeared upon the scene and succeeded in bringing about, as I am informed, a combination among the manufacturers, was $25 per thousand rounds; yet the Government of Canada has been charged, as appears here in the report submitted, $33 per thousand, and the British Government has been charged the same price, or $8 per thousand more than was a fair market price at the time when these gentlemen appeared upon the scene and brought about a combination.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What was the time to which the hon. gentleman alludes?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Some time in the fall of 1914. I do not wish to suggest for a single moment that there has been any wrongdoing on the part of the Government; but in view of what is professed to be almost common knowledge among Canadians in New York, I am sure that if, through these gentlemen who have been given credit by the Minister of Militia or some other member of the Government, the British Government or this Government, have paid much higher prices for war supplies than they ought to have paid, it is a subject which demands the immediate and most serious consideration of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and his Government. It would be bad enough, it would be condemned by the Canadian people, it would be reprehensible, if gentlemen representing Canada had gone to the United States and succeeded in making only the Canadian Government and people pay more for ammunition in these times of stress than they ought to have paid; but it is worse when these gentlemen, by reason of having credit from the Canadian Government, have succeeded in making the British Government also pay a very much larger sum than ought to have been paid. The contracts of the British Government which have been secured in this way are not confined to one, two, five, or ten million rounds of amunition. One contract alone called for the enormous amount of 200,000,000 rounds, so I am informed; and if you take the extra charge of $8 per one thousand rounds, on that contract alone the British Government paid $1,600,000 beyond the fair market price for ammunition at the time these gentlemen acted as go-betweens between the manufacturers and the Government. My information is not at all of a confidential nature. The facts are professed to be generally known in the city of New York by those who keep in touch with Canadian affairs. I recognize that it would be impossible for the Opposition in this House to get the necessary information without the co-operation of the Government. It would be impossible for even a committee of this House to get that information without the Government's co-operation, for the subpœnas of the committees of this House do not extend beyond the limits of Canada. The facts can only be got through the co-operation of the Government, and I have no doubt that if the Prime Minister institutes the proper inquiries he will be able to ascertain the truth of these allegations, which I make by reason of information given to me from a source which I am obliged to accept as reliable. If, as my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition suggested in his remarks upon the Address, a committee of this House were appointed consisting of members of both sides and of some member or members of the Government who could speak with the authority of the Canadian Government, and to a very considerable extent with the implied authority of the British Government, I am sure there would be no difficulty in ascertaining the facts in regard to the purchase of this ammunition and other war supplies.

I rise for the purpose of urging that before this resolution is considered in committee the Government should lay on the table of the House the names of those gentlemen who it has ascertained were improperly claiming to represent this Government and the British Government, as well as the names of the gentlemen who had authority from either this Government as a whole or from any member of this Government, whether the Minister of Militia or any other minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. gentleman rose to ask a question. As I have not had an opportunity of presenting the resolution to the House, I may state that the question before us is the motion of Sir Robert Borden that I do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider the resolution.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I suggested to my right hon. friend that we might pass this resolution pro forma without any discussion, and I understood him to assent. I understand my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) objects to that, and I shall therefore withdraw the motion.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not object. My point was that the names of these gentlemen should be laid on the table of the House before the resolution is considered in committee.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Oh, I did not understand. As far as my hon. friend's observations are concerned, I am not prepared to speak to-day on the number of rumours concerning war supplies which he thinks ought to be brought to the attention of the Government, for I did not know that a discussion was coming up on this subject. But I venture to say this: that if the British Government bought with the assistance of this Government any ammunition in New York City or anywhere else, the price was first submitted to them and they were asked whether it was a fair price which they would be prepared to pay. As to what is a fair price for ammunition, I have no such personal knowledge as my hon. friend professes to have. I venture to say that he will find that a price higher than that which he has named has been paid by the British and Allied Governments since the outbreak of war. That is my recollection, and I know that a very considerable effort has been made by some of the Allied Governments to get ammunition. I told my hon. friend the other day that we would give any information in the possession of the Government with regard to persons authorized to purchase war supplies. I intended to give that and would have given it before the matter came up in committee, without the long discourse which my hon. friend has made upon the subject, and I repeat to him now that all available information will be given in due course before the matter comes up in Committee.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee on the proposed resolution. Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has my right hon. friend (Sir Robert Borden) any information to give now?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, I have no information. I did not purpose giving the information at this stage, in view of the arrangement which had been made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think the discussion might take place upon the second reading. Perhaps it would be well for the committee to rise and report progress. I would ask my right hon. friend to see that at the next sitting of the House, when we take this up again, we have all the information we asked for the other day.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

On the motion of hon. W. T. White for Committee of Supply:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We cannot discuss Supply to-day.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We cannot take it up except by consent. I thought we might take Civil Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We are not prepared to discuss Supply to-day.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Do you wish to go through the motion paper?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have no objection.

WAR CONTRACTS—TENDERS FOR ARMY STORES.

On the motion of Mr. Sinclair for a copy of all tenders for army stores that have been received and dealt with by the Department of Militia and Defence since August 1, 1914:

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would ask this to stand. I explained to you yesterday, or the day before, Mr. Speaker, that I had been informed that it would be difficult for the Department of Militia and Defence under the pressure at present to furnish me with all the information I have asked for in this motion. I was also informed that information was to be brought down by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Major General Hughes) within a day or two which would probably furnish me with a great deal of the information asked for and I asked to have this motion stand until the Minister of Militia brought down the information.

Motion allowed to stand.

FISHING BOUNTIES.

Mr. KYTE moved:

For a copy of all correspondence with, and instructions issued, to fishery officers in Nova Scotia during the year 1914, relative to fishing bounties payable to fishermen in respect of fish caught during the year 1914.

Mr. HAZEN: No instructions were issued to fishing bounty officers in Nova Scotia during 1914, with the exception of the standard instructions which are embodied in circular letters and sent out every year. The other correspondence is very little indeed, but what I rose to say to my hon. friend was that, if he desires me to bring down the letters from the fishing bounty officers enclosing the terms of the bounty claims, there are some 27,000 of these, and I do not suppose that is what my hon. friend wants. I would like my hon. friend to let us know just what he wants and if he does so I will be glad to bring down all the correspondence there is.

5 p.m.

Mr. KYTE: I had not that in mind. My object was to get any instructions which had been given to the inspectors previous to the taking up of the bounty claims.

M. HAZEN: There have been practically no instructions, but such papers as there are will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

PURCHASE OF SUBMARINES.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (St. John City) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence relating to the purchase of, and payment by the Government for two Submarines authorized by Order in Council dated the 7th August, 1914, and of any other Order or Orders in Council relating thereto; and also of all reports received by the Government or any Department thereof referring to said Submarines.

He said: I find that these two submarines were purchased pursuant to an Order in Council dated the 7th of August, 1914, which appears upon page 20 of the blue book entitled Documents relative to the European War. The Order in Council is as follows:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 6th August, 1914, from the Minister of the Naval Service, submitting that, in view of the existing emergency, it is necessary to provide some additional means of naval defence on the Pacific coast of Canada. The minister states that two submarine boats have been offered to the Dominion Government; that these boats were originally built for the Chilian Government which was unable to receive them, and that their dimensions are as follows—

Giving the displacement, length, beam and speed. The order proceeds:

The technical officers of the Department of the Naval Service report that these boats are very suitable and recommend their purchase. The minister concurs and recommends, therefore, that these boats be purchased for the sum of $1,050,000, and that, as the necessity is urgent, a Governor General's warrant be issued covering this expenditure, the Minister of Finance having reported that there is no parliamentary appropriation from which this expenditure can be defrayed. The Committee advise that a Governor General's warrant do issue as recommended accordingly.

(Signed) Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

There are two singular facts connected with this Order in Council which I think my hon. friend the minister will feel desirous of explaining to the House. The first is that the price fixed by the Order in Council is $1,050,000.

Mr. HAZEN: The price was $1,150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister will agree that the amount was actually $1,150,000. Therefore it would seem that when that Order was passed, the minister thought that $1,050,000 was the amount paid for the submarines. I do not find any other Order in Council correcting this, although this report was brought down, I think at the session which opened on the 18th of August; but my hon. friend will no doubt, if there is another Order in Council, call our attention to it. Another important statement which I think requires explanation is as follows:

> The minister states that two submarine boats have been offered to the Dominion Government and that these boats were originally built for the Chilian Government which was unable to receive them.

From that statement one would assume that for some reason or other—financial, I would suppose—the Chilian Government was not able to take delivery of these submarines.

That is a fair inference from the statement of the minister contained in that recommendation to Council. My opinion is, that so far from that being the case, the Chilian government had rejected these submarines, that they had a naval expert present at Seattle where the submarines were completed, and that expert, after the tests were made on the 26th of July, declined to accept the submarines, claiming that they were not in accordance with the specifications and were not properly built. I cannot think that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, had he knowledge of that fact, would have made such a statement to Council. My hon. friend and I do not always agree, and when we are in our own home town we differ markedly on some questions. Perhaps one of the most important questions on which we differ has reference to the building of ships. I did all that I could, when I was in the ministry, to secure the building of war vessels in Canada. The fact that they were going to be constructed in St. John did not prevent me from being enthusiastic over the project; I have not been afraid to do anything I could for my own constituency. My hon. friend, for reasons that seemed good to him, has taken the opposite view, and has done all he could to prevent the building of war vessels in Canada. I do not now criticise his course, nor do I argue which of us was right. I have no doubt he thought he was right, and I am sure I was right. But, as I have said, I do not think he knew, when he made that recommendation to Council that these submarines had been rejected by the expert of the Chilian government. It shows that somebody must have been pulling the leg of the minister and that gentleman lived in the province of British Columbia. I think that when I give all the evidence which I have bearing on the subject, evidence which comes from British Columbia, and which I think is to be relied upon, it will be seen that that gentleman—who may properly be called the sixteenth member of this Government, though he is not yet sworn in; I refer to Sir Richard McBride—I say I think the House will agree that he was not exactly fair or frank with my hon. friend the minister when he induced the Government to make the purchase of the submarines. Not but that it may have been advisable—as to that I do not know—to purchase these submarines at a fair price. But I think my hon. friend would not have asked Council to purchase submarines of a somewhat obsolete character, the construction of which had been entered upon some three years before, and which had taken an unconscionably long time to build—for they could ordinarily be constructed by a good shipbuilding plant in from eight to ten months. But, as I have said, when my hon. friend was induced to purchase these submarines at a price of $1,050,000, or $1,150,000 which is the sum to be paid though it is not what is stated in the Order in Council, he was induced to do something which, I think, he would hardly have done had he had full knowledge of all the facts.

There appeared in one of the leading Seattle newspapers, the Sunday Times, of 26th July last, an article with reference to these submarines, which I think will be of interest to the House. This newspaper, I am informed, has a wide circulation both in Victoria and in Vancouver, and we may well presume that statements published in it would be pretty well known to the people of these cities. The article is as follows:

> Chile rejects fighting craft launched here—Two submarines made in New Jersey and put together in local yard reported as unsuitable.
>
> Iquique and Antafogasta, submarine war craft built in Seattle by the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey for the Government of Chile, at a cost of more than $1,000,000 will never be known in future history as great sea fighters defending the honour and welfare of the people of the South American republic. They have been officially pronounced undesirable by the Chilean naval commission, of which Captain Charles Plaza, of the Chilean navy, is chairman. They will not be accepted by the Government of Chile, says Captain Plaza.

The two underwater destroyers, built at the shipyards of the Seattle Construction and Drydock Company assembled, rather than built, to be speaking with technical accuracy were launched with great eclat and with impressive ceremonies. They have been about three years in building. All the material was made in the east by the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey and shipped to Seattle, and the two war crafts made fit for service in the local shipyards, under the personal and official direction of the representatives of the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey.

Captain Plaza determined, in the recent trials at Bellingham, that the trouble with the Iquique and the Antafogasta is that they are overweight and not of sufficient and quick acting buoyancy as to justify their acceptance and this makes it practically certain that his government will sustain his adverse recommendation.

In a carefully guarded statement, Captain Plaza completely absolves the Seattle Construction and Drydock Company from any responsibility whatever for the failure of the Iquique and Antafogasta to meet the requirements of the Naval Department of the Republic of Chile.

It is known that the local shipbuilding company merely assembled the two submarines. Every part of them, practically, was either made in the East and shipped out here or was fabricated in Seattle under the specifications and drawings prepared by the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey. Therefore, the responsibility of the local shipyards was not more than that of a man instructed to put a hat in a bandbox.

Captain Plaza, who, as chairman of the Chilean Naval Commission has been in Seattle for months past in connection with the building of the submarines and whose written report advising his government against the acceptance of the Iquique and the Antafogasta has been mailed, said last night:

'I can only confirm the report you have, that the two submarines built here for my government have not been accepted and that at this time they do not meet the full requirements of the contract between the government of Chile and the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey.

Inasmuch as my report has not yet reached my government, I cannot disclose its contents, nor can I give you the facts upon which the commission acted in advising against the acceptance of the submarines.

You are authorized to state, however, that the disagreement is a matter entirely between the commission of which I am the chairman and the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey and does not in any way involve the Seattle Construction and Drydock Company, which built the destroyers for the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey and according to the directions of the representatives of that company on duty here.'

Considering all the angles in the case it is evident that the incident of the rejection of the Iquique and Antafogasta will cause a mild sensation in Coast shipbuilding as well as in naval circles. It is apparent, however, that aside from the discovery that the two submarines lack the proper buoyancy to make certain their safety and efficiency, they are considerably out of date as to style and pattern. They were designed several years ago, and it is known they do not compare with the type of submarines now building here and elsewhere for the United States Government. In fact, it is understood, were the two submarines satisfactory in point of safety and efficiency, they would scarcely measure up in standards of destructive power, speed and other requirements to the submarines recently built or on the ways in various ship yards of the country.

Because of the absence from the city of President R. J. Patterson, of the Seattle Construction and Drydock Company, and of T. S. Bailey, local representative of the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey, no official statement could be obtained yesterday from the builders' and designers' point of view.

What recourse, if any, the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey has against the Chilean Government is not known, but it is shrewdly guessed that the company, which owns the so-called Holland patents, will charge the experience up to profit and loss.

In Bellingham Bay, several months ago, as The Times then exclusively told, the Iquique, during her preliminary trials, while partly submerged, ran afoul of a boom of logs towing in the harbour. Her plight was a serious matter for a period of two hours or more, because of the fact that the master of the tug was unaware of the fact that his tow had hooked the upper works of the diving destroyer, thereby imprisoning the craft, so to speak, and likewise confining the officers and crew within her steel body in such a manner as to menace their lives.

Before any real harm had been done the master of the tug ascertained that he was mixed up in a peculiar and embarrassing situation with the submarine, and measures were promptly taken to release her and to permit her crew to handle her in their own way.

This is the report of Captain Plaza, chairman of the commission appointed by the Chilean Government to make an examination of these submarines, to witness the test to which they were subjected and to determine whether or not they were acceptable. As this newspaper states, Captain Plaza in reporting to his Government refused to recommend the acceptance of the submarines. That was on July 26. I am informed from British Columbian sources that Mr. Patterson was the chairman or president of the company in Seattle which was putting together the parts of the submarines. I am informed that upon the rejection of the submarines by the naval expert of the Chilean Government this gentleman immediately went to Victoria and interviewed Sir Richard McBride. Presumably Sir Richard McBride communicated with this Government on the subject—of course we shall have the correspondence if this motion is carried—and it appears that in the course of a few days Sir Richard McBride purchased the submarines on behalf of the British Columbia Government, the cheque of the British Columbia Government being given in payment of the purchase price. That is a matter which I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ought at some time to explain to the House. If this Government found it desirable to purchase these submarines, I think it will be a matter of interest to know why the Government did not purchase them direct from the builders, and why it was left to Sir Richard McBride to take the extraordinary step of making a purchase in the name and on behalf of the Government of British Columbia. As one who has had some correspondence on the subject, it looks to me as if this Government was hesitating about purchasing the submarines and Sir Richard McBride took it upon himself to force the hand of the Government by purchasing them himself on behalf of the British Columbian Government, knowing right well that when he had gone that far his influence with this Government would prevent the ignoring of his recommendation and would obviate the danger of the Government of British Columbia being placed in the very awkward position in which they would have been placed if they had become the owners of these submarines.

It appears that a few days afterwards these submarines were brought over to Victoria, and subsequently, on August 7, an order in council was passed for their purchase. As I have said, in its terms the sum of $1,050,000 was mentioned as the purchase price. It was not stated that the submarines had been rejected by the naval expert of the Chilian government; my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries merely reported to His Royal Highness that the Chilian government had been unable to receive them. That order in council says that technical officers of the Department of Naval Service reported that these boats were very suitable and recommended their purchase. So far as is known in Victoria, no naval experts from the department at Ottawa had any opportunity of examining these boats before they were purchased, and my information is that no such examination was made. However, I have no doubt that the correspondence will show what these reports were. I take it that my hon. friend cannot treat that correspondence and those reports as private, and that he will bring them down as part of the return which will be submitted.

It is important that the Government should examine into all the facts in connection with this purchase. It is stated by many people and believed by many people on the Pacific coast that this company was not paid either $1,050,000 or $1,150,000 for these submarines. My information is that two cheques were passed, one of which, for the sum of $900,000, was issued to the company which built the boats. The other cheque may have been issued bona fide to a proper party, but the feeling in the public mind—among many people in British Columbia, at all events—is that somebody got a commission on the purchase of these submarines. I do not know whether or not that is so, and I make no charge in that respect, but I do say that having regard to the fact that these submarines were rejected by the naval expert of the Government for which they were built; that the builders had no market for them, except Sir Richard McBride on behalf of the British Columbia Government; that the boats were reported to be obsolete and not according to the specifications and that the naval expert of the Chilian government reported adversely upon them, it is an extraordinary thing that the price paid for them was equal to the price at which two of the most modern and up-to-date submarines could be purchased. I say that is an extraordinary fact, and it does seem to me that if those who were acting in the purchase of those two submarines had been anxious to do so, they could have purchased them at a very much lower price than that which was paid for them. My assumptions are based upon what is recognized out on the coast as public knowledge; based upon newspaper reports and statements of persons familiar with these submarines.

The fact that the purchase price was divided into two sums, one for $900,000 and one for $250,000, lends colour to the suspicion entertained on the coast that a considerable portion of this money did not go to the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey, which had the contract with the Chilian government for the building of these two submarines. As a further evidence that there can be no truth in the statement contained in the Order in Council—which I assume the Minister of Marine and Fisheries placed in the recommendation to Council without full knowledge of all the facts with regard to the Chilian government being unable to receive the boats—the Chilian government, the moment this thing was closed up and they found that they were freed from any responsibility of litigation with this company, gave an order for two up-to-date submarines and those two are now, I am told, under construction, showing that their failure to take the submarines over was not due to inability on their part to receive them but to the report of their naval expert that the vessels were not up to specifications and entirely unsuitable and obsolete.

The motion also asks for any reports which have been made with reference to these vessels at the time of purchase and also since they have been in the ownership of this Government. In this connection I am told that one of these submarines has been in the drydock practically ever since they were purchased and that recently a great portion of the side of one of them has been stripped out and that new machinery was installed. I can understand that that might be done in order to put in lighter machinery to prevent the boats from being over-burdened. I am told that the difficulty is to keep them at the proper level. They are overweighted and will sink down very much below the depth at which, for ordinary purposes of navigation or service they ought to be kept. No doubt my hon. friend will bring down any reports he may have on these subjects. With regard to the general question of purchasing submarines to form part of the Canadian navy I would assume that the correspondence I am asking for will give full information. I myself am very much in favour of adding submarines to the Canadian navy. It is a matter of great rejoicing to me that we have upon the Statute book an Act known as the Naval Service Act of 1910 which would enable the Government to have submarines built and to add to the Canadian navy a class of vessels which this war has already demonstrated is of the very greatest possible value for the protection of our harbours and for attacking larger vessels which might attempt to invade our coast. My only regret is that there should be any question as to the suitability of these submarines for the purpose for which they were bought. It is a well known fact that for some fifteen months there have been in Canada shipyards well adapted for the building of submarines and larger vessels as well. Submarines could be built to-day, and for a considerable period could have been built, at the magnificent shipyards at Maisonneuve, near Montreal, where there is one of the finest ship-building plants to be found in the world. They could be built at Esquimalt where there is a dry-dock and a shipyard as well. They could be built at Levis, where Mr. Davie has a very fine ship-building plant, not suitable for the building of large vessels, but entirely suitable for the building of the submarines. They could be built at Halifax, where there is a dry-dock and a ship-repairing plant, but we know it is very easy, by a little enlargement, to convert a ship-repairing plant into a ship-building plant. I am sorry to say they could not be built at St. John, but my hon. friend knows the reason why, and we need not refer further to that. Up on the Great Lakes at Port Arthur there is a splendid dry dock and shipyard, built under a contract which the late Government made while I was minister. Submarines could be built there. It might be that under the Rush-Bagot treaty, unless by the consent of the United States, we could not turn out more than one at a time, but you know at least two vessels of a certain tonnage are allowed on the Great Lakes. Even if they could not be put together there, all the parts could be brought down to Montreal and Quebec and assembled. I think this correspondence, when we get it down, will show that a strong argument was made by Sir Richard McBride in order to induce this Government to act, and to act promptly and buy the two submarines, even although they had been rejected by the naval experts of Chili. I take it that the papers will show a very strong argument in favour of adding submarines to the Canadian navy.

I was pleased to observe the other day in Canada, a paper published in London, a despatch from Montreal, or from New York originating in Montreal. I am sorry the Minister of Militia is not in his place. The despatch is as follows:

A telegram received in New York from Montreal, according to Reuter says: To meet the exaggerated stories published in the United States, the Canadian Militia Department has authorized the statement that there is no reason why the facts concerning the construction of submarines in Canada should not be published. They are as follows: The keels of eight first-class craft have already been laid down by the Canadian Vickers Company here and it is expected that several will be ready in August next. The plant is running at full capacity.

I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if that statement is correct?

Mr. HAZEN: As to whether the Militia Department authorized the statement I do not know.

Mr. PUGSLEY: As to the fact?

Mr. HAZEN: As a matter of fact, I think submarines are being built by the Canadian Vickers at Montreal.

Mr. PUGSLEY: For whom?

Mr. HAZEN: I presume for the British Government.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What hon. gentlemen on the other side do not know when they do not want to know is beyond comprehension. Is the censorship on my hon. friend? Has Mr. Cook or Mr. Hamilton got charge of him to see that no information can get out? The matter is very important indeed, and I would think that my hon. friend would be able to state with some definiteness whether it is correct or not, and also inform me how far he would feel I ought to go in discussing this matter. I should like my right hon. friend to intimate after recess whether the Government feel that I could, without injury to the public interest, discuss the building of these submarines at Montreal. Personally I do not think there would be any harm in it, for it is now a matter of common knowledge and has been discussed in all the newspapers of the United States and England, which profess to have published the news on the authority of the Minister of Militia.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House very much longer. There is, however, one matter in connection with the purchase of submarines which I omitted to mention, and in regard to which I trust the report to be brought down will give the House the information, and that is as to the contract price of these submarines with the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey. I take it for granted, Sir that before paying this large sum of money for new submarines the Government would inform itself as to what was the contract price which the Chilian government were paying. I am informed on authority which I believe to be reliable that the original contract price was $387,000 for each submarine. That made the original contract for the two submarines $774,000. I am told that after the contract was entered into an extra torpedo tube and some other extras were provided which brought the contract price up to $900,000. My information is from the Pacific Coast. We can well understand that when the unusual circumstances occurred, of Sir Richard McBride, as Premier of British Columbia, purchasing these vessels, there would be a good deal of discussion and eventually a good deal of information would leak out to the public. The information which I have is that cheques were issued, one of which went to the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey for the sum of $900,000 which is said to have been the contract price for these vessels and the extras which was to be paid by the Chilian government, provided, of course, that they were up to the specifications. I would hope that my hon. friend would be able to give satisfactory evidence to the House as to the circumstances under which these two cheques were drawn, and also that the report will show what was the contract price with the Chilian government.

Now, I desire to repeat that I am particularly anxious to have the correspondence brought down and to see it and I am sure that my motion will commend itself to the House if for no other reason than to see what arguments are presented in favour of having a fleet of submarines for Canada. I am entirely in favour, as I have said, of increasing the Canadian navy by the addition of a number of submarines for the protection of our coasts. If my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and the members of the Government will pardon me for saying so, I would observe that I myself am unable to see any valid reason why submarines should not be built in Canada for the Canadian Government and to form a part of the Canadian navy. The Government has asked for a vote of $100,000,000 for war purposes, to be used for the defence of Canada in connection with the army or navy. Let me say to my hon. friend, who I presume will favour the House with a few remarks after I have got through with the observations which I shall make, that, speaking for myself—and, I know I can speak for my honoured leader because he has made a statement to that effect to the House, and I believe I can speak for the whole Liberal party of Canada as represented in this House—this hundred million dollars will be cheerfully voted to the Government for the purpose of assisting in the defence of Canada and the defence of the Empire. Let me express the hope that a part of that money at all events will be used for the purpose of constructing submarines to be used by Canada and placed, of course during the war, if the war should be that long continued, at the disposal of the British Government. If it is necessary to add $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 to that amount I am sure that this House will cheerfully grant the additional sum.

There is no reason in the world, it seems to me why vessels should not be built in Canada for the Canadian navy. There is no obstacle in the way now that I can see. The late Mr. Monk was opposed, as I understood, to this policy. My hon. friends need not be afraid of their once beloved and powerfully ally, Mr. Bourassa, because he does not count for a great deal to-day with the Canadian people. My friends, Mr. Pelletier and Mr. Nantel, have been provided for and whatever obstacle their views might present as against a Canadian navy has been removed. My hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Coderre) has gone into a pleasant office where he will not want to say anything contrary to the views of the Government. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Blondin) has also gone into a position where, I think, he will be very well satisfied to carry out the views of the majority, and the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Sevigny) has been put in leash so that he is not likely to present any serious objections to whatever course in the interests of the Empire may be decided on.

Let me say to my hon. friends: Come to us and let us join together to build up as well as we can a Canadian navy which will be able to defend our coasts in case of attack by an enemy. Although we trust that peril may not arise, still we ought to be prepared for whatever peril may come to us. Let us join together in building up a Canadian navy in defence of Canada and of the Empire. I am sure that in any course which hon. gentlemen in the Government may take, towards the better ensuring of our defences and ensuring the welfare of the empire either upon the land or upon the sea, they will be heartily supported by the members of His Majesty's loyal Opposition on the floor of this House, and I believe throughout this whole Dominion.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I regret very much indeed that an old and experienced parliamentarian like my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) should have thought it desirable to make a speech on a question of this importance before the papers for which he is moving, and which will give the facts of the case, have been laid before the House. Some of these papers possibly may be of a secret character and cannot be placed upon the table of the House, but I will bring down at an early date all the papers which I can, with the approval of His Royal Highness, and when they are laid on the table and carefully perused, they will show that my hon. friend is not justified in the criticisms which he has been making. I said that I regretted very much that my hon. friend should discuss a question of such a serious character at the present time, involving as it does the sufficiency of the defences of Canada upon the Pacific coast, but when I say I regret that fact, I may add that I am not at all surprised at the course which my hon. friend has taken, because had the papers been laid on the table of the House—and they would have been given to my hon. friend at any time he asked for them—my hon. friend, after perusing them, would not have been in a position to allow his imagination to run riot as he allowed it to do to-day and to give credit to idle rumours that have reached his ears from time to time, and to press clippings. My hon. friend attacks the Government and also Sir Richard McBride. His attacks may be divided into two heads. In the first place he says—and I think he will regret, as the country will deeply regret his statement, even if it were true, which it is not—that the submarines which were purchased were not suitable for the purpose for which they were acquired. Such a statement made at the present time—when there may still be some danger, if the vessels of the German fleet escape from the North sea, of an attack being made on the coast cities of British Columbia—will when reported in the American press to-morrow morning, no doubt carry delight to the hearts of all the members of the German societies in the United States, and to others who are in sympathy with Germany. Furthermore my hon. friend's criticism, although unwarranted, will have a depressing effect upon our friends in Victoria and Vancouver and throughout British Columbia who have been relying, from the time the war broke out, on the defence and security afforded to them by the presence of these submarines in the waters of British Columbia.

My hon. friend also says that too much was paid for these submarines; and while he says he makes no charge, he insinuates that things were done of a scandalous character as regards the price paid. His remarks, if they mean anything at all, mean that Sir Richard McBride was a party to putting up a scheme on the Federal Government for the purpose of getting money through the purchase of these submarines which was not warranted, and that some of that money was diverted to other purposes. I think I am fairly stating the absolutely logical deduction from the remarks made by my hon. friend. It would have been a more manly course for my hon. friend to make the charges on his responsibility as a member of the House rather than to indulge in insinuations from which an inference of that sort can be taken. As my friend Sir Richard McBride is not here to-night to defend himself—although he is well able to do so on any and all occasions—I will take the opportunity of explaining more fully than I otherwise would Sir Richard McBride's connection with the purchase of these submarines, a connection which redounds to his credit and his patriotism and which will meet the approval, not only of his constituents in British Columbia, but of the people of Canada as a whole.

If the papers had been brought down, my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) would not have had the opportunity of making a speech which I charge was made for partisan purposes. In view of the remarks made by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in this House only last Monday, when he was speaking on the Address, my right hon. friend ought to take my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in hand and tell him that caution must be observed, because if the hon. gentleman indulges in this sort of criticism which is of the most partisan character, there is no telling what the consequences may be.

The facts in regard to the purchase of the submarines are as follows: War broke out in this country on the 4th of August. For some days previous to that it was apparent that war was coming, and there was undoubtedly serious alarm felt on the Pacific coast. It was known that German cruisers, like the Dresden, the Leipzig, the Nürnburg and others were abroad in the waters of the Pacific or in the waters of the Atlantic, which could soon betake themselves to the waters of the Pacific. There was no panic among the people of British Columbia, but there was naturally alarm over this condition of affairs. On the 3rd of August, the day before war was declared, the Naval Department at Ottawa received this telegram from Esquimalt:

Esquimalt, B.C., Aug. 3, 1914.

Naval, Ottawa. Ont.

Two submarines actually completed for the Chilean government Seattle, estimated cost £115,000—

That is, £230,000 for the two, or a little less than $1,150,000.

—could probably purchase; ready for action, torpedoes on board. Chilian government cannot take possession. I consider it most important acquire immediately. Burrell—

Referring to the Minister of Agriculture, who was then on the Pacific coast—

—Burrell concurs. Provincial government will advance money pending remittance.

Esquimalt Yard.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Who sent that message?

Mr. HAZEN: That is from our Naval station at Esquimalt and it was sent either by Captain Hose, the captain of the Rainbow, if he at that time was senior officer there; or if he was not there, it was sent by Lieutenant Pilcher, who would have been the senior officer in command of this Naval station, unless there happened to be some ship there with an officer senior to him in command.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Who signed the message?

Mr. HAZEN: It is signed, as all these messages are signed, "Esquimalt Yard." That is the way in which such official messages are signed, just as a message coming from the Admiralty is signed "Admiralty." That message came from one of our officers, and I am sure any one will assume that a Naval officer of rank, qualification and experience, before telling us that he can purchase two submarines ready for action, with torpedoes on board; that the Chilian Government cannot take possession; that he considers it most important to acquire them immediately; will have made careful inquiries into the facts. As a matter of fact, as an officer of the Naval Department, he knew every detail in regard to these two submarines that were then at Seattle and was able to speak with authority with respect to them.

That was on August 3. The naval department immediately took steps to gain further information. I consulted the expert advisors of the naval department of whom a number are men not only of ability but of experience in naval affairs, and their opinion was in favour of purchase. On the 4th of August, and before our decision had been reached, the Prime Minister received this telegram from Sir Richard McBride:

Sir Robert Borden,
Prime Minister, Ottawa.

Victoria, B.C., August 4, 1914.

After consultation with Burrell and naval officers, have advanced to-night $1,150,000 to Lieut. Pilcher, senior naval officer in command, for purchase of two modern submarines lying Seattle harbour built for Chile. All arrangements completed for their arrival Esquimalt to-morrow morning, unless untoward incident occurs. Congratulate Canada if this operation successful on acquisition of such usual—

I presume that this is a misprint for 'useful.'

—adjunct for defence of country.

R. McBride.

This telegram was in cipher, and I have this certificate signed by Mr. A. E. Blount, private secretary to the Prime Minister:

I hereby certify that the above is a true and accurate transcription of cipher Canadian Pacific telegraph message received by the Prime Minister from Sir Richard McBride.

We have therefore the recommendation of our own naval officers at Esquimalt, and the recommendation of the naval advisers of the Department of Naval Defence. and also the advice of Sir Richard McBride residing at Victoria, a comparatively short distance from Seattle, where the submarines were, and who might be presumed to be in possession of accurate information with regard to them. And this telegram of his is sent after consultation with the naval officials in Esquimalt. On these recommendations, I think, we should have been justified in buying the submarines, but we were not content with that. I caused a despatch to be sent to the British Admiralty. Hon. gentlemen know that the officers of the British Admiralty, are familiar, down to the smallest detail, with every ship of war that is being built in any part of the world. At least, that was true up to the time when war broke out. There may be ships building in Germany to-day, guarded from espionage, concerning which the British Admiralty have not such information, but I think I am right in saying that up to the breaking out of the war the officers of the British Admiralty would have accurate information about the details of every vessel building in any part of the world for any government. The reply I received from the Admiralty on the 5th of August was as follows:

London, August 5, 1914.

Your message Chilean submarines is recommended purchase by Canadian Government if they can be manned by Canada.

Admiralty.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Can the hon. minister give the telegram he sent to the Admiralty?

Mr. HAZEN: I cannot, I am sorry to say. I only had this file sent over this evening, and I cannot find the telegram here. However, it will be among the papers brought down.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is important.

Mr. HAZEN: Certainly. There is not the slightest desire to keep it back. It was a cable telling the Admiralty about these submarines and asking for advice. They advised the purchase, if we could man them. We found that we could man them. We were singularly fortunate in having in Esquimalt a gentleman who was in the British navy and experienced in submarines. There were also two or three retired officers of that class living in Victoria. With their assistance we manned these submarines, and had our crews practising day after day, as they are doing still, according to the information we have received.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the date of the telegram to the Admiralty?

Mr. HAZEN: It was the 4th of August.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What was the date of Sir Richard McBride's telegram stating that he had purchased the submarines?

Mr. HAZEN: The 4th of August.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What is the date of the telegrams sent by the Admiralty?

Mr. HAZEN: The 5th of August.

Mr. PUGSLEY: So, Sir Richard McBride purchased these submarines before their purchase was recommended by the Admiralty?

Mr. HAZEN: Not a doubt about it,—and before war was declared. And let me say to my hon. friend that it was a most fortunate thing that Sir Richard McBride did so. For, even as it was, an attempt was made to recall these submarines after they had left Seattle. Fortunately, they had got outside the territorial waters of the United States and were able to get to Esquimalt. A delay of even a few hours in purchasing these submarines would have meant that we should not have had these vessels for the defence of our cities and coasts on the Pacific; and without that defence, there is no telling what might have occurred.

Now, let me say to my hon. friend that we have no information that the Chilian government had refused to take these submarines. Our information, as contained in the telegrams, is that they could not be delivered to the Chilian government. Our information was that there were financial difficulties which made it impossible for the Chilian government to take possession of these ships and so the builders were seeking for purchasers. But I desire to say to the House, that even if I had had that information, in view of the information I received from the British Admiralty, I would have gone on and purchased these ships; that is, I would have accepted the recommendation given by the British Admiralty in preference to any other recommendation, or statement or information, that might have been given in regard to them. It has been a most fortunate thing that we acquired these submarines. Ask any man on the Pacific Coast what he thinks has been the result of these submarines being there. Ask the naval officers of the department in Ottawa what the moral effect of the presence of these submarines has been. These officers tell me that the fact that there were submarines on our Pacific Coast ready to go out and do battle in front of Victoria, Vancouver or Esquimalt would be known to German cruisers on the Pacific Coast, like the Dresden, the Lipzic and others, and they would not venture in to make an attack, knowing that they might be met by a torpedo from a submarine. These German vessels on the Pacific Coast were of 3,400 tons, about the same size as the Rainbow. The Rainbow single-handed might have been able to engage any of them, except for the fact that she is slower that these German vessels, and if she had been the sole defence of the coast cities and left without the very valuable aid of these submarines, there would have been far greater danger of an attack. We have known that these cruisers were not very far from the coast of British Columbia. We have information, accurate information I believe, that one of them went as far north as Prince Rupert, no doubt watching the trade route to Canada across the sea. In the opinion of every naval man, the presence of these submarines in British Columbian waters not only had a splendid moral effect, but they would have rendered splendid defensive service had the occasion arisen. The information we have from day to day is that the men on these vessels are doing and can do good work. Our reports are to the effect that these submarines, while perhaps not the most modern or of the highest class, yet are able to give defensive service as efficient as submarines owned by any nation and were the best that could possibly be obtained.

My hon. friend has been listening to a lot of idle talk. Some one told him that one of these submarines had been kept in the drydock ever since it was purchased and that the other is so badly damaged that it is now laid up for repairs with its side torn out. That cannot be the case. I will simply read to the House the report which on the 9th of February, two days ago, was received from the Esquimalt dockyard with regard to these submarines, concerning which we have been receiving daily reports. It is as follows:

Naval, Ottawa, Ontario.

Night report. Both submarines of our own exercised and returned to harbour.

The circumstance that they had exercised and returned to harbour that night is hardly compatible with the fancy tale which my hon. friend has had poured into his ears and which he has narrated to this House to-day, to the effect that one of the submarines was so badly injured that its side had to be taken out and that one of them has been in drydock almost ever since it was purchased.

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend has misquoted me. I did not say that the submarine had been so badly injured that it had to be put into drydock; I said my information was that she had been put into drydock ostensibly for the purpose of making changes in her machinery.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not wish to misquote my hon. friend or do him any injustice, but he certainly conveyed to my mind the meaning that one of these boats had been practically useless from the time of purchase and that one of them was very badly injured and is now laid up in drydock with its side torn out. But here we have the statement made on the 9th day of this month in the form of the ordinary report sent to us from day to day, that these two submarines had been out exercising and had returned to harbour. A boat in the condition described by my hon. friend this afternoon would not be a very safe boat to exercise in the open sea. We have received similar requests from Esquimalt almost every day since the boats were acquired.

The hon. gentleman says that these vessels were in drydock; I may say that one of them was in drydock. In coming over from Seattle to Esquimalt it touched ground at a certain point and sustained slight damage—damage that was repaired in a very short time. But, my hon. friend may say: "the boats were in dry-dock on a number of occasions." So they were. The secret service people brought in information that an attempt would be made by night in the harbour of Esquimalt to destroy those vessels by bombs while they were at anchor. For greater safety, the vessels upon returning to Esquimalt harbour after exercising or after having been up north or down south, sailed into dry-dock. A guard was put about them; ample lights were set about the dry-dock so as to provide every safeguard and make it impossible for any marauder or any evil disposed person to destroy them. That is the truth about their being in dry-dock; so far as I know these are the facts as reported from day to day by the Esquimalt dock-yard.

My hon. friend says we paid too much for these boats. Let us see whether we paid too much or not. The first telegram that I received from our responsible naval officer in Esquimalt told us that the price for which these boats could be obtained was £115,000 each, or £230,000, something over $1,150,000. On August 4, the telegram Sir Richard McBride sent to the Prime Minister conveyed the information that he had paid for the vessels $1,150,000. We remitted $1,150,000 to repay Sir Richard McBride for the amount which he had paid for these submarines. The money was sent through the banks, and when the papers are laid before the House hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity of seeing in what way the amount was paid. What becomes, then, of the charge my hon. friend makes? He says that the $1,150,000 was divided into two cheques, and, although he does not definitely make the charge, he insinuates, if his speech means anything, that Sir Richard McBride was guilty of a corrupt transaction; that Sir Richard McBride did not pay $1,150,000 for these submarines. Here we have Sir Richard's own words, and the records of the banks in Victoria will show whether the charge made by my hon. friend against a reputable, public-minded man, who enjoys in a large measure the confidence of the people of his province, is correct or is not correct. This Government remitted the $1,150,000 to Sir Richard McBride, the amount which he had paid for the submarines, and from what I know of Sir Richard McBride I think he is too shrewd a man to pay an unnecessarily large price for them. It may be that the price is generous—I do not think it is too generous—but when the necessity of getting these submarines was so immediately imperative, was that a time to haggle about a matter of price? The responsible naval officials at Esquimalt thought the price was right; Sir Richard McBride, after consulting the naval officials, thought the price was right, and he paid the money. If, because he thought—and I do not think he did think so—that the price was too high, he had allowed these submarines to escape from our grasp and not to be made available to us for the defence of this country on the Pacific coast, he and everybody connected with the transaction would have been deserving of the condemnation of the people of this country.

My hon. friend has referred to the fact that the Order in Council passed in respect of the purchase of these submarines named the price as $1,050,000. He has read that Order in Council, which is dated August 7, 1914. That Order in Council does state, as my hon. friend has said, that the price was $1,050,000. Hon. gentlemen will observe that in the telegram from Sir Richard McBride to the Prime Minister, which I have read to the House, the price is stated as $1,150,000—and this was on the 4th of August. How the mistake occurred I have not been able to understand, but, so far as I can gather, the contents of that telegram sent by Sir Richard McBride to the Prime Minister were communicated to the officials of the Naval Department by telephone, and either the naval officer who drew the report to Council misunderstood the telegram as it was received from the office of the Prime Minister, or whoever transmitted it from the Prime Minister's office made an error in reading the telegram and gave the amount as $1,050,000 instead of $1,150,000.

When the Order in Council was submitted to me the mistake escaped my eye, as it did that of Deputy Minister Desbarats. The mistake was discovered very soon afterwards, and on the 29th of August this Order in Council was passed:

The Committe of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 27th August, 1914, from the Naval Service, stating that authority was recently given him by O. C., P. C., No. 2071, of the 7th August, 1914, to purchase two submarine boats.

The minister further states that owing to a clerical error the purchase price was shown as ten hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($1,050,000) whereas the actual price should have been one million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($1,150,000).

The minister therefore recommends that O. C. P. C., No. 2071, of the 7th of August, 1914, be cancelled and that he be given authority to purchase the submarines boats for the sum of one million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($1,150,000), to be charged to war appropriation.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When was the $1,150,000 actually paid?

Mr. HAZEN: Before that, I think.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Before the amending order?

Mr. HAZEN: The date is not very material, but these facts will all appear from the correspondence.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It was of course paid out without authority, but that is merely technical.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The amending order is not printed in the file brought down.

Mr. HAZEN: This perhaps was not printed. I am reading this because my hon. friend said he was not able to find any Order in Council correcting the mistake that was made, and I am showing him that the amending order was passed on the 29th of August. There is no objection, as I have said, to bringing down the papers. I am sorry my hon. friend sees fit to insinuate charges of such a serious character against Sir Richard McBride, when a perusal of the papers would have satisfied my hon. friend that such insinuations and charges were without foundation. The papers will be brought down at an early date and laid on the table of the House. I invite my hon. friend's careful scrutiny of every transaction in regard to the matter, and of everything the Naval Department has done in connection with the purchase of the submarines. I am sure he will come to the conclusion that his suspicions are ill-founded, that the transaction is beyond suspicion or reproach in every respect, and is to the very best interests of this country during the crisis in which we are engaged, and that Sir Richard McBride, instead of being the subject of criticism and condemnation, is deserving of the praise of the people of Canada for the prompt and excellent measure he took to further safeguard the interests of the people on the Pacific coast.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), upon reflection, will come to the conclusion that it would have been better for him to have obtained the papers first and made his speech afterwards. The reason for the course he has adopted perhaps may be his suspicion that if he saw the papers first he could not have made the speech and indulged in the insinuations which we heard from him this afternoon. As far as the Government are concerned, I entirely concur in what has been said by my hon. friend the Minister of Naval Defence (Mr. Hazen), that if the hon. member for St. John has any charge to make with regard to this matter, we shall welcome him to make it, and give him the investigation he desires. As far as we are concerned the facts are precisely as my hon. friend the Minister of Naval Service has said. A communication was received on the 3rd day of August when we had secret telegrams leading us to believe that war with the Empire of Germany in the immediate future was highly probable. The Minister of Naval Service came to me and spoke to me about the telegram which had been received from the Esquimalt Naval Yard. We conferred upon the matter and I said to him that as the sum of money involved was large it would be wise for us to consult the Admiralty first and see whether or not they would recommend the purchase. If Sir Richard McBride had not taken the action which he did the submarines could not have been purchased by Canada and the security they have afforded to the Pacific coast would not have been available. I would like to remind hon. gentlemen in this House, and my friends from British Columbia will remember it, that there was grave apprehension at one time on the Pacific coast as to an attack from that very same squadron which afterwards sunk two British ships in the southern Pacific. We knew at the time, at least we had reason to believe at the time, from information gathered by the naval officers on the Pacific coast and also from information afforded to us by the Admiralty, that the German ships in the Pacific which afterwards constituted the fleet I have alluded to were endeavouring to come together. They were not together at the beginning of the war but their plans were so well laid and their means of communication so well arranged that they did succeed in coming together and defeating a British fleet much inferior in power, with a loss of two British ships. Four gallant young Canadians went down with Admiral Craddock and his crew in that disaster. There was reason to believe at the time that those German ships were intending to come north. I know it was the belief of the naval authorities on the coast, and I think also the belief of the Admiralty, that they intended to come north, and I have telegrams from personal friends of mine in Vancouver pointing out that considerable apprehension was felt as to an attack; in fact one very old personal friend of mine in British Columbia, not Sir Richard McBride, suggested to me that it would be better to not have any defences at all at Vancouver or Victoria and to rely on the observance by the German fleet of the Hague Convention which forbade an attack on an undefended place. I replied that I had not that same confidence in the observance by the Germans of the Convention and that we would, at Victoria, at Vancouver and everywhere else, perfect all the defences we could and fight it out to the end if they did attack us. I may tell the hon. member for St. John that two British ships, one of them the Rainbow, another a cruiser, I think the Newcastle, and a Japanese cruiser which happened to come to our Pacific coast at that time, together with those two submarines for which my hon. friend has such a contempt, were prepared and were ready and made their preparations to go out and fight that German fleet if they did come off the coast of British Columbia. You can imagine the unctuous air of moral indignation that would have been displayed by the hon. member for St. John if we had failed to get those submarines. No one would have been louder in his criticism upon the Government if we had neglected what I believe was our duty in that regard. I conferred with the Minister of Naval Defence. He sent a telegram to the Admiralty. The next morning we received from Sir Richard McBride this telegram:

[Sir Robert Borden.]

August 4.

After consultation with Burrell and naval officers have advanced to-night one million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to Lieut. Pilcher, senior naval officer, in command for purchase two modern submarines lying Seattle harbour and built for Chile. All arrangements complete for their arrival Esquimalt to-morrow morning unless untoward incident occurs. Congratulate Canada if this operation successful on acquisition of such useful adjunct defence of country.

R. McBride.

We were so close to the great event of which we had notice a little before nine o'clock on the evening of August 4th that it was doubtful whether or not we could get the submarines, because, as hon. gentlemen in this House may know, there is a difference between the international law with regard to the sale of a war ship and that which prevails with regard to the supply of ammunition and munitions of war generally. So we had to get those boats out of American territorial waters before the declaration of war, and owing to the promptness, activity, and patriotism of Sir Richard McBride, we succeeded in securing them as a very great aid to the defence of the Empire. In reply to Sir Richard McBride I sent the following telegram on the 5th day of August, 1914:

Sir Richard McBride,
Victoria, B.C.

Yesterday morning we communicated with Admiralty as to advisability of securing two submarines mentioned and as to feasibility of manning them as without crew they would be useless. They advised purchase provided crews could be secured. As this has been accomplished we appreciate most warmly your action, which will greatly tend to increase security on Pacific Coast, and send hearty thanks. Please advise us of their arrival.

R. L. Borden.

As far as the Government is concerned, that is the whole story with regard to these submarines. I may, however, add that Sir Richard McBride afterwards sent me a copy of the official cheque which was issued by the Finance Minister of the province of British Columbia, as a souvenir as he expressed it, of what had been done with great promptness and great vigilance by the Government of that province.

The cheque is issued to the Premier of British Columbia, who endorsed it to the order of Henry Byng Pilcher, Lieutenant R. N., and bears the endorsement of Lieutenant Pilcher.

I regret that my hon. friend from St. John should have taken the course he has. It seems most undesirable that any hon. member of this House should seek to depreciate the value of any submarines, ships of war, or war munitions of any kind that have been acquired by the people of this country for their defence. I repeat, it is a most undesirable course for my hon. friend or any other member of this House to take. I do not know what we may expect from him next. Shall we have an attack upon the guns that have been sent forward with the Canadian contingent?

Mr. PUGSLEY: The boots.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend is quite willing to make an attack upon boots. I think he will find his efforts in that regard, as in other respects, absolutely bootless.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The boot will be on the other foot, I think.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Perhaps my hon. friend changes his policy as often as he changes his boots, for this afternoon he expressed great willingness to vote $100,000,000 when two years ago he stood up in his place and resolutely fought 9 p.m. against that aid which would have been of vital importance in the present struggle.

Mr. M. CLARK: Might I ask my right hon. friend a question? I am sorry he should have made a remark like that in the course of this debate. If he is going to make that class of remark I should like to ask him to substantiate the statement he has made, that my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) ever expressed a willingness to spend $100,000,000 now on naval aid. I should like to ask another question, whether he or we wanted the Pacific defended two years ago?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: In any observations I make on these questions I shall be governed very largely by the attitude of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and I want them to understand that if there is going to be a fight and recriminations on these questions it will not be a one-sided fight. As far as the Pacific is concerned, I suppose that if the British Navy were increased by a number of useful and serviceable ships there would be a better opportunity to have the Pacific coast or any other part of His Majesty's defences adequately defended by naval force. That is what I would say in reply to my hon. friend from Red Deer. As far as the whole matter is concerned, the debate has been brought on unnecessarily and with provocation by my hon. friend the member for St. John.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The tone which he adopted in the debate from the first was one which was intended to provoke and apparently intended to induce exactly the kind of debate that has ensued. We are perfectly prepared to conduct this session on the lines laid down by my hon. friend from Red Deer the other day, but if there is going to be attack upon us from the other side of the House, we are quite ready and prepared to carry the war into the enemy's camp.

Mr. G. H. BARNARD (Victoria, B.C.): I regret that I was not in the House before 6 o'clock when the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) opened the debate upon this question. I have, however, had an opportunity of perusing the " Hansard " notes of what he said with reference to the purchase of the submarines in question. As far as I recollect he made two objections to that purchase: the first as to quality, the second as to price. I should not have intervened in this debate had it not been for the fact that I may possibly give my hon. friend some information in regard to the purchase of these boats which will not be found in the papers—possibly information that he does not want to get. Before doing so I just wish to say to him that I do not think his friends on the Pacific coast will feel grateful to him for the motion he has made to-day and his remarks in support of it. The burden of his complaint is that the submarines are no good; that they were rejected by the Chilian Government because they were obsolete; that one of them—I am speaking from my recollection of the " Hansard " notes—has been in dry dock ever since it was purchased and has been absolutely useless.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I did not say that one had been in dry dock ever since it was purchased. I said, almost ever since.

Mr. BARNARD: I accept the correction. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that in both particulars his information is absolutely wrong. From personal knowledge I know that those ships have, ever since the 4th of August, been constantly patrolling the straits of Juan de Fuca and protecting the entrance waters to Victoria and Vancouver—two cities which, I may say in passing, are, at least in my opinion, finer than any he has in his native province.

Now in regard to the quality of those ships. The hon. gentleman says they are obsolete. I want to tell my hon. friend the facts as they have been given to me. We were extremely fortunate on the Pacific coast in that we had residing amongst us a number of retired Royal Naval officers. One in particular who is to-day in command of the two submarines and of the parent ship, the Shearwater, is a lieutenant who happened to have had six years' experience in submarines on the North Sea. He had only retired from the Royal Navy twelve months ago; in fact so recent was his service in the Royal Navy that he was not even on the retired list. He was on what is called the active leave list. Directly war was impending and before it was declared, he was ordered to report to the nearest naval station which happened to be at Esquimalt. The senior naval officer in command there, Lieut. Pilcher, immediately told him that he wished him to stay for the present as he needed his services. That was before he had any knowledge that there was any possibility of obtaining the submarines at all. Lieut. Bertram Jones is the gentleman's name. When it was decided to purchase these ships Lieut. Jones went out and brought the ships in. Lieut. Jones overlooked these ships and he told me himself, personally, that they were better and more modern submarines that any he had ever served on, and he had left the Royal Navy only twelve months ago. The day before I left Victoria to come to Ottawa to attend the present session I had the pleasure of going on board the submarines. I may inform my hon. friend that neither of these submarines was in the dry dock. They were lying in Esquimalt harbour beside the parent ship. Lieut. Jones, the officer in command—and I want my hon. friend to realize that he is the man who goes out sailing these ships, who dives them and who risks his life in them—said to me when he took me over them: I want you, when you go to Ottawa, to tell the admiralty authorities at Ottawa in what fine condition these vessels are. He pointed to the torpedo tubes and said: These tubes are loaded with war heads ready to go to sea at any moment, we are prepared to do our best to account for anything that may come, and we can handle these vessels and handle them satisfactorily. That officer has not been allowed to leave these ships, or at least he had been allowed no shore leave for the past three or four weeks prior to when I left Victoria on account of some apprehension that occasion for the use of these vessels might arise.

In regard to the statement that these vessels have been placed in the dry-dock, I will venture to say without fear of contradiction, that with the exception of painting or cleaning, neither one of these vessels has been in the dry dock since they were purchased, and excepting also, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has told us, during a couple of weeks back in November or the beginning of December when information was received by the local authorities that there was the possibility of a filibustering expedition or a bomb-dropping attack of some kind. As to the efficiency, the working and quality of these ships, I say they are good and modern vessels, and vessels that will give a good account of themselves if they get the opportunity.

When these vessels came they were manned by men of the Royal Naval Volunteer Force, a force composed of citizen sailors of the town of Esquimalt and the city of Victoria, and I want to pay a well-deserved tribute to the valour and patriotism of the men who were prepared to go on board and undertake work of the most perilous kind in naval warfare—that is submarine work. They are entitled to the highest credit for the work they have done.

In regard to the facts concerning the purchase of these vessels, I know that my hon. friend from St. John is not nearly so much interested in the question of the efficiency of the ships as in the possibility of finding something wrong about the purchase. I can assure him that there was absolutely nothing that either he or anybody else could find any fault with in connection with the purchase of these vessels. On the 1st of August, which was a Saturday, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burnell) happened to be in the city of Victoria. He was in my office about eleven o'clock in the morning when I received a telephone message from Sir Richard McBride. Sir Richard McBride told me that Captain Logan, who is the agent on the whole of the Pacific coast for Lloyds underwriting agency, a very responsible citizen and a very upright man, was particularly anxious to see Mr. Burrell. Sir Richard McBride did not even say what he wanted to see him for, but he asked me if I would see that Captain Logan should get immediate access to Mr. Burrell if he came to my office. Of course I acceded to the request; Captain Logan came over, he saw Mr. Burrell and myself and he told us that there were these two submarines at Seattle that were available for purchase. Mr. Burrell and I, with Captain Logan, at once went to the naval yards at Esquimalt, where we found Lieutenant Pilcher in command. We told him about these submarines and asked him if they would be of advantage and if he thought it would be advisable to try and purchase them. He said that he thought it would. Thereupon the telegram which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has read to the House was sent. Mr. Burrell happened to be staying in my house, and next morning at half past three he and I were called to the naval yards with Captain Logan for a further conference with Lieutenant Pilcher on the question of the purchase of these submarines. It was arranged that Captain Logan should go over to Seattle that day and see what could be done. At the very first interview between Captain Logan, Mr. Burrell, myself and Mr. Pilcher, Captain Logan told us verbally that he thought the price would be about $375,000. In our presence he telephoned to Seattle, got Mr. Patterson, the man who had the control of the sale of these vessels in Seattle, and at that time Mr. Patterson told him over the telephone that the price would be $575,000 apiece or $1,150,000 for the two.

The price was stated in the presence of Mr. Burrell, Lieutenant Pilcher and myself. There was never any question as to what the price was to be; it was absolutely settled at that time. A telegram was sent to Ottawa—

Mr. PUGSLEY: When he thought the price would be about $375,000 each, did he state on what he based that?

Mr. BARNARD: Not to my recollection. That was his first statement, before we went down to see Mr. Pilcher at all. What happened was this: He rang up long distance, —and got Seattle on the telephone. He said: "Your price is $575,000?" Then I heard "What? $575,000?" And the man said "Yes."

Mr. PUGSLEY: What date was that?

Mr. BARNARD: Saturday, the first of August. On Monday Mr. Burrell had to leave for the East. Monday was the third and war was declared on the night of the fourth. Ottawa was communicated with and did not reply very promptly. The naval yard had information that war would probably be declared at any moment. The consequence was that delay was dangerous. Had, of course, Sir Richard McBride or the Dominion Government followed the policy of our friends opposite, the policy which is so enthusiastically supported by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) when he delayed for eighteen months in letting his contract after he had all his tenders—

Mr. HAZEN: Six months.

Mr. BARNARD: Well, six months, it is all the same. It was just as bad, as it turned out for my hon. friends opposite. Had they followed the policy of my hon. friends opposite, the chances are that the vessels would never have been obtained No definite reply having come on August 4, in the afternoon Sir Richard McBride said: 'I am going to take these submarines and I think Ottawa will back me up.' Accordingly he authorized the purchase and issued a provincial Government cheque. Lieutenant Jones went out; looked over the submarines; passed them; handed over the cheque and brought the submarines in. On the morning of August 5, the United States cruiser Milwaukee came out from the harbour of Bemerton into the strait of Juan de Fuca looking for these submarines with the idea of taking them back, but the cruiser was about two hours too late.

My hon. friend seems to think there is something wrong in regard to the question of price. This Mr. Patterson to whom I refer is the general manager of Moran's shipyard at Seattle. I do not know that the question of responsibility particularly interests the hon. gentleman, because, of course, when he begins to cast insinuations, the responsibility of the person against whom he casts them does not seem to worry him very much. I would like, however, to state for the benefit of other hon. members that Mr. Patterson is a responsible man, a man of high honour and standing in the city of Seattle. In the correspondence on the subject matter of this purchase, I find a letter from Sir Richard McBride in which he speaks as follows in regard to Captain Logan:

> His connection with the purchase of the submarines at Seattle is quite easily explained. Through his business relations with ship owners and builders on the coast he ascertained that there were two completed submarines in the shipyard of the Seattle Construction and Drydock Company, built for the Chilean Government but for which that Government could not pay. He reported to me and I took upon myself the responsibility of asking him to examine them to undertake the negotiations for their purchase. War was about to be declared and there was not a moment to lose and not another qualified man available. The moral effect of the quick action necessary was in itself sufficient to justify what I did. I turned over to the construction company a certified cheque of the Government for over a million dollars, confident that the federal authorities would recognize the wisdom of the transaction and reimburse the provincial treasury, which they very readily did.

If my hon. friend were to travel to either the city of Victoria or the city of Vancouver, where both Captain Logan and Sir Richard McBride are pretty well-known, and make the insinuations against them that has made in this House, he would find he would meet with more than a cold reception. For my own part, my connection with this transaction was very small; but small as it was, it has been and will be a matter of great gratification to me that I was able to be present when the transaction was entered into. When the hon. gentleman chooses to make such insinuations against Sir Richard McBride, I simply wish to hurl them back in his face and to tell him if he ever, during the whole course of his career, does such a patriotic action, he will stand a good deal higher in the estimation of the people of Canada than he does at the present time.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I suppose I ought to be very thankful to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister for letting us on this side of the House know that if we have the audacity to attack the Government, we must look out for ourselves. In other words, if we have reason to believe that some persons, not members of the Government, not members of this House, have made secret rake-offs in connection with the purchase of war vessels or of ammunition and we dare to breathe it in this House, our action will be resented by hon. gentlemen opposite. They will take it as showing that we are influenced by partisan spirit and they will endeavour to make the country believe that in some way or other we are obstructing them in doing their part in connection with this war. They will not terrify me and I do not think they will terrify any other hon. member on this side of the House. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard) have set the example of making partisan speeches. I have not done so. Has it come to this that, because Canada is engaged in war, we are not to bring to the notice of the House or of the Government any wrong-doings, as to which we have had notice, and which we believe ought to be investigated in the interest of the people of this country? If the people of Canada are prepared to spend their last dollar and to make every possible sacrifice in the interest of the Empire, we are not satisfied that there shall be any waste of public money. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries charged me with improper conduct this afternoon when I spoke of the purchase of ammunition in the United States. If the people of Canada will condemn the Government if they do not investigate any facts brought to their notice from which presumption of wrong-doing can be drawn, one hundred times stronger will be the condemnation of the people of Canada if through agents appointed by this Government—I care not whether with the knowledge of this Government or not the wrong-doing shall take place—there has been money filched from the treasury of the mother country. And Sir, would we be doing our duty, not merely as members of the Opposition but as members of this House, if we took any course but that which we are taking? I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite—I appeal to the hon. gentleman opposite who, a few days ago, at a meeting of the Horse-breeders' Association, declared that there was graft in the purchase of horses, who stated that those who purchased horses might be good at playing marbles but they were not good in the purchase of horses. The atmosphere of this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is reeking with stories of corruption by people who have been buying supplies for the Government. I can say that without making any charge or insinuation against a member of this Government or this House. We know very well that when these large expenditures are taking place it is difficult for the Government to watch every expenditure. They have to appoint agents, not only for the purchase of horses, but for the purchase of ammunition, motor-trucks, blankets, shoes and all kinds of war material, both in this country and in the United States. They cannot be supposed to watch all the purchases. And when we bring to their notice the fact that we have evidence which leads us to believe that there is this wrong-doing and ask them to take action, is it to be charged against us that we thereby are guilty of partisanship? My hon. friend (Mr. Barnard), and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the Prime Minister also, have made the charge against me that I insinuated that Sir Richard McBride had been guilty of taking the difference between $900,000, paid to the Electric Boat Company, of New Jersey, for these submarines and the $1,150,000 which the Government paid. The minister has said that the Government of British Columbia actually paid out $1,150,000. Who denied it? I did not dispute that fact. With emphasis which was great even for him, my hon. friend said that the amount of $1,150,000 was actually paid to the British Columbia Government? Who denies it? But what became of the difference between $900,000 paid to the contractors for the construction of these submarines and the $1,150,000 which was paid first by the Government of British Columbia and afterwards paid to them by the Government of Canada?

Mr. BARNARD: Did the hon. gentleman hear the Prime Minister read the cheque by which Sir Richard McBride paid over $1,150,000 direct to the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY: No, it was paid by the British Columbia Government to Captain Pilcher. It is a matter of deep regret for me to know that Captain Pilcher is out of his mind.

Mr. BARNARD: He is not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am told he is. What are the facts as to this gentleman's state of health?

Mr. HAZEN: Does the hon. gentleman say that $900,000 was paid to the company in New Jersey, and that that included all the costs, including the assembling of these vessels on the Pacific coast?

Mr. PUGSLEY: My information is that $900,000 was the entire contract.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman might state the source of his information.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It comes from a very reliable gentleman in British Columbia, let me say with all due respect to my hon. friend from Victoria, not less respectable, not less truthful, not less honourable, than my hon. friend, and that is saying a great deal, for I would believe my hon. friend as to any fact of which he has knowledge. The difficulty about what my hon. friend has said is this, that he has no expert knowledge of these submarines, but nevertheless he has given us to-night very valuable information. That information is that when the expert, Lieutenant Jones, was asked to advise with regard to these submarines, he stated that in his opinion they could be bought for $375,000 each.

Mr. BARNARD: Lieutenant Jones had absolutely nothing to do with the price and knew nothing about it. He was the man who went out and examined—

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, I beg pardon; it was Captain Logan. I thank the hon. gentleman for the correction; it would have been unpardonable if I had not got the name right. It was Captain Logan, the agent for Lloyds than whom, as my hon. friend for Victoria said, there would be no better judge in these matters—

Mr. BARNARD: I did not say that. He does not know anything about submarines; he is a mercantile marine captain.

Mr. PUGSLEY: At all events he was asked what he thought the price should be, and he gave the figure I named. As hon. gentlemen know, Seattle is not far from Victoria, and there is a daily steamer running back and forth. The people of the two cities keep close in touch with one another and their business relations are very intimate. Captain Logan, who would have information on the subject, thought these submarines could be bought for $375,000 each. The correctness of that statement is confirmed by the statement which the hon. member for Victoria has kindly furnished us this evening. Remember, this was the 3rd of August. My information is that this was not the first occasion when Mr. Patterson came to Victoria to consult Sir Richard McBride with regard to the purchase of these vessels. He came over on the 27th of July, the day after the tests were made at Seattle and the inspector of the Chilian government had stated that he would not recommend their purchase by his Government. A telephone message was sent to Seattle somewhere between the 26th of July, when the adverse report was made by the Chilian naval inspector, and the 3rd of August. Whether Mr. Patterson had it understood with anybody as to the price which he would name or not, I do not know, but certainly it is a singular fact that the price ascertained by telephone was about $400,000 greater than Captain Logan stated would be, in his judgment, a fair price for these submarines. If there was wanting any circumstance to cause the Government to investigate this matter, it is the statement of my hon. friend as to the valuation put upon the submarines by this expert, Captain Logan, who was called in for consultation with reference to the matter.

I should like to know when I made any insinuation that Sir Richard McBride had received this $250,000? I did not do so. I have great respect for the intelligence of Sir Richard McBride, and I would not for a single moment suggest that, having paid out $1,150,000 of the money of the people of British Columbia, he would be guilty of taking back this large amount of $250,000 and putting it in his own pocket or using it for an election fund. We all admit that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works knows how to run elections, but who for a single moment would suggest that the Minister of Public Works would besmirch himself with the handling of election funds? Who would imagine that Sir Richard McBride would do so? But Sir Richard McBride and this Government have their friends in British Columbia, and if any one were disposed to take advantage of it, here was a magnificent opportunity. Here were two submarines, valued by Mr. Logan at $375,000 each, the price of which according to the original contract to build was only $387,000 each. They had been rejected by the expert of the government of Chili. War was on, and public opinion in British Columbia demanded that these boats should be purchased at any price. Oh, Sir, what a temptation there was for those in the Conservative party who would like to wipe the Grits off the face of the earth, and who know so well how to use campaign funds in order to do so. What a temptation there was to take advantage of the situation. I do not, upon the information which has come to me, charge the minister with wrong-doing, nor did I do so from the beginning to the end of my address. I do not charge Sir Richard McBride with wrong-doing; I did not do so from the beginning to the end of my address.

Mr. HAZEN: Did the hon. gentleman not distinctly say that Sir Richard McBride had pulled the leg of the Minister of Naval Affairs? What other meaning can be attached to that, if the hon. gentleman is correct, than that Sir Richard McBride is party to a conspiracy to defraud the country?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am glad my hon. friend asked that question. Sir Richard was in favour of having some naval defence on the Pacific coast. He had urged that repeatedly; in that respect he has been at one with us on this side of the House. He was most anxious to secure these vessels, because of the advantage that would accrue to him in his own province if he could have two war vessels—not so good as the Rainbow, but two additional war vessels—nevertheless, upon the Pacific coast. The Government here was hesitating; apparently they had hesitated for six months. According to the statement made by the Prime Minister at the August session, he and this Government had had reason to believe that war would soon take place between Great Britain and Germany. Hon. gentlemen will remember that at the August session he said that as early as January last he began to organize the different departments so that they would be ready to take action when war broke out, yet for six whole months Sir Richard McBride was obliged to look on and see this Government apparently indifferent to naval protection upon the Pacific coast. Therefore he was most anxious that these vessels should be secured. He knew that if he wired the Prime Minister that the vessels had been rejected by the naval expert of the Chilian government, this Government would be guilty of additional delay before making the purchase. Therefore he did not convey that information and this Government was led to believe that for some reason or other the Chilian government could not pay for the vessels. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he honestly believes today that they were rejected because the Chilian government was not able to pay for them?

Mr. HAZEN: It certainly is my belief, and it is the belief of the officials of the Naval Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, my hon. friend and his department had better study the wealth and resources of Chili. It is one of the wealthiest countries upon the American continent; a country with great resources; a country with a large revenue; a country which is amply able to pay not merely for two submarines, but for twenty or for fifty if they want to do so.

I repeat that immediately after these submarines were got out of the way the Chilian government gave an order to a shipbuilding firm in the United States for the construction of two submarines of a modern, up-to-date type, which would be serviceable in case of war. Upon reflection, does my hon. friend not think that he ought to have been informed that these submarines were rejected by the Chilian government? Oh, he says, we telegraphed the British Admiralty, and, after Sir Richard McBride had committed us to this purchase by paying over the money, we got a favourable answer from the British Admiralty, who are constantly in touch with war vessels in all parts of the world, and would know about these particular vessels. Does my hon. friend think that he is acting fairly by this House when he seeks to make hon. gentlemen believe that? Would the British Government or the British Admiralty have any knowledge of the testing of these vessels at Seattle on July 26? Would they be likely to have any such knowledge? Not at all. See the position in which my hon. friend was placed by reason of the fact that the report of the expert of the Chilian government was withheld from him. He did not inform the British Government of that circumstance; he informed them—and I take it for granted that he believed it to be true—that for some reason or other the Chilian government were not able to pay for these submarines, and that here was a chance to get two splendid boats which had stood the test. Under these circumstances he asked the British Admiralty if they would recommend the purchase of the submarines.

My hon. friend says that I am very much to blame for making it known that these submarines had not stood the test required by the Chilian government. He says that my statement will give great comfort to Germans in the United States and that it will cause alarm on the Pacific coast; that cannot be so, because I merely stated what was published by a newspaper of very large circulation, printed in Seattle on July 26 last and what was telegraphed by the Associated Press all over the United States. If German-Americans are interested in the fact that these submarines failed to pass the test of the naval expert of the Chilian government, let my hon. friend not imagine for a single moment that that fact is not well known all over the United States. No words of mine in this Parliament could spread more broadly the news of that inspection which took place, as I said, at Seattle on the 26th of July. But if there were anything at all to be said about the subject of my bringing the matter before the House it would rather seem that if this statement is incorrect, if this test did not take place, if the naval representatives of the Chilian government did not reject these submarines, then let the truth be known and it will reassure the people of British Columbia, and let me say to my hon. friend that it is due to himself and due to this House that we should make inquiry of his friends in British Columbia as to whether this test did take place on the 26th of July and whether Captain Plaza, Chairman of the Naval Commission of the Chilian government, had reported recommending that they be not taken over as not being up to the specifications. Further than that it is due to my hon. friend that he should have himself put right because he assured His Royal Highness that it was for financial reasons apparently that the Chilian government did not take these submarines, and he withheld from the British Admiralty the fact that these submarines had been rejected by the naval experts of the Chilian government as early as the 26th of July. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries states that this money was paid to Captain Pilcher. True, it was, but he paid it over to Mr. Patterson, who on the 27th of July had the interview with Sir Richard McBride in Victoria and Mr. Patterson, my information is, as is well known in Victoria, divided the cheque and gave two, one for $900,000 for the amount of the contract price, and I have no knowledge of what he did with the other $250,000.

Mr. HAZEN: The contract price did not include the sending out and the assembling on the Pacific coast, did it?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Yes, according to my information that was all to be done by the Electric Company, the Seattle

Construction and Dry Dock Company assembling for the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey. It may be that this $250,000 was properly expended. I am only stating the facts. But the remarkable thing about it, from the standpoint of my hon. friend, is that he thinks the statement of facts which I have made and which has not been controverted necessarily leads to an inference of suspicion against certain gentlemen in British Columbia. I cannot help that; I have simply stated the facts, and it is because my hon. friend and my hon. friend from Victoria feel that these facts lead any sensible and reasonable man, accustomed to weighing evidence and drawing inferences to believe that there has been something wrong, that both of these gentlemen have become so angry and have rushed to the defence of Sir Richard McBride as if I had made a violent attack on him as being a boodler and one unworthy of the confidence of his province, when I did nothing of the kind.

My hon. friend says that one of the submarines in being taken over to Victoria unfortunately struck the bottom. It is very curious that I have a statement made by a gentleman, an expert submarine operator, who states that this is not the first time she struck the bottom. You know one of the essential things for a successful submarine is that when she is scaled for sinking to a level of thirty feet she must not go down to sixty feet. They sometimes do. Possibly that is why they were rejected by the naval experts of the Chilian government. This expert submarine operator says:

> That the main trouble connected with the submarines was due to the fact that no definite plan was put through to formulate a system regulating the resistance brought about by the submergence of the vessel. At one time the Chilean crew were scared nearly to death when the mark for sinking was set at thirty feet and the boat sank sixty feet or more. On another occasion, due to lack of standard, the submarine came up under a big raft of logs, breaking the raft and causing considerable trouble, the periscope being damaged.

And the same gentleman puts the value of these submarines at $250,000 each, $100,000 less than Captain Logan's estimate.

Mr. HAZEN: Who is the gentleman?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. John Martinson.

Mr. HAZEN: Where does he live?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Out on the Pacific.

Mr. HAZEN: What place?

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Mr. PUGSLEY: I presume at Victoria.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there no date on the letter?

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is in a statement which I have from him. When the papers come down, if the Government see fit to have it investigated, I have no doubt that Mr. Martinson can be brought here to give his expert knowledge before the committee.

Then there is a marine engineer who states that the engines in the two boats are all right and that the whole trouble is with the hull which being overweighted detracts from the buoyancy of the ship. He says:

> The only way we could overcome this was by having about one-half the specified amount of liquid in the tanks; then the ship behaved very well but of course was not up to the specifications.

With regard to the question of the purchase of the submarines, I am not condemning that at all, I am in favour of submarines for the Canadian Government; what I say is that we ought not to pay too high a price, we ought not to pay for a second-class submarine, one which is not of modern construction and thoroughly up to date, the same high price which first-class submarines can be obtained for; and we do know that first-class modern submarines can be obtained for about $550,000, which would be less than the amount paid for these. Neither should extravagant commissions be paid.

Now, with regard to the submarines being in the dry dock. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with that ingenuity for which he is remarkable, states that the only time they were in the dry-dock was when the people out in Victoria became afraid of bombs being dropped on them and, instead of leaving them out in the ocean they were brought in and put in the dry-dock; and in order to thoroughly guard them against the dropping of bombs, lights were lighted all around them.

Mr. HAZEN: It is hardly worth while to correct the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I wonder very much that these gentlemen who advise the Minister of Marine do not go over to London and advise Premier Asquith with regard to proper protection of the city of London at night from bombs, that instead of keeping it in darkness he should light a circle of lamps around the city—and the better the lights the greater the safety. That would be a sure preventive against the dropping of bombs.

Mr. HAZEN: Did the hon. gentleman suppose that the bombs would be dropped from Zeppelins?

Mr. PUGSLEY: How would they be dropped?

Mr. HAZEN: They would be dropped by persons who were there, like the German who went down to the bridge at Vanceboro the other day for the purpose of wrecking it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would think that a very imaginary fear. This is what I want my hon. friend to find out if he will, and he ought to have some report on the subject. My information is that one of these submarines was for a considerable time in dry dock. I do not say she is now. I have no doubt that my hon. friend's statement as to a telegram received yesterday is absolutely correct. But this boat was put in dry dock, not because she struck the bottom, but to make some change in the machinery; and the whole of one side of the ship was stripped for that purpose. That is the information I have, whether it be true or not.

Just a word as to my right hon. friend's regret that I should have brought this matter up. I must take the responsibility for that as a member of this House. If my hon. friend has made it clear to the people of this country that the purchase of these submarines was absolutely above suspicion, that they were first-class submarines, that only a reasonable and fair price was paid for them, that everybody concerned acted honestly, that there were no commissions,—all the better for my hon. friend, all the better for the Government, all the better for the people of this country. But I submit with every confidence, that a strong prima facie case has been made out.

Let me repeat very briefly the salient facts of the case. They are, first, that these vessels were built for the Chilian government under a contract price which I am informed, and which as a member of this House I state that I have from reliable authority, was originally $375,000 each; that Captain Plaza, the Chairman of the Naval Commission appointed by the Chilian government, was watching these vessels from day to day and from week to week; that when they were completed a test was made, as it was proper that it should be made; that he found they were not up to specifications and rejected them, and so reported to his Government; that then the Electric Boat Company of New Jersey had the boats on their hands and no customer for them; that the day after this test was made, the 27th of July, Mr. Patterson started for Victoria, thinking he would have a customer in Sir Richard McBride. He sees Sir Richard McBride, and on the 3rd day of August, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barnard) is present with the Minister of Agriculture, and this expert, Captain Logan, is called in. He states that in his judgment the price will be about $375,000 each.

Mr. BARNARD: I have already told the hon. gentleman that he is in error when he describes Captain Logan as an expert.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Well, then, Captain Logan was called in. Why was he called in if he could not add to the knowledge—

Mr. BARNARD: He was not called in. It was his initiative, the whole thing.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Well, then, Captain Logan was there. He is one of the agents, possibly one of the middlemen who were arranging for the sale of these boats. He goes to the house of my hon. friend the member for Victoria—

Mr. BARNARD: The hon. gentleman should confine himself to the facts. Captain Logan has never been in my house.

Mr. PUGSLEY—Captain Logan goes to the office of my hon. friend.

Mr. BARNARD: I can appreciate the desire of my hon. friend to make a good case in his summing up, but he should confine himself to the facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I recognize that it is a matter of vital importance, whether it was at the office or the home of my hon. friend that Captain Logan appeared. Well, then, Captain Logan goes to the office of my hon. friend.

10 p.m. Mr. BARNARD: Wrong again; it was at the Department of Labour.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I cheerfully accept correction. At all events these are the facts. On the 3rd of August Patterson, after having seen Sir Richard McBride, goes back to Seattle and these gentlemen meet together. The gentlemen whom my hon. friend names are included among them. Captain Logan is asked his opinion of the price.

Mr. BARNARD: He was not asked the price. He volunteered his opinion.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Well, then, he volunteered his opinion. I cannot express sufficiently to my hon. friend the gratitude which I feel for the way in which he is assisting me. This gentleman expressed his view as to the price of these submarines; he said they should be bought for $375,000 each. Then they telephoned to Mr. Patterson who had previously seen Sir Richard McBride, and the price is fixed at $1,150,000, so my hon. friend says, and that amount is paid. And I state to this House that my information is that that amount of $1,150,000 was divided into two cheques. One cheque for $900,000 was paid to the contractors, but what became of the other $250,000 cheque I do not presume to say. These are the facts. Draw from them, if you like, the inference that there has been some wrong-doing. Get angry over it if you like. But in the interests of our country, in the interest of the people who pay this money and who cannot afford at any time, and more particularly in these times of stress, to pay out one dollar more than what a submarine or a gun or a round of ammunition is worth, I ask that this matter be looked into, and when the time comes that a proper and thorough investigation take place.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT.

Report of the Department of Customs for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Hon. J. D. Reid.

QUEBEC FISHING LICENSES.

On the motion of Sir ROBERT BORDEN for the adjournment of the House:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL: Mr. Speaker, will you allow me, on this motion, to ask a question of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) of some urgency to my constituency? I intended doing so yesterday, but the sudden adjournment of the House prevented me. It is regarding the issuing of licenses for salmon fishing in the tidal waters of Quebec. There is some doubt existing as to whether these licenses are to be issued by the provincial Government or by the Ottawa Government. Notices have appeared in the Canada Gazette and in the Quebec Gazette and I have received a number of letters on the point. I would ask the minister if he would kindly tell us how the matter stands.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): My hon. friend, with the courtesy which always distinguishes him, intimated to me yesterday that he would ask this question, and I had prepared a little statement so that the facts might be absolutely accurate. In 1898, in a reference known as the Fisheries Reference, to the Privy Council, a decision was given to the effect that whatever property interests in the fisheries were held by the different provinces prior to Confederation remained vested in them subsequent to it, but that the exclusive power to legislate or make regulations govering the conduct of the fisheries is vested in the Federal Government. As soon as that decision was given, or immediately afterwards, all the provinces that are sea-washed and have fisheries claimed the fisheries, not only in the tidal as well as the non-tidal portions of all the rivers, but in the bays and in the three-mile limit as well. The officers of the department in Ottawa, however, contended that, while there was no question about the non-tidal fisheries being owned by the provinces, in tidal waters, no matter where situated, there is a public right of fishery controllable only by the Federal Government and Parliament.

At the time it was hoped that the outstanding question of jurisdiction in tidal waters could be settled amicably, and all the provinces affected, except Quebec, agreed that pending a settlement of such question the Federal Government should continue to administer the fisheries in tidal waters as theretofore. It was finally arranged with Quebec that, pending such settlement, the jurisdiction of the fisheries on the south side of the river and gulf of St. Lawrence, and on the north side west of Point des Monts, would be handed over to the province, while the Federal Government would continue to administer the fisheries east of Point des Monts.

The negotiations with the provinces took much longer than was anticipated, and in 1908 British Columbia decided to act on the assumption that it possessed the property interests in the fisheries in tidal waters, and consequently started to require licenses from fishermen before they would be allowed to operate therein.

There were negotiations and finally a reference of certain questions to the court was agreed to with British Columbia, and these questions were so framed as to decide the matter in all the other sea-washed provinces. While the reference was with British Columbia, the other interested provinces, including Quebec, became intervenants. The Supreme Court upheld the contention of the Federal Government on every point and on appeal to the Privy Council the decision of the Supreme Court was fully sustained.

The decision of the Privy Council, in brief, is that there is in tidal waters, no matter where situated, a public right of fishery which is controllable only by the Federal Government.

Following this decision, the Department of the Naval Service took steps to assert the rights which they believed the Dominion possessed in so far as the control of fisheries in tidal waters was concerned and in consequence of this judgment of the Supreme Court and Privy Council the province of Quebec was requested to hand over to the Federal Government the administration of the tidal fisheries which had been handed over to it following the 1898 decision and pending a settlement of the question of right. Quebec declined to do so on the ground that as the reference was with British Columbia alone the judgment did not apply to that province, that Magna Charta does not apply in Quebec, and that there is no public right of fishery in the waters of Quebec. There was a good deal of correspondence between the department and the government at Quebec and it was pointed out in reply that while the issue was confined to British Columbia the Privy Council laid down certain principles of public law which apply to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Quebec equally as well as to British Columbia. During the course of the correspondence it was intimated in a letter written by the deputy minister to either the Deputy Minister or the Minister of Mines and Colonization in Quebec that if the province desired to enter into negotiations on the question we would be prepared to do so as we were acting under what we believed to be our absolute right under the law and we were willing to concede to Quebec the credit of doing the same thing. As the question must clearly be settled some way or other, we were willing to have a case stated and a further reference made to the courts so that there might be no further question about the matter and that the question should be settled as it must be settled one way or the other. We said that we were prepared to discuss the matter, but as there was no suggestion of favourable consideration of this course, the Federal Government decided that the only course open to it was to carry out the law as laid down by the Privy Council. Consequently, the department issued a notice stating that during the next fishing season licenses would be granted by the Federal Government to those who were fishing in tidal waters and intimated that any one fishing without such a license would be prosecuted and prevented from doing so. The Government of Quebec has issued a similar notice to the effect, I understand, that any one fishing in these waters must first obtain a license from the Province of Quebec. Our department, acting on what we believe to be the decision of the Privy Council—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In the 1898 or the subsequent case?

Mr. HAZEN: The British Columbia case—acting on what we believe to be the decision of the Privy Council, which decision is applicable quite as much to Quebec as to British Columbia, and having also the strong opinion of the Department of Justice to the effect that it is the proper position to take, felt that it was our duty to assert the rights of the Dominion in these tidal waters. I feel, however, that the matter is one in which the province of Quebec honestly maintains the position that it upholds at the present time and that the question will therefore have to be settled in the courts. If there is no agreement in the meantime, next year somebody will be fishing without a license from the Dominion Government, our officers will probably arrest him and have him fined and no doubt an appeal will go to the courts, or it may be taken up in another way through action by the Province of Quebec. It is not desirable that this matter should be left in a state of doubt and uncertainty and it is desirable that a stated case should be placed before the Privy Council as soon as possible. I am pleased to say that since this correspondence took place, within the last day or two, there has been some communication on the subject between the Attorney General of Quebec and the Department of Justice in Ottawa, and there is every reason for thinking that a conference will be held in a short time at which the matter will be discussed between the two Governments and some course taken which is reasonable and proper under the circumstances.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

Friday, February 12, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 31, respecting The British Columbia Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Taylor.

Bill No. 32, to incorporate The Brulé Grand Prairie and Peace River Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 33, to confirm certain agreements made between The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, The Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway Company and The Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Blain.

Bill No. 34, respecting The Manitoba and North Western Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Cash.

Bill No. 35, respecting The Niagara-Welland Power Company.—Mr. Blain.

Bill No. 36, to incorporate Northern Pacific and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Taylor.

Bill No. 37, respecting Pacific, Peace River and Athabasca Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 38, respecting The Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. Taylor.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. GEORGE H. BRADBURY (Selkirk) moved the second reading of Bill No. 2 respecting the pollution of Navigable Waters. He said: This Bill is very similar to the one which I have had before the House during the last two sessions. We have taken a great deal of expert evidence, and the consensus of opinion of the experts of Canada is that a Bill of this kind is necessary to protect the streams and rivers of this country from pollution. That the House may understand thoroughly what I am asking for, I ask leave to read the Bill, which is a short one:

An Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. No person shall put or cause or permit to be put, or to flow or to be carried, any sewage, offal or refuse or other matter that is poisonous, noxious, decomposing, or any injurious refuse or waste, into any navigable water or into any other water that flows into any navigable water unless such matter is disposed of or treated in accordance with regulations made under the authority of this Act.

2. Every municipal corporation convicted of an offence against this Act shall, upon summary conviction, be liable to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars and an additional sum of fifty dollars for each day during which the offence continues.

3. Every corporation, other than a municipal corporation, convicted of an offence against this Act shall, upon summary conviction, be liable to a fine of not less than two hundred dollars and an additional sum of twenty dollars for each day during which the offence continues.

4. Every person, other than a corporation, who is convicted of an offence against this Act shall, upon summary conviction, be liable to a fine of not less than fifty dollars and an additional sum of ten dollars for each day during which the offence continues, or to imprisonment not exceeding two months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

5. The Governor in Council shall have power to exempt any water or waters from the operation of this Act for such length of time as may be prescribed, and may from time to time extend, withdraw, or vary such exemption.

6. The Governor in Council may make such regulations and appoint such officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act. All regulations and orders made under this Act shall be published in the Canada Gazette.

One of the great objections urged against this Bill by different interests and by some of the lower province members in this House last year was that the legislation would work a hardship by its control of sewage placed in tidal waters. They contended that there was no necessity of interfering with cities along the sea-coast. For the purpose of expediting the Bill and of trying to make some headway with it, I have changed the wording of the fifth clause in such a way as to give the Government absolute control of the matter, power being given to it to exempt any waters or water from the operation of the Act and to extend such exemptions or withdrawal from time to time.

During the time this Bill was before the committee we took a great deal of evidence and examined, I think, every expert in Canada. During the first session of 1913 we examined Mr. James White of the Commission of Conservation and Dr. Hodgetts. Both these gentlemen, whose evidence was very full and complete, took the position that legislation of this kind is absolutely necessary if we are to prevent our rivers and lakes from being polluted as they have been during the last fifty years. We examined also Mr. Joseph Race, F.I.C., municipal bacteriologist of the city of Ottawa; Dr. W. T. Connel, Professor of Bacteriology and Hygiene at Queen's University, Kingston; Mr. R. S. Lea and Mr. John Kennedy, civil engineers, both of the city of Montreal; Professor C. H. McLeod, Vice-Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science in McGill University; Dr. Bryce, Medical Inspector of the Immigration Branch, Department of the Interior. These gentlemen were examined at some length, and were all agreed as to the necessity of legislation of this kind.

Although this Bill was very thoroughly discussed on a former occasion, I think it is due the House that I should refer for a few moments to some of the findings of the committee appointed to look into that matter. To that end I wish to read some of the evidence given by Mr. White of the Conservation Commission. The following is part of Mr. White's evidence:

Q. Have you any data or information as to how wide an expanse of water would be necessary to prevent pollution on this side, or can you rely at all upon the distance?—A. The Great Lakes undoubtedly act as great sedimentation basins. The public health authorities of Ontario have gone half way across Lake Ontario from Toronto collecting samples of water all the way. They found bacteria right out to the middle of the lake. Of course, we can concede that the chances of the sewage of a city like Rochester infecting the supply of a town like Port Hope or Cobourg are somewhat remote; but you cannot say that it will not. The most important point of all is that the population on the shores of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence is increasing, and, as the population increases, the danger of infection also increases.

Q. What is the distance between Rochester and Cobourg?—A. The distance across the lake is approximately 40 miles, I should say.

Q. Is that sufficient to purify the water?—A. We have traced the pollution half way across the lake. Of course we assume that the pollution they get in the middle of the lake is Toronto's pollution, because, of course, Toronto is the largest city on the shores of Lake Ontario, and the pollution was found practically opposite that city. They were trying to discover whether by extending their intake pipe out a reasonable distance they would get beyond the polluted area; and they came to the conclusion that they could not.

Q. Is the water from the Great Lakes used for domestic purposes by the city? A. Yes, that is what the city of Toronto depends upon. They have installed a very large filtration plant, but other cities along the lakes are using the unfiltered water.

Mr. Joseph Race of the city of Ottawa was also examined. He gave the following evidence:

The effects of the pollution of navigable waters have chiefly been reflected in the abnormal death rates from enteric diseases, and it is these rates that have attracted public attention to this serious problem. At the outset it should be remembered that it is the use of such water for drinking purposes without purification that is the cause of so many deaths, and that the sewage problem has become acute on account of the failure of communities to realize their responsibilities in that direction.

We come now to the other aspect of this problem. If the sewage pollution of navigable waters is allowed to continue and the population continues to increase, a stage must ultimately be reached when they become impossible as a source of domestic water supply.

Q. What is your opinion regarding the whole question of the prevention of the pollution of streams?—A. I think that all sewage pollution and trade wastes ought to be prevented from running into the rivers unless thoroughly purified.

Q. Do you agree with other scientists that typhoid is a water borne disease almost entirely?—A. Not almost entirely, but a large proportion of it is.

Q. You believe that it is a disease that is preventable?—A. Yes, certainly.

Q. What percestage is preventable by legislation?—A. I should say at least 75 per cent.

Q. Then according to your statement your opinion is that if we had proper sewage protection in the city of Ottawa we would have had at least 75 per cent fewer typhoid cases and deaths during these epidemics?—A. Undoubtedly.

The evidence of Mr. Race is, I think, particularly important, inasmuch as he gives it as his opinion—and this opinion is corroborated by the opinions of a great many other scientists—that typhoid fever is largely preventable, and that it is a water-borne disease.

When we think of the awful ravages that typhoid fever has caused throughout Canada, we must realize the importance of passing some legislation that will protect our great fresh-water supplies in this country. Dr. W. T. Connel, one of the scientists connected with Queen's University, Kingston, was the next witness examined by the committee, and in connection with the pollution at Kingston he gave the following evidence:

Q. If there were typhoid fever at Kingston, would that not increase the danger of infection at the towns below?—A. I think that we can say that either typhoid fever cases or typhoid carriers are constantly present in every town and city, hence that a certain number of typhoid bacilli are being daily discharged with untreated sewage into the rivers and lakes by practically every town and city in this country.

Q. If there were anything of an epidemic, of course that danger would be increased?—A. Provided the excreta were not disinfected, as they are supposed to be by law.

Q. Speaking generally would there be any suggestion you could make which would be applicable?—A. Every city should treat its own sewage in such a manner as to render it harmless to any other cities or towns which may take their supply from below.

Q. And harmless to itself also?—A. Of course, to itself, the selfish reason would apply first. As I have said, I think our own experience has been that the danger is very largely to one's own town first, and secondly to those below, and so for purely selfish reasons we should treat our sewage and thus not injure ourselves, and secondly, not to injure others.

There is a great deal more evidence which I need not inflict upon the House, but I may say that at one of the sittings of this Committee it was suggested owing to the great importance of this question and the fact that it had been widely discussed all over the Dominion, that a conference should be called of representatives of all the provinces to meet in Ottawa to discuss the question, and I received instruction from the committe to request the Government to invite such a conference. The conference was convened in the Tower room here on October 3, 1913, by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Among those present were the Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries; Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture; myself, as Chairman of the House of Commons Committee on the subject; Mr. Warnock, M.P., and Mr. Baker, M.P. The province of Manitoba was represented by Hon. Mr. Howden, the Attorney General of the province; Prince Edward Island by Hon. Mr. Matheson, Premier of Prince Edward Island; British Columbia by Hon. William R. Ross, Minister of Lands; the province of Quebec by Dr. E. P. Lachapelle, president of the Provincial Board of Health; Mr. R. S. Lea, member of the Provincial Board of Health; and Dr. E. Elzear Pelletier, secretary of the Provincial Board of Health. The province of Saskatchewan was represented by Mr. P. Aird Murray, C.E., and Dr. Maurice M. Seymour, Commissioner of Public Health for the province of Saskatchewan; New Brunswick by Hon. Mr. Flemming, Premier of New Brunswick; the International Joint Commission by Mr. C. A. Magrath and Mr. H. A. Powell, K.C.; the Conservation Commission by James White, Secretary and deputy minister and Dr. C. A. Hodgetts.

The subject was thoroughly discussed at the conference, and the consensus of opinion was that some federal legislation should be passed to control the disposal of the sewage of the Dominion of Canada. Mr. White in his evidence made this statement:

I have all that information and I could have it here at a later date. I would like to say that the Conservation Commission is entirely in accord with Mr. Bradbury in his effort to prevent the pollution of streams.

[Mr. Bradbury.]

That is apparently the opinion of all who are interested in this great question.

I do not wish to take up too much time of the House, but I should just like to say a word as to the death rate from typhoid fever in this country. When one remembers the great bodies of water we have in Canada, our great lakes and our great rivers, and then compares our condition with European countries, with their densely populated districts, and discovers that the death rate from typhoid is much higher in Canada than in those European countries, the condition is alarming and one that ought to command and demand the attention of this Parliament. According to a table submitted to the committee by Dr. Hodgetts the death rate from typhoid fever in Scotland was 6·2 per 1,000 population; in Germany 7·6; England and Wales 11·2; Belgium 16·8; Austria 19·9; Hungary 28·3; Italy 35·2; Canada 35·5; and the United States 46. These figures indicate the awful condition that prevails in Canada at the present time. It is positively alarming when we think of such great rivers as the one that flows by the base of this building. The Ottawa river is in an awful condition and has been so for many years. The condition of the Ottawa river ought to appeal to every man in this House; and it is but one of many of such rivers in Canada. In this city we have a great population of nearly 100,000, who are taxed for water, and the city of Ottawa supplies them with water that is utterly unfit for domestic purposes. It is unfit to drink, either for man or beast. It has been condemned, not only by the medical profession, but by the veterinary surgeons, who claim that the water of Ottawa is not fit for a horse or even a dog to drink. There have been a number of serious cases among the horses and dogs of this city on account of the dope that has been put in the water. Some scientists would have it that hypochloride is harmless, that it does not cause any serious trouble when put into water. But the medical profession of Ottawa will tell you that the continual doping of the Ottawa water supply has caused a great deal of sickness in the city, apart altogether from typhoid fever. No one doubts that hypochloride prevents typhoid epidemics for it kills the baccili; but while it kills the baccili, it ruins the constitutions of the people who drink the doped water. The consequence is that the people of this city are forced to pay a high water rate, and an additional charge to get pure water. People all over the city are glad to go long distances to get pure water, just as they did five and thirty years ago before we had a water system. All this could have been prevented if Parliament had taken action years ago, as it should have done.

In view of the conditions that prevail I hope the House will not hesitate to adopt the Bill before it.

I trust that the Government will not feel inclined to send this Bill to a committee again. It has been in committee for two years. We have obtained all the information that can be obtained on it. The Bill is framed in such a manner as to leave it entirely in the hands of the Government to determine when it shall be called into operation; that is the Government can withdraw any of the waters from its operation whenever it sees fit. It empowers the Government to make regulations under which the Bill will be enforced so that the enforcement of the legislation will rest entirely in the hands of the Government. The point that it is an interprovincial question has been raised, but I do not think it is a serious difficulty in the way of the adoption of this proposed legislation. I am not a lawyer but I have discussed the question with able lawyers and I have been assured that there is no reason why the federal power should not pass legislation that would control the disposal of sewage throughout this Dominion. There is no question to my mind that the federal Government have absolute control of navigable streams. That question was settled by the case we had up here some years ago, when the millmen undertook to deposit their sawdust and slabs in the Ottawa river. It was demonstrated then that the Government could control our navigable waters and prevent the millmen from polluting these waters in any way. The same thing prevailed in connection with our fisheries. We can prevent the millmen or anybody from polluting lakes by depositing sawdust or any material that would militate against the fisheries. I claim that we can enact legislation in this House to control not only navigable waters but every stream that runs into a navigable water and say whether sewage may or may not be deposited in the streams. The Bill has been discussed from every standpoint by the best informed men in Canada. There has been no source of information left uncanvassed by the committee. Every man in Canada that the committee thought could throw any light upon this important question was summoned to attend that committee and to give his evidence and the summing up of the evidence —and we have two volumes of it—proves beyond a doubt that some legislation ought to be enacted by the federal authorities.

I noticed a few days ago that the International Waterways Commission, which has been doing some splendid work, has at last induced the nation to the south of us to join with that commission to prevent the pollution of the great rivers running between these two countries. This will also apply to the lakes. This is a move in the right direction. When this Bill was first introduced one objection raised against it was that it would be perfectly useless for this House to take any action until we could induce the American people to take similar action. I did not agree with that contention. My position was that this condition that prevailed in Canada demanded redress, it was the duty of Canada first to take care of the situation in this country; in other words, to clean up the condition which existed in our country and then we could reasonably appeal to the nation to the south of us to join with us and do its share. But the International Commission, has, I see, accomplished a good work in securing the consent of the United States Government to join with Canada in preventing the pollution of the St. Lawrence and, I presume, the great lakes contiguous to their own country. In view of this fact I submit the time has come for this House to act and I venture to say that the Bill, while not perfect by any means, will be a step in the right direction and it can be amended if necessary from year to year. Therefore, I beg to move the second reading of Bill No. 5 entitled an Act respecting the Pollution of Navigable Waters.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), who has introduced this Bill, and who, during the past two years, has introduced Bills very similar in character, has suggested that the matter should now be dealt with by the House. In the session of 1913 a Bill of this character was introduced which was referred to a committee of the House and a similar course was taken in the session of 1914. The committee, as pointed out by my hon. friend, met on a good many occasions and gave a great deal of consideration to the matter. They heard the opinions and the evidence of members of the Conservation Commission who had made a special study in regard to this question, and of sanitary experts, bacteriologists and other men of scientific training who had made scientific researches regarding it. They also, in the summer of 1913, had a conference with representatives of the different provincial authorities, and the health authorities of the different provinces, and they gave a great deal of thought and consideration to the matter. At the last session of the House they made a report to Parliament which report is found in the Votes and Proceedings of the 11th of June, and in which they made the statement that it was evident that sufficient time was not available to the committee for the completion of the task which had been committed to them, and therefore they reported back without amendment the Bills to the House. They took this course because there had been certain practical objections raised to the Bills which they thought required serious consideration and further because they believed that it was well to ascertain, if they could do so, what action the International Joint Commission proposed to take in regard to the pollution of boundary waters. There is no doubt at all, I think, that this Parliament has the right to pass legislation preventing the pollution of waters that constitute the boundary line between Canada and the United States. But that was not the difficulty which they had to face. What the committee felt was that if Canada should pass legislation to prevent raw sewage from Canadian cities and towns being placed in the waters of boundary rivers, such as the St. Lawrence and the St. John, very little good would be accomplished thereby unless the United States passed similar legislation preventing sewage from the Republic going into these boundary waters, thus preventing the pollution not only of their own waters but of the waters that were on the Canadian side of the boundary as well.

As pointed out by the hon. member for Selkirk, the International Joint Commission representing the United States and Canada, regarding the pollution of boundary waters, have made an investigation of that subject. I hold in my hand the progress report which they have made thereon. Since then they have devoted a good deal of research and study to the question, and they considered it, I believe, at a meeting which was held by the members of the Joint Commission in the city of Toronto a week or ten days ago. I am told they have practically come to a conclusion as to the recommendation they will make. While legislation in this direction should not be too long delayed, I think we should know before proceeding, the findings of the International Joint Commission, which I am led to believe will be of a very drastic character, in order that we may not pass any legislation that will conflict with or be inconsistent with the conclusions arrived at by that commission which represents the Governments of both countries.

While the Committee of this House was unanimous in favour of legislation to prevent the pollution of navigable streams, yet it was felt that to pass a sweeping law saying that no sewage should be put into any river or stream in Canada would work hardship in many cases. In the past, cities, towns, and villages, with full authority of law, have established sewage systems depositing their sewage in these streams, and were they to be at once ordered to cease this practice it would entail great financial responsibilities upon them. I am told that the city of Montreal alone would be put to an expenditure of seven or eight million dollars to change its sewage system, and of course the city of Toronto and other cities and towns would have to bear proportionately large expense.

My hon. friend has introduced quite an important provision in this Bill which was not to be found in his Bill of last year, a provision giving the Governor in Council power to exempt any water or waters from the operation of this Act, for such length of time as may be prescribed, and may from time to time extend, withdraw, or vary such exemption. That places very wide powers as to the administration of the Act in the Governor in Council, and practically makes them the judges as to the waters in which sewage can be put, and as to what time may reasonably elapse before cities, towns and villages shall be compelled to introduce some system of purification of sewage approved of by sanitary engineers. This makes a very considerable change in the Bill, as compared with that which was introduced by my hon. friend last year.

I believe this measure to be in the public interest, and that the public desire legislation which will prevent the rivers and streams from being polluted. Yet, in view of this change, and as the committee which dealt with the measure last year reported that they had not time to complete their findings, it occurs to me that the Bill should go back to the same committee. With the information which that committee has already obtained, with knowledge of the change made in the Bill, and with the information they would have as to the action of the International Joint Commission, I think the committee should, at an early date this session, report the Bill back to the House with their recommendations. I would suggest to my hon. friend, who has shown so much zeal in promoting this Bill before the House, that he should consider this suggestion. I think the Bill may properly be read a second time now, and in the meantime I will consult with my hon. friend as to the propriety of referring the Bill back to the same committee, with the understanding that the recommendation and report of the committee shall be made, so that the House can possibly deal with the Bill at the present session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The suggestion of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine (Mr. Hazen) cannot be received with very much favour by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury). That hon. gentleman has shown much zeal in promoting this legislation, which, in my humble judgment, is very much needed. I am sorry he has not received from his friends that encouragement which I think is due to the laudable object he has in view. I would have been disposed to support the contention of my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) that the Bill should be disposed of in the House and not referred to the committee, were it not that it is so framed as to present some objections. I am highly in favour of such legislation as this, which I believe to be most important, and which I think should have been placed on the statute books of this country before now.

My hon. friend in his Bill makes it a criminal offence to put refuse of any kind into any of the waters of Canada, and he gives the Government power to restrict the operations of the Bill in certain areas. As the Bill is now framed, a man in any remote district in the country, where there is no population or a very sparse population, could not erect a small sawmill on a stream and put the refuse into that stream. That cannot be the aim of my hon. friend. He is anxious that his Bill should apply to certain densely-peopled areas, such as the city of Ottawa, the city of Toronto, and others cities, towns and villages. Thus, while my hon. friend is anxious to apply this legislation to a city such as Ottawa, he at the same time would subject to penalty any person who puts refuse in waters where no ill effect could possibly arise from that act. The drastic provisions of this Bill would apply to new and remote parts of the country where there could be no possible danger to the public health from putting refuse in the water, whereas in my opinion, they should apply only to the large centres of population where the evils which my hon. friend wishes to prevent are prevalent. Were I a member of the committee I would move to amend the Bill so that the Governor in Council would have the power to proclaim the area to which the provisions of this Bill would apply and to exempt all the rest of the country. I am of the opinion that that would be a more workable provision than the one now contained in the Bill.

I cannot see any force in the objection raised by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that we should not proceed with this measure until we get the report of the International Commission. If we had this legislation on this side of the line, it would assist the American Commission in obtaining similar legislation on the other side. It is very important that we should have joint legislation in this matter, but I would not be deterred from going on with the Bill by the objection that we should wait for the report of the International Commission.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY: As one of the members of the committee which, during the last two sessions, considered the Bills to which my hon. friend the member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) has referred, I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. Before doing so, let me say to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the objection which he voiced from the point of view of certain cities, some of which he enumerated, was, I think, speaking from memory, met by the other Bill which has been referred to as having been before the committee, namely, the Bill introduced by Senator Belcourt in another chamber. Therefore I would like to ask my hon. friend from Selkirk whether the Bill he has now introduced combines the features of his former Bill with those of the Bill introduced by Senator Belcourt.

Mr. BRADBURY: There is no change in the Bill now before the House from the Bill which I introduced last year, except the last clause, which gives the Government power to exempt certain waters.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM: When these matters come closely home to us, perhaps we take a deeper interest in them than we do when we are discussing them generally. This question of disease originating from our water supply is perhaps as important a one as can be discussed by hon. members, and one in which all are interested; if not just now, they do not know when they will be. Possibly when in Ottawa they are all interested. The difficulty which confronts a good many towns on the banks of the St. Lawrence and towns on other rivers is that they have expended a lot of money in sewage plants and systems and sewage goes into the streams. Every town above on the same stream has done the same thing, so that some of these towns are liable not only to the troubles arising from their own sewage system, but to others originating from sewage systems farther up the stream.

Hon. J. D. REID: On the American side also.

Mr. GRAHAM: On both sides. In the town of Brockville at present there are more than one hundred cases of typhoid due simply to the water of the St. Lawrence. We have considered that water the purest in the world and have used it very freely.

4 p.m.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: At times.

Mr. GRAHAM: How long are we to wait for this matter to be remedied? While we are waiting people are dying of disease. At the present time examination is being made of the intake pipe of the town of Brockville, in which it is contended there is a break. The Board of Health tells us to adopt a filtration plant. Another expert says: No, you must treat the sewage as it goes into the river. We proceed to do one or both of these things under the Provincial Health Act, and a little later on we shall have a Dominion Act under which to take action. It is time that this House indicated in some way what it proposes to do. The measure need not be drastic; we may not insist on towns being bankrupted or put to great expense; but every day that this matter is postponed, a greater mileage of sewage systems is being constructed in these towns; greater quantities of sewage are being poured into the streams, and greater will be the expense of re-adjusting whole systems a few years later. Therefore I think we have waited long enough.

I do not intend to discuss the details of this Bill; but if the Government are anxious to handle this question in a practical manner, some measure can be passed which will be an indication to the people in the various towns that action is going to be taken, but that they will be given time to readjust themselves to the new condition of affairs. I am not in favour of sending this Bill to another committee if it is to be held over until another session. If it is to go to a committee, the committee ought to understand the gravity of the situation in many of our towns and investigate as far as possible all the conditions; there is plenty of material to afford them all the information necessary; and they can report a Bill which can be passed this session, letting the people throughout the Dominion know that we are going to stop the menace of pollution of our streams; because so long as something is not done to stop it, it will be continued, and no amount of talk will make the people change their systems. I have had considerable experience of injurious results from such pollution during the past few months. I hope the Bill will come before this House as a practical measure to be voted upon before this session closes.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): I wish very briefly to endorse the sentiments of my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham). I have also, like him, had a practical experience in my family of what putrid water means; and when we go through such experiences, we have perhaps a different view of the conditions than we would otherwise have. However, one does not require personal experience to have an understanding of what impure water means to a community, to a town, or to the country at large. The hon. member from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) deserves a great deal of credit for the persistence with which he has brought this measure before the House and for the large amount of information which he has been the means of disseminating amongst the people of Canada. Hon. gentlemen so far have been talking very largely about conditions in the city of Ottawa and other portions of the province of Ontario; but there is hardly a place in Canada at all fairly well settled but has to contend with the same problem. In my portion of the province of New Brunswick exactly the same condition exists as in Ottawa. The problem is just as acute and just as urgent there as it is in the city of Ottawa. The whole thing resolves itself into two questions: one as to the cost, and the other as to the method to be adopted. The question of cost, of course, in a small community, is always important; but the difficulty it presents is not insurmountable. The great difficulty seems to be that there is no power to prevent the recurrence of the cause of the difficulty. Take our own case. We are taking water out of the St. John river. Now, this river runs through a number of small towns and villages above us, all of which are pouring their sewage into the river. It is not of much use for us to take means to improve conditions unless others are compelled, so to say, to behave themselves. But it may be done. There is a great deal in what my right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says, that the Bill might be changed so that the power to bring it into effect in any given district shall rest with the Government—not make it the general law with certain districts exempted. Otherwise certain districts might not be exempted that ought to be so treated, and some crank coming along could commence prosecution of an innocent user of the water. If the Government had the power to bring the Act into force by Order in Council, stating the portions of the country in which it should be effective, it would be much better. But that is a matter of detail; so far as the general principle is concerned, I think the Bill is entirely right. I am very much of opinion that some action ought to be taken to bring this matter to a head during the present session. Let us be men enough to stand up and vote upon it; let us take our responsibility. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote on the principle of the Bill; and I have confidence in the judgment and ability of this House to work out the details in such a way as to insure justice being done to all and injustice to none. It is pretty hard, from my standpoint, to conceive of injustice being done to any man by compelling him to keep pollution out of the river which is the water supply for all his neighbours as well as for people, it may be, hundreds of miles away from him. Personally I am ready to take responsibility in the matter. Therefore, I do not like the motion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen). For, while I do not say it offensively, yet I do say, that this is a dilatory motion. We who have had some experience in parliamentary matters know that, in a session such as this which will necessarily be short, if a matter like this is handed over to a committee to take some further action, that means that it goes over until next session. The hon. minister knows that there have been hundreds of Bills sent to the political bone-yard since he entered Parliament, and thousands since Confederation. And for a public Bill like this, which can only be discussed in the early stages, except with the leave of the Government, once it is sent to the committee, it might as well be put out of existence and its promoters told to come back next year. I do not say this in any controversial spirit. I do hope that some arrangement can be arrived at between the hon. member for Selkirk and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries by which this Bill will not be sent to the political bone-yard but a vote taken upon it,—and I hope that vote will be to-day. I believe this Bill involves one of the most economic questions ever brought before this House or that could possibly be brought before it. So far as I am concerned, I should like an opportunity to vote for this Bill to-day.

Hon. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Postmaster General): My excuse for taking part, even in a very brief way, in this discussion, is that until lately, I was a member of the International Joint Commission, and one of the most important questions submitted to that Commission was a reference, under the Waterways Treaty, of the question of pollution of boundary waters. Two questions were submitted: First, whether pollution existed in boundary waters, and, if so, second, what means should be taken to remedy that pollution. The International Joint Commission has had this question under consideration for almost a year, I believe, and has expended vast sums of money, in conjunction with the United States, in an effort to find out whether pollution existed. The second question is now before the commission: What are the best means to remedy the pollution which, beyond doubt, exists in the boundary waters between the United States and Canada?

I believe my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) has brought down to the House this preliminary or progress report of the experts who were charged by the commission to examine the boundary waters between the Lake of the Woods and the Atlantic. The Commission held a great many meetings in boundary towns from the Lake of the Woods almost as far as the Atlantic ocean, hearing witnesses, including many experts. The conclusion to which we came was that this was one of the most momentous questions that could come before a commission of this kind. One most important point which struck us was the enormous expense which would be involved in the change of systems in the different cities consequent upon any decisions given by the International Joint commission. For instance, take such cities on the American side as Buffalo, Detroit, Niagara Falls and Port Huron; and, on the Canadian side, Port Sarnia, Windsor and Toronto, all of which contribute to the pollution of boundary waters. But when you seek a remedy, you are forced to the conclusion that it would cost millions and millions of dollars. In some instances it would almost bankrupt those cities if you imposed upon them stringent measures by which this pollution should be stopped. The commission examined some of the most renowned sanitary experts in the world to find the means by which this pollution could be remedied or altogether eradicated. I believe the commission is just finishing a very important meeting in Toronto, and if my information is correct its report will be brought down in a very short time.

This question was referred to the International Joint Commission by the common consent of the Canadian Government and the United States Government. So far as navigable waters are concerned, the question I put to my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) and these hon. gentlemen on the other side who are in a hurry to see legislation passed on the subject is this: Having referred this question to the commission by general consent under the treaty, how can this House proceed to pass in advance of the report, legislation which would affect that question? It seems to me it would be almost a breach of faith. The two governments having referred to the commission this question, which is a most intricate and complicated one, until that report is brought down, so far at any rate as boundary waters are concerned, I do not think this House could pass legislation in face of that report. Therefore, I think the best way would be to refer it to a committee. Nor is this reason I have given the only reason. If hon. gentlemen will study the report of the International Joint Commission they will see that it would be impossible—as it seems to me—for this House to pass legislation which would be of value in the premises. You have to hear all the interested parties and see what can be done in the different cities, to learn what would be the cost. Otherwise we should run the risk of passing legislation which, by reason of the great cost it would entail, could not be enforced and would be inoperative.

Mr. BRADBURY: In moving the second reading of this Bill, I was impressed with the importance of the question with which it deals. I have given a great deal of attention to the matter, and believe that it is one of the most important questions that this House can deal with. The fact that so many valuable lives have been sacrified because of the pollution of our streams, and that so many of our citizens are going through life with impaired health and weakened constitutions on account of the use at some time of polluted water should be sufficient reason for Parliament's taking some action in the matter. However, after listening to the remarks of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, I realize that there is good reason why this Bill should go back to committee. I had no intention of making the Bill so far-reaching as the right hon. gentleman pointed out it would be; nor had I any intention of making it a hardship on outlying districts. I felt that I had provided for that, however, when I inserted a clause under which the Government had power to withdraw certain districts from the operation of the Act. I am anxious that something should be done; consequently I am willing that the Bill should go back to the committee, with the understanding, I hope, that the Bill will be considered, and that the committee will make its report as soon as possible, and that the House will deal with the matter during the present session.

I realize that the hon. Postmaster General, as a member of the International Joint Commission ought to be well informed, but I am not prepared to agree with him that this House should not take any action until we know what the United States or the International Joint Commission are going to do. I think we ought to take care of our own country; we ought to make it impossible for our people to cause the pollution of our rivers and of the lakes which they are obliged to use for domestic purposes. I think we could appeal to our friends on the other side of the line with more force after taking action on our own part. However, as the hon. gentleman has pointed out, a reference has been made to this commission with regard to the effect of the disposal of sewage in boundary waters, and I presume that to that extent the hands of this House are tied until we know exactly what the views of the commission are, as expressed in its report. I understand from the hon. gentleman that that commission has reported.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Two questions were referred to the commission: first, as to the existence of pollution; second, as to the remedy. There is a report on the first question; in a very short time there will be a report on the second question, namely, the means by which the pollution may be either eradicated or remedied.

Mr. BRADBURY: Even if the members of this commission should not be able to agree among themselves as to what should be done, I submit that for the protection of our own people we ought to take action. If we cannot protect the boundary waters, we can at least protect the other waters of Canada. However, as I have said, I trust that when the Bill goes back to the committee it will be with the understanding that the committee report this session and that the matter be finally dealt with.

Mr. MURPHY: May I ask the hon. Postmaster General how soon the report of the International Joint Commission is expected?

Mr. CASGRAIN: So far as my relations with the International Joint Commission are concerned, of course I cannot say, but I believe—and I think my information is correct—that the report will be soon submitted to both Governments.

Mr. HAZEN: I will move for the appointment of a committee to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (St. Lawrence, Montreal) moved the second reading of Bill No. 18, to amend the Criminal Code. He said: When I introduced this Bill a few days ago I made the assertion that capital punishment is murder. I repeat that capital punishment is murder; legalized, if you like; but the state that puts capital punishment into force becomes a murderer.

Capital punishment is a relic of the dark and pestilential days of Nero's misrule of the Roman empire. I think I am safe in saying that the time has arrived when it is the bounden duty of this Government and this Parliament to give consideration to this grave question, which is daily growing in importance all over the world, especially among Christian nations. The purpose of the Bill is to abolish capital punishment in the Dominion of Canada and to substitute life imprisonment for the different crimes for which capital punishment is provided in our present criminal code.

The opinion has gained ground very rapidly in recent years that the death penalty is nothing more or less than legalized brutal murder. I am aware that there are several members of this House who still cling to the idea that capital punishment is a deterrent, and to those I would say that if they really consider it to be a deterrent, our executions should be made as public as possible. If it is to be considered as an object lesson to the community, let us have a hanging bee in the public square. If it is to be an object lesson, it should be as thorough a one as possible; it will be better to hold it where every man, woman and child will be able to see the whole ghastly proceedings. If any hon. gentlemen in this House vote against the Bill, I hope they will feel a sense of personal guilt if Canada must continue to stand before the whole world as a barbarous country.

I submit that life is the immediate gift of God to man; man has no right to resign it, nor should it be taken from him, unless by the God who gave it to him. I believe that all the members of this House will agree with me on that point. Innocent individuals, as we know, are occasionally executed, and thus makes the state which orders his execution a murderer of the worst kind. Capital punishment prevents reparation in cases of subsequently proven innocence. I submit that two or more men organized under a form of government have no more right to break God's commandments or to take life than one man has. It is murder in either case. Is it not better that ninety-nine guilty persons should go free than that one innocent man should be hanged?

We all know that 1914 has been quite a hanging year; in fact, it will be known in history as the hanging year. It has been suggested that the authorities developed a mania for hanging in 1914 such as never has been known in Canada since the days of 1837 and 1838. In truth, it has been said by some that the authorities of 1914 went hanging mad. I am prepared to prove to this House by statistics—and my remarks will consist largely of statistics—that a great many guilty men go free, while a number of innocent men are hanged, especially if they are poor men. I say also that in 1914 three men were hanged whom the public believed to be innocent. One of them, we know, was innocent, and I am prepared to prove it.

Capital punishment, I say, is a legalized crime, and is morally indefensible. All who take part in it are tainted with blood guiltiness, from the judge down to the hangman, the crown prosecutor and his running mate, the crown executioner, as well as the nation which passively allows such things to be. If crime does not increase in other countries in consequence of the abolition of capital punishment, why should it increase in Canada? It is universally admitted that two wrongs do not make a right; yet the operation of our law would seem to indicate that the contrary is the truth. A man sins by taking human life; the state sins by taking his life, and two lives are sacrificed. I submit that this is a grotesque travesty of justice. In King John's time the whole injunction of 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth' was literally obeyed, as well as 'a life for a life.' For many centuries we have ignored the two first injunctions, whilst holding with firm tenacity to the third; yet we Canadians call ourselves a Christian nation.

Capital punishment has been abolished in a great many countries, states and provinces, and in every case with good results. The following countries have abolished it: Italy, Portugal, Switzerland, Holland, Tuscany, San Marino, Roumania, New South Wales, State of Michigan, Rhode Island, Wisconsin, Maine, and Kansas.

In the early stages of society the man committing homicide was killed by the avenger of blood on behalf of the family of the man killed, and not as representing the authority of the state. This was the custom for centuries, till the mischief of this practice was mitigated by the establishment of cities of refuge, and in pagan and Christian times by the recognizing of the sanctuary of the temple and of the churches. In the laws of Khamurobi, king of Babylon, 2285-2241 B.C., the death penalty was imposed for many offences; the modes of execution specially mentioned are drowning, burning and impalement. Draco, the first compiler of the penal code of Greece, made death the penalty for all offences. When asked why he did so, he replied; 'The least offences deserve death, and I can impose no worse for the higher crimes.'

Under the Mosaic code the law of vengeance was personified in the then prevailing doctrine of 'an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth,' in many instances that rule being carried out literally. In the dark ages of the United Kingdom, under the rule of the Saxon and Danish kings, the modes of capital punishment most common were: hanging, beheading, drowning, burning, stoning, and precipitation from rocks. William the Conqueror would not permit the execution of the death sentence by hanging, but by mutilation. Death was the penalty for the most trivial offences; for example, the cutting down of a tree, poaching deer, or even stealing a loaf of bread. In 1800 there were over 200 capital crimes in Great Britain, and 180 in 1819. Men were hanged and quartered for offences which now would be regarded as misdemeanours, while the learned clergy and statesmen looked on with approval and applause. During the reign of Henry the Eighth 72,000 persons were executed. The author of Capital Punishment in the Encyclopoedia Britannica, vol. 5, page 279, says:

> At the end of the eighteenth century the criminal laws of all Europe were ferocious and indiscriminate in their administration of capital punishment for almost all grave crimes... yet such forms of crime were far more numerous than they are now.

The best blood of England drenched the execution block, and Kech, the legal executioner, became more infamous than Rob Roy, the bandit. Death was a panacea for all ills.

The United States adopted the common law of England replete with capital offences, but has finally limited the number of hanging offences, in practice at least, to two: murder and rape; but the statute names other offences, and hanging is the mode of execution.

In Belgium no execution has taken place since 1863; in Finland none since 1824; in Holland none since 1860, and capital punishment was totally abolished there in 1870. There have been no executions in Norway since 1876. Norway abolished capital punishment in 1905; Portugal in 1867; Roumania in 1864. Russia abolished capital punishment, except for military offences, in 1750, but later restored it for a short period, only to again abolish it in 1907. Only 7 out of 22 cantons in Switzerland have it. Italy revoked the law in 1888.

In the United States the number of capital crimes has been reduced in recent years to only four, and the following states have abolished the death penalty: Maine, where it was abolished in 1876, restored in 1883, and finally abolished in 1887, on the recommendation of the governor of the state; Rhode Island, in 1853; Wisconsin, in 1853; and Kansas, in 1901, but there have been no legal executions in Kansas since 1872; Michigan, in 1847.

I now propose to repeal the law of blood and vengeance in Canada, and to make life imprisonment the maximum punishment. The two main objects in enforcing our criminal laws are, first, to protect society; secondly, to reform the criminal. Some would add a third reason, namely, to punish the criminal himself, but in this day of brotherly love, when we are taught to love our enemies, and when charity and love have triumphed over vengeance and hatred, no one would seriously insist that this country has any more right to kill a man, in order to avenge the death of his victim, than has an individual.

Every man will agree with me on this one point, that, if social conditions will not be made worse by the abolition of the death penalty, then it should be abolished. The only way to determine this question is to compare the statistics of the states with and without the death penalty. The statistics are rather voluminous. I will just read a few of them, and, with the permission of the House, will hand the rest to the "Hansard" reporter.

Mr. SPEAKER: It cannot get on "Hansard" in that way. The rule is to report only what is read.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Very well, Sir. According to the mortality statistics compiled by the United States Bureau of Statistics and published in 1912, the latest I could get, the number of murders in California was 19 per 100,000 population; in Colorado, 21; in Connecticut, 7; in Indiana, 10; in Maine, where capital punishment has been abolished, only 2.

Mr. LANCASTER: Do those statistics include cases of manslaughter, or relate only to murders committed with malice aforethought?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Homicide.

Mr. LANCASTER: Homicide could be murder or manslaughter.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I think they include both.

Mr. LANCASTER: Is the hon. gentleman making any distinction in his Bill between punishment for manslaughter and punishment for deliberate murder with malice aforethought? Manslaughter to-day is punishable by imprisonment for life if the judge chooses to inflict it.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I make no distinction. I claim that the greatest penalty that a Christian country should inflict upon any criminal should be life imprisonment, even for murder, which I suppose is considered the greatest offence. I was saying that in the states where capital punishment has been abolished, crime has decreased. Furthermore, no state or district or country that has abolished capital punishment has it in practice to-day. I challenge any one to find a single country in the world that has abolished capital punishment and inflicts the death penalty to-day. The following figures show the number of murders per 100,000 population for ten years in several states:

State.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.
New Jersey—
Cities	1.7	0.9	1.4	0.7	1.3	1.8	2.9	4.2	3.7	4.7
Rural	0.1	0.1	0.8	0.2	0.9	1.4	2.5	3.2	4.6	2.9
New York—
Cities	2.00	1.8	2.0	1.4	2.2	3.5	5.0	6.1	5.3	4.4
Rural	0.2	0.4	0.3	0.5	0.5	0.6	1.8	3.3	3.6	3.3
Ohio—
Cities	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	7.4
Rural	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2.8
Pennsylvania—
Cities	...	...	...	...	...	...	5.8	6.5	5.0	4.7
Rural	...	...	...	...	...	...	4.5	4.8	4.9	4.1
Rhode Island—
Cities	2.5	2.8	2.7	2.3	3.5	2.5	3.9	5.5	4.2	3.0
Rural	2.8	0.7	4.0	1.9	1.9	0.6	2.3	1.1	3.3	2.1
South Dakota—
Cities	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	7.4	7.2
Rural	...	...	...	...	...	...	2.1	2.6	3.8	2.2

State.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Vermont—
Cities	...	...	...	...	2.0	2.0	...	3.9	3.8	3.8
Rural	...	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	2.0	1.0	1.3	2.3	3.8
Washington —
Cities	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	11.7	8.1
Rural	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6.3	4.2
Wisconsin—
Cities	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3.1	1.9
Rural	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1.6	1.7

It will thus be seen that for the ten-year period beginning with 1900 the average number of homicides in the States where capital punishment had been abolished per hundred thousand population was: Maine, 2·5; Michigan, 3·8; Rhode Island, 5; and for the two years, 1908 and 1909, for which Wisconsin reported her homicides, she averaged 4·1, there being a decrease in 1909 over the previous year. In some of the States where capital punishment prevailed we find that for a ten-year period, beginning with the year 1900, the average number of homicides per 100,000 population was: Indiana, 6·4; New Jersey, 4; New York, 4·8; and for the four years reported by Pennsylvania an average of 9·8. Ohio reports for the year 1909 only, giving 10·2; California for a four-year period shows twenty homicides per 100,000 population. While Massachusetts only shows an average of 2·57 for each 100,000 population, the increase in that State from 1905 to 1909 was 100 per cent. It will be further seen that California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Indiana, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Vermont, where capital punishment obtains, and where it is enforced rigidly, show an increase in the number of homicides for the period reported in the above statistics, while of the five states that have abolished the death penalty, only Michigan shows an increase, which is slight, but her general average for a ten-year period is less than either of the states that have retained the death penalty, with the exception of Vermont and New Hampshire; and that they have increased their homicide rate per annum continually, while Michigan shows a decrease in 1909 over the previous year. Besides the record shows that the death penalty has been abolished in Vermont and New Hampshire by practice for twenty years.

The general average for the period reported in the above table of statistics for the five states where the death penalty has been revoked is 3 85 per 100,000 population, while for the states inflicting the death penalty for the period reported the general average is 8·25, or nearly 115 per cent greater. The average homicidal rate in Tennessee was five times greater than in either of the abolition states.

While I was unable to get the statistics on this question from Kansas, I am reliably informed that the number of homicides in that state per capita is comparatively small, and in a recent letter from the secretary of the present Governor of that state he informs me that the people there are universally pleased with the workings of the new law abolishing the death penalty, and that there is no disposition to restore capital punishment in that state. It will be remembered that there has never been a legal execution in that state since 1872, the governors in their discretion failing to sign the death warrants at the end of one year's imprisonment, as the law required.

The results obtained in foreign countries from the abolition of the death penalty are no less beneficial than in the United States. I take the following facts and statistics from Report No. 108 on capital crimes of the fifty-fourth United States Congress, first session, printed January 22, 1896, by order of the House of Representatives:

Belgium.—The penalty of death has not been abolished in Belgium, but since 1866 it has not been executed. In order to appreciate the results, the following statistics are given. For the period from 1831 to 1890, in the first thirty-five years, there were 321 capital condemnations, which was at the rate of 9.17 per year. In the twenty-five years following the cessation of executions there were 201, which was at the rate of 8.004, showing a decrease of 1.1696.

Costa Rica.—The results of the abolition of capital punishment for all offences in Costa Rica are considered very favourable, thus confirming public sentiment against capital punishment.

Hayti.—The constitution of 1879 abolished the death penalty for political offences. Since the period of said abolition political crimes have not been more frequent.

Holland.—There has been no increase or crime since the abolition of the death penalty.

Italy.—Since the abolition of the death penalty by the new common penal code, which went into force January 1, 1890, the results obtained up to this present time have fully realized the expectations cherished by parliament, by public opinion, and by students of criminal matters, that is to say, social security has not been disturbed or diminished by it, and consequently the conditions of high criminality have not been rendered worse.

Norway.—Since 1874 it is made discretionary with the courts of death or hard labour for life, since which time a majority of the latter cases have been imposed, and no bad consequences, so far as public safety is concerned, have been observed.

Portugal.—The death penalty was abolished by the law on the first of July, 1867, and the number of homicides to which this penalty was applied has diminished during the succeeding years.

Switzerland.—Since 1874 capital punishment has been abolished in fifteen of the twenty-two cantons in Switzerland.

The only light we have to guide our advancing footsteps in enacting progressive legislation is the unerring light of experience. The record shows that the death penalty has been abolished in Michigan for sixty-six years; in Rhode Island for sixty-one years; in Wisconsin for sixty years; in Maine for thirty-seven years, and in Kansas by practice for about fifty years, and recently by statute. And yet those enlightened and progressive states have discovered no good reason for repealing these laws that have been in force for over a half century in most instances. That alone should be sufficient to convince us that the abolition statutes have vindicated their existence. Besides, is it a mere coincidence that the states that have so long foregone the death penalty have less than one-half the number of homicides of the states that foster executions? Is it only a coincidence that homicides in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, and New Hampshire have increased over previous years, while in their sister state of Maine, where life imprisonment is the highest penalty, the number of homicides have decreased in the same period? In 1909 the three states named above registered a total of homicides per 100,000 population as follows: Massachusetts, 4·8; Connecticut, 7·9; Vermont, 7·6, while in Maine, for the same period 2·2 for the same ratio is shown.

Making further comparisons for the year 1909 we find registered homicides per 100,000 as follows: Michigan, 4·4; Wisconsin, 3·6; and Rhode Island, 5·1; as against the death penalty states as follows: Indiana, 10·7; Ohio, 10·2; Pennsylvania, 8·8; New York, 7·7; New Jersey, 7·6; Colorado, 21·4; California, 20; Maryland, 7·2; New Hampshire, 2·9; South Dakota, 9·4; Washington, 12·3. Can all of the above facts, so favourable to the states that have abolished the death penalty, be attributed to mere chance?

In the same year the number of homicides per million people in the four abolition states was thirty-five; there were eighty-five in the death-penalty states per million population. In 1904, taking the whole United States, the ratio was 104·4 per million, while Maine, for the same year, registers 24 for each million inhabitants, Michigan 20, and Rhode Island 51, or nearly one-half the general average for all the states.

The record further shows that from 1885 to 1904 homicides increased from 32·2 per million people to 104·4 for the same ratio. There is no question that capital punishment increases the number of murders in any country. Crime begets crime just as thistledown begets thistles. In every case in which a man has been hanged, in Canada or any place else, immediately afterwards a large number of murders have been committed. This in the face of the fact that capital punishment was in full force in every state in the Union but four or five.

The foreign States that have abolished the death penalty not only refuse to reinstate it, but the reports above quoted show that criminal conditions are in all instances as good, and in some reported better than before the abolition of it. After centuries of observation and experience, the learned judges of England and America established a rule making a preponderance of evidence in civil cases the guide for themselves and juries in deciding questions of disputed facts. That is the only true rule. Then, have I not proven my case by an overwhelming preponderance of the proof? The evidence based on actual experience in foreign States is so near unanimous in favour of its abolition that it is a mere exception to a general rule that a fact militates against it.

But you may ask why do legal executions increase capital crimes? Because crime is largely a disease, and the demoralizing effect of a legal execution, and the example thus set by the state arouses the criminal nature and cheapens life in the estimation of the criminally inclined. Like begets like in this respect, as sure as night follows day. We cannot put it better than to quote from Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox's beautiful poem on capital punishment:—

And last the people, frenzied or depressed
By sight or sound, or knowledge of the deed,
Are wronged and injured by the law's effect;
Crime follows execution; thought breeds thought,
And,as from thistledown new thistles spring,
So violent actions to disorders lead.
That vengeful God of Hebraic lore
Has blocked the progress of the world too long.
When Science seeks the cause, and Love the cure,
Then crime will vanish from the human race.

Did you ever for a moment contemplate the moral wrecks, the devastation and depravity, that have followed in the wake of war and of active armies? If anything, it is worse than the active warfare itself. Notwithstanding that the guerilla knew he would be shot by his captors, hundreds of formerly honourable men, or at least apparently so, became sutlers, ghouls, horse thieves, or common robbers, and even little value or respect was placed on the virtue of womanhood. Some of the women themselves were contaminated by the general moral stagnation, and many yielded to the degeneracy of the times. Human life especially became so cheap, in the estimation of the people, that murder became the rule instead of the exception. The Government itself was engaged in the vocation of killing; the citizen, or at least the criminally inclined, put no higher value on life than his Government, and that is always true. If we are to teach our citizenship that life is sacred, we must not take it by law, nor even by law sanction it. As an example, the Quakers even refuse to go to war or for any reason take life, and they do not commit murders.

But you say it deters others from committing crimes. If that is so, why have States that do not kill the smallest homicidal rate per capita? Why are such crimes increasing, while the death penalty is being enforced? If it deters to kill by hanging or electrocuting, it would certainly act as a much stronger deterrent if you would, as of old, torture and mutilate the murderer? You say that would be too cruel and barbarous and would demoralize the public and even brutalize men. Well, the majority of people think inflicting the death penalty is too cruel and barbarous, and that the majority of people think so is proven by the fact that great majority of people want the sentence on the condemned man commuted to life imprisonment in each instance. Our descendants a century hence will look back on our legal executions with the same aversion and horror, and denounce us as we do our ancestors who burnt at the stake and mutilated the body of the condemned, or caused it to hang, for weeks, as a warning.

Dr. A. B. Martin, Dean of the Lebanon Law School of Cumberland University, gives a demonstrative illustration from his own observations, that hanging does not deter others from committing crimes. A man was to be hanged on the public square in Lebanon, Tenn., and the gallows was erected. Two enterprising—I think infamously so—young men erected an arena around the scaffold, and on the day of the hanging were present and collected a great deal of money for their seats. Within one and a half years both of the men were hanged for the same offence for which the victim that they had exploited was executed.

Some of the most shocking crimes follow closely the most notorious executions. For example, the Allens murdered Judge Massey and four others in the Court House at Hillsville, Va., while the papers of said state were heralding the news of the execution of the noted wife murderer, H. C. Beattie. The assassination of Rosenthal in New York city followed closely on the heels of the execution of four men in New York State within one hour. Instances are reported in which the spectators at a hanging in England for picking pockets committed the same offence for which the victim was being executed.

Another reason why capital punishment should be abolished is that innocent men are sometimes executed. We know of one innocent man who was hanged in Canada, and we have grave doubts that there were not three innocent men hanged.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Who were they ?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: One innocent man that we know of was hanged in New Westminster, B.C. In one case two men—I do not say they were innocent, and we know they were thieves—went into a sawmill office, stole a cash-box and went to the park to divide the spoils. It was getting dark, and one of them struck a match, and a policeman came along and one of them fired. Some said that both fired, but one of them claimed he did not fire, and the other claimed he merely fired to frighten the policeman, but the bullet struck a tree and glanced off and killed the policeman As a result of the examination it was found that there was only one bullet which struck that policeman, but British Columbia was determined to make an example, and in that case, as in the old days in Ireland, they gave both of them the benefit of the doubt and hanged the two.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: They were both guilty.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: They were not both guilty, Sir. I am sorry to have to contradict my leader.

Mr. PROULX: The hon. gentleman should know that, being on an unlawful errand, if one of them committed murder they were both guilty of murder.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: That is because one of them was in bad company, and if every man in this House that was ever in bad company was hanged there would not be many of us here to-day. Of course, that remark does not apply to my respected leader. The fact is, that that man was innocent of the crime of murder for which he paid the death penalty; and, to the disgrace of that court, and to the disgrace of the judge and jury, they took the money for sending that innocent man into eternity; they took blood money and they knew it. Even the Tory papers that were entirely opposed to anything I said in the discussion on former occasions said they were surprised that the Minister of Justice did not see that there was a reprieve in that case.

The Government itself is engaged in the vocation of killing the criminally inclined, and the criminals put no higher value on life than the Government does itself.

Mr. BURNHAM: What happens to those who die in sin?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I am not able to answer that question; but no man, unless he is an infidel, will vote to send a soul into eternity when he cannot say what the result will be. If a man believes truly that there is an eternity of the soul, either saved or damned, he cannot vote to send his fellow-man into eternity. He will not do it unless he is an infidel. It is true, there must be a lot of infidels.

The Government say that capital punishment deters others from committing crime. If that is so, I ask: Why have the States which do not have capital punishment the smallest number of crimes? Why do such crimes increase in number when the death penalty is put into force?

I would like to give a few opinions of great men on this question. I do not wish to detract from our good friend the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) at all. I have not his opinion here, but I will put it down next time. Thos. B. Reed says:

> Capital punishment is injurious to society because the example is bad.

The Government says, very nicely, to the poor criminal: We are going to punish you; we are going to prove to you that murder is wrong, and we are going to prove it by murdering you; we kill to prove that killing is wrong. Why, they are a great deal worse than the butchers in Montreal who say: 'We kill to keep alive.'

Whittier says: 'All revenge is crime.'

Lafayette says: 'I shall ask for the abolition of capital punishment until I have the infallibility of human judgment demonstrated to me.'

John F. Fitzpatrick, of the Chicago Federation of Labour, says:

> Organized labour everywhere stands for the abolishment of capital punishment, and if I am elected sheriff (he was then a candidate for sheriff), I will do my best to further this civilized reform.

William Lloyd Garrison says:

> The horror of inflicting the death penalty makes jurors violate their oaths.

General N. M. Curtis says:

> During my four years and eight months of military service, I had opportunity to observe the effects of many executions under martial law, I came to believe firmly that they were in every case demoralizing and destructive of discipline. These convictions against the efficiency of the death penalty have been strengthened as I have become better acquainted with the evil effects of executions under civil laws.

Henry Ward Beecher says:

> While the fear of hanging does not deter men from crime, the fear of inflicting death deters many a jury from finding a just verdict, and favours the escape of the criminal.

Rantoul says:

> The strongest safeguard of life is its sanctity; and this sentiment every execution diminishes.

5 p.m. Bulwer says:

> Society has erected the gallows at the end of the land instead of guide posts and directions boards at its beginning.

Seneca says:

> Many hold death in contempt, regarding it at rest from evil, while they are much afraid of imprisonment.

Dr. Cheevar says:

Had the state done its duty in his (the murderer's) education, he never would have been a murderer.

Blackstone says:

Life is the immediate gift of God to man, which neither can he resign nor can it be taken from him, unless by command of Him who gave it.

He also goes on to say that in Great Britain there is an average of three innocent men hanged every year. Channing says:

When I reflect how much of the responsibility for crime rests on the state, how many of the offences which are most severely punished are to be traced to neglected education, to early squalid want, to temptations and exposures which society might do much to relieve, I feel that the spirit of mercy should temper legislation, that we should not sever ourselves so widely from our fallen brethen; that we should recognize in them the countenance and claims of humanity; that we should strive to win them back to God.

I am sure my hon. friend will agree with what Benjamin Franklin says, namely:

Laws which inflict death for murder are, in my opinion, as un-Christian as those which justify revenge; for the obligations of Christianity upon individuals, to promote repentance, to forgive injuries, and to discharge the duties of universal benevolence are equally binding upon the state

John Quincy Adams says:

Gladly will I co-operate with any society whose object should be to promote the abolition of every form by which the life of man can be voluntarily taken by his fellow man. I do heartily wish and pray the success of your efforts to promote the abolition of capital punishment.

Father Matthew and Victor Hugo tell the same story. Robert Burns says:

Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn.

William Shakespeare on one occasion out of curiosity visited one of these murder trials, and he says:

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May, in the sworn twelve, have a thief or two,
Guiltier than him they try.

Cicero says:

Away with the executioner and execution, and the very name of its engine. Even the mere mention of them is unworthy of a Roman citizen and a freeman.

Some of my hon. friends who, when I first introduced my Bill a few years ago, thought I was in error, have since changed their minds. I would be pleased if all those who formerly opposed it would change their minds. One of them, I think my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) was very strong on the Old Testament rule of Moses that there should be a life for a life, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. I think we have passed that stage. It is true that Moses did shed the blood of his enemies; but we have in place of him One, the Lord, who shed His blood for His enemies. To me there is quite a difference. My hon. friend claimed that the Scriptures say 'a life for a life.' I claim—and I challenge successful contradiction—that there is not a word in the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelations that commands capital punishment or even commends it. Example is surely better than precept; and I would ask, what about Cain, Moses himself, David, and twenty or thirty others mentioned in the Old Testament who committed murder and not one of whom was hanged? The man who will send a soul into eternity, whether he be a murderer or the state's hangman, does not believe in eternity. If he believed in eternity, he would not, he could not, commit such an act. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition says that this man was guilty of being in bad company—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No, I said he was guilty of murder. But I did not say he should be hanged.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Was it not a case for reprieve?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Possibly.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: The right hon. gentleman knows it was; he would never have thought of hanging such a man. There was nothing against this man but that he was in bad company. He was in bad company, and probably was a thief; I think there is no question that he stole the money. But was that a reason why he should be hanged? The man did not commit the murder, and yet he was hanged as a murderer. We call ourselves a Christian nation, and we bow our heads in prayer. Yet we hanged that man though he was innocent of the crime for which he was condemned.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), when I introduced this Bill last year, had something to say about it. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not here. He said:

And the time may come when it will be unnecessary to have such extreme punishment, as capital punishment is, and administered as it has been for the deterrence of great criminals.

The hon. gentleman thought we were doing better. I claim that we are not doing better. The ink was hardly dry on the "Hansard" from which I have quoted when one of the most brutal murders ever committed in any country was committed in the Canadian city of Calgary, a brutal, legalized murder. It took twenty minutes to hang the victim, or rather to kill him. This took place in the barracks of the Northwest Mounted Police. The man was hanged and afterwards cut down, but it was found that he was not dead. The suggestion was made that they should hang him again, but the representative there of the mounted police said that that must not be done, it would not be legal. They dragged the man over and laid him beside his coffin, and he lay there for twenty minutes groaning. Why, there is not a member of this House who, if he owned a yellow, mangy, mad dog, would have the animal tortured in the way that poor unfortunate criminal was tortured to his death. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated also that he believed there were countries that had abolished capital punishment—he could not remember which countries—and had afterwards reinstated it. I can tell the hon. minister he was misinformed. Of the twenty-eight states, countries and places that have abolished capital punishment, not one of them has reinstated it. I challenge the hon. minister or anybody else to contradict me.

My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) was also misinformed as to the proportion of murders as between the State of Maine on the one side and New Brunswick and Nova Scotia on the other. He said there were not half as many murders in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as in Maine. My statistics show that there are twice as many. Of course, that was a mistake on the part of the hon. gentleman; he would not make a statement that he did not believe.

Mr. CARVELL: Have you the statistics of the State of Maine for the past year?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: No.

Mr. CARVELL: I think they would be against you.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: But if my hon. friend will look into the figures given by him and by me last year, I think he will find my figures much better based than his own.

In the discussion on this Bill last year I was well treated—very well treated; I have no fault to find. None of the hon. members called down fire from heaven to burn up my Bill, though I must admit that some of the remarks had an almost sulphurus odour. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was misinformed as to the historical facts in relation to British Columbia which he gave. He said that in that province Judge Begbie warned evil-doers: I am here to administer justice, and if there is a murder there will be a hanging. The hon. gentleman said there was a murder and a hanging followed; and murders stopped. There is where the hon. gentleman is misinformed. There was murder, there were hangings; and murders increased. And murders will go on increasing while the hangman's rope dangles over the heads of the people. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Wilson), who, I am sorry to say is not here to-day, drew the colour line at that time. I am sorry for that. The coloured man to whom he referred was hanged—the first man to be hanged in Bordeau jail, I believe. And he was innocent of the crime for which he was condemned. Let any man who doubts that consult the Roman Catholic chaplain of that jail and he will be given to understand that that man was innocent. I do not say he was a good man; he was a bad man. He was a bad man, a poor man and a black man—and he was hanged.

Some hon. gentlemen tell us that the command was ' a life for a life.' There was no such thing as a command in it. And if it were a command, as I have said before, example is better than precept, and what about Cain, Moses, Lamech, Simeon, Levi, David and many others who committed murder, and not one of whom suffered capital punishment?

Now, if the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition would place their ears to the ground, they would learn that there is a demand all over this country for a little more mercy and a little less law. If you cannot go any further, let us agree that there is no reason why a poor man should be punished for a crime more than a rich man. But, if a man is wealthy—especially if he is very wealthy—when charged with crime,, he can be adjudged insane. Or if he has a fair amount of ' pull ' he will get off. Eminent jurists, like my hon. friend, would go to work and find means to get him off. But the poor man has to go. I tell you the poor men of this country will not stand it very much longer. Which Minister of Justice in Canada shall have the immortal honour of abolishing capital punishment in this Dominion? I sincerely hope that it may be our present Minister of Justice (Mr.

Doherty). He is a good man; he has been on the Bench and he knows something about these things. If he does not, then one of his successors will. The time has come in Canada when legalized murder should be discontinued. As I have said, two alternatives are open to us: what Moses did, and what the Lord did. Which shall we choose?

I have asked the Government to give this legislation a trial. No harm can be done by making the experiment between the close of one session and the beginning of another. Let us make the experiment, and I venture to say that if we do so we shall never again go back to capital punishment. I will go further and say that if the Government will agree to give this legislation a trial and it is found that I am mistaken, I will resign my seat in this House. This shows how sure I am that if capital punishment is abolished in Canada it will never be re-established.

I do hope that the Prime Minister will see the necessity of giving this legislation a trial. Let me close by saying that Moses shed the blood of his enemies, while the Lord shed his blood for his enemies.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris): Undoubtedly the hon. gentleman has given this question a great deal of thought and research. He made two very strong, if not bold, assertions. If I understood the hon. gentleman aright, he said that capital punishment is a stimulus to murder rather than a deterrent. I should like to know how the hon. gentleman came to that conclusion. One other question. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that if we are going to have capital punishment, the more public the form this punishment takes, the better.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I did not say that. I said that if you contend that capital punishment is a deterrent, then the more public it is the better.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: Looking upon 'deterrent' as applying personally to the individual concerned, I do not see how capital punishment would be a greater deterrent if the man who committed the murder were punished publicly than if the punishment were administered in private.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: If the hon. gentleman himself believes—and I know he does—that capital punishment is a deterrent, then it should be made as public as possible; hang the por man up where everyone can see him.

[Mr. Bickerdike.]

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): While I do not agree with the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I do him the credit—and I think every member in this House will do so—for the earnestness and sincerity with which he advocates what he believes to be right.

The question of capital punishment may be considered from several different viewpoints; I am going to deal with it only from one. Considering it from the viewpoint of punishment for a crime committed, I think there are worse things than hanging. If the hon. gentleman argues that the worst thing you can do to a man is to put a rope round his neck and by that means send him into eternity, then I take issue with him. After all, what are the circumstances? Occasionally a man who has committed the crime of murder pays the penalty by being hanged. Why make a fuss about an occasional hanging? Why make a fuss about the occasional taking of life in that way? Men are being murdered by the dozen in a worse way than that in our penitentiaries—the result of the administration, or mal-administration, of justice at the present time. If hanging is a crime, then I submit that worse crimes than that are committed against men. To place a man in a prison and take away from him everything but the breath of life—and that is being done right along, and apparently is being approved right along—is, in my estimation, even worse than actually to take a man's life. The hon. gentleman mentioned the case of a murder committed in the Pacific coast province, in which two men were involved. He says that only one shot was fired, and that, therefore, at least one of these men was wrongfully hanged. While I am not a lawyer, I think that the hon. gentleman is wrong in that respect; these men were both committing an unlawful act, and, consequently, were both responsible. But supposing only one of them had been hanged, and that the other had been mercifully saved and sent, we will say, to Kingston penitentiary. Let us follow the career of the poor unfortunate who goes to Kingston penitentiary. He is confined in a cell, and is allowed to go out for exercise and fresh air. He is not permitted to utter a sound; to speak a word to a guard or to a fellow convict is a misdemeanour. He is probably put on the stone pile, cracking stone month after month and year after year. He is subjected to tauntings and goadings and torturings, and if he rebels against them he is taken to a specially-constructed cell, a hose pressure of 70 pounds is turned on the poor unfortunate wretch, and he is thrown and knocked about in the cell, until, as they say, he gives in. If that treatment sends him to the hospital, on Sunday he gets three meals, the first at nine o'clock, the next at eleven and the third at one o'clock in the afternoon, and he receives nothing more until between eight and nine o'clock the next morning. Hon. gentlemen may smile at that, but I am stating what is the fact. If the man's health breaks down after that and his treatment in the institution drives him to insanity, as is frequently the case, he is taken to the insane ward, where the last final touches are administered. Forty or fifty persons are herded together in one room, the worst cases with the milder ones, the diseased persons with those whose only defect is mental derangement. They are herded together during the day and then sent into their cells, their food is handed to them and they tear it to pieces with their fingers and teeth like wild animals. If any one of them dares to utter a protest against one of the guards or keepers, the unfortunate wretch is stripped, specially constructed harness is fastened on him, his legs are bound together and his arms fastened to his side and he is dipped into a tub of ice-cold water, being left there until, as they say, he gives in. That is how the insane are treated, or some of them at least. I am stating facts. Under this treatment the men, not merely one or two but dozens, have the life and soul crushed out of them. They become indifferent, they have no hope in this world, and are made incapable of any thought of the next. That, in my judgment, is a worse penalty than hanging.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: If the hon. member makes it much worse, I shall have to ask leave to withdraw my Bill.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am stating what I know to be facts. I repeat that in my judgment such a condition is far worse than hanging. It is a condition of affairs sanctioned apparently by organized society, and is a disgrace and scandal to this country and to all the men who keep silent in this House while this sort of thing goes on. That is how I feel. I regret that the Minister of Justice has shown an apathy in regard to this matter which to my judgment is not at all to his credit. It was three years ago that I first directed his attention to the condition of affairs at Kingston penitentiary, and Kingston penitentiary is probably no worse than other penitentiaries in the country. It is high time that this state of affairs was remedied. It reflects little credit on the Department of Justice and on the members of this House to allow this state of affairs to continue. Later in the session I hope to call attention to it more in detail. I shall not support the Bill of my hon. friend because I believe that in hanging a man you are doing him a kindness by taking him out of Kingston penitentiary.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM: I shall not occupy the House very long, but I could not conscientiously let this discussion go by without expressing my opinion in favour of the measure. Since I became a man, I have always been opposed to capital punishment. I have always felt, and have no reason now to change my mind, that by legalizing the taking of the life of a fellow-being we are making ourselves familiar with the shedding of blood. I have no comment to make on the remarks of my hon. friend from Frontenac, except this: that a charge of that kind having been made publicly by a member from his seat in this House, it is the duty of the Government to look into the matter and, if conditions prevail such as have been described, to provide a remedy. Perhaps I may be considered too humane in my views concerning the duty of one man to another. I maintain that we are our brother's keeper, and no law that can be placed on the statute book of Canada or of any other country can relieve us of that obligation to our fellow-beings. Did it ever strike a member of the House who is in favour of capital punishment that he does not hob-nob with the machinery that carries out the death sentence? None of us are ever seen hob-nobbing with the hangman.

Mr BICKERDIKE: They take him to the club for lunch.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not knowingly. Another thing that strikes me as peculiar in the administration of justice is this, and it shows our inconsistency. A criminal awaiting the death sentence in one of our penitentiaries is perhaps stricken with some disease of which he might die if he were allowed to do so. But no, the greatest care is taken to keep him alive so that he may be executed a little later on. Now, if the object in the public mind was to rid society of this criminal, why not let him pass away peacefully of his disease? And the more I study criminal law, the more convinced I am of this: the public is possessed of the idea of revenge upon the man who commits murder, and that is the only reason why his life is kept in him—in order that he may be reserved for the gallows. For if it were only a question of getting rid of the criminal he might just as well be allowed to die peacefully of his own accord. Two things govern us: first, society should be protected; second, the individual should be punished. I go a litle farther and say that the criminal should be given an opportunity to reform. No man has the right to say to what length of time that opportunity should be extended. Do we, by hanging a man, protect society? Most certainly we do. Would punishment of another kind protect society just as well? On this point there is a great difference of opinion. I have given some study to the question during the years I have been in public life, and before. I have seen how many countries, one by one, have abolished capital punishment. I am not at all surprised at the figures read by my hon. friend to-day, because I am firmly convinced that capital punishment is no greater deterrent than life imprisonment, and I think the experience of the countries that have done away with hanging fully bears me out in that.

Now, as to the punishment of the individual. I would not go so far as my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and say that imprisonment is a greater punishment than hanging, but I do believe that imprisonment is as thorough a punishment as hanging. It is only a matter of degree anyway, and only those who have had the experience could give an absolute answer. For the purposes of society, a man is punished just as thoroughly by imprisonment as by hanging, and history shows that criminals consider it just as great a punishment. Some dread it even more than execution.

I shall possibly be called a sentimentalist for the remarks I shall make as to the reclamation of criminals. I know is is much more popular to say, "Away with him; he killed somebody, so he ought to be killed," than to intimate that the criminal might possibly be reclaimed and made a good citizen. I believe that no product of the Creator's handiwork but has some good in him. In most cases the surroundings of an individual in his youth have a great deal to do with his after-life. But, I repeat, I am a firm believer that there is in every man an element of good which can be developed and fructified if found and properly nurtured. If it be true that society is protected as thoroughly by imprisonment as by hanging, and that imprisonment is a sufficient punishment, you do not by imprisonment deprive the individual of the opportunity of being reclaimed and made what the Creator intended he should be made, in a measure at least—a respectable man, before he is called to pass from this life. By capital punishment we say: "You must die on a certain day, and, in the words of the judge, may the Lord have mercy on your soul." We undertake, as a human agency, to give a man so many days to get ready for heaven, and if he cannot then he takes the consequences. We have no right to take that position, and I do not think we protect society any more by doing it. I do not believe that we punish the individual any more, and we do take from him every opportunity that he would otherwise have, perhaps during the long years of imprisonment, of becoming a man again and of making himself right in so far as possible with his fellow men in this world and with his Creator in the eternity that is before him. I go as far as my hon. friend goes in saying that I do not believe that any human being under any guise of law, under any statute that he may invoke, has the right to step in and assume the prerogative of the Creator himself and take life, with the giving of which he has had nothing to do. This may be a sentiment, but it is a sentiment I strongly entertain. I entertain it conscientiously, and so long as I am in this House I shall vote for the abolition of capital punishment, because I believe it is wrong and affords no protection to society.

Mr. G. W. KYTE (Richmond, N.S.): I was not present when this Bill was discussed on a former occasion, but the grounds I take for opposing the Bill are as sincere as the sentiments that have prompted the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), to propose this legislation. It speaks well for his humanity and his philanthropic disposition that he should present this legislation to the House. His description of execution by form of law as being legalized murder has its counterpart in another obligation which rests upon the Government in respect to the raising of revenue for carrying on the affairs of the country. I have heard in days past a certain form of taxation described as being legalized robbery, in the same way as the hon. member for St. Lawrence, Montreal, describes executions under forms of law as being legalized murder. If we go to Great Britain for a precedent in this respect, what do we find? We find that fifty years ago they abolished that form of legalized robbery, but that up to the present time they have adhered to this form of legalized murder. I think we may fairly go to the mother country for our precedent and guidance in this particular. My hon. friend has quoted figures calculated to show that in certain states of the American Union where capital punishment has been abolished, the number of charges of homicide has very considerably decreased. But I have listened to temperance orators describing the advantages of total prohibition in certain of these states, and they have attributed the extraordinary decrease of crime within these states to the existence of total prohibition. Michigan and Wisconsin are two of the states which my hon. friend has referred to as being examples of those where crime has decreased by reason of capital punishment having been abolished. I think that Michigan and Wisconsin are also states that are enjoying the advantages of a prohibitory law, and the advocates of prohibition lose no opportunity of attributing the decrease in these forms of crime to temperance legislation. My hon. friend also refers to several countries in Europe where capital punishment has been abolished. I remember that on more than one occasion during the last three years the hon. gentleman having charge of the administration of justice in this Government has felt himself called upon to propose legislation in this House calculated to reduce the number of crimes committed particularly in the city of Montreal by reason of the privileges hitherto enjoyed by certain citizens there in respect to the carrying of concealed weapons. How is it that the crimes of murder, manslaughter and the various forms of homicide which this legislation was designed to suppress were committed largely by the subjects of those countries in Europe that have abolished capital punishment?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: They do not commit them where there is no capital punishment but they come here and commit them.

Mr. KYTE: It does not indicate that the abolition of capital punishment in these countries has had a very salutary effect upon the character of their subjects. I might say, in regard to the criminal statistics in Nova Scotia, that it is quite true that in the last ten years crimes have increased in the province. But who committed them? They are committed by subjects of those countries in Europe where capital punishment has been abolished. I respect the humane instincts of the people of the United States who have been led to adopt the reform which my hon. friend from St. Lawrence, Montreal, is endeavouring to bring about, but we do know that crime and sentimentality are inextricably interwoven in certain parts of that country. There is a certain degree of sentimentality in respect to these things that is not at all creditable to those indulging in it. We hear of cases where men who have committed the most degrading crimes are, while awaiting sentence of the court, the subjects of the most touching marks of favour and sentiment. We do know that criminals who have been convicted of the most revolting crimes, while awaiting in prison the period of execution, have been visited by respectable people who have bestowed upon these criminals presents and testimonials of a character which do not suggest that these people are actuated by purposes or motives altogether calculated to put an end to these grave offences. There are certain forms of sentimentality which have been manifested that it is not well that we should copy in this country. We know that in the United States they have a record for defences on behalf of those who are charged with these grave crimes. It has been given to the legal profession of the United States to create the brain-storm defence and the defence of the higher law when their clients are charged with offences which are most revolting and which ought to be punished in the severest manner.

If we desire to take our example from any country it should be taken from the mother country which has a record for humanity and philanthropy not excelled by that of any country in the world. There they exercise the right to enforce capital punishment, but capital punishment is limited to three offences only, and as a matter of fact it is only meted out in respect to one, that is murder. With respect to manslaughter and other forms of homicide capital punishment is not inflicted. I think the humanity of the British people ought not to be challenged or inhumanity attributed to them because throughout the ages for the highest good they have adhered to capital punishment in respect to that offence. It is quite true that in days gone by capital punishment was inflicted in England in respect of many offences which to-day appear to us trivial, but the fact that they have eliminated capital punishment for all other crimes except murder goes to show that the criminal law has been developed in the direction of the widest sympathy for erring humanity, and the reasons that they adhere to capital punishment in the administration of the criminal law of England, as respects murder, ought to be sufficient for us to follow the examples which have guided us for so many years. We may, therefore, be pardoned if we fail to accept the reasoning or the sentiment applied to the question by my hon. friend.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I appreciate, in common with the other members who have listened to the hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike), the earnestness and sincerity with which he has presented his views, even if we do not concur in all the conclusions he has reached after his consideration of the subject. All the members of the House are impressed with the very great importance of this question. I do not purpose debating the matter this afternoon, because it is desirable that the Minister of Justice should speak on this motion before the debate is concluded. Before moving the adjournment of the debate, I would like to say to my hon. friend that we shall see that an opportunity shall be afforded him of having the debate continued.

With regard to the observations of my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), I may say that I remember that an investigation was held into the condition in the Kingston penitentiary, and that the report of that commission, after careful investigation disclosed that certain abuses prevailed. I would be surprised if the abuses to which my hon. friend has alluded have been allowed to continue in Kingston penitentiary since, and I would also be surprised to learn that they exist in all the penitentiaries in Canada. However, that is a matter as to which I have no personal knowledge. It is a subject peculiarly within the knowledge of the Minister of Justice, who unfortunately cannot be here to-day. For that reason also it is highly desirable that the debate should be adjourned, in order that the attention of the Minister of Justice may be directed to the observations of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). As to the insane who have been confined in penitentiaries, I understand that negotiations have been going on for some time past, between the Minister of Justice and the various provincial authorities, with the view to an arrangement by which insane prisoners should be transferred to asylums under the control and jurisdiction of the provincial authorities. Although the information comes to my knowledge indirectly in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I understand that arrangements have been consummated with all the provinces of Canada except one, and from that province there are only two insane persons confined in the penitentiary, as to whom a suitable arrangement will be made. However, I am not in a position to give the House this afternoon a full explanation which will be afforded by the Minister of Justice later on. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions to be answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

WAR CONTRACTS—HAY.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. With what persons, firms or corporations has the Department of Agriculture, or any other department of the Government of Canada, contracted for hay for the British Government, since the first day of August last past?

2. How much hay has been delivered by each of the said persons, firms or corporations since that date, and the places of delivery thereof?

3. What price, or prices, was paid to each of the said persons, firms or corporations for the hay when delivered to the Government, and the several ports or points of delivery?

4. Into how many cubic feet per ton was the said hay to be compressed, and what was to be the size and weight of each of the said bales?

5. Has the Government, or any department thereof, paid any such persons, firms or corporations, for the compressing of the said hay, the actual article having been furnished by the Government, or a department thereof? If so, what persons, firms or corporations did the compressing, and what price per ton were they paid for so doing?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I would ask that this question stand as a notice of motion for a return. There is some question as to the extent to which it should be answered in view of the precedent which was laid down some years ago, and there are other considerations which I shall be glad to mention to the House when the motion comes up at a later date.

Question to stand as notice of motion for a return.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—RIVER DU LOUP SHOPS.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. How many persons were employed at the River du Loup car shops of the Intercolonial railway, in the locomotive sheds and in the repairs establishment, respectively, from September, 1911, to 1st January, 1915?

2. How many of such persons were discharged, dismissed or suspended during the said period of time?

3. How many of such persons willingly accepted superannuation, and how many demurred when superannuated?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Car or repair shop, 38; locomotive sheds, 114.

2. Car or repair shop, 3; locomotive shed, 11.

3. 8 willingly accepted. Two demurred, but were superannuated on account of their age and disability.

MR. F. P. GUTELIUS.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Has the Department of Railways and Canals, the minister, or the Government any information regarding the nationality of Mr. F. P. Gutelius, general manager of Government railways? If so, what is his nationality? If not, will such information be obtained?

2. Has the said F. P. Gutelius sent in his resignation, or has notice been sent him to this effect?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. British subject.

2. No.

BAGOT COUNTY POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. MARCILE:

1. Has the post office at Royville, county of Bagot, been permanently closed? If so, for what reason?

2. Have the citizens of the said post office district protested against its closing and will said post office be re-opened?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Yes, the Royville Post Office has been closed, the establishment of rural mail delivery in the district having rendered its further maintenance unnecessary.

2. No protest has been received.

Mr. MARCILE:

1. Has the Moose River post office, county of Bagot, been permanently closed? If so, for what reason?

2. Who recommended the closing of said post office?

3. Does the Postmaster General know that the closing of said post office is said to be detrimental to the inhabitants of this district?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. The Moose River Post Office has been closed owing to the establishment of rural mail delivery in the district, which rendered the Post Office unnecessary.

2 and 3. The Post Office inspector reported that the closing of this office would not inconvenience any of the patrons, as all would come within the scope of rural delivery.

Mr. MARCILE:

1. Has a rural mail service been established in the parish of Ste. Christine, county of Bagot. If so, when?

2. Were tenders called for said service? If so, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender?

3. Who obtained the contract and was he the lowest tenderer?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Yes, on the 20th January, 1915.

2 and 3. Tenders were invited. Only one tender was received, that of Barthelemi Bisaillon at $800 per annum. This tender was considered too high and Mr. Bisaillon agreed to reduce the amount to $775 which was accepted.

Mr. MARCILE:

1. Has the post office of the village of Emileville, county of Bagot, been permanently closed? If so, for what reason?

2. Was a petition received by the Postmaster General requesting that said post office be maintained? If so, is it the intention of the Postmaster General to authorize its re-opening?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. No, the Emileville Post Office has not been closed.

2. No petition has been received.

Mr. MARCILE:

1. Has the Britannia Mills post office, county of Bagot, been permanently closed? If so, for what reason?

2. Has a petition, signed by a large number of citizens requesting the maintenance of said post office been received by the Postmaster General? If so, is it the intention of the Postmaster General to accede to the said petitioner's request?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. No. Britannia Mills Post Office has not been closed.

2. A petition asking for the maintenance of this Post Office was received at the Department and steps have been taken to have further inquiry made before a decision is given.

PROPOSED WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. In case of death of a member of the Canadian overseas contingent, what consideration is received by his dependents?

2. Is it the intention of the Government at this session to provide by legislation or otherwise, for pensions for disabled members of Canadian overseas contingents or to the dependents of deceased members of such contingents?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. There are regulations in force at present governing the consideration that is to be received by way of pension. A revision of those regulations has been under consideration for some weeks past, and I anticipate that a final conclusion will be reached at a very early date.

2. I am advised by the Minister of Justice that it will not be necessary to pass any additional legislation.

SOUTHAMPTON RAILWAY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. What is the total amount paid to date re Southampton railway investigation?
2. According to the claims filed, what amounts are still demanded?
3. How much has been paid respectively to each of the following persons, viz:—E. J. Walsh, A. J. Milden, James K. Pender, David W. Brown and Titus J. Carter?
4. What amounts claimed by each of the above persons still remain unpaid?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $8,482.02.

2. None.

3. E. J. Walsh, C.E., $2,029.55; A. J. Milden, C.E., $840.70; Jas. K. Pender, paid nothing by the department; David W. Brown, paid nothing by the department; T. J. Carter, K.C., $941.85.

4. None.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. With reference to paragraph 14 of the findings of R. A. Pringle, a commissioner for investigating certain charges re the Southampton Railway Company, has the Government or any department thereof taken any steps to recover the sum of $34,607.50 which amount was found to have been overpaid to the said company?
2. Has the Government commenced criminal proceedings against James K. Pender or David W. Brown in connection therewith?
3. If not, is it their intention so to do?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. The Department of Justice has the case under consideration, with instructions to proceed for the recovery of any moneys which the Government is entitled to recover.

2. No.

3. This matter is also under consideration by the Department of Justice.

THE VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Under the present agreement for the operation of the Valley railway, so called, between Fredericton and Centreville, in the province of New Brunswick, what proportion of the gross receipts are retained by the Intercolonial railway?
2. To whom is the balance of the said gross receipts to be paid?
3. In case of a loss in the operation of the said railway, what portion thereof is borne by the Intercolonial railway?
4. In such case, who bears the balance of said loss?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. None.

2. See answer to No. 1.

3. Fifty per cent.

4. Province of New Brunswick.

RIVER JOHN CUSTOMS SUB-COLLECTORSHIP.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has any appointment been made to the position of subcollector of customs at River John, Pictou county, vacant by the death of Mr. Henry?
2. Does the Government intend to maintain said office?
3. If so, when do they intend to make an appointment?

Mr. REID:

1. No permanent appointment has been made to this position.

2. Yes.

3. The position of sub-collector will be filled ere long. The duties of the position are now attended to temporarily by an officer from the customs house, Pictou.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—OXFORD JUNCTION-NEW GLASGOW BRANCH.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Why was one of the regular trains taken off the short line between Oxford Junction and New Glasgow on February 8?
2. Has the department received any representations to objections to same?
3. Does the department intend to put on said train again? If so, when?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No schedule train was taken off the short line between Oxford Junction and New Glasgow. The way freight was taken off and its work is now being done by the regular mixed train.

2. No.

3. Way freight or extra freight trains will be run as business requires.

WRENTHAM, ALTA., POST OFFICE.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Was a post office established at Wrentham, Alberta?
2. Is it still in existence?
3. If not, for what reason was it closed?

Mr. CASGRAIN: A post office has not yet been opened at Wrentham, and therefore the office has not been closed. Complaints were made against the person nominated as postmaster; but on inquiry no evidence was adduced to sustain the charge, and shortly afterwards he left the locality. Another nomination has been made, and the office will be opened immediately.

LETHBRIDGE POSTMASTER.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Who is the postmaster at Lethbridge, Alberta?
2. On whose recommendation was he appointed?
3. What is his salary?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Mr. Alvin Ripley.
2. On recommendation of Mr. W. S. Ball, president of the Conservative Association, Lethbridge.
3. $2,200 per annum.

IMPORTATION OF OIL FOR FUEL.

Mr. WILLIAM CHISHOLM:

1. How many tons of oil for fuel has been imported into Canada from April 1 to December 31, 1914, and what was the value of the same?
2. Has any duty been paid on such importations?

Mr. REID:

1. Imports entered for consumption in Canada of petroleum, crude, fuel and gas oils, ·8235 specific gravity or heavier at 60 degrees temperature, amounted to 149,419,923 gallons, valued at $4,217,336; under provisions of tariff item 267.
2. No duty was collected on the above.

PICTOU ISLAND TO MAINLAND PROPOSED TELEPHONE LINE.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has the Department of Public Works or Marine and Fisheries received any requests for the construction of a telephone line between Pictou Island and the mainland?
2. What action is proposed to be taken in regard to the same?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. The matter is under consideration.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. What was the total receipts of the Intercolonial railway from April 1, 1914, to December 31, 1914?
2. What was the total expenditure on the Intercolonial railway in the same period?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $8,913,100.11, exclusive of free shipments for Belgian relief, amounting to $44,600.
2. $8,859,950.80.

FORT ERIE SHOOTING CASE.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the Government retained counsel to defend Corporal Archie Kaye and Privates Leslie Kinsman and Edmund MacIntosh, now awaiting trial for the shooting of the American duck-hunters, Smith and Dorsch, at or near Fort Erie on the 28th of December last?
2. Will the Government also provide counsel for the defence of Constable Thomas Delaney who was committed for trial with the three militiamen on the same charge? If not, why not?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The answer to the both questions is in the negative.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the Government paid, or agreed to pay, any sum to the legal representatives of Walter Smith, who was killed, and to Charles Dorsch who was wounded by three militiamen, at or near Fort Erie, on the 28th of December last?
2. If so, what are the terms of the statement?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. Yes.
2. The Government have paid $10,000 to the mother of Walter Smith, and $5,000 to Charles Dorsch as an act of grace for the shooting which occurred at Fort Erie on the 28th December, 1914. The sum of $2,250 has been paid for legal and other expenses incurred by the parties.

CANADIAN PATRIOTIC FUND.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. What are the names and addresses of the persons employed to administer and distribute the Canadian Patriotic Fund?
2. What salary is paid to each?
3. What was the total amount paid for salaries and expenses up to February 1, 1915?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Government has no information on this subject; but it can easily be procured by application to the Association. The Association carries on its work under chapter 8 of the Statutes passed at the last session of Parliament, by which His Royal Highness the Governor General, the Lieutenant Governors of each of the provinces, the Prime Minister, and the leader of the Opposition of the Parliament of Canada, the Prime Ministers of the several provinces, and a number of other gentlemen were constituted into a body corporate under the name of the Canadian Patriotic Fund. The objects of the corporation and the purposes for which it was formed have been fully set forth in the Act alluded to.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Delisle: For a return showing how many persons of German nationality are employed in the several departments of the Federal Government, in what official capacity they are employed and the salaries they receive respectively.

Mr. McCraney: For a return showing how many applications for seed grain have been received from residents of the three Prairie provinces since June, 1914; how many bushels of grain were included in the applications; how many acres of land were to be seeded by the grain applied for; how many bushels of wheat, oats and barley, respectively, the Government has on hand with which to meet the applications; if arrangements have been made under which the several provincial governments will assist in meeting the needs of the settlers for seed grain.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

Monday, February 15, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Interim report of the Commissioners of the Transcontinental railway for the period of nine months ended December 31, 1914.—Mr. Cochrane.

Correspondence with regard to the retirement from the Government of Hon. L. P. Pelletier and Hon. W. B. Nantel.—Sir Robert Borden.

Report of the board of officers concerning the boots supplied to the expeditionary force.—Major-General Hughes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

APPOINTMENT OF TRANSLATORS.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the recommendation of His Honour the Speaker as to the appointments of Messrs Jules Tremblay, Paul Gédéon Ouimet, J. T. Keliher and L. J. Chagnon as translators of the blue book staff of the House, presented to the House on the 10th instant, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

WAR SUPPLIES—BOOTS.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: With regard to the report of the departmental committee which had under consideration the character, quality and suitability of the boots supplied to the first Canadian contingent, laid on the table of the House to-day, I think it desirable and in the public interest, and also due to the various manufacturers who supplied the boots, that the report of the committee and all matters which it concerns should be referred to a special committee of the House, in order that the subject may be further investigated, if desirable, and that the committee may report to the House in due course its findings with regard to the whole matter. Accordingly, I shall move to-morrow, when motions are called, that a committee of seven members be appointed for that purpose. If my right hon. friend will give me to-day the names of three hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, I shall be glad to have their names included in the list of members of the committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: On Wednesday, February 10, the following questions were asked by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair):

1. Has an investigation been made regarding the quality of the boots supplied to the Department of Militia and Defence for the use of the Canadian volunteers?
2. If so, who made this investigation and has the inquiry been closed?

The answers given by the Minister of Militia were as follows:

1. Yes.
2. Board appointed by the Minister of Militia. The inquiry has been closed.

There was in the press some time ago a report that the Minister of Militia had instituted inquiries in his own department, and it was also stated in the press that an inquiry had been instituted by a commission appointed by the Government for the purpose. Is it true that a commission has been appointed to conduct an investigation into this matter?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The inquiry was a departmental one, made, I understand, by a board appointed by the Minister of Militia.

REPORTED APPEARANCE OF AEROPLANES.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: A report appeared in the public press to-day to the effect that aeroplanes coming from the United States had been sighted. Can the right hon. Prime Minister give me any information on this point?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am afraid that I am unable to give the point of departure of the aeroplanes in question. The only information I have on the subject is that about nine o'clock last evening the mayor of Brockville telephoned to me that three aeroplanes had crossed over Brockville, going to the north, and that one of them had turned a searchlight upon the town, lighting up very considerably the principal street. On receiving the information I communicated it to the chief of the general staff, with the suggestion that it should also be made known to the Commissioner of Dominion Police.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. O. TURGEON: (Gloucester, N.B.): I rise to a question of privilege. My attention has been called to an article in the St. John Standard of the 11th instant, in which certain assertions of mine are misrepresented. I am reported as having used the following words at a recruiting meeting:

> I do not see how Britain can expect the men of Gloucester county to volunteer or enlist to fight her battles when they are obliged to leave their homes and go to the United States to earn their living and a living for their families.

I brand that report as an infamous distortion of fact and language. Others may call it what they wish, but that is what I think of it. I believe that no member of this House—especially you, Mr. Speaker, who have heard practically all my utterances in this Parliament during the last fifteen years—would say that I would use these remarks before the people of Gloucester county. I believe too that the diatribes contained in that report are not the views of the editor who wrote it. It has been published, no doubt for a purpose, one month after I made the declaration in Tracadie; but every man from New Brunswick knows that I was the first to organize and call recruiting meetings in Gloucester county and along the north shore of New Brunswick, as is shown by the correspondence with the Canadian Patriotic Committee of St. John, New Brunswick, of which His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick is president and Mr. Jas. Gilchrist is secretary. At my instance, eloquent speakers have attended these meetings. One of them in Bathurst was addressed by a gentleman whose name is familiar throughout New Brunswick, more particularly to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. F. M. Sproule, a member of the legal profession, an ex-member of the legislature, one of the most eloquent speakers it has ever been my pleasure to listen to, and the next morning fifteen or seventeen young men from Bathurst enlisted before dinner. If I had allowed this statement to go without contradiction some one, not in this House or in New Brunswick, might have believed it. I did not wait until war was declared to pronounce my allegiance or my loyalty to the Crown. My allegiance was my birthright and my loyalty has grown stronger with each year of my life. At the last meeting I addressed I did say, at the end of my remarks, after calling on the young men to enlist, that the young men of the county of Gloucester had not responded as generously as I had expected, although more generously than those of any of the surrounding counties. The number was not to my satisfaction. I said that, owing to the hard times prevailing in Gloucester since the year before, owing to the depression of business, such as the closing of the iron mine at Bathurst by which three or four hundred men were thrown out of employment, many of whom had gone to the United States and were therefore not here to enlist, a larger number should have gone to the front. I shall not take up your time by reading the diatribe against me that follows, as I have said I do not think that the editor of the Standard himself believes it. If any further explanation is required at any time I shall be glad to give it.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 4, respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company.—Mr. Michael Clark.

Bill No. 5, respecting the Athabasca and Grand Prairie Railway Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 6, respecting the Brantford and Hamilton Electric Railway Company.—Mr. Barker.

Bill No. 7, respecting the British Columbia and White River Railway Company.—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 8, respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 9, respecting the Essex Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Wilcox.

Bill No. 10, respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. E. M. Macdonald.

Bill No. 11, respecting The Hudson Bay, Peace River and Pacific Railway Company, and to change its name to Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

Bill No. 12, to amend the Independent Order of Foresters Consolidated Act.—Mr. Glass.

Bill No. 13, respecting the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill No. 14, to ratify and confirm a certain agreement between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill No. 15, respecting certain patents of Duncan Donald McBean.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 16, respecting The Title and Trust Company, and to change its name to Chartered Trust and Executor Company.—Mr. Nesbitt.

Bill No. 17, respecting The Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

Bill No. 20, respecting The Canadian Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Bradbury.

Bill No. 21, respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Blain.

Bill No. 22, respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Mr. Guilbault.

Bill No. 23, respecting the James Bay and Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

Bill No. 24, respecting the Ottawa and New York Railway Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 25, respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Smith.

Bill No. 26, respecting the Southern Central Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 27, respecting the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 28, respecting the Toronto Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Smith.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT LOANS TO CANADA.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Has the Government made arrangements with the Bank of England to borrow certain sums of money?

2. If so, how much has been borrowed up to date?

3. How much money is borrowed each month?

4. What is the total amount the Government has arranged to borrow up to the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

Arrangements were effected under which up to 31st March next His Majesty's Government lends to the Government of the Dominion of Canada the sum of £12,000,000. Of this sum £5,000,000 was advanced by the Bank of England for the Imperial Government up to the 24th December. To date the sum of £8,000,000 has in this manner been borrowed.

ISSUES OF DOMINION NOTES.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Has the Minister of Finance exceeded his authority and issued Dominion notes beyond what have been authorized by Statute?

2. On what authority were these notes issued?

3. What amount of Dominion notes have been issued over and above what is authorized by Statute?

4. When was this additional issue distributed?

5. Was any portion given to the Canadian Northern Railway Company? If so, how much?

6. On what authority did the Minister of Finance hand over to the Canadian Northern Railway Company this money?

7. If by Order in Council, what is the date or dates that authority was given?

8. How much money was given to the Canadian Northern Railway Company on this authority and what are the dates?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

Issues of Dominion notes were made by the Minister of Finance under the authority of Orders in Council as follows:—

(a) $10,000,000 in order that certain obligations of Canada might be met as they matured. These issues were made at various dates after November 2, 1914.

(b) $10,000,000 advanced to the Canadian Northern Railway Company upon the security of $12,500,000 of that company's four per cent debenture stock guaranteed by the Dominion under the provisions of The Canadian Northern Railway Guarantee Act, 1914. These sums were placed to the credit of the Minister of Finance and paid out under the provisions of the deed of trust securing the issue of said debenture stock. This advance is repayable, May 1, 1915, with interest at five per cent per annum.

Particulars: $2,500,000—Order in Council, September 5, 1914; $2,500,000—Order in Council, September 26, 1914; $2,000,000—Order in Council, October 24, 1914; $2,000,000—Order in Council, November 20, 1914; $1,000,000—Order in Council, December 16, 1914.

(c) $6,000,000 advanced to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company upon the security of $7,500,000 of that company's four per cent bonds guaranteed by the Dominion under the provisions of The Grand Trunk Pacific Guarantee Act, 1914. These sums were placed to the credit of the Minister of Finance and paid out under the provisions of the deed of trust securing the issue of said bonds. This advance is repayable May 1, 1915, with interest at five per cent per annum.

Particulars: $2,000,000—Order in Council, September 5, 1914; $2,000,000—Order in Council, September 26, 1914; $1,000,000—Order in Council, October 24, 1914; $1,000,000—Order in Council, November 20, 1914.

BORROWINGS BY CANADIAN BANKS FROM THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Have any of the Canadian banks taken advantage of the special Act passed at the last session of Parliament and borrowed sums of money from the Government?
2. If so, what banks have availed themselves of this opportunity, and what amounts has each one borrowed?
3. Have any of the banks paid back any portion of this money? If so, what amount?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

The sum of $14,439,767.55 was borrowed by Canadian banks from the Government under the provisions of The Finance Act, 1914. Of this sum $7,047,267.55 has been repaid.

Mr. KYTE: I wish to say to the Minister of Finance that his answer to this question is not complete. The first part of the question asks if any of the Canadian banks had taken advantage of the special Act passed at the last Session of Parliament and borrowed sums of money from the Treasury, and the second part of the question asks what banks have availed themselves of this opportunity and what amounts has each borrowed. The Minister in his answer has not given the names of the banks or the amounts borrowed by them.

Mr. WHITE: The Government does not regard it as expedient to give detailed information as to the advances made to individual banks. This policy follows the precedent established in 1907, when loans were made through the Bank of Montreal and details were not only not given as to loans to banks but are not even of record in the Department of Finance. I do not make this statement by way of criticism, because I think it was sound policy. There is another reason which I am sure will appeal to my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) why detailed information should not be given. In the letter which I addressed to the several chartered banks on September 5, 1914, giving notice of the proclamation which was issued by the Government under the authority of the Finance Act passed at the special war session in August, I stated:

> All applications to the Treasury Board will be regarded as confidential, and it is my earnest hope that we shall have the hearty co-operation of the banks in bringing into effect the new legislation.

Under all the circumstances it would seem to me that my hon. friend might possibly be disposed to refrain from pressing his application for particulars.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: At this moment I express no opinion as to whether or not the information should be given to the House; I simply call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the precedent of 1907, when, if my memory serves me, the advances were made either to the Bank of Montreal itself or upon guarantee of the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. WHITE: My right hon. friend is correct in this, that the Bank of Montreal made and guaranteed the advances, but that does not at all alter the fact that advances were made to banks from Dominion funds. There was the additional security of the guarantee of the Bank of Montreal, but there is no distinction in principle. If it is advisable to make public details of loans made to the banks upon any security, it would appear to me that the same principle would apply, although the security is enhanced by a guarantee of a bank, even though that bank may be an institution such as the Bank of Montreal. The principle is the same: Advances were made in Dominion notes upon security.

There is the further consideration, not necessary for me to emphasize unduly, that last September it was very desirable in the public interest that the banks should be made to feel quite free to avail themselves of this legislation which had a two-fold object, namely, first, to conserve the gold supply of Canada, and, secondly, to enable the banks the better to supply the commercial needs of the community. In those circumstances, I wrote the banks pointing out that such was the object of the legislation; and in order that they might be more readily induced to avail themselves of its provisions, I stated, as I have already mentioned to the House, that their applications would be regarded as confidential. Under those circumstances, I think it would be a violation of the understanding between them and the Government that we should bring down details. As a matter of fact, the total amount advanced the banks has been comparatively small, as shown by the answer to the question of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), and a substantial part has already been repaid.

BUILDINGS RENTED BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TURRIFF:

1. How many buildings have been rented by the Government in the city of Ottawa since October 1, 1911?
2. Who are the owners of the said buildings?
3. Where are said buildings situated?
4. What rent per annum is paid for each building or part of building?
5. For what term are said buildings rented?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Thirty-six buildings.

2, 3, 4 and 5. Wm. A. Allan and S. H. Fleming; 2 rooms in Victoria Chambers; $1,080; 1 year to 20th April, 1915.

Sir H. N. Bate Realty Corporation; Suite No. 6 Aylmer Annex; $648; 19th August, 1914, to 30th September, 1915.

Sir H. N. Bate Realty Corporation; Suite No. 7, Aylmer Annex; $360; 17 months to 1st October, 1915.

Russell Blackburn; 2 rooms, 1st floor, 209 Sparks st.; $350; 1st May, 1914, to 1st May, 1916.

R. L. & R. Blackburn; Room 414, Union Bank Building; $371; 1 year to 9th November, 1915.

R. L. & R. Blackburn; part of 2nd floor and part of 3rd floor, and whole of 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th floors of eastern portion of the Union Bank Building; $28,986; 5 years to 16th July, 1918.

R. L. & R. Blackburn; 6 floors, Union Bank Building; $13,000; 5 years to 6th January, 1917.

R. L. & R. Blackburn; Rooms 608, 609 and 607, Union Bank Building; $1,154; 1st August, 1914, to 15th July, 1918.

R. L. & R. Blackburn; front room in basement, Union Bank Building; $350; 1 year to 21st August, 1915.

C. Jackson Booth; 3 upper floors of Booth Building; $16,495; 5 years to 1st November, 1918.

Bryson Realty Co.; 4 floors above ground floor in Lessors' Building on Queen St.; $8,596; 5 years to 25th April, 1919.

Bytown & Suburb Land Co.; 105 Murray St. (storage Printing Bureau); $2,390; 5 years to 14th July, 1919.

Wm. D. Morris; top floor Capital Building; $1,500; 2 years to 17th April, 1915.

Capital Storage Co. Ltd.; basement 136 Emmett St.; $1,650; from 13th August, 1914, to end of war should it be longer than one year.

Eva C. Carling; 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th floors, Carling Building, east side Bank, between Sparks and Queen Sts.; $13,000; 5 years from date of occupation, in January, 1914.

W. D. Morris, D. M. Finnie; property 128 Wellington St.; $4,000; 3 years to 20th November, 1915.

John M. Garland; 2 top floors of Imperial Building, corner Queen and O'Connor Sts.; $2,500; 1st November, 1912, to 1st October, 1916.

James Hope & Sons; third floor of Hope Building corner Sparks and Elgin sts.; $2,500; 3 years to 29th January, 1916.

Frank Jarman; 1st 2 flats and basement—326 and 328 Queen st.; $1,560; 3 years to 1st April, 1916.

Journal Printing Co.; 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th floors Journal Building; $11,592; 5 years to 12th January, 1919.

Journal Printing Co.; 770 square feet on 6th floor; $539; year to year.

Journal Printing Co.; 621 sq. feet in basement; $434.70; year to year.

P. Labelle; Building of Lessor corner York and Dalhousie sts.; $11,500; 5 years to 2nd January, 1919.

J. P. Laurin; brick building 95 George st.; $1,200; 2 years to 1st May, 1915.

Lord Furniture Co.; premises 2 stories high—64 and 66 George st.; $1,800; 15th February, 1914 to 20th February, 1916.

Dr. Frederick McKinnon; house 72 Elgin st.; $780; one year to 9th October, 1915.

E. R. McNeill & R. G. Stewart; 3rd and 4th floors Lessor's Building 198 and 200 Queen st.; $1,850; 5 years to 5th Sept., 1916.

W. H. Martin; basement of 174, 176 and 178 Wellington St.; $900; 3 years to 14th Dec., 1916.

Ottawa Masonic Temple Co.; ground floor and 1st floor New Masonic Temple; $6,141; 5 years to 15th November, 1918.

Robert E. Powell; premises 221 and 223 Queen st.; $900; 1 year to 1st March, 1914 (vacated.)

Quebec Buildings Ltd.; 5 rooms on 2nd floor and 2 on 3rd floor, Quebec Bank Building; Wellington st.; $1,200; 1 year to 1st May, 1915.

A. E. Rea & Co., Ltd.; 3 upper stories of Rea Building corner Rideau and Sussex sts.; $44,034 90; 5 years to 9th September, 1919.

Rideau Club; premises in Rideau Club Building; $1,800; 5 years to 1st May, 1917.

Hiram Robinson; whole of Robinson

Block, S. side Queen st.; between Metcalfe and Elgin sts.; $15,200; 3 years to 1st Sept.; 1915.

J. L. Rochester et al.; premises 126 Queen st.; $900; to 1st May, 1916.

W. H. Stroud; 2 flats building 109 on Rideau st.; $1,677; 1st August, 1914; to 20th February, 1916.

ALLEGED DESTRUCTION OF MILITARY PROPERTY.

Mr. MARCILE:

Is the Minister of Militia aware that a quantity of blankets, saddles, boots and food was burned about the time the expeditionary force of volunteers departed from camp at Valcartier? If so, what are the reasons therefor?

Major-General HUGHES: No military property of any value was destroyed. Some property of civilian pattern brought into camp was destroyed, as was also some obsolete and worn out uniforms and some worthless articles not worth cost of removal. These latter are authorized under regulations to be destroyed on the certificate of the Senior Ordnance Officer, and under his supervision. Report of the Board herewith (filed with Clerk of the House.)

WAR SUPPLIES—BOOTS.

Mr. MARCILE:

1. How many pairs of boots were purchased for the first expeditionary force of volunteers?
2. From whom were such boots purchased, and what was the price paid per pair?
3. Were the boots supplied satisfactory?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. 65,000.

2. From Ames, Holden, McCready, Ltd., Montreal, $3·85 per pr.; Tetrault Mfg. Co., Montreal, $3·85 per pr.; The Slater Shoe Co., Montreal, $3·85 per pr.; Louis Gauthier Co., Quebec, $3·85 per pr.; John Macpherson Co., Hamilton, $3·85 per pr.; Hartt Boot and Shoe Co., Fredericton, $3·66 2-3 per pr.; Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., Nova Scotia, $3·80 per pr.

3. Yes, taking into consideration the short time allowed for manufacture.

WAR SUPPLIES—HORSES.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. How many horses were shipped to England with the first contingent?
2. What was their purchase price?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Total horses shipped to England with first contingent, 8,393.

2. Average price paid, $173·32.

WAR SUPPLIES—MEDICAL.

Mr. KYTE:

1. From whom were medical supplies purchased in Ottawa for the equipment of the first Canadian contingent?
2. Did one Mr. J. E. Powell supply a quantity of medical supplies and bandages to the Government for the first Canadian contingent?
3. If so, what amount was paid to Mr. Powell for these supplies?
4. Is Mr. Powell's place of business in Ottawa?
5. Did Mr. Powell solicit these orders or did some one act for him?
6. If so, what is the name of the person who acted for him?
7. Were steps taken to see that the prices charged for these goods were fair and reasonable?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Supplies for the medical services for the first expeditionary force were obtained from: Canadian Milk Products Co., Toronto; Ingram & Bell, Ltd., Toronto; Hartz Co., Ltd., J. F., Toronto; Wood, W. Lloyd, Toronto; Murray-Kay, Ltd., Toronto; Burroughs Wellcome Co., Montreal; Chapman, J. H., Montreal; Davidson Mfg. Co., Thos., Montreal; Frosst Co., Ltd., C. E., Montreal; Gilmour Bros. & Co. (agents, Johnston & Johnston), Montreal; Lymans, Ltd., Montreal; National Drug & Chemical Co., (agents, Seabury & Johnston), Montreal; Canadian Red Cross Society, Montreal; Mothersill Remedy Co., Detroit; Stott & Jury, Bowmanville; H. K. Mulford Co., Ltd., Philadelphia; S. S. White Dental Co., Philadelphia; Chandler & Fisher, Ltd., Winnipeg; Eimer & Amend, New York; Kny-Scheerer Co., New York; Whitall & Tatum Co., New York; I. Flack, London, England; Idris & Co., London, England; Baird & Tatlock, London, England; Birkett, T. & Son, Ottawa; Brownlee, T. A., Ottawa; Eddy, E. B. & Co., Ottawa; Graham, Weldon J., Ottawa; Harrison, R. I., Ottawa; Macdonald & Co., W. B., Ottawa; Oliver & Sons, Ltd., J., Ottawa; Ottawa Truss & Surgical Co., Ottawa; Plant, F. H. (successors to Watson Carriage Co.), Ottawa; Powell, E. (agent, Bauer & Black), Ottawa; Rea Co., Ltd., A. E., Ottawa; Stevenson, S. J., Ottawa; Watts, E. R. & Sons, Ottawa; Preston Car & Coach Co., Preston.

2. Yes.

3. $18,163.

4. Yes.

5. (a) No. (b) The goods bought were manufactured by Bauer & Black, Chicago, whose Toronto representative, Mr. Shaver, gave Mr. Powell's name to the department as their Ottawa agent.

6. Answered by 5.

7. Yes.

LETHBRIDGE IMMIGRATION OFFICER.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Why was A. E. Humphries removed as immigration officer at Lethbridge?
2. When was A. H. McKeown appointed to the immigration service at Lethbridge and for what reason?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Owing to the fact that there was at that time practically no work to do in connection with immigration at Lethbridge, Mr. A. E. Humphries, whose salary was $1,300 per annum, was, on October 15, 1914, indefinitely suspended from his position as travelling immigration inspector.

2. On November 1, 1914, Mr. A. H. McKeown was appointed as caretaker of Lethbridge immigration hall at a salary of $65 per month, it being found necessary to have some one in charge of the building there.

COUTTS, ALTA, QUARANTINE AREA.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Has any portion of the Government quarantine area at Coutts, Alberta, been leased or sold to private individuals?
2. If so, to whom and when?
3. What was the consideration in each case?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. No.
2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

DEATH OF HENRI NOTTAR.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the Government paid, or agreed, to pay, any sum to the widow and family of Henri Nottar, the French reservist, who was shot and killed by Sergeant George Hooten at the Drill Hall in Montreal?
2. If not, is it the intention of the Government to compensate the widow and family of the deceased?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am informed that a suit is pending in the courts between the representatives of the man who was unfortunately killed and the sergeant named in the question. No representations have been made to the Government on the subject. We will take the matter into consideration.

C.N.R. PAYMENTS FOR SERVICES.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. What was the total amount paid the Canadian Northern Railway Company for transportation and all other services in connection with Valcartier Camp?
2. How much of the said amount was made up of express charges?
3. Were all the accounts so paid the Canadian Northern Railway Company audited on behalf of the Government? If so, by whom?

[Mr. Sam. Hughes.]

Major-General HUGHES:

1. $19,098.89 paid to date.
2. $7,965.24.
3. Yes, by an official of the Accounts Branch.

CHARLES P. LIVINGSTONE.

Mr. CARROLL:

1. Has Charles P. Livingstone, of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, been appointed to a position on the telegraph staff of the Public Works Department, or in any other department of the Government?
2. If so, what are his duties, and what is his salary?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Mr. C. P. Livingstone, of Glace Bay, was by authorization of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, appointed 15th December, 1914, to the position of superintendent of Government telegraphs in Cape Breton, with headquarters at Sydney.

2. The duties of the position will embrace attention to the upkeep of the telegraph and telephone lines at present in operation; the establishment of new offices as required, and the conducting of whatever further construction work may be undertaken. The salary attached to Mr. Livingstone's position is at the rate of $100 per month.

ICL. RY.—ATLANTIC SUGAR REFINERY SITE.

Mr. KYTE:

1. What price did the Intercolonial Railway receive from the Atlantic Sugar Refining Company for the site occupied by the latter company in St. John, N.B.?
2. What was the date of sale or acquisition of the property by the Atlantic Sugar Refining Company?
3. Has the Department of Railways been paid the amount agreed upon?
4. Has the Department of Railways received or collected from the Atlantic Sugar Refining Company the amount due? If not, what is the reason for the delay?
5. What rate of interest is charged the Atlantic Sugar Refining Company for the postponed payments?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $100,000, in addition to 5.51 acres of land in payment for 6.94 acres out of the 11.13 acres previously granted but surrendered.

2. Property was conveyed to the company by letters patent dater January 7, 1913.

3. Yes.

4 and 5. Answered by No. 3.

EXPORT OF HORSES TO UNITED STATES.

Mr. DEMERS:

1. Are horses prohibited from being exported to the United States from Canada? If so, since when, and under what authority?

2. Does such prohibited export of horses apply generally or are certain exceptions made?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. Saddle, draught and pack animals suitable for use in war are prohibited export to any place other than the United Kingdom or British possessions, since August 9, 1914, under Order in Council based on Section 291 of Customs Act, Chapter 48, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.

2. Exception is made to saddle, draught and pack animals which are not suitable for use in war; and to horses temporarily exported for racing or exhibition purposes.

MR. F. MORRIS.

Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Was Mr. F. Morris in the employ of the Customs Department as special and investigating officer at Chicago, in 1911?
2. Is he now in the employ of that department?
3. If not, did he resign, or was he dismissed?
4. If the latter, what was the cause for such action on behalf of the Government, and what is the date of the Order in Council dismissing him?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. Services dispensed with.
4. His services were not further required in the Customs Department. The date of the Order in Council is November 8, 1913.

SIR CLIVE PHILLIPS-WOLLEY.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Does Captain Sir Clive Phillips-Wolley hold an appointment in connection with the Department of Militia and Defence? If so, what appointment does he hold?
2. What is the date of his present appointment?
3. What is his remuneration?
4. What are his duties?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Yes. He is an Assistant Censor and Special Service Officer.
2. December 1, 1914.
3. Seven dollars per day.
4. Assistant Censor and Special Service Officer.

H.M.C.S. NIOBE.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. Were any repairs or expenditures made during the year 1914, to or upon the H.M.C.S. Niobe?
2. If so, what was the nature of the same, the total cost of such expenditures or repairs and by whom performed?
3. At the outbreak of war, how many men were enlisted upon H.M.C.S. Niobe, and what is the total enlistment today?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. Halifax Graving Dock Co., Ltd., docking.. .. ..$ 3,266 00
Halifax Dockyard, hull, fittings and equipment .. ..$ 4,335 17
Machinery and boilers.. 16,283 72
Armament 158 86 2,077 75

$24,043 75

3. July 15, 1914—9 officers, 34 men. January 15, 1915—41 officers, 644 men.

MILITIA MEN IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. How many militiamen have been on active service in the province of British Columbia since August 15, 1914, to February 1, 1915?
2. What was the cost of maintaining the militia in British Columbia since August 1, 1914, to February 1, 1915?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Numbers have varied. The average number of non-permanent militia which have been on active service in British Columbia since 5th August, 1914, to the 1st February, 1915, is as follows: August, 4,102; September, 3,728; October, 3,017; November, 3,348; December, 2,460; January, 2,065.
2. $1,434,996.74.

E. C. WOOD'S LAND PATENT.

Mr. NEELY:

1. Is the Minister of the Interior aware that Mr. E. C. Wood, now holding entry for the northwest ¼ of section 24, township 35, range 24, west of the 2nd meridian, is said to have obtained a patent in Manitoba in 1892 or 1893 for the northeast ¼ of section 36, township 4, range 3?
2. If so, why was Mr. Wood given this second entry?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Yes.

2. Mr. Wood secured free homestead patent for the N.E.¼ 36-4-3-W.P.M., in July, 1898. When he made homestead entry for the N.W.¼ 24-35-24 W. 2nd Mer., on the 7th August, 1906, he was not entitled to a second free homestead and not eligible to make entry. The entry was illegal and had to be cancelled. Mr. Wood claimed that his first homestead was a very poor quarter-section being totally unfit for agriculture, and that when he made his second entry he had no idea he was breaking the law. An official of the department reported that Mr. Wood had been in continuous residence upon the N.W. of section 24-35-24 West 2nd Meridian, since he made his entry and had placed valuable improvements on the quarter-section in addition to breaking

42 acres of land. It was considered it would be a great hardship to deprive Mr. Wood of the land and it was decided last October to permit him to purchase it at the rate of $3 per acre, being the value placed thereon by a homestead inspector—such sale to exhaust Mr. Wood's right to a purchased homestead.

NEW BRUNSWICK AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. COPP:

1. Has the Government purchased or agreed to purchase the railway running from Sackville to Cape Tormentine, county of Westmorland, known as the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island railway?

2. If so, what was the price paid or agreed to be paid for said hire of railway?

3. From whom was said railway so purchased?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. There is an agreement for purchase.

2. To be $270,000.

3. The New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway Company.

IMPORTS OF CORN.

Mr. ROBB:

What was the total quantity of corn entered at each of the customs ports of Athelstan, Dundee, Hemmingford, and Valleyfield, during the year ending December 31, 1914?

Mr. REID: Athelstan, 11,018 bushels; Hemmingford, 2,019 bushels; Valleyfield, 17,989 bushels. Dundee is not a customs port, and separate returns are therefore not available.

WAR SUPPLIES—SEASICKNESS CURE.

Mr. COPP:

1. What quantity of Mothersill's Seasickness Cure was sent with the first contingent to England, and what amount was paid therefor?

2. From whom were the purchases made?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. 20,000 boxes; $3,983.34.

2. Mothersill Remedy Co., Ltd., Detroit.

REVENUE OF CANADA, 1912, 1913, 1914.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. What was the total revenue of the Dominion of Canada each month for the calendar year of 1912?

2. What was the total revenue of the Dominion of Canada each month for the calendar year 1913?

3. What was the total revenue of the Dominion of Canada each month for the calendar year 1914?

Mr. W. T. WHITE: The total revenue of the Dominion of Canada each month for calendar years 1912, 1913, and 1914 is as follows:

	1912.	1913.	1914.
January	$ 10,084,035.11	$ 13,442,378.80	$ 11,529,753.30
February	11,078,633.78	13,135,870.58	9,698,120.91
March	12,099,769.22	14,372,331.40	11,688 901.97
April	*2,622,003 33	*2,686,625.91	*2,0.2,229.89
	11,019,445.77	12,145,455 78	9,848 998.51
May	13,636,718.10	14,818,919.33	11,723,162.90
June	13,181,946 75	14 3?4 316.25	12,088,228.50
July	*740,827.96	*475,139 39	*653,(26.06
	14,619,201.22	15,811.914.26	12,521,624.27
August	14,445,849.42	14,547,853.20	14,196,104.31
September	14,475,483.52	15,249,258 36	9,953,093.07
October	14,758,946.72	14,225,590.16	10,641,254.82
November	14,297,778.28	13,536,981 32	9,495,526.30
December	14,142,180.59	12,931,466 77	9,167,440.62
	$161,202,825.77	$171,684,108.51	135,238,075.43

* Amount belonging to the fiscal year ended 31st March, but which did not come to account until after close of fiscal year.

The answers which I have given to this question also cover the answer to question No. 1 asked by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte). If the hon. member for Richmond is content with that, he will probably accept this answer as an answer to his question.

WAR SUPPLIES—GALVANIZED IRON PAILS.

Mr. TURRIFF:

1. How many galvanized iron pails have been purchased by the Government or the Militia Department from the Dominion Machine and Supply Company of Ottawa?

2. How much was paid the company for each pail?

3. How many of the said pails were manufactured by McFarlane, Douglas Co., Ltd., of Ottawa?

4. How much was the latter company paid for each pail manufactured by them?

5. By whom are the Government cheques issued to the Dominion Machine and Supply Company endorsed on behalf of the company?

6. Who are the members or directors of the Dominion Machine and Supply Company?

Major General HUGHES:

1. Two thousand one hundred and sixty.
2. $1.47½.
3. Not known.
4. Not known.
5. 'For deposit only to credit of Dominion Machinery and Supply Co.' Bank of Ottawa, Chaudière Branch, 29th December, 1914.
6. Not known.

SACKVILLE POST OFFICE SITE.

Mr. COPP:

1. Has the Government purchased a site for a new post office in the town of Sackville, county of Westmorland?
2. If so, when was such purchase made?
3. What was the price paid for said site?
4. Is it the intention of the Government to proceed with the erection of a new post office building at Sackville during the present war?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.
2. In July, 1913.
3. $8,000.
4. The matter is under consideration.

VICTORIA MEMORIAL MUSEUM TOWER.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the Government undertaken to repair the tower of the Royal Victoria museum by day labour, or has it awarded a contract for the repair of the same?
2. If the latter, to whom was the contract given and what is the amount thereof?
3. Were tenders for the work invited by public advertisement? If not, why not?
4. What is the official estimate of the total cost of the repairs?

Mr. ROGERS: No; the department is having tests made at the present time with regard to the foundation, but no work of repair has yet been undertaken. I am adding to the answer the report of Mr. Monsarrat, who made a very full report with respect to the museum:

Montreal, January 27, 1915.

Sir,—In accordance with the Order in Council dated January 5, 1915, authorizing me to examine the foundations of the Victoria Memorial Museum at Ottawa and report thereon, I beg to make a preliminary report as follows:

In order to deal intelligently with this matter there are points that should be definitely established, viz:

(1) To what extent has settlement occurred in the foundations of the building.

(2) Has such settlement affected the stability of the building.

(3) Is this settlement still going on.

When these points have been determined, and if it is found that settlement is still going on, it would then be in order to point out what steps should be taken to prevent further settlement in the future.

After an examination of the building, I will consider this subject under two heads, namely:

(1) The foundations of the main building.

(2) Foundations of the tower and heavy cross walls.

Main Building.

With regard to the settlement of the foundations of the main building there can be no question. How much this has amounted to is, however, more difficult to determine. There seem to be no plans in existence which show the original elevations of the footings or piers, nor have any observations been made to determine the progress of the settlement. The amount of settlement, however, can be arrived at approximately by comparing the present elevations of footings which have been subjected to unit loads of varying amounts. On the outside walls of the building an estimate of the weights shows that there is approximately an average pressure on all the bearing areas of about three tons per square foot. On the interior sub-basement walls and footings of columns there are loads varying from one to two tons per square foot. The result is that the outside walls have gone down much faster than these interior walls or footings.

This movement is more plainly in evidence on the ground floor, which is supported at the centre, on two rows of columns resting on light interior walls in the sub-basement, and at the sides on the main walls.

Accompanying this report is a blue print dated January 27, 1915, showing elevations which I have had taken on this main floor. The cross sections and profiles shown thereon indicate at a glance what the settlement amounts to at all points on this floor.

The settlement around the four walls of the east and west wings is shown to be fairly uniform, although there seems to be about one inch more settlement towards the north face of these wings. From the cross sections of these wings it would seem that there has been between 5 and 6 inches settlement of these walls, assuming that there has been little or no settlement of the interior walls.

There is nothing to show that the interior walls in the two wings have settled to any appreciable extent. While the average elevation of the floor over these walls is about one inch higher in the west wing than in the east wing, yet it is quite possible that some of this difference may have occurred in the original laying of the floor.

The interior walls of the main building do not show such a regular line, the settlement being much more pronounced near the main tower and wings. This, however, can be accounted for from the fact that these walls, being incorporated in the heavier walls of the tower and cross walls, would be carried down simultaneously with the latter.

From the elevations taken it would appear that settlement of the walls of the main building amounts to from 5 to 9 inches. The slope of these walls is towards the main tower, where the greatest settlement has taken place.

This indication of the settlement of the main walls is practically confined to the ground floor and basement. On the first, second and third floors, where the supporting girders extend from wall, there is little or no evidence that any such settlement has taken place.

As regards the stability of the walls of the main building, I do not consider that this has been seriously affected. If the ground floor had been supported on long girders extending from wall to wall, similar to the floors above, there would be little or no evidence to show that settlement had taken place, except of course at points where it is incorporated with the walls of the tower and the heavy cross walls. Cracks have opened up in the walls of the east and west entrance, which would naturally be expected, but this result could not in any case prove serious. A few of the stone lintels and mullions of the building have been cracked but not to any serious extent. The greatest evidence of this settlement is shown in the basement, which is sub-divided into offices with light brick partitions. These partitions rest on foundations having a very much smaller load to the square foot of area. The result is that when the outside wall settled its tendency was to shear past these lighter walls or to carry that portion of the wall nearest the main wall down with the latter, thus opening up cracks in the brickwork. These partition walls are only one story high, and, outside of the unsightly nature of the cracks, their displacement has no bearing on the stability of the building. From a thorough examination of the basement I find that the relative action between these walls is practically uniform.

The question as to whether settlement of the foundations of the main building is still going on is one that at present I am not prepared to answer. While it is an undoubted fact that considerable settlement has taken place, it may be possible that the soil has become compacted to such an extent that further settlement has stopped. On the outside of the building there is nothing that would point to the fact that settlement had taken place for a considerable length of time. At the rear of the building there is a concrete sidewalk which was laid hard up against the base course of the walls, which sidewalk, I have been informed, was constructed three years ago. If settlement had taken place in that time I would look for some evidence of cracking or distorting where this sidewalk joined the building. It is possible that the ground under this sidewalk may be more or less loose and that the walls, if settling, would carry the sidewalk with them. In this case, however, I would look for a tilting or cracking of this walk, which does not appear. While this point is not conclusive evidence, yet to my mind it is sufficient to raise serious doubts as to whether settlement is taking place at the present time.

In the basement, where the partition walls between the offices join the main walls, there seems to be a certain amount of evidence that a movement is still going on. Several occupants of these offices have informed me that cracks in the brick veneer of the main wall and in the partition wall have been opening up within the last eighteen months, and in one or two cases there seems to be evidence that the cracks have increased in length during the past few months. In other offices, cracks which had been puttied up two or three years ago, have opened very slightly. As the brick veneer on the main walls, has an air space of one inch or so behind it and is not cemented directly on the main wall, it may be that there is some local action taking place between the partition walls and this brick veneering which may be entirely independent of any present action of the main walls. It would appear, however, from the consensus of reports, that the movement during the last eighteen months has been very slight. In view of the evidence obtainable, it would seem that the only way to determine whether any action is really taking place on the main walls of the building would be to have a series of accurate readings made on the outside of these main walls, such readings to extend over a sufficient length of time to enable an intelligent and definite report to be made. I have taken steps to have such a series of level readings taken, and have given instructions that checks on these points be taken at regular intervals in order that this information may be obtained.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Main Tower and Cross Walls.

The settlement of the main tower and cross walls is considerably more pronounced than that of the main building. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the load on the footings is very much higher. On the main tower the average pressure on all the foundations of the piers and walls amounts to about four tons per square foot. On the cross walls the load per square foot varies from three to four tons. As in the case of the main building, it is also difficult to determine exactly what the total amount of settlement has been. While the tower has gone down a certain amount as a whole, it has, however, gone down much faster at the front wall, the rear wall being undoubtedly supported to a certain extent by the other walls intersecting thereat. At the present time the tower has an inclination from the vertical of about twenty-four inches, measuring from the highest point of the tower to the foot of the foundation. This means that the extreme outer edge of the foundation is 10½ inches lower than where it joins the main walls of the building.

There is no doubt in my mind but that the displacement of this tower is sufficient to cause anxiety for its ultimate safety. In moving forward it is taking the main walls of the building with it. The result has been to open up serious cracks in a portion of this wall and cause serious doubts as to its stability. So great has been the movement of this tower that the steel beams of the 4th floor, which were resting on this tower, have, I am told, pulled entirely out and have had to be supported on special girders. The cracks in the walls between the cross walls of the main building and the tower have been opening up continually and have been filled up from time to time as they became apparent. It is, moreover, quite apparent that movement is still taking place. Last September, I believe, all openings at this point were plastered up, but at the present time this crack has opened up again about ½ inch, and at one point daylight can be seen through the wall.

An indication that the tower is still settling is shown by the sidewalk at the front entrance. Last September, I understand, a new sidewalk was laid at this point with a grade sloping away from the building. At the present time this sidewalk has an inclination in the opposite direction, or towards the building, and where it joins the building, is several inches lower than at points in the near vicinity. I would judge from the nature of the soil and the loads that have been distributed upon it that there is every possibility that settlement will continue to go on until the stability of the tower is seriously menaced. This menace is magnified from the fact that as the tower continues to lean outward the centre of gravity also moves outward, increasing the pressure on the extreme toe of the foundation and thus tending to increase the rate of movement.

The cause of the trouble which has arisen in connection with this building is due entirely to the fact that the soil upon which the building was erected has had loads placed upon it entirely out of proportion to its supporting values. This soil is a type of blue clay which, under ordinary conditions, should be able to support from two to three tons per square foot. The bearing value of clay as a foundation, however, is uncertain and great difficulty is very often experienced in foundations on this class of material.

On the interior columns, which support a load of about one ton per square foot, there has probably been little or no settlement, although I cannot verify this fact. On the outside walls of the main building there is an average of three tons per square foot. This has proved too heavy a load for this material as the walls have gone down from 5 to 9 inches in the last seven years. The loads under the tower have averaged 4 tons per square foot, the settlement at this point being considerably greater than under the walls of the main building. It is quite evident, therefore, that the first point to be determined is the bearing value of the soil upon which the building rests. I have taken steps to this end, and a series of loading tests on the soil in the basement of the building is now going on.

Recommendation.

I would recommend that nothing be done with regard to the walls of the main building until a series of observations have been taken over a sufficient length of time to enable me to determine whether further settlement is actually taking place.

With regard to the main tower, I consider steps should be taken at the earliest possible moment to prevent further settlement. This can only be done by increasing the bearing area under this portion of the building. This is entirely an engineering problem, and in a later report I will advise what, in my opinion, is the best means by which this work can be successfully carried out.

I would say that I do not consider there is any immediate danger to the building, or that it will be necessary to close it to the Government employees or the general public so long as the present rate of settlement is not increased. I have made arrangements with the chief architect to have a series of readings taken at the point where danger might be expected, so that any increase in this movement would be immediately noted.

I think, however, in view of the foregoing that the necessary steps should be taken by your department to have repairs instituted in connection with the main tower and effected during the coming summer.

Respectfully submitted,

(sgd.) C. N. Monsarrat,

Hon. Robert Rogers,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Ont.

WAR SUPPLIES—FIELD GLASSES.

Mr. TURRIFF:

1. How many binoculars or field glasses has the Government purchased since August 1, 1914?
2. From whom were they bought?
3. What price was paid for them?
4. Was there competition by asking different dealers to quote prices?
5. If so, who were asked for prices?

Major General HUGHES:

1. 4,624.

2. From P. W. Ellis & Co., Ltd., Toronto, Consolidated Optical Co., Toronto, and the Topley Co., Ottawa.

3. About 100 different prices were paid, ranging from $9.45 to $75, according to the type and quality of binoculars bought in each case. Those procured for the first contingent were of many different patterns.

4. It was never a question of competition, but of getting the requisite number of binoculars of a satisfactory character in the time available. Generally speaking, the conditions did not admit of competition. Binoculars of a certain type and power were required; a sufficient quantity of these was not available. It was necessary to make the best arrangements for the provision of a more or less satisfactory substitute at reasonable prices.

5. Answered by No. 4.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all tenders for army stores that have been received and dealt with by the Department of Militia and Defence since August 1, 1914.

Mr. Macdonald: For a copy of all letters, telegrams, minutes of investigation and other documents relating to the dismissal of Isaac Arbuckle, foreman carpenter, Intercolonial railway, at Pictou, and of appointment of Alex Talbot to the vacancy.

Mr. Macdonald: For a copy of all letters, telegrams, minutes of investigation and other documents relating to the dismissal of James Brenan, fireman Intercolonial railway at Stellarton.

Mr. Buchanan: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents in connection with the removal from the customs service at Lethbridge, Alberta, of Brown Pipes and A. R. Gibbons.

Mr. Buchanan: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents in connection with the appointment of A. H. McKeown to the immigration service at Lethbridge, Alberta.

Mr. Buchanan: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents in connection with the removal from office of A. E. Humphries, inspector of immigration at Lethbridge, Alberta.

Mr. Buchanan: For a copy of all tenders in connection with the supply of lumber to the Department of Militia for the training camps at Medicine Hat and Calgary, and of the invoices for the material supplied.

Mr. Law: For a return showing the names and addresses of all persons in Yarmouth county to whom the bounty under the Fenian Raid

Volunteer Bounty Act has been paid, the names and addresses of all persons from said county whose applications have been rejected and a list giving names and addresses of all applicants from said county whose applications have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. Murphy: For a return giving the names of all the transports hired since August 1, 1914, for the conveyance of troops, horses, stores and material to England, the name of each vessel owner, broker or other person through whom the vessel was chartered, the tonnage of each vessel, speed, rate paid per ton per week or month, minimum time for which engaged, date of agreement, date at which pay commenced, date at which pay ceased, and the total sum paid by the Government for hire and other charges.

Mr. Macdonald For a copy of all letters, telegrams, contracts, and other documents relative to the purchase of cars by the Intercolonial railway since July 1, 1914.

Mr. McCraney : For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, instructions, reports and other documents relating to an application by Udo F. Schrader for a grazing lease in townships 40 and 41, range 7, west of the 3rd meridian province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Robb: For a copy of all tenders, letters, and telegrams, including first and second call for tenders, for rural mail delivery in the township of Dundee, county of Huntingdon.

Mr. Nesbitt: For a return showing how many transport wagons were purchased for the second and third contingents, from whom they were purchased and the name of each person or firm, how many were purchased from each, the price paid per wagon, whether tenders were asked and whether any tenders were received that were not accepted, and if so what was the price tendered at.

Mr. Cockshutt: For a return showing whether there have been any exportations of foodstuffs since August 1 last to European countries, other than to the United Kingdom, France and Belgium, and if so, their nature and to what countries.

ICL. RY.—FREIGHT RATES AND TRAINS.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.), moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, by any and all persons whomsoever, had with the Department of Railways and Canals, or F. P. Gutelius, General Manager of the Intercolonial Railway, or any other official thereof, with reference to freight rates over that portion of the Transcontinental Railway, province of New Brunswick, and also with reference to the removal of the Y connection at Wabski, county of Victoria, between the said Transcontinental Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway at that point.

He said: I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) to a matter of very great importance to the business community of the western portion of New Brunswick. And in doing so, perhaps the better way, in order to make it plain, is to refer to a matter which is somewhat personal. But I hope the minister will understand that this personal reference is only to illustrate what is really a public matter; nor is it purely personal, as it refers to my connection with an estate and what affects me in that capacity affects many other business men in that portion of New Brunswick. The House is aware, of course, that the Transcontinental runs in a diagonal direction from the northwestern corner of New Brunswick to the southeastern corner. In its course it crosses the Canadian Pacific railway at a place called Wabski, near Plaster Rock. It crosses the Canadian Pacific railway at an elevation of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet. When the Transcontinental was under construction, a branch line of about a mile in length was made and a connection was in this way made with the Canadian Pacific railway. This branch line was constructed, paid for, owned and operated by the Transcontinental down to three or four months ago, when the connection was destroyed and the rails taken up, so that there is no possibility of getting communication between the two roads. About a year and a half or two years ago I had occasion to bring this matter of railway rates and connections to the attention of the minister, and I complained that the Government was not taking any means, or was not taking the proper means, to promote business and industry in that portion of the province of New Brunswick. I pointed out that the rates charged on the Transcontinental were so exorbitant as to be practically prohibitive. I dealt with this matter in this House on the 21st of March, 1913. The minister, I think very much to his credit, was greatly surprised at the statement I was making, so much so indeed that he challenged the truth of it and wanted me to give a case in which the Transcontinental practically refused to do business or undertook to do it only at rates so high as to be practically prohibitive. I at once called his attention to a statement of facts. He will find the debate in "Hansard" of that year, pages 6816 to 6818 inclusive. Of this I desire to read now only one paragraph:

I happen to be the executor of an estate and during the past three or four months I have hauled by team between three and four million feet of lumber a distance of fifteen miles over probably the most hilly road in New Brunswick, to the Canadian Pacific railway. I could have hauled that very same lumber to the Transcontinental railway, a distance of less than five miles, and practically all down grade, between the mill and the railway. The party whom I represented was alive at the time the negotiations started in November, he died in December and since then, as the executor of the estate, I have been carrying on the business.

I went on to explain that we had hauled over 3,000,000 feet of lumber by team fifteen miles over a hilly road, and shipped it by the Canadian Pacific railway, because we could make more money than by hauling it five miles and shipping it by the Transcontinental. I will give the minister the credit of saying that he took up the case energetically. He told me both publicly and privately that he would see justice done. The Transcontinental wanted 6 cents per cwt. to transport that lumber thirty-one or thirty-two miles, which means almost $1 a thousand feet on ordinary spruce lumber. That was prohibitive. He told me he would send Mr. Gutelius to me and have the matter arranged. While Mr. Gutelius did not come to me, yet, after considerable negotiation, an arrangement was made under which we were to get the lumber hauled at 4 cents per cwt., which would be practically $1.20 per thousand feet. That means that I was wrong in my first calculation—6 cents per cwt. would be not $1 but $1.50 on ordinary spruce lumber. But I should think that $1.20 ought to be enough to satisfy even Mr. Gutelius, who, I presume, is animated solely by a desire to make money for the Government railway system. But, while the rate was exorbitant, still, in order to carry on business, we accepted it. In 1913 we did about the same amount of business, and got some money out of it, I am glad to say. We carried on the same business in 1914, and again made money. We had hoped to continue carrying on this business and still make money, but, early in the summer—I have forgotten exactly what date; I would give the minister the precise facts but that I have not the papers before me—the manager of the company was informed by the officials of the road that they would not accept any more freight at Wabski, that they were going to take up the connections, and that we would have to send our freight north on the Transcontinental to Theriault, which is practically fifty miles north of the connection at Wabski. There we should hand it over to the Canadian Pacific railway, who would have to bring it back on a line practically parallel to the Transcontinental and carry it to Boston. Fortunately for us, the Canadian Pacific railway charged the same rate from Theriault as from Wabski. If they had hauled the freight for the extra fifty miles for the same money we should have had no complaint to make. But it made a wonderful difference to other people. The man who had freight originating on the Canadian Pacific railway and wanted it delivered on points on the Transcontinental, found the rate was prohibitive. But the Transcontinental, or Intercolonial railway authorities, not only wanted to haul the freight the fifty miles further, but wanted us to pay 7 cents per cwt. for hauling it, or 3 cents per cwt. in addition to what we were already paying. As the average of spruce lumber will weigh 3,000 lb. per thousand feet, this extra rate would amount to 90 cents per thousand. This meant practical prohibition. After negotiation, they offered to carry the lumber at 1½ cents per cwt. additional, which would mean about 45 cents or 50 cents per thousand, which, in many cases, is a large proportion of the profit a man makes on lumbering operations in New Brunswick. I was told at that time that the difficulty lay with the Canadian Pacific railway, who were unwilling to accept freight at the Wabski junction. I took the matter up with Mr. Bamford, divisional freight agent of the Canadian Pacific railway, at St. John, to whom I wrote on the 3rd of October, 1914. This correspondence is brief, and I should like to read it so that the minister may have the facts before him:

4 p.m.

I fear very much that the minister knows only one side of this case; otherwise he would never have been a consenting party to the business outrage committed upon the people of that portion of New Brunswick. I admit that the words "business outrage" are pretty strong, but I know of no other words in the English language which would correctly describe the transaction.

On October 3, I addressed the following letter to Mr. Bamford:

> Dear Sir,—As one of the executors of the estate of Michael Welch, of Bristol, who in his life-time carried on a milling operation at Foreston. Up to last year the lumber was hauled to your road at Bristol, but as the mill is within seven miles of the Transcontinental, we hauled it to Juniper and handed it over to your road at Wabski.
>
> We have now nearly three millions of lumber to send to the American market during the coming winter, and would commence loading this just as soon as the snow comes, provided conditions were satisfactory.
>
> Last year we obtained a 17 cent rate from Juniper to Boston. I do not know how it would divide up, but I always understood the Intercolonial railway got the lion's share.
>
> Not long ago we were informed that your company objected to taking this lumber at Wabski, and therefore, it could not be handed to you until it reached Theriault, some distance below Edmundston, and we were told the rate would be 20 cents. We absolutely refused to do any business at that rate and decided that we would be compelled to haul to Bristol, and close down the business. Gutelius then came down to 18½ cents, but still persists in saying that your company objected to taking it over at Wabski, and therefore it must be taken to Theriault. This means about 50 cents a thousand, which eats up a large portion of our profits, and if this condition of affairs continues, I see nothing to do but to close up the business.

Will you kindly write me and let me know just why this course is being pursued? If you are willing to take it at Wabski at the old rate, I will endeavour to give the matter such publicity that Mr. Gutelius will hand it over at that point. If, on the other hand, it is a mutual arrangement, probably the force would be so great, that the only move would be to shut down.

On October 19 I received from Mr. Bamford the following letter, which, in my judgment, was very satisfactory:

F. B. Carvell, K.C.,
Woodstock, N.B.

Dear Sir,—With further reference to your letter of October 3 in regard to lumber shipments from Juniper to Boston.

At Wabski the interchange of traffic has been permitted between the National Transcontinental railway and Canadian Pacific railway. A connection was put in at the time of the construction of the National Transcontinental railway to permit the contractors to get in their construction material. The connecting track was of considerable length and down grade. It is claimed by the Intercolonial railway that the steep grade rendered its operation very hazardous and difficult, particularly during the winter months, and that their train operating between Moncton and Edmundston was being badly delayed on account of the time taken to do the switching.

You mention in your letter that you were informed that the Canadian Pacific railway objected to taking this lumber at Wabski. This is not correct. Our rates are still in effect from that point to Boston, and on July 30, Mr. Grout wrote the Intercolonial railway to know if he would not continue the practice as it seems to him to be a very fair arrangement. To this he received a reply dated August 10. An extract read as follows:

'It has been decided that we will not transfer any more traffic at Wabski of any kind after the 15th inst.'

In connection with this matter, I might mention that we have a published rate of 13 cents per 100 pounds at the present time from Theriault to Boston.

Trusting this explanation will be satisfactory.

Yours truly,

W. B. Bamford,
Division Freight Agent.

In this letter Mr. Bamford puts the matter up to the Minister of Railways direct. Without any doubt the blame comes back to the Minister of Railways—I am speaking now of the minister not in his personal but in his official capacity—for depriving the people of that portion of New Brunswick of that railway connection to which as a matter of business justice they are entitled. I have given an illustration showing that the taking up of that connection and the denying to the people of the right to do business means a matter of 50 cents on every thousand feet of lumber handled by one firm, with which I am connected purely in the capacity of an executor.

I do not know whether my reply to Mr. Bamford's letter is of any importance to the minister; if he wishes to see it I shall be only too glad to send the file over to him. I told Mr. Bamford that I was very glad indeed to learn that he was willing to carry out the arrangement; that I was then writing to the Minister of Railways and that I hoped to be able to succeed in having the old conditions re-established. I wish to read Mr. Bamford's reply, because it shows beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Canadian Pacific railway were not only willing but anxious to have this rate continued and to have this trade handed over to them at Wabski, and at no other point. Nevertheless, every business man in that part of the country was led to believe—I do not say by Mr. Gutelius personally, but certainly by the officials of the Intercolonial railway—that the Canadian Pacific railway were not willing to carry out this arrangement, and that it was in consequence of the protest of the Canadian Pacific railway that this connection was torn up and the people subjected to the extra cost. This is Mr. Bamford's letter, dated November 14, 1914:

Dear Sir,—I have your letter of the 4th inst., in reference to the transfer of freight at Wabski.

We are perfectly willing to continue the interchange at Wabski, if the National Transcontinental railway will give us the business at that point. In the mean time, until I hear from you again I will not do anything further.

For your private information, we would prefer to have this traffic handed to us at Wabski, and so would a large number of saw mill men doing business in that district. We are in a better position to supply empty cars to handle the traffic than our competitors, having direct connection with the Maine Central, and as you are aware, they hand over to us from fifty to one hundred empty cars daily, and we will be glad to hand over a good share of them at Wabski.

I will be very glad if you will advise me the result of your negotiations with the Minister of Railways, and oblige,

Yours truly.

I may explain that in reading over this letter a few days ago, I observed in it the word "private." I at once wired Mr. Bamford to inquire if I had his permission to use the letter, and received a reply giving me full permission to make any use of it that I wished to make.

After I had definitely ascertained beyond any doubt that the Canadian Pacific railway were not only willing but anxious to accept trade at that point, I took the matter up with Mr. Gutelius, and here is a letter which I wrote him on November 4, 1914:

Dear Sir,—Some time ago I was informed by Mr. Welch, one of my co-executors of the Michael Welch estate, that you had refused to transfer any more freight at Wabski to the Canadian Pacific railway, and informed him that in future this freight must all go to Theriault, a point 50 miles further north, for which you wanted 3 cents additional. We promptly refused to have anything more to do with the road, when he was then notified that the rate would be reduced to 1½ cents additional, or 5½ cents in all, the net result of which means that we lose 50 cents a thousand on our lumber, and you haul it 50 miles and get the 50 cents. You possibly get out of it alive, we lose it absolutely. Mr. Welch was informed by your people that the Canadian Pacific railway refused to handle this freight at Wabski. I took the matter up with Mr. Bamford at St. John, and by his letter of October the 19th, he assures me that as early as July the 30th, Mr. Grout asked you to continue the practice as then established, to which you replied under date of August the 10th, as follows :

'It has been decided that we will not transfer any more tramc at Wabski of any kind after the 15th inst.'

This puts it up to your road without any question whatever.

I thought after appealing to the minister in the spring of 1913, that I had this matter settled once and for all.

Do you consider it a fair proposition that men along the line who would like to do business with you, shall be compelled to fight for the 50 cents which you get, which practically means their profits, when to the ordinary observer there is no necessity whatever for so doing? The Canadian Pacific are perfectly willing to accept this lumber at Wabski, and are also willing to give us a rate at Bristol with the view of transportation by team from the mill to that point. We have on hand now over two million and one-half of long lumber and over one million and one-half of laths, to be transported just as soon as the snow comes, and we would like to know whether you will still give us the rate in existence last year, or whether we will be compelled to haul this lumber 15 miles over the hills to Bristol, as will certainly be the case under present conditions. Such conduct may look like good railroading from your standpoint, but it is certainly death to the operator, along the line who is trying to do an honest business.

I am very anxious indeed to hear from you at your earliest convenience.

I have also been applied to by the Fraser Company, Limited, and others along the line who would like to continue doing business at Wabski, but will be prohibited should this unfair and unprecedented discrimination be continued. I would assume that you would like to continue doing business and until I hear from you to the contrary, am going to continue in that assumption.

Mr. HAZEN: Where is Theriault?

Mr. CARVELL: It is about half way between Grand Falls and Edmundston. It is the point where the Canadian Pacific railway and the Transcontinental cross.

Mr. HAZEN: In the parish of St. Leonard?

Mr. CARVELL: In Madawaska county. The distance from Juniper to Plaster Rock, now Wabski, is thirty-two miles, and from Plaster Rock to Theriault, fifty-one miles, so it is fifty-one miles from the crossing of the Tobique to Theriault. I have taken the mileage from the Intercolonial folder.

I have here a lot of letters with which I shall not encumber the record; there are letters from the Fraser Lumber Company and others protesting against this interruption of traffic, and asking me, as a member from New Brunswick, to do what I could in order to have this injustice remedied and I promised them, of course, that I would do what I could. As you will see, two or three months prior to these things I had been trying to do what I could, you may say from a personal business point, but at least doing all I could to have the injustice remedied. I waited some time but got no answer to my letter of the 4th of November to Mr. Gutelius. I waited two weeks and it was a surprise to me that I had to wait that time in a matter of such business importance without the courtesy of an answer. So I was compelled to write to the minister direct, which I did on the 16th of November, as follows:

My Dear Sir:

I am enclosing you herewith a copy of a letter, dated the 4th inst., which I addressed to Mr. Gutelius, General Manager, Intercolonial railway, Moncton, to which I received no answer, and as the letter is complete in itself, it is unnecessary to repeat the statements therein contained.

I cannot tell you how sorry I am that Mr. Gutelius has broken up the arrangement which was made over a year ago, after a persistent and somewhat public attempt on my part to have things straightened out.

You will remember after discussing this matter in Parliament, you promised me that Mr. Gutelius would come here and arrange matters satisfactorily. While he did not come, yet he put the rate at a point where we could do business, and live, but even than 4 cents a hundred for 30 miles in carload lots, is exorbittant. Now to add on another one and one-half cents means prohibition. I simply put the matter up to you, and ask you to see that justice is done.

It is now 12 days since this letter was written, and as it is so late in the season something must be done immediately if we are to continue doing business, and I trust I will be more successful in obtaining an answer from you, than I have been from Mr. Gutelius.

I wish to say, to the credit of the minister, that I was successful in getting a letter back the day he received my letter in Ottawa and, more than that, I got an answer from Mr. Gutelius two days later, so that no blame can be attached to the minister for any discourtesy so far as replying to my letter was concerned—but I am sorry to say that was the end of it. I received a second reply from the minister dated 18th of November and also one from Mr. Gutelius dated the 20th of November. I shall read the letter from Mr. Gutelius in order that the railway side of the case may be placed upon " Hansard " as well as the business man's side:

Dear Sir:

Re your letter November 4th.

The transfer between the National Transcontinental and Canadian Pacific railway at Wabski was closed for the reasons as described by our Agent as follows:

'The distance from our main line to the Canadian Pacific railway track is about three quarters of a mile and two per cent grade practically all the way. We handle all cars both to and from their line and do all the switching.

'Should there ever be a failure of equipment such as the breaking of a coupling and taking a string of loads down the hill the damage would amount to more than the gross traffic for several months.'

This connecting track was constructed by the Transcontinental people to enable them to get material and contractors supplies up to the Transcontinental grade from the Canadian Pacific railway. It was not contemplated that it would be a point of transfer and as such it carries with it hazards to life and property that cannot be safely undertaken.

General Traffic Manager Hayes advises me that the rate from Juniper to Wabski which you desire to perpetuate was 4 cents per 100 lbs. He also advised that an offer has been made to your people to haul your lumber from Juniper to Fredericton for 4½ cents per 100 lbs. and explains that if the Canadian Pacific railway will give you the same rates from Fredericton to Boston points as they give from Wabski or Theriault that the aggregate increase which you would have to pay is a half a cent per 100 lbs. and further if the Canadian Pacific railway would give you the benefit of the reduced haul it would make the rate from Fredericton a half a cent lower than from Theriault which is about one hundred miles shorter and that your Boston rate would be the same as via Wabski and the effects of the entire operation would be to give you minimum rates and give the railways an opportunity to handle by minimum mileage at minimum risk.

From the above explanation you will understand I trust that the sole object in not making this temporary branch line a regular transfer point is based entirely upon safety of operation and that our offer to haul to Fredericton at the low rate relieves the proposition of any charge of discrimination on our part.

Yours truly,

F. P. Gutelius.

[Mr. Carvell.]

You will see that he puts the whole thing on the agent, just as if an agent at a small country station had anything to do with the tearing up of the connection between two railways, a matter so important that if it occurred on private railroads we would have an order from the Railway Commission within twenty-four hours.

I want to discuss this matter with the minister from two standpoints, first from the standpoint of the company which I represent, for it is a material matter to us, and then from the standpoint of the general public. First from our standpoint, look at the absolute inconsistency of the minister's general manager of the National Transcontinental railway. He refuses to haul freight thirty-two miles for four cents, but is willing to haul it seventy-one miles for four and a half cents. Just think of a business man putting up a business proposition like that. He is willing to haul seventy-one miles to Fredericton for four and a half cents and not willing to haul thirty-two miles to Juniper for four cents and the only objection to the Juniper line is that it has a down grade of two per cent. Millions of dollars of business is done all over Canada and the United States on short railways with, not two per cent, but three per cent and four per cent grades. My hon. friend knows that the Canadian Pacific railway crosses the Rockies in many places with more than two per cent grades, and then they talk of the danger of failure of equipment and the danger of a string of loads going down the hill and being dumped. There is danger of that occurring in any railway operation if it is not run properly, and we are not going to assume that the Transcontinental or the Intercolonial will handle business so negligently that they will allow loads to go down hill because there happens to be a two per cent grade on the hill. It seems to me it is the most childlike defence to any reasonable proposition I have ever seen advanced by a business man in my experience. Then he goes on to say: If the Canadian Pacific railway will do what they ought to do. Well, unfortunately, this Parliament has not very much control over the Canadian Pacific railway, not nearly as much as I would like, but this Parliament and this Government have absolute control over the other two roads, and no matter how unfair the Canadian Pacific railway may be, this Parliament is the body that has the power to say what the Intercolonial shall do and what the National Transcontinental railway shall do.

He says that the Canadian Pacific railway should give us the same mileage rate from Fredericton as from Wabski and that they could be hauled as cheaply. But how are we going to get the Canadian Pacific railway to change their rates from Fredericton, or from Wabski to Boston? We have no power to make them do that. The rate to-day from Fredericton to Boston is 14 cents per 100 lbs. on this class of merchandise.

Mr. COCHRANE: What is it from Wabski?

Mr. CARVELL: Thirteen cents. Mr. Gutelius agrees to have that freight for Fredericton for 4½ cents but you add 14 cents and you get 18½ cents, exactly the rate Mr. Gutelius wants us to pay if he takes it round by Wabski. I do not care whether he takes it around by Quebec or any other place so long as he gets it to Boston and gets it to Boston at 17 cents a hundred. We would be satisfied but that does not satisfy the public. The Walsh estate is only one member of the public. He says that if the Canadian Pacific railway would reduce the rate and give us the benefit of the proportional mileage, although he does not suggest what it is, we would get a less rate, but unfortunately we have no power to compel the Canadian Pacific railway to reduce their rate from Fredericton to Boston and give us the proportional mileage. That is where the matter stands to-day. I do not care whether you haul by way of Theriault or by way of Fredericton—we pay fifty cents a thousand more than we paid last year. The Transcontinental railway haul this freight 32 miles and get 4 cents per 100 lb. for doing it. If they take it to Theriault they haul it 50 miles further and get 4½ cents a hundred pounds for it, or they haul it a distance of 71 miles and get 4½ cents for hauling it. It may be good railway business on the part of the Government to haul freight 50 miles for half a cent per 100 lb. but I cannot understand it. If they can make money by hauling that freight an extra fifty miles for half a cent they must be coining money when they get four cents for hauling it 32 miles. That may be quite plain to a railway man but I only try to size up things as they appear to an ordinary lawyer upon reading the rates, and I must confess that I do not understand it. Possibly my hon. friend, being a railway expert, will be willing to explain this most remarkable discrepancy as it appears to a lawyer.

Now, having discussed this matter from the point of view of the Walsh estate I desire to look at it from the standpoint of the public. If the Walsh estate were the only ones doing business over that line of railway it would only be a matter of their losing 50 cts. per thousand, closing up their mill and going out of business. But the Walsh estate is only a small proportion of the public which would like to use that road. I have protests from a very large number of mill owners. There is Donald Fraser & Co., who have the largest lumber mills in eastern Canada, a firm which are handling over a hundred million feet of lumber a year and a firm that handles probably—

Mr. COCHRANE: Not over this road?

Mr. CARVELL: No, I am not saying that. I was just going to say that this firm handled over 15,000,000 feet of lumber at Plaster Rock, right at the point where the Transcontinental railway and the Canadian Pacific railway come together. This is a firm that, under ordinary conditions, would be able to ship millions of feet of lumber over the Transcontinental railway if they gave them a rate at the present time to St. John. My hon. friend knows that during the last three or four months there has been a complete change in the lumber market in the maritime provinces. Prior to October and possibly November practically all the inland lumber of New Brunswick went to the American market. But on account of the war conditions existing in the old country British buyers are now taking it at a price away above the price that the Americans would pay for it and they are taking lumber which you could not give away in England in the past.

Mr. COCHRANE: But that would not affect the subject you have brought up.

Mr. CARVELL: Oh, yes.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, the lumber would not go over the National Transcontinental railway, because instead of the Canadian Pacific railway giving it to the Transcontinental they would take it themselves.

Mr. CARVELL: But I will show you how it affects the matter. The Fraser business is at the end of the Canadian Pacific railway at Plaster Rock. The Y connection between the Canadian Pacific railway and the Transcontinental railway is at that same point, the Frasers have 15,000,000 feet of lumber practically all going to the English market and they would have the opportunity of shipping it either over the Canadian Pacific railway or the Transcontinental. With the Y connection gone not a foot can go over the Transcontinental railway.

Mr. COCHRANE: And would not either.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend says it would not. My hon. friend does not seem to want to do business. There are 15,000,000 feet of lumber being manufactured this year and every year right at the point where he has taken out the connection between the Canadian Pacific railway and the Transcontinental.

Mr. HAZEN: Is it my hon. friend's contention that, if there was a connection between the Canadian Pacific railway and Transcontinental railway at Wabski, the lumber of Fraser's going from Plaster Rock would go right over the Tobique Valley branch of the Canadian Pacific railway to Wabski and then over the Transcontinental railway to St. John?

Mr. CARVELL: No, not exactly, but my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen) does not understand Wabski and Plaster Rock are practically the same thing.

Mr. HAZEN: I know Wabski is a few miles below Plaster Rock.

Mr. CARVELL: This crossing is perhaps two miles below Plaster Rock, but the Y connection runs north, so that the Y connection is practically at Plaster Rock. There is only a shunting yard. It is practically all in the same yard. The Y connection between the Canadian Pacific railway and the Transcontinental is located there, and it is practically all in the same place.

Mr. COCHRANE: Is the hon. gentleman absolutely fair there? The Fraser mill is on the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE: Do you suppose the Canadian Pacific railway would be stiff enough to hold up a rate from there to St. John that would enable the Intercolonial railway to make this a transfer point to them when they would have just as far to carry the lumber as the Canadian Pacific railway and make this dangerous interchange between the two railways?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not admit it is a dangerous interchange between the railways. As to the business end of it, I am not in a position to say what the effect may be.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. HAZEN: Taking it from Plaster Rock or Wabski to St. John, what is the difference in distance by the Canadian Pacific railway and the Transcontinental railway and Intercolonal?

Mr. CARVELL: My impression is that there would be very little.

Mr. COCHRANE: The Intercolonial would be longer.

Mr. HAZEN: The Canadian Pacific railway would be shorter.

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes.

Mr. CARVELL: The difference is so little that it never would be considered for a moment with respect to the question of the rate; the rate would be the same. I would be very much surprised if there would be 25 miles difference between the two railways. But that is not the point. No matter what has been done in the past, and no matter what my hon. friend may argue as to what should be done in the future, the fact remains that my hon. friend has put himself out of the race. He is not in a position to compete, because he has torn up the connection by which he could compete. When this track was torn up, the Frasers had half a million feet of hard-wood piled at that Y connection. They were using the Y connection for a piling ground. I know what I am talking about, because I was there and saw it. I am familiar with the location, and they had the lumber piled there. I do not know exactly what they have done about it, but I know that they had the lumber and that they had erected a large piling ground out on this Y connection about a mile away to the southward in order to get it away from the danger of fire and to get it where it could be piled.

In shipping to a distant point like Boston, it makes a great difference in the weight of lumber, and consequently a great difference in the rate, as to whether the lumber is dry or not. I have also a protest from Upham, who runs a business eight or ten miles below Plaster Rock, on the Canadian Pacific railway it is true, but who has done some business by shipping from the Canadian Pacific railway over to the Transcontinental, and I have also a protest from J. B. McLaughlin & Company. This means that every man engaged in the lumber and other business in that portion of New Brunswick has only one line of railway at his disposal, whereas he might have two competing lines to carry his produce to the market. How the Minister of Railways sanctions a policy of this kind is something that I cannot understand. After this letter was written I wired to Mr. Gutelius, stating that we wanted to ship to Boston, and that if he would give us a seventeen-cent rate to Boston via Fredericton we would ship it that way, but I got no answer to that telegram. We have been perfectly fair from a business standpoint; we have done everything we possibly could, and we only appeal to the minister when we cannot get an answer from the general manager of the railway to a reasonable business proposition. All we have got from the minister up to the present time is courtesy, and I admit we have had that. The tracks have been taken up, the connection is gone, and we are sending our lumber to Boston at a loss of fifty cents a thousand. A large part of the lumber we intended should go to Boston is going to St. John over the Transcontinental, and therefore, so far as that is concerned, I do not think we are losing any money by it, but we know this is only a temporary condition of things. We are sending lumber to England to-day which we could hardly give away there a year ago, and that applies not so much to quality as to specifications. Until a year ago we could only sell deals 3 x 7, 3 x 9, and 3 x 11, whereas to-day they will take almost any specification and pay a good price. However, when the war is over, that condition of things will cease, and then we will have to pay this extra fifty cents per thousand or stop doing business. How the minister can be a party to carrying on that unfair transaction, I cannot understand. I could understand it if this road were being operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific, because the Grand Trunk Pacific could make connections with the Grand Trunk at Lévis or Richmond Junction, and they might get down to Portland and Boston in that way, but the Intercolonial Railway cannot do that. What the minister says is, that he will haul this lumber fifty miles further to Theriault and fifty miles further south to Fredericton, and hand it over to the Canadian Pacific railway and make the shippers pay for it. I hope the minister will be able to make plain what to me is particularly dense at the present moment. I wrote to Mr. Gutelius on the 25th of November and I protested as strongly as I could against the injustice, pointing out to him that we were losing fifty cents per thousand, and I have received no answer and no redress of the grievance. What is true of the Walsh estate is true of many other business firms who do business in that portion of New Brunswick and it applies to other business besides the lumber business. Probably for all time to come the great industry in the central portion of New Brunswick will be the lumber industry. While there are some parts of that region which might be made profitable as arable land, I believe that the greater portion of central New Brunswick will always continue to be more productive and more profitable as a forest area than as an agricultural area. The lumber operators in that portion of New Brunswick have to import hay, oats, fodder, and everything which goes to carrying on their business. The only way the man who lives on the Tobique or St. John river can possibly get in his supplies is by the Transcontinental railway, taking the freight up to Wabski on the Canadian Pacific railway, handing it to the Transcontinental at that point, and distributing it thence. Florenceville is possibly the great distributing centre for farm produce in New Brunswick and Florenceville is only fifty miles from Plaster Rock. The next fifty miles east of Plaster Rock is the great lumbering centre of New Brunswick, so that the farmer who has produce to sell in that portion of Carleton county and that portion of the province to the north, can best distribute his produce from that point. As it is to-day, the merchant of Florenceville who sells hay or grain must send it to Fredericton, eighty-five miles distant, thence to McGivney's, the junction of the Intercolonial railway and Transcontinental railway, another thirty odd miles, or in all twice the distance it should be sent, and that extra haul the farmer or the merchant has to pay.

Mr. HAZEN: How far is the haul by road from Florenceville across to the Miramichi waters?

Mr. CARVELL: Bristol is the nearest point. It is fifteen miles to Foreston and seven miles to Juniper, which would be twenty-two miles by team, and I think it is the hilliest part of the province.

Mr. HAZEN: I know the road.

Mr. CARVELL: If the minister has been over the road he knows what it is like and he knows that while it is possible to team there, it is utterly impracticable from a business standpoint.

I am pointing out to the minister the real facts in regard to the business of our country; I am giving nothing fanciful, nothing got up for political purposes, because there is no politics in this matter so far as I am concerned. This is business, something that affects not only the lumberman but the farmer, the merchant, the business man everywhere. It is an injustice which the minister would never have allowed had he been seized of all the facts. I have endeavoured to place the facts before the minister from an entirely unprejudiced standpoint. I have read all the correspondence between myself and Mr. Gutelius. I have given my side of the case and Mr. Gutelius' side as well, and I am willing to leave the matter to the sterlingly honest judgment of the minister. When he applies that judgment —and there is no other man in the House in a better position to apply a business judgment than he—I am sure he will come to the conclusion that the people of New Brunswick have been unjustly treated in the matter, and that we should have that track replaced and be given back the connection and the right to do business, which we had before this track was taken away from us.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals): This siding was put in for the use of the contractors in the construction of the Transcontinental. To throw a different light on what my hon. friend has stated, I may say that the Canadian Pacific railway have a station and sidings at Plaster Rock, where this spur joins their line. On the Transcontinental railway it was never intended to have a station or a siding at this point. This was only a temporary affair built by the Transcontinental Commission long before I had anything to do with the matter. One can understand the difference between transferring cars from the Canadian-Pacific railway, where there is a station and a siding, for the construction of the Transcontinental, and transferring cars from the Transcontinental to the Canadian Pacific railway where you would have to leave part of the train on the main line of the Transcontinental and push the cars up a steep grade to the Canadian Pacific railway. It is not a proper place for a transfer; and I am satisfied that if the road was under the control of the Railway Commission, they would neither authorize nor permit a transfer there under existing conditions. I do not want to put the blame on my officials, because I was a party to the removal of the spur.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. CARVELL: I am sorry to hear it.

Mr. COCHRANE: My hon. friend says it is a proper transfer. I do not pretend to be a railway man; but as long ago as May, 1913, an engineer who was on the Transcontinental road at the time wrote to the then superintendent, Mr. Brady, objecting, from the Transcontinental standpoint to this transfer. This is a question for an engineer, not for a layman like my hon. friend or myself. The letter is as follows:

May 31, 1913.

Dear Sir,—As no doubt you are aware, we now have two connections with the Canadian Pacific railway, Theriault at mileage 216, and Wabski at mileage 163.5. I would suggest that we abolish one of these points, and think that Wakski is the one that should be dropped, for the reason that we have to take our loads three quarters of a mile down a 2 per cent grade, with the risk of their getting away from us, and take the empties up the same grade. With the motive power we have had so far, our train has been frequently delayed from one to two hours. Last winter we had very often as many as twenty cars to lift at a time, and that meant four trains down the hill.

He is an engineer whose judgment I think my hon. friend will accept.

Mr. HAZEN: Who is he?

Mr. COCHRANE: Mr. H. B. Dibblee. I understand that my hon. friend some years ago recommended this engineer to the Commission, although I have no evidence as to that. From all I know, he is a good engineer; and I am quoting him rather than my own engineers employed at Moncton, who also take the position that this is a dangerous point for a transfer. For the justification of myself and of the management at Moncton, I may say that we would rather haul the freight the whole distance to Fredericton for the rate that we receive than have our employees down there run the risk of losing their lives. I am willing at any time to remove any dangerous point and to overcome the difficulty in some other way, even at a loss of money. To overcome the opposition of shippers to the proposed removal of this transfer on account of the difference in mileage to Fredericton or Theriault, which would replace Wabski, the rates accruing to the National Transcontinental railway were so adjusted as to minimize the increase in the through rates; and if for the shorter haul from Fredericton the Canadian Pacific railway would make the rates to New England correspond with those which they apply from Theriault, the aggregate through charges against the shippers of forest products originating on the Transcontinental would be the same.

In view of the temporary operation of the Transcontinental, we have not been in a position to quote or arrange for through freights. We are greatly handicapped, because we have no outlets ourselves and unfortunately we connect largely with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who have absolute control in many cases. We hope to overcome this as soon as the money markets will allow us, so that we may be able to give the people of New Brunswick two outlets to the markets to the south.

The rate from Juniper to Wabski was four cents, as rightly quoted by my hon. friend, but that four cents did not pay us, because we had no siding at Wabski. We had to leave part of our train on the line in order to shunt up to the station four or five cars at a trip. On the other hand, the Canadian Pacific railway could leave their train on the siding and take the cars down.

The distance from Juniper to Fredericton is seventy-two miles, and we have made the rate four and a half cents. Therefore the freight, instead of being fifty cents, is only seventeen and a half cents per thousand feet of spruce, or 3,300 lbs., according to my hon. friend. In order to meet the hon. gentleman's clients and the general public, rather than take the risk of this dangerous interchange between the two railways, we would haul the freight from Juniper to Fredericton; and, on the whole, I think we would make more money as well as protect our employees by not making this dangerous transfer. The trains running to Fredericton could drop the cars off at a siding much more quickly than the locomotives could shove the cars for three-quarters of a mile up the hill.

Mr. CARVELL: What does the minister now say is the rate from Fredericton to Boston points?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not giving that. I do not know it.

Mr. CARVELL: I do; that is the trouble. Fredericton is one hundred miles nearer than Plaster Rock to Boston points.

Mr. COCHRANE: Then your complaint is not against the Intercolonial railway or the Transcontinental; it is against the Canadian Pacific railway. If we haul the freight one hundred miles nearer to the Canadian Pacific railway, they can surely give the same rates or a little less.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister is all in error.

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not; I think my hon. friend will find that I am correct. If that proposition will not do, we will take the freight from Juniper to Theriault for five cents, not for one and a half cents, as my hon. friend quoted. To prove that my statement is correct, I want to quote a letter written by the I. N. Chase Lumber Company, a New England customer of Mr. Welch, one of the shippers from Juniper. It is as follows:

> We are in receipt of yours December 17 regarding rates on lumber in carload lots from Juniper to New England points and we are greatly obliged to you for this information, the rate from Fredericton to New England to be used for furtherance. We had nothing like this before and this gives us an opportunity to route shipments to New Haven points at a comparatively flat rate with shipments off the Canadian Pacific railway.

I want to assume the blame to a large extent of having this taken out. The matter was discussed with me before it was done, and the danger to employees was laid before me, and I O.K.'d the proposal.

Mr. P. MICHAUD (Victoria, N.B.): I have been consulted by the Donald Fraser Lumber Company with reference to this siding at Wabski. I understand that they have a pretty difficult situation on account of this siding. The Minister says that there was danger at that siding on account of running the train down the grade. But I have known of the running of trains on that siding at Wabski. I understand that they never heard of an accident there. I understand that the Donald Fraser Lumber Company is under a serious handicap for lack of siding at that point. I wonder if the Railway Commission of Canada would not authorize a siding there from the Transcontinental to the Canadian Pacific railway, but I am told that the minister has made up his mind that there shall not be a siding at that place. I am sorry to hear that.

Mr. COCHRANE: But we will overcome that difficulty so far as these people are concerned. As soon as the bridge and railway are completed at St. Leonard's, we will have an outlet to our bow, and will take the stuff to St. Leonard's and exchange with either the Canadian Pacific railway, the Maine Central or whoever is building that road.

Mr. MICHAUD: I know that as a matter of fact the National Transcontinental is not getting business that it might get on the line from Edmundston to Plaster Rock. There are lumbermen along that line who claim that they cannot get Intercolonial railway cars in which to ship their lumber. I have that personally from the shippers themselves, who tell me that they use Canadian Pacific railway cars to ship their lumber. The minister says I am wrong; I am sorry to say that the hon. gentleman himself is wrong. I have approached Mr. Fleming, the superintendent of that division of the Transcontinental. I am told that it was the station agent at Edmundston who went over the Wabski siding to gather the facts about it, and I am sorry to say that he was not the proper man to collect that information and send a report. The officials at Moncton took it for granted that this report was all right, and Mr. Fleming, superintendent of this railway in my constituency, said to me that the decision arrived at by the officials upon the report of this station agent was final. I am sorry that such a report should be made. It was even said that it would be of no use for me to go on with the matter, because everything was settled. I am glad that in the near future the international bridge will be built at St. Leonard's, and we shall have better communications. Meantime the Transcontinental railway is certainly not living up to its op-

5 p.m. portunities in the province of New Brunswick. A great traffic is possible in the district through which this railway runs, but there have arisen these difficulties in making the connections with the Intercolonial railway and Temiscouata railways. I hope that for the future we shall have better communications and better operation of the road. I do not wish to criticise the minister, but I must say that on some parts of the line the people are not satisfied with the officials of the railway, but little heed seems to be paid to the opinion of the people in this matter.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton): I trust the minister will pardon me if I take advantage of this discussion on the management of the Intercolonial railway to bring to his notice again two matters on which we have had some correspondence. He is aware that there is a change in the line of the railway in the eastern part of Cape Breton, between the towns of Sydney Mines and Florence and the city of Sydney. The road runs by a new route for a distance of ten or twelve miles, and for the first time the towns of Florence and Sydney Mines are on the main line of the Intercolonial railway. While the road was not placed exactly where, on business principles, it should be, we are satisfied for the present that the change is a great improvement on the old condition. What I wish particularly to bring to the minister's notice is the fact that though the town of Florence is a mining and commercial town of about fifteen or sixteen hundred people where considerable business is transacted, yet the regular train does not stop there. There is a very good passenger station and freight shed, all new. The minister will understand what a startling surprise it was to the people of the town to find that the express train did not stop there. It is unnecessary for me to point out how inconvenient it is for the people that, though they have a railway station in their own town, they must go to Sydney Mines or to the Bras d'Or station to get aboard a train. I brought this to the minister's attention a month or five weeks ago, and he replied very promptly that he had asked the officials to take the matter into consideration. I have been watching from day to day to see what was to be done, in fact, to see the trains stop at this important point. But nothing has been done. I hope the minister will see to it that the people of Florence are given the full benefit of the road. It was bad enough to be inconvenienced when the road was not running that way but now that the road passes the doors of the people, it does seem an unusual thing in the history of the Intercolonial railway that trains do not stop at a place of this size and importance.

Another matter I have to inquire about is the local connection between Sydney and the points in the northern part of the county. The minister is aware that in very cold weather the ice stops our ferry. We are then dependent for communication between the city of Sydney and the northern part of the county on the local trains of the Intercolonial railway. For years that connection has been satisfactory, but this year the old traditions have been set aside and there are no regular trains, but we have to depend upon freights passing through.

Mr. COCHRANE: That train is running now.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is only two days since I got a letter on the subject. There may have been improvements since, and if so there is no purpose in what I am saying. My information is that the regular train is not on, but if the minister says that the old service is restored, that is satisfactory.

Mr. COCHRANE: I am speaking only of the local train which runs there when the ferry stops. Do none of the trains stop at Florence?

Mr. McKENZIE: None but freight trains. I do hope this matter will be taken up at once and proper accommodation afforded the people of Florence. If the old conditions with regard to the local trains were re-established that would be quite satisfactory, but my information is that the old conditions did not prevail after the ferry stopped this year.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not before me the information with regard to Florence, as I did not know that the matter would be brought up to-day. I was informed on Friday that the local train which operates when the ferry service is discontinued is now running. In any case I shall certainly be glad to obtain information with regard to Florence, and to see what can be done.

Mr. MACDONALD: With the minister's permission, I wish to call his attention to a matter about which I have spoken to him privately: that is, the cancelling of a train previously running on what is known as the short line railway. The regular accommodation train is due in Pictou at 9.30 a.m. and, under the new arrangement, leaves at 11.40 a.m. A local paper says that on the four days during which the train had been in operation, owing to the extra work imposed upon it by reason of the taking off of the special it did not arrive in Pictou until about the time it was scheduled to leave. If the minister would extend the time of departure say to 1.30 p.m., the trainmen would probably be later in reaching their destination at the other end, but the people would be enabled to get into the county town, transact their business and return the same day. May I have the assurance of the minister that he will look into this matter?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes; I have made a note of it.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister has read a letter from the Chase Company of New York with regard to New York and New Haven points. I happen to know that the combined rates from Juniper to New York and New Haven points are not at all the same as the rate to Boston points, but I am not sufficiently acquainted with the details to discuss the matter intelligently. I wish the minister to remember, however, that it costs our company 18½ cents to get that material from Juniper to Boston, via Fredericton, and 18½ cents to get it to Boston by way of Theriault, while under the old arrangement we could get it to Boston for 17 cents. These are the things the minister cannot get away from.

Mr. COCHRANE: Your grievance is against the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. CARVELL: No; the Canadian Pacific railway have their rate, and they will maintain it, so far as I know. I have tried at various times to induce the Canadian Pacific railway to cut their rates, but I never succeeded in getting them to do so. As a matter of fact, I succeeded only once in my life in getting the Canadian Pacific railway to change their rates, and that was a case of getting them not to lower them but to raise them. I had no trouble in getting them to raise the rate, the only condition being that I should agree to defend them before the Railway Commission if any one tried to have the rate cut down to its original figure. A Boston party did attempt to have the rate cut and I defended the company—successfully, I may say. That is the only success I ever had with the Canadian Pacific railway in that respect. It would be useless for me to ask the Canadian Pacific railway to reduce the rate from Fredericton to Boston; the minister knows that they would not do it. There is no use in mincing the matter; the minister knows quite well that in suggesting that I have the Canadian Pacific railway cut their rate, he is asking me to do what is impossible.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, I do not.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, the minister has had something to do with freight rates, and he should know that I cannot have that rate reduced. The minister does know, however, that he can carry out the agreement he made with me a year and a half or two years ago, and that he can get that lumber to Boston for 17 cents per cwt. But that is only my own part of the matter; that does not touch the root of the question. If it were entirely my own affair, I am sure that I would not take up the time of the House in discussing it. The whole public is interested in this outrage. My hon. friend says that we have no siding at the junction point. That may be true, but it would not cost very much to put a siding at the junction point; besides, my hon. friend must take the bitter with the sweet. If he is going to run a transportation company he must supply the people of Canada with transportation. It cannot be all cream; there must be some skim milk in the transaction.

Mr. COCHRANE: Cream for the Canadian Pacific railway, but none for the people of the country.

Mr. CARVELL: It cannot be all cream for my hon. friend. In one respect I think the minister has hardly been fair in his discussion of this matter. I do not say that offensively, because the minister always tries to be courteous, with me at any rate. Perhaps it has not occurred to him that the distance from that junction point to his station at Plaster Rock is not more than a mile and a half. The minister has a station on the north side of the Tobique river, with enough yard room to hold a great many more cars than he will handle on the road for a good many years, especially if he allows the thing to run as it is running at the present time. When the minister puts forward as an excuse the absence of sidings or yard room, I think he is putting up a severe form of special pleading. It is like a drowning man grasping at a straw; I think my hon. friend will get very little protection from his suggestion in that regard.

The matter, then, reverts back to the main question: does the minister want to give the people of that portion of New Brunswick the rights to which they are entitled, or does he not? I am very sorry indeed to hear my hon. friend say that he does not propose to put back the connection. That is what I understood him to say; if I am wrong, he has an opportunity of correcting me. I repeat that I am sorry indeed to hear him say so, because, unfortunately, when my hon. friend puts his foot down, it usually stays down. Possibly, however, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries may be able to bring sufficient persuasion—I shall not say influence—to bear on my hon. friend the Minister of Railways to induce him to have the matter straightened out.

Did I understand the minister to say that in so far as my company is concerned, he will haul this freight to Boston at the same rate that it cost us before? I thought I heard him say so.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, I did not. I said that our rate would give you a shorter mileage.

Mr. CARVELL: Then that grievance is not remedied; I thought my hon. friend would give me that assurance. My friend is in error as to the mileage. I am within a mile or two of being correct. It is not one hundred miles, but only about sixty-four from Plaster Rock to Boston than from Fredericton to Boston. McAdam Junction is a point common to both reads. As I figure it, it is one hundred and twenty-seven miles from Plaster Rock to McAdam and sixty-six miles from Fredericton to McAdam; that leaves a distance of about sixty-one miles against Plaster Rock. My hon. friend knows that the distance is not the only factor in the determination of freight rates; it is the competition that counts, the endeavour to get business at competitive points, and the fact that the Canadian Pacific railway are giving a lower rate from Plaster Rock and Theriault to Boston than from Fredericton to Boston is no fault of mine. It would not be that way if I could help it, but I am powerless.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is not our fault.

Mr. CARVELL: It is not mine and it is my friend who is making my company and every other man doing business along that road lose money. I can only say again that I am sorry my hon. friend has flatly refused to remedy this grievance. But I hope that, even at this late date, some influence or compulsion will be brought to bear on my hon. friend which will cause him to relent and give back to the people the right so ruthlessly taken from them.

Mr. COCHRANE: I wish to impress the hazardous nature of the operation of making that transfer; that is the reason for our taking out the connection.

Mr. CARVELL: That is surely not a reason.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is to me. When these men are under my charge we will not ask them to do a hazardous thing day after day if we can avoid it.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—FREDERICTON LAND EXPROPRIATION.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.,) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and correspondence had by Margaret Lynch, or any person representing her, with reference to the expropriation of certain land belonging to the said Margaret Lynch in the city of Fredericton, province of New Brunswick, by the Intercolonial railway, and also of all letters, telegrams and correspondence had with F. P. Gutelius or any other official of the Intercolonial railway with reference thereto.

He said: This is very largely a private and professional transaction, but yet the matter has been so grossly handled that I feel I am justified in calling the Minister's attention to it in this public manner. I have done so privately, that is, by letter, and the minister, I think, did all he could, but unfortunately that was not enough to produce results. That is my justification for this motion. The minister is aware that, some time in the summer of 1913, the Department of Railways and Canals saw fit to expropriate quite a large lot of land in Fredericton belonging to a Mrs. Lynch. While, of course, the Minister of Railways has the legal right to expropriate any land, yet some discretion and respect for the rights of owners should be exercised. Mrs. Lynch is the owner of perhaps the finest residential grounds in Fredericton. It is the old residence of ex-Governor Wilmot, one of the great men of New Brunswick, and it has been in the Lynch family a great many years. It consists of some ten or twelve acres. The old residence is a fine home surrounded by many beautiful shade trees. It is one of the most desirable properties in Fredericton, and that is saying a great deal because there is perhaps no town in Canada with more desirable places in it than Fredericton. The St. John and Quebec railway, commonly known as the St. John Valley Raliway Company, wanted a certain amount of this land for right of way sidings, warehouses, and generally in connection with their scheme. The railway company have never tried to purchase this land from Mrs. Lynch. An agent in Fredericton, who we understood was acting on behalf of the St. John and Quebec Railway Company, wanted to buy the property from her two or three years ago. It was a private transaction, but nothing came of it. The next thing we knew the Intercolonial railway had filed plans to expropriate it. I have been prying into the affairs of the St. John and Quebec Railway Company during the past six or eight months and have got quite a bit of information in reference to it. I found in some of my excursions along that line that the St. John and Quebec Railway Company would have had to pay Mrs. Lynch for the land before taking possession, because if they took the land under the ordinary expropriation proceedings, under the Railway Act, they would be compelled to either buy it from this lady and pay her price or apply to the Court and deposit in Court such sum as the judge under such conditions might think fair and equitable. It seems that by getting my hon. friend to take charge of the matter for them they got rid of this inconvenience. They were able to get this land without asking the owner for leave or license, they simply filed a plan in the office of the registrar of deeds and sent her a notice that they had taken three or four acres of her land. The next thing she knew a gang of navvies were on her land cutting down trees, tearing up the lawns and destroying the place; and when she protested they said: Well, what have you to say about it? We have the right, the Minister of Railways can do it. And when she said: I want my pay, they said: Go to the Minister of Railways and get your pay That was in 1913. I took the matter up for her, as her solicitor, and I attempted to get some sort of settlement with the Department of Railways and Canals, but I was put off and put off and put off. The ostensible reason given me at that time was that they might want more land and did not want to expropriate until they decided what land they wanted to take. They did take more land in the summer of 1914, a year afterwards; they filed another plan and made greater incursions upon her private property, cut down more shade trees, and reduced the value of the remainder of her property. They made her house almost uninhabitable.

Mr. HAZEN: How near do they go to the house?

Mr. CARVELL: They go, I would say, within 100 feet speaking generally. I will send the plan over to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because he knows the property very well. He knows where those beautiful fir and elm trees were. They are practically all cut down. The line runs from a point on Regent street in a diagonal direction right back of the house. It would probably be more than 100 feet from the house to the line of the railway, but the land taken is really in the rear of the house. I wrote a number of letters to Mr. Gutelius and, I am sorry to say, there as in another matter, to which I referred this afternoon, and I did not get the courtesy of a reply, and could get no answer or satisfaction whatever. I realized that as a lawyer the Crown had a right to take this woman's property, but while I realized that the Crown had that right, there was also the moral right to try and settle with her or otherwise to start proceedings in the Exchequer Court to fix the compensation that should be allowed her. All I asked Mr. Gutelius to do was to either settle with this lady or to apply to the Exchequer Court and have compensation fixed. He would do neither. So again I resorted to a course which I find generally produces results and I appealed to the minister. I have not the correspondence here but the minister, I have no doubt, has it. I have pointed out the condition of affairs to the minister. I know I used fairly strong language. I think I told him that they were acting as—I have just forgotten the exact word and I would not like to use one for fear it might be a little too harsh—but at all events the language I used was not very complimentary. I realized that they had a right to take that woman's property, but they ought to pay for it or go to court and have the compensation settled. I got back at once a very nice letter from the minister and I got action on the part of Mr. Gutelius so that the minister again did exactly what he should have done.

Some week or two after I wrote to the minister I received an offer from a very reputable firm of solicitors in Fredericton who were acting as agents of the Government, but as the offer was afterwards withdrawn I do not feel like making it public. It was a very respectable offer. Unfortunately, Mrs. Lynch was away in New York at the time and I was unable to give an answer immediately although I did not think she would have accepted the offer as it was not high enough but it was a reasonable offer coming from the Department of Railway and Canals. The amount was as large as we would expect the Department of Railways to offer when the Intercolonial railway is presided over by the gentleman who is the general manager of that institution at the present time because his heart is not known to have any great enlargement excepting when it comes to the question of his own salary. We have not seen any contraction whatever of the valve of that gentleman's heart when it comes to taking money out of the coffers of the Dominion of Canada, but we have seen every evidence of the most sudden contraction when that gentleman is paying money to other people of Canada whose property he is taking away from them. Under these circumstances, and coming from this gentleman, I thought it was a very reasonable offer.

Before my client returned to Fredericton, where I had been for three or four weeks attending court, the solicitors to whom I have referred came and asked me if I would be willing to give up the offer I had received in writing as they had received instructions from Moncton to withdraw it. As we have always got along in a very friendly way, I, as a matter of professional courtesy, gave back the offer, and, as far as the legal effect of the matter is concerned, it stands as though the offer had never been made. From that day to this nothing has been done. They have taken altogether five acres of this lady's home. They have taken land that is worth a great many thousands of dollars, and they have torn up her property with the most ruthless hand possible. I have begged them now for a year and a half to start proceedings in the Exchequer Court. Let us have a judge of the Exchequer Court settle the matter, let them pay this woman what he says she is entitled to and we will get satisfaction. But we can neither get the Department of Railways and Canals to pay us nor can we get them to put us into the Exchequer Court, and I do not know, from the manner in which this matter is being dealt with, that Mrs. Lynch may not be able to go to the Department of Justice and get a fiat in order to bring suit against the Crown. I cannot believe that the Minister of Railways and Canals is going to stand for any such conduct as that. I cannot believe that the minister wants to take people's property in the high-handed and barbarous manner I have detailed, giving them neither compensation for their property nor the chance to have the compensation settled by the proper authorities.

I know my legal rights, of course, as well as any lawyer in this House does. I know that my client can apply to the Minister of Justice and get a fiat to start suit against the Crown, but I also know that this involves an enormous expense. It is the duty of the Crown, when they take any person's land, to start proceedings in the Exchequer Court to ascertain the compensation to be allowed for the land taken. Why the Department of Railways and Canals are carrying on this affair as they are I cannot understand. I have tried to figure it out in my own mind, but I am at a loss every time I try to do so.

I can understand quite well why the St. John and Quebec Railway Company did not go on. They would have been compelled to have paid the money before they got possession of the land, or to have paid a certain amount into court before they took possession, and that meant paying out money. We know that the St. John and Quebec Railway Company have not been very flush of funds for some time. But not so with the Department of Railways and Canals. Why you have taken this high-handed method without giving us a chance to find out what should be paid to us as compensation is something I cannot understand. While this is to some extent a private transaction, yet it is a matter of so much importance that I feel compelled to bring it before the minister in this public manner, and all I ask is that he settle with us or bring us into court and allow the proper tribunal to settle the matter and let us get our compensation and be done with it. That is a reasonable proposition, one that I do not think the minister will deny is reasonable, and now that I have brought it to his attention, I feel sure that he will be willing to see that the proper machinery is put in motion, that no more clogs are placed in the wheel, and that this woman shall be accorded the right to which she is entitled as a British subject and a person whose land has been taken by the Crown while no compensation has been made.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals): When I took charge of the department I found that there was a system in reference to the acquisition of real estate which had been in vogue on the Intercolonial railway for a long time. About six months ago I became so disgusted with it that I issued a new order with reference to the matter, and it requires that we must get two or three men to value property which we wish to acquire. To give you a fair illustration of what I mean, let me say that at a certain place on the Intercolonial we wanted to put in a track scale. We saw the owner of the property which would best suit the purpose of the railway, and he offered to let us have what we required for $80. In conformity with this system we appointed three arbitrators, and instead of eighty dollars they assessed us six hundred dollars, and that puts us in the awkward position of having evidence piled up against us if we take it to the Exchequer Court. I would cite another instance: We wanted to acquire a certain property and the owner only asked $2.25 a foot for it, but we appointed three arbitrators and they charged us $800 for expenses, for a secretary and everything else, and they assessed it at three dollars a foot. In these circumstances, I concluded it would pay the department to get a valuator of our own who would have no axe to grind and who would give us a fair valuation, and if the owners were not satisfied with it, they could go to the Exchequer Court. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has stated that this property was for the Quebec and St. John railway. The first expropriation was not for the Quebec and St. John railway, but for the Intercolonial railway, for a freight-shed and track which we needed, because of the changing of the station, and its area was 3.81 acres.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not think it makes very much difference as to that.

Mr. COCHRANE: It does, because it removes some of the ground on which my hon. friend based his remarks.

Mr. CARVELL: Suppose the Quebec and St. John railway had never been built, would the minister have expropriated that land?

Mr. COCHRANE: Yes, I would. The hon. member stated that this property was 100 feet from the residence, but I have a plan here which shows it was 200 feet from Mrs. Lynch's residence.

Mr. CARVELL: That is all wrong.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think so. It is quite a distance.

Mr. CARVELL: About fifty feet.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is more than that.

Mr. CARVELL: At any rate, it is near her residence and you tore down her trees and cut through her summer house.

Mr. COCHRANE: We had three men value this property, and the value that was placed on the 3·81 acres was $11,935, or $3,132 per acre, and in the case of the second expropriation the land had an area of 1·15 acres. The total valuation made by these gentlemen was $15,575.

Mr. CARVELL: You made no such offer as that to me.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, because we considered it was altogether too large, and we believe so to-day.

Mr. CARVELL: We are convinced to the contrary.

Mr. COCHRANE: The lawyer who is handling the case for the Intercolonial railway is a gentleman of some repute, Mr. R. B. Hanson, and he protested against it. He says in a letter:

August 27, 1914.

Replying to your favour of the 26th instant, I beg now to give you some of my reasons for considering that the property taken from Mrs. Lynch is not worth more than $8,000 or $9,000. The Intercolonial railway takes approximately five acres of this property but only a portion of the part taken is on a street, the balance is inaccessible at present and will be for the future unless the street is put through. There was no prospect of a street until after the Intercolonial had expropriated and built the freight shed. The property immediately across Regent street, known as Scully's Grove, contains 14 acres. It is situated in as good a position, in fact better, as it had access not only to Regent street, but also St. John street, and it sold in 1911 or thereabouts for $10,000, for the whole block, and the executor of the estates thinks he made a splendid sale and so do I. A few years before (not more than three or four) the estate of Wm. H. Scully sold the same property to Charles Scully for $4,000. This was a bargain, of course, but it is also a fact to be taken into consideration.

The Randolph property, known as 'Frogmore,' situate on the same side of Regent street, but west of the Canadian Pacific railway, contains 22 acres. It has a fine residence, stables and outbuildings, with fine graded grounds and large gardens and fields, and could have been purchased at any time during the last four or five years for $18,000 at the outside.

The value of the land alone taken by the Intercolonial railway considered as a whole, having in view the uses to which it could be put before August, 1913, would not, in my opinion, exceed $1,000 per acre, which would aggregate, in the whole, about $5,000. The damages to the property adjacent are difficult to measure; the conditions have not changed. A railway ran along the edge of her property then. A railway runs along the edge of her property now. The only difference is that the railway which skirts her property now is some distance nearer her residence than it was in 1913. Without pretending to estimate all the consequential damages, I would think that $3,000 or $4,000 would be liberal.

I understood also that an offer of $13,500 was made to my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell), but he refused it. I am not in a position to prove that, but I give the statement for what it is worth.

Mr. CARVELL: Do you want me to answer that?

Mr. COCHRANE: I am not making any assertion about it.

Mr. CARVELL: I may say that Mr. Hanson who gave me the offer gave it to me in writing, and I wish to state here that Mr. Hanson and I are the very best of personal friends.

Mr. COCHRANE: I understand so.

Mr. CARVELL: At that time I was acting as counsel with Mr. Hanson in a very large expropriation. I never saw my client and had no opportunity to, as she was away in New York. Three days afterwards, Mr. Hanson asked me if I would give to him the offer that had been made, as he had received instructions from Moncton to that effect, and as a matter of professional courtesy I handed it back.

Mr. COCHRANE: You did not refuse it or accept it?

[Mr. Cochrane.]

Mr. CARVELL: I had not the opportunity; I had not seen my client.

Mr. COCHRANE: I accept your word.

Mr. CARVELL: Mr. Hanson will bear out what I say.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will see that there is no further delay in sending the case to the Exchequer Court. I do not want to say that those men who valued the property have not acted fairly, but the man whom we sent down there agreed with Mr. Hanson as to the value, and he thinks he can sustain his opinion in the Exchequer Court.

Mr. CARVELL: Would the minister give me the names of the gentlemen who valued this land? I understood there had been some gentlemen appointed but we never knew the result of their valuation until to-day, and it is interesting.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not think I ought to give the names. We will try to prove that their opinion is right.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister does not want to give me the names?

Mr. COCHRANE: I would rather not.

Mr. CARVELL: They will be given in the court, and the minister might as well give them now. I do not think the minister has grasped the point I was trying to make. The fact is that great damage has been done to this lady's property. I will send to the minister a photograph showing what he has destroyed. You may talk about the Germans ravaging Belgium, but there has been nothing worse done in Belgium than the minister has done in this case.

Mr. COCHRANE: I know all about it. I was on the ground before the expropriation.

Mr. CARVELL: I am sending the minister a photograph of the ground he has cut up and run his railway through, and I wish I could get the photograph on "Hansard". It is not a question, however, how much damage has been done to my client's property. We will take our chances of convincing the Exchequer Court as to how much damage has been done. It is not a question of how much was paid for Scully's grove, because that is a matter for the courts to find out. Scully's grove is a baseball field on the opposite side of the street and a little farther towards the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks.

Mr. COCHRANE: It is good commercial property.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes. It has not a building on it; I do not think it ever had. It has been used as a baseball field and as a general resort for athletes. I think it was sold for $7,000, as Mr. Hanson states.

Mr. COCHRANE: The railway runs alongside of the property which we have taken and it would not be residential property.

Mr. CARVELL: I admit that Mrs. Lynch does not reside on every inch of this land, but it is all enclosed by her fences. It is land she did not want to sell to a railway company; she was holding it for other purposes; it is land which, as I said before, was probably the best residential property in Fredericton. It was formerly occupied by Governor Wilmot. Mrs. Lynch did not want a railway within 150 feet of her residence. When my hon. friend speaks about comparing the quantity of land taken with the Scully grove property, he is speaking as many railway people do when they take away people's land—they simply speak of acreage. Were I sitting as a judge of the Exchequer Court, the last thing I would consider in giving damages would be acreage. The acreage, the actual land taken, is the last thing which an arbitrator should consider. It is the damage done to the rest of the property that counts.

Frogmore, to which my hon. friend has referred, is nearly half a mile away from Mrs. Lynch's property.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is better residential property.

Mr. CARVELL: No, it is not. It is away out in the country. You have to cross the Canadian Pacific railway track and climb a hill in order to get to it. There is no comparison whatever. You could cut up the Lynch property into lots to-morrow, and you could sell every one of them in the course of two or three years. If you were to cut up the Frogmore property into lots, you could not sell them in twenty-five years, because the city of Fredericton is not growing rapidly enough. That, however, is a matter which we shall discuss when it comes to the court. The point is that my hon. friend has taken this woman's property, and he will not pay her nor put her into court.

Mr. COCHRANE: I will put her into court.

Mr. CARVELL: I hope my hon. friend will; that is all we ask. We shall be satisfied with what we get. If we cannot get more than $15,000 damages, or more than $7,000, the value that my hon. friend's solicitor puts on the property, I shall be much surprised. I think my hon. friend's solicitor has had his eyes opened. He is learning a lot of law on the right side of these arbitration cases; that is, the side of the owner, the person whose property has been damaged. If my hon. friend would write again to his agent, he would get a somewhat different valuation from what he got three months ago.

Mr. COCHRANE: I have not received any.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend should write to his agent again. I know the gentleman very well, and his mind has had a wonderful transformation during the last few months as regards the potential damage to property and the amount of damage that ought to be allowed for taking the land itself for severance and all those other matters that enter into the question of damages in an arbitration or Exchequer court suit. As I have my hon. friend's promise that he will put this matter into the court, that is all I want, and we will undertake to look after the law of it and try to see that the lady gets the amount of compensation to which she is entitled.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

ST. JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N. B.) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, contracts, and other documents relating to the operation of the St. John Valley railway, so called, by the Intercolonial railway, since the first day of July last past, and of all letters, correspondence, etc., had either with the Department of Railways and Canals, or with F. P. Gutelius, or any other official of the Intercolonial railway.

He said: Before this motion is passed, I desire to recall to the attention of the minister what we look upon in New Brunswick as the very unfair attitude assumed by the Department of Railways and Canals in the operation of the Valley railway, so called. While it may be possible that the minister is technically within his rights and is not compelled to do more than he is doing, yet, if he be right, it is the narrowest, most technical construction of a statute and contract I have ever known since I entered Parliament. He agreed in the most solemn fashion imaginable, and this Parliament by statute provided, that if the province of New Brunswick built a certain road up to a certain standard—a standard set by the minister himself—and did certain other things, he would operate that road as part of the Intercolonial railway, and pay back to the province forty per cent of the gross earnings with which to pay interest on the bond guarantee, the balance, if any, to go to the company that built the road. Now, I am not here as the special champion of the Government of the province of New Brunswick, nor of the company that built the road. I have had occasion during the last three or four years to say many things which were perhaps not entirely complimentary both to the Government and to the company. But the people of the province of New Brunswick have certain rights and privileges; they have a future before them, and they have certain debts which they must pay. Therefore, I contend, the Minister of Railways and Canals should carry out this contract made in good faith with the province of New Brunswick, whether he has the most friendly feeling towards the Government of New Brunswick and the railway company or not. This is a question bigger, broader and much more important than whether the province of New Brunswick has carried out its contract or whether the company has acted in perfect good faith. This is a matter that has caused great discussion in New Brunswick during the last two or three years; in fact, it has been one of the greatest bones of political contention we have had there since 1909. The subject has been discussed in this House many times, and I am not going over it now except to say generally that the people wanted a railway built along the river St. John through a country portions of which had been settled for a hundred years and which was without railway communication. This section contained some of the finest and most productive land of Canada, yet some parts of it were thirty and forty miles away from railway communications. Portions of this area had water communication during seven months of the year, but others had not even that. The great need was the need of railway communication. For some reason which I can hardly explain—and it does not matter for my present purpose—when the railways in western New Brunswick were built, they did not follow the St. John river below Woodstock. A branch line ran into Fredericton, but in the whole distance of one hundred and forty miles this point, Fredericton, about equi-distant from Woodstock and St. John, was the only point that had railway communication with the outside world. After years of agitation and, I am bound to say, considerable cross-firing between the Government of New Brunswick and the Government of the Dominion, what we thought a fair working basis was arrived at which was embodied in legislation passed in the session of 1911. Among the provisions of that statute were the following.

> The Governor in Council is authorized to enter into a contract with any railway company already authorized, or which may hereafter be authorized by law, to construct a line of railway from a point on the line of the National Transcontinental at Grand Falls, in the county of Victoria, to the city of St. John, in the province of New Brunswick, a distance of about two hundred and twenty miles, the principal and interest of the bonds of which railway company, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 6, of the statutes of the province of New Brunswick, 1910, the Government of the province of New Brunswick has guaranteed, or may guarantee, to the extent of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, and with the Government of the province of New Brunswick, for the leasing of the said line of railway when completed, with its appurtenances, and for its operation, equipment, maintenance, up-keep and repair by the Government of Canada, as part of the Government railway system of Canada, for a period of ninety-nine years and for the payment by the Government of Canada to the said province of New Brunswick, or to the said company, each year during the said term ninety-nine years, of forty per centum of the gross earnings of the said railway as or in the nature of rental thereof: Provided, however, that the said contract shall be entered into only upon the condition that the said railway shall be constructed upon plans and specifications to be approved of by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals and shall be up to the general standard of the said National Transcontinental railway through the said province: Provided further that the Governor in Council shall be authorized to enter into a contract, as aforesaid, for the operation of the said railway in sections, when completed and equipped, as follows:
>
> (1) From Fredericton to Woodstock;
>
> (2) From Fredericton, south, a distance of fourty miles;
>
> (3) Each twenty-five miles, thereafter, until the line be completed from Grand Falls to St. John.

That is an important part of the statement, because it gives the minister the right to go on and operate the road. When the present minister (Mr. Cochrane) came into office in October, 1911, he found the contract drawn up between the Dominion Government and the Provincial Government and the St. John and Quebec Railway Company which we thought was satisfactory to all parties concerned. I think it had been signed by the Dominion Government, though I am not really positive about that. However, it had not been signed by the Provincial Government. But it had been drawn up at the conference of the three parties concerned, who agreed that it would be sufficient. During the election of 1911 the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) and his colleague in the Government of New Brunswick had promised all over New Brunswick that within a few days they would sign the contract. But the elections came, the Dominion Government was defeated, and the contract had not actually been signed.

The next year, in the session of 1912, that legislation was repealed in so far as the practical working out of the scheme was concerned, and new legislation was passed which necessitated the making of a new contract. The difficulty occasioned by the new legislation was that it provided practically no specification upon which the road should be constructed.

If I may be permitted to anticipate the answer of the hon. minister, I think he will say: Oh, well, you have not given me as good a road as I wanted; you have not given me a road which I can operate economically and at the same time pay you back forty cents out of every dollar. I am not sure that the minister will not go further and take the extremely technical ground that the road is not completed, that these sections have not been constructed and completed according to the statute and that, therefore, he is not compelled to operate it under the statute. I want to discuss in a very cursory manner these two phases of my hon. friend's answer—because I know that will be his answer—in order to show him the fallacy of the principle under which he is acting. If my hon. friend has not as good a road as he ought to have, it is his own fault. If the road is full of twists and curves and crooks and hills and everything that is contrary to good railroading, then he has only himself to blame. When my hon. friend came into office he found upon the statute book legislation which provided for the construction of a railroad. One of his first official acts in so far as railways in New Brunswick were concerned was to pass an Act repealing the legislation which provided for the construction of a good railroad, and to give his political friends in the province of New Brunswick the right to build anything—so long as it consisted of a roadbed and two rails—and pass it over to him as a railway. I am not going to say that as a railway, aside from the question of curves and grades, it is not a pretty good railway; perhaps I shall not be charged either with egotism or with excessive modesty if I say the course I took last year had something to do with making the road as good as it is. We had a rather severe investigation into this matter in the province of New Brunswick during the last year. We had shown up a great many things which have not redounded to the credit of the party in power in New Brunswick; we have compelled them to spend a great many thousands of dollars which they never intended to spend. Taking it all round, we have a pretty good roadbed; the difficulty is that it is not a very good road upon which to do business, because of the curves and grades.

I want to point out to my hon. friend wherein he has to thank himself for the difficulties under which he is labouring this evening. Chapter 49 of the Statutes of 1912 recites in the first place that by Chapter 11 of the Statutes of 1911 this Parliament agrees to operate the road as part of the Intercolonial. It goes on to recite the general substance of the legislation of 1911, and then it provides for assistance towards the building of three big bridges. That I will refer to later. I do not believe my hon. friend the Minister of Railways realized for a moment the true significance of section 10 of this Act when it was being passed. I wish the Minister distinctly to understand that what I am saying to him to-night is not personal. I have no idea in the world that the Minister knew what he was doing —I do not say that offensively—but his friends, to use a slang phrase, put it all over him, and now he is compelled to pay the penalty. The first part of section 10 reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in any other Act, the agreement set out in the schedule to this Act is hereby ratified and confirmed and declared to be binding upon the respective parties thereto, subject to the provisions of this Act, and the Dominion may do whatever is necessary to give full effect to the said agreement and specifications and to the provisions of this Act.

My hon. friend will see that with one stroke of the pen everything done in 1911 was set aside; an entirely new contract was opened up and the Minister was bound to it. The schedule referred to in section 10 was an agreement which had previously been entered into between this Government, the Government of the province of New Brunswick, and the St. John and Quebec Railway Company. The St. John and Quebec Railway Company was a provincial organization having at its head a very shrewd American gentleman, Mr. A. R. Gould—a man who knows how to put it over my hon. friend, or my hon. friend's friends, without any difficulty whatever. This contract was made on the 5th day of March, and the legislation was not passed until the 1st day of April, 1912. The legislation of 1912 simply ratified this contract and made it the law of the land in the place and stead of the legislation of 1911. The contract first provided as follows:

Whereas it has been agreed by the several parties hereto that the said Company shall construct the said railway under and pursuant to an agreement which has been entered into between the company and the province, dated December twelfth, one thousand nine hundred and eleven, whereby the said province agrees to guarantee first mortgage bonds of the said company to the extent of $25,000 per mile.

Then, the enacting part of the contract proceeds as follows:

Now this indenture witnesseth.

That the said company hereby undertakes and agrees that the said railway, including the line of railway and all bridges connecting the same or forming part thereof as in the first paragraph of the preamble of this agreement set out, or intended so to be, shall be constructed and equipped in all respects up to and according to the specifications hereto annexed.

My hon. friend agreed that all they had to do was to build the railway up to the specifications annexed to the contract, and his department would take it over, operate it for 99 years, and pay back to the province of New Brunswick 40 per cent of the gross earnings. But the trouble is that there are no specifications annexed to the contract.

Mr. COCHRANE: There is a specification.

Mr. CARVELL: It is not here.

Mr. COCHRANE: That may be.

Mr. CARVELL: I can go further than that, and say that we have never been able to get the specifications. If they are or have been in existence, I should like to see them and ascertain what kind of agreement my hon. friend made at that time. Then subsection 2 of the contract provides:

That the company shall complete the construction and the equipment of the said railway in all respects up to and according to the specifications hereto annexed and the requirements as in the preceding clause set out on or before the first day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen.

There again the specifications are kept secret so far as the public is concerned. To-day the people of New Brunswick and the people of Canada in general have no knowledge of what the specifications were or what kind of railway these people agreed to build for the minister. Subsection 9 of the contract is as follows:

It is hereby understood and agreed by and between all the parties hereto, that during the first fifteen years of the term of the said lease forty (40%) per cent of the gross earnings of the said railway (exclusive of the bridges) and the bridges shall be paid by the Government of Canada to the Province of New Brunswick to be applied so far as necessary towards payment of the interest upon the said bonds so to be guaranteed by the Province of New Brunswick, and the surplus, if any, after payment of said interest to be paid semi-annually to the railway company; and during the first fifteen years of the term of the said bridge bonds the interest thereupon shall be paid and borne by the Government of Canada as further aid towards the construction of the said bridges.

The substance of that legislation was this: The minister agreed that when they completed the construction of the railway according to the terms of the specification—which we do not know anything about—they would agree to take that road over and operate it in sections and when the road was completed he would take a leasehold of it and would pay back to the province of New Brunswick 40 per cent of the gross earnings with which to pay the interest on the bonds. That is the contract which the minister made. Acting on that, the railway company went to work in the spring of 1912 and have since built 120 miles of railway running from Centreville in Carleton to Gagetown in the county of Queens, passing through York and Sunbury. The first of the sections referred to in the statutes of 1911 to which I referred the minister before, was from Centreville to Woodstock. That road has been built from Fredericton to Woodstock and, according to my information, has been completed. I received an answer from the minister the other day as to whether the contract had been carried out; he said the road was not completed. I hope the minister will say in what respect the road has not been completed. I wish to say it has been completed, that we had an inspector this year, Mr. J. J. Taylor, who, I believe, tried to do his duty, a gentleman who, while not satisfied with the specifications, yet held the company down to those specifications as well as he could, a gentleman who certainly made that company do everything which he could possibly conceive he was entitled to make them do under those specifications. He could not make them cut out one per cent grades by the hundreds and seven degree curves by the dozen because these were in the specifications. I think that the first protest that came to the minister over the character of the road came from Mr. Justice Crocket, then Conservative member for the county of York. He made very severe protests against the number of seven degree curves and one per cent grades they were inserting but all of no avail. Mr. Taylor made not only one protest but tens and dozens, and I think I may say hundreds of protests against the character of the road they were building, but all of no avail. In every case he was turned down. When it came to questions of the quality of the culverts and the width of embankments, the amount of ballast, the character of ties and all such things as that, he had his own way and in so far as he was allowed to be the judge of the question. My hon. friend has as good a railway as it is possible to give him; but whenever it got beyond the power of Mr. Taylor, the politicians interfered and my hon. friend has a railway about which he complains to-day and over which he will complain that he cannot do business at a profit. That is his fault and not the fault of his inspecting engineer. I have endeavoured to find out, if I can, wherein the road is not completed between Fredericton and Woodstock—and I might say it is also completed from Woodstock north, a distance of twenty-five miles, and they treat the two together. I have tried to find out wherein the two sections are incomplete. I am assured by gentlemen who ought to know, by the officials of the railway company itself, that the only thing which is not completed on that section of nearly eighty miles of road is a track scale at Woodstock which I believe has not been placed. It may be that my hon. friend can technically say that because a track scale has not been put in in a stretch of railway eighty miles long, the road is not completed and he is not compelled to operate it; but if he takes that ground it is the most literal interpretation of a contract I have ever heard and one which will not please his friends or any other person in New Brunswick.

The next thing is that portion of the road from Fredericton south to Gagetown. I tell my hon. friend the road is completed from Fredericton to Gagetown, a distance of thirty-six miles, going through the counties of York, Sunbury and Queens; and I have it from the contractor who built that portion of the road, I have it from the railway company itself, I have it from gentlemen who live along the line of the road, it is common knowledge in New Brunswick, that this part of the road also is absolutely completed excepting that there may be a little riprapping to be done along some of the track, but that is a matter which has been left in abeyance and which may or may not be required. The Minister must remember that, by the contract, if it becomes necessary to do anything else in the way of capital expenditure he has the power to do that work and charge it back to the company. So if it should turn out that there were any little matters not entirely completed the minister has the power to do the work and charge it back to the company and the Intercolonial suffers no loss from the transaction. What do you suppose will be my hon. friend's answer as to his reason for not operating that portion of the road. It is no more and no less than the fact that the contract says the road was to be forty miles in length and it is only thirty-six miles and they have a road entirely completed with no exceptionally bad grades except one, although the curves are not what they might be. The railway runs through a portion of the province which has been settled for over one hundred years. It is a country which has no communication whatever with the outside world in the winter. One of the finest producing countries of Canada and is to-day without railway accommodation; and yet it has a railway entirely completed, ready for operation and the Minister of Railways refuses to operate it because he said to the company; you agreed to build a stretch forty miles long and have only completed thirty-six miles. That is the only reason the Minister can urge for his non-operation of that section. When it comes to the other two sections of the road, that is from Fredericton north to Woodstock and from Woodstock north to Centreville, he cannot urge that the sections are not completed because the road is completed from Fredericton to Woodstock and is completed not twenty-five miles but twenty-six miles north of Woodstock. If my hon. friend tries to apply a somewhat hairsplitting interpretation of the contract he might say: I will operate that road up to within one mile of Centreville and then stop because I have entered into a contract with relation to a line to a point twenty-five miles north and this is twenty-six miles. He is operating the twenty-six miles. He is running one train a way a day over the road from Centreville to Fredericton. I am not complaining so much of the character of the service he is giving. I realize that it is a new road and that it takes time to work up business; and while I would like to see a little better train service, I wish to be reasonable. I hope that in the future we will have a better service than at the present, but it is a great advantage over no train service at all. In the twenty-five miles from Woodstock to Centreville I believe the road will get more freight than can be obtained from any other twenty-five miles of purely agricultural country in Canada, and that is saying a good deal. It may be that for the last two months the minister has not been getting as much traffic as he might expect because, unfortunately, a great portion of the traffic originating in that section is potatoes, and there is no market to-day for potatoes in Canada or elsewhere, and I believe there are to-day half a million barrels awaiting shipment there. If the time comes, and it must come, when we can find a market for these potatoes, we will find that the capacity of the road will be taxed to the utmost and what is true this year will be true next year and every year. I repeat that I do not believe the minister will find twenty-five miles of agricultural area in Canada that will produce more traffic of a purely agricultural character than this twenty-five miles of road.

But when it goes beyond Fredericton, while possibly it is not as good a country, and while there would not be as much traffic, yet these people have no accommodation whatever, simply because the minister says: You agreed to build a road forty miles long, and you have only completed thirty-six miles. Yet the thirty-six miles takes in the large and thriving town of Gagetown, the shire town, and if the minister insisted on going the other four miles he would simply be going down four miles into the country. There is no reason why the company should have built the section beyond Gagetown, because that will come in connection with the next section. I have no doubt that the company never had any idea that forty miles would be required to be built, or that the minister would take any exception if there were not the exact forty miles built. Now the minister maintains that he is excused from operating that road because they have not complied strictly with the terms of the contract. I do not believe that his colleagues, that the Government, that his followers in the House, that anybody in the province of New Brunswick, will agree with him in the excuse which will be put up for the non-operation of that portion of the road. I not only condemn the minister here, to-night, for not operating that road, but I condemn him for not operating any portion of that road according to the contract. The minister—and when I use the word " Minister " I mean the Government, because I want to make it perfectly clear that I cast no personal reflection on the present incumbent of the office—has not carried out his bargain with the people of New Brunswick, with the Government of New Brunswick, or with the railway company. He agreed by chapter 49 of the Statutes of 1912, in the most solemn manner possible, that when that road was completed according to certain specifications, he would operate it and pay forty per cent of the gross earnings to the people of that province. He has not done that. He shakes his head as much as to say, I suppose, that he does not intend to.

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not agree to it.

Mr. CARVELL: Did not agree to it? I have read the Statute.

Mr. COCHRANE: Let me answer for myself; you need not answer.

Mr. CARVELL: I will try to let my hon. friend know what I want him to answer.

Mr. COCHRANE: You are trying to give my answer.

Mr. CARVELL: And when I have done I will be perfectly willing to listen to the answer which my hon. friend wishes to give. I said he made a contract, and he has broken his contract with everybody concerned. As far as the Government of New Brunswick are concerned, it does not bother me very much whether they are in trouble or not, and as far as the railway company are concerned, it is perfectly clear that they are not clients of mine, but if everybody had carried out his contract the same as this company have, perhaps we would not be in the mess which we are in to-day. As far as the people of New Brunswick are concerned, the people who have to pay the interest on this enormous debt which has been rolled up over their heads, they are concerned, and it is for that reason that I am calling upon the minister to explain why he has not carried out the contract.

This road was completed practically ready for operation, and should have been in operation, last October. I do not say it was completed in the sense that every spike was driven, every shovelful of ballast had been placed upon the road, or that the last brush of paint had been put upon the station houses, but I do say that way back even in September this road was completed and fit for traffic. The roadbed was entirely completed long before that, and it was perfectly feasible to operate the road in October. The produce of that country, which is largely potatoes, was saleable in very large quantities in September and October, and hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of potatoes grown in that country might have been gotten out if the minister had in an honourable spirit carried out the contract and operated the road. He did not do so, and the result is that this stuff is locked up to-day, there is no market for it, and I am afraid there will be no market for it. To-day he is not operating the road according to his contract. I got an answer from him on Friday last, I think, and according to that answer no portion of the gross receipts of that road go to the province of New Brunswick. As I understand the contract says that no matter what the road earns, nothing goes to the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. COCHRANE: I did not say that.

Mr. CARVELL: That is what I understood the hon. gentleman's answer to be.

Mr. COCHRANE: No, I did not say that. You mean the present operation ?

Mr. CARVELL: The present operation.

Mr. COCHRANE: There will not be any.

Mr. CARVELL: I see; there will not be any other per cent. Am I right ? I think I have the faculty of understanding the English language when I read it.

Mr. COCHRANE: I misunderstood your statement.

Mr. CARVELL: Whereas by the contract which Parliament made, the people of New Brunswick were to have forty per cent on every dollar earned, under the present agreement they get nothing; and, worse than that, the Intercolonial takes all, but if there should be a loss in operation, we pay half of the loss. What is the contract which my hon. friend made, or which Parliament made for him in 1912 ? I would like to know it. That is what I am finding fault with and that is what I want the minister to explain. Why should the people of New Brunswick be compelled to pay the interest on the bonds to something like three or four million dollars ? We are liable to pay the interest on bonds to the amount of $4,000,000 and we are not getting one dollar out of the operation of the road with which to pay that interest, whereas, by the statute, by the contract made by Parliament, we are entitled to receive forty per cent of the gross earnings of the road with which to pay interest on the bonds. The minister may say: I do not think I am going to make money out of it. That is not the contract. He may say: You have not finished the road. That is not the contract. He may say: You have not built the kind of road you should have built. That is not the contract. He agreed, no matter what kind of a road we built, that he would operate it. He agreed that, so long as we built a section of 25 miles, he would take it over, and he agreed to take the whole of it. He agreed to pay forty per cent of the gross earnings for the purpose of assisting the people of New Brunswick to meet the interest on the bonds. These are things which the minister is called upon to answer. But he may say: Well, you agreed when the contract was made that you would finish that road to Grand Falls by the first of November, 1915. Let him quarrel with the people who made the contract, let him go to his friends the Government of New Brunswick, let him go to his friends of the St. John and Quebec Railway Company and ask them why they did not carry out their contract. But that is not the fault of the people of New Brunswick. It is not the fault of the men who have to pay the interest on those bonds. Just here perhaps my hon. friend may ask me whose fault it is. Why was that road not completed according to the contract ? It is all very simple. It has not been completed according to the contract because of the boodling, the worse than boodling, the almost pilfering of public money, by the men whose duty it was to safeguard the interests of the people of the province. He may say that if the road had been built through to Grand Falls he would have been able to get traffic from the Transcontinental railway and do a through business. It is not our fault that that has not been done. I have talked upon this question in the House a number of times. I have stated before, and I repeat to-night, that the road never was justifiable. The whole scheme never was justifiable. The whole scheme was almost a business and political crime if it did not go through to Grand Falls and draw freight from the Transcontinental railway. The whole scheme was based on the idea that it was to be the outlet for transcontinental railway freight into the city of St. John, and without the transcontinental railway freight it was never feasible for a moment because there will not be sufficient traffic originating along that road, partly as a branch line of the Canadian Pacific railway, to give enough business to pay forty per cent on the bonds and yet leave sufficient margin to operate the road. It is not the fault of the people that the road has not been built to Grand Falls. The minister's friends in New Brunswick may say to him: we cannot sell our bonds on account of the war and therefore we cannot extend the road to Grand Falls, but there never was a more unjust, unfair, and dishonest statement than that, and the minister's friends are simply deceiving him in the most scandalous manner possible—were it parliamentary to use a stronger term I would use it, but the minister can supply the term mentally without my saying it orally. The fact is that in 1912, when the money market was in splendid condition the province of New Brunswick and that railway company sold on the London market bonds for 170 miles at $25,000 a mile, and not for the 120 miles they intended to build. The actual cash brought from England, away back in May, 1912, amounted to $1,200,000, and that money is on hand or ought to be on hand from that day to this, and if it is not on hand to-day it is because some person in the province of New Brunswick, pretty close to the minister—

Mr. COCHRANE: Do you mean to say I got any of it?

Mr. CARVELL: No.

Mr. COCHRANE: Or anybody in this House?

Mr. CARVELL: There is no question about who is responsible; it is the Government of New Brunswick. They brought that money to Canada, and instead of putting it in the Bank of Montreal, in the Bank of Nova Scotia, or in the Royal Bank, or in one of the big trust companies, as they ought to do, they put it in the hands of a trust company in Montreal—with which I do not want to have any quarrel, and against which I have not a word of condemnation—that is at least not to be compared with the big institutions to which I have referred. They put $4,000,000 in the hands of a company called the Prudential Trust Company, and the only qualification put upon the investment of that money was a letter written by the then Provincial Secretary of New Brunswick, the present member for York in this House (Mr. McLeod), addressed to the Prudential Trust Company, and telling them they were at liberty to invest that money as they thought fit, the only condition being that every three months they should send to the Government of New Brunswick a statement of the manner in which that money had been invested.

Now, if they have not got the cash to build that road, the fault lies with the Government of New Brunswick and the Prudential Trust Company. I do not want to go further; I do not think it would be fair to go further; I can only say that they cannot get the money, and they are putting it up to the people of the province as a reason why they cannot get the money, that the money market is in such a bad condition that they cannot sell their bonds. I think I am justified in the assertion I made a moment ago as to the word that ought to be used, when these people tell the minister that they cannot finish the road because they could not sell bonds to get the money.

Again, they may say to the minister: we have issued second mortgage bonds at ten thousand a mile and we cannot sell these second mortgage bonds. I tell the minister that it is not necessary to sell the second mortgage bonds. I tell him that if he can get the cash for the first mortgage bonds, or if the Government, or the Prudential Trust Company, or whoever has the money can dig up the money from the first mortgage bonds, I will find contractors who will take the second mortgage bonds upon their own responsibility and build the road. There is no trouble about that at all. The contractors who built the road from Woodstock to Centreville—I have no hesitation in giving their names, they are Kennedy & Macdonald of Antigonish, N.S., who were large contractors on the National Transcontinental—never received a dollar of the $10,000 a mile second mortgage bonds, but took the bonds themselves. The same is true of the Hibbard Company, which built the road from Fredericton to Woodstock, and the same is true of the Corbett Construction Company, which built the road from Fredericton to Gagetown. They took the second mortgage bonds of $10,000 a mile and financed them themselves.

I was solicitor for two of these companies, and I tell the minister they are perfectly willing to take these second mortgage bonds and to build the remainder of the road, providing they have the assurance that the money which ought to be in the hands of the Prudential Trust Company is forthcoming. They will take that money and they will take these second mortgage bonds and they will build the road, and if the road is not finished it is not the fault of the contractors or anybody else, except the Minister's political friends in New Brunswick.

You may ask me why the money was put in the hands of the Prudential Trust Company. I will throw a little sidelight on the transaction, and only a sidelight, because I am not here to discuss everything that has been made public in New Brunswick during the past year. The Minister may say: Why did these men put that money in the place in which they did instead of in one of the big financial institutions of Canada? I can tell the Minister that there was a very good reason for it, a reason which was brought out in the investigation held in New Brunswick last year. We proved in that investigation that before the bonds were sold an agreement was made with the Prudential Trust Company that in case the money was left to them on deposit they would loan to Mr. Gould and his associates on their notes alone the sum of $350,000 which of course would come out of that trust fund. The money was brought from England in May, and between that date and the running of the provincial elections, $200,000 was paid over to Mr. Gould and his associates, on their own private notes. The notes were signed by Mr. A. R. Gould, a bright, shrewd, active Yankee promoter, who lives in the State of Maine a few miles away from where we live, by Ross Thompson, chief engineer of the road, by Mr. Lisman, a lawyer of New York, and by Mr. Macdonell, an official of the Canadian Pacific railway in Montreal. They advanced $200,000 before the election, and they increased the advance to $350,000 the next two or three months thereafter. Out of $350,000, I state here to-night that $100,000 was paid to a member of the Government of New Brunswick for the election fund for the elections of 1912, and I state here further that $97,000 of that amount is still owing by these gentlemen to the Prudential Trust Company. You now get some idea as to why the money was handled as it was, and the Minister of Railways can go back now and see why the road has not been completed to Grand Falls and why he ought to be compelled to operate that road.

Mr. COCHRANE: Will the hon. gentleman let me know what this has to do with running the railway, and, even if it be all true, what has this Government to do with it?

Mr. CARVELL: I am trying to enlighten the Minister of Railways.

Mr. COCHRANE: I do not see where it comes in on the operation of the road.

Mr. CARVELL: I am trying to show the minister why this road has not been completed. The minister may say: You have not lived up to the contract, and therefore I am not bound to operate the road and if I do not operate it you are going to lose the money.

Mr. COCHRANE: I never said so.

Mr. CARVELL: I have said so and I have shown the minister. The best evidence is that what I have said hurts him.

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, no.

Mr. CARVELL: It has all the evidence of it.

Mr. COCHRANE: Oh, no.

Mr. CARVELL: I am trying to show my friend why the money was squandered as it was, and that as a result of the squandering of that money the road has not been completed. I know that very strong representations have been made to the minister, to Mr. Gutelius, to the Intercolonial authorities generally, to operate this road according to the contract. I know that representations have been made by the Government of New Brunswick and by the railway company; and I know that they are all truly penitent to-day for their sins, and would like at least to have the road operated, because they realize now the crime that is being practised on the province. They realize that we are liable to pay interest on about $4,000,000 for the road already completed, and that we are paying or liable to pay interest on $1,200,000; which is in the hands of the Prudential Trust Company, and which should have gone into the building of the road. They are trying to make amends, and I know they have been importuning my hon. friend the minister to operate the road according to the contract; but so far as I know he has not done so. Instead of operating the road, instead of giving the people of New Brunswick that proportion to which they are entitled, he is giving them nothing; but if there is a loss in the operation of the road, in addition to paying the interest on the bonds and bearing other burdens, they will have to put their hands into their pockets and pay one-half of any such loss. How long is this to continue? Is it to be forever? Will my hon. friend forever be able to find some quibble and say: Your road is not yet completed. No man can ever say that a road is completed if the minister or the other party to the agreement says it is not, because building a railroad is not like binding a book or building a house, but is something which any man can say is not completed. A man might go back a hundred times and do everything the minister wants him to do, and yet the minister might say there was some other thing that should be done. There would never be a finality. Is the minister to take that course, or will he get off his perch and be reasonable and say that this road is completed to all intents and purposes? I want to say on behalf of the railway company, for whom I hold no brief whatever, that they have honestly endeavoured to complete the road. I believe they have, during the last six months or a year, done everything which lay in their power to get that road completed, to see a finality of it, to get the Intercolonial to take it over and operate it according to the terms of the contract. But it seems there is nothing which they can do, nothing which the Government of New Brunswick can do, no atonement for their sins which will satisfy their lord and master the Minister of Railways. It seems to be impossible to get him to carry out his part of the agreement and to place both them and the province of New Brunswick in the position in which they ought to be placed. I do not blame my hon. friend if he chides his friends in the province of New Brunswick very severely. In fact in my judgment he cannot castigate them strongly enough to repay them in any degree for the sins which they have committed. He can castigate them just as severely as he chooses, but there is no reason why he should castigate innocent people while he is trying to pay back a little of the political debt he owes to his friends in the province. Every one in the province of New Brunswick says that he should complete the road; but it is not our fault if the road has not been completed. The sin rests at the door of his political friends in the province of New Brunswick. Let him wreak his vengeance upon them in any way he sees fit. Let him not wreak his vengeance upon the innocent man who really wants the road constructed, the man who has not the railway facilities and who has to pay interest on that debt, because the road is not constructed. I may have spoken a little plainly to-night, but that was my intention. I may have said some things to-night which the minister may think I should have left unsaid.

9 p.m.

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. CARVELL: I think, however, I have said enough to show the minister that he, unwittingly perhaps, is wreaking his vengeance upon the wrong party. He is making every one suffer when he is perfectly justified in making his political friends suffer in any way in which he possibly can. I believe I have given the minister sufficient information to-night to justify careful investigation into the matter so far as he is concerned; to justify probing into the whole transaction in order to find out whether or not the facts I have told him to-night are borne out by the record; to justify his going into the matter to see why his friends have not carried out their part of the agreement; to see whether the fault lies with the Government of New Brunswick or with the gentlemen who are their friends, namely, the railway company. I do not know that I can say they are his friends, because I know of no connection between this Government and the railway company, excepting that I know that until about six or eight months ago the railway company could get anything they wanted in Ottawa. When things did not go right in New Brunswick they came to Ottawa and got whatever they wanted. I believe there has been a change in the relations between the department and the railway company in the last six or eight months.

There is another point in which my friend is to blame that this railway has not been completed, and this is a very serious one. While my friend perhaps did not want me to speak about the sins of his friends in New Brunswick, I know he will be glad to hear me discuss the other point, because it is strictly germane to the issue. I have tried to point out to my hon. friend the practical impossibility of ever making that road a financial success or of ever carrying out what it was intended it should be by the promoters unless it connects with the Transcontinental somewhere at or near Grand Falls; but in order to connect with the Transcontinental at that point or at any other place in the vicinity, that road must cross the river St. John. Unless my hon. friend wishes the road to parallel the Canadian Pacific railway running along the St. John river from Andover to Grand Falls, he must build a bridge across the river. Just where his friends intend to tap the Transcontinental, I do not know; it has been a political football for a number of years in our province about getting to Grand Falls with the Valley railway. Some of us were doubting Thomases to such an extent that we never believed that my friend intended the railway to go there at all; but of course my hon. friend's political friends always protested in the loudest and most pious manner possible that they had no other intention on earth except to go to Grand Falls. When I had the chief engineer of the railway company under cross-examination last summer, I found that they had never even surveyed a road from Andover to Grand Falls, and that they never intended to go to Grand Falls at all. They thought they might strike the Transcontinental some five or six miles south of Grand Falls. From the transportation standpoint, it does not make much difference where they strike the Transcontinental, so long as they get there; but from the standpoint of accommodation and business of the people, the railway should go to the town of Grand Falls, as was promised. In order to reach Grand Falls, my hon. friend must build a bridge across the St. John river. It will be a fairly important bridge, and will cost probably two or three hundred thousand dollars; including approaches, perhaps a little more.

This Act of 1912 provided, and the minister solemnly covenanted to carry it out, for the guarantee of the bonds to the extent of $1,000,000 with which to assist the building not only of that bridge but of two others, one across the St. John at Mistake, and the other across the Kennebecasis. But the railway company came back to him and said: We can not build these bridges with an assistance of $1,000,000, and must have more money. I know not whether that be true, but they convinced the minister that they could not—

Mr. COCHRANE: I was not here.

Mr. CARVELL: I know the hon. minister does not wish me to say who was the real culprit, if I may use that word, in this transaction. But let us speak of the department; they convinced the department that they could not build the bridges with that assistance, and I think they said that they ought to have $3,000,000. I confess I objected to that; I did object to having $3,000,000 handed over to these people for the purpose of building bridges or anything else. We had had experience with them. I say to the credit of the department, they conceded the point, and they agreed to build these bridges outright. The legislation providing for this was passed ten or eleven months ago. The minister and his department agreed to build the bridges no matter what they cost—a bridge across the St. John at Andover, a bridge across the St. John at or near Mistake, and a bridge across the Kennebecasis river. And the hon. gentleman agreed, in effect, to build these bridges at once. Oh, yes; don't deny that. There was a clause in this legislation as presented to the House providing that before the department could act they must have the consent of the Legislature of the province of New Brunswick. I pointed out to the minister at that time that the Legislature of the province of New Brunswick had then prorogued and that it would not be possible to get consent from them for a year, and so if they passed the legislation as it stood the effect would be to put the work off for a year. On account of my pointing this out the Bill was changed, that clause was cut out and the matter left open. So, while there was no distinct pledge either by the Government direct or through this legislation that they would build these bridges at once, still that was the real contract. For if they had put the legislation through as provided it would necessarily have caused delay of about a year and, as the result of my protest, they cut out that clause and so provided that they could go on as quickly as they liked. So, I must hold the Minister guilty of not carrying out another contract, solemnly made, with the people of New Brunswick.

The minister may say that this is a tremendous task. So it may be. But, no matter what may be said about the bridges on the lower part of the river, and whether the minister has an alternate scheme or not—and let him fight that out with his friends in New Brunswick—there is no reason why he should delay the building of the bridge at Andover. He ought not to have lost a day in the construction of that bridge. There are no engineering difficulties. If he will send down an engineer, that engineer ought to be able in two weeks to obtain the data necessary to draw the plans and specifications necessary for the building of that bridge. And not only is it easy of construction, it is absolutely vital to the whole undertaking. For, without that bridge as I have said, he cannot get connection with the Transcontinental, without which the whole scheme is a failure and will never carry out the objects intended and will never pay the interest on the investment.

When he answers me, I hope the minister will take into consideration both branches of the case that I have presented. I hope he will not try to find excuses—that is no remedy for our trouble—but will forcefully take this matter in hand, as he above all other members of the Government has power to do. We know the minister to be a forceful man. When he takes a thing into his head he usually puts it through. And we know that if he went after this matter in that way he has the power and the ability to go on with it. He will not only be able to find out where the blame lies for the condition of affairs there, but will be able to satisfy himself—and I believe will come to the conclusion—that he cannot move a moment too soon. He will find his first duty, I believe, to be to build the bridge at Andover, and the second to find out without a moment's delay where is the money obtained for the sale of these bonds nearly three years ago,—whether that money is available, and if not, why not; and if it is available then why the Government of the province of New Brunswick does not build that road to Grand Falls, make the connection with the Transcontinental and put the scheme into a position where it will not be, as the minister will tell you it is, a money-losing venture, but where it may be a boon and benefit to thousands and tens of thousands of people living in the most fertile portions of New Brunswick, and I believe one of the most fertile portions of Canada.

Hon. FRANK COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals): As to the statement of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), I must take strong exception to his statement of facts, and indeed must give him a flat contradiction. In the first place, the difference between the two Acts is an engineering point. I make the statement on my responsibility as a minister, and after discussing this matter with people who understand the operation of railways fully as well as my hon. friend does, that the road that is being built now can be operated just as cheaply as the one proposed by the late government in the statute of 1911. That is the statement made to me by men who are ready to back up their opinion, men whose business is the operation of railways, while the hon. gentleman himself will admit that he is not an operating man. Now, as to the operation of the road, the statute is very clear on it. The railway company, the contractors who are building this road, notified us that the road would be ready for operation between certain points on the 15th October last. On the 3rd of November, the engineers of the Intercolonial railway went over that portion of the road accompanied by representatives of the railway and representatives of the New Brunswick Government, and they had to admit that the road was not completed. We gave them a list of the parts that were not completed.

Mr. CARVELL: Has the minister got that list handy?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

Mr. CARVELL: I would like to see it.

Mr. COCHRANE: They have got it. My hon. friend knows that the road was not completed, the terminals were not completed at Woodstock, his own home town. Nor were the terminals completed at Fredericton. The province of New Brunswick and the railway company wanted to enter into some kind of agreement with us under which we should complete the work, and we have undertaken to do it, giving them a service that the traffic there demands, and with the direct understanding that if there is a loss the Government of New Brunswick pays half and we pay half. He is a good man who in these stringent times carries out an agreement as I have endeavoured to carry out the provisions of this legislation. I make no bones about it; I say the road was not completed; they had to admit that it was not completed. If we carry out the letter of the law, what right has my hon. friend or the province or any one else to ask us to spend money which we are not authorized to spend? There is not a railway in the Dominion of Canada today that operates on a 60 per cent basis and furnishes rolling stock as well; yet we have entered into an agreement with the province and with this railway company to do that, and when the road is completed we will carry out our contract to the letter. As to the part of the line running to Gagetown, this we have had examined by our traffic men with a view to seeing what business there would be for the road in that section. Last Friday we came to the conclusion that we would give the people of that district a service on that portion of the line.

It may not be as good as the other, but it will give them an outlet. We have tried to meet their desires in every possible way. No money was voted for this purpose, and we had to get a Governor General's warrant in order to enable us to operate this section. As to the construction of the road, the Act does no more than give us authority to see that the road is constructed according to the specifications agreed upon by the railway company and the department. We have endeavoured to carry that out to the letter, and have made no changes which the Act does not authorize us to make.

I am sorry that I am not quite as familiar with the matter of the bridges as I should be, owing to the fact that I was not here when the Act was passed last session. I think, however, that it would be a great mistake for the province, the railway company or the people of Canada to spend millions to run the line to St. John unless the traffic proves to be much heavier than we estimate it will be. It is the intention of the Government to try to make some connection between the Transcontinental and this road. I do not know whether it is best and cheapest to make it at Grand Falls, or whether it would be better to make it at some other point. We cannot possibly make a connection which will not get through traffic, and if we make connection with the Transcontinental at the cheapest possible point, we can get through traffic from Montreal and other points to St. John. This would not only be a shorter route of transportation than on the Intercolonial, but the resulting traffic would help to pay the cost of operation and keep the road up to a better standard.

I think there is one thing in the statutes of 1912—and which was not in the legislation of 1911—for which we can take credit. We have the right to issue bonds on betterments, which in the case of private roads would ordinarily be charged to capital, and if the road is ever worth it we will get our money back in that way. I have consulted practical railway men, men who have been in the business for years; men who have been financing betterments and that sort of thing on such railways as the Canadian Pacific Railway—and they tell me that his clause in the statute, which was new to them, is worth a good deal to any road which has to be run on such a basis as we are running this one.

In the matter of the construction of the road, what the provincial Government has not done is not a matter for me or for this Government or for this House. I have endeavoured to keep up to the limit our part of the agreement. I have endeavoured to see that we did not pay them a cent out of Dominion subsidies more than they were entitled to, and I propose to continue to do that, so far as I am able, and to see that we get a road that is constructed according to the specifications—of which, by the way, the hon. gentleman can get a copy if he wants to. The hon. gentleman started out by trying to lead the House to believe that there were no specifications, and he afterwards said that the engineer had tried to see that the specifications were lived up to. There were specifications, and there are specifications still.

I do not think that technically or in any other respect I have done anything but what is right and what is my duty. I have no right to overstep my powers and spend the people's money when I have no authority to do so, and I am not going to do it. The Act is quite plain; it says that when forty miles are completed we shall operate the line under the terms of the statute. This I intend to do and will do. The distance to Gagetown is not forty miles, yet we are going to put the line in operation. I am satisfied, from the report made by the traffic men, that operation will be at a loss, but I want to help as much as possible, and I am trying to do it by giving the people of that section one train a week. If the traffic warrants it, we will give them two trains a week. I am satisfied that we have carried out our part of the agreement to the letter of the law. We have nothing to do with the province; if they made a bad investment, the province is worth it, and we will not be put in the hole on that account. They have their share to bear, and must bear it.

Mr. CARVELL: I thank the hon. gentleman for the very frank statement which he has made, but I should have been pleased if he had been a little more explicit as to how he expects to connect with the Transcontinental.

Mr. COCHRANE: That is a matter of engineering which cannot be determined at the present time.

Mr. CARVELL: I should have been glad if he had been more explicit in the matter of whether he intends to build the bridge at Andover, because that is the essence of the whole thing.

Mr. COCHRANE: The railroad is not there yet.

Mr. CARVELL: It ought to be there. My hon. friend does not have to say more than he wants to; I have given him the opportunity of telling us all about it, and I am pointing out the matters in respect of which he has been hardly as explicit as he might have been. My hon. friend says that he has been advised by competent operating men that this road can be operated just as cheaply as the road we proposed. I can only say that we proposed a road which maintained a four-tenths grade, except in two places where it was necessary to exceed that to some extent. My hon. friend may have a fetish for velocity grades; I think he has. If he confined himself to velocity grades, I would not quarrel with him so very much, but I want to tell him that there are two places along the river St. John between Fredericton and Woodstock, a distance of 62 miles, where the railway leaves the river and climbs hills 175 feet high, and then comes back to the river again.

Mr. COCHRANE: And you had two pusher grades.

Mr. CARVELL: Not in that place. We had pusher grades, but they were necessary. I am telling my hon. friend now that pusher grades have been built in places where there was absolutely no necessity for them; they have made a one per cent grade four or five miles in length, both ways, north and south. They are not velocity grades; they are pusher grades of one per cent. Yet my hon. friend says he is advised by his traffic managers that he can operate that line just as cheaply as he could operate a road having a four-tenths grade. Well, that may be my friend's opinion and that may be the advice he is getting from his officials, but, if it is, it is something entirely new in the railway world.

My hon. friend also says it is a good man who carries out his agreement in these hard times. Heavens, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Railways says that the Government ought to have credit because they carry out their agreement in these hard times! That is a most remarkable statement coming from the Minister of Railways, a minister with all the resources of this Dominion at his back, a member of a Government that can go out and borrow fifty or a hundred million dollars and add to the cost of the poor man's living by adding $30,000,000 more in taxes, simply by turning his hand over, and then he says the Government are entitled to a great deal of credit because they carry out that which the law makes them carry out and they will not operate this road simply because, as a matter of law, you cannot make them do it. If the minister wants to take that position he is welcome to it. I do not think his friends and followers and supporters would entirely like to sanction a position like that in many measures affecting the government of this country. He says it is a bad bargain for the Dominion and they are going to lose money. Because they are going to lose money he will not touch it until he is compelled to, and he does not believe there is a road in Canada which is operated on sixty per cent of gross earnings with the road furnishing rolling stock and equipment. Why right in New Brunswick there is the road we were discussing this afternoon, from Perth in Victoria county to Plaster Rock, which is being operated by the Canadian Pacific railway on a sixty per cent basis, the Canadian Pacific railway getting sixty per cent only of the gross earnings, furnishing rolling stock and, more than that, betterments. They are adding betterments to the amount of thousands of dollars every year, and during the ten or twelve years they have had the road have spent vast amounts of money on it. We know it is doing good business, and I have no doubt it is paying. The very best evidence that the Canadian Pacific railway is making it pay is the fact which I gave this afternoon, that when the minister first tore up the railway connection with the road the Canadian Pacific railway came along and said: Leave the track down there and give us the business; we want the business and wish to carry it on as before. The Canadian Pacific railway does not ask for business if it does not pay. My hon. friend has a good many things to learn about railway operation. He may know something about railway finance and political railways but he has many things to learn about railway operation.

I am glad indeed to have had the perfectly frank statement we have had. I am glad the people of New Brunswick will know that the minister does not intend to operate this road excepting as the law demands and as he could almost be compelled to do by application to the court for a mandatory injunction. I only wish we had the power to go to the court and get a mandatory injunction; if so, it would be easy to find some one who would not hesitate to move, but unfortunately we cannot get such an injunction against the Government of Canada. Only that protects him and I am glad that he takes the frank and full position he does to-night and says that he will not do it because we cannot, as a matter of law, compel him to do it.

Motion agreed to.

TOBIQUE INDIAN RESERVE TIMBER.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, leases, and other documents relating to the cutting of lumber by Mr. B. F. Smith, and others from the so-called Tobique Indian reserve in the province of New Brunswick since the twelfth day of March, AD. 1914, and also of all agreements, offers and premises made either by the said B. F. Smith or the Department of Indian Affairs, with reference to the sale or disposal of any of the said Tobique Indian reserve since the said date, or any logs or lumber cut thereon.

2. Also a statement of all lumber cut by the said B. F. Smith from the said reserve, the rates of stumpage charged, and the amounts actually paid thereon from the first day of January, 1912, down to the date hereof.

He said: During the last general session of the House I asked a number of questions about some very curious transactions that were taking place in New Brunswick over timber being cut on Indian land. I got some information of it and finally moved for a return of all the papers and documents in connection with it. Some time in March I got a return down to the 12th day of March. The notice of motion which I have given and to which I am speaking now asks for a continuation of that return from the 12th day of March, 1914, down to the present time. I have not very much to say upon this particular question now except that I would like to get the remainder of the file in order that we may have the whole story. It is without any doubt something which should have been probed up at an earlier date and something which I am glad to say has been probed to some extent and will probbably be probed further. The minister has acted with reasonable discretion since the matter was brought to his attention by myself in asking a question and asking for the return. The Tobique Indian Reserve is a pretty important piece of property situate near the town of Andover in Victoria county. It is divided into two parts by the Tobique river. It fronts on the river St. John, one portion north of the Tobique river and the other south. On that portion north of the Tobique the band resides They are a very thrifty people, they have quite a large village, a church and school; and they have made pretty fair progress towards civilization. On that part south of the Tobique, by some arrangement, the department have the right to sell the land and give title; and some time in 1913 a gentleman by the name of B. F. Smith of Carleton cast longing eyes on the lumber on the reserve. He came to Ottawa and made a contract with the department by which he had the right to cut the dead and burnt timber on that portion of the reserve lying south of the Tobique river; but it was distinctly stated in the contract that no green or partly green trees were to be cut by him. My friend will find that on page 79 of the return. It is very explicit, so explicit indeed that I hardly understand how there could be any question about it. It is as follows:

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, May 8, 1913.

Sir,—Referring to your recent interview at the department concerning the offers for the burnt timber on the Tobique reserve, south side of the river, I have to inform you that your offer of $1.25 per thousand feet, B.M., free of dues, has been accepted on the conditions that no green or partly green trees shall be cut and that sworn returns of measurement shall be furnished each season during three years allowed for its removal, by an authorized scaler, culler or surveyor, and that payments shall be made before removal of the timber from the reserve.

That was in May 1913. As soon as the logging season opened up in 1913, I think in the latter part of November or the first of December, the department received a communication by wire, signed "Tobique Indian," a telegram dated November 25, 1913, a letter dated November 29, 1913, and another letter, dated 1st of December. In all of these the department was apprised of the fact that white men were cutting green timber on the north side of the reserve. It is no secret now, because the report shows that the gentleman who signed the name of the Tobique Indian was none other than the Rev. Father Ryan, missionary, who is in charge of the Indians, the parish priest, and a gentleman who gives every attention and vigilance to the discharge of his duties that he posibly can. In addition to that, he occupies the position of a sort of inspector for these Indians and receives a small gratuity from the Government for so doing. Acting in what he considered to be his right and his duty, he notified the department of what was going on. The department sent down an inspector, an officer by the name of Mr. Bury. This gentleman acted with the very greatest energy and zeal, and certainly the department ought to be congratulated on having in its employ a gentleman who acted as fearlessly and honourably as this gentleman did in investigating this matter. He sent in two reports; I am not going to weary the House by reading them. He sent one under date of December 12, and another under date of December 23, and in these reports he told the story as it was, stating that he had found man after man, operator after operator, cutting green lumber open and above board in every manner, and that they had said they had been instructed by the Indian chief and that the Indian chief had said that there was a contract with Mr. Smith. This gentleman had got the right to cut dead and burnt timber on the south side of the reserve, and he started in to clean out every green tree on the north side of the reserve, which timber represented an enormous amount of money in proportion to the size of the reserve. The timber on the north side would be worth $16,000 or $20,000, and this gentleman started in to clean it up. On account of the action and reports of Mr. Bury this was partially stopped and then, in order to have a sacrifice of some kind, they started after the poor old Indian chief and the department gave instructions to prosecute him. The chief was prosecuted and fined $2,000, and because he could not pay the fine he was sent to jail and remained in jail for a month. Then the demand came that something should be done with the white man who had put the chief in this position and who was really responsible for the attempt to clean up the reserve. While the return simply states what the facts are, evidently this gentleman himself had to come to Ottawa and in one of his letters he states that Mr. Hazen was looking after the matter for him. We find that a proposition comes from the department suggesting that Mr. Smith be allowed to buy four lots on the south side of the reserve and pay a certain amount of stumpage for the lumber which has been cut on the north side. Quite a large amount of correspondence took place about the buying of these four lots. The lots, I think, were numbers 19, 21, 23 and 25. At any rate, they were four lots on the south side of the reserve. A very nice scheme was worked out and Mr. Smith was allowed to take these lots on settlement conditions, paying down the sum of $353 and agreeing to pay, in four or five equal annual instalments, a sum amounting to somewhere between $1,100 and $1,200. He had been cutting the lumber and up to this time he had possibly cut over half a million feet of green lumber on this reserve. It would never do to prosecute Mr. Smith and put him in jail, because Mr. Smith was an important gentleman. He could not be treated as the Indian was, so this scheme was worked out for him. My hon. friend knows that the settlement conditions require that a certain amount of land be cleared; that a house be built and that certain homestead duties be performed. Of course my hon. friend is thoroughly familiar with the conditions. He will find them in "Regulations for the disposal of Indian Lands," section 3, and also the penalty provided in section 4 for cutting lumber contrary to the regulations of the department. Section 3 provides that:

> Settlement on the lot or lots included in any sale, is one of the conditions thereof, and shall consist of actual occupation and improvement of the land, which must commence within six months from the date of sale and be continuous for a period of three years; within which time there shall be cleared and fenced at least five acres in every one hundred acres, or in that proportion, also a dwelling-house of not less than 18 x 24 feet must be erected on the land included in any sale.

An Hon. MEMBER: How many lots had he?

Mr. CARVELL: Four lots, which means that he was required within 6 months to build a house and fence and clear at least five acres in each lot. Of course, this gentleman had no idea of clearing land or building a house, or anything else except getting the lumber off the land. Section 4 provides that:

> No timber, saw-logs, staves, lathwood, shingle bolts, cordwood, or any other description of wood, may be cut for sale until the patent for the lot shall have issued, except that the same may be cut under license, issued under existing regulations governing the issue of such licenses, to the party residing thereon by the Indian Lands Agent, covering any trees cut on the location in actually clearing the land for cultivation, other than pine or spruce, which are reserved from the operation of the sale of the land, and may be otherwise disposed of by the department and may be cut and removed by the purchaser of said pine or spruce up to the date on which the patent covering the land shall issue.

There is no license in this case. Then it was pointed out to the department that there was another provision of the law to the effect that no logs or lumber may be cut except logs and lumber necessary to clearing the land, but even in that case the spruce and pine lumber which is cut is the property of the Crown and shall be held for the benefit of the Indians. Smith was cutting practically all spruce lumber, and therefore he was violating the terms of the Act every time he turned around. The more my friends try to help him the deeper in the hole he gets. We find that on the 11th of March a letter was written to Mr. Smith pointing out to him the fact that this scheme could not be worked out at all. At page 59 of the return, this letter appears addressed to Mr. Smith and signed by Duncan C. Scott, Deputy Superintendent General:

> In regard to arrangement come to with you as to disposition of lots on the south side of the River Tobique Reserve, upon which timber has been cut, I beg to say that there would appear to be some difficulty in carrying out this arrangement under the regulations of the department, section 4 of the land regulations making provision for exemption of spruce in the cutting of timber on land sold under settlement conditions.
>
> As the timber on these lots was cut in trespass, prior to agreement for sale, you should pay treble dues on the quantity of spruce cut by you, viz: 179,850 feet, which amounts to $674.44 as pine and spruce are reserved from sale under settlement conditions. If, however, you are willing to pay in full for the four lots, the department would be prepared to accept such payment at once, in full settlement for the land and timber, and give permission for the removal of the timber.
>
> I am enclosing you a copy of the land and timber regulations of the department, and would refer you to section 4 of the land regulations and section 29 of the timber regulations.
>
> If any green spruce has been cut on these lots since seizure was made by Mr. Bury, payment of treble dues will be required to be made in addition to the above.

I think this return will be interesting to the minister if he will read the statement of the manner in which this affair was managed between Mr. Smith, the Indian Agent, and the department in order to get Mr. Smith and the department out of the hole in which they found themselves.

I have always looked upon the Indian agent down there as a perfectly honest and upright man and I am only sorry to find in this correspondence such evidences of that which amounts to almost a breach of duty on his part. I find that they were not willing that the gentleman who was doing the surveying for the department should be continued in the position, a gentleman named Clarke, a good Conservative, and one with whom no fault was to be found on that score. This gentleman to whom I have referred cut lumber and lots of lumber on the reserve, south of the river outside of the four lots, though the great majority of the lumber cut was on the four lots. Under this letter of the 11th of March he was liable to pay treble dues on the lumber cut outside the four lots, although he should have been treated the same as the Indian was. They were not even willing to allow this Mr. Clarke to do the surveying and they recommended a particular friend of Mr. Smith, a Mr. Craig, to assist him and then they suggested that Mr. Craig had a little more experience in surveying lumber than Mr. Clarke had and that he probably would not like to work under Mr. Clarke, and that Mr. Craig had better be given the whole job. Then the honest man Mr. Clarke was worked out and Mr. Smith's friend was worked in. I would like to know how much lumber really was cut outside of the reserve on the four lots. That can be ascertained. If the Minister wants to know he can send a man down there to count the stumps and he will be able to get a fair estimate. I believe that more lumber was cut off the four lots than on the four lots. The honest man, the man who investigated the matter, was turned out and the other man was thrust in, and Mr. Smith got out by paying a smaller amount of money than he should have paid. The Minister will find the whole thing in the return, and he will see how this was all manipulated.

In the answers to the questions which I asked on different occasions last session, I find that on the 16th of April, 1914, I was told what had been done on that portion of the reserve north of the Tobique river and that Mr. Smith had paid somewhere about $293, all for green lumber. Mr. Smith had simply gone in as an absolute trespasser and started to cut this lumber, and he probably would have succeeded in carrying out his scheme if the Rev. Father Ryan had not interfered and blocked it. On the 23rd of March, 1914, the Minister will find the answer given to me, that on the south side of the reserve Mr. Smith paid $354 to Mr. White, the Indian agent on the 10th of March; and that $1,400, the balance of the purchase price, was paid to Mr. Bury on the 13th of March, 1914. When I got that answer I took it for granted that Mr. Smith had paid all that had been required of him and while I felt he was getting a splendid bargain yet there it was and the department had seen a way out of the difficulty, and he had paid altogether $1,765. I supposed the matter was settled.

The minister will see what I am coming to, and why I ask for the remainder of the file. This Mr. Smith took at least from half a million to three-quarters of a million feet of lumber off the south side of this reserve. It is in evidence from the file that this lumber was delivered to Mr. Smith by contract on the banks of the River St. John for somewhere about $7.68 a thousand, and it would cost him from thirty to thirty-five cents to get it to Mr. Smith's mill, making the timber stand him about $8 at his mill, while that lumber last summer on the river St. John was worth $13 just as much as one dollar is worth another. Mr. Smith has made a profit of several thousand dollars on the logs, and he had the land left.

I suppose the Minister will say that this land was of no value, but he may be surprised when I tell him that Mr. Smith sold the land, after he had taken off this enormous amount of lumber, for almost as much as he paid the Department. He offered to sell it to a client of mine who came to me to know whether the title was all right and I told him it ought to be because from the information I got in Parliament this land had been sold to Mr. Smith. I wired to the Department some time in the month of January, and I got the answer back that he could not give a title for the land as it had been sold to him under settlement conditions, which conditions had not been performed. As the Minister is dealing with the property of the wards of the Government and is trustee for them, the House is entitled to know from the Minister everything that happened in connection with this transaction. In the answer given me on the 23rd of March I was told that this gentleman had paid $1,765 and the other amounts mentioned, in that and other answers, but eight months later I was told that he could not give a title because he had obtained this land on settlement conditions. I cannot understand that. There may be some good explanation for this and I hope the Minister will give it to us. When the remainder of the file is brought down perhaps the matter will be made clearer than it is now. In my experience there never has been a bolder attempt made to take from the wards of the Government their right and their patrimony than was made in this case. I give the Minister of the Interior credit for acting with a good deal of alacrity when the matter was brought to his notice both by the reverend gentleman to whom I have referred and myself. After this thing was done the Minister did all he reasonably could to protect the interests of his wards with justice to all parties. I can, if the Minister wishes, give him the name of the gentleman who purchased the property from Mr. Smith and the amount he paid for it, and it is almost as much as Mr. Smith paid for it before he took off the valuable lumber. Mr. Smith has made a large profit on it after paying the amount of money which the Minister has demanded of him for the lumber, and still he is selling the land for nearly as much as he paid for the whole thing.

While I give the Minister of the Interior credit for attempting to stop the transaction after it was brought to his attention, I cannot give the Department the same credit for allowing the matter to proceed in its initial stages. I want to say also that the Minister was not present at the time this transaction was worked off in the beginning. I do not hold the Minister responsible but I do hold his Department responsible. I hope that my hon. friend will bring down these papers; that they will make clear what now seems to be very badly muddled; that it will be a warning, and that the remainder of that reserve, whatever it may be, will be kept for the purpose for which it was intended to be kept and that the wards of the Government will not have taken from them that which at least the law intends for their protection and support.

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Minister of Interior): This matter was dealt with in the usual way departmentally, and I do not remember that it was ever brought to my attention until after the hon. gentleman had asked his respective questions which he had placed upon the order paper during the last session of Parliament. The hon. gentleman, while speaking on the previous motion, I understand spoke on behalf of his client. On this occasion, however, I understand that he is speaking in opposition to the gentleman whom he had the honour of opposing at the last general election, namely, Mr. Smith, and I do not know whether his animadversions are at all influenced by that fact. I am not saying that they are. Of course the hon. gentleman is quite within his rights in bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

The fact is that there was some dry timber, burned timber, on the reserve, on the north side and also more particularly on the south side, for the cutting of which timber tenders were asked by the department. Tenders were received from two parties, one amounting to fifty cents per thousand and the other, Mr. Smith's, amounting to $1.25.

Mr. CARVELL: Not his first tender.

Mr. ROCHE: No. The first tender was seventy-five cents, and Mr. Smith subsequently enlarged it to a dollar and a quarter.

Shortly after that—I think it was the latter part of the month of November, or the early part of December—it was drawn to the attention of the departmental officers that trespasses were being committed on the north side of the reserve and that Chief Lockwood, the Indian in charge, had been issuing permits, not only to Indians but to white men, to cut timber on the reserve. The chief exceeded his authority in that respect, as he had no right to issue any permits. In fact, he had cut on the reserve some three hundred logs. When this complaint was brought to the attention of departmental officers by Father Ryan, Mr. Bury was sent down by the department to investigate. He sent one report in on the 12th of December and another one on the 23rd of December to the effect that wholesale cutting—to use his own words—had been going on by white men as well as by Indians on the reserve. While the hon. gentleman states that a vast amount of timber has been cut on the north side of the reserve—

Mr. CARVELL: I did not say that a vast amount had been cut on the north side; I said on the south side.

Mr. ROCHE: Well, on the south side, outside of the four lots which Mr. Smith was permitted to purchase. I happen to know exactly what Mr. Bury has reported as the total cut on the south side, and it amounts to 83,700 feet outside of the four lots, and 179,850 feet inside the four lots, which is far below the amount which the hon. gentleman has stated.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend is in error in the figures he has given.

Mr. ROCHE: I am quoting from the report which Mr. Bury sent in. He gives the names of all the parties who did the cutting. The hon. gentleman is comparing the treatment accorded the chief with the treatment accorded Mr. Smith, and states that the same treatment should be accorded the latter. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the Indian comes under the Indian Act, and that the white man does not. The chief issued permits, although unauthorised to do so; he cut some 300 logs, and, when the investigation was made by Mr. Bury, he went around and defaced the logs by cutting off the seizure marks, which was a very wrong thing for him to do, and he hindered Mr. Bury very much in connection with the investigation and report. As a matter of fact, the Indian could have been prosecuted under the criminal code, and the penalty, not only for the trespass but for his defacement of the logs, would have been three years' imprisonment without the option of a fine. The department did not wish to take such harsh measures against the chief, and therefore they laid an information against him for having cut a hundred logs illegally. Under the Indian Act the penalty is twenty dollars for each log, or a total fine of $2,000, or, failing that, imprisonment for from one to three months. Inasmuch as the amount exceeded $20, the penalty of three months' imprisonment could have been imposed, but the minimum penalty was imposed by way of imprisonment. The chief could not pay the fine, so he was put in jail for thirty days. That penalty was imposed under section 128 of the Indian Act, which was applied to the chief because he was the chief and was setting a bad example to the other Indians. The section reads as follows:

10 p.m.

Every Indian of the band, who, without the license in writing of the Superintendent General, or of some officer or person deputed by him for that purpose,—

(a) cuts, carries away or removes from land in a reserve held by another Indian under a location title or by an Indian otherwise recognized by the department as the occupant thereof any of the trees, cordwood, or part of a tree, saplings, shrubs, underwood, timber or hay thereon, or removes from such land any of the stone, soil, minerals, metals, or other valuables; or,

(b) cuts, carries away removes from any portion of the reserve of his band, for sale and not for the immediate use of himself and his family any trees, timber, cordwood or part of a tree, saplings, shrubs, underwood or hay thereon, or removes any of the stone, soil, minerals, metals, or other valuables therefrom for sale, as aforesaid; or,

(c) unless with the consent of the band and the approval of the Superintendent General, cuts or uses any pine or large timber for any purpose other than for building on his own location or farm; shall incur the penalties provided in the last preceding section in respect to Indians of other bands and other persons.

The penalty referred to in the next preceding section is:

For every tree he cuts, carries away or removes, a penalty of twenty dollars.

That was the penalty imposed on the chief. It was impossible to impose the Indian Act on the white man. If we were to utilize the Indian Act to every trespasser every person who has a license and who trespasses, whether wittingly or unwittingly, I think we would have the treasury replenished by many millions of dollars. It is a very common thing for a licensee to go beyond the land for which he holds a license. The fine imposed upon Mr. Smith was the maximum fine imposed in the history of the department. Mr. Bury was a new agent, sent down there for the first time. Double dues are usually imposed; but Mr. Smith had imposed upon him treble dues, and the amount he paid in treble dues was for the amount he cut, namely, 15,500 feet on the northern side of the reserve, $97.40. He paid that in cash. He cut on the south side, outside of the four lots purchased, 83,700 feet of hemlock and spruce, for which he paid treble dues, $3 per thousand for hemlock and $3.75 for spruce, or a total of $294.47. He paid this amount also in cash. That cleans up the trespass on the north side of the river and on the south side of the river outside of the four lots which he was allowed to purchase. According to Mr. Bury's report he did cut 179,850 feet, which at treble dues, would amount to $674. Inasmuch as he expressed his willingness to settle immediately, he was given his option either to purchase the land entire with the timber, or pay treble dues. He purchased the land. But before the land was purchased, the following notice was sent out by the Deputy-Superintendent General:

Sale of Tobique Lands.

Notice is hereby given that the unsold lots on the Tobique reserve, south of the Tobique river, are for sale at upset prices, in the hands of the local Indian agent, Mr. S. P. Waite, of Andover, New Brunswick.

The terms of sale for lands fit for settlement are one-fifth cash and the balance in four equal, annual instalments with interest at five per cent, subject to the regulations of the department as to occupation and improvements. The lots unfit for settlement will be sold for cash without any conditions of settlement.

Full information in regard to the lands may be obtained upon application to the local agent, Mr. S. P. Waite, of Andover.

The unauthorized insertion of this advertisement will not be paid for.

Duncan C. Scott,
Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, November 19, 1913.

That notice appeared in the Perth paper for six weeks, and during that time not one single offer came in for these lots from any person except Mr. Smith. If this was the bonanza that the hon. gentleman says, surely some one would have seized upon it. This was at the upset price which had been placed upon the lands by a land surveyor of the province of New Brunswick and by Mr. Bury who coincided in the valuation. Nor was it an ordinary valuation, but was sworn to by Mr. Craig and acquiesced in by Mr. Bury, the inspector who was sent there. The valuation placed on these lots were as follows:

Lot 25	$ 250
Lot 27	290
Lot 29	280
Lot 31	945
Total	$1,765

But, as I have said, notwithstanding the notice given by the advertisement no person came forward with an offer except Mr. Smith.

The hon. gentleman speaks of the value of this land and of Mr. Smith having sold it for almost as much as he paid for it minus the timber. Will it surprise the hon. gentleman when I tell him that these lands of the Tobique reserve were sold for years by the Government of which he was a supporter for a bare $1 per acre? It was the rule to sell these lands at $1 an acre up to 1913, and it was only when the department sent Mr. Craig down to make a valuation that these lands were sold at $4 an acre. If they are so valuable as the hon. gentleman says, they must have become valuable since this Government came into power. We shall search the pages of "Hansard" in vain for any record of condemnation by him of this policy as carried out by his friends in selling similar properties at $1 an acre.

I do not think, therefore, that the Government or the department is to be blamed for this transaction. As to Mr. Smith selling these lots, Mr. Smith has not the title to them. He was correctly informed in that telegram sent by Mr. Scott. The lots were sold subject to settlement conditions, and we have no proof yet that these conditions have been complied with. And Mr. Smith, so far as I am concerned, will not get his title until his contract is lived up to and the settlement clause complied with. We have everything under our control. If Mr. Smith fails to live up to the conditions, we can, if we desire appropriate the money paid in and cancel the sale. Or we can retain sufficient to cover triple dues the option of which we had given him in lieu of the purchase of the property. He may have forgotten about these settlement conditions, but at any rate we have given him the option and—

Mr. MICHAUD: Had Mr. Smith the right to cut the lumber?

Mr. ROCHE: No, he was fined for cutting the timber outside his lease from the Crown to the amount of treble dues, and in lieu of these treble dues, he was allowed to purchase these four lots at an average price of about $4 an acre, as against $1 an acre which had been charged for many years before.

Mr. MICHAUD: But has he the right to cut the lumber on these lots?

Mr. ROCHE: I have not before me the return the hon. gentleman has quoted. I will bring down the remainder of the papers he has moved for. There is no objection to bringing them down; there is nothing whatever to hide, and certainly nothing that I am conversant with that we need be ashamed of. As the hon. gentleman says, when the matter was brought to my attention, I made inquiries, and Mr. Smith was instructed that he must live up to his contract. I do not know whether he has applied for the patents or not, but most assuredly he has not received them, and settlement conditions must be complied with, and compliance with them proven, before patent will issue. I do not know that there is anything I can add. The hon. gentleman will see that we cannot treat the white man exactly as the Indian is treated under the Indian Act. As I have said, it is not uncommon for a lumberman to cut in trespass and, in some cases, where it has been done by inadvertence, only single dues are charged. It is common to charge double dues; but in the case of Mr. Smith he was charged treble dues. For what he had cut on the north side he paid in cash, and outside the lots he bought on the south side he paid treble fees, while the lots he was allowed to purchase at four times the price at which the former Government sold similar lands on the same reserve.

Mr. CARVELL: I thought I threw enough bouquets at the minister to cause him to answer in a little different spirit. I tried to tell him that in my judgment he at least had tried to act fairly in the matter, and I thought that the department also had tried to protect the interests of the Indians. He is in error, however, in some of the statements he has made—innocently in error, of course. When he says that the former Government sold these lands at $1 an acre, that, I presume, is true. I never had anything to do with purchasing such lands nor do I know of a case of a hundred acres being sold; but if he says that the price charged was $1 an acre, no doubt that is true. But there are lots of land and other lots of land; some are worth $100 and some are worth $500 or $1,000. I can tell him that any lands sold by the late Government on the old Tobique Indian Reserve were burned over and practically useless. But I know a man who tried to get these very lots, which were timbered and desirable.

My hon. friend will find that a company known as the Perth Lumber Company made a contract with the Government to cut this burnt lumber—a fire took place some four or five years ago—which Mr. Smith had contracted to cut. They assigned their contracts to a gentleman by the name of Wentworth, of Boston, who was losing a large amount of money through his contracts with the Perth Lumber Company. I went to the department to see if it was possible to make some arrangement by which first the Perth company and latterly Mr. Wentworth could cut enough green timber to finish the operation. That was absolutely refused, it being contended that these four or five lots of land were the only lots south of the Tobique river upon which there was any lumber. My hon. friend will find that in the days of the old Government and under the present regime the Department of the Interior never offered to sell these lots of land at $1 an acre. Had it been known that these special lots of land were available at $1 an acre, not one but a dozen or two dozen men would have been delighted to buy them. I do not know the conditions of that notice of sale, because, unfortunately, it is not in the return which I have received, but I have no doubt at all that there was some reservation; there was something which prevented the ordinary man from knowing that these four or five lots of land were on sale.

The minister is also in error in saying that 179,850 feet of spruce and 95,330 feet of hemlock was practically all the lumber cut inside the four lots.

Mr. ROCHE: By Mr. Smith.

Mr. CARVELL: By Mr. Smith. In that respect my hon. friend is in error, and I can prove it by referring to this file. My hon. friend will find, according to the satement made by Mr. Bury in his report of December 23, 1913, that at that time Mr. Smith was only in the initial stages of the process of cutting. Up to that time it is true that he had cut only 265,000 feet of lumber, but he went on and on; my hon. friend will find that telegram after telegram was sent in regard to the matter. The amount of lumber cut by Smith on this land and on the adjoining lot was nearer 750,000 feet than 265,000 feet. It is true that down to December 23, 265,000 feet is an approximate estimate of the amount of lumber cut, but Smith did not stop; he went on and, I presume, finished the job. I say this not for the purpose of finding fault, but in order to point out the real facts of the matter. According to this Mr. Craig, the land was worth only the amount of money paid. I tell the minister that at the end of the year 1914 the amount of lumber cut was nearly three-quarters of a million feet, and that these four lots have been and could be sold to-day—part of the purchase money has already been paid, although I suppose it will now have to be repaid—for almost as much as Mr. Smith paid for them. My hon. friend will find in the report of Mr. Bury, dated December 23, 1913, this paragraph:

Practically the whole of the growing merchantable timber on the Indian lands on the south side of the Tobique river has been cut, there being left about 1,000 trees, or approximately 60,000 feet board measure left standing on lot 25.

According to the report sent to the department by Mr. Craig, the lumber was all cut on December 23, excepting 6,000 feet. Half a million feet has been cut since then, and Mr. Smith can still turn round and sell the property for nearly as much as he paid for it. That will give you some idea of the value of the reports my hon. friend is getting. That will give you some idea of the credence with which my hon. friend can receive the evidence given him by this Mr. Craig. At the time when Craig said there were not more than 60,000 feet of lumber there, worth, according to his estimate, not more than $200, there was on the land lumber upon which a profit was made of more than $2,000, and the lot was subsequently sold for $1,500. That will give you some idea of the absolute worthlessness of the evidence upon which my hon. friend has been basing his arguments to-night. I am finding no fault with my hon. friend; I am finding no fault with Mr. Bury. Mr. Bury, in the first report which he made to the department, criticised the whole transaction in the severest possible terms. He went so far as to recommend that the contract with Mr. Smith be cancelled. Here is the report which Mr. Bury made on December 12, 1913:

I beg to confirm my wire to you as follows:

'Wholesale cutting of green timber by white men and Indians has been going on, sanctioned by Chief Lockwood. Am making thorough seizure. Chief defies seizure by removing marks from logs. Suggest suspending him from office pending completion of investigation. Letter following.'

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. F. B. Smith, licensee for most of the timber on south side, has several men cutting green logs on the north side, all of whom claim that Lockwood himself gave them verbal permission to cut over 170 logs for Mr. Smith, and I have already seized a total of over 500 logs (green) cut on north side, in addition to several cords of green maple and birch cut by white men also.

I expect to seize the same number of green logs cut on the south side.

Mr. Smith has violated the terms of his license, and I would suggest you instruct me to order all cutting to cease pending presentation of report.

This refers to Mr. Smith's operations under his three-year lease.

Chief Lockwood has received moneys from time to time from various parties in return for allowing them to operate. None of said moneys have been surrendered to agent Waite.

The chief moreover has chopped off my seizure mark on his logs, and practically defies me in the execution of my duties.

I intend making a thorough clean-up of all the illegal lumber operations both on the north and south sides of the reserve, and am of opinion that this will have a very desirable effect in preventing a recurrence of trespass.

I am also scaling all logs and wood I seize so that action for collection of dues can be commenced immediately upon my return.

'In this connection I beg leave to suggest that all these green logs be confiscated outright and sold by public auction, thus providing more valuable returns, and also establishing beyond cavil that trespassing will no longer be tolerated.

And the minister says, after receiving a report like that from a responsible officer: Oh, well, we know that these lumbermen committed trespass; we know that they cut from other people's lands. As a rule, my hon. friend says, we charge them double stumpage and sometimes single stumpage, but in this case we were unusually severe, imposing upon them the full penalty of the law. We made Smith pay treble stumpage. Could Smith have paid treble on one-tenth of what he actually cut, in the face of Mr. Bury's report.

Mr. ROCHE: Does that official say that the amount quoted was only one-tenth of the amount cut?

Mr. CARVELL: No, I say so. My hon. friend made Smith pay stumpage only on the logs that were cut when Bury was there. That was back in December, and they did not commence until the 3rd or 4th of December. Smith went on cutting logs practically all winter and really paid no stumpage on the lumber cut in December. There is where the whole trouble comes in. I did not want to go into this part of the matter, but my hon. friend attempts to excuse the transaction, and I have thought it necessary to give him a few of the facts. I think if he will go over the files carefully he will come to the conclusion that it is a pretty shady transaction.

Mr. ROCHE: How will the hon. gentleman explain this extract from the report of the gentleman whom he has examined, Mr. Bury:

It is also significant to note that when the seizure was made and the cutting of green timber stopped, the various operators shut down their camps, thereby tacitly agreeing that it would not pay them to cut the burnt timber.

They shut down their camps as soon as the seizure was made.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend should take this file and look it over carefully. I am afraid he has not read the return.

Mr. ROCHE: The extract I quoted is from the same report.

Mr. CARVELL: I know, but they did not stop cutting; that is the trouble—they went right on.

Mr. ROCHE: Mr. Bury says they stopped.

Mr. CARVELL: If my hon. friend will examine the file he will find that there is a very gratifying letter from the Rev. Father Ryan to the minister, dated December 2, in which he thanks him for what he has done and expresses the hope that on account of the energetic action of Mr. Bury there will be no more pilfering and no more trespassing upon the rights of the Indians.

Andover, N.B. January 7, 1914.

Duncan Scott,
Indian Department,
Ottawa.

Smith parties lumbering for past week cutting green logs.

(Sgd) Tobique Indian.

Then Mr. Smith started in again. Then you come next to a letter from Mr. McLean to the Indian agent at Andover:

Ottawa, January 7, 1914.

S. P. Waite,
Indian Agent,
Andover, N.B.

Department has received report that Smith parties have been cutting green trees on the reserve during last week. Make immediate personal inspection and report facts. Instructions as to action to be taken will then be sent you.

(Sgd) J. D. McLean.

Following is a letter from Rev. Father Ryan, dated January 7th, in which he says:

Dear Mr. Scott,

I have learned to-day that Mr. Smith has opened his camp stronger than ever and is cutting down green lumber, there being no burnt lumber here to cut. I fear if the Government does not order him and his contractors from the reservation that serious trouble will follow in the next few days. I would strongly advise the Department to act at once have all seized lumber sold at public auction. Such would greatly please the Indians and bring about a better feeling.

Yours,

(Sgd) F. C. Ryan, Pt.

P.S.—Dear Mr. Scott, as I intend that certain matters re the seizure of lumber be brought before the House in its next session I will number letters so if ever reference is made such can easily be found.

Here is where Mr. Waite comes in. Here is where Mr. Waite's fine Italian hand commences to show itself. This is directed to the Assistant Deputy and Secretary of the Indian Department, Ottawa:

Andover, N.B., January 8, 1914.

Sir,—Telegram regard to Smith's parties cutting to hand. In reply may say since receiving same I have met one of Smith's men and he said he had been cutting under instruction from Mr. Curtis, Mr. Smith's agent. I also have information that De Merchant and F. Hanson are also working under same instruction. With this information I do not think it necessary to make further inspection to establish the fact that Smith parties are now cutting green as well as dead timber.

As it will not pay Smith's parties to make road and haul only dead timber—and it means a serious loss to Mr. Smith to have parties stopped work in mid winter—why not allow them to cut green timber and collect trespass stumpage? It will be with the Superintendent General to say what that will be as I understand it, the Indians have no voice in reserve south of Tobique but it is for Department to give right to cut timber as well as to sell the lands.

Your Obedient Servant,

(Sgd) S. P. Waite.

The return reveals one eternal conspiracy on the part of Smith and the minister's agent to rob this reserve of every green tree on it, in so far as it was possible to do so, and the minister's Department knows it, and from that day down knew it. That is where I blame the department. Up to that time they acted honourably and with a good deal of credit to themselves, and it is true that the Smith parties stopped cutting logs when Mr. Bury made his report. But what further evidence does he require than this to show that the moment this gentleman got back to Ottawa the stealing went on worse than ever, not only with the knowledge, but with the connivance and consent of the agent and it was ratified by the Department? This was allowed to go on, and they continued their trespass until the snow went away and they could not cut any more logs. Yet, in the face of evidence like that, my hon. friend would try to tell me that they cut only 265,000 feet of logs out of this reserve when that only referred to the transaction down to the 23rd of December, 1913.

Mr. ROCHE: My hon. friend knows that the valuation sworn to was long before any of this timber was cut.

Mr. CARVELL: It was sworn to by Craig, the tool of Smith, through whose instrumentality he was seeking improperly to obtain the timber of the Indians and finally did succeed in obtaining valuable property which should have been reserved by the Government for their wards.

Motion agreed to.

PROTECTION OF COPYRIGHT.

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Rouville) (Translation) moved the following resolution:

That, in the opinion of this House, stricter measures should be taken for the carrying out of the Berne convention relative to copyright.

He said: Mr. Speaker, considering that this question concerns specially the province of Quebec, since publications in the French language are those now dealt with, I wish to address the House in French, as briefly as possible, as regards what is going on in this connection in some of our large cities in the province of Quebec.

I much regret the absence just now of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture; but I may inform the Right Hon. Prime Minister that on meeting the Hon. Mr. Burrell before recess, it was arranged between us that I should move the resolution this evening, he promising to read the report of my speech in "Hansard" and to do his best to remedy the state of things complained of.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) informed the House a moment ago of the thefts and plunder of which the New Brunswick Indians are the victims. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the thefts and plunder which other whites are guilty of at the expense of writers in the French language, whose works are sold and republished, more particularly in the province of Quebec.

As you are aware, Sir, protection for copyrights is secured under the Berne convention. For some time there were doubts entertained as to the possibility of enforcement I think in Canada of the rules laid down by the aforesaid convention; but through the exertions of Sir John Thompson, at one time Prime Minister of the Dominion, all uncertainty in this respect has disappeared.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Following on a prolonged campaign carried on by the writers concerned, through the press in France and Canada, Mr. Jules Mary, under instructions from the "Société des Gens de Lettres," of Paris, entered action in the latter part of 1905, in the Superior Court of Montreal, in the form of a test case, against a counterfeiter of that city (B. Hubert). On March 23, 1906, the Hon. Mr. Justice Fortin, before whom the case had been heard, condemned the Montreal counterfeiter, holding that the Imperial statutes (49-50 Vict., cap. 33, sect. 9) did extend to Canada the effects of the rulings of the Berne convention which secure to writers in countries forming part of the Union protection for their rights within the territories covered by the international union, to which Great Britain has assented for herself and her colonies. On April 28 of the same year, the court of Appeal, sitting in Montreal, unanimously confirmed the aforesaid ruling of the Hon. Mr. Justice Fortin and set down the law in that respect. The pleadings will be found in the "Revue Canadienne," 1906, vol. 1, pp 252 and 535; the rulings of the courts, in the "Quebec Official Law Reports," Superior Court, vol. xxix 1906, p 334 and following; and, the same, Court of King's Bench, vol. xv., 1903, page 381 and following.

The judgment rendered in that test case of Jules Mary vs. B. Hubert had the effect of securing for some time in Canada the production of copyrights held by foreign writers. But counterfeiters were not to be deterred for any length of time, and French authors were once more constrained to apply to the courts to vindicate their rights protected in Canada under the Berne convention.

In matters of copyright claims having to do with theatricals, our civil courts lay down the following requirements which are to be observed by the French and Belgian plaintiff:

(1) He shall find out the name of the author of this or that production advertised and given under a false description or under a false signature, or under no signature whatever;

(2) He shall authenticate that production thus falsely represented and show that it is his property;

(3) He shall retain the services of a Canadian lawyer;

(4) He shall file with the Canadian courts the original text of his work and the certificate of its formal registration in its country of origin;

(5) He shall also file a solemn declaration duly certified in France or in Belgium, according to the case;

(6) He shall furnish a security bound 'judicatum solvi';

(7) (In the case of an editor, heir, assign or assignee) He shall, moreover, file all deeds of transfer, duly authenticated, showing that he is the rightful owner of the work.

Then the author's case is put on the list to be heard when its turn comes at some indefinite time.

Now it is a matter of experience that most counterfeiters form partnerships which are practically insolvent, which are likely to shift or dissolve at any moment; they are up to all the tricks which may be resorted to without technically breaking the law. So that, once posted, the French and Belgian author, whose works have been counterfeited in Canada, hesitates, and rightly so, to comply with all such requirements of our procedure, and to run the risks of a lawsuit with possibly no other satisfaction as regards himself than the paying of a heavy bill of costs. The practical result is that Canadian counterfeiters are allowed to go scot-free.

The Berlin conference of November 13, 1908, which revised the rules laid down by the Berne convention of September 9, 1886, provided more efficient means of protection available to authors in countries belonging to the Union. But Canada, not having as yet given its assent to the rulings of the Berlin conference, authors in unionist countries whose works are counterfeited in Canada are not entitled to claim more than the protection afforded by the Berne convention, which in the absence of proper means of enforcement, is not of much more avail than a mere " scrap of paper."

'The British organic law of December 16, 1911 (applied along the lines of the Berlin Act of 1908), is already in force in most of the colonies and possessions, save Canada and the South African Union.' (" Le Droit d'Auteur ", monthly organ of international Bureau of the Union for the protection of literary and artistic works. Berne, January 15, 1914, page 2, column 3).

I may state in passing that, on April 26, 1911, the Hon. S. Fisher, then Minister of Agriculture, introduced in the House of Commons a Bill (No. 184) amending and revising former legislation of the Dominion Parliament relating to copyright, and framing further Canadian legislation after the Imperial modernized statute (1 and 2 Geo. V., cap. 46, 1911), which, in April, 1911, had not yet been put through the British Parliament. That Bill, introduced by the Hon. Mr. Fisher, did not imply our assent to the Berlin Act, but prepared the way for such assent, with certain reservations deemed necessary for the holding in check of competition on the part of the United States. (See speeches of the Hon. S. Fisher, "Hansard," April 26 and May 12, 1911).

The Fisher Bill was not then passed. A general election was forthcoming in September, 1911, and the result was a change of Government in the Dominion. The Borden Administration has not in the meantime dealt with the question. Matters have remained in their former state, and foreign writers using the French language are still bound to apply to the courts for the enforcement of the imperial statute and the Berne convention.

" Unfortunately, difficulties and the cost of litigation are such as to render that protection more or less delusive. Copyrights are constantly infringed upon in Canada, in spite of the efforts of many prominent men who consider rights and equity as of greater account than prejudices or the egotistic interests of a few men."

That view, which reflects to some extent on Canada, is expressed by Mr. Léon Poinsard, deputy head of the international offices for the protection of trade marks and copyrights at Berne (" La propriété artistique et littéraire," par Léon Poinsard, p. 53; Paris, librairie générale de droit et jurisprudence, 1910).

In fact, any copyright claims in connection with theatrical productions due to other foreign writers, are enforced in Canada, under the provisions of the imperial statute 3 and 4, Wm. IV., cap. 15, sec. 2. That Act merely provides for a pecuniary fine recoverable from any one who, without the owner's authorization, produces a theatrical work. It enables the author at whose prejudice this is done, to claim either the profits secured through the illegal performance of his work, either an estimate of the loss incurred, or a statutory fine of not less than forty shillings for each unauthorized performance. It is almost impossible to get at the exact amount of profits secured; it is difficult as well to show what losses have been sustained. The simplest thing to do is to claim the statutory fine. That fine is recoverable after going through the regular process of law. The summary procedure, by brief of injunction, to forestall the representation of a work, is not as a rule of any use in practice, and for several reasons. In the first place, programmes of theatres are changed from week to week, and in some instances several times a week, and the various attractions are usually advertised only a few days ahead. Now, according as the case may be, the author, or his heir, or assign, or the editor who has purchased his rights, will be expected to apply in his own name to the Canadian courts and establish his claim to the property of such or such a work. The "Société des auteurs et compositeurs dramatiques" of Paris, alone has more than 50,000 works on its list. French and Belgian authors are numbered by the thousand. Several of them live in the country while others are travelling. It is utterly impossible to reach them in time to secure from them the requisite information in regard to a specific case and to transmit that information to their representatives in Canada. Besides, in a great many cases of assignment, proof of that transfer will also be required. Then, those who are acting for the "Société des auteurs" must be posted as to the actual rights held by the owner of the work the performance of which it is the object to prevent, and must secure authority from the holder of such rights before advising the author or his assignee to fulfil the requirements laid down by Canadian courts and to furnish the required security (viz., as a rule $500 for costs and $500 for possible damages) and indeed, to run the risk of being called upon to pay heavy costs, should the counterfeiter disappear—for only insolvent impresarios or theatre managers dare infringe the law with whose provisions they are quite familiar.

The Canadian counterfeiter is therefore perfectly aware to-day that the foreign author must prove his case to the satisfaction of the Canadian law courts, and such an undertaking is not of a tempting nature. So that the first comer, however insolvent he may be, is free to lay hands on the work of a French or Belgian author, make changes to suit himself, and utilize it for performances entirely for his benefit. Our theatre season generally covers ten months or forty weeks. A company which has resolved not to pay any fees for copyright advertises every week a new French or Belgian production, makes the alterations it sees fit and gives no heed to threats of the law. To adequately protect themselves, the authors concerned would have to institute against that faithless company forty law-suits for as many plays illegally produced during those forty weeks in a single theatre, and to furnish security for as many times $500 or $1,000. The company which is thus making money out of foreign works is aware that previous to judgment being rendered, the season will be over, it will have had time to dissolve and to re-organize itself under a new business name, owing to the delays inherent to our civil court proceedings.

I may point out here a few instances of such delays the effect of which has been to cause the recourse granted by our laws to actually inflict losses on the authors concerned.

(1) The "Parisiana" theatre, of Montreal, after being formally prohibited from doing so, produced during the week beginning May 19, 1910, under the assumed title "Sherlock Holmes," and without any indication of authorship, a one-act comedy really entitled "En lisant Sherlock Holmes," and whose author, Mr. R. Berton, by the way, is at present with the French army in front of Rheims. The representatives at the "Société des auteurs" made inquiries, and they brought to light both the name of the author and the original title of the play, which was being reproduced under false colours. They applied to Paris for the necessary documents to enable them to enter action, and these, duly authenticated and certified, were duly transmitted to them through the British consulate at Paris. The requisite security was furnished and an action entered on June 27, 1910, in the Montreal Superior Court. Judgment in favour of the author was rendered on December 17, 1912. Now, at that date, the "Parisiana" had ceased to exist and its owners were out of sight. . . . . Apart from the expense incurred on account of researches and the forwarding of documents, the author had to meet costs to the amount of about $100.

(2) The Aborn Opera Company, of New York, produced at the "Princess" theatre in Montreal, during the week beginning on November 18, 1912, then at Toronto, during the week beginning on November 25, 1912, the play entitled "Cloches de Corneville" (Chimes of Normandy). The Aborn Company having refused to settle with the author's assignees found it impossible to secure a brief of injunction for the following reasons which recur in a great many cases:

Editor Choudens, of Paris, had acquired full property rights in connection with the Chimes of Normandy, and had in turn transferred to the firm of James Williams & Co., of London, the right to produce that musical work throughout Great Britain and the Colonies. To secure a brief of injunction, papers proving the successive transfers were required. These papers reached here after a rather lengthy exchange of correspondence between London and Paris, and made possible the entering of an action against the Aborn company. Judgment by default was rendered against the Aborn company on October 11, 1913. But the latter had a long time previously crossed the boundary, and they have not in the meantime revisited Canada. All the costs connected with this lawsuit had to be met by the representatives of the author.

(3) The " Liberty " theatre, of Montreal, though notified several months ahead, produced without authority, under assumed titles and without indication of authorship, from December 16, 1912, to February 13, 1913 (that is during a period of eight weeks), fourteen one-act comedies of which editor Joubert, of Paris, had secured the ownership. That editor, owning a number of short plays especially well adapted to moving picture shows, is shamefully robbed in the province of Quebec. He resolved to put a stop to such plundering by suing one of the counterfeiters, the " Liberty " theatre.

As that small theatre did not go to the expense of printing a programme, the representatives in Canada of editor Joubert had to get photographs taken of the posters outside the entrance, and to send a stenographer to report extracts of the dialogue, so as to enable a comparison of it with the author's text, and thus show proof of the counterfeiting. They had also to secure in Paris authenticated copies of all transfers and other documents relative to these fourteen plays, etc. Suit against the Liberty theatre was entered on June 15, 1913, in the Superior Court in Montreal. Sixteen months later, on November 21, 1914, judgment was rendered against editor Joubert, though at the same time acknowledging that the Berne convention affords protection in Canada to French authors and editors. But the judge presiding ruled that it was the " Société des auteurs, compositeurs et éditeurs de musique," known as the " Petite société," which should have initiated the proceedings against the " Liberty " theatre, and not editor Joubert.

The above ruling upsets the whole procedure previously established as regards French authors who have rights to vindicate in the Canadian courts, and is in direct contradiction to the jurisprudence of the last eight years, that is, ever since the Berne convention has been assented to by the Canadian law-courts.

The case was at once taken to appeal. But the French editor concerned, besides having to settle the cost incurred for the making of the voluminous records required in the court below, may still have to disburse $1,500 of further costs and fees, even should the Court of Appeal decide in his favour, as he will not be in a position to recoup himself on an insolvent defendant.

On another occasion we find a troop of amateurs giving performances for the benefit of some one or other. Amateurs and beneficiary are at one in refusing to indemnify the author, and the representatives of the latter are sent from the one to the other. An action was entered in one instance against amateurs giving performances without previously making arrangements with the author. Judgment was rendered for $15 and costs in favour of the author and he had to wait a whole year for his money.

Apart from itinerant or occasional companies which shamefully delve into the works of French and Belgian authors, there exists to-day, in Montreal, as well as in other localities of the province of Quebec, over ten theatres which have recourse to counterfeiting and dispense paying any royalties to authors, with full knowledge of the law. And in spite of it all, nothing can be done.

Itinerant or occasional troops give no security; they disband or cross the frontier before any process of law can be taken against them. The author wronged in that way has no possible recourse against the owner of the hall or theatre where these itinerant companies have given their illegal performances, though the owner of the theatre often shares in the profits secured by means of these unlawful performances. The English jurisprudence exonerates the theatre owner. (Lyon vs. Knowles. See " Copinger's Law of Copyright," 4th Edition, by Easton, 1904, page 292).

As regards stock companies, which occupy permanently a theatre, the " Theatre des Nouveautes " affords us an instance of that. The " Nouveautes " theatre has been producing for the last ten months, in the heart of Montreal, French and Belgian plays. Its managers have never heeded the numerous summonses which have been served on them on behalf of injured authors; while the latter are unable to institute proceedings for this very reason that the managers of the said theatre have not registered in the Tutelles' office, that " they are doing business under the name of ' Theatre des Nouveautes,' " in other words they have not conformed to the law which requires owners or managers of places of entertainment to register their legal designation. The managers of this popular resort remain, from the legal point of view unknown entities.

The merchant is free to deliver or refuse to deliver goods to an insolvent patron acting under his own name or under that of a company. But the writer, though technically allowed, under the law, to permit or interdict the production of his work, has no means of protecting himself. He can claim compensation only when all security for the payment of such compensation has been put out of his reach. And should he make up his mind to protest against the thefts of which he is the victim in Canada, he is met by the exacting requirements of our civil procedure and is bound to secure numerous legal documents in France and in Belgium, which, unless they are absolutely without a flaw, are liable to be rejected. Then he must furnish security, put up one hundred dollars in the hope of getting one dollar back. For, those who prey on the author's means of living are in every case insolvents or people who cannot be reached under the law. And that seems to warrant the harsh expressions which Mr. Léon Poinsard made use of referring to Canada's attitude on this question, in a work which deals authoritatively with the matter.

Writers in the French language who are of French, Belgian or Swiss nationality, are mainly the victims of that state of things which, moreover, stifles the growth of a French-Canadian literature. In fact, the future of French-Canadian writers is so well linked to that of their fellow-workers across the Atlantic, that within the last two years the Société des Auteurs, of Paris, admits Canadian authors to its membership and looks after their interests. During the theatre season of 1913-14, a total amount of about $2,000, as may be vouched for and certified to by the Bank of Hochelaga, was paid over to French-Canadian authors, through the intervention of representatives of the society.

By the way, I may inform the House that the aforesaid society has effected a kind of merger, whereby all French-speaking writers have assigned their rights to it, the latter in return undertaking to safeguard such rights.

Authors in France protested in various ways against the abnormal situation in which they were left in Canada. Their representatives on several occasions approached the Dominion authorities in order to secure some redress. The Royal Society of Canada, at its meeting of May, 1913, passed a resolution urging the Dominion Government to model Canadian legislation after more effective and up-to-date enactments adopted elsewhere. The society reiterated that resolution at its meeting of May, 1914. But matters are left in the same state, opposition to any improvement in our copyright legislation centering apparently in the great body of Ontario editors and publishers, who are not in the least anxious that copyrights held by foreigners be protected here to the same extent as they are elsewhere.

The hon. Minister of Justice, whom I am glad to see at his seat, will no doubt inquire what remedy or what means I would suggest to bring about an improvement. I am prepared to offer some suggestions.

In the first place, if possible, measures should be taken requiring that organizers of entertainments should register at once with the authorities and secure a license, which, if need be, should guarantee any loss resulting from any action of theirs. Of even greater importance would be the providing of foreign writers with a summary process of law in the form of a penalty or of imprisonment for infringement of author's rights. A sanction of that kind is to be found in the legislation of most civilized countries, especially England (1 and 2 Geo. V, chapter 46, section 11); of most self-governing colonies, especially New Zealand (Act of November 22, 1913, section 15); in that of France (Penal Code, section 428-429), without in any way depriving authors of their recourse under section 1362 of the Civil Code; even in that of the United States, though they stand aloof from international unions (United States statutes at large, chapter 320, "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting copyright," March 4, 1914, sections 28 and 39); etc., etc.

At the session of 1909, Sir Allan Aylesworth, then Minister of Justice, introduced in the House of Commons a Bill (No. 148) amending the Criminal Code. That Bill comprised among others a clause providing a penalty for counterfeiting of musical and dramatic productions. After discussion that clause was modified as follows:

> Whosoever, after a dramatic work has been registered, performs or produces in public, or in some way causes to be performed, or assists in the performance or production in public, in whole or in part, of such dramatic work, without the consent of the owner, is (unless he shows that he has done so innocently) guilty of a misdemeanour and liable, on summary conviction, to a fine of one hundred to five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for a period of thirty days, or to both cumulatively, at the discretion of the court, and on the second or any further conviction to imprisonment for a period of six months with or without hard labour.

The Aylesworth Bill, with that clause inserted, was passed by the House of Commons on May 15, 1909 (see "Hansard" for 1909, vol. III, page——; vol, IV, page——

The Senate, on May 18, 1909, also passed the Aylesworth Bill, but after striking out a few clauses, especially the proposed section 508b providing protection for dramatic works (see Senate Debates, 1909, page——).

I trust the hon. Minister of Justice will read once more the discussion which took place in this House in 1909, in regard to copyrights and to the penalty suggested by Sir Allan Aylesworth, for infringement of such rights. And I shall leave to him to say whether the time is not ripe for the passing of such a clause by this Parliament.

The facts alleged by me show that the Berne convention as it is, and with the slow procedure provided for its enforcement in Canada, or at any rate in the province of Quebec, is practically of no use in helping authors who have been wronged to secure redress from the courts of law. The hon. gentleman has been on the bench long enough to know to what extent people in Quebec are fond of litigation, and should one of the litigants be in bad faith, he may drag the matter on indefinitely, in spite of the earnestness of the other party and of the presiding judge.

I have pointed out instances in which French writers who had been wronged found it impossible to secure compensation for the enforcement of the penalty provided by the Berne convention. Would it not be possible, then, to amend our criminal code in the sense suggested by Sir Allan Aylesworth, and to have that amendment passed by the Senate?

Mr. DOHERTY (text): I believe we would need your help for that purpose.

Mr. LEMIEUX (translation): I may be of some help to my hon. friend.

In closing my remarks, I wish to express my regret for having addressed the House at such length. But this is a question with which the honour of the nation and its reputation for honesty in literary matters are deeply concerned. That is what induces me to appeal to the Minister of Justice, and to request that he find a remedy for the evils which afflict specially French authors in this country.

I do not intend saying anything in reference to writers in the English tongue; others who are better qualified than myself, no doubt, will take an interest in them. I repeat it, I am anxious to secure protection for the rights of those who in old France have produced masterpieces, which we are fond of reading and re-reading, or seeing performed on the stage. However, it is only fair that such a result should not be secured through an enfringement of the most elementary principles of equity and honour.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): The question of copyright is one that comes primarily to be dealt with rather by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) as forming part of the matters that are allotted to that particular department of the Government.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Doherty) was present when I opened my remarks, but I stated that before six o'clock I had met the Minister of Agriculture and that he had begged me to go on, because, although he had to leave, he said " I will read your remarks in "Hansard" and deal with this matter as soon as I come back." But I am pleased to see my hon. friend (Mr Doherty) in his seat, because he can deal with this matter in the way I mentioned.

Mr. DOHERTY: In making the observation I did I had no intention of addressing any reproach to the hon. gentleman. I only made that observation to point out that I did not come here this evening myself anticipating that I would have the pleasure of listening to my hon. friend upon this subject and still less prepared to undertake any full discussion of the very important matter that he has dealt with. I did not have the advantage either of hearing all that the hon. gentleman has said, but if I correctly followed him, the gist of the complaint seems to be that the civil recourse of parties complaining of a violation of their rights as authors of dramatic productions is inadequate; and furthermore, that the inadequacies would seem to result from the fact that as a rule the persons guilty of such unlawful reproduction are persons financially irresponsible as against whom it would be impossible to execute any judgment. That seemed to be one of the causes which gave rise to the inefficiency, or ineffectiveness, of the law; and the other resulted from the undue delays which occurred in the enforcement of the civil right. If I followed the hon. gentleman correctly, he does not complain of the insufficiency of our law as it stands as recognizing the existence of the right, but he complains simply that we have no effective sanction.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. DOHERTY: So long as one keeps to the civil recourse, the recourse that seeks an indemnification for loss caused, there is not any method by which we can make insolvent violators of the law solvent. In so far as he points to the very regrettable consequences of the delays that occur in the procedure in connection with such civil actions, it seems to me that is something for which provincial legislation rather than any legislation of this Parliament should be responsible. I do not mean to say that perhaps it is not conceivable that we may have authority to enact some special disposition in regard to procedure in relation to the violation of copyright, but as I understand it, the procedure in cases of that kind, as in all civil cases, is at the present time governed by provincial laws, and delays in that procedure, if they be attributable to a defect in any law, would be attributable to the defects in the laws of the provinces concerned. It is undoubtedly a very regrettable thing that it should be found that, for the violation of a right which our law recognizes, that law does not at the same time provide an adequate remedy. The hon. gentleman referred to cases where Canadian authors had succeeded under the French law in obtaining compensation for such violation of their rights.

Mr. LEMIEUX: No, I said that we ought to at least reciprocate with the French, that the French-Canadian authors had the benefit in France of a fund which existed for the protection of their works. It operates automatically. If a man writes an article in a review he belongs to the Société des Auteurs. If the article is reproduced in another country, the society is represented by somebody, and the party reproducing that article will have to pay a certain amount. French-Canadian authors enjoy that protection in France, but what I said was that while they had benefited from the organization for the payment of authors in Europe, in our own country French authors are being pillaged. When the victims seek redress before the courts, by the articles of the Berne Convention, they are discouraged by delays.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know that I quite follow the hon. gentleman. I did understand that the hon. gentleman referred to some successful proceeding which had resulted in indemnity being obtained by our authors for violations occurring in France, and to urge that we should provide some similar method. If I understand correctly now, it is not the benefit which he receives as the result of any law which confers any legal right, but the result of the operation of some association which provides a fund.

Mr. LEMIEUX: A benefit fund.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is something that I do not suppose we could provide for. It is no doubt, however, a most regrettable condition of affairs if, in this country, by violations of the law of this country, persons living outside of the country suffer and if for such violations they are without adequate remedy. My hon. friend has pointed out certain grievances which are grievances shared by all persons who have recourse to the courts to enforce their rights. He points out that a foreign author would have to give security for the costs that should be incurred. If he is bound to do so, he is so bound in the province of Quebec under a provision of the law of Quebec, which I think is usually looked upon as a wise provision, that where a stranger comes into the province seeking to invoke the law against a resident, the latter should be protected to the extent of some provision being made to secure him in the event of his successfully defending himself in the action instituted against him. I do not quite grasp that that is in any particular way a grievance on the part of those who seek to enforce the particular right that may belong to a dramatic author. As regards delays, of course, in that respect dramatic authors suffer in common with the public in general, and suffer in common with our own citizens. What means may be found to expedite the civil procedure is perhaps more properly for the consideration of those who are charged with legislation as regards the procedure and administration of justice in the different provinces. I do not desire to express any absolute opinion on this subject, but it seems to me that there is a remedy to which the hon. gentleman did not refer, but which, under the law of the provinces, would be available to the authors concerned, and that would be an effective remedy in so far as it might operate as a prevention rather than a cure of the wrong that may be done. I have some difficulty in seeing why the recourse by injunction is not open to the author who is in a position to establish that any person is about to produce a work which he claims is his own, and in which he claims to be protected by the copyright law. It seems to me that that right ought to be available and ought to operate to obviate some of the things of which the hon. gentleman spoke in discussing the position of these foreign authors, and I think it is a remedy of which they might avail themselves. I am not disposed to quarrel with the proposition that it might be desirable that a means should be taken which would reach persons who might be, from the point of view of civil responsibility, not in a position to comply with any judgment that may be rendered against them. From that point of view there is a great deal to be said in support of the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), that this might be a proper matter to be dealt with by the criminal law. The Bill to which the hon. gentleman refers, I think passed this House without being opposed, but was rejected by the Senate. Of course, the Senate must be assumed to have good reasons to refuse to pass measures that this House adopts. At all events since the time to which the hon. member refers the Senate seems to have persisted with a good deal of consistency in the assertion of its right to annul what the wisdom of this House has decreed. We on this side of the House perhaps do not feel the same absolute confidence in being able to control the operations of that august body as do gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That shows the independence of the Senate; it was in 1909 that they refused to pass the Bill.

Mr. DOHERTY: I quite understand that, but I am only pointing out that they are obdurate in the determination to place themselves above what may be decreed by the wisdom of this House and that some people have thought that possibly the influence that existed at that time from this side of the House over the Senate was greater than it might be at present. If that be true, we would now have less hope of being able to convert them from their error, than had those who sat on these benches at that time. I quite recognize that the position of these authors is one which calls for careful consideration on our part, and the question as to whether or not an amendment to the criminal law such as is suggested might prove of aid to the protection of their rights is certainly one which deserves to be considered. I shall have pleasure in complying with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) to read the debates of 1909, and I shall have pleasure also in endeavouring to ascertain what reason, if any, the hon. gentlemen in the upper House set forth as justifying their action.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I regret that the Minister of Agriculture is prevented through indisposition from attending the House this afternoon. In addition to what the Minister of Justice has said, I may say that I know that the Minister of Agriculture has had the whole question of copyright under consideration during the past two years, and that representations, not so much with regard to procedure as to the substance of the law itself, and in connection with the Berlin convention, have been made to him. If I am not mistaken, negotiations have gone on from time to time with a view to adhering, if possible, to the Berlin convention, but under such conditions as to safeguard Canadian interests, which might otherwise suffer materially, but which we would not desire to sacrifice if the convention were absolutely adhered to. I have not a clear recollection of what the Minister of Agriculture, upon the advice of his officers, thought necessary, but I do know the matter has engaged his attention. The proposal of my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) would require a great deal of consideration, because questions may arise with regard to patents as well as copyright—though the infringement would probably be more distinct in the case of literary works than with regard to patents—as to whether there had been wilful infringement. As far as the remedy is concerned, I do know that the one to which the Minister of Justice has alluded has been brought to bear in other provinces, because when I was practising at the Bar I had occasion to invoke with very good results that remedy which I understand to be available under the law of Quebec, and which if made use of by those authors might be found to afford a better remedy than that which they have succeeded in obtaining in the past. As my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) has brought this matter fully to the attention of the House. I shall now move to adjourn the debate, with the assurance to my hon. friend that his observations will receive the careful attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

Tuesday, February 16, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Regulations under the Destructive Insect Pest Act.—Hon. M. Burrell.

Report on the Agricultural Instruction Act, 1913-14.—Hon. M. Burrell.

Supplement to the 47th Annual Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Fisheries Branch: Contributions to Canadian Biology, being studies from the biological stations of Canada, 1911-1914, Part I, Marine Biology.—Hon. J. D. Hazen.

CANADIAN TROOPS IN FRANCE.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I have much pleasure in communicating to the House the following telegram just received by His Royal Highness the Governor General from the Secretary of State for the Colonies:

Mr. Harcourt to Governor General.
London, February 16, 1915.

Your ministers will be glad to learn that the whole of the Canadian contingent are doing well at the front, having safely crossed over to France.

(Sgd) Harcourt.

POLLUTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. HAZEN moved:

That a Select Standing Committee consisting of Messrs. Boyer, Bradbury, Burrell, Casgrain, Graham, Gray, Hazen, Kyte, Lespérance, McCraney, Molloy, Murphy, Northrup, Descarries, Warnock, and Wilson (Wentworth), be appointed to inquire into the pollution of navigable waters and consider all matters relating thereto, with power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Hazen, the Order for the House to go into committee on Bill No. 2, respecting the pollution of navigable waters, was discharged and the Bill was referred to the special committee above named.

WAR SUPPLIES—BOOTS.

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the report of the Board of Inquiry consisting of Lieutenant Colonel W. H. Halleck, E. A. Stevens, Esq., and Theo. Galipeau, Esq., respecting boots supplied to the Department of Militia and Defence, a copy of which report was laid upon the table of the House on the 15th instant, and all matters pertaining to the boots so supplied to the said department, be referred to a special committee of seven members with instructions to investigate the matters aforesaid and to report thereon to this House.

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation and to report from time to time.

That the following members shall constitute the said committee, namely, Sir James Aikins, Mr. McCurdy, Mr. Middlebro, Mr. Rainville, Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Lemieux and Mr. Nesbitt.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I notice that the report placed upon the table of the House the day before yesterday, to which reference is made in this motion, does not contain the reference upon which the board of inquiry has acted. The commission has been omitted. It would be interesting to the House and to the committee to have the commission.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not sure whether there is any formal commission or not. It was a board constituted, I believe, according to military usage to make inquiry into a particular matter. If it should be found that there was a more definite reference to that board I shall be very glad to have it brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I notice that the report is made by one official of the department and two outsiders. Presumably they must have received some instructions.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Colonel Halleck, I understand, is an officer at the head of a particular branch that has control of such matters. The other two gentlemen are outsiders—Mr. E. A. Stephens of the city of Ottawa, who is a dealer in boots and shoes and is supposed to have expert knowledge in such matters, and Mr. Theo. Galipeau of Montreal, who, I understand, is a manufacturer of shoes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There was no commission, but were no instructions given as to what was expected of them?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We shall be glad to bring down whatever information there is.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PATRIOTIC FUND ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 39, to amend the Canadian Patriotic Fund Act, 1914. He said:

This Bill is intended to amend the Act for two purposes: first, to enable the Corporation created by the Act of 1914 to assist the wives, children and dependent relatives of residents of Newfoundland who may be on active service during the present war in the military or naval forces of Canada; secondly, to assist men of the Canadian expeditionary forces who may become incapacitated in the course of the war and return to Canada; and likewise to assist the widows and dependent relatives of members of the Canadian expeditionary forces who may be killed during the war. Under the present Act, the power to extend assistance to wives, children and dependent relatives is limited to relatives of residents of Canada actually serving in the expeditionary forces; so that under the law as it now stands, assistance could not be given to the dependent relatives of a resident of Newfoundland on active service in our naval or military forces. I understand that there are a number of these men, more particularly in the naval force, and we desire to treat their relatives in the same manner as those of Canadian residents on active service.

Under the present Act the Corporation has no power to give any assistance to members of the Canadian expeditionary forces who have become incapacitated during the war and returned to Canada. Its powers are limited to giving assistance to the wives, children and dependent relatives of men on actual service. Again, under the Act as it now stands, there is no power to give assistance to the wives, children and dependent relatives of men who have been killed on active service. The present amendment will give the Corporation these powers. With regard to the power to assist either men who have been incapacitated and returned to Canada, or widows, children and dependent relatives of men who have been killed, it is provided that this power can be exercised at any time during the war or within six months after the war, but that it shall not be exercisable for a period of more than six months, in favour of any one individual, person or persons, or the relative of any one person or persons; and, further, that it shall not be exercisable in favour of persons who are in receipt of a pension provided by Canada. It is, in effect, intended to cover a period which may elapse after a man has died or become incapacitated and before his dependent relatives, or himself if living, may have established their right to the benefit of a pension that may be provided either by Canada or by the government of the country in whose service the man may have been.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

SALE OF MILITARY STORES.

Mr. JOHN H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 40, to amend the Criminal Code. He said: The object of this Bill is to make it a crime to defraud the Government by the sale of military or naval stores. The word "stores" is used in the Interpretation Act to cover all articles sold to military or naval authorities. I was surprised on examining the criminal code to find that no punishment has been provided for defrauding the Government in this way, although ample provision is made for the punishment of any fraud perpetrated by a man on his fellow man. It is well that parties who attempt to defraud the Government, especially at a time like this, should know that there is a day of reckoning to come. I would give them to understand that, while they may deceive an innocent Minister of Militia or some simple general or colonel in his department, any attempt to defraud the Government may bring them behind the bars of a penitentiary. That is the object of the Bill. I do not suggest that there are many people practising this kind of fraud in Canada. I do not know, but if some of the public speeches of the Minister of Militia have any weight, there are some at least. I understand the minister proposed that he should be given leave to shoot these swindlers, but I do not propose anything so drastic as that; that looks to me very much like a German move. My proposal is to give them two years behind the bars of some Canadian penitentiary. I am quite well aware that I shall not secure the passage of this Bill without the consent of the Minister of Justice, and I should like to ask him to see that this important and necessary Bill goes through the necessary stages and finally becomes a part of the criminal law of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

SELECT COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved:

That a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Northrup, Maclean (Halifax), Murphy, Carvell,

Robidoux, Bennett (Calgary), and the mover be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Act relating to the election of members of this House, and into the practice and procedure in connection with election petitions; and to consider what changes are desirable therein, with power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time.

He said: The House will remember that at the last session a committee was appointed for the purpose set forth in the present resolution. That committee held a number of sittings, gathered some very valuable information, took steps to prepare a draft of legislation that seemed to be desirable, and in its report to the House recommended that it should be reconstituted at the present session in order that it might proceed with its labours. It is to give effect to that suggestion of the report that I now make this motion. The composition of the committee is changed to this extent: the name of Mr. Bennett, of Calgary, is substituted for the name of Mr. McKay, who last session represented Prince Albert in this House, but has since been appointed to the bench.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood from the report presented by the committee last session, that a Bill was to be prepared by the parliamentary counsel for submission. Is there such a draft Bill now in existence?

Mr. DOHERTY: The Bill has been put in regular shape by the parliamentary counsel for re-submission to the Committee.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That when this House adjourns this day, it stand adjourned until Thursday next; that Government orders shall have precedence after questions and notices of motions for the production of papers on Thursdays until the end of the session; and that Government orders sha l also have the same precedence on Wednesdays as on Thursdays until the end of the session; the House to meet at three o'clock on Wednesdays, and the sittings on such Wednesdays to be in all respects under the same rules provided for other days.

He said: This motion to take Wednesdays and Thursdays for Government business is earlier this session than is usual. I may point out, however, that the session of the Imperial Parliament commenced on the 11th of November and continued to the 27th of that month, when after a session of sixteen days it adjourned until a few days ago. Practically all the time of that session was taken up with Government business, probably by consent or by some arrangement. Since the session of the Imperial Parliament has been resumed, the entire time has been devoted to Government business. We do not purpose proceeding that far here, as Monday is reserved for private members. There will be also the evenings of Tuesday and Friday for private Bills, and on Wednesdays and Thursdays Government orders are not to be taken up until after notices of motion for production of papers, and questions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There are really three motions included in this. The first is that the House should not sit to-morrow, Ash Wednesday, and that goes as a matter of course. The other two motions are to take for Government business first the Thursdays, and then the Wednesdays. We on this side of the House have no disposition to interfere with the object which is to be served by this motion, which comes earlier this session than in any other previous session. We know the peculiar circumstances under which we are meeting, and we find no fault with the proposition generally speaking. Under the Rules of the House Thursday becomes a Government day automatically after the House has been in session for a month, and then, in about the sixth week of the session, the Government moves to take Wednesday, whereas that motion is now made in what is practically the second week of the session. Private members will under this motion be deprived of every day except Monday, and consequently there are several important matters on the Order Paper which will not come up this session, amongst others the Bill of Mr. Bradbury, which has been to-day referred to a special committee, the Bill of Mr. Armstrong to amend the Railway Act, the resuming of the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Bickerdike on his Bill relating to capital punishment, an important Bill to amend the Criminal Code, introduced by Mr. McCraney, a Bill by Mr. Maclean (York), to amend the Railway Act, and the resuming of the adjourned debate on the proposed resolution of Mr. Lemieux with regard to copyright. My suggestion to my right hon. friend is that he should not take next Thursday, when these Bills can probably be discussed.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will accept that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Then will the right hon. gentleman give us next Friday for private members' day in the same manner as we had Friday of last week? If that were done we would have no objection to offer to the motion. The proposition with regard to Wednesdays would come into force on Wednesday, the 24th instant.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will have the motion amended so as to meet the suggestions of my right hon. friend. We will take next Friday as private members' day, the order to be the same as it would have been on Wednesday had we been sitting to-morrow. I move the motion in the following amended form:

That when this House adjourns this day it stand adjourned until Thursday next; that Government orders shall have precedence after questions and notices of motions for production of papers on Thursdays on and after the 25th instant until the end of the session, and that Government orders shall also have the same precedence on Wednesdays as on Thursdays until the end of the session; the House to meet at three o'clock on Wednesdays, and the sittings on such Wednesdays to be in all respects under the same rules provided for other days.

Motion as amended agreed to.

SOUTH WELLINGTON MINE DISASTER.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. WILLIAM GRAY (London): I wish to ask if the Government has any knowledge of the serious accident which has recently taken place in the Pacific Coal Company's Mine at South Wellington, Vancouver Island, British Columbia. I notice by the press reports that some of the workmen have lost their lives. As I am a new member, it is with some diffidence that I ask the question. I have waited several days anticipating that some other honourable member would do so; but I feel it my duty in the interest of the workingmen of Canada to inquire into the facts. Miners have very arduous duties to perform, and there are many of them engaged in various parts of Canada. I know something of their duties and dangers, as I have been for some years in the mining business. They are exposed to underground work—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is out of order in introducing a discussion at this stage. It would be in order for him simply to ask a question, and I hope the hon. member will confine himself to doing that.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Minister of Labour): A few days ago a fair wage officer residing in Vancouver advised me that twenty miners had been drowned in one of the Pacific Coast Coal Company's mines at South Wellington, Vancouver Island. He was instructed to proceed at once to South Wellington and advise us as to conditions there. One of the expert officers of the Department of Mines was also instructed to go to South Wellington. Later I received another message from the fair wage officer saying that the accident had occurred in this way. There was an old mine, worked out many years ago and was full of water, near the mine that was being opened. The miners working at a lower level in the new mine had broken through into the old mine, and the water in the latter had rushed into the new mine, in which there were ninety-eight men working. Seventy-eight of them escaped, but the remaining twenty were drowned. The officer also advised me that nothing could be done by way of an investigation until the mine was pumped out; that was being done, but that it would require several weeks to empty the mine. It is the intention of the provincial government to make a thorough investigation, and it is our intention that an expert of the Department of Mines shall attend that investigation in an advisory capacity.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

On the motion of Sir Robert Borden for Committee of Supply:

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has asked me to make a statement with regard to the changes in the Ministry which have taken place since the session of August last. Two changes have taken place, as my right hon. friend and hon. members generally are aware. Mr. Pelletier, who was Postmaster General from the time that we took office until some time in October last, felt that his physical strength was not equal to the further performance of the very arduous duties imposed upon him as the head of that important department. I know personally that he had been advised by his physician from time to time during the past eighteen months that his health would not bear the very severe strain imposed upon it. Those who were colleagues of Mr. Pelletier, and especially I, as head of the Government, have reason to know that he applied himself to the duties of his office with a vigour and an industry which perhaps have never been surpassed by a member of any administration since Confederation. I do not think it is too much to say that no minister at the head of the Post Office Department has ever proved himself more capable as an administrator than Mr. Pelletier. The correspondence which has taken place between Mr. Pelletier and myself has been laid upon the table of the House.

The former Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. Nantel, has also retired from the Government and has been appointed to a position on the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. The position which he now fills had formerly been occupied by Mr. Bernier, at one time a member of the late Administration, whose health in recent years prevented him from giving to the discharge of his duties the attention which he would undoubtedly have desired to give. Mr. Nantel, as head of the Department of Inland Revenue, occupied himself very closely and assiduously with the duties of his department, and the correspondence which took place between him and myself upon the occasion of his retirement has been placed upon the table of the House.

Mr. Casgrain, who succeeds Mr. Pelletier as Postmaster General, has had a long service in public life, although in recent years it has been interrupted for a considerable period.

Both in the Legislature of Quebec and in the Parliament of Canada he had been a distinguished figure years before he made his re-entry into public life as Postmaster General. I have no doubt he will give to the duties of his department the same indefatigable attention, and that he will bring to them the same ability, as characterized the administration of his predecessor.

Mr. Nantel, as Minister of Inland Revenue, has been succeeded by Mr. Blondin, a man whose services in public life have not been nearly so long as that of Mr. Pelletier, as he came into Parliament only in 1908. During the past three years, having been selected to occupy the position of Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees, he has displayed, sometimes under very difficult conditions, an ability, discretion and good judgment which I am sure must have commended themselves to the members of the House without exception. I have no doubt that in his new position as a responsible minister of the Crown he will display the same qualities and will give to the public service of the country an administration which will commend itself to the judgment of all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The explanations which have been given to the House by my right hon. friend (Sir Robert Borden) have been copious in words though absolutely lacking in substance. He has told us what everybody who reads the newspapers already knew that there have been two vacancies and that they have both been filled. I have no exception to take to what he said of Mr. Pelletier, as to his ability and vigour. Mr. Pelletier was well known to us who come from Quebec as a man of ability, and those who did not come from that province were soon convinced of his ability when they saw him in office. As to his vigour, especially in the line of dismissals, I do not think it was exceeded even by any of those who still remain on the Treasury Benches. I have known Mr. Pelletier for a great many years, and I think I can do him no injustice if I add to what has been said about his qualities that he is also possessed of qualities which find expression in the maxim, "What we have we'll hold." He never was known willingly to give up what he had obtained. It was a surprise to us who knew his good points and his weaker points that he had made up his mind to resign his office. Some there were who remembered that Mr. Pelletier had carried on his campaign in 1911 on the policy of no participation by Canada in the wars of Great Britain, and that the Canadian navy should be destroyed unless the scheme were approved by a plebiscite; who remembered also that, after having taken office he went to his constituents for re-election, he promised that he would obtain a plebiscite or something better. When something better did not come, some there were who proposed that he should do what Mr. Monk had done, and withdraw. Others remembered that when he went for re-election, and afterwards, he more than once told the people of Quebec that as he had agreed to have the shops of the Transcontinental removed from the line of the Transcontinenetal to the line of the Canadian Northern railway, some nine miles from the Transcontinental line, he would see to it that the line of railway, which runs in the valley of the St. Lawrence river, and the shops which are in the valley of the St. Charles river would be connected by a tunnel; but, finding that the Minister of Railways was obdurate and would not agree to the tunnel, finding, as I should say if the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) were present, that the minister had hardened the heart of Quebec, he thought that it was due to his honour not to remain in a Government in which he could not have his wishes and promises carried out. But all these suppositions were wrong. The true reason of the removal, or rather resignation, of Mr. Pelletier is to be found in his ill-health. All were certainly sorry to hear that Mr. Pelletier's health was not equal to the duties he had undertaken to perform. But their feelings were relieved when they found that, though he was too ill to be a minister of the Crown, at least he could serve the people as a judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec. It is singular how bad health will affect individual cases when, unfortunately, it comes to gentlemen on the other side of the House. Here is Mr. Pelletier unable to serve the country as a minister of the Crown but still with health enough to be a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec; and here is my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) unable to serve the country as a judge and serving the country as a minister of the Crown. This is a fortunate condition of things which may not be quite plain to the common understanding, but it can be explained by the flexible and elastic logic of the Conservative party, which can always find a solution of every difficulty, and find it on the profitable side.

With regard to the successor of Mr. Pelletier, Mr. Casgrain, I have only a word to say. In my humble judgment he was the logical appointment under the circumstances. Mr. Casgrain has always been a Tory, an undiluted Tory. If he were here, I am sure he would not object to that compliment; or reverse of compliment. He is certainly entitled to the credit—or discredit—of having been under all circumstances a pure, undiluted Tory. He never served the new gods whose stars have risen on the horizon; he was always faithful to his old convictions. I give him full credit for that. He and I are old friends. It is a pleasure personally, though I must say the reverse of a pleasure politically, to see him where he is. And I am sure that the statement of my right hon. friend as to Mr. Casgrain's ability to fulfil the duties of his office will be realized. As to his political views or convictions I cannot say much; they are the misfortune of his circumstances.

There is another change. Mr. Nantel also has been called away from the floor of Parliament and removed to another sphere. It is not my intention to say anything of the removal of Mr. Nantel from office, but I may have something to say as to the choice of his successor, the present incumbent of the office, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Blondin). It seemed an evidence of the irony of fate that the hon. member for Champlain, the arch-Nationalist, should have been introduced into this House by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), the arch-Imperialist. When, on the opening of the session, I saw the new minister walking into this House leaning upon the arm of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I thought the Minister of Trade and Commerce showed by the way he seemed to be limping that he had a heavy load to carry. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce has always been an insistent advocate of imperialism. I cannot say as much of his new colleague; but perhaps, after all, there may be within the ranks of the Conservative party, as there is somewhere else, some joy over the conversion of one sinner. The Minister of Inland Revenue was introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When he told you, Sir, that that hon. gentleman had taken the oath and had signed the roll, I thought he would add that the hon. gentleman had filled up the holes in the flag and that he would now breathe the atmosphere of liberty. But he did not, and really there was no necessity for his doing so. The hon. member for Champlain is now breathing the atmosphere of office; he has found an atmosphere which is suitable to him, and he can breathe freely, whether there are holes in the flag or not. I have only this to observe: when my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, then the hon. member for Champlain, was making the speeches which he did make in the province of Quebec; when he was threatening to destroy the Canadian navy when he had an opportunity of doing so, I never believed that he meant one-half of what he said. I always supposed, and rightly supposed, that what he was after was simply to create advantage for himself and for his party. He has succeeded. He is now in office, but to attain office he has travelled a very dangerous road. He has sown the seed of discord—and these appeals to passion are always sure to bring forth a crop of prejudices. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue is a young member of this House; perhaps he will permit me to say, since he now has the responsibility of office, that he had better always stand by true principle.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): If there were wanting evidence of how absolutely at a loss the right hon. gentleman is to find unfavourable comment to make upon the resignation of my hon. friend Mr. Pelletier and his nomination to the Bench, it certainly would be found in the fact that he could not do so otherwise than by making a statement in this House which is absolutely and unqualifiedly untrue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DOHERTY: If hon. gentlemen will allow me to say what I wish to say—

Mr. SPEAKER: I only wish to remind the hon. member that to make the assertion that another member said what was untrue knowing it to be untrue, is not parliamentary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take it back.

Mr. DOHERTY: I said that the statement was untrue; if I had been allowed to proceed I think it would have appeared that I was not stating that the right hon. gentleman knowingly stated what was untrue. If I may be permitted to complete my phrase, I think I shall be able to put before this House what are the actual facts and at the same time be within the limit of parliamentary rules. I was going on to say that the right hon. gentleman ought to have known the assertion to be untrue. I say that because, Mr. Speaker, every man who knows me, and who knows the circumstances under which I resigned my position on the bench—and I thought until to-day that I might count the right hon. gentleman among them—knows that in connection with my resignation there never was a question, in any manner, shape or form, of illness on my part, or of illness incapacitating me from my duties on the bench. The letter in which I tendered my resignation is on record in the Department of Justice, and I defy my right hon. friend to find in that resignation the slightest suggestion of illness on my part. I tendered my resignation without the slightest suggestion that I was ill, and I asked for nothing when I tendered that resignation; I simply pointed out that under the express law of this country—a law enacted long before I was born—my fifteen years upon the bench of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec entitled me to the annuity for which that statute provided. I tendered my resignation to take effect when 4 p.m. that right was recognized, and the Government of which the right hon. gentleman was the leader recognized that right by accepting my resignation; yet the right hon. gentleman ventures to-day to make the assertion that he has made. I recall a previous occasion when the right hon. gentleman made the same statement—or, let me correct myself, when it was reported that the right hon. gentleman made the statement. That was in 1908, when I ventured to comply with the request of what proved to be the larger number of the voters in the division which I have the honour to represent, and to present myself for election to this House. It was then reported in all the papers—among them the papers supporting the right hon. gentleman—that he made in that election campaign a statement similar to the one that he has made here to-day. At that time I took occasion to point out precisely what had occurred; to point out that my resignation, as I said a moment ago, had no connection with any illness or any pretension of illness on my part, and to point out publicly through the press that all the friends of the right hon. gentleman in the province of Quebec, if he did not, knew that perfectly. I can see before me gentlemen with whom I was, as I am glad to say I am to-day, upon terms of friendly intimacy, who sit upon the other side of the House, and who knew me then and knew that I was not ill, and had made no suggestion and no pretension that I was ill. I published that assertion, and the right hon. gentleman has not come back to it until this late date. I may say that afterwards the right hon. gentleman denied having found fault with me in connection with my resignation at that time. What light has come to him since, that he makes the assertion that he has made to-day?

It is certainly a pitiable sight; the leader of a great party compelled to resort to making statements of fact which certainly he cannot know to be true, and which, as I say, the public documents on record in the Department of Justice of this country, the documents forwarded to the Minister of Justice of the Government of which he was the chief, demonstrate to be false; and that for the petty purpose of making some jeering remarks both with regard to myself, who, thank God, enjoyed at the time I retired from the bench, as I am glad to say I enjoy to-day, the very best of health, and at the expense of my friend the late Postmaster General, with regard to whom I am satisfied that every one who knew him knew that his health during all the time he was with us left much to be desired. When he left us it was in that position that while his medical adviser would not take the responsibility of counselling him to continue to give constant and arduous and unremitting attention every moment to the numerous details which his duty in the position which he occupied imposed the obligation of looking after, we all know that it is not inconsistent with that, that the hon. gentleman should have been capable of doing the work that would fall to his lot in the position which he is now filling, work of a totally different kind.

I do not know that there is anything I can add to what I have said. I have heard whisperings of what the right hon. gentleman has said to-day from other people before. I thought the right hon. gentleman was a bigger man than they are, but I find to-day that he has chosen to put himself upon a level with them. It is a matter, of course, for his own choice to determine. In making the statement which he has made, I am bound to assume that he did not know what he ought to have known; but the thing that outstands is that the statement is absolutely untrue, and that if I am entitled to receive what I am receiving to-day, it is purely and simply that, as recognized by the Government of the right hon. gentleman, as recognized in particular by the gentleman who in that Government held the office which I hold, as it must be recognized by any man who can read a statute, that the contract under which I was appointed to the Bench of the Superior Court gave me the same absolute right to receive the pension it provides for on condition that I gave fifteen years of my life to service in that court as it gave me to any dollar of salary which I drew while I sat upon that Bench. I say the truth of that statement does not rest on my word; it rests upon the public record of my resignation, and its acceptance by his Government, and it is justified by the express provision of the statute law of this country. I do not think there could be any more complete demonstration of the untruth of any statement susceptible of being made than that which I trust I have made of the untruth of the statement of the right hon. gentleman.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In reply to the hon. gentleman's explanation, I just wish to say that I knew, as everybody knows, that the law of the land allows a judge, when he has served fifteen years, if he does not find himself equal to the task, to ask for his pension; but I should suppose that if he found himself equal to the task, rather than take the pension he would continue to discharge the duties of his office. The minister has told us that he accepted the pension being in perfect health. I accept his explanation; every one will accept it.

Mr. DOHERTY: I rise for the purpose of saying that the right hon. gentleman, to bolster up his statement, has had to misstate the provision of the statute.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX: Just a word about the retirement of my good friend the ex-Postmaster General. I quite agree that the Hon. Mr. Pelletier left office because he was in poor health. But if he was in poor health, everybody knows that he is a rich man. I am surprised to find that now, after he has retired from the Government and is a judge of the land, receiving $7,000 a year and a pension after fifteen years at his sweet will, that the mail clerks, who earn something like two or three dollars a day, who have large families and get no pension, are called upon to raise a fund for the Hon. Mr. Justice Pelletier. I have received protests from some mail clerks who are indignant at the audacity of some sycophants around the Post Office Department in Ottawa who are trying to raise a fund for the Hon. Mr. Pelletier. I state the simple truth when I say that everybody knows that Mr. Pelletier is a very rich man. Here is a circular—and I call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to this—issued from Ottawa and dated January 14, 1914. It is as follows:

Appreciation for the Honourable Louis P. Pelletier, the friend of the man in the service.

Ottawa, January 14, 1914.

To Postmasters, Chief Clerks, Inspectors, Superintendents, Officers, Clerks and employees of the Post Office Department.

A few months ago some admirers of the Honourable L. P. Pelletier revived the idea of a testimonial to Mr. Pelletier in view of the great sympathy he had always shown towards the best interests of his department during his term as Postmaster General. Released from the cares of office Mr. Pelletier is now free to accept such a testimonial of our esteem, which was impossible while he was a minister of the Crown.

At the convention of the Civil Service Federation held in Ottawa, January 7, 8, and 9, the following committee was entrusted with the completion of the work: F. Grierson, G. Carpenter, J. C. O'Connor, C. A. Halladay, W. J. P. Cantwell, postal clerk, and Wm. Hoop, President Dominion Federation of Letter Carriers, Winnipeg. The committee found the work well advanced but wish to afford an opportunity to all the members of the department to subscribe.

Will you, therefore, constitute yourself the local treasurer of the fund, afford those in your branch or district an opportunity of subscribing, and forward the amount received without delay to the treasurer, C. A. Halladay, Railway Mail Service, at Ottawa, or to any of the above named committee. Small individual contributions only are requested, and all must be in the hands of the treasurer by April 15, 1915, on which day the fund will be closed.

Signed on behalf of the committee.

G. A. Carpenter,
Chairman,
Dead Letter Office, Montreal.

C. A. Halladay,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Railway Mail Service, Ottawa.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What is the date?

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is dated 1914, but I think from the context it should be 1915.

I have received protests from some of the unfortunate mail clerks who are being mulcted in this way, and in these hard times, for the benefit of a very wealthy citizen of this country, Hon. Mr. Pelletier. Here is a letter from Kingston in reply to Mr. Halliday, the man who is passing the hat.

I have a circular letter signed by you asking for contributions from the mail clerks for a fund for the benefit of Hon. Mr. Justice Pelletier. I did not know he was in need of this 'widow's mite' from his late employees. If such is not the case and a few of his personal friends or those receiving special favours choose to make a personal presentation, then it is their business; but if it is to be made in the name of the service, then I think you have your nerve with you to undertake to speak for them.

Mr. ROGERS: Who signed the letter?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I will show my hon. friend the letter. I do not want this man to be dismissed. The idea of raising such a fund for Hon. Mr. Pelletier from the letter carriers and mail clerks passes my comprehension. It is simply a hold-up and an evidence of sycophancy on the part of those who are getting up the fund, and I am quite sure that if the Hon. Mr. Pelletier knew about it he would stop it at once.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Do not be too sure.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, I must give the devil his due. We are all being asked to contribute to one thing or another nowadays. There is the Patriotic Fund, the Belgian Relief Fund, subscriptions to hospitals and the Red Cross, and is the poor mail clerk and letter carrier to be asked to stretch the last stitch in his purse and to give his mite to the Hon. Mr. Pelletier, who is worth many hundreds of thousands of dollars? I am quite sure that if he knew about this fund he would give orders for the hold-up to be stopped at once. I hope that the right hon. gentleman will see that this circular does not circulate any more, and that orders are given to the young man whose name appears on this circular to stop soliciting subscriptions at once.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not understand that I have anything to do with it. I never heard of it before. The movement originated, as I gather from the remarks of my hon. friend, in the Civil Service Federation, which is not an official organization at all. Any person who receives a circular would be absolutely at liberty to disregard it, and his disregard of it would not have the smallest effect in the world upon his status in the Civil Service.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Department of Trade and Commerce—Deputy Minister, $5,000.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There are two mistakes on this page which I wish to correct. In the 12th line it reads, "1 at $931 50"; that should be $937 50. In the Census and Statistics Branch, in line 10, it reads, "5 at $1,500"; that should be 5 at $1,050. These are just mistakes in printing.

Mr. NESBITT: The number of clerks appears to have been increased.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The work of the department has been very greatly increased and I had to add three clerks in the lower grade.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Where does the increased work come in?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It comes in from all branches. I should think I would be perfectly safe in saying that in the last six months or a year the work we have been doing in that department, counted by our communications in and out and general activities, has been pretty nearly twice as great as in the preceding year. That is a large statement to make but it is fairly well-borne out by the facts. Especially within the last six months the correspondence has been overwhelming.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where does it come from?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: From all over.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is it on account of the expansion of trade or in consequence of the war?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is because of the larger number of inquiries resulting from conditions brought about by the war. Commercial questions, questions in reference to internal and external trade have multiplied exceedingly. The bulletin which had a very small circulation previously has now a very large circulation. My own particular part of the work is very much more onerous than it has ever been before in my experience in that department or in any other department with which I have been connected.

Mr. MURPHY: Has work previously performed by other departments been transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. PUGSLEY: That was done two years ago.

Mr. NESBITT: I quite believe that the work of the department has materially increased, but I think it is a bad year to increase expenses in any department, and that it would be better to keep the work of the department down in some way or make those on the staff work harder.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My officers are working for all they are worth and a great many of them are working overtime; I will tell my hon. friend what I would do if I had a free hand. I would add $100,000 to this department and I would put it this year and next year into the commerce side of the department, and I would do that because I believe that the activities to be developed in connection with the general work of the country, owing to the dislocation of trade, the openings for trade and the vast number of inquiries coming from every part, would justify it. If it were not that financial matters are in such a stringent condition I would ask my colleagues for a large increase in this vote and I would use it I think to the great good of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Could not the minister make some arrangement by which part of the clerical work could be done by some other department where the business has fallen off, for example, the Customs Department, the revenue of which is some $30,000,000 less than formerly, and which cannot have anything like the necessity for the same clerical staff it had when there was an abounding and expanding revenue, as was the case under the previous Government? I speak of this because in this time of stress, when the Minister of Finance is obliged to impose what he, improperly I think—if I could use the emphatic language of the Minister of Justice, untruthfully I think—calls a war tax, which is striking everybody in this country, striking people who cannot afford to pay it, it does not seem to be a proper time to increase the expenses of administering the different departments. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is adding to the items on page 27 of the Estimates altogether pretty close to $12,000, which is a pretty heavy jump for one year, particularly a year like the present, when everybody in this country feels the necessity of curtailing. People who could very well make use of more employees in their business are cutting down the number of hands employed by them; they are doing more work themselves, they are spending longer hours at their business, in order to economize, and yet we find the Government instead of economizing going on increasing the expenditure of this department. Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce noticed the Ottawa Citizen of this morning, which refers to the addition of a number of employees and consequent very great increase in expenditures? The Citizen quotes from a statement made by Prof. Shortt, the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, at a meeting a short time ago, as to which the Citizen says:

> Prof. Shortt referred to the return brought down in Parliament a few days ago, showing the names of 2,000 men who had been dismissed since the change of government. Who, asked the Speaker, took the places of the 2,000? The answer was 10,000.

It is a great pity that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has been usually recognized as being pretty economical—perhaps the economical member of the Government—has not had some supervision over these other departments in which such an enormous increase in the number of employees has taken place. If that statement of Prof. Shortt is true, what does it mean? It means that, since this Government has come into power, during a considerable part of which time business has been depressed and times have been hard, if the statement of Prof. Shortt is true, there has been added to the employees of the Government the enormous number of 8,000. Assuming that their average salary would be $1,000—I do not imagine that would be too large a figure—it would mean an addition of $8,000,000 to the expenditure of the country. Prof. Shortt, the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, is regarded as being very careful and accurate in what he says; and, if his statement is correct, this is rather an alarming state of affairs. Surely that expenditure might be avoided. Surely it is better to put up with some inconvenience; surely it is better for the clerks already in the service to work a little harder and for the ministers and deputy ministers to give a little more attention to their departments, than to go on so rapidly increasing expenditure.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is hardly fair to charge the Minister of Trade and Commerce with this large addition to the service, because he is not by any means the greatest offender. I find, on examining the return, that in the Department of Trade and Commerce there were thirteen dismissals and forty-nine appointments during the present Administration. Some of the other departments, however, have gone much further than that in the number of appointments. The Department of Customs has dismissed 271 persons and appointed 1,649. The Department of Indian Affairs has dismissed 135 and appointed 295. The Department of Inland Revenue has dismissed 73 and appointed 291. The Department of the Interior has dismissed 309 and appointed 1,651. The Department of Justice has dismissed 20 and appointed 257.

Mr. PUGSLEY: With immigration falling off.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The Department of Public Works is perhaps the greatest offender of all, with 511 dismissals and 2,002 appointments.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Shocking!

Mr. SINCLAIR: The Department of the Secretary of State has dismissed 20 and appointed 287. The Department of Railways has dismissed 363 and appointed 2,076. The total number of dismissals is 2,115 and the total number of appointments 10,576.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about the Post Office Department?

Mr. SINCLAIR: I have not the figures.

Mr. J. D. REID: They did not dismiss any.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In observing the remarks of Prof. Shortt in regard to the subject to which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has drawn attention, I noticed that the return said nothing whatever of retirements; and I myself was rather surprised that a man in the position which Prof. Shortt occupies should, with a return in that form, give the impression which would evidently be gathered from his words as reported in the press. During the discussion which may ensue on the words of the hon. member for St. John, it should be kept in mind that, whatever explanation there may be, the fact appears very patently that no account is taken of the very great number which there must be of retirements.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Mr. PUGSLEY: How many would there be?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. member expect me to answer that?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Fifty at the most.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think those who affect to speak publicly on the subject should know before they speak.

Mr. PUGSLEY: When my hon. friend the Solicitor General says there are a great many retirements, he ought to be able to give us an idea of the number, if it be around 25 or 50 or 100.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Will the minister indicate to the committee what his staff is doing in the matter of seeking new outlets for Canadian trade? He has informed us that his department is extremely busy at one thing or another in consequence of the unsettled trade conditions, but he has not given us any definite idea as to the nature of the work his department is doing.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Perhaps my hon. friend would rather take the items as they come under the regular heads. There is a vote which will come up shortly for trade commissioners, to which appertains chiefly the extension of trade. It would be better if the discussion would come up on that.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I think this is the proper place, because we are asked to vote these increases in salaries upon the ground that extra work has been thrown upon the department by reason of trade conditions. The Minister of Trade and Commerce usually gets through his estimates very quickly, and we may never again have an opportunity to have this explanation. It need not be a lengthy one.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I was a little amused at my hon. friend the member for St. John, who professed to be greatly alarmed at the increase of expenditures shown in this modest estimate of mine.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This is only a sample.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Verily some great change must have taken place in my hon. friend during the last five or six years if he has learned now to be afraid of a small increase occasioned by the appointment of four or five clerks, mostly of low grade. My memory is fairly good; and I think I have been in the House when my hon. friend has come down, not only in connection with his own estimates, but in company with his colleagues, and has asked for far larger increases, and he has never shown the least sign of alarm in his countenance.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Those were prosperous times.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: But my hon. friend is taking fright at so small a bogey as is before him at the present moment. I would like to know what will become of him when he approaches some of my colleagues, of whom he has been speaking to-day, and comes up against what my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has stated to be very large increases. It is not very fair that the brunt of this should come against the least offending one, according to my hon. friend's own contention. I have, however, always been used to taking a heavy burden on my shoulders.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Sin no more.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I have appointed to permanent positions three clerks, who have been in the service of the department for a number of years at $500 each. Then there is an appointment, in the Census and Statistics branch, one in the third division; but while there is an appointment of one extra in that division, a very large number have been dropped out from the non-permanent statistical work on account of the work which had been apportioned to them in the way of tabulations and such like having been performed. But there is always a certain amount of work which remains over for file clerks after these tabulations have been made.

The one appointment that was made here is to keep up with that extra work. If my hon. friend insists that I should go into a disquisition to-day on general trade matters, of course I shall have to oblige him but he would oblige me if he would leave it over until the time when the principal items of the Trade and Commerce Estimates come up. I shall show to better advantage at that time.

Canada's proportion of expenditure in connection with International Customs Tariffs Bureau, $662.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This is the International Customs Bureau which has been in operation for eight or ten years.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is that the one with its head office in Brussels?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes. Since the war commenced it has not been carrying on its work, but we hope there will be an end to the war, and when that comes this work will be taken up again, I suppose.

Gold and Silver Marking Act, $4,000.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This work is carried on by our inspector, Mr. W. J. Ryan, of Toronto. He has been in charge of the work since the Act came into force. His salary is $2,000 a year. He was formerly an official of the Department of Agriculture for this same work, which has been transferred to my department.

West India cable, $38,932.33.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This is the usual vote in accordance with the agreement that was made two years ago between the West India Islands, the British Government and Canada. About August last the reduction in cable rates which was the result of the arrangement took place. We had supposed that the reduction would come into force about the first of the year, but the arrangement had to be ratified by Act of the British Parliament, and owing to certain delays it was impossible to get that ratification through in time for the reduction to come into force before August. The reduced rates are just about half those which formerly were charged between points in Canada and the West Indies and between points in Great Britain and the West Indies. The West India Islands pay £10,000 towards the subsidy and Great Britain and Canada pay £8,000 each.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Has there been any addition to the length of cable provided for this service?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No.

Supervision of lake and ocean freight rates, $6,000.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This is a vote I took last year for the purpose of employing an officer with expert knowledge, and at the same time practical knowledge, of freight rates, particularly of ocean rates and also rates by lake and river, in connection chiefly with the trade from the Great Lakes to and across the Atlantic. I explained last year why I wanted the vote and it was given me by the House, but it has been impossible for me to find a really good man whose services I could get, and so I have not made the appointment. I do not intend to fill the position until I find the one whom I consider to be the proper man; and it is sometimes difficult to engage such a man, because they are not usually idle but are taken up by the great transportation companies, and it is difficult to get them at a fair salary. However, communications are now in progress which I think will result in my being able to find a man for the position.

Mr. MURPHY: Does this vote cover salary alone ?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Salary and general expenses.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How is it intended to supervise ocean freight ?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: As the hon. gentleman is aware, the Minister of Trade and Commerce makes a great many of these steamship contracts and provides the lines with subsidies, and has to oversee the service itself. I was successful in getting a very good man to take in charge the supervision of the service in Canada on both coasts and also the inland services that were subsidized. But in these contracts there is a clause which gives the Minister of Trade and Commerce the power to fix rates. So I find myself obliged to make decisions of that kind yet without the technical and expert advice necessary to give what I think a reasonable judgment. What I wished was expert advice upon which I could rely in enforcing these clauses of the contracts. A layman who has to deal with these matters finds it difficult to follow the intricacies of transport rates by land or sea. It is one of the most difficult and complex subjects that I ever attempted to get some knowledge of. The object then, of the vote is to get an advisor or expert who can inform the department and the minister with reference to these matters.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Why not call in an expert each time you require one?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: If my hon. friend had charge of the department I do not think he would be able to do that very well. Invariably the expert would be connected with a transportation company; one would need to enlist the services of an expert receiving salary or emolument not from these companies, but from the department.

Mr. MURPHY : Would it not be possible for my hon. friend to avail himself of the services of Mr. Hardwell or some of the other experts of the Board of Railway Commissioners to deal with these particular matters?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I think their time is pretty well taken up. I talked that over with the Chairman of the Railway Board; there are many things in respect of which we could co-operate if we had an expert of that kind in connection with ocean services.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister stated that under the mail contract there is power on the part of the department to regulate and control freight rates. I should like to ask my hon. friend if he has taken any steps to regulate ocean freights in respect of subsidized mail steamers during the past six months. It appears that the rate on lumber shipped to the United Kingdom, which a year or two ago was 36 shillings per standard of lumber, to-day is 100 shillings. That, of course, very seriously interferes with the export of lumber to the United Kingdom. The freight charges made by the subsidized steamers naturally have a very considerable effect upon the charges made by steamers which do not belong to the regular lines and which are not subsidized.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I think my hon. friend will recognize that the last six months have been a very difficult and stormy period in which to try to regulate ocean freight rates; the causes for this condition my hon. friend very well knows. Our subsidized steamship lines crossing the Atlantic were levied on by the British Government, owing to the necessity for securing transports, and were time after time much reduced in their bests vessels. All the great lines had their best vessels taken away from them, and they had to get such vessels as they could find. This disorganized and confused the service. These somewhat extraordinary causes and others, operating together, brought about a great scarcity of ocean tonnage, and freight rates have gone up in all parts of the world. It has been absolutely impossible for the Government to get, even for its own purposes, for the transport of war supplies, vessels at anything like the proper time or at anything like reasonable rates. If I had had all the experts available, I do not think I would have endeavoured very much during the past five months to regulate ocean freights. As to our main subsidized companies, we have been keeping in constant touch with them and, so far as possible, consulting with them in the matter of rates. So far as our subsidized services from Montreal, Halifax and St. John are concerned, whilst the rates have increased, I do not think they will increase abnormally. Certainly they have not done so, compared with increases that have taken place in all parts of the world.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think that freights on lumber have been subjected to an increase of about 150 per cent.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There is another reason for the increase in freight rates upon lumber with which my hon. friend, perhaps, is not familiar. Under the system that prevails in the province of New Brunswick and in some of the Maritime provinces, lumber cargoes taken across to England invariably fall short in measurement. The man who undertakes to carry a cargo of lumber to Great Britain expects to incur a loss; that is, when he reaches the other side he expects to find that he is a number of standards short of the quantity he was supposed to carry, and the lumber people on the other side compel him to bear that loss, which usually amounts to a very considerable sum. The consequence is that the difficulties which are encountered come back on the lumber people. No ship-owner wants to carry lumber across the water, because he knows that he will have to meet the loss occasioned by shortage when he lands on the other side. An attempt was made to rectify this a few years ago. I had the honour of introducing a measure amending the law so as to make the ship-owner responsible only for the number of pieces delivered to him at the point of shipment, thus relieving him from any liability for loss after having reached the other side. It is impossible to 5 p.m. measure lumber when it is placed on board ship. It comes down the St. John or some other river in scows or schooners; the ship is always in a hurry to leave, and to put the scale on each board or plank would be an endless and practically impossible task. The consequence is that the ship-owner has to take the measurements given him by the merchant and is victimized when he reaches the other side with his cargo. When the measure to which I have referred was introduced in the House, the lumbermen, especially of new Brunswick, came here in great numbers and insisted upon the restoration of the old law, which obliged the ship-owner to sign for the number of feet stated by the owners to have been delivered to him. Consequently the law is the same as it was before; ships are scarce and rates high, and the lumber owners are themselves to blame for their present difficulties.

I would point out to the minister, too, that if he employs an expert, that expert should not only be engaged in ascertaining the proper rates, but should be able to report to the minister as to whether or not subsidies should be granted in particular instances. Many of the subsidies have been on the list for twenty or twenty-five years, and some of them should not be granted. I have no hesitation in saying that subsidies are granted by this House that should not be granted and would not be granted by the minister if he knew all the facts. I realize the importance of obtaining information as to freight rates, but the matter to which I now refer is also an important phase of the work of the department.

Department of Customs—salaries, $323,375; contingencies, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why, with a declining revenue, is it necessary to increase the staff?

Mr. J. D. REID: We are not increasing the staff. Last year we had a staff of 245 and this year we have the same number.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There is an increase of nearly $8,000.

Mr. REID: That is the statutory increase only. We have the same number of employees, but one clerk in the third division, subdivision A, is replaced by one in the third division subdivision B.

Mr. NESBITT: I suppose that it seems rather harsh to dispense with some of these people, but the customs have fallen off enormously. Could not the minister shift some of his staff over to say the Militia Department? There must be many in his department who are practically idle.

Mr. REID: Of course, quite a number have gone to the war. Seventy-six employees of the Customs, inside and outside, have enlisted.

Mr. NESBITT: What is the rule adopted with regard to employees of the Government who have volunteered for foreign service? Do they get their full salary?

Mr. REID: So far as the customs officials are concerned, any who have asked to be allowed to go to the war and who have obtained permission from the department are paid their salaries in full.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The reason I ask is that I have heard lately that quite a number of the employees of the Intercolonial Railway volunteered for service, and they make the statement in the press that they were assured by the Intercolonial authorities that they would receive their full pay while on serivce. The have latterly been informed that the Minister of Railways has refused to carry out the arrangement that was made with them by the general manager. They feel very much aggrieved at the treatment they are receiving, which they claim is harsh and, apparently from the statement of the Minister of Customs, is entirely different from the treatment meted out to the employees of the branch of the service over which he presides. I think the same rule should apply to all the employees of the Government service. If an employee of the Department of Customs is allowed full pay while on foreign service, I do not see why an employee of another department, such as the Intercolonial, should not be treated in exactly the same way, more especially as they volunteered under an assurance given to them by the general manager that they would receive full pay.

Mr. STANFIELD: Was any assurance given the first contingent?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Personally I do not know the details, but I saw a statement in the press that the Government had gone back on the promise made by the general manager.

Mr. REID: As I understand, in all the departments of the Government, which would include the Intercolonial, all who asked and obtained permission to go to the front would receive their pay in full, and the same applies to the Intercolonial. It was necessary to ask them to apply for permission for the reason that in some cases it was very difficult to allow men to go. There must be some misunderstanding, and I am sure that the Minister of Railways will be able to explain the matter satisfactorily to my hon. friend when the railway estimates come up.

Mr. PARDEE: What is the cause of the enormous increase in the number of clerks engaged in the customs during the past three years? The following questions and answers are supplied in a return brought down on the 10th of March, 1914:

Q. How many employees of the Federal Government of Canada, including all services and all departments, have been dismissed from October 10, 1911, to the present date?—A. 271 dismissals.

Q. How many customs employees have resigned?—A. 194 resignations.

Q. How many have deserted the service?—A. 11.

Q. How many deserters have been punished?—A. None.

Q. How many new employees have been engaged or appointed by the present Government during that period?—A. 1,649.

And it is signed by John McDougald, the Commissioner of Customs. To take on 1,649 new employees there must have been an enormous increase in the work to be done. The most likely explanation is that the Government or the Customs Department have created vacancies in order to find places for 1,649 men who are looking for Government jobs. According to that return, the Minister of Customs has a remarkable knack of making jobs for friends. But the knack is not peculiar to him. The Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, as a matter of fact, even outstripped him in this respect, but by the pleased look on the minister's face I see he has made up his mind to catch up to them. Seriously, it is an extraordinary state of affairs and requires some explanation. The work must have increased enormously to justify engaging all these new employees.

Mr. STANFIELD: Does that return include deaths and superannuations? There must have been quite a number of them in that time?

Mr. PARDEE: It is up to the department to furnish that information.

Mr. J. D. REID: The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) has partly explained the increase. Information was not asked for in the return as to the number of deaths. I can get the numbers, however. During the last two or three years there has been a great deal more to do in the customs on account of the increased revenue, but we never appoint a man at any place unless he is recommended by one of the inspectors. We increased the staff in the town of my hon. friend. Does he complain of that?

Mr. PARDEE: That is a very busy point.

Mr. REID: And so are other places. New offices have had to be opened and staffs increased all over the Dominion. We are continually being urged to open new offices along the frontier and throughout the West. With the growth of settlement it is absolutely necessary to have more men, but no more are appointed than are actually required; in fact, there are places now along the frontier where men are urgently required.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: How many did you appoint at the request of members?

Mr. REID: None, unless there were vacancies or some new port was opened.

Mr. KYTE: The minister has just stated that he made no appointments except on the report of the inspector. Two years ago I called to his attention the dismissal of a man in my constituency, and was told by the minister that he had been dismissed because there was nothing for him to do. The salary he enjoyed was $100. Another man was appointed for the same job of doing nothing at $250.

Mr. REID: Not at the same place?

Mr. KYTE: At the same place. The minister at that time stated that he made the appointment upon the recommendation of the inspector, and I asked him to bring down the inspector's recommendation. The minister was unable to find any recommendation on his file, and said that the man must have been appointed on the verbal report of the Commissioner of Customs. The Commissioner of Customs could not possibly have had any intimate knowledge of the circumstances existing in that remote community, but nothing that I could do could elicit any further information from the minister. As a matter of fact the dismissal was made upon the recommendation of the Conservative candidate, and the new appointment was made on the same recommendation, but with this difference: whereas the former occupant of the office got $100 for doing nothing, the present one does nothing and gets $250 for it. The minister cannot get away from that. There must be thousands of such cases in Canada to account for the extraordinary increase in salaries of Customs Department employees, and for the extraordinary number that have been appointed to take the place of those who have been dismissed.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Is it customary to punish deserters from the Customs service?

Mr. REID: We never have deserters.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: If they did desert, would you punish them?

Mr. REID: We shall wait for a case.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The minister has stated that a large number of additional employees have been put on by reason of the increased revenue. My hon. friend knows that the revenue has fallen off lately at least 25 per cent. Has there been any corresponding reduction in the number of employees? There must be less work for them to do.

Mr. REID: Those 1,600 positions are not all new appointments; deaths and resignations account for some of them.

Mr. PUGSLEY: How many?

Mr. REID: I will get that information. Although the revenue has fallen off, at some places it has increased very much and we have had to take on new employees. Then the war came. I do not feel like dismissing these men immediately. I hope the war will not last so very long, and I hardly think it is fair to turn out men with families, who have been for some time in their positions. While perhaps they have not as much to do as before the war, I believe we should keep them on until at least we see what the conditions will be later. I believe that when the war is over these men will all have as much to do as they had formerly. I have not dismissed any officials on account of the war, but in cases where the revenue of a port has decreased and where there have been resignations at other ports and vacancies caused by men going to the war, I have sent the men from the ports where business has decreased to take their places. I am continuing that practice.

Mr. COPP: I understand the minister to say that he has paid the salaries to his officials who have gone on active service.

Mr. REID: Instructions were given to pay every such official his salary and if my hon. friend knows of a case in which that has not been done I should be glad if he would let me know.

Mr. COPP: I have no information as to that with regard to the Customs Department. I would like to know why what applies to the Customs Department in that respect does not apply to other departments of the Government. I may state that the employees of the Intercolonial railway who have gone on active service have not been paid their salaries. Why are the men belonging to the Department of Customs who have gone to the front paid, while the employees of the Railway Department are not paid?

Mr. REID: I am not in a position to answer for the Railway Department. The salaries of all Custom officers who have gone on active service have been paid from the time they left the service up to the present.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, it is correct to say that in the Department of Customs ever since the war broke out there has been no effort made to economize or reduce expenses?

Mr. REID: We have tried to economize in every way we could, but in some cases the war as a matter of fact made more work for the officials. We have had to take extra precautions along the frontier. I have done everything to economize other than to dismiss permanent officials. I do not think the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) would urge that I should dismiss wholesale the officials who have been employed for some time. I do not think the hon. gentleman would suggest that under present conditions I should dismiss officials at every port in the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would think that before the Finance Minister of this Government came to Parliament to impose a very unusual and very heavy tax burden upon the people of this country, there should have been an honest effort made on the part of the different members of the Government to reduce expenses in all the departments, not only in the matter of public works but in the matter of salaries. Apparently, so far as we know at present, there has been no effort to do that, although the Government has resorted to every expedient to impose additional taxes on the people. With a declining revenue it seems to me there ought not to be and would not be nearly as much work to do in the Department of Customs as there was when there was an abounding revenue and when of course there would be need for more help.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Does the minister intend to make any reduction in the cost of administering his department, outside of the salaries of the officials? The estimates of the department provide for $4,215,000, or an increase of $400,000 over last year, although the revenue this year will be very much reduced.

Mr. REID: The hon. gentleman is incorrect in saying that these estimates exceed the estimates of late year by $400,000. The estimates of last year were for $4,210,000, and this year the estimates amount to $4,215,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: There is an increase anyway. I am sure there could be some means found to reduce the expenditure of the Customs Department by $100,000 or even $200,000.

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Mr. REID: The increase of $5,000 in these estimates is an amount to be paid to the Department of Justice to be disbursed by it, and on account of secret preventive service. Owing to the war the secret service has been increased, and we are asking for $5,000 more. Outside of that amount we are simply asking for the same estimates as last year. Of course it does not necessarily follow that we will expend the whole amount of these estimates. If the war keeps on and there are resignations or deaths, we will not replace with new men. I do not think it would be proper for me to decrease these estimates.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Why not?

Mr. REID: I may require them.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister tell me later on how many employees there were at the ports of Montreal, Winnipeg, Halifax, Quebec and Toronto when he took office, and how many there were on the 1st of January this year?

Mr. REID: I will get the information later.

Mr. MURPHY: I would point out to my hon. friends on this side of the House that bad as is this return which they are discussing, it is only a partial return. So far as the Customs Department is concerned, the return is about a year old, being dated March, 1914. The Minister of Customs should give us a supplementary return showing the state of affairs approximately to date before he proceeds with his estimates.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the increase in the number of employees in the Inside Service?

Mr. REID: No increase. We had 245 employees last year, and we are asking for the same number this year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many were there before my hon. friend took office?

Mr. REID: In the estimates for 1911-12, 198 were asked for. There has been an increase of 47 since then.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was the revenue when my hon. friend took office and what is the revenue to-day?

Mr. REID: I have not the figures. The revenue last year was about $30,000,000 more than it was in 1911-12.

Mr. McKENZIE: Upon what principle does the minister make promotions in position and increases in salary in the outside service ? I understand, of course, that the Civil Service Act furnishes machinery by which the minister makes promotions in the inside service. Does he receive a report from any official in his department, or is there any well-defined rule by which those promotions are made ?

Mr. REID: As has been the practice for many years, the officials of the department prepare a statement for the minister showing the increases they would recommend in the outside service from one end of the Dominion to the other. It has been not only my custom, but that of my predecessor, to follow that practice very closely.

Mr. McKENZIE: An official of the department making a list of that kind would have some regard for the number of years of service of each officer, for the position which he occupied, and for the salary which he was then receiving. I would imagine that the official who would report to the minister would be an officer of the inside service who would be largely governed by the records of the department. There appears to be some peculiar method by which that official deals with officers in the otutside service. In the town from which I come we have many officers of the Department of Customs.

Mr. REID: What town is that ?

Mr. McKENZIE: The town of North Sydney, a well-known town in the Maritime provinces. I am sorry that my hon. friend's geography has been so neglected. I find that by some beautiful instinct this inside official passes over the Grits and promotes the Tories in that town. I am rather suspicious that there must be some other influence than that of the inside official. I rather think that the inside official puts himself in touch with the Tory heelers in the town of North Sydney and finds out who are Grits and who are Tories, and that he promotes the Tory over the head of the poor Grit. Such has been glaringly the case in the town of North Sydney for the last few years. New men have been appointed at salaries four or five hundred dollars more than the old officials are receiving. That is unworthy of this country and unworthy of the department. The minister should inquire more closely into the knowledge which his inside officer has of these things and into the unfairness of this method of dealing with the officers of this Department.

Mr. REID: As regards increases, I find that the statement which the official submits to me is very fair so far as both Liberal and Conservative officers are concerned. We have shown no favour, and I can hardly believe there is an hon. member on the other side who can say that we have not been treating all the officers, irrespective of politics, fairly as far as increases are concerned. I know that increases have been given to Liberals as well as to Conservatives in all the ports, including Sydney. The hon. member knows that. If he does not, I have a list of the officials at Sydney and can show that they have received increases. Of course, there are officers whose salaries are at the maximum for the positions which they hold, and therefore we cannot give them further increases. I have, however, tried to give fair salaries where the salaries were small.

What happens in most of these Customs positions is, I suppose, what happened when my hon. friends opposite were in power; that is, if a vacancy occurs, and a person competent to fill it is appointed, that position is generally the one that he gets. That has been the policy of the Liberal party, and I do not see why it should not be the policy of this party. I am willing to make promotions as far as possible, but if a vacancy occurs in the Customs Department, that is the vacancy the appointee is after, and that is the vacancy he should get if he is qualified to fill the position.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not wish to mention any names of officers. If the minister will familiarize himself with the different names, he will find that some of the old officers are working at small salaries, and that others who have been appointed since the change of Government are getting large salaries and have been receiving their increases from year to year, while the older officers, appointed under the former Administration, are not receiving increases at all.

Mr. REID: I will make inquiries. I have a list before me of the officers at North Sydney. There are four or five men there, and they all got increases last year. If these are not all the names, I shall be able to give them to the hon. member later. We gave increases to T. L. Brennan, David Edwards, E. F. Jackson and Angus Young.

Mr. McKENZIE: Those are the Tory officials.

Mr. REID: Are there any Liberal officials there?

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes; but you will not find their names on the list of those who have received increases.

Mr. KYTE: I would like to ask the Minister in reference to a vacancy in the Customs office at Arichat. The preventive officer there, Captain Lawrence Gerrior, died nearly a year ago, The office has not been filled, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the minister to fill it.

Mr. REID: Not at the present time. I seem to be in a rather awkward position, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) insisting that I shall reduce the staff and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) insisting that I shall make appointments.

Mr. KYTE: I am not insisting at all, but I would like to know how long the minister will persist in his determination not to fill the office.

Mr. REID: I will not fill it until the work requires an officer at that port.

Mr. KYTE: And that will probably synchronize with the decision of the Tory patronage committee there as to an appointee. They suffer there from an embarrassment of riches—there are about twenty, I understand, applying for the office, backed by their several groups of the patronage committee. Is it because there is no work to do that the position is not filled?

Mr. REID: I have decided not to fill it at the present time. We can get along at present without the services of an officer there.

Mr. KYTE: And unless there is evidence that the services of an officer there are necessary, the minister will not fill the position?

Mr. REID: No.

Mr. KYTE: You know, we have had instances of men dismissed because there was nothing to do and others appointed at higher salaries to do that nothing.

Mr. MURPHY: The minister said some of the expert officers of his department had gone to the Finance Department?

Mr. REID: One man, Mr. Breadner. Mr. Breadner was brought here from Toronto and took a position in the Customs Department. But the Minister of Finance wanted his services in connection with that department, and so Mr. Breadner was taken over by the Finance Department, and has ceased to be an officer of the Customs.

Mr. MURPHY: Is he the only one?

Mr. REID: So far as I know.

Mr. MURPHY: His salary is not provided for in these estimates?

Mr. REID: No.

Mr. CARROLL: Are the officers on the revenue cutters on the coast under the jurisdiction of the Customs Department?

Mr. REID: The naval cutter Margaret was taken over by the Naval Service Department at the outbreak of the war and the Customs Department has nothing to do with her at the present time.

Mr. CARROLL: I refer particularly to the Alert, a vessel in the service on the coast of Cape Breton.

Mr. REID: That is a small vessel, and she is still with the Customs.

Mr. CARROLL: I would like to bring to the attention of the minister, for his investigation, certain occurrences on the coast of Cape Breton last year during the time the Alert was in that vicinity. In September, I think it was, a large amount of contraband or smuggled goods was landed at Lingan from a vessel called the Mary. For several days before that, the revenue cutter Alert was in Lingan bay or harbour. The arrival of the Mary containing the smuggled goods synchronized with the departure of the Alert. Now, I am not making any charge, but simply stating a fact when I say that the supposition in that part of the country is that the Alert was called off duty in Lingan bay after having knowledge of the fact that the Mary had left St. Pierre with a load of smuggled liquor. The public in the vicinity of Lingan and New Waterford believe that she was called off by certain political heelers in Cape Breton for the purpose of enabling their friends to land these smuggled goods. Many of the smugglers, it is true, have been convicted and have paid heavy fines. I say I am making no charge, and I am sure no charge has been made against Mr. Angus Young, who is not an officer of the Alert, but an officer of the Customs at North Sydney who was looking after the case in Sydney when these parties were tried. I would like the minister and his department to investigate and investigate thoroughly, the rumours that have been going around in that vicinity as to the negligence and incapacity of the captain, and particularly the evidence of his negligence and incapacity in allowing these contraband goods to be landed at Lingan.

Mr. REID: This is the first intimation I have had of this matter. I have just made inquiry of the commissioner, and he tells me that the parties were prosecuted, and that this vessel, the Mary, which is not worth very much, is under seizure. Until the officers reach a final decision in a case of seizure, the matter does not usually come before the minister. I shall certainly have the matter brought before the commissioner for investigation, and if anything has happened such as the hon. gentleman says, of course we cannot allow that. I think there must be some misunderstanding. The commissioner and the officials of the department have dealt with the matter. However, before we get through with my estimates, and at some future sitting of the committee, I will be in a position to discuss the matter much better than I can now:

Mr. CARROLL: Did the minister say he would investigate it?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: There were rather extraordinary things in connection with the landing of liquors at Lingan. To begin with, let me tell the minister, that the chief leader of the Tory party at that place has been found guilty of being the leader of this gang of smugglers. It so happens that this landing was made on a beautiful Sunday morning. And the extraordinary thing is that it happened that these goods were landed right at the door of the customs officer at that place. But early on Sunday morning, before seven o'clock, this customs officer was called away, forsooth, by the leading Tory heeler of that town, for a meeting at Glace Bay.

Mr. REID: Can the hon. gentleman tell me the name of the officer?

Mr. McKENZIE: His name is John Burke. I am not saying he went away, but that he was called away by the chief Tory boss in that vicinity. The absence of the officer and of the Alert seems to synchronize strangely with the landing of the goods. I am surprised that the hon. minister has heard nothing of this matter. It took place on Sunday morning, at a time when the Alert had glided away and the customs officer had been carefully stowed away in Glace Bay. The chief performer of the Tory party has since been found guilty of being at the head of the gang.

Mr. REID: I shall be better able to discuss the matter when the item comes up for consideration.

At six o'clock, the House resumed and then took recess.

The House resumed at 8 o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 29, respecting the Van Buren Bridge Company.—Mr. Michaud.

Bill No. 31, respecting the British Columbia Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Taylor.

Bill No. 32, to incorporate the Brulé, Grande Prairie and Peace River Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 33, to confirm certain agreements made between the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, the Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway Company and the Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Blain.

Bill No. 34, respecting the Manitoba and North Western Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Cash.

Bill No. 35, respecting the Niagara-Welland Power Company.—Mr. Blain.

Bill No. 36, to incorporate Northern Pacific and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Taylor.

Bill No. 37, respecting Pacific, Peace River and Athabasca Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 38, respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. Taylor.

SUPPLY.

The House resumed in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Customs—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $3,590,000.

Mr. REID: We placed in the Estimates the same amount as for 1914-15, as we had the same number of employees.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What proportion of that is for salaries and what for contingent expenses?

Mr. J. D. REID: I have a list here of the amounts spent at every port in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN: Will the vote be exhausted at the end of this year?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: Approximately how much will be spent on contingencies?

Mr. REID: I have not separate figures showing that.

Mr. MACLEAN: The boat service would not come within that item?

Mr. REID: No. There is an item below for boats and cruisers.

Mr. MACLEAN: Can you give us some idea of what will come under this item besides salaries?

Mr. REID: Rent, overtime of officers, expenses in connection with stationery, and so on.

Mr. MACLEAN: Is there no way in which the minister could reduce this item by a million dollars or so? This item of $3,590,000 for salaries and contingent expenses is more than the total cost of Customs administration in 1913, in which year the total cost was $3,150,000.

Mr. REID: The increase in salaries brings the cost of administration up each year.

Mr. MACLEAN: But the total cost in 1912-13 was 3,150,000; for 1915-16 you are asking for an amount greater than that, which seems pretty hard to understand.

Mr. REID: The revenue was probably $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 more in 1914-15 than in 1911-12. Although the amount expended for the collection of the revenue was more, the percentage of the cost of collection was less. I have a statement showing the percentages for a number of years. In 1912-13 the cost was $274,000, and it was higher in 1913-14.

Mr. MACLEAN: Your revenue in 1912-13 was $135,000,000. It was less than that last year.

Mr. REID: The revenue in 1912-13 was $115,630,000, and in 1911-12 $87,596,426.40. The increase in the number of officers and in salaries of course makes our expenditures greater. Now that the war is on there is a great deal more work to do, although the revenue is less. For instance, we could not possibly reduce the staff at Halifax or Quebec, or Montreal, or Toronto, where many of the extra officers are employed. I do not think any member of this House would ask us to dismiss these men in the winter, especially as their services will probably be required when navigation opens.

Mr. MACLEAN: You should never have taken them on.

Mr. REID: I never took a man on unless he was recommended by the inspector or by the Commissioner or one of the officials of the Department. I was asked a question about Montreal. I never took on a man there unless he was recommended by the collector, Mr. White, or the surveyor, Mr. McLaughlin. I have always tried to keep the staff down.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Two good officers.

Mr. REID: No better in Canada. Before dinner I was asked for a statement showing the total number of officers and the total salary in force on October 10, 1911, and on December 31, 1914, and the duty collected in those years. The figures are as follows:

	October 10, 1911.
	Officers.	Salary.	Duty.
Halifax.. ..	78	$ 63,880	$ 1,772,806 64
Quebec	72	72,940	1,352,345 94
Montreal. ..	306	261,605	18,233,550 77
Toronto.. ..	177	153,122	13,698,275 03
Vancouver ..	99	74,434	5,499,593 93

	December 31, 1914.
	Officers.	Salary.	Duty.
Halifax.. ..	114	$111,900	$ 2,221,696 86
Quebec	83	82,440	1,853,595 20
Montreal. ..	386	400,340	24,460,813 30
Toronto.. ..	229	238,180	18,866,881 27
Vancouver ..	157	172,850	7,416,514 49

Mr. LEMIEUX: There has been quite a growth in Halifax.

Mr. REID: That is true, but I do not think the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) would say we have too many officials there.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I do not know about that; I think I could say that. Will the minister tell us how much more it would cost to collect a revenue of one and a half million dollars than it would to collect a revenue of one and a quarter million dollars?

Mr. REID: I have not got it down as fine as that. The total collections throughout the Dominion were taken and the ratio was 2.74 which was one of the lowest in the history of the department.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister implement that statement as soon as possible with the Winnipeg figures?

Mr. REID: I shall. The Winnipeg figures were overlooked. I will hand them to the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Mr. LAW: I understood the minister to say that within the last two years the salaries of Customs officials all over the Dominion have been increased. Has there been any increase of salary granted to Custom officials in the port of Yarmouth within the last few years?

Mr. REID: I cannot answer that question now; I have not got it on the list.

Mr. LAW: I always thought Yarmouth was something of a place, but if the minister has not got it on his list he cannot think much about it.

Mr. REID: It is a good port all right.

Mr. CARROLL: Have there been any recommendations from Cape Breton county for the appointment of customs officers at New Waterford?

Mr. REID: There was a petition some time ago but no action was taken.

Mr. McKENZIE: Has the minister appointed any new customs officers in North Cape Breton, and if so, where?

Mr. REID: I do not remember of any at the present time. If the hon. gentleman will give me some more information on the point I may be able to answer him.

Mr. McKENZIE: The question is fairly explicit. Since last winter has the minister opened any new customs offices in the county of Victoria or North Cape Breton, and if so where? For example, has he opened a new customs office in Iona in Victoria county; what has been the revenue from this office since it was opened, and how far is it from the nearest previously existing customs office?

Mr. REID: There has been an office opened at Iona, but what the revenue has been I cannot say; I shall send a statement of it to the hon. member.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is it not a fact that this new office is within a mile of another office. It is a very nice country settlement, of course, but usually a country settlement like that is served by one customs house. I understand that about half a mile away from this new customs house is another. What was the urgent necessity for putting a new customs house there when there was one close by?

Mr. REID: Is it not a fact that the old customs house is on the other side of the lake? I am told there is quite a revenue at that office and it was opened for the convenience of the people.

Mr. McKENZIE: That remark of the minister would apply to two customs houses at every bridge in the country because one would be at one side of the river and the other would be at the other. This is a mere narrow arm of the sea where there is a very excellent bridge travelled all the time, and the old office was at one end of the bridge and I understand political necessity made it necessary to open another office at the other end of the bridge.

Mr. REID: It may possibly be true that the old customs house was within half a mile or a mile of the new one, but it is of great convenience to the steamers plying in that locality. Sometimes we have to put these offices close together for the convenience of steamers which run on lakes or rivers so that we may have a preventive officer to clear them in and out, or they could not call at a particular place. As I understood it, if we did not have an officer at this point it would be very inconvenient. At all events, representations were made to that effect and we opened an office for the convenience of the public and I suppose it is benefiting them.

Mr. McKENZIE: This bridge to which the minister refers is a drawbridge and the draw is at the end of the bridge where the old customs office is. For any vessel that wants to enter there, the Government wharf is at the draw end of the bridge. There the vessels had every convenience necessary to depart or enter, as they might deem advisable. On the end where the minister has put his new custom house, there is no draw at all and no vessels go there in the winter time. No vessels will ever go there, so that the building is absolutely away from the market. I do not grudge the people of Iona the convenience of a customs house if it is to be of any use; but I claim that it was put in that position for a political necessity, to meet a political emergency. Let the minister not try to defend it on any commercial principle whatever.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: I understand from the minister's remarks that throughout the country there have been general increases in the salaries of the customs officials. On what basis have these increases been made? Have they been made on the basis of length of service? For instance, in any particular customs office there are the collector, the assistant collector and a number of clerks and appraisers. Do the collector and the assistant collector get stated increases by way of an added percentage each year, and does the same rule apply to the clerks and appraisers and under clerks in each office?

Mr. REID: I explained this matter just before recess. The hon. member will understand that in the inside service the statute provides for certain increases which go into effect at the end of each year. So far as the outside service is concerned, it has been the general rule for the Minister of Customs to ask for a certain amount to be distributed amongst the officers throughout the whole Dominion. Whatever that amount may be, the officials of the department divide it up as best they can amongst those whom they think are deserving of it. The inspector reports to the commissioner the efficiency of each officer, and the report is generally accepted by the minister. It has been not only my custom but that of my predecessor to follow that report closely. Of course, there are many cases where men are at their maximum for the positions which they hold, and they sometimes complain because they are not receiving increases when others are. For instance, if the hon. member will look over the list of salaries, he will find that landing waiters in Ontario and Quebec receive between $800 and $900 per annum; but that many of them have from $200 to $350 for overtime, so that they make very good salaries. These salaries are considered about the maximum in the eastern provinces. In the western provinces, the landing waiters are paid $100 or $150 more. When the landing waiters reach that salary, the increases do not come as fast as they do in the case of other officers. Therefore, when a landing waiter is receiving a salary of $900, he generally has it supplemented by $200 or $300 for overtime. The clerks are supposed to hold higher positions and they receive higher salaries than the landing waiters, but they do not receive overtime. I would like to see the outside service on the same basis as the inside so that no fault could be found. My officials and I have tried to divide up the salaries in such a way that very little fault can be found in any way and especially so far as politics is concerned.

Mr. NESBITT: On what basis does the minister allow the extra amount for overtime? A man might be able to do his work without overtime.

Mr. REID: The men are paid at the rate of thirty cents an hour for all their time over ten hours. They must get a certificate from the collector or the surveyor that the work has actually been performed. The surveyor in a large port like Montreal has charge of the outside work. In smaller ports, where there are only half a dozen officers, they may be working at a railway station or at a steamboat landing, and it is easy to have a check on work of that nature. An officer might have to be on duty all the time. In my own town, a ferry boat runs until twelve o'clock at night and an officer must be on duty until that time. The men divide up that time: One man will be on duty for a couple of hours and another for a couple of hours each night. At a railway station they have to attend certain trains, such as express trains, coming in, and it is very easy for the collector to keep a check on the men's time. I do not think there would be much loss.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What is the estimate of the cost of collection of customs for the province of New Brunswick for the year 1914-15?

Mr. REID: I have only the general figures. I have not Nova Scotia separately.

Mr. MACLEAN: Before preparing his Estimates for 1915-16, did the minister go into the matter with his officers and make any effort to reduce them by say two million dollars or by one dollar?

Mr. REID: My officials tell me that they have as much work with the war now on as they had prior to the war; in fact, a great deal more work has been thrown on the Customs Department on account of the war. The men are all busy and they will use the whole vote of last year. With that information before me, I do not see how I would be justified in asking for a smaller vote than that of last year.

Mr. MACLEAN: Then the minister has not endeavoured to reduce the Estimates?

Mr. REID: Yes, I took the matter up with the officials of my department and that is the information they gave me, and I must rely upon the officials who understand the situation thoroughly.

Mr. NESBITT: The minister has said that on account of the war the work has been so heavy. I am curious to know how the war has increased the work of the customs officers seeing that the revenues have declined.

Mr. REID: The war has made it necessary for us to have many more officers watching vessels coming in and going out. We have to watch the imports and exports much more closely because of the prohibitions made necessary by the war. Take it, for instance, at Bridgeburg, where many cars cross—we have to have officials there to watch very closely. The Commissioner of Customs tells me that the officials are busier than they have ever been though the revenue has decreased.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: How many officers have been appointed in the Customs Department since the day when war was declared, the 4th of August?

Mr. REID: As I said before dinner, we designed to make no new appointments at all. A number of our officers went to the war and their places have not been filled, the others being used as relieving officers until these men return. When vacancies occur, we do not fill them unless it is absolutely necessary. Therefore, the new appointments are practically nil.

Mr. STANFIELD: Before dinner I asked about a return showing how many deaths and superannuations had taken place since 1911. Can the minister give me that information now?

Mr. REID: Since that return we have had 39 deaths, 16 superannuations, 43 dismissals and 45 resignations.

Mr. STANFIELD: But can the minister give me the figures since 1911?

Mr. REID: I haven't it, but will get it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Were these voluntary resignations?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. LAW: Will the minister please state what are the duties of these special officers?

Mr. REID: These officers are for special preventive service. When we receive complaints of smuggling or learn that smuggling is suspected, these officers are detailed to look up the case. Also they are supposed to travel around and learn if smuggling is going on. Such officers are needed throughout the Dominion. We have two or three in Nova Scotia, two in New Brunswick, two or more in Quebec, and so with the other provinces.

Mr. LAW: In some cases, I think the duty of these officers consists mainly in collecting their pay at the end of the month.

Mr. CARROLL: Last session I called attention to the lack of a customs officer at New Waterford. Has the hon. gentleman changed his mind since then, and does he intend to appoint a collector of customs there?

Mr. REID: We have not decided. At present I am trying to keep down the expense as much as possible, and to avoid the appointment of more officers while the war is on.

Mr. CARROLL: I am sorry the hon. gentleman has not succeeded in keeping down the expense. We do not see much difference in the expenditure except that the estimate of expenditure for next year shows an increase. I do not think there is another town of the size of New Waterford in the whole Dominion of Canada without a customs officer. The minister may not know it, but this is a town of about 8,000 people. The custom house is at a point three miles away, where there are not more than thirty families. The minister promised to give this consideration last year, but as no consideration seems to have been given, I call it to his attention again. If he feels that he cannot make a new appointment in New Waterford, I would suggest to him that he move the custom house from where it is now into New Waterford, and thus serve the bulk of the people in that locality.

Mr. REID: I shall be glad to look into the matter again. But the hon. gentleman admits that we have a custom house within three miles of New Waterford. There are many places quite as large, yet with no custom house nearer than three miles.

Mr. CARROLL: But I suggest that the minister put the custom house where it will serve the people, and not compel the seven or eight thousand of New Waterford to go to a custom house located where there is a population of about one hundred.

Mr. REID: I did not understand the matter in that way before. I shall be glad to look into it and discuss it with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I see that the customs revenue of Arichat in 1914 was $438.31, while the expense of collection was $2,588.27. In Shelburne the customs duties were $1,641.51, and the expenses of collection, $1,966.39. There should be some explanation of the great cost of collecting so small an amount of revenue.

Mr. REID: Arichat is a chief port with several outports under it—D'Escousse, Fourchu, Irish Cove, L'Ardoise, Petit de Grat, Lennox Ferry, River Bourgeoise, St. Peter's and West Arichat. The officers at these points all act as preventive officers. The hon. gentleman will see the need of having these officers when I tell him that 1,569 coasting vessels and 92 sea-going vessels arrived, and 1,556 coasting vessels and 99 sea-going vessels departed. It is necessary, therefore, to have these officers to look after the clearing of vessels at these several ports.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: It was pointed out this afternoon by the member for Richmond that at the port of Red Islands a man in the customs service was dismissed because there was nothing for him to do, and a little later another person was appointed to the same office at a salary of $250.

Mr. REID: But Irish Cove is one place and Red Islands another.

Mr. KYTE: I have endeavoured to teach my hon. friend a little geography, but so far my efforts have been entirely unsuccessful. These places are in the same parish. Irish Cove is a couple of miles from Red Islands, but no business is done at Irish Cove that could not be properly attended to by the collector at Red Islands. Irish Cove is in the same district as Red Islands, but in another part of it.

Mr. REID: I do not think there is any dispute between the hon. member and myself in that respect. These places may be in the same parish, but Irish Cove is just as different from Red Islands as Ottawa is from a place in Carleton county ten miles distant.

Mr. KYTE: So is Sparks street different from Wellington street, but the hon. minister would not propose appointing collectors of customs on each of these streets. These places are in the same district; the same people are served in either case.

Mr. REID: I am sorry I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: In many parts of the Maritime Provinces there seem to be a number of customs offices in the same district, within two or three miles of each other. In western Canada it is quite unusual to see customs offices or ports of entry outside the large centres. I have intended to bring to the minister's attention the question of establishing another port of entry on the international boundary midway between Regina and Moosejaw. There are two ports of entry in that district, one called Big Muddy and the other Wood Mountain, where there has been a customs office and a station of the North West Mounted Police for many years. The distance between these ports is seventy or eighty miles, and in that district there are a large number of settlers. I do not know whether the minister or any one in his department has had any correspondence in regard to the matter, but I have had correspondence, both before I left Regina and since I came to the city of Ottawa, with regard to the question of establishing a port of entry at a little place called Overland.

Mr. REID: Does any railway pass through that place?

Mr. MARTIN: No railway passes through Overland, but the Maryfield extension of the Canadian Northern, running west from a place called Goodwater, south of Weyburn, runs north of this particular settlement. The people who live in that settlement are about thirty miles from Wood Mountain, the port of entry to the west, and about the same distance from Big Muddy, the port of entry to the east. There are no towns nearer these people than those on the Soo line, which is forty or fifty miles from where they reside. There is no town of any consequence there at all, and any proposed port of entry would be in the same class as that established at Wood Mountain many years ago and that which in recent years has been established at Big Muddy. It would be a matter of great convenience to the people of this district if they had a port of entry nearer their places of residence than those which they have at the present time.

Mr. REID: I do not know whether any application for a port of entry at Overland has been received, but I shall be glad to look the matter up. I agree with the hon. member that along the international boundary there should be more customs offices; I think it is necessary not only for the convenience of the public, but in the interests of the revenue as well. I will discuss the matter with my officers. I may point out that it is necessary to have at these ports of entry an official who can act in the capacity of veterinary surgeon and quarantine officer. I am advised that the Minister of Agriculture has found great difficulty in getting veterinary surgeons to act as quarantine officers at those places. I have been willing to open offices along the frontier if persons can be obtained to act in that capacity, and I shall be glad to do so now. The difficulty is that it is hard to get a man to take up his residence along the frontier in districts where there are practically no settlements. Only the other day I took up with the Minister of Agriculture the matter of locating at some place along the international boundary a veterinary surgeon who was mentioned as wanting a position. The hon. member can understand how awkward it would be if a settler should come across with his cattle and horses and find he could not get them through on account of their being no quarantine officer to inspect them. It is, perhaps, on account of that difficulty that I have not been able to open as many offices along the boundary line as I would like to have opened.

9 p.m.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Shortly after the present Government came into power a man named Cavanagh of the customs service at New Glasgow, Pictou county, N.S., was removed from office. Will the minister tell me what salary he was getting, and the grounds for his removal?

Mr. REID: My deputy does not remember the circumstances in connection with the matter; I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACLEAN: Can the minister inform me whether there are two men named respectively Gillies and Cameron in the customs service at New Glasgow, and what are their salaries?

Mr. REID: Gillies, $1,000; D. A. Cameron, resigned.

Mr. MACLEAN: Was anybody appointed in his place?

Mr. REID: A man named Bailey, I think, was appointed in his place.

Mr. MACLEAN: How much does he get?

Mr. REID: $900, the same salary as that received by Mr. Cameron.

Mr. MACLEAN: Does the list state how much Mr. Cavanagh received?

Mr. REID: He was merely an acting officer. I have not the information, but I shall be glad to get the papers and send them to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE: Has the department any building rented at the port of North Sydney besides the regular customs house; if so, from whom is the building rented, and at what rental?

Mr. REID: We rent a warehouse at North Sydney. I cannot say at the moment what the rent is.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am informed that there is a middleman in this case. The department required additional room and instead of the Government renting direct from the owner of the building two good Tories rented the building and sublet to the Government so that the Government are paying twice as much for the building as if they rented it direct. The minister will find that the people from whom he is renting are not the owners, they are not in business and have nothing to do with the building. The Government is paying them a subsidy because they are Tories and because they are middlemen in the handling of this little graft.

Mr. REID: I shall be very glad to look into this matter and shall be very much surprised to find if it is the case. If I find any middleman I will—

Mr. McKENZIE: I shall be equally surprised if you find that it is the case.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What will the minister do if he finds the facts as stated?

Mr. REID: I shall wait until I see if these are the facts.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: I have had some correspondence with the Department of Customs extending over two years on the question of the importation of certain horses. The department wrote me some time ago that, as far as they are concerned, the question was closed. At the same time I do not think it will do any harm to state briefly the facts. A man named Underwood, a farmer not very far from where I live, imported nineteen horses from some portion of the United States. He purchased the horses and brought them into the country by means of certain certificates and seven of these certificates were discovered on investigation by the Customs Department to have been false certificates. The reason for holding an investigation was that some of the horses were quarantined by a Government veterinary in the West for dourine which caused an investigation into where they came from and the discovery of the false certificates. I am not concerned with the vendor of the horses in the United States. Underwood brought the horses into Canada, he paid for them to the vendor in the United States and filed declarations with the department that, as far as he was concerned, he had acted in good faith. I believe that the purchaser of these horses did act in absolute good faith and why he should have been punished by the imposition of double duty on him I have never been able to make out. I have taken that up with the department for two years but ceased doing so when I was informed that the matter had been finally closed. I cannot help representing to the minister that this man suffered an injury which he did not deserve. He acted in good faith and should not have been charged $2,200 by way of double duty owing to the false certificates under which the horses were brought into Canada, he having no part in the fraud.

Mr. REID: The horses were fraudulently imported into this country.

Mr. MARTIN: Not by this man.

Mr. REID: The hon. member agrees that they came in fraudulently.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not so far as he was concerned.

Mr. REID: The man referred to claims that he had nothing to do with the fraud, but at the same time we follow the goods. We followed the horses in this case and held them as responsible for this duty. In cases of this kind these matters are always dealt with by the regular seizing officers of the staff, and in this case double duty was imposed. That is one of the smallest fines that is imposed on fraudulent importations, and we could not possibly let men off in such cases, because if we accepted such pleas as this man's, then in every case of fraudulent importation a similar claim would be made and we feel that in business of this kind if we find the importer is not really the guilty man we impose only double duty. In other cases we would take the whole goods, simply take the horses and dispose of them and fine him the penalty of the total value. In this case while he may think it is a hardship, I feel that he got off as reasonably as many others have in similar positions.

[Mr. W. M. Martin.]

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What does the minister estimate his customs and excise revenue will be at the end of March next?

Mr. REID: I will let the hon. member have that to-morrow morning.

Customs—to provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service, $100,000.

Mr. REID: That will only be used in case we get our other cruiser back again from the Naval Service. This is a new cruiser, the Margaret. Of course, this vote may be used if we have to get another boat to take the place of the Margaret during the continuance of the war.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What steamer does the minister use in the Halifax customs service?

Mr. REID: A little gasoline launch takes the officer out to the steamer.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Is the boat satisfactory?

Mr. REID: We have had no complaints about it.

Mr. MACLEAN: I understand that no provision was made for the engineer to get down to the engine room.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does this cover the Alert? I have a protest to register against the voting of money for the Alert and her crew. The minister will remember that about this time last year we had a local election in the county of Victoria, in the province of Nova Scotia, and that I charged the minister with sending this Alert down the coast with political agents and agencies with them, such as booze and the other machinery that was brought to bear in the county of Victoria. The minister's friend the Tory candidate was elected on that occasion, but we have succeeded in unseating him since. That is what the minister does with the money we vote for him, and I am warning the people of Canada, particularly those in public life, that here we are voting money to be used by Tory candidates for Tory purposes throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion with the consent of the minister. The minister's chief agent on that boat was blacklisted by a judge of the Supreme Court, after having been found guilty of all the crimes in the calendar in connection with that trip. We are now voting money to pay for that trip, and I am registering my protest and saying that we should not spend money in that way. The minister should at least find out that the proper kind of booze is kept, for one of the strong speakers for the Tory party on that occasion complained that the booze in some out-of-the-way place where he was landed was rotten. That is the message which he sent over the public wires, which were put at his disposal. Not only did the Government put the Alert at the disposal of this man, but the telegraph line as well. Everything that the Government had in the county of Victoria in the shape of Government appliances was put at the disposal of the head man of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia, who was blacklisted by Judge Russell of the Supreme Court along with twenty-three others of my hon. friend's friends.

Mr. REID: I think the hon. member is hardly fair. He will remember that I never heard about this trip until the matter came up in Parliament, and that I then immediately suspended the officer and the use of the boat. I had nothing to do with it, and I think the hon. member is unfair when he says that I sent this boat down. An investigation was held at the time, but there was no evidence to show that there was any booze on the boat on that trip. The hon. member also says the judge blacklisted twenty three friends of mine. Whether they are friends of mine or not I cannot say, but certainly they were not customs officers. I do not think any Government official was blacklisted.

Mr. McKENZIE: Let me tell my hon. friend that the customs officer appointed at Iona, fresh from his hands, was blacklisted.

Mr. REID: I am glad to get the information; I never heard of it before. Was he a customs officer at that time?

Mr. McKENZIE: Yes, with his honours fresh upon him.

Mr. REID: I will make inquiries about that.

Customs—Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by and accounted for to it, for secret preventive service, $10,000.

Mr. NESBITT: That is an increase?

Mr. REID: Yes, on account of the war.

Mr. PARDEE: What is the money spent on?

Mr. REID: We have to give information to the United States and to other countries in regard to export stuff.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: If this item passes the minister will allow us to discuss any customs matter on a subsequent item?

Mr. REID: Certainly.

Department of the Interior—salaries, $1,143,567.50.

Mr. ROCHE: That is just the same as last year, except for the statutory salary increases.

Dominions lands and parks—salaries of the outside service, $465,000.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: According to a return brought down, up to March 10, 1914, there was a very large increase shown in the number of employees in the Interior Department, both in the inside and the outside service. I have no doubt that since that date, owing to peculiar conditions existing in certain parts of the West, there has been a further increase, and as to a portion of that increase I have no criticism to offer. Up to March 10, 1914, the return showed 301 dismissals in the Department of the Interior and 1,649 new appointments. In certain parts of western Canada with which I am familiar, I believe that a large number of these new appointments were absolutely useless to the public service. I can give an instance of four homestead inspectors being employed by the present Government in the Dominion lands office in my own city, where there is not work for one. The late Government for twelve or thirteen years only employed two homestead inspectors there and now I believe there are four, whereas any one who knows the district knows that the homesteads are practically exhausted in that vicinity and one homestead inspector could easily do the work. I am sure the present Minister of the Interior does not want to waste the public money by keeping an unnecessary number of homestead inspectors sitting around doing nothing. A couple of years ago a man named Sipes was employed as homestead inspector in the country tributary to Regina, and according to an answer given me by the Minister of the Interior some two years ago, for the four or five months that he was so employed he did not make a single homestead inspection. I know that the present Minister of the Interior has too much respect for his own reputation to waste the public money in this way. The homestead office in Regina is just an instance of what is going on in other parts of Western Canada. The appointment of 1,649 new officials in the last three years is due to the fact that the present Government has largely increased the number of officials operating in the Department of the Interior in western Canada. Homestead work is decreasing, and immigration during the past eighteen months, even before the war, as we all know, amounted to almost nothing, so that this enormous number of officials should not be needed. I do not wish to impute any motives to the present Minister of the Interior, but surely there must be some reason for keeping men in these various places in western Canada, doing practically nothing.

Mr. ROCHE: In addition to what the Solicitor-General explained before recess, as to appointments to fill vacancies by resignations and deaths, etc., there is something further to be said. I understand that Professor Shortt used an expression in an address in the People's Forum on Sunday night, which was calculated to leave an entirely erroneous impression on the public mind. In my own department the appointments probably numbered twice the number of dismissals, but that included not only the appointees referred to by the Solicitor-General, but a very large number of temporary employees. For example, the office of the Surveyor-General employs a large number of men for six months in the year when their services are dispensed with, and next year there will be forty or fifty new men engaged who, while only temporary employees, are reckoned as new appointees by the Government. The Interior Department has nearly 900 employees, and up to last year we have had as many as 140 temporary employees engaged for six months in the year, as the Civil Service Act will not allow us to retain the services of these temporary employees for a longer period. Professor Shortt not having explained this situation, his remarks have left an erroneous impression on the public mind. In reference to the homestead inspectors, I understand that some of these gentlemen have been transferred to other districts. An additional reason why there have been more homestead inspectors appointed is that we have been trying to afford greater convenience to the farmers of the country who enter for their lands, and who ordinarily would have to pay a good deal of money and spend a good deal of their time travelling long distances to the nearest subagency, for their patent, by instructing many of our homestead inspectors to visit those farmers on their farms. This is a great convenience to the farming community, and I have many requests from the settlers that it should be continued.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: That was done before.

[Mr. W. M. Martin.]

Mr. ROCHE: Not nearly to the same extent as it has been done for the last eighteen months. It may be that there are more employees now in some of these offices than the work of the offices would warrant, but the hon. gentleman knows that in these hard times it is not very nice to dismiss employees, unless you have ground for it, and we do not wish to impose any undue hardships upon these men. No person has ever complained to me before with regard to the land office at Regina. I understand there are four officials in that office at present. It is true that there are not many homesteads remaining in that district, but at the same time there is considerable work in the office. The present land agent there has gone to the front and somebody had to take his place. At all events, I can assure my hon. friend from Regina that I certainly have not appointed as many officials as I have had demands for appointments.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What does the minister estimate that the revenue for Dominion lands will be for this year?

Mr. ROCHE: It will not be as much as last year.

Mr. MACLEAN: Let me put a few facts before the minister in regard to the cost of administering this branch of his department. In 1910-11 there was a revenue of $3,108,000 from Dominion lands, and the cost of administration was $1,804,000. In 1913-14 the cost of administration had risen to $3,286,000, or nearly $1,500,000 of an increase in three or four years. The minister estimated the administration cost for 1915-16 as over $4,000,000, with a revenue less than in 1914-15. How does the minister explain this? We are receiving less money from Dominion lands than we did three or four years ago and the cost of the administration has increased between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000.

Mr. ROCHE: I understand that heretofore, in the years which the hon. gentleman first quoted, there was one special item of Dominion lands alone. Now we have several branches included under the one vote.

Mr. MACLEAN: I do not think that was true in 1910-11.

Mr. ROCHE: For instance, the Parks branch.

Mr. MACLEAN: That was in 1910-11.

Mr. ROCHE: No, it was under the item of miscellaneous.

Mr. MACLEAN: How much does that amount to ?

Mr. ROCHE: The estimate for the Parks branch for this year is considerably below what it was last year—$586,000.

Mr. MACLEAN: Would the minister give me the following information to-morrow or the next day by letter or otherwise, namely, the estimated revenue and expenditures for 1914-15 for Dominion lands, immigration and Indian Affairs ?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Mr. BOULAY: I wish to refer to a matter which I drew to the attention of the minister last year, concerning the immigration inspectors working on the trains in the province of Quebec. I then informed the minister that of eighteen men appointed as immigration officers eleven could not speak a word of French, and I said it was not fair to French-Canadians passing the boundary line on their way back from the United States to be questioned in a language which most of them could not understand. The minister promised me then that he would look into the matter. I would like to know if anything has been done to improve that condition, because some of those inspectors go so far as to be very impolite to those who cannot understand them in English. I myself was a victim on one occasion. This situation was not created by the Conservative party, but I would like to know from the minister if anything has been done to give protection in some way to our fellow citizens when they cross the border on their way back from the United States.

Mr. ROCHE: That matter more properly comes in under the Immigration vote, and I will have what information my hon. friend desires when that vote comes up. I have not had any complaints that I am aware of in regard to having too many officials who do not understand the French language; but I must admit that I have had quite a few complaints from other quarters in regard to officials in the province of Quebec, notably at the port of Quebec, because they did not understand the English language sufficiently, and it was stated that this condition had prevailed for a good many years. It may be true there are some border inspectors, notably in the Eastern Townships, who are not very conversant with the French language, and I will make inquiries into the matter. I am, however, given to understand that there is a fair proportion who do understand it.

Mr. DOUGLAS: What is the policy of the department in regard to members of the Outside Service who enlist? Are there salaries kept on in full?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes, by Order in Council passed last fall.

Dominion lands and parks contingencies, advertising, etc., $300,000.

Mr. NESBITT: Anything can come under contingencies. In a manufacturing business an employer would sack a clerk who put in such an item. What does it mean?

Mr. ROCHE: That has been the custom from time immemorial.

Mr. NESBITT: The minister ought to change such a bad practice.

Mr. ROCHE: This refers to the expenses of officials, such as homestead inspectors, including the purchase of their repairing outfits, harness, etc. It also includes the expenses of timber inspectors and of inspectors of ranches; 26 Dominion lands and Crown timber agencies; offices of the inspectors of the Dominion lands and Crown timber agencies; payment of telegrams, telephones, commission, postage, subagents, clerical assistance of a temporary nature, janitor service, and so on; printing, stationery, advertising and miscellaneous, such as express charges, freight, and so on.

Protection of timber, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories, and the Railway Belt in British Columbia; tree culture in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and inspection and management of forest reserves, $750,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS: There is an increase here; what is the explanation?

Mr. ROCHE: Hon. members will recollect that last session we formed a number of new forest reserves in the northern portion of Alberta and Saskatchewan. A large part of the increase is made necessary by the work of organisation of those reserves. There is also an increase in connection with tree planting. This covers the work of distributing trees for planting on farms, which work is steadily increasing. This additional amount is asked for to develop the new nursery station at Saskatoon, established last year.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Are the trees got at the experimental farm at Lacombe?

Mr. ROCHE: No, I think mainly from the nursery station at Indian Head.

Mr. DOUGLAS: This is the same policy that has been carried out for years?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS: As to re-forestation, is anything being done along that line?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Protection of reindeer herd, $3,000.

Mr. NESBITT: What about this?

Mr. ROCHE: I am sorry to say that the history of our reindeer work has not been very satisfactory. But probably we shall do better in the future, because of what has been learned. Thirty-three reindeer were taken from Labrador, of which seven died on the way. The first season they were there flies stampeded them, and some of them did not recover. The survivors have been removed to a better part of the country where they are not likely to be so troubled with flies, and our officers have expressed the opinion that they are more likely to live.

Mr. NESBITT: Why do you want to spend $3,000 on half a dozen reindeer?

Mr. ROCHE: There were thirty-three reindeer, though there are only nine left. They have a great many of them in Alaska and find them very useful.

Mr. NESBITT: They make money out of them there.

Mr. ROCHE: I hope that some day we shall develop the industry so as to make money out of it too.

Mr. DOUGLAS: What do you do for this money?

Mr. ROCHE: We have to supply a certain amount of attendance for the reindeer. We have herders whose salaries have to be paid.

Mr. NESBITT: How many?

Mr. ROCHE: We had originally one herder and two assistants, but there is only one assistant now.

Mr. NESBITT: Better tie the reindeer up than have two herders for nine deer.

To pay expenses connected with water-power investigations and reports in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Railway Belt in British Columbia, $194,000.

[Mr. Roche.]

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: What portion of this grant, if any, is being spent in connection with the Saskatchewan river and on what water-power?

Mr. ROCHE: I cannot give the facts in quite such detail as that. The whole expenditure is in the prairie provinces, particularly in Alberta and Saskatchewan—$25 000 in Saskatchewan. The vote includes a considerable expenditure in connection with the head office at Ottawa. The offices are carrying on a good deal of work in connection with small water-powers, getting information for those who wish to develop them. My information from the superintendent of the branch is that they have been doing a great deal of useful work during the past two years and hope to continue it. They are engaged in a work which they think it would be wrong policy for us now to drop. Therefore, the superintendent recommended to me the securing of a vote for this amount This is one of the only two items that are increased in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. MARTIN: I wish to find out how much of this money is being spent in connection with the supposed diversion of the Saskatchewan river or the taking of water from that river. Is any part of this money to be spent in connection with taking water from the Saskatchewan and diverting it through portions of the country south of that river?

Mr. ROCHE: There is an item of $17,000 in connection with the storage in the Saskatchewan basin.

Mr. MARTIN: What has been done in connection with that scheme? And is it the intention of the Government to actually take water from the Saskatchewan and distribute it in the surrounding country?

Mr. ROCHE: A delegation from Prince Albert made requests of the department on this subject about eighteen months ago. I remember that several gentlemen waited upon myself on my western tour in 1913. As a result of that delegation an investigation was authorized with a view to improving, if possible, the low water conditions in the river and placing the municipal plant of Prince Albert at Lacolle in a more satisfactory position for the production of power. The future of hydro-electric development along the Saskatchewan river is largely dependent on the storage facilities which may be available throughout the basin. The importance of this question to the industrial life of the prairie is such that it must receive immediate and energetic attention. The great demand for cheap power throughout the West makes it necessary that every possible effort be put forth to secure the same, and the storage investigations now going on have in view the best methods of securing satisfactory results from hydro-electric development. This appropriation will enable us to carry on the investigation which we have been conducting during the past year.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: Do I understand from the minister that this item of $17,000 has only to do with the matter of the investigation of the power contained in the Saskatchewan river? For the last few years requests have been made by the city of Prince Albert to the Government to grant them some assistance in respect of obtaining some assistance for the development of Lacolle Falls up to the present time, I believe, without avail. I am scarcely able to gather from the minister, however, whether this $17,000, which includes all the money voted for the purpose of investigating water schemes along the Saskatchewan river, is to be devoted entirely to the development of Lacolle falls for the benefit of the city of Prince Albert, or whether it has anything to do with the distribution of water for domestic purposes to the people who reside south and east of the Saskatchewan river.

Mr. ROCHE: It is not at all confined to the particular item to which the hon. gentleman has referred. It is for surveys and investigations all along the Saskatchewan river, in what is known as the Saskatchewan basin.

Mr. MARTIN: I do not wish to be unduly persistent about this matter, but in the province in which I reside we have been led to believe that the Government had on foot a tremendous scheme having in view the supplying of pure water to the cities of Moosejaw and Regina and to the rural inhabitants of the adjoining country by diverting water from the Saskatchewan river and bringing it down through Buffalo lake to the southeastern part of the province. In a section of the country where water is scarcer than it is in the eastern provinces, it is important that steps be taken to secure an adequate supply of pure water. As I say, we have been led to believe that the Government has had this scheme in view, with the object of getting rid of the question of the scarcity of water in the province of Saskatchewan for all time to come.

Mr. ROCHE: I may say that there is no provision in these Estimates for an expenditure such as the hon. gentleman has mentioned. We think it is not a suitable time to launch out on such an extensive enterprise.

Mr. MARTIN: Does the minister consider that it would not be a proper expenditure?

Mr. ROCHE: No, I say this is not the proper time to incur it.

Mr. MARTIN: I suppose it is the view of the minister that it is all right to spend the money somewhere else, but that it is not the proper time to spend the money there.

Mr. OLIVER: This item is very largely increased this year. It is an item that provides for examination and exploration, which examination and exploration can not be turned to actual account without a vast future expenditure of money. It seems to me that if we are in a condition of financial stringency which precludes the probability of any of these large expenditures being carried forward within a short time, these processes of examination and exploration might very well be slackened off for the present or for a year or two, instead of being increased as they have been. I do not wish to make the criticism in any factious spirit, but, having regard to prevailing conditions, and especially to the financial situation, I take the ground that this is an item which might very well be reduced at this session without throwing any discredit upon the general purposes that the Government has in view, and without affecting the ultimate carrying out of these objects. But, inasmuch as the giving effect to the results of these examinations or explorations must involve a vast expenditure of money, which money is not likely to be available, the preliminary expenditures might be postponed for the time being, or reduced rather than increased.

Mr. ROCHE: A special staff of engineers is engaged on this work. The hon gentleman will realize the difficulties which would arise if we dismissed the staff and re-engaged later persons who possibly would not be so conversant with the work. Having set out to do this work, we thought it better to continue it, and we have kept the engineers together. This item covers not only the expenses of surveys, but several sub-items as well, such as: publishing reports in connection with investigations and surveys; expenses of official administration at the head office; drainage and reclamation. There are several items under the one heading of water-powers. I realize that this is not a good year for launching out on new enterprises, and we have endeavoured not to do that, but in respect of this enterprise which we have already undertaken, we thought it would be more economical to continue it, especially in view of the fact that we have a special staff engaged for the purpose.

For surveys and works under the Irrigation Act, etc., including $400 for P. Marchand, as auditor of disbursements made by companies acquiring lands under the irrigation system, $268,350.

Mr. OLIVER: I merely repeat the criticism I made on the previous item. I do not wish to make any adverse criticism of the payment to a very capable auditor, Mr. Marchand, but I think it is only fair to say that this item is, in my judgment, in very much the same position as the previous one. It is an item for expenditure upon examinations and explorations which, if it were desired to study economy, might be decreased or deferred in some measure during the present year.

Canadian national parks, $349,670.

Mr. WARNOCK: May I ask the minister whether he has had any complaints or protests in respect to the extension of the boundaries of Waterloo Lakes Park?

Mr. ROCHE: I think I have had one or two complaints in regard to the extension. I cannot remember from whom, but I think the matter has been brought to my attention.

Mr. WARNOCK: Is it proposed to reduce the size of that park? I understand that there has been some friction, in the matter between the Forestry Department and the Parks Department. The matter is quite important, in a way; I am sure that some petitions have been sent in by stockmen and settlers.

10 p.m.

Mr. ROCHE: The matter is under consideration. I think I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is most likely that there will be a reduction in the size of the park.

Mr. OLIVER: In what particular feature is the very considerable reduction in this item?

Mr. ROCHE: In nearly all the parks we are having a reduction of expenditure. There was a large expenditure in connection with the Banff park last year in building the bath house. That is now completed and will effect quite a saving.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Is any money being made out of the Wainwright buffalo park? What are you doing with the surplus buffalo? They are breeding very rapidly.

Mr. ROCHE: I do not think there is much money being made out of the park, there may be some but not very much.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any intention of increasing the area of the Jasper park? At present there is a stretch of, I think, ten miles on each side of the railway.

Mr. ROCHE: If my memory serves me correctly it was enlarged a year or two ago.

Mr. OLIVER: Before leaving Edmonton, I was spoken to in reference to a suggestion that the area should be increased very considerably. There was some objection to any very considerable increase, the idea was that it was fair and reasonable to have a stretch of say from ten to twenty miles on each side of the railway track under the special park regulations. I wish to put myself on record as in favour of not having an unreasonable extension of the park regulations.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Has the minister had any representations from the residents of Wainwright asking for the removal of the buffalo park?

Mr. ROCHE: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I understand a petition was sent in asking the Government to remove that park, that they required the land for arable purposes. Wainwright is the centre of a good arable country and it is considered a detriment to have the whole southern section of the district occupied by a buffalo park.

Mr. ROCHE: I was under the impression that the people of Wainwright originally were all in favour of having it there.

Mr. DOUGLAS: At one time, yes.

Mr. ROCHE: It may be that they have changed their minds and sent in some petition, but I cannot recall it.

Mr. OLIVER: At Jasper park the Government have made very considerable expenditures in road-making and otherwise. They have added greatly to the advantages of the park as a point for tourists and pleasure seekers but they have been so very particular in their determination that everything be kept up to the highest standard that, up to the present time, time, no accommodation has been provided for visitors at the park. The natural beauty is there, but of course unless a visitor is able to obtain food and shelter, the scenery is not of any serious advantage to him, and he passes on through. I understand it is the intention of the Government to require the erection of very first-class hotel accommodation in the park. I would suggest that in these hard times the minister lower the standard required by his officials and endeavour to secure moderate accommodation which will meet the immediate purposes of the tourist trade and enable the visitors of to-day to enjoy the scenery and advantages of the park. There are two important points. Jasper is what might be called the capital of the park, and Pocohontas the point at which people leave to go into the hot springs. There should be accomodation for travellers at both.

Engraving, lithographing, printing and preparation of maps, plans and kindred publications of the Dominion, including necessary materials for same, $81,500.

Mr. ROCHE: This increase is offset by the reduction which we have made in the surveys, so that there is no real increase in the vote, and it is caused by the establishment of a blue print plant in connection with the department for lithographing, etc.

Mr. OLIVER: Homestead maps of the West are issued showing the progress of settlement from year to year. They are unique, and most valuable to any one who desires to follow them. They are gotten up in four separate sheets, one Manitoba, one Saskatchewan, one of the southern part of Alberta and one of the northern part of Alberta. I suppose that owing to the great amount of labour involved, in making corrections from year to year, the staff is occupied nearly the whole year, so that the last of the four maps gets out only at the end of the year. That is to say, the map of Northern Alberta which gives the condition of settlement up to the beginning of 1914, does not reach the public until the end of 1914. As the area covered by the map of Northern Alberta includes the Peace River country, which to-day is attracting attention and settlement more than any other section of the West, I would suggest to the minister that this map be made the first care of his staff in getting out these four maps.

Mr. ROCHE: I recognize the force of my hon. friend's remarks. As homesteaders are flocking into the Peace River District at the present time I think we might be justified in giving that map the first claim, although my hon. friend no doubt remembers the argument that is sometimes made against the department for encouraging settlers to go up into the north country in advance of transportation facilities. The settlers there frequently become a charge on the department for grub-staking and so on. After they have raised their crops they say: We have no transportation facilities; you encouraged us by your immigration literature to locate here, and now you must look after us. That must be taken into consideration, although personally I do not think that a map would induce people to settle there; but undoubtedly it would be a great source of information.

Mr. OLIVER: What the minister said would have been to the point at any time up to the present. Although nobody is more interested in that section of the country than I am, I have refrained from encouraging settlers to go in there for the reason the minister has just stated; but to-day conditions have got beyond that point. Many thousands of people have gone in there under great transportation difficulties, and are in there now. As a matter of fact, railroad communication is following them up and overcoming the difficulties of getting in and out of the country. In these circumstances the point that my hon. friend has mentioned is really behind us. It may as well be accepted that the Peace River country is a field for active settlement, and everybody might just as well join in and help it along, for it has gone so far that if any setback occurs it would be detrimental to the whole country.

Department of Marine—salaries, $209,100; Department of Naval Service—salaries, $170,600.

Mr. HAZEN: I have practically to take the two departments together. Last year we had 178 officials in the Marine Department; this year we have 143, or 35 less. In the Naval Department last year we had 84 officials, and we have now 125, or 41 more. In explanation I may say that under the statute the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is also the Minister of Naval Service. The two departments are under the one minister, and for the purpose of equalizing the work of those departments we have found it desirable to transfer a considerable quantity of work from the Marine and Fisheries Department to the Naval Service Department. This equalizes the work and promotes greater efficiency. For the Naval Service Department, which deals not merely with naval affairs, but with fisheries protection, the hydrographic and tidal surveys, and other branches of some importance, had a far less share of work than the Marine and Fisheries Department. By the changes we have made, 38 clerks are transferred from the Marine Department to the Naval Service Department, which accounts for the great diminution in the number of marine officials, and the great increase in the number of Naval Service officials. There are no salary increases in the Marine Department except the ordinary statutory increases. There are apparently three extra clerks, but when it comes to be looked into one of them is the naval architect, who has been employed by the department for many years. He has always been in the outside service, but it is now proposed to place him in the inside service on the same footing as other Civil Service officials. The other two extra clerks are stenographers at $500 a year. In the Naval Service Department too, there are apparently three extra clerks, but they are all outside service officials who are being transferred to the inside service. There are no promotions, and no increases except the statutory increases.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Can the minister explain why there has been no return from the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Naval Service as to the number of officials appointed or dismissed? A return was moved for more than a year ago asking for these figures in regard to all departments, and apparently the Post Office Department and the Marine and Fisheries Department are the only ones that have not complied with that order. Can the minister tell us how many officials have been dismissed and how many appointed since this Government took office?

Mr. HAZEN: I am not able to say offhand, but speaking from memory I do not think a single official in the insiae service of either the Marine and Fisheries Department or the Naval Service Department has been dismissed since the Government took office.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I understand that most of the changes have taken place in the outside service. Might I suggest to the minister that his department follow the good example of the other departments and furnish the House with that information.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not know why it has not been done. I shall certainly have the information brought down.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There is apparently an increase in the total.

Mr. HAZEN: For 1915-16 the total salaries for the two departments are $379,700, and last year $359,950. In the two there is an apparent increase of $20,000, but fully half of that is accounted for by the statutory increases, which in the case of most of the officials is $100 a year, although some of the lower ones get only $50. In addition to that, there is the salary of Mr. Duguid, the naval architect, who has been transferred from the outside to the inside service. That accounts for $4,000. Two stenographers at $500 a year brings that up to $5,000. In addition, there is an inspector in the radio-telegraph branch at $1,600, an engineer in connection with the fish hatchery work, $1,800, and a clerk in the accountant's branch of the Naval Department, $500. These three officers were in the outside service, and they were transferred to the inside service. These items amount to $9,000 or $10,000, and the balance of the other $10,000 is represented by the statutory increases in the salaries of the officers.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Would the minister furnish us with a complete list of the appointed and dismissed officials before he goes into the main estimates?

Mr. HAZEN: I will if it has not already been brought down.

Mr. SINCLAIR: A large number of officers were appointed in October as inspectors of pickled fish and fish canneries.

Mr. HAZEN: The administration of that Act was handed over to us by the Agriculture Department and we re-appointed the officers, but it entailed no extra salaries.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Would it not be better to appoint competent men and pay them?

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps it would.

Civil Government—Department of Naval Service, $220,600.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Many persons were rather surprised when the Fisheries Department was transferred to the Naval Service Department. In August last when war was declared everybody was looking with a good deal of interest to see what our Naval Department was doing to keep the flag flying and to protect the coasts of Canada, and to my astonishment on the 4th of August I received a very pretty little book, entitled "Fish and How to Cook It," issued by the Department of Naval Service. I have no criticism at all to make of this book; it is a beautiful little book with pictures of fish and containing little stories that are no doubt useful to the housewives of the country. For example, it tells us:

In buying fresh fish, see that the eyes are bright and prominent, and that the fish is firm and not flabby.

That is very good advice. On page 39 it refers to the way to cook a herring, saying:

Have a clean frying-pan quite hot and place herring in it with the skin next the pan and fry them for five minutes and then turn them and fry the other side.

I have no doubt that is all right; at all events it looks to me to be all right and I think it would work out all right in practice. Then at page 58 of this nice little book I find a dissertation on smelts. It says:

The only way to cook smelts is to fry them.

It must never be said again that the Naval Department has not made up its mind on some questions, for here is a question on which it makes the most positive statement that the only way to cook smelts is to fry them, although it does add that they are sometimes baked. Then it says, also dealing with smelts:

Open them at the gills and draw each smelt separately between your finger and thumb.

That seems to be very good advice also. There are quite number of interesting and useful details in this book, but what struck me was that at a time when the country was at war with one of the greatest naval powers in the world, the circulation of this book was the only thing I could find that was being done by our Naval Department. I wondered how the Naval Department had anything to do with cooking fish, a process which it would seem to me should appertain to the Fisheries Department. Can the minister explain why he transferred these matters from the Fisheries to the Naval Department?

Mr. HAZEN: It was done with the intention of equalizing the work of the departments. Ever since there has been a Naval Department it has had to do with the administration of a portion of the fisheries, such as the fishery protection service and other branches, and it was thought desirable to equalize the distribution of the work between the officials. The change was made in the public interest and it has worked well. The book referred to was published first of all in 1913 for distribution at the Toronto Exhibition where the Department for the first time made an exhibition of the fisheries wealth of Canada. There was an edition of 50,000 originally published and that soon ran out, and we are getting further demands from all parts of Canada. Our French citizens have been asking for copies of this book so that we have had a translation made for distribution amongst them. I am glad my hon. friend from Guysborough approves of the book, and coming as he does from a fishing county he no doubt recognizes the value of fish as a food.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Why not say that it is issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. HAZEN: Because it is not issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries; it is issued by the Department of Naval Affairs which has under its charge fishery matters. What difference does it make? I think it is better to speak the truth.

Mr. MACLEAN: It makes a great difference. It is throwing ridicule upon the Department of Naval Service to say that this cookery book is issued by that department.

Mr. HAZEN: No one has tried before to throw ridicule upon it.

Mr. MACLEAN: I think the minister should not bring out another edition of this book and credit it to the Department of Naval Service.

Mr. HAZEN: Then we would not be crediting it to the right department.

Mr. MACLEAN: The Government will forgive the minister if he is not quite frank in stating the name of the department issuing the book. I think he should state the fisheries branch.

Ocean and river service, $1,256,900.

Mr. HAZEN: I just want this item of the main estimates called. I am not calling it for the purpose of discussion.

Mr. McKENZIE: The hon. minister will remember the claims that are filed in his department with regard to the Behring sea fisheries. I do not know exactly which item they come under, and I presume they are not to this discussion; but I have received several inquiries from men who laid claims before Judge Audette when he was going throughout the country and they are naturally anxious to know what progress is being made in regard to the matter. Perhaps while the minister is dealing with the estimates, he will be able to tell us in what state those claims are at present.

Mr. HAZEN: There have been a great many of those claims, and Judge Audette has investigated nearly all of them. He is going to British Columbia in a very short time to dispose of the remaining ones in which he has not yet heard the evidence. That will wind up the hearing of the claims, and I understand he hopes to be able to make a report dealing with the whole question some time during the coming summer. The matter is getting to the point where it will be wound up very soon.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, the House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

Thursday, February 18, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 41, respecting The Athabaska Northern Railway Company—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 42, respecting The Canada Preferred Insurance Company—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 43, respecting The Huron and Erie Loan and Savings Company, and to change its name to "The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation"—Mr. Marshall.

Bill No. 44, respecting certain patents of The Lohmann Company—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 45, respecting The Vancouver Life Insurance Company—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 46, respecting The Western Dominion Railway Company—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the year ended March 31, 1914.—Sir Robert Borden.

Detailed statement of all bonds or securities registered in the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada since last return (21st January, 1914)—Hon. L. Coderre.

Annual return under Chapter 125, R.S.C., 1906, intituled An Act respecting Trade Unions—Hon. L. Coderre.

[Mr. McKenzie,]

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

FAIR WAGE CLAUSE IN GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Was there a fair wage clause attached to the contract for the erection of the Grenadier Guard armoury building at Montreal?
2. Was there any representation made to the Government in that respect? If so, by whom?
3. What action, if any, has the Government taken in that respect?
4. Was there a fair wage clause attached to any or all the contracts at Valcartier and Petawawa?
5. Has any representation been made to the Government? If so, what action was taken?
6. Has there been any fair wage clause attached to the contract for the supply of clothing, boots or other supplies given by the Government for the soldiers now gone or to go to Great Britain, or was there any representation made to that effect?
7. What is the intention of the Government in that respect?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. No.

2. (a) Yes. (b) To the Department of Labour by J. Poulin, Secretary of the Montreal Branch of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Association of North America.

3. The plans and specification for this drill hall were prepared by local architects, employed by the officers of the regiment. Tenders were invited by the local architects, and contracts were prepared by them, on their form, and on plans and specifications approved by the officers of the regiment, and then returned to the department, duly signed, in order to ensure the payment of the Government grant after an Order in Council authorizing the tenders had been passed.

4 and 5. A fair wage clause was attached to the contract governing the work on the rifle range and camp construction works at Valcartier camp. A fair wage clause was also attached to the contract governing the work of construction of buildings at Petawawa camp.

6 and 7. The printed forms of tender and of contracts for military stores, clothing and necessaries, used by the department, contain a fair wage clause; and much of the material purchased for the expeditionary forces was supplied under contracts containing this clause. In some cases, however, owing to the great pressure of work, and in order to save time, the printed forms were dispensed with. In such cases, the contract was not subject to the fair wage clause. These exceptions were the result of the unusual circumstances, and were not due to any change of policy.

WAR SUPPLIES—HAY.

*Mr. CARVELL:

1. With what persons, corporations or firms has the Government, or any member, official or department thereof, contracted for the compressing of hay for military purposes in the province of New Brunswick?
2. What amounts have been contracted for with each such person?
3. Where is the said hay to be delivered?
4. What prices are to be paid each such person, firm or corporation at such point or delivery?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am informed by the Department of Militia and Defence that the Government of Canada has not purchased any hay for military purposes in the province of New Brunswick. If the question refers to purchases by the British Government, the hon. gentleman might recall the question and put it in more distinct form.

LEASES OF OIL AND GAS RIGHTS.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Has the Government decided to extend the time within which the lessees of oil and gas rights would have to commence operations?
2. If so, for how long, and from what date does the extension apply?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Yes.
2. For one year from the 12th of November, 1914. An Order in Council was passed, and every publicity given to the extension through the press and otherwise.

OTTAWA AND HULL TOWN PLANNING COMMISSION.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. What are the names of the members of the Ottawa and Hull Town Planning Commission?
2. What are the names and addresses of the engineers and other persons employed by the commission, and what salary is paid to each?
3. What was the total amount expended by, or on account of, the said commission up to February 1, 1915?
4. Has the commission made a report to the Government?
5. If so, will the report be submitted to Parliament, and when?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

1. Sir Herbert S. Holt, chairman; Sir Alexander Lacoste, Frank Darling, R. Home Smith, Mayor of Ottawa, Mayor of Hull.

2. E. H. Bennett, consultant on city plan, professional fee, $15,000 (for complete report), of which $10,000 has been paid, together with all office and travelling expenses; E. L. Cousins, consulting engineer, salary, $2,000 per annum, together with travelling expenses; A. E. K. Bunnell, assistant engineer, Ottawa, salary, $200 per month; N. W. Birkett, acting secretary, Ottawa, salary, $75 per month. Previous to the first of the year the staff in the Ottawa office was larger and averaged about ten men.

3. Total appropriation, $63,000; total expenditure from December, 1913, to February 1, 1915, $57,039.44. Balance, $5,960.56.

4 and 5. The report of the commission is almost completed, and will, it is expected, be ready for presentation to Parliament before the close of the present session.

HYMAN BENJAMIN.

Mr. CARROLL:

Is Hyman Benjamin, of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, employed by the Militia Department or by any other department of the Government? If so, what are his duties, and what is his salary?

Mr. CODERRE: Not in the employ of the Government.

EDGAR KELLY.

Mr. CARROLL:

1. Is Edgar Kelly, of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, employed by the Militia Department, or by any other department of the Government?
2. If so, what are his duties, and what is his salary?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

LEVIS QURANTINE STATION.

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. What was the cost of labour on the buildings of the Lévis quarantine station up to January 1, 1915?
2. How many buildings were erected at said station, and what is the cost and the purpose of each such buildings?
3. Were tenders called and received for the construction of such buildings? If so, what is the name of each tenderer, and what was the amount stated in each tender?
4. In connection with the contracts of such building operations were any extras allowed? If so, for what amounts and to whom were such amounts paid?

Mr. BURRELL:

1. $9,283.83.

2. Three dwelling houses, for certain employees to live in; one office.

The three dwelling houses and one office were contracted for at a lump sum of $21,255, plus extras amounting to $1,605.90. The architect's charges amounted to $917.40.

18 cattle sheds. These sheds were composed of buildings at the old quarantine station, which were taken down and rebuilt at the new station by a staff of labourers working under the supervision of our superintendent at the Lévis Quarantine Station. They were built for the accommodation of import stock. The cost of taking down and rebuilding these cattle sheds amounted to $9,283.83.

3. Tenders were called for the construction of three dwelling houses and a small office at the new cattle quarantine at Lévis. Only one tender was received, and that from Messrs. Lagueux & Veilleux, of Lévis, P.Q., for the sum of $21,255.

4. The following amounts were allowed for extras: To Messrs. Lagueux & Veilleux, $1,480.90; to Beal Giguere (for wiring the office and one house with electricity) $125.

ALBERTA RELIEF DISTRIBUTION.

Mr. BUCHANAN:

1. Who were the parties appointed by the Government to direct the distribution of relief in the drouth affected districts of Alberta?

2. What was the remuneration paid in each case?

Mr. ROCHE:

Lethbridge Land District.

Name.	Address.	Salary per month.
Boyd, Hugh,	Lethbridge	$150
Stuart, G.,	Lethbridge	75
Ingram, C. E.,	Sundial	25
Patton, W. F.,	Coutts	25
Salvage, Wm.,	Grassy Lake	25
Peterson, Louis,	New Dayton	25
Burr, C.,	Kippenville	25
Ringwood, R. H.,	Foremost	25
Mantle, Isaac,	Milk River	25
Benningfield, A. E.,	Barhill	25
McLellan, J. J.,	Purple Springs	25
Karren, C. H.,	Magrath	25
Maxwell, W. J.,	Burdett	25
Thomas, F. S.,	Retlaw	25
Hunt, W. J.,	Iron Springs	25
Wride, Geo. T.,	Raymond	25
Russell, Wm.,	Taber	25
Couper, Geo. V.	Brunetta	25
Hilliard, R. H.,	Macleod	25

Medicine Hat Land District.

Brown, H. H.,	Medicine Hat	$150
Power, Geo.,	Medicine Hat	75
Brown, Geo. T.,	Medicine Hat	60
Card, Jas. S.,	Medicine Hat	60
Bentley, W. D.,	Cyan	50
Jackson, Annie,	Medicine Hat	50
McPherson, P. G.,	Medicine Hat	50
Drummond, A. J.,	Carlstadt	50
Cotton, W. P.,	Bow Island	40
McKetrick, C. W.,	Brooks	25
Bond, W. A.,	Jenner	25
Posey, A. L.,	Seven Persons	25
Reid, J. S.,	Suffield	25
Carson, J. H.,	Whitla	25
Parker, G. W.,	Winnifred	$25
Crews, F. J.,	Irvine	25
Cruickshanks, W. A.,	Foremost	25
Edwards, E. H.,	Faith	25
Rogers, M. J.,	Minda	25
Cussack, Jno.,	Empress	25
Purves, Geo.,	McNally's P.O.	25
Jonah, Gordon,	Youngstown	25
Cooper, W. W.,	Youngstown	25
Johnson, H. S.,	Bassano	25
Stone, E. L.,	Redcliff	25
Campbell, David,	Ryremore	25

FENIAN RAID BOUNTY ACT.

Mr. MACDONALD:

Is it the intention of the Government to introduce legislation at this session to extend the provisions of the Fenian Raid Bounty Act so as to provide for the payment of the bounty to the widows or personal representatives of those veterans who died previous to April, 1912?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The necessary announcement in regard to this inquiry will be given to the House in due course.

FIRST CANADIAN CONTINGENT— SUPPLY OF CARTRIDGES.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Were the members of the first expeditionary force from Canada supplied with cartridges?

2. If so, in what quantity and from what source?

3. Were said cartridges accepted or discarded by the British military authorities? If so, for what cause?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am informed by the Department of Militia and Defence that the answer to the first question is in the affirmative and that the answer to the third question is that no cartridges were discarded by the British military authorities. It is not desirable in the public interest that any answer should be given to the second question.

EMIGRATION FROM WESTERN PROVINCES.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. How many settlers from the western provinces left Canada for the United States during the year 1914?

2. What is the number in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia respectively?

Mr. ROCHE: No statistics are collected by the Canadian Government of persons leaving Canada for the United States.

CHAPLAIN TO OVERSEAS FORCES.

Mr. LAW:

1. Was Rev. E. E. Graham, of Arcadia, N.S., recommended for appointment as chaplain in the first or second Canadian expeditionary forces?

2. If so, by whom was he recommended?
3. Has he received his appointment, and when?
4. If not appointed, why not?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Yes.
2. By many estimable gentlemen.
3. He has not an appointment.
4. There are already upwards of five thousand applicants for positions of chaplains. There are twenty-two chaplains now in England, besides only eleven permitted to accompany the force to the continent. Permission has not yet been obtained for the sending of further chaplains.

TORONTO HOME GUARD.

Mr. LAW:

1. Were rifles supplied by the Government to the Home Guard of Toronto?
2. If so, under what terms and conditions?
3. Is it the intention to supply all home guards with rifles?

Major-General HUGHES:

1 and 2. No rifles were supplied.
3. No. Rifles firing service ammunition are reserved exclusively for militia.

SUSPENSION OF IMMIGRATION OFFICERS.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Were Chas. C. Genik, Robert Adamson, M. Mitchell, John Beckett, J. M. Boyd, and — Johnson dismissed from the staff of the Immigration Hall at Winnipeg in the fall of 1914?
2. How many years service had been performed by each of the men so dismissed?
3. What was the reason for the dismissal in each case and under whose direction was it made?
4. Was Baron Von Amorengen appointed to a position in the immigration offices at Winnipeg after the said dismissals?
5. What experience had he to qualify him for the position to which he was appointed?

Mr. ROCHE:

1, 2 and 3. On September 17, 1914, it appeared unnecessary, on account of decreased immigration, to have entire staff at Winnipeg under pay and consequently the following officers were suspended indefinitely:

Charles C. Genik, 17 years in service; Robert Adamson, 13 years in service, reinstated December, 1914; M. Mitchell, 5 years in service, given other work during December, 1914, reinstated January, 1915; John Beckett, 5 years in service, reinstated January, 1915; J. M. Boyd, 3 years in service.

With reference to — Johnson, if question refers to Arthur Johnson, this party is employed in Grain Exhibit Warehouse at Winnipeg under the direction of the Commissioner of Immigration whose accounts show that Johnston was not at work between September 13, 1914, and October 15, 1914.

4 and 5. The Commissioner of Immigration at Winnipeg reported the necessity of engaging some person of suitable experience and education to conduct foreign correspondence and mentioned Baron Amorengen as one who would no doubt fill the requirements of the position. Baron Amorengen was accordingly appointed and entered on his duties November 2, 1914.

FOREIGN TRAWLERS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Have the provisions of chapter 14 of the Act of 1913 been enforced as against foreign trawlers who make Canadian ports a base for their fishing operations?
2. If not, why not?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. Answered by No. 1.

VILLAGE OF RIBSTONE.

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. Has patent been issued for that portion of the northwest ¼ of section 17, township 43, range 2, west of the 4th meridian on which the village of Ribstone is situated?
2. If not, what is the cause of delay?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Yes, and was sent to the Registrar at Edmonton by whom it was returned, as the land was described therein as shown upon a certain plan of survey attached thereto instead of by metes and bounds. Such patent has in consequence been cancelled and steps are now being taken to issue a new patent in lieu thereof, describing the land by metes and bounds.
2. Answered by No. 1.

OIL LEASE TO GEORGE McRAE.

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. In whose name does oil lease comprising east half of sections 21, 28, 33, and west half of sections 22, 27, 34, township 73, range 24, west 4th stand?
2. What date was the claim filed on and by whom?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. In the name of George McRae.
2. Location was staked on the 22nd of November, 1913, by George McRae. Personal application for a lease was made to the Recorder at Edmonton on the 28th of November, 1913, by George McRae.

MAIL ROUTE FROM KILLAM, ALTA.

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. Has rural mail route No. 1, starting from Killam, Alberta, and running south and east, been put in operation?
2. If so, when? If not, why not?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. No.
2. Inquiry into the matter has just been completed and tenders for proposed route will be invited at once.

PRINCE OF WALES FUND.

*Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has a loan of five million dollars been made to the Dominion Government by the controllers of the Prince of Wales Fund in England?
2. If so, at what rate and on what terms?

Mr. W. T. WHITE: No direct loan has been made to the Government from the fund referred to. It is possible, although the Government has no information on the subject, that the fund may have purchased Dominion Treasury Bills of which £3,000,000 are outstanding maturing in June next or Dominion debenture stock.

WAR SUPPLIES—BOOTS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. How many ankle boots were purchased from each firm which supplied the first contingent?
2. How many canvas shoes?
3. How many slippers?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Ames, Holden, McCready, Ltd., 20,000; Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., 20,000; Louis Gauthier Co., Ltd., 10,000; Hartt Boot and Shoe Co., 6,000; John Macpherson Co., 6,000; Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., 2,000; Slater Shoe Co., 1,000.

2. Louis Gauthier Co., 17,000; Ames, Holden, McCready, Ltd., 16,500; Tetrault Shoe Co., 16,500.

3. Ames, Holden, McCready, Ltd., 600.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Have any purchases of boots been made from any of the following firms for the first expeditionary force, namely: Cook-Fitzgerald Company, London, Ont.; Western Shoe Company, Berlin, Ont.; Valentine & Martin Company, Waterloo, Ont., and Relindo Shoe Company, Toronto, Ont.?
2. What is the quantity of boots purchased from each of the above firms and the price per pair?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. No.
2. Answered by 1.

[Mr. Roche.]

IRON ORE IMPORTS.

Mr. CARROLL:

What was the number of tons of iron ore imported into Canada in the calendar years 1914 and 1913 from the colony of Newfoundland?

Mr. J. D. REID: 1913, 869,669 tons; 1914, 389,850 tons.

ANTHRACITE COAL IMPORTS.

Mr. CARROLL:

What was the total quantity of anthracite coal imported into Canada in the calendar years 1914 and 1913?

Mr. J. D. REID: 1913, 4,642,057 tons; 1914, 4,435,010 tons.

SQUID IMPORTS.

*Mr. KYTE:

1. What was the total value of squid imported into Canada during the calendar years ending December 31, 1912, 1913 and 1914, respectively?
2. What was the amount of duty collected on same in each of said years?
3. At what ports in Canada was said squid entered and what was the amount of duty collected at each of such ports?

Mr. J. D. REID: Squid is not separately enumerated in the customs classification of imports, and therefore no information as to value of imports, duty collected thereon or ports of entry is available from the statistical records.

PICTOU COUNTY POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. How many rural mail routes have been established in Pictou county, and what are the names of such routes?
2. How many post offices have been closed in said county, and what are the names of the same, since January 1, 1912?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. 19. Beaver Bank No. 1, Eureka No. 1, Glengarry Station No. 1, Glengarry Station No. 2, Hopewell No. 1, Hopewell No. 2, Meadowville Station No. 1, Merigonish No. 1, New Glasgow No. 1, New Glasgow No. 2, New Glasgow No. 3, Pictou No. 1, River John No. 1 (authorized but not yet in operation) River John No. 2, Salt Springs No. 1, Scotsburn Station No. 1, Stellarton No. 1, West Branch River John No. 1 (in part), West River Station No. 1.

2. Twenty-four post offices have been closed in Pictou county, N.S., from January 1, 1912, to February 15, 1915, viz: Abercrombie, Burnside, Churchville, Concord, Elgin, Granton, Heathbell, Iron Rock, Island East River, Lorne, Lorne Station, Lower Barneys River, Marshdale, Minto, Mount William, Murrayfield, Ponds, Rocklin, Royal Centre, St. Paul's, Scotsburn, Stillman, Union Centre, White Hill.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Who were the tenderers for the mail contract from Barneys River Station to Barneys River, Pictou county, for which tenders closed on January 8, and what was the amount of each tender?
2. Has the contract been awarded?
3. If so, to whom and at what price?

Mr. CASGRAIN: 1, 2 and 3. The contract has been awarded to the lowest tenderer. As the contract has not yet been executed, it is not considered advisable to furnish the names of the tenderers and amounts until this has been done. This information will be given later.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

Mr. MACDONALD:

Does the Government intend to introduce at this session any legislation to carry into effect the recommendation of Commission upon technical education?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The information in regard to this will be given in due course.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Mr. MACDONALD:

Does the Government intend to introduce this session the amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, asked for by the Deputation from the Trades and Labour Council in January last?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Any information necessary in regard to this matter will be given in due course.

THE VALE RAILWAY.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Has any agreement been arrived at between the Department of Railways and the Acadia Coal Company as to taking over the railway from New Glasgow to Thoburn, in the county of Pictou, known as the Vale Railway?
2. If so, what was the price agreed upon?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

Has the Minister of Public Works been able to reserve space in the new public buildings in Ottawa to enable the Royal Society of Canada to hold its meetings therein, and for its library?

Mr. ROGERS: No space has been reserved as yet, but the society is now using a portion of the library at the Royal Victoria Museum building for their library.

Icl. Ry.—ENLISTMENT OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. COPP:

1. Was the following notice posted in the General Offices and shops of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, county of Westmorland, on or about the day of the date of said notice:

"Canadian Government Railways.
Office of General Manager,
Moncton, N.B., Oct. 30, 1914,
Circular No. 16.

To Officers and Employees:

All officers and employees of these railways enrolled in the active militia, called out for active service, and all officers and employees who, with the consent of the management, enlist for Overseas service, shall receive their regular salary or wages while in the said service, subject to such regulations and conditions as to the payment of such salary or wages as may be prescribed by Order in Council or by the management, and all officers and all employees in active military service shall, upon their immediate return from such service, be reinstated in the same position as held by them at the time of their being called out for enlistment.

All officers and employees desiring to enlist for the Second Contingent should make application for leave and pay during such absence on forms to be obtained from the heads of departments and similar forms should be presented for all such officers and employees who are already in military service.

F. P. Gutelius,
General Manager.

2. At the time of the posting of said notice, were any officers or employees of the said Intercolonial Railway enrolled in the active militia called out for active service?
3. After the posting of said notice did any officers or employees of the said Intercolonial Railway enlist for Overseas service?
4. If so, have the said officers or employees who were so called out, or who so enlisted, been paid their regular salary or wages by the Railway Department?
5. If not, is it the intention of the Railway Department to pay such salaries and wages to such officers and employees who have been called out for active service or enlisted for Overseas service in defence of the Empire?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4. No.
5. Yes.

PICTOU FISHERIES GUARDIANS.

Mr. MACDONALD:

What are the names and Post Office addresses, with amount paid to each of the Fishery Guardians in the county of Pictou during the year 1914?

Mr. HAZEN:

Guardians 1914-15.

Name, Address
Wm. Conley, Alma	$20.00
	$20.00

J. R. McDonald, Pictou	$25.00
Alex. Fraser, Watervale	25.00
Roderick Martin, Westville	50.00
Angus D. McDonald, Lourdes	50.00
Jas. Cameron, River John	16.00
James McKenzie, Alma	20.00
J. T. McGregor, Eureka	20.00
Philip V. Long, Springville	20.00
J. D. McKinnon, Bailey's Brook	15.00
Alex. D. McDonald, Ponds	20.00
D. W. McGregor, Avondale	20.00
John Roberston, Marneys R.	20.00
J. W. Foote, French River	20.00
David Simpson, French River	20.00
W. A. Campbell, Sutherlands R.	40.00
Joseph Mason, E. Br. St. Marys	10.00
Daniel McLaren, Eden Lake P.O.	10.00

PICTOU FREIGHT HANDLING.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. How much has been paid each week since the beginning of the season at Pictou, N.S., for labour at the winter boats in connection with handling of freight?

2. How much has been paid each week at same service for the loading of coal?

3. Who is the foreman in charge of labour at Pictou on said service, and what is being paid to him?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. For week ending—

December	26	$215 15
January	2	393 00
"	9	198 68
"	18	386 85
"	23	270 74
"	30	226 49
February	6	210 14
"	13	535 60

2. For week ending—

December	26	29 25
January	2	195 30
"	9	195 30
"	18	116 78
"	23	120 03
"	30	107 74
February	6	223 58
"	13	100 69

3. The work is done under contract with David A. Morrison, who paid 50 cents per ton for discharging and loading freight on Minto, and 60 cents per ton for loading coal on same steamer; and 50 cents per ton for discharging and loading freight on Stanley and 75 cents per ton for loading coal on same boat.

TRAWLERS AND FISHING BOUNTY.

Mr. A. W. CHISHOLM:

1. Are fishermen engaged in the prosecution of their industry in steam or beam trawlers entitled to the fishing bounty in Canada?

2. Are steam or beam trawlers paid a fishing bounty?

3. Did beam or steam trawlers, or fishermen engaged on such vessels, ever receive fishing bounty in Canada? If so, in what years?

4. If trawlers are no longer entitled to fishing bounty, when was the bounty withdrawn by this Government?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. No.

2. No.

3. Yes; in 1909.

4. No bounty has been paid to such trawlers by the present Government.

HORSES FOR FIRST CONTINGENT.

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. How many horses purchased for the first contingent were sold at Quebec before the departure of the first contingent?

2. What was the reason of the sale of the said horses?

3. What amount was realized upon the same?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. None.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

ARTICLES EXEMPT FROM INCREASED DUTIES.

Mr. McCRANEY:

What are the articles referred to in the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance as exempt from increased duties, as follows:

(1) Goods enumerated in the following tariff items in schedule A: 1, 2, 3, 19, 20, 20a,, 21, 22, 23, 28a, 29a, 29b, 40, 55, 60, 61, 68, 77a, 101a, 118a, 129, 132, 134, 135, 142, 143, 144, 145, 153, 164, 169, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 178a, 180a, 184, 196, 201, 209b, 329, 329a, 348a, 352a, 359, 360, 373, 441, 443, 445, 445a, 446a, 464, 466, 466a, 470, 483, 544, 544a, 576, 595, 596, 676, 682, 688, 689, 689a, 690, 690a, 691, 692, 692a, 693, 694, 695a, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, and 709.

Explanatory.

List of articles exempt from the added percentage duties (5 p.c. ad valorem, preferential, or 7½ p.c. ad valorem, intermediate and general) provided for in the Customs Tariff Resolution introduced in Parliament 11th February, 1915.

Reference.	Articles Exempt From Added Percentage.
Section 8.	Products of Newfoundland fisheries.
9.	Products of Canadian fisheries arriving from sea.
	(b) Goods specified in schedule C, French Convention Act, viz.:
Item.
86 ex.	Vegetables, except tomatoes, including baked beans in cans or other air tight packages, n.o.p.
120 ex.	Anchovies, sardines, sprats, and other fish, packed in oil or otherwise, in tin boxes, weighing over eight ounces and not over twelve ounces each.
163 ex.	Wines of the fresh grape of all kinds, not sparkling, imported in barrels or in bottles.
165 ex.	Champagne and all other sparkling wines in bottles.

169 ex. Novels, etc., unbound or paper bound, or in sheets, in the French language, not including Christmas annuals or juvenile or toy books.

171 ex. Books, printed, periodicals or pamphlets, in the French language, n.o.p., not including blank account books, copy books, or books to be written or drawn upon.

220 ex. All medicinal, chemical and pharmaceutical preparations, compounded or more than one substance, including patent and proprietary preparations, tinctures, pills, powders, troches, lozenges, syrups, cordials, bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniments, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters, essences, and oils, n.o.p.

Ex. (b) All other than dry and not containing alcohol.

Provided that drugs, pill mass and preparations, not including pills or medicinal plasters, recognized by the British or United States Pharmacopœia, or the French Codex as officinal, shall not be held to be covered by this item.

262 Olive oil, n.o.p.

575 ex. Embroideries, n.o.p.; lace, n.o.p.; collars or collarettes in lace and all manufactures of lace; nettings of cotton, linen, silk, or other material, n.o.p.

581 ex. Velvets or pure silk and silk fabrics.

582 Ribbons of all kinds, and materials.

583 Manufactures of silk or of which silk is the component part of chief value, n.o.p.

445 Goods imported to be used in the manufacture of mowing machines, harvesters, self-binding or without binders, binding attachments, reapers, and complete parts thereof, under regulations by the Minister of Customs.

544 a. Goods imported to be used in the manufacture of binder twine for harvest binders, under regulations by the Minister of Customs.

682 Articles imported to be used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff item 682 in Schedule A, under regulations by the Minister of Customs.

586 ex, Anthracite coal and anthracite coal dust.

206 ex. Bacteriological products or serum for subcutaneous injection.

206 ex. Vaccine and ivory vaccine points.

564, 620 and 506 ex. Pressed felt, elastic webbing and hollow blocks of wood imported to be used in the manufacture of artificial limbs.

725 Steel imported to be used in manufacturing rough unfinished parts of rifles, when such parts are to be used in rifles to be made for the Government of Canada.

765 Fabrics of which silk is the component material of chief value imported to be used in the manufacture of neckties.

1 Horses, cattle, sheep, goats, asses, swine, and dogs, for the improvement of stock.

2 Domestic fowls, pure bred, for the improvement of stock, homing or messenger pigeons, and pheasants and quails.

3 Bees.

19 Cocoa shells and nibs.

20 Cocoa paste or 'liquor' and chocolate paste or 'liquor,' not sweetened, in blocks or cakes.

20a. Butter produced from the cocoa bean.

21 Cocoa paste or 'liquor' and chocolate paste or 'liquor,' sweetened, in blocks or cakes not less than two pounds in weight.

22. Preparations of cocoa or chocolate in powder form.

23. Preparations of cocoa or chocolate, n.o.p., and confectionery coated with or containing chocolate.

28a. Tea imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea purchased in bond in the United Kingdom.

29a. Tea, n.o.p.

39b. Arrowroot.

40. Salt for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries.

55. Indian corn, not for purposes of distillation.

60. Wheat.

61. Wheat flour.

66. Biscuits sweetened.

77a. Cocoa beans, not roasted, crushed or ground.

101a. Limes.

118a. Squid.

129. Oysters, seed and breeding, imported for the purpose of being planted in Canadian waters.

132. Live fish and fish eggs, for propagating purposes.

134. All sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard in colours, and all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards.

135. Sugar, n.o.p., not above No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, sugar drainings or pumpings, etc., and molasses testing over 56 degrees by the polariscope.

142. Tobacco, unmanufactured, for excise purposes.

143. Cigars and cigarettes.

144. Cut tobacco.

145. Manufactured tobacco, n.o.p., and snuff.

153. Lime juice, raw and concentrated, not refined.

164. Wine of all kinds, except sparkling wines, containing not more than 40 per cent of proof spirit, when the produce of any British colony or territory in the South African Customs Union Convention.

169. Novels, etc., unbound or paper bound, or in sheets, not including Christmas annuals, or juvenile or toy books.

171. Books, printed, periodicals and pamphlets, or parts thereof, n.o.p., not including blank account books, copy books, or books to be written or drawn upon.

172. Books on the application of science to industries of all kinds; books printed in any language other than the English and French languages, etc., and bibles, prayer books, psalm and hymn books, religious tracts, and Sunday school lesson pictures.

173. Books, embossed, and grooved cards for the blind; and books for the instruction of the deaf, dumb and blind; maps and charts for schools for the blind.

174. Books printed by any government or by any association for the promotion of science or letters, and official annual reports of religious or benevolent associations, etc.

175. Text books, etc., which are on the curriculum of any university, etc., in Canada; and books specially imported for the use of incorporated mechanics' institutes, public libraries, etc.

176. Books, bound or unbound, printed and manufactured more than twelve years.

178a. Goods specified in item 178, imported by mail, and duty-paid by customs revenue stamps.

180a. Photographs sent to the press for use only as news pictures.

184. Newspapers, magazines and literary papers, unbound; fashion plates imported with magazines or periodical trade journals.

196. Printing paper, in sheets and rolls valued at not more than 2¼ cents per pound.

201. Matrix paper, not being tissue paper, adapted for use in printing.

209b. Nicotine sulphate.

329. Ores of metals, n.o.p.

329a. Iron ore.

348a. Works of art in bronze, cast from models made in Canada and designed by sculptors domiciled therein.

352a. Bells when imported for use of churches only.

359. Gold and silver, in ingots, etc., unmanufactured; gold and silver sweepings; and bullion fringe or gold fringe.

360. British and Canadian coin and foreign gold coin.

369. Chronometers and compasses for ships.

373. Scrap iron and scrap steel, old and fit only to be remanufactured, recovered from vessels wrecked in Canadian waters.

441. Typecasting and typesetting machines, etc.

443. Newspaper printing presses, etc.

445. Mowing machines, harvesters, binding attachments, reapers, etc.

445a. Malleable iron castings when imported by manufacturers of mowing machines, harvesters, etc.

446a. Traction ditching machines adapted for tile drainage on farms, etc.

464. Tools and machinery, and materials or parts in the rough, unfinished, etc., for the manufacture of rifles for the Government of Canada.

466 Surgical and dental instruments of metal, etc.

466a. Glassware and other scientific apparatus for laboratory work in public hospitals, etc.

470. Goods as specified for the manufacture or equipment of ships or vessels.

483. Sterotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of newspaper columns in any language other than French and English ,and of books, and bases and matrices, and copper shells for the same.

544. Binder twine and twine for harvest binders.

544a. Articles which enter into the cost of the manufacture of binder twine or twine for harvest binders.

576. Silk, raw or as reeled from the cocoon, not being doubled, twisted or advanced in manufacture in any way; silk cocoons and silk waste.

595. Locomotives and railway passenger, baggage and freight cars, property of railway companies in U. S. crossing the frontier, etc.

596. Materials to be used in Canada for construction of bridges and tunnels crossing the boundary between the United States and Canada, etc.

676. Metallic tubes, etc., for manufacture of vaccine points.

682. Fish hooks for deep sea or lake fishing, and all other articles enumerated in this item.

688. Artificial limbs and parts thereof, artificial teeth not mounted.

689. Life boats and life saving apparatus specially imported by societies to encourage the saving of human life.

689a. Miners rescue appliances, and automatic resuscitation apparatus.

690. Clothing and books, donations of, for charitable purposes, and photographs, not exceeding three sent by friends and not for sale.

690a. Casual donations from abroad sent by friends, and not being advertising matter, tobacco, articles containing spirits or merchandise for sale—when duty does not exceed fifty cents in any one case.

691. Communion sets of metal, glass or wood.

692. Coins, cabinets of; collections of medals and collections of postage stamps; medals of gold, silver or copper and other metallic articles bestowed as trophies or received as prizes, etc.

692a. Articles presented from abroad in recognition of saving of human life.

693. Collections of antiquities, for public museums, public libraries, etc.

694. Models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts.

695a. Paintings in oil or water colour and pastels, valued at not less than twenty dollars each; paintings and sculptures by artists domiciled in Canada, but residing temporarily abroad for purposes of study.

696. Philosophic and scientific apparatus, utensils, instruments, and preparations, including boxes and bottles containing the same: maps, photographic reproductions, casts as models, etchings, and lithographic prints or charts—when imported under conditions of tariff item 696.

697. Globes, geographical, topographical and astronomical.

698. Typewriters, type, tablets with movable figures, and musical instruments, for schools for the blind.

699. Botannical and entomological specimens and all other articles in this item.

700. Animals and articles brought into Canada, for exhibition or competition for prizes.

701. Menageries, horses, cattle, carriages, and harness of.

702. Carriages for travellers and carriages laden with merchandise.

703. Travellers' baggage.

704. Apparel, wearing and other personal and household effects, not merchandise, of British subjects dying abroad, but domiciled in Canada; books, pictures, family plate of furniture, personal effects and heirlooms left by request.

705. Settlers' effects as per item 705.
706. Articles for the personal of official use of Consuls General, etc.
707 Articles for the use of the Governor General.
708. Arms, etc., property of the Imperial Government as per item 708.
709. Articles growth, produce or manufacture of Canada, returned—under conditions in item 709.

PHILIPSBURG-ST. ARMAND MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. KAY:

1. Why was Willie Rivers dismissed as courier between Philipsburg and St. Armand Station, Quebec, and how long a notice given?
2. Who asked for his dismissal?
3. Who recommended the appointment of the present courier?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Willie Rivers has not been an employee of the Post Office Department in connection with the mail service between Philipsburg and St. Armand Station. In view of this fact, Nos. 2 and 3 cannot be answered.

HORSES FOR CANADIAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

Mr. J. A. ROBB (Huntingdon): I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to a condition that may lead to a scandal almost equal to the boot incident that has caused so much injury to Canadian industries. In the Montreal Gazette of February 18, reference is made to the recruiting camp at Sherbrooke, and I wish to draw the attention of the minister to this statement in particular:

> A number of horses have also arrived at Sherbrooke for the regiment being sent on from Ontario by the Remount Commission, under Sir Adam Beck. The Ontario horses have not all shown themselves suitable for cavalry work and it is not improbable that some changes will be made.

In the Toronto Globe of February 17, this statement is made in regard to the Salisbury camp:

> They brought two or three hundred Clydesdales down from Scotland, as our general purpose horses were too light to haul the heavy transport wagons.

Our friends from Ontario may sit quiet under this charge, but we from the province of Quebec will not sit dumb while an incompetent purchasing commission is buying all the old hacks throughout the country and sending them out as Canadian-bred horses.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I beg to remind the hon. member that it is not in order at this stage to read an article from a newspaper and found an argument upon it. It would be in order to ask a question or to deny the correctness of a statement, but not to commence a discussion.

Mr. ROBB: I have made the statement I wish to make, and I want to know from the hon. minister if this remount commission is to be continued in office?

Major-General HUGHES: There is absolutely no foundation in fact in the statement, and the remount commission remains.

THIRTIETH OVERSEAS BATTALION.

MAJOR-GENERAL HUGHES: I wish to announce the fact that the Thirtieth Overseas Battalion from Victoria, B.C., will pass through this city to-morrow en route to Halifax, to join the other corps of the brigade in preliminary training for overseas work during next month. The regiment will be paraded for review in front of the parliamentary buildings to-morrow at 10.30 a.m. I am requested to invite all the members of Parliament, the press and friends generally of the service to come and witness the review. The regiment is a very fine one, and I am sure the soldiers will be delighted to see the members and the members will be delighted to see the soldiers.

MEDICAL EXAMINER J. C. MORRISON.

Mr. CARROLL: Has Dr. J. C. Morrison, of Waterford, been dismissed as medical examiner at that recruiting station?

MAJOR-GENERAL HUGHES: If my hon. friend will send in his question in proper form, I will attend to it. I endeavour to keep in my head everything that comes under my notice, but it is rather difficult to do so.

INLAND NAVIGATION RATES BILL.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) moved the second reading of Bill No. 3, to amend the Railway Act. He said: This Bill will, I believe, be of great benefit to producers and shippers in western and eastern Canada. It calls for the placing of vessels on our inland waters under the control of the Railway Commission. The transportation problem is one of the most important with which Canada has to deal. We have a vast territory and a small population. Our lines of communication in many instances have been built in advance of the needs of the districts through which they run. With the most wonderful water transportation facilities in the world and with a people who are ready and willing to develop these advantages, we have the duty imposed upon us of assisting this development.

In Europe artificial and natural waterways are developed to an enormous extent. The great bulk of the grain and grain products are never carried by rail. The port which has behind it a navigable stream or canal has a wonderful advantage over its competitor that depends entirely upon railway transportation. When the Welland canal is completed the Canadian Government will have expended since Confederation $350,000,000 in developing our waterways. This is an enormous sum of money, and it is the duty of Parliament to surround the people who have been so generous, with legislation that will mean every safeguard in the transportation of our products both east and west. This expenditure is increasing year by year, and the charges of maintenance and operation are being borne by the people. We have great fleets of dredges, ice breakers, and barges, that are constantly assisting navigation, and practically all these advantages are free to the vessel-owners, who are not compelled to make any sacrifices for them. Notwithstanding this enormous outlay freight rates keep steadily increasing.

A commission, appointed by the Saskatchewan Government two years ago for the purpose of investigating the freight rates from the producers in Saskatchewan to the Liverpool markets, made some startling statements. One statement was that the lake-carriers' charges have doubled since 1909. If hon. members will look at the report placed in their hands by the Joint Commission appointed by the Senate and the House of Commons for the purpose of investigating the consolidation of the Railway Act, they will find on the last page of it a statement made by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals which practically supports the statement made by the Saskatchewan Commission. If this statement is correct, and I have no reason to doubt that it is correct, then, it is the duty of this Parliament to surround the producers in western Canada with such legislation that they may receive a reasonable service for a reasonable rate.

The Liverpool market, we know, regulates the price of grain products for the whole world. Every dollar that we add to the cost of transportation of our products to that market means that the producer in Canada receives one dollar less. Another statement made by the commission appointed by the Saskatchewan government was that our ocean freight rates have increased since 1909 to an enormous extent. They say that, while in 1909 the cost of transporting a thousand bushels of grain from the port of Montreal to Liverpool was only $40, the present charge for that service is no less than $75. They say that the grain of Canada costs more per ton delivered to the Liverpool market than does the grain of any other country in the world. If that be true, the sooner we adopt the Bill which I have presented to the House and allow the Railway Commission to deal with this question the better it will be for the producers of Canada. Is it possible that grain can be collected at the ports of the Argentine Republic with its territory very similar to our own, and transported a distance of about 5,000 miles across the ocean, practically double the distance that our grain has to be transported, and delivered in Liverpool at a less cost than we have to pay with all our splendid facilities? Is it possible that grain can be carried from Australia and New Zealand, 12,000 miles from Liverpool, at a less cost than from Canada?

The governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have built hundreds of elevators in these western provinces. This Government, also, has built large elevators in Saskatoon and Moosejaw, and others are in course of construction. The Railway Commission has control of freight rates from the time the grain leaves the producer until it arrives at Port Arthur or Fort William. But there it is handed over to the vessel owner who is free to make any charge he pleases, to enter into any arrangement he wishes. We have appointed a Grain Commission to assist the producers in the West to secure a fair and adequate return for their efforts. But after we have expended the enormous sums I have already stated on the maintenance and improvements of our inland waterways, the vesselmen can take that grain, carry it where they please, and charge what they please without restriction.

The building of elevators at our ports has materially assisted in the handling of grain. Montreal has elevators with capacity of about nine million bushels. And just a word with regard to the port of Montreal, because men who are interested in the carrying of grain on our inland waters have placed some definite statements on that subject before the committee that had this Bill under consideration. They stated that last season vessels had to remain in the port of Montreal, ten, fifteen and even twenty days before they could be unloaded. They said that the elevators of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners at the port of Montreal in 1907 only handled a little over a million bushels of grain, while owing to their greatly increased elevator capacity they were able last year to handle sixty-two million bushels. That is an enormous increase. But the president of the Marine Association and others declare that the port of Montreal is not yet capable of taking care of the grain that comes to that port. If that be the case, it is up to this Parliament, it is up to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, to put forth every effort to remedy that state of affairs. Those of you who will read the book that has been placed in your hands by the Gazette Publishing Company of Montreal during the last few weeks, a book for which that concern deserves a great deal of credit, will learn that vessels containing 1,500,000 bushels of grain after reaching the port of Montreal could not be accommodated there, and were compelled to return to Buffalo to unload their grain rather than lose the twenty days or more of waiting in Montreal harbour during the two months when there was a blockade in that port. This is another reason why the Railway Commissioners should have control over our shipping rates. They should be able to force the speculators who hold up grain in the port of Montreal to send that grain forward; and should be able also to provide sufficient elevator capacity for the handling of our products from the West.

It is estimated that when the Welland canal is completed we shall save one cent a bushel in cost of transportation. But if this Parliament will not surround the producer with such legislative protection as I am proposing, the whole of that saving will go, not to the producers but to the transportation interests.

One great difficulty is that grain is held in Montreal by speculators, and the Harbour Commissioners seem to be powerless to force these men to export it.

The port of Buffalo handles about 150,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum. The bulk of that wheat is not exported, but is for consumption in the United States.

The carrying trade of this country, especially water transportation, is capable of wonderful development; Canada is only at the beginning of the development of her industries. It has been stated that only two per cent of the arable land in Alberta is under cultivation, and it has also been stated by members of this House that only ten per cent of the arable land in Saskatchewan is under cultivation. I remember listening to a speech made by a former minister of the province of Manitoba, during the course of which he said that the province of Manitoba—then without its increased area—was capable of producing at least 500,000,000 bushels of wheat in addition to other grains. I have no reason to doubt that assertion. In the face of these facts, is it not wise that we should enact such legislation as I am proposing, in order that we may assist the western producer as much as possible?

I know that the Government have received many urgent requests to defeat this legislation. I understand that this very day we have men here representing the shipping interests who assert that every member of the Joint Commission of the House of Commons and the Senate are opposed to this Bill. I wish to say to these visiting gentlemen that that assertion is untrue. I feel confident that not half a dozen members of the committee will oppose this legislation, and I feel sure that it is not too much for the producers to ask that their interests be protected, and that whatever is done by the vessel men be done in the interests of the public.

There are 8,500 vessels registered in Canada, and the Department of Marine and Fisheries report that 42,500 men and boys are working on those vessels. The Department of Railways and Canals reports that during 1913 the total tonnage passing through American and Canadian canals was 79,000,000 tons, and that 55 per cent of that was carried through Canadian canals. The people of Canada furnish every means to assist transportation on our inland waters, and they protect the marine interests against foreign shipping. Our coast regulations give Canadian vessels advantage over vessels of other countries; in other words, we retain for our vessel owners the exclusive right to enjoy the coasting privileges. All vessels owned, constructed or operated in connection with the railway system in Canada are compelled to file their tolls, rates and tariff arrangements with the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the Railway Commission have absolute control over those arrangements. Only a small proportion of the vessels on our inland waters come under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board. If the ships carrying freight on our inland waters and connected with our railways are compelled to come under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, what reason can be given why other vessels should not be willing to come under that same jurisdiction? The railway men have not complained because they have been placed under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and there is no reason why the vessel men should not be fairly treated by the Board if they were placed under their control.

This Bill simply asks that all other vessels plying between any port or place in Canada to other ports in Canada and handling produce of any kind in Canada shall be considered common carriers and come under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. The vessel men protest strongly against being placed under the jurisdiction of the board, and assert that it will result in increased freight rates and lack of competition. Increased freight rates? Is it possible that these men object to increased freight rates. Increased freight rates means increased profits for these men. I feel that I am justified in making the assertion that there is mighty little competition on our inland waters to-day. I want to make use of a statement made before the joint committee by Mr. Henderson, Chairman of the Marine Association, in which he said that 90 per cent of the vessels on our inland waters are under the control of the Marine Association. He also said that with regard to rates, charges tolls and agreements they had no combination. But it seems very strange that these men are ready and willing to organize and band themselves together, unless it be for their own mutual benefit.

Remember that we must take into consideration not only the large shippers of grain and products from western Canada, but the small manufacturer; the small producer from eastern Canada who is anxious to ship his goods to the West to compete with similar products coming in from the united States. These men are seriously handicapped because of the restrictions surrounding them and forced upon them by the vessel owners. I am informed that unless some definite action is taken by this Government during the present session, increased freight rates will be charged to the shippers both in the East and in the West. I hope that the Government will see to it, therefore, that this Bill becomes law and that a reasonable service and reasonable rates are granted to shippers, both east and west. It cannot with justice be said that the Railway Commission has not the right to control in this matter, and that the Marine and Fisheries Department of Canada is likely to interfere. I have made a thorough investigation into this phase of the matter, and I have the most definite assurance from the best legal advisers—men who are thoroughly posted in regard to the marine laws of Canada—that nothing can interfere with this legislation if it once becomes law. I, therefore, respectfully urge the Government to place this legislation on the statute book at the earliest possible moment giving to the Railway Commission control of all freight charges, and tariff agreements made by vessel men. By doing this they will enable manufacturers and producers to do business on a basis of reasonable service. They will make the boat owners liable for any failure in their duty. The Board will fix penalties, and provide for fair and equitable treatment of all interests using our navigable waters. Vessel men giving service need not fear this legislation; those who do not give such service should be compelled to do so.

Mr. HEPBURN: If an individual is operating small steamers, say in the bay of Quinte, and giving perhaps a tri-weekly service, and you endeavour to force him to give a weekly service and he says; rather than do that I shall withdraw my steamers; what would you do?

Mr. ARMSTRONG: It is not my intention to attempt to answer questions such as that because it is a matter which, if this Bill becomes law, would come before the Railway Commission and there is no reason to doubt that the Railway Commission would deal fairly and reasonably with any proposition placed before them. The Railway Commission have shown that they will be most reasonable and fair towards the transportation companies and also towards the people who are using transportation facilities. I am satisfied that the Railway Commission are a reasonable body of men who will do justice to any matter that comes under their jurisdiction.

Mr. CARROLL: This applies only to steamers carrying some passengers?

Mr. ARMSTRONG: To both freight and passenger boats.

Mr. CARROLL: Would a steamship or vessel carrying only freight come within the meaning of this amendment?

Mr. ARMSTRONG: Most assuredly. There is another clause dealing with certain privileges granted by railway companies to shippers and manufacturers in the eastern provinces especially. I have received petitions and letters from numerous shippers and manufacturers who feel that they are seriously handicapped by the privileges which are being granted to other shippers and manufacturers in the eastern provinces, and of which they cannot take advantage. For instance, before the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, it was shown that the Board of Trade of Toronto had formulated several objections to the privileges granted by railway companies to millers and speculators whereby large quantities of grain are stored in cars at Port Arthur or Fort William or in Winnipeg, the rolling stock which should be placed at the disposal of the producers in our western country being thereby tied up and the advantage which should accrue to the producers 4 p.m. through the handling of their grain seriously lessened. I might also refer to the privileges granted to real estate speculators, particularly in western towns, who are also interested in railway companies who have been able to induce the railways to pass by communities which are thickly settled and to establish townsites at points where there is no reason or justification for their establishment. The Board of Railway Commissioners have distinctly stated time and again that they have no control over the privileges granted by the railway corporations in this respect. This clause merely provides that all these privileges shall come under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board. Questions such as cartage should also come under their jurisdiction. I am satisfied that the matters which I have laid before the House call for a remedy, and I believe that the remedy is to be found in the Bill that I am now proposing. There is not a farmers' organization in western Canada that will not support this Bill nor is there a fruit or vegetable growers' association in eastern Canada that will not be enthusiastically for it. Boards of trade, shippers and manufacturers in different parts of our country have been calling for just such legislation as this, and I am confident that it is the duty of the Government to place it on the statute book at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia): I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought forward this Bill. Most members will agree that it is a very necessary one. The principle was discussed and received very general acceptance in this House a year ago. There is absolutely no reason why the steamship companies should not come under the Board of Railway Commissioners. No decision of the Railway Board has ever been challenged as unfair. The railway companies themselves are satisfied with the board. I was told by one of the biggest railway men in Canada about two years ago that if they had a choice they would not go back to the position in which they were before, for one of the very reasons that my hon. friend is trying to remedy this Bill of his, that is that they much prefer the decision of the Railway Commission that enables them to do away with the granting of any privilege to any particular class of shipper or class of people, While at this moment the rates on western grain may not appear so very burdensome simply because the grain is double the price it was a year ago, yet the grain was practically all out of the hands of the farmers before the rise in price came about.

Things had reached such a point a year ago that there was no profit or mighty little, for the farmer who produced the grain. The cost of taking a bushel of wheat from Winnipeg to Liverpool was from 6 to 8 cents higher than for two years previously. This was all brought about by mergers and amalgamations among the lake and ocean transportation companies, and the farmer had to pay every cent of the increase. The Bill my hon. friend has introduced will remedy this to a very large extent. The steamship companies cannot suffer; for no one can make me believe that the Railway Commission is not absolutely fair, or that it will deal unfairly with railroads, steamship companies or the public. We can safely leave the matter to them. I trust the Minister of Railways will accept this Bill and see that it becomes law this session.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN (Regina): I desire to make a few remarks in regard to this Bill, and to say at the outset that I approve of the principle of bringing navigation companies on the lakes, and their tolls, under the control of the Railway Commission just as railway rates are under its control. I have not been able to gather from my hon. friend's remarks the relative charges of the railroads, the lake and the steamship companies. Personally I do not know exactly how much the lake companies charge for carrying a bushel of wheat from Fort William to Montreal, for instance, or how much the ocean companies charge for carrying it from Montreal to Liverpool. If we had that information we should be in a better position to know exactly where the high rates come in. In western Canada we have been inclined to blame the railroads more than the steamship companies, and we have had the idea that ocean rates are perhaps higher than they should be; but as a rule, I have not heard much criticism in western Canada of the companies operating on the Great Lakes. My hon. friend spoke about competition, and would have us believe that there is no competition on the Great Lakes; but I have always understood, although I may be wrong, that there was competition between American companies and American ports and Canadian companies and Canadian ports. It is a matter of great importance that our tolls on the Great Lakes should not be too high, and I am sure that if the navigation companies are put under the Railway Commission they will be fairly dealt with. If the companies are not charging too much I cannot see why they should not at once agree to come under the commission, but if they are charging too much I can see why they would be afraid to come under its jurisdiction. It would be a most fortunate thing for the people of Canada to know that they were being charged fair rates by the navigation companies. It has always seemed to me that any great corporation using the public utilities whether canals, lakes, or the right of way, should be under the control of the Parliament of Canada through a commission of some sort. That is only due to the people of this country, who are paying for these great public utilities. It is important that our rates on the lakes should be low, not only for the purpose of building up our Great Lake ports but, as my hon. friend from Lambton has said, for the benefit of all the producers in this country. For these reasons I think every member in this House might well give his support to this Bill.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto): I was present before the committee, and had the opportunity of hearing some of the vesselmen who would be affected, presenting their views to the committee. I have also listened with some attention to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and to the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill. It seems only fair to the House, to the country, and to the enormous interests which would be affected, that I should give, in the briefest possible fashion, the reason why the vesselmen believe it is not in the interests of the Canadian people that this particular legislation should pass. And as I understand it manufacturers and shippers take practically this view. I have not the evidence before me, but I understand that is the case, and it is very easily explained.

Obviously the rates of the shipping companies on the Great Lakes have to be lower than railroad rates, because if they were not, the shipping companies would not get the business. They must beat the railroad rates, whether American or Canadian. Consequently, although the Railway Commission may fix reasonable railway rates in view of water and other competition, shipping companies have still to get under those rates. That is the first point. Secondly, the competition on the Great Lakes is not merely among Canadian shipping companies themselves but also with American shipping companies via Buffalo and New York. Consequently, to get grain from the head of the lakes to Montreal and thence to Liverpool, the rate on Canadian vessels has to be lower than on American vessels, or otherwise the grain would go via Duluth, Buffalo, and New York. Every one knows that the Buffalo and New York route, so far as the ocean end of it is concerned, has a great advantage over the Canadian route. New York is on what is called the Atlantic triangle. Vessels going from London to the Argentine come up the coast to New York, and then cross to London. The ocean rate is the one that very largely affects the situation, and over that rate, unfortunately, we have no control. From day to day and hour to hour during the grain season in this country, the competition is against New York and the New York route, and if by any chance the rates happen to be reasonably high, you can rest assured that the Atlantic combine will take over all there is from Canada via New York; and we cannot touch them.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: We do not permit that.

Mr. BRISTOL: This Bill does not touch them in any way. What the Canadian vessel owners say is: We want to get freight away from Buffalo and New York and into Canadian ships, Canadian channels, and Canadian ports. The only way to do that is from day to day and hour to hour to give a better rate, and we have done it this season. We have taken over ten millions of grain this season out of Chicago via Montreal, and it is the first time it has ever happened. If their view is correct, how would it be possible for the vessel owners of this country to give a better rate practically from day to day and hour to hour on grain, which is the most important product shipped out of this country, and on which every one wants to see the best possible rate given to the Canadian farmer? We must make transportation as cheap as we can in this country. Farming is one of the most vital industries of Canada; more important than transportation, and unless we can give cheap rates the farming industry will not advance. The vessel people say: You will hinder us from doing the very thing you want to see brought about, because we have to be in a position to beat the Buffalo and New York route.

What has happened this year? Atlantic rates are higher to-day than they have ever been and the reasons for that are obvious. The rates on the Great Lakes have been lower than they have been for years. We have had the spectacle of grain being carried from Port Arthur to Montreal for three and a half cents a bushel as against five, six and seven cents a bushel in other years. If there have been any combinations on the Great Lakes that have affected the matter they have affected it very beneficially for the Canadian farmer because if the Canadian farmer had been getting anything like the same rates from the head of the lakes to the shipping point in the Canadian west or from Montreal to Liverpool he would have had a lower rate than that in force in any other country in the world.

Mr. WEICHEL: Is it not a fact that more Canadian tonnage was under the jurisdiction of one company this year than in any other previous year?

Mr. BRISTOL: Absolutely; there is no doubt about it, but the result is that the company has been able to save nearly $300,000 in cost of operation and the Canadian farmer is getting his share of the benefit in a lower rate than has ever been known in this country before.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would ask whether the American ships on the Great Lakes are under the control of the Inter-State Commerce Commission?

Mr. BRISTOL: I understand that those operated by railways are and that the others are not. But the boats we have to compete against in the grain trade are not operated by railways but by private shipping companies. Anybody can get into the shipping business. You can incorporate a company; the Great Lakes are free to everybody and competition is absolutely keen. There is no opportunity to do anything different so long as Buffalo and New York are competing with Canadian shipping. We are deepening the Welland canal and I am sorry we are not also deepening the St. Lawrence. When you deepen the Welland canal what do the Americans do to meet that situation? They have paid many millions of dollars in building a canal from Oswego to the Erie canal so that when the Welland canal is deepened the big boats that now stop at Port Colborne or Buffalo will go to Oswego, Kingston or Prescott. The way the grain will go will depend precisely on what the rate is going to be between Oswego and New York. New York has a very great advantage over Montreal by reason of insurance rates, accessibility, and the tramp ships that come in there. One of the great troubles we have is the fact that on our northern route insurance on the vessels is greater and that the route itself is considered somewhat more dangerous than the New York route. The Canadian Government have been doing everything they possibly could do to make the St. Lawrence route as good as it can be made. I believe that we could canalize the St. Lawrence, and I believe that in doing it we would help the Canadian farmer, because the grain would go to Montreal and then be loaded into lighters or into ships going abroad. That is the ideal shipping situation for this country to be in, and that is what we should aim at. I am satisfied that my hon. friend is introducing this Bill in absolute good faith, and I am satisfied that every hon. gentleman who supports it is supporting it in good faith, but I believe that we should pay heed to what the shipping interests say when they tell us that so long as they have to fight this American competition they cannot be giving a rate of tolls from hour to hour and minute to minute to the Railway Commission, that they have to be in a position from hour to hour in order to fight that competition, to give a better rate by Canadian boats and through Canadian channels, and that if you do not leave them in that position you are going to seriously hamper them in the competition that they have to meet in the shipping world to-day.

Mr. CARROLL: Mr. Speaker, I had the honour last session to be a member of the joint committee, composed of members of this House and of the Senate appointed to consider the consolidation of the Railway Act, and this was one of the changes which it was intended to make and which was introduced by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). I am sorry that I did not hear that hon. gentleman throughout his speech. He presented his case very ably in the latter part of his speech, and, like my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), I believe that the hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill has done so with the very best of intentions, and I also believe there are many people who think that the adoption of this Bill would be of very great benefit to the Canadian people. I do not think I can present the evidence that was taken before that committee last year in any better manner than it has been presented by the hon. member for Centre Toronto. The great question that was raised there by the shippers who opposed this amendment was, just as he has stated, that the task which the steamboat owners had to perform was to successfully meet competition from their American rivals and they represented, as I understood their story, that in the United States the steamboats and vessels which were directly connected with the railways were under the jurisdiction of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. This is a grave situation. If the situation on the Great Lakes is as grave as it was represented to be by those who opposed this amendment last year, I think we should come to a decision in regard to this Bill only after the most mature consideration. My hon. friend who introduced the Bill tells us that because steamships are connected with railway lines they are under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board and he argues that therefore all ships should be under the jurisdiction of the same board. I do not follow him in that contention. There are very good and very serious reasons why ships connected with railways should be under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board, which I suppose is responsible to Parliament. I do not know whether it is responsible to Parliament or not, but I suppose that if it does not do right the Government can dismiss it. There is not a railway in the Dominion but has received aid from the Government, and the Government must necessarily be interested in the proper conduct of these railways because the country's money has been invested in them. I suppose that is true of every railway built in Canada since Confederation. When these railways operate boats there is good reason why this Government should have some say in preventing these boats from putting on exorbitant rates. The Government exercises that control through the instrumentality of the Railway Board. But the question that we are now considering is an entirely different one. When it is proposed to place under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board vessels under private ownership which have never received anything from the Government by way of subvention or anything else, the proposal is one involving a very important departure from the policy which has hitherto been pursued. I do not pretend to be a very great constitutional lawyer but I have serious doubts as to whether or not the Railway Department, leaving the Railway Board out of the question, could take control of the shipping interests. The Railway Department has a man of good business capacity at its head at the present, but if he should propose to take control of the shipping interests a considerable howl would go up and I believe the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) would say: Hands off; you may be well able to look after the railway interests but I have been appointed to look after the marine interests.

What difference is there between the Minister of Railways taking control of the shipping interests of this country and a board or commission appointed by him doing so? That is a question that should be submitted to the Minister of Justice for his consideration. Doubtless my hon. friend who has introduced this Bill has some very good reason for introducing it in this form; but, while there may be some excuse for bringing common carriers under the jurisdiction of the Railway Board, ships owned and controlled by people who ship only their own products in their own ships should not come under this Bill, and ships chartered by the season by companies or individuals who ship in such ships only their own products, should not come under this Bill. I have in mind several companies in the lower provinces, namely, the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, the Dominion Coal Company and the Dominion Steel Company, all of which absolutely control their own ships. The Dominion Steel Company has a magnificent fleet of ships plying between Sydney and Montreal, and also with Newfoundland. The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company have also a very large fleet of ships plying to and from Montreal, Sydney, New Glasgow, and in fact every place where they can sell a bar of steel or a pound of coal. Their ships carry nothing but the products of the mines of their owners or the products of the steel works; they are in no sense common carriers, and I do not think it would be fair to place them in the same position as common carriers. Owing to the very strong evidence which I heard given before the committee last year by the shipping interests of this country, and owing to the fact that they would be unduly hampered in their competition with the United States, I object to the passage of this Bill. I have not heard their objection answered. If it is answered to my satisfaction, then, of course, my objection to that phase of the Bill will fall to the ground.

As I pointed out a moment ago, I think the Minister of Justice should take the matter into consideration and give his legal opinion as to whether or not the Department of Railways or the Railway Commission can take control. Is it not the function of the Minister of Marine to institute a board to look after this matter?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: The Minister of Railways is also the Minister of Canals, and as such has jurisdiction over the public canals. On that ground alone he can take control over the rates of the railways that use the public canals.

Mr. CARROLL: That is a very small part of my objection. Canadian ships coming to and from Canada pass through other waters than our canals.

Mr. MACLEAN: The St. Lawrence channels, for instance, made by the Government.

Mr. CARROLL: I do not think the Minister of Railways contends that his department has any exclusive jurisdiction over the river St. Lawrence or the gulf of St. Lawrence or the waters into which the river St. Lawrence flows. As a Nova Scotian, I am not so very much interested in the traffic on the Great Lakes, but as a Canadian I am deeply interested. My chief objection to the Bill is that if it passes it will embrace common carriers. I contend that it should not embrace a line of steamships exclusively engaged in carrying the produce of one company from the place of production to its destination.

Mr. B. R. HEPBURN (Prince Edward): I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of my hon. friend the member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), and I believe he is perfectly sincere in his desire to have this Bill pass. Having been, however, in the steamboat business for a number of years, but fortunately now being out of it, I can see that if this Bill is passed, it will cause all sorts of complications. If the hon. member for East Lambton was thoroughly familiar with the port of Montreal, for example, and the thousands of small ships owned by different individuals that trade between the port of Montreal and the ports of the lower St. Lawrence in the different parts of Quebec, he would see it would be almost impossible to put such boats under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. If we attempted to do that, we would put the small boat owners absolutely out of business. A great many of the men owning boats that operate on the lower St. Lawrence are uneducated, not being able to read or write, and they have trouble enough now endeavouring to make a small living out of the operation of their boats, because of the slowness of time in the carrying of freight between ports and the giving to the people of a service probably once every week or once every two weeks as the case may be.

The manner in which freight rates are arrived at with regard to package freight for carriage on the Great Lakes is that the steamboat owners take the freight and work on a differential basis. The differential between Montreal and Port Arthur, for example, runs from two cents for fifth-class freight to either eight or ten cents for first-class freight. Let us suppose that I am operating a line of steamers from Montreal to Port Arthur to connect with the railroads there, and that I am running a boat a day and giving quicker service from Montreal to Winnipeg than do the railroads, is there any reason why I should not be allowed to charge the shippers as much money as the railroads do? I cannot see any reason why I should not, and I am satisfied that the Railway Commission could not see any either. The Canadian steamship owners are giving a daily service out of Montreal and are operating at a less cost than the railways, on a first-class rate of ten cents per 100 lb., and a fifth-class rate of two cents per hundred. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) has given reasons why the control of the grain carriers between Port Arthur and Liverpool via Montreal should be in the hands of the steamboat owners in order to enable them to meet competition via New York. If you attempt to put grain rates under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, you will practically ruin the Canadian shipping industry and drive all business via Buffalo and New York.

The same thing applies to the smaller boats in the province of Ontario. I live in a county in which the carriage of freight is practically dependent on the steamboat men. We have only one railroad there and only one line through the county. I know a number of men operating small boats on the Bay of Quinte and endeavouring to make a living. If you put them under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission it will mean the introduction of men skilled in the formation of tariffs and so on, the elimination of the existing boat service, and bring about all kinds of trouble.

Mr. F. L. SCHAFFNER (Souris): I believe I should not fulfil my duty if I had not something to say on this Bill. It goes back to the old question of freight rates, which is an important question to any man from western Canada. Perhaps that question has been more important in the past than it will be in the future. For we all know that, thanks to the efforts of this Government, we shall soon have in operation the Hudson Bay railway, and a large percentage of our grain—though perhaps not so much as has been stated to-day—will be exported by that route. If I have any fault to find with this Bill it is that, as I understand it, it does not include ocean freight rates. Heretofore, when the question of freight rates has been before this House, we have always thought of railway rates—land rates—and have not paid much attention to ocean freight rates. An exception is to be made, I believe, by my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) who made careful research into that problem and made it a subject of a very able speech. What we want is the cheapest possible freight rates, whether by land or by water. I was a little surprised at my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Hepburn) saying he could not see any reason why ocean rates should be cheaper than railway rates. I am confident that any commission to which the matter is submitted would not hesitate to say that there was no comparison between the cost of transporting freight by sea and transporting it by land. As an illustration I may state that it costs about the same to bring a bushel of wheat from Argentina to Montreal by water as it costs to carry a bushel of wheat from Winnipeg to Port Arthur by rail. Any board to whom this matter of freight rates, whether by land or water was referred would be expected to consider it in a sensible, businesslike manner. This year, freight rates are not bothering us very much; the farmer is getting now perhaps more than a reasonable price for his wheat.

[Mr. Hepburn.]

Mr. BRADBURY: The middleman is getting it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: If the farmer has the wheat, he is getting the price. I do not know that it is much of an argument as suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) to say that the wheat is out of the hands of the farmer. There is a good deal of wheat still in the farmers' hands, and most of what has been sold did not get out of their hands until a very good price was received. If we could have a guarantee that in the future the farmer should not find it necessary to let the wheat out of his hands for a lower price than that which he is receiving this year, I do not know that we should object to paying a good, round freight rate, whether by land or water. But we can only judge the future by the past, and, judging in that way, we must conclude that the conditions which have existed will return. During the last four or five years, and until war conditions prevailed, it did not pay the farmer to raise wheat. Now, from the time the farmer begins to prepare his land for the crop until the grain reaches the market, it is the duty of this Parliament, in the interests of the whole people, whether in the East or in the West, to give us the most favourable conditions. What shall we say about the Railway Commission? My opinion is that commissions may come and commissions may go, but the Railway Commission will go on for ever. Why? Because never in the history of this country has any commission given such general satisfaction. Some hon. member said that he did not know that the railways would be very anxious to have the Railway Commission discontinue. I do not agree with him. The railways of this country are not very fond of the present Railway Commission. This commission has been fair, and because of its great popularity the railways have not seen fit—and rightly too—to take the unpopular side and oppose the commission. I believe that we in western Canada have much to thank the Railway Commission for. Of course, the Railway Commission does not operate in exactly the same way as it did when it was inaugurated. How do we know but that from a small beginning—and I do not mean anything offensive to the promoter of the Bill in that—we may develop another body which will be as useful as the Railway Commission? Let us start somewhere. If we have been so successful in relieving the western farmer through the Railway Commission, we have a right to believe that we shall be just as successful with a commission controlling the rates by water.

The only objection I have to this Bill is that it does not go far enough. It controls rates, as I understand, only on inland waters. It is stated by some hon. gentleman on the other side that the Bill should not apply to private companies, but that we have a perfect right to apply it to companies that receive subsidies from this Parliament. But, even though we are not granting subsidies in actual money to these companies, we have spent, are spending, and will spend in the future, immense sums of money in aids to navigation, in docks, harbours and canals, for the development of this business. Hence, I cannot see why these companies should be exempt from control. The new commission, should one be appointed and charged with this duty of regulation, may be counted upon to be as fair to all companies as the Railway Commission has been to the railway companies. We must realize that wheat is not always going to be $1.50 a bushel—if it were I might not be supporting my hon. friend's Bill. But, in view of the change that may be expected to take place in the market conditions, the real business of this Parliament is to do its utmost to enable the farmers of Canada to send their products to the market at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe): The riding which I have the honour to represent is very much interested in the growth and development of large grain ports, especially in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific railway have elevators at Port McNicoll, and the Grand Trunk railway elevators at Midland. The fact that the business of transportation of grain through Canada has not increased as we hoped it would is my reason for rising to give my opinion of this proposed legislation.

While some gentlemen who have supported the Bill have made many statements, I regret that few of them have been statements of fact. One would almost imagine that the freight rates on the Great Lakes have been going up by leaps and bounds for the last ten years. Perhaps it will surprise hon. gentlemen when I tell them that there was a time when the freight rate from Fort William to Midland was seven cents a bushel, and that last year it was about one cent a bushel. I have in my hand the report of the Chamber of Commerce of Buffalo—the rates to Georgian bay ports are about on a parity with the rates to Buffalo—and for the benefit of hon. gentlemen and for future reference I will quote the rates in force previous to 1908.

In 1897, the range of rates on wheat from Duluth to Buffalo was 1-2½ cents; 1898, 1-3½ cents; 1899, 2½-6 cents; 1900, 1½-3¾ cents; 1901, 1⅛-3¾ cents; 1902, 1-2¼ cents; 1903, 1⅛-2¾ cents; 1904, 1-5 cents; 1905, 1¼-4 cents; 1906, 1¾-3 cents; 1907, 1-2½ cents; 1907, 1-2½ cents; 1908, 1-3½ cents.

There is no report later than that for the year 1908, but I can say that so low were the rates last year that a large number of vessels were tied up, on the American as well as on the Canadian side; the rates would not pay investors to go into the business. When the Algonquin first went on the lakes twenty or twenty-five years ago, the rate in the fall was seven cents a bushel, the reason being that there were very few vessels then in the grain business. I wonder if hon. gentlemen know how trade has grown particularly in respect of American vessels. I hold in my hand a book commonly known as the Great Lakes Red Book, issued in 1912. It gives the name of one vessel, the William P. Snider, with a tonnage of 13,000 tons, and scores of others with tonnages of 8,000, 10,000, and so on. As a rule the Canadian vessels are small, having a tonnage of about 3,500 tons. What is the real position of this grain trade? It is admitted that in the United States there are no restrictions in the shape of commissions hampering or interfering with the vessel owner or with the grain owner. It should be remembered, after all, that the grain owner is the man who dictates the route which the grain will take. If the grain owner has a million bushels of grain in the Port Arthur elevators, it is to him not a matter of sentiment, but a matter of business whether he ships it by Buffalo or by Montreal. My hon. friend the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) made the statement, which everybody knows is correct, that the rates from New York are always lower than those from Montreal. Some hon. gentleman referred to the fact that there was an abnormal output from Montreal last year. I have sent for one of the reports, and I find that during the year 1913-1914 70,000,000 bushels of wheat were sent out of Montreal, and during the year before, 41,000,000. In 1897 the amount of wheat sent out was 11,000,000 bushels. Living at Midland, I know that prior to the war it was a matter of common knowledge that through that port there was passing a lot of wheat for Germany last year, and that the increase of 30,000,000 bushels at Montreal was due to to the fact that the German Government or German dealers in grain, in view of the impending war, were buying largely, and were having the grain shipped via Montreal. I presume that was the reason for the vast increase of 30,000,000 bushels.

What are we going to do if we pass legislation like this? A man who owns grain in the Northwest will ship it by the Soo line to Duluth; it will then go on American vessels to Buffalo and be transhipped to England or other European country. It will not be interfered with by any commission in Canada, because no commission will deal with it in the United States. On the other hand, supposing a grain dealer should wish to send shipments by Fort William or via the Canadian Northern to Port Arthur; he is not bound to be under the ban of the Railway Commission, because it will be no contravention of the coasting laws to employ American vessels to take that grain from Port Arthur to Buffalo. It is in the fall of the year, when grain is passing out rapidly, that the Canadian vessel owner is looking for freights. In this little red book there is arranged a list of what are known as ore carriers, of which, I think, there are about 600. Some of these are of Canadian register and some American. Any vessel which is of such strength that you can shoot ore into its hold will easily carry grain, but any vessel that will carry grain will not necessarily be strong enough to carry a cargo of ore. Hon. gentlemen who have seen ore rushing into the bottom of a vessel realize that for that particular purpose a vessel of superior strength is needed. I take it, therefore, that there are not only upwards of 600 ore vessels in the trade, but two or three thousand large grain vessels in Canada and the United States. What are you going to do about it? Last year Canadian trade was in an apathetic state and competition with American carriers was so keen that Canadian vessels by the score were tied up. Vessels were tied up in Midland which in other years were probably getting two or three cents a bushel for carrying grain. The same conditions prevailed at the Soo, in the Detroit river and elsewhere. The ship lines of Canada made no money last year. The largest of them, the Canada Steamship line, passed its dividend; many others did the same, and some of them paid a very much decreased dividend. The passing of legislation of this kind means that the grain owner, who, I repeat, does not consider sentiment in the matter, may take his grain to Duluth by the Canadian Pacific railway and via American lines. The American system owned by the Hill people crosses into Manitoba and from the Northwest; and grain may by this line be brought down to Duluth, and the grain owner will not be hampered by the control of freight rates by a commission. In that respect you take the chance of hitting your Canadian railways. Of course, the Canadian Pacific railway can bring the grain to Duluth on their own line just as conveniently as they can bring it to Fort William, but it is the vesselman who will be hit, and hit the hardest—the vessel man who in Canada to-day is not getting within two or three cents a bushel of the rates that he got a few years ago. Despite the vast export from Montreal, last year such a state of things existed that the owners were compelled in many instances to tie up their vessels. These men will be in this position, that the ore trade being over in the United States, immense carriers like the Snider, with a capacity of 13,000 tons or 450,000 to 500,000 bushels of wheat, having made a good season in the ore business, will take on board cargoes from Port Arthur or Fort William for Buffalo at seven-eighths of a cent per bushel, as was the case last year; whereas the Canadian vessel, which cannot enter the ore trade owing to the American coasting laws, must wait for the Canadian wheat trade in the fall, and then cannot meet such a price as that charged by these immense carriers, the capacity of the Canadian vessels being usually about 100,000 bushels. This competition tends to divert the wheat from the Canadian Georgian bay ports or St. Lawrence ports to American ports. Not only are the two ports in my constituency deeply concerned in this, but also Goderich, Collingwood and the other ports on our lower lakes. The men who are endeavouring to build up a vessel trade in Canada are seriously handicapped in this way. It may be said, of course, that they are permitted to engage in the coal carrying trade from American ports to Fort William and Port Arthur in the summer, but there they have the competition of old American sailing vessels which are now used as tow barges and which, owing to their age and inferiority, carry the coal at rates which would be quite impossible for the Canadian steamships as the Canadian vessels, in order to comply with the insurance requirements for the carrying of grain, must be of a very much better class. It must be remembered that the proportion of American shipping to Canadian shipping is about seventy to one. The moment you place the Railway Commission over vessels this result will come about that the owner of the grain will be fearful that rates may be imposed which are not now imposed by reason of the keen competition on the lakes to-day and the grain would be diverted to Buffalo and other American ports by these vessels. It would be an unfortunate thing for the Canadian vessel owner and for Canadian ports. The records show that the rates to Buffalo and to Georgian bay ports are the same. The freight rates on the Great Lakes are not high. They are decreasing and have decreased abnormally, and in view of the fact that while on the other side enterprise and capital have gone into the business of placing ships on the Great Lakes so that their merchant marine is firmly established, there are 5 p.m. comparatively few Canadian-owned vessels. These vessels should be given a fair chance and we should not pass legislation that can have but one effect, that of causing the shipper of grain to prefer the American ships and American avenues of trade rather than Canadian ships and Canadian avenues of trade.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (York South): Mr. Speaker, we have undertaken to deal in Parliament with the general transportation question. We have regulated the railways and we propose now to regulate the inland steamboats, and if I had my way we would regulate the ocean rates as well. I believe that ocean rates can easily be brought within the jurisdiction of this Parliament and it would be absurd for this country to continue spending the millions we are spending on the solution of the transportation problem unless we deal with the question as a whole, embracing railroads, inland navigation and ocean freight rates. One great principle that must be kept in mind is that water transportation and land transportation ought to be complementary one of the other. That has been worked out in Germany and in other countries and if a freight company can use both railroad and water transportation it should be compelled to do so. The question is not, as it was put by the hon. member for Centre Toronto, whether the steamships charge less than the railways, but do they charge a rate that gives a fair margin above the actual cost? So the man or the state that proposes to deal with transportation must deal with land transportation and with water transportation—and by water transportation I mean both on inland waters and on the high seas. So it is well within the jurisdiction of this House to deal with this question, and it is the duty of this House in dealing with transportation to regulate the rates on water as well as on land. It will be idle for us to spend any money in improving our inland navigation if we do not get the benefit of that improvement, because the more canals we build and the cheaper we make transportation, unless we regulate the steamboat lines, the more they will benefit by the reduction in cost of operation. If these things are true we ought to take control of the boats as well as of the railroads, and if we do take control we will not try to prevent the boat lines giving the claimed low service they have been giving to our people, but will prevent them doing any injustice. Inland transportation rates have often been the same as railway rates. They should not be as high as railway rates and we should have been able to prevent such a charge. We are told that we will be asked some day to allow a great railway company in this country to segregate its assets and take its boats and its steamship lines out of the control of the main company and put them under a company that would be purely a navigation or sea-going steamship company. If we had not control over the inland transportation of a railway, we might in this case lose control of it altogether. If we have control of a railway we ought also to have control of the boats, and it is only in that way that we can regulate transportation and get lower rates. Furthermore, if the proposal which the hon. gentleman has introduced to-day was in the Government measure of last session, why is not the Railway Act to be dealt with this session? We ought to have the Railway Bill before the House to-day, because the dislocation that has come to this country by reason of the war calls for regulation of the great corporations that seek to give public service to this country, whether banks, railway companies, inland transportation companies or ships upon the sea. We ought to be dealing with this transportation question in a broad way, and I hope the Minister of Railways will announce to-day that he is going on with this measure, so that it will not be necessary for private members to bring in Bills that seek to put in force some of the good principles that were incorporated in the Government Bill of last session. It would be to the great benefit of this country if we dealt with the transportation question this session, and put in force not only the clause which the hon. gentleman has introduced to-day but nearly all the clauses in the estimable Government Bill of last session. We should then be trying to get good rates. As the hon. member (Mr. Schaffner) has just said, it is not of so much importance to the farmers this year because the price of grain is high; but we do not know how long that high price will continue. And I absolutely endorse what he has said and what the commission in the West found out that grain-growing is almost impossible in this country at the price obtained by farmers in the last few years. Furthermore, as grain went down in price, freight rates went up. In fact the whole tendency for the past few years has been to reduce the price that the farmer obtains for his wheat and to increase the cost of carriage. We shall not be able to populate the West and make it a successful farming country unless we control the rates charged on the produce of that country. We may subsidize railways, build competing lines, spend our money as freely as we like, but unless we adopt regulation of transportation as a principle, and in that direction, we shall be throwing our money away and not be helping to settle the West. The problem to-day is to settle the Canadian West and to restore prosperity to that country. Instead of only two per cent of the agricultural lands being occupied they should all be occupied. But to do that we must be able to say: We are going to give you a fair deal, you shall get a fair share of the product of your labour. Apparently there is no way of doing that and of holding out the lamp of hope to attract settlers to the West, except by regulation of transportation. When you adopt a great principle of that kind there is bound to be injustice in various directions. All practical legislation does more or less injustice; but it works. This principle could be applied and public relief attained, but only by making the principle broad and giving it a fair interpretation; and you can trust any public commission such as the Railway Board, to do justice, to secure fair treatment to the companies who give the service, and to injure nobody. I heard apologies made in this House to-day for a great transportation company that only a year ago was authorized to do what it liked in connection with its capitalization. That company has not been successful in making money on the enormous flotation it put out some months ago. But that is largely the fault of this Parliament. We should have kept control of the capitalization of that company, and if we had that control and control of its rates, we should be in a better position to-day to compel them to do what this Bill seeks to do: to treat the public fairly, to give a good service; and those who give the service should get a fair remuneration for it, based on its actual cost. I should like to see the House seized of this Bill, and the Bill of last session We should prepare now to take up the new duty that comes to Canada by reason of the dislocation the war has caused, and we should approach these new conditions with transportation under the control of Parliament by way of a commission, whether transportation by lake, rail, river or canal.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: Just a few words in answer to the objections made by different members. The hon. member for South York and the hon. member for Souris are supporting the measure. They merely ask that we shall have control of ocean freight rates as well.

Hon. F. COCHRANE (Minister of Railways and Canals): There is no doubt a good deal that is interesting to the people of Canada in the Bill that is now before the House, and from the discussion that has taken place this afternoon there is no doubt that there are two sides to the question. There was also considerable discussion in the committee last year, although I was not present, and I think the best thing for me to do is to move that the Bill be referred to the Railway Committee for discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question of the second reading is not disposed of yet, and consequently the hon. gentleman cannot make his motion now. The motion before the House is: Shall the Bill be read a second time? It is my duty to say that if there are any who desire to speak before the hon. member who moved the second reading of this Bill makes his final reply, as is his privilege, they have the opportunity to do so now. They cannot do so after he has spoken.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: I wish to thank the Minister of Railways for being good enough to let this Bill go to the committee. I am satisfied that when the evidence on both sides is heard the committee will unanimously decide in favour of the Bill. The hon. member for South York and the hon. member for Souris have called attention to ocean freight rates and urged that the Bill should give us control over those rates. That is quite impossible here. These gentlemen know that a commission has been appointed by this Government for the purpose of investigating freight rates on the ocean, and that commission is acting jointly with a similar commission appointed by the British Government and have this matter under consideration. There is a provision in this Bill which requires that ocean vessels coming to our ports shall file their tolls and tariff arrangements and agreements at those ports. I am satisfied if that should become established the commission that is appointed to investigate ocean freight rates will be materially assisted. The hon. member for East Simcoe called attention to the fact that the United States has not any legislation similar to this applicable to shipping having coasting privileges along the shores of the United States. That is true; but at the present time Congress has under consideration a Bill which proposes to control such rates and to place them under a commission in the United States. They have had during the past two years a commission investigating this question and have decided to bring in a Bill, not similar to this, but one whereby they will be able to place vessels in their inland waters under the control of a commission.

The hon. member for East Simcoe quoted a number of rates in force to-day, but you will quite understand that these are the lowest rates that are given to the port of Midland. He also called attention to the fact that we are at the mercy of the vesselmen of the United States. The increased export through Montreal goes to show the enormous extension of the trade of that port and the need of such legislation as I am proposing. The volume of the transportation of grain through our ports is constantly increasing.

The hon. member for Central Toronto (Mr. Bristol) called attention to the fact that some of the manufacturers in eastern Canada are opposed to this legislation. I am quite aware of that. Large manufacturers, who to-day are receiving special privileges, or the lowest possible rates, from the vesselmen on inland waters—and I am not objecting to these reasonably low rates because they have tremendous quantities of goods to be carried by these vessels—are the only manufacturers who are coming forward to object to this measure. On the other hand, practically all the smaller manufacturers and shippers will welcome this measure in order that they may be able to have the rates applied in such a manner as the Board of Railway Commissioners will apply them. We have a statement from one hon. gentleman in opposition to this Bill to the effect that the freight rates on the inland waters should not exceed those on the railways, or that they should compare favourably with them. What an absurd statement to make, because when you take into consideration the fact that there are boats on the inland waters that are capable of carrying 250,000 or 300,000 bushels of grain, and that these boats can be operated at a cost of $250 per day, you can readily understand the small amount of actual cost involved in the transportation of these products from western ports to the port of Montreal.

I do not know that there were any other statements made seriously objecting to this measure. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) gave his assurance that he would not oppose this Bill if people who own private steamboats or vessels are not interfered with, such as the Steel Company. I might call his attention to the fact that this Bill will have no effect on companies, such as the Steel Company, who own, control and operate their own boats. Therefore, I will in the future look for his sympathy in connection with this measure. I again wish to thank my hon. friend the Minister of Railways for agreeing to refer this measure to the Railway Committee, and I feel confident that we will be able to establish justification for taking the action we have.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. COCHRANE moved that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is that really the committee to which my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) wishes to refer this Bill? The Railway Act itself is referred to a committee which I think is not the standing committee on railways, but rather a special committee. The Senate has named a committee likewise. It was supposed that these two committees would possibly meet together and discuss the new Railway Act. It strikes me that it would possibly be well to refer this Bill to the special committee.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: This Bill is worded so that it applies to the old Act and it is perfectly right to refer it to the railway committee.

Mr. COCHRANE: We did not propose going on with the consolidation of the Railway Act this session and that is the reason I was proposing to refer the Bill to the Railway Committee of the House.

Motion agreed to.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

On the order for resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bickerdike for the second reading of Bill No. 18, to amend the Criminal Code:

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I had not the pleasure or the advantage of being present when the motion of my hon. friend from Montreal, (Mr. Bickerdike) for the second reading of the measure which he proposes, was moved. I have, however, taken occasion to read carefully the report of what was said by my hon. friend and by other hon. members who took part in the discussion on this very important question. It is unnecessary for me to say that my hon. friend who is my neighbour in the city of Montreal, put his motion before the House, in such a manner as to win our sympathy for the cause he is advocating. No one questions the absolute sincerity of the view that he puts forward on this very important question, nor would any one be disposed to question that he supported that view with arguments that are worthy of the most careful consideration. Neither do I think that there is any need of saying anything about the importance of the question itself. It is one that has for a long period of time engaged the attention of, I think I can without exaggeration say, the civilized peoples of the world. It is one too upon which there has been a very marked divergence of opinion. I am certainly free to concede that upon the side of this question which the hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike) has taken up there can be invoked the authority of names entitled to the very highest respect, as well as arguments of the very greatest weight.

In the United Kingdom in 1864, a committee was appointed to consider this matter and upon that committee were men of the very highest standing in the legal profession and in the public life of the country. The result of the deliberations of that committee was that its members were practically equally divided upon the question whether or not capital punishment should be abolished. That means that upon both sides of the question one could invoke the authority of the most eminent and most qualified men to judge, to be found in the United Kingdom at that time. That fact alone demonstrates that we are dealing with a question upon which no one can undertake to speak dogmatically, or which can be looked upon as one having anything even approaching but one side to it.

[Mr. Cochrane.]

I do not purpose going seriatim into the arguments advanced in support of this Bill. I may say at once that they have not carried to me the conviction that, at the present time at all events, this measure should pass into law. The basic argument—if I correctly grasp the effect of what the hon. member who introduced this Bill said—upon which he founds his contention, is that there is no right in the State to take any man's life. I understand him to take the most absolute view of the effect of the prohibition, "Thou shalt not kill". In the first place, before I touch the question whether there is any distinction to be made between the individual and the authority vested by society in the head of the State, when you come to the application of that prohibition, I think it may be well to point out what is obvious to us all, that even as regards that prohibition as addressed to the individual, it is not possible to accept it as being as absolute as the hon. member would seem to consider it. For instance, I do not think it would be suggested even by the hon. member himself that the individual is so absolutely bound by that prohibition that under no circumstances whatsoever would he be justified in killing a human being. Take for instance, a case that presents itself at the very first glance to every one—the case of self-defence. Surely no one would suggest that the prohibition is so absolute that when some man, armed to take my life, attacks me, I must, to conform with the reasonable requirement of the prohibition, stand quietly and allow him to kill me. It must be present to all our minds that there are other cases where the prohibition is not of absolute application. On the battlefields of Europe to-day our brothers, those of our own blood, those of our own immediate country, are engaged in the destruction of human life. We are making great sacrifices to fit them out and equip them so that they may be able to act with the greatest effect in that work in which they are engaged. I am satisfied that my patriotic friend from St. Lawrence will not suggest that those men are violating the command for which he, in common with us all, has such a very great respect. Therefore in so far as the contention is that the prohibition is so absolute that neither the State nor the individual can have any right under any circumstances to violate its letter, I need not spend more time in meeting it.

It seems to me also that there is a distinction to be made between the effect of that prohibition as addressed to the individual and its effect when you seek to apply it to the governing power of the State, which is charged with the defence and the preservation of the State, just as the individual is charged with his own defence and his own preservation. And if it be true that the individual, when it is necessary for the preservation of his own life, is entitled to treat the prohibition as not applicable, I hardly think it can be claimed that, where the State, responsible for the protection of society and of all its members, finds it necessary in discharge of that paramount duty to take human life, it can be held to have violated that prohibition.

It seems to be contended that there is some more absolute right to life on the part of the individual than there is to any other possession of his, and more especially it is manifestly the contention of the supporters of this Bill that the individual has a more absolute right to his life than he has to his liberty, because what is proposed is not that we should let the guilty man, who to-day is condemned to lose his life, go free; what is proposed is that we should deprive him of his liberty. I think that on reflection it will appear clear that man's right to his life is no more absolute than his right to his liberty. It may be that in one case the object of the right is more precious or more valuable than in the other; but that does not alter the nature of the right, though it may affect the interest which a man has in asserting its inviolability. Whether life is more precious than liberty is a question on which there may very well be a difference of opinion. Certainly, the people who have at all times been most highly admired and commended are those who thought that liberty was more precious than life.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would remind the hon. minister of that great Irishman who said, " Give me liberty or give me death."

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: No, he was a Scotch-American. His name was Patrick Henry, but Patrick is an Aberdeen name.

Mr. DOHERTY: If he was not an Irishman, he had the best of names, and when a man has the best of names, I can excuse the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) for thinking that he must be an Irishman.

Mr. LEMIEUX: He deserved to be.

Mr. DOHERTY: Patrick Henry, whatever may have been his nationality, was among those who expressed the view that liberty is more precious than life. That is a view with which one may concur in without fear, at all events, of finding himself otherwise than in the very best of company. I am entirely unable to see what distinction can be made between the right to life and the right to liberty. If the proposition upon which this measure is based be that the right to life is so absolute that under no circumstances has the State the right to deprive a man of it, then it seems clear to me that it should apply equally to the right to liberty. Or, if it be alleged that the object of the right to life is more precious than the object of the right to liberty, I cannot see that reason has been given for making such a distinction. Looking at the matter from the point of view of abstract principle simply, I therefore find it impossible to follow the hon. member.

Now, if we could conceive of circumstances in which an individual, even when he becomes a member of society, retains rights so absolute that it is not to give way in the face of the superior right of the State to do the things essential for its preservation and for the effective carrying out of the duties incumbent upon those who are charged with the authority of the State, then I presume that a man's right to his life might be counted as among those absolute rights. But we must remember that, whatever may be the absolute right of the individual when he stands alone, yet, when he forms one unit in a great society his right must yield in order that the society of which he is a member may properly perform its functions and may secure to him, in common with all his fellow-members of that society, these very advantages, the assurance of which to the individual is the purpose for which society exists.

If I am right in this, all we have to ask ourselves is: Is the continuance of capital punishment necessary as a means for the repression of crime? For my part, I am willing to go further and to ask: Is it desirable for the enabling of society or the State to perform its duty of securing to those who are in its charge in the enjoyment of their lives and their liberty? No man's right is so absolute that it must not yield in the face of the equal right of his neighbour, and no man's right is so absolute that it must not yield in the face of that which is necessary, or even desirable, to maintain that condition in which organized society may ensure to the individual the full measure of protection which it is the duty of the State to give, and the giving of which to its members is the one thing that justifies the existence of the State and its rightful authority.

I know, it may be said, that it is upon those who advocate the maintenance of this form of punishment to demonstrate its necessity and desirability. The best answer to that is that those who maintain the rightfulness of this form of punishment are, in this country at all events, the parties in possession. They are able to invoke, moreover, the fact that from the earliest times down to a comparatively recent period, there has been common consent as to the right of the State to enforce this penalty, and as to its necessity and desirability. Some countries in modern times have done away with this penalty; all countries have reduced its application so that it comes into play only in respect of the very gravest crimes. In that regard I think we may all agree that they have acted wisely—and in saying that I do not think that we imply at all that it would be wiser for them to go further and apply it to crimes of all classes.

A great deal has been said in support of this measure as to the sacredness of human life. I think the very sacredness of human life is the strongest justification for the maintenance of this penalty. Human life is sacred; there is no doubt about that. The life of the criminal is, within the limits of the disposition of properly ordained law, sacred. But the lives of the innocent are sacred, too; the lives of the whole community—men, women and children—are just as sacred. Their enjoyment of life, free from apprehension, is a very sacred thing. We are apt to lose sight of that when we get face to face with one man who is going to be hanged. Advocates of this measure at once forget the other one man, or the other several men, perhaps, who stood facing the revolver of this condemned individual. One life is not more sacred than another. But, it will be said, by taking the one you will not revive the other; and that is perfectly true. But, I think we need nothing more to justify the maintenance of this penalty than that it operates to deter the commission of the crime for which it is inflicted. I do not conceive that it is incumbent upon us to show that it is necessary for the purposes of a deterrent. All we are called upon to show is that it contributes to deterring, and adds an additional safeguard. Upon the question as to whether or not it operates as a deterrent, as upon all matters that touch this question, I am quite free to agree that there is anything but unanimity of opinion, and that people of the very highest authority have taken the view that the imposition of this penalty does not operate as a deterrent, or, at all events, not as a more effective deterrent than other means of punishment. When we are called upon to form an opinion about that, we are always asked to confine our attention to the individual man who has come to the stage of contemplating committing a murder and it is said: unless it can be established that the man at that moment stops and says to himself, well, if it were not for the hanging that might follow, I would kill my neighbour, you have not shown any deterrent effect. I do not so understand it. The great deterrent effect, to my mind, that the infliction of this penalty produces is the great deterrent effect upon the whole body of the community; upon the general mind; upon the manner in which the whole of the people look upon murder. It is in that respect that I think the argument fails, that because good effects have followed upon the abolition of this penalty with regard to minor crimes, we should go further. I can quite understand that the deterrent effect of capital punishment was very much minimized when it was made of general application, so that any offence whatever which a man might be tempted to commit, or, at all events, offences even of a minor character which a man might be tempted to commit, exposed him to this ultimate penalty. Inasmuch as we cannot hope for a community exempt from temptation to crime or offence of any kind, that condition of affairs very naturally created the feeling which is expressed in the saying that one might as well be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb; if hanging is to be applicable to offences great and small, the effect is that you put all offences upon the same level. But when you single out this crime of murder, this crime of taking human life, and set it apart in a category with treason, which involves taking or attacking the life of the state itself; when you set it aside to have applied to it this extreme penalty, then, it seems to me, you infallibly set that crime apart as an uncommittable crime for the great bulk of the population. That, to me, is the deterrent effect that I argue for. I am not prepared to argue, and I do not think it is necessary to argue, that when a man under the influence of passion, under the influence, perhaps, of intoxicating drink or under the pressure of cupidity, has come to the point where he is willing to consider murder as among the possible things, he will stop because he may be hanged. But I do contend—and this seems to me to be clear—that the maintenance of this penalty is a great deterrent on the great mass of the people. You keep this crime before them as the thing that may be compared to the scriptural unpardonable sin and the thing that the State visits with the last and ultimate penalty of deprivation of life. Doing that, you bring home to every individual in the community just the extent to which the State appreciates the sacredness of human life. The state so appreciates that sacredness, it attaches such importance to enforcement of the prohibition: Thou shalt not kill, that before all its people it proclaims that towards the man who takes his neighbour's life, the state has no disposition to exercise mercy or leniency. So, for my part, it is not a question at all of what the individual would-be murderer thinks at the moment that he is going to commit his crime; the great important matter is how the whole community will look upon the crime of slaying a human being. I think that we can make no mistake when we take the most extreme means that are at our disposal to create and maintain in the common mind of the whole people that absolute conviction that the man who kills another steps beyond the pale of compassion.

So much for the deterrent effects of the maintenance of this form of punishment—and if you once admit the deterrent effects I do not think I need spend time in arguing for the position: that the authority responsible for the protection of society and all its individual members, the authority to whom the individual owes allegiance purely and simply because it exists to give and does give him that protection, is bound to use effective means to secure it to him. I know that minor arguments are advanced. We are told of the terrible danger, in view of the fallibility of all human judgment of some innocent man being convicted and being executed. I think under our system of administration of justice, that while, of course, no one can say that that is not a possibility, at the very least we can safely claim that it is a most remote possibility; and if it should have to be admitted that it might, after a long series of years, happen that one man, innocent of a crime, should unfortunately be convicted and executed, no doubt that would be a most lamentable thing. But for my part I would be quite prepared to set over against that the immense advantage which, in my judgment at least, results to society at large and to every individual member of it from the maintenance of this most extreme form of punishment.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) spoke with a good deal of feeling of a case in which he said within the last year an innocent man had gone to the gallows. I happen to be familiar with that case. I am quite sure that the hon. member will not find fault if I suggest that I had greater opportunity of knowing just what happened in that case than he could possibly have had. I have on my shoulders the responsibility of that man's life, jointly, of course, with my colleagues, but the initiative of the advice and the responsibility for it was mine; and might I say to the hon. gentleman that that man went to the gallows after a trial before a properly constituted court, before a jury of his countrymen who convicted him; and he went to the gallows after the perfect regularity and legality of the trial had been submitted to the Court of Appeals in his own province and then to the Supreme Court of Canada, and he went there under the unanimous judgment of that Supreme Court and under a disposition of law which, for my part, I would with great regret see disappear from the Criminal code of this country.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DOHERTY (resuming): When you left the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I was proceeding to speak of a case which the non. member who introduced this Bill had referred to in his remarks as being a case where an innocent man had gone to the scaffold. In themselves the circumstances of that case are perfectly simple. I have no desire, it is not a pleasant task, to insist upon the guilt of one who has now gone before a higher and an infallible Judge. But the fact remains that, so far as it is possible for us with our limited capacity for judgment to reach a sound conclusion, I myself have no doubt that that man went to a deserved death. The innocent man for whom the hon. member's heart bleeds started out with another innocent man, each of them armed with revolvers loaded and prepared for action, on the laudable purpose of holding up whomsoever they might meet and robbing them at the point of the revolver. They intended to go in company with two others. Somehow or other their arrangement did not turn out as they expected. They missed the two others, and from the innocent employment of holding up the passer-by they diverted their attention to the equally innocent employment of burglarizing a couple of stores. They achieved this laudable purpose, and proceeded to divide the swag. But while engaged in that perfectly innocent occupation a policeman was imprudent enough and inconsiderate enough to intrude upon them and the policeman was shot. Nobody knows till this hour which of those two men shot the policeman.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Good!

Mr. DOHERTY: But it is absolutely certain that one of those two men shot the policeman. The hon. gentleman's interjection of "good" conveys his idea of immaculate innocence. In the eyes of the hon. member, the man that did not fire the shot is an innocent man. All that he did was to start out armed and equipped and ready for murder. All that he did was to go out with murder in his heart. All that he did was to prepare himself so that if somebody interfered with his robbery of his neighbours he would be in a position to murder that somebody. That is all. Perfect innocence! If you have tears, prepare to shed them now. This perfectly innocent gentleman—and I do not know which of these two was the perfectly innocent gentleman, and nobody does—had only started out with that purpose. He had only started out with a companion inspired, to his knowledge, with the same purpose. The two of them had only gone out on an absolutely unlawful expedition in the course of which the two of them perfectly knew that murder was liable to be committed. They got ready for that. They went out, and what they perfectly knew might happen did happen. The barbarous representative of the law, the law that hangs men that murder their neighbours, ventured to interfere with them, and between the two of those men he was shot down and killed. There was not any possible doubt of all the facts that I have stated. These two men told us the story themselves. They agreed upon every incident until the moment of the firing of the shot; and then each said that the other man fired the shot. If we are to apply the doctrine that my hon. friend apparently thinks we should apply, then so far as we knew these were two absolutely innocent men who ought to have gone scot free.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I did not say so.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is absolutely certain that one of them fired the shot. The Parliament of this country has enacted that where two or more men prepare for the committing of a crime, join together in the attainment of an unlawful purpose in the pursuit of which it is probable that any crime may be committed, each one of them is responsible for whatever crime the other commits and that certainly was the case here. For my part, I would be sorry should that cease to be the law. There was an innocent policeman who went out in the performance of his duty to protect the lives and the property of the citizens of Vancouver, for it was in that city this happened. He lost his life. My hon. friend does not seem to be impressed with the sacredness of his life; yet he was a perfectly innocent man. More than that, he was a brave man courageously doing his duty for the protection of the citizens of this country, doing his duty in seeing that other people who slept quietly at home in their beds that night were protected from the nefarious operations of the man who has gone to the gallows, and that policeman was shot down in cold blood without a moment's warning; was sent to his reckoning with his Creator without one instant of preparation. Human life is sacred, but my hon. friend has no sympathy to waste on the death of that man. His horror is that the two men were held responsible for that crime, the two men who co-operated to bring about the conditions in which that policeman lost his life, the two men whom the law declared to be equally guilty whichever of them fired the shot and the actions of each of whom led up to and culminated in that crime. For my part, I have said it twice already, and I say it now, I hope the law in that respect may long remain on the statute book. I think it is an absolutely just, an absolutely equitable, an absolutely necessary law. I said that I was responsible for the advice that sent that man to the gallows. I have no repentance for that advice. I certainly would have most absolutely failed in my duty, and my colleagues would have failed equally with me, had we given any other advice. Should we have sent it forth broadcast throughout this country that all that the burglar and the man willing to murder in the process of burglary has to do to save his neck, is to secure a companion so that you will not know which of the two did the shooting, when those who seek to interfere with him in the perpetration of his crimes have been murdered? I say it is an absolutely salutary law. If a guilty man ever went to the gallows, and I now have in mind the man who did not fire the shot, I say it was that man. So much for that one particular instance which the hon. member has been able to point out in which he says an innocent man went to the gallows.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I did not say an innocent man. I said he was innocent of the crime for which he was condemned and hanged. I will say he was a bad man.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know that it makes any material difference. This is his statement as "Hansard" reported it, although of course I am quite willing to take the hon. gentleman's statement and believe the reporter was in error. I will read it just to show that certainly I did not intentionally misquote the hon. gentleman. He is reported as having said:

> Another reason why capital punishment should be abolished is that innocent men are sometimes executed. We know of one innocent man who was hanged in Canada, and we have grave doubts that there were not three innocent men hanged.
>
> Sir Wilfrid Laurier: Who were they?
>
> Mr. Bickerdike: One innocent man that we know of was hanged in New Westminster, B.C.

That is the innocent man I have been speaking of. Now, the hon. gentleman referred to another case not as an instance of where an innocent man had been hanged, but apparently for the purpose of showing how horrifying was the execution of the death penalty. He told us of an unfortunate man who was hanged at Calgary, and pictured the distressing circumstances of that man's death. It would appear that the man was cut down before he was actually dead and that it took some little period of time—I think that the hon. gentleman said twenty minutes—before life was entirely extinct. I believe that was the fact, and it certainly was a most distressing circumstance for those whose duty it was to be present and witness what happened. But, if I am not mistaken, the very best authorities say that a man, having undergone what he underwent, is unconscious absolutely from the moment that the drop falls. It is very distressing that that should have happened, but there are good and innocent men who die under greater suffering every day. Undoubtedly, it would be a horrible thing if the law provided that any unnecessary suffering should be imposed upon a man who had to be executed. For my part, I do not think that I am much more hard-hearted than the average man, but if it did happen that a condemned man suffered some of the agony that hundreds of thousands of innocent men suffer on their dying beds, I do not know that to avoid that we would be justified in wiping out that, which in my conviction is, to say the least of it, an invaluable aid to society in the discharge of its duty to protect human life.

We have had some statistics put before us for the purpose of supporting the proposition that the infliction of capital punishment does not deter people from committing crime. If I correctly seize the purpose for which these statistics are cited, it is to lead us to the conclusion that because in some of the countries where there is capital punishment there have been as many or more murders as in other countries where there is no capital punishment, the infliction of capital punishment does not deter people from committing crime. Other statistics are cited for the purpose of showing that in some countries, at a period when capital punishment prevailed, there were as many, or more, murders as there have been since capital punishment was abolished. As regards the first class of statistics, you have to consider a great many other things, when you are comparing two countries, than the mere matter of whether capital punishment prevails in one and not in another. There are a great many things that render probable the commission of crimes of a certain class that might exist in one country and not in another. If you have a wild, unsettled, or only partially settled country, where the methods for the detection of crime are weak, and where the opportunity for escape is ready to the hand of the criminal, you have circumstances that render it probable that you will have more crime in that country than in an adjacent, well-settled, quiet country, where the arm of the law is strong and reaches the offender easily. If in that latter country there was no capital punishment, and if in the former there was, if murders are more numerous in the former country, and if you are to be guided by statistics alone, you say: Why, it is the presence of capital punishment that apparently incites to murder. I want to show how absolutely unconclusive mere statistics are when dealing with a question of this kind. If you take them for the purpose of showing that in some country, at a period when capital punishment prevailed, murders were numerous, while at a later period when capital punishment had disappeared murders are few, you have to consider the advance of civilization within the country, and the possible change of conditions. It is a most dangerous thing to say that purely and simply because after capital punishment was abolished murders did not increase or that they even decreased capital punishment does not deter. Post hoc, ergo propter hoc was always one of the most dangerous of arguments. They say, the devil can quote Scripture to support his own propositions.

You might quote statistics also to show that capital punishment should not be abolished if statistics are to settle the question. In 1905, comparative statistics of murder in the United Kingdom, where capital punishment prevails, and in Italy, where there is no capital punishment, were gathered. It was found that, whereas in the United Kingdom the murders were 25 or 26 for every million persons, in Italy where there was no capital punishment the murders were 105 for every million persons. If statistics are to settle this matter, there is a very startling argument indeed. I do not contend that they do. I quite admit that in that case, as in the other case to which I have referred, you have to look into a great many other conditions prevailing in the respective countries; but I mention it as showing that after all statistics may be appealed to on both sides of this question.

While we are on statistics I would like to call attention to some that come right home to ourselves, and that I think have a particular bearing upon this question. Within the last few years we have had a most alarming increase in the number of murders in this country. If you go back over a period of ten or twelve years, you will find that we had an average of twelve or thirteen convictions for murders per annum, whereas in the last three years the figures have been 26, 24, and I think 29 respectively, or in all 79 convictions for murder in Canada in the past three years. In that connection I would like to call attention to the fact that out of those 79 convictions for murder 38 were convictions of foreigners newly arrived in this country. Of those 38 foreigners 27 were people who came to us from countries where capital punishment either had been entirely abolished, or at all events was not applicable to the ordinary case of murder. That means that of our murders 49 per cent were committed by people newly arrived amongst us, and that of that 49 per cent, 68 per cent were committed by men who came from countries where capital punishment had been abolished or at all events did not apply to the ordinary crime of murder. Can we have any better lesson?

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I think that is a pretty good argument in my favour.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am glad if my hon friend is satisfied with the argument. I am satisfied with it. The hon. member does not bear in mind how relatively small a proportion of our population this foreign element is, and yet they contribute 49 per cent of our murders, and 68 per cent of that 49 per cent, or 35 per cent of our entire murders, are committed by people who come from those countries where capital punishment does not prevail or is not applicable to the particular crime of murder. It seems to me that it establishes beyond a doubt that among that class of people you see the absence of the constant pressure resulting upon the minds of the whole community from the fact that murder is put aside in that class by itself as the crime that calls for death. Certainly it is no unfair thing to say that it is evidence that those people look more lightly on human life, to the sacredness of which the hon. member attaches such importance, than do the great bulk of our population who have grown up under this awful shadow of the death sentence being imposable upon murderers. The same thing is true when you look at the comparison between the people who come from countries where capital punishment prevails and those who come from countries where it does not prevail. Those statistics seem to me to have a direct bearing upon this question.

Is it an opportune time to make the change proposed when murder is becoming additionally frequent amongst us, and when we find that it is additionally frequent because we are getting flooded with a population who are accustomed to think that you can kill your neighbour but that your life is so sacred that the state will never touch you? It seems to me that this is not the time to adopt the system that prevails in the countries from which these people come to us, who have such a light idea of the value of human life. Perhaps as the years go by, and when we all get better trained and more advanced (as I suppose the hon. gentleman would say), when the horror of murder shall have been more impressed upon the universal human mind, it may perhaps then be possible to withdraw the means or the method whereby it was so impressed; but until that time comes, and so long as we live in a country where we find that we are being flooded with people who have grown up so careless of human life under a state of law that was so careful of the lives of the guilty that it forgot to take care of the lives of the innocent, we may very well adhere to the safe old rule that has come down to us from our fathers, to the rule that has behind it the sanction of human law for centuries, and that has behind it the sanction of the divine law.

The hon. member, if I am not mistaken, asserted absolutely that there was no country that had ever abolished capital punishment and that had gone back to it. I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman his mistake in that respect. I have been at some pains to get absolutely accurate information, and it shows that in quite a number of countries capital punishment has been abolished and people have come back to it, and that in some of those countries they have abolished it again, and in some of them they have adhered to it. That has happened in Austria-Hungary; that has happened in seven or eight of the states in Germany. Capital punishment was abolished in Brunswick, Coburg, Nassau, Oldenburg in 1849; Saxe-Meiningen, Saxe-Weimar in 1862; Baden in 1863, and Saxony in 1868. In 1872, it was restored by the Imperial Criminal Code, limited, it is true, to attempts on the life of the emperor or the sovereign of any State, deliberate homicide as opposed to unintentional homicide, and treasonable acts. Here we have a noteworthy case of repeal followed by re-establishment. In Russia capital punishment was abolished in 1750 and subsequently re-enacted, and freely inflicted. Since 1907, there his been no capital punishment in Russia, it is true, save for crimes endangering the life of the Emperor or Empress or the heir to the throne. In Switzerland no less than seven of the Cantons in which capital punishment was abolished have since returned to it. In the United States you have the cases of Rhode Island and Colorado which states returned to capital punishment after having abolished it. Maine is another instance of the same kind. It is true, some of these states have since abolished it again. But, so far as the hon. gentleman seems to find what he regards as an unanswerable argument in the fact that those states that have abolished capital punishment have never repented their action, I think these instances are enough to show that his assertion is, at all events too wide. I do not intend to detain the House at any greater length upon the merits of this question. I have tried to put forward the reasons which lead me to conclude that the House should reject the measure the hon. gentleman has proposed.

There is one matter, perhaps not directly pertinent to this discussion but which has been introduced into it by one of the hon. gentlemen who spoke on Monday evening during my absence, the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). I once knew a distinguished alienist who said that all men and women were on their way either to the penitentiary or to the insane asylum. When he was remonstrated with, he said that he could not qualify that statement further than to say that some people died before they got there. Now, it rather seems to me that, from wherever I start or for wherever I start, I am gently led up to both the penitentiary and the insane asylum. That is the predicament in which I find myself now. However, I have no fault to find with the hon. member because he has led me up to the consideration of these two institutions. I have every sympathy with every one who is anxious about the condition of our penitentiaries, and more particularly about the manner of treatment of our unfortunate insane convicts. I have every sympathy with him, because I share his anxiety. It is a subject that is present to my mind during a very large part of the time, and which has given me matter for thought, and I may say for action, during a period of months. The argument of the hon. member with regard to this Bill—though I understood him not to support the measure—was that there were worse things than hanging, because a man might be sent to Kingston penitentiary. He went on to tell us the reason why he said that. Now, I want to deal with this thing frankly, fairly, and quite calmly—for it is altogether too big a question to afford room for anything in the nature of personal feeling, and I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman who made the observations to which I am going to refer will agree witih me in that. But he made these statements, and they are very grave. Certainly, whatever one may think of their value as an argument bearing on the infliction of capital punishment, they are altogether too grave to be allowed to go to the public unanswered. I desire purely and simply to answer these statements so far as they are statements of fact. When referring to the case to which the hon. member who proposed the Bill instanced, that of a man said to be innocent, at all events, of the offence of which he was convicted, but who was hanged, the hon. member for Frontenac said:

> But supposing only one of them had been hanged, and that the other had been mercifully saved and sent, we will say, to Kingston penitentiary. Let us follow the career of the poor unfortunate who goes to Kingston penitentiary.

Now, we have a series of statements of fact:

He is confined in a cell, and is allowed to go out for exercise and fresh air. He is not permitted to utter a sound; to speak a word to a guard or to a fellow convict is a misdemeanour. He is probably put on the stone pile, cracking stone month after month and year after year. He is subjected to tauntings and goadings and torturings, and if he rebels against them he is taken to a specially-constructed cell, a hose pressure of 70 pounds is turned on the poor unfortunate wretch and he is thrown and knocked about in the cell, until, as they say, he gives in. If that treatment sends him to the hospital, on Sunday he gets three meals, the first at nine o'clock, the next at eleven and the third at one o'clock in the afternoon, and he receives nothing more until between eight and nine o'clock the next morning. Hon. gentlemen may smile at that, but I am stating what is the fact. If the man's health breaks down after that and his treatment in the institution drives him to insanity, as is frequently the case, he is taken to the insane ward, where the last final touches are administered. Forty or fifty persons are herded together in one room, the worst cases with the milder ones, the diseased persons with those whose only defect is mental derangement. They are herded together during the day and then sent into their cells, their food is handed to them and they tear it to pieces with their fingers and teeth like wild animals. If any one of them dares to utter a protest against one of the guards or keepers, the unfortunate, wretch is stripped, specially constructed harness is fastened on him, his legs are bound together and his arms fastened to his side and he is dipped into a tub of ice-cold water, being left there until, as they say, he gives in. That is how the insane are treated, or some of them at least. I am stating facts. Under this treatment the men, not merely one or two but dozens, have the life and soul crushed out of them. They become indifferent, they have no hope in this world, and are made incapable of any thought of the next. That, in my judgment, is a worse penalty than hanging.

I am stating what I know to be facts. I repeat that in my judgment such a condition is far worse than hanging. It is a condition of affairs sanctioned apparently by organized society, and is a disgrace and scandal to this country and to all the men who keep silent in this House while this sort of thing goes on. That is how I feel. I regret that the Minister of Justice has shown an apathy in regard to this matter which to my judgment is not at all to his credit. It was three years ago that I first directed his attention to the condition of affairs at Kingston penitentiary, and Kingston penitentiary is probably no better than other penitentiaries in the country. It is high time that this state of affairs was remedied. It reflects little credit on the Department of Justice and on the members of this House to allow this state of affairs to continue.

I wish to point out that in all this the hon. gentleman is speaking of a condition of affairs which he states to exist at the present time. The whole context which I have read shows that, and in the earlier part of his remarks, where he makes his general statement, he says it in so many words:

Men are being murdered by the dozen in a worse way than that in our penitentiaries—the result of the administration, or maladministration, of justice at the present time.

I want to point that out as showing that what I am called upon to deal with is purely and simply a condition of affairs at the present time; what may have occurred in the past is not in the question at the present moment.

I wish to deal as briefly as I can with these serious statements. Of course, the general assertion that men are being murdered by the dozen is supported only by the particular statements that follow. I am not going to enter into a discussion of the general statement that men are being murdered by the dozen; but what are the particular statements? We are told that when a man arrives at Kingston penitentiary he is confined in a cell—mind you, this is at the present time—and is allowed to go out for exercise and fresh air. I have followed conditions in the Kingston penitentiary as closely as possible before, and unquestionably since, the investigation into that institution which took place last year. I have impressed upon those responsible for its administration the necessity of remedying so far as possible everything which it was suggested by the investigation called for remedy in that institution. With regard to the first statement, that the man is confined in a cell and allowed to go out for exercise and fresh air; what are the facts in that connection? I may say that before the investigation took place a vacancy occurred in the wardenship of the penitentiary, and I appointed to that wardenship a man of long experience and one considered above reproach. It is true that he was advanced in years, but I did not expect that he would remain long in the position, and he did not. Since then I have had occasion to appoint a second warden, and I have not heard a suggestion that he is not an absolutely capable man. He was a man of long experience in work in connection with penitentiaries. There could not be a suggestion of any political influence in the matter. It is true that the position that he occupied was not directly concerned with the administration—he was accountant in the office here—but I had tried him out; I had used him as acting warden in different institutions as temporary vacancies occurred. I tried him out, I appointed him, and he is now in charge. I refer to Mr. Creighton. As I have said, I have not only endeavoured myself to follow as closely as possible the conditions in the penitentiary, but I have asked that gentleman, warden of the penitentiary, for a statement with regard to these particular affirmations. What does he say as to the treatment of prisoners when they are received in the institution? I read from his report:

When prisoners are received at the penitentiary they are bathed, changed into prison uniform, examined by the surgeon, and their work allotted to them, except on the rare occasions when men are sent from other penitentiaries as incorrigible, when they are confined in the prison of isolation until their conduct warrants their being placed at work with the other prisoners.

That is what is done with them, according to the statement of the warden. I have been there myself on different occasions—and I have no reason to believe that the whole system was revolutionized prior to my arrival—and I found these men at work. I did not find that they had the choice between being locked in their cells and going out for a little exercise. They were at work, and I have the testimony of absolutely reliable people who have been there, as well as of the officers, that that is the regular routine. As to their being prohibited from uttering a word, unquestionably there is a regulation which prohibits talking except under certain conditions: for instance, except upon matters of work in which the men are engaged—I am not pretending to give the exact words of the regulation—or with the guards upon matters pertaining to their work. But what is it that is actually done under that rule? The warden says:

While silence is one of the rules laid down for the guidance of prisoners, it is not rigidly enforced except in the prison of isolation. We do, however, try to enforce the rule to a certain extent, otherwise bedlam would result.

What I am told by people in whom I have absolute confidence is that conversation that constitutes no interruption of work or no creation of noise that would disturb discipline, and that is not otherwise objectionable, is not interfered with, notwithstanding the letter of the rule. The next statement of the hon. gentleman to which I wish to call attention is this:

He is probably put on the stone pile, cracking stone month after month and year after year.

That is what probably happens to him. The warden states:

Unfortunately there is not sufficient work to employ all the inmates otherwise; consequently we have to keep a large gang breaking stone. The stone pile, however, is the last resort. Those working in the tailor and shoe shops and in other sedentary occupations are given exercise in the fresh air morning and afternoon. The prison of isolation is used solely for gross breaches of prison discipline. Except in rare cases the term of confinement is about three months.

Mr. EDWARDS: Does the warden inform the hon. minister what proportion of the total number of inmates work on the stone pile?

Mr. DOHERTY: No, he has not sent me that information. The stone pile is not a pleasant or desirable place, and I shall be glad when it becomes possible to find work for all these men without putting them on the stone pile, but I venture to say that work on the stone pile is better than enforced idleness. However, I do not want to argue; I want to put the facts, as I have every confidence they exist, before this House and before the public. The hon. gentleman further makes this assertion:

He is subjected to tauntings and goadings and torturings, and if he rebels against them he is taken to a specially-constructed cell, a hose pressure of 70 pounds is turned on the poor unfortunate wretch, and he is thrown and knocked about in the cell until, as they say, he gives in.

Bear in mind that it is stated that these things occur at the present time. The report of the warden goes on to deal with matters which do not bear upon the subject under discussion, but I will read them to show that I do not want to conceal anything:

There are two men who have been confined in this building for about three years, for the reason that it would be a menace to the safety of the prison to permit them to be at large with the other prisoners. These are two of the five men who succeeded in escaping from this building about three years ago, after almost killing Guard Davis and seriously injuring two other officers. The other three men implicated in the escape were less dangerous characters, and have been at work for some time. So far as I am aware there are no 'tauntings' or 'goadings' of prisoners by officers. Needless to say if such a thing came to my knowledge it would entail the suspension of the officers and a recommendation that he be dismissed. No prisoner has been hosed since I have been in charge or for some time before.

Mr. Creighton has been in charge, if my memory is correct, since some time last May. He was there as acting warden for a period of time prior to his actual appointment as warden, and I have information, of which I have not the slightest doubt, that for at least two years there has been no hosing, and under his predecessor in office, Col. Irvine, my information is that there has been no hosing, and in any event we are dealing with conditions at the present time. As I said, I gave instructions that care was to be taken, pending whatever might be considered to be the final determination of what ought to be accepted or what ought not to be accepted in the report of the investigation, to avoid the outstanding things that they condemned, and this hosing has not taken place and does not take place at the present time. I do not wish to be carried back to any discussion of the past, but I think it fair to say that any generalization by which it would be understood that any man who came into the penitentiary would at any period probably be hosed, would not be borne out by the evidence before the investigation. But cases were found, and the larger number occurred while the penitentiary was under the administration of a gentleman who was not the permanent regular warden of the penitentiary. However, it will be wiser to adhere to conditions at the present time, because it is present conditions that are in question in the observations of the hon. gentleman, and because no good purpose would be served by going back over the past, save in so far as we may find in it a lesson to guide our conduct in the future.

The next statement of the hon. member for Frontenac is:

If that treatment sends him into the hospital, on Sunday he gets three meals, the first at nine o'clock, the next at eleven o'clock, and the third at one o'clock in the afternoon.

The statement of the warden is:

In the hospital the meals on Sunday are served at, approximately, the following hours: breakfast, 8.15; dinner, 1 p.m.; supper, 4 p.m. During the week the supper hour varies with the closing hour of the prison. This, however, we are trying to rearrange; it requires thought and consideration to bring about the change without endangering the safety of the prison. When patients are seriously ill they receive constant attention, and are given nourishment day and night, as ordered by the surgeon.

Mr. EDWARDS: Is the minister aware that only last July two convicts died in that institution, within twenty-four hours of one another, without any attendance?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not aware.

Mr. EDWARDS: I can tell the hon. gentleman that was published in the papers at the time, so public was it.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have seen a large number of things published in the papers that were not borne out by the facts.

The warden further says:

When prisoners are seriously ill they receive constant attention, and are given nourishment day and night, as ordered by the surgeon. I may say that during the present fiscal year, which will expire on March 31, there have been but two deaths, not a high average with a population of over 500 inmates.

There were two deaths in that period of time; whether they are the two to which the hon. member referred it is impossible for me to say; but as the hon. member tells me that it has been stated that two men died there utterly unattended, I shall inquire into that situation. The warden continues:

9 p.m.

During the winter months the inmates of the asylum, with the exception of two or three, who have marked homicidal tendencies and are of necessity kept in their cells, spend the day in a large room provided for that purpose and there means of recreation, such as draughts and playing cards, are afforded.

During the summer, when the weather permits, they occupy a good-sized yard situated behind the asylum building.

They are given their morning and evening meals in their cells, and their dinner at common tables situated one at the end of each corridor. They are provided with spoons, but no forks.

That is in connection with the statement that:

They tear it to pieces with their fingers and teeth like wild animals.

The warden says:

They are provided with spoons, but no forks, the latter being used in the prison proper only. Tubbing, if it ever existed, has been a thing of the past for a long period.

That is in reference to the statement:

If any one of them dares to utter a protest against one of the guards or keepers, the unfortunate wretch is stripped, specially constructed harness is fastened on him, his legs are bound together and his arms fastened to his side and he is dipped into a tub of ice-cold water, being left there until, as they say, he gives in.

That is the statement of the present warden of the penitentiary with regard to the conditions. As I say, I believe the gentleman to be trustworthy and reliable, and, with regard to the statement he makes to me of the conditions, they indicate the carrying out of instructions that were given and insisted upon.

Mr. EDWARDS: Does the warden assign the prisoners to their respective work?

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. member the other afternoon did not refer to that, and therefore I did not inquire; but I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. EDWARDS: Your regulations tell you it is the work of the deputy warden.

Mr. DOHERTY: I believe that is true. The warden, however, has made the statement of the facts. There is a further observation I desire to make with regard to the treatment of the insane. The hon. member, of course, will hardly expect that I will agree with him in his observations as to the Minister of Justice. Of course, he is fully entitled to appreciate my conduct as it presents itself to his view, and I have no desire to quarrel with him on the subject. At the same time, he will not expect me to agree in his observations on that subject. He says:

> That it was three years ago when he first directed my attention to this condition of affairs at Kingston penitentiary and Kingston penitentiary is probably no better than other penitentiaries in the country.

My memory is not in accord with the memory of the hon. member, but I have no desire to quarrel about that. His position in the matter or mine is of relatively small importance as compared with the importance of the work at the penitentiary. As regards the treatment of the insane, I want to add something which may have a bearing on my alleged apathy in that regard.

The Commissioners found that conditions at the insane hospital were not suitable, and recommended—I am not pretending to quote their words—that these people should be in an institution provided for the insane, and suggested that this might be done under the provincial authorities. I took the matter up very shortly after last session and came to the conclusion that the proper course, when it would be possible to do it, would be for this Government to provide a special institution for the detention of insane convicts. I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion it is not a desirable way to deal with persons who are insane, whether convicts or not, to keep them in an insane asylum carried on as an adjunct to a penitentiary.

But of course you cannot create an institution of that kind in a day, and I looked for a more prompt method of action, for something that might temporarily meet what is quite clear to me is a need. I took the matter up with the provincial governments. Under the existing condition of affairs in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, insane convicts are taken care of in insane asylums by the provincial authorities. This had been done under arrangement with the provincial governments. Under the Penitentiary Act we are authorized to deal with insane convicts in one of two ways; either by the establishment and maintenance of an insane ward; or by having them sent to provincial insane asylums under an arrangement made for that purpose with the lieutenant-governor. When this Government came in we found an insane ward in existence at Kingston which had been used for a considerable period of time, and to which insane convicts from the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and I believe from the Yukon, were sent. Such was the system we found in existence. As the result of our own examination, I might perhaps say to some extent of my own examination, as well as in consequence of the views expressed by the Commissioners, I have reached the conclusion that that is not the best way to deal with these unfortunate people. Having that in mind, I took this matter up with the provincial governments shortly after the end of last session. I did not find that it was simply a matter of saying, will you do this? and their being prepared at once to say, yes. The matter was a serious one from their point of view, and while at a very early period the Government of Quebec expressed their willingness to take over convicts from that province, they coupled with it what under their system they necessarily had to, a condition that we should make satisfactory arrangements with the proprietors of the insane asylums; for the system down there is a system of proprietary asylums subsidized by the Government, not a system of government institutions. In Ontario the Government was at first entirely indisposed to take over these patients because of the fact that they found themselves crowded in their present institutions. We had some correspondence on the subject, and I impressed upon these gentlemen the importance of this work and the consideration that it was a good work in the cause of humanity. After looking over the situation they consented to find means to provide for these men, and are at present classifying them at the institutions; for I understand they contemplate distributing these men in different institutions, as the case warrants. In the province of Quebec we have reached the point where the Government has expressed its consent subject to such conditions as I have mentioned, and there I hope arrangements will be completed in a few days. In New Brunswick, where we have only one man to deal with, the Provincial Government has consented to take him over and he has been sent to them. So that we have kept at work preparing this great amelioration, and I hope soon to have it completed. I am free to admit that it might have gone quicker under different circumstances, but I fancy that everybody knows that the condition of this country since the war began, and the condition in which in consequence this Government has been placed, has necessitated delays with regard to many projects. But I am not here pleading any excuses, nor am I making any boasts whatever. The fact is that in common with my colleagues the state of war since August last has created a condition where the time of myself and largely of the people in my department has had to be given to things that were of the first importance and called pressingly for immediate attention. If that situation had not existed this negotiation with regard to insane asylums might have been pushed with more vigour. I do not know that we should sooner have reached a conclusion, because of course it was a matter of persuading other people. Although the work might have gone on quicker in different circumstances, the delay is not for want of a real interest in the subject and a real determination to do the best that was possible to ameliorate the condition of these unfortunate people.

I have made what I deemed to be the necessary explanation to meet the very serious statements which the hon. member (Mr. Edwards) made the other evening. My conviction is that he is misinformed upon these subjects. Further than that I have no comment to make upon his observations. I have no doubt that he acts believing in the truth of his statements and that he was doing his duty in making them. I equally have felt it my duty to meet them with the answer which I have given, and of the correctness of which I am absolutely convinced. In saying that, I am speaking of course of that portion of it which is not personal to myself. As to what has been done and is being done in regard to insane asylums, I speak of my own knowledge.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm) (translation): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention to the statements made this afternoon by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), in respect to the Bill now before the House. I may say at the outset that I fully agree with what he said in regard to capital punishment.

In the course of the last session, the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) introduced a Bill to the same effect, and after listening attentively to what he had to say, I found that I could not comply with his request that I should support his Bill; far from it, I felt bound to oppose it.

I was not at my seat when the hon. gentleman once more introduced the matter, but I have read the report of the speech he delivered on that occasion, and I must say that he did not bring in any new arguments, and was content with going over his statements of last year. The reasons alleged previously, and which had failed to win me over to his point of view, have not met with greater success this year.

As was stated by the hon. Minister of Justice, this is a very serious question and which should be discussed most carefully, without show of prejudice or ill-feeling. When it comes to a question of amending the law inflicting capital punishment, and of repealing its provisions, very weighty reasons should be given to justify such a course. I have the greatest respect for the motives which have induced the hon. member for St. Lawrence to take such a stand. Satisfied that he is fulfilling a duty and doing what is right by his constituents, believing that such a change should be effected, he insists that his Bill should go through. I hasten to say that I believe him to be sincere and acting in good faith, though all the while mistaken. The hon. gentleman submitted to the House a carefully prepared and painstaking presentment of his case; but he will allow me to say that, had he a more intimate acquaintance with what is going on in our criminal courts, and specially in the district of Montreal, possibly he would not be so anxious to secure the repeal of an Act which, in my humble opinion, should remain in our statute-books.

Having enjoyed for the last nine years the signal honour of representing the Attorney General in the district of Montreal, I made it a point, Mr. Speaker, to look into the question, and did my best to satisfy myself that there was something good and useful in the measure introduced by the hon. member. But the older I get, the wider my experience, and the more I am satisfied, on the contrary, that it would be a grievous mistake to abolish capital punishment.

The hon. gentleman referred to judicial errors. He spoke of the pity inspired by, of the mercy which should be shown to, those who murder their fellow creatures, and who are brought up for trial before the criminal courts. I also, Mr. Speaker, have feelings of pity; I also have a heart, I also know that it is painful to condemn a fellow-being to death. But were the hon. gentleman to consider the question from the standpoint of the victims, possibly he would not be so anxious to secure the abolition of the death penalty in the case of those who, from their own impulse, inflicted it on a fellow-citizen.

It is objected: But why hang the man? Would it not be enough to send him to penitentiary for life? Would not society, through such means be sufficiently safeguarded? I have had occasion to see how matters are in the penitentiaries. In 1897, I was called upon to investigate at some length how things were being managed at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. Numerous cases were at the time looked into, until I had obtained a fairly accurate knowledge of the situation. I tried to find out whether errors had not been committed prejudicial to those who were interned, some of them under sentences for life. I also tried to satisfy myself, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence has done, that life sentences in the penitentiaries afford sufficient and adequate protection for the community. Well, I must acknowledge that, as a result, I reached the very opposite conclusion. I found that criminals, though shut up for life in penitentiaries and I make particular reference at St. Vincent de Paul—were still a danger to the community, inasmuch as they were turned into professors for the teaching of crime.

Criminals serving life sentences in our penitentiaries are actually expert teachers in the arts of the criminal, who spend night and day plotting to make their fellow-prisoners even worse than they are. Is that the kind of protection that the hon. member for St. Lawrence would secure for the community? Such people spend the greater part of their lives in the penitentiaries in an effort to corrupt their fellow prisoners. I may state for the benefit of the hon. gentleman that criminals interned in our penitentiaries are the most dangerous people with whom the community has to deal. Society has a right to protect itself against them, and such criminals should be punished in proportion to their guilt.

Oh, but, the hon. gentleman may interpose, you are the Crown prosecutor, and therefore not in a position to express an unbiased opinion, considering that you are paid for doing such work. My answer is that I am no more prejudiced than he is himself, and that moreover, I always feel very sorry when, in the fulfilment of my duties as Crown prosecutor, I must ask that the death penalty be inflicted on some of those poor fellows. I always feel sorry when I have to insist on the carrying out of the law against them. We, Crown prosecutors, are in duty bound to forward the ends of justice, not by any means to secure convictions under all circumstances, and we are always glad when lawyers for the defence can procure the release of their client and induce the jury to give a verdict of not guilty. The fees we are paid are not for the purpose of securing convictions, but solely with a view to forwarding the ends of justice. It is immaterial to us, as far as money is concerned, whether the charge is sustained or not. Should the verdict be one of not guilty, the Crown has no reason to be dissatisfied, since the accused has proved his innocence. A verdict of guilty is also a source of satisfaction to the Crown, since the majesty of the law is thereby upheld. Jurors are at all times warned to be careful before rendering a verdict of guilty to make sure that there is no possibility of error; should there subsist the least doubt, jurors are instructed that the accused should be given the benefit of it, for it is preferable that ninety-nine criminals should escape, rather than have one innocent person to suffer condamnation. Such is our duty and we are careful to fulfill it conscientiously.

Reference has been made to judicial errors; it is an easy matter to dilate on such a subject, but much more difficult to prove one's statements. Now, in the course of the last ten years I have had constantly to do with the administraion of justice in an important district; in the meantime, numerous trials have taken place, many verdicts have been rendered, and once more I assert that not a single judicial error has been pointed out. It has been insinuated that such an error had been committed, but no evidence whatevver has been adduced in support of this contention. A single case has been suggested. It was claimed that a judicial error had been committed in the case of a man in whose behalf the intervention of the Government was sought after he had undergone five or six years' detention in the penitentiary. His discharge was asked, but not on the ground of any judicial error. There was no reference to the subject in the solemn declaration. A petition was forwarded to the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. gentleman deemed it proper to grant the discharge sought for. Is that any evidence of the so called judicial error which has been referred to? No, there was no judicial error committed. What happened was only this, that the hon. minister considered that the prisoner had paid the penalty of his crime and took pity on him; nothing more. I am quite conversant with the case referred to, and I may say to the hon. minister that he was right in extending mercy under the circumstances, and in granting the petition forwarded to him, he did so of his own accord, and not on account of the discovery of any so-called judicial error. He then set at liberty a man who had been five or six years in the penitentiary.

Taking into account the safeguards provided by the requirements of the law in all criminal proceedings, it is not an easy matter that a judicial error should occur. To begin with, a complaint is filed with the magistrate who is not to finally dispose of the case but simply to decide whether there is a prima facie case against the accused, and should this be so, the latter is sent before the grand jury. Witnesses previously summoned before the magistrate will be called to testify a second time before the grand-jury, and the grand-jury in turn, inquires whether the prosecution should go on. Should the grand-jury bring in a true bill, the accused will then have to appear before the petty jury, consisting of twelve of his peers, and they will render final judgment. The evidence is taken and the accused either convicted or discharged. Should the accused be a poor man, unable to secure the services of a lawyer, the Crown immediately provides one for him. and if necessary summons witnesses in his behalf. Should he be found guilty, after being granted the full benefit of doubtful circumstances, the docket is completed and forwarded to the authorities who, in turn, will look into all the proceedings.

The record, then, is examined, so is the judge's charge, so is the evidence, and the judge is expected to forward a report to the Minister of Justice. Should all that prove insufficient, should there still be a doubt, the benefit of that doubt is given to the accused. Lastly, the prisoner may solicit the royal clemency. And, as an additional means, there are the writ of error and the writ of appeal. When new issues are raised by the accused, he has the right to demand that the full court of appeal should look into the records. And still, should he be not satisfied, he may take his case to the Supreme court and as far as the Privy Council in England.

All the aforesaid proceedings show how jealously the rights of the accused are safeguarded, so that full and entire justice be meted out to him. Why then show such compassion for those who are to suffer capital punishment? Why should they specially be the object of our pity?

Murderers do not kill for the mere pleasure of taking other people's life. They do so through a desire to plunder, rob, dispossess their victim of the treasures they covet. Murderers commit outrages, and then take the life of their victims. and dispossess their victim of the treasures They set fire to buildings, and then commit murder. Still there will be found people who take compassion on such ruffians and who are ready to blame others anxious that such crimes be punished by the infliction of the death penalty. They forget that these thugs have not taken compassion on their victims, that they have not even given them time to make their peace with God and clear their conscience before departing for the other life. Criminals, on the other hand, are granted all the time requisite to make their peace with God, a privilege they withheld from their victims. How strange that so much goodly feeling should be expended on these cut-throats, while so little heed is paid to the sufferings of their victims.

There was a poor man, a workingman, settled in my village; he used to work in the quarries at Joliette. One day he started out with some tools, some clothes and twenty dollars in his valise. On his way he was murdered by some one who wanted to have that money and other valuables. Now, the hon. member for St. Lawrence tells us: Hands off that murderer! I say that all the people in my village were loud in their clamourings not for revenge, but for justice, anxious as they were that any others who might be tempted to follow in the lead of that cut-throat should, through the knowledge of the punishment inflicted, be deterred from doing so.

I shall point out another instance. A middle-aged man having met a young girl just leaving school, took her against her will into a house, and after outraging her, shoved her through a third-story window. Notwithstanding that, the hon. gentleman considers that this miscreant is entitled to mercy. I wonder what would have happened, supposing the hon. gentleman had been the father of that child. I am pretty sure that that would have caused him to change his mind, and possibly he would have killed the man on the spot.

I may cite still another case. By dint of hard work and strict economy, a man had succeeded in saving $300. His intention was to send that money to Italy, his country of origin. One of his fellow-citizens, born in the same village, tried to induce a fellow-worker to accompany them both on a trip to the Cedars. His plan was to rob the other fellow and murder him, if need be, with the help of his friend. However, the latter refused, saying that rather than commit such a crime, he would prefer losing his own life. If we are to believe the hon. gentleman the man who started out to commit that crime single-handed was worthy of the concern of his fellow-citizens and should not have undergone capital punishment.

While, as I stated a moment ago, I respect the view held by the hon. member for St. Lawrence, but he must be ignorant of what is going on before the courts.

We are told that once the criminal is interned, the community will no longer run any risks. The hon. gentleman would have quite a different story to tell if he had inquired into the facts which occurred at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in the year 1885-86, when the then warden, Dr. Laviolette, came near losing his life at the hands of some of the convicts serving life sentences and who had been for months engaged in a conspiracy to escape from the penitentiary. They would have attained their object, had it not been for the remarkable courage displayed by the warden who refused to give up the keys to these ruffians. They left him lying in the yard, and believing him to be dead, were content with killing two men and severely injuring a third. Such is the protection afforded by the penitentiary. Mainville,—I can speak freely of him to-day, since he is dead,—was at the time a recognized expert in the arts of the criminal.

During most every session of the Assize Court, convicts are brought from St. Vincent de Paul against whom very serious charges have been made for having wounded, sometimes deadly, the guards of the penitentiary.

Let me tell the honourable member that he is mistaken, and that those people do more harm than before, because their hatred toward authority is boundless.

The hon. member may re-introduce his Bill every session—it is his right to do so—but I do not think he will ever find a majority to sanction his request. As far as I am concerned, he must set forth some more convincing reasons in order to have me change my opinion.

I say to the hon. member: You are not doing justice to the community by asking, with no argument whatever in support of your proposal, that we should do away with capital punishment. A poor man is slaughtered, his wife and children are plunged into the greatest misery as a consequence of that crime, and then you talk of charity, of humanity, of what a cruel thing it is to take away the life of a fellow man. But did the murderer allow his victim to prepare for death, to set his temporal and spiritual concerns in order? No, he struck him treacherously, without giving him one moment for reflection, whereas he, the murderer, will have months and months to prepare his departure from this life, in view of the life to come.

The hon. Minister of Justice was quite right in saying, a moment ago, that the most dangerous culprits are those interned in the penitentiaries. Most of the strangers who become guilty of such heinous crimes are from countries where capital punishment has been abolished. I have examined the record of some of these prisoners, and I could not believe my eyes when I witnessed that a man had only been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for having once committed murder, and to nine months for the same offence in another instance. Is it strange that such individuals, when in our country, should kill so readily? No, because such is their frame of mind. They think that the same treatment is awaiting them here as in their own country, and that they will get no more than six months' imprisonment for one murder and nine months for another.

The session of March will soon be opened. Indeed, there is a great increase in the number of crimes, but that increase would be still greater were the hon. member for St. Lawrence to have his Bill approved by this House. We could no longer allow our wives and children to go out and walk on the streets of our great cities after six o'clock in the evening, nor even by full daylight, lest they should be attacked. Is it not true that things so happened in the case of Hayden, who slaughtered a child in order to rob him of eleven cents? Yes, he struck him with his knife and left him dead on the sidewalk. And the hon. member tells us that we should have pity on that man, on that murderer? Really, I cannot believe my ears.

I am only quoting those several cases from memory; but how many crimes are committed which will remain forever unknown and unpunished, notwithstanding the severity of the law? Who does not recollect the case of Gregoire? A man knocked a poor woman down on Jacques-Cartier street at three o'clock in the afternoon, to rob her of five dollars; he had pounded her with a bottle and had left her as dead on the street. And we should have pity on that man? Who does not recollect also the case of Demers which created such a sensation at the time, the murderer in that case, having never been detected? The poor woman was found weltering in her blood, at six o'clock in the morning. And the case of Quinn? Somebody had murdered a poor old woman who lived alone in her house, in order to take $100 away from her; the corpse was found, cut to pieces, at four o'clock in the afternoon.

Let us extend our protection to thieves and murderers, when no later than last winter, at St. Laurent, in my own village, Beauchamp, Bourret and Foucault, who had just stolen a few flitches of meat at a butcher's stall in the village, killed two policemen who were trying to arrest them, for we all know that robbers are always provided with the tools they want for the purpose of committing murder. Let us protect those assassins, let us have pity on them, let us ask that the law be repealed, let us apply to those poor murderers the law of Christ which forbids that they should be hanged, because this would be contrary to humanity. Well, as far as I am concerned, I say that the assassins and the murderers should behave honestly, and they would by no means be endangered. But so long as the law of Christ demands that justice should be done, so long as humanity remains what it is, let us apply this precept: Eye for eye, tooth for tooth. He who draws the sword shall perish by the sword. If you wish to be respected, you should first have respect for others.

The motives of these culprits are always the same: Robbery, plunder and rape.

When a prisoner comes before us and is found guilty of a mere manslaughter, never is he hanged. The Crown must prove that there was malice and premeditation, in order that an execution should take place. If the Crown failed to establish that the murder was committed deliberately, with malice, and premeditation, the verdict should always be to the effect that there was manslaughter only.

[Mr. Lafortune.]

It was said before to-night, and justly so, that the assassins should first refrain from committing murder, and hanging would then be done away with. But until the assassins have done so, I see no reason why our laws providing for capital punishment should be amended. It has been suggested that we should make an experiment; the hon. member urged us to repeal the law, and he suggested that, should this measure fail to give good results, we could at any rate, have capital punishment restored. But the same experience was made in other countries; in France, for instance, the system advocated by the hon. member was resorted to. The guillotine was abolished, and what was the result? Crimes increased in number to such an alarming extent that the guillotine had to be restored. Why should we put ourselves in such a danger, I pray? Why should we make such a trial? Why should such a sad experience repeat itself in our country? I shall go no further, I have said enough already to make myself understood and to give an account of the experience I have acquired before the criminal courts.

I respect the opinion of the hon. member, but I think he is mistaken in requesting us to adopt such a Bill, a Bill which would bring about an intolerable condition of things, especially at this time, exposed as we are to receive here a great number of strangers as a consequence of what is taking place in other countries. In fact, we may well fear that with the influx of immigration which will come to our country hereafter and settle within our walls, a great number of these culprits may be found whom capital punishment alone could deter from committing such heinous crimes.

Let me tell the mayor of Montreal, who is sitting by my side, that he would not remain in his chair, as mayor of that great city, for a very long time were we to adopt this Bill. Owing to the official position which he holds, he is not a single day without receiving all kinds of threats from miscellaneous vagabonds, and were not the scaffold there, ready to throttle these misbelievers, they would soon put their threats into effect and kill him. The sentiments of the hon. member call for our respect, but he also must respect the opinion of those who think otherwise than he does. We are interested in the sound administration of justice to the same extent as he is, and that is the reason why we take leave to differ in opinion with him on such a serious question.

I think I would be neglecting my duty as member for Montcalm should I fail to follow the dictates of my conscience, enlightened as it is by the experience I have acquired before the assizes of Montreal, and were I not to vote against the Bill now before us.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I presume that I am expected to make some reply to the very many criticisms—and some of them are rather unjust—which have been offered since I introduced this proposed amendment to the Criminal Code. I do not think my hon. friend from Montcalm (Mr. Lafortune) is a very fair witness in this case. He has had a great, big harvest out of sending souls into eternity, I suppose no bigger harvest than he has had in 1914, and he is expecting a very large one in 1915. He has grown fat, lusty and wealthy on sending souls into eternity without caring where they are going to. It is generally stated that the hon. gentleman has made $50,000 out of sending souls into eternity. I shall not reply to the hon. gentleman any further than that. I say that he is an interested party. He wants the law, he wants the murders, and he wants to send the murderers to the other world. I would like to say one or two words in regard to the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). While he was opposed to this Bill, he gave reasons for his opposition and these are the very reasons I advance in support of it. He said that it would be more of a punishment to send a man to Kingston penitentiary than to hang him. That is what I have contended all along. My hon. friend, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) argued rather in that direction too. He said that the loss of liberty was a greater punishment to the individual than the taking of his life. That is also exactly what I have been contending for. That is the principle upon which I have founded this Bill. If you want to punish a man and to provide a deterrent, I say it is a greater deterrent to send him to penitentiary, with the consequent loss of liberty, than that he should lose his life, and if that is the case let us abolish capital punishment.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. gentleman made out a very strong case for you.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: He made out a fairly good case for me. I do not think the Minister of Justice really intended to put it just in that way. The Minister of Justice says that all of these men that commit murders in Canada come from a country where capital punishment has been abolished and is not now in existence. They come to this country, where murder is staring them in the face, and naturally they commence to murder. Would you expect anything else from men coming from a country where there is no legalized murder into a country where the Minister of Justice approves of and stands by it—would you, I say, expect anything else than that these poor, ignorant men should start killing each other, if not one of us? The state here sets the example to murder, and as long as the state sets the example to murder you will have murder.

It looks to me as though my Bill were going to be guillotined, but I do hope that my hon. friends, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), and others who supported me in this measure, will not become discouraged. The time will come when the people will realize that hanging a few poor, miserable men every year, strangling a half-dozen citizens or so, is not going to be the best law for this country. It may look all right now. The Minister of Justice surprised me very much, because in the old days, before he got into politics, he was a good, tender-hearted judge. Now with him it is more rope, and nothing but the rope. We may not live to see the day when the millennium is here, when swords will be beaten into plough-shares and spears into pruning-hooks, but we will see the day when the better elements in this country will rise in their might, and in that day they will make oakum of your halters, they will smash your gallows, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific make kindling-wood of your scaffolds. If the Government wishes to teach that human life is sacred, they must not set the example of deliberately destroying it. I am not disposed now to argue the question at any length at this late hour, of the impropriety of the punishment by death on entirely religious grounds, nor do I intend to quote largely from the Scriptures in support of my views. We should study this question with a just estimate of its importance and unbiased prejudices which form an almost impassable barrier. The hon. member for Montcalm would not understand the sentiment. I think I have surely furnished sufficient proof to convince any real enquirer after truth that any extreme of cruelty in punishment, beyond what could be proved to be really necessary and indispensible, is contrary to the profession of Christianity. That is the ground I stand on here. The question again resolves itself into proof, and I think I have already shown that the punishment of death is useless and unnecessary.

The security of life in Canada does not depend upon the public strangling of a few poor wretches every year, and I should be glad indeed that it might be said of this Government and this Parliament at some future time that it had dared to act upon the true lessons and not upon the superstitions of the past, and that it might be declared to be the Parliament which destroyed the gallows in order that it might teach that human life is sacred, for upon that alone can the public safety be secured. Reference has been made to the hanging of a poor unfortunate negro, the first criminal to be hanged on the new gallows at Bordeaux, and I may say here that the general impression is that poor Campbell was hanged innocent, at least so far as the crime for which he suffered is concerned. I do not mean to say, that he was an innocent man; he was a bad man, a poor man, a black man, he had no friends, and therefore he was hanged. Just before leaving the cell, in company with the Catholic priest, he wrote this illiterate and mis-spelled letter:

> This is the word to let them know I died for nothing, before God and man I am not guilty of this crime, it was all made up on me by.....and the detectives. Really I am not guilty of what I am accused. I want all coloured men not to take up with white women for God's sake, goodby.
>
> (Signed) William Campbell, > in death cell.

He was just leaving his cell with his father confessor, to step into eternity, and this is what he said. He was hanged on January 24, 1914—my hon. friend from Montcalm knows all about it—for the murder of George Muir, at Senecal station on the Park and Island railway.

I wonder if the judge and the jury and my hon. friend the Crown Prosecutor and his running mate the Crown Executioner realize that they will have to stand on that last great Judgment Day side by side with these poor criminals whom they have sent into eternity. It is well to think upon these things at times. I have no doubt that the Minister of Justice will realize that also in regard to that poor man in British Columbia whom he sent into eternity, for which act he takes all the responsibility. I submit that where the equities are equal the element of mercy should hold the balance of power in deciding this question; and with the statistics which I have given the House all the members ought to be convinced that the equities are equal, and that they will vote for mercy instead of blood for blood.

My hon. friend has given half a dozen pictures. Let me give just one—of the awful suffering and remorse of the family of the victim of the homicide. We agree that it is hard on the family of the deceased and our sympathy goes out to them whether death is the result of assassination or of justifiable homicide. It is just the same in either case. But for that reason would you have two widows, two sets of orphans and two sorrowing parents? Why, the family of the prisoner are just as innocent of an offence as the family of the deceased, and are just as much entitled to compassion and sympathy. For example, a man commits murder. He probably got drunk or was by environment made a criminal. He has a good wife and also children; a good mother and father and a large number of relatives, all innocent people and profoundly grieved that the offence was committed. The accused is tried and convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The very thought of taking the life of the husband, father, brother and son breaks a multitude of hearts. The time has healed the wounds that grief for the victim rent; but as the days roll by and the time approaches for the execution of the prisoner, the hearts of the mother and father all but break; the affectionate and tender cord of love that stretches from the altar to the scaffold is crushed but not broken, and the heart of the wife once gay is burned to its very socket. She goes to and from the awful death cell. Little innocent hearts of children are crushed like the tender blades of grass beneath the angry wheels of cannon on the German battlefield, yet they are all innocent. The brother and sister suffer for his sins, and see his ghost-like form in their dreams of repose. As the day draws near, the father and mother with tottering footsteps visit the death cell, and their minds wander back to the time when a little boy said his prayers at his mother's knee and whistled the tune that his father carrolled, and they ask God why they have this affliction to bear. The wife, children and relatives and friends all bid him goodby and leave with breaking hearts, bitterly thinking of to-morrow. With heart-breaking despair, the mother prays God to spare her child, and as the time flies by, the height of Heaven could not measure her sorrow. The father's hair turns gray over night, and their very souls are all scarred and forever seared over by the thought of the vengeance visited on their unfortunate relative, son and husband and father. The parents are hurried to their graves of broken hearts; the wife tries to forget, but cannot forgive and the hearts of the children, relatives and friends are hardened by the harrowing example of killing by the country. Two families are in mourning and the prisoner's family crushed and heart-broken by a protracted suspense, and that amounts to cruelty to the innocents. Then why make two families instead of one desolate? Then suppose he was innocent? The country cannot retract what it has done. If life imprisonment would serve the same purpose, would you not prefer it to the death penalty? My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says it is a greater deterrent than the death penalty. Then why not abolish the death penalty?

One of the strongest arguments why capital punishment should be abolished is that innocent men are sometimes executed, and I will give a few instances. Some time ago Sir James McIntosh, a most calm and dispassionate observer, declared that, taking a long period of time, one innocent man was hanged in England every three years. I have no doubt my good friends the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Montcalm will say: What is one man in three years; let him go; he will hardly be missed.

The late Chief Baron Kelly stated, as the result of his experience, that from 1802 to 1840, no fewer than twenty-two innocent men had been sentenced to death in England, of whom seven were actually executed. That is a point that apparently my opponents have forgotten. I wonder how my hon. friend will feel when he sends an innocent man into eternity?

Mr. LAFORTUNE: No proof of that—only your assertion.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I am giving you authorities.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: No proof—it is only the opinion of that man.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: It is pretty nearly as good as yours. Here is an opinion that the Crown Prosecutor will approve. Mrs. Booth says:

> I know a man who has served nine years and is still in prison, where he has been visited by the boy whom he was supposed to have murdered. The fact that in our day justice may thus miscarry must give men constant pause before they seek remedial vengeance in the death penalty.

My opponents have handled the question altogether on the line of vengeance—a man has committed murder and we must kill him.

Mr. Scruggs, former secretary to ex-Governor Patterson, states on his honour that, while he was serving as said ex-Governor's secretary, an innocent negro was hanged, as it developed subsequent to the hanging.

Two negroes by the name of Duvall and Clapp were arrested for rape on a white woman by the name of Warden. She could not state whether her assailants were white or black. They tried, convicted and hanged the two negroes at Blandville, Ky. Their last words were that they were innocent of the crime. Some years later a white man by the name of Gossop moved to Arkansas from Milburn, and shortly afterwards took sick, and on his deathbed made confession to the crime. But two innocent lives had gone to meet their Maker. Let me give a few names that I know will be familiar to my friend. Socrates, Cicero, Sir Walter Raleigh, Algernon Sidney, John Huss, Michael Servetus, Louis XVI, the Duc d'Enghien, Marshall Ney, Riego, Sandor Nagi, Maximilian, are among the conspicuous instances of victims of the law of blood.

I will now cite a case that I think the Minister of Justice knows something about as well as the hon. member for Montcalm. The most powerful case cited by Mr. McConnico was the Durand case, from California. Durand, though ably defended, was convicted of the murder of his sweetheart in the tower of a church; and, on what appeared, so far as human eye could see, an absolutely perfect and unbreakable case of circumstantial evidence, he was convicted and hanged. About a year after the murder, the minister of the church in which the murder occurrred confessed that he was guilty of the crime for which the other man had been put to death.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: Have you the confession?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: No, I have not been there for some time. My hon. friend painted a very brilliant picture of a man robbing another of twenty dollars. I think that man deserved punishment, and I would not care how much you punished him, if you did not send his soul into eternity unprepared. And I want to say, that any man who really believes in the eternity of the soul will not vote for capital punishment—he cannot do it.

My hon. friend the Minister of Justice said, I think, that we had divine authority for capital punishment. He did not tell us where he found it. From Genesis to Revelation there is no commandment, no recommendation, of capital punishment. In fact, the Creator proved that he was in favour of the life penalty as against the death penalty. I was surprised when the Minister of Justice made that statement. Of course, he would not have made it had he not believed it; but I think it will be very difficult for him to establish it. Let me point out where you will find a very strong contradiction of the belief that we have divine authority for sending these poor souls into eternity. When Cain slew Abel—and that was the first murder we read about—God was the only arbiter between men. He was both the political and moral governor of men. Did God kill Cain? On the contrary, he gave him a life sentence, the very thing I am asking for:

> When thou tillest the ground it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

And He added, in order to prevent another murder:

> Whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him seven fold.

Could anything be clearer than that? I repeat, I challenge the Minister of Justice or any other member of this House to find a single word in Scripture, in the word of God, from Genesis to Revelations, that approves of capital punishment. No such word can be found.

The Minister of Justice said that he knew of some places that had abolished capital punishment, and reinstated it. I do not like to contradict the hon. gentleman, but I am sure he is in error. I say it boldly, there is no place in the world to-day that has once abolished capital punishment and is practising it to-day. Some places have abolished capital punishment and then reinstated it. But only for a short time. I say I do not wish to directly contradict the minister, if he has proof of his statement. But I have written to all these different countries, and in every case I have an answer that they are not practising capital punishment now. That is true of twenty-nine places. We had twenty-eight places when this Bill was up last year, but since then New South Wales has adopted my very Bill. If these places find that abolition of capital punishment is best, and if the people there are satisfied, surely the Minister of Justice and the Crown Prosecutor will not attempt to show that those people should be dissatisfied. These people say, in effect, that the abolition of capital punishment has reduced crime; were it otherwise they would go back to capital punishment.

I wish to tell the Minister of Justice that the day will come when he will introduce this Bill; he will get credit for it, and that will be all right. I should be glad if he would adopt the Bill and take the credit for it now; I had hoped until recently that he would accept the Bill as a Government measure.

I had intended laying a lot of statistics before the House; but the hour is late, and I will finish by giving one more picture—it is a picture that many hon. members have seen. A French painter has depicted this scene: In the dreary hours of night, Napoleon's drummer boy is made to arise and sound the march. The ghost of Napoleon comes forward and stands at attention. And then the Grand Army and the Old Guard pass by in solemn review before the "Archangel of War." They come from Arcola, from Lodi, from Austerlitz, from Waterloo. And on Napoleon's face you see an expression which says as plainly as words: Is it possible that I am responsible for all these men being sent into eternity?

How many men have been burned at the stake for their religious convictions—and surely religious conviction is no crime, whether we agree with it or not. Hundreds and hundreds have been burnt, some because they would not turn Protestant, some because they would not turn Catholic. As you are considering the passing of this law, the blood of the many martyrs of the block, the guillotine and the gibbet appeal to you to abolish the law that is founded on vengeance and destruction instead of on mercy and reform.

Motion for second reading of Bill negatived on division.

TITLE OF REAL ESTATE BILL.

Mr. GEORGE E. McCRANEY (Saskatoon) moved the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the Criminal Code. He said:

This Bill is to amend Section 390 of the Criminal Code, which is as follows:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, being a trustee of any property for the use or benefit, either in whole or in part, of some other person, or for any public or charitable purpose, with intent to defraud, and in violation of his trust, converts anything of which he is trustee to any use not authorized by the trust. 55-56 V., c. 29, s. 363.

A period of speculation in real estate such as Canada has recently passed through is inseparable from conditions where persons contract to sell what they themselves have not title to, and for which they have not paid, and for which they may never pay. The losses which are being suffered by many buyers of land who have paid their money and are unable to obtain title or to secure return of the moneys paid show that our laws are defective in the obligations which they impose on those who sell under such circumstances. The purpose of a purchaser in paying money is to become the owner of the land which he buys. Until that purpose is accomplished, the purchaser should have an interest in the moneys which he has paid. At present the law gives him no interest, and when he cannot obtain title to lands purchased his only right is to a judgment for damages which will include the moneys paid. This course will always be expensive, but usually valueless. Our law at present treats these purchase moneys as belonging to the seller of lands, and imposes no corresponding duty to make use of them for the purpose for which they are paid, namely, to perfect title in the purchaser. Sometimes the moneys are squandered before the eyes of a purchaser who has no right to interfere, for he has no interest in the moneys, no matter what his misgivings may be. This Bill would impose a duty on such a seller of land to use the money in clearing up his own title, and to hold in trust any moneys not so used until that end is accomplished. Until the vendor has title in himself, the purchaser would have an interest in any moneys which may be in the vendor's hands. The principle is not new, for where the title is held by the vendor the interest of the purchaser in the property being paid for is recognized. The statement in Halsbury's "Laws of England," vol. 28, p. 64, is as follows:

> A person who has contracted to sell real property to the purchaser is in a sense a trustee of it for the purchaser, but until the completion of the purchase he has a lien upon it for the payment of the purchase money. He has also a substantial and paramount interest in the property, and a right to protect that interest, and an active right to assert that interest if anything is done in derogation of it.

This Bill would apply the same principle to the converse case, and would impose a trust interest on behalf of a purchaser in the moneys paid where the interest could not be imposed on the lands.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I have read the Bill of the hon. member, and there is, no doubt, a good deal to be said in favour of the proposition. I should like to point out, however, that the Government is, with regard to this measure and to measures generally looking to the amendment of the Criminal Code, in this position: they did not contemplate passing legislation at the present session providing for amendment of the Criminal Code. Our desire has been, so far as that is possible consistently with the public interest, to limit any legislation that may be introduced to legislation connected in some way with the war conditions. Under these circumstances I—and other members of the Government, I think—in answering a number of applications for amendments to the Criminal Code, intimated that we did not propose to introduce legislation for that purpose at this session, and that, therefore, we were not prepared to take up the suggested amendments. Quite a number of those would have a great deal to be said in their favour if we should depart from that rule. Should we facilitate the passing of the Bill of the hon. member, I think it will be agreed that it would only be fair that those who have suggested other amendments should have an opportunity of submitting them, and, if amending legislation is to be passed, that there should be an opportunity of embodying in the Bill the amendments sought by these other parties, if they should be approved. My hon. friend the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) the other evening pressed upon us very strongly an amendment to the Criminal Code connected with the Copyright Act. I may say, therefore, that I would be disposed, with the understanding that by so doing we do not necessarily adopt the principle of the Bill, to allow this Bill to have its second reading, and after that I shall at a subsequent sitting move that it be referred to a committee together with such other suggested amendments to the Criminal Code as may come up.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York) moved the second reading of Bill No. 30, to amend the Railway Act. He said:

A year ago the Government brought in a Bill to amend the general Railway Act, and in it there was a clause placing the regulation of the capitalization of railway companies under the control of the Railway Commission. We have received no intimation from the Government that they intend introducing legislation this session to amend the Railway Act, but I am convinced that the railway situation is such that if we do not re-introduce the whole of the proposed amending legislation, we ought to bring forward some of its more important clauses and have them put into law this session, particularly in view of the fact that the difficulties sought to be removed may be increased by neglect of Parliament to deal with the matter this session.

I have called the attention of this House time after time to the capitalization of one great company in Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have endeavoured to point out that that company has been financing in an expensive way at the expense of the country, and especially at the expense of those who use the railway. I did suggest that we should have a law similar to that which they have in many of the states of the Union, providing that a company's capitalization shall be subject to regulation by a commission, which would see that any money raised for the benefit of the company is raised only because it is absolutely necessary, and in such a manner as to place the lightest burden upon the people who use the railway. The Canadian Pacific railway and other railways in this country have, so far as I can make out, conducted their financial operations in a manner expensive to those who use the road, and therefore I think it is high time that we should adopt the system which now prevails in New York State, thus providing that if a railway wishes to increase its capitalization it must show good reason for doing so and must show that the method it proposes to employ is one that is in the public interest.

There is a rumour in the press that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company intend to increase their capitalization, to divide the company, and to do other things that are, I think, largely in the interests of the shareholders rather than in the interests of the country. In this time when transportation is, as was stated here this afternoon of greatest importance, it is essential that the intention of the Government to bring the capitalization of railways under public control should be speedily carried out. If we neglect it this session something will be done in the meantime by the railway that will be against the public interest. We have taken over control of the Canadian Northern railway, and its capitalization is now strictly within the control of this Parliament. Why should not that be the case with every other railway company that we have in Canada? As I said, there is a danger of the public interest being jeopardized by new legislation on the part of the Canadian Pacific railway and other roads. It is for the purpose of having these matters immediately placed under the Railway Commission and of preventing anything unfair to the public being done that I urge that this law should be adopted this session. There is no harm done to the railway if it be made to justify its new issues, and if it is shown that the plan which it proposes to follow is in the public interest there is no hardship in it.

The great trouble to-day throughout the world is improvident capitalization in connection with great corporations. The experience of the United States in connection with the Boston and Maine, the New York, New Haven and Hartford especially, the Rock Island and other railroads show that road after road has been ruined or injured by improvident capitalization; and, as a consequence, the people of the United States are now seeking to bring all of this capitalization under control. To show what improvident legislation will do in the way of capitalization one has only to look at the failures all over Canada, from ocean to ocean, in connection with over-capitalized companies. If you take the mergers that have taken place, if you look into the flotations that have been made, if you look into the way in which the great industries of this country have been over-capitalized and then put in a condition that they could not pay their interest or any dividends, and if you look at and realize the way they have been wrecked, you will find that over-capitalization is the cause of their trouble. A marvellous light has been thrown on this question of capitalization in the United States lately. A man named Henry Ford started a great automobile industry, beginning in a very small way. He succeeded in the operations of his company and he is to-day distributing $25,000,000 of the profits of his company among his employees. He is enabled to do it because there has been no water injected into that great company. You find company after company whose profits ought to be as large as Ford's; had they not to pay dividends on watered stock the owners would have been enabled to do as Ford has done and to pay out the profits of the company for the benefit of the workingman.

Anyone who professes to have the interests of labour at heart must admit that the only way to get fair treatment out of the great bulk of these corporations is to control their capitalization, put it down to the lowest possible amount and have it of a kind that bears least on those who are patrons of the proposition. If a company finance by issuing bonds say at 4 per cent instead of stock on which owners expect 10 per cent and if we stop this business of cutting melons we will overcome much of the trouble. It is not a legitimate proposition that a public company, holding a public franchise, should devote its time to cutting melons for the benefit of the shareholders; it should be devoting its main attention to the service of the public and there cannot be good and faithful service to the public where there is an enormous over-capitalization—and there are so many instances of it. Take all these outside flotations that are centered in Canada with franchises today in parts of the world. We have had scores and scores floated all over Canada, Mexicans, South Americans, and others. They have all been over capitaized, none of them have realized the promises of their promoters; the public served by the franchise have not had a good service and the people who have invested their capital have largely lost thereby. They have lost because we allowed this unfair capitalization to take place. It must be regulated. We have been promised in Parliament time after time that it would be regulated. We have had Ministers of Justice in this House who have said that it was not any concern of the public that they ought to be regulated, but all experience goes to show that you must regulate capitalization in such a way as to bear least on the public. That is all I ask. I ask that the railways of this country, who have undertaken to solve the transportation problem of Canada shall do it on sound financial lines, on lines that will be approved of by the public and be in the public interest. The Government of the day have recognized this principle. They put it in a Bill which they introduced last session. That Bill was delayed. I do not see why it should be delayed now. I see the seriousness of the situation in regard to the war, but I also see the disturbance the war is causing to the transportation and the settlement of our West, and in trying to build the West up again and have it populated, we should let the people of the West and of Canada know that when we are creating corporations for the public we shall take power to regulate their capitalization. I say that is a reasonable thing and if we neglect to do it now some of these companies will get away from our jurisdiction and do whatever they wish before they come under the law. If the Government will say that they did not quite see their way this session to go on with this legislation but they will give notice to the corporations that none of them will be allowed to deal with their capitalization until the general law can be passed, I might be satisfied to accept that and probably the country would be satisfied. I feel that I do not need to argue in favour of this proposition. The consensus of opinion is in favour of it. The effect of the clause that I have here tonight is a recognized Government measure of last session. Inasmuch as they are following on the lines of legislation in other countries I say that we ought to adopt it now and let every one know that hereafter undue inflation in connection with public franchises, and especially railways, will not be allowed.

A Bill was introduced in this House in connection with a steamship company a year or so ago. I opposed it and I gave as a reason then that there was a flotation proposition in it that was against the interests of the public. It was denied in a way, but what happened afterwards? They organized under the Companies Act and they did what they liked in connection with their flotations. It has been a great disappointment to the people who put their money into it. Our object today, if we are to assist in the recuperation of Canada, in trying to regain our position after this war, will be to encourage and allow only sound financing in this country in connection with these companies. If we put an end for all time to this high financing and get them back to honest and fair measures, we shall be doing a lot to put this country in better shape. It will take this country and the mother country and every nation in Europe years to recover from the setback occasioned by the war, and nothing will so much prevent a recovery as unfair financing. I could go fully into that and give argument after argument, but it does not require it. It seems to me absolutely in the public interest that the high financing which takes place in connection with railways in this and other countries should cease. All these matters should be under the control of a public body and, following the lines of the Government Bill of last session, my suggestion is to put these matters under the regulation of the Railway Commission.

The other clause of this Bill deals with a matter that largely affects the cities of Toronto and Montreal, and in fact the whole country. The clause is taken from the Government Bill of last session, and is to give power to the Railway Commission to make an order, if it sees fit, whereby a municipality can associate itself with a railway company that proposes to build a bridge within the municipality, in order that a joint bridge may be built for vehicular and steam traffic. That is a sound commonsense principle. In my own constituency the Canadian Pacific railway has built within the last two or three years two great bridges. The township council of York, through its council, approached the railway company and asked to be allowed to join in the building of the bridge so that a roadway might be made for the public. The railway company said they were ready to discuss the matter; but it was not discussed. Other great bridges are to be built in my constituency over ravines that the public wish to cross, and they would be prepared to pay a fair share of the cost if they had an opportunity of doing so. This clause is to give them that right. One of the members of the city of Montreal, when this matter was up in the Railway Committee a year ago, pointed out that it was of the greatest importance to the people of Montreal as also to people of other towns and cities in the province of Quebec. I have seen members of the Railway Committee urge time after time that municipalities be given the right to join with the railways in building bridges. The Railway Commission would apportion the cost. Member after member from the West has brought up cases of this kind where people want a public roadway in connection with the bridges that are built across the rivers and ravines in their districts. In a number of cases the railways have of their own motion joined with the municipalities in giving such a public service bridge. The demand for this kind of bridge is greatly increasing. The question is up in my constituency, and in the city of Toronto where the railways propose to build additional bridges over the great ravines that surround the city, and there is no reason why the city of Toronto and the municipality should not have the right to join with the railway company in order to get a public roadway as well as a railway bridge. These two things are in the public interest and are needed now and every day, and I see no reason why Parliament should not put these two clauses on the statute-book this year. It is for that purpose, because I think it is in the public interest, that I have introduced the Bill this session. I should like to have it read a second time, but would prefer to have seen it discussed in Committee of the Whole House and dealt with there; but as the Minister of Railways has moved that the previous Bill go to the Railway Committee I suppose, if the House sees fit, the same course will be taken with this Bill, and that I shall have to bring forward my arguments there. The need for this legislation is apparent to everybody, and it is more needed now than ever it was. It will help to meet the general transportation question, and the financing of the railways. It will help the settlement of the country, and give farmers better rates and better bridges to the towns, and Parliament will have done something towards meeting conditions in this country. For that reason I move the second reading of this Bill.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia): At this late hour I shall only occupy the House for a moment or two. I quite agree with the object of the Bill and the remarks made by the mover. I think the over-capitalization of our railways is one of the biggest difficulties that this Parliament will have to deal with in the future. If it were not for over-capitalization I do not think the different railways would be coming here before the Railway Commission on the 1st of March next to ask for an increase in railway rates. Nor would they need to increase the rates to pay handsome dividends on their capitalization, at least on all the money that went into their capitalization. There is no reason why we should not take this action. The country practically financed the Canadian Pacific railway, and certainly the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, the three companies which own practically the whole mileage in Canada. As this Bill is exactly in accordance with what the Government undertook to do last year I trust the minister will see his way clear to accept and pass it this session. I see by the press that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company again proposes to ask for a large increase in their capitalization. As the hon. member for South York has pointed out, if not to-night, on some former occasion, if the money was borrowed on debentures at four per cent, it would not be necessary to charge as high freight rates to pay that interest as the company has to do when it sells stock on what it now pays ten per cent, and on which I presume it expects to pay ten per cent in the future. There can be no harm in asking the railways to come before the board and make out their case. They can say how much money they want and how they propose to get it, and if they make out a reasonable case the Railway Commission would undoubtedly give them the authority they ask for. But if they can get money at four per cent instead of ten per cent, I think the Railway Commission would say to them that it was in the interests of the company, in the interest of its patrons, and of the farmers and producers and of everybody that used the road, that they should get the money on the cheapest basis and put it into the company instead of into the pockets of the shareholders. For these reasons I have much pleasure in seconding the motion for the second reading.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (South Renfrew): I have a good deal of sympathy with the object of my hon. friend from South York. I think much of our difficulty at the present time arises from over-capitalization and the merging of different interests without any control over them whatever. My hon. friend has spoken of the protection of the public. That is true. Greater rates have to be charged in order to meet the overhead expenses, including interest on watered stock. But there is the other side to it and that is the side of the investor. I think it is time that we went a little farther than the Bill of my hon. friend proposes and, in conjunction with the provinces, took a little more interest in the amalgamation of different concerns, including industries, because while the public suffer, I am afraid our good name in the money markets of the world is also suffering from the fact that we are flying a good many kites and asking the capitalists of the world to invest in undertakings which, on account of very great capitalization, are not proving a financial success. When times are good and everything is running along swimmingly this is not noticed so much, but when the pinch comes and we find that some concerns formerly looked upon as quite solvent have to cease even paying their bond interest and have to postpone further dividends on preferred stock, we begin to wonder if these investments are sound. We in Canada may perhaps have more confidence in them, being on the ground, but we do not supply the money to float these great institutions. Everybody knows that during the next two years investors will be particularly careful where they place their money as there will be such a demand for it. Belgium will have to be resuscitated and money will be required by Great Britain, France, Russia, Servia, and all the countries involved in the present struggle. Untold millions will be necessary and it will not perhaps be so easy to get money and certainly not so easy unless we can present a good financial standing to the financiers of the world. I would prefer that this Bill should go on to a committee, although I am prepared to discuss it in Committee of the Whole, for the reason that the Government has rather given notice to the large companies that they will be allowed a hearing before the committee on all questions affecting the Railway Act. They will expect that, and we want to be absolutely fair to the men who have their money invested in these great undertakings, and I think it would be unwise not to give them that opportunity which they had been expecting to place their side of the case before Parliament, through the committee which has been appointed. As to the second clause, the railways will object to that, although I do not see much reason for their objection. While I was Minister of Railways and Canals this question came up on two or three occasions, but unfortunately bridges were started before they were brought to my notice. The railways declined to enter into any negotiations. I see no reason why, if a bridge is being constructed and if a municipality will pay the extra cost, such construction should not be made to admit of a roadway or footway being added at the time or at such future time as the municipality may decide. If something of this kind had been in force, and the Board of Railway Commissioners had had the power, we would not have had the spectacle that we have to-day of having to avail ourselves of a scow ferry when we wish to go from Montreal westward. There are two bridges at different places across the Ottawa river and yet people with an automobile or a vehicle of any kind have to take a very primitive ferry to get across the river. This is a move in the right direction. Possibly the railway companies may have some better reasons than I have yet heard for the position which they take, but I am prepared to support this part of the Bill at least and I think the other portion in principle. If the hon. gentleman takes the right view it will be better to have it sent to the committee so that the companies that represent great investments in this country will have an opportunity of presenting their cases to Parliament, and we will be in a better position to judge of the merits of the Bill.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: When a Bill consolidating the Railway Act was introduced last year, which embodied several new features, and among others the one that is expressed in the first section of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), it was the intention of the Government at that time, and that intention was carried out, to give to all persons interested in the proposed amendment an opportunity of being heard. That was carried out last year by the constitution of a special committee of this House and a similar committee was appointed in the Senate in order that there might be economy of time in the discussion of the amendments. It was apprehended that a great many interests would desire to be heard before the committees, and it was more convenient that the hearing should take place once for all. It had also the additional advantage that if the two committees conferred together and worked practically as one committee, although technically they were two committees, there would be a better opportunity of coming to a definite conclusion which would carry the judgment of both Houses of Parliament. The committees were so constituted, and I believe that considerable hearings were had. The report of the evidence has been placed before both Houses of Parliament. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) comes this year with this proposition which embodies one of the amendments that he alluded to, and he has supported it by reference to capitalization. As far as the Canadian Pacific railway, to which he has particularly alluded, is concerned, I am not especially aware of the affairs of the company, but I have a very strong impression that the capitalization is represented by solid cash put into the enterprise. I do not think that in respect of that railway it can be said that there is any portion of its stock which is not represented by money actually expended. My hon. friend the member for York has advocated the view that if stock is issued it should be issued at or very nearly the figure which the stock from time to time commands on the market. It has been urged by different railway companies, particularly by the one to which he alludes, that it would be impracticable to raise money in that way and for the reason, among others which have been urged, that no one could foresee the contingencies which might arise between the time that the figure was fixed and the time that people were called upon to subscribe to the stock. The event of tremendous importance which occurred six months ago is an indication that circumstances might arise which would make it impossible for a railway company to fix, without the possibility of an amendment or change, the figure at which its stock should be offered for subscription unless one were to contemplate the possibility of the absolute failure of any subscription at all.

My hon. friend refers to the possibility of raising money in a way which will be more in the public interest than by the issuance of stock. All these matters are of course very proper for consideration by such a tribunal, if one should be established to supervise the issuing of stock or of debentures for the purpose of providing necessary capital in addition to that already provided. I think we should bear in mind what my hon. friend the member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has said, if I gathered his meaning correctly, that is, that money for the building of railways in this country must be very largely provided from abroad; and in dealing with all these matters we must have regard to the consideration that capital will not come to us from abroad for that purpose or for any other purpose unless those who propose to invest it can do so under such conditions as will make the investment a safe and a reasonably remunerative one. I am aware that in several of the states a provision somewhat similar to this has been in force, although I am not sure that it goes precisely along the same lines. I understand —I do not know whether it is correct or not —that commissions in the United States have refused, even at the request of the company proposing to make the issue, to authorize that issue at a higher rate than par. That has been so represented to me, but I have not had an opportunity of investigating the question nor do I understand at the moment precisely the reason which would induce any commission to come to such a conclusion. What I have said, however, relates to matters that are very proper to be considered by the committee to which the Bill will be referred if the House should so decide, because it is the proposal of the Government, as my hon. friend has said, that the Bill should be referred to a committee for the purpose of giving an opportunity to those who may desire to be heard.

I have not had an opportunity of giving much consideration to the proposal which is embodied in the second section of the Bill, but I am bound to say that the impression which I gathered from the remarks of my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) and of my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) leads me to think that a proposal of that kind has a good deal to commend it. We have not any money in this country to waste in the building of two bridges where one would be sufficient. It is necessary for us to do a great deal of construction of that kind in the vast territory which it is our duty to develop; and if by adding at small expense to a railway bridge, a footway or a way for carriages under the conditions set forth in the Bill can be provided, it seems to me that the proposal is an eminently fair one and entirely reasonable. In fact if I remember correctly, the late Administration, on one occasion, when the Victoria bridge was being rebuilt, gave some assistance—I think it was the payment of a certain sum of money—so that in the reconstruction of the bridge a footway should be added.

Mr. CODERRE: There was a double drive on both sides.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Therefore we are content to have this Bill take its second reading with a view to having it referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

My hon. friend the member for South Renfrew referred to the fact that there was a special committee last year. We have not proposed to establish such a special committee this year. I am aware that the Committee on Railways and Canals is a very large committee, almost as large in numbers as this House itself—

Mr. GRAHAM: As large as the attendance in the House.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: But Bills of this character, which require very careful and special consideration, such as this Bill and the one already introduced by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), could I suppose be referred by the Committee on Railways to a smaller sub-committee, and in that way the same advantage could be obtained as if the Bill was referred to a small committee in the first instance. I have a distinct prejudice in favour of small committees in this House, and perhaps it would have been better to have referred both these Bills to a small committee, but I deferred to the proposal that it be referred to the large Committee on Railways, with a view that such a course might eventually be adopted if it commended itself to the members of the railway committee. I am speaking in the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I know it was his intention to move that the Bill should be referred to the committee after having passed its second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the Bill was referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

Friday, February 19, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

AID TO FARMERS IN QUEBEC.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Hon. CHAS. MARCIL: Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if he will give me a moment of his attention with respect to what I consider an urgent matter on account of the times of stress through which we are passing. The Department of Agriculture—I am sorry that the minister is absent today—has been following up the custom established by the department of sending agricultural lecturers to the province of Quebec, as well as to other provinces, for the purpose of furthering the interests of agriculture which is a very laudable purpose and should be continued. I hold in my hand one of the circulars which have been distributed by the department by authority of the Hon. Martin Burrell, in which the province of Quebec has been divided into five groups for the purpose of these lectures. This series of lectures is to be given in the district comprising the counties below the city of Quebec, or a majority of them, such as Bellechasse, Montmagny, L'Islet, Kamouraska, Temiscouata, Rimouski, and Bonaventure. These lectures, one hundred and one in all, extend throughout the whole province of Quebec. The object for which they are to be given is the promotion of patriotism and production which is certainly a very laudable object at the present time. These words convey the object of these conferences:

(Translation.) The lecturers who will address these meetings are agricultural experts for the campaign of "Patriotism and agricultural Production" inaugurated throughout Canada. "Let us serve the Empire by increasing the means of re-victualling." Such is to be the text of their speeches. Every farmer should attend those lectures. Ladies are specially invited.

Those lectures are organized by order of the Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture for Canada.

I approve entirely of this campaign, but I am sorry to say that in some of the more remote regions of Quebec, and in some of the new settlements, especially in my own constituency, with which I am more familiar—I am not speaking of the older parts of the province but of the remoter districts and newer settlements—the farmers have been through a very hard winter, and I am informed on reliable authority that many of them have not the means of raising the seed that is necessary to put in the ground for ordinary production. In the one or two districts in the county of Bonaventure that have been called to my attention the farmers have been entirely deprived of the means necessary to carry on work of this kind. I would ask my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to give this matter his attention, if he has not already done so, because it is probably the most important question that could come before him at the present time, and I would ask him if he cannot extend to at least some of the more deserving parts, not only of Quebec, but of the other older provinces, the benefits of the campaign which has been undertaken and of the aid which has been given in Saskatchewan and other parts of Canada. The farmers of the eastern provinces have borne the burden and heat of the day and they are willing to do their share to preserve the Empire and Canada. If you send an agricultural lecturer down to these poorer settlements and ask the people to go in for this new campaign of production without providing them with the means to do so this work will be useless and Canada will suffer from a declining production. I hope that the Prime Minister will give this more consideration and that he will, if possible, have an investigation and find out exactly to what extent this aid might be given.

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Minister of the Interior): Inasmuch as the matter referred to comes more particularly under the department over which I have the honour to preside, I would call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he apparently confuses the propaganda that is being carried on under the auspices of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) for greater production with the matter of seed grain relief in the western province. The one is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture and the other under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. They are entirely separate and distinct.

Mr. MARCIL: I thought both were under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ROCHE: No, we are granting assistance of the character referred to by reason of the exceedingly dry season in certain districts in Alberta and Saskatchewan, which has deprived settlers of their crop almost in their entirety. It has been the habit to a limited extent each year for some years past for the Department of the Interior to come to the relief of settlers deprived of their crops who were resident on their homesteads and not the owners of the land. The reason is that we have encouraged immigration and we look upon those people, until they become the owners of the land, as in a certain sense wards of the Government. In the past owners of their land who have been deprived of their crops through drouth or otherwise have been provided for by the provincial governments, but the provincial government felt themselves unable to cope with such a huge proposition as presented itself this year and we have arranged with the Provincial Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan that we would look after the seed grain of those who were deprived of their crops last year, while, the governments have agreed to pass legislation at the next sessions of their legislatures giving priorty to our liens over those mortgages for our advance of seed grain. Wherever we have advanced provisions for people who are actually in need of food, either for themselves or for their stock, we have secured a promise from the provincial governments to give our lien against the crop priority in the same manner as they are giving priority to our liens in connection with mortgages against land for seed grain. Petitions along much the same lines have been presented to me from the northern provinces of Ontario, and I have referred back these petitions with the statement that the people should apply to the provincial government, which has handled this matter in the past, and is in the best position to give aid to them. The difference between the western provinces, in which farmers are receiving aid, and the eastern provinces, in which a certain number of settlers appear to be in need, is that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario are the owners of their natural resources, whereas the Dominion Government is the owner of the natural resources of the western provinces. In consequence of that we feel under an obligation to supply those of our homesteaders who are in need.

COMFORTS FOR THE CANADIAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. TURRIFF: I should like to bring an important matter to the attention of the Government, and I can best do so by reading a short article headed "Our sockless soldiers again," which is as follows:

Once more Canada is placed in the humiliating position of having to appeal to private benevolence for the common articles of clothing needed by our troops who have crossed the ocean to fight for the Empire. The extraordinary part of the present appeal is that it is made by a member of the Canadian Government, Sir George Perley, who is temporarily acting as High Commissioner for Canada in London. The despatch comes from Ottawa, and reads as follows:

Ottawa, Ont., February 16.—The first official announcement that the Canadian troops are in France was made this morning, and carries with it an appeal which will doubtless evoke a prompt and ready response from all parts of Canada.

Sir George Perley cables urgently for a large stock of comforts for the use of the Canadian contingent. All kinds of warm clothing is needed, and Sir George undertakes, through the Canadian War Contingent Association, that the requirements of the Canadian troops shall be met as far as possible. He is in constant communication with the commanding officers and is, therefore, in a position to know the exact nature of the supplies required. The association, however, cannot supply comforts unless it receives a constant stream of goods from Canada.

The National Service Committee of the Canadian Woman's organization, therefore, appeals to the people of Canada for a prompt response to Sir George Perley's request.

The articles asked for at present are all kinds of heavy woollen articles, especially socks, while later it would be better to confine attention to socks and mitts, woven belts, and coloured handkerchiefs, well knit socks being the most important.

Gifts of money to purchase woven body belts, sweaters, tobacco, and such comforts will also be most acceptable, especially if sent promptly.

All donations of money should be sent to the officer of the National Service Committee, 77 King street East, Toronto, and parcels, freight charges collect, to the Toronto office or to the warehouse. 1 Campbell Road, Halifax, N.S.

This appeal for the men in the trenches should take precedence of all local appeals for field comforts, and the cable received definitely requests that all supplies should be sent through the National Service Committee to the Canadian War Contingent Association in London, and not to Salisbury Plain.

Then the paper adds on its own account:

What can the Canadian people think of the situation when, not merely for tobacco or other 'comforts' of that class, but for the common necessary articles of clothing, especially socks,' an appeal of this kind has to be issued? If out of the millions of dollars that are being poured out like water for war expenses, the Canadian Government cannot supply the soldiers with such necessary articles as ordinary woollen clothing, what is the money being spent for? If the millions that are being voted so readily at Ottawa are not enough, then let the Government ask for more millions, which will be readily granted, and see that the Canadian soldiers are supplied from the Government stores with the clothing that is so urgently required.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: What is that from?

Mr. TURRIFF: From The Journal of Commerce, Montreal, under date of February 18, 1915. This is a matter of such importance that I thought it advisable to bring it to the attention of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, because every one in Canada will agree that, while gifts are very acceptable to the soldiers, it surely should not be necessary, in view of all the socks and other articles of clothing that have been purchased for the soldiers, for Sir George Perley to make a request that the people of Canada should supply such articles as a necessity. It is all right to send socks as extras; but our soldiers should be properly equipped by the Government, and they should not have to go to the front wearing boots without socks, especially the class of boots that have been supplied to them.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If the hon. gentleman had made inquiries, as he might easily have done, he would have found that the troops going to the front are supplied with clothing and socks precisely on the same scale as the British armies in the fields; but perhaps it served his purpose better to endeavour to cast some discredit on the Government by the remarks which he has made.

Mr. TURRIFF: It is not my remarks that are against the Government.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Pardon me a moment. The hon. gentleman is, or ought to be, perfectly well aware that in Great Britain as well as in Canada efforts have been made by private individuals and associations of various kinds to supply to the troops who have gone to the front comforts of the character mentioned, in addition to those supplied by the country; and I would not think that any hon. gentleman in this House, or any person in this country, would find fault with any Government because those efforts had been made by private individuals and associations. It is a highly commendable course that they have taken to endeavour to add to that which in the ordinary course is supplied by the country, because we know that this war is being waged under very difficult conditions, and it is desirable that our men and the men who go from the British Isles into the field should be furnished with any additional comforts of the character mentioned that patriotic benevolence, whether in this country or in the British Isles, may desire to supply. I am informed by the Minister of Militia—and I have no reason to doubt his word—that the scale upon which our men are supplied with clothing and socks is precisely the same as that upon which the British soldiers in the field are supplied; and whenever any requisition for that purpose is made, the Department of Militia uses its best endeavours to fill it, and I believe that up to the present time always has filled it. The hon. gentleman knows that not only in this country, but in every other dominion of the Empire, in the British Islands and in the United States as well, women, inspired by a patriotic desire to assist, have been furnishing socks, comforters, caps, belts, and articles of that description, and that these have been sent forward under private organizations so that they might be placed at the disposal of the troops for use whenever required. It is only for that purpose, so far as I understand, that this appeal has been made by my hon. friend Sir George Perley. I know nothing of it except what has appeared in the press.

Mr. TURRIFF: Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to say one word?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is presuming a little too far upon the courtesy of the House in bringing in a long article and reading it, on which to found an argument. It is not in order to do that, although it would be in order to ask a question. Therefore I would ask that the House do not encourarge this practice.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

[Sir Robert Borden.]

FUEL OIL IMPORTS.

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. What quantity of fuel oil was imported into British Columbia during the years 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914, respectively?
2. What was the value of said oil in each of these years?
3. What quantity of coal was imported into British Columbia from the State of Washington, Australia and Japan, during each of said years?
4. What was the value of same?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. Imports entered for consumption through customs ports in the province of British Columbia during the fiscal years ended March 31, 1911, 1912, 1913, and 1914, respectively, of "petroleum, crude, fuel and gas oils, .8235 specific gravity or heavier at 60 degrees temperature" under the provisions of tariff item 267, were as follows:

1911	7,299,727	gal.
1912	20,454,309	"
1913	79,233,053	"
1914	110,547,653	"

2.

1911	$ 151,028
1912	446,718
1913	1,443,519
1914	2,278,918

3. Customs returns do not show local origin of imports from United States.

	Australia.	Japan.
1911	Nil.	Nil.
1912	Nil.	Nil.
1913	Nil.	9 tons.
1914	13,430 tons.	Nil.

4.

	Australia.	Japan.
1911	Nil.	Nil.
1912	Nil.	Nil.
1913	Nil.	$34.
1914	$51,573	Nil.

CREAM EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES.

*Mr. KAY:

1. How much cream was exported to the United States from the counties of Brome and Missisiquoi during the year 1914?
2. How much was exported from each port in these counties and what was the value thereof in each case?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. The Department of Customs has no returns showing the local origin of goods exported.

2. The exports of fresh cream to United States through customs ports of exit in the counties of Brome and Missisquoi during the year were as follows:

Abercorn	340,615	gals.	$440,746
Highwater	132,608	"	121,150
Mansonville.. ..	81,910	"	59,685
St. Armand	60,818	"	40,463

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Lemieux: For a copy of all Orders in Council, letters and telegrams exchanged between the Dominion Government and the several provinces, concerning the proposed transfer of fisheries in tidal waters from the provincial to the federal control.

Mr. Marcil: For a copy of all correspondence and other documents relating to the awarding of the mail contract at Maria Capes, Bonaventure county, in 1914.

Mr. Macdonald: For a return showing the names and addresses of all persons in the county of Pictou who have been paid the Fenian raid bounty, and of all persons in said county who have made application for said bounty and who have not yet received it.

Mr. W. M. Martin : For a copy of all correspondence between the Dominion Government and the governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta relating in any way to the supplying of seed grain to settlers for the season of 1915.

2. A copy of all memoranda and instructions given by the Government, or any department thereof, to any of its officials regarding the purchase and distribution of seed grain to settlers in the provinces referred to.

3. A copy of all circular letters whether written, printed or typewritten, together with forms of application, forms of security and all such other forms or circulars as were issued by any department, or any official of the Government in dealing with the seed grain problem.

Mr. W. M. Martin: For a return showing the total quality of seed grain purchased to date, specifying in each case the number of bushels of wheat, oats, barley and flax; the average price per bushel paid for each class of seed grain secured to date; the names and addresses of all persons employed to purchase seed grain and the amount of salary and expenses paid to each; and the name and addresses of all persons empowered to take applications from settlers for seed grain, and a copy of all instructions sent to such persons in connection therewith, and the amount of the salary or remuneration paid to such persons.

Mr. W. M. Martin : For a copy of all Orders in Council, letters, memoranda and all documents issued by the Government, or any member or department thereof, which contain instructions or directions regarding the distribution of relief or assistance of any nature whatsoever to settlers in Alberta and Saskatchewan, owing to the partial crop failure of the past season.

2. With a return showing the total amount of such relief or assistance actually granted to such settlers in each of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, exclusive of the cost of administration and exclusive of all expenditures made in connection with the purchase and storing of seed grain.

3. The total amount of such relief or assistance actually granted to settlers in each of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, being within the area recently fixed by the Interior Department and referred to as the 'drouth stricken area,' such amounts to be exclusive of the cost of administration and exclusive of all expenditure made in connection with the purchase and storing of seed grain.

4. The names and addresses of the committee, board or other body appointed by the Government to take charge of the distribution of such relief, and a statement as to the provision made by the Government for their remuneration and expenses.

5. A list of any persons appointed by the Government, or any department thereof, since July 15, 1914, to assist in receiving and approving applications for such relief; such list to include the names of the persons so employed, their addresses, monthly, daily or other salary, date of employment, length of time employed, total salary paid each and total amount paid each for expenses.

6. The provision made by the Government for getting security for loans advanced by way of such relief, and

7. The steps, if any, taken by the Government to prevent duplication of relief to needy settlers by the federal and provincial authorities.

Mr. Sinclair: For a return showing the names and post office addresses of all persons in Guysborough county, N.S., to whom the bounty under the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act has been paid; the names and post office addresses of all persons whose applications have been rejected, and the reasons for such rejections; also the names and post office addresses of all person whose applications have been received but have not yet been paid, distinguishing between those who have been dealt with and allowed, and such applications as have been received but not yet considered, if any.

Mr. Carroll: For a return showing the names and addresses of all persons in South Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, who have been paid Fenian raid bounty; the names and addresses of all persons in South Cape Breton, N.S., who have made application for said bounty and who have not yet received it.

Mr. Michael Clark: For a statement in detail of: The number of prisoners of war in this country; the number under parole; the number held in detention camps; the number of detention camps, where situated, how accessible, and the number of prisoners in each. The amount of cost to Canada in each of these camps, respectively, for subsistence, pay, clothing, transportation and supervision; the nature of work done by prisoners, and the total value of same to date.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, petitions, letters and all other documents in any way referring to the dismissal of Mr. Mallet, captain of the life boat in the life-saving station at Cheticamp, and the appointment of his successor?

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters, petitions and documents of all kinds in any way referring to a proposed change in the mail route from Inverness railway station to Margaree harbour.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda, pay-lists, recommendations and any other documents whatsoever in anywise appertaining to the construction of a wharf at Lower Burlington, in the county of Hants.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

EXTENSION OF COASTING AREA.

Mr. JOHN H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient to amend section 3 of chapter 65 of the Acts of 1908 by repealing the said section and substituting therefor the following:

(f) "Coasting voyage" means a voyage between any port or place on the eastern coast of Canada, and any other port or place on such coast, or in Newfoundland, Labrador, or St. Pierre or Miquelon, or any other port or place on the eastern coast of the United States of America or Mexico or Ceneral America or in the West Indies, or on the eastern coast of South America not further south than forty degrees south latitude; and also means a voyage between any port or place on the western coast of Canada, and any other port place on such coast, or on the western coast of the territory of Alaska, or of the United States of America or of the western coast of Mexico or Central America or South America, not further south than forty degrees south latitude."

He said: This resolution will be followed by a Bill, the object of which is to amend the Canada Shipping Act so as to enable certain captains holding coasting certificates to visit or clear for ports in South America. In our Canadian Shipping Act provision is made for two kinds of certificate. The first is what is publicly known as a deep-sea certificate, which enables those holding such certificates to clear for any port in the world. I do not propose to interfere with that certificate in any way. The other class of certificate is that which is known as a coasting certificate, which enables a captain holding it to sail his ship within a certain limited area. My complaint is that the limitations of this area are too much restricted. At present the master of a Canadian ship holding a coasting license can sail his ship only as far south as 5 north latitude, which is somewhere in the vicinity of the mouth of the Amazon river. This shuts our vessels out from a very profitable trade in South America. So far as I am aware, there is no reason why this restriction should be maintained. Before Confederation no such restriction was in force; a coasting captain in my province was allowed to take his ship to any port on the coast of South America. He was permitted to go through the Straits of Magellan, to sail up the coast of Chile, and thence to California, British Columbia, or Alaska. For one hundred years Nova Scotia ships were seen in all these parts, but when the seat of Government was changed from Halifax to Ottawa some meddlesome official for some reason which I have been unable to ascertain, decided that the coasting captain should be restricted in his movements. The rule was then laid down that coasting captains should not take their ships farther south than Cape Hatteras, thus shutting them out from a very profitable trade in the West Indies. It was the custom of persons owning large schooners in those days to engage them in fishing during the summer and in the winter season to send them with cargoes of fish to the West Indies and have them bring back molasses. In this way a very good trade was carried on, but by stopping these ships at Cape Hatteras this business was entirely wiped out, and a great deal of trouble ensued among shipping people on the coast of the maritime provinces. Protests were made here, but they were apparently of no avail. This has never been a political question. It is simply a matter of business, and I do not want the minister or any body to suppose that I am endeavouring to make it a political question now. I regret to say that Governments of both political parties have maintained this provision, when, I think, they should not have done so.

By reason of this condition of affairs, owners were compelled to seek a remedy in some other way. One plan to which they resorted was that of securing a retired captain holding a deep-sea license and putting him as a figurehead on board the ship. In this way they were enabled to clear their ship from a Canadian port and get out of the custom house. The next thing was to get rid of the figurehead. Sometimes he went ashore in the pilot boat; sometimes the ship was stopped at the headland, he was sent ashore, and the real captain boarded and took charge of the ship and was generally successful in his voyage. No trouble ensued; the only difficulty was that shipping people had to resort to this subterfuge in order to get away from the Canadian custom house. There was no escape from the regulation; these plans were unsatisfactory, people began to transfer the registry of their ships to other ports. The registers of many Canadian vessels were transferred from Canadian ports to Barbados, which was the favourite port for that purpose. Some were transferred to Newfoundland, and some to Bermuda—anywhere where they could enjoy the protection of the British flag and at the same time escape the restrictions imposed upon them by the Canadian Government.

I have here a partial list of ships owned in the maritime, provinces, which, were-compelled to seek refuge in Barbados. These ships comprise some of the largest freight vessels that we have in the maritime provinces. In order that the minister may see how far this matter has gone, I will read a portion of the list:

Name of Vessel.	Owner.	Residence of Owner.	Port of Registry.
Annie M. Parker	R. C. Elkin	St. John	Barbados.
Adonis	Cushing & Co.	t. John	"
Annie L. Warren	F. K. Warren	Halifax	"
Alvina Thériault	P. A. Thériault	Belliveau Cove	"
Archie Crowell	C. W. Anderson	Sherbrooke, N.S.	"
Bessie Crooks	Arthur Crooks	Liverpool	"
Beryl Corkum	William Duff	Lunenburg	"
Coral Leaf	J. F. Whitney & Co.	New York	"
David C. Ritcey	Capt. D. C. Ritcey	La Have	"
E. M. Roberts	R. C. Elkin	St. John	"
Earl of Aberdeen	C. C. Langill	Parrsboro	"
Edde Thériault	F. K. Warren	Halifax	"
Edyth	J. Ernest & Son	Mahone Bay	"
Emily Anderson	F. K. Warren	Halifax	"
Fleetly	Zwicker & Co.	Lunenburg	"
Frances	F. K. Warren	Halifax	"
General Laurie	Wm. McMillan	Lockeport	"
H. R. Silver	W. C. Smith	Lunenburg	"
Inga	J. N. Rafuse	La Have	"
J. L. Nelson	F. K. Warren	Halifax	"
Laura C	Lemuel Creaser	Riverport	"
Lavengro	George A. Cox	Shelburne	"
Lavonia	J. Willard Smith	St. John	"
Lillian Baluvelt	H. Jones	Weymouth	"
Maple Leaf	Wm. Arenburg	Lunenburg	"
Melba	R. C. Elkin	St. John	"
Mineola	J. Willard Smith	"	"
Moama			"
Mary Hendry	Henry Ltd	Liverpool	"
Ponhook	"	"	"
Ronald	J. B. Waggoner	St. John	"

And so I could go on with a large number of vessels once registered in the Maritime provinces but now registered in the Barbados and in other ports. The question arises, why should the people of the maritime provinces transfer their ships from Canadian registration to the Barbados? The answer is very plain: it is because the British law is in force in Barbados, and by transferring to Barbados they get rid of Canadian regulations and are able to sail ships with captains having only coasting licenses. They are able in this way to take cargoes to South American ports, as they are bound to do if they are to carry on a successful business. Competitors in the United States are able to do this without restriction, and consequently, as our vessel owners have to compete with coasting vessels of the United States, they have to get rid of the customs regulations of Canada and, leaving the Canadian flag, go to some place else. I venture to say that by reason of the change no calamity has overtaken the ships that left the Canadian flag and registered in the Barbados. They have been carrying on a successful business. I do not think the minister has ever heard that they were unable to find their way to South American ports or back again. This regulation has been maintained from year to year, and the only result has been that we have driven the ships belonging to the people of Canada away under some other registry.

In 1908, with the assistance of some of my colleagues, I brought this matter to the attention of the Government then in power. At that date I had the same view as I have to-day, that captains holding coasting certificates should be allowed to sail anywhere on the coasts of North and South America. However, I was unable to induce the Parliament of that date to adopt my views. They did compromise: they agreed to fix the southern limit of coasting voyages instead of at Cape Hatteras, at the fifth degree of north latitude, which, of course, was a measure of relief, enabling the ships of the Maritime Provinces to carry on their business in the waters of the West Indies. This was a very valuable concession, but it did not open to these vessels the trade of South America. The question has arisen recently in an urgent form owing to the fact that the coasting trade in Canada is not profitable at present and has not been for a number of years, whereas the trade with South America is profitable and our vessels are very anxious to get a share of it.

This is not a new question; I have brought it to the attention of the present Minister of Marine more than once. I attempted last year to have the law amended. My hon. friend expressed himself, I think, in favour of some relief; but he informed the House when I introduced my Bill that he intended to revise the Canada Shipping Act and that within two or three weeks from the date on which I made my motion the Bill for that purpose would be introduced, which would be the proper time for me to deal with this question. My hon. friend kept his promise and introduced his Bill, but I was disappointed to find that the old clause defining a coasting voyage was re-introduced. Some change was made in the size of vessel that required a certificated captain, but there was no change of the character that I am asking the House to make. If my hon. friend had adopted my view of last year and allowed my Bill to go through, it would have meant tens of thousands of dollars in the pockets of the shipping people of the maritime provinces since that time. That money has gone to the ship owners in the United States, because the people of the maritime provinces were unable to take advantage of the freights because their captains could not clear to a point south of the 5th degree of north latitude.

This restriction, I submit, cannot be justified. It cannot be said that our captains are incompetent, for they can sail anywhere and have always done so. It cannot be said that it is unsafe. I do not think there is any record in the department or anywhere else that will show that there has been anything risky or unsafe in allowing a coasting captain to take his vessel anywhere in North or South America. There is no such rule in force in Great Britain, the greatest shipping country in the world. There, a ship engaged in deep-sea foreign trade or in the home trade carrying passengers must have a certificated captain; but a vessel not carrying passengers in the home trade is not required to have a certificated captain. No matter what the size of the ship, the captain is allowed to go anywhere on the coast of Britain. In the United States any ship of less than 700 tons register is also allowed that privilege; the smaller ships are allowed to go to South America or wherever they please—to clear from any American port without restriction. If we had the same law as the United States there would be no trouble, because nearly all the sailing ships I have referred to, and nearly all the ships owned in the maritime provinces, are under 700 tons. As we compete with the United States in this business, it is very important that we should give our people some relief and put them in a position to take advantage of the profitable trade that offers in South America. I think we ought to feel that the rule that obtains in Great Britain, the greatest ship-owning country in the world, should be good enough for us.

There is another reason why prompt action should be taken, and that is that since July last the registry of the United States has been thrown open to foreign shipping. Prior to that date you could not register a ship in the United States, and an American citizen could not buy a ship; he had to build it in the United States. Protection had gone so mad in that country that they would not allow an American citizen to import a ship and put it under the American flag. The consequence was that the American flag was driven off the seas altogether. The United States found that they had made a mistake, and they are now endeavouring to build up a merchant marine. They have gone to the limit; they have thrown the door wide open, and if a Canadian citizen wishes to register his ship under the American flag, he can now do so in the name of some American Associate without any trouble and without paying any duty. That is what our shippers generally will do if my hon. friend does not give them some relief in this direction. A few days ago I asked his department for some information as to the number of ships transferred during the past year. The questions and answers were as follows:

Mr. Sinclair:

1. How many vessels of all kinds were withdrawn from the Canadian Shipping Registry since July 1, 1914?

2. What is the gross tonnage of such vessels?

3. What are the countries to the registry of which such vessels were transferred?

Mr. Hazen:

1. Twenty-two vessels of all kinds.

2. Gross tonnage, 28,791.

3. Three to Newfoundland; three to Barbados; one to France; fourteen to United States of America.

These figures do not cover the whole year, but only a period of six or seven months. They show what is going to happen. Since July 1, just about the time when the American registry was thrown open, fourteen vessels formerly registered in Canada have transferred to the United States; and after the war is over and Canadians can sell or transfer their vessels, practically all the coasting vessels will go over to the United States flag if something is not done in regard to this matter. This resolution deals with the coast of British Columbia as well as with the coast of eastern Canada. I have no mandate to speak for the Pacific coast, but I am assuming that it is just as important for a coasting schooner owned in British Columbia or in the West to have this privilege as for a schooner owned in eastern Canada. I understand that the present limit is the harbour of Portland; but as the Panama canal is now being opened, and will probably result in a very profitable trade for our coasting vessels carrying lumber and other products from British Columbia through the canal to the eastern coast of Canada or the United States, I regard it as very important that the western limit should be moved as well as the eastern limit. I propose that instead of five north, the latitude should be fixed at forty south. That would allow our vessels to go to Rio de Janeiro and the River Plate on the eastern coast of South America, and the vessels on the western coast could go as far as Valparaiso, in Chile.

4 p.m.

A few days ago I wrote a letter to the secretary of the Maritime Shipowners' Association in Halifax, asking for his opinion of this resolution, and this is his reply:

Maritime Shipowners' Association,
Secretary's Office,
Halifax, N.S. February 12, 1915.

John H. Sinclair, Esq., M.P.
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear sir,—I thank you for your favour of the 9th inst., enclosing a copy of Orders of the Day, and in reply would beg to say that this association heartily endorses your resolution regarding coasting voyages, and I trust that you will be successful in getting it passed, as present regulations prohibit vessel owners from sending their vessels to Brazil if registered in a home port, unless both the master and the mate hold foreign-going certificates and it is needless for me to tell you that it is an impossibility to get masters, and far more so to get mates (because any mate holding the necessary certificate would have no difficulty in getting command of a vessel) and consequently in order to evade the restrictions of the Canadian Shipping Act, we are compelled to register our vessels in Barbados.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) J. K. Warren,
Secretary.

That will show my hon. friend why so many of our vessels are leaving Canadian ports. The question is, what ought to be done? I submit that this resolution should pass and the Act follow at once. I have no objection to a committee except that a committee, as the minister knows, generally ends in delay, and in that case we might not get the Act passed this session. If a committee is granted I have not the slightest doubt that the shipping people will be able to show that there is a complete case for a change. The minister no doubt knows the facts already, and I would much prefer that he deal with this matter himself rather than refer it to a committee. It is a business proposal that ought to be patent to everybody without being threshed out before a committee. I therefore beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton, that this resolution be adopted.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why does the hon. gentleman limit his resolution to vessels doing a coasting trade on either the eastern or the western coast? If, for instance, a Canadian coasting vessel wanted to go south of the Panama canal, why should she not be allowed to go through that canal and along the west coast?

Mr. SINCLAIR: I did not intend to. Does not this resolution cover that?

Mr. PUGSLEY: No; it simply allows vessels on the eastern coast of Canada to trade up and down the eastern coast, and vessels on the western coast to trade up and down the western coast. I do not see why a vessel on the western coast should not be allowed to go through the Panama canal and up the eastern coast, and vice versa. That would greatly encourage trade between Eastern and Western Canada, and between Canada and the United States.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I hold the view that this resolution would enable coasting vessels to go through the Panama canal. It would certainly enable them to go to the mouth of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: But not through.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is really one of the objects of the resolution, and if there is any defect in the wording, it must be amended to allow vessels to go through the Panama canal.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) has introduced a subject that is undoubtedly of very great interest to the owners of ships engaged in the coasting trade. The hon. gentleman has put before the House very clearly and very precisely his reasons in favour of having some lesser restrictions upon the coasting trade. I am disposed to agree very largely indeed with the argument which my hon. friend has made, though I do not agree entirely with him as to the means which should be taken for the purpose of carrying out what is undoubtedly the object of this resolution. If the resolution accomplishes what my hon. friend expects of it, it would prevent the owners of vessels on the Atlantic coast from transferring their ships to Barbados registry, as they now do to a very considerable extent, and in my opinion would also result in vessels that are now registered in the United States being transferred to Canadian registry. This subject is one, as my hon. friend says, which has been considered for a good many years. My hon. friend refers to the fact that in 1908 he introduced a resolution in practically similar terms to the one which he has now introduced and which apparently was not viewed with favour in its entirety by the Government of that day. That is no reason why this resolution should not be regarded with favour now and why the House might not take a different view of the situation in view of what has occurred since and especially perhaps in view of what is occurring in Canada at the present time in consequence of the action of the Government of the United States as pointed out by my hon. friend from Guysborough. The resolution proposed by my hon. friend is designed to extend the limit of a coasting voyage from five degrees north latitude to forty degrees south latitude. This question of determining what should constitute a coasting voyage is one that has at various times received the very earnest consideration and attention of the officials of my department and they gave special attention to it during the summer of 1913 when the revision and consolidation of The Canadian Shipping Act was undertaken by the department. The Bill for the revision and consolidation of The Canadian Shipping Act was introduced to Parliament last session. This is a very large and a very important measure and after conversation with a number of members of the House interested in shipping matters it was my opinion not that it would be desirable not to press the Bill through Parliament last session but rather to have the Bill distributed and have copies sent all over the country to those interested in shipping matters so that they might have the opportunity to give careful study and consideration to the measure and let us know what their criticism and views were in regard to it so that we might have these views before us when we came to deal with the question at another session of the House. That course was taken. We have not had very much criticism of the measure; we have had some carefully considered criticism, but as a rule the Bill has met with favour from shipping interests. The Bill has not been introduced at this session, and this being a session for a particular purpose, the particular purpose being the consideration of the war, it might not be possible that the Bill should be introduced and receive that consideration which the importance of the subject demands.

That Bill dealt with this question in a way which I will proceed to explain to the House. At the time that the officials of my department were considering this Bill masters and other interested persons were consulted, and, having regard to the facts as considered by us, it was decided to restrict our own coasting vessels to the limits of a coasting voyage and in another way to meet what I thought to be the objections put forward by my hon. friend for Guysborough concerning which I had during the past summer consulted and advised with gentlemen in my own constituency and other parts of Canada in respect to what remedy might be applied. In the Bill which was laid on the table last session providing for the revision and consolidation of The Canadian Shipping Act it is provided that a "coasting voyage" means—

> A voyage between any port or place on the eastern coast of Canada, and any port or place in Newfoundland Labrador or St. Pierre or Miquelon, or any port or place on the eastern coast of the United States of America, not further south than Charleston, in the state of South Carolina, and on the Pacific, means a voyage between any port or place on the western coast of Canada, and any port or place on the western coast of the United States of America not further south than the port of San Diego in the state of California, and not further north than Cape Spencer in the territory of Alaska, or any inlet or bay having its entrance on the eastern side of said cape.

This conclusion as to restricted coast voyages was reached very largely as the result of a provision of the International Convention for the Safety of Human Life at Sea. Perhaps the House will remember that following the Titanic disaster a convention was held in London at which representatives were present from all the maritime countries in the world for the purpose of considering the question of the safety of human life at sea. Canada was represented at that meeting, its representative being the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries. A convention was concluded, Canada was a party to it, and the terms, which I fully explained to the House last year, will become operative on the first of July next. Under the terms of the convention, vessels employed on voyages between Canada and ports out of Canada which take them two hundred miles off shore are to be regarded as " foreign-going " vessels, and they are to be subject to the terms of the convention in regard to life-saving equipment and matters of that sort. In the revised Act, laid on the table last session, wherein it is proposed to terminate " coasting " voyage at Galveston on the Atlantic and at San Diego on the Pacific, due regard was had to the provisions of the convention, and on examination of the chart it will be seen that at no point on such a voyage unless extraordinary conditions occur, would a ship be taken two hundred miles off land. But the convention has raised a different question, one which has to be carefully considered in any legislation that we may pass unless we are prepared to withdraw from the convention and not be parties to its terms which, I believe, are in the interest of the travelling public and of the people generally. If the limits as proposed by the resolution moved by the hon. member for Guysborough are adopted, it will be at once observed that on a voyage from Halifax to Brazil, for instance, by the shortest route, a vessel would at one point be 700 miles off land and for a distance of 3,000 miles of the journey the same vessel would be an average of 300 miles off land, which is in excess of the distance allowed by the London convention. It would scarcely seem consistent to designate a voyage of that nature as a coasting voyage.

Mr. SINCLAIR: At what point would it be 700 miles off land—in the Gulf of Mexico?

Mr. HAZEN: I presume in the Gulf of Mexico. In the revision of the Canada Shipping Act the department endeavoured to deal with the proposals contained in the resolution under consideration by creating another class of voyage to be known as " limited foreign-going voyage." I see that my colleague from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), who has taken a great interest in this question in the past, has just come in, and I shall repeat what I have to say. I was saying that if the limits as proposed by the resolution before the House are adopted, this would be observed that on a voyage from Halifax to Brazil, by the shortest route, a vessel would at one point be 700 miles off land and for a distance of 300 miles of the journey the same vessel would be an average of 300 miles off land, and it would scarcely be consistent to designate a voyage of that nature as a coasting one. In the revision of the Canada Shipping Act we endeavoured to deal with the proposal contained in the resolution placed before the House by the hon. member for Guysborough.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Suppose a coasting ship were to leave Halifax to cross by the shortest route to Charleston, how far off land would it be?

Mr. HAZEN: I am not prepared to answer.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It would be 500 or 600 miles, would it not?

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps it would. Of course, the idea of a coasting vessel is a vessel that follows from one point on the coast to another point on the coast, and so on. The certificate for a coasting vessel is different from a deep-sea certificate, which is for a vessel that crosses the ocean. It may not in many cases be more dangerous to navigate a vessel across the ocean than to navigate a vessel along the coast.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Much easier.

Mr. HAZEN: In some cases perhaps not so dangerous, but by legislation in Great Britain and also in other countries a distinction has been drawn between the two classes of voyages. In the revision of the Canada Shipping Act, we endeavoured to deal with the proposal contained in the resolution under consideration by creating another class of voyage to be known as " limited foreign-going voyage." This voyage—and I would ask hon. gentlemen's attention to this is defined in the new Bill as follows:

> A voyage between any place or places in Canada and any place or places in the West Indies, or on the continent of America or the islands adjacent thereto not within the limits of a coasting voyage.

Under that " limited foreign voyage," a vessel could go to any port on the continent of America or the islands adjacent thereto. If that idea is adopted by the House, we shall have three classes of voyages, namely: the deep sea voyage, the coasting voyage, and this other voyage which I have referred to as being described as the "limited foreign-going voyage;" and certificates will be granted for this limited foreign-going voyage, not of such a character as is required for the ocean going voyage, but to some extent requiring a little more skill than is required for masters and mates of coasting vessels.

Hon. gentlemen will see at once the difficulty, in view of the London Convention, of adopting the resolution moved by my hon. friend the member for Guysborough, unless we are prepared to say that we shall withdraw from that convention, which was entered into in good faith by all the maritime nations of the world. Masters wishing to trade only on coasting voyages can at present be given certificates for a coasting voyage, the qualifications for which need not necessarily be as high as those required for a limited foreign-going certificate. Similarly, it is proposed by the department, if the terms of the proposed Bill should be adopted, to provide that limited foreign-going certificates should issue to masters who desire to engage in trade to the larger areas. The qualifications for this certificate would not be so high as those required for foreign-going certificates.

With a limited foreign-going certificate, a master would be enabled to take charge of a vessel to trade between ports in Canada and ports in the West Indies, the United States of America, Mexico, Central South America, or the islands adjacent thereto. It seems to me, that this is the more desirable way to deal with the situation; and with that end in view, I would suggest to the hon. member for Guysborough that, instead of asking for the adoption of his resolution as it stands, he should agree to refer it to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries, where the merits of his proposal and the proposals to which I have referred, would be more fully and carefully considered. I have an amendment prepared to refer to the Committee on Marine and Fisheries, and I am not suggesting this course with any view of delaying action in the matter. While a great deal of time may be taken up in discussing the whole of the Canada Shipping Act, which is a very large measure, it seems to me that this one proposal might be dealt with. The committee would have before them the proposal embodied in the resolution introduced by my hon. friend, the proposal embodied in the Bill introduced by the department last year, and other matters which might be considered by the committee as well.

[Mr. Hazen.]

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister tell the House if he intends to re-introduce at this session the Bill consolidating the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think so. I thought I intimated that a little while ago.

I am disposed to agree with my hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that the resolution placed on the order paper to-day, if passed in its present form, would not enable any one engaged on a coasting voyage to go through the Panama canal. Whether that should be allowed or not is a matter that should be taken up by the Committee on Marine and Fisheries; and whether the large certificate that we propose to give should permit, in addition to what I have stated, vessels to pass from the Pacific through the Panama canal to trade on the Atlantic and vice versa is a matter that the committee should consider as well. I understand that the committee has not very much before it this session, and it might be brought together at a very early date and consider all these matters. There is no difference between my hon. friend and myself as to the desirability of having some legislation; the question is as to the proper means by which the change that is desired in the interest of our coasting vessels should be obtained. Therefore, before the debate concludes, I would move this amendment:

That all the words after the word "that" in the first line of the proposed resolution down to and including the word "following" in the third line of the resolution be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The Committee on Marine and Fisheries be instructed to inquire and report whether it is expedient to enact as follows:

And by adding to the proposed resolution at the end thereof the following words:

Or, whether it is expedient to make any other amendment and if so what amendment to the existing laws defining a coasting voyage.

That would raise the whole question and there would be ample opportunity for its full consideration by the committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I understand from my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that, while it is not intended to introduce a Bill providing for general amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, there will be no objection to making, at this session, amendments along these lines or along the lines of a limited ocean voyage.

Mr. HAZEN: I know of no reason at the present time why that should not be done.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I am very much pleased that the minister has shown that he is really interested in this matter, and that he has told us that he intends to put through some kind of a measure dealing with it before this session is over. At least, I understand him in that way. I am not very clear as to the way in which this proposal interferes with the Hague convention, because I do not see how a question of this kind could be before the convention at all. Our Act is a peculiar one. There is no similar Act either in the United States or in Great Britain, or, so far as I know, in any other country. The same restrictions on coasting voyages are not imposed in any other country so far as I have been able to find out. The safety of human life at sea is, of course, very important; but has there been any evidence submitted to show that the proposal to allow coasting vessels to trade to South American ports will endanger human life at sea? I do not think so. I do not think that there is such evidence available anywhere. Ships meet with disaster out at sea, but the most dangerous place where a ship can be is close to the land. A good captain does not take a sleep until he is far enough away from the land to feel that he is out on the ocean. The simplest kind of navigation is that far from the land. Two years ago when we had an investigation of this matter before the Marine and Fisheries Committee, one official told us that his view was that coasting captains went along the shore till they found one lighthouse, then looked for the next, and in this way crept along by the points on the shore.

Mr. HAZEN: They have an expression that they "spell" their way along.

Mr. SINCLAIR: That is what this man understood, and he was an employee in the department of my hon. friend and might reasonably be supposed to know something about shipping. Perhaps he never saw salt water in his life; certainly he did not know much about it. The captain who leaves a harbour in Nova Scotia for the West Indies never sees land again until he arrives at the port of destination. He is a navigator and knows how to figure out his position at sea. So long as he sees the sun that is all that he cares about; he can figure out his course. I see no reason why the coasting captains should not be allowed to sail across the ocean; it is much simpler sailing by latitude than by longitude. As a matter of fact these men are crossing the ocean. Some of the registered vessels in Barbados not more than ten days ago were chartered to carry cargoes to ports in Europe. It is commonly done, and there is no record that it is dangerous to human life or to property to carry on this business. The hon. gentleman says that the London convention fixes the limit for coasting captains at 700 miles from land. If that be so it is a very curious condition for the convention to impose. I venture to say that all the convention ought to require is some special appliances on board the ship. It would not be necessary to interfere in any way with the license under which the captain runs his ship merely because he happens to be more than seven hundred miles from land. But it might be necessary to have an extra boat or some life preservers aboard. I think my hon. friend will find that is all that is required in order to comply with the order of the convention.

However, I am not opposing the proposal of the minister. On the contrary, I am glad he is taking this course, and hope will invite a number of the shipping people of the Maritime Provinces to come here before the committee. My main purpose is to arrive at a result, and to arrive at it during the present session.

Mr. SPEAKER: It appears to me that the proposed amendment is not in very good form. It goes on to say "that the Committee of Marine and Fisheries be instructed to inquire and report." Yet the matter is not referred to the committee.

Mr. HAZEN: I would suggest that that be made to read in this way, which is practically in the same form as an amendment made in the case of the Bill with regard to cigarettes proposed by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder):

> That all the words after the word "that" in the first line of the proposed resolution down to and including the word "following" in the third line of the resolution be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "The Committee of Marine and Fisheries be instructed to inquire and report whether it is expedient to enact as follows", and by adding to the proposed resolution at the end thereof the following words: "or whether it is expedient to make any other amendment and if so what amendment to the existing laws defining a coasting voyage."

That gives the committee full power to inquire into the amendments proposed by my hon. friend, and also to consider whether any other amendment, and if so what amendment, should be introduced.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Would it enable the committee to send for and examine witnesses?

Mr. HAZEN: As this is one of the standing committees, I take it for granted that it has the power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses under oath; but I have not looked into the matter. In order to be on the safe side, perhaps we ought to add the ordinary words which give the committee this power.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think that the committee already possesses this power under the resolution of the 11th of February:

That the Select Standing Committees of this House shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon; with power to send for persons, papers and records, with the exception of the Committee on Debates and that on the Library of Parliament.

Mr. HAZEN: That does not give power to examine witnesses under oath.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am not certain, but I think that under our rules that power is given to committees of the House.

Mr. HAZEN: If we find that we have not the power, we can ask for it later.

Amendment agreed to and motion as amended agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

SALE OF MILITARY STORES.

Mr. JOHN H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. 40, to amend the Criminal Code. He said:

When introducing this Bill I took occasion to explain shortly its provisions. Perhaps the simplest way for me to proceed now would be to read the two clauses of the Bill. They are as follows:

Every person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for two years, with or without hard labour, or to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or to both imprisonment and fine, who knowingly with intent to defraud, sells or delivers, or causes to be sold or delivered, to His Majesty or to any officer or servant of His Majesty, any defective military, militia or naval stores of any kind or description, whether such stores are for His Majesty in the right of His Government of Canada or in the right of any other of His Majesty's dominions, or who in any way commits any act of dishonesty, fraud, or deception upon His Majesty or any of His Majesty's officers or servants in connection with the sale or lease or purchase or delivery or manufacture of such military, militia or naval stores.

If any offence referred to in this section is committed by a body corporate, every director and officer of such body corporate who has taken any part or share in such fraud, dishonesty or deception, or who knows or had reason to suspect that such fraud, dishonesty or deception would be committed, or knows or had reason to suspect that such fraud, dishonesty or deception has been committed, and does not at once inform His Majesty thereof, shall be liable to the penalties imposed by this section in all respects as if such offence was committed by said directors or officers themselves, and every such body corporate, director or officer convicted of such offence shall be thereafter incapable of contracting with His Majesty or with any of His Majesty's officers or servants, or of holding any contract or office with, from or under him or them, or of receiving any benefit under any contract so made.

The necessity for such a measure as this will, I think, be admitted by the Minister of Justice and by every member of the House. I was looking over the criminal law to ascertain whether we really had any provision for punishment of those who defraud the Government in the sale of military stores, and I was unable to find that Parliament had legislated on this question at any previous time.

There is a large number of provisions relating to military affairs; for example, we have imposed penalties for persuading soldiers to desert, for concealing a deserter, for attending a drill without lawful authority, for obliterating the marks on military stores, for being in possession of stores without lawful authority, for receiving clothing, etc., from a soldier or deserter. We have a large number of provisions in the code that relate to minor offences of that kind, but no provision that punishes a contractor who deliberately and with intention of fraud palms off shoddy goods on the Militia Department. We know that at a time like this, when there is great excitement and when everybody in the department is busy with matters of great importance, the dishonest man is also busy. It is his opportunity to get contracts, to supply articles that are not up to the standard, and in this way to deceive the Government, and so do far more damage to the public interest than could be done by men who might commit the minor offences to which I have referred; but at the same time no provision has been made for such cases. I do not know to what extent these things are carried on, but if we are to credit the press we must believe that they are carried on to some extent. The press of Great Britain has made reference to them. The London Times, even, has discussed the question of the character of some of the supplies that have been furnished to the Canadian soldiers. I have seen frequent references in the press to this subject, and what startled me most was the reference of the Minister of Militia himself, who in Vancouver said that he would like to have authority to shoot the dishonest contractors who were imposing upon the Government in this way.

Mr. HAZEN: Does the hon. gentleman propose shooting as a penalty under the Bill?

Mr. SINCLAIR: I do not. I propose two years' imprisonment, which is a much milder form of punishment; but it will be for the Minister of Marine, if he thinks the penalty is not severe enough, to ask the House to add to it.

In the Ottawa Evening Journal of the 12th of January reference is made to a letter from a prominent Canadian officer at Salisbury, whose name for obvious reasons is withheld, in the course of which he says:

> Outside of certain discomforts, we get plenty, and all that money can buy, but I would ask you to appeal to the Government contractors with a view to touching their sense of honour. It seems to me that all they care about is to produce some kind of article that has appearance. They evidently do not stop to consider that these sons of Canada are roughing it for the specific purpose of fighting, and sacrificing their all in order to defend these same contractors' factories and personal liberty. The principal trouble has been in boots, and it is not fair to the soldier to allow these contractors to reap a harvest at his expense. An officer is in a position to purchase his own equipment, but the man behind the gun must take what he is served out with. Of course, there have been some good boots issued, which have been manufactured by a certain two firms, but the others are absolutely unserviceable after a few days' wear.

No later than yesterday morning I myself received a letter from a person who wished me to inform the inspector of military stores that shoddy blankets were being manufactured for the Government at Toronto. I do not know whether that is true or not, but the person who wrote me said it was true. I did not know who the inspector was or to whom I should go. It is well, I think, to have these contractors understand that while they may be able to deceive the department and sell them shoddy and useless stuff for the present, there is a day of reckoning ahead, that these things generally come out; and that when fraud is discovered they will be liable to criminal prosecution. I think that such a provision would deter many people from undertaking a crime of that kind. All the money that we spend should be well spent at a time like this. Money, as we all know, is the sinews of war. The Finance Minister has his own troubles in securing enough cash to carry on our share of this dreadful conflict, and every dollar should be used to the very best advantage. Everybody remembers the scandals in Europe at the time of the Crimean war. The soldiers suffered in the trenches before Sebastopol because defective clothing, blankets and boots were furnished to them by worthless contractors in Great Britain, who were reaping a rich harvest from contracts. The facts all came out later on. People ought to be punished for a crime of this character in connection with military affairs. The German spy who secures information for his government and is paid for it suffers death; but he is a gentleman compared with the Canadian contractor who, when his country is engaged in such a desperate struggle as the present, when the life and the future of the Empire and of civilization are at stake, plots and schemes to defraud the Government by selling shoddy blankets or boots, or a spavined horse, or something of that kind. I think that no penalty is too severe for men who do these things, and I hope the Minister of Justice will aid me in placing either this provision or a provision of this kind on the Canadian statute-book.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I do not think many of us will hesitate in agreeing that persons guilty of offences such as those referred to by the hon. member should be condignly punished. I have great deference for the hon. gentleman's statement that he has not been able to find in the existing criminal law any provision that will cover the cases he suggested. Inasmuch as he has carefully gone into it, I have some hesitation in suggesting that there may be some provision to cover such a case as he speaks of. It seems to me surprising that there should not be some such provision. If there be any doubt upon that, under the method I propose to suggest we shall be able to make it quite clear. For the reasons I gave last evening with regard to the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney), I propose to move that this Bill be referred to the committee which, in accordance with what was said last evening, is to be constituted to take in to consideration suggested amendments to the Criminal Code. I suggested last evening the reasons that led us to the conclusion that it was desirable to proceed in that way. I am quite willing, therefore, having it understood that by doing this we are not necessarily accepting the principle of the Bill, to have the Bill go to a further reading, and then I will move that it be referred to the committee I have just mentioned.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the second time.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I understand that we have gone through the entire order paper, and would move that the House adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 4.56 p.m.

Monday, February 22, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the return of Gideon Rochon, Esquire, as member for the electoral district of Terrebonne.

WAR SUPPLIES—COMMITTEE ON BOOTS.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the name of the Hon. Charles Murphy be substituted for that of the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux on the committee appointed to inquire into all matters appertaining to boots supplied to the Department of Militia.

Motion agreed to.

EVIDENCE BEFORE COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPEAKER: In reply to a question put to me on Friday last, I stated that committees have power to swear witnesses without the House authorizing them. I quote from the Revised Statutes, 1906, cap. 10, sec. 25, "an Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons:"

Any committee of the Senate or of the House of Commons may administer the oath to any witness examined before said committee.

I have noticed that motions have been made in the House to confer power on committees to examine witnesses under oath, and I have already stated that I thought this unnecessary. I quote this section of the Act now in confirmation of that view.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It may be a question as to whether the statute has application only to a committee that was so authorized by the House, and that may be the reason why motions have been made in the House to confer that power.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is quite evident that committees of the House are fully authorized and empowered to administer the oath to a witness because under another clause, sec. 24, the Senate or House of Commons may at any time order a witness to be examined under oath before a committee, provided the committee had neglected to do so.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill No. 47, to amend the Civil Service Act, 1908—Mr. Broder—introduced and read the first time.

WAR SUPPLIES AT SALISBURY PLAINS.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM: I notice in a despatch which has been given prominence in the leading newspapers, including the Ottawa Journal of Saturday last, a statement that wagons, harness, Ross rifles, etc., have been discarded in great quantities and left behind at Salisbury Plains. Has the Government any information on that point?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not think we have any such information as that. I shall be able to give my hon. friend full information later. I believe the Princess Patricia regiment did take British rifles, because it was brigaded with a British division, but so far as the Canadian Overseas force is concerned, I have no information whatever that the Ross rifle has been discarded. The long Ross rifle, I understand from the Minister of Militia, is not regarded as very suitable for cavalry, not because of the rifle itself, but because of the difficulty of handling a long rifle on horseback. So far as the motor transport is concerned, my recollection is that it was subjected to very severe usage during the four or five months which have elapsed since the force has been in Salisbury Plains, and it would be desirable, I have no doubt, that new motor transports should be sent to the front as quickly as possible; but I do not know at the moment how much of the motor transport which was so used has been taken to the front and what proportion has been left behind to be usesd during training by any further expeditionary force that may go forward.

Mr. GRAHAM: The despatch also refers to wagons and harness having been left behind.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: So far as wagons and harness are concerned, I am not in a position to speak; but I will get the information later on.

GASPE-CAMPBELLTON STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) regarding the memorial that has been sent to him by the Campbellton Board of Trade, a copy of which has been sent to me by the secretary of the board, regarding the steamship service between Gaspé and Campbellton. As the House is aware from our last discussion on the matter, the minister was under some difficulty in establishing that service last year, and the best that he could do was to establish a long-distance service between Montreal, Quebec and Campbellton. But this does not meet the requirements between Campbellton and Gaspé and of the Bonaventure shore, and so they are asking that the local service between Gaspé and Campbellton be re-established. I have no objection to the long-distance service if it can be maintained, but the signers of the memorial are in favour of re-establishing the old semi-weekly service. Would it be possible for the minister, in view of the near opening of navigation, to call for tenders for such service? Has any action been taken in the matter?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is as the hon. member for Bonaventure has intimated, about the beginning of last year's service the proprietor of the line, a contractor in this case, died. His estate was not able to carry on the service. We were in the midst of the season before this was decided, and so the best that could be done at that time was to make an arrangement for weekly service instead of semi-weekly with a line which carried as far as Montreal. The document referred to by my hon. friend has been received, and is now being considered by the officers of the department. In a little while I shall be able to come to a conclusion as to what is best to be done, or what is possible under the circumstances.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 41, respecting The Athabasca Northern Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 42, respecting The Canada Preferred Insurance Company.—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 43, respecting The Huron and Erie Loan and Savings Company, and to change its name to The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation.—Mr. Marshall.

Bill No. 44, respecting certain patents of The Lohmann Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 45, respecting The Vancouver Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 46, respecting The Western Dominion Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

ST. GILBERT DE PORTNEUF POSTMASTER.

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Has the postmaster of the parish of St. Gilbert de Portneuf been dismissed from office?
2. If so, who requested his dismissal?
3. Who is his successor? and by whom was he recommended?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. The Postmaster General directed a change in the site of the post office.
2. Mr. Honoré Grenier.
3. Mr. Bertrand Giraud, who was recommended by Mr. H. Grenier and approved by the Postmaster General.

WAR SUPPLIES—CLINIC THERMOMETERS.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM:

1. Did the Government purchase for the first Canadian contingent any clinic thermometers from any one in Ottawa?
2. If so, from whom were these clinic thermometers purchased, and what was the price paid?
3. Did the Government have any offers from private individuals for clinic thermometers? If so, what were the prices quoted?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Yes.
2. T. A. Brownlee. $1 was paid at first, but subsequently Mr. Brownlee discovered an error in his charge, and refunded half of this, making the net price 50c.
3. Not before the order was given—August 11.

WAR SUPPLIES—RAZORS.

Mr. TURRIFF:

1. How many razors have been bought by or on behalf of the Government since the war began?
2. What price was paid per dozen, gross or thousand?

Mr. CODERRE:

Department of Militia and Defence.

1. 62,363.

2. Prices varied from $4.85 to $9 per dozen.

Department of Naval Service.

1. 500 razors were purchased November 14 for delivery at H.M.C. dockyard, Halifax, N.S.

2. $5.84 per dozen.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CITIES.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Department of Labour ascertained how many unemployed there were on the 1st of January, 1915, in the cities of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Halifax and St. John, N.B.?

2. If so, what is the number in each case?

Mr. CROTHERS:

1. No information has been received showing the precise number of unemployed on January 1, 1915, in the cities named. Information is gathered from time to time showing generally the extent of unemployment in various parts of Canada, including the cities named.

2. Answered by No. 1.

VALCARTIER CAMP—DISPOSAL OF STORES.

Mr. CARROLL:

1. Has the Government or any official of the Government recently received written or verbal information in regard to the disposal of the military stores at the close of the Valcartier camp?

2. If so, has the Government taken any steps to investigate the charge and recover the property?

Major-General HUGHES: No information on the matter.

WAR SUPPLIES—DRUGS, MEDICAL SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. What wholesale firms doing business in pharmaceutical supplies have furnished the first expeditionary force with drugs, medical supplies, surgical instruments, etc.?

2. What are the names of such firms, and what is the amount in each case?

3. Were tenders called for in every case?

Major-General HUGHES:

1 and 2. Ingram & Bell, Ltd., Toronto, $3,054.99; Hartz Co., Ltd., J. F., Toronto, $704.52; Wood, W. Lloyd, Toronto, $3,125; Burroughs Wellcome & Co., Montreal, $614.62; Chapman, J. H., Montreal, $14,741; Gilmour Bros. & Co. (agents Johnston & Johnston), Montreal, $1,180.60; Lymans, Ltd., Montreal, $702.83; National Drug & Chemical Co., Montreal (agents Seabury & Johnston), $3,081.13; Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, $246; H. K. Mulford Co., Philadelphia, $4,950; Chandler & Fisher, Ltd., Winnipeg, $1,838.47; Eimer & Amend, New York, $953.48; Kny-Scheerer Co., New York, $3,618.73; Whitall Tatum Co., New York, $500.55; E. Powell, Ottawa, $18,163.

3. No. In many cases the supplies were of a special character and were obtained from the manufacturers, either direct or through their representatives.

BUILDINGS RENTED BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TURRIFF:

1. How many buildings or portions of buildings under lease by the Government in the City of Ottawa on the 1st of October, 1911, have been vacated or leases cancelled?

2. Who are the owners of said buildings?

3. Where are said buildings situated?

4. What rent per annum was paid for each?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Nine.

2, 3 and 4. W. J. Baskerville; tenement east side Sussex street, Nos. 537 and 539; $800. Victoria Dubé; offices corner Sussex and Clarence streets; $600. Great North Western Telegraph Company; 2 rooms corner Sparks and Metcalfe streets; $420. E. D. Kerr, Vancouver; portion of ground floor 136 Lyon street; $900. Molsons Bank; Basement and 1st and 2nd flats No. 14 westerly side Metcalfe street, Molsons Bank Chambers; $2,340. J. A. Seybold; Premises corner Sparks and O'Connor streets; $6,500. Slater and Sherwood, Rooms 9, 16, 14, 49 and 17 Sparks Chambers, 193 Sparks street; $1,020. Edith Taylor; 4th, 5th and 6th flats and part of basement, Corry building; $10,200. Thistle Estate; Ground floor, 2nd and 3rd flats, Thistle Building, 26 Wellington street; $1,100.

Leases had expired in all cases, excepting that of J. A. Seybold's property, where lease was cancelled by mutual agreement

Mr. LOUIS PEART.

Mr. MACNUTT:

Is Mr. Louis Peart, who was until lately a school teacher at the Indian Industrial school, Lebret, district of Saltcoats, Sask., now in the employment of the Government? If so, in what capacity, what are his duties and what is his salary?

Mr. CODERRE: Not now in the employ of the Government.

CARIBOO ISLAND BREAKWATER.

Mr. MACDONALD:

Why was the amount voted for breakwater at Cariboo Island, in the session of 1914, not expended during the past season?

Mr. ROGERS: Owing to the Engineer's branch being occupied with works of greater importance, this work was not put under way.

ANTICOSTI LIGHTSHIP.

Mr. BOULAY:

1. What are the names of the officers and engineers of the Anticosti Lightship?
2. Are said officers and engineers in possession of certificates of competency as such? If not, what are the names of those who are not duly qualified?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Captain, Joseph Boulanger (on leave); Captain, Peter LeBlanc (acting); 1st mate, Arthur Marvin (acting); 2nd mate, C. J. Morin (acting); 2nd mate, N. Mathurin (on leave); Note:—On return of 2nd mate Mathurin to duty acting 2nd mate Morin will take position of 1st mate.) Chief Engineer, C. F. Duffy; 2nd Engineer, J. Murphy.
2. Yes.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—CEMENT POSTS.

Mr. BOULAY:

Has B. B. Stewart, contractor, Newcastle, N.B., obtained contracts from the Government of Canada for the construction of cement posts for the use of the Intercolonial railway? If so, for what amounts, and at what localities in the province of Quebec?

Mr. COCHRANE: No.

CANADIAN ORE REFINED IN UNITED STATES.

Mr. BOULAY:

1. What quantity of ore production from the mines of North Ontario has been shipped to the United States to be refined and finished off, during the years 1910, 1911, 1912 and 1913?
2. What is the value of such ore products when refined and finished off?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. Export entries in Department of Customs do not indicate in what part of Ontario iron ore shipped from Canada to United States originates.
2. The value will depend on the extent of refining and finishing.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—CONTRACTS FOR TIES.

Mr. BELLEMARE:

1. How many railway ties were sold to the Government of Canada for the Intercolonial railway, by a Mr. Fraser of Quebec, during the year 1914?
2. What was the price paid, and the number of each kind?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. W. J. B. Fraser, of Quebec, supplied 35,547 ties.

2. 11,770 No. 1 cedar ties, 52c. each; 17,620 No. 2 cedar ties, 44c. each; 2,688 No. 3 cedar ties, 30c. each; 2,408 No. 1 black spruce, 50c. each; 1,061 No. 2 black spruce, 42c. each.

Mr. BELLEMARE:

1. Did a Mr. Flemming of Ottawa obtain a contract from the Government or the Intercolonial railway for the supply of railway ties in the year 1914?
2. If so, what was the number and the price paid, respectively for No. 1 and No. 2 of such railway ties?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes. C. E. Flemming, of the Harris Tie and Timber Co., was given such a contract.
2. 46,694 No. 1 cedar ties at 50 cents each; 31,926 No. 2 cedar ties at 44 cents each; 7,639 No. 3 cedar ties at 30 cents each. Total, 86,259.

Mr. F. P. GUTELIUS.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Since when has Mr. F. P. Gutelius of the Intercolonial become a British subject?
2. To whom, and in what locality was the application to become a British subject presented?
3. By whom was the naturalization certificate given the said F. P. Gutelius, and what date does such certificate bear?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. February 23, 1912.
2. Judge of Circuit Court, Montreal.
3. Said judge, February 23, 1912.

SEED LOBSTERS.

Mr. LAW:

1. How many seed lobsters have been placed in the lobster pond at Long Beach, St. Mary's, Digby county, N.S.?
2. What was the cost of said seed lobsters for each year?
3. What amount has the Department of Marine and Fisheries expended on said pond since its purchase?
4. How many lobsters have been liberated, and when?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. 436.
2. In 1913 the cost was $48.50; in 1914 the cost was $60.50.
3. $11,746.17, including construction, maintenance and cost of lobsters.
4. 169 in 1913; 119 in 1914.

The pond is also being used by the Biological Board in conducting experiments into the rearing of lobsters.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. LAW:

1. How many and what breeds of service horses and cattle have been purchased by the Department of Agriculture in the county of Yarmouth for farm or breeding purposes during the year 1914?

2. What is the name and address of each seller?

3. What is the name and address of each agent or representative through whom the purchase was made?

4. Were any of the animals so purchased found not to be satisfactory? If so, were they returned to the seller, and what is the name of the party from whom purchased?

5. What was the cost of purchasing above animals and to whom was same paid?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. Four Jersey bulls and one Devon bull were purchased by the Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture in the county of Yarmouth for breeding purposes during the year 1914. No stallions were purchased in this county.

2. Messrs. H. and A. Cann, Chegoggin, N.S., "Fox's Gay Boy", 4195, Jersey.

John C. Corning, Chegoggin, N.S., "Prospect of Hebron", 4970, Jersey.

Robt. J. Melvin, Yarmouth, N.S., "Clairmont 3rd", 3198, Jersey.

John C. Corning, Chegoggin, N.S., "Victor of Hillcrest", Jersey.

W. A. Pintney, Melbourne, N.S., "King Philip 2nd", 8905, Devon.

3. Each of the above bulls was purchased by Mr. C. A. Archibald, Clifton, N.S., a duly authorized representative of the Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture.

4. Three of the animals have not proved entirely satisfactory at service. They were not returned to the sellers, who were: Messrs. H. and A. Cann, Chegoggin, N.S.; Robt. J. Melvin, Yarmouth, N.S.; W. A. Pintney, Melbourne, N.S.

5. "Fox's Gay Boy," 4195; $125—Messrs. C. and H. Cann.

"Clairmont 3rd," 3198; $125. Robt. J. Melvin.

"King Philip 2nd," 8905; $100—W. A. Pintney.

"Prospect of Hebron," 4970; $125—John C. Corning.

"Victor of Hillcrest" (yearling), $50—John C. Corning.

STEFANSON ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. What is the latest information in the hands of the Government as to the present whereabouts of the several members of the Stefanson Arctic Expedition who were on board the Karluk when she was crushed in the ice?

2. What steps were taken by the Government to rescue the members of the expedition, who are reported as not having been heard from since they left the neighbourhood of the vessel?

[Mr. Law.]

3. What information has the Government as to the present whereabouts of Mr. Stefanson?

4. What are the names of the men in company with Mr. Stefanson?

5. Does the Government intend to take any steps to find Mr. Stefanson and his party and to aid them if they need aid?

Mr. HAZEN:

1 and 2. After the steamer Karluk was crushed in January, 1914, the surviving members of the expedition landed on Wrangel Island, where they wintered. Captain Robert Bartlett made his way over the ice and across Siberia to Emmer harbour and then across Behring Strait to St. Michaels, where he advised the Canadian Government of the fate of the Karluk. Arrangements were made to attempt the relief of the expedition, and the following ships sailed for Wrangel Island during the summer of 1914, with this object in view: the Russian ice breakers Vaigach and Taimyr, United States patrol steamer Bear, whaling steamer King and Wing, and whaling steamer Corwin. The steamer King and Wing penetrated to Wrangel Island and took off the survivors. Three members that died on the island, and two parties who left the main camp shortly after the wreck of the Karluk have not been heard of. During the winter search parties had been organized to look for these men. Wrangel Island had been explored and search parties had travelled over the ice without finding any trace of the missing parties, and the opinion of the returning members is that these parties have perished.

3, 4 and 5. The second section of the Arctic expedition is at present engaged in scientific work on the Arctic shores of Canada. They have with them, three ships commanded by navigators experienced in northern waters.

4. Mr. Stefanson left the Alaskan coast in March, 1914, for an exploring trip north over the ice, with two men, Storker Storkerson and Ole Anderson. Before leaving he gave instructions as to measures to be taken in case he did not return the same winter. The vessel was to proceed in the summer of 1914 to the coast of Banksland and lay caches, and erect beacons for the men of the Stefanson party when they reached land in the winter of 1914-15. When the latest news of the expedition, dated August, 1914, reached the department, these instructions were being carried out. The expedition being supplied with three vessels does not seem, from latest advice, in need of any further aid at the present time.

ROYAL NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE—PREMISES AT REGINA.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN:

1. What rental is being paid for premises for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police in the city of Regina in connection with what is called the town station of the police?
2. To whom is such rent paid?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. $100 per month.
2. Hugh Armour & Co. Ltd.

ABERDEEN ASSOCIATION—FRANKING PRIVILEGE

Mr. W. M. MARTIN:

Has the Government decided to take away the franking privilege from the Aberdeen Association, a society which has for its object the sending of good literature to settlers in lonely parts of Canada? If so, why?

Mr. CASGRAIN: The matter is under the consideration of the department.

LAST MOUNTAIN LAKE DREDGING.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to continue dredging operations at the foot of Last Mountain Lake, province of Saskatchewan?
2. What amount of money has been spent by the Government in carrying on such dredging in each of the years 1912, 1913 and 1914?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. The requirements of navigation having been sufficiently attended to, the matter of further dredging will be considered when the need for such is shown to exist.

2. 1912, $6,973 52; 1913, $7,114 43; 1914, to Dec. 31, $6,272 00.

MOOSEJAW-REGINA WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to make provision for supplying the cities of Moosejaw and Regina and the surrounding country with water diverted from the Saskatchewan river?
2. How much money has been spent in making preliminary surveys or in any way investigating the feasibility of such a scheme?
3. Has any federal assistance ever been granted in Canada in order to assist in providing a water supply for domestic purposes for any urban community? If so, what community?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. The Department of the Interior has made preliminary investigations covering the development of the power necessary to carry out the Moosejaw-Regina water supply scheme. Further action on this matter has been stayed in so far as this department is concerned, pending the consideration by the Saskatchewan Water Commission of the data collected.

2. About $19,720.

3. In 1903, the sum of $5,000 was granted to the City of Regina for the purpose of rebuilding the Wascana dam which formed the reservoir from which the city obtained its water supply. No other assistance was given through the Department of Public Works.

STEAM TRAWLING.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

Were any steps taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or his department, during 1914, in the direction of prohibiting that mode of deep sea fishing known as steam trawling? If so, what were the steps taken?

Mr. HAZEN:

The Fisheries Protection Cruisers were as active as conditions would permit to prevent steam trawling in territorial waters. There has also been correspondence with the United States Bureau of Fisheries to ascertain when the report it was having prepared following its investigations into the effects of such trawling would be completed, as that country desired to complete such investigations before considering the question of an international arrangement with regard to such trawling.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY ICE SUPPLY.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What are the names of all parties who tendered for supplying ice to the Intercolonial railway at Mulgrave for the current year?
2. What are the dates of such tenders?
3. What is the amount of each tender?
4. If tenders were called for more than once, what are the names, amounts and dates on each occasion on which tenders were called for?
5. Who was the successful tenderer?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1, 2 and 3. S. W. Hagerty, Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, Jan. 4, 1915, 52 cents per net ton, delivered on cars at Pt. Tupper; 88 cents per net ton, delivered and packed in ice house.

G. H. McIntyre, McIntyre's Lake, Nova Scotia, Jan. 4, 1915, 46 cents per net ton, delivered on cars at McIntyre's Lake; 25 cents per net ton extra for storing in ice house.

E. L. Hadley, Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, Jan. 2, 1915, $1 per net ton, delivered and packed in ice house.

J. J. Duff, McIntyre's Lake, Nova Scotia, Jan. 4, 1915, $2.50 per net ton, delivered and packed in ice house.

James Dunlap, Leitches Creek, Nova Scotia, Jan. 4, 1915, 65 cents per net ton, delivered on cars Dunlap's Siding, at Leitches Creek.

4. Tenders were called for, only once; by poster dated Dec. 24, 1914.

5. S. W. Hagerty, at 88 cents per ton, delivered and packed in ice house, his tender being the lowest.

EXPORTS OF COPPER TO UNITED STATES.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What is the quantity and value of copper ore and copper of all kinds exported to the United States between August 4, 1913, and February 15, 1914?

2. What is the quantity and value of copper ore and copper of all kinds exported to the United States between August 4, 1914, and February 15, 1915?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. During the six months ended January 31, 1914; copper, fine, contained in ore, matte, regulus, etc.: domestic, 37,636,785 lbs., $4,399,974. Copper, black or coarse, cement copper and copper in pigs: nil. Copper, old and scrap: domestic, 11,157 cwt., $148,212; foreign, 674 cwt., $8,833.

2. During the six months ended January, 1915: copper, fine, contained in ore, matte, regulus, etc.: domestic, 20,279,733 lbs., $2,059,447. Copper, black or coarse, cement copper and copper in pigs: domestic, 6,020,576 lbs., $811,877. Copper, old and scrap: 10,245 cwt., $108,315.

CIVIL SERVANTS IN HOME MILITIA.

Mr. PROULX:

1. Are there any Dominion Civil Service employees and Provincial Civil Service employees serving in the home militia as guards on canals and other public works or otherwise? If so, how many?

2. What are the names of such civil service employees serving as officers and non-commissioned officers, the salaries they receive from the different Governments, and the remuneration allowed them by the Department of Militia?

Major-General HUGHES: No means immediately available of ascertaining these names.

D.G.S. EARL GREY.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES:

1. Was the D.G.S. Earl Grey sold?
2. If so, to whom, and for what price?
3. What did she cost when completed and ready for sea?
4. If said steamer was not sold, what disposition was made of her?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. Russian Government, $493,000.00.
3. $516,690.97.
4. Answered by No. 1.

FOREIGN STEAM TRAWLERS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

Have foreign steam trawlers been permitted to purchase coal and supplies at the Port of North Sydney, N.S., since the passing of Chapter 14 of the Acts of 1913?

Mr. J. D. REID: Yes. The present collector at North Sydney says French steam trawlers have been permitted to purchase coal and supplies at the port of North Sydney, N.S., since he has been in office.

NATIONAL DRUG COMPANY.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Militia Department given any contract to the National Drug Company?
2. If so, for what amount, and what is the nature of the purchase made?

Major-General HUGHES: No.

THE PROPOSED STAMP TAX.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

Has the Minister of Finance received protests from the manufacturers of patent medicines against the proposed stamp tax? If so, from whom?

Mr. W. T. WHITE: A number of communications have been received from manufacturers and dealers in patent medicines respecting the stamp tax referred to. It is not the practice to make known the names of those from whom such communications are received.

VALCARTIER CAMP—PAYMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. Was an advance of money made by the Government, or by any department thereof, to enable paymasters or other officers or officials to pay in cash, bills and accounts incurred in connection with the transportation and training of troops at Valcartier camp?
2. If so, what amount was advanced, and to whom?
3. Out of the amount so advanced, how much was paid to the Canadian Northern Railway Company?
4. Are there any receipts or vouchers for such cash payments?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Yes. Militia Department.
2. Aggregating $2,245,000 up to January 31, 1915; Major C. N. Shanly, Camp Paymaster, Valcartier, until departure of troops, and Capt. J. A. Gilbert, C.A.P.C., his successor.
3. Nothing.
4. Answered by No. 3.

LEONARDSVILLE DREDGING.

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. Who were the tenderers for the work of dredging at Leonardsville, N.B., for which tenders closed on the 10th August, 1914?
2. What were the amounts of the various tenders received?
3. Who was the lowest tenderer?
4. To whom was the contract awarded?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. The Maritime Dredging and Construction Co., Ltd., J. S. Gregory.

2. Tender "A," 36½ cents per cubic yard, class B; tender "B," 50 cents per cubic yard, class B.

3. The Maritime Dredging and Construction Co., Ltd.

4. No contract was awarded, as it was decided not to proceed with the work at present.

YARMOUTH COUNTY FISHERY GUARDIANS.

Mr. LAW:

What are the names and post office addresses, with amount paid to each, of the fishery guardians in the county of Yarmouth, during the year 1914?

Mr. HAZEN: Jacob Foote, Sanford, N.S., $22.50; C. J. B. Tooker, Yarmouth, N.S., $354; J. E. Golden, Chebogue Point, N.S., $37.50; C. E. Churchill, Short Beach, N.S., $15; David Stanwood, Yarmouth Bar, $30; Nathan Sweeney, Pleasant Lake, $30; Frank Frost, Carleton, N.S., $56.25; Samuel V. Miuse, Quinan, $22.50; C. Reeves, Kemptville, $56.25; Forman Harlbert, Canaan, N.S., $30; J. V. N. Hatfield, Gavelton, N.S., $150; Wade Reynard, Tusket Falls, N.S., $150; S. J. Hood, jr., Yarmouth, N.S., $37.50; Albert A. Pothier, Wedgeport, N.S., $37.50; David Le Ferve, Belleville, N.S., $18.75; Albert Elwell, Argyle, N.S., $18.75; Loran Smith, East Pubnico, N.S., $15; Dennis J. Amiro, West Pubnico, N.S., $37.50; Freeman De Viller, Comeau Hill, $121.50.

YARMOUTH COUNTY MAIL ROUTES.

Mr. LAW:

1. How many rural mail routes have been established in Yarmouth county, what are the names of such routes, and the dates established?

2. How many post offices have been closed in said county, and what are the names of the same, since January 1, 1912?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Six rural mail routes: Carleton No. 1 (in part), Sept. 1, 1913; South Ohio No. 1, Aug. 1, 1909; South Ohio No. 2, April 1, 1910; Tusket No. 1, June 17, 1914; Yarmouth No. 1, May 1, 1909; Yarmouth No. 2, Oct. 1, 1911.

2. Eight post offices: Brenton, Deerfield, Gavelton, Pleasant Valley Corner, Reynard's Bridge, South Deerfield, Tusket Falls.

WINNIPEG VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. MOLLOY:

1. How many volunteers for overseas service are now in barracks in Winnipeg?

2. What are the names or numbers of the several regiments, battalions, or squadrons?

3. At what price per man is food supplied?

4. Who are the contractors for supplying food to the volunteers?

Major-General HUGHES:

1 and 2. Inadvisable to answer, as question is one of military preparation.

3. Cost per ration, 27·74c.

4. John Enright, Winnipeg, meat; Speirs-Parnell Baking Co., Winnipeg, bread; Hardy & Buchanan, Winnipeg, groceries; Laing Bros., Winnipeg, flour.

GUYSBOROUGH COUNTY FISHERY GUARDIANS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

What are the names and post office addresses, with amount paid to each, of the fishery guardians in Guysborough county, during the year 1914?

Mr. HAZEN: Albert Pride, Sonora, N.S., $20; John Faulkner, Sherbrooke, N.S., $20; Earl Archibald, Stillwater, N.S., $35; David Kirk, Aspen, N.S., $20; Archibald Smith, Smithsfield, N.S., $20; George J. Wilson, Caledonia, N.S., $20; William Findla, Caledonia, N.S., $20; John D. Hattie, Camerons Settlement, N.S., $20; Geo. A. Hudson, Country Harbour Mines, N.S., $16; Wm. R. Mason, Country Harbour Cross Road, $20; Moses Mason, Country Harbour Cross Road, $20; Joseph Rudolph, Liscomb, N.S., $15; John Cross, Indian River, N.S., $20; Stephen Myers, Isaacs Harbour, N.S., $20; Ira Sangster, New Harbour, N.S., $10; Otto N. Munro, Cole Harbour, N.S., $30; Norman McDonald, Cooks Cove, N.S., $15; Jeremiah Jones, Cooks Cove, N.S., $15; Harvey Spanks, Rockdale, N.S., $20; Patrick McDonald, Erinville, N.S., $20; John Kenny, Erinville, N.S., $13; James M. Cunningham, Havendale, N.S., $5.20; Duncan Chisholm, St. Francis Harbour, N.S., $20; Jeremiah Borden, Upper Big Tracadie, $15; Walter Nicolle, Mulgrave, N.S., $20.

PHILLIPSBURG-ST. ARMAND MAIL CARRIER.

Mr. KAY:

1. Who was the mail carrier between Phillipsburg and St. Armand station during the summer of 1914?

2. Was he dismissed? If so, when and how much notice was he given to discontinue his services?

3. Who asked for his dismissal?

4. Why was he dismissed?

5. Who recommended the appointment of his successor?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. N. Larivière.

2, 3, 4 and 5. On the expiration of the last regular contract on the 30th September, 1913, and pending certain proposed rearrangements in connection with the establishment of rural routes, a temporary arrangement, terminable at the pleasure of the Postmaster-General, was entered into with Mr. Larivière. This temporary arrangement was continued until the 22nd November, 1914, when a new temporary arrangement was made and the service put up for public tenders.

BONDED LIQUORS AND TOBACCO.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES:

1. What quantity of spirituous liquors proof gallons, including ales, wines and beers, was taken out of bond between August 6, and August 21, 1914?

2. What quantity of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco was taken out of bond between the above mentioned dates?

Mr. BLONDIN:

1. Spirits, 617,461.85 p. gals.

2. Cigars, 13,008,570; cigarettes, 2,209,250; tobacco, 469,224 pounds.

WAR SUPPLIES, FIFTH MOUNTED RIFLES.

Mr. McCREA:

1. From whom is food for men and horses and all other supplies and equipment for the Fifth Mounted Rifles, now in camp at Sherbrooke, bought from and how?

2. If by tender, what date were tenders called for?

3. When were tenders opened and contracts awarded?

4. What are the names and Post Office addresses of all parties who submitted tenders?

5. Who are the successful tenderers, and the price of each?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Harris Abattoir Co., Ltd., beef, 11 cents per pound; mutton, 11 cents per pound.

Walter Allatt, bread, 4 cents per pound.

Harris Abattoir Co., Ltd., groceries: Bacon, breakfast, 18c per pound; bacon, green, 15 cents per pound; potatoes, 9-10 cents per pound; beans, 6½ cents per pound; jam, 13 cents per pound; butter, creamery, 31 cents per pound; butter, dairy, 22 cents per pound; cheese, 17 cents per pound; split pease, 6 cents per pound; sugar, white, 7½ cents per pound; salt, 2 cents per pound; pepper, 25 cents per pound; fresh vegetables, 2¼ cents per pound; lard, 12 cents per pound. At these prices the grocery ration costs less than at those of any other tenderer, viz., 11·76 cents per man per day.

Hyndman Grain Co., straw, $11 per ton; oats, 70 cents per bushel; afterwards increased to 74 cents per bushel.

C. C. Lusk, hay, $20 per ton.

La Cie. Coderre and Fils, coal, hard, furnace, stove, and egg sizes, $7.50 per ton.

S. and W. Fortier, Ltd., wood, hard, 4-foot lengths, $6 per cord; wood, hard, 2-foot lengths, $3.25 per cord; wood, soft, 4-foot lengths, $5 per cord; 2-foot lengths, $2.75 per cord.

The above prices were obtained by public tender, contracts having been made with the lowest tenderer in each case.

2. January 27; time afterwards extended to February 5.

The advertisement calling for tenders did not specify the period for which contracts were to be made. Prospective tenderers complained that they were unable to fix the amount of security deposit and could not quote prices without knowing the time for which they were to hold good. On this account, therefore, after tenders had been opened on January 28, the time for receiving tenders was extended to February 5, the contract period was fixed to expire March 31, 1915, and notice to this effect was at once sent all previous tenderers who were allowed to withdraw their tenders and submit new ones, if this additional information had affected prices in their opinion. As a result of this extension of time, five tenders were received from firms not previously tendering; but in every case but one, the contracts were given to firms who had tendered in the first place and who were the bona fide lowest tenderers. The one exception was the contract for wood. Only one tender was received for this supply.

3. Tenders were opened on January 28 and February 5. Contracts awarded: Hay, January 30; contracts for balance of items were made on February 9.

4. Walter Allatt, Sherbrooke; Bouchard and Blais, Sherbrooke; Thos. J. Pavey, Sherbrooke; Henry Grant, Lennoxville; Eusebe Fontaine, Sherbrooke; Harris Abattoir Co., Quebec; Alex. Ames and Sons, Ltd., Sherbrooke; George F. Moore, Sherbrooke, M. McKechnie, Sherbrooke; Dean and Lacey, Sherbrooke; May and Houlahan, Sherbrooke; Hebert and Fortier, Sherbrooke; L. H. Oliver, Sherbrooke; C. C. Lusk, Cookshire; James Scott and Co., Montreal; Hyndman Grain Co., Sherbrooke; La Cie. C. O. Genest and Fils, Sherbrooke; Ewing Cross, Sherbrooke; La Cie. Coderre and Fils, Sherbrooke; S. and W. Fortier, Ltd., Sherbrooke.

5. Answered by No. 1.

WAR SUPPLIES—HORSES.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. How many horses were bought for the first contingent?

2. What was the average price paid per horse?

3. Were some of the horses so bought, afterwards sold at public auction? If so, how many?
4. Where was the auction held, and who authorized the sale?
5. What was the net amount realized by the auction sale?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. 8,150.

2. $172.45.

3. Yes: 481 horses which had received injuries, or which had deteriorated owing to exposure and other causes, were sold by public auction.

4. Auction sale was held at Quebec, P.Q., and authorized by the Department.

5. The net amount realized was $25,855.

Mr. MARCILE:

Were any horses, discovered to be unsuitable for service, sold by order of the Militia Department or of any other department of the Government, about the time of departure of the first expeditionary force? If so, how many were sold at the cities of Quebec and Montreal, respectively, and what was the average price obtained for such horses?

Major-General HUGHES: Quebec—481 horses which had received injuries, or which had deteriorated owing to exposure and other causes, were sold by auction. The average price obtained was $53.74. Montreal, none.

Mr. MARCILE:

How many horses were purchased for cavalry purposes, and for the ordinary camp service of Valcartier, respectively, in connection with the requirements of the first expeditionary force, and what was the average price paid for the same?

Major-General HUGHES: 1,436 horses purchased for cavalry. No horses were specially purchased for camp service. The average price paid was $172.45.

WAR SUPPLIES—OVERSHOES.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. How many overshoes were purchased by the Government for the Canadian contingents?
2. From whom were such purchases made, and at what price?
3. How many overshoes were supplied the first contingent, and at what date?
4. Were the overshoes sent the first contingent used by the troops or returned to Canada?
5. If returned without being used, what reason was given for such return?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Since August 1, 1914, 120,000 pairs have been bought.

2. From Canadian Consolidated Rubber Company at $1.96 and $1.85 per pair; from Gutta Percha and Rubber, Ltd., at $1.70 and $1.85 per pair; from Kauffman Rubber Co., Columbus Rubber Co., and Independent Rubber Co., at $1.85 per pair.

3. 48,000 pairs were shipped to England during the month of October for the use of First Contingent and for upkeep.

4. Used by troops.

5. None have been returned to Canada.

WAR SUPPLIES—SHOES.

Mr. GERMAN:

Did Mr. Robert Wilson, boot and shoe merchant, of the city of Hamilton, have a contract with the Government for the sale of army shoes to be used by the first Canadian contingent? If so, for how many pairs, and at what price per pair?

Major-General HUGHES: No.

WAR SUPPLIES—DRUGS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has any sale of drugs or pharmaceutical products of any kind been made to the Department of Militia by Mrs. George Plamondon, St. Joseph street, Quebec?

2. If so, what is the total amount of the purchase made from said Mrs. Plamondon, and what is the nature of the purchase?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Yes.

2. (a) $23,495.54, from July 1, 1914, to January 31, 1915. (b) Drugs, etc., for Permanent Corps and troops mobilizing at Valcartier.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Gauvreau: For a return showing the names and post office addresses of all persons in the county of Temiscouata, who have received the bounty which is granted to the Fenian raid veterans under the provisions of the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act. Also, the names and post office addresses of all persons in the county of Temiscouata, whose requests have been rejected, and the names and post office addresses of such persons whose claims have not yet been taken into consideration.

Mr. Gauvreau: For a copy of all papers, petitions, declarations, affidavits, sworn statements, requests, certificates and all other documents in connection with the naturalization of F. P. Gutelius, general manager of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. Cruise: For a copy of the report of investigation held about June 1, 1914, by R. T. Ferguson, as special commissioner, into the allotment of homesteads on the area cut of the Riding Mountain Forest Reserve in the year 1908 or about that time.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports, recommendations, orders in council and all other documents and papers in connection with rewards to the officers and crews of steamers John L. Cann and Westport III, for their heroic efforts in saving the passengers and crews of S.S. Cobequid, wrecked on Trinity Ledge, January 13, 1914.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all petitions, correspondence, complaints, reports and other documents relating to the dismissal of Alfred H. Bonnyman, postmaster of Mattatall lake, in the county of Colchester, N.S.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all correspondence, recommendations, petitions. contracts, tenders and other papers and documents in any way connected with the letting of the contract for carrying the mails between Guysborough and Erinville, N.S.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all petitions, letters or other papers or documents in the possession of the Department of Public Works relating to the expenditure of money for the construction of new public works in Guysborough county since October 10, 1911.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all petitions, correspondence, reports of engineers or other persons in the possession of the Department of Railways and Canals relating to the construction of a railway in the county of Guysborough, N.S.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all correspondence, recommendations, tenders and other papers on file in the office of the Department of Railways and Canals relating to supplying ice for the Intercolonial railway at Mulgrave for the year 1915.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all correspondence, petitions, recommendations, and other papers on file in the office of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, relating to the automatic gas buoy placed at the entrance of Country Harbour, in the county of Guysborough, known as The Isaac's harbour Buoy.

Mr. Sinclair: For a copy of all orders in council, memoranda, correspondence or other documents in the possession of the Government, or any department thereof, relating to the trade in dried fish and wines between Portugal and Canada.

Mr. Sinclair: For a return showing the names, tonnage, port of registry and destination of all foreign vessels engaged in fishing, both sail and steam, that entered and cleared from the port of North Sydney, N.S., from December 31, 1913, to date.

Mr. Boyer: For a copy of all letters, telegrams and papers generally concerning the proposed construction of a bridge between the island of Montreal and the mainland at Vaudreuil.

Mr. Boyer: For a copy of all letters, telegrams and papers generally concerning the proposed construction of a bridge to connect Isle Perrot with the mainland at Vaudreuil.

Mr. W. M. Martin: For a return showing what properties have been acquired by the Government in the city of Regina since September 21, 1911. The descriptions of such properties by metes and bounds. For what purposes such properties were acquired. From whom such properties were purchased. The total price and the price per foot paid for each property. If any such property was acquired by expropriation, what tribunal determined the price to be paid for any property so expropriated. The dates on which any such properties were acquired.

Mr. Lemieux: For a return showing the total number of employees, both permanent and temporary, at the following post offices: Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Halifax, Quebec, St. John, N.B., and Vancouver. The total number of salaries paid in each case. The total number of employees, and the amount of salaries paid in the above offices on the first of October, 1911.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Mr. Achim: For a return showing the total amount of the travelling expenses of the members of the late Government in the last ten years of their administration. Trips to other countries, Europe included, they have made. The names of the ministers who have travelled at the expense of the public treasury. The total amount so expended by each of the ministers who have so travelled. The objects of these visits, and how long did they last.

Mr. Loggie: For a return showing the inward tonnage freight, and also the outward tonnage freight respectively, at Loggieville station on the Intercolonial railway for each month of 1914, and also for the month of January, 1915. The inward tonnage freight, and the outward tonnage freight at Chatham station, on the Intercolonial railway for each month of 1914, and also for the month of January, 1915. The inward tonnage freight, and the outward tonnage freight at Newcastle station on the Intercolonial railway for each month of 1914, and also for the month of January, 1915. The local and through passenger traffic to and through each of the above stations respectively, during each of the months above mentioned. It is requested that coal and other railway supplies be shown separately.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a return showing the names and addresses of all Fenian raid veterans in the county of Inverness who have been paid the Fenian raid bounty, the names and addresses of those who have not yet been paid, and the names and addresses of those whose applications have been refused.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a return showing the amounts expended by the Public Works Department in the county of Inverness each year from 1896 down to 1915.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a copy of all letters, telgerams, petitions and documents of all kinds in possession of the Post Office Department, referring in any way to the conduct of the postmaster at Grand Etang since his appointment until the present date.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm: For a copy of all telegrams, letters, reports petitions and all other documents in any way referring to the proposed line of railway from Orangedale to Cheticamp.

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.) moved:

That a humble address be presented to His Majesty praying that he may be graciously pleased to give his consent to submitting a measure to the Parliament of the United Kingdom to amend certain provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, in order that the province of Prince Edward Island will always be entitled to at least six members in the House of Commons of Canada, that being the number of members assigned to the said province when it entered confederation.

He said: During the last regular session of Parliament the question of the membership of this House, and of the other House as well, occupied a good deal of time and attention. The fact that there was a continued and steady reduction in the number of members of this House coming from the group of provinces known as the Maritime Provinces claimed considerable attention, and the Committee on Redistribution suggested that a change be made in the British North America Act so that no province would have fewer representatives in this House than it had in the Senate. That suggestion appeared to have commended itself to the House, and some action was taken in regard to it. However, Parliament prorogued without anything definite having been done in that regard. Hence I am bringing this resolution to the notice of the House to-day. The members from the larger provinces may perhaps wonder why we from the smaller provinces, particularly from Prince Edward Island, attach so much importance to this question. My answer to that natural inquiry would be, that in all countries having representative institutions to which delegates are sent, the small communities are always very sensitive, perhaps even jealous, with regard to the number of their representatives. While the larger provinces and the strong places can take care of themselves, the smaller provinces or communities are not so satisfied that they can under all circumstances look after their own interests, and they have in consequence a sensitiveness on the question of representation. I should like the members from the larger provinces to look at this question for a few moments from our viewpoint. I think I can establish that there was in the minds of those who drew up the terms of Confederation the idea that whatever the number of members a province started with that number should not be reduced, particularly in regard to the smaller provinces. A provision was put in the Constitution to safeguard that principle. I think I can prove that when Prince Edward Island finally came into the Confederation after her stipulation for six members had been conceded, the delegates from that province were firmly convinced they were to have at least six members for all time; and I believe that the members of the sub-committee of the Privy Council with whom they negotiated the terms of the Union had the same opinion. In support of my argument, I shall quote from Sir Joseph Pope's Confederation documents, which I believe is as good a record of the negotiations as is extant. As of course the members of this House know, the first conference on Confederation was held at Charlottetown, in the province of Prince Edward Island, and was called to consider the question of a Maritime union. The public men of Canada—Quebec and Ontario at that time—had a larger idea, and suggested at the Charlottetown conference that the meeting be adjourned to meet later on at Quebec, and that representatives of the lower provinces be invited to attend to consider the question of the Confederation of the Dominion. That suggestion was carried out and the second conference met at Quebec in 1864. The province of Prince Edward Island sent certain representatives, and on looking up the records I find that those delegates were willing to discuss any question in connection with Confederation except the question of representation. The other questions were very important of course but on the question of representation the delegates from Prince Edward Island would make no concessions. They pointed out that unless they could get six representatives that, so far as they were concerned, Confederation could not be considered. The delegates from the other provinces did not see their way clear to grant this concession, and the consequence was that when Confederation was accomplished some three years later, Prince Edward Island did not come in. I have already stated that in the minds of those who were laying down the principles of Confederation there was the idea that whatever number of members a province started with, that number should not be reduced; and the conference unanimously passed a resolution to that effect, resolution No. 21, which reads as follows:

> No reduction shall be made in the number of members returned by any section, unless its population shall have decreased relatively to the population of the whole Union, to the extent of five per centum.

That provision was later on embodied in the British North America Act in subsection 4 of section 51. It was put in with the object of preserving the original representation. Under certain conditions that provision would have very far-reaching consequences. For instance, if the population of any province compared with the population of the whole Dominion was reduced in the first decade by only 4 per cent, or one twenty-fifth, no reduction in representation would take place. A basis of calculation would then be established, and if in the next decade the reduction of population in the province compared with the population of the whole Dominion was only one twenty-fifth, again no reduction in representation would take place although the population had been re-reduced by eight per cent. Supposing the same thing took place in the third decade, that the population of the province as compared with the whole Dominion was again reduced by 4 per cent; no reduction would occur in the representation, although in those three decades a reduction of 12 per cent would have taken place in the population of the province. And so on. If, in say 50 years, a reduction of 20 per cent took place in the population of any one province no reduction would take place in the representation. But that provision did not safeguard the Maritime Provinces from reduction in their representation, although in my judgment it was thought at that time a sufficient safeguard, and if it had not been deemed a sufficient safeguard, a provision would have been inserted that would have adequately safeguarded the original representation.

The discussion of the Quebec Conference went on from day to day, and an effort was made to meet the views of the delegates from Prince Edward Island. Mr. Galt, who was very anxious to meet the views of the delegates and to have Prince Edward Island included in the Confederation, proposed that the representation of the other provinces be increased. Mr. Brown, one of the delegates from Ontario, was, of course, very strong on the principle of representation by population. Mr. Brown had moved a resolution which gave Quebec sixty-five and all the other provinces a number in proportion but which gave Prince Edward Island only five members. Mr. Galt made this statement in reference to Mr. Brown's motion, he proposing two hundred and twenty-five members instead of two hundred:

If we divide two hundred and twenty-five, according to population. I calculated it would give Upper Canada ninety-nine, Lower Canada seventy-four, Nova Scotia twenty-one, New Brunswick seventeen, Newfoundland eight, and Prince Edward Island six. We should commence with the census of 1861, and readjust after each subsequent census. We have supposed that the population of Lower Canada, being tolerably equable in its character, would afford the best basis. But, having respect to the rapid increase of Upper Canada, we think the Lower Provinces should not be reduced if they do not increase in the same ratio. Therefore, the Lower Provinces would have the same as they have now—

I presume that is at the time of coming into Confederation—

—unless in the very improbable case of any one falling off by five per cent or more—that is a decrease relatively to the whole federation.

That, I think, carries out the point I have been trying to substantiate, namely, that in the minds of the men laying the foundations of Confederation the idea was present that this saving clause would be sufficient to safeguard the provinces against any reduction in their representation, and that whatever representation it started off with must not be reduced in number. The suggestion of Mr. Galt, however did not carry. Mr. Brown moved that Upper Canada have eighty-two members, Lower Canada sixty-five, Nova Scotia nineteen, New Brunswick fifteen, Newfoundland seven, and Prince Edward Island five. That carried, Prince Edward Island voting nay. Mr. Brown, in speaking to that motion, said:

The practical result will be that while Lower Canada certainly will not be less and the Lower Provinces may increase in population, they cannot decrease in the number of representatives. It keeps the House within a reasonable limit.

I think I have already stated that Mr. Brown's motion carried, Prince Edward Island voting nay. Mr. Haviland, one of the delegates from Prince Edward Island who was strongly in favour of Confederation, said:

Prince Edward Island would rather be out of the confederation than consent to this motion. We should have no status. Only five members out of one hundred and ninety-four would give the Island no position.

If five members out of a representation of one hundred and ninety-five at that time would give the Island no status, if we are now down to three and if the representation of the other provinces is much larger, of course our position relatively becomes much worse. There were speeches by other delegates from Prince Edward Island but all in the same direction.

Mr. Galt was, as I have already said, very anxious to meet the views of the delegates from Prince Edward Island. And he made this statement:

It would be a matter for the greatest regret that any difficulty should arise over this matter. We request the Prince Edward Island delegates to reconsider their decision. It would be a matter of reproach to us if the smallest colony should leave us.

In accordance with this suggestion the delegates from Prince Edward Island left the conference chamber to reconsider the matter and to give their answer the next day, but before leaving Mr. Whelan, one of the delegates who was also very favourably impressed with the idea of Confederation, made this statement:

4 p.m.

I should feel it my duty to-night to vote against the resolution, but we had better reconsider the matter. Mr. Haviland and I came here perfectly untrammeled and without any instructions from the Government of Prince Edward Island. We understand that all proceedings were to be 'de novo' and apart from anything which had taken place at Charlottetown. I thought that Prince Edward Island had not been fairly treated as to representation in the Legislative Council, but I gave way on that occasion. I do not think, however, I could say I was satisfied with the representation of five in the Federal House of Commons. We are in an isolated position. Our resources are large, and our people would not be content to give up their present benefits for the representation of five members. It may be said that the confederation will go on without Prince Edward Island, and that we shall eventually be forced in. Better, however, that, than that we should willingly go into the confederation with that representation. But if the Government who formed the delegation will take the responsibility on them, I may support them.

I have already stated that the delegation from Prince Edward Island withdrew from that meeting and returned next morning to give their answer to the conference. Col. Gray spoke for the others. He said:

I am instructed by my co-delegates to say that the provision of five members is unsatisfactory. Prince Edward Island is divided longitudinally into three counties, each returning ten members.

That is for the local legislature.

But they are always opposed to a change of representation. We cannot divide the three counties into the five members.

Mr. Brown answered:

Every province must revise its own electoral divisions to suit the number of its representatives.

Mr. Pope, one of the delegates who was afterwards Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the Government here, made this statement:

I agree in all that has been said by Colonel Gray and Mr. Coles. But the circumstances of Prince Edward Island are such that I hope the conference will agree to give us such a number as we can divide amongst our three constituencies. Nature, as well as the original settlement of the island, has made three counties, and it would give rise to much difficulty if we had to adjust five members to the three counties. I cannot ask it as a matter of right, but one of expediency, as one without which it is impossible for us to carry the measure in Prince Edward Island. I, therefore, ask for six members.

Mr. Haviland said:

I fully agree with Mr. Pope. It would be an insuperable difficulty to us if we had not six members.

I do not think it is necessary to read further from these documents to show that the delegation from Prince Edward Island at that time were fully convinced that Confederation could not be carried in that province unless they got six members to start with and six in perpetuity. I draw from these statements the conclusion that in the minds of the delegates from Prince Edward Island, and in the mind of every man at the conference, the idea was established that whatever number of members the province received that number would not be decreased. Otherwise, why lay stress upon the particular number to start with? If Prince Edward Island were to have six members for a few years only I presume the delegates from the other provinces would not have considered it such an important matter and would have yielded the point. Then, if it were only to be for a few years the delegates from Prince Edward Island would not have laid such stress upon it and would not have considered it a matter which would justify them in remaining outside of Confederation. Therefore, I come to the conclusion, and no other conclusion in my judgment is feasible, that at that period the delegates from Prince Edward Island and the delegates from the other provinces were fully impressed with the idea that the original number would not be reduced.

When the delegates returned to Prince Edward Island they were sustained by the legislature, the people, and the press. The people were willing to discuss any other feature of Confederation, but on the question of representation there was no compromise, and three years later, when Confederation took place, Prince Edward Island remained out. It appeared, however, to be the wish of the Home Government and the wish of the Government of Canada that Confederation should be rounded out by the inclusion of Prince Edward Island, and from time to time negotiations were carried on looking to that end. In 1869 Lord Granville, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, wrote to the Governor General of Canada, suggesting that the Federal Government should give liberal concessions to Prince Edward Island, and what is known as the better terms of 1869 were offered; but still we could not get the six members in the House of Commons, and Prince Edward Island would not come in. Negotiations continued, and in 1873 Earl Kimberley, then Colonial Secretary, wrote to the Governor General of Canada along the same lines as the correspondence that had taken place between the Governor General and Lord Granville, and the Governor General of Canada wrote to Lieutenant Governor Robinson of Prince Edward Island, stating that if his Government would send a delegation to Ottawa, a sub-committee of the Privy Council would meet them to negotiate on terms of Confederation. Accordingly the Government of Prince Edward Island sent a delegation here, consisting of Messrs. Laird and Haythorne, and the Government of Canada appointed a subcommittee of the Privy Council consisting of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Hector Langevin, and Mr. Howe. Negotiations between these gentlemen continued for several days. The delegates knew well the feeling of the people of Prince Edward Island on the question of representation, and this was the one point which they appeared to be determined to obtain, and did obtain, although their population entitled them at that time to only five members. So important was this point considered that it was the subject of several communications between the delegates at Ottawa and the Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island, while the other conditions appear to have been left to the delegates, to make the best terms they could, although of course the financial and other terms were very important. On the 26th of February, 1873, Mr. Haythorne, one of the delegates, sent this message to Lieutenant Governor Robinson:

> Probably yield six representatives.

On the 6th of March, this telegram was sent by Mr. Haythorne:

> Highly probable get six representatives.

The negotiations continued and apparently the delegates from Prince Edward Island had impressed their views upon the sub-committee of the Privy Council, and on the same day, the 6th of March, the Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island telegraphed to Mr. Haythorne:

> We hope six representatives will be conceded.

A conclusion seemed to have been reached on that date, because later in the day Mr. Haythorne wired to Mr. Edward Palmer, his colleague in the Government of Prince Edward Island:

> Six representatives conceded.

The point upon which I have laid so much stress, and the point as to which we remained out of Confederation for six years and upon which we finally entered Confederation, was the concession of six representatives in this House. I leave it to the judgment of hon. gentlemen if they think that in the circumstances this representation was to be for a few years only. On a point which the delegates from Prince Edward Island emphasized so much and to which they attached so much importance, is it to be thought that the sub-committee of the Privy Council with which they were negotiating the terms, would have hesitated to yield the point if that representation of six members were to continue for only a few years. I do not think so, and I do not think that any fair-minded man would come to that conclusion. There is no other intelligent conclusion to be arrived at than that the delegates from Prince Edward Island had at all events convinced themselves that they were obtaining a minimum representation which would be permanent. The men who sat around that council board must have known what was in the minds of the Prince Edward Island delegates, and it would be an injustice to the memory and character of these men to say that they deceived the delegates, or even that they allowed these delegates to deceive themselves on that point. I, therefore, am justified in coming to the conclusion that it was in the minds of all these men who were carrying on the negotiations that Prince Edward Island was getting a concession which was to be hers in perpetuity. Unfortunately, the terms of the union were not worded so that that provision was put beyond doubt, or otherwise we would not be here to-day looking for our rights. I can understand how easy it is for a mistake to occur even in important documents. It is known to us all that important measures have passed this Parliament, statutes drawn by the most expert lawyers, and that defects have afterwards been discovered in them which rendered remedial legislation necessary. Only a few days ago the Minister of Marine gave an illustration of how mistakes may occur in connection with the purchase of the submarines on the Pacific coast. A telegram from Sir Richard McBride stated that the price of these submarines was to be $1,150,000, but the Order-in-Council was passed for $1,050,000, and that was a mistake which one would think could be easily seen.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries told us that he did not know how the mistake occurred. It might have occurred in transmitting a message by telephone from the Prime Minister's office to the office of Naval Affairs; it might have occurred—probably it did occur—in the course of the work of the officer in the Naval Affairs Department who prepared the memorandum for Council. It escaped the notice of that officer, of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, of the Deputy Minister of Naval Affairs, of the Privy Council—and was only discovered a number of days afterwards. So we see how easy it is for mistakes to occur; and in all human probability a mistake occurred in the terms of union, which mistake escaped the notice of the delegates from Prince Edward Island, of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, and of the Government of Canada.

During the last regular session of this Parliament, as I have stated, a resolution was passed in this House to the effect that no province should have fewer members in this House than it had in the Senate. That was an effort to correct this error. Some hon. member of the House—I have forgotten who it was—told the Prime Minister that he was departing from the principle of representation by population. The Prime Minister's answer was that the departure was not very serious. And I say the same now. If this House should agree to give the original representation to Prince Edward Island, the departure from the principle of representation by population would not be very serious. I do not think it would endanger the Constitution. On the other hand, it would be a settlement of the question; it would lead the people of Prince Edward Island to believe that they had been fairly and generously used in this matter, a matter that to them at least is important. And any other settlement will not lead to that conclusion. We may obtain four members. That, of course, would be better than to be reduced to three or to two; but will not, so far as we are concerned, be regarded as a full or generous settlement of this question. And I say that the Parliament of Canada is big enough and broad-minded enough, and I think the men of the other provinces are broad-minded enough, to give to the smallest province of the Dominion this concession, which cannot possibly injure anybody, and which is regarded by the people of Prince Edward Island as being of great importance.

Years ago, I think it was in 1892, when the question of redistribution was under consideration, and British Columbia was obtaining a larger representation in this House than she would have been entitled to on the basis of population, Sir John Thompson spoke very strongly in favour of British Columbia's views. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then leader of the Opposition, spoke in the same way, and said—I am not quoting his words, but I think I give with precision the effect of what he said—he would be sorry that any province of the Dominion should have fewer representatives in Parliament than that province thought itself entitled to. That is all I am asking for. And if the right hon. leader of the Government and the right hon. leader of the Opposition think these views correct, if they would regret that any province in the Dominion should have a smaller representation in this House than it has always thought it was entitled to, there would be no difficulty about the passing of this resolution.

I think this matter should be dealt with this session. We may, or may not, have an election before another session, and we may, or may not, be reduced to three members. And some time or other this question must be taken up; and it would be just as well, in my judgment, to take it up and dispose of it now.

As I have already said, we of Prince Edward Island feel proud that Charlottetown, the capital of our province, saw the first conference to take into consideration the idea of Confederation. We think that since Confederation we have contributed our share towards the prosperity of this Dominion. Large numbers from the province of Prince Edward Island, as from the other Maritime Provinces, have gone into the Northwest. As a rule, I believe, they have done well there. They have cooperated with the people of the other provinces towards the progress of the West. And it is hard for us that this very contribution we are making towards the advancement of the country should become the very means of reducing our representation in this House and weakening our voice at the council board.

This, you may tell us is a matter of sentiment. To a certain extent, so it is. But it is a not ignoble sentiment. It is the sentiment that prevailed in our province before we entered Confederation. It is a sentiment, I think, that this House would be justified in considering; yes, a sentiment that this House would be justified in meeting and satisfying for all time. I place this matter before hon. members with full confidence that they will do what they believe to be just and generous, that they will dispose of the matter in the way pointed out by my right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in 1892, when he said that he would regret that any province should have a smaller representation in this House than it always thought it was entitled to.

Mr.D.D.McKENZIE (North Cape Breton): The case for Prince Edward Island has been put before the House so clearly and ably by the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr.

Hughes), that it will not be necessary for me to review the same history at any length. It would appear to me, from the case the hon. gentleman has made out, that it was the intention of the representatives of Prince Edward Island at the time that province entered Confederation, that it was to have six members. The question is possibly not so difficult to the mind of the hon. gentleman as it might be to myself. He is a layman, and, taking the layman's view, the difficulty would perhaps not be so striking as it is, or ought to be to me who have had, to some extent, the training of a lawyer. I know that the right hon. leader of the Government, and possibly the leader of the Opposition, will say: What is the use of talking this way?—the adjustment of the terms of Confederation in relation to the representation of the provinces is a settled question. There was a time when this question was regarded as an open one, but a judicial interpretation of the Act was made. The matter was argued before the Supreme Court of Canada by the ablest legal minds in this country. It was carried from the Supreme Court of Canada to the Privy Council, and there received the last and, I suppose, the best, interpretation that can be given to it. That interpretation is, in effect, that the way in which the Act has been interpreted and carried out in Canada is the right way; that the representation of the maritime provinces must be reduced as the population decreases; that the reduction which we have suffered is the proper and legitimate outcome of the Act of Confederation in which we concurred in 1867. But I wish to present to the legal mind of the right hon. leader of the Government the fact that because an Act of Parliament is interpreted by the courts in such a way as not to carry out its original intention, it does not follow that Parliament must sit back and do nothing at all. In hundreds of cases where courts have given certain interpretations of provincial or Dominion Acts, Parliament has come back and legislated in such a way as to carry out the original intention of the legislation, regardless of what the interpretation of the courts may have been. Let me bring to the attention of the Prime Minister a particular case in point: that of the Manitoba School question. In that case the Lords of the Privy Council said that there was no doubt as to what the intention of the Manitoba Act was, but that the language used by those who drafted the Act was not of such a character as to ensure that the intention of the legislation would be carried out. The Government of the day thereupon introduced in this House what was known as the Remedial Bill, the object of which was not to accept the decision of the Privy Council, but to legislate in such a way as to carry out the real intention of the Act. I submit that a proper interpretation of the intention of the British North America Act as drafted and enacted in 1867 is that the representation of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island should not be reduced. I submit that if Canada had continued to consist of the four provinces—five with Prince Edward Island—that originally entered Confederation, and if the representation of these provinces had been adjusted under the terms of the Act according to each decennial census, we should not have lost any representation in the maritime provinces.

Let me call the attention of the Prime Minister to certain conditions in the province of Nova Scotia which, I think, will appeal to him just as strongly as the representations of my hon. friend who has just moved this resolution should appeal to the Prince Edward Islanders. At the time of Confederation every county in the province of Nova Scotia was to have a member, and the county of Halifax was to have two. We had then in the province the same number of counties as we have now, all bearing the same names. If the county of Shelburne, for instance, which was one of the first counties to suffer from this interpretation of the Act, had been told at the time of Confederation that after some years they would have no representation at all; that possibly they would be joined to some other county and secure their interest in a representative in that way; would they for a moment have supported the proposal to enter into Confederation? If the counties of Queens, Cape Breton, Victoria, Pictou, Annapolis, Yarmouth, Digby, the representation of all of which has since suffered by reason of this interpretation of the Act by the Lords of the Privy Council, had been told that only for a few years would they have their original representation in the House and that after that it would be a matter of doubt whether they would have any representation at all, would the strong-minded and intelligent people of those counties have supported the proposal to enter into Confederation? I submit that they would not. I submit that the understanding from the beginning was that there should be no reduction of the representation originally granted in 1867. It will be readily understood that we expected to grow; we expected that Nova Scotia and the other Maritime Provinces would keep pace with the growth and development of Quebec and Ontario, the only provinces with which they had to keep pace. The idea was that we should grow and that we should subsequently have not a smaller, but a larger representation.

Under section 8 of the Act under which British Columbia entered Confederation, it was provided that British Columbia should be entitled to be represented by three senators in the Senate and by six members in the House of Commons, the representation to be increased under the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867. The idea of the people of British Columbia when they entered Confederation was that their representation should increase, if the conditions were such as to come under the terms of the Act, but that in any case it should not decrease. The idea of what terms of Confederation should be applied to the different provinces was then fresh in the minds of the great men who took part in framing the constitution, and I believe that they did not intend to give British Columbia any better terms than those granted to the other provinces. If the terms under which British Columbia entered Confederation were fair and right and proper, there is no reason why similar conditions should not be extended to the other provinces.

As I said a little while ago, the interpretation of sections 3 and 5 of the British North America Act stands as texture so far as the courts are concerned, but it is open to this Parliament to amend or readjust these sections. What was in the minds of the Fathers of Confederation when they drafted section 2 of the Act is, I think, clear:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, to declare by proclamation that on and after a Day therein appointed, not being more than six months after the passing of this Act, the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall form and be One Dominion under the name of Canada; and on and after that Day those Three Provinces shall form and be One Dominion under that Name accordingly.

Section 5 of the Act says:

> Canada shall be divided into four provinces, named—Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Were I at liberty to do so, I would dispute the decision of the Lords of the Privy Council on this point. It is too clear for argument that Canada must mean, and meant at that time, those provinces—Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—and that in every adjustment of representation, and on all other occasions when it was necessary for the Legislature to bear in mind what Canada meant, it simply meant those four provinces. But the Lords of the Privy Council have held against that view, and there is no use arguing that phase of it now. Our duty now is to press forward and legislate in such a way as to give the smaller provinces the rights they were supposed to have obtained under the provisions of this Act.

With further reference to what was argued by the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I., I think the terms of the Act of Union of Prince Edward Island itself could very well be cited. One section reads:

> That, in accordance with the terms of the said address relating to the electoral district and laws and regulations under which the first election of members to serve in the House of Commons of Canada for such electoral district shall be held, it is hereby further ordered and declared.
>
> That Prince county shall constitute one district to be designated Prince county district and return two members.
>
> That Queens county shall constitute one district to be designated Queens county district and return two members.
>
> That Kings county shall constitute one district to be designated Kings county and return two members.

That seems to be straight and emphatic legislation, leaving no loophole or provision for repealing. That was what was meant to be the condition upon which Prince Edward Island came into Confederation, and I submit that it is in itself a strong argument in support of the contention taken by the hon. member for Kings that there should be some remedy by which the operation of the Act as now understood should not result in the reduction of the representation of Prince Edward Island below the six members given to it at Confederation.

Although it is not in the resolution, and although my purpose in rising was to support the resolution of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, I would say that while the trouble which they have in the Island is perhaps not quite as acute in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the whole question of the representation of the maritime provinces should be settled. We had at one time twenty-one members from Nova Scotia. After the next general election we may have only sixteen, and it is only a question of time until we shall be wiped out altogether. We still have eighteen members; after the next election we shall have only sixteen; and while we have a Nova Scotia Premier guiding the ship of State would be a fair time to put a stop to this downhill run and restore to us the representation we had when we entered Confederation. I have much pleasure in seconding the motion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, Prince Edward Island): I do not suppose that any of the facts connected with the Confederation conferences are so well known to the people of Prince Edward Island, and particularly to the members of this House as the speeches delivered at the two conferences at Charlottetown and Quebec referred to by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Hughes). Our object in this contention, which has been made for many years, is to impress upon this House and upon the people of Canada the fact that when we negotiated to come into Confederation, part of the contract was that we should, for all time to come, have a representation in this House of six members. The speech which the hon. member for Kings read goes to show that that contention was made. That is a historical fact. But I contend that the contract, evidence of which is to be found on the minutes of the proceedings of this House and of the proceedings of the local House in Prince Edward Island, proves conclusively that a representation of six members was conceded to Prince Edward Island by the telegram which was sent to Mr. Haythorne, the leader of the Government of Prince Edward Island, by Mr. Palmer, on the 8th of March, 1872.

I have been in this House on several occasions when this question has come up. In 1907, and I think in 1908, last session, and I think the year before, this matter of the representation was brought before the House. We have never yet had a division on the question. When the Liberal party were in power, I do not think that the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who was then leader of the Government, was very sympathetic with us in our contention that the contract we made in 1873 entitled us to a representation of six members. At any rate, he did not concede us anything. No member of the Liberal party would back us up in that contention, although we claimed in Prince Edward Island that it was clear that we were entitled to six members and that the records of the negotiations showed that. Last ssesion we brought the matter before the committee which was authorized to look into the redistribution of the seats in Canada. We had the privilege of being heard before that committee. The leader and one of the members of the Provincial Government came here and argued that there was no doubt, under the contract of 1873, that we were entitled to a representation of six members in this House. Members from the province also spoke on the same lines. When the resolution was brought down, the right hon. leader of the Government (Sir Robert Borden) did not concede that we were entitled to a representation of six members, but he inserted a clause which provided:

> That notwithstanding anything in this Act, a province shall always be entitled to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators representing such province.

When this resolution came up in this House, I must say that, although the members to whom I spoke were very sympathetic, there was no member who rose in his seat to back the representations of Mr. Nicholson and myself, the only Island members present, in our contention that we were entitled to six members.

On the 11th June, 1914, I moved the following amendment to the resolution:

> (b) Prince Edward Island shall be entitled to be represented in the House of Commons by six members. The representation to be increased under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867. Prince county shall constitute one district to be designated 'Prince county district' and return two members; Queens county shall constitute one district and be designated 'Queens county district' and return two members; and Kings county shall constitute one district, to be designated 'Kings county district' and return two members.

I stated at the time that, while I appreciated the right hon. gentleman's concession of four members, as contained in the resolution which I have just read, and which referred not only to our province but to other provinces similarly situated. I thought that under the original bargain we were entitled to six members. The Government deserved credit, I said, for conceding us even four members, because previous governments would not recognize our right at all whenever the matter had been brought up.

So far as the representation is concerned, as proposed in the Government's resolution of last year, I realize that the Government was doing something, that we were entitled to more than was conceded to us in the British North America Act resolutions passed by the Government of this country and accepted by the British Government. I was very grateful for the small concession the resolution granted. But when the resolution went up to the Senate it was turned down. The hon. member for Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) was not in Ottawa at that time, although he must have known that this very important matter was coming up. He went home to Prince Edward Island and neglected the opportunity, which he should have taken advantage of, for he had many friends in the Senate, and perhaps he might have been able to persuade those gentlemen to see the matter as he sees it to-day and as we saw it then. But, instead of doing that, he went to his home, and left the matter to the other Liberal members of this House. The Senate returned the resolution with this amendment:

That this Act shall not take effect until the termination of the now existing Canadian Parliament.

What did that mean? It meant that at the next general election Prince Edward Island would have only three members: one for Kings County, one for Queens County, and one for Prince County. Why did these gentlemen in the upper house do this; what reason was there for it? I can see no reason why they should have turned down the resolution. Some of the members in their speeches made distinctions between the East and the West. Some said that the right of Prince Edward Island should be recognized, that, under the terms of Confederation, she was entitled to the representation these resolutions conceded. But, when it came to a vote, they turned the whole thing down by their amendment. The right hon. leader of the Government announced that this House could not accept the amendment made by the Senate. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) has spoken very well indeed on this question, and mentioned the province of Nova Scotia. Although I was present in 1914 when this matter was before the House, I do not think he had much sympathy for Prince Edward Island on that occasion. How is it these gentlemen come here now with trumpets blowing and ask for six members, when in 1914, when we had a chance to get some increase, although not what we asked for, these very same men were dumb?

I do not know what the intention of the Government is with regard to this matter, but I would respectfully ask that the Government take it into their consideration; and if they find that the Senate will not pass the whole resolution as submitted to them last session, the Government might eliminate from the resolutions that part which is obnoxious to the members of the Upper House. Personally I do not know any reason why the whole resolution should not be passed. But if that is impossible, I repeat that it is of very great importance to the people of Prince Edward Island that their representation in this House should not be reduced; and that although they consider themselves entitled to more than this resolution concedes they are willing to accept this concession for the present and leave the matter open for future negotiation by this or some other Government. I would ask the right hon. leader of the Government to take the matter into consideration, and to introduce this session a resolution similar to the one introduced last session, providing that no province shall be represented in this House by a less number of members than that to which it is entitled to be represented in the Senate.

Mr. G. W. KYTE: While I recognize that any discussion of the question of representation in the maritime provinces, so far as relates to the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, must be in the nature of a post mortem, I am glad there is still life in the carcass so far as the province of Prince Edward Island is concerned. I have on more than one occasion expressed my views on this question of representation of the maritime provinces, and I can only register my regret that I was not more successful in impressing upon the powers that be the validity of the arguments and the views which I advanced to this House.

I rise more particularly for the purpose of correcting a statement which the hon. member for Queens (Mr. A. A. McLean) has quite inadvertently I believe put before the House with respect to the attitude of another chamber of this Parliament on the question of representation of the province of Prince Edward Island. It is well remembered by hon. members of this House that in the early hours of the morning when the Redistribution Bill was going through its final stage at the last regular session of Parliament, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) rose in his place and proposed an amendment to the Redistribution Bill which provided that in the province of Prince Edward Island the number of representatives should in no case be diminished below the number of senators for that province. That amendment was accepted by both sides of this House, and it was understood at the time that it would be annexed to the Redistribution Bill to be considered by the other body of this Parliament with that Bill. For reasons which are not patent to myself at all events, the resolution of the hon. member for Pictou was not attached to the Redistribution Bill, but to another resolution having reference to an increase in the number of senators to be appointed from the western provinces. That resolution was held up by the Senate, or at all events so amended that it would not take effect until after the next general election. It is most unfortunate for the contention of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island that the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Pictou was not attached to the Redistribution Bill, where it properly belonged. If it had been so attached, the Redistribution Bill having passed, the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou would have passed with it and at this moment it would be the law that under no circumstances should the representation of the province of Prince Edward Island be diminished beyond the number of senators. However, that course was not adopted, and while I am not here to criticise or defend the other body in this legislature in regard to their action on the resolution respecting the increase in the number of senators in the West, I am bound to say that in my judgment the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) had no place.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: I think the hon. gentleman is astray. If he will look at page 5364 of "Hansard," he will find that the amendment which was suggested by the hon. member for Pictou was incorporated in the Act and that the amendment was moved here, or suggested to the right hon. leader of the Government (Sir Robert Borden) while the resolution was up in the Senate and before the resolution was passed. "Hansard" states clearly what the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou was, and it was accepted by the leader of the Government.

Mr. KYTE: What was the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou?

Mr. McLEAN: It reads as follows:

Provided, that if the British North America Act, 1867, should be amended by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, in accordance with the address of both Houses of Parliament of Canada in that behalf, passed at the present session, immediately upon the Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom amending the said British North America Act, 1867, in accordance with such address coming into force, there shall be in the province of the Prince Edward Island three electoral districts defined as follows:

1. The county af Kings shall form and constitute the electoral district of Kings and shall return one member.

2. The county of Prince shall form and constitute the electoral district of Prince and shall return one member.

3. The county of Queens shall from and contitute the electoral district of Queens and shall return two members.

That is what was suggested to the leader of the Government by the hon. member for Pictou on the day before the 11th of June, and the leader of the Government told the hon. member for Pictou on that occasion that the matter had been suggested by myself to him, but that it had been overlooked and that he intended to place it before the Deputy Minister of Justice in order that he might draw up a clause. Although the hon. member for Pictou handed this form to the leader of the Government and asked him to incorporate it in the Act, the time had not arrived when it should be incorporated, and the leader of the Government told the hon. member for Pictou that the matter would receive his consideration.

Mr. KYTE: I do not desire to rob the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLean) of any credit that he may be entitled to for his in camera suggestions to the Prime Minister in respect to what he thought should be done on this question of representation. His statement, however, does not alter my recollection of the fact as I have endeavoured to give it to the House. This amendment was proposed by the hon. member for Pictou at a very early hour in the morning, when the Redistribution Bill was receiving its final consideration. The amendment was accepted by the Prime Minister with the understanding that it would be attached to the Redistribution Bill. If it had been it would now be law. Why it was not attached I do not know.

5 p.m.

Mr. McLEAN: It is attached to the Redistribution Bill and if the hon. member will turn up the Act he will find that it is part of the Redistribution Bill.

Mr. KYTE: Then it is law?

Mr. McLEAN: No, it is not law because it has not come into effect. At the time it was passed in this House the other resolution was in the Senate and it was turned down by the Senate and never became law.

Mr. KYTE: That has reference to the representation in the Senate of the western provinces.

Mr. McLEAN: No.

Mr. KYTE: If it is not law it is not because it did not receive the support of this House, and it does not change the position that I took in the first instance that the whole question was settled as far as this House was concerned by the resolution of the hon. member for Pictou.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): The subject which my hon. friend from Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Hughes) has brought to the attention of the House is one which has been debated on many occasions in the House, and all that has been put forward to-day, I think, has been brought to the attention of the House on the occasions to which I have alluded. Last year I took the responsibility of leaving the number of members for the province of Prince Edward Island blank in the Bill which was introduced, and I did that for the purpose of giving to those representing Prince Edward Island an opportunity of making their case fully before the committee and probably at greater length and with greater cogency than it might be made in a debate in this Parliament. The reasons why I thought that a desirable course to pursue were set forth in the observations which I made to the House at that time. The Bill was accordingly referred to the committee in that way. It was not, however, referred without some objection from my right hon. friend who leads the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who said, as reported at page 847 of "Hansard":

> My right hon. friend, in this Bill, has refrained from making one provision, the absence of which seems to me a weakness in the Bill, and, I cannot but think, also a weakness on his part. He refused to determine whether or not the Island of Prince Edward is to lose a member. He left that blank and referred it to the committee for determination. I have to represent to my right hon. friend that that is a matter upon which the committee cannot have any jurisdiction; it is a matter on which this House has no jurisdiction. Parliament in this matter is not a free agent; the whole question is simply a question of arithmetic.

Then my right hon. friend went on to adduce reasons why in his opinion it was not only a weak but an improper course to take. He said, for example, this:

> But when my right hon. friend leaves it to the committee to determine whether or not Prince Edward Island shall lose one member, what will he say to my hon. friend from Pictou or any other hon. member from Nova Scotia should he suggest that it be left to the committee to determine whether or not Nova Scotia shall lose two members?

Then he illustrated in the same way in regard to New Brunswick and Ontario. Finally he said:

> Therefore I regret that my right hon. friend has introduced in his Bill a principle—no, I cannot call it a principle, but rather a vicious feature—which might land him in very serious difficulties were its necessary implications followed to their logical conclusion.

However, the Bill went to the committee, and the committee gave a very careful hearing, as I understand, to members of this House representing Prince Edward Island, and also to members of the Provincial Government of Prince Edward Island, all of whom put their case before the committee with the greatest cogency at their command, and the committee eventually made a report to this House. In that report the committee recommended that an address should be passed asking that the British North America Act should be so amended that no province in Canada should have a smaller representation in the House of Commons than in the Senate. If the British North America Act were so amended the amendment would take no present effect in any province excepting Prince Edward Island, the representation of which in the House of Commons it would increase from three to four members. As my hon. friend has observed, there was some discussion on the Address which I subsequently moved in this House for the purpose of carrying out that proposal and certain other proposals which are not germane to my hon. friend's motion at the moment. When that address was moved my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. McLean), who has just addressed the House, was not satisfied with it, and he moved, as reported at page 5209 of "Hansard," a resolution of entirely the same effect as that which my hon. friend has now proposed. He moved in amendment:

> Prince Edward Island shall be entitled to be represented in the House of Commons by six members, the representation to be increased under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867.
>
> Prince county shall constitute one district to be designated Prince county district, and return two members.
>
> Queens county shall constitute one district to be designated Queens county district, and return two members.
>
> Kings county, shall constitute one district to be designated Kings county district, and return two members.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLean) then used these words:

> While I appreciate the concession of four representatives for Prince Edward Island, as provided in the last clause of the resolution, I submit that the original terms should be recognized and carried into effect. The Government deserves great credit for this concession, which is of very great importance, but I do not think it too much for me to ask that the original representation of six members should be restored.

The amendment was lost on division and the resolution as originally proposed by me passed the House. The proposal which was reported to the House by the committee was accepted by the House, as I felt that it would not be possible for us to disregard the carefully considered report of that committee composed of five members from this side and four from the other side of the House, who had devoted a great deal of attention to the subject.

While I appreciate the spirit in which my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes) has brought this subject to the attention of the House, and while I appreciate the arguments he has put forward, I would remind him that he has argued sometimes the other way. In 1903 he took strong grounds against a motion which was proposed by Mr. Hackett, then a member of the House. My hon. friend at that time was of the opinion—I think I have his words under my hand—that it was not a question of a mistake at the time Prince Edward Island entered Confederation, but that the particular form of expression that was used at the time was the result of oversight or neglect. I do not desire to misquote my hon. friend, and therefore I give his exact words:—

> I regret as much as any man can regret that the delegates at the time the province of Prince Edward Island joined the Union overlooked this important point, and did not provide against the contingency that has since arisen.

My hon. friend did not put it upon the ground of a mistake at that time; he put it on the ground of oversight, and he also took very strongly the ground (as will be found by reference to page 10909 of "Hansard" of 1903) that the long acquiescence on the part of Prince Edward Island would make it difficult to provide any remedy. Twelve years have, of course, elapsed since my hon. friend made that remark. The hon. gentleman also explained in that speech that the reason why the original representation was not reduced in 1882 was not because of reasons which had been advanced in this House, and which at one time impressed me, but was due to the fact that the census of 1881 was the first Dominion census taken after the Island had entered Confederation, and consequently that, so far as Prince Edward Island was concerned, there was no previous census with which to compare it. Therefore he argued that inasmuch as there was no previous census with which to compare the population of Prince Edward Island in 1881, the Government of the day found itself unable to determine whether or not the saving clause, to which he has alluded, could take effect, and so he said there was little to be deduced in favour of the claim of Prince Edward Island from the fact that its representation was not reduced in 1882.

Under all these circumstances, it does not seem to me that the House would be justified at the present time in coming to a perfectly opposite conclusion to that at which the House arrived less than a year ago, when the motion of my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. McLean) was put to the House, which was then considering in committee, the resolution which I had the honour to propose. Further, I believe that we should be guided, as has always been the practice in this House, by the report of the committee to whom was confided the particular duty of hearing the claims of Prince Edward Island, and of hearing everything that could be said in favour of the motion which my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. McLean) proposed a year ago, and which my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Hughes) is proposing. That report should command the support of the House unless very grave and cogent reasons can be adduced for leading the House to an opposite conclusion.

The resolution proposed by me last year went to the Senate by the unanimous consent of the House, and the Senate sent it back with a certain amendment, which by the unanimous consent of this House we refused to accept. My hon. friend from Queens has proposed that one or other of the courses he suggested should be adopted this session, and I will give to his proposal in that regard my best consideration and inform him and the House later of the conclusion at which we have arrived.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The members of the House know that we heard of this question for the first time, I think, in 1883, after the census of 1881, by which Prince Edward Island, for the first time, lost some of its representation in this House. There is no doubt that the grievance as put forward to-day by my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Hughes), and re-echoed by my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. McLean) was just as much felt at that time as it is now. But no one thought then that it would be possible to interfere with the terms of the Constitution, which provided that the regulation of representation should follow the movement of population; the representation of a province increasing or decreasing according to the result of the census.

Ten years later, in 1902, not simply Prince Edward Island but all three maritime provinces, had to submit to a further reduction of representation. The grievance then became more acute, and we have heard of it from time to time ever since. All governments and all parties have had to deal with that question. All have dealt with it in the same way, concluding that, without an amendment of the Constitution, it would not be possible to grant the prayer of the people of Prince Edward Island. Last year, when the right hon. leader of the Government introduced the Redistribution Bill, he left in blank the representation of Prince Edward Island. I pointed out at the time that he had just said that it was a useless step, because this Parliament had no power in the matter, and the authority that could deal with it was the British Parliament. If there was any doubt on the subject at that time, we all agree that at present there is no doubt at all: this Parliament has no jurisdiction over the matter, and, even if it had, it could not grant the remedy sought by my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island, on both sides, but would have to seek legislation to that effect from the Imperial Parliament.

Last year it was determined to seek that legislation, and it was done in a way that commends itself to my judgment, and I think commends itself to the judgment of hon. members generally. The committee to which was submitted the question of redistribution came back with a report that this House had no power to give to Prince Edward Island the representation it wanted; on the contrary, the committee had agreed to reduce the representation of Prince Edward Island from four to three, because they could not do anything else. A member of the committee, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), made a suggestion. There was at that moment a petition pending before this House to increase the representation of the western provinces in the Senate. The hon. member for Pictou suggested that if this petition were granted by the two Houses of this Parliament, and if, in consequence, the Imperial Parliament were to be asked to pass the necessary legislation, advantage might be taken of the occasion to have an amendment of the Constitution made, providing, not for granting all that was asked for by Prince Edward Island, but that the prayer should be granted to this extent, that the representation of any province in the House of Commons should not be less than its representation in the Senate.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I thought that was the report of the committee?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No, that was the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think it was in the report.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My memory may be at fault in the matter; but, if so, the fact gives greater emphasis to the view I hold. My hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Hughes) has referred to some words of mine to the effect that I should be sorry that any province should feel that it had a grievance on account of its representation. I should be sorry that in matters of representation or any other matters a province should feel that it was aggrieved in any way by anything done or left undone by this Parliament. It is of the very essence of our Constitution that we should endeavour to have all provinces fairly represented, and the views of all provinces accepted in this Parliament in so far as we can attain that end. It may be that the condition I have referred to was in the report as stated by the Prime Minister; but I am certain that the hon. member for Pictou suggested that the amendment to the British North America Act referred to should be sought; and this was include in the Bill as it went from this House to the Senate. The Bill as reported was in these words:

> There shall be in the province of Prince Edward Island three electoral districts, defined as follows :
>
> 1. The county of Kings shall form and constitute the electoral district of Kings, and shall return one member;
>
> 2. The county of Prince shall form and constitute the electoral district of Prince, and shall return one member;
>
> 3. The county of Queens shall form and constitute the electoral district of Queens, and shall return one member.

My impression still is that this was the provision of the Bill as reported by the committee, and that the following amendment was added on the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou:

> Provided that if the British North America Act, 1867, should be amended by the Parliament of the United Kingdom, in accordance with the address of both Houses of the Parliament of Canada in that behalf, passed at the present session, immediately upon the Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom amending the said British North America Act, 1867, in accordance with such address, coming into force, there shall be in the province of Prince Edward Island three electoral districts defined as follows:
>
> 1. The county of Kings shall form and constitute the electoral district of Kings and shall return one member;
>
> 2. The county of Prince shall form and constitute the electoral district of Prince and shall return one member;

3. The county of Queens shall form and constitute the electoral district of Queens and shall return two members.

By the Act as passed by the House of Commons and the Senate the province of Prince Edward Island was given four members if it was in the power of Parliament to do so, and provided that the British North America Act should be amended so as to cover this change. This was on June 10. On the following day, June 11, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister introduced a resolution to amend the Act relating to representation in the Senate and to give to the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, six members each in the Upper Chamber; and to this he added this resolution:

The British North America Act of 1867 is amended by adding thereto the following section immediately after sections 51 of the said Act:

"51a. Notwithstanding anything in this Act a province shall always be entitled to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of senators representing such province."

That was passed by this House and by the Senate, but the Senate added a rider to the effect that this clause should come into force not immediately, but at the dissolution of Parliament. If this amendment had been accepted, the Act would have come into force at the time of dissolution, and after the next election the province of Prince Edward Island would have been entitled to four members.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: Not at the next election.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: At dissolution. I have not the amendment of the Senate before me, but I am quite positive that it provided that this section should come into force not after the general election, but at dissolution. When Parliament dissolved, therefore, the Act would come into force, and the province of Prince Edward Island would be entitled to four members. The amendment was not accepted, however, and the Act remains on the Statute book without it.

It is not worth while arguing as to what was done or what was not done by the Senate; I have only to say this to the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLean) and to the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Hughes). I am well aware that the province of Prince Edward Island has felt for many years that it has been unfairly dealt with, because its representation has decreased with each succeeding census. But if the representation of the province of Prince Edward Island has been moving down, that decrease has been in accordance with the Act of Confederation; the province has obtained the representation to which it is entitled under the terms of that Act. My hon. friend says that Prince Edward Island would not have come into Confederation unless it had been assured of at least six members. When it entered Confederation, Prince Edward Island, according to its population, was entitled to only five members. The province did not want to come into Confederation unless it had a representation of six members, and the men of that day, very properly I think, not being inclined to quarrel upon such a trifling point, granted them six. No provision was made at that time that the permanent representation of the province should be six members. This want of foresight applied not only to Prince Edward Island, but to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well; no one of the fathers of Confederation—neither Sir John Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper, nor anybody else—anticipated the great development which has taken place in the West, and which has reduced the population of the eastern provinces. This grievance is not peculiar to Prince Edward Island; it applies to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well. With census after census the three maritime provinces have seen their populations decrease. But representation by population is a fair and just principle. If the population of a province increases, the province is entitled to additional representation, whereas if its population decreases, its representation decreases also. So absolutely fair is this principle that the men responsible for government, either on the one side or the other, have hesitated to deviate or depart from it. It was proposed last year, by the committee that reported upon the Bill then under consideration, that the matter should be settled in this way: henceforth no province shall have less representation in the House of Commons than it has in the Senate. That was a departure from the principle, but it was, after all, what seemed to me to be a fair compromise. The larger western provinces—Quebec, Ontario and the young giants in the West—are too strong to have reason to begrudge the slight increase in representation which this would give to the eastern provinces. We accepted that compromise—for my part I was glad to support the committee in that respect—and it seems to me that our friends in the maritime provinces ought to be satisfied that in so doing we endeavoured to dispose of this irritating question in a fair and just manner.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: I was very careful, Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks which I made upon this subject, to avoid saying anything at all that would have a party colour, because I think this is a question which can be and ought to be settled without resorting to party politics. I regret, however, that the senior member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. McLean), did not feel disposed to pursue a similar course. I regret to a still greater extent that the right hon. Prime Minister did not pursue a similar course. If I understood the hon. member for Queen's correctly, in speaking on this subject a few moments ago, he made a statement that is not borne out by the facts. He sought to leave the impression that on account of the action of the Senate, the Government was prevented from passing legislation which would give the province of Prince Edward Island four members at the next election. That matter has been pretty well cleared up since the hon. member sat down, and I am sure that he now feels that he made a mistake. He must realize that no action taken by the Senate when this matter was before them, operates to prevent this Government from passing an Act or from completing legislation, which would come into force upon the dissolution of this Parliament, to give the province of Prince Edward Island four members at the next election. My hon. friend, therefore, was mistaken in that respect, as he generally is.

The hon. gentleman went out of his way a little, I think, to mention the fact that I was absent from the House when this matter was finally considered during the closing days of the regular session of 1914. It is true that I was absent, just for a few days. I was informed by a member of the Redistribution Committee a few days before Parliament closed that the chairman of the committee had told him that the question of redistribution would not come up for consideration at that session therefore I left for home a few days before Parliament prorogued. The Redistribution Committee or the Government changed its mind, however; the matter was brought up, and I could not possibly find time to get back. But I wish to say to the senior member for Queens that if he were as attentive to his duties as I have been, whether on the Government side or in Opposition, he would not be in the position that he is in to-day. He would be certain of nomination when he goes back to his constituents, and would not have to importune the Government to give him a position to save him from his friends. The hon. member knows that he will not be nominated.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: The hon. member makes a statement which he cannot prove and which has no foundation in fact.

Mr. HUGHES: If the hon. gentleman will tell me he is not importuning the Government daily for some position in the gift of the Government I shall be satisfied.

Mr. McLEAN: I have denied it and it is an absolute falsehood.

Mr. HUGHES: All right, I will accept the hon. gentleman's explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is going, I think, a little too far in saying that a statement of an hon. member is an absolute falsehood; he could properly say it is untrue.

Mr. HUGHES: We shall know in a few months. The truth of this matter will be all explained to the hon. gentleman's constituents in a few months from the present time.

Now, with regard to the right hon. the Prime Minister, I regret that a man of the ability of the right hon. gentleman should think it necessary to go somewhat out of his way to represent to the people of Prince Edward Island that I was not thoroughly orthodox on the question of representation. The right hon. gentleman brought up this matter in 1914 and referred to a speech which I made in 1903, in answer to Mr. Hackett, then a member of this House. This speech did not happen to be indexed, and the right hon. gentleman must have waded through "Hansard" for eleven years to find some statement of mine that he could twist or construe into an argument against the representation of Prince Edward Island, while at the same time pretending to be a friend of Prince Edward Island on this subject. I had spoken two or three times as strongly and as favourably as I could for the views of Prince Edward Island on this matter, and these speeches had been indexed; but the right hon. gentleman did not quote from any of these, all the time pretending to be a friend of Prince Edward Island and wading through "Hansard" year after year to find some statement made by me that could be twisted into an argument against Prince Edward Island on this point.

The right hon. gentleman went farther than that. He said I had made the statement that it was too late to raise the question. The right hon. gentleman is a shrewd enough man to know that my statement was that it was too late in the day for Mr. Hackett to raise that question in order to make political capital of it. I think perhaps I had better read my remarks. This is the conclusion:

Therefore I think it is altogether too late for my honourable friend and his political associates from Prince Edward Island to try to make political capital out of it at this time.

I referred to the fact that when the first reduction took place the Conservatives were in power and the hon. gentleman then speaking had raised no objection. That was an innocent remark to make, and I do not think it would bear the interpretation the right hon. gentleman put upon it. The right hon. gentleman said in effect that he might have got over that unfortunate speech of mine if I had not used the word "overlooked" or "oversight," but he said that was a terrible word to use and was equivalent to negligence or incompetence. I find in the International Dictionary the definition of the word is "an error committed through inadvertence." That was just what I meant, an error committed by the delegates through inadvertence, and I am sure if my right hon. friend wished to do something for Prince Edward Island that word would not have prevented him. I am sorry if anything I said prevented the right hon. gentlemen from doing what he would wish to do for Prince Edward Island. He said that the delegates who came here to argue this question before the Redistribution Committee and before the Government—the Premier of the Island and Mr. Stewart—had presented clear, cogent and strong arguments. I find that they used the word "unforeseen." I do not think there is a great deal of difference in the meaning of the two words, and if in their statement, which was written, by the way, so that they would have time to choose their words, they said that unforeseen contingencies had arisen. If that was a suitable word, the word "oversight" would not be so unfortunate. The right hon. gentleman in his course in this matter, reminds me of the characters in the Old Curiosity Shop, where Codlin told Little Nell not to pay any attention to Short, that Codlin was her friend, not Short. Codlin wanted to be the friend of Prince Edward Island, not Short; if they would have nothing to do with Short and cultivate Codlin, he would see them through. My friend Codlin has the opportunity; I would be pleased if he would see the matter through and give to Prince Edward Island that which he has always contended he would be inclined to give, provided he had an opportunity and power to do so. I hope it will not be a case of Codlin and Short.

Motion negatived on division.

THE FORT ERIE SHOOTING CASE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of all complaints to the Government of the killing of one American citizen and the shooting of another by militiamen, in the waters of Lake Erie, and of all correspondence with regard to the same with the British Embassy and American authorities.

He said: The community some weeks ago was shocked when it heard that two American citizens in the waters of Lake Erie had been shot by three Canadian Militiamen, one being killed and the other wounded. What I saw in the newspapers led me to believe that these men were trespassers—that they were in our waters and were poaching and were at that moment violating the laws of Canada. The boys who shot them, three young militiamen, are now in durance. They are to be subjected to trial, and I would say nothing to prejudice them. On the contrary, I believe that they acted according to what they thought was their duty, and, for my part, I give them credit for having no wrong intentions. Perhaps they were too hasty in using the rifle, but that is the only thing with which we might reproach them. I understand that the Government have since that time made what amends they could by agreeing to pay $10,000 to the relatives of the one who was killed and $5,000 to the one who was wounded. In this the Government have followed the right course, and I commend them. They have done what in their power lay to alleviate whatever bad feeling may have been caused. They have preserved the peace between ourselves and our neighbours, and that is an essential element in the case. For my part I would approve of anything done by the Government with a view to repairing as much as possible the injury done, even though the men who were shot were trespassing and breaking the law.

My object in making this motion is to call to the attention of my right hon. friend a very similar case, about which my right hon. friend was questioned some time ago in this House. I refer to the case of Nottar, a French reservist, who had gone to Montreal to book his passage to France, where he was going to take up arms with the rest of his fellow-countrymen. Nottar was shot by a sentry under circumstances very similar to those to which I have just alluded. There was this difference only, that, while the victims in the Fort Erie shooting case were trespassers, Nottar was not a trespasser. He was endeavouring to discharge his duty to his mother country. He was challenged by the sentry. He did not answer as soon as he should have done, perhaps because of a difference in language, the sentry having challenged him in English and he understanding only French. He passed on, and the sentry shot him. It is to be regretted—and if the Minister of Militia were here I should have less hesitation in saying what I have to say now—that the Minister of Militia seems to have given the order that sentries were to shoot to kill. At all events, in the early days of the war our sentries were too prone to make use of their rifles. But there has been no such action since. I rise to say that the relatives of Nottar are just as much entitled to compensation as the relatives of those American citizens who lost, one his life, and the other his limb; but Nottar has an even stronger case, I think, and I commend it to my right hon. friend that his family are just as much entitled to compensation. My right hon. friend stated the other day that he had received no application from Nottar's family, but was informed that they were bringing an action against the sentry who committed the act. That is equivalent to an application to the Government; for, if the courts determine that the sentry went beyond his duty, the Government would very properly assume the condemnation and seek to indemnify Nottar's family. It is for these reasons that I have brought this matter to the attention of my right hon. friend.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: After some question had been asked in the House about Nottar's case, I asked my colleague the Secretary of State to ascertain as precisely as he could the circumstances of the case and the position of the litigation, which I understand is pending. He informs me that the solicitor representing Nottar's family has promised to send us full information on the subject within a week. When that information arrives we shall take the case into consideration. I admit that there is a good deal to be said in favour of what my right hon. friend has put forward to-day as to the propriety of granting compensation to this man's family.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend has alluded to sentries having been somewhat too prone to shoot in the early days of the war. We must always bear in mind that at that time we were facing very unusual conditions and that there was a great deal of excitement as to the possibliity of an attempt to destroy buildings in which munitions of war were kept, and other buildings in which preparations for war could be carried on on an extensive scale. I am not aware that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia has ever used the language that has been attributed to him in his instructions to sentries. On the contrary, I have found him disposed to have them fully cognizant of the responsibility placed upon them. But at the same time one can realize that a sentry placed in an important position and under the conditions to which I have alluded, might find himself in danger of reprimand if he did not enforce pretty strictly the instructions given to him by his superior officers.

So far as the Fort Erie shooting case is concerned, there is no objection to bringing down such papers as are not of a confidential character; nor should I have the slightest objection to my right hon. friend perusing the entire file, which is pretty voluminous. Immediately after the unfortunate incident had occurred, we took steps to ascertain the facts as far as we could. Having ascertained these facts to a certain extent, through the Attorney General of the province of Ontario and by inquiry of the military authorities, we sent an expression of regret to the Government of the United States at a very early date. Afterwards, when the proceedings at the inquest were available, further communication took place over the telephone with the Attorney General of Ontario, and we ascertained his view after perusal of that evidence, whereupon, on the sixth day of January, a despatch was sent to His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, which perhaps I might read for the information of the House:

> Referring to my telegram January 4th. Shooting at Fort Erie. From information received from Attorney General of Ontario as to nature of evidence given at Coroner's inquest, it appears that object of shooting was deterrent, as deceased and his companions were unlawfully engaged in shooting out of season and that injury which resulted in death of deceased was entirely unintentional. Nevertheless Government of Canada are of opinion that person guilty of shooting ought to be placed on his trial and steps will be taken for that purpose. In view of circumstances which so unfortunately resulted in death of deceased, Government of Canada consider that as an act of grace, suitable compensation should be made to family of deceased and to person injured by shooting.

Communication was had afterwards through the ambassador at Washington, and by direct negotiation through the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, Sir Joseph Pope. Eventually an arrangement was arrived at by which, as my right hon. friend has stated, we agreed to pay, and have since paid, $10,000 to the family of the unfortunate man who was killed and $5,000 to the man who was wounded somewhat severely and was in hospital for some time. There was also an arrangement made by which certain expenses of solicitors and others who were engaged by the representatives of the deceased man, and by the person who was wounded, but survived, should also be defrayed by the Government.

The accident was unfortunate in many respects. It would be unfortunate, of course, that this shooting should have taken place under any circumstances. It was particularly unfortunate that the persons, one of whom was killed and the other severely wounded, should have been citizens of the great and friendly nation to the south. We thought that under the circumstances it was our duty to express, and we did express, immediate regret, and we also thought—and I am glad to know that my right hon. friend agrees in that view—that under the circumstances, and as an act of grace, it was proper for this country to make compensation. I am glad to be able to assure the House that the course which the Government have adopted in that regard is entirely satisfactory to the Government of the United States and also satisfactory to the persons who were acting for the family of the deceased and for the unfortunate man who was wounded.

I do not desire to lay before the House any of the circumstances which were detailed to us through the military inquiry which took place, nor do I think it a desirable thing to dwell upon the evidence which was given at the inquest. The whole circumstances will be under judicial consideration early in March, when these men will be placed on their trial, and it would neither be desirable nor proper that we should make, in advance of the trial, any observations. This, however, may be said, that the men, as I understand, were asked to go to the assistance of an officer of the province of Ontario who had observed the two men trespassing on the Canadian side, and he was of the opinion that they were violating the game laws of the province of Ontario in what they were doing. He has stated, I believe, and it has been stated by the men also, that there was no intention to wound or kill either of the persons so engaged, but merely to deter them from proceeding in that which they had undertaken and, if possible, perhaps to induce them to come to the Canadian side and submit to the jurisdiction of the country upon whose territory they were in fact at the time the shooting took place. I shall be glad to bring the papers down at the earliest date. If my right hon. friend should desire to peruse the confidential correspondence, I shall be glad to place it at his disposal for that purpose.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

VOTES FOR ELECTORS ON ACTIVE SERVICE.

Mr. A. E. FRIPP (Ottawa) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, legislation should be passed at this session providing that all electors of Canada who have enlisted for Imperial service be enabled to exercise their franchise at any election that may occur during their absence on such service.

He said: My attention was specially called to the necessity for some action by Parliament of the kind foreshadowed in my motion, by the remarks of the Prime Minister in his speech on the Address. The right hon. gentleman stated that 32,000 Canadians were either in England or in France in the service of our King and country, and that at least 50,000 more were being mobilized or would be mobilized with the intention of sending them to the front as occasion might require. It has occurred to me that probably before this war is over there will be at least 100,000 Canadians in the field, and should an election for this House occur during the progress of the war, these men would be disfranchised. In view of the fact that these men are making the greatest sacrifice that can be made by the citizens of any country, we should, above everything else, take care that they should have opportunity to exercise the franchise, which is the highest right of citizenship. In addition to the opinions they may hold with the civilian electorate of Canada on general public questions, these men, if given the franchise, would be especially qualified to pronounce upon the treatment they have received while at the front, and the provisions that have been made for their comfort and that of their families and relatives who have been left behind.

It has seemed to me proper that this Parliament should at the very earliest possible moment assure our volunteers that if the war is prolonged until an election should take place, they would be permitted to vote. I am quite satisfied that the majority, if not all the members of the House, agree with the principle of my motion, although I am quite prepared to hear that some may question the practicability of carrying out such a scheme, so as to secure a proper representation of the vote of the men absent on service. I find, that the principle for which I contend has been recognized by legislation in Australia and in New Zealand. In Australia, the Commonwealth Electorate Act of 1902 provides for ordinary absentee voters registering their votes, and some of the provisions of that Act might be incorporated in a Bill to attain the object I have in view. Under the Commonwealth Electoral Act, absentee voters are entitled to vote by mail, and the procedure is briefly this: they apply to the returning officer for a ballot, and certain persons, including justices of the peace and postmasters are authorized to take the ballot of the absentee, and as authorized witnesses must certify that he knows the voter who has exercised his franchise and that he has voted upon the ballot supplied to him. That has general application to absentee voters, but an Act passed last year by the Legislature of New Zealand deals specifically with the Overseas force. It is called the Expeditionary Force Voting Act, 1914, and under its provisions every member of that force who was sent from New Zealand to serve in the war for His Majesty, is entitled to vote.

I take it from this that the right to vote is not confined to those whose names appear upon the voters' lists. Under the Canadian Enlistment Act, a young man of 18 years is eligible to become a volunteer, whereas he would not be eligible to vote, and it would be a matter for consideration whether we should give all our volunteers, regardless of age, the right to vote, or whether we should confine that right to those whose names appear upon the voters' lists in Canada, and who would have voted had they been in their constituencies when an election occurred. Another provision in the New Zealand law is worthy of attention, and that is the recognition that it would be almost impossible for an absentee voter to vote for any particular candidate, and the provision therefore is that he shall have an opportunity of voting either for the Government candidate or for the Opposition candidate, and of course the Labour party being a very strong party in that country, he also has an opportunity to vote for a supporter of it. The voter therefore votes for his party and the vote is assigned by the Prime Minister for the Government and by the leader of the Opposition for the Opposition, and by two members of the Labour party if he votes for that party. Technically speaking, there is no government when Parliament is dissolved and the Act has a special clause which says, that "Government" and "Opposition" means the government and opposition in office at the time of the passing of the Act.

Mr. CARROLL: Does the hon. gentleman know how that Act worked out in practice last election?

Mr. FRIPP: I cannot say what the result was in the last election. In view of the fact that the principle of such legislation has been recognized in Australia and New Zealand, it does seem to me that a law could be framed by this Parliament which would give effect to the object my motion has in view.

It is a question whether a ballot should be supplied, or whether the volunteer should not be allowed to write on any piece of paper his choice at an election, and that paper, safeguarded, let us say, by the commissioned officer of his company writing his name on the back and stating that this is the ballot of so-and-so of such-and-such a company and such-and-such a corps and forwarded to the returning officer. Then, provision might be made that every returning officer should notify some officer in charge of the force of the dissolution of Parliament, that officer to notify the commissioned officers of the opportunity which the volunteers would have of exercising their franchise in this way. Copies of the Act, when passed, could be distributed by the Canadian High Commissioner, for example, for those who are now at the front, and by the Militia Department sending to the volunters a copy of the Act when they proceed to the front. Certain penalties are provided in the New Zealand Act which could be provided in ours also. On the whole, it seems quite feasible for us to frame an Act which would give to our volunteers an opportunity to exercise their franchise should an occasion arise. I understand that there is at present a committee of this House dealing with the electoral law, and I think this matter might well be referred to that committee for action, should the House be of opinion that we should make such an amendment as I propose.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Has the hon. gentleman in mind any machinery by which it would be possible to have the absent elector seized of the issues presenting themselves at a general election?

Mr. FRIPP: I think the volunteers are at present seized, and perhaps more strongly than we are, of certain features of what may be in issue in the campaign. They are, and must be, in almost daily communication with their parents or relatives in this country. For example, I have in my possession a very interesting letter from one of the volunteers at the front—I presume he is at the front; this is dated from Salisbury—in which he deals with the question of boots for the soldiers which is agitating the country at the present time. He expresses a clear opinion on that subject, and if the House is interested I should like very much to read the letter. It would show hon. members that our soldiers are familiar with what is going on at home. It seems to me that no difficulty would arise under the head suggested by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). The volunteers would be seized of one of the issues at all events, and that is, what this Government has done to take care of them.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not a party issue.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough). As the seconder of this resolution, I would say with all due deference to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) that there is nothing in the Election Act requiring a man, as qualification for voting, to know one thing of what is going on in the country. The hon. member's objection would be valid if the right to vote were conditional on such knowledge; but it is not. In order to vote, a man must be a British subject, not less than twenty-one years of age, a resident of the electoral division, and—

Mr. GAUVREAU: And go it blind.

Mr. BURNHAM: Others go it blind besides the men at the front. I cannot see, on general principles, what justification there can be for withholding from the men who are defending this country at the front with their bayonets, the right to do the same with their ballots.

Mr. PROULX: This might be feasible if clear-cut issues were presented to the people. But we must remember that the candidates are nominated only eight days before polling, and in some counties both candidates are on the same side of politics. It would be pretty hard, at such a distance, for the soldiers to decide between the candidates. Many candidates would not even be known to these electors. I think it would be hard to devise any machinery to enable the soldiers to cast their votes intelligently.

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS: The resolution of my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Fripp) is undoubtedly a very important one. It is a resolution that requires, in my humble judgment, very calm, reasonable and fair consideration at the hands of hon. members of this House. I am sure I express the earnest hope and wish of every hon. gentleman within the four walls of this Chamber, when I say that it is to be hoped that it may not be necessary to have a general election in the Dominion of Canada before the termination of this terrible war. But there is none the less great importance to be attached to the suggestion of the hon. member. We are living in a time of rapid change and have to be prepared to deal with new conditions. The hon. member for Ottawa has referred to the legislation of the Commonwealth of Australia under which a system has been devised for the exercise of the franchise on the part of their soldiers who have gone to the front in defence of their country and their flag. But I am a little afraid that the Bill of the Commonwealth of Australia would not apply in so far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned. Should necessity arise for a general election, I am sure there is no man in this House or out of it who would like to deny the right of the franchise to the good, loyal citizen who has gone to the front in defence of the flag, and to fight our battle for the greatest possession of the people of Canada, our British citizenship, and for the maintenance of our membership in the great British Empire. However, I have not had time to discuss this matter with my right hon. friend the leader of the Government, who has just taken his seat, and I have no doubt that he will suggest what is the best course to be adopted with regard to the subject matter of the resolution now before the House.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM: I am not sure that the attitude of my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Public Works in this instance will not go down as one of the famous retreats under proper cover. I, like the Minister of Public Works, hope that there will be no necessity for a general election in Canada until this war is over. In fact, I would go farther, perhaps, than some of my associates in clearing the way so that there need not be any election, so far as constitutional law is concerned. I understand that the New Zealand Act has not yet been made operative; consequently we cannot tell how it would work if an election were brought on during the war. I agree with all that has been said as to the wisdom of allowing our volunteers to exercise their franchise. They are defending, in a more practical way, perhaps, than we in this Parliament are—that citizenship which gives us the right of free franchise. They are doing their utmost to protect our rights as citizens of the country which we think is the freest in the world, and I would not think of doing anything to deprive them of the privilege of exercising their rights if some practical scheme could be worked out under which they could do so in a proper way. For some years the introduction of a system has been advocated in Canada to enable commercial travellers to cast their ballots without being obliged to return to their constituency and lose perhaps a week or more of valuable time. Up to the present no practical result has been attained along this line, for reasons which presented themselves to those in power heretofore and which are, no doubt, apparent to those in power at the present time. If our volunteers were all in Canada, the difficulty of working out a scheme of this kind would not be so great, because Canadian laws and regulations would be applicable no matter in what part of Canada the volunteers were at the time of the election. But the large majority of them are in a foreign land, many thousands of miles away, and they cannot have full information with regard to the candidates or as to the various conditions which prevail, a knowledge of which is quite necessary. Besides, there is no way, so far as I can see, of enforcing a Canadian Election Act in a foreign country. Certainly the difficulties are very great. Secrecy would be another extremely difficult thing to enforce in an army, the men composing which are scattered about, some in the trenches and some in other sections of the fighting line, working under conditions which we can scarcely comprehend. Then, again, I can hardly imagine that the soldiers fighting shoulder to shoulder in the trenches for the rights of the British people and the continuance of the liberties which we all enjoy would have any time to differ with each other on matters which to them would seem at the moment comparatively trivial. I think it would not be prudent to do anything which might sow the seed of discord among our soldiers who are neither Grits nor Tories, French nor English, Irish nor Scotch, but British citizens fighting without any division for what they believe to be right. It strikes me that their time will be fully taken up with the great work in which they are engaged. In saying that, I do not combat the principle at all, but it strikes me that a Bill should have been placed before the House so that we might have been enabled to see if there is any practical way of working the thing out. But were we to commit ourselves immediately to this principle without being sure that it is practicable, we would not be treating the question as seriously as its importance deserves. The adoption of some scheme might prove beneficial, or, again, it might create discord among the men—and unquestionably there should be no discord among them. I do not wish to be too emphatic in the matter, but I see almost unsurmountable difficulties in the way of our trying to apply this principle to our volunteers, particularly to those outside our own country. As to those who are in Canada, I think the modus operandi might be worked out if it were thought desirable.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I was not aware that the motion of my hon. friend was coming up this evening, nor have I had an opportunity of giving much consideration to the subject, which is not without importance, that he has brought to the attention of the House. It would seem to me, in line with what my hon. friend the member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) has said, that a great many difficulties would be encountered in working out legislation based on this proposal. To carry on an election in this country under the present statutory provisions, which are the result of a great many years' thought and frequent careful revision, is not unattended with difficulty; so that the proposal that men who are fighting for the Dominion and for the Empire should participate in an election by casting their votes thereat while abroad, is a subject that certainly demands the most careful consideration. I am not aware of the provisions of the New Zealand Act. I have never seen it, nor do I know of the existence of such a legislative provision in New Zealand except by references which I have seen from time to time in the press. It has been stated in the press that that Act was invoked in respect of New Zealand's expeditionary force. I am not at all sure that the statement is correct, but I remember that it was reported that some elections depended upon the returns of the voting of the expeditionary force. It is possible that my hon. friend the hon. member for South Renfrew is correct in what he has said in that regard. It would be undesirable for us to refuse consideration to the proposal which the hon. member for Ottawa has brought to the attention of the House; on the other hand, it would be even more undesirable that we should embark upon any such proposal without giving it very careful consideration. So I would suggest to my hon. friend from Ottawa that the best course would be to refer his proposal to the committee which has already been appointed for the purpose of taking into consideration certain amendments to the Act respecting Controverted Elections, and I therefore move that all the words after the word "that" in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:

The select committee composed of Messrs. Northrup, Maclean (Halifax), Murphy, Carvell, Robidoux, Bennett (Calgary) and Doherty, be authorized to inquire, consider and report to this House whether legislation should be passed at this session providing that electors of Canada who have enlisted for Imperial service or are engaged in active service be enabled to exercise their franchise at any election that may occur during their absence on such service, and whether any other legislative provision ought to be made with respect to the matter.

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

FREE LETTERS FOR SOLDIERS.

Hon. CHAS. MARCIL—for Mr. Lemieux—moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, legislation should be enacted during the present session of Parliament providing that all mail matter addressed to Canadian soldiers on active service shall be sent free of postage.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member is moving this resolution at the request of the hon. member in whose name it stands, but who, owing to indisposition, is unable to be present. I presume that would be satisfactory to the House. I am afraid that this resolution cannot very well be moved by a private member, because it affects postage and therefore really involves a contribution of public money.

Mr. MARCIL: The hon. member for Rouville is unfortunately indisposed, and I understand that, acting under the advice of his physician, it will be a couple of weeks at least before he can again take his seat in the House. This afternoon he asked me, through a fellow member, if I would move the resolution in his absence. The late Postmaster General I presume, at the time was familiar with the rules of the House. The adoption of such a resolution may or may not compel the Government. Decisions have been rendered pro and con. During the time I occupied the Chair the point was raised several times. Some Speakers have decided that such a resolution is binding on the Government, but others have decided in a contrary way. It is at the request of the hon. member for Rouville that I am moving the resolution. We have heard something about the volunteers to-day. This is not a party question, but merely a friendly move towards the boys, giving an opportunity to their friends in Canada to send letters or newspapers free of postage. It is a thing that will appeal to the House. Of course, I am prepared to leave the matter in the hands of the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: If carried in the affirmative, the resolution will practically commit the House to an expenditure of money, and therefore it should be moved only by a member of the Government.

Mr. GRAHAM: It might be considered either advisory or compulsory; I believe there are opinions both ways. Under the circumstances, could we let the motion stand for the present as if it had not been moved?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Motion stands.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—Maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and ice-breakers, $1,125,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the explanation of this increase?

Mr. HAZEN: The reason for the increase in this appropriation is that the department intends to pay out of it the maintenance and repairs of the following steamers, in addition to those whose expenses have been formerly charged to it: Aranmore, construction, N.S., Quebec and Hudson Bay, Halifax; Bellechasse, river St. Lawrence ship channel, inspection and staff boat, Quebec; Grenville, lighthouse and buoy service, Upper St. Lawrence and lake Ontario, Prescott, Ont.; Lambton, construction, Great Lakes, Parry Sound, Ont.; Rouville, construction, Gulf of St. Lawrence, Quebec.

These expenses were formerly charged to the boats, but we thought it more correct to bulk them into this one item. That accounts for the increase.

Mr. CARROLL: Have any new ice-breakers been put in commission during the last six months?

Mr. HAZEN: No.

Mr. MARCIL: Requests have frequently been made to me that an ice-breaker be sent into Gaspé bay early in the spring. Was any action taken in that regard last year?

Mr. HAZEN: No. The difficulty is that we can not comply with all the requests we receive for the services of ice-breakers. We are worse off now than last year, because we have sold the Earl Grey to the Russian Government to keep the White Sea open during the winter. We regretted having to part with her, but, under the circumstances, felt we ought to comply with the Russian Government's request. We have an ice-breaker in course of construction by the Canadian Vickers at their shipyards at Montreal, but for reasons hon. gentlemen will understand the date of its delivery has had to be postponed considerably.

Mr. MARCIL: The condition of Gaspé bay has become almost famous since the departure from that place of the Canadian expeditionary force. In the inner bay there is a lot of floating ice, which takes two or three weeks and sometimes more to break up, and delays navigation accordingly. It is just the same between Dalhousie and Campbellton. The route is blocked at both extremities. If ever the minister has an opportunity of sending an ice-breaker down there, I am sure it would be appreciated.

Mr. KYTE: How much was received from the Russian Government for the Earl Grey?

Mr. HAZEN: One hundred thousand pounds in round figures. The exact figures were given to the House to-day in reply to a question. It was $493,000.00.

Mr. GRAHAM: I should like a little explanation of an item I have seen in the press. I think it was on Wednesday last that I saw in the Montreal Star an item to the effect that an official of the Marine Department had made an examination in connection with the collision between the Storstad and the Empress of Ireland; and that on being asked by the Canadian Pacific Railway solicitors for some information concerning the investigation he had made, he declined to give it, saying that he had been engaged by the Storstad Company, and considered that he should give the information to them only. I do not know anything about the circumstances, but it struck me as peculiar that a Government official should be engaged by the Norwegian Company to get technical information which could not be made available to our own Canadian Company.

Mr. HAZEN: That would concern the Department of Naval Service, not the Marine and Fisheries Department. I presume it would be some official connected with the Hydrographic Survey. I do not know what the facts are, nor does the deputy of the Marine and Fisheries Department who is with me to-night. I will get the information, however, and give it to my hon. friend at a later date.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was in the other department?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, the Department of the Naval Service.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is assumed that this official said he had been instructed by the deputy of the department to do this work for the Storstad people. If the item is not absolutely accurate it ought to be straightened out.

Mr. HAZEN: I will ascertain what the facts are and when the items for the Naval Department are under consideration I will give the information to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MARCIL: For many years ice-breaking work has been carried on in the St. Lawrence. Will the Minister tell us if any material advantage has been gained by the work of ice-breakers during the spring, particularly at Cap Rouge and in the vicinity of Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: Several advantages have resulted from the work of the ice-breaker. In the first place it has prevented the flooding in the spring of the low lands below Montreal, and in the second place, it has caused the opening of navigation to Montreal at an early date. I think it was last year I submitted a report to the House showing that it was believed that the navigation up the St. Lawrence to Montreal, in consequence of the work of the ice-breakers, was being advanced perhaps ten days or two weeks and in some cases more, depending on the season.

Mr. MARCIL: What is the minister's programme for this season in connection with the St. Lawrence channel?

Mr. HAZEN: I will be very happy, when we get to the vote on the St. Lawrence ship channel, to give the hon. gentleman all the information about that.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: I did not note the name of the Minto in the list of ice-breakers to be repaired under this vote that the minister read.

Mr. HAZEN: I did not give the list of all the vessels that are to be repaired but the list of the vessels that previously were charged to the item for construction. In the list of those that are to be repaired the Minto and the Stanley are included.

Mr. HUGHES: They will need repairs during the coming summer?

Mr. HAZEN: These boats nearly all have to be repaired, especially the ice-breakers.

Examiners of masters and mates, $16,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is it advisable to permit teachers who have had charge of instructing men who are up for examination as masters and mates to conduct the examination of these men and pass upon their qualifications? It is regarded as convenient if it is permissible.

Mr. HAZEN: It has never been permissible.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not see why it would not be permissible. A man who has attended college, has his degree, and has become a professor or a teacher ought to be more than usually competent. He does not get anything for the work of conducting an examination of this kind and I fancy it would be a great convenience. It is hard to understand why, if he is a capable man to teach these candidates, he should not be equally capable to conduct their examinations and pass judgment upon their qualifications unless there was some special advantage to himself in passing them. We have a school in the town where I live presided over by a very capable man and when some of the pupils attending that school wanted to go up for examination I understand that a man was sent from Halifax to examine them, whereas, if a local man could examine them, it would be less expensive and more convenient. When a man was ready to go up for examination he could be examined without having to wait. As it is now, I understand that if they want to go up for examination, unless there are five or six of them ready to be examined, the examination cannot be conducted and the result is that men who are ready to pass their examination are kept back.

9 p.m.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. gentleman is raising a question about which there is considerable difference of opinion in connection with ordinary educational work. There are some people who contend with a good deal of force too, that the instructor is better qualified to conduct the examination of his pupils than any one else. There are other people who hold that the instructor should not conduct examinations, but that a fairer and more intelligent examination can be obtained by having examiners who have not been connected with the instruction of the pupil. There are some universities in this country that I know of in which degrees are awarded on examinations conducted by educationalists who are not instructors in the institutions. They feel that a teacher might have some prejudice against, or leaning towards, a certain pupil and that if they get an outsider who simply takes the pupil, having no personal knowledge of him, they may get a fairer examination in that way. The practice which has always prevailed in the department in connection with the examination of masters and mates is that examiners are appointed by the department. There is a regular examiner at Halifax, Captain Malcolm, and if any one in my hon. friend's neighbourhood wants to try the examination Captain Malcolm will be sent there to conduct it. It is not necessary to wait until there are four, five or six, or any number of students to be examined although the attempt is made to get as many together at the same time as possible. If there is only one man who is prepared to undergo examination he does not have to wait until there are several candidates, but the examiner will be sent down for that purpose. Naturally, we try to have a number of applicants together in order to save expense. This system is open to discussion. There is a good deal, I frankly admit, to be said on both sides of the question of whether the examiner should conduct the examination or whether the instructor should do it. Perhaps it is as well to have an examiner who is appointed by the department for that purpose and in whose knowledge, skill and experience the department have confidence. Perhaps that would cause greater confidence to be reposed in the results of the examinations and certificates given by the department than might be the case under the system which my hon. friend has spoken of. This is the system which has always prevailed and I think it would hardly be wise to change it unless the arguments presented were very strong the other way.

Mr. PARDEE: Regarding examinations for masters and mates, I take it that the system applies to salt water or would the minister send an examiner to any part to examine candidates for masters or mates?

Mr. HAZEN: Quite right.

Mr. PARDEE: Why should that system not be extended to fresh water?

Mr. HAZEN: It is.

Mr. PARDEE: When there are two or three candidates to be examined for certificates as fresh-water masters and mates, do you compel them to attend any particular centre for examination?

Mr. HAZEN: For the past two years, wherever there are candidates to be examined, we send an examiner there.

Mr. PARDEE: Who are the examiners in Ontario?

Mr. HAZEN: Captain King at Toronto, Captain Coles at Collingwood, Captain Phillips at Kenora.

Mr. PARDEE: I am glad to hear that an examiner is sent to wherever the candidates reside, it is an improvement on the former system.

Mr. MARCIL: Who are the examiners in Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: Captain Lachance for Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. MARCIL: Who are the examiners for New Brunswick?

Mr. HAZEN: The examiners for the eastern division are: Captain Malcolm, Halifax, Captain Lachance, Quebec, Captain Alexander Cameron, Charlottetown, Captain Murphy, Yarmouth, Captain Sutherland, North Sydney, Captain Bennett, St. John, N.B.

Mr. PARDEE: I understand that whenever there is a candidate for a certificate as master or mate an examiner is sent to that point?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. PARDEE: Formerly the centres were Windsor, St. Catherines, Toronto and Collingwood.

Mr. HAZEN: My desire is that the students shall have every opportunity to pass the examination. Of course, if there are three or four students to be examined, residing at different points not widely separated, we would ask them to meet at a central point in the vicinity, but we would not withhold the examination from any person who wants to be examined, simply because he is the only candidate presenting himself. We will send an examiner to him if necessary.

Mr. MARCIL: Some years ago there was difficulty in Quebec arising out of the language question, and I assume that now the examiners in Quebec are familiar with both languages. In northern New Brunswick, where there is a very large French population, what would be the procedure in the case of a candidate who was not familiar with the English language?

Mr. HAZEN: The very idea my hon. friend suggests has occurred to us, but as such a case has never arisen we do not think it necessary to duplicate the examiners. If in northern New Brunswick a candidate who wants to be examined in the French language presents himself, we would get Captain Lachance to go down from Quebec.

Mr. MARCIL: If there is any one on the Lower St. Lawrence who wishes to be examined in the French language, he will have an opportunity of being so examined?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: There are a large number of Acadian navigators who would desire, I presume, to be examined in the French language.

Mr. HAZEN: When that question arises we will provide for it.

Mr. LAW: Has the Minister a list of the masters and mates who passed in Nova Scotia last year?

Mr. HAZEN: I have not the names, but the following table shows the particulars of the examinations held during the ten months ended 31st January last:

Name of Examiner.	Port.	Seagoing Master-Mate.		Coasting Master-Mate.		Inland Master-Mate.
Capt. Malcolm	Halifax		10	12	11
Capt. Lachance	Montreal and Quebec	3	2		5	25	5
Capt. Murphy	Yarmouth	9	7	8	6
Capt. Bennett	St. John	1		9	2	12
Capt. Eddie	Vancouver	2	7	25	21
Capt. Macpherson	Victoria		2	10	6	1	1
Capt. Cameron	Charlottetown			1	1
Capt. King	Toronto and Ottawa					37	35
Capt. Coles	Collingwood				1	11	6
Capt. Thordarson	West Selkirk					2	8
Capt. Phillips	Kenora					8
Capt. Sutherland	North Sydney		1	4	2
Lieut. Hallett	Nelson					3

Mr. PARDEE: How long has Captain King been an examiner? Is he not a very old employee?

Mr. HAZEN: He was appointed not quite two years ago.

Mr. MARCIL: The Quebec district comprises all the country below Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Where does the examination take place for the Quebec district?

Mr. HAZEN: At the city of Quebec, I presume.

Mr. MARCIL: A man living in Gaspé would have to travel three or four hundred miles to Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: He would send an examiner down there, but as a matter of fact a great many do come to the centre to be examined.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the candidate to pay his own expenses going and coming?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: If he fails in the examination that is lost?

Mr. HAZEN: There is no allowance made for travelling expenses.

Mr. MARCIL: Not even a reduced rate on the Government railway?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think so.

Mr. MARCIL: Why should he not have a reduced rate on the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. HAZEN: I will discuss that with the Minister of Railways.

Mr. GRAHAM: And I doubt very much if the Minister of Railways will be willing to consent.

Mr. MARCIL: The civil servants get reduced rates on the Government railways.

Investigation into wrecks, $18,400.

Mr. GRAHAM: Who is the Wreck Commissioner?

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. L. A. Demers, who is a very old official. Mr. Demers retired from the position at one time and became Harbour Master at Montreal and Captain Lindsay was appointed Wreck Commissioner. About a year ago Captain Lindsay was appointed to the commission in connection with the pilotage service, and Captain Demers was appointed to his old position in the department. The Wreck Commission is a court consisting of the Wreck Commissioner, who is chairman and two nautical assessors. The practice is for the Wreck Commissioner, in holding an inquiry at Quebec, St. John, Halifax, or elsewhere, to select two seamen of experience to act with him as assessors. The authority for the assessors is signed by myself, or whoever may be minister. He makes inquiry and gets the two most experienced sea captains, old sailors, he can find, and they act with him as assessors. The finding of the court has to be signed by the Wreck Commissioner and at least one assessor. The item this year is $10,000 less than last year. That is accounted for by the fact that last year inquiry had to be made into the loss of the Empress of India. For that purpose a special court was appointed. We estimated the expenses of that court at $10,000. This year no such special court is provided for.

Mr. GRAHAM: The signing of the warrant in blank is almost like a cheque to buy militia horses. The report of the Wreck Commissioner on the Empress of Ireland disaster, I suppose, cannot be taken as evidence in the civil suit now pending?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not know what the laws of evidence are in the province of Quebec—whether evidence taken before a properly constituted court be accepted in another court. By agreement it could.

Mr. GRAHAM: How many wrecks are investigated in a year? How many were investigated last year?

Mr. HAZEN: In the fiscal year the number of wrecks investigated was thirty-four, exclusive of the Empress of Ireland, which was invesigated by a special court.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is there any report of the court in the Empress of Ireland disaster?

Mr. HAZEN: A very full report has been published. I suppose it would be right that that should be laid on the table. That had not occurred to me, but I see no objection to bringing it down.

Mr. McKENZIE: It would hardly be useful unless it is printed.

Mr. HAZEN: It is printed. If the hon. gentleman is interested, I shall be glad to send him a copy.

Mr. McKENZIE: I shall be thankful for it. Perhaps other members also would like to have copies, unless it is too expensive.

Mr. HAZEN: If I find we have enough copies, I will act on the hon. member's suggestion and send one to each member of the House.

Mr. PARDEE: The hon. gentleman said that Captain Demers, with two sea-captains—

Mr. HAZEN: That is the word I used, but they need not be sea-captains in the literal sense. They ought to be marine men, but both not necessarily sailors. In certain cases one might be an engineer, for instance.

Mr. PARDEE: The point was as to appointing men to examine into wrecks on the Great Lakes. I had occasion to speak to the minister last year upon this matter. The conditions on the Great Lakes are entirely different from those on the ocean. Without going into details, I may say that, so far as Captain Lindsay is concerned, he was a wreck commissioner to investigate the wrecks that occurred in the storm of the 9th November, 1913, perhaps the greatest that ever visited the Great Lakes. Some findings were made in the case of the Arcadia by the wreck commissioner, Captain Lindsay, who is wholly a deep-sea man that, in my opinion and in the opinion of many masters—I believe, in the opinion of ninety-nine per cent of those masters—were wholly erroneous. Had Captain Lindsay understood the Great Lakes as well as he understood deep-sea sailing, he never would have made such findings. I am not going into a dissertation on the evidence, which I have before me, nor into the findings themselves. But, from my knowledge of the Great Lakes, having lived upon them all my life and having some knowledge of marine matters, I think that in justice to the masters and mariners upon those lakes, and in justice to the department itself, no wreck commissioner should be appointed to investigate wrecks upon the Great Lakes except one who has had experience in sailing on the Great Lakes and knows absolutely the conditions of that navigation. I think the minister must agree that sailing on the Great Lakes is vastly different from deep-sea sailing. On the lakes they have not the room that they have at sea and cannot go about their course in the same way. In many other ways also the navigation differs. I am not pretending to find fault with the department except in the case of the Arcadia, in which the finding was erroneous. I throw out these suggestions in order that in future wreck investigations men may be appointed upon these occasions who are familiar with the navigation conditions of the Great Lakes.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Pardee) called my attention to this fact during last session. A delegation waited upon me composed of gentlemen interested in the navigation of the Great Lakes, introduced, I think, by my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro). I was very much impressed with their sincerity, and it was perfectly clear that they believed the course that had been pursued was not fair to the navigation of the lakes. They asked that a Wreck Commissioner should be appointed for the Great Lakes besides those for the Atlantic and Pacific. But in view of the small number of wrecks on the lakes within the last few years I thought it not wise to appoint a Wreck Commissioner; but I did give positive instructions that when there was investigation of a wreck on the Great Lakes or inland waters, the Wreck Commissioner should see to it that the two assessors he selected to advise him should be navigators familiar with the navigation of the lakes. I hope that will meet the case. Certainly, we have had no complaints since. The hon. member refers to the case of the Arcadia. He will remember that I told these gentlemen there is a provision in the Act for an appeal, that appeal being to the Minister. It has to be taken within a certain time. But my recollection is I told these gentlemen that I would waive the time limit, if they wished to appeal to me and would hear the appeal. I think the power of the Minister in such a case is to order another inquiry before the same commissioner or before some other. However, the matter did not proceed further. They said it would not be convenient to get it up then, but I said I would hear it later in the season. But I believe they thought it better to leave the matter as it was. It is still open to them, however, to bring in an appeal if they desire to do so, and if they take that course I shall give my best attention to the matter.

Mr. PARDEE: I think the decision of the minister along the lines mentioned will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. MARCIL: Following this inquiry into the disaster to the Empress of Ireland, have any changes been ordered by the department with regard to the dropping of pilots by steamers at Father Point?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, we are carrying out the recommendations made in that respect. It may be necessary for us to obtain permission to build another boat some time in the future in order to have it done thoroughly. My hon. friend will understand that I have endeavoured to cut out of my estimates this year as much capital expenditure as possible; consequently they have been very considerably reduced. We are acting entirely in accord with the recommendations made by the commission especially constituted by this Parliament, of which Lord Mersey was chairman, and this year arrangements will be made which will obviate any danger previously arising from the source referred to.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister state briefly what was the result of the inquiry into the stranding of the steamer Canada at Ste. Anne des Monts?

Mr. HAZEN: I have here two lists of investigations. The first list is one of investigations into wrecks during the fiscal years 1913 and 1914. In this list I find: "Canada, stranding; no one to blame." The other list is one of investigations into wrecks during the period from April 1, 1914, to February 4, 1915, in which I find, under the heading "Canada, stranding," the following: "Master reprimanded, and mate suspended for three months."

Mr. MARCIL: Are any particulars given as to how the accident happened?

Mr. HAZEN: No.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the Canada been in dry-dock this year?

Mr. HAZEN: The Canada is not a government boat; I do not know whether she has been in dry-dock or not.

Mr. MARCIL: The Canada in which I am interested is a boat subsidized by the Government, which is about to begin a new service. There has been a good deal of talk about this wreck, and I am anxious to know what position the matter is in at the present time.

Mr. HAZEN: This boat receives a subsidy from the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MARCIL: Before a subsidized boat begins a season of navigation under contract with the Dominion Government, is it inspected by any officer of the department?

Mr. HAZEN: All boats are inspected by an inspector of hulls and an inspector of boilers and must obtain certificates from these inspectors before they are allowed to go on route.

Mr. MARCIL: Are the results of these examinations made public in any way? Are they accessible?

Mr. HAZEN: They are available in the department to any one who wishes to see them.

Mr. MARCIL: The Canada is a very old boat. She used to be known as the Copatriot, and belonged to a French company navigating between Baie des Chaleurs ports and St. Pierre Miquelon. Her name was changed and she engaged in service in Chaleurs Bay. She has met with several accidents, and the people want to know whether the boat is seaworthy or not. I was told that last year and the year before she should have gone into dry-dock.

Mr. HAZEN: The boat cannot go on route unless a certificate is obtained from the inspectors of hulls and boilers.

Mr. MARCIL: The certificate of the suspended mate is in force this year, then?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, after the lapse of the three months.

Mr. BOULAY: Who is holding wreck investigations at Quebec; Captain Lindsay?

Mr. HAZEN: Captain Lindsay does not hold any wreck investigations. These would be held by Captain Demers.

Mr. BOULAY: I understand that during the summer an investigation was held as a result of which a certain person was held to blame. Subsequently another investigation was held, and the same person was exonerated because of the fact that the gentleman who conducted the first investigation was unable to understand the parties who were called to testify. Would the minister give me some particulars in regard to this matter?

Mr. HAZEN: I think that was in respect of the inquiry into the case of the Montfort. Senator Choquette appeared as counsel for the officers of the ship, and after the inquiry was over he complained that neither the wreck commissioner, who at that time was Captain Lindsay, nor the assessors were able to understand the French language well enough to enable the man whose conduct was being examined to make a proper defence. As a result of this a re-hearing was granted, of which Captain Lindsay was chairman and Captain Demers was one of the assessors. In that way the difficulty was overcome.

Mr. JAMESON: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to a statement made to me by a person whom I believe to be entirely trustworthy, to the effect that some of the steamers which are navigating our maritime waters at the present time are unseaworthy. I would like the minister to give definite instructions to the inspector of hulls with a view to securing a proper test of the seaworthiness of these boats. In order to ensure that the boats are actually seaworthy they should be subjected to a practical test involving the placing in the boat of a weight equal to that ordinarily borne by it in the carrying of passengers and crew. I have every reason to believe that the statement made to me is correct, and I believe there should be no difficulty whatever in seeing that proper and sufficient tests in that respect are made in the future.

Mr. HAZEN: If the inspectors of hulls—so far as I know they are competent men—carry out their duties and the instructions given to them, no vessel will go to sea that is not in a seaworthy condition. The same applies to the inspector of boilers, whose duty it is to examine the machinery and to see that it is in proper condition before the vessel is allowed to go to sea. Before appointment these gentlemen have to pass an examination to the satisfaction of the officers of the Marine Department, and the instructions given to them are of a very explicit character. I shall, however, examine those instructions more thoroughly and see if they are sufficient.

Mr. MARCIL: We hear certain strange stories from pilots, engineers, captains, etc., about the unseaworthy condition of such and such a boat. Is the minister certain that the inspections are properly and thoroughly made? I heard many stories in connection with the Canada that I do not care to repeat. Is the department in a position to know that the work of inspection is very thorough and full?

Mr. HAZEN: They make reports to us of their personal inspections of every single boat and these reports are in the department. Their instructions are to make most careful examinations, but in view of what has been said I think we shall send out a special circular letter to the inspectors calling their attention to the instructions received and pointing out that there is some alarm in the public mind that the inspection is not sufficiently thorough and telling them to see that the examination is as thorough as possible.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not expect the hon. members who have spoken to inform the House who are the owners of these steamers that are said to be unseaworthy, but it is extremely dangerous that steamers should be plying along the coast of Nova Scotia or anywhere that are dangerous, and I think it would be well for the hon. members to convey privately to the minister the names of the steamers referred to in order that there may be a thorough investigation.

Mr. HAZEN: If my hon. friends have any particular steamers in mind, if they will come to the Marine Department we shall show them the reports on those steamers.

Mr. LAW: The only complaint I have heard in reference to the inspectors in our part of Nova Scotia is that they are too strict. I doubt very much whether there are any owners of steamboats who would dare to send boats to sea in an unseaworthy condition and without the certificates of the inspectors of hulls and boilers. As I understand, there is a heavy penalty for operating boats which are not regularly inspected.

Mr. JAMESON: There seems to be some misunderstanding as to my meaning. I did not mean that the steamers themselves were in an unseaworthy condition, but that the boats they carried had been lying on the decks for a long time and had become dry, and my informant did not think that they would support the number of passengers they are supposed to carry in an emergency. His idea was that the inspector should put the life boats in the water when making an inspection, and put in them a weight equal to that of the number of passengers they are supposed to carry. I shall be glad to give to the minister a list of the boats that have been mentioned to me.

Mr. LAW: It is part of the duty of the inspector to inspect the life boats just as he does the life preservers, etc.

Expenses of schools of navigation, $8,000.

Mr. LAW: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. HAZEN: This item is intended to cover the expenditure in connection with the department's free navigation schools already established and to provide any extension of the service that may be undertaken in the fiscal year 1915-16. Free navigation schools are now in operation during the whole year at Quebec, Halifax and St. John, and during the winter free navigation schools are operated at North Sydney, Collingwood, Vancouver and Carleton. The hon. member from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) brought the necessity of that part of the country to my attention last year, and we established a school at Carleton, in Bonaventure county.

Mr. MARCIL: Who is the instructor?

Mr. HAZEN: Captain Landry.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the result been encouraging?

Mr. HAZEN: According to the report, the new school opened at Carleton, Bonaventure, on the 1st of December last, under Captain Landry has had an average attendance of six pupils and these will be ready for examination for certificates about the middle of February. There has been an average attendance of six pupils, and it cannot be said that the school is a failure.

Mr. MARCIL: For the first year that is very encouraging. Will the school be continued at Carleton or moved along the coast to other parishes, say Bonaventure?

Mr. HAZEN: Does the hon. member think there is a site better adapted for the school than Carleton?

Mr. MARCIL: Bonaventure has some three thousand people. It is farther east than Carleton.

Mr. HAZEN: I shall consider the desirability of changing the location.

Mr. LAW: Does the minister say that there is a free school at Yarmouth?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LAW: Conducted by whom?

Mr. HAZEN: Conducted by Captain John E. Murphy.

Mr. LAW: That is news to me. I knew that Mr. Murphy delivered lectures there during the winter, but I never heard that he was running a free navigation school.

Mr. HAZEN: It would perhaps be more correct to say that lectures on navigation are delivered during the winter at the places I have mentioned.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the course completed in one year?

Mr. HAZEN: Not necessarily. As a rule the pupils who go to the school are young men who have had experience on the sea, and have studied more or less. Then they attend these lectures for a certain time and a good deal depends on their aptitude and cleverness as to the length of time that the course will take.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister will understand that my only object is to give the various districts an opportunity of benefiting by the schools to as great an extent as possible.

Mr. McKENZIE: The school in the town of North Sydney is doing excellent work. The attendance is getting larger every year, but we should like to see it larger still. I notice from the newspapers that the technical college at Halifax has added navigation to the subjects taught there. I understand there is some co-operation between the college at Halifax and the department at Ottawa. Perhaps the minister could give us some explanation of that arrangement, if any, and what assistance the department is giving in paying teachers.

Mr. HAZEN: Yes, we entered into an arrangement with the technical college at Halifax. They provide the accommodation, fuel and that sort of thing, and we provide the instructors and equipment. We pay the instructor, Capt. John Simmons, $80 a month. I will just quote from Mr. Burnett's report of the school:

The Halifax school is making good progress. It was opened 1st April, 1914, and has been in operation continuously since. Captain Simmons, the instructor, has been in constant attendance every day and evening except Sundays. The attendance since the summer months has been good. For November and December the average daily attendance was seven pupils. Several of those attending the school have already passed examination and received certificates as masters or mates. Others after attending the school for a while, go to sea to return at a later date and finish the course. Others will be ready for examination in the spring. Thirty-one candidates have already passed at Halifax for certificates since April last.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: Have any applications been made to the minister for a school of this kind in Charlottetown?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not know of any.

Mr. HUGHES: We are a sea-faring people down there, and have turned out a good many captains who have sailed all over the world.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there a private navigation school at Charlottetown?

Mr. HUGHES: Yes, but the pupils have to pay a fee. If men in other parts of the maritime provinces can get tuition free or partly free, the department is discriminating. I am sure the teacher in that college would be glad to work under the Government and relieve the pupils to that extent. It is desirable that our young men should be encouraged to qualify themselves as masters or mates, and as the Government are helping in other parts of the country, I now make application and press it as strongly as I can for similar assistance to be given to the school at Charlottetown.

Mr. HAZEN: In places where a well-conducted school seems to be meeting the needs of the case, the department has always been very careful not to interfere with the gentleman conducting such a school. There have been no applications from Charlottetown for assistance of that kind since I have been minister; so evidently the people there are pretty well satisfied with the present state of affairs. However, I will look into the facts of the case.

Mr. HUGHES: I am not suggesting that the minister establish a rival school, but I think he should take advantage of the school that already exists there. The Government might supplement the instruction, or make it less expensive to the many young men who wish to get an education, but find the fees of a private school too high. The very fact that a private school is being successfully conducted there, would indicate that a competent instructor could be easily got.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $20,000

Mr. A. W. CHISHOLM: What comes under that?

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps I can best explain by giving what we paid out in 1914-15 for removing these wrecks. The steamer Charles Crawford, Lake St. Clair, Ont., $1,450; steamer City of London, Lake Erie, Ont., $4,900; sunken moorings, Grand Manan, N.B., $75; steamer Electra, Margaree Harbour, N.S., $150; old hulk, Guysborough, N.S., $70.45; schooner Annie R. Lewis, Barrington, N.S., $454.50; steamer Elfin, Charlottetown, P.E.I., $500. Up to the present we have spent $7,599.95. This money is for removing obstructions in navigable waters. Where the owners of a sunken barge or ship cannot be got to remove it quickly enough, the department removes it in the interests of navigation and charges the cost up against the vessel owners, and collects if possible. Sometimes we succeed in collecting, and sometimes not.

Mr. A. W. CHISHOLM: Are you collecting the cost of removing the wreck at Margaree Harbour?

Mr. HAZEN: Captain LeBlanc removed that at a cost of $150, which we are trying to collect.

Mr. CHISHOLM: How does the minister select these persons for removing obstructions?

Mr. HAZEN: We advertise for tenders.

Mr. CHISHOLM: How are these tenders advertised?

Mr. HAZEN: By public posters in the district.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I am afraid the minister is ill-informed in respect to that. My information is that instructions were sent down to the Patronage Committee and that they selected Captain LeBlanc. If the notices were sent down there, they were never posted up. Nobody knew about the work except the man who got the contract, and he got it through the Patronage Committee. I have no doubt the minister has acted in good faith, but to say that public tenders were asked for the removal of that wreck is not correct. Notices were not posted up. That is my home, and I know all about the circumstances, what it cost to remove the wreck, who did the work, and how the choice was made. I wish to impress upon the minister that this man was selected by the Patronage Committee.

Mr. HAZEN: I never heard of the matter before. The deputy minister tells me that the usual practice was followed. These posters are printed, sent down and posted up in different parts of the district. Tenders are asked for the removal.

Mr. CHISHOLM: These posters were not put up; nobody knew anything about them until this man came along and removed the wreck.

Winter mail service, $11,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: From where to where?

Mr. HAZEN: This is from Cape Traverse to Cape Tormentine.

Mr. MARCIL: The service is in operation now?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: Is that for the small boats?

Mr. HAZEN: The amount spent during the last fiscal year was $7,566. The amount spent during the present fiscal year, up to 31st December, was $2,218. Something, of course, depends upon the severity of the winter. The vote is used for the ice-boat service.

Mr. HUGHES: How many boats are employed?

Mr. HAZEN: The number of men employed is 74 and there are twelve boats altogether.

Mr. HUGHES: This vote is for the winter of 1916?

Mr. HAZEN: It is for next year.

Mr. HUGHES: Is it not supposed that the car ferry will be in operation then?

Mr. HAZEN: Then we will not have to spend any of this vote. The car ferry would have been completed by now but for the war. When the war broke out the British Admiralty took charge of the shipyard in which the car ferry was being built and put this work to one side as other work for the navy had to be undertaken. This has caused delay. I do not know whether the car ferry will be ready next year or not, but if it is this vote will not be wanted.

[Mr. A. W. Chisholm.]

Mr. HUGHES: The war could not very well have caused the delay in completing the car ferry because the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) told me during the regular session that the car ferry would be in operation by the 1st of August and the war did not break out until the 4th of August. I do not see how the war could have prevented the construction of a ship that was to have been completed, on this side of the water and in operation by the 1st of August.

Mr. HAZEN: There was a great deal of work done for the navy before the war broke out.

Mr. HUGHES: Yes, in anticipation of the war.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Minister of Railways will have to explain that.

Mr. HAZEN: You will have to wait until he comes.

Mr. HUGHES: This vote has proved that the Government are a little doubtful as to whether the car ferry will be a success. Of course, I am glad to see that they are making provision to have the mails carried in any event. The fact that the Earl Grey has been taken away and sold to the Russian Government is unfortunate for that service. Perhaps it could not have been helped, perhaps there was a reason for it and we hope she is doing good service where she is, but if this had not been a very mild winter there would have been a very poor service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The Minto and Stanley were put into that service and notwithstanding the mildness of the winter they were caught in the ice and were unable to perform the service. If that condition continues and next winter should happen to be severe the people of Prince Edward Island will suffer a great deal because of the war. Their communication will be cut out and I sincerely trust that every effort will be made to try and have the car ferry in operation before next winter. We have been waiting for it for a long time, we have been promised it and something always happened to prevent it being put in operation. This vote gives an indication that in the mind of the Government we will have to wait a while yet.

10 p.m.

Inspection of live stock shipment, $5,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is that for?

Mr. HAZEN: It is our business to see that live stock shipped through Canadian ports is shipped in such a manner that it does not suffer during the voyage, that the stalls and places where the animals are confined are suitable for the purpose. We spent $2,400 last year. There are two inspectors at Montreal and we used to have an inspector at St. John. I did not see any reason for the continuation for the office at St. John and the work is now discharged by the agent of the department there.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister the number of cattle shipped from Montreal, Halifax and St. John?

Mr. HAZEN: The inspectors of live stock shipments at Montreal report that 134 horses, 512 cattle, 97 mules and 296 sheep were shipped to Great Britain from the 1st May to the 20th November, 1913. This year's report has not been received.

Mr. MARCIL: That is a great falling off from the previous years?

Mr. HAZEN: There has been a great falling off in the shipment of live stock from Canada of late years.

To continue subsidy for wrecking plants—Quebec, Maritime Provinces and British Columbie, $45,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: What wrecking plants are there in Nova Scotia?

Mr. HAZEN: The wrecking plant in Nova Scotia is provided by the Dominion Coal Company. They maintain a wrecking plant which is divided between Halifax and Sydney and which will be placed at the disposal of shipowners and others requiring this service whenever required. Steamers and tugs are located at Sydney and Louisburg and also at Halifax.

Mr. McKENZIE: What steamers are located at Louisburg?

Mr. HAZEN: The tugs Duglas Thomas and C. M. Winch are located at Sydney in summer and Louisburg in winter. The steamers located at Louisburg in summer are the Cabot, the Cacouna, the Cape Breton and the Louisburg; of course they are not there all the time.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is there any report from the Dominion Coal Company on the services they rendered last year as a wrecking concern?

Mr. HAZEN: There is such a report.

Mr. McKENZIE: Complaints have been made that the Dominion Coal Company, as a wrecking concern, is not a success. Unfortunately, and what is a very unusual thing, three foreign vessels went ashore in a dense fog, on the island of Scatari, last summer. The consul of the nation to which one of these ships belonged complained that they could not obtain any assistance from the Dominion Coal Company.

Mr. HAZEN: Do you know the names of these ships?

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not; but one of them was a Norwegian vessel. I do not make any complaint, but I think it is only fair to say that these vessels are not what might be called stationed at Louisburg in the summer, nor would that be contended for by the company. These vessels are carrying coal between Sydney and Montreal in summer and it is quite possible they may be for a little while at Louisburg, but they do not load coal there unless they are going to Boston or some New England port. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister so that he may make inquiry into what service the country is getting for the money paid to the Coal Company as a wrecking concern.

Mr. HAZEN: I will make inquiry. I understand my hon. friend to say that a complaint has reached his ear from the Norwegian consul or from some other consul. I can understand that persons may not wish to make a public complaint but if my hon. friend will send me the facts privately, I shall be much obliged to him. We want a proper service for money we pay and if we are not getting it we should know the reason why. If my hon. friend can give me privately more information than he would like to give in the House, I will have the matter very thoroughly inquired into, without involving names.

Mr. McKENZIE: I shall be happy to get particulars from the person I have in mind, and I will hand the information to the minister. I can assure the minister that I have nothing at all but the most friendly relations personally with the Dominion Coal Company, but if they are getting money out of the treasury of this country they should certainly render a suitable service for it.

Mr. LAW: Did the minister say there is a wrecking plant at St. John?

Mr. HAZEN: I said that during the winter the tug Springhill of the Dominion Coal Company was located at St. John. In addition to that, this winter, in consequence of representations we received, and there being a large amount of shipping in St. John, we made arrangements with the company that supplies the wrecking plant at Quebec, and they stationed the large tug Strathcona with pumps and wrecking appliance, at St. John for service in the Bay of Fundy. The arrangement I made with that wrecking company was that we would guarantee them five thousand dollars. If they earned five thousand dollars we would have to pay nothing, but we had to ensure that they would receive five thousand dollars in any event. I think the arrangement was a very good one. Of course, if there was a wreck of any importance, they would easily earn an amount larger than we guaranteed.

Mr. LAW: Did any of these boats come to the wreck of the Navarre, bound from St. John to the old country, which occurred near Yarmouth, about the beginning of this year?

Mr. HAZEN: I know that our own boats went down there, but I am not certain as to the Lord Strathcona. However, I have no doubt she was available if her services were wanted by the owners of the ship.

Mr. LAW: I am very sorry the minister did not carry out the recommendation which I made to him last year, and I shall now repeat it. A great many wrecks occur at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy south of Yarmouth.

Mr. HAZEN: Not so very many.

Mr. LAW: Quite a number; almost every winter there are one or two steamers wrecked on the Gaunet Rock ledges or some of the Tusket islands. Last year I recommended that the minister should enter into an arrangement with Messrs. Hugh Cann and Son, Limited, of Yarmouth, who have a large number of boats, to look after wrecks that occur in that vicinity. If the minister had taken my advice, he would have a more satisfactory arrangement than that which exists at present. If a wreck occurs in the vicinity of Yarmouth, a considerable time must elapse before a boat can reach the wreck from St. John, and if an arrangement were made with this Yarmouth firm I believe it would result in the saving of lives and property. I hope that before long the minister will see his way to make such an arrangement as I have suggested.

Mr. MARCIL: What are the arrangements with the wrecking company on the lower St. Lawrence

Mr. HAZEN: The Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company maintains the Lord Strathcona and such other craft as may be required to the satisfaction of the department, from the 1st of May to the 1st of November each year, on payment of a subsidy subject to certain conditions.

Mr. MARCIL: That applies to below Quebec as well as to above Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Outside of the wreck of the Empress of Ireland, were the wrecks more numerous this year than last year?

Mr. HAZEN: The Empress of Ireland was the only wreck this year that was of any importance; the others were minor wrecks and little damage occurred.

Mr. MARCIL: Some of these wrecks were owing to defects in aids to navigation.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think there was any such finding by the commissioner.

Mr. MARCIL: Was there any increase in insurance rates up to the 1st of August last?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think there was any appreciable increase up to the 1st of August.

Ocean and river service—Unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: I desire to call the attention of the minister to a service rendered last year to the fishermen in the harbour of Ingonish. I do not know whether any claim has been put in for it with the department. In the early part of the year 1914, the fishing was very poor, but what they call the fall fishing was particularly good. It was made possible for the fishermen because a steam tug called the Nelson was fishing in the harbour and its owner broke the ice, making a track around the harbour which the gasoline and other boats could use and so get out to sea. In this way scores of boats were enabled to enjoy good fishing. The fishermen were talking of making a claim on the department for some slight recognition of the services rendered by the owner of this vessel. I should like to have the Government bear the matter in mind if an application is made. The expense would be small.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there no application for life-saving stations?

Mr. HAZEN: That has been transferred to the Department of the Naval Service.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister will remember that at the last regular session I called his attention to the fact that there was not a single life-saving station on the whole

Gulf of St. Lawrence. I do not know if anything has been done since then. The minister will recognize the importance of having several such stations in the gulf.

Mr. HAZEN: We have been considering the matter, and hope to meet the hon. gentleman's wish.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES: I desire, when the life-saving appropriation is under discussion to get some information. The boathouse of the life-saving service at Souris was moved, but I think that the present location is not as good as the former one. Also the building was somewhat injured in the removal. I wish to know how much it cost to remove this building, who recommended the removal, whether the new site has been purchased, and, if so, what it cost.

Mr. HAZEN: We will get the information for my hon. friend.

Progress reported.

On motion of Hon. Robert Rogers the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

Tuesday, February 23, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 48, to incorporate Austral Insurance Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill No. 49, respecting The Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Sir James Aikins.

Bill No. 50, respecting The Canadian Western Railway Company.—Sir James Aikins.

Bill No. 51, respecting The Kettle Valley Railway Company, and to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. Green.

Bill No. 52, respecting The Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company. —Mr. G. V. White.

Bill No. 53, to incorporate The Marcil Trust Company.—Hon. Chas. Marcil.

Bill No. 54, respecting The Toronto Terminals Railway Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill No. 55, to incorporate Vancouver Terminal Railway Company.—Mr. Stevens.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

RENEWABLE TERM POLICIES.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 56, to amend the Insurance Act, 1910. He said: The Bill deals simply with that class of life insurance policies known as renewable term policies, under which a man takes out a policy for six months or a year and is called upon to pay an increased premium each time that he renews it. Such policies as at present issued give a schedule of the rates which each man will have to pay, the premiums increasing steadily until he reaches the age of sixty; but the insurance company gives him no assurance as to what will happen when he reaches that age or after he passes it. The man finds that when he is sixty years of age he is at the mercy of the insurance company, and has to pay enormous premiums or lose all the money that he has paid in premiums up to that time. This Bill gives him an option at any time to exchange that policy for what is known as an ordinary life level premium policy by paying to the company the difference in the premiums that he would have paid, with compound interest computed yearly, so as to make the policy equitable to every one. That is the purpose of the amendment. It is not the custom to debate a Bill on its first reading, so I will defer any further remarks until the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT.

MEMBERS ON ACTIVE SERVICE.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 57, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act. He said: The purpose and effect of this Bill is to render eligible to and capable of sitting in this House and of sitting in the Senate all officers and men in active service in the military or naval forces, notwithstanding the fact that they receive the pay pertaining to their position as such; and furthermore to provide that in the computation of days of absence on the part of any member of either House, any days during which he may be absent on active service in the military or naval forces shall not be computed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROPOSED INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. TURRIFF: A few days ago I asked the Prime Minister if the Government had taken any steps to appoint counsel to protect the rights of the people in connection with the coming meeting of the Railway Commission to consider a proposed general increase in freight rates. Is the right hon. gentleman now in a position to answer my question?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is the intention of the Government to appoint counsel.

FEDERAL LABOUR BUREAU.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: Is it the intention of the Government to introduce this session any legislation looking to the creation of a federal labour bureau?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Minister of Labour has had the subject under consideration. I cannot give my hon. friend a definite answer to-day, but if he will repeat his inquiry later, we will be prepared to make an announcement.

THE BUDGET.

PROPOSED WAR TAXATION.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Ways and Means, resumed from February 11.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): In resuming the debate on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means, let me point out that a review of the Budget speech or financial statement of the Minister of Finance naturally involves three main considerations: the war supply; the ordinary or civil supply; and the ways and means proposed to supplement the existing sources of revenue.

A few words indeed will suffice to express my views regarding the war supply, which has been outlined in the Budget speech of the Finance Minister, and by resolution. In August last, the war supply Bill amounting to $50,000,000, was submitted to Parliament by the Government, and was speedily and unanimously voted. In the same prompt, generous and patriotic spirit will the representatives of the people vote the proposed war supply of $100,000,000. Engaged in one of the most momentous as well as one of the most tragic of wars known to human history, we are fortified by the strong belief that it is a war not for domination but for the preservation of our national and individual liberty; a war for the extermination of military autocracy and the perpetuation of democratic institutions and rule by the people; a war to enforce the submission of nations to their treaty obligations and to the well established principles of international law; a war to redress the wrongs committed against an outraged people and to restore to a kingdom its sovereignty and its soil. In these circumstances, enjoying an unshaken belief in the justice of our cause, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that His Majesty's loyal Opposition will with promptitude and unanimity facilitate the passage of the War Supply Bill of $100,000,000, and we shall ever stand ready to supplement the same in order to continue the struggle to a successful issue and until peace under proper terms may be safely assured.

In doing this, however, we impose one condition upon and exact one promise from the Government: a strict accountability for the destination of the moneys so voted and a faithful realization on its part of the great trust resting upon it. The people of Canada expect from the Government unceasing vigilance against departmental follies and laxities, and dishonest contractors and patronage brokers. Nothing should more instantly provoke the overwhelming indignation of Canada than the thought that money voted for war purposes was diverted from its true destination by the profane hands of dishonest contractors and vendors, patronage brokers and party camp followers, and more so if it occurs owing to the lack of vigilance or duty on the part of the national trustees, the Government. I realize it to be too true that in Canada the public sense respecting Government expenditures is not so delicately and correctly adjusted as it should be, and it frequently appears but like the voice of one crying in the wilderness to protest; yet I feel it to be our duty to fortify as much as we can by protest the weak places in public expenditure. Having said this, I shall no longer direct your attention to that feature of the Budget programme.

Upon the balance of the Budget programme I find myself in unqualified conflict with the Government. Our national expenditure, revenue and taxation is a domestic affair, always demanding the most careful and mature consideration, not less in war than in peace, but rather more. National and individual interests to-day call louder than ever in our history for a frank, critical consideration of what might be termed this year, the civil Budget. We are on the threshold of a new era in Canada. New economic issues of tremendous importance are on the horizon. Old issues are likely to pass away, other problems are before us. We must abandon many of our national practices. National finance, as Gladstone once remarked, is more concerned with expenditure than with revenue. There never was a time in our history when a critical examination of our finance was so necessary as to-day, because we have had from the Minister of Finance the most disastrous financial statement ever delivered by a Finance Minister. Therefore, while intending to do no violence to a reasonable construction of the public sense of a party truce, I propose at some little length dealing with the matter of expenditure.

Therefore I approach consideration of the matter of our ordinary revenue and expenditure. It being some days since the Minister of Finance delivered his Budget, I wish to refresh the memories of honourable gentlemen by repeating the summary of the financial statement made by him in respect to the fiscal years 1915 and 1916. The financial operations for the year ending March 31 next are estimated about as follows:

Revenue, (estimated).		$130,000,000
Expenditure ordinary.	$140,000,000
Capital and special.....	50,000,000	190,000,000
Deficit for 1914-15		$ 60,000,000

The result of our financial operations for the year ending March 31 next will therefore show an excess of ordinary and capital and special expenditure over revenue, to the extent of $60,000,000, which will accordingly increase our debt to that extent, being the greatest in any year since Confederation. To this, of course, must be added the war expenditure for 1914-15 which the minister estimates will reach the amount authorized, $50,000,000. Including this amount the addition to the public debt will exceed $110,000,000. I do not wish to emphasize the war expenditure at the moment—in fact I mean to exclude it altogether from my remarks and calculations—but rather the fact that our ordinary and capital expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1915, will exceed the revenue by about sixty million dollars, increasing the net public debt by that amount.

Let me summarily state the conclusions reached by the Minister of Finance respecting the next fiscal year. The estimated revenue and expenditures for 1915-16, calculating revenue on the basis of taxation in force prior to the presentation of the Budget speech a few days ago, is as follows:

Revenue (on previous tariff duties)		$120,000,000
Ordinary expenditure.	$140,000,000
Capital and special expenditure..	40,000,000
Investments, Treasury bills and bank indebtedness	24,000,000
War expenditure... ..	100,000,000
		304,000,000
Excess of expenditure..		$184,000,000

Eliminating again entirely the war expenditure, it will be seen that calculating revenue upon the basis of the old tariff taxation, we were face to face with an estimated deficit of eighty-four million dollars, for the next fiscal year. Taking, therefore, the present and the next fiscal years together, we find that our total expenditures, exclusive of war expenditure, will probably exceed revenue, calculated on the former customs and excise rates, by over $144,000,000.

The Minister of Finance proposes meeting this situation partially by special and tariff taxation, and to the extent he recovers revenue from such sources the deficits I have stated will be reduced.

These figures, which disregard altogether war expenditures, disclose a condition in our finances which is indeed serious and calls for our careful consideration. Might this situation have been avoided by a sound businesslike administration of the public services? Is the Government wholly or partially responsible for this condition in our finances? Were the supplemental taxation measures introduced by the Minister of Finance avoidable under careful administration of public affairs? Were the causes producing the condition avoidable? These are questions which are agitating the people of Canada to-day. These are questions which we, as the parliamentary representatives of the people, must seriously consider and examine. While not a popular subject for exposition, I must discuss with some particularity the matters involved in these questions. I think I shall be able to show that our present financial condition was almost entirely avoidable, that it is due to an utter disregard of public interests and the lack of sound administration of the public services. I think I shall be able to show that the Government deliberately and in the face of warning, brought about our present financial condition, that they never did and are not to-day making an effort to maintain the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure, and place public expenditure upon a sound basis. They are almost entirely responsible for our present financial position. It was once remarked of the financial record of one of the governments of Great Britain in office a few years ago that, "they were the heirs of a highly solvent estate; they have reduced it to a declaration of partial insolvency." Might not the same observation be made to-day respecting this Government?

On this side of the House we long ago prophesied the present condition of our finances. From the first day hon. gentlemen opposite assumed the treasury benches they gave great promise of prodigality in expenditure and regarded it even as a virtue. Extravagance has characterized their expenditures ever since. The country was promised and expected something quite different. The present Government party, when in Opposition, promised, if elected to power, a reduction in public expenditure. The late Government's ordinary expenditure was characterized as extravagant and wasteful. When in 1910 ordinary expenditure was about eighty million dollars, the present Prime Minister was so seriously alarmed and impressed with its magnitude that he declared it to be prima facie evidence of corrupt expenditure. They promised time and again by their leaders that if honoured with the confidence of the electorate, they would carry on the public services for a much less sum. And they professed much regard for the sanctity of public pledges given by political leaders. In their election handbook of 1911, I find this:

> If there is one thing more clear than another in the government of a democratic country it is that political leaders should be held to a strict account for their pledges, and platforms. These form the basis of the contract between them and the electorate. These undertakings are solemnly given. They are not actionable in Courts of Law ,and therefore all the more should they be held cognizable in the great moot courts of the people, and their terms rigidly exacted.

Let us see if they have observed faithfully their pledges. Under this code of political ethics are they guilty or not guilty? What are the facts regarding their ordinary or consolidated fund expenditures? Here are a few figures showing ordinary expenditures since 1910:

1910	$ 79,411,749 12
1911	87,774,198 32
1912	98,161,440 77
1913	112,059,537 41
1914	127,384,472 99
1915	140,000,000 00
1916	140,000,000 00

Does this show a fulfilment of their public pledges? Do these figures indicate restraint or prodigality in expenditure? If an ordinary expenditure of $79,000,000 in 1910 was prima facie evidence of corrupt expenditure, are not honourable gentlemen constrained to admit that an expenditure of $140,000,000 in 1915 is a plea of actual guilt? The expenditure of $140,000,000 in 1915 is almost double that of 1910, and I have no doubt that were it not for the little restraint that actual conditions have enforced upon them, the ordinary expenditure of 1915 would be more than double that of 1910. Such, doubtless, was their intention, for the amount voted for ordinary expenditure in 1915 was over $156,000,000. When the late Government came into power in 1896, ordinary expenditure was $36,949,000, and in 1910, fourteen years after, it was but $79,411,000; a little more than double the amount, and that was in a period of prosperity and development and rising revenues. The present Government have almost managed to double in less than four years, the expenditure of 1910, which they charged was prima facie evidence of corruption. Let me put this question to honourable gentlemen. Has any substantial change occurred in Canada since 1910 in respect to our material condition, our needs and necessities, to drive ordinary expenditure from $79,000,000 in 1910 to $140,000,000 in 1915? Let hon. gentlemen answer.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: May I ask whether my hon. friend regards a considerable portion of the expenditure as unjustifiable?

Mr. MACLEAN: I do, and I propose to prove it later on.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Did my hon. friend move against any of it in the House?

Mr. MACLEAN: I fail to see how the absence of a formal motion relieves the Government of its responsibility.

There is another way of looking at the matter. Was the increased expenditure for 1913, 1914, 1915, and the proposed expenditure for 1916 accompanied by a corresponding increase in revenue? Has it that doubtful justification even? Let us appeal to the arbitrament of the actual figures, starting with the year 1912-13, the first full year in which honourable gentlemen were in power after the elections of 1911.

Revenue.	From all sources.	Ordinary expenditure.
1912-13	$133,212,743 67	$112,059,537 41
1913-14	126,143,275 31	127,384,472 99
1914-15	130,000,000 00	140,000,000 00
1915-16	120,000,000 00	140,000,000 00

In order to make a fair comparison, in these figures I have estimated the customs and excise revenue for 1915-16 on the basis of taxation prevailing before the recently added taxation. What does this disclose? Falling revenue and rising expenditure. For 1916 they do not suggest a reduction in expenditure. They propose continuing it at $140,000,000, as in 1915, knowing full well that customs and excise revenues on the basis of the taxation in force a few weeks ago would very materially fall and produce a much smaller revenue. "Oh, no," says the Minister of Finance. "We must count upon ordinary expenditure for 1916 reaching the amount of $140,000,000 the same as for 1915, notwithstanding a falling revenue; but we will just impose more taxation to meet the deficit, that is all." No reduction in expenditure, but more taxation to increase the revenue. They decide first what they shall expend, and then consider how they are going to get the revenue. Would it not have been prudent first to determine what the country could reasonably pay in taxation in 1915-16, and afterwards determine the amount and character of expenditures? I ask honourable gentlemen if this criticism is not just? Is not the conduct of the Government in the circumstances open to the gravest censure? Was not this a fitting season for the Government to practise economy and implement its pre-election pledges?

Let us look at it from another point. Do trade conditions warrant it? Did not trade figures for the past three years stand as a storm signal to the Finance Minister? Let us look at the volume of our total export and import trade since 1913. It is as follows:

1912-13..	$1,085,264,449
1913-14..	1,129,744,725
1914, calendar year.. ..	860,615,163

More than a year ago the Government had evidence of declining trade. The official figures give the total trade for 1914 at only about $40,000 over 1913, and this was due to the abnormal fall exports of wheat in 1913 owing to an early harvest. The Government know that the total trade of the present fiscal year will be much below last year's, and that next year, 1915-16, the decline will probably be greater still; and yet in the face of such facts and in the light of such knowledge, we are calmly informed that ordinary expenditure for 1916 will be $140,000,000. What have honourable gentlemen to say to this?

I have been speaking in general terms, and it might well be asked of me to point out with some particularity the expenditure increases I object to, what departments of the public service I complain against in respect to expenditure, and where and how I would suggest reductions in expenditures for the coming year. I propose to do this, and I think I can present a case which the hon. gentlemen will find difficult to answer. If I fail it will not be for the want of facts. It will be due to my inability to marshall and present actual facts as they are. I feel sure that the record of the expenditures of the Government during the past few years carries its condemnation.

I have prepared a statement showing the expenditures of several of the important departments or branches of the public service, but not including the Militia Department which I purposely eliminate for the moment, for the years 1911-12, 1913-14, and the expenditures estimated and to be voted for 1915-16, and I invite the careful attention of the House to the several increases. The figures for 1914-15 are not available, and I take the estimated expenditures for 1915-16 as they would be practically the same, and for the further reason, that I am seeking to establish the view that our proposed expenditures for 1915-16 are, in view of all existing conditions, enormously excessive, and the failure to reduce them the real cause of the freshly imposed taxation. The statement is as follows:

	Expenditures by Departments.
	1911-12.	1913-14.	1915-16 Estimated.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Civil Government	4,774,678 00	5,607,794 95	7,024,253 41
Fisheries	843,856 98	1,229,519 19	1,561,400 00
Mines, Geological Survey	261,718 83	470,506 66	547,275 00
Immigration	1,364,999 93	1,893,297 77	1,875,000 00
Quarantine	182,392 43	220,927 83	248,000 00
Indians	1,756,565 46	2,182,470 95	2,254,928 00
Public Works	10,344,487 21	19,007,512 63	22,351,830 46
Customs	2,443,846 23	3,849,983 86	4,215,000 00
Dominion Lands	2,277,099 87	3,286,480 25	3,475,079 50
Post Office	9,172,035 47	12,822,058 44	16,677,355 25

Now, let me examine these severally. Let us inquire in a spirit of fairness if they are open to criticism. Let us inquire if there exist the facts to prove that degree of reckless and improvident administration of some branches of the public service which merits criticism and the withdrawal of confidence by the people in the Government. First, let me take the expenditures for Civil Government which cover salaries and contingencies of all the departments, at Ottawa, the High Commissioner's office at London, and the salaries of the lieutenant governors of the provinces. What is the record of increases in this branch of the service?

Civil Government Expenditure.

1911-12..	$4,774,678 00
1913-14..	5,607,794 95
1915-16..	7,024,253 41

We find that the cost of Civil Government in 1911-12 was $4,744,678.00; for 1913-14, two years later it was $5,607,795.95, an increase of $663,116.95; for 1915, $6,850,257.91 was voted and it looks as if it would all be expended by March 31, 1915, an increase over 1911-12 of $2,000,000, an increase of $1,342,461.96 over 1914. For 1915-16, we are asked to vote $7,024,253.41, which in round figures is nearly $200,000 over 1915, $1,500,000 over 1914, $2,300,000 over 1912. These figures speak in condemnation of the Government more effectively than I can, and I leave them to hon. gentlemen for food and reflection. Has anything occurred in this country to justify this increase within the past thirty-four months? Does increased revenue, expenditure, trade, immigration, productions, or an improved public service account for it? This can only be accounted for by unnecessary additions of officials and increases of contingent expenses. Some increase was inevitable, but it is beyond human credibility that any justification exists for this enormous increase within such a short period. What have hon. gentlemen opposite to say about this? The ministers to-day say, we cannot reduce the service without inflicting hardships. My reply is that if the unnecessary increases had not been made there would be no decreases necessary to provoke hardships.

A return recently presented to Parliament is my authority for the statement that some 10,000 additions were made to the Civil Service list, in both the outside and inside service, I assume, in about the period of two years. This number of additions may be capable of some explanation, but quite inconsequential. In the time of the present Government the Civil Service has been prostituted for political exigencies at the expense of the country while deteriorating the character and value of the Civil Service.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL: Would the hon. gentleman be in favour at the present moment of reducing all civil servants' salaries say by ten per cent?

Mr. MACLEAN: What I want to point out to my hon. friend is that under a sound administration of the public service of this country the cost of civil government would be two millions of dollars less to-day than it is, and there would be no necessity for my hon. friend to ask such a question.

Take Indian expenditure, which for the same period is as follows:

1911-12..	$1,756,565.46
1913-14..	2,182,470.95
1915-16..	*2,244,928.00

*To be voted.

Here the increase in 1914 over 1912 was just a little short of $425,000. The Estimates to be voted for 1916 are again in excess of 1912 by $588,000. The administration of this department has increased in every province. In Nova Scotia I see it has increased seventy-five per cent in two or three years. The increase in salaries for Indian Affairs for next year in Nova Scotia alone makes an increase of 140 per cent over the present year, 1914-15. A recent return showing dismissals and appointments by departments credits the Indian Affairs branch with 135 dismissals and 295 engagements in about two years. This means that for every vacancy created there were two appointments made. In this branch unnecessary offices have been created, not for the good of the service or the Indians, but for friends of the Government. The increase since 1911 has been about $750,000, an amount no one will believe to have been necessary.

The increases in Fisheries expenditures are as follows:

1911-12..	$ 843,856.98
1913-14..	1,229,519.00
1915-16..	*1,561,400.00

*To be voted.

Here we find for 1914 an increase of $385,663 over 1912, and the Estimates for next year, 1915-16, exceed 1912 by $717,000, and this, notwithstanding the fact that a part of the staff in the Fisheries branch will next year be in the Naval branch of the department, which diminishes the Civil Service vote of the Fisheries branch by $100,000. An examination of the services performed by this department will disclose nothing to justify this increase.

Next, take the Mines and Geological Survey expenditures:

1911-12..	$261,718.83
1913-14..	470,506.66
1915-16..	*547,275.00

*To be voted.

In the Mines and Geological Survey branch the increase for 1914 over 1912 is $208,787.83, while for 1915-16 over 1911-12 it is over $285,000. The amount to be voted for salaries alone for the Mines and Geological Survey for 1915-16 is $358,775, being $97,000 more than the total expenditure of all kinds in this department in 1912, and $114,500 more than the total expenditures of all kinds in 1910-11. This branch of the service has the record of 103 engagements of officials in two years, which pretty well tells the story, and I shall not say further about it other than to observe that the increase in a great measure would never have been incurred if the good of the service was the only motive. Examine it critically or otherwise and you are bound to reach the conclusion that the increase is almost indefensible.

4 p.m.

Let me next inquire into Immigration expenditure just a little carefully. The figures for this period are:

1911-12..	$1,364,999.93
1913-14..	1,893,297.77
1915-16..	*1,875,000.00

*To be voted.

In 1911-12 the cost of this branch of the service was $1,364,999.93. In 1913-14 it was about $500,000 greater, over $800,000 greater than in 1910-11. For the ten months ending January 31, 1913, the expenditure was about equal to the total of expenditures for 1911-12, or $1,301,399, and let me with emphasis call your attention to the fact we are asked to vote $1,875,000 for 1915-16. The business of this department is immigration. While its expenditures were increasing, let us see how its business was getting along. In 1911-12 we had an immigration of 354,257, whereas in the calendar year 1914 it was 168,859, just about one-half. In 1915 our immigration will probably be from 50,000 to 75,000, and the amount we are asked to vote for that year is $1,875,000, which is $500,000 in excess of expenditures of 1911-12, when we had an immigration of 354,000, and about the same as the expenditure of 1913-14 when we had an immigration of 384,878. The return respecting dismissals and appointments credits this department with 110 dismissals and 343 engagements in about two years, which gives the scent to a great deal of the extravagance. I think the few facts I have given about this branch of the service cannot fail to impress one. It is expensively operated. The amazing fact is this, that apparently they do not propose cutting down expenditures, notwithstanding our financial condition and the almost complete loss of immigration. Their policy is to keep up expenditures and increase taxation, notwithstanding that the business of the department is at a standstill.

Next, take Dominion Lands expenditures, closely related to the immigration service. Let me give you the revenue and the expenditure since 1912 in connection with this branch of the service:

	Revenue.	Expenditure.
1911-12...	$3,775,856 97	$2,277,098 87
1912-13..	3,402,026 63	2,462,623 92
1913-14..	3,036,030 32	3,286,480 25
1914-15..	*2,996,271 39	†4,063,120 36
1915-16..		‡3,457,000 00

* Estimated. † voted. ‡ To be voted.

You will have noticed how revenue since 1912 has been declining and expenditure increasing. In 1914 there was a deficit of $250,000 in this service, the first since 1885. In 1915 there will be a deficit of probably over $500,000. Unless the Minister of the Interior undertakes heroic measures, he will soon have a deficit of $1,000,000 and more in this department. There is no defence whatever for the financial record of this service for the past few years. For 1916 there should be a reduction in the Estimates of expenditure of from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. With declining revenue and diminishing immigration and homesteading, we have increasing expenditure. The homestead entries for the past three years show the following decline:

	No. of entries.	Acreage.
Fiscal year ending March 31, 1913..	33,699	5,391,840
Fiscal year ending March 31, 1914..	31,829	5,092,640
Calendar year, 1914..	25,623	4,099,680

It cannot be asserted truthfully that this vast increase in the administration of Dominion lands has any business justification, or was necessary for the welfare of the service and the protection of public interest. The business of the department did not warrant such increasing costs of administration. Expenditures made for purely political and partisan purposes is the open sesame to the business record of this department.

Let us inquire briefly into Customs expenditures. A comparison of Customs revenue, with the cost of collection for say five years, might be of interest:

Year ending March.	Revenue.
1911	$ 71,838,088 46
1912	85,051,872 18
1913	111,764,698 73
1914	104,691,238 43
1915	*77,000,000 00
	Expenditure.
1911	$2,187,174 76
1912	2,443,846 23
1913	3,150,776 75
1914	3,849,083 86
1915	*4,000,000 00

*Estimated.

In 1911-12 it cost $2,187,174.76 to collect customs revenue amounting to nearly $72,000,000. For the year ending March 31 next, it will cost $4,000,000 or more to collect about $77,000,000 of revenue. No person, I may safely say, will be so presumptuous as to contend that the increased cost of this branch of the public service can be sustained by any fair consideration of the facts and circumstances. It is obvious that the service has been overmanned, that unnecessary outports have been established and unnecessary salaries paid, until a few short years of such practices have brought about the condition which the Minister of Customs admits is unsatisfactory. Besides, a great injustice is being done to those legitimately engaged in the service. In about two years, a return shows that in the Customs service there were 271 dismissals and 1,649 engagements. This tells the tale. The minister now says he cannot reduce the number of employees at the present time. A difficult task I grant you. I am pointing out the causes, not the effects, of the improper administration of the Customs service. The Minister of Customs is responsible for the causes bringing about the effects which he says can only be rectified by causing hardship. If it is difficult to repair the wrong by reduction in the service and expenditures he is to blame for that condition, and in that respect his administrative record is gravely censurable.

Just a few words as to Public Works expenditure on revenue account. In this case the figures are:

1911-12	$10,344,487 21
1913-14	19,007,512 63
1914-15	*20,000,000 00

*Estimated.

Here we find the expenditure for 1914-15 one hundred per cent greater than the year ending March 1912, when revenue and trade conditions were much more favourable. The Minister of Public Works asks for a vote for 1915-16 of over $22,350,000 which, roughly speaking, is about what he expended in 1914-15. I recognize the necessity of public works expenditure. I admit that works commenced cannot well be abandoned, but why should the expenditures of the present fiscal year and of the next fiscal year respectively exceed the expenditures of 1912 by $10,000,000? Does the Minister of Public Works pretend to say that the conditions of trade and revenue justify his expending $10,000,000 more this year in public works than was expended in 1912? The estimated expenditure for public buildings and harbours and rivers alone total $18,379,580 for next year; this might well have been reduced for the present by 50 per cent. I do not believe that the people of any province of Canada would have objected to the most drastic measures on the part of the Minister of Public Works during the present year and during the next fiscal year in connection with public works expenditure. Many of these projected works were without justification, the necessity for others have at least temporarily passed away by reason of the declining business of the country. Expenditures for these purposes should have been reduced to the minimum this year and next year. And bear in mind that the expenditures to which I have referred do not include votes for dredging and dredging plants nor for other public works of an important or national character, whether proposed to be made under ordinary or capital expenditure. In respect to public works expenditure is it not time to adopt some rational policy? Is not this the time to commence? Circumstances will compel us in the near future, and I believe public opinion is condemnatory of the present method of spending money on public works. In this respect the present Government have been great sinners.

The Post Office Department deserves much attention, but I can devote to it just a moment. That this branch of the public service would sooner or later come into disrepute under the administration of the late minister was inevitable. Cancelling unnecessarily existing contracts, awarding contracts without tender, awarding contracts to tenderers other than the lowest, was bound in the end to tell. I do not know what is the record of this department in respect to additional employment. It would rank high. Perhaps a few figures showing the revenue and expenditure for a few years would be profitable:

	Receipts.	Expenditure.
1910-11.	$ 9,146,952 47	$ 7,954,222 79
1911-12.	10,492,349 18	9,172,035 47
1912-13.	12,051,728 86	10,822,804 57
1913-14.	12,954,529 92	12,822,058 44

Here we find the usual surplus of one million dollars and over in recent years reduced to zero practically in 1913-14. In 1914-15 there will be a probable deficit of from $500,000 to $1,000,000, the first deficit since 1900, and probably a still greater deficit will be found in 1915-16. And why? Extravagant and inefficient administration affords the answer. There is no sound business reason for it. There may have been reasons for a small portion of this increase, but in the main it cannot be defended. For the past few years this department has been operated almost as much for political purposes as for the public service. One could easily present a strong and unanswerable indictment against the administration of this department during the past few years, time, however, will not permit it. Investigation of this department would disclose many of the causes necessitating the new taxation proposals of the Government.

Now, Sir, I have gone into these matters with some particularity, to lay the foundation for the contention that our proposed ordinary expenditures for the next year are excessive in the extreme, as the expenditures were last year. I have shown that the several branches of the public services have been carried on during the past three years with what appears indefensible extravagance. The same is true of most other departments. The gradually increasing annual cost of operating these branches of the public service has not been for the good of the service or for the necessities of the service, or rendered necessary by the business or trade of the country. If this condition is difficult to remedy this year it is chargeable to the Government itself which deliberately and improperly created such conditions. The estimated expenditure of $140,000,000 on revenue account for next year cannot be defended. Had the public services been administered during the past two or three years with solely an eye for the public good and the public service, the ordinary expenditure would for the present year be at least thirty or forty million dollars below the amount which will be expended, and the additions to the public debt for the present fiscal year would have been that much less, and the estimates for ordinary and capital expenditure for next year, 1915-16, might easily be $40,000,000 below what they are. No effort has been made towards reduction. Every effort is directed towards increase.

Will any man seriously argue that ordinary expenditure for the years 1915 and 1916 could not have been well kept within the amount of expenditures for the years 1912 and 1914 when they were in round figures respectively ninety-eight millions and one hundred and twelve millions of dollars. Why should not our ordinary expenditures this year have been within the 100-million dollar mark, and why should not the proposed expenditures of next fiscal year be within the same amount? The fiscal year 1910-11 was a fairly prosperous one. It is a year memorable in the history of both political parties. It was in that year that hon. gentlemen opposite were contending that we were so prosperous and our future so well assured, that we should engage in no tariff alliances with our neighbours. In that year, our ordinary expenditures were eighty-seven million dollars. Mr. Speaker, do you know, or does any hon. gentleman know a strong, substantial, incontrovertible reason why our expenditures for 1915-16 should be in excess of that amount, namely, eighty-seven million dollars? Under a careful administration of the public services, during the present fiscal year, and next, there need not have been any substantial deficit, if any, in respect to capital and ordinary expenditures over revenue. Consider our declining revenue, trade and immigration, the cessation of railway construction, that our borrowings from abroad have ceased, that the public debt interest account rose during the present year by nearly nine million dollars, that we face a probable annual pension charge of ten million dollars, that the world's capital is being dissipated by the great war now in progress—in view of all these and other circumstances prevailing during the past year and likely to continue during the next, can it be seriously contended that our current expenditure for 1914-15, and the proposed current expenditure for 1915-16 are justified? A reduction of fifty million dollars and more in ordinary and capital expenditure for 1915-16 would easily be possible if hon. gentlemen opposite were attempting to govern this country solely for the country's good. The Minister of Finance apparently has no control over his colleagues in respect to expenditures. He seems to be without influence among them. I venture to say that no impartial man can do otherwise than condemn the expenditure policy of the Government ever since they came into power, but particularly of the present fiscal year and as proposed for the next; and it is for this reason that they are directly and conclusively responsible for the new taxation recently imposed upon the country. They could easily have avoided this fresh taxation, but they made not a single effort to do so. Do not the facts I have presented to the House conclusively sustain that contention?

In respect to its ordinary expenditures this year and next, the Government is apparently proceeding upon the theory that trade and revenue will suddenly resume its former proportions immediately after the end of the war. There is nothing to indicate that this will happen; in fact, the trend of opinion is to the contrary. Compare the course now being pursued by the present Minister of Finance with that of his predecessor in 1908 and 1909, when there was a slight recession in trade. In 1909 Mr. Fielding reduced his ordinary expenditures by over five million dollars, just the amount of the decline in customs revenue that year. A small amount, it is true, but based upon sound business principles. In that year there was an excess of revenue over ordinary expenditure of over twenty million dollars, but still in the circumstances Mr. Fielding felt justified, on account of the recession in trade and the decline in revenue, in reducing his ordinary expenditure below that of the previous year.

Let us now consider the methods that are proposed for meeting the Government expenditures—methods which I consider objectionable. In order to meet the estimated deficit of about $60,000,000 of capital and ordinary expenditure for 1915-16, over revenue calculated on the basis of the former rates of taxation, it is proposed to raise more revenue by special taxes, stamp taxes and increased customs taxes. We are informed that the war expenditures are for the time being to be met by borrowings from the British Government. Therefore it is quite clear that the additional taxation is made necessary by our excess of capital and ordinary expenditures over revenue. I understand hon. gentlemen opposite to contend that the fall in revenue and the fresh taxation imposed is due to the war. If I am not correct in this, let the correction come now. At any rate this point is worthy of investigation. I personally do not believe our loss in revenue is in any substantial degree attributable to the war.

I would here like to remind Government supporters that they have always contended that an excess of imports over exports was to be deplored, and that an equality was the condition to be desired. During the past year imports have diminshed considerably while our exports have pretty well maintained the normal. We therefore find that close relation between imports and exports which Government supporters claim should prevail. I ask the Minister of Finance if that condition of affairs to-day appears to be productive of good results. And they are making things worse by encouraging this "buy in Canada" propaganda, which I am sorry to see members of this Parliament are supporting. I can understand local patriotism encouraging the purchase of local productions, when it is a reasonably fair thing to do so; but I cannot understand any sane man in this country encouraging the preposterous policy of discouraging purchases from abroad. That is but adding to the sorrows and difficulties of the Government. I would think that every man in this country who has reached the years of discretion would have learned in the first few weeks of the war the economic truism that to have exports you must have imports as well. The first few days of the present war must surely have impressed that lesson upon all men now living.

It is difficult to estimate to a nicety what will be the fall in revenue for the year ending March 31, 1915, due to the war or as a result of the war. Imports were declining, war or no war, with the consequent fall in revenues. I am of the opinion that our customs revenue will be found to have fallen but little this year as the result of the war. Our customs revenue for the year ending March, 1914, was $104,691,000; for the year ending March, 1915, it is estimated at the Customs Department at $77,000,000, a decline of $27,000,000. I have here a table showing our dutiable imports, and the duty collected each month during the calendar years 1913 and 1914:

Month.	Imports on Dutiable Goods.		Duties Collected.
	1913.	1914.	1913.	1914.
	$	$	$	$
January	34,358,564	26,234,666	8,862,982	7,029,888
February	35,111,113	25,511,846	9,152,220	6,822,925
March	45,630,678	34,944,885	11,912,314	9,337,771
April	32,431,932	23,945,085	8,463,576	6,458,271
May	40,120,651	28,346,934	10,306,244	7,619,746
June	37,836,560	27,794,320	9,684,724	7,414,597
July	39,394,223	26,424,70	10,077,223	6,988,917
August	39,277,690	29,497,076	10,125,376	8,358,948
September	37,997,562	22,575,997	9,906,183	6,016,606
October	35,238,192	21,061,440	9,198,657	5,657,871
November	32,338,858	18,697,737	8,346,778	5,113,062
December	28,798,409	17,482,008	7,845,300	4,953,048
Total, 12 months	438,534,432	302,516,964	113,881,577	81,771,650

From this you will see that the imports of dutiable goods from January to August, 1913, inclusive, eight months, was $304,-161,411; while for the corresponding eight months in 1914 it was $222,699,782, a decline of $81,461,629. The duties collected in the same period were respectively $65,224,434 and $46,931,171, a total decline of $18,293,263 in the first eight months of the calendar year 1914 as compared with the same period in 1913, or at the rate of about $2,285,000 a month, or $27,420 for the year. The total decline in customs revenue for the calendar year 1914 as compared with the calendar year 1913 was $32,109,927; so on this basis it might possibly be argued that the loss of revenue in 1914 attributable to war conditions was less than $5,000,000. That, I submit, is a fair method of computation. It would be necessary to have the customs returns for January, February and March of this year to ascertain accurately the loss of customs revenue in the fiscal year of 1915 as compared with 1914, but I venture to say no decline greater than $5,000,000 can by any fair system of computation be assigned to the war. The Government must have anticipated the present trade and revenue conditions. Many banking and commercial men in this country have stated during the past few weeks or months that the financial conditions were not due to the war, but were for other causes inevitable. The Government itself was alarmed over the conditions prevailing during the present fiscal year. I remember seeing in the press last June or July that an Order in Council had been passed to actually deport people from this country back to Europe.

Mr. ROGERS: That is not correct.

Mr. MACLEAN: I say I read it in the papers.

Mr. ROGERS: You must have been reading the Globe.

Mr. MACLEAN: I do not know whether it is correct or not, but the matter was very much discussed in the public press, and I should like to have some further explanation than a flat denial from the Minister of Public Works about it.

Mr. ROGERS: I will be glad to supply it.

Mr. MACLEAN: Tell me what the trouble was?

Mr. ROGERS: An hon. gentleman, last night, just before the House closed, asked that such an order, if it existed, be brought down. I asked the Secretary of the Privy Council, and he gave me this reply: "There is no Order in Council ordering the deportation of unemployed in Canada." It has not been passed.

Mr. MACLEAN: I am glad to hear it, but that is only evidence of the fact that no Order in Council was passed. I assume, in view of all that appeared in the public press, that the Government must have been considering the matter. I am bound to accept the word of the Minister of Public Works that no Order in Council was passed.

I have only occupied the time of the House upon this point to emphasize the fact that while hon. gentlemen opposite have said, and will doubtless say in the future, that the falling revenue for the present fiscal year was due to the war, the contention is not entirely founded upon the facts. Some decrease in trade, some small decline in revenue, may be attributable to the consequences of the war, but hon. gentlemen opposite must remember that a great deal of our export and import trade during the past few months has been directly attributable to the war. Let the war bear its own consequences, its own sins. Let the Government take care of its own obligations and its own shortcomings. The Government were more alarmed over conditions last July than now with the war on our hands. I do not mean you could infer this from their expenditures. That would only prove that they have not and never had any concern about the condition of our finances. I should say in conclusion on this point that the excise revenues for 1915-16 will be about the same as for 1914-15.

Now, if the decline in revenue is not in the main attributable to the war, then the Minister of Finance should have boldly faced the situation to-day and he should have commenced a year ago or more by reducing expenditure to come within the revenues, and not by increasing taxation to produce revenue to meet expenditure. It was almost as easy to reduce expenditure to the amount of revenue as not to do so. This was not the time for increasing taxation in any form except strictly for war expenditures.

But there is to be a war expenditure of $100,000,000, and we will be told that for this reason alone fresh taxation was necessary. I would not deny the validity of that position if such were the fact. It has been the practice of belligerent nations to meet war expenditures by taxation and borrowings. If such were all the facts and only considerations in our case a good defence might be made for taxation for war purposes. However, the minister has arranged for war loans from the British Government during the continuance of the war. There is much to be said in favour of this. Canada was a borrowing country. Her loans amounted to from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 a year. That has been cut off, and in this and other circumstances to borrow upon favourable terms during the war, funding the same after the war, is perhaps amply justified. If the Minister of Finance saw fit to declare to Parliament as his policy, the meeting of war expenditures partially by taxation and partially by borrowings, I think he could have found justification for so doing, and the Canadian taxpayer would have met his proposals in the proper spirit. But such is not the case, and I say his proposed special taxes and customs taxation are caused solely by the fact that his expenditures are and have been absurdly excessive, and he should have kept within his revenue and on the former basis of taxation. He can give no reason for not having done so. The Government and not the war is clearly responsible for the proposed taxation. Even if the proposed taxes were specially ear-marked and to be directly applied in reduction of war loans I do not see that the position of the Government would be improved or that they would thus be relieved of blame for our present position. In that case the deficit of consolidated fund account would have been all the greater and the additions to the net debts would have been just the same. In either event they are censurable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman stated that annual borrowings of $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 had been suddenly cut off. Will the hon. gentleman give the cause? Do I understand him to say that it is caused by the war?

Mr. MACLEAN: I suppose that was due largely to the war, or to some extent at least, but even our borrowings were declining. I referred to the decline in the borrowings of the country as a justification for the minister in borrowing entirely the war expenditure.

At this time I am not going to discuss the taxation resolutions in so far as they relate to stamp and special taxation. If they were necessary, or were to be applied to war expenditures, I do not think they are open to serious objection as to principle, though they work some injustice and might be improved in detail. I think the tax upon proprietary medicines is so excessive as to be unjust and should yet be modified. That is all I propose to say about the stamp and special taxes until the resolutions are before the Committee of Ways and Means, except to repeat that their imposition was not necessary at this time under proper economies and administration.

Now, I wish to discuss several aspects of the freshly imposed tariff taxation, but in rather a general way. The desire of the average man in Canada regardless of politics is to search for a justification of taxation imposed by a government during a war period. Ordinary patriotism prompts a generous consideration of such measures. Now the Government have decided that 25 or 30 million dollars of taxation shall be levied by increasing the general tariff 7½ per cent, the preferential tariff 5 per cent, and the making of all articles now on the free list, with some exceptions, subject to a 7½ per cent ad valorem duty, and a 5 per cent preferential rate. I have given this matter some little consideration since the announcement. I have honestly endeavoured to discover supporting facts for the tariff increases on any grounds and have failed. I have sought for a justification for the method employed and the principle invoked, for obtaining supplemental revenue, and I must say that the more thought I have given to it the more convinced am I that there exists no justification for the tariff resolutions. If we had to raise additional revenue surely this was not the proper method. The Minister of Finance sought the line of least resistance but apparently invoked no principle and gave no consideration to the interest of trade or tax payer.

Mr. PUGSLEY: He took the easiest way out.

Mr. MACLEAN: He took the easiest way to make a tariff. Having created these deficits and incurred these expenditures in an easy way, it was only natural 5 p.m. that he would resort to an easy method of obtaining additional revenue.

As hon. gentlemen know we have in Canada a tariff based on the protective system. To raise the general tariff 7½ per cent, to increase the preferential tariff rates 5 per cent and to say that it was done for purposes of revenue is a proposition to which I cannot subscribe. It is trifling with truth and the facts. That additions to the general and preferential tariff restrict trade and reduce revenue is axiomatic, and the proposal to increase protective tariffs in a war period is without parallel, I think. It does look as if under the banner of war the Government have brought into the citadel a tariff for protection and not one for revenue, and we are not even told how long the misnamed stranger is to be within our gates. The country was entitled to a declaration from the minister, that this increased tariff taxation was to remain operative only during the continuance of the war as a war tax, or that it was likely to continue indefinitely. It is, I predict, likely to continue in force in the main, so long as hon. gentlemen opposite are to remain in power.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That will not be long.

Mr. MACLEAN: Let us hope we will be relieved of the war and of the Government about the same time. On the day he delivered his Budget, and after announcing his tariff resolutions, the Finance Minister, concluded by a statement of the belief that his new tariff would produce revenue and stimulate Canadian industry and agriculture. Well if the new tariff is going to stimulate Canadian industry and agriculture then that tariff is here, just as long as the present Government is here, because if it is a stimulant to industry and agriculture, then we may always expect to hear it said that dread consequences will follow a withdrawal of the stimulant. I predict it will prove more of a depressent than a stimulant. Further, it seems to me that more political consideration entered into the making of the tariff than the consideration of producing revenue. Was it politics or principal that induced the minister to leave tea on the free list?

Mr. WILCOX: Does my hon. friend think there ought to be a duty on tea?

Mr. MACLEAN: I do not think there ought to be any special duties or stamp taxes upon anything. Was it political consideration advanced by political supporters in some provinces or his own business judgment that prompted this course in respect to tea? He could not have been expected to restore the tariff on the agricultural implements that he slightly reduced last year, amidst the plaudits of hon. gentlemen opposite. However, Government supporters cheered the other day when the tariff was increased on other agricultural implements for the stimulation of Canadian agriculture. How very strange this all seems. Here and there we find a sop to this interest or that interest, to this prejudice or that prejudice. Everything indicates that the new tariff was inspired by protection and politics and not revenue or patriotism. It is utterly bereft of principle or reason.

Now, what should be the main features of a war revenue tax? It should be made as much as possible on articles relatively cheap and of universal consumption; it should not be so high as to discourage consumption; it should be of such a nature that it could be remitted on the termination of the purposes for which it was imposed; it should be of such a nature that the revenue would go directly and wholly, less collection charges, to the Treasury; it should not create new vested interests; it should not unduly contract trade; judged by these tests, and they are the tests usually applied in such circumstances, the tariff resolutions fail, and should not meet with favour from any person or class. To add 7½ per cent ad valorem to our present general tariff could not promote revenue or trade. It is a heavy increase. It must restrict consumption, because it means increased cost to producers and to consumers, particularly in a period when the purchasing power of the country is diminishing. A revenue might possibly be obtained by an increase of 7½ per cent in the tariff rates upon selected imports. Here and there items of imports might be found where this could be done with success from the revenue standpoint. Investigation would lead the way in selecting the articles. However, to increase horizontally the general tariff 7½ per cent, the preferential tariff 5 per cent, and the placing of the free list articles under the general tariff, without exception practically, without discrimination, without consideration of the different facts that might apply to one article and not another, without regard to the existing tariff rates, without cognizance of disrupted world trade conditions, without reference to the fact that many commodities principally produced by the belligerent nations are to-day unavailable, without thought of the business conditions to-day prevailing in Canada, is beyond comprehension, and can only be understood upon the theory that the tariff was intended for protective and not for revenue purposes; or that, maddened by the situation and the conflicting views of his friends and colleagues, the Minister of Finance concluded to revise the tariff with his eyes shut and his ears closed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Will the hon. gentleman give us his method of raising this taxation, which will measure up to the test which he has just suggested?

Mr. GAUVREAU: It is your duty to give it to us.

Mr. MACLEAN: My contention is that there is no necessity for any tariff increases. Surely the hon. gentleman must admit that if the Government which he supports had administered properly the financial affairs of this country, we would not have had a $60,000,000 deficit this year, and there would not have been an estimated deficit of $84,000,000 for next year.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: The same would apply to every country in Europe.

Mr. MACLEAN: In the first place the tariff increases were unnecessary, and secondly, in themselves they are most objectionable and supported by no principle.

Again, take the increase in the British preferential tariff. This tariff was established to promote trade with the mother country. In that respect it has been successful. It has encouraged a preference in the British market for Canadian productions and has given an impetus to the investment of Canadian securities in Great Britain. But the general tariff to-day as amended, is such as to diminish the value and destroy the purpose of the preferential tariff to Great Britain. The withdrawal of so much British shipping from the seas for war purposes, the excessive ocean freight rates and insurance rates, alone, at the present time have more than offset the advantages of the preferential tariff to British exporters. As matters stood there was protection amounting to almost prohibition, and still the Government add to it.

Further, when Britain is financing our war obligations, when her artisans are enduring fresh burdens, when sufficient and efficient labour is scarce for manufacturing purposes owing to the vast army of former artisans that are upon the battlefield, when ocean traffic and insurance rates alone minimize if not destroy the effect of the preferential tariff, what motive prompted a decrease of the preference to British importations? Surely in such circumstances British connection should have counted for something? It cannot be shown that it was done for the purposes of revenue. I think the preference to British imports might well have been increased, at least in many cases, and not decreased. For patriotic and for business reasons such action would in the circumstances have been justifiable. I venture to say, Sir, that the decrease in the tariff preference to the United Kingdom will not meet with a favourable response in Canada, and it must arouse some curiosity in Great Britain.

Again, is there any justification of any kind for the indiscriminate application of a 7½ per cent general tariff and 5 per cent preferential tariff on articles formerly on the free list? Does a tax on raw cotton, raw wool, rubber, hides, tin plate and a host of other articles tend to extend commerce? Will it expand or contract imports, trade or consumption? Will it increase or decrease labour? True, taxing raw material which we do not produce and which enters into manufactured articles will give a revenue, but at what price, and at what cost to the public? Does not that principle violate every canon in the creed of protectionist and free trader alike, and do violence to common sense as well?

It is to be pointed out further that a tariff on raw material of 7½ per cent is more than compensated by a similar rate on the finished article. The manufacturer is being given additional protection on his labour and capital, and labour will get none of the advantage, for wages are being reduced. In manufactured articles the cost of raw material constitutes from one-third to one-half the cost of production per unit of the manufactured product, the rest being chargeable to labour and fixed charges. If you tax raw material the manufacturer is entitled, generally speaking, to a compensatory tariff on his finished article. But a tariff of 7½ per cent on raw material is more than compensated by a 7½ per cent increase on the finished article, and adds to the protection afforded to labour and capital invested, anywhere from 2½ to 5 per cent. The new tariff on iron ore is to be 6 cents per ton. It takes two tons of ore to produce a ton of iron, which is worth say $12. The added tax on the raw material to the iron-producer is 12 cents while he has an added compensatory tariff or protection, on the finished product of say 90 cents. If the iron ore is converted immediately into steel, say rails at $27 per ton, then the producer has an added protective tariff of $2.12 per ton. He is getting an increase in the general tariff which not only covers the tax upon his raw material, but gives him an additional tariff upon his labour and capital which, in the case of iron ore and pig iron, is the far greater part of the total cost of production. And we are informed that this has been done for purposes of revenue. In view of the conditions confronting the iron and steel trade, one would imagine it wise to encourage cheaper production in order to meet competition but the Government evidently is of the opinion that this increased tax will encourage trade.

Again, take the wool tariff. We imported under the free list in 1914, 7,252,109 lb. of raw wool, of which 4,000,000 lb., valued at $1,872,089, came from Great Britain. This to be taxed 7½ per cent under the general tariff and 5 per cent under the preferential tariff, and on the finished product the same rates are to be added to the present general and preferential tariffs. Just as in the case of iron, I say that the 7½ per cent upon the finished article is more than a compensatory tariff; it is protective to the extent of anywhere from 2½ to 3½ per cent. Will it give a revenue? Perhaps it will, but at what cost? It will increase the production cost of woollen goods, which the consumer will pay; accordingly it will curtail consumption, and the revenue will be disappointing. It gives the manufacturer a protection greater than he ever had before, and forsooth, it is called a revenue tariff. Our own consumption of woollen goods has decreased and will continue to be below the normal. We may import more wool than usual, if it can be purchased, but it will be largely for the manufacture of clothing for the Canadian and British troops. What does this mean? It means that the Canadian manufacturer of woollen goods who sells to the Department of Militia pays the duty on the raw wool to the Canadian Treasury, but the Militia Department pays it back to him again plus the added protection on labour and capital employed in producing goods. In other words, you make the manufacturer pay a sum into the Treasury and you provide the means by which he can get it back, with interest and profit, from the same Treasury. Let me point out two conditions to-day existing in connection with the wool trade. London, as you know, is the great wool market of the world. So great is Great Britain's desire to protect her wool reserves for war and domestic purposes, and to control prices, that it is to-day a customs regulation that we may import wool from the United Kingdom and Australia only upon the undertaking of the importer that it is to be used for the manufacture of goods in Canada, and that the said goods so manufactured can only be disposed of for use in Canada or for export to the United Kingdom. Perhaps I had better read the regulation:

> Having regard to the circumstances of their exportation to Canada, it is ordered that the undermentioned goods, when imported into Canada from the United Kingdom or from Australia, on arrival at the port of destination in Canada shall be entered "for warehouse," and shall be ex-warehoused only upon an undertaking by the importer in writing, on the face of the entry, to the satisfaction of the collector, that the materials herein describd shall be used only for the manufacture of goods in Canada, and that the goods so manufactured shall be sold or disposed of for use in Canada, or for export to the United Kingdom and not otherwise, viz.:
>
> Goods herein referred to: wool, raw (sheep and lambs), wool tops, wool noils, woollen and worsted yarns, woollen and worsted cloth suitable for uniform clothing (not including women's dress stuffs or cloth with pattern), uniform clothing, cardigan jackets, woollen jerseys, woollen gloves, woollen socks, and men's woollen underwear of all kinds.

Now, what does this indicate? It shows that the world's supply of wool is below normal, and that the cost of raw wool is unusually high. That is a fact known to all. It also shows that an effort is being made to conserve our wool supplies in order to ensure supplies for British and Canadian troops and the citizens of Canada and the United Kingdom. Now, Sir, do you think that in the circumstances this was the time to tax raw wool, to add to the cost of clothing for domestic purposes and for our troops, or to enhance the amount the British Government is paying to carry on the war? I would flatter the Government if I said this was a penny wise and pound foolish policy. It is worse. From the patriotic, business and revenue viewpoints it is reprehensible. The action of the Government in this respect is inexplicable.

There is another reason why it was unwise to increase the wool tariffs at the present moment. The cost of raw wool is now inordinately high. The increase, I suppose, has been on the average 70 per cent since August last and high prices will be maintained for a long time. Why should the cost be added to now? Why should this article be selected for taxation, assuming additional revenue was necessary? Then it is to be pointed out that it is the coarse or cross-bred wools used in the cheaper grades of woollen goods and army supplies which have increased the most. The price of the finer wools used in the more expensive goods has increased but little. Therefore, the recent tariff amendments will be borne by the class of goods and class of consumers which can least afford it. The same is true of a great many other articles of consumption, such as rubber, hides, and other commodities too numerous to mention.

In respect to the cotton tariff it is to be particularly pointed out that the spread between the tariff rate on raw cotton and the finished product is more than compensatory to the manufacturer, it is protective by three or four per cent ad valorem, because of the low price of the raw material, and the small proportion of the finished product the raw material constitutes. Possibly the Government may obtain some revenue, but I doubt if it will be as great as they expect. The price of raw cotton was extremely low when the season opened in the United States last September, owing to want of shipping and the demoralization of the foreign exchanges, and doubtless Canadian manufacturers availed themselves of low prices and imported heavily. From September 1, 1914, to January 31, 1915, 37,038,294 pounds of cotton was imported into Canada of the value of $3,091,544. Considering the curtailment of domestic consumption and needs for the next year, this importation will meet the demand for raw cotton for a long time, and if so, not much revenue will come from cotton for the next ten months.

The Government are promoting a "greater production" campaign among agriculturists. Is it to be seriously argued that this was the opportune occasion to tax wire fencing and increase txation upon agricultural implements of many kinds, in fact almost everything which is a factor in agricultural production? Will this tariff stimulate agriculture? Will the placing of a tariff on many articles formerly free but produced only or largely in belligerent countries, such as drugs, certain woods and other articles, either stimulate trade, promote the welfare of our people, or afford additional revenue?

Is the imposition of 10 cents per ton upon bituminous coal in addition to its present specific duty of 53 cents per ton, a desirable thing to such portions of Canada as must import American coal, particularly at a time when our railway earnings are declining and they are applying for permission to increase traffic rates upon coal to the extent of 10 cents par ton? We imported into Canada in 1914, 10,817,536 tons of bituminous coal of the value of $21,838,319, upon which duties were paid to the amount of $5,733,294.08. This was largely imported by the railways and by manufacturers for steam purposes, largely in Western Quebec and throughout the province of Ontario. If the railways secure an increase of 10 cents per ton for freight between the international line and Canadian points, this, with the additional tariff of 10 cents per ton, will constitute an addition of 20 cents per ton to the cost. That is a tremendous increase. I do not know anything more calculated at the present moment to reduce wages of railway operators and factory employees, and that I am told is likely to happen, than the addition of 10 cents per ton to the cost of coal for locomotive and power purposes.

The tariff changes afford a fertile field for just criticism and discussion, but I must conclude.

This was not a time for increased taxation which will be burdensome to the people. Economy and reduction in unproductive expenditure should have been the watchword of the Government. All classes of people are practising economy, and in our cities many are standing in the bread line. This was a time for the Government to practise economy in expenditure and redeem their pre-election pledges. The country is looking to the Federal Government for leadership in economies. The Government might have pursued that policy quite easily, and had they done so there would have been no special taxation measure this year. Additional taxation was not immediately necessary for war purposes. But the Government having determined otherwise I submit that the taxation should have been for revenue purposes purely, and not for protective purposes, as the war itself works for the prohibition of international trade. It should not have added to the cost of the actual necessities of life, now extremely high, and in many instances with the supply already below the normal. It should not have been so designed as to tend to the contraction of trade. In taxing raw products and goods formerly free there should have been displayed some discrimination and discretion. The tariff taxation should have been of such a nature as to be easily remitted at the close of the war, and I do not believe that the major portion of it can or will be remitted at the end of the war. The British Preference should not have been decreased, though its increase might be justified. The proposals are altogether unnecessary and unjust. They will not accomplish to any great extent the purposes of the Government, while they will inflict unnecessary burdens upon the people, and put unnecessary obstacles in the way of the trade and commerce of the country. This is the view hon. gentlemen on this side of the House entertain in respect to the taxation measures of the Government, and I believe it is in harmony with the view of the great majority of the people of Canada.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, permit me to say on rising how pleased I was with the early remarks of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean). His words and mental attitude were pleasing, and his party supported him in his remarks with regard to the war, and I am glad that the party opposite are in accord with this Government in the matter of expenditures necessary on account of war conditions. But from his remarks on the domestic part of the Budget the members of this House and the country might very well expect an eight or ten-months session over the $100,000,000 war vote to be brought down later, provided he fought it as he now proposes to fight this Budget. However, I will meet the hon. gentleman half way, and congratulate him upon the British feeling which actuates him, and indeed the whole country, in regard to the war. I take his remarks as an assurance that questions pertaining to the war will be dealt with in this House in an absolutely non-partisan spirit. That part of his speech devoted to what is called the domestic matters of the Budget was very controversial.

My hon. friend has abandoned to-day the course of conduct he usually adopts in a debate in this House, and particularly in a Budget debate. For he has been in the habit of following the line of least resistance with regard to debate, the easy and apparently simple course which would give to him and his party the least difficulty. But to-day he showed heroic courage almost equal to that of Baron Munchausen, when he attacked the policy of the Government. The most reasonable inference to be drawn from the words of the hon. gentleman is that no state of war exists. My hon. friend must have been sleeping for the last six months, for he has certainly shown no knowledge whatever of war conditions. My hon. friend has had a very substantial advantage. It is now ten or twelve days since the Budget was introduced, so I think he has had ample time to familiarize himself with what it contained and the form of his reply.

I was rather disappointed at the way my hon. friend attacked the civil servants of this country. He is an able man in debate, as those who have watched his career in this House well know, and I was rather disappointed to-day when he dropped down to small piffling things such as the salaries of the civil servants.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I wish to protect the civil servants.

Mr. MACDONELL: These matters could be more properly dealt with in Committee of Supply.

I do not think I am doing my hon. friend very great injustice when I say that he appeared to be rather pleased with the shrinkage in the returns of the immigration and other departments of the Government. These shrinkages did not seem to weigh very heavily on him, or to impress him in any way with the seriousness of our present condition, or to make him realize that we are to-day labouring in the throes of a great war. The hon. gentleman rather fell into a groove in that respect, which he could not get out of. Proceeding to criticise department after department, he reminded me of the old saying that the only difference between a "groove and a grave" is that of width and length. I hope my hon. friend will not take matters so seriously as to get into a groove of that kind; but politically he may if he continues in the course he followed this afternoon.

I was also surprised at his attitude with regard to the prosecution of public works, for he must know that the present war conditions make it imperative that the Government should do whatever they can in the way of providing employment under proper conditions for the people of this country. I do not think the Government have undertaken any new works recently. The works now going on were contracted for either by the old Government or by this Government before war begun. I would ask my hon. friend if he would approve of the public works at Halifax, for instance, being abandoned. In the Estimates I find provision made for the following works at Halifax: Dry-dock, $250,000 (p. 57); Citadel, $13,000 (p. 58); Customs examining warehouse, $100,000 (p. 58); Dominion buildings, $5,000 (p. 58); Drill hall, $45,000 (p. 58); Postal station, $25,000 (p. 58); Docks and wharves, $30,000 (p. 52); New terminal facilities, $3,000,000 (p. 52); to increase accommodation and provide machinery, $3,500 (p. 52); Willow Park sewer, $14,500 (p. 52). That is a total of $3,486,000. I ask the pardon of the House for referring to details of this kind, which should properly come up in committee, but as my hon. friend has shown me the way I think I am justified in referring to these matters. His attitude is that all public works should be stopped.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I did not say that.

Mr. J. D. REID: That is what you said.

Mr. MACDONELL: I took the hon. gentleman's words down. I did not find any argument in what the hon. gentleman said; all we got was words, words, words. We got no reasons. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House may have seen some grain of reason in the attacks which he made upon these public expenditures.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What about the $5,000,000 at Port Nelson?

[Mr. Macdonell.]

Mr. J. D. REID: That was started by you people.

Mr. MACDONELL: My hon. friend from Halifax attacks those who are advocating the "Made in Canada" propaganda. He thinks that is wrong; he condemns it. Surely the people of this country can do their own thinking in regard to buying where they want to, and if certain patriotic people want to buy goods made in Canada they should be allowed to do so, and, for my part, I commend them very highly.

My hon. friend says that the deficit is not due to the war. I shall follow that up a little later; but I would like to say a word in answer to another statement which my hon. friend made. He said in all seriousness that the sum of $5,000,000, no more and no less, represented the loss in the trade of Canada during the current year attributable to the war.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The revenue.

Mr. MACDONELL: Yes, that the revenue of the country had fallen by $5,000,000 on account of the war. I would like to know by what process of magic, reasoning, guessing, or otherwise my hon. friend arrives at the conclusion that the revenue of the country has suffered to the extent of $5,000,000 exactly. It is just a guess, as an hon. gentleman behind me says. In the next breath the hon. member for Halifax admitted that the general borrowing power of the country, which he said in the last year amounted to $250,000,000 or $300,000,000, had been cut off; that is, the general borrowing by industries, municipalities, provinces, cities, and so on. I think that is what the hon. gentleman meant?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. MACDONELL: Finance is a very sensitive thing, money is very elusive, and if money does not come in, how does my hon. friend expect trade is going to be carried on? Money is timid enough, trade is timid, too, but if our borrowing power is cut off, even suppose we had no war, what is going to be the result? Suppose our borrowing power had been shut off during the six months immediately preceding the war, when this country was borrowing $1,000,000 a day or more, would not trade have come to a standstill? My hon. friend's own admission is sufficient to prove that the war, having stopped the inflow of capital to Canada, had at least something to do with the tariff conditions, and it had a great deal more to do with them than the hon. gentleman will admit.

I desire to say a word about the Budget. I believe that this Budget has been received with greater satisfaction than any Budget which has ever preceded it in the history of this country. There has been little criticism of the budget as far as I am aware, and we know that carping critics spring to the surface at the slightest opportunity, and if there is a chance of getting anything remedied that they believe to be wrong an outcry immediately commences. Whatever grievances the people think they have they will seek to have remedied. Beyond a few retail druggists who are complaining about the stamp on proprietary medicines, etc., we hear no criticism in the country of this Budget—at least I have heard none—except that which we have listened to in this House to-day. Why does the hon. gentleman not bring before the House some evidence of the public discontent with this Budget? It taxes those who are best able to pay the tax. I submit that this is a Budget for which the Finance Minister should have the greatest possible credit, and that the Government is entitled to whatever credit is due to a Government that acts wisely and prudently under the conditions and circumstances which confront us at the present time. The conditions are not normal and an abnormal remedy must be applied. Under ordinary conditions taxes of this kind would not be imposed. They have been imposed because of the necessity of imposing taxes to raise revenue. The country cannot get on without revenue. What does my hon. friend suggest in substitution of the Budget that has been brought down?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Economy. The minister estimates a revenue of $120,000,000 for the next fiscal year without any additional tariff taxation. I say, get that $120,000,000, spend $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 less and you will have enough for your capital and special expenditures and will not require any further taxation.

Mr. MACDONELL: The minister has shown very plainly the need of these taxes. He has shown that there is a deficit between probable income and expenditure that has to be met. It cannot be met by magic, it has to be met by dollars and cents, and you cannot get dollars and cents without raising revenue by tariff or taxation of some kind.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACDONELL (resuming): Were the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) now in his seat, I would ask him again what public works now in progress in Halifax he would drop and cease to expend money on, so that the Government and the country might have the benefit of his opinion in detail, as to the cutting down of expenditures, that is, if he is sincere in his professions. The hon. gentleman laboured at great length in dealing with the expenditure of the Government on public works, and I trust he will permit me to say that he succeeded in arguing on both sides of the question. In his opening remarks he said he was in favour of continuing the public works which had been commenced; but later on he got to the other side of the fence, and apparently wanted to have most public works indiscriminately cut down or cut out. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) took the same view; he considered that expenditure should cease on the Hudson Bay railway and the terminals in connection therewith. I would remind the hon. gentleman that it was he and his Government who let the contracts for the Hudson Bay railway, and I presume in the ordinary course they are responsible for that undertaking.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The hon. gentleman only heard an interjection of mine. The view I intended to express was that I would do exactly as was done in 1908 at the time of the financial depression, when the Estimates for our public works were cut in two. I was Minister of Public Works at the time. I would do that with all public works to-day, and I would go slowly during this year of depression.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: All these were your own Estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The Estimates were cut in two.

Mr. WHITE: But they were your Estimates.

Mr. MACDONELL: I would like to know what percentage of the Estimates were eliminated in the year the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) refers to.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Pretty nearly 50 per cent of the Public Works Estimates. I had made up my Estimates and submitted them to the Minister of Finance, and the Government considered the declining revenue, and it was agreed to cut them in two, and they were reduced by about 50 per cent.

Mr. ROGERS: Do you recommend that reduction in connection with the public works at St. John for the present year?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would recommend a reduction all round; and let me say to the Minister of Public Works that the people of St. John are patriotic enough to stand it just as well as any other part of the country.

Mr. MACDONELL: Perhaps the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) would tell us whether his Estimates in the year he refers to were reduced 50 per cent as compared with the Estimates of the then previous year?

Mr. PUGSLEY: What I recollect is that the Estimates were made up with great care.

Mr. MACDONELL: I did not ask that question.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There were no amounts included but what I thought to be necessary in the public interest; yet, in view of the declining revenue they were cut in two.

Mr. MACDONELL: Will the hon. gentleman state to the House whether or not the 50 per cent to which he refers was written off the face of the Estimates of the then previous year? Were the Estimates of the previous year reduced 50 per cent—Will the hon. gentleman say that?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I cannot say that.

Mr. MACDONELL: I do not think my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) was candid in speaking of cutting down all expenditure on public works. He will recollect that the Estimates for 1914-15 were passed months before war was declared and before there were even rumours of war, and therefore the Government had no opportunity to reduce these Estimates. The first opportunity the Government has had to reduce Estimates comes now for the year 1915-16, and I will draw the attention of my hon. friend to some of the reductions made in these Estimates as compared with the Estimates for 1914-15. The hon. gentleman will see that there were reductions in all the departments he criticised for incurring excessive expenditure. The following statement shows the reductions:

[Mr. Pugsley.]

Reductions in the Estimates for 1915-16 as compared with the Estimates for 1914-15.

Legislation	$ 155,906
Immigration	263,800
Railways and Canals (income)	255,361
Railways and Canals (collection of revenue)	1,253,000
Public Works	11,038,825
Naval Service	104,600
Lighthouses	170,360
Dominion Lands	588,040
Miscellaneous expenditure	274,170
Trade and Commerce	1,903,600
Railways and Canals (capital account)	3,833,890
Public Works (capital account)	3,321,300
Public Works (capital, Marine Department)	474,500
Total	$17,780,320

If my hon. friend is fair he will admit that these reductions have been made in controllable expenditure; for of course as he knows there are certain expenditures that are not controllable.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The Public Works expenditure on current account is reduced, it is true, eleven millions below the Estimates of last year, but there are still thirty-two million dollars—

Mr. MACDONELL: I am not stating what they were last year; what I am pointing out is that on the first opportunity to reduce expenditure this Government has had since the war, it has reduced expenditure to the large amount of over $17,000,000 on controllable items in connection with the departments which my hon. friend attacked.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: You have reduced the whole lot $10,000,000, whereas the reduction should have been thirty or forty million dollars.

Mr. MACDONELL: The total reduction is $17,780,320, which is a pretty respectable cutting down at one stroke. I believe, Sir, that public opinion has endorsed this Budget to the full extent. The proposed taxation falls upon financial institutions and those who are able to bear the taxes. The revenue had to be raised, and the question confronting the Government was how it could be raised in the most desirable manner. The proposed taxation does not fall on the farmer or on the workingman, and both these classes are throughly satisfied with the Budget as it stands at present. They ought to be satisfied. Hon. members who came from rural communities can speak as to the farmers; but I can speak as to the men in the cities, and they are thoroughly satisfied, because they realize that these taxes which are very necessary have been imposed very generally, principally upon the moneyed interests, and that they have not affected the artisan or workman except in a very minor respect.

My hon. friend cavils at protection. Protection seems to be the red rag that angers Liberals in this House and out of it. I have no apology to make for protection; I am a stalwart protectionist. Protection has built up Canada. When this country is in straitened circumstances, as it will be more or less, and as all other countries will be owing to the war, and after it is over, it will be protection and the protectionist interests and the National Policy over again that will rebuild this country and put it back where it was before the outbreak of the war, and make it even more prosperous than ever before. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) is perhaps amused at that statement, but history will prove that it is the truth.

This afternoon I asked my hon. friend from Halifax a question which he did not answer. He was deprecating the immense amount of money spent on the Civil Service. I asked him if he would be in favour of a reduction of ten per cent in the salaries of all employees.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: If the service had not been improperly increased, the amount spent on it would have been more than ten per cent below what it is.

Mr. MACDONELL: I will answer that in this way. My hon. friend made a point of attacking the Customs Department. If he will take the revenue collected and the expense of collecting that revenue he will find that the percentage of expense for collection is not any greater to-day than it was five or ten years ago.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What will it be in 1914-15?

Mr. MACDONELL: I hope it will be high, because that will mean a big revenue.

Mr. MACLEAN: But the percentage of revenue?

Mr. MACDONELL: I am not guessing; I am just trying to give facts.

Mr. MACLEAN: It will be over five per cent.

Mr. MACDONELL: The Government are to be congratulated also on the arrangements they have made for their war borrowings. They have made arrangements to borrow all the money necessary for war purposes. Let me be reminiscent with regard to our borrowings. On the first of October, 1913, we paid off the last of the old Imperial guaranteed loan amounting to $8,273,333. This was the last loan which Canada had bearing the underwriting of the British Government guaranteeing it in the markets of the world. In 1869 there was $7,300,000 of an Imperial guaranteed loan outstanding. In 1874 it stood at $16,000,000. In 1885 it stood at $31,600,000, part of which was used to purchase Rupert's Land which made a Canadian nation possible, part for the defence of the country, part for public works, and so on. The last of that loan, as I said, was paid off a short time ago. To-day we find history repeating itself, but in a better way. Canada is borrowing to-day not by British guarantees, because the loan for which the Government have arranged is one made jointly with Great Britain. Canada is participating in that loan and in its advantages equally with Great Britain. Canada is getting the same terms as Great Britain, though no longer in the position of having Great Britain's guarantee. Great Britain is borrowing with Canada, and Canada is borrowing with Great Britain. It is to all intents and purposes a partnership; and on both sides of the House it is a matter of congratulation that Canada has lived through the early stages of her history with Great Britain standing behind her, and that now Canada is standing by Great Britain and Great Britain is standing by Canada, and Canada will stand by Great Britain to the end of this war and I trust to the end of time.

Notwithstanding our borrowings, the Budget makes out a strong case for a large amount of increased taxation. The situation must be faced. To temporize would be weak from a financial standpoint. The situation has to be grasped with a strong hand. The Government have presented a determined front to every phase of the war situation which has appeared. They have mastered the mobilization of the troops and have co-operated with Great Britain as regards our loans and other matters of importance connected with financing the war. Our trade has been protected by Government action as far as possible; our banking has been safeguarded and made permanent and strong, and quite recently the Government have provided seed grain and other assistance for the farmers in the West who are in need, so that they in turn may be able to reap a large harvest and bear their share of the war taxation when the proper time comes. Although the fact is not pleasing to my hon. friend from Halifax, the Government are proceeding with the construction of public works. My hon. friend comes from a city. Does he think it would be wise or proper to discontinue in an hour all the public works in the cities in Canada? Surely not. Private individuals look to the Government for an example. They want to see a strong Government going on with its work, undertaking and facing its obligations; and the business men and capitalists throughout Canada are doing their share to prevent unemployment. They are giving employment to men whenever it can be secured; and wherever it cannot be secured, they are putting the men on short time and are treating them as humanely as existing conditions will permit. In that the Government is taking its share and it is right that it should do so. The Government is strong and Canada is strong, notwithstanding what we see in the Toronto Globe—because we all read the Globe; even gentlemen on this side of the House read the Globe. I see by that paper that we are in for a "smash." In an editorial it tells us that the smash has actually arrived—Canada smashed, industry and enterprise smashed. It is a nice object lesson to Germany and the other continental nations whom we are fighting to be told by a paper of the prominence and eminence of the Globe that Canada is smashed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: A bad moral.

Mr. MACDONELL: That is not a desirable thing to say, and the statement is absolutely without foundation and is also very silly.

My hon. friend from Halifax spoke rather emphatically about there being no necessity for a revenue Budget. I presume he is aware of the fact that for the first ten months of the present fiscal year the revenue from Customs has fallen off $28,000,000, and that the estimated falling off for the whole year is $33,000,000. I am reminded by an hon. gentleman that the hon. junior member for Halifax rejoices in that fact.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Not at all.

Mr. MACDONELL: My hon. friend says that there has apparently been no loss to Canada or to the Government by the interruption of trade and ocean traffic. My hon. friend surely knows better than that. The falling off is due in a great measure to the use by the British Government of a great number of ships for the transport of soldiers and so on. Practically all ocean freight traffic has been tied up or ruined because there are not sufficient ships for the Canadian trade. My hon. friend comes from a maritime district, and knows that fact very well. It is no news to any one. The hon. gentleman has admitted that because of the war this country has not received a large addition to its finances. I am glad he makes that assertion; it simply corroborates what the Minister of Finance said as to the condition in which the country finds itself as a result of the war. My hon. friend is probably aware of the fact that borrowing in England is now prohibited by Royal proclamation; English investors of money cannot lend in the British Dominions without the consent of the Treasury Board. This circumstance operates greatly to decrease the flow of money into Canada, thus affecting not only the industries of the country, but the Government as well.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Is that not a good reason why the Government should cut down expenditures?

Mr. MACDONELL: It is a good reason why trade has been almost ruined through the commercial congestion and depression which has been the result of lack of money.

Mr. MACLEAN: I would remind the hon. member that the Minister of Finance estimated that for 1915-16, with the taxation now in force, he could get a revenue of $120,000,000, only $10,000,000 below the amount he will receive for the present fiscal year.

Mr. MACDONELL: What does that establish?

Mr. MACLEAN: If you have a revenue of $120,000,000, why do you not cut down your expenditures?

Mr. MACDONELL: I have given the reasons why certain expenditures have been cut down, and I am endeavouring to give reasons why it is not possible to cut down everything. You cannot cut all expenditures down; my hon. friend knows that.

My hon. friend denies that this is a war tax, but I submit that this a war tax, if there ever was one. They are made necessary by the war, whether the proceeds are used to buy guns and war material or to make good revenue deficits caused by dislocation of trade and consequent loss of revenue. The war has closed off borrowing by Canadian corporations, thereby diminishing imports.

The new taxes will pay interest on war loans, pensions, and part of capital expenditure. The interest on the $50,000,000 to be borrowed this year and the $100,000,000 to be borrowed next year will amount to nearly $7,500,000 annually. This the new taxes will have to provide for, together with interest on additional borrowings during the war. It must also provide for a pension list amounting to about $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year. If there were no war the Government could borrow money in the London market under the usual conditions, but, as I have attempted to show, the war makes that impossible.

Hon. gentlemen opposite take issue with the Government with regard to these taxes being war taxes. Hon. gentlemen opposite, especially the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), have been wont in times gone by to cast eyes across the border when looking for precedents and encouragement. What has happened in the United States, a neutral country, which is not embroiled in this war? Although they have no hand in the quarrel; although they are simply bystanders, they have been affected to such an extent by the war conditions that they have experienced a very great decrease in revenue. On September 4, last, in making an address to Congress asking them to pass a war tax bill, President Wilson said:

> During the month of August there was as compared with the corresponding month of last year, a falling off of $10,629,538 in the revenues collected from customs. A continuation of this decrease in the same proportion throughout the current fiscal year would probably mean a loss of customs revenues from sixty to one hundred millions. I need not tell you to what this falling off is due. It is due, in chief part, not to the reductions recently made in the customs duties, but to the great decrease in importations; and that is due to the extraordinary extent of the industrial area affected by the present war in Europe. Conditions have arisen which no man foresaw; they affect the whole world of commerce and economic production; and they must be faced and dealt with.

How did Congress face and deal with that message? They passed Bill No. 217 of the 63rd Congress, entitled an Act to increase the internal revenue and for other purposes. I wish to read one or two extracts from the report of the committee to which that Bill, together with the address of the President, was referred for report.

> The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred House Bill H. R. 18891, to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with certain minor amendments.

Then follows, under the heading, "Necessity of this Legislation":

> The necessity for this legislation grows out of the reduction of revenue derived from customs receipts caused by the disturbed conditions resulting from the war in Europe.
>
> The following table shows the value of the dutiable imports into the United States from the European countries at war during the fiscal year ending June, 1914, together with the estimated falling off in customs revenue during the next 12 months, computed on the basis of Tariff Act of October 3, 1913.

Then follows a table showing the estimated falling off in revenue during the next twelve months, which is totalled at $125,811,000. On the next page I find the following:

> The necessity for this legislation cannot be traced to the Tariff Act of 1913. If it had not been for the war in Europe the Tariff Act of October 3, 1913 and the other sources of revenue would have yielded sufficient revenue to meet the demands of the Government.

Under the heading "Effects of the European War" is the following:

> The countries now at war comprise Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, Japan, Russia, Servia, Montenegro and the United Kingdom of Great Britain. If it were not for remained the same as those of last year, had remain the same as those of last year, the customs taxes levied by the present tariff Act from said countries would have yielded $133,079,000. This does not include the importation from other countries that will naturally bring the customs devenue that is directly affected by war conditions to an amount over $150,000,000. The fact that the ships of these belligerent countries carried over 80 per cent of the foreign commerce entering our ports and the further fact that war conditions have disturbed the lines of transportation belonging to these countries and forced many of their tramp steamers to remain in port, will seriously affect the importation of merchandise coming from neutral countries, and thereby cause a diminution of customs revenues from neutral as well as belligerent countries.
>
> It, therefore, seems to be the part of wisdom for the Congress to levy a tax at this time to take care of the deficit in our customs revenues brought about by conditions over which our Government and our people have no control.

Is that not an exact parallel of the conditions existing here to-day? A non-belligerent neutral country, situated as we are and subject to the same commercial conditions, saw fit to pass an act of this kind long before we introduced our legislation, and for the same reasons.

The proposed tariff changes do not, I submit, mean more protection. My hon. friend, as are all gentlemen opposite, is subject to the protection bogey. The increased tariff, as my hon. friend knows, applies to raw materials, so that when raw materials come into this country to be used in the manufacture of various commodities, duties will be paid upon them. My hon. friend spoke particularly to-day about wool and cotton. If they come in, as I hope they will, in abundant quantities, to be manufactured by the workmen of Canada and sold to our own people or shipped abroad, a duty will be paid on the raw material and there will be a compensation in that respect. That will be an offset to any additional duty placed upon manufactured goods that may come from other countries.

My hon. friend is fearful for the British preference. The British preference is greater than it was before; the British manufacturer is better off; he gains 2½ per cent as compared with his foreign competitor. Take an article which under the old general tariff paid 30 per cent and under the preferential 20 per cent. Add 7½ per cent to the general duty and you have 37½ per cent; add 5 per cent to the British preferential duty and you have 25 per cent; therefore you have a preference of 12½ per cent whereas before the preference it was 10 per cent. So the British shipper is better off than he was by 2½ per cent. Why this wail about the British manufacturer? Why this grief and fear on account of the British exporter to our country? He is better off than he was before, especially—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONELL: My hon. friends laugh—as compared with the foreign competitor of course.

Mr. TURRIFF: You increase the duty and make him better off.

Mr. MACDONELL: Certainly, as compared with his foreign competitor. There is no doubt about that. If the general tariff had been increased and there had been no increase in the duty under the Imperial preference Canadian industries would have been ruined. Let us bear that in mind. If you increased the general tariff by 7½ per cent or 10½ per cent or 20½ per cent and made no increase in the duty under the British preferential tariff, you would ruin the Canadian manufacturer; and for my part I adopt with the greatest possible enthusiasm the statement made by the hon. leader of the Government (Sir Robert Borden) on more than one occasion, in this House and out of it, both before and after the change of Government, that an industry in any Canadian city is as good for the Empire as an industry in Birmingham or any other British city—and much better for Canada. Surely the very essence of our relationship with the Old Country is the freedom and liberty which Great Britain allows always. We can compete with her if we want to, but we want to build up the Empire as a whole, and an industry in Toronto or Winnipeg is as great a factor in building up the Empire as one in Liverpool or Manchester. England builds up her trade and commerce; she is building up her greatness on the islands of Great Britain, and we are building up her greatness overseas in our own time and in our own way and in our own name. Our friends are still fearful of the bogey of protection. They did nothing to reduce the tariff when they had the power to do so. They allow themselves that delightful liberty and freedom, that splendid isolation in this case, of being able to blow hot and cold, of standing first on one foot and then on the other. One gentleman advocates one policy and another gentleman another, and the whole party advocate one policy in one province and another policy in another province. There is no consistency about the party on any subject; and so it is with protection. They could have reduced protection if they had desired to do so, if they thought it too high when they came into power. When they assumed office in 1896, the average rate of duty was 29·79 per cent; in 1911, when the change of Government took place, the percentage was 26·71 per cent; so there was a reduction of about 3 per cent, notwithstanding the fact that the average price of merchandise had increased between those two dates by from 30 per cent to 40 per cent. So I do not see any merit now in the hon. gentlemen beating their breasts and tearing out their hair and shrieking against protection.

Then, as to spending money, our friend of the Globe got funny the other morning. I do not know where the reverend editor was the night before, but he said that the Government was spending money like a drunken sailor. Let me give the foundation for Mr. Globeman's talk about spending money like a drunken sailor. He makes the statement that during the three years the Conservative party have been in power they have been spending money in a reckless manner, like a drunken sailor. I do not wish to go back to ancient history; some of us are still young men, and we do not need to take figures one hundred years old. Let us take the three years before and immediately after the great victory of the people of September 21, 1911, and what do we find as a result in regard to the expenditure of money? The years 1909, 1910 and 1911 show a net increase in the public debt of $62,000,000, while the three years 1912, 1913 and 1914 show a decrease in the public debt of $6,750,000, and this notwithstanding the fact that in these three latter years the Government expended large sums of money, aggregating about $130,000,000, on capital account, which moneys were taken from consolidated revenue fund account.

What is the record of surpluses for the same three years? That is a test which my hon. friend from Halifax tried to apply this afternoon. The surplus in consolidated account for the year 1912 amounted to $37,946,000; for 1913 it amounted to $56,960,000, and for 1914, $35,000,000, a total surplus of $129,576,000 for the three years.

My hon. friends say that the Government may have saved money in one pocket but paid it out of the other. The country has only one pocket as a matter of fact, only one chest of money; but I will answer even the argument they make, if it be an argument. The large expenditure during the last three years was due to the fact that the Government inherited obligations and debts from the old Government which they had to pay, with respect to public works and undertakings and contracts entered into, such as the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Quebec bridge, the purchase of Grand Trunk Pacific bonds to the extent of $23,000,000, the loan to the Grand Trunk Pacific of $8,000,000, besides railway subsidies authorized by the late Government. Let me give an instance.

Halifax was referred to this afternoon. Coming west, let us take the great harbour of Quebec. I am making a statement of facts and not an argument. I want it to be understood that this Government had been committed to make expenditures that they could not disregard. I am not quoting these figures for the purpose of getting hot justice from the electors of Quebec at the next election. The expenditures on Quebec harbour since the present Government came into power in 1911 up to date, that is, for three years, as compared with the expenditures made by the Liberal party during the whole fourteen years of their term of office, were as follows: By the present Government, during their three years, $8,841,379; by the late Government, for the same period of time, $3,338,307. The present Government spent $8,000,000 and the late Government $3,000,000. Why did the present Government spend the $8,000,000? On account of the National Transcontinental railway, on account of the Quebec Harbour Commission, and on account of the Public Works Department. The late Government built a railway to Quebec and left it. How could the railway operate without terminals and facilities of that kind? It had to have these or the whole road would have been wasted and all expenditure lost. That is why they have had to spend money, and they have done it.

That brings me to the question of railway subsidies. My hon. friend talked about subsidies, and they have been spoken of in the press. It has been said that these subsidies were a bugaboo, a very dreadful thing. I want to face that condition and tell the House the facts. There has been a substantial increase in the last three years in railway subsidies, which accounts for an annual expenditure of over $10,000,000 in that period. Over $2,000,000 a year was authorized by Acts of the late Government, and over $6,000,000 a year has gone to the Canadian Northern railway and its constituents on account of the old Government's guarantee of its bonds for upwards of $56,000,000. The Canadian Northern railway also got guarantees from the provinces to the extent of $76,000,000. This $76,000,000 and the $56,000,000 guaranteed by the Dominion were contingent liabilities. The time came when this road had to have more money and the cash subsidy which this Government is paying at the rate of over $6,000,000 a year was granted to prevent the guarantees which had already been given from becoming actual liabilities. Those are the facts. If this Government had not given the road that cash subsidy, the contingent liabilities of $76,000,000 by the provinces and $56,000,000 by this Government would have become actual liabilities, and the country and the provinces would have been called upon to pay them. That seems to me a very substantial reason why the Government should have given the subsidy. So that when you take the $6,000,000 and the $2,000,000, that means that this Government have only granted a $2,000,000 guarantee a year or thereabouts, since they have been in office for railway subsidies.

My hon. friend this afternoon dwelt ad nauseam I was going to say, but I will say very extensively, on the net debt. We had not been three years in office when war broke out and dislocated all trade. Our predecessors had fifteen years of office, and let us now compare the net debt of Canada as left by our predecessors with what it is now. In 1896 the net debt was $258,497,000, and in 1911 $340,042,000. That is, in those fifteen years the net debt was increased by $81,500,000, or at the comfortable rate of $5,000,000 a year. I am not objecting to a Government's spending money properly, nor do I suggest that the money was wrongly spent, but the facts are obvious and what is the use of shutting our eyes to facts and doing the ostrich act like my hon. friend from Halifax did this afternoon. I am not criticising hon. gentlemen opposite for increasing the debt by that amount, but I say it is idle for them to turn around now and criticise the present Government for not having greatly reduced the net debt. Now look at the figures of the present Government. On the 31st March, 1914, the net debt was $333,300,000, and on the 31st March, 1911, $340,050,000. Whereas the previous Government had increased the debt by $81,500,000 in fifteen years, the present Government reduced the debt by $6,750,000 in three years. These are facts, and we know that the old adage says that facts are stubborn things. They cannot be got out of the way by such arguments as my hon. friend from Halifax used this afternoon.

In addition to that, this Government since it has been in power has spent nearly $130,000,000 of money taken from the current revenues and applied and used it for capital expenditure. The estimated taxation for 1910-11 was $89,350,000 as against $27,700,000 in 1896, when hon. gentlemen opposite took office; or $11.50 per head of population in 1910 as compared with $5.40 in 1896. In other words the late Government increased the debt on the people of this country from $5.40 per head to $11.50 per head between 1896 and 1911. I am not quoting these figures in the tu quoque manner, but it is not fair to criticise this Government for increasing the debt of Canada when, if any odium should be attached on account of that increase, it does and should rest on hon. gentlemen opposite.

I have already referred to the large expenditures this Government has made on account of contracts which had already been entered into. Large sums had been invested in public works throughout the country, and unless money had been supplied to continue those works they would simply have remained in a dormant state or rotted away. Would hon. gentlemen opposite prefer to see these public works which had cost tens of millions of dollars, rotting away rather than to spend the amount necessary to complete them. The necessity of giving employment to people of this country had also to be considered. The Government must set an example in this respect, and if I have any criticism to offer it is that the Government have been too stingy in carrying on the public works of this country under the present conditions. But certainly they should not be blamed for having increased the expenditure.

Our borrowing for war purposes will be enormous, but our credit is first-class as the public accounts will show. We must keep up the credit of Canada. We have built up Canadian credit, and that is why Canada can bear the strain to-day.

I have already referred to the large increase in the volume of trade which this country is annually transacting. This has made necessary a large increase in the public service and an increase in the expenditure of that service. I have here the figures showing the total trade of Canada with all countries for a few years past. In 1908 the aggregate trade was $650,793,000; in 1909, $571,268,000; in 1910, $693,211,000; in 1911, $769,443,000; in 1912, $874,637,000; in 1913, $1,085,264,000; in 1914, $1,129,744,000. The trade in merchandise only for the nine months ending 31st December, 1914, is estimated at $744,000,000. Increase in trade and revenue means an increase in the cost of collection, customs expenses and so on. If the Customs Department is collecting twice the revenue it did some years ago, it needs a larger staff. Surely that does not need to be laboured. I maintain that the increase in the gross expenditure by this Government was under the conditions proper and unavoidable, and as I have said, great expense has been incurred in carrying to completion the undertakings entered into by the old Government. Take the Department of Railways and Canals.. Comparing the three years previous to March 31, 1912, with the succeeding three years, we have an average annual expenditure during the first period of $37,426,000 as compared with $41,489,000 in the latter period, and having regard to the very great increase done by the Department of Railways and Canals I do not think the increase a large one. The average yearly earnings of Government railways should also be considered. The average yearly earnings of the Government railways during the respective three-year periods were $10,208,000 and $12,698,000; that is the average yearly earnings during the last three years under the old Government amounted to $10,208,000 and under the present Government they had reached $12,698,000. That, together with the increases in wages of employees, accounted for the increase in the revenue expenditures. Income expenditure shows an increase of $71,000 a year in the different departments, and the capital expenditure shows an increase of $663,000 per year, which increase is accounted for by the expenditures upon the National Transcontinental railway, the Quebec bridge, the Hudson Bay railway, the Government railway, Canadian Government railways, the Welland ship canal and the Trent canal. All of these works were authorized by the old Government, with the sole exception of the Welland ship canal, the Halifax terminals and the Prince Edward Island car ferry. The Welland canal was endorsed by hon. gentlemen opposite, and we have yet to hear any complaints from them in regard to the Halifax terminals. That being our position, it seems to me that it is the duty of the Government to make the best of the present situation, to stand by the country, and to exercise every possible influence and energy that the country possesses, individually and collectively, for the purpose of tiding us over the trying time and permitting Canada when the war is over to take its stand again as the senior member of the great overseas dominions of the British Empire.

What is to be done by the Government, by public men, and by the industrial and business men of this country? I have just taken a glance at the exports from Germany, and I find that they have been very large. The trade of Germany, Austria-Hungary and the other enemy nations has been destroyed as far as the British Empire is concerned. Last year Germany exported to different countries throughout the world goods to the amount of $2,402,967,000, and that trade is at large to-day. Any one can get it who can take it. A great part of that trade belongs to the enterprising people who can compete in the markets of the world which have hitherto been supplied by Germany, and I believe there is no part of the world that can compete for that trade in a more effective and able manner than the people of Canada. Let us go after the chance. Great Britain was the largest consumer of German goods in the world; in fact, she was a greater consumer of German goods than any other two countries put together. Last year Germany exported to Canada and other overseas British dominions no less than $50,000,000 worth of goods. There is no part of the Empire that is better equipped in point of natural resources, raw material and energy of men to secure that trade than Canada. Twenty million dollars worth of that trade is our own. The total volume of the trade that Germany has hitherto done with Canada amounts to about $20,000,000 a year. But there is $50,000,000 at large for the British Empire to secure. We have a preference in all overseas British dominions with the exception of Australia, and therefore we should be able to capture two-thirds of that trade. As I say, we have a preference in all the markets of the overseas dominions except that of Australia, and as we are the premier manufacturing overseas dominion of the Empire, outside of Great Britain herself, we have a splendid opportunity of capturing that $50,000,000 worth of trade. Let us make the best of it.

I am going to refer for a moment to a matter and this time with the approval of my friend the Globe. I see that the Globe has been advocating that the country engage in a propaganda of industrial research. That is not a new idea; in fact, it is an old idea in Canada, and it is older still in other countries. The idea is to invoke the aid and assistance of our universities and great seats of learning and knowledge and to send out to the world practical scientific men equipped with expert knowledge, to secure information in regard to manufacturing processes and to ascertain the location of markets, etc., with reference particularly to those products the supply of which hitherto has been in the hands of Germany and which is now available to any one who may be able to capture it. Let me point out that in the University of Toronto they are now making anti-toxine for the relief of persons afflicted by diphtheria. It is a purely philanthropic work that is being done by university graduates and is the beginning of what I trust will be a very large public enterprise in the near future. They are also manufacturing tetanus, an anti-toxine for the use of the Red Cross Society for the treatment of lock-jaw and illnesses of that kind. The university, on the first small order saved the Red Cross Society no less than $3,000. We have many opportunities of securing the business that has been thrown open by the dislocation of the trade which Germany formerly did with Canada and the rest of the world.

9 p.m.

All of which means that Canada will have either to supply herself from abroad with what she has heretofore purchased from enemy countries, or make it herself, which is the preferable course to adopt.

We must ascertain the entire quality and quantity of the products that we will require under the new conditions, so that we may supply ourselves with all these goods from this time forward, which means aggressive industrial research, so as to submit to capital and moneyed men the means of manufacturing what we need.

Our universities turn out each year a large number of engineers, chemical engineers, doctors, doctors of philosophy, chemists, and highly trained men in the various arts and sciences. These are "pure science men," and should be devoted to "applied science." They should be turned to practical problems and their solution, for the benefit of the people. These men have been taught to believe that their objective in life was to be teachers, professors, etc. This should apply to some of them, but many of the abler men should go out into the world to investigate and direct for the betterment of human kind and thereby increase the amount of useful knowledge. This method of research is practical.

There should be an established relationship between learning and industry. Laboratories of industrial research should be established at all great seats of learning, and at our universities.

We have precedents for this splendid work in many of the large institutions and foundations in the United States. I might refer to the Carnegie Institute at Washington, the General Education board, the Carnegie Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, et cetera, all of which are performing a great public service by educating men scientifically and equipping them to take part in the industrial enterprises of the country. These institutions are endowed with hundreds of millions of dollars. I commend to the Government some such action as that which has been taken in many other countries in regard to the encouragement of scientific men to aid and assist in the technical application of the scientific knowledge which they have acquired at the universities in order to help to build up the manufacturing enterprises of the country.

In conclusion, in my opinion, the Budget makes out the case for an increase of taxation. The situation must be faced. To temporize with it would be financial folly. These taxes are purely war taxes and must be treated as such. I do not care how you may argue or evade the question, these are war taxes and the revenue is raised, as similar revenues were raised in the United States, for war purposes.

My hon. friend from Halifax had nothing to suggest to this House as to how to raise the necessary money. He criticised, he objected to everything that had been done, but he argued himself in a circle, and he came out of the same hole that he entered by, without contributing any information as to how taxes should be levied. I understand that a single tax association had suggested a tax on land, but how could this Government levy a tax on land? It would take an army of men to collect such a tax, and anyway the taxation of land is a function of the provincial governments, and the provinces will need more revenue in the near future. At Confederation, the total revenue of the Dominion, as compared with the total revenues of all the provinces, was as two dollars to one; but now the total revenue of the Dominion, as compared with the total revenue of all the provinces, is about as three or four dollars are to one. We cannot invade the domain of the provinces; we are approached by them from year to year for additional and increased subsidies, and if we do not aid them in increased subsidies we do aid them by grants to agricultural and other matters. It would not be fair for us to trespass upon the domain of the provinces and invade the methods of taxation which the constitution has provided for them. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken about the cost of living, but the fact is that the cost of living has not increased in Canada. Farm products, except wheat, have not increased in price, and the ordinary man can to-day buy his groceries and his dry-goods as cheaply, if not more cheaply, than he could a year ago. The British preference is only affected to the extent of 2½ per cent when considered with the general tariff and if you argue from this until doomsday you cannot make it more or less. I believe, Sir, that this Budget from beginning to end meets the wishes and desires of the Canadian people. I believe that the taxation imposed by it is eminently fair and proper, that it bears upon nobody unduly, and that it justly apportions the burden which must be borne. It is my belief that the people of Canada will bear this taxation patiently until the time comes when war ceases, and this country will again be in a position to conduct its affairs under normal conditions.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton): The Finance Minister, who presented the Budget, as well as my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. A. K. Macdonell), who criticised it on behalf of the Opposition, have both spoken of it as an extraordinary Budget, and as being excusable on the ground of extraordinary circumstances. I will agree that the circumstances are extraordinary and that the Budget is extraordinary. I will admit that extraordinary circumstances would justify an extraordinary Budget, but I do not admit that the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance is a Budget that is adapted or adequate to the extraordinary circumstances which now have to be faced. My criticism would be, that notwithstanding the fact that the Finance Minister has introduced a new principle into the taxation of the country, there is still evidence both in the items of the Budget and in the arguments which have been made in support of it, that the Government itself does not realize the gravity of the present situation, either in regard to the financial condition of the Dominion or in regard to the duty of Canada as a part of the Empire in this present time of stress and trial. There has been criticism of the Budget on the ground that it does not recognize the changed financial conditions of the country by a reduction in the proposed expenditure, a point which has already been dealt with. But it is surely elementary, if our revenues are declining, and if there is no other prospect than that they will continue to decline for an indefinite period, that it is the part of wisdom to introduce measures of economy of a substantial nature. That is a point that does not seem to have been considered by the Government as being of importance. My hon. friend (Mr. A. C. Macdonell), and I believe the Prime Minister as well, when this point was being dealt with, satisfied themselves and their friends by asking the member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) in what particular he would reduce the expenditure, and especially if he would be willing to reduce the expenditure at the port of Halifax. I can only say that however satisfactory that form of answer may have been to the Prime Minister and to the hon. member, I do not think it will be satisfactory to the people of Canada. It is the gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches and their friends behind them who are responsible for the disposition of the public moneys. They are answerable to the people for what use is made of these moneys, and it is for them to say when and where and how moneys shall be spent, and to submit to criticism if money is spent for which provision has not been made, or for which no provision is intended to be made, so far as the Budget discloses.

I do not intend to weary the House with figures; but there is a point which has struck me in regard to the question of revenue and expenditure, of debt and deficit, that I will try to place before the House at this time. I gather from the speech of the Minister of Finance that in the current fiscal year there will be added to the public debt the sum of $60,000,000, not including moneys borrowed on account of the war. That increase of debt occurs, notwithstanding the special taxes imposed for revenue purposes at the last session of Parliament, which the Minister of Finance, when he announced them in his Budget of last September, expected would realize $7,000,000 during the six months of the current fiscal year then ensuing. That is to say, our shortage as between actual expenditure and actual revenue, based upon the tariff taxation as it was a year ago, was not $60,000,000 but $67,000,000. We have taken $7,000,000 more out of the pockets of the people of this country during the current six months than would have been taken out under the system of taxation that prevailed before the short summer session.

Again, I find that, notwithstanding this increase of taxation, expecting a further increase of the debt during the coming year to the amount of another $60,000,000, exclusive of war expenditure, the Minister of Finance brings in additional taxation which he hopes will yield $30,000,000. But besides that special taxation, which he proposes by his Budget just brought down, is the $14,000,000 of extra taxation which will accrue because of his Budget proposals of September last. We are carrying, then, a load of extra taxation, as the result of the Budget of last September and the present Budget, of not $30,000,000, but $44,000,000. The load of taxation has been increased for the year which we are about to enter upon to the amount of $44,000,000, and we shall still have a difference between revenue and expenditure, on the estimates of my hon. friend, of $30,000,000. Therefore we are $74,000,000 behind in our business transactions as expected for the coming year, aside altogether from war expenditure, according to the statements made by the Minister of Finance. That is a sufficiently startling condition to warrant the statement I have already made, namely, that the Government scarcely seem to have appreciated the gravity of the situation. Although our revenues have fallen so tremendously even in the face of such enormous increased taxation, we still are unable to meet the requirements of the public service, according to the estimates of my hon. friend.

The Government of to-day may have some means of creating something out of nothing, of creating money otherwise than by getting it from the people by way of taxes. But, unless they have some other means of securing money, they are taking the position that they are not called upon under present circumstances to do what every other person, corporation, government, or other organization throughout the world has to do, that is, to bring its expenditures into some comparison with its revenues, present or prospective. As I read the Estimates, as I have followed the Budget statement, the Government have absolutely ignored that as being a necessity. If I have read correctly the Budget statement of the hon. Minister of Finance, he proposes to make the same expenditure on current account and on capital account during the coming year, and to face the shortage of which he speaks, as he did during the present year, when he had no such reason to expect a shortage, and had not found it necessary to impose an enormous additional burden of taxation upon the Canadian people in order to bring his revenue even approximately up to his expenditure. I do not wish to labour the point unduly, but surely it is the business of those charged with the administration of the affairs of our country to keep some reasonable balance between revenue and expenditure without adding repeatedly and seriously to the burdens borne by the people. If the Government are going to take the view that expenditures may be made freely, liberally, and carelessly, and that the result is simply an increase in some measure of the burden of taxation, and that this burden is something that really makes no serious difference to the people, I can only say that I do not think they appreciate the seriousness of the situation or the means that should be taken to remedy it.

I do not wish to deal with the question of the war or the war expenditures at any great length; but it appears to me that, if the Government has failed in its appreciation of the gravity of the financial situation of the country as it stands at present, it has failed even more seriously in regard to the gravity of the situation so far as the great world-war now in progress is concerned. The Government has a duty besides that of collecting taxes and spending money. It has a duty to give inspiration and direction to the minds of the people of the country in regard to all great questions that may come up for consideration, and ten times more so in a case such as that which confronts Canada. the Empire and the world at the present time. I do not wish to be misunderstood as to my conception of the position of the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada is not responsible for the occurrence of this war, or for its direction. The responsibility of the Government of Canada is that Canada shall take her proper part, with her men and with her means, in supporting the cause with which the interests of Canada are absolutely bound up: the maintenance of the prestige of the British Empire and the preservation of human liberty throughout the world.

The existence of the war has been used, it appears to me, as an excuse for a great many actions on the part of the Government and for a great many omissions on the part of the Government for which there is no excuse. As I have said, this Government neither directs the war nor is responsible for it, but this Government is responsible for the part that the Canadian people take in the war; and it is there, it seems to me, where they have failed in discharging their responsibilities; failed at any rate in appreciating the measure of their responsibility in the Budget proposals that they have laid before the House.

In the Budget proposals of last summer, the Finance Minister announced the necessity of a war loan of $50,000,000. We have been informed since this session opened that $50,000,000 will keep practically 50,000 men in the field for six months. We are proposing another war loan of $100,000,000 to last, I presume, for a year, and, if I understood the Prime Minister correctly, his statement was that we were to have 90,000 or possibly 100,000 men in the field. If 50,000 men require $50,000,000 to maintain them for six months, certainly $100,000,000 will not maintain 100,000 men for a year at the same rate. I do not wish to press this point; it is a question that is eminently for the responsibility of the Government, but the facts and figures are as I have stated. Do they believe that they can keep 100,000 men in the field for twelve months on an appropriation of $100,000,000, and is 100,000 men the limit of their intention in regard to the aid that they are to give the Empire during this war? We do not know how long this war may last; we do not know what turn it may take; we only know what our duty is and what results we desire to see achieved. At such a time, if ever, our resources should be conserved so that the money can be found and the men can be put in the field and kept there as long as the necessity remains. This is not a time to dismiss lightly with a wave of the hand the question of expenditures, of deficits, of revenue or lack of revenue. This is the time above all others when every care should be taken, when every dollar should be conserved, when every portion of the credit of the country should be maintained to the highest degree as long as it can be so maintained. What is the use of our saying that we are in this war to a finish with our last man and our last dollar when we are throwing money right and left on this, that or the other expenditure, connected with the well-being of this country, it may be, but still not necessary in any degree for the maintenance of Canada's position in connection with the war? We are liberal with our money; the money that we spend in military support we borrow in England, and we go to England also to borrow the money that we spend over and above our revenues for the very ordinary current expenses of the country.

In following the remarks of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell), I noted that he made a strong point of the commitments of the late Government with regard to large public expenditures of various kinds, and especially with regard to railway expenditure, and gave these commitments of the late Government as a reason for the large expenditures at the present time of the present Government. I will not go into that matter at any great length, except to say in regard to one of the great commitments of the late Government, namely, the Transcontinental railway, that, if my memory is correct, when the late Government went out of power that railway was within fifteen per cent of being completed. That was three and a half years ago. I do not know how long it is taking this Government to complete that fifteen per cent, or how much money they are spending on it, but if they are using the same energy and the same economy that their predecessors used, certainly that expenditure should have been off the slate before now. In regard to the Canadian Northern, my hon. friend told of the guarantees by the Federal Government and of guarantees by the Provincial governments, and said that the enormous cash bonus paid by this Government was necessary in order to protect the guarantees already given by the Federal and Provincial governments. The cash subsidy paid by this Government to the Canadian Northern railway had practically no bearing on the security for the guarantees given by either the Federal Government or the provinces. The Canadian Northern railway was a sufficiently completed system, upon the guarantees given by the Federal Government and the provinces; and the grant of money by this Government was of their own motion, of their own desire to, as I presume, gratify the ambitions of the projectors of the Canadian Northern railway, but with absolutely no justification from a financial point of view, as the conditions are at the present time. They must take the whole responsibility for the vast expenditure of cash that they have made in regard to the Canadian Northern railway for that part of its line which runs through the province of British Columbia. The late Government was not responsible in any particular, in any degree, for a dollar of that expenditure either directly or indirectly, by reason of commitments, obligations or for any other reason.

I desire to draw the attention of the House more particularly to the means that is proposed by the Finance Minister to raise increased revenue. We will admit that if he keeps up his expenditure he must have revenue, he must have money, and he must get it either by increased taxes or by increased borrowings. As to what proportion should be increased taxes and what proportion should be borrowings I shall not argue, that is not the point I wish to bring forward. I wish to say that, assuming the necessity for increasing the taxes, I for one am glad to see this Government adopt the principle of direct taxation. I do not say that the details are in all particulars as I would like to see them, but it is certainly an important point that a Government whose policy is tariff for protection should, at this time of stress and serious conditions, adopt the principle of direct taxation as a means of raising revenue and of meeting a deficit. It is, in the first place, a square, straight admission that their tariff is a tariff for protection and not for revenue. If an increase of tariff would give increase of revenue now was the time to make that increase of tariff if it was revenue the Government wanted. We maintain that it is a fact that undue increase of tariff will not give revenue, and the direct taxation features of the Budget are an absolute admission of that contention.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. gentleman not just argued that the increase in duties which we made last year had produced some $7,000,000 more revenue than would have been obtained if we had not increased them?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now he is arguing that an increase does not give more revenue at all.

Mr. OLIVER: No, my hon. friend is mistaken. I say that if the Government wanted to raise $30,000,000 at this session, being a Government whose policy is a policy of protection by tariff, if they believed that any increase of tariff would raise that $30,000,000, now was the time to show their faith by their works. But they knew that no possible increase that they could make in the tariff would give them that amount of revenue and therefore they did not take that means of raising the additional revenue, they adopted the system of direct taxation as a means of raising revenue while they did increase the measure of protection already in force. I do not know how far this will be acceptable to the people of the country. I am inclined to think that there are many people who would have accepted a higher tariff for purposes of revenue, but that there are very few of the general body of consumers who will accept the higher tariff for purposes of protection and at the same time direct taxes in order to raise revenue.

How much revenue is expected to be raised by these two means of taxation? I understood the Finance Minister to say that he expected $30,000,000, of which he expected to get from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 by direct taxation and the balance of $20,000,000 or $22,000,000 by indirect or protective duties. The Toronto Star has gone into the matter somewhat and figures that, on the business of last year, the direct taxes proposed by the Budget, exclusive of the Patent Medicines tax would produce $14,000,000, and I cannot imagine that the Finance Minister had not those figures at hand when he framed the Budget and he had in mind receiving a larger proportion of revenue from the direct tax side of his Budget than he gave the House to understand. His hopes of revenue centered rather on the direct taxes than on the indirect taxes. With regard to the direct taxes let me point this out. We all agree that there must be taxation, there must be revenue, and the whole question as between one party and the other, and between any two individuals in arguing upon taxation, is in regard to the fairness of the taxation. If the taxation is equally levied according to the ability of the different people to carry it, then it is carried easily and without detriment to the country. But if it is levied unequally, if the man of small means and great responsibility is compelled to carry more than his share and the man of greater means and less responsibilities carries less than his share, then there is an undue burden resting upon one section of the community, and, as a consequence, the whole community is hampered in its progress. In the scheme of direct taxation that the minister proposes I find that of $14,000,000 the banks will contribute $1,000,000, and the trust companies $1,000,000.

Mr. J. D. REID: Are you against that?

Mr. OLIVER: Not at all. Then $300,000 is expected on insurance premiums, $7,000,000 from increased postal rates, and $3,000,000 from railway passengers. It appears to me that the ordinary man who uses the postal facilities is bearing an unduly heavy share of this burden of taxation, while the great financial interests are bearing an unduly light proportion. Furthermore, I do not agree with the Finance Minister that it was not advisable to levy an income tax. I do not know where he would go for money except where money is. The burden should be levied according to the ability of the people to bear it. The burden should be laid equally, but the minister is not doing that when the banks with their great resources and profits pay only $1,000,000, and the trust companies with their profits only $1,000,000, while the ordinary people who write letters pay $7,000,000, and the people who ride in railway trains pay $3,000,000. The principle of direct taxation is sound, but the principle must be carried out in a sound way. The advantage of direct taxation is that the tax can be levied according to the ability of the person to bear it. When the tax is not so levied, when it is levied lightly on the wealthy and heavily on those who are not wealthy, it has many of the disadvantageous features of the ordinary protective tariff.

Mr. WILCOX: Do not the banks and the trust companies post letters?

Mr. OLIVER: They will help to pay that tax, of course. But does not my hon. friend think that the banks, with their hundreds of millions of free circulation and the advantages they have at the hands of the Government of Canada, might fairly be asked to pay a larger share than they are being asked to do?

Mr. WILCOX: My hon. friend said that the stamp tax would fall entirely on the poor people.

Mr. OLIVER: Oh, no, I said the poor people would pay the greater part of it.

Mr. J. D. REID: Oh, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Give us the figures.

Mr. OLIVER: I have not got them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If my hon. friend had taken the trouble to get them, he would have found that he was far from the facts.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not think my hon. friend could get those figures.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will try.

Mr. OLIVER: The side of the Budget proposals that calls for the most attention, and will probably receive the greatest attention at the hands of the people, is the proposals relating to tariff increases. It was quite in order that my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) should be the member on the Government side of the House to follow my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean), and defend this high tariff Budget. As I read it, the tariff was made for Toronto, by Toronto and in Toronto.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: It was made in Canada for Canadians.

Mr. OLIVER: But only for some of the Canadians, very few in fact. We are anxious to see a tariff framed for all Canadians, just as we should be glad to see a system of taxation that would lay the burden equally on the shoulders of all of us. The proposal to increase by 5 per cent the duty on goods coming from Great Britain, and by 7½ per cent on goods coming from other countries, is, in fact, an increase in the tariff of 25 per cent. By a stroke of the pen the Finance Minister or the Government of this country have raised the tariff by one-fourth. They have made the tariff of Canada to-day higher in many particulars than the so-called National Policy of 1878, which was reduced in many particulars by those who framed it after they had had experience of it for 16 years. By the introduction of this Budget, the Finance Minister has taken away in important instances the advantages that were given to this country by the tariff reductions of 1904.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There were no reductions then.

Mr. OLIVER: In 1894.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: That is a great point. They need points badly.

Mr. OLIVER: The Finance Minister said that this was a tariff for Canadians. I notice that some Canadians will do very well out of it. I see our old friend the lumber combine figures quite successfully in this tariff. Lumber dressed on one side only was made free under the tariff of 1894 as a concession to the special conditions existing at that time in the prairie regions of Canada. It has been recognized as being an important benefit to the people of that western country. There have repeatedly been demands made upon the late Government and this Government to have that condition of free lumber removed. My hon. friend has removed it, and to-day that lumber stands under a duty of seven and one-half per cent.

Mr. J. D. REID: That is a war tax.

Mr. OLIVER: We will deal with that later. Lumber that costs $15 a thousand and was free, now pays $1.12½ a thousand duty. Lumber that costs $20 a thousand which formerly paid $5, now pays $6.50, and lumber that costs $25 a thousand formerly paid $6.25, now pays $8.25. If there is one institution or organization in the Dominion of Canada that did not merit consideration at the hands of this Government it was the lumber combine. My hon. friend has seen fit to place a taxation that is unjustified, unwarranted from any point of view upon the people of western Canada who depend largely upon imported lumber. While my hon. friend is preaching a campaign of patriotism and production, while the Minister of Agriculture is lecturing, and sending lecturers, throughout the West enjoining the farmers on the prairies to raise stock, to go into cattle and hogs, which must have shelter in buildings made of lumber or they cannot live, the Minister of Finance puts a bar of from $1 to $1.50 a thousand upon the use of that lumber for the benefit of an industry and an organization that, I say, has no claim upon the consideration of this Government or of the people of this country from any point of view. Just how far the lumber combine will benefit by this duty I cannot say, but I find that during last year we imported lumber to the value of $4,428,000 and that on that amount the revenue to the country will be $221,000.

Mr. WRIGHT: How much of that lumber came in free?

Mr. OLIVER: It all came in free.

Mr. WRIGHT: It would affect the calculation if some of this were free and some dutiable.

Mr. OLIVER: The Trade and Commerce returns show that in the year ended March 31, 1914, we imported free of duty $4,428,341 worth of lumber, upon which, with the duty now imposed, the consumer would pay, or the treasury would receive $221,000. But while we imported four and a half millions worth we exported nearly twenty million dollars worth showing that we are not dependent on imports for our supply of lumber. As a matter of fact, I fancy, for every thousand feet of lumber we import, we consume twice as much as we import, and if we do, then, as a result of the imposition of this 7½ per cent duty, while we will pay the treasury $221,000, we will pay the gentlemen who constitute the British Columbia lumber combine $442,000. The duty of 7½ per cent will cost the settler in the Northwest, on this calculation, not $221,000 but 10 p.m. $663,000 in addition to what he has been paying in the past. That is one of my hon. friend's contributions to the campaign of patriotism and production.

Now, take cement. We imported 709,000 cwt. in the year I have mentioned of a value of $332,564 and the duty collected amounted to $69,684. On that amount of cement there will be $24,279 of additional duty under the increased tariff. In other words, the cement combine, these good Canadians, these true patriots, these gentlemen who are out for patriotism and production, get the benefit of a 30 per cent additional protection at the hands of my hon. friend. And the consumer of cement pays $24,000 in addition? No, he pays on whatever amount of cement is used in Canada that is purchased in Canada as well as on the amount that is imported. I do not imagine that we import one-quarter of the cement that we use.

Mr. TURRIFF: One-tenth.

Mr. OLIVER: If we import only one-tenth of what we use, then this little increase in the tariff, instead of costing $24,000 additional, will cost $240,000 to the consumer of cement. Again a boost for the campaign of patriotism and production!

Mr. WRIGHT: We know that cement was reduced a few years ago—I think it was two years ago—and that in practical operation the foreign manufacturers of cement put half of the reduction in their own pockets and the consumers did not benefit to the extent the hon. gentleman is setting forth.

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. OLIVER: I do not know anything about that, but I think I can demonstrate that the producers of cement will benefit to the amount I say by the change which has been made in the tariff and I do not think that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will question that.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: Oh, yes, I will.

Mr. J. D. REID: No one will agree with you on that.

Mr. OLIVER: However, that is a matter the facts will demonstrate, and there is no doubt about it the consumer will have to pay. I notice that this Budget provides that mowers and reapers and binder twine are not subject to this increase of 7½ per cent. That is an important omission. It is of great advantage to the people of Western Canada particularly, and to the farmers of all Canada, that mowers and reapers are not subject to this increased duty, but mowers and reapers are not the only implements that are necessary to carry on this campaign of production and patriotism.

Mr. GRAHAM: Ask them why they were left off the list of articles subject to increased taxation.

Mr. OLIVER: I wonder why they happen to be left out of the list of articles subject to the increased taxation, unless the increase was liable to raise their price. Some of the gentlemen on the other side can answer that question at their leisure, I will not press for an answer at the moment. While mowers and reapers are exempt from this increase of duty, there is a long list of other agricultural implements that are not exempt, and which might be, such as engines, threshers, ploughs, harrows, drills, seeders, rollers, packers, hayrakes, potato-diggers. The plough, as everybody knows, is the symbol of agriculture; it is the fundamental implement of agriculture, and the plough pays an increased duty of seven and a half per cent. We imported in the year ending 1914, one million dollars' worth of ploughs and the duty on them was two hundred thousand dollars. If we import one million dollars' worth of ploughs next year they will pay $275,000 duty, which means that the campaign of patriotism and production will be aided by levying an additional tax of $75,000 upon the men who buy the ploughs.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is the way the farmers are made prosperous.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes. In this country I do not think that we import the larger proportion of our ploughs. We have men in Canada who make ploughs; they are very excellent ploughs, and they are made in such numbers and of such quality that they are even exported to the United States to compete in the United States markets with the product of that country. So that, if we import one million dollars' worth of ploughs, we may reasonably believe that we produce three million dollars' worth in this country. And so our bill in respect to ploughs, under the seven and a half per cent increase, will be not $75,000 but $225,000, $75,000 of which will go to the Treasury, and the balance to the patriotic manufacturers of ploughs to aid in the campaign of patriotism and production.

I hope the House will pardon me for taking so much time on this feature of the case, but my hon. friend from Toronto was so insistent on the point that everybody was satisfied with this tariff, that I am sure hon. gentlemen will permit me to show to what extent we have reason to be satisfied with it. But there are people besides farmers who are interested in this tariff, because many of the people of Canada use cottons and woollens. In the year ending 31st March, 1914, under eight particular items, we imported woollens to the value of over twenty million dollars, blankets, worsteds, tweeds, etc., and upon that importation we paid a duty of five and a half million dollars. If we buy that same quantity of woollens next year, then under the five per cent and seven and a half per cent increase we will pay in the neighbourhood of $1,225,000 additional to what we paid before. Remember we do not get all these goods from Great Britain and they do not all come under the preference, although the larger portion does. In cottons, taking four items, we imported seven million dollars' worth last year, and we paid on that $1,225,000 duty. Averaging the five per cent and the seven and a half per cent increase, we will pay in addition $409,000 on the same importation next year. I do not imagine that we import one-half the cottons we use in Canada. We have immense cotton factories, we must be producing a great deal of cotton goods, and I think we produce at least twice as much as we import, so that while the Minister of Finance takes less than half a million dollars out of the people for the Treasury, his friends, these good Canadians, these patriotic manufacturers of cotton, will draw down anywhere from one million to one and a half million dollars. There is no doubt they are highly satisfied with the increase in the tariff. There is another class of patriots in this country who ought to have attention at this particular time, I speak of the manufacturers of boots. In the year ending 1914 we purchased $4,225,000 worth of boots and we paid $1,225,000 duty upon these boots. Taking the increase at seven per cent, because the larger portion of these boots comes from the United States, we will be paying $300,000 more duty upon the same quantity of boots imported next year. But everybody knows that we only import a comparatively small part of the boots we use in this country. I fancy that we make at any rate three pairs of boots in Canada for home use for every pair that we import. If that fact is a fact—and it is unquestionably a fact in this time of strife and hardship, when the cost of living has gone up and the means of living have gone down—my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, by his Budget, is handing to the manufacturers of boots in Canada approximately $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What does the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) think of that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman, while he is on the subject, will say why this Government raised the duty on boots by five per cent?

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend will have all he can handle in explaining what his Government has done. The point is what his Government has done, not what the late Government did.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is you I am asking for an explanation. I hope you will make it.

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend is asking for an explanation of something that is not pertinent to the subject. We are discussing war taxes that are being imposed at the present time.

Mr. GRAHAM: So-called war taxes.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes. My conclusion is that, if the estimate of the amount of home production is correct, to those sterling patriots who are producing boots in Canada so greatly to the credit of Canada, and who are so strongly upholding Canada in its share of this war that is in progress, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has handed out a little matter of $1,000,000 at this time, when every man is wondering where his revenue is to come from and how he can make his expenditure and his revenue meet.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: That is the way the bootmakers die for the flag.

Mr. OLIVER: In the exposure that we have had lately, if there is any class of manufacturers in this country who are not entitled to special consideration at the hands of this Government, it is our friends who make boots.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Who make boots for the army. There are some very good makers of boots at St. John.

Mr. OLIVER: Who make boots for the army. My hon. friends have spoken of this Budget as a war Budget. It is a war Budget inasmuch as it is a Budget that is placed before the country while a war is in progress, but it is not a Budget which provides for meeting the expenses of that war. That we have on the authority of the Minister of Finance, and the facts are evident on the face of the record. The war is responsible for many things; but it is not responsible for the mismanagement of the finances of Canada which has occurred since our friends have taken office, and which has resulted in a deficit as between current revenue and current expenditure for the current year, amounting, on the authority of the Minister of Finance, to, I think, $20,000,000.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: $10,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER: $10,000,000 this year, and that is with an additional and special tax, which is expected to produce $7,000,000 during the last six months of the year, so that it really amounts to a deficit of $17,000,000 on current account.

I would like to see the Government appreciate their responsibility in regard to the part that Canada has to take in this war. They have not done so up to date; and it is not right or fair—I will not go further and say what ought to be said—that the Government should make the pretence, should hold out the false signal, and declare that the existence of this war is a reason why they increase the burdens on the people of Canada for the benefit of their particular friends. We hear a great deal in war time about vessels sailing under false flags. When this Government put forward, as their excuse for increasing the tax burden upon the people of this country, the existence of the war in Europe, they are sailing under a false flag; they are attempting to trade upon the patriotism of the people for the benefit of their particular friends and supporters, the manufacturing interests. This is neither a time nor an occasion when any government of any British country should come before Parliament and the people with such a proposal. This is a time when we ought to have fair play, fair dealing, and square talking. The Government should not attempt to mislead public opinion by mis-stating the facts of the case, putting upon their stamp, "war tax," when not a particle nor a fraction of the cost of the stamp is intended to pay any part of the war cost.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What about the interest?

Mr. OLIVER: We are not even paying the interest.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. OLIVER: According to the statement of the Minister of Finance, we are not even providing enough money to pay the expenditures that we have undertaken, aside altogether from the war, let alone interest. We have to borrow money to pay the interest, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nonsense.

Mr. OLIVER: Patriotism and production! The words sound well, and there is no doubt that there is great need in Canada at the present time both of patriotism and of production. Why is it that our friends are holding meetings here and there throughout the country and urging upon the farmers in the West to increase their acreage, to increase their production, for the sake of patriotism? Do they know why the farmers in the West have not increased their acreage during the past few years? Do they know that the acreage of production in the West in 1914 was no greater than it was in 1911, and do they know why?

Mr. BURNHAM: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: Does my hon. friend know why?

Mr. BURNHAM: Economically the world can consume only a certain quantity of food, and if you increase production, as some hon. gentlemen furiously profess they intend to do in the West, you will only heap waste on the market. While you may interchange manufactures and have five pianos or five motor cars or five anything else you like instead of one, you cannot eat any more than you did before, no matter what you may do.

Mr. OLIVER: In 1914 the area of production in the West was no greater than it was in 1911, and to-day the Government and the people who claim to have leadership in Canada are urging upon the people of the West to increase their production. Do our friends recall the conditions that existed throughout the prairie provinces immediately after they took office in 1911? Do they remember the tremendous crop that was on the ground, the unfavourable weather conditions that existed, the grain blockade that took place, the rotting of the grain in the stooks and in the granaries? Do they remember what was done when pressure was exerted in this House to secure an outlet for this grain by means of reduced railway rates and by means of tariff concessions in respect of trade with the United States? When it was too late, railway rates were reduced, but no tariff concessions were made. Railway rates were reduced for grain that was routed through, but not for grain that was sold in the States subject to the tariff; it had to pay the higher rates. Well, I can assure my hon. friend that when a farmer has seen his crop rot on the ground or in the granary, and when he has not the wherewithal to seed that ground the next year, he is just in the same position as any business man would be. In the first place, he is discouraged; in the second place, he cannot go on. And when the next year prices were abnormally low; when oats were selling in the province of Alberta at 15, 16, and 18 cents a bushel, what was done by this Government to relieve the situation? Anything? Nothing, absolutely. Since that time the changes in the United States tariff have given an advantage to Canadian producers. There has been a reduction in the duty on oats, and last year the reduction of the United States duty to 6 cents a bushel enabled the people of the western country to dispose of their oats, I shall not say at a living price, but they were able to get rid of them, and they would not have been able to do so otherwise. Yet my hon. friends wonder why production stands still. They think that by issuing pamphlets and by holding meetings in board rooms of banks they can instruct the farmer how to increase production. If they would give the farmer the benefit of a market, then he would increase production. At the present time, owing to the war, he has a market. Give him reasonable accommodation at the bank and you shall not need to issue pamphlets or hold lectures; he will increase the production all right enough. But he has to have the money. Unless you are prepared to let him have the money, he cannot make the production. If these kings of finance, who are so wise on every subject after everything is over, would make their arrangements so that they could and would finance the farmers of the western country during this year of high prices, I will guarantee that they will increase production. But talk will not do it, and the levying of extra taxes will not do it. The 25-cent increase that is proposed to be placed in the tariff by this present Budget is a campaign against patriotism and against production, and it will take years and great effort—on the part, I am sure, of some other government than this—to overcome the loss that the country will sustain by reason of its imposition.

On motion of Mr. J. H. Burnham (West Peterborough), the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Hon. W. T. White, the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 24, 1915.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill No. 58, respecting the Casualty Company of Canada.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill No. 59, respecting the Empire Life Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill No. 60, to incorporate Entwhistle and Alberta Southern Railway Company.—Mr. R. B. Bennett.

Bill No. 61, respecting the Simcoe, Grey and Bruce Railway Company.—Mr. Middlebro.

DIVISION OF BILL—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE moved:

That it be an instruction to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, if it thinks fit, to divide Bill No. 17, an Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, into two Bills.

Mr. SPEAKER: With reference to this motion I have the honour to submit the following:

The motion referred to asks the House to give power—by instruction—to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, to divide Bill No. 17 into two Bills.

This Bill was referred to that committee on February the 15th instant, and is consequently in the possession of the committee and is not on the Orders of the House.

On the subject of instruction to committees, May (11th edition, page 48), states that an instruction is necessary to enable a committee to divide a Bill into two Bills; but (see page 481) he further states that:

> A motion for an instruction which seeks to confer upon a committee of the Whole House power to make amendments in a Bill that is already possessed by the committee is out of order and this rule applies to instructions to standing or joint committees.

Bourinot inferentially sustains this position on page 651, 3rd edition, where it is observed that an instruction to a committee should be moved as soon as the Order for the committee has been read by the Clerk, showing that the Bill must then be in possession of the House when instruction is given.

In the case of Bill 17, now that it is in the possession of the committee and not of the House, it is not in order to entertain this motion. This Bill being in the possession of the committee, it would be in order for the committee to report the Bill back to the House with such recommendations as are thought desirable, including that of receiving power to divide the Bill into two Bills. The House could then take such action in the premises as it considers advisable.

A resolution of a similar character to the present appears, however, to have passed the House in 1888, the Bill in question being then in the possession of the committee and no notice of motion having been previously given. There was no ruling given by the Speaker on the propriety of the action taken: indeed, the question was not raised.

I do not think that case constitutes a precedent and consequently I have ruled as above.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that your ruling is that the Railway Committee, which is possessed of the Bill, should send it back to the House for instructions?

Mr. SPEAKER: My ruling is that a Bill must be in possession of the House at the time it gives instructions. Therefore, in this case, it would be in order for the Railway Committee to report the Bill to the House, with such recommendations as they see fit. The House would then have the advantage of the committee's judgment and recommendation and could act upon it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

QUESTIONS.

[Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.]

WAR SUPPLIES—HORSES.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Who was in charge of the purchase of horses for military purposes in the province of Nova Scotia in 1914?
2. How many horses were purchased?
3. In what counties and how many in each county?
4. How much was paid for these horses?
5. How many of them were sent to Valcartier?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. The Principal Veterinary Officer for Canada and his assistants.
2. 428 horses were so purchased.
3. Kings County, 224; Hants, 29; Halifax, 70; Colchester, 27; Pictou, 40; Annapolis, 38.
4. $72,994.
5. 428 horses.

*Mr. BOYER:

1. Did Sir Adam Beck act as purchaser of remounts for the first contingent?
2. If so, how many remounts were purchased by him and what was the average price paid per horse?
3. What was the average per horse to cover all expenses in purchasing the said horses?
4. Were the owners from whom the said horses were purchased paid by Government cheque, or were they paid for by Sir Adam Beck, by his own personal cheque and he afterwards reimbursed?
5. Were the said horses branded at time of purchase or only after arrival at Valcartier?
6. If the latter, why were the regulations laid down in mobilization orders 1913 not complied with?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Yes.
2. 334; $166.08.
3. $7.50 per horse.
4. Paid by order on Bank of Montreal, signed by Sir Adam Beck and the Veterinary Inspecting Officer, and endorsed by the seller of the horse.
5. Horses were branded at the time of purchase.
6. Answered by No. 5.

Mr. NEELY:

1. Did Mr. A. DeWitt Foster, M.P., for King's county, N.S., purchase horses for the Canadian Government for the first contingent?
2. If so, how many horses did he purchase?
3. What was the total amount of money given to Mr. Foster by the Government for purchasing horses?
4. Did Mr. Foster draw this money from the deposit which the Government made in one of the Canadian banks?
5. Did Mr. Foster submit a receipt from each person from whom he purchased a horse?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Mr. Foster was requested by the Principal Veterinary Officer for Canada to assist the Inspecting Veterinary Officers in the Maritime Provinces in the purchase of horses. Mr. Foster consented to assist, but on the understanding it was to be without remuneration.

2. 428 horses were so purchased.

3. None.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5. Yes. Each order on the Bank of Montreal was jointly signed by Mr. Foster and the Veterinary Inspecting Officer, and endorsed by the seller of the horse.

WAR SUPPLIES—CANVAS SHOES.

*Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. From how many firms have the Government ordered canvas shoes for the various contingents now being equipped for service??

2. What are the names of these firms?

3. How many canvas shoes have been ordered from each firm?

4. How many canvas shoes have each firm delivered up to date?

5. How many canvas shoes have each firm yet to deliver?

6. What is the price that each firm is receiving for these canvas shoes?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. Seven.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6:—

Names of Contractors.	No. ordered.	No. delivered to date.	No. still to be delivered.	Price per pair.
	Prs.	Prs.	Prs.	$ cts.
Cook & Fitzgerald	5,000	5,000	Nil.	2 00
Dufresne & Galipeau	5,000	4,639	361	2 00
Dufresne & Locke	10,000	9,748	252	2 00
Jas. Muir Co	10,000	9,961	39	2 00
Brandon Shoe Co	5,000	4,910	90	2 00
Regal Shoe Co	5,000	4,797	203	2 00
E. T. Wright Co	5,000	4,639	361	2 00

WAR SUPPLIES—SLIPPERS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. From how many firms has the Government ordered slippers for the various contingents now being equipped for service?

2. What are the names of these firms?

3. How many slippers have been ordered from each firm?

4. How many slippers have each firm delivered up to date?

5. How many slippers have each firm yet to deliver?

6. What is the price that each firm are receiving for these slippers?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. One.

2. Ames, Holden, McCready, Ltd.

3. 2,350 pairs.

4. 2,348 pairs.

5. 2 pairs.

6. $1.50 per pair.

AMHERST ARMOURY.

Mr. LAW:

1. What was the amount of the tender by Rhodes, Curry and Company, Ltd., for building the armoury at Amherst, N.S.?

2. Has any extra amount been allowed the contractors for the completion of the building? If so, how much?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $81,100.

2. $14,639, of which $125 was for a bevelled strip on floor, and $14,514 for strengthening foundation and increasing thickness of external brick walls and walls of tower; the substitution of brick walls for wooden partitions at end of main hall; substituting brick partitions for lath and plaster in basement, and changing the hot-air heating system to steam heating.

SHELBURNE HARBOUR FOG ALARM.

Mr. LAW:

1. Were tenders called for the repairs to or the construction of the fog whistle at Cape Roseway, Shelburne harbour?

2. If so, who are the tenderers, and what was the amount of each tender?

3. Was the work done by tender and contract? If so, by whom? If not, why not?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes, tenders were publicly invited in July, 1913, for the construction of a wooden fog-alarm building at Cape Roseway, N.S., and one offer was received, namely, from L. Mury & Son, of West Arichat, for the sum of $2,368. This was accepted, but the contractor declined to proceed with the work unless the department allowed an increase of $800 over his tender price. New tenders were invited in the spring of 1914.

2. In 1914 the following tenders were received, namely, Maynard C. Denton & Maurice A. Condon, of Digby, N.S., $3,490; Oliphant J. O'Brien, of Digby, N.S., $3,930; Howard de Champ, of Shelburne, N.S., $4,100.

3. Owing to the fact that the lowest tender was considerably higher than the estimate of the departmental officials, the department decided to have the work performed by day labour, under the supervision of the resident engineer in Nova Scotia.

JORDAN EAST BREAKWATER.

Mr. LAW:

1. Did the Government receive any complaint from any person or persons in respect to any irregularities alleged or otherwise, in the pay-rolls or endorsements on cheques in connection with the repairs to Jordan East breakwater, either in 1913 or 1914?

2. If so, did the Government investigate the matter and give the person or persons making charges or irregularities an opportunity of proving the charges?

3. If so, what was the result of said investigation?

4. Will the Government lay on the table of the House a copy of all correspondence in relation to the matter?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.

2. Yes, investigated by an officer of the Department of Public Works.

3. That there was no foundation for the charges made.

4. Yes.

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN:

1. Is the Government aware that life insurance companies generally are charging additional premiums on men who have enlisted, amounting to $50 on the first $1,000 of insurance, and $200 on the second $1,000 of insurance?

2. Has the Government taken any steps to regulate the additional premiums which may be charged in case of enlistment?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

1. The Government is aware that on policies issued since the outbreak of the war life insurance companies generally are charging additional premiums on men who have enlisted, of $50 per $1,000 of insurance. In the case of a few companies, larger additional premiums are charged in respect of insurance in excess of $2,000, the additional premium on such excess amount being in some cases as high as $200 per $1,000.

2. The Government has taken steps to see that the provisions of the Insurance Act with respect to military service are complied with. The Act, however, does not provide for the regulation of the amount of additional premium which may be charged in case of enlistment.

[Mr. Hazen.]

CARLETON RETAINING WALL.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has any application been received by the Government or any of its members, from the mayor or municipal council of Carleton, Quebec, or from the citizens thereof, for a grant for the retaining wall, consequent upon the damage caused by the high tides of last fall?

2. If so, has any action been taken, and what was that action?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes, application was received under date of December 18, 1914, from Mr. H. J. Martin.

2. No action was taken, as there was no provision made by Parliament to do this work.

STONEY MOUNTAIN PENITENTIARY.

Mr. EDWARDS:

(a) Is the wardenship of Stoney Mountain Penitentiary vacant? (b) If so, how long has it been vacant, and (c) who has been performing the duties of the said office?

Mr. DOHERTY: (a) Yes. (b) Since March 25, 1914. (c) The deputy warden.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHAS. GAUVREAU.

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. Is Mr. Chas. Gauvreau, of Rimouski, employed by the federal Government? If so, since when?

2. What salary does the said Chas. Gauvreau receive, and what is his occupation?

3. By whom was he recommended for appointment?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes, since July 14, 1914.

2. He is paid at the rate of $2 a day as a mail transfer agent.

3. He was recommended for appointment by Mr. H. Boulay, M.P.

RIVER RIGAUD DREDGING.

Mr. BOYER:

(a) Is it the intention of the Government to dredge river Rigaud, this year? (b) If so, by whom was such dredging recommended, and (c) what is the aim sought thereby?

Mr. ROGERS: (a) The matter is under consideration. (b) Mr. De Lery Macdonald. (c) To obtain a uniform depth of 8 feet by a width of 75 feet.

ST. ZOTIQUE WHARF.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to repair during the coming season the wharf at St. Zotique, county of Soulanges?

2. Does the report of the engineer in charge of wharfs show that said wharf is totally unserviceable, in its present condition, to navigation?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. The question will be taken into consideration.

2. No.

WALLACE SPUR LINE.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What amount was voted for the construction of a spur line of railway in Wallace, N.S.?

2. When was this amount first voted?

3. Has any part of the amount been spent in construction? If so, how much?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $60,000.

2. Fiscal year 1912-13.

3. No.

PUGWASH SPUR LINE.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What has been the cost of the railway spur line or siding to the brickyard at Pugwash, N.S.?

2. What have been the receipts?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. $74,568.84 to date.

2. Spur is not yet completed.

TRANSPORT OF PRINCESS PATRICIA REGIMENT.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. Was the SS. Megantic chartered to convey the Princess Patricia Regiment to England? If so, at what date, and upon what terms?

2. Did the regiment embark at Montreal, disembark at Quebec, and remain at or near the latter city until the date of sailing of all the troops comprising the first Canadian expeditionary force?

3. Was the detention of the said regiment due to the fact that a convoy could not be provided to escort the SS. Megantic on a special trip distant from the voyage of the other vessels hired to transport the rest of the troops?

4. If so, why was the Megantic hired, and the said regiment embarked before arrangements for a convoy had been made?

5. Were the owners of the Megantic paid for the interrupted trip across the Atlantic? If so, what amount was paid, and when?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. No, she was not chartered. On the 25th August, 1914, the Oceanic Steamship Navigation Company agreed to convey the Princess Patricias Light Infantry from Montreal to Liverpool on the steamship Megantic, sailing August 29. The rates to be charged were the usual passenger rates.

2. The regiment did embark at Montreal and disembarked at Quebec. They were placed under canvas at Levis until the first contingent sailed for England.

3 and 4. These questions relate to matters which are the subject of secret communications, and with regard thereto we have the distinct request of the War Office and of the Admiralty, expressed in a very earnest manner, that such communications should not be brought down to Parliament at the present time.

5. The owners were paid $54,754.25 on 28th November, 1914.

THE FARMERS BANK.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

Is it the intention of the Government to introduce legislation during the present session with a view to reimburse the depositors of the defunct Farmers Bank?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is not the intention to introduce legislation during the present session for the purpose mentioned.

CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONERSHIP.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

Is it the intention of the Government to appoint a successor to Lord Strathcona as High Commissioner? If so, when?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Some months previous to the outbreak of war Sir George Perley, who is a member of the Government without portfolio, had proceeded to London under authority of an Order in Council for the purpose of discharging the duties of High Commissioner. He remained in the discharge of these functions up to the time of the outbreak of war, and since then he has so continued. His service during that time has been of very great advantage to the whole country, as it has afforded a means of co-operation between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Canada which otherwise would not have been possible. At the time when Mr. Perley proceeded to London it was in order to consider the status of the High Commissioner's office with a view of possibly making certain modifications or changes therein. Until his colleagues, and especially myself, have had an opportunity of discussing that subject with him, the arrangements which have continued since last April or May will still continue.

WAGES AT VALCARTIER.

*Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Has the Department of Labour made an investigation in respect of work done in Valcartier respecting the fair wage clause?

2. If so, of what nature was the report?

Mr. CROTHERS:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

RECRUITING AT NEW WATERFORD.

Mr. CARROLL:

1. When was Dr. J. C. Morrison appointed examining physician for recruits at New Waterford, Cape Breton South, Nova Scotia?
2. When was he dismissed?
3. Why was he dismissed?

Major-General HUGHES:

1. February 8, 1915.

2. He was relieved from duty on the 15th February, 1915.

3. Dr. Morrison was not a member of the Army Medical Corps, and another medical officer, Dr. Macleod, had been nominated before Dr. Morrison.

WINNIPEG IMMIGRATION OFFICE DISMISSALS.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. How many officials have been dismissed from the immigration service at Winnipeg, since August 1, 1914?
2. What are the names of those dismissed, their nationality and their length of service?
3. What others have been appointed in place of those dismissed, and what is the nationality of each?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Two dismissed and six indefinitely suspended, of whom four since have been reinstated.

2. Mary Ann Walsh, British, in service since September 1, 1906. Ivan Petrushevich, Ruthenian, in service since June 15, 1914.

3. None.

TEMISCOUATA RURAL MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. How many tenders for the rural mail service at St. Jean-de-Dieu, Temiscouata, did the Post Office Department receive?
2. What was the amount stipulated in each tender?
3. To whom was the contract awarded?
4. Was it the lowest tender?

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Nine tenders were received.

2. Joseph Ouellet, $400, reduced to $345; Joseph Jean, $350; Jean Rosseau, $350; Cyrille Rioux, $448; Joseph D'Auteuil, $450; Timothe Rioux, $450; Theophile Sirois, $500; Pierre Deschenes, $500; Joseph Dumas, $525.

3. Joseph Ouellet, at the rate of his reduced tender.

4. It was the lowest offer received.

FRASERVILLE HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

For what reason was the sum of $50,000, contained in the estimates of 1913-14 in connection with proposed improvements of the Fraserville harbour, River du Loup, not expended last year??

[Mr. Crothers.]

Mr. ROGERS:

The cost of the work was so much greater than was anticipated that it was deemed advisable to again inquire into the matter before calling for tenders.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all correspondence, petitions and documents since the 31st of October, 1912, relating in any way whatever to the proposed public wharf at Lower Woods Harbour?

Mr. Law: For a copy of pay-rolls and all correspondence and vouchers in connection with the repairs of Jordan breakwater, Shelburne county, for which Leander McKenzie was contractor of works or foreman.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all correspondence, petitions, documents, etc., in connection with a petition of Donald Williams and others in respect to the regulation of fish traps in Green harbour and vicinity.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all pay-rolls, vouchers in detail, correspondence and all other documents in connection with the following public works in Shelburne: Breakwater or wharf at East Green harbour; shed on public wharf at Shelburne, and repairs to Gunning Cove wharf.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all letters, papers and documents relating to the dismissal of the following officers in Shelburne county, N.S.: Wm. L. Smith, lightkeeper, Baccaro, N.S.; J. A. Arechia, harbour master, Lowerwoods harbour, and J. C. Morrison, harbour master, Shelburne, N.S.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all tenders, contracts, pay-rolls, vouchers, letters, correspondence papers and documents, relating to the following public works in Shelburne county: breakwater and wharf at Frudes pont; breakwater and wharf at Jordan east; wharf at Shelburne; wharf at Port Clyde; breakwater at Blanche Point; wharf at Centreville; wharf at West Head; cribwork at Mathews lake, and clearing channel at Round bay.

Mr. Law: For a return showing the amounts in detail paid to Ward Fisher, of Shelburne, N.S., fishery inspector, for the years 1912 and 1913, for salary, office expenses, travelling expenses, and all other expenses.

Mr. Kyte: For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and petitions relating to the appointment of Alfred Bishop as farm foreman, or in any other capacity at the experimental station at Kemptville, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and pay-rolls in connection with the repairs and other work on the breakwater at Sandford, Yarmouth county, N.S., during the year 1914.

Mr. Law: For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and pay-rolls in connection with repars and extension of breakwater at Bluff Head, Yarmouth county, N.S., during year 1914.

Mr. German: For a copy of all correspondence between the Government, or any member or department thereof, and P. W. Ellis and Company of Toronto, for the purchase of supplies for the Militia Department since the 1st of August, 1914, the amount of commission paid or agreed to be paid to the said P. W. Ellis and Company on the purchase of supplies for the Militia Department of Canada since the 1st of August, 1914, and the nature of all supplies furnished the Department of Militia by said

P. W. Ellis and Company either by themselves or through them on commission, and from whom purchased.

Mr. Lemieux: For a return showing:

1. Who the remount commissioners are for Western and Eastern Canada respectively.

2. When and by whom they were appointed, and what their general instructions were.

3. Why were the mobilization orders 1913, which provide for the purchase of remounts, ignored and civilians put in charge of the purchase of remounts.

4. The names of the purchasers and inspecting veterinary officers appointed by the remount commissioner for Eastern Canada, in the various remount divisions.

5. If any of the purchasers and inspecting veterinary officers have been stopped buying. If so, what their names are, and the reasons given by the remount commissioner for his action.

6. How many horses have been purchased between December 1 and January 21, in each remount division in Eastern Canada, and the average price paid per horse.

7. What the average cost per horse is in each remount division to cover the expenses, including pay or allowances and all travelling and other expenses, between the said dates.

Mr. Law: For a return showing:

1. If the Government ever leased any land at or near Shelburne, Nova Scotia, known as the Barracks property, to the town of Shelburne.

2. If so, when, at what rental, and for how long.

3. If said lease is now in force?

4. If the Government has sold any of the standing timber on this property.

5. If so, when, to whom, and at what price.

6. How long the purchaser has to remove it.

7. What is the minimum size at the stump, sold.

8. If the Government has ever had the property cruised by competent timber cruiser.

9. If so, by whom, and when.

10. If the timber on said property was advertised for sale, and tenders were asked for, or any opportunity afforded to other prospective buyers to bid for this timber.

11. If any other offers were received.

12. If the town of Shelburne was notified before the sale took place. If so, on what date?

13. How much timber the Government estimates to be on this property.

14, What steps the Government intends to take to compute the quantity of timber cut from this property.

15. If the Government is aware that timber is now being cut from this property by a person or firm who are cutting timber from private property adjoining said Barracks property.

16. What steps are being taken by the Government to be sure that in the case the logs are kept separate from those coming from the adjoining lot, for the purpose of having accurate count and scale.

17. If the Government will bring down a copy if all correspondence, cruisers' reports and contracts in relation to the sale of this timber.

Mr. Lemieux: For a return showing:

1. From how many firms the Government have ordered ankle boots for the various contingents now being equipped for service.

2. The names of these firms.

3. How many ankle boots have been ordered from each firm.

4. How many ankle boots each firm have delivered up to date.

5. How many ankle boots each firm have yet to deliver.

6. The price that each firm is receiving for these ankle boots.

CANADIAN PATRIOTIC FUND AMENDMENT BILL.

Bill No. 39, to amend the Canadian Patriotic Fund Act, 1914.—Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice)—read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Sevigny in the Chair.

Mr. DOHERTY: I might just repeat the formal explanation I gave in introducing this Bill. The provisions of this amendment empower the corporation to assist incapacitated soldiers who may return from the war, and widows, children and dependent relatives of men who may be killed on active service. It also empowers the corporation to give assistance to the wives, children and dependent relatives of residents of Newfoundland who are engaged on active service in the military or naval forces of Canada. As the Act now stands, the powers of the corporation are limited to assisting the wives, children and dependent relatives of men on active service, so that an incapacitated man is not provided for, nor are the widows and children of the men who may be killed. Furthermore, under the present Act the powers of the corporation are limited to assisting the wives, children and dependent relatives of residents of Canada only.

Mr. CARROLL. Will the relatives of men on active service at the front, who are partially dependent upon the wages of these men, get anything from the patriotic fund?

Mr. DOHERTY: The Act says that dependent relatives may be assisted. I do nor think that the Act makes any express provision for those who are partially dependent.

Mr. CARROLL: I understand that applications have been made to certain local committees in different parts of the country for relief from this fund and that the best the applicants could do was to give evidence that they were partially dependent on the wages of their sons and they were refused any assistance.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not very familiar with the actual operation of the Act, but perhaps my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), will explain how the work is carried on.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps it might be well if the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, would take this opportunity of making a statement of what has been done with the patriotic fund up to date.

Mr. AMES: If the House desires to have a statement of that character, in my capacity as honorary secretary of the fund, I shall be very glad to give it. The House will remember that towards the end of the last session held in August authority for the creation of this fund was given. At the present time probably ninety per cent of the Dominion of Canada is covered either by branches of the patriotic fund or by auxiliary organizations run on the same lines. We have an office in Ottawa which acts as a clearing house, and all cases that are referred to us are sent on to the proper organization which is a branch of our own organization or an affiliated association. We adopt, generally speaking, a uniform system in dealing with all these cases and we are constantly sending out from the head office memoranda for the guidance of the various branches. I shall be very glad to deal with any question which any hon. gentleman desires to raise. The story in detail would be a very long one but any questions that any hon. gentleman may wish to bring up I shall be most happy to deal with. The hon. member for Cape Breton, South (Mr. Carroll), raised a point a moment ago. In reply to his question I would say that generally speaking, the local committee of each branch is, within certain limits, a law unto itself dealing with applications for relief. We issue suggestions from the head office to them and we tell them how other branches are operating their relief funds. The principles upon which relief is given are these: The first question that is always asked is "Is the family in need, or would the family be in need if there was no patriotic fund?" If it is found that the family are getting along very well there would be no claim upon the fund. But if it is the case that in consequence of the departure of soldiers for the war a family is falling below the scale of decent subsistence then that family would have a claim upon the fund. The next question which would be asked is: Was the family dependent on the soldier? If a wife and children have been wholly dependent upon a man who has gone to the front there would be no question. If it is a widowed mother who is entirely dependent upon the soldier son who has enlisted there would be no question; she would rank both with the Government and with us the same as the wife and children. But we have a certain number of complicated cases of what you might call partial dependency that are dealt with usually by the local branch committee upon suggestions from the head office. In a case of partial dependency where a son has gone to the war, the question usually asked is: How much does the family fall below the scale of decent subsistence in consequence of this boy having gone to the war? If he has turned in $5 a week and his own board was worth $3 the fund would make up the other $2 and put the family in the same position as they would have been in if the boy had not gone to the front. These cases of partial dependency are rather difficult to deal with, and they are usually taken up by the local committees along some such lines as I have indicated.

Mr. GRAHAM: How much has been collected and expended?

Mr. AMES: As nearly as we can judge at present, in round figures, there is at the disposition of our honorary treasurer about $2,700,000, and there has been expended to date about $800,000, leaving a net cash balance on hand of about $1,900,000. We have resources which we expect will produce about as much more. Consequently, the fund will probably be self-sustaining to the end of the present year, and it is now mainly a question of securing the co-operation of a few communities that have not as yet contributed, on the basis that all take part in the burden before any are asked for the second time to contribute.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the proportion received by dependents of soldiers from the Government in the way of separation allowance, or assigned pay, and that received from the patriotic fund?

Mr. AMES: In order to answer that question adequately it would be necessary to classify the soldiers' families in this way: first, families of British reservists; second, French reservists; third, Belgian reservists; then Canadian Overseas contingents, and, finally, Canadians who are called out for home service whether they volunteer to go or not. Besides these there are men in the naval service. The Government, in the case of overseas service, gives a separation allowance of $20 a month to every wife or widowed mother. We take a family and consider the question with a view to the cost of living in a particular neighbourhood. We would consider that in Montreal a woman with three children, one twelve years of age, one eight, and one four, was entitled to $45 a month from all sources in order to maintain a decent scale of living. The Government gives $20 and the patriotic fund would give her $25. When we get to the western provinces we authorized a scale which is about 25 per cent higher because we found by accurate comparison that the cost of living in Saskatchewan and British Columbia—not so much in Alberta—was about twenty or twenty-five per cent higher than in the large cities in the east.

An hon. MEMBER: Where do you draw the line?

Mr. AMES: At Lake Superior. As a general thing, the rule we have with the local committees is this: Our committees are composed of some of the best men in each province, and we say to the committee: determine what you consider to be the amount necessary for a typical family to decently live upon in your province; you can do it better than we can; decide this; fix the amount at $50 or $40 or whatever you may decide upon. The Government gives Canadians $20, the Imperial Government gives Reservists about $15, the French Government about $12, and the Belgian Government gives nothing at all. We make up the difference in each of these cases in order that a family may be enabled to maintain a decent scale of living.

Mr. OLIVER: As it appears to me the responsibility of caring for the dependents of men who are serving the country in a military way at the present time rests primarily upon the State and private efforts should not be called upon to more than supplement the provision made by the State. Does the State at the present time undertake the major provision for the dependents of soldiers, or has the major provision to be made up by subscriptions of citizens? I think it is entirely desirable from every point of view that it should be distinctly understood on all hands that the obligation of maintenance of soldiers' dependents is an obligation of the state, and that private generosity should not be drawn upon except to a supplementary extent and for supplementary purposes.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The separation allowance established in this country was fixed by reference to that of the United Kingdom, but it was made somewhat larger here than in the United Kingdom by reason of the fact that the conditions here as compared with those in the old country would justify it. In addition to that, the soldiers in some cases assign a portion of their pay. If I remember correctly, an Order in Council was subsequently passed to deal with cases in which pay was not assigned, providing that a certain proportion of the pay should be appropriated for the support of the soldier's dependents in cases of the character to which my hon. friend has referred. I shall be glad later on to lay a copy of the Order in Council on the table. It was passed purely for the reason that in a proportion of cases, I think not a large proportion, no portion of the pay was being assigned, and therefore the depend nts were left to be taken care of by the separation allowances, supplemented by the Canadian patriotic fund. It was felt that as the great majority of the soldiers did assign a portion of their pay, and as that seemed the proper course to pursue, an order should be made in regard to it, and an order was so made.

Mr. OLIVER: Was the order made to divert a portion of the soldier's pay to his family?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It was made so that a portion of the soldier's pay could be appropriated for the support of his family during his absence.

Mr. OLIVER: I have no desire to delay the committee, nor have I any desire to press unduly for information that I am quite aware it would be difficult to get; but this is a far-reaching matter, and I think that here and now is as good a place as any to get a fairly good general understanding as to what are to be considered the obligations of the state and the obligations of private citizens. I do not wish to criticise the Government or the gentlemen who are interested in the patriotic fund to any degree, but I take this opportunity of stating that within the range of my knowledge, and according to my judgment, the conditions of life from which our soldiers have enlisted differ materially from the conditions of life from which were enlisted the soldiers of the United Kingdom, to whose case the separation allowance which was used as the basis of calculation in fixing our separation allowance applied. I do not think that the fact that the present separation allowance was considered a proper allowance in the United Kingdom, under the circumstances existing before this war occurred, was a sufficient ground for believing that a certain percentage of advance upon that allowance was a proper allowance in Canada when and where the extraordinary circumstances surrounding this war were taking place. The proof that the view I express is correct, is, that the British Government has found it necessary to recognize the new conditions surrounding enlistment in the army for the present war, and have seen fit—and no doubt not without the greatest necessity for it—to revise their provisions in regard to separation allowance. We could not tell beforehand—I do not expect even this Government to know everything in advance—but the war has been in progress for six months; we have had the separation allowance in operation, we have had the assignment of men's pay, we have had the patriotic fund raised generously throughout the country and administered I am sure with the very best of intentions, and I have no doubt capably administered, so that to-day we must know a great deal more about this matter of taking care of the dependents of those who are fighting our battles than we did in August last. While I quite readily accept the amendments to the Bill which we are now considering, I still think that there is necessary a very considerable revision of the provisions which have been made for the maintenance of the dependents of soldiers who are now serving their country, or who may be hereafter expected to serve their country. While I am quite aware that this legislation is not legislation providing for separation allowances from the treasury, I think this is a proper time to put on record the views I hold, and hold very strongly, that time having elapsed, and conditions having become known, it is in order that there should be a readjustment of the statutory arrangements for the maintenance of dependents of soldiers in the service of their country, that would render the efforts of the patriotic fund and those who are interested in it a supplementary source and not, as they appear to me at the present time to be, the principal source of support of the dependents of the soldiers who are at the front. I wish to say, as strongly as I can, that the support of these dependents is the duty of the state, and that the interests of the state require that that duty shall be discharged freely and generously, with, of course, good judgment and care. I hope that there will be legislation both in regard to separation allowances and maintenance of dependents, and that it will be based on conditions as they exist in this country, and as they have been found to exist in the operation of our laws in this matter up to the present time, rather than upon the legislation and regulations prevailing in the United Kingdom which were based on a totally different condition of affairs.

Mr. AMES: It appears to me that the Government has acted very generously in the matter of separation allowances. As I understand the Government is to-day paying 20,000 separation allowances, while the Canadian patriotic fund is carrying between 10,000 and 11,000 families, so that about half of the dependent families of the soldiers are not coming to the patriotic fund at all. That would go to prove that the Government, in making the basic appropriation of $20 applicable everywhere, was covering pretty nearly half of the cases. To overpay that half would be as bad as to underpay the other half. The Government, moreover, has no flexibility. It would have to pay $20 to a soldier's wife just the same, whether she lived in a rich rural community in the East where the cost of living was low, or in the Yukon or in a mining district in British Columbia where the cost of living was very high. The Government can not discriminate and say that for this area the separation allowance shall be $20, for that area $25, for that $30, and so on. The patriotic fund comes on afterwards and acts with a great deal of flexibility, on the best local advice that can be secured. It takes each family by itself and asks the simple question: Considering that the family gets $20 from the Government, how much more is needed to bring your family up to a decent scale of existence? One wife may have no family, and $10 added to the $20 separation allowance may be all that she requires. Another wife may have ten children, and the patriotic fund takes into consideration the fact that this woman needs a great deal more to support her than the first, although the Government gives both the same separation allowance. The Government has acted very wisely in giving a basic $20 to each dependent family whether it needs it or not, and the patriotic fund follows only in cases where further assistance is required.

You have only to read the casualty lists to see how many of our soldiers have their next of kin in the old country. For those families probably $20 is enough, and we do not send any money to England from the patriotic fund, because it is apparently not necessary to do so. The few cases of hardship that we hear of in England are provided for by reciprocal arrangement with the Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Association. We care for the wives and dependents of old country reservists here, and that Association cares for our soldiers' wives and dependents in the old country in cases where $20 is not quite sufficient.

This combination of Government effort and local philanthropy works extremely well. It has been a great blessing to many people in Canada to have an opportunity to contribute to the patriotic fund. It has done many people a world of good, because many a one who could not fight wanted to have an opportunity of helping in some way. Many a man, who is saving from month to month and making a monthly contribution, has the satisfaction of knowing that, while he does not go to the front himself, he is providing for the wife and family of some other fellow who has joined.

Mr. W.H. BENNETT: This discussion will perhaps clear the air a little in the province of Ontario. The Toronto evening papers, which as a rule are very widely 4 p.m. read by the working classes, have been filled with letters in regard to what is being paid in the way of separation allowances. I regret that a great many of these letters have been anonymous, but I am sure a full statement has not yet been placed before the people of this country as to how the different funds stand.

According to my information, the amounts payable to-day to officers and privates are as follows. A major is paid $150 a month as pay, and receives in addition a separation allowance of $60, making a total of $210 a month. A captain is paid $105 a month, plus a separation allowance of $20 a month. A lieutenant is paid $75 a month with a separation allowance of $40 a month. A private draws about $35 a month, with a separation allowance of $20 a month. If these men hand over all their wages to their families, it means that the family of a major receives $210 a month, the family of a captain $155 a month, the family of a lieutenant $150, and the family of the man behind the gun $55. In my town, and in many other towns, the admirers of the man behind the gun consider it unfair that the wife of a major should be drawing $210 a month for pay and separation allowance, while the family of the poor private gets only a total of $55. I would ask the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) what proportion of this fund so far has gone to the families of officers, and what amount approximately to the families of privates, and also, if the statement is correct—because I have seen it so stated in the newspapers—that in any town where no contribution has been made to the patriotic fund, any person being the relative either of a private or of an officer who makes application to the patriotic fund is told: As your town has not contributed to this patriotic fund, you are stopped from participation in it. If such is the case, it is unfair, in view of the fact that the Government has paid a considerable amount towards this fund.

Mr. AMES: It has paid nothing.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT: I understood there was a vote last session, but I am in error as to that. The wife and family of the private should get more money from the separation allowance, because his pay is so small as compared with the pay of an officer.

Mr. NESBITT: Was the hon. gentleman right in stating that the Government had paid something towards the patriotic fund?

Mr. BENNETT: I was in error as to that. I thought that it had contributed $1,000,000 last session.

Mr. AMES: The Government has contributed nothing whatever to the patriotic fund. Many municipalities and towns have been extremely generous, and so have individuals.

I do not think we have on our list a single case of a major or any one of higher rank than a major receiving assistance from the patriotic fund. A case might arise of some sudden call being made on the wife of a major, in his absence, for an insurance premium or something of that sort. In such a case the patriotic fund might make a special grant. Generally speaking, we have assisted very few officers. Some captains' and lieutenants' families have been assisted; but every case in which an officer's family has been assisted has been made the subject of inquiry by a special committee at Ottawa. It has been said that, if persons write from a community that has given no subscription to the patriotic fund, they are likely to get a reply to the effect that the fund refuses to assist them. That is putting the matter rather baldly, but there is a germ of truth in it. Where a community, like the county of Simcoe, for example, has through its county council set apart a vote of $25,000 for the patriotic fund, $4,000 of which has been distributed and $21,000 of which is not being distributed as yet in any way, if that community writes asking us to take care of some of its cases, we are very liable to reply: "Take care of your own." Wherever it has been impossible to create a local organization—and there are two towns in Canada, so far, that have absolutely refused to do anything for their people—we have selected a leading patriotic citizen in the town and asked him to administer our fund, and we send him each week all that is needed for the soldiers' wives there, even though these towns have never given a dollar and never will.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT: I forgot, while on my feet, to make a statement regarding my own town. Before this patriotic fund was launched and circulars sent out, an appeal was made—as I recollect it—for the Hospital Ship Fund. In my own town that was responded to very liberally—I think nearly $1,000 was subscribed. Then came the Belgian fund, and I think that upwards of $700 was subscribed for that; so the town was not doing badly. When the further appeal was made for the patriotic fund, in view of the fact which was well-known, that the officers and soldiers were going along the line of the figures I have given and they, the soldiers, had, in the main, given their pay to their families, it was thought it would be difficult to launch a third contribution for the patriotic fund. For that reason the town of Midland did not make any grant to the patriotic fund. As to the grant of the County Council of Simcoe, I have not the details of that grant before me, but I understand that it was apportioned so much to the patriotic fund, so much to the Belgian relief fund and so much for these other funds, all of which have in view the laudable purpose of assisting those engaged and who have suffered in the war.

Mr. MARCIL: Could the hon. member for St. Antoine give us the figures by provinces?

Mr. AMES: I could not give that exactly up to date. But up to the 1st of February, the cash actually received here amounted to about $1,035,000 for Quebec, $1,010,000 for Ontario, and contributions from the other provinces the amounts of which I do not recollect, making a total of about $2,500,000. Since then we have been in receipt of very large subscriptions from many places in Ontario, and to-day Ontario has probably subscribed $1,250,000 and Quebec about the same.

[Mr. Ames.]

Mr. MARCIL: There is a very laudable emulation between the two provinces in this matter.

Mr. AMES: There is.

Mr. MARCIL: Could the hon. gentleman also give us the amounts subscribed to the other funds by Quebec and the other provinces?

Mr. MACDONALD: I see in the press at various times statements as to aid being refused from the patriotic fund to wives of men who have gone to the front if the marriage took place after enlistment and after a certain date. I would like to know if there has been any such refusal, and what the position of the fund is in regard to a soldier who has married, no matter what date.

Mr. AMES: The fund has followed exactly the path blazed by the Government in that respect. The Government gave notice, about the middle of January, that after the 28th of January, it would not recognize marriages which took place after enlistment, except in special cases certified to as having taken place with the consent of the colonel commanding. We recognize the family as the Government recognizes it for separation allowance.

Mr. MACDONALD: Looking at the statute passed in August last, I do not find in section 3 any power to discriminate in the matter:

> The object of the fund is to assist in case of need the wives, children and dependent relatives of officers and men who may be in active service.

I very much doubt the wisdom of the patriotic fund declining to assist a woman who may become the wife of a soldier at any time previous to his leaving this country and going abroad. I can see that, from a military standpoint, it may be necessary to make regulations with regard to the marriage of soldiers, as to the consent of the colonel or officers of the regiment. But the idea of the patriotic fund is to assist cases of actual need, and one can readily imagine conditions under which any soldier's wife would be justified in coming forward for assistance and in expecting that assistance from the patriotic fund.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: So far as the general rule is concerned, my hon. friend doubtless knows that in the British army a certain number of men in each regiment are allowed to marry, and those who marry with the consent of the commanding officer—

Mr. MACDONALD: Marry "on the strength of the regiment."

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: For those that marry on the strength of the regiment provision is made for the support of their family. But a man who marries without leave is said to marry not on the strength of the regiment, and no provision is made for the support of his wife and family. I know that in garrison towns distressing conditions often arise because women have married soldiers and no provision is made for them under the regulations. I should be glad to lay on the table the Order in Council to which my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has alluded. I appreciate the force of what my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) has said, and I hope he will also appreciate the consideration that there has been some apprehension that marriages might be rather hurriedly contracted, especially abroad, and a soldier might occasionally be made a victim in an undesirable way. Some intimation of that was given to the Government, and the Order in Council was passed, I think, by reason of the desire to protect and assist the soldier by some such regulation.

Mr. MACDONALD: I apprehend that what my right hon. friend says is that the Order in Council provides for aid being given to the wife where the marriage took place with the consent of the commanding officer.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I cannot remember the exact terms. It was brought to us on the recommendation of the officers of the department, by whom it had been considered very carefully. We also gave it very careful consideration. If I remember it well, it amounted to this, that up to the time the Order in Council was passed all marriages that had been contracted were to be recognized and the families provided for. But after that date there were certain restrictions which we thought reasonable and in the interest of the soldier himself. However, I will bring down the Order in Council, that its exact terms may be brought to the attention of every hon. member of the House.

Mr. KYTE: Will the hon. member for St. Antoine be good enough to explain what course an application for separation allowance has to take? The municipalities of Nova Scotia were asked to forward their contributions to the treasurer of the fund at Halifax, who is the general manager of one of the banks. Applications have been made to the local committee in the town in which I live. After such an application has been passed upon, is it proper to send it to Halifax, or should it be sent to the central committee of the fund at Ottawa?

Mr. AMES: So far as Nova Scotia is concerned, we have a provincial organization which has a branch in every one of the eighteen counties. Moneys raised in Nova Scotia are all placed in the bank at Halifax, where they are under the control of the Hon. W. T. White, our treasurer. Halifax once a month makes an estimate of the amount required by the eighteen branches. That is released for distribution, and is sent in bulk sums to the eighteen counties. It is then distributed by the local relief committee, and at the end of the month each local relief committee is expected to give a detailed statement on forms furnished by us. These returns are checked by our accountant and if they are correct then an advance is made for the next month and we again receive a detailed statement.

Mr. KYTE: Have the contributions to the fund made in Nova Scotia been forwarded to Ottawa?

Mr. AMES: No, $50,000 is now at Halifax under the control of Mr. White, and it may be either left there or brought here, whichever he wishes to do. We usually leave them a working balance and send each month what they need for any one province. The underlying principle of the patriotic fund is for every community to make a general subscription and to put it all in the common fund. After that every community has a right to draw on the fund so long as there is a dollar there in proportion to their needs. We do not feel that the ability of communities to give in money or in men is always the same. One community may be able to send a large number of men but may not be able to contribute largely to the fund. We do not feel that a community which contributes $5,000 to the fund and draws $10,000 from it is in the slightest degree inferior to a community that gives $10,000 to the fund and draws $5,000.

Mr. WILCOX: What arrangement is made as to assistance to wives and families of soldiers when they live in the United States? I think about nine hundred have enlisted from Windsor of whom some two or three hundred come from the United States and their families reside in the United States. They are British subjects and I would like to know if the families of those who reside in the United States are receiving that assistance, and if so, by what means the assistance is contributed.

Mr. AMES: There are funds similar to ours in Great Britain, in Newfoundland and in the United States and we have a reciprocity of exchange between them. For example, we look after all the wives of British reservists here in Canada and the British Association looks after the wives of Canadian volunteers who have been left in their country. We have a similar arrangement in the United States. The Canadian Society of New York has collected a considerable sum of money in the United States and so likewise has the British Imperial Relief Fund of New England in Boston, where I understand our Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) speaks to-morrow night for the benefit of that fund. These organizations take care of all families left in the United States of men who enlist in our Canadian forces and besides that they have, in some cases sent us of their surplus funds as well. So the people referred to in Detroit can be all cared for through the American corresponding agency with which we deal.

Mr. TURRIFF: Has the separation allowance been paid to the families of men who did not go with the first contingent? I have heard it repeated on several occasions that a number of men who joined the service when the first contingent was raised, expecting to go to the front, did not pass the final medical examination and were therefore not sent; but in the meantime the names of their wives or families had been handed in for the separation allowance and in a number of cases the separation allowance has been paid. The report I heard was that after the first contingent left, for a considerable time, there was no complete list of those who had gone. Matters are being cleared up here in connection with the patriotic fund and I think it well, if that has not taken place, that a statement to that effect should be made.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I could not tell my hon. friend at the moment whether any cases of that kind have occurred. Of course if the money was paid under such circumstances it would be through inadvertence and in the belief that the men had gone to the front. I heard some rumour of it myself but was not able to verify it. I shall be very glad to make inquiry and let my hon. friend know later whether any such instance had actually occurred.

Mr. OLIVER: I wish to make a further remark in reply to my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). I hold that the responsibility for the maintenance of dependents of soldiers on service is a responsibility of the State and should be discharged by the State. My hon. friend says that the Government cannot grade its aid according to conditions and circumstances as can the committee of the patriotic fund. I think my hon. friend is placing a limitation upon the Government which I would not like to place on it. I do not know why a committee of the Government cannot use at least as good judgment with such a fund as this as a committee organized under the terms of this statute. The main point that I want to bring to the attention of the House is that the very fact that these allowances from the patriotic fund are raised or lowered, are given or withheld, according to the judgment of private individuals, puts the fact of the receipt of aid from the patriotic fund on a different basis from an allowance from the State. I do not intend to suggest that it is the intention of the Government to continue to deal with the matter in that way, but if the Government should take such a stand; which is virtually equivalent to saying that the dependents of those who have sacrificed themselves and their prospects for the benefit of the country shall be left as dependents on charity, they are certainly not doing credit to either themselves or the country. The conditions of enlistment for this war are different from the conditions of enlistment under ordinary occasions in military service. We have need to-day of every man who can give his services, whatever rank of life he may be in, We are looking for the best and are not content with anything but the best.

Mr. WILCOX: The county council of the county of Essex appropriated $20,000 for this fund. In what way would that constitute charity more than if it had been given by the Government of Canada, to be applied absolutely to the same use?

Mr. OLIVER: That is not the point in question. If the County Council of Essex raises $40,000 by taxation, to be applied to the support of soldiers' dependents in that or any other county, it is exactly the same as if the money had been raised by this Government or by a provincial government. But the intent of the patriotic fund is that it shall represent private contributions. I agree with everything my hon. friend has said as to the desirability of there being such a fund, which confers not only a benefit on soldiers' dependents, but affords to those who are neither soldiers nor dependents the privilege of contributing to the fund for the good of their own souls. But the point is that when that fund comes to be the larger part of the support of the dependents, they are then in the position of being receivers of charity rather than in the position of receiving payment of a debt which the country owes to them. I want to see the dependents of the soldiers who have gone to the front receive on the responsibility of the state to whom they are giving their services whatever consideration they are entitled to, according to the circumstances of the country and their own circumstances. If over and above that, private individuals or organizations see fit to come forward and supplement what has been done, well and good; it is entirely to their credit to do so. But I still say that the obligation of taking care of dependents of soldiers at the front rests primarily on the state, and that that duty should be discharged by the state as a sacred obligation and, with reasonable limitations, discharged to the full. I have seen it stated in the papers that in some parts of Canada recruiting for our contingents is not as rapid as is desirable. No one need go far to believe that one of the reasons for that is the fact that the dependents of men who have enlisted are not being provided for by the state as an obligation, but are dependent upon the good will and good offices of Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones or Mr. Robertson who holds the position of distributor of the patriotic fund. They do not like that, and we cannot expect them to. We are not enlisting ordinary soldiers for ordinary military service. We are facing a most extraordinary condition, and we must face it accordingly. It is not a time to quibble or to count cents. It is a time when we who ask our fellow citizens to take the risks or make the sacrifices of military service should take upon ourselves the responsibility of saying: The state is behind you, for you are doing the service of the state.

Mr. W. F. NICKLE (Kingston): Coming as I do from a riding that has been liberal in its contribution of men for this cause, and not illiberal in its contribution of money towards the patriotic fund, I regret exceedingly that the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has let it go to the country through this House that those who are receiving advantage from the patriotic fund are the recipients of charity. If it is charity that the dependents of the men at the front are receiving from the Canadian patriotic fund, it follows inevitably that it is given not as a bounty, but as a dole to those who are poor and needy. If I catch the meaning of the patriotic fund at all, it is this: the movers behind the scheme recognized that the state owed to the dependents at home an adequate remuneration in the ordinary conditions of life, but that upon those who were able to give and were not able to go there devolved the duty of supplementing this amount in the extraordinary and unusual case. I therefore say that the money that is going to the dependents of our soldiers is not going as a charity. It is going as philanthropy; it may be going as a benevolence; but it is going as the grateful gift of the people of the community, who feel that those who have gone to the front have given much in the cause of the community and of the Empire, and that those who have means and stay at home should contribute to this national fund. In the riding I have the honour to represent, the patriotic fund has never been regarded as a charity. When we made solicitation of the people of Kingston, it was clearly put before them that it was their duty to give, and that we wanted the fund to be the spontaneous gift of a grateful people. And in that city of some twenty thousand people, $50,000, or $2.50 a head, was raised for this fund. As the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has said, through its elasticity the fund has relieved very much distress. It has a tremendous advantage in that what is being done is not done as the hon. member for Edmonton says, through the good offices of the local organizations, but through a body which acts judicially and in such a way that the needs and requirements of those who receive are not known to the general public. Through the elasticity of the compassionate allowance much has been done to relieve the distress of delicate women and delicate children. Speaking for my own community—if I may be permitted to speak for them, and possibly I should speak for them alone, as my experience in connection with the fund is practically confined to Kingston—I may say that the patriotic fund has been a God-send to numbers of people who have been relieved in a most trying time and in such a way that only a few knew their need, and those of us who gave to the fund had the tremendous satisfaction of feeling that we were doing something in the cause of the community and of the Empire.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): I feel that there is a good deal of common sense and sound reasoning in the argument of my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). There is undoubtedly a good deal of dissatisfaction in the country over the distribution of the Canadian patriotic fund. There is a feeling that it is being done by favour, and that those counties which have contributed most generously towards it are securing the best treatment. Some other hon. member has mentioned that help from the fund for the dependents of any man on foreign service, depends entirely on whether his county has sufficiently responded. I might also give a case in point. Some time ago I wrote the secretary of the patriotic fund regarding the case of three English reservists who had enlisted from my riding. They had lived in the county only a short time and were practically unknown there, although they had been in Canada for a considerable period. They left an aged father and mother entirely dependent upon the community. The community did its best for them, and I think has supported them up to the present. I felt that if this fund was to be of any use to the people entitled to be relieved by it, this aged couple had a perfectly good claim against it. I wrote to the secretary of the patriotic fund, and the answer I received was that the district of Parry Sound as a whole had not contributed to the fund, and that it was up to me to get busy. The district which I have the honour to represent has contributed, not necessarily to this fund, but to almost every movement along this line and very generously. It has also a fund of its own raised in the district for those members of the regiment who have gone from there, numbering from 150 to 200 men. This fund has been raised locally, and it is kept in case of need for the dependants of those who have gone to the front. It has not, as far as I know, been transferred to the patriotic fund; but be that as it may, the point I raise is that people such as I have instanced, especially English reservists, have gone, leaving families totally without means, and these people ought to receive that money from the patriotic fund, which is due to them regardless entirely of the question whether this or that municipality or district has contributed anything towards this fund.

Mr. AMES: I want to record my protest against the use of the word "charity." There is absolutely no charity in the patriotic fund from start to finish. When we hear of a branch that is trying to run it as a charitable organization, we ask them not to do so. Every man throughout this country has two choices—either to fight or to pay. If a man fights, we say to him: "Go, God bless you, and may you return safely." If he does not fight, we say: "Pay; make it possible for some one else to go and fight in your place." The man who goes to the front leaving a wife and child behind him, goes because he has confidence that the people of Canada will care for his wife and child while he is gone. He does not bring home the pay envelope on Saturday night, but it comes all the same, because it is filled with the money that other people are ready and willing to put into that envelope, seeing that that man is fighting the battle for the other man who ought to fight. Every man will not be able to go to the front, but he should be quite satisfied to contribute to the burden of those who do. In the American Civil War it was customary for men to buy other men to take their places in the fighting line. I know a man who bought two other men to go to the front for him, and paid each man $500 for that purpose. We call for recruits, and when a recruit presents himself, we say: "Do not be anxious about your wife and children; they will be well cared for while you are gone." The Government makes a flat rate allowance, so to speak, for every family and dependent such as I have mentioned. The Government, as a rule, gives the larger part of the amount that the family receive. The average supplementary assistance from the patriotic fund generally runs about $18 per family, taking it for the older parts of the country, and a little more in the northwest provinces. A great many families get only $10 or $15, and some get $20 per month.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: You are speaking of the patriotic fund?

Mr. AMES: I am speaking of the patriotic fund. What brings up the average is the fact that we have to give larger assistance to the French and Belgium reservists, who get very little from their own Governments. Wherever we can bring any influence to bear upon those in charge of private patriotic funds, we tell them to eliminate everything that may give this work an appearance of charity in dealing with the people. We say: "Tell them that they are getting their 'dividend cheques,' if you like; send the cheques out from the head office; do not make it necessary for the woman ever to come to the head office, except the first time; see that she gets her cheque every month, or oftener because it is just as much due to her as is the separation allowance cheque which the Government sends." Contented soldiers' wives distributed throughout Canada, living comfortably on what the Government gives and what the patriotic fund adds thereto constitute the best recruiting agencies we can have in Canada to-day. When it becomes necessary to appeal to the people for the third, the fourth and the fifth contingents, the fact that these women have been comfortable all winter and have learned to feel that they can trust the people of Canada to look after them, is going to help to get the remaining men that we so much need.

I want to say one more word and it is for the benefit of my hon. friend from Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs). It has always been our endeavour to organize committees either in towns or counties, and there are very few counties throughout Canada to-day which have not been thoroughly organized. Parry Sound is one of the few backward counties. The great province of Saskatchewan has 310 branches and so well organized is it that I understand there are but six municipal corporations in the whole province which are not connected with the fund in some way. If they can organize Saskatchewan they can organize Parry Sound. If the people of Parry Sound would create a local organization or would apply to become a branch of the Canadian patriotic fund, even if they only contributed $10 and drew $10,000, we would give them that $10,000 if we felt that $10 was all they could raise, provided we had a medium of distribution that could be recognized and controlled. We could not deal with any organization whose accounts we could not check, because we could not become responsible for them. If Parry Sound will become a branch of the Canadian patriotic fund, the matter of how much money they may send in is of minor importance. Let them send us what they can. The moment they become a branch of the Canadian patriotic fund, we will try to see that they get all the money they need, but until they do so, and while they take the position that they are going to look after their own people, I do not think we can interfere. The office here does not send out cheques to individual families. It is a clearing house, an organizing force that deals with the branches, and through these branches with the local situation. It stands behind them all, makes up the deficiency whatever it may be, and it is glad and willing to make up that deficiency and to endeavour to carry the gospel of giving into places that have not yet been covered. We are the central organizing clearing house here at Ottawa. We do not pay families, we do not determine how much families should get, we do not send out cheques to Smith, Brown and Robinson in Parry Sound, but we expect the people of Parry Sound to form a local organization there, and if they want $100 or $500 or $5,000 to care for cases in that county, they will get it.

Mr. OLIVER: We have heard enough to date to substantiate the view I hold that this is a question that is not only of national but of Imperial significance; and yet my hon. friend stands up in his place and dictates as to the terms and conditions upon which dependents of men who are serving the country and the Empire shall receive assistance from this legislatively authorized fund. We have a Government in Canada whose business it is to look after these things, to stand in the place of the people of Canada in dealing with the interests of Canada, and it certainly grates on my ear to hear any private individual, or any member of Parliament, even the hon. member for St. Antoine, say whether or not dependents of people who have gladly given their services to the country shall or shall not receive aid from this fund. We have been told that in Parry Sound they must look after their own people because they have not formed some organization. In Midland they must do the same because they have not made some subscription. This is not a question of whether they have formed some organization or given a subscription; it is a question of whether the men are serving the country and the Empire. But that is not the question with my hon. friend. It is whether they have gone through some sort of procedure that will be satisfactory to him, and if they satisfy him as to that they may come under the rule.

Mr. AMES: If a case should be reported in an outlying district of Parry Sound away from Ottawa, how could you tell whether that case was genuine and entitled to receive consideration unless we got assistance from the local authorities?

Mr. OLIVER: My hon. friend can answer his own question. My point is that a man who is rendering service to the State is entitled to the consideration and compensation of the State for that service and that neither he nor his dependents should be dependent upon my hon. friend or upon any other private individual.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): Perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) is scarcely just to the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). I think he overlooks the fact that the patriotic fund was established by an Act in the War session and that practically speaking the patriotic fund and the work done under the patriotic fund, being an Act of this Parliament, is an Act of the State. I venture to say that to my hon. friend in all good nature. I have a feeling that the House is indebted to my hon. friend from St. Antoine for his explanation of what has been done, and I think the country is indebted to him for what we know to be the very painstaking effort he is bringing to bear upon making the patriotic fund a success, in so far as he can do it in his position as secretary, which I presume has been given to him under the Act of Parliament passed at the War session. I say this in a spirit of fairness and as expressing what I really feel is due to my hon. friend in this matter. Unfortunately, imperfection is a mark of humanity, and it would be difficult to invent any machinery which would work with absolute precision. So far from detecting anything dictatorial in what my hon. friend has said, I feel personally indebted to him, and I am very pleased to express my opinion.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE BUDGET.

PROPOSED WAR TAXATION.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Hon. W. T. White, (Minister of Finance) for Committee of Ways and Means, resumed from February 23.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to follow the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) in this debate. Before beginning my remarks in reply to him, I should like to pay the Minister of Finance the best compliment I can, in view of his magnificent handling of his great historic Budget in a masterly, comprehensive, and entirely satisfactory manner. It is true, it is possible to find fault; it is indeed only too easy to find fault anywhere. I have been rather surprised therefore by the remarks, although I enjoyed the speech as a whole, of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), because he has expressed the policy largely of dissatisfaction at large, and in crystallizing his views he has laid down what may be called two main principles of dissatisfaction, to one of which I shall proceed to refer. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) said:

> But it is surely elementary, if our revenues are declining and if there is no other prospect than that they will continue to decline for an indefinite period, that it is the part of wisdom to introduce measures of economy of a substantial nature.

That means, if it means anything, that instead of spending money during this trying time to enable the people of this country to earn their daily bread on public works, when they cannot earn it on private works, he would prefer to see them tramping the streets in unemployment. I know perfectly well that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) does not mean that, but that is what he has said, and it shows how dangerous it is—if I may be permitted to judge so eminent a man as the hon. member for Edmonton—simply to oppose because you are in opposition. It would be far better for him, and better also for the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) to have taken the Minister of Finance and the rest of the Government party into their confidence, and told them how to construct this Budget, and wherein they are in error, and then supply details of reconstruction. They have done nothing of the sort; they have simply found fault. As I have said, it is easy to find fault—look at the weather; if they want scope for their feelings, let them turn their invective on the weather. Look also, if you will, at the universe—we find a lot of serious things happening, such as the earthquakes in Italy, for which we are in no way responsible. If these gentlemen want simply to find fault why not find fault there. It is very possible to find fault in such case, because it would seem according to the natural forces which work themselves out under Divine guidance, but these are things that pass our understanding, and if we cannot do better the least we should do is to keep quiet.

I would like also to pay a little attention to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean). He made a tremendous deliverance in its way, but it was fired almost altogether in the wrong direction; but he was not firing at the enemy, he was shooting up in the air. The question was asked by Mr. Wilcox:

> Does my hon. friend think there ought to be a duty on tea?
>
> Mr. Maclean: I do not think there ought to be any special duty or stamp tax on anything.

Immediately afterwards Mr. Maclean goes on to say:

> Now, what should be the main features of a war revenue tax? It should be made as much as possible on articles relatively cheap and of universal consumption.

Do I understand that tea is not of universal consumption? Perhaps the hon. gentleman refers to water. In any event, he has not made himself clear, nor has he taken us into his confidence and provided us with the details of a better Budget. Mr. Middlebro asked, very pertinently, I thought:

> Will the hon. gentleman give us his method of raising the taxation, which will measure up to the test which he has just suggested?

Mr. Gauvreau sprang into the breach and said:

> It is your duty to give it to us.

That is his idea of fulfilling his duty as a member of Parliament. If you cannot make any capital for your party, try to throw the other side into confusion; but do not remember that you were sent here by a grateful country to do the best you can for it. Raise a row; make a disturbance; split the whole affair up, and then when asked for an opinion say: Oh, you go on and give it; I do not know anything about it at all. That is the purpose which the hon. member served in making that statement. Mr. Maclean, however, said:

> My contention is that there is no necessity for any tariff increases. Surely the hon. gentleman must admit that, if the Government which he supports had administered properly the financial affairs of this country, we would not have had a $60,000,000 deficit this year, and there would not have been an estimated deficit of $80,000,000 for next year.
>
> Mr. Middlebro: The same would apply to every country in Europe.
>
> Mr. Maclean: Some time, when I have nothing else to do, and the hon. gentleman wants to know how I would arrange a tariff that would yield additional revenue under the circumstances prevailing to-day, I might do so, but I am not inclined to do so at the present moment.

Nor did he at any other time. Surely that is a fair question. We are living under conditions which the hon. member helped to create; and yet when he is fairly asked how he would construct a Budget or a war tariff under these circumstances, at the very moment of his criticism he absolutely declines to give us any consolation whatever, and takes his seat amidst the general confusion which he has created.

To my mind the most important reference in the Budget was to unemployment. Wars may come and wars may go, but the great war against unemployment continues with us at all times; it is perennial. I am not referring, of course, to shiftlessness or incapacity, to insanity or any other weakness of that nature. I am referring to economic unemployment; and I maintain that it is the great break-down of modern civilization, to which it is our duty, as indicated by the Minister of Finance in his Budget, to turn our immediate attention and to let it be no longer a reproach to our twentieth century civilization.

In the thirteenth century the people were in the midst of no such economic difficulties. Every man was his own manufacturer, his own farmer and his own consumer. He lived upon the land; he worked it; he was beholden to no man. He contributed, even though he were a serf, a slave, to the general fund of the little settlement or to the lord of the manor, but he had his indefeasible rights. He paid no rent and he owed no tax further than that to any man. There was never any unemployment.

5 p.m.

When he wanted wood, he went out and gathered it. When he wanted food, he went out and raised it. If he, by good fortune, had cattle, he had plenty of meat, milk and cheese. During his spare hours he did a little work perhaps as a smith. He was occasionally a carpenter or a stonemason or something of that sort. Every one was free to do as he liked. The consequence was that, except for those people who were perhaps shiftless—and they were very few—there was no economic unemployment. But later on there arose a different condition. People became divorced from the land by reason largely of the great plague of 1347, when nearly half of the people of Great Britain died. The consequence was that labourers were few. The harvest was naturally still great and the labourers chose to assess the value of their services at a higher rate, and the famous statute of labourers preventing them from doing any such thing was brought in by an alleged parliament of landlords and monopolists. This scattered the labouring class throughout the country in confusion. They were no longer upon the land or off the land. They had no standing, and to this day the great class of labourers has no particular standing in the country except what it is forcing from time to time upon the Government. There was no recognition of an economic standing. Why is it that there has been so much trouble? Why is it that in the midst of plenty, in the midst of a great and rich country where there ought to be such profusion, there is so much need? The taking of profit and the desire to take profit are, in my opinion, the sole cause of economic unemployment. What is profit? Profit is the taking of that for which we give no true equivalent. If we gave a true equivalent there would be no profit. Take the case of 'making money.' A man makes money when he takes out money that he has not put in. If he takes out only what he puts in, counting his own labour, he will be extremely dissatisfied. The more he takes out the better pleased he is. If by putting in $5,000, a man can take out $50,000, he is considered a genius; whereas what he has done is he has robbed some one else of that money, because it is a mathematical impossibility that he can put in $5,000 and take out $50,000 without taking the difference from some one else. The alleged stimulus to modern industry has been the taking of profit. This is what the whole system of modern industry has been built upon; and the consequence of its being so large a factor in modern industry and a direct cause of economic unemployment, is that the whole modern system in regard to labour and economic unemployment is mere anarchy—and so it is.

What is the source of value? There is but one source of value—labour cost. Sometimes it is hinted that there is another—monopoly. But, of course, monopoly is not an economic source of value. If the people choose to allow monopolists to take possession of that which they did not earn, if they choose to allow these monopolists to place themselves in the position of lording it over the whole community and so exact tribute, they may. But it is unscientific, it is uneconomic, it is not sensible. Monopoly is in no sense a cause of value. Labour-cost and labour-cost alone, is the cause of value. Labour produces all wealth. Wealth includes capital, which, of course, is wealth in the form of money and money only. Labour, the working world, as we know, can produce in two days a week of eight hours each, enough and to spare for everybody in the world. These calculations have been made by statisticians; they are no guesswork and no dream. But the people who desire to take profit know that if they are to have profit they must create profit, and to create profit it is necessary to make things dear; and they proceed to do this in the only way in which it can be done—by limiting the supply. And by limiting supply you cause economic unemployment. Is not that clear? I think it is. So, we have the taking of profits linked up with economic unemployment and shown to be its sole cause. There should be no anxiety in the minds of the human race for food or raiment. There is enough and to spare; there is profusion, even luxury. But we are like a man stooping down to drink at a little stream flowing from a great lake. He thinks there is plenty and to spare; but some one comes along and says: I will take possession of the lake and charge you so much a cup for the water. The moment it is sought, by monopoly, and by means of taking profit, to make others pay, the troubles begin and one man becomes practically the slave of the other.

You see, the disposition always is for profit to limit supply. If it be urged that sometimes mills shut down in order to avoid loss and not to limit supply, it may well be replied that this is true under present conditions. But if we were to begin production all over again, no capital would be employed except where it is needed, none would be employed where it would be imperilled in any way, but it would be used entirely for the purpose of production. So, shutting down to avoid loss, like shutting down to make a profit, would be eliminated.

That part of price which is unearned means a profit that is wrongly taken. I admit that it is taken; I admit that there is practically no hope of anybody giving it up. But I do say, and I say it here because this is the proper place to say it, with reference to unemployment, there is no use of discussing free trade, protection or any other abstract question unless you come to the fundamental principle and see to it that people give a fair equivalent for what they get.

The theory of Ricardo, the founder of modern political economy, was altogether an assumption that political economy depended upon the theory of rent. Adam Smith, in his Wealth of Nations, argued that the wealth of nations would depend altogether upon freedom of trade and upon its twin monster, freedom of labour competition, which is absolutely essential to free trade and which must accompany it as its shadow must accompany any substance. Free labour competition is the basis, the source, the vital cause of distress. It has followed necessarily in the wake of free trade; and if free trade were deliberately, truly and correctly carried out, it would absolutely put the world in the power of money and make slaves of the labour market.

Thorold Rogers and men of that description gathered a priceless treasure of records from the vestries and other storehouses of records of life in England, records of the accounts and work of the people of England for six centuries. And it was upon such records that Herbert Spencer was enabled to base his tremendous generalizations. Herbert Spencer, however, makes human progress depend upon natural evolution, which is a reversal; it takes it out of our hands altogether except as a normal outcome of our everyday proceedings. Karl Marx, the author of Capital—and I would commend the reading of that work to anybody who has not read it; it will take him three months night and day to read it; it is almost like a work on algebra; but it is worth all the trouble; Karl Marx has analysed, dissected and described every known economic phrase. But, strange to say, he has left them at that. Then, we have the French school—Fourier, Saint Simon and others—who insisted that the remedy for all this trouble is in the socialistic state and who declared that until we have the socialistic state as the owner of the machinery of production, exchange and transportation, there is no way out of the difficulty in which we find ourselves. Then come the Germans. The Germans believe in matter and force—gross modern materialism. They are the apostles of the strictly modern propaganda. Believing in matter and force, they have given an exhibition of it at the present time such as ought to satisfy anybody who likes that sort of thing.

Modern unemployment dates from the time when England invented, monopolized, and patented practically all the modern means of economic invention. Great Britain had a monopoly of this sort of thing. The consequence was that she wanted the rest of the world to give her the means of gratifying her desire to extend her trade in these particular goods. The rest of the world was then just awakening to the necessity of modern industrialism, but had no means of gratifying it. Great Britain had the whip hand with her system of patent rights, with her knowledge of the inventions which she herself had made. It was this monopoly that gave her that place of pre-eminence which she has so long enjoyed. She had the Corn laws. In 1846 it was decided to give up the Corn laws, and very rightly so, because the Corn laws were making labour in England expensive, and yet the landlords were getting all the benefit, while doing no good to themselves or to anybody else. So when the Corn laws were done away with food poured in from outside, food became cheap. The agricultural industry necessarily went down and out, but food became cheap, and great industrial organizations were soon in a position, as I say, to dominate the world. Then began that era of industrial slavery when men and women worked up to seventeen hours a day, and it has taken all the time from that early date to the present to get the day's labour down to nine and ten hours. This shows what a tremendous struggle there has to be in the world on behalf of life and labour against machinery and the desire to make profit. It is a very singular thing, but it shows a philosophic antagonism on the part of many people, it shows a callousness that is to be greatly deplored. It will work itself out, it is working itself out in the United States by means of a financial revolution; it worked itself out in France by means of a revolution that tore the country to pieces. These things were foretold, but nobody paid any attention. Why? Because they would rather take profit than listen to the truth. No doubt they will continue so to do, but, as I have said in reply to the hon. member for Edmonton, it is useless to lament the fact that the incidence of taxation under free trade or under protection goes here, there and everywhere, frequently not to the places which it should go. It is useless to lament that fact because what I have referred to are the underlying causes of the whole trouble. Manufacturing and money replaced the agricultural landlord and became the new landlord of the modern era. Labour looked back to the land, and the only solution that is proposed of the whole situation at the present time is: "Back to the land! Back to where we were in the thirteenth century." It is made a joke of, people laugh about it because they are insincere about it and frequently do not understand it, but it is a far atavistic cry to something six centuries back, which tells the people instinctively what is the matter; put them back on the land and they will be free, they will be liberated once more.

You take the grandest of all professions, the medical profession, that has conferred more great benefits on mankind by far than all others put together; would there not be a mighty howl of lament and anger if the medical men patented their remedies? Medical men are supposed to make these great sacrifices, to make these great discoveries and inventions which require the profoundest knowledge of science and of the fundamental laws of chemical motion and construction, even the sacrifice of life, yet no one expects the medical profession to patent their rights, because if they did place themselves in the position of the patentee of mechanical rights, the world's last hope would be gone. Surely, if that be so with regard to the medical profession, it should be none the less so with regard to the feeding and clothing of mankind. If it be so with regard to the curing of mankind, it should be none the less so with regard to the feeding of mankind. Therefore, I say there should be no method of exacting tribute on the cost of food production or the production of clothes that goes on from day to day; it should be absolutely clear of that. People think that unless they are making profit there is nothing in the world, that nobody will do anything. Well, if that is the impelling spirit of any man, all I can say is, God help the man. If he has no more patience, no more unselfishness and no more nobility of character than to throw up his hands when he cannot make profit out of any transaction, then he is fit for Golgotha or some other place of that description, for certainly he is not fit for heaven. Protection is merely control. No one supposes for one moment that protection, which is restriction, is valuable in any other particular, except as a means of control. What is the history of free trade and protection? It is simply this: In the early days, twenty odd centuries ago, when the merchants of Tyre and Sidon, of ancient Greece, of Sicily and Alexandria and Bagdad and Damascus and the East, went about over the then known world with their Tyrian purple or their finished products, whatever they might be, there was no necessity of discussing free trade or protection, because the people in the countries from which they came fed and clothed themselves. These men were but adventurers, excursionists who went out on what might be called a side issue. Later on came modern inventions, came the means of making food in profusion, of making clothes in profusion, of wholesale transportation. The danger immediately arose, not that there would be a partial making of goods in one country for another, but that whole mountains of food would be transferred from one country to another, as, for example, from America to France, whole mountains of wools, whole mountains of everything of consequence, so that France would be put out of business by cheapness. The French could go to America and live and buy their food there; but French life and French civilization would disappear; the French people realized this and would not have it, and went back to protection. After 1846 it was felt that the influence of England upon France would result in France adopting free trade. France did so, but she found out, just as I have said, that the result was that her people were being stripped. Take China silk. The people of Cevennes used to make silk; they had the silk worms, the mulberry and everything else, and had established a great and prosperous industry. China silk began to come in under free trade, and the people had to stop making silk and fled to the towns. That is what happeed in France; and of necessity they had to stop it by protection, and they put on protection. To-day we must give our people employment. We must keep them at home and make Canada a well-balanced country; otherwise she will be ruined. You say Canadians could get things more cheaply where things are made by cheaper labour or grown more cheaply? So can anybody. But if we are to depend upon cheap labour and cheap production rather than upon the balance of life and production within the country in which we live, we shall become an effete instead of a progressive civilization, and shall soon disappear. From that it follows that this new theory of profit-sharing also is impossible. It might do for a while, but under it men put more money into their pockets than they earn, as I have pointed out. But the idea will remain I suppose, until the people are inspired with some new idea. It is not as in the old Athenian days. Did Socrates teach for gain, did Plato, did Aristotle, did even the Sophists? Not one. It is true that when the jeunesse dorée wished to take advantage of their generosity it was necessary for them to adopt means of protection, and they did make a charge.

We have then, if I am right, an exchange of work for goods, for wealth, for food and clothing. Now let us see how this works out. Everything will remain as it is to-day except what? The hours. If you have two days a week with short hours you still have everybody working in the same grade, in the same class, under the same conditions as to-day. Money is still utilized in the same way, and there is no change in exchange or creation or production. There is simply a limiting of the hours of labour in order that all may work. Then all will be able to get work, and there will be still plenty of time left. This is not a Utopian scheme; it is entirely mathematical; you can work it out with a pencil and paper. It is based on economic science, and can be proved or disproved in five minutes, and I therefore ask the Finance Minister's attention to it in the further consideration of his Budget.

I will now touch upon the most extraordinary measure that was ever placed before any country: the British preference.

The British preference is a trade advantage which Canada gives to Great Britain in the Canadian market by means of the the operation of a protective tariff, and without that tariff it could not exist. That means that the Opposition in advocating a preference, British or any other, are guilty of the wildest stretch of heresy that they could possibly indulge in, because Britain could not get a preference in our market for one minute without a protective tariff. The British preference or any other sort of preference has all the evils of protection, but none of its good points. Why? Because it sends the work out of this country; it sends money out of this country when we import goods; and it leaves the tax-paying to us. That is all. It is a confession that a preference can be given to people by means of a protective tariff, and that is the whole end and aim of protection, which in Conservative hands aims to give that preference to the people at home in Canada. The adoption of the principle of protection is a confession—notwithstanding any arguments to the contrary—that by means of protection you can confer a favour upon a friend; and they propose to confer it upon the British friend. We propose to confer it upon the Canadian friend. That is the only difference. What is the British preference? It is the most un-British thing that ever was concocted—the most absolutely un-British.

There is not a man in England who is not ashamed of the British preference. It is absolutely contrary to the principles of free trade, because absolute freedom of exchange without any preference is the basis of modern British economics. If that is so, you are injuring instead of helping the cause of free trade by giving a preference. You are saying to the British people that in order to establish trade relations with them it is necessary that they should have some little by-way or alley, and this you christen the British preference. I do not think there is any excuse for such a thing as a preference. I would sooner see honest square free trade, for a British preference is absolutely un-British; it is certainly un-Canadian; it is inconsistent and unreasonable. Great Britain gives Canada no preference. Why? Because it is absurd. It is against her idea of economic freedom. She would say that it would be injurious to Canada. And yet for some strange reason we plume ourselves on giving this mighty country of England a preference. We send our work and our money away, and retain the privilege of paying the taxes. If a member of the Liberal party had said that they had to adopt the preference and not free trade because protection had placed them in an awkward box, they would have had some excuse. But for years they had nothing but a long record of surpluses, and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) particularly refers to this. He has now turned the tables on us. He says, why do you have these great surpluses taking money out of the pockets of the people? I ask the hon. member for St. John why when he had such big surpluses, he did not adopt free trade instead of giving a British preference? But these gentlemen dared not adopt free trade. The British preference is a two-faced affiair. It is a pretended exhibition of loyalty, and it is a sop to free-traders. It is an apology for having adopted a system of protection instead of free trade. I say that in all kindness and not abusively, but it is nevertheless true and cannot be contradicted. We cannot hope to keep our people employed if on any pretence we send our work out of the country.

The next point I wish to take up is even more practical in its application. I refer to the Eastern peril. Missionaries returning from India and China say that the awakening of those countries to industrial life has been marvelous. China which for 6,000, or at least 3,000 years, has been embedded in a matrix of granite, has changed her whole system of government in practically a day, and she is now a modern republic and ready for the most advanced ideas. Capital is now pouring in there. They lacked capital, and capital is now pouring in. It is now taking advantage of cheap oriental labour. The capitalist now is asking us to lower the tariff. He asks the Americans to lower their tariff so that he can go to China, erect enormous steel mills and other works and produce cheap goods for the markets of the United States and Canada. Do you imagine that we would be silly enough to allow him to do that? Eight hundred million people are now awaiting to be exploited. They were agriculturists, they dug away with a wooden stick or something of that kind for many years and earned a precarious livelihood. They have learned by means of the missionaries and in other ways the advantage it would be to them to take their place in the van of progress. Railways have disseminated information and established means of interchange and communication. The consequence is that with all these facilities and great natural resources the centre of gravity of modern industrial civilization will be in the Orient as sure as can be unless we keep it in the West. That is something we cannot impress too strongly upon our people. In this connection I wish to read an article from that intellectual journal, The Globe, which has always seemed to me to be the brains of the Liberal party, with a few exceptions, of course. It says, in an editorial in its issue of January 22:

> Terror of good things is one of the peculiar results of distorted economic. A Consul has 'warned' the American Republic that an underwear mill in Hong Kong sells one-half ts entire product in New Work city, that steel rails are being produced in a Chinese modern steel mill with labour that commands only thirty cents a day for ten and a half hours, that Shantung province, with a population of more than 30,000,000, is building modern railways, that in the city of Tsingchau Chinese capital is building a modern steel mill with $10,000,000 invested, and employing labour at twenty cents a day. Instead of rejoicing at the resultant prospect of getting underwear, steel rails, and other products with much less effort than formerly, the reporting Consul regards these things as portentous and even terrible.
>
> This capacity of China to shower blessings on the world is regarded with terror because the reporting Consul has forgotten that the object of industry and commerce is to get underclothing, steel rails, and other products. He thinks the object is to throw obstacles in the way of getting these things and to make it more difficult to supply ordinary wants. The heathen Chinese may be peculiar, but he will not send one single suit or half-suit of underclothing from his gigantic factory or so much as a single knife-blade from his vast rolling mills to the United States unless the people of that republic make something more satisfactory to give him in payment.

Pray, what will they make?

> He will do no Zeppelin act to ruin American industry. He will distrbute only as American industry continues able to reciprocate. The more freely he is able to distribute and the more he gives in return for what he receives the more he will lessen the difficulties that make it so hard to produce a living by work in the Republic. The Consul's theory that it is a good thing to make good things hard to get has received a rude jolt by the present belligerent obstruction of trade.

The Globe of January 27 gives further consideration to this question. It says:

> The primary purpose of all economic effort, all industry, and all commerce is to obtain things to use and enjoy, not to create difficulties which prevent the accomplishing of that purpose. We must pay for goods from China with our own goods.

What would the Americans pay with, I ask again?

> The Chinamen's object in manufacturing is not to give, but to get. They want to get our goods. This shows how delusive is the notion that imports or purchases deprive us of work. It is only as we work that we can purchase.

That is true, and if the Chinese do the work, how are we going to purchase?

[Mr. Burnham.]

> The delusion about money leaving the country comes in here, but that is another story. Every industral expansion in China or elsewhere is a blessing to the world at large, and especially to the industrial workers. When this is understood and acted upon we will no longer have the paradox of want through an excess of producing capacity and efficiency.

There is the whole question of free trade and the problem of Oriental competition. I thought it wise to submit this to a labour body and I picked out the Peterborough labour body for the reason that the president is the president of the Liberal Association of West Peterborough, the secretary is a Liberal and several members of the executive are also Liberals. It is a large and influential body, it keeps in touch with Toronto, fairly represents the district, and is a very intelligent body as you will presently see. I submitted my course in the House of Commons on the Oriental question to them because, although some hon. members may not remember, I have spoken upon this subject on several occasions. I asked them what they thought of this whole question, and here is what they say:

> Peterborough, Feb. 5, 1915.
>
> Mr. J. H. Burnham,
> M.P. for West Peterborough.
>
> Dear sir,—We, the undersigned, a committee appointed by the Trades and Labour Council of Peterborough to express to you on their behalf the stand taken by them on receipt of your letters of the 22nd and 27th January, do hereby convey to you their wholehearted support of the proposals regarding Oriental labour you are seeking to place before the House.
>
> With the resources of the country developed by intelligent and representative administrations, there is no need for any working man in Canada to be cheap—we have no sympathy with 'Celestial' ideals of labour.
>
> Yours sincerely,
>
> G. A. Hamon,
> Thos. Palmer,
> Hugh Robertson,
> J. Arthur Sharp.

This, I think, is fairly clear and reasonable. Some little time ago when the British preference first came in, the potters of St. Johns, Que., suffered a serious reverse because they were placed at the mercy of the competition of the potters in the south of Scotland and the north of England. It was from these places in England and Scotland that most of the potters had come to St. Johns, Que. They would go back to the old country but for two things: one is that they have not money enough to go back; the other is that if they did get back they say the prospects are gloomy and they do not want to live as the potters live in Great Britain. I said to these men: "What were you in England—Tories or Liberals?" They said: "Most of us were Liberals." Not having an a priori theory, and not being like the man in the fable of ancient Greece who, if he did not fit the bed, had to be made to fit it, they betook themselves to their common sense. They said to us: "If you will raise the protective tariff on sanitary ware in St. Johns, you will give us relief and enable us to go on with our work and live our life and have our being in this country. Here is where we want to live; we like the country, we like the people, we like the climate and we like the prospects." According to his promise not to discuss the tariff, the Minister of Finance could last year give no consideration. He is not at all presenting, as I understood him to say, the war tariff as a protective measure, although it might have that effect. And when the war tariff came forward what do they say? George Smith, as the spokesman of the sanitary ware men in St. Johns, said:

> The 5 per cent we have gained should make a difference although the manufacturers are trying to belittle it. I can assure you the operatives recognize that it will help materially, and I myself think it will do so; also the 7½ per cent against the States, even if there is not so much from these of our own class of works.

There is a concrete case. Here are men not brought up with any protectionist ideas, men brought up with free trade ideas, men confessing that formerly they had been greatly prejudiced in favour of free trade and who now say they do not want free trade; they want to stay in Canada and they want to stay here under a protective tariff, because clearly a protective tariff is good if evenly balanced—I do not for one moment say that a protective tariff which makes a country tight for the manufacturer and the farmer and leaves it wide open for labour is a beneficial protective tariff all around by any means; it is a humbug. You cannot leave it tight for certain things and open for other things and call it an even distribution; that is not an honest distribution. To invite labour from the old country or from anywhere else in here and yet keep the people locked in protection is an iniquity which no one will for a moment stand for. That would not be protection; it would be robbery.

I wish to consider for a moment another very threatening thing known as the menace. I would not have referred to it were it not for the fact that a good deal has been said about it, and I trust I am within the rules of the House in speaking of it now. I wish to confute the statement of the Opposition that there was no menace, or that we on this side of the House did not know anything about it, and I wish to confute it by the words of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark). The hon. member for Red Deer is a practical thinker, a philosopher, the very Cobden of the Opposition, and in Hansard, 1912-13, page 1200, volume 1, he says:

> I personally am rather in a position to plume myself on this naval question.

So that he offers no apology for the opinion he gives.

> The fact of the matter is that this German scare has become so attenuated a thing—

—if you please.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: What date was that?

Mr. BURNHAM: December 16, 1912.

Mr. CLARK: That is some years ago.

Mr. BURNHAM: The hon. gentleman said:

> The fact of the matter is that this German scare has become so attenuated a thing that it only finds a resting-place in such comparatively disordered minds as we have had an example of this afternoon.

And then the hon. gentleman spoke after recess, and during recess he does not seem to have considered the matter at all in the way of correcting it, for he says.

> Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I had pointed out that just as in the middle of the last century the French scare passed away without there having been the smell of gunpowder between the two great nations of France and Great Britain from that time, and as the Russian scare in the seventies passed away likewise without there having been a trigger pulled then or since; so happily for humanity and civilization the German scare of yesterday is vanishing. I think I shall be able to offer proof from the best possible sources that a generation from now we shall be looking back upon this scare as another of the human follies and upon the historical fact that following it there was not the firing of a shot by the one or the other of these two great Christian nations.

A little further on in the same speech he says:

> There is no emergency. But the extraordinary political situation we are in in Canada is this: that although there is no emergency we have a government which comes cooly forward for its only naval policy with an emergency contribution.

Thus he confessed that the Government must have thought there was an emergency, must have thought that there was a reason for action, but he could tell them there was none. How disturbing it must be to members of the Opposition these days, responsible and irresponsible, to think that they told us there was no menace and that we did not know anything about it, and that we did not know what we were doing, and that we were just as much in the dark as they.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: May I ask a question?

Mr. BURNHAM: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: May I say that I ask the question with very great reluctance. I do not see the connection between what my hon. friend is saying and the tariff, but he has given me permission to ask a question, and it is this: If he and the Government he supports knew there was a menace, why did they for fourteen months sit on their oars and do nothing, after the Senate rejected the Dreadnought proposal?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BURNHAM: When the applause has died away, Mr. Speaker, I answer the question thus: It was because of the tremendous opposition which was offered by the Liberal party in this House and in the Senate; it was because of their lack of sympathy with the efforts being made by the Government; it was because we had been kept here the entire winter by the Liberals, who did not believe in doing anything in the circumstances. It is true that the menace has nothing to do with the tariff, but having spent forty-five minutes on the tariff I thought it was long enough, and that I would give you a treat by turning to something else. I find unfortunately that some don't appreciate my efforts in that direction. Let us refer for a moment to Imperialism, and I entirely agree with the Globe's stand in this particular. Here is what the Globe said in its issue of February 20th inst.:

> Our imperialistic friends are now talking about rebuilding the Empire after the war. Has not the Empire just as it is proved reasonably efficient; why rebuild it?

That is what I say, but I want to say more. The Naval Service Act of 1910, section 22, says:

> The Governor in Council may place the naval forces, or any part thereof, on active service at any time that it appears advisable to do so, by reason of an emergency.

First of all, the Governor in Council may place the naval forces on active service, and I emphasize the word "may," and in the second place the Governor in Council can only do so if there is an emergency. So, if you prove there is no emergency, as in the present case of a war going on, you are in the soup, Mr. Speaker. We want it understood all the time that we belong to the Empire; that these forces are at the service of the Empire until such time as we say they are not; not as this Act, which says that they are not until we say they are. After that, if we want to meet and say that we cannot do this and that we cannot do that for various reasons, it is within our power to do so. That is consistent with the entire freedom and personal and practical independence of Canada. It is consistent with every ideal that we should like to have that we are managing our own affairs, but the proposition contained in the Naval Service Act is a practical declaration of independence.

Mr. PROULX: Does the hon. member know that it is identical with the provisions of the Militia Act?

Mr. BURNHAM: I have heard that certainly, but that does not defend it at all. If you think that is a confutation of my argument, you will have to think again.

Mr. PROULX: The Militia Act was passed when a Conservative Government was in power.

Mr. BURNHAM: The Conservatives may have made lots of mistakes, but they are trying to repair them. Section 23 says:

> In case of an emergency the Governor in Council may place at the disposal of His Majesty—

That means that he has not done so as yet.

> —for general service in the Royal Navy, the Naval Service or any part thereof, any ships or vessels of the Naval Service, and the officers and seamen serving in such ships or vessels, or any officers or seamen belonging to the Naval Service.

Section 24 says:

> Whenever the Governor in Council places the Naval Service or any part thereof on active service, as provided in the two preceding sections, if Parliament is then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire with ten days, a proclamation shall issue for a meeting of Parliament within fifteen days, and Parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued to the same day.

There is the gist of the Liberal opposition to an Empire. You stand out until such times as you say you are in; and if it suits your interest and your prejudices and your meanness, you will say you belong to the Empire and that you are under the old mother's wing; but if it does not suit you, you can stay out, and you provide for that contingency by being out, so that, if it is going to be expensive and not going to serve your immediate purpose, if it is not going to be a good vote catching measure, why then you are out and you will not instruct the Governor in Council at all. He must be instructed by his advisors and he will not be instructed; or at least it will be long before he is and then Parliament will have to be called, and when Parliament has been called together, the Liberals will begin with their "ifs" and their "ands". This is the Liberal idea of loyalty to the Empire. I am not in favour of Imperial federation. Imperial federation with a central council would mean the dismemberment of the Empire in a week. I do not believe in that at all. I believe in Canada remaining as she is at the present time without the Naval Service Act. Repeal the Naval Service Act.

Mr. TURRIFF: That is what the Government promised to do and they did not do it. They did not dare to do it.

Mr. BURNHAM: They should have done it. I will concede that at any rate in my opinion.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Suppose the Naval Service Act had been repealed, what would my hon. friend have done with the Rainbow and Niobe?

Mr. BURNHAM: I would have taken the Rainbow and the Niobe and put them on the end of a toothpick and have presented them to the first passer-by.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BURNHAM (resuming): I will not detain the House further at any length, but I wish to make a few further remarks to emphasize my observations on the subject of trade. There has been a serious misapprehension, I think, as to the doctrine laid down by Cobden. In the preface to an edition of his speeches, compiled by Thorold Rogers and John Bright, this observation is made, and it is one, I think, that should be borne in mind by those who severely criticise protection, especially with regard to the incidence of taxation:

> He saw, for example, that no ultimate benefit would ensue to the mass of the people by the abolition of all taxes on food, unless what he called, by a pardonable metaphor, "free trade in land," were also established.

That, I think, is important, and has a very direct bearing, especially in the face of the somewhat violent attacks made upon the protective tariff with reference to food. Then, again, in this preface I find something of a still more profound nature, something that the protectionist particularly lays claim to have adopted as against the free trader who has absolutely defied it, and yet which is the foundation of Cobdenism:

> A cautious student of political economy, he knew that this science, the difficulty of which he fully recognized, was, or ought to be, eminently inductive.

Now, free trade is founded wholly and solely upon a narrow a priori principle or statement, from which are deduced certain rules for the guidance of mankind. Free traders would make political economy the deductive science par excellence. As they expound it, political economy is not an inductive science; it pays no attention whatever to results, nor does it cite facts; but, beginning with a principle of free exchange, free labour—free everything—proceeds upon the belief that all else will follow. It is a good deal like the physicist with the Newtonian principle of gravitation, who, having solved that, looks for the explanation of everything else in the terms of this one great fact, except that it errs to begin with. But the protectionist looks to see what nature has afforded and what man has done, and seeks to apply the remedy from time to time applicable to the cases before him. It is useless to say that a certain principle must be assumed and that from that everything must proceed and that all mankind must conform, because it is this sort of thing that has landed free traders in such a pit of distress, and it is that which has left them without a single companion in the world except in Great Britain.

I find in one of Cobden's speeches, something that shows exactly what he meant when he advocated the abolition of the Corn Laws. He shows that the whole bearing of that agitation which resulted in the mighty revolution inaugurated by Sir Robert Peel and brought about by him was altogether relative to the prosperity of the manufacturers:

> If I know anything, it means—

That is, the abolition of the Corn Laws means > —increased trade, and the claim of a right besides to exchange our manufactures with the corn of all other countries, by which we should very much increase the extent of our trade.

That, I submit, is the real basis of Cobdenism—an attempt to develop manufacturing in Britain. On the abolition of the Corn Laws, with more cheaply fed labour, and, as I said before, with patent rights and a monopoly of inventions, Great Britain sprang into that pre-eminence which she enjoys to-day and which is represented by the capitalist manufacturer. Britain, to-day is represented in her immense wealth and power by the British manufacturer, and he owes his success to the prescience of Cobden who saw that England was too small to give free scope to her own powers of food production, and saw likewise that landlords were living in idleness upon a monopoly, and who said: Do away with these things and you will raise manufacture to tremendous prominence—and he succeeded in doing it.

I wish to refer for a moment also to a well-known newspaper published in Ottawa —the Citizen—because of its attack upon the Budget. It says that our system of taxation showed last year that we were willing to pay $25,000,000 in taxes rather than let the work go to Great Britain. This newspaper, I frankly admit, is a journal of great influence and superior tone; although it indulges in the luxury of contradicting itself from time to time as the different writers present their views to the public. Its idea of prosperity, however, seems to be to send the work that we ought to do in Canada somewhere else. It says that we have penalized ourselves. Well, if we had the work, and kept the money in the country, and paid the taxes into our own treasury, it is difficult to see where we have penalized ourselves. We may have penalized some people, some class in the country, but we cannot have penalized Canada as a whole. Therefore, I deprecate these reckless statements in these influential newspapers. They convey a wrong impression and mislead the unthinking public. The Citizen seems to be betrayed by catchwords—many good men are betrayed by catch-words. The catch-words to which I refer in this case are these: "Buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest." It seems to be the impression that the typical free trader all his life dwells in a free trade terrestrial paradise and goes round chuckling over the fact that he bought in the cheapest market and sold in the dearest. That is the whole and soul of liberalism, to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest, a principle which in itself is a manifest absurdity because economically if you continue to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market how is the cheapest market going to pay for the goods in the long run? It cannot be done, it is an impossibility, but as a catch word it is all right to those influenced by unnatural cupidity and to stay public criticism, while the moneyed man bags the market. It also appeals to a certain class of labour men who have not in the past had time to investigate, but who are now getting shorter hours under protection and are looking into the matter and seeing the falsity of this system. Free trade therefore is pre-eminently a doctrine of selfishness. It says: "Laissez faire, laissez passer, laissez aller, pay attention to nothing." Once a capitalist has got his money, then you have put the whole world in his power. You have made the only legal tender that which he possesses in abundance, and you ask him or he asks you to let everything else go—just step to the one side and you will see the greatest fight you ever saw in your life. That is exactly what happens. He has the world at his finger tips, he is the master of the world, and therefore it is, I submit, pre-eminently a doctrine of selfishness. It reminds one a good deal of the case of "Lo, the poor Indian." The Indian brings in four beaver skins and trades them for a plug of tobacco. That is free trade. The capitalist is the man who furnishes the tobacco and his unsuspecting victim is the man who pays the four beaver skins. He has commanded, by reason of his superior acumen and capital, the immense labour of the poor Indian, who has probably journeyed hundreds of miles and sat up many nights to gain these beaver skins to buy his little plug of tobacco. The idea of letting the strong alone, the idea of inviting the strong to take care of the weak, the idea of putting the weaker part of the world in the custody of the strong on an economic non-sentimental basis and expecting them to be taken care of, is in itself an absurdity; you might just as well ask vice to take care of virtue. The truth of the matter is that the principle of control should govern and, in so far as protection means control, protection is good, but in so far as it means handing a monopoly to anybody, or an inequitable system of exchange, production or employment, it is of course absolutely bad.

I wish to refer briefly to the new cry of "Made in Canada," a most admirable motto for any people, the substitution of a request for a law. We ask the people of the country, although they may have established trade with other countries, to remember Canada, the land where they have been prosperous and happy, the land of noble prospects, of health, prosperity and above all, the land of home. We ask them to remember that and not to sell their souls and their love of Canada for a little money; we ask them to remember, and rather than go outside of Canada, to be prepared to pay a greater labour cost for an article. It will come back to them, even on that low ground, but apart from that, let us remember that we cannot make of this country anything except by co-operation and consideration. We must remember that to keep the work in the country must be our supreme aim and object, and if we do not do that, how can we expect to make this country great? Let us be an independent, industrial Canada, let us feel and know that if the whole world was excluded, if there was a wall fifty feet high around Canada, that we ourselves, with our resources, our capabilities, our population, could go on and thrive, interchanging our products one with the other, and so securing a prosperity that would be tantamount to perfection and absolute balance. So much so indeed that it calls to mind a fact laid down and descanted upon by many economists, that foreign trade is a trap which beguiles people into the idea that they are extending their prosperity, whereas in the last analysis foreign trade should not exist because every country should manufacture and grow and produce for itself; every individual should have inherent in him the same quality. The minute the process is reversed and the individual extends out of himself, he makes himself depend on somebody else, he loses his free condition and becomes another man; the nation becomes another nation and becomes unsettled; labour becomes unsettled, and the whole involved system of exchange and interchange exposes the people of the country to the machinations of the unprincipled.

A great deal of the trouble arises, of course, from the altogether false position of gold. Gold, of course, is nothing more than wool or timber or fish or beef. It so happens that, being a handy thing to carry about and being universally appreciated, it is chosen as the one thing which will satisfy all parties and is used as a medium of exchange; but because of that there is attached to it a natural monopoly, and though we may have any quantity of timber, any quantity of wool, any quantity of mutton or of cattle, we can do nothing with them if people do not come along with the cash to enable us to transfer the products that we have to some other place. If they do not they will remain where they are forever, or so long as they do not rot, showing that the placing of one commodity, namely gold, in such a pre-eminent and monopolistic position is wrong, it is dangerous, it is serious and it is the cause unquestionably of a great deal of our unhappiness.

Strange to say, it has been customary, for what reason I do not understand, to laugh and sneer at the balance of trade. You would think the balance of trade was some bogey or absurdity that was in the imagination of the ignorant and unlettered. We are told time and again that the balance of trade is against England or against France or against so and so, and that is followed by a peal of loud, reverberating laughter, and the fears of a place like Canada are supposed to be at once stilled. Of course that is an absolutely unfair, improper and incorrect statement of the balance of trade. The balance of trade, because of the use of the word trade, is made to refer to the exports and imports of commodities, whereas it properly refers to all the transactions that a country has—cash, goods, means of transportation and everything else; and we find that the balance of trade so far from being against England and France is, on account of the foreign interest that they receive, and on account of transportation and other things, immeasureably in their favour. This laughing at the balance of trade has a bad effect, for the people are lulled into a false sense of security. The balance of trade in its narrower and more restricted meaning, referring to commodities, shows one thing; and that is, that unless the balance of trade in commodities is in your favour you are on the high road to immediate ruin. The capital which has given strength and pre-eminence to the nations to which I have referred was amassed by reason of the balance of trade in commodities being so long in their favour. If the United States continues to have a balance of trade of hundreds of millions in its favour against Canada, it is easily within our imaginations to grasp that the United States must be laying up a great store of prosperity and profit at our expense; and we must pay them for these things by borrowing money from England, and exhaust our resources in paying foreign interest. Is it any wonder then that the cry is raised from day to day, that our taxes are tremendous and that our borrowing powers seem to be without limit? That is one of the peculiarities of the preference. We were told by an hon. gentleman yesterday that the preference enabled us to borrow more money from England, and yet the very same gentleman told us that this country was going to perdition because of its extravagance in borrowing—another nail in the coffin of preference. Therefore, it seems to me that Finance Ministers in making up their annual budgets might very well give for the information of the people a complete analysis of all the receipts and liabilities of the nation so that we should know exactly how we stand. Then we should see that although the balance of trade was in our favour with respect to commodities and production, actually it would be vastly against us when we took into account the foreign interest that we pay and the other liabilities; and we should see that our resources would be ultimately exhausted if we did not do our own work in Canada. If we send the money and the profit out of this country we are bound to pay for it in the long run.

I wish to make one more reference before closing, and that is to what I may call the ethical standard of the present day. In that connection I wish to say that trades unions exist for the purpose of curbing internationalism, and controlling the labour market. Except by force, there can be no trades union, logically speaking, in a country that has free trade and free labour competition. Agriculture is of course in the same predicament. It is customary to say that agriculture is not of a manufacturing character; but as a matter of fact the farmer is a manufacturer. He puts his labour into the soil and gets it out again, and is just as much a manufacturer as the man who makes lumber out of timber or digs minerals and makes them into something else. I have often thought how profoundly true was the remark made by the right hon. leader of the Opposition in an address to a large assembly of farmers near Toronto some three years ago. In discussing the conditions best suited to the farmer and their prospects for better trade and a superior development, the right hon. gentleman said: "Your best market is the home market." That is how he was reported in the Globe. I cut it out and have treasured it ever since. He laid particular emphasis on that fact , and I admired the candour of the right hon. gentleman as much as the fact itself. He laid it down to the farmers that the home market was pre-eminently the best, and I am sure the Ontario farmer knows, now that he has the competition of the West, that without the home market he would be a ruined man.

In the old days people got along very well without money. When they had anything to trade, they lugged it around to their neighbours until they got what they wanted in exchange. It occurred to a princess in the kingdom of Lydia that it would be a good idea to earmark the gifts to the goddesses in the temples, especially gold which was particularly an Asiatic product. The idea was good, because the ear mark not only indicated where the gifts came from, but was a guarantee of genuineness and from that sprang the idea of earmarking money. First of all, it had only a few earmarks such as a seal or mark of some peculiar weapon carried by an Asiatic prince. By-and-by the designs became more elaborate until finally the head of the Sovereign was used. As soon as that occurred and money became money, the financiers proceeded to invent the science of money, and capitalists ever since have been dealing in it, not always I am sure to the advantage of those who in all other walks of life are absolutely dependent upon it. Cash money is at the outside only one-fiftieth of the wealth of the whole world. It would be impossible to transport cash in payment for all the goods bought, because in a very short time the country that did so would be left without any cash, and would be on its beam ends. So the system of bills of exchange was adopted, which is a good deal like our system of a clearing house for banks. This was necessary because no nation in the world would allow its gold reserve to sink below a certain level; and in times of war when distress is greatest nations take particular care that the gold reserve in the treasury is as big as possible; for it is admitted that the country that has most gold will win the fight.

In Greece, the ideal was superiority. She gave to the world great sculptors, great painters, tragedians, great writers of tragedies and comedies, great orators such as Demosthenes, and so on. All the countries together in the world have never produced their equal since for quality or quantity. Why? Because the Greeks were a highly imaginative and intellectual people. Their ideal was typified in the reward they gave to their great athletes at the Olympian games. The winners were crowned with a simple chaplet of wild olive, the olive tree being typical of Greece. Money they never dreamt of, gold they despised, and a rich man they suspected.

Nowhere, even in Homeric history, is there any reference to the riches of anybody. It is their fighting ability, or their eloquence, or beauty or strength that is spoken of, but never their riches. It has remained for this age to glorify the idea of materialism as typified by the rich man.

I wish, therefore, in conclusion, to say that every one of us must realize that we have sold ourselves very largely to materialism, whereas in this age we should keep constantly before ourselves the Christian or ethical ideal as opposed to the materialistic ideal. But Christianity is practically at a discount, or, if not at a discount, it occupies an altogether secondary position in its influence. It is not prominent, it is not predominant, its ideals are laughed at, and theology occupies about as much of a place in the public mind as political economy. What the people want is money, and it is very easy to glide from the wish for or want of capital into desiring to get it at any price and at the sacrifice of any principle. We see every day the mergers in this country, we see the banks that have gone up, we see the investigations, the disclosures, the horrible catastrophies from time to time that are taking place. We see them increasing, and we see people vainly endeavouring to stem this tide of corruption by laws. It can not be done, Mr. Speaker. There are laws enough on the statute books to send all the people in the country to jail. Unless the people become good enough to do more without law, to rise superior to laws, the ideal of a nobler human being will never succeed in placing itself spiritually and ethically on that high plane which it ought to occupy in our minds, and where it would be worthy of those great Greek idealists who have so long preceded us.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia): I think it will be conceded by everybody in this House, and also out of the House, that the propositions submitted by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) in his Budget speech are amongst the most important that have ever been submitted to this House. He comes to Parliament, as is usual, for the supply of money for the coming year, and the money he asks for is for the ordinary expenses of the country and for the continuance of the war. The money that he asks for naturally divides itself into two parts—that part that he asks for in connection with the war, and that part that he asks for in connection with the ordinary expenses of the country. I will, for a moment or two, deal with that portion of his Budget that asks for money in connection with the war. I want to say to my hon. friend that with reference to everything that he asks this House to vote in connection with the carrying on of the war, he will have every man on this side of the House right behind him; we will support him to the limit, and vote anything that he says is necessary for the carrying on of this war. This war has been forced on Great Britain, and the other portions of the Empire. It is not of their own seeking. Great Britain has gone to war for self-preservation in one sense, and for the purpose of seeing that smaller nations are allowed to live and that treaties are kept.

When the war broke out the Government that happened to be in power at the time took, in my judgment, the proper and necessary steps. They called a special session of Parliament and asked for $50,000,000, which was voted without a word of criticism on this side. Now, they are asking for $100,000,000, and we propose to vote that without a word of criticism from this side. We think that the Government took the proper course and that they are doing all right in carrying on the war and we say that Canada is with Great Britain in this war to the extent of her men and her money. If my hon. friend the Minister of Finance should find out at the end of the next fiscal year, March 31, 1916, that the $100,000,000 that he is asking for to-day is not sufficient for the war, the vote shall be supplemented, all he has to do is to come before Parliament and ask for what is necessary and he will find that every Liberal, and I am satisfied every Conservative, in fact every man, will be right behind any proposition he makes and will not criticise the amount he asks for.

We naturally reserve to ourselves the right to expect that it shall be properly expended and to ask, if it is not properly expended, that the matter shall be looked into. I do not imagine for a moment that any Minister of Militia or any Government can look after every dollar of expenditure and see that everything is done rightly. We expect there will be mistakes, that there will be a certain amount of wrong-doing that the Government cannot stop, but whenever there is any very persistent course of wrong-doing, where contractors are charging two prices or contractors are putting in an inferior class of goods for our soldiers, we reserve the right to ask for an investigation of these matters. I think it is our duty to ourselves and to the country and I am satisfied that it is our duty to the Government and that the Government will be a great deal better in the end if matters are looked into and stopped in the beginning instead of being allowed to run on for a year or two or to the extent of the duration of the war. I do not think I need refer any further to that phase of the question.

We come now to consider that portion of my hon. friend's Budget which deals with the money required for the ordinary expenditure of the country and for the capital account expenditure. While we do not criticise the other portion of the Budget I feel that we are absolutely justified in thoroughly criticising that portion of the Budget where my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is asking for money to carry on the ordinary work of the country. It is just as much our duty and right to criticise and look into this matter at this session as at any other session that has ever been held. I think it is more necessary because we are in a very peculiar position at this time. We find that the country is in a most depressed condition, not on account of the war altogether. It may have had something to do with it, but the depression was on the country, conditions were bad, imports were falling, everything was largely at a standstill, the business of the country was going back day by day, month by month, year by year, and in face of all this the Minister of Finance comes down to this House and asks for a greater Budget than ever has been asked for in the history of Canada. My hon. friend tells us that his expenditures are going up so much and therefore he must have more revenue. There are two ways to equalize revenue and expenditure. One way is to do as my friend the Minister of Finance has attempted to do, increase the revenue; another way is to decrease the expenditure. What is the better way, what is the sensible way, in what way would any common-sense man go about equalizing revenue and expenditure? Would it be in hard times to try to collect more taxes or would it be to take the common-sense view and reduce expenditure?

The Minister of Finance is a business man, and I venture to say if he had been allowed a free hand he would never have submitted such a Budget. No business man in Canada, no business man in the civilized world, under the conditions that obtain at present in the Dominion, would have come down with a proposal asking for an expenditure of $190,000,000, apart from the cost of the war, when he admits that the revenue will be about $120,000,000. And yet, that is what he has done. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) suggested that the expenditure should have been cut down, and I say without the slightest fear of successful contradiction that the expenditure could have been cut down, with the full consent of the people of Canada, to meet the revenue of 1915-16, which will be $120,000,000, and that is some $30,000,000 greater than the expenditure was in Canada when the present Government came into power three and a half years ago. There is absolutely no reason on earth for this great increase of expenditure, from $87,000,000 in 1911 to $140,000,000 at the present time. Suppose the Minister of Finance had submitted a ballot to every voter in Canada, asking: Are you in favour of reducing the public expenditure by $30,000,000 or are you in favour of raising that $30,000,000 partly by a direct tax and partly by the raising of the customs duties by which for every dollar you put into the treasury you put three dollars into the pockets of the manufacturers, how many of the voters of Canada do you think would have marked that ballot against reducing expenditures? It is the people of Canada, who have the right to say whether expenditures shall be reduced or taxes increased.

Mr. BRADBURY: Let us go to the people and find out.

Mr. TURRIFF: You cannot go to the people too quick for me. Gentlemen on the other side of the House and their friends outside have been threatening us that if we do not behave ourselves and be good boys and keep quiet, they will dissolve the House and go to the country. I would tell these gentlemen that in view of this Budget they can dissolve the House if they dare and appeal to the people. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) and the gentleman who sits beside him (Mr. Meighen) will have a good deal to explain when they go out to the western farmers.

Mr. BRADBURY: It will not be hard.

Mr. TURRIFF: My hon. friend will have a good deal to explain, and he will have to use greater efforts than he did before to secure a majority.

Mr. BRADBURY: There will be others.

Mr. KYTE: On that side of the House.

Mr. TURRIFF: I think I am looking at a good many hon. gentlemen opposite to whom the remarks of my hon. friend will apply. The Minister of Public Works said yesterday that he hoped there would be no election. I venture to think that there is not a man on the other side of the House who does not know what to take out of that assertion. I notice that while the Minister of Public Works says he hopes there is not going to be an election until after the war, that he is mighty busy, and hon. gentlemen opposite are mighty busy, sending out party literature at the present moment.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is the way they keep the truce.

Mr. TURRIFF: I can assure my hon. friends opposite, that we, as well as they, know how to interpret the smooth words of the Minister of Public Works. We know the Minister of Public Works and we are not blinded one iota by anything he says about deferring the election. My hon. friend stated that when the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) was referring to cutting down expenditures, he did not show how this extra revenue that is needed could be raised if taxes were not levied. That is true, but the hon. member pointed out that it was not necessary to raise this extra revenue at all if the expenditure were cut down. My hon. friend asked if we would stop the public works in view of the fact that there is a great deal of unemployment in the country, but I ask him, who supplies the money for carrying on public works? It is the taxes paid by the people of Canada that provides that money. If the Minister of Finance spends $30,000,000 more this year than he needs to, it is the people of Canada who will have to supply that money, and I tell the Government that when they say they are benefiting the people of Canada by carrying on public works, they are simply taking the money out of one pocket of the ratepayers of Canada and putting it into another. I say that the expenditure on public works could be cut in two and the good of the country would not suffer to the extent of one dollar.

The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) took great credit to himself and to the Government of which he is a supporter that in the Estimates for public works this coming year there is a reduction of about $11,000,000 over the estimate of last year. But let me tell the hon. member that last year the Minister of Public Works put in an estimate of $33,000,000, not that he had the slightest intention of spending $33,000,000, but to hang it out as a bribe to the different constituencies of Canada, and for no other purpose. The Minister of Public Works did not spend that money and he had no idea of spending it when he put it in the Estimates. But, neverthless, when the Minister of Public Works comes forward now and asks for $11,000,000 less than he did in the inflated estimates of last year, the hon. gentleman from Toronto points to what an economical government we have. What my hon. friend is asking for now is double what was expected on public works when his party came into power three years ago.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: Is my hon. friend finding fault with the Minister of Public Works for not expending the whole of last year's vote?

Mr. TURRIFF: Certainly not. The sums were put in the Estimates of last year, not for the purpose of expending all of them, but as a bribe to the different constituencies in case of an election and as nothing else. That is what I said, and that is what I stand by.

Mr. WILCOX: There was no election.

Mr. TURRIFF: There was always the prospect of an election last fall, and it would have looked very well to go through the different constituencies and say: See what this Government has done; it has voted tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars for public works. But the money was not expended, and this year my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is asking for more than his expenditure of last year. Is it a time to go in for lavish expenditures when the revenue is falling away tremendously, and when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has to borrow every dollar required for the war, every dollar for expenditure for public works on capital account, and, if he had not put on extra taxation, a considerable part of the ordinary expenditure on consolidated account?

What does the common-sense business man do when his revenue is partly cut off? Let us take the case of a workingman who for the last ten years until a year ago has been earning $2.50 a day. He is an industrious man and has an economical wife. He buys a lot on the outskirts of the city and builds a little house. As the years go by his house becomes worth say $4,000 to $5,000. Suddenly there comes depressed times throughout the Dominion, and he finds that instead of his wages being $2.50 a day they are cut down to $1.50 a day. What does he do if he is sensible and has succeeded, as the man I speak of has? Does he go to a loan company and borrow enough money to enable him to continue living at the rate of $2.50 a day, or does he cut his living expenses from $2.50 to $1.50 a day? The latter is what the common-sense artisan does on every occasion.

