I think it is somewhat unreal and impractical to expect most borrowers faced with excessive credit charges to go on their own to the courts in order to take advantage of the new provisions in the bill, supposedly for their greater protection. In the bill the government is not proposing any mechanism of its own to initiate and present applications for relief on behalf of borrowers, not is the government proposing to help pay the cost of such court action where a borrower goes to court on his own. Also the government is not proposing any mechanism of its own to defend the borrower or help the borrower bear the cost of defence where the borrower is taken to court for refusing to pay unwarranted credit charges.

● (2120)

To be meaningful, the unwarranted rate concept must require the administrator appointed under the act and his staff to act on behalf, at the very least, of low-income borrowers, to bring action on their behalf before the courts or to defend actions for the purpose of having the court rule the credit charge in question unwarranted. In any event, the minister has not in my view as yet sufficiently made the case for the total abandonment of the step rate ceiling approach of the present Small Loans Act. The fact that the $1,500 ceiling and the rates set out in the act may be out-of-date does not mean the concept as a whole should be totally abandoned. Instead this is simply an argument for raising the ceiling and providing a new formula for setting acceptable interest rates.

The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, the Porter Commission, did not propose removing the ceiling. The special joint committee of the Senate and House on Consumer Credit—The Croll-Basford Committee—did not recommend removing the ceiling. Instead after careful study they both recommended raising it to a more appropriate level—which at the time of their reports they said should be $5,000 rather than $1,500—and also modifying the allowable rates of interest.

One co-chairman of that special committee is now our distinguished and capable Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) in this government which has presented the bill we are now debating. It seems to me that the point of view of his famous report on consumer credit, on the desirability of the ceiling system for small loans, still has validity today.

Also let us look at the Liberal election platform of 1974. This platform did not propose removing that ceiling. The Consumers Association of Canada now has urged that the maximum rate and ceiling concept of the Small Loans Act be maintained. Proposals in this bill to eliminate that approach must be carefully examined to see if they will, in fact, achieve the objectives claimed for them of providing greater access to credit at more reasonable rates for borrowers, while providing them with easy access for relief if they accept unwarranted rates.

However, this bill does nothing to ensure that the low income borrower who has in the past found it difficult to obtain credit from legitimate institutions, will not continue to be forced into the hands of loan sharks rather than getting that credit from legitimate lenders. The bill does nothing to ensure that the borrower, who found it difficult in the past to get credit except from companies licensed under the Small Loans Act, will, when this bill is passed, get credit on terms as favourable as those now provided for loans under the act, either from small loan companies or other credit granting institutions. The minister in his speech on second reading said at one point:

> That is why we propose the repeal of the Small Loans Act. Instead we are proposing a strong and comprehensive set of protective devices applicable to all forms and levels of consumer credit so that consumers will be assured of access to loans bearing fair and reasonable credit charges.

At another point in that same speech he said:

> —I would remind the House of the prepayment privilege and the unwarranted rate provision. A low income borrower who is a good risk—and many of them are—is entitled to get a rate that takes that fact into account. His credit rating may be as good and perhaps better than that of higher income people, but because he is ill-informed, timid, or a person alarmed by forms, he will tend to avoid institutions which will gladly deal with him. Now this borrower can go freely to any institution, obtain a loan at rates commensurate with his true credit risk, and prepay the higher rate loan he is carrying.

However, in spite of the impression conveyed by these words, if the bill simply is passed in its present form, no lender will be obliged to make any loan he is not obliged to make now, and lenders have never been obliged to make loans. No borrower will have any greater right to obtain credit, to obtain a loan, after the bill is passed than he has at present.

The bill adds nothing by way of any absolute assurance that individual consumer borrowers, who consider themselves sufficiently credit worthy to obtain loans at reasonable rates, will ever get them. In fact totally absent from the bill is a pledge made quite explicitly in the 1974 Liberal election platform which said:

> The Liberal policy includes . . . plan for a low-income insurance plan to help establish credit for low-income, steadily employed wage earners.

We need explanations as to why the program promised in the 1974 election platform is not in the bill right now. We should have the government's commitment, before the bill finally becomes law, to the early creation of such a program. If this program comes in the form of federal government guarantees against loss for loans made by financial institutions to low-income, steadily employed borrowers, there would be no valid argument that such a program would be too costly to the public treasury. However, such a program would help fill a need the bill really does not deal with adequately.

The minister's second reading speech said:

> In placing this bill before the House, I would not wish to leave the impression that Canadians are ill-served by the overwhelming majority of their lending institutions.

I suppose it is generally correct that these institutions are of good quality in comparison to much of the rest of the world and that they do provide adequately for the needs of many Canadians. But having said this, the question remains, if it is true as the minister says in his speech that the "police estimate that loan sharking has become a $3 billion a year business in Canada" why should this be the case? Why should a business of this size have developed? If our lending institutions are doing as good a job as the minister says, why do so many Canadians feel that they must turn to loan sharks in order to fill their needs for credit? Why do so many apparently feel that loan sharks are more accessible than our much vaunted financial institutions? Neither the bill nor the minister's speech gives us any real answer to these key questions.

However, the high degree of recourse by consumer-borrowers to loan sharks as described by the minister leads to the conclusions, in my view at least, that there is something necessary in the field of consumer credit that our legitimate financial institutions are not doing. There is a gap they are not filling. To fill this gap calls for early co-operative action both by financial institutions and the government, with the government showing leadership in filling the need of low-income borrowers. This involves not only a special lending program of the type outlined in the election platform but also a new, wide-ranging program for consumer education on the wise use and choice of credit. Such a program has not yet been proposed either in the bill or in the minister's speech on behalf of the government.

An aim of the bill is to enable strong action to be taken against loan sharks. The criminal rate concept, the requirements for record keeping, prohibition against oppressive treatment and harassment of borrowers will all be helpful for this purpose. However, something is missing from the bill which is very important when it comes to dealing with loan sharks. It is something which is also very important for dealing with lenders who do not exactly fall in the loan shark category but whose practices can be described as questionable if not as being downright unscrupulous.

What is missing from the bill is the concept of licensing. The 1974 Liberal election platform promised:

> —legislation requiring federal registration of all money lenders not already registered who lend to individuals.

Not only has this promise not been carried out in the bill but the bill actually proposes the elimination of those requirements already in our law for the licensing of small loans companies and money lenders as defined in the Small Loans Act. No explanation has been given, not only for the seeming abandonment of that 1974 election pledge, but also of the licensing provisions we already have. Licensing procedures can be an effective way of ensuring that those subject to them meet the standards of the law with regard to acceptable conduct in the market place. They can be used to remove from the market place entirely those who have shown through their past conduct that they do not deserve to be there at all. A licensing system provides a basis for cease and desist proceedings and voluntary compliance proceedings that can be quicker and more effective in many instances than having recourse solely to prosecutions which often result only in monetary penalties against the lender with no meaningful direct redress for borrowers.

● (2130)

The bill before us would not prevent anyone from continuing to make loans using questionable or unscrupulous techniques, no matter how many times such a lender were to be convicted under the act or how many times the court ruled the credit charges extracted by that lender to be unwarranted. As long as the lender could find enough unwary customers, it could stay in business.

A licensing procedure authorizing a tribunal to order the removal of the licence after a fair hearing and with rights of appeal could deal effectively with this kind of bad actor in the market place. The proposed law will not only allow them to continue operating, it even removes from the sanction and scrutiny of a licensing procedure those firms now obliged to subject themselves to it under the present Small Loans Act. The lack of a licensing procedure should at the very least, be explained and justified by the government during the course of consideration of this bill.

A simple approach would be to require the licensing, the registration, of all moneylenders not subject to be licensed under other federal or provincial laws. One can agree that duplication of licensing is not necessary. But why remove even the requirement for licensing from those now subject to it under the existing law? Whatever may be said for the authority to be given to the new administrator under the act, that authority is not to exercise a licensing jurisdiction.

The bill gives those harmed through infractions of it the right to sue for civil damages. This is a step in the right direction, but its value is limited. There is the whole problem of access to the courts as discussed earlier. Also, the cost of going to court may not be worth while, even though the interest as a percentage of the loan is very high, if the loan itself is small. The bill provides no right, as it should, for borrowers similarly harmed by a lender or group of lenders to band together through a class action to achieve relief through the courts, something which might not be worth while for them to do alone. The bill also makes no provision for the administrator to take action for damages even on behalf of individual low income borrowers.

In looking at the unwarranted rate concept, it should be noted that a decision by a court that a rate is unwarranted applies only to the case which is brought before it—to the one transaction for which a review is sought. Certainly the same judge, or another, may use such a ruling as a precedent when considering another case. However, a decision that a rate is unwarranted will not be binding on lenders with respect to any other transaction even though such other transaction may contain identical terms. Further individual court actions would have to be undertaken.

Therefore it could well be that the fear of having their credit charges challenged in court as being unwarranted might not have the salutary and self-policing effect hoped for by the government and expressed in the minister's speech. Instead, some lenders might rely on their understanding of the law of averages, expecting that while some of their loans might be challenged as unwarranted, most would not be challenged, for the reasons I have already outlined. Some lenders might well decide to take their chances in the expectation that while a few of their loans and credit charges would be struck down by the courts, any loss involved would be more than made up by excessive and unjustified gains from charging rates which might be unwarranted but which would never be looked at by any court, no matter what the bill in its present form may say.

[Mr. Gray.]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, much of the effectiveness of the act will come not from what is said in the bill itself but rather in regulations, the contents of which have not yet been disclosed to us. There are more than 20 places in the bill where matters are left to be defined and made meaningful by regulation.

I would also point out that the bill would allow even those beneficial features it contains to be made meaningless—to be withdrawn—since, according to clause 31(1)(a) the government may make regulations "exempting any class of lending transactions from the application of this act or of any provision or provisions of this act". In some cases regulations can be made excluding whole classes of institutions from the provisions of the bill. I recognize that delegation to the government by parliament of the right to make and change definitions and details of the application of a law by regulation helps keep that law relevant in the light of changing practices in the market place, but it can also mean that this bill, after it is debated and voted upon, may later turn out to be far different both in form and application from what it is now, before the regulations are finally issued.

The bill does say that before any regulations made under it may be proclaimed in force there must be a reasonable time left to comment on them. That is, no doubt, worth while for groups and individuals in the private sector. But as far as parliament is concerned it cannot be a substitute for knowing the government's exact intentions on the important matters the bill proposes be left to be spelled out in regulations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I am referring, for example, to the level of the rate of the criminal rate of interest to which sanctions will apply, to the institutions and transactions to be exempt from the act, and the kind of information to be spelled out in advertizing in which credit is mentioned. I say that the government must table a complete set of draft regulations before the committee studying the bill at the outset of its hearings. There can be no meaningful parliamentary debate nor can there be meaningful public input as to the content of the bill without these regulations being before us at the earliest date possible, which I say should not be later than the beginning of the committee hearings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: The material distributed with the bill said it would permit the creation of a national base of data on consumer credit, but the minister in his speech made no reference to this aspect, nor does the measure before us explicitly deal with it. We should hear more about the government's intentions in this regard. How will this data base be created and operated? What does the government intend to do to ensure the right of privacy of borrowers and prevent anyone having access to information about a particular individual without that individual's consent? What will the government do to ensure that any individual can ascertain what information may exist in the data base about him and that any errors will be quickly and fully corrected? More information on this is required.

My comments and questions have been raised in a constructive way with the aim of securing the best possible legislation for Canadian consumers. This is extremely important since, as has been pointed out, consumer debt has increased from $1 billion in 1947 to $23 billion at the present time and has come to represent 22 per cent of the total disposable income of Canadians. The importance of consumer credit is so great that, to use the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he announced the consumer credit plank in the 1974 Liberal election platform, "We feel it is vital to provide the utmost in protection and equity in the field of consumer credit." I believe the bill deserves support on second reading, but in allowing it to pass through the balance of the parliamentary process we must make sure that it does, in fact, provide "the utmost in protection and equity in the field of consumer credit".

Finally, Mr. Speaker, however much, in the words of Edward Fitzgerald in his "Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam", one would like to "take the cash and let the credit go", the economy we have now, and which we are likely to have in the foreseeable future, does not make this possibility at all likely. Our duty, therefore, is to ensure that credit goes with, and not against, the best interests of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to make my comments on Bill C-16 I might be excused for feeling a little pity for the minister. It seems that in his new post he has not had a chance to get agreement from all members of his party over there. It is not often that I have to wait when I get up for applause for a member on the government side to die down.

● (2140)

I find it very strange, Mr. Speaker, in fact incredible, that a government that has allowed such high inflation as we have been experiencing in past years should be so worried, as it is now, about high interest rates. While being concerned with high interest rates we find that it has removed the ceiling on interest rates and replaced those ceilings with some unknown rates, to be included in some regulation to be promulgated at some unknown time.

I listened to the minister telling us about his consultations. It is true that there were consultations, Mr. Speaker, but consultation to be meaningful has to be two way. I should like to refer to a letter from the Consumers Association of Canada in which they make reference to discussions with the minister held by several representatives from their association. I think it is significant that this letter is dated October 20, exactly one week before this bill was introduced by the minister in this House.

In their letter the Consumers Association of Canada make reference to several proposals that they want the minister to consider in drafting the legislation. The first matter they refer to is the ceilings. They favour retention of a graduated ceiling on the cost of loans up to $7,500. They are also concerned that ceilings should be set at levels that realistically reflect the cost of lending money. With reference to the unwarranted rate, the Consumers Association has this to say:

> We do not believe that the proposed provision involving an unwarranted rate concept and a seven times prime rate ceiling are adequate substitutes for explicit regulation of small loan rates.

Small loan rates have not been mentioned in any way in any of the material put out or in the ministers own remarks in this House. Apparently, judging from this letter, there was a discussion with the CAC and the minister about a rate, and presumably a seven times prime rate ceiling was mentioned by one side or the other. The prime rate in Canada today is 11¼ per cent, so if we are to have an unwarranted rate seven times that, it does not take very long to calculate that this comes to 77 and some odd per cent interest, or nearly 80 per cent, as one hon. member has already mentioned tonight.

That may sound like a very high figure and the minister has not given us any idea what he plans to do in connection with the ceiling. It might be worth reflecting that the Small Loans Act, which will be repealed if this bill is passed, provided for a nominal rate of 24 per cent per annum. This act was last amended 20 years ago, in 1956, and I suspect that 24 per cent per annum in 1956 was roughly six times the likely prime rate at that time of approximately 4 per cent.

The Consumers Association goes on to suggest that the unwarranted rate system depends ultimately on the ability and willingness of those most likely to need protection to go to court. I will be saying something more about that in a few minuter, Mr. Speaker.

Another concern of the Consumers Association is disadvantaged borrowers. They express concern about the loan sharking problem and therefore favour inclusion of an absolute ceiling for legal interest rates. There is reference somewhere in the material to a criminal rate, but I have not been able to find the term "criminal rate" in the bill and certainly it does not seem to be defined there.

In discussing disadvantaged borrowers the Consumers Association says this:

> In any case, the widespread vulnerability of low-income populations to credit difficulties is by now well known, and should therefore be made a priority target of government policy and program development.

The CAC also favours retention of licensing requirements for regulated lenders, subject to exemption of lenders already governed by existing or future federal or provincial licensing requirements. As we have heard from others in this debate, Mr. Speaker, the licensing requirements will have disappeared with the passage of this legislation.

Some of the other concerns mentioned by the CAC in its letter to the minister are civil sanctions; the definition of "credit transaction", which has not been clarified, Mr. Speaker; non-purchase money mortgages, to which they would like to see attached the right of prepayment without penalty; and finally in the field of federal provincial relations they recommend regular consultation between federal and provincial governments.

What makes this letter all the more incredible, Mr. Speaker, is its final sentence to the minister, as follows:

I trust that you will be giving close attention to our views before introducing the new bill to parliament.

We know that hardly was the letter received by the minister that the bill was presented to parliament. One can only guess that the reason for the sudden introduction of this bill was the government's failure to have anything else of any meaning on the docket of this House.

To underline the disappointment of the Consumers Association of Canada at the ignoring of their recommendations, I should like to refer to their bulletin which is dated the day after the bill was introduced into this House. They have this to say:

It is clear that comprehensive credit legislation to deal with all types of credit transactions is long overdue . . . And we warmly welcome those elements of the new bill which will help to provide greater protection to consumers who borrow and lend money.

They then express some severe reservations, such as the government's proposal to eliminate the limits on interest rates on small loans. They hope that these features will be amended when the bill is debated in parliament. They also consider that the bill allows consumers only limited means to obtain restitution for losses incurred as a result of illicit lending practices. They also make reference to the fact that this is a long and complicated bill.

This important group, the Consumers Association of Canada, is funded by this government in order to bring some ground level reports forward from the consumers of this country, who are the very people that the minister is proposing to help. There is no evidence that he has received any support from the very people at whom he has aimed this legislation.

As speakers on this side of the House have already said, we are in general agreement with the stated aims of this bill. In particular, the minister said that he wanted to protect Canadian borrowers. We could not agree with anything more. Secondly, the minister says he wants to provide more and better information on credit, which is another commendable and long overdue aim with which we totally agree. Further, he wants to eliminate unnecessary complexities and confusion in credit dealings, again extremely commendable, Mr. Speaker. He also wants to define uniform rules to protect borrowers and depositors. That also is fine. We have four important principles with which we are in total agreement.

These aims are given priority in the bill because consumer borrowing has increased at such a high rate, even considering the rates of inflation that have had to be overcome. For example, in 1950 the consumer credit figure given is $1.2 billion, or 10 per cent of personal expenditures. By 1974 consumer credit had reached $20.6 billion and amounted to 26 per cent of personal expenditures in that year. That did not include money borrowed on mortgages on individual houses and condominiums, which money was actually used not for the purchase of the real property but for the purchase of consumer goods. But frequently to borrow on a mortgage on a house is a cheaper way of borrowing than by the conventional financing methods. On average, statistics show that every employed member of the labour force owed $2,250 in 1974.

● (2150)

Despite this dramatic change the Small Loans Act and the Interest Act have not been altered significantly, since 1956 in the case of the Small Loans Act and since 1917 in the case of the Interest Act. These bills remained substantially the same in spite of the Porter Commission of 1964 and the report on consumer credit in 1967 which showed the need for change. In 1975, just about one year ago, the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs said in a speech that there has been serious need for change for a long time.

There has obviously been a lot of thought in the past and it is nice to see that the government is taking steps to make some corrections. One could wonder whom one could blame for all this delay. It is interesting to note that since I was two years old we have had less than six years of non-Liberal government in this country. In other words, for 35 of the last 41 years we have had Liberal governments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You were born too late.

Mr. Clarke: I should add that it is likely to change very soon. I do not see how hon. members opposite can sit there and applaud the performance of this government.

I want to deal with some of the complaints of a general nature which we might have in connection with this bill. First of all we find that the borrower is defined as a person or a closely held corporation with fewer than 15 shareholders. However, when we come to the mortgage clauses of this act, namely clauses 14 and 15, the definition of "borrower" is changed to exclude a closely held corporation. Many individuals band together to form corporations, for business dealings or whatever, and sometimes individuals have corporations and the home is owned by a corporation. These individuals will now be denied the rights given to individual borrowers.

The minister has made a big point about the right to pay-off by individual borrowers, but all he has done under the new rules is to allow a complete pay-off of a mortgage after three years instead of five years. The individual borrower always had the right to pay off his loan in full after five years. There has been no change in the penalty payment required in paying off an individual's mortgage—it is still three months.

Another specific type of complaint is found in Clause 31 and it covers the regulations. It is stated that the governor in council may make regulations. We have heard about how many different times the regulations have been referred to in the bill, and I will not try to detail them all, but there are some glaring examples—about six here, I think—in clause 6, with regard to the form prescribed by the regulation, that the information must be filed in a form to be prescribed by the regulations, and the contents must be such information as is prescribed by the regulations. That has regard to the relevant credit charge.

Clause 7 requires that the lender shall, in a manner and form prescribed, disclose to the borrower such information as is prescribed by the regulations. Here we are again asked to approve a bill which does not tell us the form or how the information should be filed, and it does not say what information is required to be filed. We wonder how one can comply with a statute that does not contain these details and how we can be asked to pass such a bill. In clause 18 we are told of the manner of providing statements to borrowers and that the fee prescribed is to be determined by regulation.

Clause 20 refers to the content of advertisements for deposit taking institutions which is to be set out by regulation. Clause 21 refers to regulations for a class of institution excepted from the bill, and the calculations must be in the manner prescribed by the regulations as well as the intervals which are to be prescribed by the regulations. Finally under clause 31 we find that the governor in council may exempt any class of lending transactions from the act.

There are so many holes there that one really does not know what kind of thing we are asked to pass. We have a bill with unspecified maximums and an unspecified criminal rate of interest. We find that the borrower has to take after-the-fact action which is really quite ineffective, too indefinite, and nobody knows where he stands on various transactions.

The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) commented on the problems a borrower might find if he has to go to court. The bill is absolutely silent on legal costs, and I imagine there would be very few borrowers who would be willing to take a chance in a court on further burdening themselves with high legal costs as well as interest rates they have been called upon to pay. I think the hon. member for Windsor West made the problem quite clear with regard to the average small borrower and his dealings with the courts. When we had the small loans provisions, the 24 per cent was spelled out in the act and it worked well for the few years it had before it was finally repealed. Even then the ceiling was $1,500, and all that did was to encourage the people who were unwilling to get involved with the small loans regulations to increase the amount of their loans to over $1,500. The figure often seen was $1,525. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I might ask the acting government House leader or the deputy House leader for the House business tomorrow and for the balance of the week.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, we intend to continue with Bill C-16 until the debate is completed. I gather from the number of hon. members who still wish to speak on the subject on both sides that we are not likely to finish that subject tomorrow, although we might. If we do, we would then move on to government order No. 5, the legislation relating to currency and exchange. After we have concluded that, we would likely take a look at government order No. 4 relating to land surveys, and following that to government order No. 7 relating to fishing and recreational harbours. Our primary intention will be to continue with Bill C-16 until second reading stage is completed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—SUGGESTED ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES IN CONNECTION WITH PROPOSED THIRD RUNWAY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that I have available I want to remind all hon. members that early in 1973 questions were raised in the House by members of this party, myself included, concerning a proposed expansion of Vancouver Airport which consisted primarily of the building of a new runway which would be closer by a considerable distance to the heavily built up portion of Vancouver and which would extend into the estuary part of the Fraser River, which is an important salmon resting area for young fish having come down the Fraser River and before going into the Pacific Ocean. The two immediate problems were pollution, first of the water, and the second of noise for those people affected by the new runway. There are the other problems of how this would affect the entire area.

• (2200)

Eventually the government of the day agreed to establish an airport planning committee to study this entire issue. That was established early in 1973 and the report came down in March, 1976. The result of the deliberations of that planning committee, which included members of the Vancouver regional government, interested people in the aviation industry, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Urban Affairs, The Community Forum, the City of Vancouver and the greater Vancouver regional district, was that there was a split decision, but the majority was for not proceeding with the airport expansion because a case had not been made for it by the Ministry of Transport. The issue was whether or not a long runway, which would extend into the estuary, should be built.

Subsequent to the report of the airport planning committee the then minister of the environment said that perhaps we could have a shorter runway which would not extend into the estuary. On March 7, 1976, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) issued a press release in which he said:

A federal government decision is expected to be made within the next few months and all interested parties are asked to present their views to the minister as soon as possible.

In the press release the minister did not set out what kind of a proposal was now being looked at, but it became very clear that the minister had decided to take the decision making from the airport planning committee and make his own decision in the secrecy of his own office as to whether or not, first of all, there ought to be any new runway, and second, what kind of runway it ought to be. Subsequently in the House the minister was asked on several occasions in recent weeks just what was going on.

On October 25, as reported at page 402 of Hansard I asked the minister if he would advise the House at what stage were the deliberations concerning the so-called third runway at Vancouver International Airport. The minister replied that some further studies of an environmental nature were seen as necessary before any final decision was taken. Then the minister went on to say a most extraordinary thing. He said that in the meantime a certain amount of regular fill that is available without impact upon the waters nearby is being obtained and arranged for pre-loading in the runway area.

I asked the minister if this meant that the decision had in fact been made to go ahead with the new runway and he said no, that it did not mean that. Then on November 1 I asked the minister again if he could tell us what was happening with regard to the situation, especially in view of the fact that an environmental panel had been selected in July this year but had apparently been disbanded. The minister did not know what the reference to that environment panel was and said:

My view is that the panel that is to be, is still to be and there will be an announcement on that in due course.

It is extraordinary that on September 18 a member of his department spoke to the citizens' group in Vancouver and answered certain questions. He was asked whether an environmental panel had been established and was asked the date and formation of the original panel. He answered that that was in July of this year. He was asked this question:

Was there actually a specified membership of persons on the panel?

He answered:

Yes there was a list drawn up and a panel meeting actually was held, as a first go-around to inform the panel members what it was all about.

He then went on to say that the panel was disbanded and has no longer any standing.

There are certain questions which arise out of this. The events are well known in the city of Vancouver, British Columbia, and there are certain questions which demand answers. First, why has the minister circumvented the planning and review process established three years ago under the airport planning committee which involved the federal government, the local government, the greater Vancouver regional district, the city of Vancouver, and the citizens of the affected area? The second question is what happened to the representations, if any, which the minister invited from the public in his press release of March 12, 1976? Are we ever going to see them?

[Mr. Fraser.]

The third question is just how could anyone comment on a proposal when no details of the proposal—or proposals—have ever been given to anyone? In other words, we have no details as to what it is the minister is in fact studying. The fourth question is why did the minister say in his press release of March 12, that, and I quote, "a decision would be made in the next few months"? It is now eight months later, and all is confusion.

The next question is why has the minister refused, since March, 1976, up to now to tell us what proposal is being considered? Is it a long runway into the estuary or only a short runway within the dyke? Sixth, will the minister refer the proposals under consideration, whatever they are, back to the airport planning committee if the proposals he is considering are different from those already studied by that committee? Presumably there must be some difference, or the minister would not be talking about further studies or comments. The next point is that if no decision has yet been made—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to stop the hon. member because his seven minutes have expired.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) I think it is necessary, in order to understand fully what is now taking place with regard to a third runway at Vancouver International Airport, to review some of the recent history of the project.

In 1973 the Ministry of Transport came to the conclusion that a runway parallel to the existing east-west runway was needed at Vancouver International Airport. Terms of reference for an airport planning committee were established, and the first meeting was held in April, 1973. The terms of reference were "to ensure that the proposed development of Vancouver International Airport was compatible with the planning of the various levels of government and the concerns of the public in the communities involved".

Several planning studies were carried out under the supervision of various subcommittees of the airport planning committee. The studies resulted in ten reports, all of which were completed and printed at various times in 1975. During the course of the planning and environmental studies, alternative concepts for a parallel runway were considered, all of which involved extensions past the dyke and into the estuary.

The report of the airport planning committee was printed and made available to the public in March of this year, and the airport planning committee was dissolved. At about this point in time we arrived at the conclusion that instead of implementing one of the concepts involving extension into the estuary we should construct a shorter runway—of approximately 10,000 feet—which could be located entirely within the dyke and which would involve no protrusion into the estuary. We have taken the position that this third runway should not be started before 1978 and that this project is subject to the environmental assessment and review process of the federal government.

We have asked that officials of Environment Canada establish an environment assessment panel to review the third runway project. These officials now are considering our request, and we expect a response in the near future.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.12 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

80001—46½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 3, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSING

COMPLIANCE OF FEDERAL PROGRAMS INVOLVING RENTAL UNITS WITH RENT CONTROL REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since federally subsidized housing does not fall within the jurisdiction of provincial rent controls and in view of the injustices arising from low income earners being forced to pay rent increases far in excess of permitted wage increases and in excess of the maximum rental increase limitations established for private sector rental housing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs take immediate action to ensure that all federal programs involving rental housing comply with the rental control legislation in their appropriate province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

SUGGESTION LEADER OF OPPOSITION DISCLOSES ANY CASES OF WHICH HE IS AWARE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid any further possible conflict of interest cases involving members of parliament, and following the initiative taken by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) in writing to members of his caucus, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Leader of the Official Opposition to disclose to this House any possible conflict of interest cases which he becomes aware of as a result of his letter to Conservative members of parliament and, that in the interest of maintaining the integrity of members of this parliament, he make such information open and public to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FALSE ADVERTISING OF WORKS OF ART—GOVERNMENT ACTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing urgency. Since Canadian artists are being irreparably harmed financially by the sale of factory produced paintings advertised right here, in Ottawa, as original paintings, even though federal customs officials have refused them free entry as original works of art, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That this House urges the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to investigate and lay charges, if warranted, against persons advertising as original works of art paintings which are in fact produced on an assembly line basis.

Mr. Speaker: Such motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

EXPRESSION OF THANKS FOR DIRECTION GIVEN BY LEADER OF OPPOSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, as a matter of urgent and pressing necessity:

That this House expresses its thanks to the Leader of the Opposition for the direction he has given to this House and regrets that other party leaders have not seen fit to follow his lead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Goodale and Pierre said no.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Try again, fellows.

Les Terrasses de la Chaudière

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF OLD AGE PENSIONS TO WIDOWS, SPINSTERS, WIDOWERS AND BACHELORS BETWEEN AGES OF 60 AND 65—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my motion relates to a matter of serious urgency to many Canadians between the ages of 60 and 65, as members in all parts of the House realize. I therefore ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House urges the government to introduce without delay an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to provide for the equivalent of the spouse's allowance to be paid as well to widows, spinsters, widowers and bachelors between the ages of 60 and 65, provided they are out of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can only be presented to the House with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

PROPOSED DELAY OF LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the economy of Canada is being detrimentally affected by government construction or participation in grandiose projects at a time when essential research and development and other more worthwhile endeavours are being starved for lack of funds, and whereas the Government of Canada has opted to lease at tremendous cost 1,825,000 square feet of office space in a project recently commenced in the national capital area called les Terrasses de la Chaudière, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

● (1410)

That at a time when surplus office space in existing facilities is a very real possibility, particularly in view of decentralization initiatives by government, which have a lot of merit, that the government forthwith modify or postpone this ill-advised and poorly conceived arrangement for additional office space, and by so doing, save the taxpayers of Canada a sum in excess of $600 million.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF BANK OF MONTREAL TO HIRE PEOPLE SUFFERING FROM DIABETES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Bank of Montreal practices discrimination in refusing to hire people who suffer from diabetes, and in view of the fact that those who suffer from this disease have a statistically proven better work record than many other people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Minister of Labour commission an investigation into the hiring practices of the Bank of Montreal and that the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is at present launching a campaign against alcoholism, also launch an information campaign encouraging the victims of diabetes and related disorders to withdraw their funds and all financial dealings from the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

SUGGESTED NAMING OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR AGENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. In the interests of good management of government and to correct the serious internal confusion in CIDA, a $1 billion agency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Prime Minister immediately implement his own answer to a question of the Leader of the Opposition given at page 625 of Hansard, that a minister be named expressly for the purpose of supervising CIDA.

An hon. Member: Joe Guay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY AND REPORT

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Minister of Public Works is in the chamber. I would like to ask him if at this time he would give to the House or table in the House the details of the report that he asked for from the members of his staff in the Department of Public Works. Can he advise if he is satisfied with the agreement that was made with Campeau on the Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project and whether he considers it a good one for the people of Canada?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, basically the information to which the hon. member makes reference was not in the form of a report. It was a considerable quantity of information relating to Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project as well as phase three and phase four in Hull and the York Olympia project here in Ottawa. I am still going over some of the details of this information. I am not yet in a position to comment on the final parts of the question.

Mr. Huntington: Does the minister not agree that the taxpayers of Canada are entitled to a full and open inquiry on this contract, particularly in view of its magnitude, as well as the negotiations and circumstances leading to the contract? Can he assure the House that documents and files in his department pertaining to the Terrasses de la Chaudière deal are not being removed in order to obscure the situation with regard to a subsequent investigation on this project?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, to date my investigations have not lead me to believe that there was any wrongdoing, as suggested by the hon. member. Until I am convinced that there was a shred of that type of activity, I do not see the reason or justification for an inquiry.

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE TREASURY BOARD PROCEDURES FOLLOWED

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I will address my final supplementary to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister reviewed the circumstances leading to Les Terrasses project and can he assure the House that there was no circumvention of normal Treasury Board procedures in the negotiations leading to the signing of this contract?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I believe I reported to the House a few days ago, I have already discussed this matter with the Minister of Public Works. He reported to me that he was conducting an inquiry and every reply we have had to date is to the effect that Treasury Board procedures were followed in the most normal fashion.

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—TENDERING PROCEDURE—ROLE OF A. J. PERRIER IN EVALUATION OF PROJECT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. As the Department of Public Works has a tendering procedure applicable to office lease-purchase proposals, would the hon. gentleman tell us whether that procedure was followed with respect to the Campeau project, Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, and, in particular, was the evaluation of the project carried out by a committee chaired by the Assistant Deputy Minister (Realty), Mr. A. J. Perrier, a former employee of Campeau, as was the case when tenders were sought for the Olympia-York project to which the minister has just referred, now being built on Sparks Street?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): There is a significant difference between that situation and the Olympia-York situation. The situation here involved a blend of Crown-owned and privately-owned land so in this case the builder-developer, or builder-lessor, actually made the submission because he owned a portion of the land with which we were concerned. To date there is no set procedure, as the hon. member implies, as far as these purchase arrangements are concerned.

Mr. Stevens: Since the minister is reported in the press to have stated yesterday, referring to the Campeau project, that in retrospect it would have been better had the government expropriated the land and invited public tenders, would the hon. gentleman tell us whether he or the department are now considering such an expropriation with a view to either dropping the project or, at least, following proper tendering procedures before continuing any further?

Mr. Buchanan: I think that as a matter of policy in the future, while I am minister, I should like to expropriate the land. But, again, as I said to the hon. member for Capilano, I wish to emphasize that I have found no suggestion or indication of wrongdoing in this particular case, although that was not the procedure followed.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

INQUIRY WHETHER LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT RECEIVED TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My final supplementary is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister of Finance having stated yesterday, with reference to the Chaudière project that an expenditure of this kind would in due course have to receive Treasury Board approval, would the minister inform us whether such approval was granted and whether he is satisfied there were no irregularities in the procedures followed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): I believe this transaction was vetted and approved by Treasury Board. I am so informed. Insofar as the propriety of what took place is concerned, I have given the matter a preliminary examination and I say again I see no ethical problems involved in it; I think it will stand examination although it is admittedly a very complex transaction.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATED GUIDELINES FOR MEMBERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In addressing this question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note that it was only members of the Conservative Party who said no to an important conflict of interest motion yesterday. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that the government will bring forward legislation before Christmas which will make it mandatory that all members of parliament publicly declare, on an annual basis, their financial interests and those of their spouses. I have in mind a parliamentary financial interest registry of the kind established last year in the parliament of Great Britain.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to remind the House of what the government has done already in this regard, more than two years ago.

An hon. Member: Nothing!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member says "Nothing". He has obviously not been doing his homework.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The policy statement was very elaborate and I made it myself in the House. It was a policy statement regarding conflict of interest as it concerned members of parliament generally and members of the ministry in particular. So far as the members of the ministry are concerned, I indicated the policies we were following and every member of my ministry has made a public declaration in front of a trustee.

● (1420)

Mr. Grafftey: They have not, and you know it.

Mr. Trudeau: So, it is open to scrutiny whether or not ministers have complied with the guidelines that have been laid down.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Tony hasn't made his.

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to members of parliament themselves, naturally the government did not want to legislate until members of parliament had been given an opportunity to study the guidelines proposed for their conduct, part of the intention being to clarify some provisions of the present Senate and House of Commons Act which are not perfectly clear.

[Mr. Andras.]

This statement of policy was handed to the Commons committee and to a committee of the Senate. They were some year and a half or two years bringing in a report but we now have a report from the two Houses which was received early this summer. The government intends proceeding with a new statement of policy or legislation, one I would be inclined to say which would follow a rather tougher route than some of the recommendations of the committee. But it is completely erroneous to indicate that there have been no guidelines. The government has stated its policy for ministers and for members of parliament, and it is up to members of parliament themselves to follow those guidelines or to modify them.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that I did not say in my question that nothing had been done vis-à-vis the ministry. My question pertains to members of parliament of all parties and has, of course, come up because of a very recent case involving one member of this House. I listened with care to what the Prime Minister said, but given the fact that members of parliament on both sides have to make decisions on trade policy, or on taxation policy, for example, would he not agree that in order to avoid the appearance even of a conflict of interest in such important matters it is essential not simply for the ministry but for all members of parliament, to have on record a detailed outline of their financial interests? If so, would he assure the House that the measures that he intends to bring forward will in fact go as far as those in Great Britain on this important issue?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member refers to the proposals which were made by the government in its policy statement, he will find they would involve members abstaining from making any decision or speech or taking a position in areas where they might have a conflict. As a matter of fact, these very days the House leader of the Senate is ensuring that a committee which will examine banking legislation shortly has no member on its membership who might be in a conflict of position situation. So, as far as the chairmen, ministers, the public service and the staff in our offices are concerned, all of the guidelines have been enunciated and followed. So far as members of parliament are concerned, the hon. member will remember that there was quite a large area of disagreement on both sides of the House as to what should be implemented, and that is what the government is presently studying.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister took a long time not to answer the question. I should like to ask him this. Does or does not the government believe that it is essential to maintain at least the appearance of public integrity for members of parliament, and therefore believe that all members should declare on a regular annual basis their financial interests in the way that has been established in other democratic bodies, including that of Great Britain?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member insists that I am evading the question. I assure him that so far as the people who are under my control as Prime Minister in minister's offices, in the public service and in the ministry are concerned, their interests have been declared. So far as the House of Commons is concerned, I think it is up to the House of Commons to make up its mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question.

Considering that the press reported yesterday that the statements recently made by the former minister of transport, who is now a Liberal candidate in the Louis-Hébert riding in Quebec, to the effect that, should Quebec choose to separate from Canada, he would fight along the sides of those who think like him, I would like to ask if the Prime Minister could advise this House whether Mr. Jean Marchand had consultations with him or whether he mentioned his intentions to him on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it pertains to the House or to myself to comment on the provincial elections now in process. It is not our custom to do so and I do not see why the hon. member would expect the federal government to interfere with those elections. The former minister of transport now stands as a candidate in provincial elections. Being a former minister of transport, he is no longer a member of the federal cabinet.

* * *

BILINGUALISM

INQUIRY IF PROVINCES REQUESTED FUNDS TO TEACH SECOND LANGUAGE IN SCHOOLS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Since the current elections are of paramount importance especially to Quebecers and indirectly involve the federal government, could the Prime Minister advise the House, since they talk about teaching our children in the other language, French or English as the case may be, whether some Canadian provinces, including Quebec, have applied to the federal government for more funds for the teaching of the other language in schools?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows or should know that for many years now the government has followed a policy which provides provinces with funds for the teaching of the second language or the other official language in the case of a minority group speaking it. I think the funds available in the budget for the current year amount to about $125 million. Those funds are distributed among the provinces under a formula which is also known to the House. I do not know the detailed distribution to tell exactly what amount goes to which province, but if the hon. member would put his question on the order paper, he would surely get the answer.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF EXPROPRIATION AND TENDERING

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works another question about the Chaudière project. In view of his very constructive answer to the hon. member for York-Simcoe to the effect that in future he would favour expropriation and tendering procedures for vast projects like this one, and in view of the fact that this project is still in its infancy, will the minister undertake to consider very seriously reviewing this project and instituting this type of action now rather than limiting it to the future?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in reply a few days ago to the hon. member for Capilano, this project is one where in fact a contract was negotiated over a period of 12 to 15 months and was entered into in good faith. It is my understanding that the government now stands in the position of having entered into a full and binding contract, so I would find it awkward to follow the course of action advocated by the hon. member.

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—INTEREST RATE AND MANAGEMENT FEE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I would like to remind the minister that at times governments do have the power to abrogate, on a fair basis, binding contracts, as has been recently shown, and I would like to ask the minister one detailed question with respect to this project. Is it the case that this project is amortized at the rate of 11¼ per cent over a period of 35 years? The project presently appears to have had no competitive bidding or supervision by government with respect to its proposed construction? Is it a fact that the Campeau Corporation will receive a management fee of 5 per cent of the total cost of this project, which will add approximately another $7.5 million?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): There are two parts to that question. The 11¼ per cent is only for the first 15 years, as I understand it, not for the full period of 35 years.

An hon. Member: Does it go up?

Mr. Buchanan: It is not binding for the full period. I am sorry, but I forget the last part of the question.

Mr. MacKay: The management fee.

Mr. Buchanan: I will verify that point, but to the best of my knowledge there is not a management fee. I will check that out.

* * *

● (1430)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF ADOPTING METHODS USED BY WEST GERMANY TO SECURE LABOUR-MANAGEMENT CO-OPERATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As West Germany has achieved an inflation rate of 4 per cent, an unemployment rate of 3.7 per cent and last year had a trade surplus of $13 billion brought about by cooperation between management, labour and government, with government giving great leadership, is the government examining the methods used in that country to see whether they could be tried here as an alternative to the government's policy of confrontation with management and labour which has produced such unsatisfactory results for our economy.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the various methods used for arriving at an incomes policy have been a matter of scrutiny within the government and it is indeed for the purpose of achieving some national consensus on the fair share between the various elements in the community that we are having meetings with leaders of organized labour, business leaders and with other groups in the country to arrive at, perhaps not the same kind of agreement, but a similar type of agreement that the Germans have achieved in the past.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. As latest reports are that the government's chance of success with these latest approaches to management and labour are no better than during the past few years—which has been zero—does the Prime Minister not agree that it is desirable to examine the methods used by those who have achieved such very spectacular results in fields where we need to show great improvement if the economy is to continue in a viable position.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen is pessimistic about the reasonableness of business and labour in accepting some kind of formula for restraining the growth of inflation in Canada. I think, as to the experience of my predecessor in the spring of 1975, one should not be too sanguine in that regard, but we all stand to gain if that kind of an initiative can be successful. I would only say that in Germany where you have a social democrat government elected by the trade union movement, there is an intimate relationship between organized labour and the government of the day there which does not exist here.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I will try a final supplementary to the Prime Minister who has ducked the first two questions. I would say to him, as he is taking no interest in examining the very spectacular results produced by West Germany, as there are none so blind as those who will not see, does the Prime Minister ever get migraine headaches—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —from keeping his head in the sand so much of the time.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

APPLICATION OF BELL CANADA FOR RATE INCREASE—ASSURANCE OF CONSUMER REPRESENTATION AT HEARINGS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Is the minister aware of today's application by Bell Canada for another phone rate increase ranging in 1977 between 9.5 per cent and 12.5 per cent, and will she insure that there is active and adequate consumer representation at the hearings before the CRTC.

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I know about the application by Bell Canada for a rate increase based on its investment needs for the future. However, I would point out to the hon. member that there are regulatory bodies whose function is to consider the revenues of public utilities. Such bodies are specifically created to protect the consumer against unwarranted increases, in view of the fact that those companies often hold monopolies or near monopolies.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate the function of the regulatory body, but in view of the fact that we have another regulatory body that has been created because of the problems of the government in respect of the economic conditions in this country, namely the AIB, will the minister confer with the regulator and find out if there are any restrictions or adverse regulations or directives of the AIB that are affecting adversely the profit picture, the investment portfolio or the profit ratio of this company which is one of the reasons perhaps that it has to have another rate increase.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the CRTC is empowered to implement the anti-inflation program, and the measures we established to fight inflation are submitted to the consideration of the CRTC with respect to the requests it gets. Those bodies are quite flexible because companies such as Bell Canada or others are not always subject to the normal laws of the market.

[English]

* * *

SPORTS

SUMMER GAMES AT ST. JOHN'S—TERMS OF COMMITMENT TO SUPPLY FUNDS

Mr. Dave Rooney (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for sports and fitness. It concerns the summer games to be held in St. John's, Newfoundland, in 1977. In view of the fact that the chairman of the summer games committee, with the concurrence of the committee largely appointed by the chairman, has awarded the major contract for the games to a company owned by himself without public tender, can the minister inform the House whether or not the government has already made commitments which carry an obligation to provide funds for this transaction and, if not, can the minister inform the House whether or not the government intends to do so.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has promised to contribute $750,000 in capital to this particular event. Of course this will be contingent upon acceptable tendering practices.

* * *

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ALTERNATIVE TO PROVISION PERMITTING PROVINCIAL BORROWING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding the Canada Pension Plan and the provincial borrowing in that regard. In light of the fact that the preferred rate of interest on borrowing by the provinces from the Canada Pension Plan fund, except in respect of the Quebec plan, is being seriously questioned in that such a practice seems to be at the expense of the over-all investment return of pension plan assets and thus to the detriment of participants in the plan and their beneficiaries, has any agreement been reached with the provinces regarding interest rates on borrowing and has the government submitted an alternative to the present practice which can be revealed at this time.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have tabled in this House a report of the advisory committee on the Canada Pension Plan. This report recommends several alternatives to the present system which I have indicated both inside and outside the House is indeed unsatisfactory to the Government of Canada, as well as to the contributors to the plan, and to the future beneficiaries of the plan. Unfortunately, those alternatives have not as yet received very active consideration by the provinces as yet, and I would appreciate it if the hon. member would help me convince the provinces, particularly the government of Ontario, to go ahead with a review of this matter in order to arrive at a better solution than that which we have at the present time. I might say that the Minister of Finance of Ontario has not been very cooperative in this respect because he seems to have the view, according to his declaration, that the Canada Pension Plan is among his very first objectives as a source of cheap revenue for the province, a statement with which I do not agree.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON INTEREST EARNED BY ASSETS HELD BY PLAN

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, that is a cheap partisan shot. Let me ask him another question relating to the pension advisory committee report. The Canada Pension Plan advisory committee, in a report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare dated August 18, 1976, recommended that the investments held to meet plan liabilities bear or earn a fair rate of return. It further recommended that the interest rate on provincial bonds held in the fund should be brought to a realistic rate as soon as possible. I ask the minister whether the above recommendations are now government policy and because of the urgency of the matter stated by the advisory committee in this regard, as the minister indicates that they are policy, when can we expect these recommendations to be enforced by way of legislation or otherwise given the urgency of the situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I totally agree with the statement the hon. member has made from this particular report, but again I have to remind the hon. member that in order to have this particular reform put into effect I would need the assent of two thirds of the provinces with two thirds of the population which, in effect, gives the province of Ontario a right of veto on the implementation of any such change.

* * *

• (1440)

FISHERIES

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF QUOTAS FOR DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN FISHERMEN AS WELL AS DECLARATION OF 200-MILE ZONE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In light of the serious social and economic problems presently facing fishermen and fish packers in Atlantic Canada, and the necessity of establishing a meaningful management plan by the industry in order to provide steady employment for our people, would the minister indicate when we can expect an announcement in this House of the quotas for all areas and all species that will be made available effective on January 1, 1977 for Canada's fishermen within the economic or 200-mile zone, and at the same time will he give an indication of the quotas to be given to foreign nationals fishing within our zones in 1977? Finally, will he indicate the date on which the 200-mile limit will be declared since I have difficulty finding the exact date in the Canada Gazette which he tabled yesterday or in his comments?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the fishing plans for 1977 are the subject of discussion with the industry and with fishermen's organizations at this very moment. In fact, I will be meeting the regional directors from the Atlantic area tomorrow morning to have further discussions with them. Both sides of the industry have been asked to give their opinion on the allocation of quotas available.

As for the other part of the question regarding the date, the order in council yesterday meant the date for the extension will be January 1, 1977.

PLANS FOR SURVEILLANCE OF 200-MILE ZONE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the minister is aware that in spite of the agreement of other nations on specified quotas and the fact that they agreed to reduce their catch by 30 per cent, there have been many incidents of over-fishing by foreign nations. I wish to ask the minister how far in advance, if the 200-mile limit becomes effective on January 1, are the plans made by him, the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Transport with regard to surveillance and the patrolling of this vast area which will have to be covered.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment): I cannot accept the allegation of over-fishing until I have checked the facts, which I am quite willing to do. I might say that some members of the Canadian fishing industry also have over-fished. As regards the matter of surveillance, we have doubled the capacity in the number of days at sea and number of flights over the past few months, and we will increase this level with the cooperation of other departments. I might point out that one of the conditions of entrance into the new extended zone will be the reporting of the exact location which would mean that violation of that condition could result in charges before Canadian courts.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

TAKEOVER OF UNION OIL BY HUSKY OIL—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON REQUEST FOR DELAY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Recently the Foreign Investment Review Agency approved the takeover of Union Oil by Husky Oil, an American firm. The takeover was of a refinery in Prince George. The Independent Petroleum Agents Association wrote to the Prime Minister and the cabinet asking that that decision be delayed in order to give them an opportunity as a Canadian operation to make a competitive bid on the Prince George refinery. Would the minister advise the House whether his government interceded on behalf of those petroleum agents to delay the decision in order that they may have the opportunity of making a bid on the Prince George refinery?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. In cases like those, according to the law the government must analyze each proposal to see if it is of benefit to Canada. We found that the proposal made by Husky Oil Ltd. offered Canada certain advantages. In fact, 62 per cent of its shares are Canadian-owned, and we are not required to take any other proposal into consideration. According to the law, we need only analyze the proposal before us; in view of circumstances, we feel advantages will accrue to Canada so we approved it.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: I am aware, of course, of the difficulty with regard to the law, and that is something the minister might indicate to the House that he is going to correct by providing a notification procedure. But my question is as follows: Is it the government's policy not to intervene with regard to foreign takeovers so that Canadian corporations have an opportunity of matching foreign bids on Canadian assets?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the law forbids me to do so. The law is not some sort of middleman acting as a go between; it is a matter of analyzing each offer of purchase and seeing where its advantages lie, and I am surprised the hon. member is asking me not to respect the law.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

SMI INDUSTRIES—POSSIBILITY ARTICLES MANUFACTURED IN UNITED STATES ALLOWED ENTRY TO CANADA

Mr. Herbert Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Supply and Services.

In view of the apprehensions expressed by the workers' union of the SMI Industries of Bathurst in New Brunswick because the units to be sold to the Canadian government would be built by an American plant belonging to the same interests, and because that plant is now on strike legally, can the minister tell the House whether the contract his department has signed with the firm allows the latter to transfer some work, that is articles originating from outside?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the purchasing department has revised its requisition; it now covers four vehicles. The Bathurst plant can supply four vehicles manufactured in Canada.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SHARING COST OF HOME CARE PROGRAMS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the escalating health care costs and the necessity for substituting health care facilities to cut down the time spent in active treatment beds—and I refer to home care programs—which, adequately serviced, could reduce costs substantially, I should like to ask the minister whether he has conferred with his provincial counterparts to share costs or tax credit this program so it may be enlarged?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the provinces over the last year and a half on this very subject, particularly with regard to the development of a five year plan aimed at increasing lower cost alternatives. I have received answers from most of the provinces at this stage. As the hon. member knows, we are also presently in discussion with the provinces in order to arrive at a new financing formula which would give the provinces greater flexibility in the administration of funds in the health care field than that presently accorded under the medical care and hospital insurance acts. There will be further discussions with the provinces on this subject in the next few months and in particular with their ministers of finance. I hope a satisfactory solution will be arrived at which will give the provinces the necessary flexibility to develop the type of services to which the hon. member has referred.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REASON FOR FAILURE OF CANADIAN NATIONAL TO NEGOTIATE WITH EMPLOYEES OF CHAPMAN TRANSPORT—POSSIBILITY OF CHAPMAN CEASING OPERATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour and I have given him notice of it. Yesterday my colleague, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, raised the question of the 200 workers of Chapman Transport in British Columbia, a subsidiary of the CNR. The Minister of Transport said that was a labour problem. In view of the fact that the minister appointed a commissioner, whose report apparently supports the position of the employees that their contract should be comparable with other truckers in the province, can the minister advise the House why there is apparently no initiative on the part of the company to reopen negotiations, even though the union was told by a terminal manager this would happen?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, I cannot, Mr. Speaker. That would be very much the business of the employer himself, and he is not communicating that to our officials. However, we have advised the parties that we are available. As the hon. member knows, we have competent mediators in Vancouver who are ready to do anything they possibly can in this situation.

Mr. Fraser: In view of the fact that there have been rumours that CNR intends to hang tough and also of radio reports that Chapman's would close up their operations, would the minister tell us if the CNR, which is a publicly owned corporation, is in fact about to close down its subsidiary, which would of course end the jobs of 200 workers in British Columbia?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): At this stage I can only say that I certainly hope that is not the case.

* * *

● (1450)

[Translation]

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

RAP PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

My question deals with the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program in rural areas. I have here a letter I am going to quote from to enable the minister to grasp the scope of my question. In this letter, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation said the following:

> . . . because of a lack of funds for the rehabilitation program, must discontinue their commitments for the year 1976.

Could the minister advise the House whether he was informed of this situation and whether he thinks that there may be other credits for this program before the adoption of the new estimates?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let us first note that the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program in question is one of the most successful programs in our country. Unfortunately, there was not enough money for this year and we have problems in meeting the applications from rural and urban areas.

I would ask the hon. member to show a little patience. We are reviewing the program to see whether there is any possibility of finding funds from another source and if possible of turning to Treasury Board to be able to get funds to meet the applications. I would invite hon. members to encourage municipalities to go on making applications because we did not say that applications were rejected; we simply said we lacked funds.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the parliamentary secretary for his answer which is quite clear but I have also a straightforward question for him.

This program does respond to a need, evidence has been given, there are lots of applications. Given the fact that it happens some time that there are programs with no actual import, would it be possible to ask the President of the Treasury Board to transfer funds allocated for that kind of programs which the population does not want since it does not use them, to a program such as the one on housing rehabilitation so we may continue to answer positively to applications made by municipalities and by taxpayers?

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, again I will say to the hon. member that we are perfectly aware of the success of this program. Incidentally we are very proud of it. Nevertheless applications this year have exceeded the amount of money we had planned for this purpose. The President of the Treasury Board is aware of that. I think he is giving it consideration and as for us, we are looking into the question to find a solution.

* * *

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED NEW EVIDENCE IN LATTA CASE—POSSIBILITY OF NEW TRIAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and refers to a man by the name of Latta a former law professor convicted of murder now serving a life sentence. The minister directed a term of reference to the court of appeal of Alberta in connection with new evidence which they ruled inadmissible. I understand it is now alleged there is further new evidence. Is the minister going to have a further investigation and direct another reference to the same court that heard it twice or direct a new trial?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the position is as I indicated in a recent letter to the hon. member. I have received the view of the court of appeal of Alberta on the question I referred to them about subsequent information which came to my attention, and I am examining that before deciding on the next step I should take.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that we have had another reference to this convicted person serving a life sentence, surely in light of the reasonable doubt that exists the minister could now direct a new trial so that this man could at least enjoy the civil rights that every citizen of Canada expects from the administration of justice?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am examining the information that has come to my attention to determine whether there is, in fact, a question of reasonable doubt which should be settled either by way of reference or by way of a new trial.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).]

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST OF MR. DAOUST CONCERNING RELEASE OF MARIE LECLERC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

On October 28 last, Mr. Daoust, a Montreal barrister, sent to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a request concerning the case of Marie-Andrée Leclerc. Since the family of this young Quebecer is deeply concerned, given all the publicity surrounding this case, would the Prime Minister be in a position to indicate to the House whether his government will give favourable consideration to Mr. Daoust's request and whether the result of the inquiry or all information related to this matter will be made public?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leclerc case has often been discussed in the House and the High Commissioner in India continues to make representations to Indian authorities so that charges will be brought before the courts as soon as possible. But, at this time, we have to deal with laws that are not ours, and unfortunately this Canadian girl is subject to the laws of India. However, we are making every effort to help her family. Mr. Raymond Daoust made representations and we already had made every effort to try to deal with this case as soon as possible.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his reply. Since Indian police authorities obstinately refuse to give the reasons for Miss Leclerc's incarceration, could the parliamentary secretary inform the House whether his government knows the real reasons for this incarceration and whether they will be made public?

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Leclerc family has retained a lawyer and we have met others to consider the case. However, as I said and have often repeated in the House, we are subject to the legislation of the countries where our Canadian citizens are imprisoned, either in India, Mexico or elsewhere. We are now making efforts to learn the details requested by the hon. member. However, Indian authorities have their own laws and we must obey them. But since a Canadian is involved, we are interested in that case and we are making all possible efforts to have it settled as soon as possible. Moreover, we can say that as a result of our interventions, we know that the physical condition of Miss Leclerc has improved appreciably as did the conditions of her detention.

* * *

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATED GUIDELINES FOR MEMBERS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the late distinguished New Democratic Party member of parliament for Kootenay West, Mr. Herridge, resigned his seat before his private member's bill concerning a conflict of interest by members of parliament who are lawyers could be dealt with, and in view of the fact that in spite of his request the former leader of the party, David Lewis, did not wish this bill introduced because of his own circumstances, would the Minister of Justice consider introducing such legislation or, preferably, encourage the NDP to submit the public bill again which was first drafted by the late distinguished member of this House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister made the government's position very clear at the beginning of the question period. I would be very happy, however, to make a representation to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that he adopt the policy of the late Mr. Herridge.

ALLEGED FAILURE OF NEW MINISTERS TO FILE DECLARATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister arises from the statement he made earlier in the question period that every one of the ministers had complied with the government's conflict of interest regulations. In view of the fact that in the last half hour a Mr. Taylor in the office of the Registrar General confirmed that not one of the seven new ministers appointed seven weeks ago has a public declaration on file with respect to compliance with the conflict of interest regulations, can the Prime Minister correct the statement he made? Can he also indicate whether he is prepared to give the House an assurance that he will do everything possible to ensure that every minister complies with the conflict of interest guidelines, including the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has responsibility for the office of the Registrar General?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would agree that there is a test of reasonableness in this particular matter. All members of our ministry have complied with the guidelines, although I doubt whether those who were named this morning have done so yet. It is possible that some who were named a month ago have not complied yet either. As a matter of principle, I have allowed the ministers from one to three months to comply with the guidelines. In some cases, it means a complex setting up of a trustee and as the hon. member opposite knows, this cannot be done overnight.

• (1500)

As to the statement that none of those named one month ago has complied with the guidelines, that is not correct. This week-end I remember writing to at least two of them, to tell them I had received the declaration, and to thank them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you the registrar?

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. JELINEK—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE CONCERNING CONSTITUENCY OFFICE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to rise on a question of personal privilege pertaining to the article that appeared in Saturday's Globe and Mail concerning my constituency office, as well as to the allusions made on the matter in this House.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Jelinek: As I read it, Mr. Speaker, that article implied that I was guilty of a misuse of funds voted by this House for the establishment of a riding office. I am accused of conniving with an old age pensioner, my constituency secretary, to pay her money she had not earned. I believe the accusation is as serious in its implication for my reputation as it is erroneous in fact. My constituency office is established in conformity with the spirit as well as the letter of the law; it provides a complete and accessible service to my constituents, and it is similar in location and operation to that of the most effective offices set up by many of my colleagues in this House.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to deal briefly with the specific accusations implying a misuse of funds. The article states that I have committed the government to $200 per month for partial use of a tiny room and kitchen which are so inadequate that interviews must be held in the living room of Miss Pattison, my constituency secretary. This, of course, is false. The fact is that the whole bottom floor is used for riding office purposes. This includes the living room, which is used for interviews, the dining room, which is set up for group meetings or discussions, and a third and smaller area which is used for filing. The kitchen is also available, as an incidental convenience, for coffee. From the $200 per month rent, approximately $45 is deducted for an answering service available to all constituents 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and a phone bill of approximately $15 per month. In addition, Miss Pattison pays all heat and light charges. Far from being a suspicious arrangement, this is as good a value for the taxpayers' money as any, the net result being a saving of roughly 50 per cent to the taxpayer from the government's established allowance of $3,600.

It was stated, as well, that Miss Pattison and the office were not easily accessible to constituents. On the contrary, the office, which is centrally located on a main thoroughfare close to one of the central intersections of the riding, keeps the constituency secretary occupied over six hours a day, six days a week. Certainly, as was stated in the article, Miss Pattison has other community interests in the High Park-Humber Valley area; this only makes her more, not less, suitable as a constituency secretary in helping people with their problems, as her long and extensive community involvements bring her to the heart of local and current affairs.

As for the charge that she refers many problems to my office here in Ottawa, the reasons for this must be obvious to everyone except perhaps the irresponsible Globe and Mail reporter who authored this slanderous article. It is true that the office does not have a sign, because I believe the zoning bylaws do not permit one, and as a result both the address and phone number are listed on a great number of mailings that go from my office to every household in the constituency.

The writer of the article makes much of the fact that my party's constituency president has never been to the riding office. He never has, because I take great pains not to use the office for partisan purposes. All executive meetings and party functions are held elsewhere, as I am sure they are with most members, for a constituency office is not the place to advertise or play party politics. One must wonder how a once reputable newspaper like the Globe and Mail could stoop to such low levels of yellow journalism by utilizing a large portion of its front page with a story so misleading and erroneous.

In any event, I believe the article was so full of half-truths, innuendoes and outright lies that it constitutes a malicious and slanderous attack on my conduct as a member of parliament. I also believe that I would be fully justified in proposing a motion to send this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that the mechanics of assembling this vicious and unsubstantiated attack on the character of a member of parliament could be exposed. However, I do not wish to take the further time of the House on this subject matter; and, being aware of suggestions in some of the procedural authorities that libel and slander should be dealt with by the courts, I have instructed my lawyers to proceed accordingly on that basis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no difficulty concluding, as I have on numerous occasions in the past, that the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) has raised what he considers to be a grievance in respect of the reporting of his activities. To be consistent with my reasoning and the manner of treating the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) whose case was, I think, the most recent example, and also the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) with respect to complaints about the reporting by newspapers of the activities of members, I must say that where there is no suggestion that the reporting is so coloured as to represent contempt of parliament, a question of privilege obviously does not arise.

Also, to be consistent with the treatment accorded both the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria and the hon. member for Athabasca, it would be appropriate if the Chair were to allow reasonable time for the development of a thesis counter to that contained in examples of the sort alluded to. However, I would be completely disregarding the rules of procedure and precedence as I have recited them if I were to indicate that this matter constitutes a question of privilege, or even the suspicion of a question of privilege, and so permit a contribution from the other side. The matter is not partisan in nature. It does not involve accusations against other hon. members.

Questions of privilege which involve differences or disagreements between members have been raised. In fairness, in such circumstances I have always allowed countervailing comments in order to equalize time in such discussions. But that is not the case here, and I really think there is no justification for allowing the matter to go further.

MISS BÉGIN—ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My case is far simpler than the one just exposed before the House. I should like to answer the hon. gentleman opposite whose constituency contains several names, the last of which is Waterloo, by saying that he can choose between being frozen and being blind, but I filed quite some time ago my declaration of conflict of interest, and I understand I am not the only one. I should, therefore, like Your Honour to ask the hon. member——and I will say it in French—to make a retractation. It is the only thing which I ask him and it is quite simple.

[Translation]

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: How about the rest of them?

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

• (1510)

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, I am pleased that the hon. minister raised the question and I invite her to contact Mr. Taylor, the registrar—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You do it.

Mr. Beatty: I did, within the last half hour.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really do not want to raise the subject again, but we are dealing with a confined question of privilege. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) indicated in his question that none of the ministers appointed a month ago filed a declaration. The minister takes a question of privilege, saying that she in fact filed her declaration. That is the point at issue. If the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo seeks the floor to contribute to that point, I am prepared to listen.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, Hansard will show that I in fact said that not one of the new ministers has yet a declaration in the public file of the registrar. That is correct. I checked within the last half hour to see whether any of the new ministers had a declaration in the public file. According to Mr. Taylor, not one of them is yet in the public file.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

First report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—Mr. Cafik.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF REFERENCES TO THE ADMINISTRATOR

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two references to the administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 8, 184, 505, 619, 620 and 684.

[Text]

USE OF PRIVATELY OWNED AIRCRAFT FOR TRIPS MADE BY PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 8—Mr. Cossitt:

Since June 1, 1975, has the Prime Minister used any privately owned aircraft for trips made to points outside Ottawa and, if so, in each case (a) on what dates (b) to what destinations (c) what are the names and addresses of the owners of such aircraft?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No.

BRIDGEWATER, N.S.—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR NEW BUILDING

Question No. 184—Mr. Crouse:

Is it the government's intention to construct a new building in Bridgewater, Nova Scotia and, if so (a) what funds have been allocated (b) on what date will construction begin?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Yes. (a) $70,000 for site acquisition and preliminary design in 1976/77. (b) It is anticipated that construction will begin in the 1977/78 fiscal year.

Order Paper Questions

MR. BRIAN FLEMMING

Question No. 505—Mr. MacKay:

1. What are the terms of Mr. Brian Flemming's contract with the Prime Minister's Office?

2. What is his per diem?

3. What are Mr. Flemming's specific duties?

4. What is Mr. Flemming's current status with the Halifax law firm of Stewart, Covert and MacKeen?

5. What positions does Mr. Flemming hold with any other government agency besides the Prime Minister's Office?

6. What allowances are being made for Mr. Flemming's travel expenses to and from Halifax?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Mr. Flemming was appointed under 37(1) of the Public Service Employment Act.

2. Annual salary: $35,500-$47,500.

3. To advise the Prime Minister on policy related matters.

4. Mr. Flemming resigned effective August 31, 1976.

5. None.

6. Removal expenses Halifax-Ottawa in accordance with Removal Regulations. Mr. Flemming is based in Ottawa and is subject to Treasury Board Travel Directive when on duty outside of Ottawa.

STE. ANNE'S HOSPITAL

Question No. 619—Mr. Herbert:

Did the government of Quebec refuse to accept, at this time, the transfer of the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital to their jurisdiction and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Discussions on the transfer of Ste. Anne's Hospital will, it is expected, be undertaken during the 1977-78 fiscal year.

STE. ANNE'S HOSPITAL

Question No. 620—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is it the intention of the government to attempt to transfer the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital to the government of Quebec and, if so, what is the approximate date on which such a transfer could be effected?

2. What is the minimum period of time that employees and patients at the hospital can anticipate remaining under federal control?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The policy of the Government concerning the transfer of hospitals remains unchanged. If the Department can negotiate a transfer agreement for Ste. Anne's Hospital, it will do so. At this time there are no discussions concerning the transfer of this hospital, therefore no date of transfer can be forecast.

2. Employees will remain under federal control until the effective date of an agreement of transfer. Since determination of a date for transfer is not wholly in the hands of the Department of Veterans Affairs no information is available concerning the minimum period of time employees and patients can anticipate remaining under federal control.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MANPOWER

Question No. 684—Mr. McKinnon:

What was the total (a) regular military (b) reserve (c) civilian strength of the Department of National Defence as of October 1, 1976?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) 77,996; (b) 21,768; (c) 38,828 (This includes 5,990 term employees).

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I ask that question No. 764 be made an order for return, and also ask for the consent of the House to table immediately the information which has already been submitted. The balance of the information will follow as soon as it is submitted to me.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

TRANSMISSION OF DATA DERIVED FROM STATISTICS CANADA

Question No. 764—Mr. MacKay:

1. Did Statistics Canada discover that G. Snyder, F. L. Torrington, I. E. Altman and Y. Goulet, employees of the Merchandising and Services Division, were transmitting data derived from Statistics Canada sources to outside interests for direct or indirect remuneration and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what way did Statistics Canada become aware of these activities?

2. Was the Royal Canadian Mounted Police notified of these activities and, if so (a) on what date (b) by whom (c) in what manner (d) what is the name of the person notified?

3. Was the (a) Department of Justice (b) Public Service Commission (c) Privy Council Office notified of these activities and, if so, in each case (i) by whom (ii) on what date (iii) what is the name of the person notified?

4. Was the then Chief Statistician of Canada, Dr. Sylvia Ostry, notified first of these activities and, if so (a) on what date (b) by whom (c) in what manner?

5. Was the then Minister responsible for Statistics Canada informed about these activities and, if so (a) on what date (b) by whom (c) in what manner?

6. What other persons were informed by officials of Statistics Canada, the Public Service Commission, the Privy Council Office and the RCMP, of these activities?

7. Were any steps taken by officials of government agencies to investigate the activities of G. Snyder, F. L. Torrington, I. E. Altman and Y. Goulet or Allan Jefferies Associates (or an entity with a similar name) and, if so (a) what were they (b) on what dates (c) by whom and (d) in each case, what (i) was the result of the investigation (ii) recommendation was made and what action followed such recommendation?

8. Was any data transmitted or offered to the U.S. firm Decision Sciences Corporation by the four employees or Allan Jefferys Associates and, if so, what data?

9. Was data derived from Statistics Canada sources sold or offered by the four employees or Allan Jefferys Associates to any other organizations or individuals and, if so (a) what data (b) to whom (c) what were the actual or proposed amounts of transactions?

10. Was data referred to in Parts 8 and 9, derived exclusively from material available at that time to the public and, if so, was the source material available to the public and in what form?

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

11. Was the source material for the data referred to in Parts 8 and 9 made available to the public after the data had been transmitted to Decision Sciences Corporation and, if so, in what form and on what date?

12. Was data referred to in Part 8 and 9, in whole or in part, produced by the four employees or by Allan Jefferys Associates, on the premises of Statistics Canada and, if so, was it produced in whole or in part, during hours when the four were receiving remuneration as public servants?

13. Did the four employees or Allan Jeffery Associates, use in any way, for private gain, any of the following resources of Statistics Canada (a) computer programming (b) computer services (c) clerical or other support (d) professional services (e) office supplies or materials (f) other resources and, if so, what was the estimated value of each?

14. Did the actions of the four employees constitute a breach of (a) Public Servants' Conflict of Interest Guidelines (Canada Gazette, January 9, 1974) (b) affirmation of office and secrecy, administered to all public servants (c) Statistics Act (d) Criminal Code?

15. (a) What recommendations for disciplinary action or prosecution were made as a result of investigations of the activities of the four employees and Allan Jefferys Associates (b) what disciplinary actions or prosecutions were in fact taken and (i) by what authority (ii) on what date?

16. What were the official titles of the positions occupied by the four employees, or by any persons connected with Allan Jefferys Associates, at the time that Statistics Canada became aware of the dealings of Allan Jefferys Associates?

17. What were the salary ranges of the four employees at the time that Statistics Canada became aware of the dealings of Allan Jefferys Associates?

18. As of October 14, 1976 were the four employees still employed by the government and, if so (a) in what capacity (b) in which agency (c) at what salary range?

19. What was the involvement, if any, of Mrs. Roslyn Snyder in Allan Jefferys Associates?

20. Was Mrs. Snyder an employee of the government at the time that Statistics Canada became aware of the activities of Allan Jefferys Associates and, if so (a) in what capacity (b) with which agency (c) at what salary range?

21. As of October 14, 1976 was Mrs. Snyder an employee of the government and, if so (a) with which agency (b) in what capacity (c) at what salary range?

22. (a) What was the legal form of Allan Jefferys Associates (or any variation of this name) (b) on what date was it established (c) what was the address and who were the owners, officers and employees (d) on what date was it dissolved and for what reason?

23. Were all payments made to Allan Jefferys Associates or any individuals associated with them reported for federal tax purposes and, if not, what action has been taken?

24. Were any of the expenses claimed for tax purposes by Allan Jefferys Associates or any individuals associated with them, paid for with public funds?

25. Was data transmitted directly or indirectly by Allan Jefferys Associates or any individuals associated with them to the Campeau Corporation or any of its subsidiaries for their retail studies or for any other purpose?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining question stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 4, 5, 9, 12 and 13 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the conditions and reservations mentioned by the parliamentary secretary, shall notices of motion for the production of papers Nos. 4, 5, 9, 12 and 13 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Are the other notices of motion for the production of papers allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RELATING TO TRANSFER OF VETERANS' HOSPITAL

Motion No. 4—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, telegrams, contracts and/or agreements between the government and the Province of British Columbia having to do with the transfer of Veterans' Hospital in Victoria, B.C.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RELATING TO SHAUGHNESSY HOSPITAL

Motion No. 5—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, telegrams, contracts and/or agreements between the government and the Province of British Columbia having to do with the transfer of Shaughnessy Hospital in Vancouver, B.C.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND ONTARIO RELATING TO TRANSFER OF SUNNYBROOK HOSPITAL

Motion No. 9—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, telegrams, contracts and/or agreements between the government and the Province of Ontario having to do with the transfer of Sunnybrook Hospital in Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND QUEBEC RELATING TO TRANSFER OF ST. FOY HOSPITAL

Motion No. 12—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, telegrams, contract and/or agreements between the government and the Province of Quebec having to do with the transfer of St. Foy Hospital.

Motion agreed to.

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND NEW BRUNSWICK RELATING TO TRANSFER OF LANCASTER HOSPITAL

Motion No. 13—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, telegrams, contracts and/or agreements between the government and the Province of New Brunswick having to do with the transfer of Lancaster Hospital.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the questions just enumerated by the parliamentary secretary, in particular question No. 764 which I believe covers questions raised by the hon. member for Central Nova with regard to the Statistics Canada matter which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated he would be filing today. Can the parliamentary secretary explain why it has to be made an order for return, as opposed to being printed, in view of the substantial interest there is in this particular matter and the undertaking of the minister to make the fullest possible disclosure of the answer to the question raised by my colleague?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, there were two physical difficulties with the answer to the question to which the hon. member just referred. In the first instance, we have been working to try to compile the information requested in the question. It is a rather extensive collection of facts and figures. The material that we have been able to collect so far relates specifically to the responsibilities which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has in this House. Some parts of the question sought information from other ministers and the agencies of government. That information, although we are sure it will be on its way to us very quickly, is not yet in our hands.

In order to facilitate the presentation of the material which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wanted to provide to the House as quickly as possible, we felt this was the most expeditious way of doing it. Further, when hon. members see the material which we have just sought to table, they will notice that it is very voluminous. That is one of the physical problems which led us to try to answer in this way.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX

The House proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a ways and means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act, laid upon the table on Thursday, October 28, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-21, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INCOME TAX

The House proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act, laid upon the table on Tuesday, November 2, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX APPLICATION RULES, 1971

The House proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Application Rules, 1971.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Application Rules, 1971, laid upon the table on Tuesday, November 2, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE INTEREST ON JUDGMENT DEBTS AND AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott that Bill C-16, to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, last night when I called it ten o'clock I was saying that although we on this side were giving agreement to the principle of this bill, it was necessary to find fault with the lack of consultation with consumer groups and with the absence of specific rates and other details which the minister says will be spelled out in the regulations.

I want to deal for a moment today with the unwarranted credit charge rate, which rate is not stated in the bill. It seems that the minister wants to leave the determination of the unwarranted rate to the courts and that in each case it will be determined on the merits of the particular case. This, of course, will clog up the courts. It will put the burden of proof on the lender, which is a complete change from the rule of law in this country whereby one is innocent until proven guilty. Here, the lender will be assumed guilty until he can prove himself innocent. There will be a serious trend here. The tendency of this rule will be to restrict the making of loans to good risks. Further, it will restrict the rights of the bad risks and improve the chance of business going to the loan sharks.

We have always had a matter of choice in our life in Canada, bad as the choice might be. For example, a tenant might prefer to pay a higher rate of interest than is allowed in order to avoid a court order eviction. The minister, in his remarks, referred to the unwarranted rate and said that when the ceiling rates for small loans were lower than prevailing credit market rates, lenders had refused to grant small loans, forcing higher risk borrowers to seek funds from loan sharks. Mr. Speaker, nothing he is proposing now is going to change that situation.

● (1520)

Further on, the minister said interest rates would be set "according to the cost of funds and the risks involved in a particular transaction." This, of course, will be the defence in court. The minister says that if a borrower, after seeking sound professional advice, believes that the rate he is being charged is too high, he can choose to apply to a court for a review of the credit charge and the court will determine whether or not the rate is warranted. But why not make such a determination beforehand instead of going through the courts after the fact? I believe the lender has a right to choose the risks he wishes to accept, and the likelihood is that the source of funds will be dried up to the disadvantage of the very people the minister seems to wish to help.

I turn now to the computation of interest on sums deposited. The minister intends to require the interest calculation to be made on a daily basis. This seems a good idea and I am sure people whose savings vary from day to day will agree with it. However, on examination it becomes evident that this would impose a penalty on steady savers, those who deposit every month, who do not need computation of interest on a daily basis but who will be asked to share in the cost of daily calculation in order to benefit other depositors.

I see a number of other specific problems arising. An administrator is to be appointed. Heaven knows, Mr. Speaker, there are already enough senior bureaucrats around Ottawa. The powers to be given him are enormous. For example, he will be permitted to enter any premises at any time to conduct audits, seize records, and so on. All this will involve huge cost to the taxpayer. In addition, there are, of course, many clauses in the bill which impose additional obligations on lenders, the costs of which obviously will be passed on to the borrowers.

One noteworthy—I might say "notorious"—feature of the legislation as it affects lenders is that a payment made on a loan is deemed to have been made on the day it is sent by mail. In Canada today, mail sometimes takes weeks to arrive. No exemption is provided in the case of disruption of the postal service, and I suggest that lenders are being made subject to a heavy penalty which is particularly serious when large sums are paid on a Friday after banking hours.

It might be said that I am pitying the lenders too much and that lenders can take care of themselves. However, I would point out that lenders, in the main, are only trustees of funds belonging to small depositors. Union funds are used to make loans. Funds entrusted to trust companies for the care of widows and orphans are similarly used. Life insurance companies are, after all, investing the funds of millions of Canadians. Even the banks, the so-called beasts of the financial world, number many thousands of Canadians among their shareholders.

I want to say a word now about loan-sharking. The minister told us last week that he wanted to help our police forces to fight the ever-increasing crime of loan-sharking. That is a very fine objective. But he did not tell us what loan-sharking is, and the details given in the bill are illusive if not invisible. Perhaps a better picture will emerge when the regulations are forthcoming, but as things stand we are being asked to pass the bill as presented.

In his speech the minister told us the government had not been able to end the activities of loan sharks, and that any rate today was a legal rate. We might ask ourselves why the government did not move effectively into this area during the past 14 years, and why they have not been able to define an appropriate rate. In fact, only the ceilings on small loan interest rates have been removed. We know the industry will get along somehow, no matter what restrictions the government may impose. But why cannot the minister tell us what the criminal rate under this bill is to be?

I am concernced about the methods used by loan sharks to enforce their claims. Certainly, the description of those methods is awful. But tactics of this kind are already illegal—one cannot go around threatening people or beating up people in Canada today. I do not think the minister is correct when he says that the provisions he is putting forward in this respect will really help the police.

The minister did refer to the "criminal rate" in the course of his remarks and said the bill would establish one. But there is no mention of such a rate in the measure before us. He said he would be clear and concise, and that the rate would be of great value to those launching criminal prosecutions. He told us the level would be set well above the rate normally charged in the market. Well, what is it? Evidence given in committee during examination of the Small Loans Act would indicate that the warranted rate is something like 80 per cent. Does this mean that the criminal rate will be 150 per cent or 200 per cent? We are not told, yet there is a penalty clause, clause 38, which sets out in great detail the penalties which can be imposed under the act.

On the subject of tax refund discounting, the minister said such discounting was "clearly an unscrupulous practice". Well, the government has the solution to this problem in its own hands. The only reason for which a person needs to get his tax refund discounted is that he cannot get his money from the government. I suggest there is no difference between a man borrowing on the strength of a promise to pay from the government in the shape of a future tax rebate, and a man borrowing on the strength of a Canadian bond. I read in a newspaper yesterday that certain bonds issued by the government of Canada are being quoted at a discount rate of 72 per cent of their value. That is a fairly normal figure. The most infamous case is that of the 3 per cent perpetuals which are being discounted at $47.

• (1530)

The government has the ability to eliminate this problem entirely. It could accept an application from Canadians in, let us say, November to have an interim calculation made of the amount of tax they will have to pay and they could get a refund. The government has lots of clerical capacity, especially in this day of computers, and so on, to make this calculation. The government makes deductions from wages on the basis of a full year's work. We all know that particularly those workers who suffer hardship and who need to borrow money do not work for a full year. Therefore, I suggest the government owes it to them to make interim calculations so as to eliminate this particular problem.

The minister has been insistent on knowing what suggestions we on this side would make in view of the fact that we are not in agreement with all of his proposals. I have listed a few for the minister and will give them to him now, and no doubt we will be discussing them in committee. First of all, the government has it within its power to control to some degree rates of interest by controlling the rate of inflation. Naturally, as long as the inflation rate remains as high as it is, interest rates are not going to be any lower. We recommend that the government regulate this industry as it does others, but not compete as it does in other fields. We suggest that clear rules are necessary. However, apart from the principles laid out, this bill gives us no clear rules whatever and puts far too much power in the hands of the ministry.

A government that was concerned could regulate in order to require retailers to provide credit at certain rates on all sales that they make on credit. That is the kind of regulatory device that would not require that the government be directly involved. The government should allow the marketplace to set rates; that is, to encourage competition. That, as we have seen in other fields, is the most effective way of providing properly priced services for Canadians.

I have already mentioned the streamlining of the tax system which would eliminate the need for tax refund discounting. It is obvious that banks and trust companies now compete vigorously to obtain depositors' business. All one has to do is look around in January or February of any year to see the many different rates offered on registered retirement savings plans. Just at the moment, in the present general business climate there is a lot of investment money and plenty of competition for borrowers in the money market. If rates are controlled too much, then credit will not be available to all those who need it, and that is not what the government says it wants.

Finally, on Monday the minister said that he hoped I would be on the committee to help with amendments. All I can say is that I hope the minister is not just being naive, because it has been my experience, Mr. Speaker, during my four years in this House that usually the government does not accept amendments easily, even though in the case of one specific bill in the last session the government approved 54 amendments. Even although the Globe and Mail has reported the minister as saying that this in no way is the final form of the bill, I will have to be convinced in committee that the minister is sincere in his wish to have this bill amended. I have never felt that it was the opposition's job to perfect government's legislation and to give the government credit for producing a good bill. However, I shall be in attendance in the committee, and I hope that we will get fuller information at that time so that for the benefit of the borrowers of Canada we can perfect this bill.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I thought that Bill C-16 would provide me with an opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) and wish him every success. But having read Bill C-16, all I can do is congratulate the minister on his appointment and wish him no success in regard to the passage of this bill. He has failed miserably and dismally in regard to solving the problem of exorbitant interest rates, commonly called loan-sharking and he has not dealt with excessive interest rates. I can appreciate the problem the minister faced. He is a former corporation counsel, and when he was appointed to this position he had to decide whether he would be an advocate for the corporate boards or whether he would be an advocate for consumers.

Mr. Abbott: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Mr. Abbott is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that if the hon. member wants to describe the defects in this bill, that is his business. But if he is trying to describe the dilemma that I faced personally on assuming this portfolio, he is quite mistaken and out of order.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I am just giving my interpretation of the problem the minister had. He has the background of a corporation counsel. To me, he must have had a problem deciding whether he would be an advocate for the corporate boards or whether he would be a consumer advocate. Having read the bill, I realize that he opted for being the advocate of the corporate boards.

This is a bill of least resistance to the credit institutions, with little or no protection to borrowers. It is what is known as a candy-floss bill—all sweetness and no substance. I direct the minister's attention to the title of the bill. He has the nerve to call it the borrowers and depositors protection bill. What protection does it give the borrower? What protection does it give the depositor? He should have called the bill the lenders and loan sharks protection bill.

Mr. Abbott: Obviously you have not read the bill.

Mr. Gilbert: The main principle enunciated in the bill, namely, that of protecting the Canadian borrower from loan-sharking and excessive interest rates, will not succeed because it is based on two approaches—on self-policing by credit institutions, and on comparative competition on the money marketplace. These approaches are like asking a starving cannibal to stop eating the missionary. It is like asking the loan sharks to start acting like Sister Theresa. The main principle is wrong and unworkable. It is a surrender to the credit institutions and a rejection of the necessity for basic protection for the borrower, and more especially for people of low income.

All members of the House can quickly and readily agree with the other three principles which the minister outlined in his speech: (a) to provide information with regard to credit and deposit dealings; (b) to eliminate complexities and confusion in the credit field; (c) to regularize and rationalize credit legislation. May I remind Your Honour and all members of the House that these other corrective measures are the direct result of the chicanery, greed and duplicitous dealings of credit institutions. These dealings have required provincial legislation to protect the borrower against lenders, and now we are introducing federal legislation.

● (1540)

Returning to the main principles of the legislation put forward by the minister, protection of the Canadian borrower from loan-sharking and excessive interest rates by imposing self-policing on credit institutions and comparative competition in the money market, if the minister had made the same speech as the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), I would be tempted to agree with him. The hon. member for Windsor West cut right into the heart of the problem when he asked whether this measure deals in the best way with loan-sharking and excessive interest rates. The substance of his speech indicates it does not.

It is striking that the hon. member for Windsor West makes far better speeches now that he is out of the cabinet. I suppose the reason is that he can now tell it the way it is. The hon. member for Windsor West reminded the minister of the Liberal policy and program in the 1974 election when they put forward the consumer protection package. The hon. member enumerated some of those principles but he omitted two main parts of the Liberal program. I shall point them out to hon.

members because I am sure they would like to have their memories refreshed.

In the 1974 election campaign, the Liberal party said that it would have a loan insurance scheme for low-paid workers who could not establish a credit rating. Second, the Liberal party said it would have consumer-help storefront offices the number of which would be increased to 20 by the end of 1974. The hon. member for Windsor West did not mention these two main items in the Liberal program. The reason is that the Liberals do not have them. They have established no storefront credit counselling offices to help people who are borrowing money and to make them aware of interest rates and some of the nefarious schemes of credit institutions. More importantly, the Liberal party has not adopted the other principle, that is, loan insurance for people with low incomes who have difficulty obtaining loans.

The minister said he is going to protect people against loan-sharking and excessive interest rates by having credit institutions police themselves. Have hon. members ever heard of such an approach for protecting borrowers from loan-sharking and excessive interest rates? The government is asking the very people who are guilty of these practices to police themselves in order to protect the borrower. The minister is relying on those credit institutions.

Let me tell the House about banks. What is the practice of banks with regard to paying interest on deposits? Twice a year they pay interest on the lowest minimum deposit in depositors' accounts. The banks talk about red convertible loans in times of inflation. The minister is asking these institutions to police themselves in order to protect the borrower. Let us consider the front-end loading charges and service charges, the costs, the credit reports, the prepayment charges and the misleading advertising as to rates of interest of finance companies. Let us consider the kickbacks car dealers receive for turning over credit notes to finance companies. These are the finance companies we are asking to police themselves in order to protect the borrower against loan-sharking and excessive interest rates.

By exhortations and warnings, the government is going to ask loan sharks to lower their interest rates. The government is going to do this in the face of recent releases by the minister and a speech by him saying that loan sharks charge in excess of 1,000 per cent to borrowers who are disadvantaged and must seek high-risk loans. The minister suggests a rate of seven times the prime rate. The prime rate for loans in Canada at the moment is 10 per cent, so the minister is saying that as long as lenders charge a rate less than 70 per cent or 75 per cent, they are not charging the criminal rate.

The minister is asking these people to police themselves with regard to loan-sharking and charging excessive interest rates. Can we rely on bank officials, finance companies and loan sharks to protect the borrower? The answer is no. I am surprised at the naivety of the minister in thinking that these groups are capable of self-policing. Their past practices have forced the minister to write into legislation the need to inform and protect the public with regard to information on credit and deposit dealings and the need to define strict and uniform rules to protect borrowers and depositors respecting effective rates of interest. This is why relying on credit institutions to police themselves will not work.

With regard to the second principle the minister has enunciated, competition in the money market, the minister feels that by some strange osmosis we are going to have competition in the money market. We have never had real competition in the money market. Bank rates are exactly the same for their three different types of loans. With regard to finance companies, they are practically the same, and loan sharks do not use competitive rates. There has never been any real competition in the money market. Any competition has been on a service basis only, never on an interest rate basis. The result has been slick advertisements by financial institutions which say, "We are your friendly finance company", or, "Don't borrow money needlessly". For a former member, a great hockey player and a great coach, Red Kelly, to advertise on behalf of Beneficial Finance does not do him or advertising ethics any credit.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): It puts money in the bank.

Mr. Gilbert: It is quite true that it puts money in the banks and finance companies, but we must remember that all this advertising gimmickry is a cost factor to be included in interest rates. Competition has been illusory or non-existent. What is the defence of the minister? He says that if a person has been overcharged, he can take court action or default on his payments and force the lender to sue him. What bravado by the minister! Can hon. members imagine a low income worker having sufficient bravado to say, "Let them sue me; let them take me to court and I will prove that they have charged excessive interest rates"? What would be the result? In the first instance, it would be no contest because of reluctance by the borrower to sue and because of the legal costs involved. Second, the possibility or probability of blacklisting or blackballing the borrower by lenders in the future would be very real. The third result is the probable action by these institutions in respect of contracting-out provisions in the loan agreement.

● (1550)

We have had experience with regard to contracting-out and warranties given by companies concerning goods. We have had contracting-out with regard to leases under the landlord and tenant act. The law says that the landlord shall not unreasonably withhold consent to transfer, but we have found leases which contain clauses in respect of contracting-out. We will find the same thing with loan agreements and credit applications. I am sure the minister will jump quickly to the defence in this respect and say he has a provision within the act which will prevent contracting-out.

There is a very practical problem with regard to contracting-out. I can see the wording that will be in the agreement. The borrower will say he is satisfied and accepts the interest rate therein and will acknowledge that the "Meet 'em and Cheat 'em" credit company has taken into account all the provisions and criteria set forth in the protection of borrowers and depositors act and he hereby waives his right to independent advice and any or all legal proceedings. That is an example of the typical contracting provision that we will find. In any contract we will find that provision. It will contain the amount of the loan, the interest chargeable, and the payment date.

The minister says that in his legislation, in order for the borrower to use such an instrument as a defence, or if the company is to use it, the company shall give 15 days' notice if the action is to be commenced. I say that provision will be part and parcel of the contract. Under the ordinary rules of evidence, if the borrower is to prove excessive rates he will have to file the agreement in order to show the terms of the contract, and by putting that provision in he is consenting to the terms of the contract and to the contracting-out clause and is thereby limited in his defence.

We have had experience with regard to the unconscionable transactions act of Ontario. We know there have been very few actions under that act and very few successes. The reason is that the people who draw up these contracts consider all the possible defences of the borrower and tighten the contract to the point where the borrower has little or no hope of success when he goes to court. We will have the same results in respect of any action a borrower may take with regard to excessive interest rates. For these reasons, my colleagues and I think the bill is a sham and constitutes a surrender to the credit institutions.

Let me deal with one final argument the minister set forth in his press release. The argument goes like this: the credit institutions have a certain investment in dollars. They are in the business of making a profit. I do not use the word "reasonable", because they make unconscionable profits. If they cannot make these profits in the credit field, they will go elsewhere to invest their moneys, and what a tragedy would befall the poor, defenceless borrowers: this is the argument of the minister. It is much like the argument of the little boy who had a ball and said, "If you don't let me play the game my way, I will take my ball and go home".

We have had similar experience in the building field. In recent months builders have said they do not like the economic and taxation climate in Canada and therefore they will go to the south. They have gone to the United States to invest in real estate and building to the tune of $1½ billion to date. This is the type of attitude the builders have, and it is the type of attitude the minister thinks the credit institutions will take, that is: if you do not let me make all the profits that are obtainable, I will not invest in the field and the poor people will suffer.

Surely the making of a reasonable profit should be the basis of credit lending in Canada. It should not be an unconscionable profit; it should not be usury. How much is enough? When one sees the profits that the various finance companies and loan sharks make, it is evident that they are more than enough. There is a social responsibility on the credit institutions to use the moneys of Canadian depositors and investors to the fair advantage of both borrower and lender. There is a biblical proverb to the effect that the borrower is the servant of the lender. In Canada, the borrower is becoming the slave of the lender. I remember George Bernard Shaw in one of his books saying that the rich man will do anything for the poor man except to get off his back and keep his hands out of the poor man's pocket.

Members of the New Democratic Party have a different approach to the problems of excessive interest rates and loan-sharking. We would replace the approach of the minister, of self-policing and the competitive money market aspect with four things. First, we would institute the requirement of loan insurance for the borrower. Second, we would impose ceilings on loan amounts and interest rates. Third, we would have a massive program of budget counselling in schools, churches, social agencies and community centres to teach budget counselling. Fourth, we would appoint a credit ombudsman to protect the borrower and to license, regulate and control the lender by use of court action by the ombudsman, by the use of class actions and by the use of cease and desist orders and consent orders.

Let me speak briefly on the four principles we would adopt. First, the requirement of loan insurance would be a cost factor in determining the rate of interest. This is not new. As I reminded the minister, this was part of the Liberal program in 1974. I shall read this, Mr. Speaker:

> —loan insurance scheme for low-paid workers who cannot establish a credit rating.

This is what the Liberals said they would do in 1974, and it is what they are not doing in 1976. The federal government uses loan insurance in a variety of ways. First, it uses it in the mortgage field; all NHA mortgages and CMHC direct loan mortgages and AHOP mortgages have insurance. The purchaser pays a premium of 1 per cent of the loan. It has been a success with regard to default in payments by the borrowers. It is what is known as "spread the risk". The federal government uses it in respect of student loans, small business loans, farmers' loans, and fishermen's loans—to protect whom: to protect the banks and other institutions with regard to default by a student, fisherman or farmer.

The government is prepared to protect the banks against default by the borrower. The government is prepared to protect multinational companies such as International Nickel when loans are given by the Export Development Bank to stimulate exports. When loans are given by the Export Development Bank to stimulate exports, the government says to International Nickel, "We will provide insurance against a company in any other country defaulting on its payments". The government is assuring payment to the multinational corporations.

● (1600)

The final insurance aspect is deposit insurance, that is, to protect bank depositors from the bankruptcy or failure of a bank. Surely, if we can protect the banks against default by borrowers, we can give the borrower some protection against the lender. At this stage, the banks, some finance companies and credit unions use a limited form of loan insurance in case of the death of a borrower. If a borrower dies, the loan is paid up. There is no reason why we cannot adopt loan insurance, especially for low income workers. If that is the case, how does it affect the problem of loan-sharking and excessive interest rates? It spreads the risk, which is the principle of insurance, and it should, and would, reduce high interest rates because it would sweep away the argument of the banks, the finance companies and the loan sharks regarding high-risk loans.

It would result in a reasonable return to the lender and a reasonable and fair chance of repayment by the borrower. It would rid us of the problem of determining the unwarranted rate or the criminal rate, and it would rid us of loan sharks.

You, Mr. Speaker, have the right to ask what happens if the borrower does not pay loan insurance. It is obvious that no further loans would be made to him. This is the practice with regard to student loans. A constituent of mine who went to university back in 1972 and borrowed money for it, quit the university in 1974 and did not pay back his student loan. In 1976 he wanted to go back to university to take a course and he applied for a student loan. He was advised by the administrator of the fund in Ottawa that he could not get a loan because he had already an outstanding loan. Surely that principle should apply to borrowers under this act, because no person has the inalienable right to borrow. Before a person borrows, he must establish need and he must establish himself with regard to the risk; he must indicate a payment record. In those circumstances, the borrower would try his utmost to repay the loan. I am amazed at the number of people who go to finance companies and are most anxious to maintain their credit rating. They try their darndest to keep up the payments.

If we had loan insurance, we would have no multiplicity of loans with finance companies. It is rather sad to have people come into my constituency office with credit problems. When you ask what credit they have outstanding, you find they have loans with different finance companies, sometimes three or four of them. If we had loan insurance we would not have such a multiplicity of loans with different finance companies. In certain circumstances we could impose a requirement on a borrower to take budget counselling when necessary.

With regard to the second proposition put forward by the NDP for the imposition of ceilings on loans and on interest rates, we agree with the loan amounts imposed by the Consumers' Association of Canada of $7,500 plus a consumer price index adjustment. We have the same approach with regard to AHOP loans. Those loans are adjusted from time to time and there is no reason why a ceiling of $7,500 cannot be imposed with a consumer price index adjustment.

I have heard it said by the minister and by some members of the House that the Small Loans Act did not work. It is the intention of the minister to rescind the Small Loans Act. The reason the act did not work was that it was circumvented by the lenders. What would happen if a person went to a credit institution? They had a limit of $1,500 on loans. A person would asked for a loan of $1,000 and the credit institution would say to him; "No, we will not lend you $1,000"—the reason being that $1,000 would bring low interest rates—"but we will lend you $1,600, $100 over the limit of $1,500, and we will charge you 25 per cent". That is the reason the Small Loans Act did not serve the purpose for which it was intended. It was circumvented, not by the borrower but more especially by the lender. All that had to be done was to adjust the loan limits under the Small Loans Act and in some cases adjust the interest rates. It makes no sense to rescind the Small Loans Act and say it did not work, we know it was circumvented by the lending institutions; let us make no mistake about it.

The practice of credit institutions is to impose different loan interest rates on different customers. But the banks have different types of loans. They have business loans, on which they usually charge a prime rate of about 10 per cent, they have consumer loans at 13 per cent and 14 per cent, and they have mortgage loans which are at the moment 11½ per cent, and farm improvement loans which are practically the same, 11½ per cent. Banks serve a business community and the middle and upper classes, but they have limits on the amount of the loan and limits on the interest rate.

Finance companies deal in consumer loans and they have limits on the amount of the loan and on the interest rates, and usually the interest rates vary from 24 per cent to 33 per cent. They serve the low income and the lower middle income people who have a basic fear of the banks and therefore go to the finance companies. Then there are the loan sharks who impose their own rates. According to the minister, some of those rates are 1,000 per cent. They impose them on the poor and disadvantaged. Some might say that those are not loan limits or limits on the interest rates, but they are market interest rates. I rather doubt that there is any competition with regard to the market interest rate, because banks get the money from the depositors and lend it out at the highest rate they can obtain. There may be a little competition, but not much. What do finance companies do? They borrow from banks and add on to what they pay to the banks to make their profit.

● (1610)

Mr. Speaker, if the minister is worried about the competitive rates of the banks, all he has to do is use them and add a reasonable rate of return by banks, finance companies and loan sharks. When the former finance spokesman for the Conservative party sat on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in 1967, he knew that there was a formula for interest rates which was used for CMHC mortgages. It was the rate of return on Canada savings bonds, plus an adjustment of 1½ per cent or 2 per cent. So there is no reason the minister cannot use the basic prime rate imposed by the banks and add a reasonable rate of return. Anything beyond that is unwarranted, unjustified and criminal.

I am rather impressed with the minister, Mr. Speaker, because I think he is morally a very fine gentleman. I find it morally reprehensible, however, that he puts in his press release a suggestion of seven times the basic interest rate to determine the warranted rate.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would allow me an intervention?

Mr. Gilbert: Certainly.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I have not anywhere in a press release or the bill suggested a multiple of the prime rate. I should like the hon. member to understand that. It was members of the opposition who suggested a high rate of interest.

An hon. Member: Your member said 70 per cent.

Mr. Abbott: Who did?

An hon. Member: Your member.

An hon. Member: Windsor West.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)? That is his business, but he is not a member of the government and I am not taking my orders from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I think the least the minister can do—and he did not do it in his speech—is to set out what he thinks would be a reasonable rate of return over and above the basic interest rate. That is all I am asking. I am almost positive I read that in one of the press releases from his department. I notice that the Conservative members used it, and I notice that the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) used it.

Mr. Peters: Even I used it.

Mr. Gilbert: My colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), used it.

Mr. Abbott: That confirms it is false.

Mr. Gilbert: It was not drawn out of a hat. After I finish speaking I shall get it from the press release and send it to the minister, or if I have made a mistake I shall apologize. Conservative members and New Democratic members suggested it was seven times the basic rate. It might not be a criminal rate, but when it is suggested that it amounts to 70 per cent or 75 per cent, I say it is morally reprehensible.

Mr. Abbott: That is not true.

Mr. Gilbert: In his speech the minister failed to state what in his opinion would be the warranted rate, and I urge him now to tell us what he thinks the warranted rate for banks, finance companies and loan sharks should be to enable them to make a reasonable profit. He says this information will be in the regulations, but that is not satisfactory, Mr. Speaker. Last night the hon. member for Windsor West said that before we have any further discussion on this bill, the least the minister should do is set forth the regulations he proposes. I am concerned about this, because we want to protect people against loan-sharking and excessive interest rates. The New Democratic Party would do this with loan insurance for low income borrowers, limits on loans and limits on interest rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret having to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I shall not take more than five minutes. The New Democratic Party's proposition is a far better approach than that of the minister, that of self-policing in the competition of the money marketplace. We would have a massive program of budget counselling, but not the type the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) was worried about yesterday. Surely not every borrower needs to take a course in budget counselling. We say this should be instituted in the schools, community centres, credit unions and churches so that people would get a good idea of how budget counselling works.

We propose the appointment of a credit ombudsman, separate and apart from the minister. I am not the least impressed by the appointment of an administrator who would be an arm of the minister and an arm of the credit institutions and would afford little or no protection to the borrower. I propose a credit ombudsman to license lenders, impose cease and desist orders, consent orders and to put some strength into this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I have to give some credit to the minister on the matter of interest on bank deposits, but surely there should be a daily interest rate instead of the present practice where banks give interest on the lowest minimum balance every month, payable twice a year. I notice many of the credit institutions have agreed to this proposal, and I was surprised to hear some members speaking on behalf of the banks trying to make out that this is a difficult system. Many of the institutions are doing it already, so it is no problem.

With regard to the privilege of the repayment of mortgage loans at 10 per cent on the anniversary of the interest payment for the first year, 10 per cent on the principal payment of the second year, and all or any on the anniversary of the third year on payment of three months' interest, I find this a very interesting provision. I should like to know how many people with CMHC mortgages, and how many with NHA mortgages—which are government insured—have taken advantage of that privilege.

Members might be interested to know that on a $50,000 mortgage, at the current interest rate of 11-¾ per cent for a period of 25 years, which is how long it takes the average person to pay off a mortgage, the monthly payment of principal and interest is $498.54. After 25 years the mortgagee has paid, in principal and interest, a total of $143,562. I am not too impressed with that "privilege" clause, Mr. Speaker; it is just a sop. If I were minister of consumer and corporate affairs I would be more interested in bringing down the interest rate so that people who buy a home are given a reasonable chance, with reasonable payments, to pay it off in a reasonable time.

● (1620)

Finally, I say this bill has little to commend it. The saying, "Neither a lender nor a borrower be" should be, "Never a borrower be, under the provisions of this bill." The minister made a tragic mistake when he insisted on calling the bill the borrowers and depositors protection act. To be honest, he ought to have called it the lenders and loan sharks protection act. I congratulate him on his appointment, wish him no success with passage of the bill, and give him this advice, "Consult the people in the department and return to this House with a bill of which you and we can be proud, a bill which will protect borrowers fairly and will limit the gouging of lenders."

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is always pleasant to rise after the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has spoken in this House. As usual, he presented his own version of Alice in Wonderland and, in suggesting what he did, went wandering about in the clouds. I should think we would be in general agreement with the purported aims of this bill. No one is compelled to be a borrower, Mr. Speaker. Those who borrow today perform a conscious act. They know that they have not got the money to buy what they want, so they borrow to take a trip, to go on holiday, and so on. They even borrow money to go to the races. People borrow money for all sorts of foolish pleasures. An examination of the history of credit will show, I think, that the number of borrowings which are justified and not justified is about the same.

To say that everything is loaded on the side of the lender is wrong. I admit that some unconscionable lenders operate on the fringe of credit granting. But there are just as many, if not more, unconscionable borrowers—skippers, people who borrow with no intention of repaying. They are drifters, grafters, people who abscond with goods originally bought on time. They are dishonest, and what they do is no better and no worse than what the unconscionable lender does.

From time to time legislation like the Small Loans Act and the Interest Act has appeared on our statute books but has gone by the boards. These laws are out of date because inflation has been allowed to take such a free run in the economy and the amounts recited in those acts are no longer relevant. Now the government of Canada has come forward with a bill which I say is largely cosmetic. It acts as if it has sole responsibility in this field. Actually, statutes passed by the provinces, particularly by Ontario and Alberta, have covered most of this ground for 20 years. Those provincial laws are still adequate.

Let me illustrate my experience with the Alberta legislation. I remember, as solicitor for a department store, participating in negotiations with the then attorney general as to terms which would be included when any document, conditional sales agreement or chattel mortgage evidenced the purchase of big-ticket items. Provisions in provincial laws are better, I think, than the ones contained in this bill. Yesterday I asked the minister a question to which he failed to reply. I will ask it again: Does he believe that this legislation will override pertinent legislation existing in almost all provinces and covering property and civil rights? Have we developed another version of the theory that father knows best, or big brother knows best? Does the minister believe that the legislation is superior to and overrides, for example, the credit and loan agreements act of Alberta which came into force in about 1955? I invite the minister and his officials to read what is meant by time sale agreements.

Bill C-16 purports, with a great deal of horn-blowing, to represent itself as the new charter for those buying on time. Nothing could be further from the truth. Both the Alberta and the Ontario laws have for many years required all this disclosure. Actually, provincial disclosure requirements are more honest than those proposed by the minister or by his advisers who may have put certain words in his mouth, words which I think he may want to reconsider. I refer to the minister's words as reported at the foot of page 635 of Hansard for November 1:

> It is now possible for lenders to stack a variety of other charges on top of the quoted cost of borrowing. Insurance premiums, various administrative charges, legal costs, registration costs and the like are very often charged to the consumer and, in most cases, excluded from the calculation of the cost of borrowing. As a result, the consumer is not apprised of the real interest burden that he actually has to carry.

I repeat what I said previously, the minister is lumping together apples, oranges, cherries, bananas and other things in the same basket. The point is that provincial legislation in Alberta and other provinces provides that if a big-ticket item, such as furniture, is sold pursuant to a conditional sales contract or a chattel mortgage, such document, to be enforceable, must be registered. Usually it is registered at the courthouse, at a rate set by the provinces which depends on a sliding scale, the amount of the purchase, and so on. That is part of the cost of borrowing.

Another cost is that of insurance. It is there for the protection of the borrower in the event that he or she should die and the family should be faced with a claim. Remember, under a time contract or chattel mortgage the lender or vendor is not limited to repossessing the goods. There is an obligation to repay the money, at the election of the lender or vendor. There could be an unpaid balance, under a conditional sales agreement, of many thousands of dollars for an automobile, tractor or combine.

● (1630)

I am sure that a farmer purchasing a combine today costing thousands of dollars would be most happy to have a few dollars of insurance costs that guarantee his estate would be protected from any unpaid balance should he die before completing the payments under the contract. That is only sensible. There are other legitimate charges, such as the cost of doing business, and legal costs. After all, the loan is not for the sole benefit of the lender; it is the borrower who wants to borrow the money. I am sorry that the minister left to attend a meeting, but I would like, from his parliamentary secretary or his officials, clarification of this part of the minister's remarks on Monday afternoon.

Charges such as insurance, registration charges and legal costs are certainly costs of borrowing. No one denies that. However, to then say that was the real rate of interest, in other words, that legal costs, insurance costs and registration costs are really interest costs, is poppycock. It is misleading. For a person concerned with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs it is totally irresponsible to make such a statement in the House.

I wish to deal with the three main goals of the minister. I am going to comment on the first two. I quote the minister:

The first is to impose uniformity in the practices used for the calculation, crediting and description of interest on all those who take deposits from or make loans to consumers in Canada, and to require a full, uniform and comprehensible disclosure system so that the consumer, before he enters into a deposit or borrowing transaction, will know all his rights and the obligations he will have to bear.

Will this legislation override the credit and loans agreement act of 1967 of the province of Alberta, should it vary in any pertinent detail, or the consumer protection act, Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1970, particularly regulation No. 128 which details it? It may be that the regulations which will form a great part of Bill C-16—and we have seen but the tip of the iceberg—will be apparent in the legislation of some of the provinces. I suggest there may be a real battle. Somehow or other, Big Brother has said we are going to pass an act in this House of Commons in a jurisdiction that is undeniably that of the provinces and has been for well over a century. The provinces will all have to line up, touch their forelocks, bend the knee and say that the federal legislation is going to override their legislation, and they will conform.

If it is the desire to establish uniformity, let the minister say that he and his officials are going to convince the appropriate ministries in the provincial governments to establish uniform legislation. That would be a positive act, and I would agree with it. However, to say that this bill will establish such uniformity is sheer poppycock. I again quote the minister:

The second goal is to facilitate the proper functioning of the market by encouraging more vigorous competition and providing the consumer both with protection and with the right of civil recourse.

We will see whether there is greater accessibility of credit for potential borrowers. We will see whether there will be meaningful civil recourse against unconscionable contracts.

Thirdly, this bill will establish a clear and easily provable criminal offence to act as a strong deterrent to the cancer of loan-sharking that has spread throughout this country.

Why not amend the Criminal Code, if loan-sharking should be a criminal offence—and it is not at the present time. We have bills like Bill C-83, of non-lamented fame, of the last session. Loan-sharking could have been described in that bill and made part of the criminal law, something the minister is trying to do under this law. There is one thing about a lot of this regulation and the so-called attempts to increase competition by increasing regulations and making it more difficult for lenders to operate. There is something that does not click in the bureaucratic mind. Every regulation requiring an act on behalf of a manufacturer, distributor, supplier, merchant, lender, or what-have-you, results in a cost. Who pays it? The consumer—the very person this legislation is alleged to benefit.

Take the banks and the trust companies which are already covered by a great deal of legislation, inspection and practice, and impose further requirements. Has any one of the people who talk about the daily calculation of interest determined how much it costs to calculate that interest, verify it and balance the books? Many years ago, for some two years I exercised what little grey matter I had—

An hon. Member: It's all gone now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It became honed-in very well, compared to the stuff you people put out. I worked on interest rates as a bank clerk. Hon. members may remind me how long it used to take to figure that out manually some 35 years ago. I am reminded of the hours and the days and the cost involved in calculating interest; and in those days it was 2½ per cent on savings accounts. I remember, also, calculating interest at 1½ per cent on savings accounts. That was done on the minimum quarterly balance, as I recall it. Later, the calculation was made on the basis of the minimum monthly balance. So I can tell hon. members just what is involved in the cost of calculating interest payments, bearing in mind the far greater volume and complexity of savings accounts today. We say to the banks and to the trust companies, "Just calculate this interest on a daily basis." Well, perhaps they will calculate interest on loans on a daily basis. Let us see, then, if the smile goes on the other side of the face. This is a two-edged sword.

● (1640)

If costs for the operation of savings accounts go up because of the requirements of this bill, all that will happen is that the interest spread will have to be widened. In other words, the interest rate will have to be lowered. It is not the banks which are going to pay for this. Moreover, if there is a decline in profits, the federal treasury will suffer because 50 per cent of this additional expenditure will be deductible from taxable income. Thus, in the end, the requirement could be self-defeating; I think the bottom-line figures on the balance sheet would be zero or something less. It sounds good and it reads well but, frankly, it is a purely cosmetic operation as far as the consumer is concerned.

I thought I would go over the list of legislation in the two provinces to which I referred, Ontario and Alberta. In Ontario, the first is the personal property security act. These are all in the Revised Statutes of 1970; I do not know when they may have been passed in their original form. Then there is the credit unions act, the mechanics liens act, the conditional sales act, the loan and trust corporations act, the consumer protection act and the bills of sale and chattel mortgages act. In the province of Alberta there is, as I recall, the judicature act, the mortgage brokers' regulation act (1964), the direct sales calculation act (1966), and the credit and loan agreements act (1967). There are any number of parts to that act, one which from the consumer's point of view is a real refuge. It is said that some provinces are havens for the absconding debtor, the person who buys on time and then wants to beat it.

On the other hand, do you not agree, Mr. Speaker, that business losses incurred when customers do not pay their debts must be recovered at other points in the operation if the company concerned is to stay in business? This is what happens when, for example, an automobile dealer makes a loss in connection with a car he has repossessed or when one of his debtors absconds. Such losses have to be taken into consideration in the course of other transactions, otherwise the dealer will go under.

The situation is the same for a furniture dealer, a radio and television dealer—any type of store or business operation which operates on credit. If things are made too easy for the so-called poor borrower or poor purchaser, one of two consequences will ensue. Either the business will become more discriminating in granting credit, thereby narrowing the field for borrowers—an effect which is counterproductive to the bill before us—or losses will be such that additional costs will be placed on the shoulders of consumers. There is nothing like sharing the load! Again, I submit that this is counterproductive to the spirit of this legislation.

Society certainly has the right to ask that when there is a transaction all relevant information should be clearly stated. In the case, say, of the purchase of a refrigerator, the cash price of the unit in question should be stated. So should the price with trade-in, if a trade-in is involved. Then there will be the dates and the amounts and number of regular payments, payments which may be blended so as to include interest, or calculated on the basis of a declining amount of interest, leaving a balance to become payable on such and such a date. To the amount to be paid there would be added the cost of a credit report, if it is part of the transaction, as well as the cost of insuring the purchaser, if such were part of the contract. Registration charges, if required by provincial law, would also be listed and, finally, the total cost.

Having arrived at that figure, it is simple to take the cash price of the product, subtract it from the total cost and arrive, by simple mathematics, at the cost of borrowing, the cost of the transaction. It is spread over so many months. I do not underestimate the capacity of a purchaser who buys a refrigerator to understand the type of contract in which this is spelled out. Incidentally, there are many provinces in which a person buying under such a contract has the right to go back within, say, five business days and say that he is sorry, he has changed his mind. I do not see that provision in this bill, but it may be the answer sometimes to the practices of some pretty high pressure salesmanship. Salesmen of home appliances, automobiles, radio and televisions are pretty skilled. They have to be; theirs is a highly competitive world. Take the case of a purchaser who cannot afford to buy. He goes back home, talks to his wife and says, "What were we thinking about? Buying this is absolutely crazy". Having reflected on the matter, he can go back and say to the salesman, "I am sorry; we have changed our minds".

• (1650)

That, Mr. Speaker, is the ultimate protection and I am quite prepared to see that here. When it comes to the purchase of an automobile, every blessed cent of the cost of that vehicle which will go into every monthly payment should be listed in appropriate columns—no fine print so small one almost needs a magnifying glass to read it—so the figures are there in tabular form before the purchaser, readily explainable to him or her. That I would agree with, and it is provided for in some provinces.

Are we going to see such provisions as this in the regulations, Mr. Speaker? My colleagues have expressed some concern about the regulations, and I hope the minister will break with tradition and disclose the regulations during the committee hearings. After all, this is not a bill that was dreamed up two weeks ago and is being rushed through; we have been hearing about it over eons of time almost. I am sure the department has had every opportunity for consultation and examination of provincial legislation which has preceded this measure by up to 20 years. I have before me a copy of a letter dated October 20 from the Consumers' Association of Canada which raises some points of query about which there is legitimate argument.

My final point, Mr. Speaker, has to do with loan-sharking. It sounds great to say that there are going to be penalties imposed on loan sharks. But it is not so much the loan-sharking that is the bad thing; it is the coercion and the efforts at extortion today that are so reprehensible. These are the offences of which people are convicted.

Does anyone in their right mind believe that there is going to be a written agreement between a lender and a borrower who enter into a transaction on, say, the docks in Montreal, where there has been evidence of loan-sharking? What about a transaction that takes place on some construction sites, where judicial inquiries have elicited that loan-sharking has been carried on by various individuals both inside and outside the industrial personnel? Will there be any agreement between gamblers and among the underworld where this type of operation known as loan-sharking takes place? Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that an agreement will be signed between a lender who is going to put up, say, a couple of thousand dollars for some poor fool who has gambled away that much money with a bookie, and that enforcers will collect this loan? What if he says, "No, I am not going to pay; you take me to court?" What will happen to him will be the baseball bat across his legs and arms. That is what happens under loan-sharking.

I say that combating loan-sharking is no function of a bill of this type. Give the police the authority to deal with loan sharks. Put it in the Criminal code where it belongs. Then we will not have to go through all this nonsense of talking about agreements and civil recourse. In that league, Mr. Speaker, there is no civil recourse. Where does one imagine so-called loan-sharking is carried on? There may be usurious loan practices carried on at times among some pawnbrokers, but in such cases what was the purpose of the loan? Was it necessary to pay the rent or to buy food? Not all of those transactions is so, shall I say, humdrum and for such a useful purpose, not by a long chalk. Such transactions usually are on the wrong side of the law or for some purpose that cannot stand examination by the light of day. Let us put this kind of activity under the Criminal Code. I hope we can persuade the minister that he should try to persuade his colleague, the Attorney General, to include appropriate provisions in the bill that is to follow what was Bill C-83.

We should send this bill to committee. The principle of it is to amend certain acts. We are going to repeal the Small Loans Act and do a number of other things, but the principle of the whole bill is to amend certain acts. That is fine; I am quite agreeable to it and the bill should be sent to committee. Outside of that though, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very cosmetic bill which will not accomplish the purpose the minister has set out for it.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by commending the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) for bringing forward this bill as his initial piece of legislation on entering the cabinet. I think he has established a legitimate beachhead from which to launch his ministry. We may well disagree with some points in the legislation, but we certainly agree on the necessity for it. I hope he will be open-minded enough to listen to what members have to say during second reading debate, that he will listen to the proposals that are made, and gather together some of the hints that members offer relative to the amendments that he should expect at committee stage and at report stage.

● (1700)

I hope he will be open-minded enough to realize that even the best minister cannot bring forward perfect legislation, and that it is not a sign of weakness to allow amendments later on, but a sign of strength. Again I congratulate him for bringing forward this piece of legislation. It is his responsibility to act on behalf of the public to protect either the unwary or the defenceless, and not to encourage or reward unrestrained impulse buying.

The kind of legislation we are discussing lends itself to the creation of many victims in the marketplace. The very term "consumer", which is part of the title of the minister's portfolio, gives us some hint as to what the marketplace thinks of the ordinary individual. He is no longer a person or a human being; he is now completely depersonalized and is simply a consumer. The term has obviously been invented by some unfeeling genius of the market system whose responsibility it is to provide devourers of the unending array and supply of gadgets spewed out by the industries which have hired these callous hawkers of the marketplace. It is not the responsibility of the minister to encourage that kind of depersonalization in the marketplace. Rather, it is his responsibility to humanize the whole process by which we buy and sell.

The bill sets out the responsibilities of a lender and puts on him the onus to disclose certain very important information, such as the total amount of the loan being discussed, the total amount of repayment, the dollar amount of interest per annum, the effective annual percentage rate, the amounts and rates of payments to be made to the lender or to a designated third party, the conditions regarding payment of penalties and the computation of the same, and the effective date of the beginning of the transaction.

It has been said that the only thing money cannot buy is poverty. I suppose at one time that was true, but in the market place and in the marketing system today that is already becoming a contradiction because of the ready availability of debt or finance. Indeed, today money can buy poverty.

I would like to address myself for a few minutes to the whole business of consumer finance as it relates to the credit card system. I do not suppose there is a member in this House who does not use a credit card; they are a very convenient way of buying.

Mr. Parent: I don't.

Mr. Friesen: I see there is an hon. member opposite who does not have one. I respect him for that. I respect his self-control.

Mr. Parent: I can't get one.

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member says he cannot get one. I suppose he cannot pass the character test. Perhaps he has come to the point, as other people have, where obviously his credit must be good because he owes everybody. However, in all seriousness I think anybody who can resist the pressure to borrow is to be commended.

I was talking to the minister just today about the fact that there is too much pressure on the public to apply for credit cards. There is unending pressure through television ads, magazines end even the mail service. At the present time the post office is operating, but it is strange that credit is now possible even through provincial schemes. Where the credit card companies get their mailing lists, I do not know. It would be interesting to find out. The fact that a credit card company can mail out credit cards or applications for credit cards is something which deserves serious examination by the government. It seems that consumers face no relief from the endless barrage of credit card companies saying how easy it is to borrow and how good and how convenient it is. We see happy young people pictured flicking out credit cards and making purchases, but there is never any mention that the rate of interest is 18 per cent or 24 per cent.

We see these people walk away in ecstasy, but we do not see them getting their statements at the end of the month or paying usurious interest rates. I think the government has a responsibility to put a curb on this pressure which is always facing the consumer. I know we are not dealing with such things as subliminal advertising, but the private citizen no longer seems to have the freedom of independent decision. He is being pressured and conned into making decisions and he is caught off guard. I know we cannot endure a "buyer beware" market, nor can the government be paternalistic in this sense and protect the public from all the pitfalls there may be, but I think the government has some responsibility and should have these companies exercise restraint in this area.

Just last week when I was home I went through some of my mail and came across a letter from Master Charge. I do not even have a Master Charge card, but that letter in effect said, "Congratulations, it is now possible for you to borrow up to a limit of $1,500". I never even asked for that privilege. These companies are inviting people to go into debt. The government has a responsibility to put pressure on such companies to restrict that kind of advertising.

The government is taking away the percentage limits the lending companies can impose on their borrowers. The government says that if it puts loan-sharks out of the market—which is a happy thought, if it can be done—then taking away the ceiling on lending rates will simply make the market more competitive. I am not convinced that that is true. That could be the case, but I am not convinced. However, if the government is going to take away that ceiling, it certainly ought to take a very close look at the number of dollars these companies are spending in advertising to convince the public that it ought to use their credit, just as I think we ought to look at the amount of advertising used in other industries to convince shoppers that their product is best.

Why should General Motors have a multimillion dollar advertising budget to convince me that I should buy a General Motors' car? Surely most people know whether they want a GM, Chrysler, Ford, American Motors' or any other kind of vehicle. We do not have to be convinced by that kind of advertising, and the same is true with regard to credit. If the government is going to take the restraints off the lending market by taking away the interest ceiling, it also has a responsibility to consider the amount of money credit card companies are spending on advertising.

● (1710)

I thought we had an excellent presentation before the House last night by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I believe he spoke from a very informed position, since he is a former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. I thought he gave a very responsible and well thought-out presentation regarding this legislation. The criticisms he had for the bill were not vitriolic; they were constructive. He pointed out the gaps in the legislation and offered alternative proposals which the government might introduce if it wants to improve this legislation.

I want to emphasize that the minister would display his strength as a minister if he had the courage to entertain the kinds of amendments that will be suggested during this debate and at the committee stage. The hon. member for Windsor West said, as recorded at page 704 of Hansard:

> However, this bill does nothing to ensure that the low income borrower who has in the past found it difficult to obtain credit from legitimate institutions, will not continue to be forced into the hands of loan sharks rather than getting that credit from legitimate lenders. The bill does nothing to ensure that the borrower, who found it difficult in the past to get credit except from companies licensed under the Small Loans Act, will, when this bill is passed, get credit on terms as favourable as those now provided for loans under the act, either from small loan companies or other credit granting institutions. The minister in his speech on second reading said at one point:
>
> "That is why we propose the repeal of the Small Loans Act. Instead we are proposing a strong and comprehensive set of protective devices applicable to all forms and levels of consumer credit so that consumers will be assured of access to loans bearing fair and reasonable credit charges."

It is a truism among the people who have to go to the lending market, to the regular financial institutions to borrow money, that the only time money will be lent to them is when they can prove that they really do not need it. That is another way of saying that one needs so much collateral that one probably could get along very well without borrowing the money unless one wanted to expand his enterprise. The fact is that some of the lending institutions are so careful in establishing their criteria and in examining their prospective clients that it becomes very difficult to borrow money from them.

A friend of mine went to his local bank. He wanted to do some renovations to his house. I think he was a school teacher; at least, he seemed to be a very respected person in the community. He had good credentials but he simply did not have too many resources, as is the case with most teachers. This man went to his banker and said he wanted to borrow "X" number of dollars for the purpose of renovating his house. After discussion the banker said that he did not think he could do that for him because he did not have very much collateral. They made small-talk for a while and when my friend went to leave, the banker, in the usual closing remarks said, "any time I can do something for you, please come and see me". My friend said that the time was then.

The fact is that these institutions tend to be so secretive and security-oriented that only the most prosperous clients stand a chance of getting the kind of terms they need in respect of loans. As the hon. member for Windsor West pointed out, if you do not have blue chip kind of credit, it is not likely that you will get that kind of loan. So a person who might in every other sense qualify for this type of credit, eventually ends up going to the loan-sharking business.

The minister proposes to do away with loan-sharking. I hope he is successful. I hope that this bill makes it possible. However, human nature being what it is, and because of the unscrupulousness of the people already engaged in that kind of business, I am not inclined to be sanguine about the hope. Because of the very nature of these people, who are dangerous and usurious, they will continue to operate in a devious fashion and there will always be a market for their product. They will simply go further underground. The borrower who does not have blue chip collateral will end up in some kind of financial arrangement like this.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asked, what is the recourse? The bill says the recourse is the law and that the lender will have to prove before the law that the rates are not usurious or criminal. That kind of lender has other ways of handling his client who would have the temerity to go before the law. There is the matter of the baseball bat, the slashed tires or the threatening phone calls at three o'clock in the morning. These unscrupulous people take matters into their own hands. Their method is intimidation. So what is the borrower to do in this kind of situation? If, in normal circumstances, he has good credit but cannot borrow at an ordinary lending institution, what is he to do?

I suggest the hon. member for Windsor West came up with a very reasonable solution which I think deserves examination by all members of the House, certainly by the members of the committee and the minister. As recorded at page 706 of Hansard, the hon. member said:

> A simple approach would be to require the licensing, the registration, of all moneylenders not subject to be licensed under other federal or provincial laws. One can agree that duplication of licensing is not necessary. But why remove even the requirement for licensing from those now subject to it under the existing law? Whatever may be said for the authority to be given to the new administrator under the act, that authority is not to exercise a licensing jurisdiction.

The simple solution is a licensing requirement. This government, of all governments, ought to have some kind of experience in licensing. When we think of the government's proposal in respect of Bill C-83, one would think with that kind of reflex action the government would have thought of that proposal when it came to the matter of moneylenders.

I understand that the government of British Columbia has brought forward legislation which requires moneylenders in British Columbia to be licensed. What is wrong with that? Why not take the people who want to be involved in the moneylending business and require that they take a course of study which would prepare them for this kind of business? During that course of study the licensing process would soon eliminate people who are not equipped to be involved in this kind of business. We have this situation in other areas. It happens in the insurance business. To be a reputable insurance salesman a man must pass a course; then he is given a licence to sell insurance.

● (1720)

We do it in the real estate business. Banks have to be licensed. It seems to me that the hon. member for Windsor West has come up with a very legitimate proposal for the government to examine and to bring forward in committee. The government should let it be examined in amendment form. I do not know why the government should not want to adopt this suggestion. One of their own members brought it forward. It seems to me that it deserves examination.

This whole business of pressure to buy, pressure to borrow, has very invidious dimensions. I have already mentioned the credit card business and consumer orientation, but when you see how the marketplace operates today where, for example, large department stores also become lending institutions for one who is buying their merchandise, it takes you back to the company store, "Sixteen stone, and what do you get? Another day older and deeper in debt." We have examples of large, chain department stores charging what may be a legitimate mark-up on their merchandise, but they are making another 18 per cent to 24 per cent on the money they lend to the consumer who purchases from them.

That kind of vertical organization lends itself to a lot of abuse. I am not saying that the chains we have in Canada are abusing the system; I am saying the system lends itself to abuse. Then you have a company such as the Power Corporation, for example, which is an enterprise involved in transportation, in communications, in advertising and in moneylending.

An hon. Member: Also, in politics.

Mr. Friesen: You have those kinds of relationships. We have to get away from the pressure on the consumer encouraging him, almost forcing him, into impulse buying. Let me get back to the borrower who comes to the lending market with what would be classed, I suppose, as secondary qualifications to borrow money. The present legislation says there is the litigation process which he can go through if he feels he is being charged too much. On the surface, it sounds reasonable—the lender now has to justify the rates he is charging. But it seems to me, if I understand the bill correctly, that that is after the fact. After they have engaged in an agreement and the borrower realizes that he is being charged more than he should be charged, it is then his prerogative to go before a judge and engage in litigation.

However, in so many cases the very people who become victims of this kind of money market are those who are not accustomed to going before the law; they cannot afford it. They are not accustomed to going before the law because they are not in that kind of world, and they do not have that kind of income to hire a lawyer or even to get legal advice. While the proposal seems to be legitimate, I am afraid that it will break down and the very people whom the legislation is designed to help will continue to be the victims because they have a fear of the legal system, they stay away from the courts and they are not accustomed to being in that kind of position.

The hon. member for Windsor West said that the criminal rate of interest for which sanctions will apply to the institutions, transactions to be exempted from the act, and the kind of information to be spelled out in the advertising in which credit is mentioned cause him concern. He said the government must table a complete set of draft regulations with the committee studying the bill. He hit the point right on the head. We have had too much exposure to legislation which provides that regulations will come at a later date or will be drafted after the legislation has been passed. We have experienced that, especially with Bill C-83. We faced it in immigration laws where the government could change the regulations overnight and simply impose them on the public without providing the people with prior information.

The hon. member for Windsor West has a very strong point. He said there can be no meaningful parliamentary debate, nor can there be meaningful public input as to the content of the bill without these regulations being put before us at the earliest possible date which, he says, should not be later than the beginning of the committee hearings. I should like to encourage the minister to draft those regulations and give himself that much time before he moves forward with this legislation, so that the committee can examine the regulations and provide the kind of input that the legislation needs if we are to do the best we can for the public.

If we do not have the best kind of bill issuing from this debate and from discussion in committee, only the public will suffer. The very people whom the minister wants to help will be hurt the most. The tragedy is that the people will have confidence in this legislation, but that confidence will be betrayed if the minister does not submit it for scrutiny. I encourage the minister to give himself more time so that the regulations can be drafted and presented to the committee. We should allow amendments to come forward and let the public benefit from the best possible discussion and scrutiny of this legislation so that we will get the best protection that the public deserves under it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this very important debate on Bill C-16, an act to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof. I am afraid we are off to a very bad start with Bill C-16, as the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) stated. It is similar to Bill C-83, which was very poorly drafted. If it ever comes back, which we hope it will not, about 100 amendments will be presented to try to improve the bill.

● (1730)

The Globe and Mail of October 29 reported the Canadian Bankers' Association as saying that this bill, rather than achieving the stated objective of eliminating unnecessary complexities and confusion in the credit field, in its present form could confuse and dislocate consumer finance to the detriment of all Canadians. It reported that the CBA has serious reservations as to the contents of the bill in the form in which it has been introduced, saying it appears that rather than meeting specifically Canadian needs, based on Canadian experience and the need to operate within the Canadian institutional framework, foreign precedents and procedures have been adopted. It claimed that as the bill stands, the cost and availability of credit to consumers would be adversely affected since legitimate lenders would face difficulties in their administration and assets and liabilities management. It noted that another stated objective of the bill is to rationalize federal credit legislation, saying that with this the bill attempts to cover such a diverse range of topics as consumer credit, mortgages, deposits, advertising and disclosure, without having regard to existing federal and provincial legislation.

The newspaper noted that the CBA argues the public would have been better served, and more effective and useful legislation would have emerged more quickly, if the government had allowed for adequate public discussion of the proposals before the introduction of the legislation, perhaps through a white paper process. The report continued that the CBA said after it has had an opportunity to study the bill it will prepare detailed alternative submissions for parliamentary committees to consider.

On November 1, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) put the following question to the minister:

> I hesitate to interrupt the minister, Mr. Speaker, but I wonder if by the time he completes his explanation on this point he could tell me how he believes he can lump together charges under provincial legislation for the registration of chattel mortgages or other forms of incumbencies with interest charges that are to the benefit of the lender. Those are two different things. I should like to know how the minister believes he can lump together apples, oranges, cherries, bananas and other things in the same basket and come out with common interest charges and rates.

The minister replied:

> I would prefer not to attempt to answer that question because it opens the problems of provincial instruments—

That indicates how ill-prepared the government was and how poorly the bill is drafted. Under a heading "Loan bill constitutionality queried", an article in the Montreal Gazette of November 2 refers to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), saying:

> —he has doubts about the constitutionality of a government bill aimed at halting loan-sharking and protecting borrowers from unfair interest rates.

The article goes on to say that the hon. member doubted there had been full consultation with the provinces before the bill was introduced. Mr. Speaker, this is evidence of complete lack of consultation, and now we doubt if the bill is even constitutional. Now let us look at some clauses of the bill, Mr. Speaker. Clause 2 (2) (a) reads:

> Where the payment is in the form of an amount paid that is sent by mail to the lender at his latest known mailing address and, on the day it is sent, the payment is in a form that is negotiable by the lender, on that day—

With the mail service, we have, Mr. Speaker, that clause could cause very serious problems and will have to be looked at in committee. Clause 33 reads as follows:

> Where, in any proceedings in relation to a particular lending transaction, a dispute arises as to whether a payment by a borrower under the transaction was made on or before the day on or before which such payment was, under the terms of the lending transaction, required to be made, such payment shall, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be presumed to have been made on or before that day.

I do not know how this is to be recorded. I would imagine lenders will have to photostat all letters. I will be interested to hear them explain, when they appear before the committee, how they will carry out this provision. On the matter of the obligations of lenders, clauses 17 and 18 provide that all lenders shall maintain records and books of account which would enable the administrator to identify credit charges in individual transactions. These records shall be kept by the lender until such time as prescribed by regulation. Here we get into the question of the regulations. This matter has been mentioned by other members during the debate.

It is puzzling to see how all the regulations can be administered, when little bombshells are dropped from time to time.

The bill says that the records may then be destroyed; a lender shall provide a periodic statement of account to a borrower without charge; frequency and form will be specified by regulation; upon the payment of a fee in an amount to be specified by regulation, the lender shall provide to the borrower an interim statement of account. All these procedures should be stated in the bill and not by regulation, Mr. Speaker.

Because of the considerable dependence of this section on unrevealed regulations, analysis of it would not be fruitful. However, the extent of the use of regulations is itself significant. Why, for instance, the length of time the records must be kept should be at the discretion of the governor in council is an interesting question. On the matter of depositors, clauses 19 to 21 state that a deposit is defined as the aggregate of moneys, including interest, accepted or held by the institution in return for which the institution is primarily liable, for which it must issue a receipt and give credit to the depositor's account. To retain the character of a deposit the institution must also be obligated to repay the moneys on demand or on notice.

Advertisements shall not claim to provide a deposit interest payment, except as provided by regulation; the amount of interest earned shall be calculated in the manner prescribed by regulation; the frequency with which interest is credited to accounts shall be monthly, or at such more frequent intervals as may be prescribed by regulation; all deposit-taking institutions shall disclose to the depositor the annual rate on the applicable class of deposits, the method by which that interest is calculated and such other information as may be prescribed by regulation. Mr. Speaker, we will have a longer list of regulations than there are clauses in the bill. These sections apply to all deposit-taking institutions except to classes of institutions that are exempted by regulation.

Emphasis has been placed on the words "by regulation" because of the magnitude of what these sections will regulate. In chartered banks, trust companies and mortgage loan companies alone there are over $40 billion of savings deposits. That discretionary powers over the treatment of such an enormous amount of money should be proposed at all is a frightening thought. A further source of alarm is that control over transactions involving this amount of money is vested in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, a department that has no mandate to concern itself with the stability of the monetary system.

A possible scenario where these deposit provisions could interfere with monetary stability is here outlined. Assuming that the regulations will specify that interest payments are to be calculated daily, it will become more profitable for depositors to use chequing and non-chequing savings accounts rather than personal chequing accounts which bear no interest. There will thus be a shift from demand deposits to notice deposits. In terms of the classifications used by the Bank of Canada, funds will shift from M-1, currency and demand deposits, to M-2, currency and privately-held deposits, including savings deposits and non-personal term and notice deposits. Since the Bank of Canada fastens upon M-1 as the principal method of regulating the size of the monetary mass, to the extent that funds move from M-1 to M-2 Bank of Canada control is reduced.

● (1740)

Further, chartered banks currently must maintain reserves of 12 per cent on demand deposits and 4 per cent on notice deposits. If funds shift from demand to notice deposits, a reduction in the aggregate level of reserves maintained by the banks will occur. This would not only reduce Bank of Canada control of the money supply but would also release large quantities of funds into the monetary system. The above scenario is not meant to suggest that this will occur but that it might. Surely, there should be a requirement that any regulations proposed for deposits by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should be first checked and approved by the Department of Finance and or the Bank of Canada.

Although these sections leave much of their substance to regulation, yet a further point can be made. Inasmuch as Canada savings bonds are available only to consumers, it should be incumbent upon the government of Canada to lead the way in interest rate disclosure by agreeing to treat Canada savings bonds in the same manner as deposit-taking institutions are required to treat interest on non-chequing deposits.

I now come to the powers of the administrator, dealt with in clauses 24 to 30, inclusive. The administrator shall keep a register about lenders which is likely to be of interest to borrowers, including judicial proceedings, under the BDPA or any federal or provincial statute. Borrowers, upon payment of a fee, may inspect the register or obtain a certificate of compliance concerning the lender's activities. The bill states that the administrator may require a lender to submit information regarding lending transactions. Also, the administrator may enter the premises of the lender at reasonable times, examine or audit his books, obtain assistance in his examination from the lender and, if it appears to the administrator that an offence has been committed, seize all relevant information. Entry can only be approved by a judge, and only when a complaint has been received from a borrower.

Information obtained in this manner is privileged and may only be made public in enforcing the act. The power of the administrator is considerable but is protected from abuse by the requirement that judicial authorization shall be sought in advance of the use of any extraordinary remedies. If it is granted that the strictures specified in the act are necessary and beneficial, then it is apparent that a person must be vested with the power to apply them. In one area, however, the administrator has power that may be abused and for which there is no judicial authorization required.

The administrator shall keep a register which will include any information which, in the judgment of the administrator, is likely to be of use to the borrower. This information will include records of judicial proceedings against lenders, whether under the BDPA or any other act. The legislation does not specify whether these records of court proceedings only will include cases in which the lender has been found guilty. Failure to limit the judgment of the administrator in this way could allow the administrator to conduct a campaign of innuendo against a lender by simply listing the actions brought against a lender whether or not they were successful.

I now deal with clauses 37 to 40, inclusive, which have to do with offences. Persons who demand an excessive credit charge, unlawfully destroy records or accounts or employ any threat or coercion against a borrower, are liable, on summary conviction, to a fine of between $1,000 and $10,000 and/or to imprisonment for two years or, upon indictment, to a fine not less than $1,000 and to imprisonment for five years. Illegal types of threat or coercion are identified. They include: intent to use violence, threat of public accusation, threat of sale or assignment, threat of arrest or seizure of possessions. Activities which constitute threatening are identified: use of obscene language, placement of anonymous telephone calls, collect calls or calls at inconvenient times.

The purpose of the very detailed list of illegal practices is to prohibit practices used by loan sharks or unscrupulous lenders in obtaining payment. But since practices of intimidation or of abusive conduct or of threat or coercion are already deemed criminal offences under the Criminal Code, it is unlikely that this bill will create any new deterrent to criminal acts. The problem is one of enforcement rather than of law.

May I now make some general comments. Much of the borrowers and depositors protection bill will be of considerable benefit to consumers who borrow or deposit, and is not likely to impose an undue financial or administrative burden on the various classes of financial institutions which either lend or accept deposits. Certain features of the bill, however, are manifestly unfair to lenders and, indeed, may be counterproductive for consumers. Implementation of the legislation in its current form may disrupt loan markets to the extent that funds available to borrowers through legal sources will be reduced. Other sections of the bill may only serve to confuse consumers, when the object is to allow them to be better informed. For depositors, benefits are not clear at this time, as most of the procedures by which interest on deposits is to be advertised, computed and credited will be prescribed by regulation.

Few would dispute that new legislation in this area is required. The principal federal borrower protection laws are the Interest Act and the Small Loans Act, last amended in 1917 and 1956 respectively. It is clear that many significant changes in the financial system have occurred since these times, including a much greater willingness of consumers to borrow, much higher general interest rates, greater sophistication in advertising, the large-scale entry of chartered banks into the consumer loan market, and a proliferation in the range of financial services available to consumers.

Bringing the act up to date, however, is not the only change required. The Small Loans Act only regulates designated moneylenders and loan companies. There are many other classes of financial institutions, not the least being the banks, which are not affected by the provisions of this legislation. Provincial governments have implemented some legislation which is of assistance to borrowers, but these protections have neither been complete in their coverage nor consistent between provinces.

Bill C-16 proposes protection that will be uniform in degree throughout the country and will affect all institutions which lend to consumers or closely-held corporations. The Interest Act will be repealed and replaced by one piece of legislation. At the same time, responsibility for administration of the act will be vested in a different minister. Although there was no privy councillor assigned to administer the Interest Act, it was assumed to be under the general authority of the minister of finance of the day and in practice required no administrative guidance, being used primarily by the courts. Administration of the Small Loans Act is the responsibility of the minister of finance of the day. The new BDPA will be administered by the minister of consumer and corporate affairs.

This change in administration itself raises some questions which may be of some importance. The objective of the BDPA is to protect consumer borrowers and depositors. The objective of the Department of Finance in administering small loans legislation is not only to ensure the propriety of management policies and operations of small loans companies but also to ensure their financial solvency. Further, the Department of Finance is charged with maintaining an orderly financial system. It is possible that the goals of borrower and depositor protection may conflict with those of the financial solvency of loan companies or of an orderly financial system. Since it is within the mandate of the Department of Finance to examine policies proposed by other departments and agencies of government having an effect on economic or financial conditions, it may be useful to direct questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) as to the likely impact of the BDPA legislation.

I said a moment ago that the BDPA intends to provide national standards of protection. Thus, where a provincial statute is in conflict with a federal one it appears that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intends that the federal act shall be supreme. This presumption of jurisdiction is based on a constitutional premise. Section 91(19) of the BNA Act indicates that matters pertaining to interest are within federal power. Federal reasoning is that "all transactions where interest is involved must therefore be considered to be within federal jurisdiction."

● (1750)

This interpretation may seem to be sound, but is suspect for two reasons. First, in this bill the definition of "interest" is often extended somewhat beyond its original 1867 meaning, as when "credit charge rate" is used in place of the notion of interest rate and is only defined precisely by regulation. Second, although a loan or deposit is a transaction where interest is involved, the bill regulates aspects of a loan or deposit transaction which have little or nothing to do with interest, as when late or early penalty payment procedures are specified, when loan account statements are demanded or when unacceptable collection procedures are designated. Rules in all these areas may be desirable, but the federal jurisdictional power of interest is being stretched in interpretation when it is used as justification for regulation of these practices. Objections from provinces may be expected.

A rather alarming number of the provisions of Bill C-16 are deliberately vague. Details will be filled in by regulation. In a bill of 44 clauses there are at least 20 distinct cases where clarification as to the meaning of terms or the procedures to be followed will be given in regulations which will be proclaimed by the governor in council. The only check on the unrestrained power to make regulations is the provision in clause 31(2) which requires that an opportunity to hear representations shall be provided to interested parties.

Many of the regulations will specify matters of substance rather than of detail. Examples of definitional or procedural matters which will be revealed by regulation include, (1) the definitions of "credit charge rate", "lowest rate quoted" for prime or non-chequing rates, and "variable rate" of a loan, and (2) the procedures to be followed in advertising credit availability, making full disclosure of the cost of a loan, providing statements of account to borrowers—manner, form and periodicity—advertising, calculating and crediting interest on deposits. Application for so many discretionary powers in a bill should give cause for concern in itself, but the extent of the powers sought is quite astounding. The bill proposes to give unchallengeable power to the governor in council to control the manner and form in which billions of dollars of deposits and loans are made every year. Whether such power would be used wisely is a question which pales into insignificance beside the question of whether such unchallengeable power should exist at all.

I now wish to deal with the principal provisions of the bill. The interest rate ceilings are removed in clause 3. Apart from restrictions imposed by this and other acts of parliament, any rate of interest may be charged "that is agreed upon." This provision constitutes the removal of the interest rate ceilings imposed by the Small Loans Act. Under that act a rate of interest could not be charged on a loan that would exceed, (a) 2 per cent per month on any unpaid balance less than $300, (b) 1 per cent per month on any unpaid balance over $300 but less than $1,000, or (c) one-half of 1 per cent per month on any unpaid balance exceeding $1,000 but less than $1,500. Longer term loans were subject to even lower rates.

The removal of interest rate ceilings is a source of benefit to both lenders and consumers. The ceilings were imposed at a time when general interest rates were at a much lower level. Under more recent conditions, where a loan company has had to pay rates in excess of 11 per cent to purchase the money it loans, it is impossible to expect loan companies to lend at rates of 12 per cent and less and still remain solvent. Under certain conditions, for certain amounts of money, a loan company would have been expected to lend at rates less than those offered by chartered banks exempt from small loans legislation which have, because of superior leverage and lower costs of raising funds, a much lower cost of doing business. Such a situation causes moneylenders and small loan companies to turn down all but the most credit-worthy borrowers or to lend amounts above the regulatory coverage of the act, which is $1,500.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Loan companies affected by rate regulation have generally been opposed to it. They have argued that rate regulation is unnecessary. They say:

> The degree of competition among various credit suppliers and among the member companies of our own industry guarantees the vast majority of borrowers that adequate credit will be available to them at fair, efficient and competitive rates.

This was contained in a submission by the Canadian Consumer Loan Association to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The CCLA is now part of the Association of Canadian Financial Corporations. Consumers will be satisfied in one respect, that loans will be more freely available to borrowers. However, the Consumers' Association of Canada maintains that the retention of a graduated rate ceiling of up to $7,500 is still necessary, arguing that the competitive rate model is "theoretical" only, particularly for low income and or sophisticated borrowers. They recognize that rate regulation may deprive high-risk borrowers of access to credit, but if the problem of the high-risk borrower can only be salved by giving him access to high-cost credit, this is not, in our view, an objectionable effect. Although explicit rate regulation is removed by this clause, control over rates exists in another section, clause 8. To a certain extent, then, rate regulation appears in a more flexible though not necessarily a more satisfactory form.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before embarking on the point of order, may I formally express in this chamber the congratulations that are due and owning to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) who has now been elevated to the ministry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Members on all sides have always enjoyed his company. We hope this elevation will not deprive us of the day to day contact we have had with him as a person who has exhibited the utmost accessibility. On behalf of our party, I congratulate him on this elevation. I also want to have the honour of asking him his first question as minister. Can he advise us of the business of the House for tomorrow?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the opposition House leader for his kind words and good wishes. I will answer his question. We anticipate carrying on with Bill C-16 until it is completed. If that is done tomorrow, possibly we could proceed to Bill C-5 dealing with currency and exchange.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that it is appropriate for a fellow Winnipegger to join in congratulations to the new Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). I do so very heartily.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: Perhaps the new Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guay) will inform the House as to his responsibilities, as we may wish to ask him the odd question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6:02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 4, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TREASURY BOARD MINUTES DEALING WITH LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House. Whereas the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) stated, in answer to a question by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) that the financing for the Les Terrasses project was voted and approved by Treasury Board and that the proceedings would "stand examination", I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe:

That this House instruct the President of the Treasury Board to table all minutes of the proceedings and meetings by Treasury Board touching this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS IN MANILA DEALING WITH INTERNATIONAL SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, affecting the financial stability of this country. Press reports and press releases have indicated that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) was in Manila just over a month ago discussing the international financial situation, with particular reference to currency flows, with IMF and World Bank officials. Noting that discussions in which the minister participated may have substantial consequences for the future stability of the Canadian dollar in the event of international currency difficulties, and that Bill C-5 the Currency and Exchange Act Amendments that are proposed will affect the manner in which losses in exchange transactions are accounted, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to prepare a report on his activities in Manila detailing the nature of substantial discussions and/or commitments made on behalf of Canada, and that this report be tabled before Bill C-5 is called for second reading.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 demands the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROPOSED ACTION TO SECURE RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN SOVIET UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that Christians and other religious believers in the Soviet Union are being persecuted simply because they desire to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience and the precepts of their faith rather than according to the dictates of the state; and in view of the fact that a symbol of the denial of basic human rights by the Soviet Union is the imprisonment for five years at hard labour of Georgi Vins, Secretary for the Council for the Evangelical Christians and Baptists, for the alleged crime of administering to the congregation that elected him as their pastor, and the continuing persecution of the Vins family, which for three generations has suffered imprisonment and death, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That members of this House urge the Prime Minister to make representation to the government of the U.S.S.R. that Georgi Vins be released from imprisonment and that the government of the Soviet Union allow him and all other religious believers within its borders to worship God freely according to their own consciences, as the Soviet Union is committed to do by the provisions of its constitution and by the provisions of the United Nations Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which the Soviet Union has ratified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be done with the consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPLIANCE BY SOVIET UNION WITH TERMS OF HELSINKI AGREEMENT RELATING TO REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to seek leave to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Helsinki agreement requires that all signatories deal with the reunification of families "in a positive and expeditious spirit" and in view of the Russian government's refusal to respond favourably to the representations by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) on behalf of Nailya Bibershtein and some 300 other families which are split between Canada and Russia, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House unanimously regrets the refusal of the Russian government to expedite the reunification of families according to the terms of the Helsinki agreement and this House accordingly instructs the Secretary of State for External Affairs to inform the ambassador of the U.S.S.R. of the Canadian people's desire for early compliance with the terms of the Helsinki agreement as they relate to the reunification of families.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented to the House with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

OIL SANDS—MEASURES TO STIMULATE OPERATION—PROPOSALS TO ALBERTA

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of a concern for a lack of coherent policy for energy, as demonstrated by the situation in connection with the oil sands. Given the fact that according to its recent strategy report, the government is counting on producing at least one out of every four barrels of crude oil in Canada by 1990 from the tar sands, what policy will the government put into effect in order to again start operation of the oil sands, which have now come to practically a total stop?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will realize that is a very general question. I can tell him quite specifically that I met with the energy minister of Alberta very recently and also the energy minister of Saskatchewan to deal specifically with some of these very important questions. I am referring to the Athabasca tar sands, the Cold Lake deposit and of course the Lloydminster deposits as well. I put forward a proposal to the energy minister. He is now discussing it with his colleagues and I am awaiting his reply.

• (1410)

Mr. Gillies: I thank the minister for that very general answer. Now that Shell has pulled out of its operations in oil sands, and since it looks as though there will be no new operations for at least five years, would the minister tell us specifically what he is doing to try to get that Shell project, or a project of similar dimensions, started right away?

Mr. Gillespie: Very specifically, we are trying to work out a deal with Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: We need a new government from this side to get that done.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Gillies: Would the minister tell us, then, specifically what the federal government has proposed to the Province of Alberta which will ensure that this project and other projects, for example in the Cold Lake area, for example, will get under way?

Mr. Gillespie: There were a number of elements in the proposal I put forward—I do not think this is the time to discuss them. They are under consideration by the government of Alberta and I very much hope to get a reply shortly. At the appropriate moment I would be glad to pursue this matter with hon. members.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO INCREASE EXPLORATION IN FRONTIER AREAS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wish to ask him about what appears to be a conspicuous lack of success in moving toward his target of doubling Canadian frontier exploration in view of the fact that the government is skimming off $3 million a day from oil production revenues which is twice as much as it is putting back into the entire energy sector. Can the minister tell us whether he intends to enhance the financial environment of the industry so that more can be accomplished?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member has tunnel vision if he is looking at oil revenues in those terms. He seems to have forgotten the substantial fiscal commitment the Government of Canada has made through the compensation account, through investment in Syncrude and through investment in Panarctic and in Petro-Canada. I can understand why he would not want to focus on all those things; his party was against Petro-Canada.

Mr. McKenzie: If there is any tunnelling going on, it is being done by the government which is tunnelling these revenues into general revenue, and that is not the purpose of those revenues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: Will the minister tell the House why completions in the north will be down by almost 50 per cent while in Alberta, where the provincial government has acted to provide incentive, work is proceeding at record rates?

Mr. Gillespie: As the hon. member knows perfectly well, you just don't turn the tap on that quickly.

Mr. Fraser: You turned it off quickly enough!

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Gillespie: Do you fellows want an answer or don't you? Maybe you should get your own leader to clear up his own position on Petro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: I understand he has not made up his mind whether to wind it up or wind it down. We on this side introduced a whole new set of fiscal incentives. We set, as a target, the doubling of exploration in the north. We have set forth a new set of proposals with respect to oil and gas regulations. I would expect that activity to start to build. As the hon. member knows, it is very costly and there is a very short season. I did not hear the hon. member or his party supporting us in our tough decision to drill in the Beaufort Sea.

* * *

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE ACTION TO PROVIDE FOR PUBLIC DISCLOSURE BY MEMBER OF FINANCIAL INTERESTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is always good to hear, if rarely, the government defending public enterprise. I should like to shift to another matter regarding which the official opposition is also in a little difficulty these days. Given the Leader of the Official Opposition's decision not to reveal any conflict of interest situation that he might discover in his own caucus—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Broadbent: —and given also the important right of the public to have access to such information, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would assure the House that the government will act as soon as possible to implement the recommendations of the House and Senate committees' reports, which the government has had for sometime, on this important subject, with the one important change, namely that the financial interests of members of parliament be made public in whatever action is taken, as is now the practice in the United Kingdom.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it was made clear earlier in the week by the Prime Minister that at the present time the government has under consideration the reports of both the standing committee of the House and the Senate committee on the green paper on conflict of interest, which I had tabled in the House some years ago. I must say that the government is not encouraged by any speed that was shown by either chamber in dealing with this matter, but we intend to follow it through and, we hope, introduce a bill entitled "the Independence of Parliament Act" that will cover these important matters.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Acting Prime Minister speaks of the need for speed. He knows that he has had the House's report for 15 months and that the government has not acted yet. Given the fact that neither the green paper nor the report of the House committee went as far as the system which is now in operation in Great Britain whereby financial interests disclosures are made available to the public in general, will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House when the government finally acts in this important area it will duplicate that very important and positive practice of the government of the United Kingdom?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to look at the precedents in the United Kingdom but as the hon. member knows there are two ways recommended in the conflict of interest paper for dealing with the subject. One is full disclosure; the other is to set up a way by which the conflict itself is extinguished. One of these methods will be followed generally in the bill that will be brought forward.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Just so that we do not have to wait another 15 months, would the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether we will have legislation before Christmas on this important matter, or if legislation is not contemplated are other procedures going to be followed to act upon these committee reports, and will that action be taken before Christmas?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to the hon. member, at the present time we are considering as a matter of urgency the reports of both Houses. It is my intention to bring forward legislative measures as soon as possible. Whether that will occur before Christmas is something I cannot guarantee at this moment.

[Translation]

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROGRAM—CRITERIA USED IN ALLOCATING PEOPLE TO PROJECTS

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Given the number of protests we have received concerning the selection of workers for LIP projects, it would appear that officials unilaterally prepare the list of those who are registered with manpower centres without any consideration for the needs of promoters and workers' qualifications. I think that project managers should be consulted, particularly when they back up those projects to the tune of 40 to 50 per cent. Can the minister tell the House if it is the new approach used this year and if he has issued directives to have this unilateral selection followed?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at the situation described by the hon. member.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): I wish to ask a supplementary.

I thank the minister for his answer, and I would ask him, while dealing with the situation, to consider the anti-alcoholic program. Is it normal that people used to working with alcoholics were replaced by others who know precious little about that disease? What does the minister intend to do about that?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, we will have to make an expertise. We will make a thorough examination of that situation.

* * *

● (1420)

[English]

ENERGY

OIL—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING EXPLORATION IN THE NORTH

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in light of the answers he has given today. In view of the serious problems being caused to petroleum development in the north and offshore by the proposed right of Petro-Canada to acquire up to 25 per cent of existing undiscovered plays, will the minister take steps to assure those operators in the frontiers who have spent as much as $30 million on a single well will not have their equity diluted to the point where reasonable incentives no longer exist and they therefore cease to explore for the gas and oil so important to the economy?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that this is important to Canada. I also believe it is in the self-interest of corporations to explore for oil in the north of Canada. It is our policy to insure that the régime is such that the interest of the companies themselves will continue.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the government vacillated and procrastinated on regulations and in light of the further delay in the promulgation of the new land regulations, will the minister expedite final resolution of the right of Petro-Canada to "back-into" prospects so that at the very least some régime may exist for those who must carry on business in the frontier, thus clearing up the matter, so that the companies know where they stand and Petro-Canada knows where it stands?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have plenty of opportunities to make his points when the bill goes to committee.

An hon. Member: Oh come on.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister how long we have to wait. We have been waiting for three years and now he is putting us off saying that we will have it before the committee and we will be able to make submissions then. How long does the country have to wait? How long does the industry have to wait? How long does Petro-Canada have to wait?

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR RESEARCH ON ALTERNATIVE SOURCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the current fiscal year the United States government is spending roughly $290 million on renewable energy research and development which is equal to 12 per cent of their nuclear energy research and development budget. Given that the equivalent figure for Canada is a minuscule $4.7 million, is the minister prepared to reconsider his department's research priorities before we lose all initiative in this field? Is he perhaps prepared to view favourably the requests for innovative research funding such as recently made by the Premier of Prince Edward Island for funds for alternative energy for that province?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at the present time there is a paper before my Cabinet colleagues which deals with this question of government priorities, more specifically the question of incremental funds that may become available for energy research and development this year. I can assure the hon. member that in terms of incremental funds I give first priority to research and development in renewable energy resources.

FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STATUS OF PROJECT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am glad to note the interest of the minister in renewable resources. My question is: What is the present status of the reassessment of the review or report on Fundy tidal power which was tabled in this House in 1969?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been following the events he would know that the first step of phase one has been completed and that a report has been made. Three or possibly four sites have been identified, from over some 30 sites, as being the best bet, which is I think all I can say at the present time. The work is now going on in respect of those four sites to establish the economic viability of those sites. As the hon. member knows the question is not so much a technical one but is far more an economic and environmental one.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of the progress of this development since the tides of the Bay of Fundy wash twice a day against my constituency. I should like to ask if the minister is going to expedite or activate a decision in this regard since we have been waiting for seven years now in which time man has gone to the moon and the James Bay project is off the drawing board and almost in production. When can we expect the next stage? Is the minister doing anything to activate the situation in view of the very serious energy crisis in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. member did not listen to my last answer. If he had he would have heard that stage one of phase one has been completed and we have now moved on to the second stage which has to do with determining the economic viability of those four sites. That work should be completed I hope very early next year. That then becomes a second decision point. The decision will then be as to whether or not very much more substantial resources, in the tens of millions of dollars perhaps, will have to be spent on engineering work for a specific site.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO DESIGNATE TWO DAYS FOR DEBATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. First, I want to say that I am enthusiastic in following him in his peregrinations since the assumption of the portfolio. I shall not be able to ask all the questions I would like to ask because it would take quite a while. I ask him first whether he will do that which was done under the administration of Mr. King, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Pearson and myself whereby a couple of days would be set aside by the government, not as opposition days but as days set aside by the government, for the discussion of external affairs because so far as members of this House are concerned they know absolutely nothing concerning what the government is doing in connection with the problems affecting the peace of the world.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I could interpret that question as having been somewhat argumentative in tone. In so far as giving the House an opportunity I, of course, would be glad to do that.

It seems to me, however, that in the eras to which he referred of the former prime ministers, including himself, there were not in fact designated opposition days to the extent there are now. If the opposition so wishes they can put down that subject or there may be other forums. But let me assure the hon. member that I would be glad to answer whatever question he or other members might have.

SOVIET UNION—ALLEGED CRUELTY AGAINST PEOPLE OF UKRAINE—DISCUSSION BETWEEN MINISTER AND MR. GROMYKO

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my first question is, when he was in Moscow and met with Mr. Gromyko is it a fact that he raised the question of the diabolical cruelty being perpetrated by the U.S.S.R. against captive peoples in the Ukraine and also in the Baltic States. When he raised the question in general terms did Mr. Gromyko say to him, "Now, what is your next question".

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. member would not expect me to reveal precisely the nature of these conversations. Perhaps I should answer him by saying, "What is your next question", but I will not do that.

• (1430)

I did not bring up, in reference to the first part of the Right Hon. member's question, the specific matter of the Ukraine, etc. I did talk about this matter in terms of the follow on to the Helinski Declaration and expressed the view that we hope these matters can be discussed thoroughly at the conference in Belgrade which is to take place in 1977. I do not think I left any doubt in the foreign minister's mind as to what the Canadian government's position is. On the precise aspect of the question, namely the reunification of families, I can assure the Right Hon. member and the House that I made the strongest possible representations in this connection to the best of my knowledge and capability in the language. I do not think I left any doubts as to our view that unification should take place and that it was deeply regrettable that the Soviet Union was not prepared to move, as we asked them to do repeatedly on this question. While not quoting exactly the response of the Soviet foreign minister, I can say that it came reasonably close to what was described by the Right Hon. member.

SOVIET UNION—DISCUSSION BETWEEN MINISTER AND MR. GROMYKO CONCERNING RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I am glad to have that admission because it was widely rumoured around the world that Canada was simply shoved aside in the face of responsible questions and stands taken by the minister. Did the minister bring out with the representative of the U.S.S.R. the fact that in the Baltic states a policy is now being followed by the U.S.S.R. of destroying Christian churches, demolishing them and refusing permission to the people of those countries to have their own churches and to worship their God as they will?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not, I repeat, bring up these matters in precisely those terms. I am sure that the Right Hon. member will understand that I was not privy to his vernacular on the occasion. But I repeat that I have no problem in saying that I re-emphasize now our insistence that the meetings in Belgrade following the Helinski conference embrace all of these matters regarding both human rights and a greater and more free exchange of people, their objectives and their right to carry out their own lifestyle and their own wishes.

POSSIBILITY OF TREATY ENABLING CANADIAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO TO BE REPATRIATED TO SERVE SENTENCES IN CANADA

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government considering or will it consider negotiating, as, I understand, the United States is with the government of Mexico, a treaty which would have as its purpose the voluntary repatriation of prisoners from the jails of one country back to their own country to serve any sentence?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since coming to the House today I have been advised of a report that the United States—and, I believe, it was also suggested that Canada—was engaged in this kind of negotiation with Mexico. Personally, I am not aware of it. The principle sounds one that we could accept. We will make further inquiries and advise the hon. member in the House.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS FOR MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport who is also in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that as of last weekend there was a shortage of some 4,800 box cars for grain movement in the Prairie provinces, 3,100 of them on CP tracks and most of them in Alberta, 900 short in Saskatchewan on CP tracks, and many country elevators congested, is the minister aware of this matter? Has he taken it up with the railways, and what action are they taking to increase the supply of cars for grain movement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the report I had the falling behind of loading, which is temporary and not at all serious in the over-all program, the indication was that particular track and bridge problems were the cause. Therefore, the situation can be remedied as soon as those problems are corrected.

Mr. Benjamin: As a consequence of this matter, since there are four ships loading in Vancouver, eight to arrive by the end of this week and six more the following week and not sufficient cars on hand—Thunder Bay does not have a sufficient number of cars on hand to warrant unloadings on the weekends and nothing is happening at Prince Rupert—in fact, there is available space for over 1 million bushels in Prince Rupert and no cars en route—can the minister tell the House whether or not he has requested the railways to arrange an increased supply of box cars and hopper cars for grain movement, supplied at the taxpayers expense, in order to meet what will likely be a difficult situation for grain loadings at those terminals?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously missed the point of the earlier answer. It is not a question of the shortage of cars; it is a question of the speed with which they are turned around, given the track and bridge condition.

An hon. Member: What tracks, what bridges?

Mr. Lang: While the hon. member for Calgary North does not seem to know it, if bridges are out, cars do not move very quickly across them, and obviously they have a problem. I indicated that this matter is of concern, but essentially it is in hand. There is a high volume of stocks in Vancouver and, as the hon. member may know, there have been very few ships waiting for the last eight or ten months. As a result, we have not heard from him on the subject. With these developments, we are glad to hear from him again.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the minister said there are some bridges out, but he did not say where the cars are. The bridges are not out on all lines. I would like to ask the minister what provisions have been made. There are adequate stocks in Vancouver for loading the ships arriving in the coming week, but there are not adequate stocks for six more ships arriving in the following week. What action is he taking to see that there are sufficient carloads of grain arriving to allow elevator terminals to put on ships on the weekend. Only three terminals will be working this weekend in Thunder Bay, for example, and nothing is happening in Prince Rupert. All the grain companies are complaining that they do not have enough cars on hand.

Mr. Lang: I can assure the hon. member that I have full confidence in the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to handle the situation. I know that they are fully on top of the situation and will overcome the current temporary difficulties as they did when a much more serious problem arose with a bridge in New Westminster. If the Canadian Wheat Board feel they need my assistance, they will let me know it. They have not done so until this time, so I ask the hon. member to share my confidence in the Canadian Wheat Board.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON NOVA SCOTIA'S PROPOSAL FOR AID WITH COST OF ELECTRICITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to his policy toward the Atlantic provinces, not long-term solutions but rather whether he really intends to take any action with respect to the immediate problem facing the people there of a 65 per cent increase in rates. Is he deliberately pursuing a secretive and conspiratorial attitude toward this subject, or he is now prepared to tell me and the members of the House whether the government will come up with a decision with respect to the equally highly secret and conspiratorial proposition put before the minister and the government by the government of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I indicated the other day that we hope to make a decision before the end of the year. May I go on to say that there is nothing secret or conspiratorial about this matter, unless it be on your side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gillespie: It is not at all clear to me where your leader stands on oil prices. I believe he would have been for higher prices. I can understand your anxieties in this respect—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the minister a very simple question. I would like to believe he is an honest man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Certainly he is simple.

Mr. Stanfield: If there is nothing secret or conspiratorial about the proposal put forward by the government of Nova Scotia, which the minister insists that he and the government of Canada are considering and which, frankly, I do not believe they are seriously considering, why will the minister not say what it is that the government is pretending to consider?

● (1440)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: I have said repeatedly that we are quite prepared to make it public if the premier of Nova Scotia agrees. It was his document. It was his proposal made to us. I ask the hon. member to be open and to reveal his secret conspiratorial position with respect to prices.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are a wind tunnel.

Mr. Stanfield: I think we can all agree now that the suggestion I made about conspiracy and secretiveness was fully justified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the minister whether he is prepared to use the last opportunity he has to be credible on this subject in the Atlantic provinces and in Canada by coming clean and dealing openly and honestly with this proposition.

Mr. Gillespie: I put it to the hon. member that the letter was written to the government in confidence, and before the government releases that document, it should get the agreement of the person who wrote it. That is the position the government has taken. We have not been able to secure his agreement.

RESEARCH ON ALTERNATIVE SOURCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is now apparent that the government is not intending to implement the recommendations of its own task force of last year, nor does it have any intention of following up the commitment made in the throne speech to channel more money into research and development of exotic energy sources. Can the minister tell the House whether this government has any intention of going into partnership with the provinces and bringing on stream conversion plants for biomass and industrial wastes, things for which technology is already known, but for which some stimulation from the federal government is needed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are already involved in a number of shared-cost programs with the provinces, and it is quite incorrect for the hon. member to state that we are not interested in increasing our energy research and development expenditures. We have made it quite clear—and I think I have made it quite clear in answer to the first and second questions today—that we would be doing so.

Mr. Oberle: Could the minister tell us how much money is in the budget this year for research and development? The information we have indicates that the government is not spending any money at all in this field, except for a few minor demonstration projects.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question might properly be asked in some other way. The hon. member for South Western Nova.

* * *

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING FIFTY-MILE ZONE FOR BOATS UNDER ONE HUNDRED FEET IN LENGTH

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the minister's statement yesterday that at present he is considering fish plans for 1977, and in view of his action in the gulf, will he now consider establishing perhaps a 50-mile limit off the coast of Nova Scotia in which only boats under 100 feet could fish, since boats over 100 feet will be able to go further once we have established the 200-mile limit?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not fully agree with the hon. member's association of the decision to remove large vessels from the gulf with the proposal she is making. This proposal has been made by some fishermen's organizations. The implications of it are really quite serious, and I would be very hesitant to substitute disagreements between the provinces and groups of fishermen for those we have started to sort out with the international community.

* * *

HARBOURS

ALLEGED APPOINTMENT OF MR. WOODALL TO IMPLEMENT NEW PORTS POLICY—BASIS FOR DELEGATING AUTHORITY TO PORT CHAIRMEN

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has Michael Woodall been hired, effective November 1, to implement the new ports policy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with any such development. There were certain other people involved in the implementation of the ports policy the last time I looked, but I will check for the hon. member.

Mr. Fairweather: Under what legislation have the various port authority chairmen been delegated authority by the National Harbours Board effective January 1, 1977? The minister will recall that such a delegation was ruled out by his ministry about two years ago.

Mr. Lang: Certain delegation of authority has taken place with regard to a number of ports in Canada over the last couple of years, notably Vancouver and Montreal, and this pattern with the same authority is being employed in other ports.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

DANGER POSED BY TANKER IN STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment.

I would like to ask him if he was made aware of the case of the tanker White Peony, loaded with 24.5 million gallons of crude oil, which was found during last weekend roaming in the Juan de Fuca strait, looking for a pilot, navigating in Canada-

[Miss Campbell (South Western Nova).]

American waters and therefore endangering other ships plying the same commercial fishing and sporting waters?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, maybe I did not quite understand what the question was about, but I can make inquiries and inform the hon. member tomorrow. If it is related to pilots, I think it is under the responsibility of the Department of Transport.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

RESTRICTION OF IMPORTS OF BEEF AND VEAL—CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR PERIOD BEYOND JANUARY 1, 1977

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Does the minister have a contingency plan for the restriction of imports of offshore beef and veal for the period beyond January 1, 1977, and if so, what is the nature and duration of this plan?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I would call it a contingency plan at all because it depends on negotiations between Australia and New Zealand and Canada and the United States, and it also depends on what the United States might do. However, we are prepared to act with a program of our own in case they may do one of many different things.

Mr. Malone: In order that there might be some security put back into the beef market in Canada, I wonder if the minister can tell us if he has any plan to stabilize the market system of this country, and by that I do not mean supply-management.

Mr. Whelan: To put beef marketing into its proper perspective there has to be some supply-management, no matter whether it happens to be a Whelan plan or a President Ford plan or anything else.

An hon. Member: You are both going the same way.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOVIET UNION—INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY MINISTER FOR RELEASE OF GEORGI VINS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, following my motion under Standing Order 43 today and the questions of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I would like to ask the minister whether any specific representations were made by him or any other Canadian government officials during the visit to the U.S.S.R. that prisoners of conscience, especially prisoners such as Georgi Vins, about whom the minister received numerous representations might be released and allowed to practice their faith in freedom?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check precisely on the name the hon. member gave in order to know whether that name was included on a list. However, I can tell the hon. member that following my meetings in the Soviet Union the Canadian ambassador in Moscow was instructed by me to convey to Soviet officials specific representations, some of which had been received by me while I was in the Soviet Union and others which had come prior to my departure. I think I am safe in assuring the hon. member that if there were individual representations, these have been conveyed to officials of the Soviet government by now.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

OBJECTION TO DOCUMENTARY ON FRENCH CULTURE IN VILLAGE OF PAINCOURT

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State, and it relates to a documentary on French culture in the village of Paincourt, which appeared on CBET Windsor, channel 9 during the early part of the evening on Monday, October 26. The major part of that documentary involved the showing of a hotel and a nude stripper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1450)

Mr. Holmes: Mr. Speaker, as a member of the village and resident of that particular township familiar with the culture and traditions of the village, I ask the minister if he will make a thorough investigation of that obviously unbalanced program which was an insult, Sir, to all the residents of that area. Will he insist upon a public apology being made to the citizens of Paincourt and the residents of the township.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member on living in such a splendid community. I regret to say that I was unaware of the documentary and thus did not have a chance to see it, but I shall be pleased to look into the matter with extremely perceptive attention.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DECENTRALIZATION—REQUEST FOR NAME OF DEPARTMENT WHICH MIGHT BE MOVED TO CAPE BRETON

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Acting Prime Minister concerns representations I made over a long period to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, when he was President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Supply and Services and the previous Minister of National Revenue, in the form of letters, questions in the House and personal conversations with regard to decentralization. Is the Acting Prime Minister now in the position or will he be in the position shortly to announce what department of government will be transferred to Cape Breton Island, an area of chronic unemployment where, unfortunately, as the minister knows, the present unemployment rate is running at between 25 per cent and 30 per cent? May I ask the minister if he is still sending diplomatic notes to his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on this subject?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, now he is in the position to send direct notes.

Mr. Clark: But does he read them?

POSSIBILITY DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES TRANSFERRED TO CAPE BRETON

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Acting Prime Minister's not being more interested. May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him if negotiations are going on at the moment, as was suggested yesterday or the day before by the Premier of Nova Scotia, for the possible transfer of the Department of Fisheries to Sydney, Cape Breton Island?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel at all with the choice of the site. As to the suggestion, I must confess it is a surprise to me.

* * *

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RESPONSIBILITIES GIVEN TO MEMBER FOR ST. BONIFACE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have been attempting to ask a question of our newest cabinet minister since his swearing in yesterday morning, but have not seen him in his seat for more than a couple of minutes. Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the newly appointed Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: You'll have to say more than no, Joe.

Mr. Lawrence: I ask the minister, what special, extra responsibilities has he been given by the Prime Minister which would justify the extra burden his elevation to the cabinet imposes on the taxpayers of this country?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Say no, Joe.

Mr. Fairweather: Speak up, Joe.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should like to give the hon. member an appropriate answer by telling him, first, that one of my responsibilities will be to represent the people of Manitoba to the best of my ability.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I look forward to doing that. In a lighter vein, I can tell the hon. member that I often have secret meetings with the chief Whip of the opposition. That is a military secret, and I will not tell him anything more about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED PRORATA PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF VETERANS WHOSE PENSIONS LESS THAN FORTY-EIGHT PER CENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs? Since Remembrance Day is only a week away, will the minister consider, in honour of that day, the introduction of legislation to provide prorata pensions for widows of veterans where the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is under consideration by the government, as is other legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister do his best to persuade the government to permit him to make a statement of policy on this matter before Remembrance Day?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I will take that under consideration.

* * *

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

NAME OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR AGENCY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The other day, as reported in Hansard, in the absence of the Acting Prime Minister and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs the Prime Minister indicated that the location of the responsibility for CIDA was a matter for discussion between the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as House leader and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister can advise the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the interjections from the other side will last long enough to get the minister beyond the question period. I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to report upon the conclusion of the discussion between himself and the Secretary of State for External Affairs and whether he can tell us which minister will continue to be responsible for CIDA in this House. If the minister cannot tell us, perhaps he would like us to consult with the Clerk of the Privy Council.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, the situation has not changed since the question was answered by myself last week and on Monday of this week by the Prime Minister. The situation is as described by both of us. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have not had the chance to resume our discussions since his arrival back from his very successful trip to Europe.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House when he expects to be on speaking terms again with his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

An hon. Member: Cheap shot!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —and when the House and country may tell which minister is going to be responsible for reporting in this House on CIDA?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry; I did not hear the question of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Ask Schumacher.

Mr. Clark: I apologize to the government House leader for the conduct of his caucus.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The difficulty is that I was unable, as well, to hear the Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps he would ask his question.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the government House leader will be able to get his caucus under control fairly soon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: May I ask when the Acting Prime Minister expects the House and country to be advised on who is going to be responsible for reporting to parliament on the activities of CIDA?

● (1500)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is responsible for reporting to the House on CIDA. If and when that situation changes, the House will be notified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In prefacing my usual business question today, I wish to say that the official opposition is delighted with the announcement that the Acting Prime Minister made today with regard to the introduction of the Independence of Parliament Act, particularly in view of the fact that government members rejected a motion which would have allowed a study of this subject earlier in the week, the motion having been made by a member of the official opposition.

Dealing with the matter of the legislative program, I ask the House leader to inform the House of the business that he contemplates for the balance of this week and perhaps next week. Is the House leader prepared to make a statement today with regard to the arrangements concerning Remembrance Day, and with respect to Friday, November 12? There have been some discussions on that. In addition, will he designate on the order paper the opposition days which he and I have discussed and which I understand are in order, subject to certain caveats which he wishes to make.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be able to deal with all the points raised by the hon. member. On the first question with regard to the regular business of the House, we will continue with the borrowers and depositors act. If it is necessary to complete the business of a particular day, we will call the Currency and Exchange Act and the Canada Land Surveys Act. However, at the beginning of the next full day I will call the government expenditure restraint bill. On Tuesday next it is my intention to have an allotted day. For planning purposes, I wish to indicate to the House that the following are proposed as allotted days in addition to November 9: November 18, November 26, December 1 and December 9.

With regard to the sittings of the House next week, as hon. members know, Thursday of next week is Remembrance Day and is, accordingly, a day when members are in their constituencies. In order to make the proper arrangements for next week, it is my proposal that we not sit on the Friday following Remembrance Day and, in order to pick up some time, that we sit for an extra two hours on Tuesday, November 16. If these arrangements are agreeable to hon. members I am ready to propose a motion that will put them into effect. I shall read the motion and then ask for consent. I propose to move:

That when the House adjourns on November 10, 1976, it shall stand adjourned to November 15, 1976; and that the House shall sit from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on November 16, 1976, for the purpose of considering government business.

If I have consent, I will move that motion.

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Privy Council seeks the consent of the House to put the motion at the present time. Does he have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), moves:

That when the House adjourns on November 10, 1976, it shall stand adjourned to November 15, 1976; and that the House shall sit from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on November 16, 1976, for the purpose of considering government business.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. While we are discussing future business of the House, may I ask the House leader how soon we may expect the reintroduction of the human rights bill which was before us but not considered in the last session. Can he say when that bill will be introduced, and whether the provisions in it to provide equality between men and women will be improved?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope to have first reading of that bill within the next week or two. I cannot give the hon. member specific information about the various provisions of the bill, but I believe he will find it an improved bill over the bill of last session.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, can the House leader advise when we will have the introduction and second reading of Bill C-11, to amend the Pension Act? It is a very simple bill to create a deputy minister of the Pension Review Board.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am ready to call that bill at any moment if we can get agreement on how to deal with it. We could interrupt the normal business which I have announced, at a particular time—after consultation with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald)—to give it second reading.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister did not mention the harbours and ports legislation among the list of priorities. Is he contemplating early action with regard to that? It is important in terms of arrangements that I must make.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If, for example, we succeed in concluding the bill presently before the House, the borrowers and depositors act, we could then proceed to the currency exchange, fishing and recreational harbours and land surveys bills. However, as I indicated, if we are beginning a full day with a new item tomorrow, the new item I would call would be the expenditure restraint bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) on a point of order.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, could the government leader tell the House when he is going to introduce a bill on the tax exemption under registered retirement savings plans, allowing a private company owner to claim a $3,500 deduction instead of $2,500.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will be proceeding with the income tax bill flowing from the budget. However, I am not contemplating any new budgetary provisions beyond those that were announced by the Minister of Finance. It appears that the proposal put forward by the hon. member is a matter for announcement in the budget.

* * *

● (1510)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

First report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments—(Mr. McCleave).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT PLEBISCITE ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR NATIONAL PLEBISCITE ON ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-377, to provide for a national plebiscite on the abolition of capital punishment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give the people of Canada the chance to make their views known with regard to a decision taken in this House which was unacceptable to a majority of Canadians.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1977

MEASURE TO REINSTATE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-378, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the reinstatement of capital punishment.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

PETITION RELATING TO TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67, I hereby present a petition relating to the circumstances surrounding and leading to the terms and conditions of the Terrasses de la Chaudière project in the national capital region. The petitioners pray that this honourable House inquire into such matters and provide such remedy as this honourable House may determine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 38, 50, 115, 176, 370, 580, 611, 683, 712 and 813.

[Text]

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO JAMAICA—1976 EASTER VACATION

Question No. 38—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 5,339 of the First Session of the 30th Parliament, which stated in part that the Prime Minister travelled to and from Jamaica on his 1976 Easter vacation by commercial aircraft, does this represent a change in the previous policy of the Prime Minister to use government owned aircraft for pleasure and political trips and, if so (a) what are the reasons for this change (b) on what date was it decided (c) will the Prime Minister continue to use commercial aircraft for pleasure and political trips?

2. Were air fares of persons accompanying the Prime Minister paid for by the taxpayer and, if so, what are their names and job designations?

3. Did any person including the Prime Minister travel to and from Jamaica using a free pass on the Air Canada flight involved and, if so, what is the name and job designation of each person who was provided with free transportation?

4. Did a member of the RCMP or any other government employee accompany the Prime Minister and, if so, what are their names and job designations and who paid their air fare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. See line 44, part 4 of reply to Question 69, Hansard 237, page 10581, dated February 3, 1976.

2. See reply to Question 5339, Hansard 294, page 13153, dated May 4, 1976.

3. The Prime Minister and family (see replies to Questions 2315, Hansard 157, page 6918 of June 19, 1975 and 2315 (Supplementary), Hansard 174, page 7718 of July 18, 1975.

4. A member of the RCMP—fare paid by the RCMP (see lines 21 to 24, part 4 of reply to Question 69).

OIL SPILL IN ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, WEST OF BROCKVILLE, ONTARIO

Question No. 115—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On or about August 21 and 22, 1976, was there a second oil spill in the St. Lawrence River, west of Brockville, Ontario and, if so (a) what are the results of any investigations made by the Department of Transport (b) what is the identity of the vessel (c) what steps have or will be taken to deal with the owner of the vessel (d) what has been or what is the total estimated cost for cleaning up the spill by the Department of Transport?

2. (a) What is the maximum penalty applicable for convictions of an offence of this kind (b) is the government giving consideration to raising the penalty and, if so, what penalty is being considered and on what date will action be taken?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes (a) The United States Coast Guard conducted the investigation but could not identify the ship. (b) unknown; (c) the owner cannot be identified. (d) $32,500.

2. (a) $100,000, (b) The government is not giving consideration to raising the penalty.

TRANSPORT—COST ESTIMATES, JACQUES CARTIER AND RODNEY TERMINALS

Question No. 176—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 5,503 of the First Session of the 30th Parliament, is there an allocation of cost for the takeover of quays and back-up land (excluding sheds) in the cost estimates for Jacques Cartier Terminal and, if not, for what reason?

2. (a) What is the government's best estimate of the value of quays and back-up area (excluding sheds) incorporated in Jacques Cartier Terminal (b) how do these estimates compare with those for Rodney Terminal at St. John, N.B. (c) was the cost of existing quays and back-up area included in the St. John estimates?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Cost estimates for budget purposes included direct construction costs only. Project costs included an allocation of cost for the takeover of quays and back-up land.

2. (a) Estimated value of pre-existing quays is $1,077,371. (b) The net book value of quays which were destroyed to permit construction of Rodney Terminal was $2.3 million. The estimated value of existing land and waterlot incorporated in the terminal was $3.1 million. (c) No, only construction costs were included in cost estimates used for budget purposes.

ART BANK SELECTION COMMITTEE

Question No. 580—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Who comprises the Selection Committee for the Art Bank that is sponsored by the Canada Council?

2. Is there any other government agency that purchases art for the government and, if so, what is the name of the committee or committees and who serves on them?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: 1. Since its inception, 144 persons, chosen mainly among artists but also including curators and critics have served on selection committees of the Art Bank and the list for 1975-76 was as follows: Kim Andrews (Toronto); Ted Bieler (Toronto); Zbigniew Blazege (Toronto); Ronald Bloore (Toronto, Ottawa, Oakville, Brampton, Claremont); George Bogardi (Ottawa); Daid Bolduc (Vancouver, Victoria, Ottawa); Jim Borcoman (Ottawa); Robert Bourdeau (Ottawa); John Boyle (Ottawa, Guelph, Georgetown, Stratford, Hamilton); Janice Campbell (Toronto); Robin Collyer (Toronto); Ulysse Comtois (Montréal); Greg Curnoe (Ottawa); Ihor Dmytruk (Edmonton); Paterson Ewen (Ottawa); Bill Ewing (Montréal, Ottawa); Joe Fafard (Ottawa); Bruce Ferguson (Ottawa); Brian Fisher (Ottawa); Robert Frank (Ottawa); Vera Frenkel (Toronto); Charles Gagnon (Montréal, Ottawa, Peterborough, Kingston, Tamworth, Havelock, Glenburnie); Yves Gaucher (Montréal, Québec); Pierre Gaudard (Ottawa, Montréal); Tom Gibson (Ottawa); Ted Godwin (Ottawa); John Greer (St-Jean, Sackville, Halifax, Charlottetown, Moncton, Saint-Jean, Fredericton); Donald Harvey (Victoria); Dave Heath (Ottawa); Terence Heath (Saskatoon); Jules Heller (Toronto); Jacques Hurtubise (Montréal); Gershon Iskowitz (Toronto); William Kirby (Winnipeg); Nobuo Kubota (Toronto); Ken Lochhead (Ottawa); Joan Lowndes (Vancouver, Victoria); Robin Mackenzie (Toronto); Jean McEwen (Montréal, Ottawa, St-Jean, Halifax, Sackville, Charlottetown, Moncton, Saint-Jean, Fredericton); Guido Molinari (Ottawa); Ron Moppett (Calgary); Michael Morris (Ottawa); Doug Morton (Toronto); Ken Morton (Vancouver); Robert Murray (New York); Ronald Nasgaard (Toronto); Jean Noël (Montréal); Bruce O'Neil (Banff); Chantal Pombriand (Montréal); David Rabinowitch (New York); Royden Rabinowitch (Ottawa); Pnina Rajinsky (Ottawa); Gordon Rayner (Toronto, London, St. Catharines, West Lorne, St. Thomas, New York); Don Reichert (Winnipeg, Toronto, Oakville, Brampton, Claremont); Suzanne Rivard-Lemoyne (Ottawa); Henry Saxe (London, St. Catharines, West Lorne, St. Thomas, Guelph, Georgetown, Stratford, Hamilton); Michael Schreier (Ottawa); Jack (Shadbolt (Vancouver)); Vincent Sharp (Ottawa); Gordon Smith (Ottawa, Vancouver); Gabor Szilazi (Ottawa); Takao Tanabe (Calgary); Sam Tata (Montréal); Eugene Tellez (Toronto); Normand Thériault (Montréal); Gilles Toupin (Ottawa, Montréal); Claude Tousignant (Montréal, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, Banff); Serge Tousignant (Ottawa); Tony Urquhart (Ottawa); Roger Vilder (Montréal, Kingston, Peterborough, Tamworth, Havelock, Glenburnie, Ottawa); Irene Whittome (Montréal, Québec, Ottawa); Shirley Wiitasalo (Toronto); Karen Wilkin (Edmonton); Dennis Young (Ottawa).

I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows: 2. The National Museums of Canada purchases art for the national collections of the Corporation. Acquisitions are made on the recommendation of the Director of the appropriate museum for the approval by the Board of Trustees of the Corporation and in special circumstances of the Minister and Treasury Board.

Order Paper Questions

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—REGIONAL OFFICES

Question No. 611—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. (a) How many regional offices are maintained by the Ministry of Science and Technology (b) where is each located (c) for what area is each responsible?

2. On what date was each established and with how many personnel?

3. What is the present personnel strength of each office?

4. In addition to regional offices, are district or other sub-offices maintained and, if so (a) in what locations (b) how many?

5. Are the duties performed by those manning the regional and/or district offices line functions, in the chain of command from Ottawa to the operator in the field, or do they have other functions to perform and, if so, what are such functions?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is concerned: Nil return.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 683—Mr. McKinnon:

What was the standing of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account on (a) October 1, 1975 (b) October 1, 1976?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) The standing of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account on October 1, 1975 and on October 1, 1976 follows:

Standing of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account

	October 1, 1975	October 1, 1976
Current contributions	781,620,196.69	835,395,192.26
Arrears of contributions	48,237,174.76	49,393,988.50
Transfer from other funds	9,501,653.28	10,988,738.63
Interest	1,026,676,988.18	1,113,678,502.86
Government contributions	1,412,648,692.70	1,512,995,374.42
Unclaimed accounts	457,234.92	467,751.64
Undelivered cheques	147,394.33	151,513.72
Repayments of annuity (Bill C-52)	—	287,514.88
Sub Total	3,279,289,334.86	3,523,358,576.91
Less:
Payments of Annuities and Annual Allowances	960,227,179.86	1,118,935,109.51
Payments of Cash Termination Allowances and Returns of contributions	174,758,018.88	180,391,466.40
Payments of Interest on Returns of Contributions	—	137,434.77
Transfers to other Pension Funds	3,699,394.89	4,842,576.99
Payments of Estate Tax and Succession Duties	6,708.87	6,708.87
Sub Total	1,138,691,302.50	1,304,313,296.54
Total	2,140,598,032.36	2,219,045,280.37
Actuarial Account
Actuarial Liability Contributions	3,296,919,000.00	3,310,399,000.00
Interest to date	889,207,115.63	1,059,180,622.29
Total	4,186,126,115.63	4,369,579,622.29
Grand Total	6,326,724,147.99	6,588,624,902.66

[Mr. Roberts.]

PARKS CANADA SCHOLARSHIPS PROGRAM

Question No. 712—Mr. Marshall:

1. Were applications received from Newfoundland under Parks Canada $4,000 Scholarships Programme to assist graduate students in the pursuit of studies related to the conservation, management and interpretation of the natural and historic resources of Canada?

2. Were applications received from Newfoundland under the Scholarship Programme for undergraduates of Indian and Inuit origin to increase the opportunities for employment of native people in areas of environmental and historical conservation and interpretation, outdoor recreation and the natural sciences?

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No applications were received from Newfoundland under the Parks Canada Graduate Scholarships Program for 1976-77.

2. No applications were received from Newfoundland under the Parks Canada undergraduate Scholarship Program 1976-77 for registered Indians and inuit. This was searched both by province of permanent residence and by university attended.

ACTING MINISTERS AND SECOND ACTING MINISTERS

Question No. 813—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

What are the names of the (a) acting ministers (b) second acting ministers of each department of the government?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): P.C. 1976-2303. Certified to be a true copy of a Minute of a Meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the September 20, 1976. The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise: 1. That in the absence from Ottawa of the Prime Minister or in the event of his being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the next Senior Minister who is in Ottawa, and is able to perform the functions of the Office of Prime Minister, be authorized to act for the Prime Minister;

2. That in the absence from Ottawa of a Minister whose name is set out in Column II of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

3. That in the absence from Ottawa of the Ministers named in Columns II and III of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of both of those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

4. That in the absence from Ottawa of the Ministers named in Columns II, III and IV of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of all those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Prime Minister or, if the Prime Minister is absent from Ottawa or unable to perform the functions of his Office, the next Senior Minister who is in Ottawa be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

5. That where an Office set out in Column I of an item of the Schedule to this Minute is vacant, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item; and

6. That where an Office set out in Column I of an item of the Schedule to this Minute is vacant, in the absence from Ottawa of the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of the Office set out in Column I of that item, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item.

P.C. 1976-2303
List of Acting Ministers

	Column I	Column II	Column III	Column IV
	Office	Name	Acting Minister	Second acting Minister
1.	Agriculture	Mr. E. F. Whelan	Mr. D. J. MacDonald	Mr. O. E. Lang
2.	Communications	Mrs. J. Sauvé	Mr. A. W. Gillespie	Mr. J. H Faulkner
3.	Consumer and Corporate Affairs	Mr. A. C. Abbott	Mr. M. Lalonde	Miss M. Bégin
4.	Energy, Mines and Resources	Mr. A. W. Gillespie	Mr. D. S. Macdonald	Mr. D. C. Jamieson
5.	External Affairs	Mr. D. C. Jamieson	Mr. A. J. MacEachen	Mr. D.S. Macdonald
6.	Finance	Mr. D. S. Macdonald	Mr. O. E. Lang	Mr. A. C. Abbott
7.	Fisheries and the Environment	Mr. R. LeBlanc	Mr. M. Lessard	Mr. E. F. Whelan
8.	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	Mr. W. W. Allmand	Mr. J. J. Buchanan	Mr. J. Chrétien
9.	Industry, Trade and Commerce	Mr. J. Chrétien	Mr. L. S. Marchand	Mr. R. K. Andras
10.	Justice and Attorney General	Mr. S. R. Basford	Mr. F. Fox	Mr. W. W. Allmand
11.	Labour	Mr. J. C. Munro	Mr. J. Roberts	Mr. J.-P. Goyer
12.	Manpower and Immigration	Mr. J. S. G. Cullen	Mr. R. K. Andras	Mr. M. Lalonde
13.	National Defence	Mr. J. Richardson	Mr. B. J. Danson	Mr. A. J. MacEachen
14.	National Health and Welfare	Mr. M. Lalonde	Mrs. I. Campagnolo	Mrs. J. Sauvé
15.	National Revenue	Miss M. Bégin	Mr. J. S. G. Cullen	Mr. J.-J. Blais
16.	Post Office	Mr. J.-J. Blais	Mr. A. C. Abbott	Mr. J. C. Munro
17.	Privy Council	Mr. A. J. MacEachen	Mr. J.-J. Blais	Mr. J. S. G. Cullen
18.	Public Works	Mr. J. J. Buchanan	Mr. J.-P. Goyer	Mr. M. Lessard
19.	Regional Economic Expansion	Mr. M. Lessard	Mr. R. LeBlanc	Mr. D. J. MacDonald
20.	Science and Technology	Mr. J. H. Faulkner	Mrs. J. Sauvé	Mr. A. W. Gillespie
21.	Secretary of State	Mr. J. Roberts	Mr. J. H. Faulkner	Mr. F. Fox
22.	Solicitor General	Mr. F. Fox	Mr. W. W. Allmand	Mr. S. R. Basford
23.	Supply and Services	Mr. J.-P. Goyer	Mr. J. Richardson	Mr. B. J. Danson
24.	Transport	Mr. O. E. Lang	Mr. S. R. Basford	Mr. R. LeBlanc
25.	Treasury Board	Mr. R. K. Andras	Mr. J. Chrétien	Mr. J. J. Buchanan
26.	Urban Affairs	Mr. B. J. Danson	Miss M. Bégin	Mr. J. Richardson
27.	Veterans Affairs	Mr. D. J. MacDonald	Mr. E. F. Whelan	Mr. J. Roberts

P.C. 1976-2559. Certified to be a true copy of a Minute of a Meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the October 18, 1976. The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise that Order in Council P.C. 1976-2303 of September 20, 1976, which appointed Acting Ministers, be hereby amended by deleting items 23 and 26 from the Schedule thereto and substituting therefor the following:

Order Paper Questions

Column I	Column II	Column III	Column IV
Office	Name	Acting Minister	Second Acting Minister
"23. Supply and Services	Mr. J.-P. Goyer	Mr. J. H. Faulkner	Mr. B. J. Danson"
"26. Urban Affairs	Mr. B. J. Danson	Miss M. Bégin	Mrs. I. Campagnolo"

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 50 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I understand this is an answer to a question put by the hon. member for Leeds. Could the parliamentary secretary tell us the reason for this request?

Mr. Goodale: The document has just been sent to the table. It is voluminous. The reason for answering the question in this fashion is simply the length of the answer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Agreed.

[Text]

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Question No. 50—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many times since becoming a member of the Cabinet has the Minister of Transport personally made use of government aircraft and, in each case, what was the (a) purpose (b) point of departure and destination (c) type of aircraft used (d) cost to the taxpayer?

2. What was the total cost to the taxpayer of all such trips?

3. Which trips were for personal and political business?

Return tabled.

STARRED QUESTION

[Text]

*LRPA—PAYMENTS TO LOCKHEED UP TO OCTOBER 1, 1976

Question No. 370—Mr. McKinnon:

How much money has the government paid to Lockheed on the LRPA contract up to October 1, 1976, including the monies paid under the penalty clause of the first contract?

[English]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): On behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence, I should like to provide an answer to this question. Up to October 1, 1976, $20,621,000 (U.S.) which amounts to $20,248,000 Canadian funds has been paid to Lockheed in connection with all phases of the Long Range Patrol Aircraft CP-140 Aurora program. No moneys were paid or are due as a result of the penalty clauses in the P-3 LRPA contract.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE INTEREST ON JUDGMENT DEBTS AND AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott that Bill C-16, to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in continuing the debate on Bill C-16 let me say at once that since the bill was introduced a few days ago there has been considerable criticism of the poor manner in which this measure has been drafted. Consumers and lenders have listed complaints with regard to the proposals before us. They have drawn attention to inequities in those proposals. Once again we are being asked to deal with legislation which has been drafted in the absence of proper consultation with the borrowers and the lenders organizations.

The government would like us to hasten the debate on the various bills which are brought forward, but there is no way in which we in the opposition will agree merely to rubber-stamp pieces of legislation which have not been properly drafted and with respect to which the legitimate interests of those concerned have not been taken into account. The Canadian Bankers Association considers it uncomplimentary to banks to have them and other legitimate financial institutions lumped together with loan sharks under the borrowers protection bill. This matter was mentioned yesterday.

Loan-sharking, Mr. Speaker, has nothing to do with the bill before us. Loan sharks form part of the criminal element and should be dealt with by the police. Mr. Frazee, who is the executive vice-president and chief general manager of the Royal Bank of Canada, feels the government, in seeking to achieve the commendable object of ensuring that the consumer is protected against unscrupulous lenders, has gone overboard in introducing legislation which covers all financial institutions. He also warned that if increased costs for legitimate lenders were involved in meeting the provisions of the bill, everybody, including consumers, would end up suffering.

Referring to the view of the government that because they have computers financial institutions should find no problem meeting the provisions of the bill, including the provision which specifies that interest shall be calculated and credited daily on deposit accounts, Mr. Frazee pointed out that all financial institutions are not fully computerized—the Royal Bank is not, for example—and that these provisions would mean employing increased personnel.

In addition, Mr. Frazee objects strongly to what he sees as an assertion in the bill that a lender is guilty until proved innocent. This is a reference to the unwarranted rate concept: the bill allows a borrower who believes he is being overcharged to stop payment on a loan or to apply to the court for a review of the credit charges. In case of such dispute, the onus would be on the lender to prove that the rate charged reflected only the normal cost of lending money and the risk presented by the borrower. Mr. Frazee suggested that this provision might allow some unscrupulous borrowers to take advantage of lenders. Another aspect of this bill to which Mr. Frazee objects is the one which prescribes that lenders must state a single effective credit charge for each loan. Included in that charge would be interest, insurance charges, brokerage fees and charges for appraisals, investigations and credit reports.

The views I have put on the record are examples of the criticisms which this poorly-prepared piece of legislation has been receiving. I can see we shall have our work cut out in committee before we are finished with the legislation. In all probability, the bill will have to be completely rewritten, and this would be just another useless and unnecessary delay in the operation of the House of Commons.

● (1520)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) on a point of order.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, yesterday during my speech on Bill C-16 I stated that to solve the problem of loan-sharking and excessive interest rates the minister was proposing to set a legal ceiling on interest rates. That legal ceiling would be seven times the present prime rate; in other words, the legal ceiling that the minister intended to have would amount to between 70 and 75 per cent.

The minister challenged me on this, and I replied that I had read this information in press releases from the minister's office, that I had heard it said by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), by Conservative members and by one of my colleagues. The minister then rose on a point of order. I might say that when I said I had heard of it from one of my colleagues, the minister said that I had given a false impression. Therefore, I told the minister that after my speech I would check my notes to see where I had found the formula that the minister was proposing, and if I was mistaken and it was not in any of his releases, I would apologize to him.

I have checked my notes and the press releases, Mr. Speaker, and it certainly is not in the minister's press releases or in his speech. Therefore, I should like to apologize to the minister for making that statement. However, I should like to tell the House where I did get that statement and probably where Conservative members and the Liberal member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and my colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) got it. They got it from a letter that was sent to the minister by the Consumers' Association of Canada, dated October 20, 1976. I checked with the Consumers' Association of Canada who informed me they had obtained that information from a presentation contained in legislative proposals prepared by the minister's department for a convention in Ottawa of federal and provincial consumer and corporate affairs ministers. The proposal was used for discussion purposes on December 1, 1975.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the CAC said they had an interview with the minister and his officials, and their letter of October 20 relates to those interviews. At that time the unwarranted rate was mentioned—in other words, the rate between 70 and 75 per cent, anything in excess of that being a criminal rate. They did discuss it with the minister and his officials and the minister did not deny it. As a result, the Consumers' Association of Canada wrote to the minister setting forth their views in that regard.

To further strengthen my contention in regard to the formula of seven times the basic rate, namely, between 70 and 75 per cent, and any interest charge over 75 per cent being a criminal rate, I checked with provincial ministers. I was advised that officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have advised officials in provincial departments of consumer and corporate affairs that this was the rate intended to be used by the minister with regard to the regulations he hopes to present to the committee.

In these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, although I have apologized to the minister for making a mistake by saying the information came from his press releases, I think he has been unfair not only to me but also to the hon. member for Windsor West, to Conservative members and certainly to my colleague for Timiskaming, and he owes it to the House to clarify the matter and to state categorically what the unwarranted rate and the criminal rate will be. It is not sufficient that he wait until we get to committee stage when he can present his regulations. The least he can do is to be fair to members of the House and tell them at this time. Otherwise, I think he has been unfair to me in challenging where I obtained that information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I would like to quote Standing Order 37(1):

No member may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood, but then he is not to introduce any new matter, and no debate shall be allowed upon such explanation.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan).

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks I wish to congratulate the minister on his appointment from the backbenches. Being just two years in the House, he will realize that anything I say derogatory of the bill—because I really do not have much good to say about it—is nothing personal. I find it rather astounding, as one who still accepts the fact that there is a supernatural order and that there can still be miracles; but this is a new kind of miracle, that a minister can be appointed and within a month bring in legislation. It must have been churning through the bureaucracy. I get a great kick when I read legislation like this and realize that some are opposed to the decentralization policies of this government. For goodness sake, if this is the kind of efficiency that exists in the bureaucracy in Ottawa, it is no wonder the country is facing such terrible economic obstacles. I do not want to make a blanket condemnation, of course, because this would be quite unfair to many dedicated civil servants in various offices. Nevertheless, it seems to me obvious that one case of incredible inefficiency on the part of swollen bureaucracy in Ottawa is evidenced by the provisions of Bill C-16.

The minister says the bill is long overdue. That is one of the great understatements of this parliament. The minister has pointed out that under the British North America Act the subject of interest falls within federal jurisdiction, and he was frank enough to admit that existing legislation was hopelessly out of date. The fact that the Small Loans Act has not been amended for 20 years says a good deal about the way this country has been governed, and its economy managed, by recent Liberal governments.

The minister knows that since 1946 the total consumer debt of this country has increased from roughly $1 billion to more than $23 billion. As he noted, more than 65 per cent of that increase has occurred since 1967. In the period 1947 to 1975, non-mortgaged debt has increased three times as much as disposable income. Again I repeat that this says something for this and past Liberal administrations which have been so snail-like in attempting to make an honest commitment to protect borrowers from the inadequacies of present institutional arrangements between borrowers and lenders.

In light of spiralling increases in consumer debt in this country during the last 15 years, and the increasing publicity given to the maldistribution of income that exists, it is amazing that we have taken so long to give adequate credit protection to the working and non-working poor, or at least to consider reforms in existing legislation. One would have thought that, given the fact that Great Britain, the United States and the most progressive European countries in the last 15 years introduced the type of legislation that is before us in this bill, this would long ago have spurred this government to come up with meaningful protection for low income borrowers, as they promised so fervently during the 1974 election campaign. It has taken them 2½ years to get where we are now, Mr. Speaker. A lot of time will be spent in committee mending this legislation before I, for one—and, I think my party—will consider voting for it.

• (1530)

Since this legislation is designed, presumably, to protect those who are suffering from the persistent and continuing maldistribution of the national income, it might be well to remind ourselves of the seriousness of this disease which we seem to find so difficult to face. The widespread inequity in the distribution of the economic pie is suggested in a comparison of the figures issued by Statistics Canada for the period 1965 to 1974 which relate to the distribution of income by income groups. The percentage of total income received by family units—which is defined as including families and unattached individuals—between 1965 and 1974, for the bottom 20 per cent compared to the top 20 per cent, reveals the following: in 1965 the bottom 20 per cent received 4.4 per cent of the total economic pie, and in 1974 they received 4 per cent. While the top 20 per cent received 41.4 per cent in 1965, by 1974 they received 42.5 per cent. The sad part is that both in Canada and the United States the relative position of these groups has been the same since 1951, despite the increase in all the individual components that go to make up the welfare state in a mixed capitalistic system.

If we consider the distribution of income by income group and do not include family units which take in unattached individuals but only families, we find that the bottom 20 per cent earned less than $3,320 in 1965, and the top 20 per cent earned more than $8,944. In 1974 the bottom 20 per cent earned less than $7,480, while the top 20 per cent earned more than $20,174. The total income received by these families in 1965 was 6.2 per cent for the bottom 20 per cent, while in 1974 they received 6.3 per cent: In 1965 the top 20 per cent received 39 per cent, and in 1974 they received 38.8 per cent. According to Statistics Canada, in 1974 there were 5.5 million families in Canada and 93,500 families received less than $3,000 a year.

Some people claim that these statistics need to be qualified. It is pointed out, for instance, that the lowest income group who get such a teeny-weeny morsel of the economic pie are not a permanent group, but change from generation to generation. In the parlance of economists, they are a flow and not a stock. This takes nothing away from the argument that the lowest 20 per cent, made up largely of senior citizens and single women who are heads of households, suffer badly in our economic system. It is also pointed out that these figures make no allowance for income "in kind", such as medicare and low-cost drugs for elderly citizens. But the very rich also receive the benefit of medicare, old age pensions, etc. Since we are talking about the relative positions of income groups, this fact has also to be considered. It is difficult for anybody to rationalize the curious and ugly symmetry which characterizes income distribution in Canada.

The report of the Senate committee on poverty which was published in 1971 showed that one of the major causes of low income, or poverty, was that regressive taxes such as sales, excise and property taxes, fall more heavily on these unfortunate groups. In other words, the effect of the income tax system which is progressive—that is, based on the ability to pay—is cancelled by the low income groups paying a proportionately higher share of these taxes that are not based on ability to pay. We all know that tax loopholes and shelters favour the high income groups in our society. We will be more specific on this matter later, Mr. Speaker.

In the debate on the Speech from the Throne, the leader of our party pointed out that under the registered retirement savings plan a tax shelter allowed those earning $25,000 or more to stash away $1,502 in 1974, while those in the $5,000 to $10,000 income bracket only saved an average of $34 under the same scheme. This party, in season and out of season, has stressed the unfairness of our total tax system.

In the 1972 election campaign we pointed out that the rich and the very large corporations were receiving income welfare payments and subsidies from the Liberal government through inequities in the tax system. We were told this was socialist propaganda. We pointed out that all kinds of hidden subsidies were being given to the large corporations and the upper income groups in our society. We were accused of pandering to the lazy by trying to correct some of these gross abuses through such things as a guaranteed income for the working poor and the non-working poor. It always struck us, and still does, as being somewhat paradoxical and odd that when the country gives such breaks to the large corporations and the wealthy, it is considered either a grant or an incentive to save; but when transfers are suggested for the lower income groups, we are criticized for pandering to the welfare bums.

Just yesterday the National Council of Welfare, scarcely a socialistic organization, brought additional conclusive evidence and confirmation of what we in this party have been claiming for a very long time. The council found that Canada's hidden welfare system allows the federal government to transfer billions of dollars to wealthy taxpayers through inequitable income tax deductions and exemptions. Some examples of existing inequities cited in the report are as follows. Someone earning $30,000 per year saves $62 in income tax for contributing $135 to the Canada Pension Plan, while someone earning $9,000 per year and contributing the same amount saves only $37. A woman earning $6,000 per year claims the $1,000 child-care deduction, thus reducing her taxable income for a tax saving of $257, while a woman earning $20,000 applies the same deduction, for a saving of $380. A person earning between $5,000 and $10,000 per year places $1,000 in a registered home ownership savings plan and receives a grant or tax saving of $264.93, while the person earning between $15,000 and $20,000 saves $365.80 under the same plan.

The council, which is a government-financed advisory body for the Department of National Health and Welfare, maintains that average taxpayers, the middle and low income wage earners, are unaware of the mechanics of the Income Tax Act. It is also clear that it is they who bear the greatest burden of the costs I have mentioned, while it is the wealthy who reap the greatest benefits.

● (1540)

I have engaged in this preamble concerning income distribution and the inequalities of the tax system because I wanted the bill which we are debating on second reading to be put in the context of the political and economic realities of some of the major problems which face Canada today. It is unfortunate that the proposed legislation did not take these facts into account. Instead, Bill C-16 had its origin, as I noted before, during the 1974 election campaign. At that time, in an effort to obtain a majority government, the Liberals brought forward legislative proposals—but I note that most of these promises have not been kept after 2½ years. The Liberals have never felt compelled to live up to their rhetorical flourishes on the campaign trail. F. R. Scott's closing couplet dedicated to Mackenzie King continues to apply to them: "Do nothing by halves which can be done by quarters". As Scott suggests, the Liberals do manage to bring forward bits of good legislation, however reluctantly.

One of the positive changes in this legislation, which has been noted by many speakers, includes standardization in respect of banks and financial institutions calculating interest rates on savings accounts. Presently, deposit institutions have a form of windfall profit because of their method of calculating interest. Interest charges will be figured on an annual basis and must be paid on the net principal sum, and will be calculated for savings purposes on the average, rather than the minimum amount in savings. The amount that the borrower will actually get in his pocket will be the basis of calculation, rather than the present system which includes administrative and other costs.

Third, we have the government's belated recognition that there is such a thing as a criminal rate of interest. Presently there are no controls on the amount of interest some moneylenders can squeeze out of their desperate customers. As the minister noted in his speech, the loan shark racket has become, according to police sources, a $3 billion a year business in Canada. I, for one, have great reluctance in accepting that figure. I wish the minister would note, as he finds his way in his new ministry, that Statistics Canada should be pushed to come up with some reliable figures. Dependence upon police force figures in respect of loan-sharking seems to be an incredible, inefficient and questionable procedure. I very much doubt there is a business in illegal loan-sharking in Canada to the amount of $3 billion a year.

Of course, if we include some of the loan-sharking which goes on in the finance companies we could easily come up with a figure of $3 billion. But in speaking of an underworld type of thing, as I believe is implied in the use of that figure, it strikes me that it is ridiculous. On this question, the minister also used statistics that were corrected by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who mentioned that the minister had said that in the order of $296 million was lent in 1974 under the Small Loans Act with protection under the $1,500 loan level. As the hon. member for Windsor West pointed out, it is really more than $400 million that we are talking about.

In talking about this whole question of loan-sharking, whether legal or otherwise, the minister did not mention the measure of responsibility the government should accept for having allowed this situation to exist for so long. The fourth thing, in general, that is pretty good about this bill is that fixed rate mortgages will be brought into line with the present practice in respect of NHA mortgages. This measure is long overdue. It will allow up to 10 per cent of the outstanding principal to be paid on the first or second anniversary of the loan or on any payment after the third anniversary. All or part of the outstanding principal can be repaid, with the maximum penalty being three months' interest on the amount prepaid.

I thought it was kind of a joke, as I read some of the speeches, to find there were those who were so concerned that the "poor" trust companies and finance companies might lose in these transactions with the poor. The important thing is to help them become more competitive and to allow consumers to use the sovereignty that is supposed to be theirs under a competitive market system. Some members seem to be protesting against this, in favour of giving more protection to the lender instead of more freedom to the borrower, and therefore more competition among those who are lending.

That is what the private enterprise system is supposed to be all about. There must be controls on advertising, so that rates and conditions of credit will be prominent in the ads. There are some people among our party, and probably some among the backbenchers in all parties, who would like to see a total ban on credit advertising, but I think it has to be at least strongly regulated because one can often look in vain for the information aspects which are supposed to be the best part of advertising. So much of it is just waste.

We already know that one of the greatest weaknesses of the capitalist system, whether or not it is a mixed capital system, is the huge waste inherent in the economic institution called advertising, where we have in North America, I think, somewhere close to $30 billion a year now invested in that industry. It is very difficult, even for the most avid defender of that system, to say that most of that really contributes to the common good of the people in our countries. I know it is extremely difficult to regulate the informational component as compared to the other, but we must remember that the criticisms that are being made about the poor and low income people in respect of unemployment insurance, going after too much credit and all these types of things, relate to the values that are being created by the media which depend upon these advertising revenues. They would ask the poor to turn themselves off and close their ears to this sort of thing because it is only geared to those who can afford it.

These are the cultural values and the cultural consequences of the system that is being defended here all the time by many spokesmen from the old-line parties. It is just like the criticisms that are made in respect of the poor blacks in the United States when they want cars or coloured television sets, and so on. Why should they not want these things, when they are being pushed by everything in that society to want them, and when the measure of value of the people in that society is so often the possession of material goods, money, and so on. What an insult to human beings! These represent either the cultural contradictions or the consequences of that system which must be faced. One is being hypercritical when one tries to blame the low income groups for so much that is society's own responsibility for what is really a cultural conditioning process. I do not say it is a deterministic one, but it is a cultural conditioning process which so many people in our society, including those who speak for the defenders of the capitalist system in the two major parties in this House, do not seem to want to recognize or take seriously.

To get back to the bill, Mr. Speaker, there are new disclosure rules in all credit transactions to standardize the formula for presenting such information so that it will be easily comparable. Of course, that is a step in the right direction. Finally, the administrator must enforce the act and advise the public of their rights under the act. In many ways, the success of the act will pivot on the terms of reference given to the administrator and, of course, the actual choice of the administrator. It is essential that an activist person, with legitimate and credible credentials, be chosen for this position. Let us hope that patronage will not play a predominent role in the choice of an administrator by a new minister who is trying to establish some credibility. The work which his department embraces is becoming a more and more important part of people's welfare in our society and it is desperately important that the right people are appointed at the top. This is what the bill proposes, and while I applaud many of the individual initiatives, the general thrust of the bill seems, to me, to leave much to be desired.

● (1550)

The first principle, establishing the fact that there is a criminal or usurious rate, is a breakthrough. Thomas Aquinas wrote about this, and I am glad hon. members on the other side have discovered this theologian who lived in the twelfth century. The Liberals have finally caught up with Aristotle and Aquinas, these men of history. But this principle must be coupled with other measures.

Any sincere effort to protect consumers from loan sharks and their criminal rates of interest must come to terms with the reasons people deal with loan sharks in the first place. Quite simply, financial institutions are unwilling to give some people loans because of the high risk they represent. The government should implement a comprehensive insurance scheme for small consumer loans along the lines of the Canada student loan plan. When I was campaigning in 1974, I listened to the Liberal platform and sometimes said to myself that what they said was so good that it was too good to be true. In fact, now we find that it was so good that they did not even legislate it. Not only have they done this tremendous flip-flop on wage and price controls, as it is known in the country, but they did not even legislate the good things they were saying.

When they finally got around to legislating it 2½ years later, they neglected to put into legislation one of the principal things they offered to the Canadian people. That insurance idea was a tremendous selling point to the middle income group and low wage earners which, coupled with the promise not to freeze prices and wages, is in my opinion, largely responsible for the fact that the Liberal party is now in government. They promised this insurance scheme, and now they are not even offering it. Why is the government so scared of including an insurance scheme in this legislation along the lines, for example, of the Canada student loan plan? This would have a twofold effect. First, since banks and other financial institutions would be guaranteed payment—and we have nothing against that—interest rates charged to high-risk customers would no longer be justified. In reference to this point, I might add that the vast majority of high-risk loans, as has been repeated in the House several times, are repaid on schedule, thus creating no problem to the lending institutions. You can verify this by asking any credit union manager: he will confirm it. Thus you have the paradox of these institutions getting the highest return on loans to people who can least afford to pay it. Second, if these loans were guaranteed, the poor in many metropolitan areas—and the minister should recognize this better than someone like myself—would not be forced to turn to loan sharks, especially the illegal ones, but could deal with the legitimate lending institutions.

With this loan insurance scheme the criminal rate of interest could be set at a substantially lower rate than now envisaged, because the reason given for high interest rates by the legitimate store-front loan sharks—and they might not like to be called that, but in my experience even some of the respectable finance companies advertising in our media can be so called—is the risks involved. While it is true that there is a largely criminal element involved in loan-sharking, in my experience—and, I think, in the experience of many others—some of these finance companies can be rough on borrowers. Some hon. members seemed to be surprised at some of the things the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned about a certain individual who was forced to pay back his loan to a well known finance company. Coming from a mining town, I saw such things as furniture being removed from houses because people could not pay back their loans.

Of course, those finance companies have been engaging in a loud public relations campaign in recent years, saying that they have changed their methods and practices. Perhaps they have, but certainly they have left traumatic memories, aversion and resentment in those of us who saw some of their actions. So it seems to me no coincidence when we see in some of the hard-hit, low income areas, such as the one I represent, the only new activity in the commercial centres of the various towns consisting of the opening of more and more finance companies. These companies may not be the sharks or barracudas mentioned by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), but they sometimes remind me of vultures circling around a wounded animal, waiting to take advantage of the helpless victim. They advertise low monthly repayment schemes, but always play down the bottom line. The actual interest rate charged by the so-called good corporate citizens—only filling a need in society—often exceeds 24 per cent. It is vital that the government set clearly within this bill the maximum rate of interest that can legally be charged, rather than through regulation later. I was glad to hear my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), making the point he did, and I think correctly, to the minister today. As a social democrat—

Mr. Paproski: You are not a social democrat.

Mr. Gilbert: I am a social democrat, a socialist and a New Democrat—certainly not a Liberal or a Conservative.

Mr. Nystrom: Explain what a social democrat is.

Mr. Saltsman: They wouldn't understand, anyway.

Mr. Hogan: It is vital that the government set the maximum rate of interest that can legally be charged clearly within this bill, rather than through regulations later. As a socialist, I would like to see the maximum interest rate allowable set at an extremely low level, but this cannot be done in isolation and, given the existing economic system, it is not possible. However, even given our present mixed capitalist economy, outlawing interest rates above 24 per cent would be feasible. The minister will be surprised at how many of his own backbenchers agree with that.

Now I would like to return to the matter of the role of the administrator in overseeing this legislation. His office has great potential, but his powers would have to be enlarged. As the legislation reads now, the borrower must initiate, through default, any action against the finance company. As the minister knows from experience—we come from different economic backgrounds, but surely he has had enough experience with low income people, or if he has not, surely the people who are advising him or some of his friends can tell him—these people will not take IAC or Household Finance to court. It is a clear misunderstanding of the way lower income people think, and ignorance which shows how scared they are of these institutions. My goodness, I run into people in my constituency who are scared of going inside a bank, let alone a courtroom.

● (1600)

The matter of going to a court was raised by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). The responsibility of taking corporations of large size to court strikes me as dreamy stuff. Most people do not want to be dragged into court by lending institutions, for any reason. In this regard the government is putting the cart before the horse. These people should be able to appeal to an ombudsman. As the bill now stands, borrowers must renege on their loans and face court action to prove that the interest rates they have been charged are excessive. Does the government believe that people will use this type of mechanism to demonstrate that interest rates are excessive? If the minister thinks so, he is not in contact with the people that I am. I repeat, to most Canadians, being taken to court is a traumatic experience. There is a stigma attached to people who are taken to court. I do not foresee many hard working Canadians defaulting and then facing giant lending companies in courtrooms.

I suggest that borrowers should be able to turn to the office of the administrator—and I see his role as that of an ombudsman, which I would prefer him to be called. I think that is a Swedish term, and the Swedish people have made much more use of ombudsmen than we have. I think that is a good concept. Ombudsmen have a good image; administrators have not. Administrators are considered bureaucrats—and the AIB has not helped that, either. I see the administrator's role as that of an ombudsman who would have both the regional staff and the resolve to look into these matters.

The government has also decided to abolish the ceiling on interest rates on small loans under $1,500. The $1,500 level may be set too low, given the inflation we have been experiencing. This level should be raised to, perhaps, $3,500 or $4,000, but the ceiling on interest should not be removed. The minister should think about that and try to get some more advice on this matter. I just cannot understand some of the thinking of the people who prepared this legislation. The hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) tried to defend this type of thing.

Mr. Abbott: And did it very well.

Mr. Hogan: Nonsense.

Mr. Gilbert: You cannot defend the indefensible.

Mr. Abbott: It is very easy to defend, and he did it well.

Mr. Hogan: If the minister does not like what I am saying, he should read the speech of the hon. member for Windsor West. It may be argued by some that lenders will not make money available for small loans if a ceiling is placed on the interest rate. I am sure that is what the minister is talking about. This may well be true, but it seems to me that it can very easily be corrected by this government ordering lenders to make available a reasonable percentage of their lending capital to small loans. That does not seem to be an awfully difficult demand in order to help low income groups.

The government talks a lot about disclosure of all information relating to the true cost of loans, such as insurance, administration costs, et cetera. This is well and good, but the borrower should have all the information. The lender should have to tell his prospective customer his credit rating and how he arrived at the interest rate charged.

This bill tries to come to grips with the problem of the lack of consumer understanding of the credit system, but it falls short. The government should embark on an extensive adult education program to make Canadians aware of their rights and responsibilities. Credit counselling could be done by setting up offices where they are needed. An important function would be to dissuade people from borrowing for things they cannot afford. That will be hard to do, considering that every day on television we are told to buy, buy, buy—and to buy on credit. People could be counselled to put off buying until they are in better financial shape. This education program could be handled by some non-governmental group such as the Consumers' Association of Canada. In addition, individual credit counselling could be carried out through local offices of the ombudsman and institutions delegated by him to perform this function. The ombudsman would thus oversee the legislation.

One of the things I like is the idea of data bank collection which is mentioned in this bill. I suggest to the minister that that will only give us more details about the use of consumer credit, but besides making this information generally available to business firms it could be an important source of information for government policy-making. Although this is not directly related to the bill, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) issued a caveat about invasion of privacy. I think that is a good point. His notion is very sound and I think the Department of Finance should use the data as a tool of policy in order to make a better diagnosis of consumer intentions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hogan: Bill C-16 was drawn up with the best intentions, but the substance is not there. I get the feeling that the people in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are completely out of touch with the people they are trying to help.

In his opening remarks, the minister said that Canadian banks are some of the largest and best run in the world, and that other lending institutions serve effectively and honestly the credit needs of Canadians. He neglected to add that they are also some of the most profitable. But for whom are they best run? Why is there a $1 billion to $3 billion per year loan shark racket? Why does that exist if lending institutions serve the public so well? The truth of the matter is that banks and other lending institutions have failed to provide the type of service Canadians have a right to expect.

In spite of the extravagant "Have you got a dream" advertising campaign of the Bank of Montreal and its assertion that it is there to help Canadians grow, the ultimate thing the Bank of Montreal, or any other bank, is interested in is the bottom line. With this in mind, if the government is serious about helping Canadians with their credit problems, careful and thorough regulation of these giant lending institutions is needed through this act and the upcoming changes in the Bank Act.

In summary, the government must face the fact that until a basic redistribution of income is achieved in Canadian society, all the tinkering of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will come to naught. This bill could be a basis for Canadians to get a better deal from moneylenders and credit institutions, but only if the legislation is changed drastically in committee. First, the role of the administrator must be expanded to that of an ombudsman. He, or she,—not the courts—must have the power to rule on excessive interest rates charged to borrowers. That office must vigorously inform Canadians of their rights under this legislation. The rate of interest which would be classified as criminal must be set at a realistic level, somewhere between 24 per cent and 33 per cent per annum. The illegal loan sharks can be completely put out of business by proper licensing procedures. In committee, I hope the government will see the error of its ways and keep the ceiling for small loans.

● (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lajoie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank and congratulate all those who took part in the debate on Bill C-16, especially my colleagues on this side of the House. I offer my sincere congratulations to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) who had the courage to introduce this very sensible bill.

This bill is of great importance for Canadians, especially the less fortunate who are often victims of unscrupulous money lenders who are usually called loan sharks or underworld bosses. In my humble opinion, this is one of the most popular bills to be introduced; it had been expected and prepared for two years, and my colleague the Hon. André Ouellet, worked very hard on it when he was Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would like to pay him tribute for the great work he did concerning this bill.

The Liberal party accepts members who do not necessarily share our opinions. The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) proved this in his speech when he criticized and approved in principle the bill now before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I shall make only a few comments so as not to delay passage of this bill. Therefore, if I may, I shall speak in general terms.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am full of enthusiasm about Bill C-16 now being debated in the House. The bill is, I believe, right and ripe, it having been introduced at the proper time when Canadians across the land have been asking for such protection. It is a bill with teeth, a bill with which everybody agrees in principle.

[Translation]

Why this bill? The federal government has the firm intention of protecting the Canadian consumer. Consumer credit has more than doubled since 1967 and has now reached over $24 billion, not including mortgages. Let me explain: The bill also grants important rights to real estate owners who want to reduce their interests by prepaying their mortgages. Essentially, this is an improvement over traditional mortgage loans offered under the National Housing Act.

Other provisions will help consumers who take out a variable rate mortgage. The present legislation is outdated. The Small Loans Act was amended for the last time in 1956. This bill will rectify the situation. The complaints we are receiving show that, from a consumer's viewpoint, credit problems are among the most important. The government wants to make the rules of the game consistent and to simplify them as much as possible. The increase in loan shark activities calls for strong government action. Loan sharking has become organized crime's second main industry. According to police estimations, that racket is now getting over $3 billion in Canada.

What does the legislation in the way of protecting consumers? The bill will clarify credit rules by establishing uniform methods of computing interest, by forcing lenders to clearly disclose the terms of a loan, and by regulating credit advertising in every form. The bill will give increased protection to the borrowing consumer, by giving him more legal remedies, by allowing him to repay his debt at any time without penalty, except in the case of mortgages where penalties will be significantly reduced, by putting the burden on the lender to prove his case if things come to an end, and by limiting lender recourses for debt collection.

Any Canadian who has to risk his credit is entitled to a minimum of protection, just as the millions of people who try to lay their savings to advantage. This legislation will therefore provide and effective tool to fight loan sharking and establish a criminal rate beyond which any lender will face severe penalties ranging from $1,000 to $10,000 fines or up to years imprisonment, or both. The consumer will therefore get his money's worth. It is the federal government's duty to control unfair interest practices. We are determine to rid Canada of all loan sharking activities. There will be a legislation to help the consumer get a loan at a reasonable rate. Police forces will have legal means at their disposal to fight that terrible disease. Also, the onus of proof will rest with loan sharks and illegal lenders. Every lender will be forced to disclose the terms and conditions of the contract. Loans sharks who cash ahead of time family allowances cheques, social insurance or income tax cheques are profiteers who charge interest rates from 400 per cent to 1500 per cent to those poor victims. For loan sharks, it is the second biggest source of income. The first one being prostitution and the third, drug trafficking. This bill is aimed at eliminating intimidation and black mail.

This bill is not only concerned with lending transactions entered by trust or banking institutions. This government is also interested in the activities of every dealer, those who sell goods and services on credit, ranging from national or multinational enterprises to local car, clothes or furniture dealers.

The reign of the loan sharks is coming to an end. With the cooperation of the opposition parties we hope to see this bill through in the shortest time possible and we are ready to accept constructive suggestions. I have no doubt that the opposition will not demonstrate a mean and partisan attitude.

[English]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my few remarks on Bill C-16 I should like to extend to the hon. member opposite my best wishes for success and a long life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A long life, anyway.

● (1620)

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that Bill C-16 that we are presently studying is extremely necessary for a very important number of Canadians who borrow or deposit money in the banks.

I agree with the minister when he says that the chartered banks are considered as the most important and better organized banks in the world and that, furthermore, some other credit institutions efficiently cater to the financial needs of all Canadians. But what I want to know is this: What is the rate of interest, what will be the costs to the borrower? It is quite clear that, pursuant to the British North America Act, the federal government has jurisdiction when it comes to interest rates and that any transaction made with an interest falls within the purview of the central government because when looking at the British North America Act, and especially at subsections (2), (3), (14), (15), (19) of clause 91, one can notice that the central government has all powers when it comes to trade and commerce, the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation, banks and the issue of paper money and, what we are particularly interested in, interest rates.

When he introduced the bill, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs declared, I quote:

> The Interest Act was last amended in 1917. The Small Loans Act has not been amended for 20 years. In the last 30 years alone, total consumer debt—not including mortgage debt—has increased from less than $1 billion to more than $23 billion. More than 65 per cent of that increase has occurred since 1967. Today, excluding mortgages, consumer debt represents more than 22 per cent of our total disposable personal income. In the period from 1947 until 1975, non-mortgage debt has increased fully three times as quickly as income.

Mr. Speaker, when I read such figures, I cannot help thinking of unwarranted interest rates which are, in my opinion, the major cause of inflation in Canada and also of the prodigious escalation of Canadian consumer indebtedness as a whole. To correct this situation, the government has decided to introduce a very timely piece of legislation which, in its view, will help relieve market conditions and stimulate competition in such an important sector as consumer credit. I respectfully suggest, even though I support the bill, that if this government wishes to help the consumer, it should take the necessary steps to reduce interest rates and cut off incentives to loan sharks.

Mr. Speaker, consumers are going into debt to maintain, if not to increase, their standard of living and often to get out of financial straits. To appreciate this, one only has to take a quick look at the last figures available, that is for June 30, 1976.

Canadian indebtedness represented the impressive amount of $20,263 million, an increase of 17.3 per cent over a year ago.

Curiously, one could read in the daily Le Soleil of September 24 last, and I quote:

> It should be noted that chartered banks are the greatest credit dispensers with two thirds of the total. Personal loans as of July 30 last stood at $14,841 million, 23.7 per cent more than a year ago.
>
> On the other hand, personal cash loans made by lending and finance companies represent a small percentage of the overall credit; they are even down slightly for the period under review. According to official statistics those loans stood at $1,773 million a year earlier.
>
> As to credit extended by those same institutions to finance consumer purchases it accounted for a slightly higher volume at the same date, $1,143 million compared with $1,138 million a year ago.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. Canadians are borrowing more than ever on life insurance policies. Up to the month of August 1976 loans on life insurance policies stood at $1,202 million, an increase of 6.8 per cent, and outstanding credit at $1,186 million exceeds by even $100 million the credit obtained in department stores. I sincerely think that the rise in interest levels that we witnessed in recent years and even today is simply due for a large part, of course, to our institutional structures because there is no doubt that our financial institutions exercise and have exercised considerable influence on rising interest rates.

In January 1924 at the general shareholders meeting of the Midland Bank of London, Mr. Reginald McKenna, president of that bank and also former British Chancellor of Exchequer, had this to say:

> I am afraid the average citizen would not like to be told that banks can—

Note what he is saying.

> —and that is what they do—create and destroy money (credit). The amount of money in existence varies only through the action of banks increasing or reducing their deposits or banking purchases. Any loan, overdraft or purchase by the bank creates a deposit; and any reimbursement of a loan, an overdraft or a sale destroys a deposit.

So this can be summed up this way, Mr. Speaker:

Every bank loan creates a deposit and every repayment of a bank loan destroys it. In addition, it is a well known fact that through the leverage given to them by Canadian legislation, the chartered banks manage to lend, while maintaining a low statutory margin, up to 16 times the amount of this margin, thus creating a new purchasing power. The same banks have acquired those privileges of creating credit out of nothing and of charging a penalty under the form of interest to the borrower, simply because they have every power to create the money required to achieve their aims.

Obviously, this enables us to compare such procedures with the honest behaviour of a citizen who buys government savings bonds available to chartered banks. It simply happens that the poor fellow who has worked hard to save a few pennies invests his few savings, while the banks secure a powerful financial control over the government thanks to the money created through a manipulation of the banking system. Besides, among all sectors of society, the banks are the only ones which create their means of payment out of nothing. Therefore, it is fair to say that the methods used by the banks to get hold of our country and of the Canadian people are nothing but sheer fraud.

Mr. Speaker, I really think that high interest rates are inflationary since they result in higher costs for those who are able to obtain funds and follow the average increase in the cost of living index. In other words, interest rates adjust to inflation and, as a result, interest rates go up along with other costs, just as labour unions claim that wage increases do not preceed rising prices but rather simply proceed from them. As far as I am concerned, I think labour unions are justified in demanding wage increases in view of the ever rising cost of living.

So, I tend to believe that higher interest rates produce exactly the same effects. Frankly, it is easy to admit that everyone is in debt, that all governments, provincial, municipal and federal are hopelessly in debt, and that those debts, because of the millions of dollars paid in interest every year, can only add to inflationary pressures. As we know, that interest is paid by the taxpayers through their taxes. Taxpayers do not print money and so they have to ask for higher incomes and ever increasing salaries to meet cost requirements. All those taxes are finally included in prices because that is the only way producers can recoup higher costs.

The consumer, in an attempt to make up the taxes deducted from his paycheque, through pay deductions, and just like the producers, demand ever higher salaries and wages. One can therefore readily conclude that higher taxes, because of the interest governments at all levels have to pay, are reflected in consumer prices and, as a result, add to the growth of inflation.

Mr. Speaker, the statistics quoted previously prove that all Canadian taxpayers suffer from inflation, that worldwide plague, and increasingly higher interest rates. Add to this, of course, our governments. In this regard, former Bank of Canada governor Louis Rasminsky, in a brief presented on July 3, 1969 to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, said, as reported on page 2749 of Issue 55 of its Minutes and Proceedings, and I quote:

● (1630)

One of the casualties of a prolonged period of inflation is the market for long-term debt obligations. This is because investors become increasingly reluctant to commit their funds in such a form even at progressively higher interest rate levels. Private corporations who wish to raise long-term funds can try to combat this trend by offering equity participation, often in the form of convertible debentures, but this option is not open to governments—federal, provincial or municipal—or to home buyers or to publicly-owned utilities who must rely on debt financing to cover their borrowing requirements. It is social capital formation rather than private capital formation which must bear the brunt of the harm done to the long-term capital market by inflation.

Mr. Speaker, before closing this brief statement, I would like to draw your attention to the subject of credit cards.

Protection of Borrowers and Depositors

In the Journal de Montréal of November 3, 1976, there is on page 10 an article entitled as follows: "Explosive Danger". Here is what is says:

What would you say if an individual stole your pay every month and asserted in all seriousness that he was doing you a service? You would simply say: He is nothing but a thief. But it is true. Hundreds of thousands of Quebecers are so treated each month and they applaud. You know as well as I do no one is as shrewd as a banker to pocket his neighbour's money. But one day, one of those money men—I don't know who, unfortunately—had a strike of genius, the credit card. I give them a credit card that allows me to lend them money at a higher rate still and I bet ten to one that they will all applaud.

And our poor man was right. Who does not go around without his little plastic card? This genius of a banker had just sparked a revolution in the world of credit and consumer behaviour. In the imaginary museum of the consumer, this inventor should be put on a throne in the best room. The dream was limitless, except for the nightmare. Here is what does happen. You are idly walking around the stores with your little card in your pocket, and with no particular purpose in mind. All of a sudden, without any warning, you are overwhelmed with a tremendous desire for possession while standing in front of something which is useless more often than not, and lo and behold, you buy saying to yourself that you will arrange to have the payments made over 12 or 24 months.

You have just borrowed from the bank which issued your credit card, at a 18 percent interest rate. This is why bankers are terribly pleased when you refer to credit cards. If you have something important or essential to purchase and you do not have the cash for it, why not go to your credit union or your bank where interest rates fluctuate around 14 percent. This way, you are not using your credit card and you will be saving at least 4 percent interest.

Mr. Speaker, this is the plain truth, is it not? Bank credit is simply created by a mere stroke of the pen under a legislative authorization. At any rate, one may conclude that the government instead of being a servant of the people is forced to become their oppressor because of the pressure from financial institution. Admittedly, this kind of situation may tend to have serious consequences on the stability of our economy.

The government has just now realized that Canadians are relying on him to draw the abscess which has been actually undermining the economic health of our society for so long; whether you like it or not, the active forces in our society are increasingly becoming mere robots for the consumer public. As a matter of fact, beyond the limits set by a legislation which is no longer adequately protecting and defending the consumer and which is finally becoming obsolete there are open fields of activity in want of development.

Mr. Speaker, the same goes when it comes to buying, selling or financing new and second hand cars because, if my information is correct, there is hardly any control over this production and consumption sector which is spreading in the international market. Just think about pressure selling best exemplified by hawking which results in misrepresentations and breaches of trust, and God knows what else. One only needs to go to large stores to realize how easily credit is obtained through budget plans and credit cards. From all this one may conclude that publicity leads the dance and Satan calls the tune.

In my opinion, it is high time the government denounced the inadequacy and obsolescence of the legislation which is completely outdated because of the well-organized invasion of mass production which subjects the consumer to the law of the jungle. The government should promote the drafting of a fair, just and clear legislation based on the needs of today's consumers. I also believe it is high time the government saw to it to establish some protection and defence organizations for those consumers who are unfortunate enough to become the victims of loan sharking and exploitation. And what is more comical about the whole matter is that all this is sometimes legalized and consumption is encouraged through the creation of needs by artificial means most of the time. Moreover, a solution might be for the government to try and establish popular schools in order to convey to consumers of all ages, both indidually and collectively, some basic information as a first means of defence, thus giving the legislation a role of rehabilitation and prevention.

[English]

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a few remarks to this bill primarily because I did not have the opportunity earlier to congratulate the new minister upon his appointment. I feel a certain kinship with the minister because of the fact that we were both elected in 1974, and because at some time in the past we each sat in the official gallery of the House as executive assistants. I understand some of the exasperation the hon. gentleman may feel, coming into parliament and trying to put into action some of the advice he has been giving over past years.

I wish to draw attention to a few points of interest to me with respect to this legislation. The bill before us has been promised for a considerable period of time, and I compliment the government for finally having brought forward the new piece of legislation designed to give borrowers some protection against excessive charges and interest rates. I have personally been interested for some time in updating federal law in this area, and on earlier occasions since I was elected I have urged the government to take action in this regard.

It is worth-while noting that the bill before us repeals the interest Act, an insignificant piece of legislation in some respect. I recall, shortly after I graduated from law school, my principal in the law office in which I articled talking to me about conveyancing and mortgages and calling to my attention one of the law's provisions which, I imagine, is very little known. Nevertheless, it is a provision which a lot of people who have mortgages on their homes might like to consider because the effect of it is that unless the mortgage states that the computation of interest is to be made either yearly or half-yearly, and not in advance, then the interest requirement is not enforceable.

I have never heard of anyone bringing an action to seek a declaration that interest payable under a mortgage loan might not be payable because the particular provision of the Interest Act to which I have referred was not complied with, but I wonder whether the minister has it in mind that, on the basis of the precedent established in the Interest Act, interest might not be payable should there be a breach of the legislation he is proposing.

Those who read Hansard might have an opportunity of reading their own mortgage documents and ascertaining whether the wording referred to in the Interest Act is actually contained in such documents. They may then look at the Interest Act and get in touch with their legal counsel with regard to the obligation to pay interest under their respective mortgages. That advice is my little service today to the individual who has a mortgage against his property—and it is something that very few people are aware of.

● (1640)

There are also some other aspects that might be considered in this kind of legislation. I do not know whether the minister would be receptive to specific suggestions for amendments, but one amendment I have in mind might be more drastic than he is contemplating. Coming from Saskatchewan, I can say that the history of the province is such that with it's boom and bust cycle after the great depression, there has been legislation passed which, in effect, puts limitations on remedies available to mortgagees and persons who lend money on the security of real or personal property, which leads me to think out loud, so to speak, that there is room for a similar kind of provision in legislation such as that presented to the House today.

Specifically, I am referring to the kind of provision existing in many provincial jurisdictions in regard to residences or homes, where there is a limitation placed on the remedy available to persons lending money on the security of a mortgage. In many provincial jurisdictions a person lending money on such security is limited to realizing the security itself. In other words, if I were selling a house for $50,000 and received a downpayment of $5,000, and the balance of $45,000 was in the form of a mortgage against the house, in the event of default, in many provinces a limitation is placed on the lender in that he can only realize on the security to the extent of the amount realized on the sale of the house under foreclosure proceedings, whether the sale realized the balance owing of $45,000 or not.

Since the federal government is deeply and heavily committed in the mortgage loan field, it seems not an unreasonable proposition, to me at least, that we consider the following. Wherever a mortgage is used as the basis of security on a home, we might give consideration to limiting the remedy of institutions under federal jurisdiction to the extent of their security under the mortgage as opposed to a right that involves a dual remedy that the mortgagor has to have a judicial sale and then to sue the borrower for any deficiency in amount after the house is sold and the proceeds applied to the balance of the mortgage.

If this legislation is to be regarded as social legislation, we should also consider federal responsibility in the house building and home ownership field. It seems to me that that principle might apply not only to the home itself but to the furnishings. Here, again, there could be a limitation on the remedy of a person who lends money on the security of, say a refrigerator, stove or furniture. Such remedy would be restricted to repossession and realization of that security.

I think there is a good deal to be said in support of the proposition that, aside from the interest rate provision and the attempt to limit the interest charges, consideration should also be given, in the case of institutions under federal jurisdiction, to some sort of limitation of the right of the lender and his remedy vis-à-vis the home owner, the person buying a home. I think there would be great support for such provisions, not only because the government would then demonstrate its interest in the encouragement of home ownership, but also it would give many home owners some protection. I think the minister would agree it would include many young people, such as newly married people who need some sort of protection during the first years of life. I commend some of these ideas to the minister with a view to seeing whether or not the government is interested in extending the protection afforded borrowers and consumers in the two areas I have mentioned.

I also think the federal government is to be commended on coming forward with this legislation even at this late date. Quite frankly, I think the federal government has lagged behind many provinces in this field. Perhaps this is understandable, in view of the fact that the provinces have jurisdiction over property and civil rights and are more directly concerned with this kind of legislation. However, it seems to me that the federal government is now becoming greatly involved in the area of consumer borrowing. In addition, NHA has assumed dimensions of great importance in this country, and CMHC has grown from very modest proportions as originally introduced by the Liberal government in the fifties. Under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when prime minister, the National Housing Act came into its own and a substantial amount of money was made available for home building, which was given real impetus by the government of that day.

I said I would not take too much time, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to commend the government for bringing in legislation to deal with the growing and rather questionable businesses involved in making advances on income tax refunds and welfare cheques. I have written to the minister's predecessors in office regarding constituency complaints about this sort of thing which, quite frankly, feeds on the poor and on people not able to protect themselves. I would be the first to commend the minister on bringing forth this kind of provision and seeing that it is carried out. I do not want to be too negative or critical in my remarks on the bill, and this is one area in which I congratulate the minister and regarding which he will have my full support. This is an insidious practice that goes on in our larger cities, though in many medium-sized cities as well.

One other aspect of the bill on which I want to ask the minister a question, and on which he can possibly elaborate during the course of committee debate, has to do with the absence in the bill of any provision giving consumers access to their credit rating file and their concurrent right to correct any errors on it. We never really know what collection agencies or credit agencies are saying about us. As a friend of mine once said of me—almost anything you could say about me is probably true and I would not have any recourse. On the other hand I am sure my colleagues in this House, most of them being honourable gentlemen, share my concern that information picked up by collection agencies or credit agencies might have very serious consequences in respect of one's ability to obtain necessary financing. That seems to be a not unreasonable proposition and in accordance with at least the apparent undertaking for openness in government mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

• (1650)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Do not dignify it by the word "undertaking".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) questions if it is an undertaking. We are a little apprehensive about the undertakings of this government, Mr. Speaker, but they did mention that they are changing their course and in future will be more open with the Canadian public. I agree with that. If they carry out this undertaking, they will receive their just reward.

In this legislation there is room for provision that any consumer who wishes would have the right to obtain copies of information on file with respect to him, and would have the concurrent right to correct any errors therein. The other aspect of the bill which concerns me is the prohibition on unwarranted interest rates. The bill does not specify any ceiling for interest rates. That will, presumably, be left to the discretion of the minister. This opens up another question that concerns me, because in my observation this government has a propensity for introducing legislation inevitably containing a provision that regulations can be brought forward by order in council to give effect to the act. I hope the minister will not succumb to this tendency to govern by regulation.

I have noticed in my time in this House that some of the most important legislation to be presented has come in the form of bills with perhaps 10, 20 or 30 clauses, the main one providing that the governor in council may make regulations to give effect to the legislation. An example is the Anti-Inflation Act. The only provision of any consequence in the bill gave the cabinet power to move by regulation as opposed to having the details of the governing law outlined in the statute. I abhor this tendency, Mr. Speaker and I am sorry to see that a similar provision exists in the legislation before us. It is appalling how often the government attempts to move by regulation rather than by legislation which is open to the scrutiny of parliament and the public. This should not continue, and it will not after 1978 when I am sure this party will form the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The propensity of this government to operate almost exclusively by regulation and arbitrary measures is unfortunate, to say the least. Clause 31 of the bill gives power to the minister to make regulations for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this act as he deems appropriate. I think the people of Canada are interested in giving parliament a more important role and meaning as far as law-making is concerned.

An hon. Member: I thought you said only five minutes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has to catch a plane, I always want to accommodate him. I did not want to take very much time in this debate, and I have spoken briefly on some very important matters relating to this bill. I shall say nothing more at this time and will let the matter go back to the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Before I recognize the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) it is my duty to inform hon. members that if I do recognize the minister, he will close the debate.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and I thank hon. members for their very constructive interventions. Had time permitted, I should have liked to have answered some of the points that hon. members made in detail, but I know all hon. members are anxious to see this bill approved in principle so that it can move to committee.

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Statutory holidays—Possibility of legislation establishing Heritage Day; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—National defence—Failure to reinstate William Biggs—Request for inquiry; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Regional economic expansion—Reason for failure to make changes to incentives act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWERS AND DEPOSITORS PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE INTEREST ON JUDGMENT DEBTS AND AMEND CERTAIN STATUTES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott that Bill C-16, to provide for the protection of borrowers and depositors, to regulate interest on judgment debts, to repeal the Interest Act, the Pawnbrokers Act and the Small Loans Act and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

● (1700)

(Division No. 6)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott
Alexander
Allard
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Balfour
Basford
Beatty
Beaudoin
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Brisco
Buchanan
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Chrétien
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Clermont
Collenette
Corbin
Côté
Crosbie
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Darling
Daudlin
Demers
Dinsdale
Dionne
(Kamouraska)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Duclos
Dupras
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Ethier
Fairweather
Faulkner
Flynn
Fortin
Foster
Fox
Francis
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gendron
Gillespie
Gillies
Goodale
Goyer
Grafftey
Gray
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hargrave
Harquail
Herbert
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Horner
Howie
Huntington
Isabelle
Kaplan
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lambert
(Bellechasse)
Lambert
(Edmonton West)

Messrs.

Landers	Martin	Ritchie
Lang	Masniuk	Roberts
Langlois	Mazankowski	Robinson
Laniel	McCain	Rompkey
La Salle	McCleave	Rondeau
Lavoie	McGrath	Rooney
Lawrence	McIsaac	Roy (Timmins)
Leblanc (Laurier)	McKenzie	Roy (Laval)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)	McKinnon	Sauvé (Mrs.)
Lee	McRae	Schellenberger
Lefebvre	Milne	Schumacher
Lessard	Muir	Sharp
Loiselle (Chambly)	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)	Smith (Churchill)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)	Munro (Hamilton East)	Smith (Saint-Jean)
Lumley	Nielsen	Stanbury
MacDonald (Cardigan)	Oberle	Stevens
MacDonald (Egmont)	Olivier	Stewart (Marquette)
Macdonald (Rosedale)	Paproski	Stollery
MacEachen	Parent	Tessier
MacFarlane	Patterson	Towers
MacGuigan	Pearsall	Trudel
Macquarrie	Pelletier	Turner
Malone	Penner	Watson
Marceau	Pigott (Mrs.)	Whelan
Marshall	Portelance	Woolliams
	Poulin	Yanakis
	Railton	Young—169
	Raines
	Reid
	Reynolds

NAYS

Messrs.

Brewin	Gilbert	Leggatt
Broadbent	Hogan	Nystrom
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)	Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)	Peters
		Saltsman
		Symes—11

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be some disposition to dispense with private members' hour and call it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5:45 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Currency and Exchange Act

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE ACT AND OTHER ACTS IN CONSEQUENCE THEREOF

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-5, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Robert Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this bill should be viewed as an accompanying bill to Bill C-18 which is "an act to ratify the Bretton Woods Agreements." Taking the two together there is, of course, a great deal to say about them. The Currency and Exchange Act, which is before us now, has the simpler background. I can tell the House that the minister will be piloting the Bretton Woods Agreements measure, Bill C-18, and will have considerably more to say about it.

The main purpose of Bill C-5 is to make Canadian legislation with respect to currencies and official international reserves consonant with the amended articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund. At the same time we are taking advantage of the occasion to introduce a few other amendments of a technical nature.

The amendments before us will give legal sanction to the use of the special drawing right and similar composite units of account in Canadian contracts. It will also give authority to the governor in council to specify how values expressed in SDRs, gold, or foreign currencies are to be calculated in terms of Canadian dollars. This latter provision is intended to remove any legal ambiguity which might arise as a result of the changing role of gold and SDRs as units of account.

We are also proposing that the assets of the Exchange Fund Account, which are denominated in SDRs and foreign currencies, should be valued at current exchange rates so that their value in Canadian dollar terms is accurately reflected in the public accounts. At the same time, given the possibility of large but reversible movements in exchange rates, we do not wish to see large, offsetting charges and credits being made to the Consolidated Revenue Fund in consecutive years. Accordingly the amendments provide for a three year averaging period for these valuation changes.

The list of assets eligible for investment by the EFA is being expanded to include government securities in freely usable currencies with a maturity of not more than two years. The EFA would also be empowered to lend its gold holdings.

Finally, at the request of the Auditor General's office, the requirements for the Auditor General's report are being changed slightly to bring them into line with those contained in other legislation.

In sum these amendments are largely technical in nature and are designed primarily to reflect in Canadian law and practice the changes that are taking place in the international monetary system.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who I see is in the Chamber, will join in this debate before the evening ends. I am surprised he did not speak first himself instead of leaving that task to his parliamentary secretary.

I note that in the statement which the parliamentary secretary read the bill was described as a companion piece to the Bretton Woods Agreements bill which will be coming before us later. He said, further, that while there are certain matters of consequence in it, the bill contains a lot of technical features. Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for a parliamentary secretary to come in and read a page and say, in effect "Don't worry, let's get this passed", but I believe that all members, before deciding how they wish to vote, should get these proposals into perspective.

We are dealing here with billions of dollars and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if they read some of the technical features of the bill every member of the House would be alarmed by what the Minister of Finance is proposing. I shall be dealing with this aspect more fully later, but I would draw the attention of the House in particular to Clause 5. The parliamentary secretary did not even refer to Clause 5, though that clause contemplates taking away from parliament its right to have the Auditor General report directly to the House concerning transactions involving the exchange fund and covered by the act we are being asked to amend. One of the most fundamental rights this parliament has is to preserve the independent position of the Auditor General so he can report as he sees fit to this House.

● (2010)

I should like to take the House through the sequence of events leading up to the point where we are now being asked, in effect, to cut off one more right parliament has to scrutinize the spending and general financial activities of the government. I feel it is time the members of the House stood up and said that they have had enough of the government's tendency to whittle away the few remaining rights that parliament has over the government of the day.

Let me put it in perspective, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps there is no more volatile question in the world today than that of exchange. There is no more volatile financial or economic factor than the changing of world current account balances. For example, let me refer to the Bank of Canada Review which gives the highlights of the OECD's economic outlook in its monthly publication for August of this year. On page 13 of that Review, in table III, you will see the magnitude of current account balances or imbalances at the present time. These figures are truly staggering.

The total OECD deficits in 1976 are going to be $20 billion. I emphasize that 25 per cent of those current account balance deficits are in this country alone. We have the largest single deficit of any OECD nation listed in the Review to which I have referred. In total OECD anticipates a $20 billion deficit for 1976, and of that amount $5 billion is for Canada alone. The United States deficit is $3.5 billion, Japan has a surplus,

[Mr. Kaplan.]

France has a deficit of $2.75 billion, Germany has a surplus, Italy has a $2 billion deficit, and the United Kingdom has a $2.5 billion deficit.

Just on that point, Mr. Speaker, how often are we quick to laugh almost at Great Britain's dilemma? But let us not forget that in the current year we are running a current account balance deficit twice the amount estimated by the OECD report. Let us not assume that this is some type of temporary situation. The fact is that the deficit to which I have referred is likely to continue. The Review shows that, based on an annual report, in the first quarter of 1977 the deficit for OECD countries will have risen to $23 billion.

What I am trying to show, Mr. Speaker, is that we are dealing with huge deficit figures in the world today in terms of current account balances. The OPEC countries, the petroleum exporting countries, have a huge surplus of $51 billion contemplated in 1976, and the non-oil producing countries have a deficit of $21 billion. Other countries have a deficit of $13 billion. The world total deficit will be $3 billion. In short, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where two industrialized nations, Japan and Germany, are in surplus, the largest surplus is among the OPEC nations, and huge deficits are being piled up by all other nations. That is the framework within which we should consider this bill tonight.

Where does Canada fit into all of this? The fact is that Canada will be called upon, indeed, has been called upon, to share in the bailing out of some countries that have run up big deficits. As we know, Great Britain is in a rather serious predicament. The pound has fallen dramatically and Britain has asked the International Monetary Fund to bail her out immediately with a loan of $3.9 billion. After she receives this money, assuming it is granted, it is contemplated that they will ask world nations for a further bail out of $10 billion.

Rather than the Minister of Finance trying to slip this bill through the House tonight, I suggest that he owes the House a full explanation of what is the government's position in relation to bailing out such nations as Great Britain, Italy, or whoever it is who is looking for credit. Once again I point out, as we did earlier today, that the Minister of Finance went to Manila and entered into some private discussions with World Bank and International Monetary Fund officials, but has never come back to the House and made a statement on what he suggested, or negotiated, or given us any type of briefing on what transpired at Manila, and this in spite of the fact that tremendous amounts of money will be required to bail out various countries with currency problems.

Surely this House is entitled to know what the minister is commiting us to at some of these conferences at which he likes to turn up and puff around like a world figure. I have a copy of the speech that the minister made in Manila so let hon. members not simply take my word as to the size of the problem. In his speech the minister said:

> —the liquidity of the Fund has dropped to a low level. I must say frankly that I am concerned about the financing of the Fund programs. There may well be difficulties for the Fund in meeting its commitments if more countries do not, as a matter of urgency, make their currencies freely usable for Fund transactions.

The entry into force of new quotas, the economic recovery and the provisions of the amended Articles will all have a beneficial impact on the liquidity of the Fund. But this will take time and will not solve the problem we are facing right now. I would consequently hope that member countries would make appropriate arrangements with the Fund for the free use of their currencies as soon as possible.

Earlier in his address the minister said this:

In the session of the Canadian Parliament which will commence as I return to Ottawa, I intend to introduce the necessary legislation to adopt the amended Articles.

That is, of the International Monetary Fund. In Manila the minister mentioned he was going to introduce legislation, and we have one of the bills before us tonight. Yet we are not even given the courtesy of having the minister stand up and explain, in introducing the first piece of this legislation, what it is he has in mind and what exactly were the commitments that he made on behalf of Canada when he was in Manila. In my view, Mr. Speaker, that is not what this parliament deserves from the Minister of Finance. If commitments are going to be made to help other nations, either through the International Monetary Fund or directly, then we should learn from the government exactly what conditions are going to be attached to such bail outs.

For example, are we going to continue, through the awarding of credit, to bail out, say, Great Britain without saying that we will help them financially only if they agree to pull in their belts and act more responsibly so far as spending is concerned?

Mr. Kaplan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows perfectly well that if the minister were to stand up and make that kind of statement, he would be out of order because that issue has nothing to do with these amendments to the Currency and Exchange Act. If the minister would be out of order, the hon. member opposite is also out of order. He should stick to the bill and to the amendments.

● (2020)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe it, but presumably the parliamentary secretary has not even read this bill. He does not seem to realize that we are dealing with the exchange fund. One of the principal assets of the exchange fund is its investment in the International Monetary Fund which in turn is being called upon to make certain credit advances to various nations of the world, including Great Britain.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You have the wrong bill; the right speech but the wrong bill.

Mr. Stevens: If it is not relevant to review the impact of the exchange provisions that I refer to, that is a very strange thing indeed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is the parliamentary secretary; if he read it he did not understand it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, to sum up, I simply feel that when the Minister of Finance is dealing with these interrelated subjects—and the two bills are interrelated, the one dealing with Bretton Woods, and this one—it is time he explained to the public and to this House the exact commitment he is entering into in some of these international forums. More and more we are being committed to bail out other countries. The time is fast approaching when we have to say to nations such as Great Britain that no further credit is available until they put their own house in order. Unfortunately under the labour government presently in power in Great Britain I do not believe that country intends to tighten its belt. In fact in The Times of October 29 a front page heading read "Chancellor Shuns More Spending Cuts". The article following explains that because of a power play among certain members of the Labour party it is likely that the spending spree in Great Britain will continue.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I think we have come to the point where the secrecy of this government and its cavalier attitude in regard to international monetary conditions and our involvement in them, have to come to a stop. The government must accept that parliament has a right to know.

This brings me back to Clause 5 of the bill to which I referred earlier, Mr. Speaker. I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to what is the proposed substitution for Section 18(2) of the Currency and Exchange Act. Clause 5 of the bill reads as follows:

(2) An annual audit of the Exchange Fund Account and of the transactions in connection therewith shall be made by the Auditor General of Canada in such manner as he thinks proper—

I hope we underline those words, Mr. Speaker.

—and he shall report to the minister and the results thereof.

That is all that will happen, Mr. Speaker. We should compare what the minister wants us to accept now with what exists in the Currency and Exchange Act, Section 18(2). Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, this wording has been in the act since it came into force in July, 1935. The present act reads:

An annual audit of the Exchange Fund Account and of the transactions in connection therewith shall be made by the Auditor General of Canada in such manner as he thinks proper—

That is where the new wording ends. The existing clause states:

—with a view to ascertaining whether the transactions in connection with the account have been in accordance with this act and he shall certify to parliament—

Mr. Speaker, please note this—not to the Minister of Finance but to parliament.

—that, in his opinion, having regard to such examination, the transactions in connection with the account have or have not been in accordance with this Act, and that the records of the account do or do not show truly and clearly the state of the account.

In short, Mr. Speaker, if this bill were to pass without amendment, parliament would have lost the right to have the Auditor General report directly to us concerning transactions in the exchange fund.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stevens: I think there is nothing more fundamental to this parliament than our right to scrutinize such a fund and the transactions that take place. In Clause 4 of the bill we find that the Auditor General reports to the Minister of Finance. Clause 4 reads as follows:

(2) The Minister shall include the financial statements of the account and the report of the Auditor General referred to in subsection 18(2) in the report to parliament referred to in subsection (1) of this section.

Instead of having the Auditor General report directly to us on the activities within the exchange fund, the minister has very cleverly short circuited parliament. Basically he is saying, "The Auditor General reports to me, and I in turn in my regular report under the act, will include that report." That is a very different situation from the present one, Mr. Speaker. I have pointed out that Auditors General have repeatedly included in their reports to the House of Commons a special report on the exchange fund.

In the report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, the present Auditor General sets out at page 45 a statement of assets and liabilities for the Exchange Fund Account. I would draw this to the attention of the hon. minister. At page 46 the Auditor General makes a specific report to parliament. In short, Mr. Speaker, the present procedure is that the Auditor General makes a report not only to the Minister of Finance but also specifically a report to parliament. This is contained in his regular report to this House of Commons, a report to which we are entitled every year under the Financial Administration Act. The Auditor General acts under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act and his responsibilities are very clear. He has to report to the House of Commons concerning his findings.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that Section 18(1) of the Currency and Exchange Act shows the mischief this government is up to. That section reads:

The Financial Administration Act does not apply to the Exchange Fund Account or operations or transactions in connection therewith.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we have caught them taking advantage of the fact that under Section 18(1) the Financial Administration Act does not apply to the Currency and Exchange Act. As things now stand, Section 18(2) requires the Auditor General to report to parliament. If we pass Clause 5 of this bill, however, the Auditor General will no longer have the jurisdiction to report to this parliament because the Financial Administration Act, which he works under, does not apply to the Currency and Exchange Act. It is even questionable whether there will be any report to parliament through the public accounts, or the Auditor General's report at all. The only thing we will see will be a report presumably screened by the Minister of Finance and tabled by him in this House. We should consider the magnitude of this, Mr. Speaker. Members of this parliament must be aroused before this bill is passed to demand an explanation of why we are asked to take away this right.

● (2030)

I would point out that in the Public Accounts of Canada 1976 the transactions, including the assets and liabilities of the exchange reserve accounts, are clearly set out. The exchange fund account is shown as having assets of $4 ¾ billion. It is also set out that the foreign exchange reserve transactions in the year under review are something over $6 billion. Surely it is a very significant thing that those transactions should be properly reviewed, not merely by a screening by the Minister of Finance but by this parliament, and that we have the right to have the Auditor General continue to report to this parliament concerning his findings with regard to transactions of that magnitude.

One really should ask oneself exactly what the minister is after here. Is there something he hopes he can conceal, or does he anticipate that in the future there may be things he would just as soon not have to reveal which he would have to reveal through the reports of the Auditor General at the present time? It is very nice for the parliamentary secretary to stand up and explain that there is this provision with regard to credits and deficits over a three year period in the fund, but why should the government not be required to show the full deficit in the year in which it is incurred, or the full credit, if that is what the government is worried about. Most accounting is on the current basis. Why should there be this right to slough off the full losses we are having to live with now?

I believe there must be a serious question concerning why the bill proposes to take away from the Auditor General his responsibility which has existed since 1935 to report to this House and, second, why there is now this proposal to have this three year averaging kind of a provision. Wouldn't many businesses just love that; if there were mistakes or if they have write-offs wouldn't they love to be able to say that they do not have to report them in the immediate year but can drop them for three years!

The fact is that I believe the minister realizes we are in for a roller-coaster period and realizes he will take us more and more into the international scene where we will just have to hold on to our seats and watch the manipulations in the international monetary markets, with our commitments possibly being cut in half or to zero by countries which have to default on some of the obligations they may have to the external world. This is the reality. I believe there is no question but that we should demand that we receive full explanation and a full accounting through the Auditor General's reports right in this House and not screened through the Minister of Finance, which is what the government is cleverly trying to get through the House this evening.

The Currency and Exchange Act is an act with which most of us are quite familiar. Certainly the Bank of Canada has the immediate charge of investigating the assets of the account. I am not suggesting in any way that there is any faulty management with regard to that account. It is well run. But I am saying that we should never at any time give up our right to have an independent Auditor General's report on those transactions in this House.

In conclusion may I say it is particularly important to remember that the Auditor General in his reports over the years has been most helpful in pointing out some of the mistakes that have been made by this government. In dealing with the exchange fund the Auditor General has often pointed out that certain valuations have not been made clear and that deficits would be shown if those evaluations had been made. I refer, for example, to the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, and his comments in respect to the foreign exchange reserve account. Under the foreign exchange reserve accounts the advances to the exchange fund account at March 31, 1972, amounted to $5,500,000,000, comprising cash advances from the Consolidated Revenue Account of $5,146,000,000 and special drawing rights of $370 odd million. The report states:

> However, as the market value of the net investments from cash advances held by the Account at that date was only $4,928,540,000, there was a deficit of $217,460,000 which in our opinion should be written off with parliamentary approval as a cost of exchange management.

That is only one of the comments. I could read into the record several that have been made by the Auditor General from time to time concerning the activities within the exchange account. If we should pass this bill in its present form it would appear that no longer would the Auditor General be required to report back to us in parliament in respect to such transactions. I would also point out that if the Financial Administration Act is not applicable, which it is not, to the Currency and Exchange Act, this means that all the rights and privileges which exist under the Financial Administration Act will not apply to the Currency and Exchange Act.

I would recommend, before we are asked to vote on this legislation, that each member carefully review the provisions of this bill and ask himself the simple question: do we want to whittle away the right we have had to have the Auditor General specifically review the activities of this fund and report back to this parliament as an obligation? Do we want to lose that? I believe if there were an open vote in this House we would find that in no way would this bill be passed containing such a provision. I hope that before the evening runs out the minister will give an explanation concerning why he proposes to take away this right from parliament.

I would point out again that the suggestion that the Auditor General will report to the Minister of Finance and the minister of Finance will in turn include that report in his report on the fund to the House is not the answer. We have already had that provision. What I am stating is that there is no reason why we should give up the responsibility of the Auditor General to report back directly to this House in respect of the foreign exchange provisions provided under the Financial Administration Act and allow a full examination to take place in the public accounts committee of this House if it is required.

I know there are other members who wish to speak on this bill. I hope to have an opportunity to speak on it more fully at a later time. I hope that members will not be lulled by the gentle little speech made by the parliamentary secretary. We have a very serious piece of legislation before us tonight and I think we are not acting as true parliamentarians if we let it slip through without getting some explanations.

● (2040)

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I think I should start off, initially at least, by expressing one piece of agreement with what the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said, that it is a serious and important piece of legislation—and then we can start parting company.

I must admit that I have tremendous admiration for the self-confidence of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Because the Canadian polls show that his party might be forming a government some time in the near future, he can hardly contain his enthusiasm and he feels he should govern Great Britain as well! I did not think that I would be engaging in a debate in which the shade of William Jennings Bryan and his "cross of gold" speech would be revived.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe, I think, is quite correct in his analysis when he says this is an important piece of legislation, but he might have added also that it is a very dangerous and uncertain piece of legislation, and yet the danger of acting otherwise is greater than the danger contained in this legislation.

What we are doing specifically—I suppose because it is the companion piece to the Bretton Wood's Agreement legislation—is to try to look at this bill as part of a total picture. It is an attempt on the part of the world to find some way of making sure that trade is maintained, and that countries which run into financial difficulty can be assisted without both loads of gold having to cross back and forth, or without waiting for a depression to sort things out. We have gone through that on a number of occasions. The world had bogged down completely because we were not able to devise an effective credit system in which we would help out even countries like Great Britain which had some difficulties, without suggesting that they tighten their belt before we give them any money, because what happens to Great Britain will have repercussions in this country. In the 1930's we went through the nonsense of trying to beggar our neighbour, and we destroyed each other in the process.

We have to recognize that what happens to somebody 5,000 10,000 or 15,000 miles away will ultimately affect us as well. It is a dangerous thing. There are not enough dollars around in some cases, there is not enough gold around, nor is there enough credit around. The special drawing rights have been designed as a kind of fill-in currency, perhaps some way of keeping the wheels turning and keeping things going on the basis of credit. I presume that we really do not know how well this will work out, and there is a fair amount of risk involved in dealing in this way. But I think this has to be done, and for that reason I am prepared to support legislation of this kind, although I want to raise some questions in committee and I feel that this bill should go to the committee so we can raise some questions on it there.

I want to make a comment about Auditors General. We have had two different kinds. We have the present one, whom I admire greatly, and we have had one who seemed to be more politician than Auditor General. I am very curious about clause 5 of the bill. I have some reservations about the Auditor General reporting to the minister rather than to the House, but on looking at some of the preceding clauses I find that the difference between the Auditor General reporting directly to the House and reporting through the minister, who in turn reports to the House, including the financial statements of the account and the report of the Auditor General—it seems to me that basically the information the Auditor General is collecting will be made available to the House—is that there will not be any political comment in that report. By going through the minister, the Auditor General does not have to make any comment and perhaps he prefers not to make any comment on the state of the account and the values in that account because it is not really an accounting procedure that we are examining.

The minute we start dealing with such things as special drawing rights and foreign currencies and asking ourselves what valuation we place on them, it becomes a political decision and it should be dealt with as a political rather than an accounting decision, and if it is a political decision then the person to hold responsible is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) rather than the Auditor General. I say this because it seems to me that this is the only reason that I can see at the moment why the government would want to change the accounting procedure from having the Auditor General report directly to the House to having him report to the minister and then have the minister report to the House. But that is something that I will want to question and find out more about when the bill is before the committee.

There is a great danger in a bill of this kind. I am sure every member of the House recognizes that when you are dealing with currencies that are fluctuating and currencies which are not really currencies, such as special drawing rights, there is a great opportunity for hiding the cost of foreign assistance or the cost of being an international good citizen, and it will be a great problem for legislators to find out to what extent we want to bail out other countries and to what extent it will be possible to find out whether in fact we are doing it and how it is being done.

I hope that when this bill gets to committee we will receive an explanation from the government on how it will proceed, and we hope the Auditor General will come before the committee. I would feel much better about letting this bill go through if we had certain assurances from the Minister of Finance, or from his parliamentary secretary, who I think is very capable—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: —because it does not bother me at all that he introduced the bill and spoke on it. I would accept assurances from either one of them that we will have an opportunity of speaking directly to the Auditor General and asking him what his wishes would be in a case of this kind—would he prefer to report directly to the House, or would he prefer to report to the minister and have the minister report to the House? As I said, I am very impressed with the work that our present Auditor General is doing, and I would like to have an assurance from the minister that we could speak to him because the Auditor General is a servant of this House, not of the minister, and as a servant of this House we should have the right to put that question to him.

I will conclude on that note, Mr. Speaker, and say that I look forward to the examination of the important questions that bills of this kind raise when they go to committee.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill, and I hope the minister or his parliamentary secretary will be able to answer some of my questions in committee.

I notice that Clause 14(2) reads:

> The minister may purchase or acquire or cause to be purchased or acquired with assets held by the minister or on his behalf for the Exchange Fund Account
>
> (a) special drawing rights issued by the International Monetary Fund, which rights shall be deemed for the purposes of this Part to be securities;

I raise this because I think it is most important at this time in the history of the world that we have some discussion about the role of the International Monetary Fund and about world currency. Serious questions are being raised around the world and in financial circles about the effectiveness of the International Monetary Fund and how it will function.

• (2050)

On October 21, as reported at page 298 of Hansard, I asked the minister about the policy of the sale of gold by the International Monetary Fund which seems to be depressing the price and which has the effect, at least in this part of the world, of reducing the value of our own reserves as well as causing unemployment in our gold centres. The minister reacted by saying that in Manila he had expressed reservations about the way the gold auctions were being conducted, but that in a general way he agreed with it.

There are those who have doubts as to the ability of the International Monetary Fund to continue in the future in the way it was anticipated to operate. Perhaps the demands upon it will be much too great. There are those who argue that removing gold as one of the main ingredients in the International Monetary Fund may have been a mistake.

In committee I hope the minister will give a complete explanation of what happened in Manila and how he sees the IMF performing in the future. We have a real interest in this because according to the general economic advisory committee of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce reporting on Canada's trade and balance of payments situation from 1971 to June of 1976, since 1971 Canada's current account balance has fallen from a surplus of $431 million to a deficit of nearly $5 billion in 1975. As recently as 1973 Canada had a small current account surplus, so in fact in two years from a small surplus we have gone to a deficit of nearly $5 billion. In the first half of 1976 the deficit was slightly higher than the same period in 1975. Although it might improve as the year goes on, there are good reasons to wonder if it will improve. Grain sales are low and prices are low at this time.

Both the merchandise and non-merchandise accounts in our trade balance showed deficits. They moved from a peak of $2.7 billion in 1973 to a deficit of $639 million in 1975. There may be a small merchandise trade surplus for this year of $500 million, as forecast by the department. But what about our deficit on non-merchandise trade? It almost doubled between 1971 and 1975 from $2.1 billion to $4.3 billion. The deficit for the first half of 1976 was about $600 million higher than for the same period in 1975. The non-merchandise deficit for the year as a whole is expected to be in the neighbourhood of $5 billion.

I think we have a significant interest in how the IMF will function. How did this problem come about? The greatest increase has been the increase in the deficit on interest and dividends from $1.1 billion in 1971 to $2 billion in 1975. The deficit on travel rose from $200 million in 1971 to $700 million in 1975.

These are some of the very important things to be discussed with regard to this bill. Two people who are not citizens of this country spoke on this subject. One was the Prime Minister of Jamaica, Mr. Manley, and the other was the American ambassador to Canada. They talked about the problem of international payments in relation to commodity prices. I suppose they reflected the two opposite interests of this world in that Mr. Manley represented the underdeveloped countries. He talked about tyranny of trade, 20 per cent unemployment, the price of manufactured goods from industrial countries rising rapidly and the price of commodities not rising and not being fixed. On the other hand, in a speech in Edmonton Mr. Enders, the American ambassador, pointed out the great problems we have with regard to commodity prices and how they will be set. I suggest that we in Canada have not talked about commodity prices that world nations, and particularly Third World countries, desire. We have not even begun to meet their demands or to discuss their demands, although I think the ambassador, as reported in the newspapers, initiated this.

If commodity prices in the Third World are raised to a high enough level to give them a sense of security and to give them what they consider their rightful market, Canada will face importing products at a much higher price than that to which we have been accustomed.

I will close my brief remarks by pointing out the important things which are facing the world at this time. The Third World countries have debts in the amount of $40 billion or $50 billion, and there seems little hope of their being able to pay them. A few minutes ago on television we saw an interview with Mr. Carter, the President-elect of the United States, with regard to what he would be able to do if the OPEC nations raised their price of oil by 20 per cent. His answer was that he did not hold out much hope that there would be very much which could be done. The United Kingdom is asking for $3.9 billion from the International Monetary Fund, and Mexico has just negotiated a loan of nearly $1 billion. It is now thought that the IMF does not have enough resources to cover even those loans, which are probably small compared with the demands which will be made on the IMF in the future.

In committee I hope we can get from the minister some idea of how he thinks the IMF will cope with the world situation and how he sees Canada's role in the IMF, which is a matter touched upon in this bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing this evening some amendments to a legislation, which according to the text can be entitled: The Currency and Exchange Act. On the other hand, what is suggested? Some amendments are proposed and according to the explanatory notes, I see in clause I that we will add to the currencies considered in Canadian contracts some units of account such as the special drawing rights issued by the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Speaker, we have discussed at great length in previous years other bills dealing with the benefits of special drawing rights. However, I regret very much that this afternoon when the Minister made his statement on the bill, he refused to explain the benefits for Canada of those special drawing rights issued by the International Monetary Fund.

• (2100)

[English]

I have had some experience of what the Government of Canada had to contend with in the IMF. I am reminded of what happened in 1968, and what happened further back, in 1962, when I think of the problems Canada encountered in its participation in the IMF. I do not regret those experiences the Government of Canada underwent. I remember, in the name of international monetary sanity, and I underline sanity, the rebuke or, shall we say, the "Cry halt" which was imposed on the Government of Canada at that time. One must bear in mind the difficulties of interpreting certain statistical information and the fact that various countries, not always the same ones, behaved in a rather strange manner over the years.

I think of what happened to the Government of Canada of the 1962 epoch, when the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert was Prime Minister, and what happened in 1968 when the Right Hon. Lester Pearson was Prime Minister. The latter had to cut short a holiday in Jamaica by reason of the most horrendous international financial bind Canada had ever known. I may say that in the spirit of the crisis then facing Canada—and it is well known that the Liberal administration of the time was defeated on the third reading of an income tax bill—the then Prime Minister who had to cut short his holiday in Jamaica asked the then leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), to give the government 24 hours' respite. And the hon. member for Halifax, with his intense loyalty to Canada, of which I know and which cannot be measured, agreed; because to him, and to me, were exposed the positions of the international financial account at the time.

We could have mounted an offensive to defeat the government; but it would have been a Pyrrhic victory. Many of those lusting for blood and many bloodsuckers, whether they were social scientists, newspaper columnists, or just plain Bob Stanfield haters, said that the hon. member for Halifax was too soft on that occasion. Mr. Speaker, I want to be on record as saying that Bob Stanfield at that time acted for Canada. There are no two ways about it. Sure, he could have carried on a guerrilla campaign within this House which might have had the support of the NDP and the Créditiste party, and particularly of the Créditiste party of that time, against a motion of general support for the government. But you know, Mr. Speaker, at that time Canada had reached the most perilous international financial status it had ever known.

To meet Canada's trade requirements and those of other countries as well, there was devised a system of international finance. Canada has no particular formula, nor particular pride of possession in this regard. Some trading partners with whom we are proud to deal run into difficulty from time to time. I am sure that all members of the House share with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) the hope that somehow, over the years, we will so arrange our mutual affairs internationally as to avoid unnecessary international dislocations. This will not necessarily be done under this bill, in the case of Canada, or under another bill to amend the Bretton Woods Agreement.

Internationally we have had some rough passages in the past. We are going to have some really bumpy passages to negotiate in the next few years. In this regard I refer hon. members to a speech I made the other day on Bill C-15 with regard to the customs tariff. As I, and my colleague from York-Simcoe, and others in the House will show, in international trade this country is going to negotiate some really bumpy water. In his heart I think the minister agrees.

Having said that I say to the minister, and I am sure colleagues on my side of the House agree, that we will participate in any positive measure, if it is going to smooth the rough water ahead which Canadian trade must negotiate during the next few years. And when one speaks of Canadian trade one immediately says, "Yes, but the condition of our trade is reflected in the value of Canadian currency." Mr. Speaker, as I recall, a couple of years ago we went through the exercise of establishing special drawing rights. The minister is asking us to accept an amendment in Clause 1 of the bill, which is quite reasonable I think, to this effect: that in a contract, if there are to be certain, shall we say, equivalents expressed as between Canadian currency and a foreign currency, they may also be expressed in SDRs. I think that is perfectly legitimate. But there are other things which the minister must explain.

● (2110)

Within the general philosophy of this bill there is a greater concentration of ministerial interpretation which is for the benefit of the government. Let us look at an example in the language of the bill. Clause 14(2) reads:

The Minister may purchase or acquire or cause to be purchased or acquired with assets held by the Minister or on his behalf for the Exchange Fund Account

I simply raise the question, why? A little further on there is a change in the language where it reads:

(b) currency of the United States, deposits in currency of the United States held in the name of the Minister with the Bank of Canada or any bank designated by the Minister and securities of the United States;

When we look at the previous act again we say why?

(c) such currencies as the Minister designates as freely usable currencies—

In the past it read:

(c) currencies of any country other than Canada or the United States that are freely convertible into gold or United States dollars;

Why is the designation of the minister introduced?

I then come to the point that was made by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Notwithstanding my general disposition to amendments to the act to make it more administratively feasible, I cry halt. In Section 5 the Minister of Finance says that any examination of the Foreign Exchange Fund Account shall be submitted to him by the Auditor General. That is the point of no return. The Auditor General and his role have been the subject of a great deal of discussion in this House, in newspaper editorials and in academic circles. On this particular point I would defy any member on the government side of the House, from the minister down to the newest backbencher, to debate with me and my colleagues any reason why there should not be a straight, uncomplicated, and direct report on this account from the Auditor General to the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: You're on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The parliamentary secretary says I am on. I will debate that with him until kingdom come—

Mr. MacFarlane: And it will.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —and with the hon. deputy whip of the government, or even the chief whip on the government side. We will debate and we will keep this bill from passage in this House until we are given a satisfactory explanation as to why this particular report, which in essence comes down to the bottom line explanation of the Canadian account on international trade, is not made to all of the Parliament of Canada. I have heard it argued that Canada's international trade should be discussed on the basis of monthly accounts.

Miss Campbell: Oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is something that bothers the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell). It is not in the realm of women. She snored in an unlikely manner.

Miss Campbell: I did not!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I say to the hon. lady that there must be the strongest economic performance by Canada on all sides to meet the demands that come to us rather frequently from some of the less favoured parts of this country. Frankly we must listen to them. On the other hand, how can we respond in the appropriate manner if there is not economic strength in this country?

I point out to some of the neophytes on the government side that in parts of the country there is good economic activity and that a dissent in these areas in the name of, shall we say, the public weal, is of no value to the country. It cannot be justified on demagogic reasons. We hear every day from the NDP that anybody who is going to make a dollar should have to sacrifice a dollar and a half in a so-called egalitarianism, even if the egalitarianism is made from the bottom of someone's trousers sitting on a bench, and not contributing one iota to the economic advancement, development, and support of this country. In other words you breathe, you demand, you get, and there is to be no differentiation in any part of the country or among individuals. That is their philosophy. I challenge the NDP to make it stick in my province, Alberta. They know how far they are getting in Alberta with that way of thinking. They know how far they will get in any part of the country—

• (2120)

Mr. Goodale: Is there a difference between them and red Tories?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh! I heard somebody whisper something about red Tories. Somebody just woke up over there.

Mr. Duclos: No wonder he was asleep!

[Translation]

But look, my dear friend, all that because you don't understand English. I can repeat my whole speech in French if you wish.

Well, then I shall start all over again for the benefit of some hon. members.

An hon. Member: Your remarks are not pertinent!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There, I ask you if you wish to take part in this debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Would hon. members allow the hon. member for Edmonton West to continue his remarks?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, to simply point out my rights and say that the participation of the hon. member does not bother me in the least.

I ask the hon. member to listen to me. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I invite him to participate in this debate. I challenge him.

An hon. Member: We participate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to invite the minister to take part in this debate, because the time which was allotted to me is nearly over.

An hon. Member: Fine.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh no! Not because of your participation, you know, because it is non existent. Listen, friend, come and pay us a visit.

An hon. Member: People do. I did myself last summer.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, you paid us a visit, but you were not appreciated. Do come back, because your participation was so insignficant . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The Chair would appreciate it if the hon. member would return to the bill before us and if other hon. members would refrain from intervening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not the least bothered by the interjections originating from my colleagues opposite, and I see that the new minister wants to have his say in this debate. I might ask a few appropriate questions while waiting for his thoughtful contribution to this debate with respect to voicing his feelings on behalf of the Parliament of Canada—and of course, I am thinking of the past. Now that he is a member of the Cabinet, does he share the view that the Auditor General should submit his report on the International Monetary Fund, not to this Parliament, but first to the Minister of Finance, who could then put it through . . . how can I put it . . .

[English]

In English I would call it a fine wire sieve. I ask the Minister of State from Winnipeg (Mr. Guay) just where he thinks the Parliament of Canada would be with regard to the role of the Auditor General if we set this example, bearing in mind that there is presently on the Order Paper a bill defining, and even expanding, the role of Auditor General in relation to parliament.

We are members of parliament. I must bow to the hon. member for St. Boniface; he is now a member of the government. But the role of the Auditor General has always been defined in relation to parliament. To the satisfaction of members in all quarters of the House, from the hon. lady from South Western Nova all the way around this Chamber to the farthest benches, this role is being expanded. The bill before us now contains only one clause of significance. Outside of that clause it is a trashy piece of paper. I ask the hon. lady, the newly-appointed minister of state, and all hon. members right through to the Minister of Finance: what should be the reaction of the House to the proposal before us? I say no to this bill.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, reference has been made this evening to the companion bill which also deals with this question of the International Monetary Fund. As the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) has stated, I shall be speaking at some length on that bill which deals with some important aspects of international liquidity. The bill before us now deals only with the manner in which the exchange fund is accounted for within the context of our own institutions.

We have listened to an interesting discussion on international liquidity but unfortunately, as I said a while ago, the speech which the hon. member's research department had prepared for him was delivered on the wrong bill.

The essence of the argument made by the official opposition this evening with respect to Clause 5 is that this is an amendment motivated for the purpose of preventing parliament from better knowing the method in which the exchange fund is handled.

Some hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hon. members opposite say yes. If that is their only objection, I would point out to them that the provision which is the subject of the amendment I am proposing is, I am advised, the only place remaining in the statutes where that particular wording is used for reporting to parliament; the change is therefore being effected to make this bill consistent with all the other references within the statutes in which the Auditor General's report is called for. The critical question is: on whose motivation is this change being sought? It is alleged that the motivation is mine. May I point out to the hon. gentleman that it was the office of the Auditor General that suggested that this amendment be made.

● (2130)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps the Auditor General is wrong in doing that, although I think he is right in seeking consistency.

At this point may I refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). I would be delighted if the committee would call the Auditor General so as to get his reflections on the proposals in the bill, and perhaps confirmation of what is the nature of the advice given me, namely, that it is at his initiative that this amendment is being made.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now you are blaming the civil service. Don't you take responsibility for anything?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That disposes of the substance of the hon. gentleman's arguments, and I should like to deal with a number of other points.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Stevens: You are passing the buck.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman says that I am passing the buck. He has said that the Auditor General is a good and faithful servant of parliament, which he is. It is he who has recommended that this amendment be made. I, as minister, have taken that recommendation and acted upon it. It seems to me that he cannot accuse me of passing the buck or of failing to take my responsibility. I am taking that responsibility, and it can be confirmed in committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you now telling us where you get your advice? Is this a new precedent?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I get advice on a great many questions from my officials. If the hon. member does not know that, then he does not know much about government.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) referred to that section of my Manila speech concerning the liquidity of the International Monetary Fund and the free use of currency. I point out that the reference there was to the fact that certain of the major states contributing to the International Monetary Fund, particularly members of OPEC, have not themselves freed their currencies for general use, as Canada has freed its currency. It was for that purpose that I made the comments I made in Manila.

The hon. Member for York-Simcoe raised an interesting question, which was enthusiastically concurred in by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), when he said that we have got to be tough with the British, that we have to make it tough for the British.

Mr. Paproski: I did not say that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for York-Simcoe said it and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre pounded his desk, as is his manner, and made his usual contribution to the House of "Hear, hear!" I think the hon. gentlemen would do well to refer back to the question asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) just two days ago, when he complained as a grievance that the International Monetary Fund was being too tough on the British. I would be interested to know what the stand of the official opposition is on this matter. Is the authoritative voice that of the hon. member for York-Simcoe or that of the hon. member for Prince Albert?

Mr. Stevens: What is your stand?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member would refer to my answer the other day he would know what it is. He might do a little homework around here.

The final point I would make to the hon. members again is that the critical questions of liquidity and international transactions are covered in the other bill. I would refer finally to the opening clauses of this bill which make it possible, in terms of domestic transactions, ones under domestic law, to use the currency of special drawing rights. The remaining provisions of the bill deal with the manner in which the public accounts for the exchange fund are kept and scrutinized. I would be glad to attend personally and also have the relevant officials attend—those responsible for managing Canada's international payments—in order to respond to the interests of the hon. gentleman in this respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please way nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (2140)

(Division No. 7)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Broadbent
Caccia
Cafik
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte
Saint-Paul)
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Corbin
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Duclos
Dupras
Ethier
Faulkner
Flynn
Foster
Fox
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay
(St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Kaplan
Knowles
(Winnipeg North Centre)
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc
(Laurier)
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
Macdonald
(Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Marceau
Martin
McRae
Milne
Munro
(Hamilton East)
Nystrom
Parent
Pearsall
Peters
Portelance
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rooney
Roy
(Laval)
Saltsman
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Smith
(Saint-Jean)
Stewart
(Cochrane)
Symes
Tessier
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—96.

NAYS

Messrs.

Alexander
Allard
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Balfour
Beatty
Beaudoin
Brisco
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Crosbie
Crouse
Darling
Dick Dinsdale
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Fortin
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Horner
Huntington
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
MacDonald
(Egmont)
Malone
Marshall
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McKenzie
McKinnon
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Pigott (Mrs.)
Reynolds
Ritchie
Rondeau
Schellenberger
Schumacher
Smith
(Churchill)
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Towers
Woolliams—64.

● (2320)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

STATUTORY HOLIDAYS—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING HERITAGE DAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, October 22, as recorded in Hansard at page 368, I put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) regarding Heritage Day. In particular I asked him if the report of last session was true, namely, that at this session there would be a comprehensive holidays bill which the government would introduce and which would include Heritage Day in the month of February. The minister's answer to that question was a categorical yes. That answer was very satisfactory, and therefore the minister may wonder why I am raising the matter on a late show.

The reason, of course, is to be found in the answer he gave to my supplementary question. In my supplementary question I asked him whether action could be taken in time so that the first Heritage Day could be celebrated in February, 1977. His reply was to the effect that he hoped that would be the case, but he could not promise it.

The reason I am here tonight—and at this hour of the night those of us on the late show will have enough sense to shorten our questions—is to give the minister a chance to revise that answer. Surely if it has been decided by the government that Heritage Day is to be added to the list of holidays in Canada, there is no reason to delay it for another year.

Actually when Mr. Justice Emmett Hall dealt with a railway dispute well over two years ago, the possibility of Heritage Day becoming a holiday was then before us, and he gave the railway workers at that time reason to believe that the contract he was settling for them would include Heritage Day. They have missed two of them; surely they are not going to miss another.

I believe the idea of a Heritage Day is a good one in terms of what it would recognize, and it is a good idea in this country to have a holiday in February. I was glad that the minister said the other day that the government agrees. I hope tonight he can make a short answer and say that the bill will be introduced in time so that we can celebrate the first Heritage Day in February, 1977.

Mr. Paproski: We have a holiday on February 14, St. Valentine's Day.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) recommends February 14 as a national holiday, which I would gladly support, not only because it is St. Valentine's Day but also because it is my wife's birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: I appreciate not only the brevity but the eloquence of my friend from the other side of the House. Considerable interest has been shown by members in all parties in this subject in the past. I could refer to the hon. member's bill which he has presented. Other bills have been presented, one proposing the creation of a flag day, one to establish discovery day, one from our distinguished colleague from Prince Edward Island who had the ambition to create a holidy to honour Sir John A. Macdonald, and one from my colleague, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) who has often spoken eloquently about the desirability of establishing Heritage Day some time in February.

It is true, as my answer to my hon. friend indicated, that we do plan to proceed with legislation so that hon. members may have the opportunity to make their views known to us about this matter and to vote on it in the House. I must confess that there have been members who have expressed to me the consideration that, in an era of restraint and at a time when all of us are extremely conscious of the necessity for belt-tightening not only in the government but in the private sector, it may not be the right moment for doing this extremely desirable thing. Those sentiments have not deterred the government nor have they deterred me from bringing a measure forward, but it is because there seems to be some indication that there may be some controversy or desire on the part of members of the House to discuss the matter, that I cannot give the assurance to the hon. gentleman that I would like to give him that some time in February he and I together will be able to celebrate this splendid occasion, a holiday in the midst of that grim month of February which seems to last almost into infinity in the middle of the long Canadian winter.

As I said to him, I want this to happen and I wish I were in a position to guarantee that it will happen, but in this matter I am at the disposition of members of the House. Some of them have expressed some reservations. I hope they can be overcome. Our plan is to bring the bill before hon. members as quickly as we can so that they can give us the benefit of their views. I hope they will agree with the hon. member and myself that this is something we should do quickly, but it would be a very brave minister indeed who felt that with such notice he could commit the intention of the House of Commons—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Give us the chance.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—FAILURE TO REINSTATE WILLIAM BIGGS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, Mr. William Biggs, a retired army captain having served 25 years with the Canadian forces, was from 1970 to 1974 a civilian employed by Canadian Forces Europe, holding the position of manager of the automobile transaction office in Lahr, Germany. In November, 1974, Biggs without warning was locked out of his office and suspended. He was accused by the Canadian forces of, among other things, fraud, misappropriation of funds, and falsification of accounts. On December 20, 1974, he was fired.

On December 1 of that year while still under suspension Biggs wrote to the Commander, Canadian Forces Europe, requesting a military hearing and access to the ATO files in order to prove his innocence. From that time he has written numerous letters of grievance to his military superiors; to date none of them have been answered except by form acknowledgments of receipt. He was, however, told in February, 1975, by Major General Quinn, Commander of CFE, in answer to a point by point rebuttal written by Biggs, that Biggs' redress of grievance would be answered when the investigation was complete. Nothing further has been heard from General Quinn except that in a letter to Mrs. Biggs, in response to an appeal on her husband's behalf, General Quinn stated that he considered the matter closed.

Immediately after being suspended, a radio announcement was made on the Canadian radio station that the ATO office was closed temporarily due to the results of an audit showing certain discrepancies in its books. The entire community in Lahr was, and still is, under the impression that Mr. Biggs was caught with his hand in the till. In truth there was no audit made before that time. The special investigation unit of the Canadian forces investigated the charges against Mr. Biggs and turned their reports over to the German civil authorities. Mr. Biggs was prosecuted in a German court. On January 27, 1976, his case was heard in the Lahr county court. He was acquitted of all charges against him, and in addition the judge said:

In the course of the hearing the accused has proven himself to be a man of honour, whose seriousness and integrity are not doubted, the reproaches that were raised against him have proven to be absolutely unfounded.

Even the state prosecutor, after he had heard some of his own evidence, requested a dismissal of the charges. The evidence was taken and the case dismissed. Mr. Biggs, of course, expected to be reinstated if found innocent, but this has not happened, and he has instead been informed that the military consider the case closed.

● (2330)

The conduct of this case involves many disturbing and unjust procedures. At no time was he given a clear statement of the allegations against him. The letter of termination includes four paragraphs of charges; these paragraphs state that he did certain things either dishonestly or negligently, but they do not specify the exact transactions referred to and are extremely vague with respect to his exact offences. One of the reasons for this vagueness is undoubtedly that although the letter suggests he may have been dishonest, dishonesty is a ground for firing an employee in Biggs' position only if it is admitted or proven. As it was, neither of the allegations was framed as "unsatisfactory work performance."

Letter after letter from the military personnel stated that his grievance could not be dealt with until the Germans had completed their case against him. Yet no one from the Canadian forces was present at the German trial and, after its completion, no action was taken in response to Mr. Biggs' letter of grievance.

In conclusion, the letter of termination of December, 1974, indicates that Mr. Biggs was either dishonest—and he was entirely cleared of charges of dishonesty by a German county court—or grossly negligent. If in fact Mr. Biggs was incompetent, one would have thought that it might have been discovered some time in his 25 years of military service, or in his four years' service with the automobile transaction office, rather than in the middle of an investigation resulting in trumped up charges which were dismissed in court. In addition, the way in which Mr. Biggs was fired left a cloud hanging over his head. His reputation in the community in which he lives is now that of a dishonest man, and he has for the last two years been unable to find another job. The destruction of a man's reputation and of his ability to earn a livelihood surely requires that he have the opportunity at the very least to answer specific allegations and a chance to restore his good name.

Mr. Biggs has been tried and found innocent but, despite this, has been savagely punished. This is a travesty of basic Canadian justice and fair play.

I point out to the minister that the Canadian Bill of Rights states, in Part I:

. . . no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to . . . deprive a person of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations.

To illustrate how fundamental the justice is which is being denied to Mr. Biggs, I also point out that Magna Carta states:

No free man shall be seized . . . nor will we condemn him . . . excepting by the legal judgment of his peers, or by the laws of the land.

The minister is new at this job, up until now I have always considered him a fair man. I am aware that there has been a "closing of the ranks" on this subject in his department where, of course, the only advice he can get is from the people who instituted or confirmed this outrageous course of action. I have made available to the minister a very brief summation of the facts, as obtained by an independent source. It is now up to him to show the stuff he is made of and to institute an independent inquiry into this very disturbing matter.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the minister has asked me to thank the hon. member for his interest in the case. I wish to assure the hon. member that the minister is personally investigating the matter. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that the minister has been in charge of the department only for a couple of days and obviously has not had chance to investigate all documents and facts pertinent to the case. The minister would also wish me to thank the hon. member for making available to him a summary of the facts, which he mentioned a few moments ago, facts which he will want to examine closely.

The hon. member himself used expressions such as "disturbing aspects", "trumped-up charges", savagely punished" and "travesty of justice". If such terms represent the feelings of the hon. member and of Mr. Biggs, then it is all the more important for the minister to look carefully at the case, if he is to make a fair and honest determination. The minister has authorized me to assure the hon. member that after he has had an opportunity of reviewing the entire case, he will report his findings to the hon. member personally.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—REASON FOR FAILURE TO MAKE CHANGES TO INCENTIVES ACT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on the second or third day of the present session of parliament I raised a question concerning possible amendments to the Regional Development Incentives Act. Numerous suggestions have been made by advisory bodies to the minister, by provincial governments, and other independent bodies with respect to this particular act.

One would have expected to have seen in the recent Speech from the Throne an indication that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion had been dealing in specific terms with some of the improvements and modifications that many Canadians now feel will be necessary if the basic task of assisting and developing industry in regions of economic and social disparity is to be accomplished.

Frankly I was surprised in the first instance that there was no reference in the Speech from the Throne to this matter. I was even more surprised and disturbed when I raised the question in the House on October 13 with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard). In his answer with regard to the lack of any indication in the Speech from the Throne and whether there was any recommendation to his cabinet colleagues on this matter and whether they had turned it down, the minister said, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, no recommendations have actually been made to cabinet at this point by myself or my department because we are now considering as we have done in recent weeks several representations made by various Canadian organizations on the ways to amend the act. I do hope that in the months to come we will be able to reach a consensus in that respect. I would then be in a position to submit to my colleagues in cabinet the amendments that will prove appropriate to meet the needs.

I find this a disturbing answer from a minister who represents a department that claims to be specifically interested in and charged with the problems of economic and social disparity in the various regions of the country.

I realize that the Regional Development Incentives Act is not the major component in the expenditures of this department. It occupies only 20 per cent or less of the department's budget. Much of the money goes into the kind of infrastructure programs that are under the general development agreement and subsidiary agreements with the various provinces.

What is disturbing is that the recommendations that have been made for some time now have virtually been ignored to this date by the minister and his officials. Since 1973 the minister has had a draft report from the Atlantic Development Council. It was published this year. I quote from the report:

> The evidence to date and the trends with respect to offers and applications suggest that unless significant changes in policy and its applications are made, the program as far as the Atlantic region is concerned will not achieve further momentum, but on the contrary, may significantly run down.

The minister has had that advice before him, presumably, for three years. It is not the only report that has been made available to the minister, first from his own advisory group and also from independent studies, some of which have been considered by the regional development committee of this House. The ADC report went on to say, and I quote:

> As a result of RDIA in Atlantic Canada, 'an average of only one new project per year had entered commercial production in the region that possibly would have located elsewhere'.

In addition, major concern has been expressed by independent studies and members on both sides of this House with regard to the amount of ministerial discretion and latitude that exists concerning the approval of project applications.

As far back as June 20, 1972, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) asked for the expedition of grants and demanded less completed work before making payment. Indeed the Liberal party policy convention in 1975 called for the elimination of DREE red tape. There are a number of points that have been made. There is not time this evening to quote all of them.

On December 5, 1975, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) suggested RDIA should not use uniform standards across the country. The Canadian Council on Rural Development, an advisory body to the minister, in 1969, as well as the Atlantic Development Council in its report published this year, called for more industrial intelligence and post-incentive assistance.

Of greater importance, however, are suggestions that have been made not only by advisory bodies but by provincial governments with regard to the universal coverage of RDIA. Concern has been expressed from the outset.

● (2340)

I recall being a member of the regional development committee in 1969 reviewing the initial legislation and being concerned about the application of this act to service industries. Representations have certainly been made by provincial governments and, in one instance, by the four ministers of tourism in the Atlantic provinces with respect to the importance of RDIA amendments in relation to the tourist industry. In addition, the former minister of regional economic expansion, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), indicated there might well be three or four amendments dealing with bridge financing, a matter of great importance in the establishment of new industries in economically deprived areas.

I suppose that in the short time available to me I should draw attention to what is a major concern of those of us who have been studying the effects of this act, that is, the difficulty of defining an effective goal and strategy with respect to the federal program of industrial assistance. The Atlantic Council, in a recent report, has stated that from the outset there has never been a clearly defined industrial strategy to which the RDIA would apply. This view was expressed also in a number of independent studies. After seven years it is far too late for the minister to tell us that the government has just begun to study recommendations which have been well-known for years. It is high time some action was taken and it is my hope that the government will act to bring about long overdue amendments to the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to note from the question asked during the queston period on October 13 by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) that he recognizes the importance of the Regional Development Incentives Act as a tool for implementing regional development policy. This is a view which I personally share with him and one which is held by many other groups as well, including provincial governments and the Atlantic Development Council.

In his question the other day the hon. member referred to recommendations made by the Atlantic Development Council as an advisory body to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard). I assume he is referring specifically to the recommendations contained in a study published by the Council in May, 1976, which relates to activity under the program during the period from 1969 to 1972.

That study did indeed make recommendations for improving the effectiveness of the regional development incentives program. There are, however, two important points that I would like to make in this regard.

First, the council noted that—and I quote from the report:

"The incentives program in the Atlantic region has been a useful source of financial assistance for industry and has brought a welcome contribution to the growth of employment".

Therefore, even on the basis of early and limited experience with the program, the council study revealed that the program was proving effective.

Second, and perhaps more important, the Council recognized in its report that its recommendations had been "taken into account in the formulation of a number of changes in departmental administration and in the operation of the RDIA program itself." In other words, the council recognized that the department had, on its own initiative, undertaken a policy review of the regional development incentives program and had adopted many of the changes proposed by other bodies including provincial governments and the Atlantic Development Council itself. The decentralization of decision-making and the introduction of standard formulae for certain types of incentives projects are two examples of the recommendations made by the council which were adopted by the department.

Although this major review of the incentives program was undertaken in 1972 and 1973 and changes were initiated in 1974, this is not to say that we are now content with the program and will make no further changes to improve its effectiveness. In fact, as my minister said the other day in response to the question from the hon. Member for Egmont, we are constantly reviewing the on-going operation of the incentives program and continually considering ways and means by which it can be made a better tool for fostering economic expansion and social adjustment in disadvantaged regions of the country.

In this regard, it will be remembered that only last year parliament approved an extension to the act from 1976 to 1981. That extension permits the continued provision of incentives to industry of all sizes, including small businesses where increased emphasis was made possible as a result of the program changes in 1974. It will also provide an opportunity to consider the representations of various Canadian groups and to determine how the government's and the department's objectives can best be met and what, if any, amendments to the Regional Development Incentives Act will be required during that period.

I hope these remarks will help to clarify for all concerned the actions taken recently by our department in relation to the incentives program and our intentions with regard to this program in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 11.47 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 5, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT FOR DELAYING VOTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask leave to move:

That this House record its condemnation of the contemptuous disregard shown by the government to this institution of parliament last evening by holding up a vote for an hour or so in order to meet its own needs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED ACTION TO CREATE BETTER RELATIONS BETWEEN UNION AND MANAGEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of the continuing malaise in labour-management relations inside the Post Office—a phrase often used by the former postmaster general—a malaise which has now degenerated into impasse according to the new Postmaster General in his speech to the Canadian Postal Users' Conference this week, management having broken the spirit of the December, 1975 collective agreement with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers by failing to inform the union executive about new equipment being installed in St. John's Newfoundland, and London, Ontario, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That the Postmaster General take immediate steps to make management less autocratic, thereby lessening the need of the union to coerce, and as an essential step, to restoring with CUPW an atmosphere of mutual confidence and trust similar to that which has been established with the letter carriers union over recent months, thus assuring the people of Canada the quality of postal service they formerly enjoyed and have every right to expect.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion can only be presented with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

MANPOWER

PROPOSED CONSULTATION BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA ON MEASURES TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the fact that the Sydney Steel Plant is about to lay off an additional 170 employees shortly and given the fact that unemployment in the industrial area of Cape Breton has already reached almost 20 per cent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House instruct the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to consult with the Premier of Nova Scotia to formulate special measures to deal with this unemployment crisis and to work out plans to ensure a stable future for the Sydney Steel Plant.

Mr. Speaker: This is a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 and it can be put only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1110)

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED ABORTION RACKET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity in reference to the administration of justice. I refer to numerous advertisements put in daily newspapers concerning abortion: for example, "Confidential: legally performed in the state of New York by qualified gynecologists, directly from Ottawa, same day return".

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the Minister of Justice, within his powers conferred upon him by the constitution and with consultation with the appropriate attorneys general of the provinces, investigate this abortion racket being advertised in Canada and performed in the U.S.A., particularly when Morgentaler is being persecuted and prosecuted for illegal abortions in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE FIGURES RELATING TO LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) presented a series of figures in a press conference yesterday purporting to show that the government lost only $6 million, not $50 million, in its lease-purchase agreement at Les Terrasses de la Chaudière compared to expropriating and constructing similar facilities for itself, and since these figures actually constitute a shell game based on the most irresponsible financial premises—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stevens: —and conceal a loss to the taxpayers of several tens of millions of dollars, and whereas the minister avowed he would meet any challenge to the validity of these figures and is prepared to back them up, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner):

That this House direct the minister to table his figures, which appear to be as irregular and extraordinary as the Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project itself.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will put the question to the House, but we have consistently held in the past that a notice of motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 ought to contain only sufficient information to display its urgency and not argument or debate. In any case, such a motion can be presented to the House only with its unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF REPORT "THE HIDDEN WELFARE SYSTEM" TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the conclusion of the recent National Council of Welfare publication, "The Hidden Welfare System" that the system of income tax subsidies in effect currently cost the treasury $6.4 billion a year, and in light of the fact that the benefits of this $6.4 billion subsidy benefit more the rich and wealthy in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the House refer to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the report of the National Council of Welfare, "The Hidden Welfare System", for study, and that it report back to the House prior to December, 1976.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the oral question period, I know hon. members would want me to call attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor in the person of the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, the Honourable Shridath Ramphal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RESULTS OF DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE ON EXTENSION BY CANADA OF FISHING ZONE TO TWO HUNDRED MILES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister has recently returned from France and I should like to ask him this question. In light of the important social and economic impact of the fisheries on the people of Atlantic Canada, may I ask the minister whether agreement has been reached between Canada and France over the conflict of interest between our two countries with regard to the extension of our fishing limit to 200 miles, bearing in mind that while he was attending to his duties in Paris his counterpart, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, made an announcement in this House and served statutory notice of his intention to declare a 200 mile limit effective January 1, 1977?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to give the hon. member and the House as much information as I can today. I undertake as well to have a statement prepared over the weekend regarding the Canada-France negotiations; there simply has not been time for me to put it together. On the matter of the St. Pierre and Miquelon-Canada situation, we held discussions lately at the ministerial level in Paris which were a follow on of discussions which have been underway between officials for sometime. It is evident that it will not be possible, as it was not possible with the United States, to conclude and finalize all aspects of this question before January 1.

However, in a most amiable discussion and negotiation, France and Canada undertook to put in place an interim agreement or arrangement, which will be done before January 1; the mutual objective, as stated by each side during the talks in Paris, is to prevent any disruption or serious change in the situation as of January 1. In the meantime long-term discussions will continue and the interim arrangement will eventually be replaced with what I am satisfied will be a mutually agreeable solution.

DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE ON ALLOCATION OF FISHING QUOTAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his reply and appreciate that he recently returned and has not had time to prepare a report. I hope that when it is ready the report will be presented to the House and not outside the House, so that we will have the opportunity to examine it. My supplementary question is as follows: Since there has obviously been a lack of agreement to date on this important matter, I should like to know if there was any discussion of quotas which would be allocated to France under the ICNAF arrangement covering zones three and four; also, have any special arrangements been made between Canada and France in this particular area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I assure the hon. member that, on the matter of providing full information, I will be pleased to consult with him and other interested members on the best means for giving detailed information to the House; we could perhaps do that after the weekend. To answer the specific question, I think the hon. member is aware of two agreements in place between Canada and France which will, in our judgment and incidentally in the judgment of France, resolve the immediate problem. One is the ICNAF quota arrangements for 1977 which will form the basis for setting up quotas in the zones to which the hon. member referred. Of course, there is in addition a 1972 treaty between Canada and France which is not affected substantively by the announcement of the 200-mile zone extension made by my colleague on my behalf and his own two days ago.

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING GEORGES BANK

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question. The perimeter of the 200-mile limit as listed by the minister responsible for fisheries and the environment shows that we have drawn a line equidistant from Canada and the United States which takes in the upper portion of Georges Bank, an area which alone provides about $30 million worth of scallops to Canada. I ask the minister if final agreement has been reached on the ownership of Georges Bank with the Americans? I ask this because of the economic value in fisheries resources alone of this bank to Canada, and because the minerals and oil and gas deposits which could be discovered in the area make it doubly important to the economy of this country. What is the status of the negotiations concerning this area between Canada and the United States, and have they been finalized?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the many issues to which the hon. member referred have not been settled finally. I believe I indicated prior to the declaration made two days ago that action was being taken without prejudice and that negotiations with the United States would continue. Canada has drawn what is properly described by the hon. member as an equidistant line which goes through Georges Bank. The United States in response, and incidentally in consultation, for we were aware it was going to be done, has drawn a different line with which I am sure the hon. member is familiar. Each of these actions has been taken without prejudice. As the press releases of both sides indicated, it was merely, to use an informal expression, a staking out of positions so far as the United States is concerned, and the talks will continue in an amicable way.

• (1120)

In the meantime, as with the situation vis-à-vis St. Pierre-Miquelon we expect there will be an interim arrangement in place by January 1, the objective of which will be to ensure that there is no disruption in the historical and normal pattern of activity in the Georges Bank area.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes, and the House is agreeable, I could table both the press release of Canada and that of the United States which would give a fuller explanation.

EFFECT OF BILATERAL AGREEMENTS ON RIGHT OF CANADA TO MANAGE FISHERIES RESOURCES—POSSIBILITY OF JOINT VENTURES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister on his successful first mission abroad. I hope he hill continue with that old fashioned salt-water diplomacy. Bearing in mind the fact that we have already bartered away 85 per cent of the foreign capability in bilateral agreements and that the Prime Minister when he was in Japan indicated there would be a licensing agreement with Japan which does not recognize our right to the 200-mile economic zone leading us to believe that the declaration may be a cosmetic exercise and not mean a great deal to Canada, can the minister assure the House that the bilateral agreements with these countries, including France and including the licensing arrangement with Japan, will not take away the right which is ours to manage the resource and to have first right to exploitation.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think I can give that assurance without any qualification, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for his kind words. He made reference to bartering away 85 per cent. In point of fact I think if he looks thoroughly at the bilateral agreement he would find that it is protecting the 85 per cent which was taken by countries with whom we now have a bilateral agreement. The essential element, to the extent that Mr. Speaker will permit, is really that in the 200-mile zone and with the problem areas I have mentioned having to be dealt with on an interim basis, Canada will take all it requires for its own purposes and only quotas that are in excess of Canada's needs will be allocated to any of the countries with whom we have bilateral agreements.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if the government has taken any position on the possibility of Canada entering into joint ventures with the countries with whom we have bilateral agreements, bearing in mind the fact that it will be some considerable time before we have the capacity to utilize our rights within the 200-mile zone.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the possibility of joint ventures with the various countries with whom we have bilateral agreements has of course been explored and to some degree has been as a result of initiatives undertaken by the Government of Newfoundland. There are, however, a great many implications which will need thorough study. I think all hon. members would wish that kind of joint venture to be undertaken. Specifically, in the first year after the declaration of the 200 miles it is highly unlikely there will be adequate stocks remaining to foreign countries to justify such joint ventures, but we are not ruling out the possibility. We would merely want to make sure that the Canadian fishermen and the Canadian fish plant operators are properly protected before anything additional is done.

* * *

MANPOWER

LAY-OFFS AT SYDNEY STEEL PLANT—MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and in his absence I will direct it to the acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that another 170 employees will shortly be laid off at the Sydney steel plant, will the acting Prime Minister tell us if the government intends to come up with some emergency measures to meet the serious unemployment problem in the Cape Breton area.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the presence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I, of course, am concerned about the issue raised by the hon. member. As he knows we have manpower consultative services which are always available to meet situations such as this, and those services most assuredly will be made available. My people will be looking into it, probably in concert with management and labour in that particular industry.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, in view of this approaching lay-off will the Minister of Manpower and Immigration announce early next week the amounts of training and re-training funds his department will be making available. Would he also consider once again putting additional LIP funds into that area immediately, since the people in the area had this program slashed so badly this year, in order to prevent the area from suffering a further serious collapse?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, as in each LIP program some funds have been leftover—I believe "slippage" is the word used—where possible we try to put them into an area, such as the hon. member suggests, when something occurs between the time the level is set and the lay-off takes place.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—INQUIRY IF REPORT ON IMPORTS WILL BE TABLED

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary.

Because of the very difficult situation in which the textile industry finds itself, would the parliamentary secretary give the House some information about the real situation with regard to imports? In addition, has the commission responsible for supervising those imports recently made a report on the situation and, if so, could that report be tabled in the House?

If, however, it is impossible to give a reply to my question today, I would appreciate good note being taken of it and a reply being given to it next week.

[English]

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the total question. Rather than have the hon. member repeat it, I will take notice of it and bring it to the attention of the minister.

An hon. Member: What will you take notice of if you did not hear it?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE USE BY FRANCE OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON TO EXTEND TWO HUNDRED MILE FISHING ZONE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked by my colleagues of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was the minister, in his talks with French officials, given the assurance, since they declared the 200 mile economic zone back in July, that they would not use St. Pierre and Miquelon to extend the 200 mile limit around these small islands which would interfere with any negotiations that would take place?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all, France has not as yet declared a 200 mile economic zone. However, on Wednesday of this week a statement was released by the European Economic Community indicating that there had been agreement within the community to a total extension by all the countries involved. In so far as the two islands are concerned, there is no suggestion that the French government would seek to extend the 200 mile zone around the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon in the sense that the hon. member has mentioned. Apart from everything else, I would have to fight that vigorously because I would lose most of my good constituency in the process.

Mr. Marshall: Even though the minister might lose his constituency—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He will lose it anyway.

Mr. Marshall: —St. Pierre and Miquelon are a French department and a member of the Common Market. They could extend their zone legally and the French could use it as a weapon in further negotiations. The minister did not answer my question. Was he given the assurance that they would not use that as a weapon to extend the 200 mile limit?

Mr. Jamieson: No, I was not given that assurance because, quite honestly, the issue never arose. I think there was a general assumption on all sides that this would not be the case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on.

● (1130)

Mr. Jamieson: Hon. members should let me answer the question. I was there, I know what happened, and I would be glad to tell the House, if hon. members do not mind listening.

Mr. Paproski: Don't get testy, Don.

Mr. Jamieson: What I said, in seeking to answer the hon. member as fully as I could, was that on neither side was there the slightest suggestion that St. Pierre and Miquelon would be regarded as being part of the position of the European Economic Community. In answer to those who ooh and aah about it, I made it perfectly clear to the French government that there was no willingness on Canada's part, and in fact there would be total resistance if there were any effort to seek to change a Canada-France bilateral arrangement into one which entitled the European Economic Community as a whole to some kind of privilege. That was made perfectly clear in the discussions.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEASURES TO GIVE BLIND PEOPLE BETTER STANDARD OF LIVING

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The recent report by Professor Cyril Greenland, who was commissioned by the minister's department and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind to study the problems faced by blind people in Canada, states that more than half the blind people of working age exist at substantially less than the officially accepted levels of poverty and also that the CNIB has lost much of its ability to meet the needs of the blind. When will the minister be making a statement as to what he and his department intend to do to correct this serious situation and to give blind people in Canada the same chance of a good life as other people have?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the report has been received by myself, as well as by the CNIB. I would point out that most of the recommendations in the report are addressed to the institute, and I am advised that it has taken steps to put into effect the recommendations involving the institute itself.

As far as the department is concerned, I am glad to hear the suggestion of the hon. member that we should do more for low income people, particularly blind and disabled people. I hope that his side of the House will support any proposals for a form of guaranteed income and expanded social services for people on low incomes in this country.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ESTABLISHMENT OF SINKING FUND FOR LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I would like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the rather bizarre presentation of figures by the Minister of Public Works during a press conference yesterday in which he attempted to leave the impression that an admitted government commitment to pay $510 million to Campeau Corporation over the next 35 years would only cost the government $142,517,021, would the President of the Treasury Board indicate if he subscribes to this view, and would he indicate if the government has actually set up a $142,517,021 sinking fund with respect to the Campeau Hull project to which the Minister of Public Works referred and which is apparently a critical part of his thesis?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before I go into that kind of detail, I would like to refresh my memory as to exactly what was said and as to all the facts.

Mr. Stevens: In view of the possible new breakthrough in handling government commitments discovered by the Department of Public Works as revealed yesterday, is the President of the Treasury Board aware that if the $142,517,021 referred to by the Minister of Public Works in his press conference were held at 10 per cent interest for 70 years, and not just the 35 years suggested by him, it would be sufficient to pay off the entire national debt, and if so, does the minister intend to liquidate the nation's debt in this way?

Mr. Andras: I must admit I had not thought of that fascinating possibility.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to direct my final supplementary to the Acting Prime Minister. As the Minister of Public Works apparently has not impressed his colleague the President of the Treasury Board with his new mathematics, would the Acting Prime Minister indicate if in fact the theory advanced yesterday by the Minister of Public Works was advanced in the hope that he might be swept into the leadership of the Social Credit Party at its forthcoming convention?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

HEALTH

BASIS ON WHICH CANADIAN DECISION ON RED DYE IN FOODSTUFFS DIFFERENT FROM THAT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We were informed some time ago that the food and drug agency in the United States of America banned certain red dyes for foodstuffs, et cetera. The minister has informed this House that Canadian officials and our food and drug agency do not agree with this decision and have not banned certain red dyes for foodstuffs in Canada. In the interests of the Canadian consumer, aside from verbally assuring the House that there has been a difference of opinion between our agency and the agency in the United States, will the minister make public in detail—and I emphasize in detail—the basis upon which our officials made their decision which was different from that made in the United States?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, within the hour the hon. member will receive extensive bibliography, text and literature on this whole subject which I expect will keep him busy for the next two months. I certainly would have no objection to making it available to anyone else who is interested. The bibliography will be in his hands some time today, and I wish the hon. member good luck with it.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DATE ON WHICH MEASURES APPLYING TO INTERNATIONAL BOYCOTTS APPLICABLE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his statement on October 21 about the policy of the government on the Arab and other international boycotts he said that the government would be denying its support and facilities to Canadian firms involved in boycott undertakings and that all Canadian firms would be required to report to the government any compliance by them with such boycott provisions. However, later he confirmed to me that these measures were not being put into effect that day, and he did not indicate a date for them to start, so I want to ask the minister whether these two measures are now in operation in all federal government departments, agencies and Crown corporations, and if so by what mechanism? If not, exactly when will they be put into full and meaningful operation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, having just returned yesterday I am not sure whether all agencies, Crown corporations et cetera have been fully advised as to the mechanisms. I do know that immediately after making my announcement in the House I had discussions with legal people in the department, and I also understand that they had some with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to work out the mechanics of the implementation of the policy. If the hon. member will permit, I will check on it again today and find out if it is fully in place or how long it is likely to take to get the regulations published and the information disseminated.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REASON INCOMES OF PROFESSIONALS ALLOWED TO EXCEED GUIDELINES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked a question which was not answered due to the unfortunate absence of the Minister of Finance. I would like to direct a question to him now arising out of the first report of the Anti-Inflation Board, which shows that between the base period and the reporting period the average income of professional individuals increased by $4,900, which is more than double the $2,400 per year prescribed by the Anti-Inflation Board. It also shows that the three leading groups were engineers, who exceeded by $7,700, dentists by $6,700 and lawyers by $5,100. I want to ask the minister if there is any explanation for this failure to enforce the $2,400 increase allowed to professionals and what action the AIB proposes to take to deal with this situation.

● (1140)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is an explanation for it. The first reporting period was the year 1975, in respect of which only two and a half months were under the anti-inflation program. With a number of the professions cited by the hon. gentleman, such as dentists, the fee increase had come into effect earlier in the year 1975, before the anti-inflation program was in place so the figures indicated in that report covered a year of which more than three-quarters had elapsed before the program came into effect, thereby causing the difference in the increase over the program limits. I might comment that this indication of substantial increases in professional income is just further evidence of the extent to which additional income costs were being pushed through the economy to people who have to pay before the control period commenced.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. May I point out first of all that if the reporting period is not for all of 1975, surely the base year must have been 1974. I want to ask the minister why it was not possible to make the reporting period the last 2½ months of 1975 which would have given an accurate picture, and why it is not possible to give an interim report for the first six months of 1976 as was done in the case of the reports on the interim excess revenue received by business companies who report to the Anti-Inflation Board?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would have to confirm this with the board, but my expectation would be that individuals in this case—and we are talking about individual professionals as well as many firms—who would normally report on a full year basis do not have the same facilities as corporations to make quarterly reports as companies customarily do through stock exchanges to their shareholders. The first period of control is therefore just for 2½ months, and it was not possible, I take it, to segregate that 2½ month period in 1975 from the whole year in which the income was reported.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that a number of professionals who work for municipalities and public institutions have been required to return money which they received in excess of the $2,400 allowable maximum; and in view of the fact there seems to be no mechanism clearly established for imposing this provision with respect to professional firms and individuals reporting, does it not become increasingly apparent that the Prime Minister was quite right in 1974 when he reiterated again and again that while it was possible to impose controls on wage and salary earners it was virtually impossible to impose controls on professional groups, profits and dividends? Is it not time the minister gave to the House a clearcut formula by which this requirement can be applied to professionals or admit that this part of the program is simply a charade?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is going too far with his final words. It certainly is more difficult to apply the controls on the many thousands of professionals and their incomes in comparison, for example, with the larger economic aggregates, such as the major corporations. Notwithstanding that, I think it is in the interests of the equity of the program to try to maintain the restraint as well on professional incomes. I think the hon. gentleman's comments highlight the importance of imposing restraints on the professional sector as well as on management and organized labour.

* * *

PARKS CANADA

POSSIBILITY CORNWALL OFFICE TO BE MOVED—CONSULTATION WITH MEMBER FOR STORMONT-DUNDAS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is there any truth to the stories that the Parks Canada installation at Cornwall, Ontario is to be moved from that city in eastern Ontario to some other part of Ontario?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there was a plan to move the present regional office which was for Ontario and Quebec and was situated in Cornwall, to Guelph and Quebec City. What was one region serving Quebec and Ontario was to be split into two regions covering Quebec and Ontario with a regional office in Quebec City and one in Guelph. That was the plan set up some time ago and as far as I know that is the present plan.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question. Can the minister tell the House whether there was consultation with the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas with respect to the move and if there was did he approve of that move which is part of the relocation program of the government? I particularly ask the question in view of the reports of the protest that was lodged with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce by his parliamentary secretary against the public service move and requesting that construction of additional office accommodation be stopped. Obviously, he was not consulted by his own minister, but was the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas consulted and did he approve?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if he was consulted because I was not minister at the time. I can tell the hon. member, however, that the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas has asked me to reconsider the move and try to keep the office in Cornwall.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED REQUEST OF MR. POULIN THAT CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL OFFICE SPACE BE STOPPED

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should now like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I hope he can answer it. Can the parliamentary secretary tell the House whether his minister has received his letter of protest with respect to the movement of public servants to Hull or elsewhere in Canada, a letter which also requests that construction of additional office accommodation be stopped until the requested information is received? Has the minister indicated to him that he is prepared to act upon his request?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I might say with respect to the general matter of decentralization of government services from Ottawa to other parts of the country that both in my election campaign in 1972 and also in 1974—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have been getting closer and closer to some very dicey ground in the asking and answering of questions in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has indicated that he retains responsibility for the decentralization program. The question is therefore properly put to him and I presume properly put to his parliamentary secretary. However, the answer would have to relate to the minister's responsibility for decentralization and not the parliamentary secretary's responsibility as the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, with respect, my riding is Ottawa Centre and not Ottawa West. I was answering the question and the preamble put to me by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I did have occasion and did support the policy at that time. The policy is one that would be for the benefit of Canada. If the hon. member will read my letter very closely, the direction of the complaint was more to the Minister of Public Works with respect to the vacancies which would occur in the community as a result of movement to Hull and elsewhere in Canada. As far as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned, I have consulted with him on this matter and he has said he will discuss it with me further upon his return to Ottawa next week. He has suggested that he and I meet with the mayor to discuss this very urgent problem at the earliest possible time.

* * *

BANK ACT

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF REVISIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance? Given that the Bank Act will expire next June 30, and given the concern of Canadians as evidenced by the many briefs submitted in response to the white paper as well as the normal length of time needed for passage of new legislation, may I ask when the revisions to the Bank Act will be presented to the House so that the detailed process can be completed in time to avoid the many extensions of the Bank Act that were necessary between 1964 and 1967?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman may know, a deadline of October 15 was set for public reaction to the white paper on banking. The reactions we have received are now being taken into account in the drafting process and we would expect that by mid-December it would be possible to give the bill first reading. I was therefore pleased to learn that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has agreed upon a tentative timetable which will make it possible for all stages of the Bank Act to be dealt with by June 30, 1977.

* * *

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF STATEMENT ON EXPORT OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the minister intend to make a statement around 12.30 p.m. today about export hydro-electric power in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board will be making a release at about that time.

An hon. Member: Why not here?

An hon. Member: What is the matter with the House of Commons?

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PAYMENT OF COSTS FOR MR. OUELLET CONTEMPT OF COURT PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister advise whether the federal government or the Quebec government has taken up the account for the Ouellet contempt of court proceedings set in motion by Mr. Justice Mackay of the Superior Court of Quebec or, alternatively, is each side leaving it up to a judge to spend about half of his gross pay for a year, to protect the honour of the Canadian legal system?

• (1150)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I gather that when the hon. member says "taken up" he refers to payment. I can only speak for the federal government and the answer is no.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I will, however, present a motion on Monday which may solve this miserable situation.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA TEACHERS BE ALLOWED TO STAND

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the retroactive nature of Bill C-16 passed by the government of British Columbia giving the Anti-Inflation Board jurisdiction over British Columbia teachers as of October 14, 1975, although the enabling legislation was not enacted until June 23, 1976, will the minister give special consideration to allowing the original binding arbitration agreement to stand, first in the interest of justice and, second, in order to forestall a complicated legal battle between the B.C. teachers federation and/or the government of British Columbia and/or the government of Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to advise the hon. member that the Anti-Inflation Act as it stands on the books really gives no discretion either to the ministry or to the Anti-Inflation Board with regard to this particular settlement. As the hon. member has suggested, there is now litigation underway in the B.C. courts to determine the validity of the retroactive legislation passed by the British Columbia government. I think I am probably constrained by that litigation from making any further comment about that particular settlement.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Is the RCMP investigating the apparent kidnapping of the new Minister of State for Urban Affairs, the hon. member for Papineau, who was named three days ago and has not been seen in this chamber since?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION CANADA SEEKING DESIGN FOR ICEBREAKER IN FRANCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why did the minister feel it necessary to go to France to look for design plans for an icebreaker, as reported in the press, when we have in Canada an acknowledged competence in this particular area of ship design, as in others, a competence that has won us worldwide recognition?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the press report, but if it states anything of that nature, it is totally erroneous. The French government raised with me the possibility of providing a power plant for an icebreaker to be designed and built in Canada. The French government is interested in supplying the power plant for it, as are several governments. It was they who raised the issue and that was all there was to it.

* * *

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

DATE OF FINAL PAYMENT TO FISHERMEN—POSSIBLE EXCLUSION OF SASKATCHEWAN FISHERMEN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries. Is it the intention of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to make a final payment to all fishermen and when will this payment be made? Is it the intention to exclude about 80 per cent of the Saskatchewan fishermen from such final payment?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check into that. However, that is a decision for the board on which fishermen and the provinces are represented. It is a decision they would make, not I.

Mr. Korchinski: How is it that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation can exclude certain fishermen even though they are a part of the total operation? As I understand it, they are being excluded in order to make the cooperatives function rather than have individual fishermen receive a greater return.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am not acquainted with the proposal or the fact. I have not checked into this. The groups could or could not be excluded. I repeat, the matter of final payment and redistribution of money of the corporation is a matter for the board to decide. The board has fishermen representatives and provincial government representatives. I do not run the board from this office in Ottawa.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF NORTH-SOUTH CONFERENCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It follows the answer he gave yesterday to the Leader of the Opposition. As a result of discussions that have been going on between him and the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning who will take parliamentary responsibility for CIDA, can the minister now confirm that he will take this responsibility in order to ensure consistency in government policy in harmonizing the work of CIDA with the North-South Conference and will the minister press for an extension of the North-South talks because of the change in the United States presidency?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): On the first point, Mr. Speaker, the situation has not changed since my answer yesterday. With regard to the extension of the North-South dialogue in Paris, it is too early for me to draw conclusions as to whether it would be good to extend the conference into next year. Obviously, because it is a conference that operates on concensus, the group of 19 would have to be involved in any decision to extend. I expect to be seeing my fellow co-chairman a week from next Monday, and I will have discussions along those lines with him.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF STOCK CARS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport or the acting Minister of Transport. It relates to an extreme railway stock car shortage in western Canada during the peak shipping season of calves to Ontario. In view of the results of a personal survey of this situation conducted yesterday, indicating severe shortages of stock cars sufficient to further depress the western calf market, and in view of serious delays in turn-around time for these cars which in turn is related to a cleaning bottleneck in Toronto, will the minister use his good office to inquire into this serious stock car shortage and take whatever steps are necessary to help prevent a further depression of our calf-market in western Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are now in the process of studying the situation and I trust that some time next week we will be able to follow the suggestion of the hon. member.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

[English]

SHIPPING SERVICE TO NORTHERN BRITISH COLUMBIA—NATURE OF RESERVATIONS OF RESIDENTS OF AREA ABOUT NEW SYSTEM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. In his absence, I will direct it to the acting minister, the Minister of Justice. It arises out of the minister's announcement of what he called "improved shipping service to northern B.C.", an improvement which will rely on barges and aluminium hulled boats. The minister in his statement said that the three coastal members of parliament from Coast Chilcotin, Comox-Alberni and Skeena assisted in developing the plan. He acknowledges that "some residents of the area have reservations about the new system". I ask the minister what kind of reservations the residents of the area have about the new system and do the three Liberal members of parliament he mentioned give their full support to the new arrangements?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be—

An hon. Member: Read the Vancouver Sun and see what they have to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If, as the minister says, this arrangement will mean an improvement in services and that he has studied the problems thoroughly as he has suggested, why did Mr. Campbell of his department just two days before these very arrangements were announced see fit to call Northland Navigation and ask them whether they would continue service if the subsidy were reinstated?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, in line with the practice which has been explained many times, I was delighted to see the House leader of the official opposition confirm that practice of asking the parliamentary secretary questions this morning. Questions with regard to transport are being answered by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Speaking for the three members of parliament mentioned, they have been doing and will continue to do an immensely able job as representatives of their constituencies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

● (1200)

ENERGY

MEASURES TO INCREASE CONSERVATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parrry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of a report from the International Energy Agency that in terms of curbing rates of energy demand growth Canada had results below average when compared with other IEA countries, will the hon. gentleman tell the House whether he plans to give home-owners further incentives to retrofit insulation beyond the minimal measures announced thus far?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the report of the International Energy Agency, as I know the hon. member was. I wonder whether he noted that the main criticism levelled at Canada was that our price was too low.

Mr. Darling: Would the minister kindly answer my question, and also the supplementary: in the light of the fact that other countries, such as Japan, have been almost twice as successful as ourselves in curbing their rates of energy demand growth, will the hon. gentleman heed the agency's stricture that our transportation and industrial conservation programs need a good deal of strengthening?

Mr. Gillespie: We have taken a lot of measures with respect to conservation. We have removed the sales tax from insulation materials. We have taken steps to devise mandatory standards which will lead to a reduction of the amount of gasoline used by automobiles in Canada; we have embarked upon a whole series of measures which I would be happy to describe to the House again on another occasion. With regard to the whole question of standards, and particularly with regard to the question concerning incentives to retrofit, I can tell the hon. member that the National Research Council is presently carrying out a massive study in this field. We shall shortly be publishing new standards and I very much hope the provinces will adopt those standards, because responsibility with respect to insulation standards clearly rests with the provinces.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF FRANCE GRANTING COMPENSATION TO MR. McTAGGART FOR ILLEGAL BOARDING OF "GREENPEACE"

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following his return from France I am sure the House is interested to know whether he is continuing the position of his predecessor in espousing the case of David McTaggart in his long struggle for compensation from the French government in respect to the illegal boarding of the Greenpeace during atomic testing in the Pacific. Could the minister advise the House whether he made any representation with regard to McTaggart's case and, if he did, would he tell us what response he received from the French government? Is there any hope that compensation will be paid?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I did raise the issue with the foreign secretary of France. He and I agree, as I believe, incidentally, does the gentleman in question, Mr. McTaggart, that an out-of-court settlement of some kind would be the most appropriate and least time-consuming. I again reaffirmed our desire that a settlement should be made. The foreign secretary indicated to me that he would be in touch with me again in the next little while—he did not give me a time span but I would expect within two or three weeks—outlining the French reaction to my latest submission.

Mr. Leggatt: Was there, during this discussion, an indication from the French government that they intended to intervene by granting compensation rather than allowing the matter to continue to drag through the courts?

Mr. Jamieson: I think that was precisely the point I wished to make with the foreign minister and believe I succeeded in the sense that he did indicate that dragging on this matter in the courts was not the most suitable way of dealing with it. This conclusion having been, more or less, reached, he then said they would make some offer or some response to us. I must qualify that. He did not say "an offer", a response to us within a short time.

Mr. Gillies: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege arises from the answer given me by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and has to do with the right of members of parliament to be informed about major activities of the government of Canada. The minister is, as everyone knows, responsible to parliament for the National Energy Board. It seems to me that when decisions of the National Energy Board are of great importance to all Canadians, it is the responsibility of the minister to get reports from the National Energy Board and bring them to parliament—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: —so that issues of this significance can be debated. The report talked about today is one of great significance. That sort of information, that sort of report, should come to parliament first so that members of parliament may be able to respond to any statements of such importance.

The question I raise and would ask you to rule on, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not members of parliament have a right to be informed of important activities that are administered through an agency of the government in cases where a minister sitting in the House has the responsibility for reporting to parliament on those issues.

Mr. Gillespie: I would ask the hon. member for Don Valley to go back and read the "blues" and take a look at the question he put to me. If he were to do that, he would find he has no question of privilege. He asked me a question and I gave him a straight answer. I think he couched his question in a very poor way. If he had asked me whether I would be prepared to table a report, my answer would have been yes. I am prepared to table that report at any time. The question concerned the announcement of a decision by the National Energy Board. I gave him a straight answer to that question. I shall be pleased to table the report, and I shall do so at the first opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: A question of privilege has been raised by the hon. member for Don Valley. As is often the case, it involves a very important grievance which I am sure many of us regret cannot find correct expression under the somewhat strict procedures governing privilege. Many of us would look for an opportunity for legitimate grievances of this sort to be raised without having to be couched in the guise of a question of privilege. On the other hand, I think everyone recognizes that this important grievance does not, strictly, fall under the definition of a question of privilege and, indeed, no motion is attached which would demand action by the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) promised me that today he would answer the question I put to him about the tanker which recently roamed about in the waters of the Strait of Juan de Fuca. I would like to know whether the minister is now willing to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order. For the second day in a row I gave the floor to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich during the oral question period this morning. Unfortunately, the question period is now over.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion allowing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to table the report of the National Energy Board which I understand is to be released at 12.30 in any event.

Mr. Speaker: One of the forthcoming items under routine proceedings will permit that to be done, if it is the minister's intention.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Hansard, at pages 760 and 761, records a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in which he was seeking the names of acting ministers and second acting ministers in each department of the government. The parliamentary secretary then proceeded to give the House a list of acting ministers.

The question I raised today was intended for the Minister of Transport. In his absence, I directed it to the acting minister. I thought it very fortuitous that in this case the acting minister was affected by the very question I raised, since the matter of shipping is also of interest to him: his riding is Vancouver Centre. However, before he could answer—and I give him credit for rising to answer my question—the parliamentary secretary cut him off at the pass and gave us a departmental answer. I would be very interested to know what the Minister of Justice would have said today in response to my question. Since the question was directed to the acting minister, I do not see why the parliamentary secretary should have the right to cut him off.

● (1210)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, the acting minister did in fact get the floor and indicated in response that he had arranged that the minister's parliamentary secretary would answer the question. He then attempted to add a further remark, which was not accepted as being procedurally correct by the Chair at the time. However, the minister did make a response and indicated that from an informational point of view the answer would be given by the minister's parliamentary secretary. From a procedural point of view, I cannot find a valid point of order against that practice.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF PRESS RELEASES RELATING TO 200-MILE EXTENSION OF FISHERIES ZONE

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I undertook to do during the question period, I should like to table copies of the Canadian and United States press releases relating to the announcement on the extension to 200 miles of the fisheries zone.

Mr. Speaker: Tabling of documents.

Mr. Paproski: Come on, Gillespie, table the document or make a statement.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, with the agreement of the House I will be pleased to table it when I have the document in front of me. I do not have it right now, but if there is agreement and an order can be made, I will table it later this day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister will table the report of the National Energy Board later this day?

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, instead of tabling the document, would the minister be good enough to make a ministerial statement on the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it agreed that the minister shall have leave to table the report later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed, and so ordered.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-22, to amend the statute law relating to income tax.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

PETITION RESPECTING LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the third report of the Clerk of Petitions, stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary the fact that a number of us had questions on the order paper in the last session which died when the session ended. Those questions were sitting for several months on the order paper for last session, not counting the summer recess, and have been refiled. Would the parliamentary secretary undertake to get a speedy answer to those questions which were refiled in the same form in which they were on the order paper in the previous session?

Mr. Goodale: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. gentleman has raised this matter in the House. A number of questions were, indeed, left outstanding on the order paper as the previous session of parliament concluded. As the House will recall, in the final hour of that session the government had a considerable stack of questions answered which could have been dealt with in the normal way in the House of Commons, or tabled. However, the hon. member for Leeds refused the necessary unanimous consent to answer those questions in the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman and many of his colleagues across the way could well have had answers to those questions weeks ago had the hon. member for Leeds not refused the necessary unanimous consent to answer the questions in the fashion we proposed.

The net result is that these questions, some in the same form, others in different form, have been asked again and placed on the order paper. We are proceeding to acquire answers to these questions in updated form so that the information is as current as possible. If hon. members are prepared to accept outdated answers to their questions, we could give them old answers, but obviously they want current, relevant and up-to-date information. We want to give hon. members the best information possible and we are trying to do so as quickly as we can. I would also point out that because of the action of the hon. member for Leeds, the taxpayers of Canada will be put to additional expense.

Mr. Paproski: You are just stalling.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that all questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): moved that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in opening the debate on second reading of the bill, which is not a lengthy bill but a very significant one, I want to take the opportunity of paying tribute to my predecessor, who has now taken over the responsibilities of trade and commerce, for his performance and effectiveness during his regime in this portfolio, particularly in the area of expenditure restraint. This bill is important to that effort, of course.

As I move into a greater awareness of my responsibilities as President of the Treasury Board, I am beginning to realize fully the extraordinary competence with which my predecessor addressed the problems that he faced and which I now inherit. I shall continue to try to perform in the manner he did. I know that the shoes are big to fill, and I realize, based upon my experience as a "line-operating departmental minister", the difficulties of having to deal with one's colleagues and all sorts of meritorious suggestions for the improvement of government programs, policy and services, all of which, of course, also carry with them a dollar figure. The success of my predecessor has, I think, already been apparent and will be more apparent when the full fiscal framework story of 1976-77 is written. Indeed, I can confirm now that he will have been able during his period of the fiscal year to meet his commitments on the kind of restraint figures that he announced in this House.

One of the government measures required to complete that story is passage of Bill C-19. Last December 18, as one of the many steps the government was taking to bring inflation under control, certain reductions in planned government expenditures for the fiscal year 1976-77 were announced. These reductions were categorized as deferrals of planned expenditures, elimination of planned expenditures and elimination of activities. I should like to give some examples of reductions in expenditures. As the House knows, we moved to freeze the salaries of the members of this House, members of the other House, of all judges of the Supreme Court, judges in the Federal Court and provincial superior courts, as well as public servants in the higher-salaried categories. We shall also terminate the program known as Opportunities for Youth and the agencies known as Information Canada and the Company of Young Canadians. This bill contains authority to eliminate in the year 1976 the indexation of family allowances, and also to defer or reduce loans to Crown corporations or require them to obtain their funds from the commercial sector.

● (1220)

The total reduction in planned expenditures for these and many other items was about $1.5 billion, of which slightly more than half is reductions in budgetary expenditures, the remainder being reductions in non-budgetary expenditures. Had these reductions not been imposed, the main estimates which were tabled in the House on February 18, 1976, would have been about $1 billion higher than they were and the capital budgets of Crown corporations, which are approved by orders in council and also tabled in this House, would have been about $500 million higher. The levels of expenditure for some of the items involved in these reductions are regulated by specific provisions in certain acts of parliament. Of course, to effect the reductions it is necessary to amend those provisions.

Hon. members will recall that this bill was first introduced—that is, given first reading—last March, but was not proceeded with prior to the summer recess, or the end of the previous session. Consequently, the bill, with minor revisions, was given first reading again a few days ago, on November 1. The revisions relate to the effective dates for certain amendments. The purpose of the omnibus legislation now before hon. members is to provide the authority necessary for enabling certain planned expenditure reductions to be made. I will try to itemize the intent and major provisions of the bill, although I think most of them are familiar to hon. members.

The bill would amend the Adult Occupational Training Act. Sections 7 and 8 of the act are being repealed and new sections substituted. This change is necessary to eliminate the present statutory requirement for an automatic annual escalation of trainee allowances which have been based, and are still based, on increases in the manufacturing wage index, and to substitute a provision which would permit the setting of these allowances by regulation, without reference to an indexing provision, subsequent to an annual review by the minister. This would come after reference of the matter to cabinet. Under the present act, training allowances are increased annually on July 1 in accordance with the increase in the manufacturing wage index for the previous calendar year.

Another clause of the act deals with the Company of Young Canadians. The Company of Young Canadians Act is to be repealed, and the provisions of the bill provide for the transfer of the Company's assets and liabilities to Her Majesty and for the Secretary of State to administer the closing out of the Company.

The Family Allowances Act, 1973, is to be amended. New subsections are being added to that act so that for 1976 the rates at which the allowance will be paid will be frozen at the 1975 level. It will be made clear that provincial rates for family allowances may be specified by provincial regulations. Other amendments are consequential to those measures, of course. Indeed, as some hon. members noted in the throne speech debate, the indexation of family allowances is planned to begin again on January 1,1977.

The bill will repeal the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. However, before that can be accomplished the act must be amended in order to end the period during which assistance is available for the support of the costs of conducting research and development and to provide that all applications for grants will be cut off as of December 31, 1976. The amendments provide that once the provisions of the act are fulfilled, it may be repealed by proclamation of the governor in council.

The bill also deals with Appropriation Act No. 3, 1970, vote 25 of Supply and Services. This vote was the legislation which set up Information Canada and the vote must be repealed so that Information Canada may be formally abolished. The bill also amends the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Section 41 of the act is being amended so as to authorize my colleague, the Minister of Finance, to postpone crediting amounts in the consolidated revenue fund to the stabilization account until a later date, at which time interest would also be credited.

Mr. Horner: I suppose farmers can postpone their payments, too.

Mr. Andras: Section 272 of the Railway Act is being repealed so as to remove the 1960 ceiling on rates for moving grain and the 1966 ceiling on rates for moving flour for export to an eastern port, and also to remove the subsidy paid to railway companies that allows them to move grain or flour at these rates. My colleague or his representative, the Minister of Transport or his representative, will be elaborating on some of the subsequent arrangements which have been discussed and negotiated for phasing out that program. I will not go into detail at this stage. I might say that several of my colleagues or their representatives will participate in the debate on this omnibus bill. Certain measures will be explained more satisfactorily by representatives of the particular ministry which has direct responsibility for the specific part being considered by the House.

The other elements of the expenditure reduction program announced on December 18 do not require legislation since they were authorized and fall within the scope of executive action. The bill before the House covers matters which require legislative amendment and has been brought forward for debate on second reading.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this bill as revised by the government has finally been presented to the House. It was announced earlier last year. Since then there has been a change of minister and we now have a new President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). The previous bill was a famous non-starter, although it was on the government's list of priorities for action prior to the summer recess. The previous bill was Bill C-87 which, if one ignores some differences in the last clause as to applicability, is essentially the same as the bill now before the House.

As the President of the Treasury Board mentioned, many aspects of a special nature will be dealt with by other ministers. Similarly, many of my colleagues have a special interest in particular clauses. Clause 14 has to do with grain stabilization; other parts of the bill deal with adult training, family allowances, etc. I am primarily concerned with the over-view of government spending and want to put in proper perspective this so-called restraint. Is this restraint? Is it cutting back? Is this cosmetic, or is it merely transferring expenditures from one account to another?

I am thinking of the cutting down of the adult training program. The result will be a greater drop-out rate among student trainees who will then have to go on unemployment insurance or social assistance. From the standpoint of the Canadian public, this is just a reshuffling of cards. There is no reduction in public spending resulting from restraint. We are told there is going to be a reduction of $20 million or so in the capital budget brought about by the elimination of cost of living escalations which are tied in with certain wage rate increases. The net result is that trainees who are at the real subsistence level will find, because of the change in the legislation, that they cannot make it, and will drop out. Then where do they go?

● (1230)

The program was designed to take them off the unemployment rolls. Instead, we will be paying them unemployment insurance, if they qualify, and if they do not qualify they will, unfortunately, have to resort to some sort of social assistance. Now there are more who will drop out and will resort to those two avenues of assistance, their only sources, in order to keep body and soul together. What is not realized, and what should be explained by the government, is that there is this coldly calculated treatment in dealing with people who are in trouble and are merely being shifted through another door. This is not dealing with the problem. It is not a restraint program in any way. It is merely a matter of shunting something to somewhere else where it can be lost. Nothing is being said about reducing payments to the Unemployment Insurance Commission in so far as the federal deficit is concerned.

When we look at the billions of dollars of federal government subsidies to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, one could say there is almost another $20 million which can be lost in those billions. That is precisely what is happening. What I would really like the minister to propose in this particular sector is improvement in long-term planning. The average vacancy rate, representing an actual loss to the manpower retraining scheme, has been in the nature of 17 per cent. In other words, the government of Canada, through its Manpower division, contracts for so much training time either with provincial institutions or others: there is a commitment which has to be met.

On the basis of 1973-74, the vacancy rate for the annual occupational training program was 17.1 per cent. The vacancy rate has not been reduced in the past few years. A vacancy rate of approximately 17 per cent indicates that the government is wasting in the order of $63 million in training time, as well as a comparable amount in training allowances. By an increase in the rates payable to adults receiving training allowances, the total cost of the program could increase but the net loss may decrease due to more individuals remaining for the duration of the program.

The government will not reduce the Canada Manpower budget unless it dramatically decreases its services to the general public and decreases the number of people receiving Canada Manpower training. The individuals now receiving Canada Manpower training require the upgrading allowed under this program, and any reduction in this portion of the Canada Manpower budget will lead to too many unnecessary hardships to individuals who can least afford it. As I pointed out, their only alternative will be to resort to unemployment insurance if they are qualified, and if not qualified, to fall back on social assistance.

The provinces are paying half the social assistance and the government of Canada is paying the other half. It is the little man, the Canadian taxpayer, who wants to see restraint or reduction in government spending programs, because he is the man standing there now with his pockets wide open and empty. Why? I should like to quote from a very authoritative publication, one to which I have resorted on many occasions, National Finances, which is compiled annually by the Canadian Tax Foundation. I will point out the change that has occurred in the past decade, taking into account inflation, the increase in population and the increase in economic activity. Table 2-8, which appears at page 15 of the 1975-76 issue of National Finances, indicates that in the decade 1965 to 1974, inclusive, the share of total government revenue, expressed in percentage of gross national product, went from 30.3 per cent to 40.4 per cent.

We do not yet have the figures for 1975, but the public sector—that is, the productive sector of the country—says that the share of the gross national product which has gone to governments, municipal, provincial and federal, in either direct or indirect taxes has increased by one-third in a decade. We started out with 30.3 per cent, and finished with 40.4 per cent, an increase of 10 percentage points in GNP. Over a decade, that means an increase of one-third. That is part of the problem in Canada. That is part of the problem of inflation contributed to by the federal government of Canada. Many factors lead to inflation, but government unrestrained spending is one of the most serious ones.

● (1240)

In the past decade we saw the pile of resources produced by Canadians, goods and services which have become available to the public sector to spend, go up by one-third. Now we have to sit back and examine the totality of these programs. It is something that we can expect to see in the next ten years. If that rate of expansion of public expenditure continues, we will remember the rate of increase of public expenditure, of GNP, will have been 33 per cent, or one-third, in the past decade. Let us assume that that rate of increase in expenditures continues over the next decade—and there is nothing to suggest that it will go down—then I suggest the word "restraint" may not be applicable. If we go a further third in government spending, we will see that by 1984, eight years from now, almost 54 per cent of the Canadian GNP will fall into the realm of public expenditure.

I am dealing with the rate of increase. If it goes over from one decade to the next without a reduction—in other words, if no restraint is applied—then I suggest that is a possible perimeter of the level of the GNP which the government will take. I strongly assert, and I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) would agree with me, that that would create problems in this country, particularly on the question of investment of capital in productive resources and the rate of return on invested capital which is the greatest stimulant to further investment. For either the renewal of productive resources or the development of further productive resources this would create problems.

Let us consider how the government of Canada will spend its money in 1976 and how its expenditures are projected for 1977, because we now have the estimates before us. I will ask leave, when I complete my remarks, for this table which is compiled from the estimates and the supplementary estimates to form part of the record of today's proceedings. The table was compiled by the Canadian Tax Foundation and I accept responsibility for it. I can table it or read it in its entirety. I ask leave to table it as an appendix to today's Hansard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The document, not being an official document, cannot be tabled, but it can be attached as an appendix to Hansard. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For table referred to above, see Appendix.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I thank hon. members for their consideration; it will make examination of the program that much simpler. The 1976 estimates provided that interest on the public debt be $3,930 million, or 11.3 per cent of federal expenditures. However, in 1977 interest on the public debt will have gone up by $720 million to a total of $4,650 million, or 12.1 per cent of total government expenditures. Under the heading of National Health and Welfare there is to be—this includes old age security, GIS, spouse's allowance, the Canada Assistance Plan, hospital insurance, medicare, family allowances, the health resources fund, and miscellaneous—an expenditure of $9,886.7 million, or 28.5 per cent of the federal expenditures. In 1977 that total will have gone up to $10,881 million, or 28.3 per cent. However, the government of Canada's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund in 1976 is estimated to be $890 million, or 2.6 per cent, but—and this may startle hon. members—the government examines all its factors and says that for 1977 it expects that contribution to be $1,700 million, almost double what it was in 1976, for 4.4 per cent of total government expenditures to meet the deficit in unemployment insurance.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I do not have to go through all the other figures, such as figures for national defence, which are more or less static, unconditional transfers to provinces, which are more or less static; oil compensation payments, with a gentle lowering; manpower training and service allowances, which are static; payments for post-secondary education, which are being frozen and are therefore static; and the bilingualism program, which is also relatively static. The figures for transport are static, including air, water, railways and roads, and others; public works and programs, which is a very small item; and the Post Office, which is going from $896.5 million, or 2.6 per cent, to $1,122 million or 2.9 per cent; Indian Affairs and Northern Development—this is a strange priority—remains static; and agriculture and grains go down.

Mr. Towers: Naturally.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They go down from $957 million to $862 million. Under miscellaneous there is an increase of $600 million, but the percentage is about the same. The total budgetary expenditure at the federal level for 1976 will be just $34.691 billion. In 1977 it is estimated to be $38.417 billion. We here cannot answer for, control or influence the level of provincial expenditures, but if we are talking about restraint in spending programs and the philosophy of government spending programs over-all, I want to reassert what I said earlier about the percentage of gross national product which goes into the public sector: it is a frightening picture. It could be that some of our colleagues in the New Democratic Party will say that it is a glorious picture for them, but the public sector is not producing that GNP.

● (1250)

I want to discuss an area in which we have to re-examine levels of expenditure. The provinces have a clear ride in this area and there is no accountability to the money market. They have accountability to their legislatures for their spending programs, but the money market is something which says where you can get your money. The provinces have the ability to go to the Canada Pension fund and to borrow right up to their level of contributions less a proportion for administrative expenses, but then we see that they are not paying interest. They are supposed to be paying some interest in cash to the Canada Pension fund, but they are not. There is no transfer back from the provinces, though they would have to do so if they were floating bonds on the market among their citizens.

They have been permitted to capitalize their interest payments to the Canada Pension fund; in other words, issue more provincial bonds. That will be all right until 1982, when the cash contributions from the John and Jane Citizens of this country will not cover the payout and there will have to be some realization of assets of the fund in order to cover the payout. There is a day of reckoning, but I suggest that no provincial administration, under this system, feels any restraint because it knows that its citizens are taxed in an indirect way under the guise of the Canada Pension Plan and governments make no contribution to the fund other than as employers.

This money, then, is taken out of the hands of the citizens of a province and sequestered into a fund which is immediately turned over to the province, and that is a source of income. I suggest that instead of starting from square one in finance, the responsibilities of the provinces start from square ten because there is no accountability to anyone with regard to that money, particularly not the money market. If a province had to justify expenditures against its revenue capabilities, the money market would soon tell the provincial treasurers and cabinets where they were overspending. This is very serious and we will have to deal with it. Is the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces serious about their restraint programs, or are they merely shuffling cards?

My colleagues will examine this program, as laid out in Bill C-19, in great detail. I suggest that there is not very much in the bill as far as restraint is concerned. As I said, a good deal of what is contained in the bill is a matter of shuffling cards from one program into another program which is not very readily identifiable. We will examine this bill in detail. I think there will be a long debate on this bill. It merits close attention, although individually the items themselves have not very much import, with the possible exception of clauses 14 and 15. After all, stabilization is merely a postponement of payments; the payments will still have to be made. This bill requires very careful attention. We should be able to analyse the real intent of the government with regard to its restraint on the rim of public expenditure, and I suggest that we must come to grips with the rate of increase of public expenditure.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY

TABLING OF REPORT OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that an order of the House has already been made to allow the Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources to lay on the table a report of the National Energy Board. The parliamentary secretary to the minister is ready to do so at this time. I recognize the parliamentary secretary.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), I have the honour to table the report of the National Energy Board concerning demand, in accordance with the National Energy Board Act of the Quebec Hydro Commission.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House much longer, having made most of my remarks. I wish to draw the attention of hon. members and the public at large, however, to one of the areas in which I feel the government has been extraordinarily shortsighted with regard to the application of this so-called restraint program.

Prior to one o'clock I spent a good deal of my time indicating just how large a chunk of the gross national product the government of Canada was taking. We have seen reports almost ad nauseam in number and in content about the difficulties Canadian industry, Canadian trade and, in fact, the whole Canadian economy is facing at the present time with regard to reduced productivity, our difficulties in selling abroad, our fantastically high wage rates compared to our competitors, and our extraordinarily high unit costs.

When you come down to it—and I do not care whether it is a raw product, a basic resource material, semi-processed, or the most sophisticated piece of machinery equipment or consumer goods—if the price that has to be paid for the continuing production of the commodity is too high for the market, then that is the end of the road. In so many commodities today we have reached the end of the road unless we mend our ways. What are the areas in which Canadian industry, Canadian labour and Canadian government can participate jointly, freely and with enlightened self-interest in each sector? Is it the encouragement and the development of Canadian industrial research? We cannot stand still, Mr. Speaker. What do we see in this bill, however? What is the area in which restraint should be applied? Is it a total wind-down of government assistance in this particular form to industrial development and research?

● (1410)

I suppose that from the bureaucratic point of view there is something to commend this type of close-down. We know all too well that in the insular shell of government administration there is one principle that applies with agonizing repetitiveness. That is, "Not invented here". In other words, we did not think about it, we did not work on it, we did not develop it, and therefore it is no good and should not be allowed. It is a human trait, I suppose, but "Not invented here" or "NIH" has a terrible influence within government administrative circles. The burden is on the minister to indicate that the cost benefit usefulness of this program is wound down; that it is completely taken out of circulation as of December 31 this year. To that extent I put the minister to the proof and I suggest it will likely be the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) who has responsibility for this program.

I do not think the government has made its case with regard to imposing restraint, certainly not restraint in the way I spelled it out. There has been imposed on the government, by its self-discipline, the principle that the rate of increase in the gross national product that is being taken by the government shall be reduced. I have said, and I am sure my colleagues will point it out even more clearly, that this program is just a shuffling of cards. Certain programs that may have a certain identity are cut out and then shuffled to unemployment insurance or here or there. To that extent, the burden of proof is on the President of the Treasury Board and his colleagues. The ministers will defend the particular points put forward in this bill. It is certainly not incumbent upon the opposition to prove that the government is wrong in putting forward the bill in this particular form.

I invite my colleagues and other members of the House to participate in this debate because it goes to the fundamental basis of what this country is going to do in the next ten years.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, in many ways Bill C-19, restraint of government expenditures, should be subtitled "a Tory conversion bill". It contains a whole package of measures for which the Progressive Conservative party has been asking a long time. It shows the kind of trouble that Liberal governments get themselves into when they do not have the NDP around to kick them in the shins once in a while. As long as we were around and they were in a minority position, we could kick them in a progressive direction. However, the terrible misfortune of a majority government befell them in the last election. Therefore, they do not have anyone to straighten them out from time to time and they tend to respond to the blandishments of the Progressive Conservative party in their posture of restraint. It would not be so bad if my friends to the right were grateful, but they are not. They are not showering the government with any laurels for this bill. I think of one item in particular.

During the last campaign, the Conservative platform was strongly loaded in the direction of cutting back government expenditures. We asked the Conservative candidates what kind of government expenditures they would cut out. We asked whether they would cut out family allowances or old age pensions. To their credit, they were in favour of family allowances and old age pensions. As it turned out, the only thing they would only cut out was Information Canada. Information Canada was the great villain of the last election campaign. The government has cut out Information Canada in this bill. As I say, I see no gratitude on the part of my friends on the right. As a matter of fact, when the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) spoke, he did not even have the courtesy of mentioning that Information Canada was one of the items being cut out.

Hon. friends to my right are all for getting rid of government programs. They say they want to get rid of useless government programs, not the good ones. However, it is always difficult to determine what they consider useful and what they consider useless. Let me give one example that was framed by the hon. member for Edmonton West in his address to this House. He seems to regret that the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act is being cut out, despite the fact it is not being cut out because the government is trying to save money. My understanding is that they have not been able to give away any money under that act, so they might as well get rid of it. Our position would be that if you cannot encourage industrial development or industrial research with those kinds of provisions, you encourage it under some other provision. We are not going to fight in favour of keeping an item for which there is obviously no earthly use.

I listened very carefully, in the hope that I would get some advance support on a very important item that is being cut out. Of all things the government chooses to cut out in a year when people in Canada are experiencing great difficulty, they pick on family allowances. This is the great beast to which the government is going to apply the axe. I had hoped that some word in defence of the indexing of family allowances would have come from my friends to the right. After all, they were in favour of indexing. They wanted to index the Income Tax Act. Not only did they want to, but they were so successful that they persuaded the government to act in a Tory way and index the Income Tax Act, in spite of the knowledge that indexing income tax is of infinitely greater benefit to those who have a lot of money than to those who have not. They are in favour of indexing the Income Tax Act, removing hundreds of millions of dollars from the government. The way in which that loss of revenue will be made up is by depriving people who receive family allowances of the benefits of indexing.

That is a very nice trade-off, obviously one which we in this party cannot possibly agree with. However, in the criticism of this bill by my friends to the right, there was not a single word about what the government is doing with family allowances. That is particularly criminal with a measure of this kind, considering an ad that appeared in a morning newspaper placed by the Citizens' Coalition. It is a horrible ad and I do not agree with the conclusions, but there is an element of truth in it. The ad set out to attack the indexing of public service pensions. That was the whole purpose of the advertisement—to attack the idea of indexing civil servants' pensions, despite the fact that the indexing provision is part of the total passage on the basis of which salaries are negotiated.

● (1420)

What will make it difficult for this government or any other government to justify the indexing of civil servants' pensions is the fact that a decision has been taken to remove the indexing provision as it applies to family allowances. Before this decision was made we pointed out, when this question of the indexing of civil servants' pensions was raised, that old age pensions were indexed, that parliamentary allowances were indexed and that income tax allowances were indexed. We were able to point out that a broad range of people benefited from indexing, not just civil servants.

But what has happened now? The government has an instinct for self-destruction which is almost impossible to credit. It is in serious trouble now, yet it goes to great pains to make matters even worse. At a time when members of parliament are under attack for the indexing of their pensions, the government does away with the indexing of family allowances. Who benefits, in the main, from family allowances? It is true that some of them go to well-off people, but it is the poor, with large families, who benefit most substantially. We retain the principle of escalation as it applies to members of parliament and public servants, but we remove it in the case of people in receipt of family allowances. Aside from the unconscionable nature of an act of this kind, its stupidity cannot be overlooked. Yet not one word has been said by hon. members to my right condemning this effrontery toward recipients of family allowances, or criticizing the government because these people have been singled out to bear the brunt of the cuts the government believes to be necessary during a period of restraint.

I listened to what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton West about the way in which government expenditures are increasing. In fairness to him, the federal government, whose share of the gross national product has increased, if I remember the figures he used correctly, from 30.3 per cent ten years ago to 40.4 per cent today, was not his only target. He deplored that increase. I wonder what the comparable figures for the hon. member's native province of Alberta would be, because in that province the increase in government revenues has been phenomenal. Who is paying this tax which accrues to the coffers of Alberta? Other Canadians. I am not implying that Alberta is being unfair; the province is not charging the world price. We have been able to persuade Alberta, by one means or another, to keep its price below the world price. But be realistic. What we are seeing here is a transfer of income from one group of Canadians to another.

Would the hon. member propose that this accidental increase in the price of oil, this increase which has nothing to do with the skill or intelligence of the oil companies, should all go to the credit of those companies? His figures would then look somewhat better, and instead of saying that over the last ten years the federal share of the GNP had increased from 30 per cent to rather more than 40 per cent, he would be quoting a final figure of, say, 38 per cent because the other 2 per cent had gone into the pockets of the oil companies. I make these comments to illustrate how ridiculous it is to use figures of this kind when comparing the proportion of the gross national product taken by the public sector as against the private sector, without directing attention to the use being made of these moneys.

If, for example, the share taken by the private sector was unusually large and it was being used for frivolous purposes, would that have been satisfactory? If the share taken by the public sector was used, as it is used, in supplying hospitals, education, medical services, and so on, is that bad; or if it is used to make oil compensation payments for the benefit of people who live in one part of Canada as opposed to another. I am sure the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield)—who I see in his place—is concerned about the difficulty in which oil consumers in his province now find themselves and what would be likely to happen if those compensation payments were reduced or removed as the government is threatening.

Is the expenditure we are talking about so terrible, or is it merely a reflection of the fact that we are living in a society which has become somewhat more sensitive to the needs of particular groups of Canadians, to the need for sharing? As the percentage of government expenditure increases by comparison with private expenditures, what really happens is this: a redistribution of income is taking place in a manner different from the way in which redistribution is brought about in the marketplace. Most people, I believe, would agree that the redistribution which takes place through the government sector is considerably fairer and, very often, more useful and more humane than the other approach.

There is a perverse logic to Bill C-19. It is difficult for me to look at the title without feeling anger. The title is "Restraint of government expenditures". The reverse logic is that there are a number of government programs involving both expenditure and taxation which have proven to be both costly and ineffective. Yet there is not a word in the bill about the cancellation of those programs.

Let me refer to the accelerated depreciation allowances which are now part of the Income Tax Act, or to the provisions for the reduction of corporation taxes which are now part of that act. When these measures were introduced, we were told they would increase employment opportunities. That was the argument advanced in justification of those measures. While this meant that personal income tax payers would have to assume a heavier share of the burden of being citizens of Canada, that was the reason given. What are the facts? What does the record show? Almost from the day these measures were brought in, unemployment in Canada has been increasing, until today the unemployment figure has reached almost 700,000, the highest since the great depression. Where are all these give-away programs, these billions of dollars in forgone revenue designed by the government to create employment? Despite these programs, investment is at a new low. The companies who received these benefits were asked to comment and state the extent to which they had been able to increase employment as a result. The answer was that it was negligible: employment was not increasing as a result of these benefits.

● (1430)

If you want to exercise restraint, Mr. Speaker, you should look at programs that have proven to be ineffective, and cut them. But no, the government uses a different logic. If you dispensed with indexation of family allowances, this would save the government $230 million a year. Those who have examined the economy of this country have pointed out that one reason Canada has had a less severe recession than the United States is that consumer purchasing power has been maintained. Family allowances and indexed family allowances are part of that purchasing power and have contributed toward saving us from an even worse recession than the one we are now experiencing. This is not true of the example I gave of the corporate tax benefits, yet this is the program that is being cut.

Take another case of perversity. I can understand the government's cutting out Information Canada; it had to make a response. This was the great bête noire of the Progressive Conservative party, and since it is now government policy to try to outdo the Tories and be more Tory than the Tories, it had to get rid of Information Canada. It is not that anyone really believes that this will do much good, or that this is a real cut, or that the expenditures made on Information Canada will not be made in some other department or area, or that some other functions that were performed by Information Canada will not be performed in some other area.

Let me go to one other item, the Company of Young Canadians. This is being cut. I know it has been a very controversial body, but it was designed to be controversial. When the CYC was set up, it was designed to be a trouble-making organization; it was designed to be anti-establishment; it was designed to stimulate activity. You cannot do this without making some mistakes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was designed to afflict the comfortable.

Mr. Saltsman: It was designed to afflict the comfortable. My hon. friend still retains some of that fine biblical language that did him credit in his earlier years. To afflict the comfortable is a good thing to do, and the Company of Young Canadians did it. We are going on a great, big budget-cutting kick. We are going to save money out of some $35 billion. What is going to be cut out?

Mr. Brewin: They are not going to cut out the Orion.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Saltsman: That is right, they are not going to cut out the Orion. They are going to take $3.7 million from the Company of Young Canadians. I do not want to get into the bad habit of some former Liberal cabinet ministers and ask, "What's a million?" or "What's $3 million?"

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And they cannot say it's peanuts any more.

Mr. Saltsman: They cannot say it's peanuts any more, either, because that would be a sort of international insult. It is getting tougher and tougher, Mr. Speaker, to make a speech with all these limitations being placed on a person. The Company of Young Canadians did, I think, a remarkable job with that kind of budget. Their budget was pared from the previous year's budget of $5.9 million in 1975-76, which was a little more than the budget of 1974 and 1973. They employed persons of an age and category who represented the most difficult challenge to employment. Among the young people of Canada the rate of unemployment is at least twice as high as that of other groups.

To what extent, Mr. Speaker, is this going to be a real saving? We are cutting out $3.7 million, or $5.9 million, depending on which year's budget you are looking at. But how much will be a real saving? These kids were operating at barely above minimum wage, and considering some of the hours they were putting in, they did not even get minimum wage. It is not as if there is alternate employment for them. If we had an economy that was fully employed, or if we had a tremendous labour shortage, we could well say that this was a direct saving because these people could work somewhere else and thus save the federal budget money. But this is not going to happen, Mr. Speaker. There are far less than 100,000 jobs available for the 700,000 people who are unemployed, so at the very best, using outside figures, the prospects of a young man of this sort finding employment are 1 in 14. Even though 1 in 14 may find employment, the others will have to be sustained, probably by unemployment insurance or some other kind of support program. So what is saved by this kind of magnificent gesture? However, what is lost, Mr. Speaker, is significant. What is lost is a group of young idealists who did an effective job. It was not a job with which I always agreed. As a matter of fact, on many occasions I was critical of some of the work they did. Nevertheless it was one of the most idealistic and activist groups that we had in this country. We could not stand it; we had to kill it off in the name of budgetary restraint—I suggest a false name indeed.

Although some of the cuts in the bill had to be made because the funds were not being used effectively, the CYC was effective. It was not costing us a great deal of money. Nevertheless, the government had to put a package together; it had to show it could out-Tory the Tories on this, and this is the result.

To look upon a bill like this as some kind of solution, or even a part solution—I know the government is not claiming that it is the only solution—to the problems afflicting our society is a disgrace. Although these cuts are being made, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is going to bring in the son of LIP, or the son of OFY, or perhaps even the son of CYC. The government are going to bring in another range of programs that perhaps will work under a different minister.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration speaks of enlarging the job opportunities program. How many jobs are going to be created? Not very many. I am not going to knock the program because it does not create that many jobs. If it creates any jobs at all, it is worth while, especially with as many unemployed as we have in Canada. But what we on this side of the House fail to see is any real effort on the part of the government to tackle an unemployment level in this country that is disgraceful.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in Montreal, I think the day before yesterday, and a report appeared in yesterday's Toronto Star headlined "People are not satisfied—and they're right: PM". The report goes on:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau last night pleaded with Canadians to learn once again to trust government—despite its bungling.
>
> Trudeau told more than 1,300 businessmen at the annual convention in Montreal of the Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations that "before we can even begin to solve the problem of your business and our laws, we have to solve a much more basic problem—the understanding between government and the people.
>
> "People are not satisfied, and God knows they have cause not to be satisfied in our country—the way we've bungled things.

● (1440)

I do not condemn such public soul-searching, but there is reason for the present lack of confidence. The Prime Minister's admitting that the government has bumbled is no disgrace. From time to time all governments bumble. But not meaning what he says, that is the disgrace. If the Prime Minister means what he says, if he has really concluded that the government is not performing as it should, we should see evidence of his concern. But there is no such indication. We only see a tendency on the part of the government to run scared to death of polls which show the Progressive Conservative party rising in the public esteem. When this happens, the Liberals traditionally say, "Let's look for someone else's clothes on the clothes' line. We don't like the NDP clothes; let's try on the Tory pants." Unfortunately, such clothes, such ideas, do not fit the Liberals very well; they do not fit the Tories well, either. That is the bumbling Liberal way for solving these dilemmas and, not surprisingly, the situation remains a shambles. The government still does not know how to curtail unemployment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tory pants could turn out to be bloomers.

Mr. Saltsman: If the Prime Minister is sincere in what he says about this government's bungling and wants to change things, he must act positively. Incidentally, I should like to address my remarks particularly to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is present in the chamber and has said some of the things I am about to say. If we are worried about our future, we must be concerned about the present. We know that in the long run unemployment will go away, but I do not like to join John Keynes in what he says about the long run.

We need to solve this country's unemployment difficulties soon. At present there is unemployment, and some time in the future we shall face a labour shortage. Surely the government will not wait to act until that future shortage develops. If it waits, it will encounter problems as severe as those it faces today. It seems to me, since fewer young people will be available in the society of the future to do our work, they will need to be exceedingly productive if they are to provide for themselves and those who are retired and are no longer in the work force a decent standard of living.

What am I saying, Mr. Speaker? We must do our best to curtail present unemployment. Many things in this country need to be done, and if we want to ensure a satisfactory future for our society they should be done. For example, factories need to be improved, railways need to be built, we need more storage facilities for grain in order to avoid present boom and bust cycles. We must create the infrastructure which will be needed in the future, and by so doing allow those who want to work the opportunity of working.

I say all this because the costs of unemployment are horrendous, in human as well as economic terms. Last year by reason of unemployment we lost more than $6 billion worth of goods and services. Tax revenues have been curtailed. In addition to individual contributions to the unemployment insurance fund of about $2 billion, the government itself had to spend $1.7 billion on the program. As well, the government paid about $2.3 billion for family support and welfare programs. This being so, I cannot understand why the government thinks it is cheaper not to be involved in public projects. Why is it on this kick of cutting government expenses? The inevitable result will be horrible losses in the gross national product or, putting it another way, a decline in the output of goods and services.

Apparently the government is cutting expenses for the cosmetic effect. The government is bowing to Conservative pressure. That will be the perceived reason for its action. Certainly, it cannot be defended in logic. The government will be seen as waffling back and forth. People will say that it is not sticking to traditional Liberal party programs; it is trying to be a shadow Conservative party. Therefore people will say, "If the Liberals want to be shadow Tories, we might as well move to the genuine article and vote Tory. We might as well have the real thing."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Liberals do not have very far to go.

Mr. Saltsman: No, the party does not have very far to go. They have gone in that direction. The government must realize that if the society of the future is to be productive, we cannot afford to waste present-day resources. We cannot tolerate high levels of unemployment, and the government's failure to prepare for the future is, in my view, truly disgraceful. In conclusion, I fail to see the logic behind this bill. Since the government had the chance to evaluate the economy this past summer, it must have seen that conditions are becoming worse in fields of employment. Therefore, to maintain purchasing power it could have changed its mind on eliminating the indexation of family allowances. As it is, members of parliament whose pensions will be indexed will find it difficult, if not impossible, to justify the government's decision not to index family allowances.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, although the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) said earlier that the government would cut expenditures by $1 billion in one area and by about $500,000 in another, it is difficult to believe, if one reads this bill, that the reduction in federal expenditures will actually be so great. The government is merely postponing expenditures. There is the suggestion that the 4 per cent federal share of the stabilization fund will not be paid in until it is needed. That makes a mockery of the federal government's previous assurance to farmers that the money would be there. Few farmers will have much confidence in this government.

As mentioned by the previous speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has urged the people of Canada once more to place their faith and trust in the federal government. How can you do that? In one session of parliament the government said that it would invest an amount equal to 4 per cent of gross sales in the stabilization fund and asked farmers to invest 2 per cent: it said, "We will double the amount you invest." Then in the very next session the government brought in a piece of legislation which stated that it would not put that 4 per cent into the stabilization fund. But we are to rest assured that it will be a bookkeeping entry and that the interest rate will be figured out on the books, and that if it is necessary to draw on that fund, the government of Canada will find the money somewhere.

● (1450)

Let us assume there is a huge reduction in the sale of grain, or that the price comes down substantially and the fund has to be drawn upon the extent of $1 million or $1.5 million. The government then would be tempted to do some accounting so that it would not have to come up with the money, particularly if it were after an election. If it were just before an election, the government would come up with the money somehow or other. This is the reason for the feeling of uneasiness and distrust which people have. It is to be merely a bookkeeping entry and there will not be any saving of money. It is merely a postponement. But through postponement the trust that the Canadian farmers are being asked to place in the government will be destroyed. The Canadian farmer is reluctant to join the stabilization plan because of the distrust of the federal government which they have had for years. There is ample reason for that distrust.

The bill goes on to deal with the Company of Young Canadians, family allowances and a number of other items. I should like to deal more particularly with the "at and east" rates which are being done away with in this bill, where it is merely stated that section 272 of the Railway Act will be deleted. This was a guarantee to the maritime ports, particularly the flour milling trade, that flour mills would receive a subsidy for export. Bill C-19 repeals section 272 of the Railway Act which provides a subsidy in respect of the export of grain and flour by Atlantic and east coast ports.

The shippers of the grain and flour had the right approach at the time these rates were made statutory. The Canadian Transport Commission ascertains the compensatory rate, and the government pays the difference to the railways. This is, therefore, an indirect subsidy to the shippers of the grain and the millers. Is it necessary? What is happening to Canada's trade in flour? It is all very well for the former speaker to talk about jobs and employment. If we mill the wheat into flour, this creates jobs in this country and I think it is important that we should do this.

The U.S.S.R. has told the Canadian government that we can very well lose the Cuban flour market if we raise the price of flour or change the flour subsidy. What does the Cuban flour market mean to the Canadian milling industry? It takes about 80 per cent of the flour we mill. This is very well known to the government. One wonders why the government would attempt to change it and save money in this regard, when this fact is well known. I suppose some speaker will tell us that the milling trade will be subsidized in some other way.

In the Railway Act the "at and east" rates are a statutory provision given in essence to the maritime and eastern ports. They are there. They are an assurance, a guarantee and a trust. One cannot build up the trust which the Prime Minister was speaking about, when we have a policy whereby a subsidy can be given to the millers in one year and taken away in the next. Here, again, I point out that the trust is being eroded in respect of the prairie farmers who have a grain stabilization fund. The trust is being eroded in respect of not only the eastern ports. One could continue to set out the whole matter. In the current calendar year, Canadian exports of flour to Cuba will probably represent something in the order of 375,000 metric tons. This will go to Cuba under an agreement made in 1963. The Cubans receive the flour and Russia pays for it. The transaction was made in 1963 and has been quite successful for Canada since that time.

Canadian flour, however, is in competition with Common Market flour and United States flour. The European Common Market heavily subsidizes the export of flour to many of the underdeveloped countries. The United States does not subsidize the export of its flour, but it exports a great deal of flour in the form of aid programs such as public law 480. The removal of the "at and east" rates will increase the cost of Canadian flour by $15 to $20 a ton. This will place us in a very disadvantageous position with regard to maintaining the Cuban market.

Russia has told the Canadian government, through the Canadian Wheat Board, that if the price of our flour goes up too high, they will build flour mills in Cuba, buy our wheat and mill the flour themselves. What effect will that have on the situation in this country? It will not help the situation at all. What has happened in recent years in respect of the whole flour industry? The total world trade in flour has remained relatively constant over the past ten years, at something like five billion metric tons.

The Canadian share of the world flour market has drastically decreased. Ten years ago Canadian millers received something like 18 per cent of the world flour trade. Today that figure is down to 10 per cent even with the advantage of selling flour to Cuba. One must, of course, look at the whole flour industry to see what has happened. Back in 1956, for example, there were 78 flour mills in Canada, and today there are 39. That give one an idea what really is taking place in the milling industry. We are slowly shrinking in our ability to compete throughout the world because of the subsidies of the European Common Market in respect of the flour milling industry and because of U.S. shipments of flour in the form of aid to underdeveloped countries. Canada is not in a very good competitive position.

● (1500)

We should really reconsider Clause 15 of this bill and perhaps even delete it because it is of no advantage to the country as a whole. It does not save us any money, and the government is destroying a little more of the trust which the people have placed in government in recent years. We must try to build up that trust; we must try to build up markets and create jobs in this country.

As I stated, the volume of trade that is available to Canada as a result of the export of flour paid for by the Russians, shipped to Cuba and then distributed by Cuba as assistance to some of the African countries, has been beneficial to the Canadian grain industry, the Canadian milling industry, and to the Canadian ports. The Canadian Wheat Board has been told by the U.S.S.R. grain buying agency that if flour goes up in price, they will stop buying it from us. The agreement stands only as long as the at and east rates are left alone. I know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) can rise in the House and assure us and the milling industry, with whom they have had many meetings, that they will be compensated in another way, but in my view this assurance will not be sufficient to ensure the continuity of the milling industry. You cannot modernize plants and improve their milling capacity on the sole guarantee of a year to year subsidy to a particular plant or port. Also, such a subsidy will establish a precedent. People will be asking themselves which ports will receive such a subsidy—will it be available only to the milling industry in Halifax or to the milling industry all across Canada? The government will have to wrestle with this problem once it grants such a subsidy.

There is also the big danger that if we subsidize the milling industry directly in, say, the Atlantic ports, then the United States, which can and have proven very effectively that they can compete with us—and they are not subsidizing their milling industry directly, although they are assisting it—may well retaliate and start subsidizing their milling industry, thus making if far more difficult for the Canadian milling industry to compete with them.

As we know, 80 per cent of our flour exports go to Cuba. If this bill passes we will be jeopardizing this substantial sale. Maintaining section 272 in the Railway Act and maintaining the Act at and east rates is the anwer. The section does not need to be changed, and it should not be eliminated. Millers know exactly what their situation is and they know whether or not they will get the subsidy from one year to another. Granting such a subsidy is a dangerous game. This is not the way to encourage capital expenditures. The milling industry cannot afford the risk of a change of mind by the government.

If the competitive position of Canadian flour is reduced by $15 to $20 per ton, the outlook is for an immediate reduction of exports to markets other than Cuba, and the reduction of exports to that market beginning in 1977, not somewhere down the road but in the very near future. It is more than likely that in the longer run Cuba will either expand its milling capacity and reduce imports to minimal levels, or else turn to other suppliers. The resultant loss of export markets will cause tremendous rationalization to take place in the milling industry and require the industry to close several mills.

As I said earlier, back in 1956 there were 78 milling plants in Canada; today there are 39. How much further can we retrench? We have already lost a large percentage of the world's flour market. Ten years ago we captured 18 per cent of it. The flour market has not shrunk, but our share of it has fallen. Today we are capturing less than 10 per cent of it, even with the record shipments to Cuba of 375,000 tons this year. In my opinion it behooves the federal government, in an inflationary period and in a period of high unemployment in regions of Canada where we have consistently had what one might call higher unemployment than acceptable, to do everything it can to maintain the industry instead of allowing it to be destroyed, something which may well happen as a result of the elimination of Section 272 from the Railway Act.

I know that the government will say that it will subsidize the milling industry directly, but the whole purpose of Bill C-19 is to reduce expenditures. If the government is to subsidize the milling industry directly, why do so through Bill C-19, the purpose of which is to reduce expenditures? One can believe that there is no real reduction if one has faith in the government, but one does not have such faith in the government, nor do the millers have it. They have no confidence that the subsidy will be maintained for any length of time.

It can be argued that, if a fixed subsidy is paid, the millers will tend to use the least costly routes. That is an old argument. One would like to think that the least costly routes are being used right now.

By passing this bill on second reading and sending it to committee we can assure the milling industry that a lengthy and careful examination will be given to this aspect of the bill, because we on this side of the House are mighty concerned with every part of Canada. Maritime members are and were violently concerned about the old bill, Bill C-87, and we thought we had successfully convinced the government to delete Clause 15 of the old bill. It was Clause 15 in the old bill, and it is Clause 15 in this bill. We thought that in the last session we had convinced the government to delete this aspect of the legislation. However, the government continues to plough blindly on, insensitive to the wishes and concerns of the people of the nation, and wonders why it is so unpopular.

● (1510)

The Prime Minister goes across Canada bleating and asking people why they do not like him. People in every region of Canada do not like him because he has demonstrated insensitivity to their concerns. This bill is a prime example of that insensitivity, and so is the repeal of section 272. We thought we had the government convinced that it could not proceed in this manner, but it is obvious we were not successful.

The Russian bargaining agency has told the government that it will cease to buy if flour rates go up. It has told the government that Russia will build a milling industry in Cuba to mill our wheat, the thing we should be asking them not to do. We should be maintaining our industry, particularly in areas where unemployment has been a persistent problem.

The government pays no attention to the wishes of the people, and when that happens it is the responsibility of the people to remove the government at the first opportunity. I am certain that that time will not come too soon for the people who are affected by this bill, and one cannot blame them for feeling that way. The Prime Minister can claim that he is unpopular because he is French and he promotes the French language, if he likes, but that is not the reason at all. He is unpopular because he is insensitive to the wishes and needs of people in every region of Canada.

The government could boost its popularity a great deal if it proceeded step by step, and one of the steps I suggest would be to agree that Clause 15 should be deleted from this bill. It would be simple to accept such an amendment, and the milling industry would be much happier and have more confidence and trust in the government if the government did so.

That is really all I have to say about Bill C-19. I want to assure the milling industry that we on this side of the House will proceed very cautiously to make certain that that industry is not eliminated, that employment opportunities will continue and, if possible, that there will be a substantial expansion. We hope the Canadian Millers' Association will be called before the committee to present its case so that we can ascertain whether the subsidies with which the government will bait the industry will be ample to maintain its existence. If not, we hope the committee will take action to bring this about.

Certainly for me the essence of governing is creating opportunities for Canadians, not diminishing them. This bill appears to limit the milling industry, which once played a very vital part in Canada and which at one time was competitive throughout the world. Now it is not because the European Common Market is heavily subsidizing its milling industry, and we are placing our milling industry in a disadvantageous position.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) is eagerly taking notes. I hope he has noted my words of caution, because this means a great deal to the grains industry as a whole.

[Mr. Horner.]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy taking part in a debate in this House when I have the opportunity to follow my friend, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), and I hope I can offer to him some of the reassurance which he seemed to be requesting in his closing remarks. I was interested in his very plain spoken statement about the importance to Canada of our trade with Cuba, particularly the importance of our trade in agricultural commodities and, more particularly, flour. I wonder, though, if my hon. friend might not be accused by his colleague, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) of "cuddling up to Castro", in view of the comments he made this afternoon.

Mr. Horner: That is how little you know about it.

Mr. Fairweather: It is exactly the reverse.

Mr. Goodale: There is a double standard on the other side of this Chamber when the right hon. member for Prince Albert can make the kinds of comments he makes in attacking Canada for maintaining trade relations with Cuba and accusing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of all sorts of sinister—

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member insists upon making statements which are completely wrong. When the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister, he continued to trade with Cuba, in spite of urgings from the United States to assist them in their embargo against Cuba. We continued to expand our trade with Cuba, and I do not think my remarks today were in any way—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a point of order but a point of debate.

Mr. Horner: I had to straighten him out.

Mr. Goodale: My friend has again highlighted the very inconsistency on the other side about which I was just talking. On the one hand the right hon. member for Prince Albert can be as critical as he was of the Prime Minister and of his visit to Cuba on trading and diplomatic matters earlier this year, and at the same time the hon. member opposite can applaud the trading relations Canada has traditionally enjoyed with Cuba. I suggest that that is a gross inconsistency which neither the right hon. member for Prince Albert nor the hon. member for Crowfoot can explain away as simply as the hon. member has just tried to do. That is an inconsistency which I think it is impossible for them to justify.

In any event, in a moment or two I would like to deal with the concern the hon. member for Crowfoot expressed about the milling industry in Canada, but as I begin my remarks I want to deal specifically with another provision in Bill C-19, the one relating to the western grain stabilization plan, which proposes to amend Section 41 of that plan. I think to understand the impact of this clause it is important to understand one or two basic points about the mechanical operation of the western grain stabilization plan. It is a mechanism which is now in place to provide a way whereby the incomes of western grain producers can be cushioned against the jolting, recurring impact of the fluctuations in grain receipts which are so painfully familiar to many of us from western Canada.

The technique adopted is the establishment of a western grain stabilization fund. The fund draws revenue from four sources. First it draws from the producers who will be asked to contribute a certain amount of their gross grain receipts annually to the grain stabilization fund. As has been mentioned, this is a voluntary plan, and producers may exercise the option to withdraw, but if they are in it they will be asked to contribute this levy. Second, the Government of Canada contributes to the fund $2 for every $1 the farmer puts into it. Third, when the fund is in a surplus position the government will pay interest on it. Fourth, the Government of Canada backs the grain stabilization fund with a fundamental guarantee of solvency so that it can never run out of money. It will always have sufficient money to pay out to grain producers on those occasions when payments are required.

● (1520)

The amendment proposed in Bill C-19 in so far as it affects the western grain stabilization plan is concerned, allows possible deferment of government contributions to the plan until that money is needed. When it is needed farmers and people in western Canada can be assured that the full amount will be there, with interest as provided in clause 14. The western farmer's position is protected; there can be no detrimental effect upon the western grain stabilization plan or the interests of western Canadian farmers.

Earlier today my hon. friend opposite asked why the producer is not in a position to defer his contribution to the grain stabilization fund as well. Of course that issue is not as he tries to make out. There are 140,000 or 150,000 participating producers in the plan and, as was discussed thoroughly in the Standing Committee on Agriculture when the bill was before it last year, the possibility of establishing an individual and separate account for each of 140,000 or 150,000 participants would be an administrative nightmare which I do not think even he would want to sanction.

The idea of the levy is that producers' contributions to the fund would be deducted at source by licensed elevators and others. It is administratively convenient and has the sanction, approval, and support of the vast majority of farmers in western Canada and of Canadian farm organizations. My hon. friend opposite will know that some contributions do not lend themselves to automatic deduction at source; they are essentially voluntary and can be contributed at will by producers if they deem it in their interest, on grain receipts that do not lend themselves to an automatic or simple deduction at source.

An important point to remember is that when the farmer contributes to the grain stabilization fund, and when the fund is running a surplus, that money is earning interest paid by the Government of Canada. The money is not sitting idle but is at work for western grain producers.

Another important point that should be highlighted relates to the question that the hon. member for Crowfoot brought up about trust in and support for the western grain stabilization plan. The fact is that about 80 per cent of western grain producers participate, and it has become plain that the number of those who earlier opted out and now want back in, is increasing. It could happen that by the end of the year the participation rate will be higher than 80 per cent.

Any government program of any kind, sponsored by any government anywhere, that has an 80 per cent participation rate—a plan that is essentially voluntary—must enjoy a significant measure of support among the people to whom it is available. In the last few months I have had the privilege of conducting a number of meetings across western Canada and in different parts of the prairies where I have talked to farmers and others about the grain stabilization plan. After more than 50 public meetings it is clear to me that there is keen interest in the plan and a sound understanding of how it is intended to operate. There is a broad measure of support for it. I suggest to the House, with confidence, that this measure of trust and support for the plan is real and is not being eroded by anything taking place at the present time.

Mr. Horner: Call an election and find out.

Mr. Goodale: Clause 15 of Bill C-19 refers to what is commonly known as the "at and east subsidy" or section 272 of the Railway Act. I think it is clear that this provision in the Railway Act supports what has become an expensive and inefficient system of grain movement which is not in the interests of producers nor in the interests of Canada. It is interesting to examine the kind of grain movement this particular section of the Railway Act tended to foster in the past. If you move grain from the farm to the prairie elevator, out of that elevator into a train which goes from the prairies to Thunder Bay, unload it at the Lakehead into a terminal, clean it, store it for a while, load it on a ship, move it across the lakes—not down the Seaway, but just across the lakes—take it out of the ship and put it into an elevator, take it out of the elevator, load it on to a train and move it further east—if you do all that then you get a subsidy. If you do it any other way you do not get a subsidy. I think that demonstrates the problem with this type of provision in the Railway Act. It is a subsidy which is uneconomical and counter-productive, and which does nothing to enhance the system of grain movement we have in Canada.

Bill C-19 proposes that section 272 of the Railway Act be repealed. It has been mentioned earlier today, and it is recognized by this government that such action would have an impact upon the Canadian milling industry. Various ministers of the government have been engaged in intensive discussions with representatives of the milling industry in the last few months in order to try to deal directly with the economic and industrial problems facing millers. The mechanism needed to provide the assistance they claim they require has been under intensive discussion inside government, and outside with industrial representatives. These discussions have borne fruit, Mr.

Speaker. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), will, I understand, be participating later in this debate to explain to members opposite and to the industry the details which have been worked out to provide a more sensible, economic, and effective method of dealing with the problems of the milling industry. I think my hon. friend and the industry have the assurance they seek that the kind of proposal forthcoming will meet their requirements.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude. I was interested in the tone of the debate this afternoon, with members of the Conservative party saying that the bill does not do anything, members of the New Democratic Party saying the bill does far too much, and the hon. member for Crowfoot managing to say both of these things at the same time. Perhaps that is rather typical. I hope in the debate which follows, both in the House and in committee, that we can have a full discussion of what is intended by C-19, how it will effectively restrain government expenditures, and have a positive impact upon the economy of the country.

● (1530)

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, will the parliamentary secretary permit a question?

Mr. Goodale: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know seriously whether the hon. member has consulted his colleague and my neighbour, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers), to learn about the serious way in which the passage of clause 15 will inhibit the movement of flour through the port of Saint John. A cabinet document states:

> Flour exports will be seriously affected by the elimination of the At and East subsidized rates.

What does my friend have to say about that?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, not only have I been involved in discussions with my colleagues on this side from the Atlantic region, but the ministers involved in the development of Bill C-19 have taken part in those discussions as well. The government has benefited indeed from the wisdom and advice that our Atlantic colleagues have offered to us.

Mr. Fairweather: Where is the policy?

Mr. Goodale: The point I was trying to make in my remarks is that in reading Bill C-19 one should not think that the total sum and substance of the government's policy relating to the Canadian milling industry and the level of activity in Atlantic ports is contained in Clause 15 of Bill C-19. Those matters are much more important and complicated than could be dealt with in one simple clause in one bill.

Mr. Fairweather: We're from Missouri; we have to be shown.

Mr. Goodale: The hon. member says he is from Missouri and has to be shown. I can assure him he will not have to wait very long before that proof, in very graphic terms, is before him.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at this so-called restraint act, Bill C-19. Some of the things that it provides do in fact show some restraint on the part of the government. However, I question the effectiveness of some of them.

What first came to my attention was the treatment of the adult occupational training grants. They are set by regulation, not by this House of Commons. The House of Commons will again be unable to approve the appropriateness of those allowances. The minister is instructed to make an annual review of these expenditures. However, there is no suggestion or requirement that he make any kind of a reduction in them. Therefore I am not at all sure what kind of restraint will be shown in that case.

I notice the elimination of the Company of Young Canadians. I well remember that promise being made by the former leader of this party in at least one if not two election campaigns. While that certainly is a matter of restraint, I note from the Public Accounts recently issued that it will be a saving of something less than $6 million.

I note the removal of Information Canada, another recommendation made by this party on a number of occasions. This will be a saving of $10 million. Presumably some operations of Information Canada will be taken over by the Queen's Printer and some measure of those costs may continue. That is not told to us in the figures that are available.

The freeze on family allowances is a little harder to take. The figure I have heard in the House today is a saving of $230 million a year. I also note a proposal to postpone credits under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. My colleagues from farm areas will adequately deal with that provision as well as the one that proposes to adjust grain freight rates.

I think we can identify something in the order of $250 million a year in restraint specifically in the program. When we are talking of a budget for the country of some $42 billion, an increase of something like 16 per cent over the previous fiscal year, I am not sure that those are restraint measures that deserve very much in the way of laudatory comment.

I want to make some suggestions to the government on some real savings that could be made with restraint. I want to spend a few minutes on the area of Crown corporations. Volume III of the Public Accounts which came into our hands about a month ago lists the financial statements of the Crown corporations. In the table of contents there are no fewer than 43 Crown corporations listed. They run from Air Canada to Uranium Canada Limited. It is not my proposal to deal with all of them, or even with a lot of them today, but I do want to touch on a few, starting at the top with Air Canada.

The Air Canada statement reported an operating loss of $12 million in the fiscal year ended December 31, 1975. That is not a lot of money in the over-all expenditures of the Government of Canada of $42 billion. Compared to the passengers carried it is only about a $1.12 loss for each passenger carried on the airline. However, those figures by themselves hide quite a lot of true financial information.

If you dig deeply into the report of Air Canada you find that the passenger load factor for that year was down to 58 per cent, the lowest since 1971. In a business like that, with huge gross revenues of close to a billion dollars, it is obvious that a very small change in the passenger load factor, which could be achieved through scheduling and so on, could have had a great effect on the expenditures of the Government of Canada.

I should comment that Air Canada does not always lose $12 million. The figure for the year before was somewhat lower. However, there is a lot of money invested in Air Canada. In fact it has a debt of over $1 billion. Of course the government owns approximately three quarters of that debt. In other words, the Government of Canada has a cash investment in the debt of Air Canada of three quarters of a billion dollars. Investment, on anybody's part, might not be too bad provided there is an adequate return. But Air Canada's own report shows that the return on investment is 5.1 per cent—that is an average return; they have had some higher and some lower figures in the past ten years. But we must inquire where the government gets the money to invest at that return of 5.1 per cent.

• (1540)

As we know, the government goes each year to the citizens of Canada to borrow money. If we look at one aspect of this process we see that Canada Savings Bonds probably carry a lower rate of interest than many similar government bonds and we find that the government is borrowing at a rate of something over 9 per cent. And, as we have noted, it is earning 5.1 per cent, which does not appear to be very good business. This makes one wonder what kind of restraint is not being practised by an organization like Air Canada.

I have maintained for a number of years that the government should look closely at selling Air Canada. I understand that when the industry was very young in the thirties, many companies went into business and, like other young companies, ran into financial difficulty. I think there might well have been some justification for the government getting into the operation at that stage, bearing in mind the huge amounts of capital which were needed to get the thing going and the need to consolidate all the companies which were experiencing financial difficulties.

It might be said that the people of Canada could not afford to buy Air Canada. But there is evidence that Canadian investors whether through pension funds, trust companies, banks or whatever, have already invested in bonds covering three quarters of the total debt of that corporation. I was delighted, from one point of view, to read recently that the government is presently considering the return in some measure of Air Canada to private enterprise. I have not seen the details but I am waiting eagerly to see what ideas it has in mind and whether some of mine have filtered down to the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. Clarke: I do not want to see all my ideas taken over by the government because I know what would happen then whenever members opposite can summon up the courage to go to the people again. They would say "We have already used all the ideas put forward by the opposition; we have them all in place, anyway."

An hon. Member: That is when you would wake up.

Mr. Clarke: Air Canada is only one example of an area where restraint could be exercised at enormous saving to the taxpayer.

We might well take a look at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We find from an examination of the Public Accounts that for the year ending March 31, 1976, the net cost, otherwise known as the loss, of the CBC in that year was $310 million. This was the figure for the most recent fiscal year; in the preceding fiscal year the loss was $260 million. So instead of there being any kind of restraint program in the CBC the cost increased by $60 million in one year. Even so, one could say, I suppose that that is not very much money because apportioned among the people of Canada it amounts to only $14 per capita. But again we must look at the investment which is required before these losses can be incurred. And we find from the Public Accounts that the total assets of the CBC amount to some $316 million. Bearing in mind then that the investment amounts to slightly more than the loss on the operations this year, it seems that the return on investment amounts to about minus 98 per cent.

An hon. Member: Not very much.

Mr. Clarke: It is not excess revenue, anyway. They would never get hauled up before the Anti-Inflation Board.

If I can find the report of the Auditor General I have one or two other comments to make on those figures. Referring to the CBC financial statement it says, having set out the figures I have quoted:

> The corporation has not recorded accrued interest of $28 million of which $14 million is the interest for the year on loans from Canada and payment of such interest has been deferred until March 31, 1979.

I take it the results were so bad that the people who make up the statement for the CBC could not bear to put in another $28 million of accrued interest. The Auditor General also says that severance pay is recorded in the accounts when paid on employee retirement or separation and, he says,

> No provision has been made in the accounts for benefits accruing to employees amounting to $28.7 million at March 31, 1976 and expenses for the year have been understated by $3.4 million.

I suppose this aspect will be considered if and when the accounts of the CBC come before the Public Accounts Committee. However, as hon. members know, that committee is not privileged to examine regularly the affairs of every Crown corporation or even every department, so perhaps we shall have a chance to comment on that observation by the Auditor General, and perhaps not.

It will probably be said that the CBC provides Canadians with some very special features and that it should not be concerned directly with cost. I go along with that to some extent, except that I find that effective the first of this month, for example, after 30 years the CBC has ceased to carry the BBC news direct from London. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the features whose cost could have been included, I would have thought, in the $300 million loss the people of Canada can expect to see continuing.

One of the other things we like to think of, as far as the CBC is concerned, is that we have freedom from most advertising and freedom from a lot of unimportant detail. I find that in place of the BBC news we are to be subjected to sports reports, so we must now listen to what is happening in all the sports arenas around the country.

What is the true cost per capita of this monster of the CBC which is costing us $300 million losses on total assets of $300 million in capital? I do not know what percentage of the people listen to the CBC, but the corporation is obviously competing with hundreds of other stations around the country, so the per capita cost per listener must be astronomical.

Why cannot we get rid of the CBC? We would free up the $300 million we would not have to borrow, and save $300 million in annual losses which we are now carrying. Hon. members may ask: who is going to buy the CBC? Well, I have talked to the radio and telecommunications industry in Canada. These people have enormous resources and enormous investment in their own physical plant. Many of them would take over and pay a fair price for the assets of the CBC.

● (1550)

What would we lose, Mr. Speaker? We would lose a national network to which few people listen. Perhaps in the days when the CBC was first formed it was necessary in a country like Canada to have a national network. But with networks flourishing all over the place—I understand there is not a single independent radio station left in Ottawa; all are members of a network of some kind or other—we could let the CBC become part of another network. Just think of all the resources of Canada that would be saved thereby.

Some might say that no one is going to take radio and television into unprofitable areas such as the far north, where there is insufficient demand for a commercial operation. Well, there is a simple answer to that. If the government would adopt a policy of being a regulatory body, instead of competing with people already in the business, there would be no problem. For example, there is no reason why the government could not sell off the CBC and issue licences as it does to all other broadcasters in Canada. It could make it a condition of the licence—heaven knows, enough conditions are attached to licences issued by the CRTC, the governing body in Canada—that those who acquire the assets of the CBC must serve outlying areas as well as profitable areas.

The advertising-free aspect of the CBC would be lost, but this would be a small price to pay compared with the $300 million investment and a $300 million loss. Perhaps 90 per cent of the people of Canada do not listen to the CBC anyway but choose to listen to some of the other hundreds of stations that operate on a profitable basis with advertising.

Some might say that this has never been done before. I see no member of the NDP is listening to my remarks. I did expect some challenge from that quarter; I am sorry they are missing out. I guess that is why it is so quiet down there, Mr. Speaker.

Let me give an example. I am sure the telephone industry operates well under Bell Canada, but I know better about my own province of British Columbia. The B.C. Telephone Company is privately owned—that is, shareholder owned—a corporation with huge investment from the private sector. All regions of British Columbia have telephone service. How can this company afford to service unprofitable areas and do so willingly? Perhaps it does not do so willingly, but the point is that the government has granted the B.C. Telephone Company a licence—a monopoly if you like—to provide telephone service.

A telephone licence is not like a licence to carry on the road, such as a licensed taxi. It is difficult to have competition in the telephone business because of the physical plant that is required to provide a service. B.C. Telephone Company get a licence that allows them the right to provide telephone service in areas they want to service because they get a return on their investment, but the licence also requires them to provide service in less profitable areas. No government investment is required. No government competition is involved. And people in outlying areas get telephone service at a very reasonable rate.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to learn that in the outlying areas of British Columbia telephone rates are actually lower than they are in the cities. There is a rationale for this. It makes good sense if you stop to think about it. The larger your settlement, the more use is a telephone; therefore the more the company is allowed to require people to pay for its use. The assumption is that the more you use something, whether telephone service or something else, the more you should be willing to pay for it.

Mr. Raines: Why don't you come along and give some of your ideas to the broadcasting committee.

Mr. Clarke: I hear the suggestion that I should bring my suggestions to another committee. I think the House of Commons is the place to make these suggestions, and that is what I am attempting to do. I am glad some members of the broadcasting committee are in the House; I hope they will pick up a few of my ideas.

In the few minutes that remain before four o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move on to the next of these Crown corporations, Canadian National Railways. Let me see if I can find any area of restraint here. Canadian National Railways is a very complex structure, though it had its beginnings in much the same way as Air Canada. During the twenties there were many railway problems and the CNR was formed to consolidate those problem areas.

According to its report there are 13 separately operated trucking companies owned by Canadian National whose operations are consolidated. In addition to the trucking companies, which of course are competing with privately owned trucking companies, there are 53 consolidated subsidiaries all included in the same financial statement. I am not going to bother with the 53 consolidated subsidiaries but it is of interest to note that the CNR never considers that money costs anything. It will report to us with a straight face that its 13 separately operated trucking companies earned $6.6 million; and then there is a little note that says that this is before interest. Of course, Mr. Speaker, you cannot pick out the interest figure. It does not say how much money is invested in trucks so you cannot work out what the results of the operation are. However, the total operation suffered a loss of $91 million in 1975. I think I have to be fair and say that that was the first operating loss that the railway had experienced since 1962. For example, in 1974 it had a profit of $17 million. However, in this area of restraint about which the government is so concerned, from a profit of $17 million to a loss of $91 million is not much evidence of restraint.

Furthermore, the note goes on to point out that the $91 million loss is before interest charges—here we do know what the total figure is—of $111 million. I suggest $91 million before and after $111 million in interest are two different things. May I call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

Order No. 1, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). Shall the order stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order No. 3, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). Shall the order stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1600)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

BANK OF CANADA ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO MAKE LONG-TERM LOANS AT COST OF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) moved that Bill C-206, to amend the Bank of Canada Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to pilot this bill whose importance is very significant and I am convinced that if it is passed by Parliament, it will have a very favourable impact on the Canadian economy.

This bill is identical to the one my leader (Mr. Caouette) introduced in the House and spelled out so ably during the last session. The purpose of this bill it to amend the Bank of Canada Act. Although its foundation goes back to 40 years ago, the fact remains that the bank still does not have the authority to make long term loans to the government of Canada or the government of a province.

In fact, paragraph 18(1)(i) reads as follows: The bank may

"(i) make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to the Government of Canada or the government of any province on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province;"

In my opinion, this cannot be considered a way to ease the credit of the nation for financing the public sector to the benefit of the Canadian public.

Paragraph 18(1)(j), which is no longer valid as it only limited the time allowed for the reimbursement of the advances made, reads as follows:

"(j) make loans to the Government of Canada or the government of any province, but such loans outstanding at any one time shall not, in the case of the Government of Canada, exceed one-third of the estimated revenue of such government for its fiscal year, and shall not in the case of any provincial government exceed one-fourth of such government's estimated revenue for its fiscal year; and such loans shall be repaid before the end of the first quarter after the end of the fiscal year of such government;"

In other words, if the fiscal year of a provincial government ends on March 31 and the said government had borrowed $150 million from the Bank of Canada, it will have to reimburse these $150 million not later than June 30, so that the province will find itself financially in the same situation as before obtaining its loan and the vicious circle will start all over again. Yet, the Canadian government is a lot more generous with foreign countries, since it is lending them huge amounts of money, sometimes without interest, and at other times at extremely low interest rates.

Why could we not do for ourselves what we are doing for other countries? The purpose of Bill C-206 is to amend the Bank of Canada Act to permit the Bank to make loans or advances for periods not exceeding sixty years to the Government of Canada or the government of any province based on the real credit of Canada or the province at a rate of interest which does not exceed the cost of administration.

Secondly, paragraph 18 (1) (j) of the said act is repealed. Thus, Mr. Speaker this amendment gives the Government of Canada, through the Bank of Canada, the real power to finance the credit of this nation at a very low cost, which should slow down inflation and enable the government to finance the public sector more economically. The government would cease to be the competitor of free enterprise on the loan market, on the money market.

I know that some hon. members are already stating that this will fan inflation. Come on, let's be serious. Whether a $50 million credit be generated by chartered banks and put into circulation through government borrowings for the construction of a public building, or a $50 million credit be generated by the Bank of Canada and put into circulation through government borrowings for the same purpose makes no difference. Would there be greater inflation if those $50 million were generated by the Bank of Canada? I suggest not. Now, there would be a difference for Canadian taxpayers. Instead of paying taxes and levies to pay out 12 and 15 per cent interest rates as is presently the case, they would pay for administrative costs only. We should not forget that a country's monetary system should first of all be a service, not a merchandise which can be produced and destroyed to the liking of those who are controlling it, as is presently the case.

I might be told that those who have money to lend will be the losers, as the rates would surely decrease. To this I would answer that this is precisely the avowed purpose—lower interest rates. But if Canadians pay less income and other taxes to finance the public sector, they will have more income left, which will compensate them for the loss of income issuing from interest on investments. Though there may be more private borrowers than lenders in Canada, I feel that, in the final analysis, this bill will benefit everyone. Here is another advantage of lower interest rates: industrialists, businessmen and the whole private sector would see their operating costs drop, this would lead to a generally lower cost of living, and that is what we are all seeking.

To my mind, it is far more difficult to adopt the metric system in this country than to implement a monetary reform. Still, the government, through an act of Parliament, implements a major economic reform by adopting the metric system. The Canadian Parliament, the supreme authority in this country, has the power to change our monetary system, and one of the best possible means of doing so is to pass Bill C-206.

Mr. Speaker, many people have very confused ideas about money. For instance, they often think money is automatically created by economic activity. That is far from the truth. The beef producer who has a herd of cattle does not create through cattle breeding the monetary value of his herd. I am convinced a large number of producers would now accept those means if it were possible. The production of goods and the production of money are the result of two very different processes:

● (1610)

Money is largely generated through chartered banks, although general control over the money supply is assumed by the Bank of Canada. Under section 72 of the Bank Act, it controls the reserves of chartered banks. These reserves allow chartered banks to create and issue the financial credit used by Canadians but since chartered banks have the power to issue up to 16 times more credit than they have in the form of reserves, these institutions exert a decisive influence on conditions which allow Canadians to acquire their purchasing power.

It goes without saying that credit creation is geared to credit reimbursement with interest. Just as a family can pay a house three times over in interest before enjoying ownership, so do governments usually pay three, four and even five times in interest the original price of public works. Mr. Speaker, there is the cancer of inflation. However, I do not like to make such a statement without backing it with some evidence.

So, Mr. Speaker, allow me to give an example that is quite recent. I refer to Hansard for February 23, 1976, page 11151, question No. 3580 put by the hon. member for Bellechasse and answered by the Minister for Urban Affairs. It is about two housing projects for retired people. Under an agreement between the province of Quebec and the federal government, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation lends the Quebec Housing Corporation 90 per cent of the project's estimated value, and for one of them the loan in the amount of $537,863 at 10⅜ per cent, is to be repaid over a 50-year period. It is clearly stipulated that the yearly repayment of capital and interests will be $57,617.24.

If you multiply the yearly repayment by 50, since the loan is refundable over 50 years, the total amount Quebec will have to pay for these 30 units will be $2,880,862, that is $2,342,999 in interest only, which represents the value of 130 units worth $17,929.00 originally. Thus, 30 housing units for retired people, plus the value of 100 units in interests, which goes to the credit and finance monopoly, that is to say, the loan sharks.

Mr. Speaker, this is a clear illustration of the financing system of the public sector. In order not to be the exclusive boss of the monetary system, the government requires the Canadian people to pay five times the value of a public good, which is why the national debt doubled between 1967 and 1975 and will continue to rise during the next years if we do not have the courage to amend the Bank of Canada Act by allowing it to authorize long term loans to the government with an interest rate equal to the administration costs. If I were authorized under our rules, I would submit to the clerk, Mr. Speaker, tables indicating the difference between those two financing practices in the public sector. The first concerns the fact I just mentioned, that is a loan of $537,863 with an interest of 1⅜ p. 100, calculated twice a year, which means that six months only after the lending transaction, the debt increased by $27,901.64 and that after 12 months, the interest will be calculated on the interest of the first six months, which means that the repayment of capital with the first yearly payment of $57,617.24 will only be $366.56. That is the cancer.

In my opinion, government loans should be made at a simple interest rate, since experts like architects, engineers and other people estimated that the building could last at least 50 years. Thus, it would be normal that the depreciation be deducted from the repayments. Consequently, in this case, the repayment would amount to $10,757.26 a year; thus, the second year, interest costs would be reduced in proportion. It would therefore be on a decreasing scale. The lender could lend to others the $10,757.26 repayment. Even at a simple interest of 10⅜ per cent, taxpayers would pay $1,423,667.00 in interest, but in any case this would save $1 million on this building. At a simple interest rate, Mr. Speaker, to pay $2,342,999 in interest on a $537,863 loan refundable over a 50-year period, represents all the same a 17 per cent interest rate. If this is not loan sharking, I wonder what loan sharking is. We should keep this in mind when we consider Bill C-16 on criminal interest rate.

This bill gives to the Bank of Canada authority to lend money for financing public utility buildings, for example, a $537,863 loan for the erection of a 30-apartment building, the principal to be paid back, as in the case I referred to, over a 50-year period, at an interest rate of 1.5 per cent, which covers service charges. So, the total cost will amount to $743,150, covering both the principal and the interest, or $14,863 annually instead of $57,617.24. On this particular building, which would be just as solid as the one costing $2,880,862, there would be a saving of $2,137,712. The only difference would be in the financing. The government could therefore build more housing without getting future generations into debts they can never pay back. One needs only look at the increase of the national debt.

In Fortune magazine it has been reported that Prime Minister Trudeau said that the worst complainers were bankers. They take it easy, he said, as never before since I became head of this government. And he added: "I am ashamed. They are making more money than the manufacturing sector or the natural resources sector and all service industries". He is right, Mr. Speaker, when he says that bankers are the worst complainers, but it remains that they are the ones who make all governments in Canada crawl on their knees. I know that some are afraid to attack finance, that some will argue: "Well, if we alter our monetary system, how are we going to trade with other countries?" Let us begin by properly organizing our domestic trade. Are we not free to adopt our own monetary system, as we have adopted our own postal system.

And yet, if there is such a service which does business with every country in the world, it is the postal service. Our letters go all over the world. Whatever the colour, the size or the design on the stamps we affix to envelopes, that comes under an international agreement and it is working very well. Why should things be different if we reformed our monetary system? Why do some suggest that our currency would lose some of its value? It does not get its value from the banks but from our gross national output which comes from Canadians. Money is not the real wealth but only a symbol to measure the value of things and services and also an instrument of exchange.

I ask the Liberals to meditate on the words of the late leader of the Liberal party during a general election in 1935, and I quote:

> The Liberal party believes that credit is a public matter which does not only concern the bankers but which is of direct concern to the ordinary citizen.

The Bank of Canada

> The Liberal party is in favour of the immediate creation of a well-constituted national bank to control the issuance of currency to meet public needs. Capital flow should be related to the domestic, social and industrial needs of the Canadian people.

And I think so too. He went on to say:

> Once a nation loses control over its currency and its credit, it does not matter much who in that nation makes laws. Once in control, money lenders will ruin any country. As long as control over currency and credit has not been restored—

• (1620)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, as well as all my colleagues.

Mr. Béchard: Once more we heard the theories of the Social Credit Party of Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I am reading the theory of Mr. King—that of the Liberal party, in 1935.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I accept those very friendly remarks, but the fact remains that we are dealing with a very serious matter. In the present economic context when things are going very badly in this country, when all governments are complaining precisely of a shortage of dollars to run either the country or the provinces and everyone is rising early to run after those famous dollars, it is important that at least in the public sector we empower our bank—the bank of Canadians—to help the government, whatever it may be, to run the country.

I continue the quotation I was reading earlier. Mr. King was saying:

> —its most obvious and most sacred responsibility, any talk of democracy and Parliament supremacy is vain and futile.

I am talking to the Liberals, those who have the majority in the House . . .

An hon. Member: Is there nobody else?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, certainly there are other members. I am talking to all members, specially to you who think you hold power. After 40 years, do you not agree that it is time to change the Bank of Canada Act to put into practice the ideas put forward by the Liberal chief in 1935?

Since Liberals have the majority, I ask them not to kill this bill but refer it to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and then definitely passed by the House to give the government a good instrument and allow it to run properly the country without jeopardizing future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have clearly explained the scope of the bill of which I am sponsor with concrete examples and tables which I have here and which I would like to be put on record. Unfortunately, our procedure does not allow it. All the same, they are available. Any member who would like to consult them can ask me and I will be glad to put them at their disposal so that they can examine them and criticize them.

In any event, this represents a considerable amount of work and it is well worth looking into by parliamentarians like us who are responsible for running the country properly, so that when we leave this House, we may leave to the next generations something which will make them proud of us. If we leave them in debt up to their neck, they will have to provide for their own needs and pay for our present needs, which is not reasonable. Therefore we must make every effort to control this fantastic increase of the national debt and the best way to do it is to give the Bank of Canada the powers described in the bill.

As for the private sector, it will carry on as it does today, but governments will stop competing with it. The private sector will then be able to survive, individuals will regain confidence in the country and will be able to leave to those following us something to be proud of. Thank you once again for these few extra minutes for which I am very grateful.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

[English]

I regret very much that I cannot make my whole speech in French. The day I can, I will be the proudest lady, I mean member, in this House. I almost was a female chauvinist.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I agree with the statement of the hon. member that banks play a sinister role in society today. They are manufacturing credit and making money. Bank buildings all over this country are almost as big as those built by lawyers. The lawyers are also a rather sinister group, those present excluded. They have much to answer for, just as bankers have. If I had time I could talk about frauds and the collusion among the lawyers of this country with which I have some personal experience. I am afraid I must tell the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that it is happening in his city and that I can document it.

I should like to say a few words about this bill. If this were not a time of necessary restraint—and we have taken so much criticism already from the same people who would support this bill about the manufacturing of money—I might say that the idea might have merit. This idea goes back some years ago to Major C. H. Douglas in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century and some of this Douglas—or Social Credit philosophy—might be worthy of support. I could also say that it would be easy to look at the economy of Alberta, where I grew up, and mistakenly believe something worked because of the wealth today.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

I can remember very clearly the Aberhart period because that was the first contact we had with newspapers. At that time there was what was called "fountain pen" money which was issued very briefly, or funny money. It was a script on which you put stamps. But this did not last long. The economy of Alberta grew and expanded, not because of the money program. Perhaps the old provincial Treasury Branch approach was a useful approach. It consisted of buying and selling your own goods within the province and thus building up the provincial economy. It may have been very useful, but by the same token it was Premier Ernest Manning, and perhaps Premier William Aberhart, who laid the foundations for the strong economy it is—an economy of which Mr. Lougheed now pretends to be the creator and saviour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: The health of that economy was not his creation but rather God's creation, because it was God who put the riches in the soil.

Mr. Fraser: And he waited for the right government to come along before it was discovered.

Mrs. Holt: They have a very good life there; they do not have a sales tax, but it is the richness of the minerals, not the greatness of the mentality of the Conservatives in office at present. Had Manning or Aberhart not abandoned funny money, we might very well not have had the kind of economy that exists there now.

• (1630)

Perhaps in my years of work with crime and courts I have seen too many paperhangers or, in the refined parliamentary parlance of this great House, counterfeiters. They made their money overnight and peddled it wherever it was best to do so. I really do not have too much hope for that system, as much as I admire the hon. member for Bellechasse. I remember the script era. We keep hearing that there is manufacture of too much money, and if money continues to be made this way, it will not be much better or safer than counterfeit. We worry about inflation. Of course this measure would only produce greater inflation, and accelerate the very problem we are now trying to correct. To quote one of the greatest men in this House, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), inflation is a pervasive disease. It causes fear, distrust, and a divisiveness among various segments of society. I do not trust bankers, and bankers do not trust me because I am a woman. We will have to educate Mr. MacLaughlin of the Royal Bank about women in this country.

In the next election we will have to educate everyone so that we can get a few more women in this Chamber. Perhaps then we will not have these superficial banking approaches and resolve the problems with women's intellect working on them—the problems women as homemakers have had to worry about throughout the generations with regard to handling home budgets. It is remarkable that the whole nation is joining in the fight against inflation, and despite what hon. members opposite say, the nation is involved in this—the rank and file trade unionists, the public, and the teachers. We may hear from their leaders who are fundamentally NDP or Maoists—although not all of them—how bad the system is, but they are peddling the Goebbels lie. They figure if they say the lie often enough, people will believe it, but if there was integrity, all of you over there would be—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order. Address the Chair.

Mrs. Holt: The people of Canada want the problem of inflation solved, but they do not want it solved the way you people suggest, with a freeze. You want to freeze everything.

Mr. Goodale: "Through you, Mr. Speaker."

Mrs. Holt: Even through you, Mr. Speaker, it is the same lie. Through you, Sir, I would like to say that they do not know the difference between freeze and formula. The formula for control is quite different from the proposal of hon. members opposite, but they go across the country attacking the very thing the public wants most. They are leaving this House because they cannot stand what I am saying. There are not very many of them over there. There are two Conservatives, one NDP, and three from the party presenting the bill. The Liberals are carrying a quorum. In fact, if you people do not get some people in here in a few minutes we will not have a quorum.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order. Address the Chair.

Mrs. Holt: You do not like the fact that after the next election you may be the only one here to watch over us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am merely trying to be helpful to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), and to teach her that she should address the Chair, not hon. members across the way.

Mrs. Holt: I apologize to the Chair, but I cannot help but notice all those green people over there. Oh! The green people are really empty seats.

The anti-inflation program we have now has not failed, and I think it would be quite disastrous to try to create more money at a time when the country is trying to cut back. Hon. members opposite attacked and have talked about government spending. They try to give the impression that government spending means we are putting money into the pockets of a few civil servants and into our own pockets. Of course nothing could be further from the truth.

Hon. members opposite should tell the truth because some day they will have to answer for their actions here. The opposition is part of the government, and they may have to tell the truth about what government spending really means—that is cost sharing, welfare, pensions, education, highways, courts, police, prisons, subsidies to stabilize food costs and living costs, family allowances, and all the rest. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has talked about all these necessities. I do not know how much he has ever done about them, but they are all necessities of life. Hon. members opposite are misleading the public about the need for restraint, and as much as I admire the hon. member for Bellechasse and some of the theories he has expounded here, I must speak in opposition to this bill.

It is dangerous to attempt to mislead the public. The public is already uneasy. Women like me and men who shop know what happened a year ago when we went into the market place and saw that every day a bottle of milk or a loaf of bread cost ten cents more than the day before. Everything seemed to be going up, and we panicked. That is not happening now. In fact prices have stabilized, even dropped in some cases.

Prices are a little higher in British Columbia, but we had an N.P.D. government which bought out bankrupt companies, and now we have to pay for it. Chicken prices, for example, across Canada have dropped except in B.C., but that is because in B.C. the N.P.D. thought it would buy up chicken farms, and sell the birds. Would you believe chickens run by a government? But it was a chicken government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Had you people shared in telling the truth, you might have served Canada better.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, they might have served Canada better had they told the public the truth about the formula. It is not a freeze; it is a formula. It was the contingency plan spoken about long before the election. Hon. members opposite say that the Liberals said one thing before the election and came here and did another. Long before the election the Prime Minister said that there was a contingency plan.

As a reporter before I ever came to this place I remember asking what the contingency plan was. I wondered whether it would be a freeze, and at that time I was told that it would not be a freeze; it could be controls. We have controls. The Prime Minister, the former minister of finance, and our current Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) tried to persuade big business, labour, and big government to use restraint. A child who refuses to use restraint requires discipline.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): So they are children, are they?

Mrs. Holt: It was because these interests refused to use self-discipline that the controls were imposed on them. The formula has worked, and I know that makes hon. members opposite very sad. I often wonder whether partisan success is more important than the welfare of our nation.

I think hon. members opposite would have liked the program to fail so that they could have said the government is a failure. However, we have had tremendous success in fighting inflation, and by August of this year the inflation rate had dropped from the 11.1 per cent of last October to 6.7 per cent.

The Bank of Canada

The Canadian Labour Congress held a phony so-called protest, which was a fancy word in the 1960's. It was as ridiculous then as it is today. The CLC attempted to attack controls by having a national strike. The CLC did not care about the rank and file trade unionists who wanted to work and to earn their pay that day. It only cared about its big conspiracy with a few leaders of the NDP. The rank and file of the NDP are like the rank and file trade unionists; they have come to me and said that they resented any attempt to stop the rise in inflation in this country, so perhaps at the next election that party will be lucky to have even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sitting over there to supervise the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He'll be here.

Mrs. Holt: However, the program has not failed, and because of that I would hate for us at this time to become involved in anything which inflates the money of this country. I would like to see the controls continue.

• (1640)

The Prime Minister says that controls will be removed only when the inflation rate reaches 4 per cent. I should like controls to remain until we see it go to zero. When prices and wages are set in the post-control period I hope every segment of society will be responsible, and not seek increases as they did in the past. At the present time people are better off than they have been for years. Food baskets are full. Controls have actually improved the earning power of the worker and the value of the dollar; it is more than 3 per cent higher than it was a year ago. Specious attempts to arouse the Canadian public against controls, and mislead them will not win confidence. Indeed we are losing the confidence of the nation by lying to the public. This is an educated public, Mr. Speaker, not an illiterate public. They know the truth. Women comprise 50 per cent of the population, although it does not look like it in this House.

Mr. Fraser: Fifty-one per cent.

Mrs. Holt: The 51 per cent do most of the buying although today more men are doing the buying and sharing the housekeeping. These people know when members stand here and on public platforms lying about prices, or when the press sets out to create fear in the minds of the public. People who go shopping, who make purchases in the stores, who live under the new anti-inflation controls know that controls are working. They have absolutely no respect for the story that controls should be dropped in Canada. Most Canadians wanted something to be done, and this government responded with its war on inflation. I do not say the formula is perfect, Mr. Speaker. What formula can be perfect that involves human beings? There are so many human variables that there can never be a formula that can resolve the complexities of these variables in a complex economic society.

The Douglas theory was an interesting formula. But formulas do not work for people or for an economy. This formula was introduced in 1935 and I gather 13 acts were passed in 1937 but they were thrown out by the courts and the following year were disallowed. There were repeated attempts to bring the Douglas "A plus B" theorem into the life of Alberta.

[Mrs. Holt.]

As you know, in the Douglas formula, "A" represented wages paid to employees and "B" the cost of production, which was considered essential to supplement A, the wages. B, I presume was $25, I think in script, which could be used at the treasury board. You had to buy Alberta goods. It sounded a good scheme—especially getting $25—but it was dropped. I think they would have dropped it even if it had not been thrown out by the courts. It was not constitutional at that time and I doubt if it would be today. Indeed it would be dangerous today to introduce it at a time when we must all work for one Canada and a strong Canada. We must not divide it by a technique of destruction and disincentive.

Again I come back to those who continually tell the lie, hoping that somebody will believe it, and undermine all government attempts to save our tenuous economy, and the buying power of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, would the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) accept a question?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Will the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) accept a question?

Mrs. Holt: Yes, if I can answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard).

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: In the remarks she made earlier, the hon. member spoke of her native province, Alberta. And she seemed to allege that if that province had been able to pay off its debts, which amounted to $179 million in 1935 to such an extent that the province was going bankrupt and was under the trusteeship of the federal government, it did it because of its natural resources.

I wish to point out to the hon. member that Alberta has natural energy resources and oil reserves. I would also point out to her that the Aberhart government was elected in Alberta in 1935 and that from 1935 to 1948, they succeeded in paying off the province's debt. Alberta did not owe a penny to anyone and I would emphasize that before finding oil, the people had found the Social Credit Party. As for the phoney money to which she referred earlier, the fact that bankers disowned that money does not mean that the system was bad. Evidence is shown by the fact that they managed to pay off the debt between 1935 and 1948 with the only means available to them. Would the hon. member answer this question?

[English]

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I said very clearly that Mr. Aberhart and Mr. Manning provided excellent government. They had very good fiscal policies but I am well aware that they did not tap the resources—the oil or tarsands—then. As the hon. member says, they could not, because they did not have the finances. They had good policies but they did not have Social Credit policies; they merely had the name Social Credit. I think they were modified policies in that they used their own banks, the Alberta Treasury Bank, and bought Alberta goods. People were buying and paying into their own banks to help the province. I did say that Mr. Lougheed, who now has the resources, had the benefit of good fiscal and economic programs under Mr. Manning, on which to build. That is the reason Alberta is rich today.

● (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I note the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) has another question for the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I have no objection to the hon. member putting his question.

Mr. Allard: Go ahead, I will give you a chance.

Mr. Béchard: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in view of the very deep love the Social Credit Party of Canada has entertained since its inception for the Bank of Canada, I am not overly suprised by the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on the subject of Bill C-206. This House will remember similar endeavours in the history, not only of the Social Credit Party of Canada, but also of the House of Commons. According to the information I gathered from Hansard over the last few years, similar legislation was examined before. As the hon. member for Bellechasse stated earlier, the debate here was on March 15, 1967. So, even before he came here, there were debates here on the subject of the Bank of Canada. Later on, a similar piece of legislation was introduced on March 18, 1969 by the current leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, and my hon. friend from Bellechasse referred to it on October 22, 1974. The current leader of the Social Credit Party, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) always showed remarkable conviction during the earlier debate I referred to. The sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Bellechasse, also shows a remarkable sincerity in his comments.

Incidentally, I would like to commend the hon. member for Bellechasse, although I do not share his views, for his perseverence in attacking not only the Bank of Canada and its powers, by also for addressing himself to a particular subject. In this he deserves commendation. But although I am not an expert in social credit or banking affairs, I believe I can safely state that the provisions included in Bill C-206 by the honourable member for Bellechasse are unrealistic. However, they commend some interest, if nothing else. Considering only the drafting of the bill presented by the hon. member for Bellechasse, one would say that he certainly did not spend too much time on it, and the same would be said looking at the finished product as it is very short.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): We should beware of bills that are too bulky.

Mr. Béchard: I continue. It is a very short bill. Its author made it short intentionally, I suppose, but it contains suggestions that, if they were implemented, if this bill were passed by 5 p.m. and referred to the commitee and then passed by this House, would change considerably, and I shall not say immediately, but dangerously, the role of the Bank of Canada. But the hon. member for Bellechasse, like his predecessors who proposed similar bills, intends effectively to change the role of the Bank of Canada and this could well have some bad effects.

For instance, if you read the first two lines of the bill, you realize that it would change the Bank of Canada Act by raising to a maximum of 60 years the term for loans or advance payments from the Bank of Canada to the government of Canada and provincial governments.

One must admit, Mr. Speaker, and I know that my hon. friend from Bellechasse agrees with this, that this would amount to an awful jump from 6 months, as it is now, to 60 years.

This is what I read in the explanatory note on paragraph 18(1)(i):

> make loans or advances for period "not exceeding six months" to the Government of Canada or the government of any province on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province;

On the other hand, the bill of the hon. member says: "make loans or advances for a period not exceeding 60 years to the government of Canada, et cetera." Everyone will admit, as I said earlier, that an increase from "six months" to "60 years" in the legislation is a considerable jump.

Mr. Speaker, the same terminology has been used in all the bills submitted by the Social Credit Party of Canada since 1967. Every time such a bill has been introduced and debated in the House, we must admit that, as it will happen tonight, the government has always rejected it, but it has not refused these proposals in a spirit of contradiction or to oppose a proposal of the Social Credit Party of Canada or simply because the bill was introduced by the opposition. No! It is because of the dangers that such a policy represents for our economy, and at this point I would like to mention the warning given by the hon. member for Bellechasse who said in his speech: There are some who will say during this debate that this bill is inflationary. Well, yes!

We are now going through a period of inflation and, according to what the Social Credit Party has preached since its beginnings, the hon. member for Bellechasse wants more money to be put in circulation in the country, in the province. The hon. member is making a gesture of denial. But this is what he wants. At least, this is what he said in his speech. Because if we grant more authority to the Bank of Canada, like he says in his bill and in his speech, more money will be put in circulation, and this comes back to the original theory of the Social Credit Party: Put in money; put in a lot of money. The hon. member made a fairly long speech because he was given all the time he wanted. We are polite, I even said: Let us give him 10, 15 or 20 minutes more.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Béchard: —in order to conclude this very able speech—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will allow a question.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to answer all the questions the hon. member might ask me once I have finished my speech.

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows perfectly well that the Social Credit Party of Canada, following its theory and its philosophy, has always solved the economic, fiscal and monetary problems, all the problems and even the moral ones by the only way it knows of: "The Bank of Canada". But, Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just accused me of saying that we want to create heaps of money. That is why I raise the question of privilege. I said in my speech, and I will give an example, that we want to get a new tap, that is a tap that costs $1 a gallon instead of a tap that costs $100 a gallon—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) that that is not a question of privilege, but a disagreement.

It being five o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. Therefore this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

1976-77 Addendum

As the 1975-76 issue of National Finances was being printed, final supplementary estimates for 1975-76 and the Main Estimates for 1976-77 were tabled. The table below incorporates these new data on a basis comparable with Table 3-3, page 29 of National Finances.

NET BUDGETARY EXPENDITURE BY PRINCIPAL ITEM OR DEPARTMENT
FISCAL YEARS ENDING MARCH 31, 1976 AND 1977

(dollar figures in millions)

	1976[a]		1977[b]
	($)	(%)	($)	(%)
Interest on public debt	3,930.0	11.3	4,650.0	12.1
National Health and Welfare
Old age security, spouse's allowance and guaranteed income supplement	4,127.7[c]	11.9	4,506.2	11.7
Canada Assistance Plan	860.1	2.5	926.3	2.4
Hospital insurance	1,739.9	5.0	2,065.0	5.4
Medicare	796.3	2.3	956.7	2.5
Family allowances	1,961.9	5.7	2,013.3	5.2
Health resources fund	20.0	.1	36.7	.1
Other	380.8	1.1	376.9	1.0
	9,886.7[c]	28.5	10,881.0	28.3
Government's contribution to Unemployment Insurance Fund	890.0	2.6	1,700.0	4.4
National Defence	2,975.6	8.6	3,371.1	8.8
Unconditional transfers to provinces	2,755.2	7.9	2,851.1	7.4
Oil compensation payments	1,685.0	4.9	1,410.0	3.7
Manpower training services and allowances	518.5	1.5	525.0	1.4
Payments for post-secondary education	535.0	1.5	538.0	1.4
Bilingualism program	121.2	.3	134.4	.3
Transport
Air	331.3	1.0	388.0	1.0
Water	376.9	1.1	438.5	1.1
Railways and roads	515.5	1.5	463.2	1.2
Other	66.2	.2	85.3	.2
	1,289.9	3.7	1,375.0	3.6
Public Works road and marine programs	47.2	.1	64.0	.2
Post Office	896.5	2.6	1,122.7	2.9
Indian Affairs and Northern Development	854.4	2.5	949.4	2.5
Agriculture and grains	957.7	2.8	862.2	2.2
Other	7,348.5	21.2	7,983.1	20.8
Total Net Budgetary Expenditure	34,691.4[c]	100.0	38,417.1	100.0

[a] Main and Supplementary Estimates (A) and (B). [b] Main Estimates. [c] Includes non-budgetary expenditures from Old Age Security Fund.

Source: Estimates.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 8, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO LEADER OF OPPOSITION AND NEW LEADER OF THE SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With the happening over the weekend of two rather blessed events—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —both in the city of Ottawa—

[Translation]

—one at least for the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, and the other for the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada.

[English]

I am sure that the House will forgive me if I see one or two members for a moment before beginning the question period. I promise faithfully under the circumstances to make up the time at the end. The right hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to echo your own words and congratulate the two heroes of the events over the weekend, and as far as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is concerned to welcome him to the club of fathers. We will be expecting many more cigars in the years to come.

With regard to Le Parti Crédit Social, I would preface my remarks by saying that for some weeks now we have regretted the absence of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) who has spent some time in hospital. We all hope to see him back in the House very soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: On behalf of my party, I should also like to extend our congratulations to the hon. member for Lotbinière by welcoming him once more to the House, after the Social Credit leadership convention which was a success for him.

His election seems to reflect youth. Indeed, even though he has been in the House of Commons for nine years, the hon. member for Lotbinière will be only 33 next week. That is in the order of things, Mr. Speaker, for they say that from the demographic viewpoint his constituency is one of the youngest in the country. But in spite of his being young, the new Social Credit leader is one of the senior members in the House, and as the leader of his party in the House of Commons, he acted as a skilled parliamentarian.

He will now have the opportunity to show further evidence of his political talents and we express to him our good wishes. Once more, I congratulate him for his victory and, on behalf of my party, I offer him our best wishes.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in my own case I think it not appropriate to refer to a hero. If there were heroics I think it would be more appropriate to refer to two heroines. I should like simply on my own behalf, and on Maureen's and Catherine's, to express my appreciation to my colleagues in the House of Commons for their good wishes, many of them delivered personally. We appreciate them very much. Mother and child are doing very well and the father is recovering.

• (1410)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: On behalf of my colleagues and on my own behalf, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for having acceded to the leadership of the Social Credit Party of Canada. We know it is no easy task to succeed the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), but we feel quite confident that the hon. member will be able to maintain the impetus of his predecessor, and that he will fight with as much ardour for the principles of his party and the unity of our country. We extend to him our best wishes for success.

[English]

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that I am prepared, however reluctantly, to pass along the title of being the youngest party leader in the House of Commons to my colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). That, as the House knows, is a distinction that has passed from the NDP to the PC's to the Social Credit party. We are all naturally waiting to see what might happen next to the title.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) welcomed me to my position as leader of this party, he did me a great honour by saying that I took my position in the tradition of my predecessor, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). That is a commendation and a compliment that should also be paid to our colleague, the member for Lotbinière. His conduct in the House of Commons has been in the spirit of his predecessor, the hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) who, as the leader of that party and as one who had an impact upon Canadian affairs, while he might have been regional in base was always national in outlook and in thinking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That is a characteristic which is shared by the new leader of his party. Many of us have come to know him personally as a friend. We have come to respect him as a House leader and a parliamentarian. On behalf of my party and myself, I want to extend our congratulations and our welcome to the hon. member for Lotbinière as the leader of his party in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the blessed events over the past weekend, I wish to first say on behalf of my colleagues that we are delighted to hear that the women in the Clark household are doing well and progressing in a healthy manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We extend to both women our heartiest good wishes, and to the father as well. With reference to the latter, given the rather lofty state the Conservative party has maintained in recent months in the Gallup poll, as an old father, I would like to offer some unsolicited advice to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and suggest to him that he spend less time in politics and more time at home with his family.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He is more successful there.

Mr. Broadbent: Switching immediately to the other blessed event, and on a more serious note, I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in paying tribute to the former leader of the Social Credit party, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). He was always proud to assert that he was both a Quebecker and a Canadian, an unequivocal federalist. Throughout his political life, he worked to establish harmony between the two principal linguistic groups in this country. Perhaps more than anything else when the history of Réal Caouette's political career is written, that fact will stand out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Also on a personal basis, on behalf of my colleagues and myself I wish to extend our sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). I wish him well. He has worked hard as a member of parliament. He deserves the new position. I can now say that he is making the Leader of the New Democratic Party look responsibly middle aged which is the right age to lead a government in Canada. I would say to him that we will even wish his party continued success and growth so long as it remains, if we are both in opposition, always just after the New Democratic Party in the order of questioning.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on my own behalf and on that of my colleagues, I wish to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) for their kind words, both for myself and for the man in whom all hon. members recognize an outstanding Canadian—the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

I am very much aware of the tremendous challenge facing the Social Credit Party of Canada in replacing such a man, but I believe that, over the weekend, we gave the country the picture of a group of serious people, intent upon building this country and cooperating with the others in a spirit of good will. Of course, in politics we have to make electoral gains, and passages of arms are at times inevitable. But there is one thing I have always noticed in this House, that is the solidarity shown by hon. members when time comes to recognize historical facts, as Réal Caouette does, in Canada.

I wish to assure all my colleagues, on both sides of the House, that we are eager to cooperate with all hon. members to get on with the business of the House, to continue doing efficient work and making positive proposals in an effort to improve the lot of our fellow citizens.

In closing, I wish to congratulate the Leader of the Official Opposition on his fatherhood; he pointed out that the honour of having the youngest leader went from the New Democratic Party to the Progressive Conservatives and now goes to the Social Credit Party of Canada; all this to remind him and all the other party leaders that the Social Credit Party of Canada often has the last word.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

BANK ACT

NEW PROCEDURE FOR CREATION OF BANKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am so used to work as a member of a team that I was forgetting my own role.

I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. The government tabled in August 1976 a very serious white paper on the decennial review of the Bank Act which, as you know, will soon have to be done. On page 21 of that brief, the government suggests that from now on to become a chartered bank it will no longer be necessary to apply to the Canadian Parliament. It will solely be necessary to obtain letters patent from the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is conscious of the fact that it is one of the last powers of Parliament with regard to the banking system and whether he is in a position to answer the House today or seriously consider the matter to give back further powers to Parliament on the banking system instead of withdrawing them.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this issue of course has to be debated in the House and in the other place, and I do hope it will be thoroughly considered by all parties in the House. However, I would just tell the leader of the Social Credit Party that the aim of this bill is not to give more power to the banks but on the contrary to increase competition, and we hope competition between more numerous banks will benefit savers and borrowers alike. As there will be more banks, we may expect that competition will enable them to make transaction at a lower profit rate.

● (1420)

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House how taking power from Parliament could possibly restore competition in the banking system?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we know through experience that when the government is allowed to charter and create banks, there will be more of them than if, each time, we have to go through a very long debate before Parliament which, for inherent reasons, is generally slower in taking action than the government.

* * *

[English]

STATISTICS CANADA

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST SITUATIONS OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whom I would like to thank for his co-operation in providing some answers, and the inquiries which apparently he has caused the Chief Statistician to make with respect to Statistics Canada's activities. I want to ask the minister whether he would not agree that we have passed the point where an internal inquiry by the Chief Statistician is the appropriate procedure in view of the way in which the Allan Jeffery affair was handled and in view of the unanswered questions on the activities of other employees and indeed on the efficiency of the department itself. Would the minister not now agree that in order to safeguard the reputation of the overwhelming majority of Statistics Canada employees, an inquiry under the Inquiries Act or by an appropriate committee of this House, even a special one, would be the best method to restore public confidence?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all. I think we have a very good institution there and I do not think it would serve any useful purpose to create doubt about this very good institution. I think the Chief Statistician is doing a very diligent job at this time in trying to restore confidence in that organization, and I do not think that casting doubt on it will serve any purpose. I think that all of us must help the institution to regain the high reputation which this organization had around Canada and abroad. I am satisfied that his predecessor had acted very diligently, and I do not think that the fact that his assistant has given his services to some university has in any way impaired the ability of this organization. I think that if the hon. member wants this organization to keep its reputation he should continue asking questions, if he has any more, or put them on the order paper and I will reply to them as quickly as I can. I do not think that a public inquiry will serve any good purpose in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST SITUATION OF EMPLOYEES—REASON FOR SECRET MEETING OF OFFICIALS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer. I want to tell him that I have taken his advise and I have put some more questions on the order paper. I want to thank him again for the questions he has answered.

I have another supplementary question for the minister. Further to press reports last Friday that there was an unprecedented conflict of interest check of 5,600 Statistic Canada's employees, can the minister confirm on a tentative basis why a secret meeting of 80 top ranking Statistic Canada officials was required last week and whether in fact these 80 top officials handed in a written conflict of interest declaration, as the press has reported. I think it is fair to conclude that all these developments are based on more than a minor indiscretion, which is the way the minister labelled it in the first instance.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have asked the Chief Statistician to make sure that the institution is well protected, and it was on my advice that he asked everybody to declare to him any conflict of interest or any doubt they may have in their minds. I am satisfied the Chief Statistician is making sure that if there is any conflict of interest the employee will have to choose between his internal job and his external job. However, so far he has reported to me that there is not any serious problem. Of course, there are some experts who are teaching part time at universities in Ottawa, and I do not think the university community of Canada should be deprived of the talent we in the government have managed to get. Of course, if there is any conflict of interest, I have told Dr. Kirkham to tell the employees to make the choice of either staying in or getting out. He said they have made that choice and he is satisfied that, to his knowledge, there is no conflict of interest prevailing at this time within the institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST SITUATION OF EMPLOYEES—ALLEGED DISAPPOINTMENT WITH SOME ASPECTS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief supplementary question for the Solicitor General, further to the question asked last week by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Has the minister now ascertained from the officer in charge of the RCMP investigation into Statistics Canada in 1974 whether the conditions found when the force was called in, and the procedures used to notify the force were entirely satisfactory, in view of reports I have received that the police were quite disappointed with some aspects of the investigation?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if that were the case, I am sure the commissioner of the RCMP would have brought the matter to my attention. That has not been done, and I can only presume that the matter was handled to the entire satisfaction of the force.

An hon. Member: Look into it, please.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

ACCURACY OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT ESTIMATE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question to direct to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister advise the House what action has been taken or what action is planned to correct the problem alluded to in an internal Statistics Canada memo which states that the accuracy of the gross national product estimate has been adversely affected by the deterioration of the component labour income and consumer expenditure which could affect the final GNP figure by an amount of $10 billion annually?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely complex problem. I discussed it with Dr. Kirkham. I am sure that in a few days I shall be in a better position to give a more satisfactory answer to the hon. member, because this is a serious problem. But, due to the very quick changes taking place in statistics, not only in Canada but in other countries as well, and due to new factors that statisticians must obtain, I believe it is normal to be unable to give an absolute answer at this time on that problem. However, I am sure that the high degree of competence of Statistics Canada staff will allow to solve the problem to which the hon. member has just referred.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Having regard to the fact that this particular problem would pose very grave implications for the interpretations of GNP figures in Statistics Canada and the fact that forecasting by Statistics Canada has been taken by trends rather than actual facts, and given the importance of accuracy in this particular area, I wonder if the minister would be prepared to table in the House the internal memorandum which was circulated, and also whether he would be prepared to make known the steps the government and Statistics Canada have taken to correct the errors contained in the memorandum.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall see what I can do to satisfy the hon. member's request and report to the House as soon as possible.

* * *

[English]

INCOME TAX

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS TO REMOVE INEQUITIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since the Minister of Finance has received a report presented by the National Council of Welfare which shows, for example, that in 1974 through various inequitable income tax deductions and exemptions the government of Canada lost $6.4 billion in revenue, with the bulk of it going disproportionately to higher income groups, I wonder if the Prime Minister will assure the House that the government will bring forward legislation which will change this for the next taxation year.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the report to which the hon. member refers. I will draw it to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Broadbent: It is unfortunate that the Prime Minister is not aware of one of the most damaging reports of a private agency to come out in a long time. However, following this up, he ought to be aware that a majority of the provinces have made representations to the government urging it to change its present indexing system on taxation. For example, this system will cost the people of Canada, in the next fiscal year, over $1 billion in lost revenue. The system will provide tax benefits in the following order: a family of four earning $50,000 will save $580 and a similar family of four—I will come directly to the question, Mr. Speaker—a similar family, numerically, with a much lower income gets much less of a reduction. Since the majority of the provinces have already appealed to the federal government to abolish this unfair system, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will do so?

● (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat my first answer, Mr. Speaker: the hon. member is referring to a report of which I have no knowledge. I can only say I will look at it and have the Minister of Finance take knowledge of it.

SUGGESTED PUBLICATION OF AMOUNT OF REVENUE LOST THROUGH EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I correct the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. The second question referred to specific requests that came to his government from provincial governments, not from a report. As a final supplementary, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will consider adopting the system which is already in force in the United States which forecasts years in advance the losses to the taxpayers of that country from the various tax exemption provisions that are contained in the legislation of that country. Will he duplicate that public kind of report in Canada so that such information will be available to all Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to believe that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would be suggesting that we follow a tax system from the United States in part or in whole. As regards the position of the provinces, there is a meeting of the ministers of finance of the provinces with the federal Minister of Finance later this month. If they have representations they will be able to make them directly without the help of the hon. member.

* * *

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES MENTIONED IN MR. GALLANT'S LETTER CONCERNING OFFER OF STATISTICS CANADA EMPLOYEES TO SELL INFORMATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs but I notice he is not here so I should like to put it to the acting minister. On November 2 I asked a question to which the then minister replied that for the time being he would prefer not to table the correspondence between Mr. Gallant and Mr. Gordon Robertson in connection with the selling of data by Statistics Canada employees because, as he said, "It mentions individuals by name." Would the acting minister confirm that more than one employee of Statistics Canada was mentioned by name in that correspondence?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am in no position to confirm that there is more than one. All I can say is that the answer of the minister still stands, and we are looking into it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the acting minister or whoever is speaking for the government on this matter. In view of the fact that the minister is new, could the parliamentary secretary assure me and the House that he will bring my question of November 2 to his attention so that he, like his predecessor, can attempt to give an answer to it?

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister is quite well aware of that but there is a question of confidentiality here. I think it has been the practice that correspondence between employees of the Canadian government at that level is considered confidential.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the parliamentary secretary to be misled. He will note that I have not asked for names; all I have asked for is confirmation regarding the number of employees at Statistics Canada who were mentioned in the correspondence. I have not yet asked for names but I assume they will be forthcoming later.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I shall take note of the question.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister without Portfolio from the province of Manitoba for as Manitoba goes so goes the nation. The hon. gentleman seems to be very restless these days. As a fellow Manitoban, I should like to congratulate him on his elevation to this responsibility—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: —for the province that is referred to as the keystone province—for as Manitoba goes, so goes the nation. In light of that statement and the protests reflected in the vote of that other important election that was held last Tuesday in Manitoba where the Conservative leader emerged a strong number one—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: —the Liberal candidate, a charming lady—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to be as lenient as I can under the circumstances.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this is preparing the way for the question. The Liberal candidate was a charming lady and we are all aware of the political power—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are in serious difficulty to start with in that it has never been the practice to put questions to a minister in terms of his geographic location rather than his area of responsibility.

An hon. Member: That is his only responsibility.

Mr. Dinsdale: My question is: in light of the keystone province where the New Democratic Party came number three, can the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

INCENTIVES FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Prime Minister quite rightly said in Tokyo, if we are going to get more export business we must pull up our socks and develop our technology, can the minister inform the House when we may expect him to introduce incentives to induce greater research and development in this country, thereby greatly increasing our technology which the Prime Minister said we need so badly and will these incentives be paid in direct proportion to the increase in effort?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will have to wake up and become competitive on the international market. Everybody must understand also that Canadian economic health depends a lot on our exports. As for tax rebates or other concessions made to help research and development in Canada, I am examining the whole question and I hope that we shall be able to help Canadian industry gain a better competitive position in the world.

* * *

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as that was, of course, no answer at all I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport and hope for some better luck. Is the meaning of the minister's "user-pay" transport policy that he uses the equipment and the taxpayers pay for it?

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

STATUS OF APPLICATION TO SERVE ATLANTIC REGION—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I have a serious question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the great need for a modern air passenger service in Atlantic Canada, a matter which I brought to the attention of the House in June of this year, would the minister advise the House of the status of the applications for class two licences now before the Canadian Transport Commission? Would the minister also inquire when we might expect a decision on these applications by the CTC in order to alleviate a most serious air passenger problem regarding air transportation facilities not only in New Brunswick but in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all very conscious of the great importance attached to this question by people in the Atlantic region. I am sure the CTC is aware of that as well. They have a total of three applications before them in relation to the area and they are working on them. They are, of course, working on them. I do not have an indication as to when those judgments are likely to come down, either singly, or the three together. I assure the hon. member that the matter is before the CTC; they are conscious of the interest in the area, and so am I.

* * *

● (1440)

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTING SETTING OF GUIDELINES FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of press reports that the Minister of Transport took a government Jet to Saskatoon again this week end, to speak to a group of young Liberals among others in that city, and since the minister spent about $750,000 on trips in government aircraft during the last three years, I ask the Prime Minister, seriously, if he will undertake to set strict guidelines for the use of government aircraft by cabinet ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines do exist and they are quite strict. They are to the effect that if the minister is travelling on government business and that is by far the most efficient way of doing his business, he is entitled to use government aircraft. As the minister indicated, and this is so particularly for ministers who live in the more distant parts of Canada, it really is a question of making sure that the federal government is aware of the existence and feelings of various groups and in a position to meet and communicate with them as frequently as possible while ministers stay in Ottawa and carry out their departmental and House duties.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister consider a meeting of the young Liberals to be official government business?

Mr. Paproski: There are not that many Liberals in western Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: If he does not, will he ask the Minister of Transport to exercise his user-pay policy and repay the treasury the money it costs to run government aircraft on such trips?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN LOCATION OF AIRBORNE REGIMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of disquieting rumours and reports to the effect that the Department of National Defence is determined to move the Canadian Airborne Regiment now in Edmonton to a new location in eastern Canada and change significantly the organizational structure, and since continued uncertainty about their future and the serious impact of such a material change would have adverse effects on the morale of officers and men in this corps d'elite, will the minister please advise the House if the Edmonton Airborne Regiment is one of those contemplated in the move?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, certainly, our armed forces are determined. I thank the hon. member for using that phrase in the opening part of his question. I have not made a decision so far. I realize the uncertainty. All options are open, and I want to remove that uncertainty as soon as possible. I do not want to shoot from the hip, because I know many people are concerned about the move.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The predecessor to the minister, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, resigned from the cabinet because, in part, western Canada was not receiving reasonable attention. Will the minister give assurance that he has a feeling for western Canada and its people and that he will stop this unsound military proposal to achieve obscure military objectives?

* * *

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR DELAY OF PERMISSION TO QUEBEC TO EXPORT ELECTRICITY UNTIL NEWFOUNDLAND'S DEMANDS SETTLED

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the decision taken on Friday by the National Energy Board to grant a permit to Hydro-Quebec for the export of 800 megawatts of power to New York at a time when Newfoundland is being denied the right to recall some of this power under the Churchill Falls agreement and when this matter is being considered by the courts, I ask the minister if he intends to recommend to his cabinet colleagues the setting aside of this decision until the matter can be resolved to the satisfaction of Newfoundland and Quebec?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Atlantic provinces are suffering from a severe energy shortage at a time when Labrador hydro power could be funnelled into the region to satisfy some of its needs, would the minister use the offices of the federal government to bring pressure to bear on the government of Quebec and so allow Newfoundland to recall some of this power? This would make it economically viable for the province to build transmission lines and open the way for including this power in the Atlantic grid.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is trying to draw me into the discussion of a matter now before the courts. He should realize that it would be inappropriate for me to make any comment. I can say that I am most interested in the development of Gull Island and interested in assisting Newfoundland to develop this resource, for the use of the rest of Canada including the Maritimes. Toward that end the government has already made an offer of $343 million, for half the financing of a transmission line. We are looking at other opportunities as well.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE ON EXPORT OF NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY AND ENRICHED URANIUM PLANT AT JAMES BAY

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. During his talks in Paris last week did the minister seek from the French authorities an agreement on a moratorium on exports of nuclear technology until such time as a more satisfactory system of international inspection is achieved over the possible use of nuclear spent fuel for other purposes than peaceful ones?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was quite a detailed and lengthy discussion of the whole question of non-proliferation. The French government advised me of the memorandum which they had issued just a few days before and indicated what changes had taken place in their position. I do not think it would be accurate to describe it as a total moratorium but, certainly, it moves a considerable distance toward the position which Canada and other countries have taken. The meeting of the suppliers group, which is under way in London this week I think, will be considering this question in more detail. Of course, we shall watch closely what happens in the United States in the next two or three months. I mention these points because they have a direct bearing on the Canada-French discussions on the non-proliferation question.

Mr. Wagner: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While in Paris did the minister discuss at any length the French proposal for an enriched uranium plant in the James Bay area?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker, this matter was not discussed in detail. To the best of my knowledge, I think it merely came up in casual conversation but nothing substantive was said about it by either side.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ENABLE SOME COMMUNITIES TO PARTICIPATE IN RAILWAY RELOCATION PROGRAM

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport? As the cost-sharing formula in the railway relocation legislation makes it impossible for many towns and communities to participate in the program, will the minister consider the introduction of amendments which will make it possible for less affluent communities to proceed with plans to remove serious inconveniences and eliminate safety hazards occasioned by the presence of railway lines in heavily populated areas?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to consider improvements to legislation. I had not been aware of such impediments before and I know that small but vigorous communities, such as Regina in Saskatchewan, have been going ahead with plans.

Mr. Patterson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since in many small communities railway lines constitute a real hazard in connection with the provision of emergency services to parts of such communities, I wonder if the minister would consider an amendment along the lines I suggested.

* * *

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REDUCTION OF STAFF IN NEWFOUNDLAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on October 27 I asked the minister a question about the reduction of CN staff in Newfoundland. He said he would investigate. Since there have been further announcements of cutbacks, can the minister say if he has received the report? If not, will he ask CN to desist from further staff reductions until that report is received?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, more accurately, I indicated to the hon. member that the question of staffing is largely a management one for Canadian National, but that I would investigate specifically his allegation that the cuts were being made contrary to statements by Canadian National that no cuts would be made. I investigated that and found, according to Canadian National, that in one particular location it was indicated that a post would not be closed, not that there would not be any cuts there and in other places. Of course, the whole question of Canadian National and its organization in Newfoundland is a complicated and long-range one. At this time I wanted to give the hon. member a brief report.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

AIRPORTS

GANDER—CHANGES IN HOLDING FACILITIES FOR IN-TRANSIT INTERNATIONAL PASSENGERS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue and the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, both of whom are involved in the matter. Will the minister advise the House what plans the Ministry of Transport has for the alteration of the airport facilities at Gander, in the light of reports that for the past ten years in-transit passengers on international aircraft have been able to wander about the airport, even into the town of Gander, without complying with the formalities of either customs or immigration? What steps have been taken to remedy this situation from the custodial point of view since the incident complained of by Iron Curtain countries?

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The problem arose when concern was expressed as to whether rules with regard to immigration and customs were being ignored under the procedures being followed. When this concern surfaced, it became apparent that modifications were required to the holding facilities at Gander Airport, because if the rules were strictly applied it would cause great inconvenience and make it almost impossible for aircraft to land there and use Gander to the full. Since we wished to ensure that Gander was available, and that it was used as much as possible we made immediate short-run plans to deal with the situation and long-run plans to provide adequate facilities for holding passengers who were not clearing at Gander.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask whether the short-run plans are merely to hold passengers in the plane? Second, how soon does the hon. gentleman expect the longer-term expansion of the facilities to take; and, third, will those facilities include the possibility of customs pre-clearance in the case of passengers flying on to either Malton or Mirabel?

Mr. Lang: Since the question was raised only a short time ago the plans are still being developed and I cannot give the hon. member an exact timetable as to when the longer run plans will be implemented. The short-run plans are designed to allow passengers off the aircraft and into the terminal building. The difficulty is that this allows them access to some facilities while restricting access to others. We hope eventually to clear up this situation.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES TO MAKE PROVISIONS MORE EQUITABLE

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Finance. Will the Minister of Finance give consideration to having an independent study conducted of the apparent anomalies in the Income Tax Act which appear to favour wealthy Canadians as opposed to those in the lower and middle income groups? I refer to such things as allowing interest and depreciation on rental property to be classed as income deductions in the case of landlords but not in the case of home-owners, travel deductions for wealthy businessmen—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That information may be sought in another way.

* * *

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF UNITED NATIONS COMMITTEE ON ISRAELI PRACTICES IN OCCUPIED TERRITORY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the tabling before the UN special political commission of paper A31-218 on October 1, 1976, entitled: Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israel Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of Occupied Territories and in view of the conclusions of this report drawn by an independent firm of consultant engineers under the responsibility of Swiss engineer Edward Gruner, according to which the destruction of 4,088 homes in the city of Quneitra was caused by systematic and deliberate action, does the minister envisage to recommend that Canada ratify the conclusions of the report by casting a positive ballot when the resolution is presented before the special political committee?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In large measure the question is hypothetical inasmuch as the resolution related to this report has not yet been received. I am, therefore, in no position to indicate what Canada's reaction will be.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, before addressing my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to call attention to the presence in the gallery to your right of the Speaker of—

[Translation]

SOUTH AFRICA AND RHODESIA—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN INTERVENTION IN CONFLICTS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Shefford has a question, I suggest he should ask it immediately.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of current events in South Africa and Rhodesia, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure the House that the Canadian government will not intervene, adopting a neutral position in this conflict? What does the Canadian government intend to do with regard to the requests it is receiving from all over the world urging it to intervene?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There have been no such requests for any intervention, participation or involvement by Canada in any other way in matters relating to Rhodesia. A number of speculative stories have appeared and a number of proposals are being discussed in one form or another but to this moment, at least, nothing specific has been asked of the government of Canada.

RHODESIA—POSSIBILITY OF CANADA TAKING REFUGEES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Has a direct request been made to Canadian officials by United States officials in connection with Rhodesia settlement question that Canada take a certain number of refugees from Rhodesia?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I want to take advantage of this opportunity to re-emphasize that under no circumstances and at no time has any request been made to us by any country, including the United States, for consideration to be given to that matter.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBILITY ADVERTISEMENTS FOR ABORTIONS BREACH OF PROVISIONS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION AND TABLING OF BADGLEY REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It relates to a motion I put forward on Friday. In the light of a statement made by the minister thereafter that he knows of no law in Canada to prevent the publication of advertisements across the country soliciting abortions, and in light of the fact that section 251 of the Criminal Code makes it illegal to aid and abet, will the minister investigate this matter within the purview of his responsibility as Minister of Justice and principal law officer of the Crown, and will he likewise consult with his counterparts at the provincial level, the attorneys general of the provinces, to determine whether the section of the Code I mentioned has, indeed, been breached?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): As I have stated both inside and outside the House, a committee under the chairmanship of Dr. Robin Badgley is examining the operation of the whole of the law relating to abortion. In the course of its work, the committee has examined the operation of referral agencies outside Canada. As to the specific question asked by the hon. member, I shall be pleased to take that up with my provincial counterparts to ensure that any advertisements which appear do not offend the provisions of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Woolliams: To follow up that answer, may I ask whether the hon. gentleman has received the Badgley Report? If he has, will he file it and if not, will he give an undertaking that it will be tabled in the House of Commons so that the public and members of the House may know what it contains?

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have not yet received the report but I understand the work of the committee has been completed and that its members are preparing their report and having it translated into both official languages. As soon as it is available it will be tabled as the hon. member asks. Such an undertaking was given at the time the committee was appointed.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

ARRANGEMENT BETWEEN TELESAT AND TRANS-CANADA TELEPHONE—POSSIBLE DISADVANTAGE TO CNCP—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. Patrick Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Has the government approved of an in-part de facto merger or contractual arrangement between Telsat and Trans-Canada Telephone Systems whereby in exchange for a cash flow from Telesat it will be guaranteed the use of transponders in the building of three new satellites?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have agreed to this request by those two corporations to make an arrangement whereby the renting of space on the satellite would be done by the grouping of telephone companies and Telesat so that we might ensure for the future more profitable operations to Telesat.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the minister for that answer as far as it goes. But in the course of these arrangements was due consideration given to the fact that Telesat will be playing a very active role in TCTS, as part of the trans-continental telephone system and thus would be well placed to take unfair advantage vis-à-vis the other communication system in this country, CNCP quite apart from the governmental regulatory body which also controls and directs TCTS? Is there not a potential conflict of interest?

Mrs. Sauvé: The role which will be played by Telesat is not different from that of the other members of this proposed arrangement between TCTS and Telesat. Telesat will maintain its corporate identity but it will have full membership in TCTS and will have the same veto power and the same role as other members of TCTS. As for CNCP, which the hon. member feels is at a disadvantage in this new arrangement between Telesat and TCTS, Telesat has obtained a full guarantee in light of this new arrangement that CNCP will have access at the same price, without discrimination, to space on the satellite, so it will not be in a disadvantageous position vis-à-vis the other carriers.

* * *

● (1500)

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO APPOINT NEW ENVIRONMENTAL PANEL TO STUDY PROPOSED THIRD RUNWAY AT VANCOUVER AIRPORT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and concerns the proposed third runway at Vancouver airport. In view of the fact that an environmental panel was established in July of this year and has since been disbanded, would the minister advise the House why the panel has been disbanded and why, at least until last Tuesday night, no new panel had been established?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check with my colleague who sits in front of me. I understand the decision was to examine the possibility of doing the construction within the existing dykes, in which case, of course, the problem would be very different from extending out into the estuary. However, I will look at the facts and try to answer the hon. member's question tomorrow.

Mr. Fraser: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would be kind enough to undertake to give the House and the public a release of the terms of reference of the proposed environmental study?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into this. I see no reason why the terms of reference could not be indicated.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

REQUEST MINISTER TABLE LETTER TO PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD CONCERNING LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT CONTRACT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Has the minister had an opportunity to examine the question I put to him on October 29 with respect to tabling the letter that the minister wrote on March 1, 1976 on the subject of his knowledge and recommendations respecting the LRPA contract that he sent to the then president of the Treasury Board? Will the minister table the letter at the earliest opportunity?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have considered the hon. member's request, and since there is reference in the letter to cabinet decisions or documents, I think that in those circumstances it would not be advisable to make this letter public.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ATTACHMENTS TO CONTRACT FOR PURCHASE OF "AURORA"

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the contract between the Lockheed Corporation and the government for the purchase of the Aurora which the minister tabled four weeks ago, would the minister now table the annexes, schedules, attachments and other documents referred to in article 2.1 of the contract which, according to that article, form part of the contract and therefore should have been tabled at that time?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, those documents could be eight to ten inches thick. I do not know whether the hon. member realizes the amount of work that the translation would represent. In any event, there is nothing to hide. If the hon. member wants to consult the documents, I invite him to do so and I offer him my services.

* * *

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF EMPLOYEES AT EXECUTIVE LEVEL EXCEEDING GUIDELINES—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE FOR OTHER CATEGORIES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question could have been put to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of National Revenue, or perhaps to both of them, but in their absence may I put it to the right hon. the Prime Minister. In view of the restraint that the government is practising with respect to pensions, as demonstrated by its opposition to a review of widows' pensions two weeks ago tomorrow, would the government reconsider two rules that were announced at the end of last week, one by the Department of National Revenue, the other by the Anti-Inflation Board, that permit the pensions of top executives to rise from a maximum of $40,000 a year to $60,000 a year, contrary to the whole spirit of the anti-inflation program?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a representation that I will be glad to bring to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is obviously on a matter of policy. So may I direct it again to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since the government is agreeing to a 50 per cent increase in the pensions of top executives, will it bring in proposals for a 50 per cent increase in old age pensions, widows' pensions and war veterans' pensions?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, again I will bring that question to the attention of the minister.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST BY MR. PELTIER THAT CANADA REFUSE HIS EXTRADITION TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Mr. Leonard Peltier, a Sioux from the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota, is accused in the United States of murdering two FBI agents and of two attempted murders and a burglary. I understand that the gentleman in question has asked for political asylum in Canada on the basis that he is innocent of these charges and feels that he will not be safe if he returns to the United States. Since the Minister of Justice is in charge of extradition proceedings or at least has designated a lawyer to prosecute, I wonder whether the minister can tell the House if he has received this representation and if it is his intention in fact to comply with the request for political asylum on the part of Mr. Peltier?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think "political asylum" would be a wrong use of words. The facts in Leonard Peltier's case are that there was an application for extradition which has been heard at trial in British Columbia, with an appeal to the Federal Court which was dismissed. I have indicated to Mr. Peltier's counsel that I was prepared, subject to further legal proceedings being taken, to receive written submissions from him on behalf of Mr. Peltier and, if he wishes, to have oral submissions made to me in support of the written submissions.

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Would he advise the House why he would interfere with a court decision that we should take this man out of the country?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, that is a very pejorative question and the hon. member, not being a lawyer, may be excused his use of the word "interfere". As my hon. friend from Calgary knows, there are several sections under the Extradition Act. Some apply to court proceedings, and others refer to the minister—the question as to whether a warrant for extradition will in fact be signed. The latter is a decision, not for the court but for the minister.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOVIET UNION—DISCUSSION WITH MR. GROMYKO ABOUT PERMISSION TO MRS. BIBERSHTEIN TO JOIN FAMILY IN CANADA

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to his discussions with Soviet foreign minister Gromyko about the question of reunification of families. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs was talking with Mr. Gromyko, did he specifically raise the case of Nailya Bibershtein with the foreign minister? If not, has the Bibershtein case been raised with the Russians since that time and, if so, by whom?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. member will permit me some slight qualification of the second part of his question. I instructed our embassy in Moscow to submit the names of all outstanding cases. I assume that the case to which the hon. member refers was included in those names, but I would have to make a specific inquiry. So I make that qualification. I did not raise it or any other individual case with the foreign minister.

SOVIET UNION—DISCUSSION WITH MR. GROMYKO CONCERNING HELSINKI AGREEMENT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his answer but may I ask him whether, during the discussions which the Secretary of State for External Affairs conducted with the Russians, he stressed to the Russians that this country expects the Soviet government to live up to the terms of the Helsinki agreement as they refer to the reunification of families; and, if so, did he indicate any steps that might be taken by Canada, such as being hesitant to sign one-sided agreements, if the Soviet government continues to refuse to abide by agreements to which they are a signatory?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was no—if the word is appropriate—threat on my part or anything of that nature. I consider that the best way to advance this cause is to keep making the kind of statement that I did make, and which the hon. member paraphrased. But I did not couple it to any comments about what future action might be taken in the event of non-compliance.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANG—REMARK OF MR. NYSTROM

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Transport, on a question of privilege.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, first of all to clarify the kind of comment that was made by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I claim that I would not ordinarily have to tell the House what government business I am doing across the country except, perhaps, to assure the House that I am usually very busy at it. However, I do want to comment on the very erroneous reference to my using a Jetstar for a meeting of Young Liberals, which ignores this fact. I must say Young Liberals from all over western Canada are very vigorous and are doing a great job.

• (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: In addition to that meeting with several hundred Young Liberals from all over the west, during the course of the weekend I met with a group of beef producers from Alberta who obviously are not being very well represented by their members, so they came to Saskatoon to see me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I spoke to university students on matters of government interest. I met representatives of Serena Canada, and I met the aviation committee of the Chamber of Commerce and spoke to the Chamber of Commerce at Melfort, Saskatchewan, in the constituency of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I want to make quite clear that the record shows that. I appreciate that the question was first raised by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), who in his wisdom as minister of transport put in the first order for a Jetstar, as I understand it.

Mr. Hees: This is a straight political speech.

Mr. Lang: I want to make it clear that the record of cost, as shown, includes the total cost—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The extent to which a member is entitled to go, on a question of privilege, in clarifying a reference made on the opposite side is always a very difficult matter for the Chair. The reference was made by way of a question today which I ruled out of order, whether it was considered that a meeting of Young Liberals was, in fact, government business.

The minister has risen on a question of privilege. I was prepared to let him go at least to the extent of indicating that the trip did involve other government business, which he has now done. This is an area that can only lead to a very partisan debate. It is not the proper subject of a question of privilege. I do not propose to let the matter go any further unless the minister is prepared forthwith to put some motion of privilege calling for a decision of the Chair. If not, I think the matter ought to close.

MR. DINSDALE—ANSWER TO QUESTION PUT LAST THURSDAY BY MR. LAWRENCE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a question I asked today. I trust I can remain within the rules. This arises from a question asked last Thursday by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) to which the following reply was given:

—one of my responsibilities will be to represent the people of Manitoba to the best of my ability.

What we are trying to do is to get the terms of reference of the responsibilities of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guay). In light of that reply, I seek your judgment, sir, as to whether it is possible for the Minister without Portfolio to deal specifically with questions relating to the province he represents, because there are many long-outstanding problems there, or whether he has a wider area of responsibility. That is the question I was trying to pose today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) raises an interesting point of order. I did, finally, refuse to let his question be answered. In fact, he never got to the point of putting the question. In any event, I tried a couple of times to draw him gently to the point of the question. His continued reference to a political result and situation in Manitoba was in an effort to put a question to the minister with respect to his presumed geographic representation of the province of Manitoba. That is a question which has consistently been rejected in the past.

Several questions in the past have been sought by members to be put to ministers in their direction of the political party in a region. That has consistently been turned down. The strict scope of the question period is clearly understood to be that which falls within the administrative competence of the government. Certainly, that is a political responsibility and not an administrative one.

Last week, as a first question of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), a question was put as to exactly what the responsibilities of the new minister were. Of course, until I hear the answer I cannot tell what they will be. The minister's first answer was, if I recall correctly, to represent the people of Manitoba. That is a nice answer on his part, but does not alter the basic rules. He will have to adopt more responsibilities if questions are to be put within an administrative sphere. I cannot permit questions to go on a geographic responsibility, inviting as they may be.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It arises out of a statement made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) during question period. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I do not have to answer for the responsibility of the Minister without Portfolio or chief government whip. However, I am concerned about the form of the question of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With due respect, concern about the form of a question is for the Chair. I took action by not permitting the question to be put.

Mrs. Holt: May I explain the point of order? You ruled, Mr. Speaker, that you do not have to rule on geographic questions. I suggest, with the greatest respect, that do you have to rule, either, on a lady's charm.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: You've got charm, Simma.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO APPOINT ANOTHER ELECTOR AS PROXY VOTER

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-379, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, at present, proxy voting is available only to voters who are unable to cast their ballots at the advance polls or on election day because of illness or physical incapacity, because of absence in the course of employment as a fisherman, mariner or prospector, or because of absence while a full-time student at a Canadian educational institution.

This bill proposes to allow proxy voting for voters absent for any purpose, including business, vacation or compassionate travel, and will also eliminate the need for medical certificates for illness or incapacity and the need for a registrar's statement for students. The bill further proposes to allow the urban voter a right presently allowed only to the rural voter; that is, the right of a qualified voter whose name has been omitted from the list of electors to cast his ballot upon being vouched for by an elector whose name appears on the official list of electors.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE ON REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I was going to move a motion seconded by the charming lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), but perhaps it can be seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson). The motion is as follows:

That the first report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Thursday, November 4, 1976, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

• (1520)

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 10, 34, 82, 363, 367, 498, 641 and 697.

[Text]

FOREIGN DIPLOMATS AND EMBASSY PERSONNEL

Question No. 10—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since April 20, 1968, how many foreign diplomats or embassy personnel stationed in Canada left the country as a result of (a) the request (b) the suggestion (c) direct or indirect action on the part of the Canadian government and, in each case (i) what were their names (ii) what countries were they from (iii) on what date did they leave Canada (iv) for what reason did they leave?

2. Were all such incidents made public at the time and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Three. (a) (i) Lieut. Col. V. S. Didenko; (ii) USSR; (iii) May 24, 1968; (iv) Retaliation for expulsion from the USSR of the Canadian Assistant Military Attaché. (b) (i) Janos Hegedus; (ii) Hungarian People's Republic; (iii) January 10, 1970; (iv) Activities incompatible with diplomatic status. (c) (i) Kuo Ching-an; (ii) People's Republic of China; (iii) May 2, 1975; (iv) Activities incompatible with diplomatic status.

2. Yes.

PUBLIC WORKS—TENDERS FOR NEW CARPET IN LA CITÉ PROJECT—MONTREAL, QUEBEC

Question No. 34—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 4,109 of the First Session of the 30th Parliament, which stated in part that new carpet valued at $77,443 is being used by the Secretary of State in the premises rented in La Cité project in Montreal, were tenders called and (a) if so (i) on what date (ii) were they publicly advertised and, if so, in what publications; (b) if not, for what reasons; (c) were they invited tenders and, if so, what are the names and addresses of all those invited to tender and where were such names obtained?

2. What are the names, addresses and amounts of all tenders received?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) Tenders were not called by the Department of Public Works. (i) Not applicable; (ii) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable. (c) The onwer of the La Cité building invited the following contractors to tender for our project by invited tenders: Savoie et Sauvé, 5060 Charleroi, Montréal N.—Date of request for quotations: March 8/76 $77,443. Roy & Fils, 3399 Metropolitan Blvd., St. Michèle—Date of request for quotations: March 19/76 $79,423. Provincial Flooring, 4228 Decarie Blvd., Montréal—Date of request for quotations: March 15/76 $84,793. Jérôme Myers, Place Bonaventure, Montréal—Date of request for quotations: Feb. 26/76 $86,013. Lemnor Interiors, 4020 Côte Vertu, Montréal—Date of request for quotations: March 9/76 $86,026. In the case of this project, the Department of Public Works was authorized to award directly to the owner, a contract for fitting up the space to be occupied by the Government of Canada. In such circumstances the owner is free to select the number of tenders he wishes to invite and to decide which one he wants as contractor. The Department in such cases, asks owners for estimates and requires prices to be competitive and to meet the estimates of our appraisers. In the case of La Cité, these two criteria were met.

2. See 1 (c) above.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FRANCOPHONE INSTITUTIONS DIVISION

Question No. 82—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the Annual Report of the Department of External Affairs for 1975 contain a Departmental Headquarters Organization Chart on pages 86-87?

2. Does the chart show a Francophone Institutions Division and, if so (a) what is a full description of the purpose of the Division (b) how many persons are employed there (c) what is its total annual budget for all expenses?

3. Does the Department have an Anglophone Institutions Division and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. The annual report also gives a general indication of the functions and activities of the Francophone Institutions Division, which, along with the Commonwealth Institutions Division and the Federal-Provincial Co-ordination Division, is attached to the Bureau of Co-ordination. (a) More specifically, the Francophone Institutions Division is responsible for all aspects of Canada's participation in multilateral intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations forming part of what is commonly referred to as la Francophonie internationale (the international French-speaking community). In this way, the Division, under the authority of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, co-operates in the development and implementation of Canadian government policy with regard to the international French-speaking community and, in this regard, with the countries and organizations forming part of it. Additionally, the Division is responsible for co-ordination and liaison, on the one hand with the many departments and agencies of the Canadian government which participate in the programs and activities of the international French-speaking community, and on the other hand with the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Manitoba, which also have some involvement in the Community. At the intergovernmental level, the principal international French-speaking institutions of which Canada is a member and to whose activities Canada contributes are: (i) The agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, created in 1970. (ii) The Conference of Ministers of Education of French-speaking Countries, and a related organization, le Conseil Africain et Malgache pour l'Enseignement supérieur (African and Madagascan Higher Education Council), which Canada joined in 1969. (iii) The Conference of Ministers of Youth and Sports of French-speaking Countries, which Canada took part in creating in 1969. About thirty European, American, African and Asian countries having French as their official or working language are members of these institutions. At the private international level, Canada, through the Francophone Institutions Division, maintains constant ties with the numerous international associations and organizations in the French-speaking world, with which it co-operates to promote and ensure effective and truly representative participation by Canada. Among the more important of these associations, many of them of Canadian origin or inspiration, we may name by way of example: l'Association des Universités partiellement ou entièrement de Langue française (AUPELF); le Fonds international de Coopération universitaire (FICU), an offshoot of AUPELF; le Conseil international de la Langue française (CILF); l'Association mondiale des Médecins de Langue française (AMMF);le Conseil de la Vie française en Amérique; l'Association internationale des Parlementaires de Langue française (AIPLF); l'Institut international de Droit d'expression française (IDEF); etc. (b) Present staff consists of three officers, one trainee and three secretaries. (c) The Francophone Institutions Division, in co-operation with the Finance Division of External Affairs, administers the contributions which Canada makes as a member of Francophone multilateral organizations (Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, Conference of Ministers of Education, Conference of Ministers of Youth and Sports of French-speaking Countries). These contributions amounted to about $2,900,000 for the fiscal year 1976-77. The Division is also responsible for disbursement of the subsidies granted by the Canadian government in 1976-77 to AUPELF ($95,000) and CILF ($30,000). Lastly, the Department of External Affairs has a budget for 1976-77 of $200,000, managed by the Francophone Institutions Division in close co-operation with the Finance Division and Treasury Board, for the purpose of promoting and giving substance to Canada's necessary and constructive presence in the many activities of the international French-speaking community, both those of an intergovernmental nature and those in the private sector. Within the Bureau of Co-ordination, the Francophone Institutions Division's share of the travel budget for 1966-77 is about $15,000.

3. Yes, to the extent that the international French-speaking community can be considered as the counterpart of the Commonwealth. The appropriate units are grouped together under the Commonwealth Institutions Division, which assumes identical functions with regard to multilateral intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations making up the Commonwealth. The activities of this division are described in the annual report of the Department of External Affairs.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—OFY PROGRAM

Question No. 363—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. For each constituency in British Columbia, what was the allotment of OFY grants in (a) 1972-73 (b) 1973-74 (c) 1974-75 (d) 1975-76 (e) 1976-77?

2. For the same years, what were the unemployment figures, in percentage terms, in each constituency?

3. What other criteria were used in deciding on allocations?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a), (b), (c) and (d) Funds under the OFY Program were not allocated by federal constituency. (e) The Program was not administered in 1976.

2. As funds were not allocated on a constituency basis, unemployment rates were not calculated by constituency for the full year.

3. The OFY Program came under the jurisdiction of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in 1974, and since that time funds were allocated to departmental Management Areas on the basis of student unemployment, youth population between the ages of 14 and 25 and youth job availability index.

ALLOCATION OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR EDUCATION OF INDIAN PEOPLE AND INUITS IN YUKON TERRITORY

Question No. 367—Mr. Nielsen:

For each year 1970 to 1976, what was the total amount of federal monies allocated to education of the Indian people in the Yukon and to the Indian people and Inuit respectively in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The following is a list of monies expended for the education of Indian people in the Yukon Territory:

Fiscal Year	O&M	Capital
1970/71	$ 632,000	$ 2,000
1971/72	617,000	11,000
1972/73	1,145,000	194,000
1973/74	1,249,000	137,000
1974/75	1,254,000	317,000
1975/76	1,442,680	248,200

No federal monies were allocated for education in the N.W.T. as this is a Territorial Government responsibility.

REPLACEMENT OF "CROWN COPYRIGHT RESERVED"

Question No. 498—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Were the words "Crown copyright reserved" replaced in the April 1976 edition of the Economic Review by "Copyright Minister of Supply and Services" and, if so (a) by whose authority (b) for what reason (c) on what date was the change authorized (d) is it intended that the new wording will continue in future?

2. Is it intended to credit copyright of the Crown to individual Ministers and/or Ministries in all future publications and, if so, on what date was such decision taken and by whom?

3. Which publications since 1974 has "Crown copyright reserved" been replaced and, in each case (a) what credit was used as a replacement (b) who authorized the change (c) is the change now permanent policy?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. (a) By the authority of P.C. 1976-104 dated January 20, 1976. (b) The Minister of Supply and Services was designated by P.C. 1976-104 as the Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada under whom the Director, Information Canada shall administer a consolidated information service which includes the supervision and control of the rights and obligations in respect of the Crown copyright in any document or other work of any kind in which it subsists. The use of the title of the Minister of the Crown who supervises and controls the rights and obligations in respect of Crown copyright clearly identifies the individual who, by assignation, controls the copyright of Her Majesty and to whom all requests for permission must be addressed. (c) January 20, 1976. (d) Yes.

Order Paper Questions

2. The copyright notice © Minister of Supply and Services Canada will appear on all publications published by the Publishing Centre of the Department of Supply and Services as this notice clearly identifies the individual who, by assignation, controls the copyright of Her Majesty and to whom all requests for permission must be addressed. This decision was effected in P.C. 1976-104 dated January 20, 1976.

3. (a) Before April, 1976, the notice © Information Canada was used by the Publishing Directorate, then of Information Canada, in free publications published by Information Canada. Since April 1976, the notice © Minister of Supply and Services Canada has appeared in publications published by the Publishing Centre. (b) The authority for the use of the notice © Information Canada came from the Director-General, Information Canada. The authority for the notice © Minister of Supply and Services Canada is P.C. 1976-104 dated January 20, 1976. (c) Yes; the use of the notice © Minister of Supply and Services Canada is permanent policy.

HABITAT CONFERENCE

Question No. 641—Mr. Beatty:

Did the government provide aid of any kind to the Palestine Liberation Organization for the preparation of audio-visual material for the Habitat conference and, if so, what was the nature and amount of such aid?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian Government did not provide aid, either financial or technical, to the Palestine Liberation Organization for the preparation of audio-visual material for the Habitat conference.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 697—Mr. Fortin:

What is the classification of the post office in each municipality in the Constituency of Lotbinière?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General):

Name	Classification	Group or Grade
Victoriaville	Sub 3	—
Norbertville	Revenue	3
St. Valere	Revenue	3
St. Pierre les Becquets	Revenue	5
Val Alain	Revenue	5
St. Sylvere	Revenue	6
Victoriaville	Sub 1	—
Victoriaville	Sub 2	—
Victoriaville	Sub 7	—
Ste. Marie de Blandford	Revenue	3
Ste. Sophie de Levrard	Revenue	6
Victoriaville	Sub 5	—
Ste. Françoise de Lotbinière	Revenue	3
St. Samuel de Horton	Revenue	2
Victoriaville	Staff	8
Villeroy	Revenue	3
Leclercville	Revenue	3
Ste. Eulalie	Revenue	6
Lemieux	Revenue	2
Daveluyville	Semi Staff	5
Ste. Emmelie de Lotbinière	Revenue	2
Deschaillons	Semi Staff	3
Lotbinière	Semi Staff	1
Dosquet	Revenue	5
Blandford	Revenue	3
St. Antoine de Tilly	Revenue	6
Rivière Bois Clair	Semi Staff	2
Ste. Cécile de Levrard	Revenue	4
Laurier	Semi Staff	4
Ste. Croix	Semi Staff	5
Aston Junction	Revenue	6
Parisville	Revenue	3
St. Flavien	Semi Staff	1
Victoriaville	Sub 6	—
Manseau	Semi Staff	3
Fortierville	Revenue	6
Joly	Revenue	4
Princeville	Semi Staff	6

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 369 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

MEAT INSPECTORS

Question No. 369—Mr. Patterson:

1. How many meat inspectors are in the employ of the government in (a) Canada (b) British Columbia at the present time?

2. Which department or departments employ them?

3. What is the salary range for the job classification?

4. What are the qualifications for the position of meat inspector with the government?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed consideration, from Friday, November 5, of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on Friday before four o'clock I was saying that the government's effort at restraint in the area of CYC, Information Canada and the freezing of family allowances was weak. I suggested there was an enormous potential for restraint in Crown corporations such as Air Canada and the CBC. I was just starting on the Canadian National Railways. I thought it was significant that in an operation like the CNR, where the total revenue was close to $2 billion and the losses on operations in 1975 were $91 million, that the corporation does not even consider that a bill of total interest charges of $111 million could not be cut somewhat as a matter of restraint.

So we have a total deficit for that corporation in the 1975 fiscal year of $168 million, which is an increase of $130 million over the deficit from the preceding year. I hardly think we can consider there is any measure of restraint in that kind of report. There is not only the loss of that income, but also the amount of money that they invest in order to incur that loss. For example, on page 21 of the report of the corporation we see that the government of Canada has an investment of $1.4 billion in the operations of the CNR. Furthermore, there is an investment in shareholders' equity—and the government of Canada is the only one listed in the shareholding section—in the amount of $2.2 billion. The total assets of the CNR now are just less than $5 billion. There is a further example where I think we might see the lack of restraint on the part of this particular Crown corporation. On page 22 of the corporation's report we have this statement in the notes to the financial statement:

> —based on the latest actuarial reviews, the unfunded liabilities to be funded over various periods to 2027 amounted to $809,020,329.

They already show a lack of restraint in their statements, but one would wonder why these unfunded liabilities are not shown in the statement instead of only in the notes. This corporation, in addition to its railway operations, has a hotel operation. If we look at page 14 of the annual report, we see that in fact they make a profit on operating their hotels of $900,000, and also on those they lease to the Hilton hotel organization of $2.7 million, for a total net income for hotel operations of $3.6 million in the year. However, in order to earn that there is a capital expenditure of $4.2 million, so the net cash requirement in that period is something over half a million dollars. If we accept $3.6 million as profit on the hotel operation, we cannot tell what the return on investment is, because the investment of that corporation is not detailed as it relates to particular operations such as hotels. So we have the taxpayers of Canada being asked to contribute to the investment in an operation in which the CNR does not need to be, and this operation is in competition with other enterprises in this country. If the government wishes to be serious about restraint, there is plenty of room in the CNR.

In the remaining time I have, I should like to comment about the Canada Post Office. This should be a place in which we could exercise a little restraint. The gross revenue of the Post Office is $618 million, and the deficit for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1975, was some $321 million. In the preceding year the loss of the Post Office was only $177 million, so these people who are trying to practice restraint have increased the deficit of the department by $144 million. That department spends $1.50 for every dollar it takes in in revenue. The interesting thing about the Post Office is that the statements do not reflect all the costs that are incurred by the Post Office and charged to the Department of Public Works for the occupancy cost of the various buildings the Post Office occupies. It does include an amount for accommodation of $59 million, but on the balance-sheet we see a note at page 8 of the 1975 annual report of the Post Office which says:

> Land and buildings are provided and paid for by the Department of Public Works and consequently are not included among the assets. Certain international accounts receivable and payable are not in the balance-sheet since they cannot be established with sufficient accuracy.

Mr. Speaker, I submit there is plenty of room in an operation such as this to exercise some kind of restraint. While I am commenting on the cost of the Post Office that is charged to the Department of Public Works budget, I think it might be well to have a look at that department. In the public accounts for 1976 which were received about a month ago, on page 20.4 we find that in the accommodation program the budget of the Department of Public Works has an expenditure of $252 million for operating expenses for the provision of accommodation of various departments in the government. That may seem like a reasonable figure, but in the previous year that amount was only $220 million. The increase is $32 million, or something like 15 per cent.

Furthermore, the expenditures of the Department of Public Works on capital expenditures including expenditures on works other than federal property amounted to $270 million in that fiscal year—for capital expenditures on buildings they do not even own! That is an increase from $208 million in the preceding fiscal period, which would be an increase of $62 million or something in the order of 30 per cent. In the limited time I have, I want to emphasize that when we are asked to consider a measure of restraint as weak as that we are dealing with, I think it is well for us to insist that more detailed examination be made of the very many areas available to this government in order to achieve some real kind of restraint.

● (1530)

Mr. Marke Raines (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I always welcome a bill which restrains and cuts back on unnecessary government spending, so I welcome the treasury board's Bill C-19. My only complaint is that it does not go far enough. Included in Bill C-19 is the demise of the Company of Young Canadians. I shed no tears for the CYC. They had their day, but times change and we must now address ourselves to new priorities.

As I said, I do not think Bill C-19 goes far enough. There are other areas of government spending that could be examined. I have in mind one which could be called mind-boggling and which, again, deals with CNR, a subject which the speaker before me, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), dealt with. That is another facet of the operations of the CNR. I refer to a picture, with cut-lines, in an Ottawa newspaper.

[Translation]

In an article of the Ottawa Le Droit, November 3, 1976, titled "Publicity Campaign", we read the following:

CN public relations vice-president Jean Cormier administers a publicity budget of $1 million to restore the image of the Crown corporation which, he said, has a reputation of "inefficiency, bureaucracy and waste" because of its association with the government.

[English]

That is a rather ludicrous situation when the vice-president of public relations of CNR says he is going to spend, or at least he has, a $1 million budget to restore the image of the CNR; an image which, he says, was created as a result of government policy. So we are giving them money and they are spending the money we give them to restore their image. I suggest that that $1 million could be put to better use. The vice-president of public relations of CNR says he has $1 million to counteract an image. I suggest that if the $1 million is indeed available, it might be better spent in further lowering rail fares so that more people, especially students and young Canadians, could travel across Canada and get to know this country.

Another strange expense that PR people favour is the logo or call it what you will, a trademark, an emblem, a symbol, a design, an insignia, or a squiggly line which reads "CN". These people fall into the trap and they hold the fond belief, apparently, that if you get the right, new logo, everything else will fall magically into place. This morning I made several inquiries through my office about the cost of the CN logo. I found that officials in Crown corporations and bureaucrats are rather reluctant to disclose such costs. I suppose that, like most logos, its cost must have been a source of embarrassment because it seems to be hidden with as much secrecy as the CBC logo was, that new device which was incorporated by the CBC and about which I inquired earlier in the House. So I have not yet been able to confirm the cost of the CNR logo.

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

This leads me to the secrecy regarding the expenses of government agencies. In my view, this secrecy is unacceptable. I am repeatedly told, and I cannot accept it, that government agencies and Crown corporations are not required to disclose certain details of expenses relating to internal management and administration. The reason given is that the information might be used by competitors seeking a commercial advantage. I cannot accept that reasoning. When these agencies are subsidized by the taxpayer, I believe the taxpayer has a right to know how his or her money is being spent.

Personally, I think the CNR could improve its image by getting back to the main reason for its being, which is the efficient movement of people and freight as cheaply and as effectively as possible. All the rest is frills—and the expense of frills should not be tolerated by the taxpayer. If, by its own admission, the CNR suffers from an image of inefficiency, bureaucracy and waste, then let it address itself to these problems and the image will take care of itself.

The CNR could be used effectively in the movement of young people from east to west and from west to east. We have had a good beginning in this type of program with the Young Voyageurs, for example, student exchanges, and summer language schools which combine both travel and learning. But these programs have been too limited. Most people do not even know about these programs or their value. However, the programs are very good and should be expanded and enlarged. Lower train fares would enable students and young people to see the country as they travel, and more and better summer language training programs would give students a working vacation that would be stimulating and rewarding.

The cost of the bilingual programs in Canada has also come up for discussion. I think it is important that this money be spent wisely. I point out that I do not criticize the amount of money spent on bilingualism. The time has come, and gone, when we can afford the luxury of debating and toying with the idea of bilingualism, niggling over the cost of it, wondering if we are not moving too quickly, suspicious and fearful of exposing ourselves and our youth to a language and culture that have for too long been alien to us. The time for this has passed, because if we do not accelerate the bilingualism program in our schools, in our communications systems and even in our government services, we are going to face the possibility of losing Quebec and, regardless of whether or not we are ready to admit it, if we lose Quebec we will lose Canada and everything that has made this country worth while.

So what can we do to hasten the day when our two languages and cultures meet and when we talk to one another, instead of remaining in our respective corners brooding and scowling? I submit that we need more in the way of education. I know that the educational system in Canada has always been claimed as the creature of provincial governments. The provinces have guarded their jurisdiction over education jealously over the years, affirming their rights under the BNA Act. But their rights, unquestioned so far, entail enormous responsibilities and duties to give young Canadians the very best education available.

In my view, a major part of this education should consist of instruction in the other official language. It should also consist of an introduction to our own cultures and peoples, if only to help our children gain a better understanding of their nation and of its role in the world. In this respect, our educational system and the responsible provincial governments have been negligent. In some cases they have been spitefully negligent. Their attitudes toward bilingualism and biculturalism must change, and they must open their eyes not only to their provincial responsibilities but also to their national responsibilities. If they cannot do this, then perhaps it will be necessary to consider a federal role in education.

Also extremely important to the survival of Canada is the communications field. We are told that we must all be sensitive to the power of the media to shape the public mind and spirit. We are, especially in this House, sensitive to the media. The power—and in it, the wonderful potential—has not been wisely used so far. Instead of a lively system linking disparate parts of the country with information and entertainment from all other parts of the land, we have a loose, unbalanced conglomeration of broadcast centres which look blankly at the rest of the country, hardly aware, hardly seeing. Broadcasting in Canada is ghettoized and balkanized. The media in Canada have not fulfilled what I consider to be their primary role, namely, to introduce Canadians to each other. How can one plead for community understanding, tolerance and compassion, when the members of the national community have never met? The media have the power to take on the role of national communicators. I say they also have the duty to take on this role and that it is long overdue.

Finally, I should like to speak about the development of bilingualism in the federal government and civil service. There is no question in anyone's mind that this is money well spent, that every Canadian has the right to approach his or her federal government in either of the two official languages and to be served in that language. That is little to ask, yet that small but crucial principle has been so widely misunderstood. From this principle let us expand the notion of bilingualism to include more, and much better, language instruction in our shools, and a positive, constructive role for the communications industry in bringing our cultural and linguistic communities closer together.

● (1540)

For too long we have been on the defensive about the policy of bilingualism—almost apologetic—in trying to explain a program which is giving French-speaking Canadians but a smattering of the rights we English-speaking Canadians have enjoyed and taken for granted for years. I suggest that this attitude must be replaced soon with one of justifiable pride in having at least begun the construction of a bridge between what we have been calling the two solitudes.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I think I am the first maritimer to take part in this debate on the son of Bill C-87 from the last session, for want of being able to use somewhat stronger language with reference to its name. But I will not be the last, because there is an important principle here which very much affects the ports of Halifax and Saint John. Indeed, that principle affects the port of Montreal and other ports on the St. Lawrence river, and it has a substantial effect upon the milling industry in Canada. The policy set forth in this bill is so bad that it has been labelled by one member of the present administration with one classic word. I will indicate later who said it, but I can say now what he said. He said, "It is nuts." When a minister of the Crown, no doubt committed to defence of the bill, has that to say about a measure, it is about time his party and the government he adorns takes another look at the measure.

I intend to devote my speech to the subject of the "at and east rate" and to the matter of the removal of section 272 of the Railway Act; in short, to what clause 15 of Bill C-19 attempts to do. I do so because when the matter originally came up in the spring, the hon. member for Vegreville and myself alternated in bringing the issue, by way of questions, to the ministry. I think at one time we had four or five ministers involved. Then we went to the "late show" to try to make as much noise as we could and to raise the cry of "rape" as much as we could. At least, the bill did not get beyond first reading last session. However, now it has been resurrected. The Frankenstein whose components have not been improved by age, comes before us again.

On Friday the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the transport critic for my party, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale), the apologist for his party, dealt with the matter of the effect of this measure on grain movement and, more particularly, on the flour industry. I thought the hon. member for Crowfoot, in his usual succint style, put the case pretty well. I thought the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council was being somewhat pessimistic. After all, if the flour industry in Canada is facing some difficulties, we should not forget that wheat is perhaps the one product for which we are known in the rest of the world, and flour is a good commodity with which to help the starving of the world keep body and soul together on this planet.

There is one flour mill near the area I serve. It serves the whole of central Nova Scotia, and it is threatened with closure if clause 15 is passed. As I develop my argument, I think the House will also find that while there was some talk by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) about an alternative program which might restore to the ports what is now so rudely being taken away—at least an attempt is being made—the fact is that he said nothing, and there has been no indication so far that any substantial and workable policy will be substituted.

At one time when the hon. member for Vegreville and myself were using the "late show" to some good effect in getting this subject at least raised as an issue in certain parts of the country, I went to the Halifax waterfront and walked through the mass of sheds there. The floor area of those sheds is about the size of three football fields. I walked between stacks and stacks of flour, stacked almost to the ceiling and covering, as I have said, an area of almost three football fields. It appeared that alongside there was a Russian freighter loading that flour which I believe was destined for Cuba.

That business is a very important part of the livelihood of the people of the Halifax longshore who have to scratch for a living, and if clause 15 passes, all that would be removed in peremptory fashion by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Transport. The minister should not duck his responsibilities on that one. This measure to repeal section 272 of the Railway Act has all the smell of an action of the Minister of Transport. I will resist it as best I can. My colleagues, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), and the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) will be among the hon. members who will be taking part in this debate, but you can bet your bottom dollar that there will also be hon. members from flour-milling communities in other parts of Canada who will join in the effort. We might even get somebody from the other side in on this effort, because I am going to read some of the quotes which some hon. gentlemen opposite have proffered. This matter is obviously of some concern to them, and perhaps they will participate in the debate along with, I am sure, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers). He will want to have his say, because this question affects many jobs on the Saint John waterfront, and anyone who represents a waterfront community knows that people do not give up jobs very lightly.

First let us start with somebody who is well known on the government side. He is a long-time friend of mine, and a well known and valuable member of the Liberal party of Canada. He is Mr. J. W. E. Mingo, and he happens to be the chairman of the Halifax-Dartmouth Port Commission. He is a lawyer of standing in the province of Nova Scotia. He is either a past president of the Nova Scotia barristers' society or will be its president in another year or so. He is important in the business life of Nova Scotia; and because money is needed to run an election campaign, he is very important in that he raises money for the Liberal party. In an act of supreme statesmanship, Mr. Mingo sent a telegram to the Minister of Transport in which he said:

> Termination of the subsidy and the statutory rates will cost Halifax its export flour trade, estimated at 200,000 tons in 1976, and will greatly reduce the throughput of grain at its elevator, thereby increasing the operating deficit of the elevator to the point where its closure will be inevitable.

Then he makes this point:

> Prairie grain moves at statutory rates to Vancouver and Thunder Bay, at an annual loss to the railroads which is now estimated at $150 million or more (and which has to be subsidized by other traffic, including export-import traffic moving to and from the port of Halifax), and from Thunder Bay via the St. Lawrence Seaway at highly subsidized tolls to Montreal, Bay Comeau, and the other river and gulf ports. How is it that this $11 million subsidy on the movement of grain to eastern ports is singled out for termination?

● (1550)

He talked about amounts 14 times as much that are untouched, as far as I can see, by this statute in which the Minister of Transport would say to all of us in Atlantic Canada, "You are only second-class citizens so let's see how I can turn you into third-class citizens". I have a telegram from Mr. Mingo followed by one from Mr. J. Peill, chairman of the Inter-Cereal Producers Association of Nova Scotia. This telegram was sent to me, and I adopt his reasoning as my own. It reads as follows:

> Grain producers of Nova Scotia are concerned with the effect Bill C-87—

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-87 was the father of the present Bill C-19. The telegram continues:

> —may have on continued operation of NHB and Dover Mills both of which we consider vital to ascertain continuation and expansion of our young and promising grain production industry in this province.
>
> Modern production methods have made grain production in the past years an economically viable crop in Nova Scotia resulting in doubling of winter wheat acreage for milling purposes every year over the last three.
>
> All signs point to possible continuation of this trend providing handling facilities continue to exist.
>
> Since full implications of Bill C-87 and other contemplated transportation policies are not known we urge that all steps be taken to keep elevator and Dover Mills in operation.

The NHB is the National Harbours Board, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the policy set forth in Bill C-15 as insane. Now I should like to turn to that statesman-like gentleman who used a choicer word—he called it "nuts". In the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, reported in issue No. 84, an exchange took place as follows:

> MR. DOUGLAS (BRUCE-GREY): Mr. Chairman through you to the minister and the members from the Feed Board, just going on a little bit with the subject raised by Mr. Corbin and that, of course, is the repeal of section 272. It is certainly going to affect the eastern ports but it is almost going to wipe out the flour milling industry in at least my section of Ontario and possibly other sections of Ontario as well, but I think we have to leave that part of it to another time.

Then we come to the statesman who said the policy was "nuts":

> MR. WHELAN: I do not think so, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask the member what he has done about it.

This is the minister asking for help from a government backbencher to ward off the government's own evil policy. The hon. member for Bruce-Grey replied:

> I have written a number of letters to a number of people, Mr. Minister, and I intend to continue doing so because I think it is wrong.

I hope the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) will enter the present debate and tell us whether those letters succeeded or failed. This would give us some appreciation of his fight for his constituents. Later in the same debate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said:

> I think what Mr. Douglas is saying and it is a fear that we all have that it is going to affect the feed industry because of the fact that you will not be using those bay port elevators in Georgian Bay and Lake Huron and possibly the one on the St. Clair River as much as you did before because of the fact that the boats will try and haul the grain through to the St. Lawrence ports at the end of the season and then it can cause congestion that way. It can cause less use of the bay port elevators; they will be of no use whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, the ripples are spreading from Halifax practically to the other end of Ottawa. The exchange continues:

> The ships will not stay loaded in the ports because it is their last run they can make in the fall and if they are down through the St. Lawrence they will not have time to get back up the Lakehead to load and come into the bay port elevator, so you can rail that grain out in the winter because you will lose the subsidy on that movement of grain by rail. That amounts to about $11 million, if I remember correctly.

MR. TOWERS: You are in agreement with that bill, then?

MR. WHELAN: No, I am not. I think it is nuts. I want to clarify that; on that part of it I voiced my opinion and I think it is very wrong.

THE CHAIRMAN: I think, gentlemen, that—

MR. WHELAN: I withdraw the word "nuts".

THE CHAIRMAN: I think, gentlemen, that that probably clarifies the concern that the committee members had with respect to Bill C-87. Perhaps we could now restrict ourselves to the estimates.

MR. WISE: On a point of order, if that is the way the minister feels about the bill, then I would suspect that he would support our motion that we have in mind to request that that section be withdrawn.

As the debate goes on, Mr. Speaker, possibly the Minister of Agriculture will have that opportunity. The hon. member continued:

I hope to see support from the Minister of Agriculture coming at that time.

MR. WHELAN: I think you must have had your private detectives in my mail, because you know what I am doing.

MR. WISE: We have just been representing our constituents.

That, indeed, is exactly what is going on. It would not be very difficult for a person of even one-quarter of the normal intelligence to recognize that from the standpoint of the Department of Agriculture this is a very bad bill. Those who want to look back to the contributions of the hon. member for Vegreville and myself to the debate will find that we hauled in the then minister of industry, trade and commerce as well as the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Transport—when he was on the ground and not at the 30,000 foot level in an expensive plane! We also hauled in the then president of the treasury board. In the Minister of Agriculture we knew we had a friend and ally since he had commissioned studies in his department on the effect of this legislation on the flour and grain trade in Canada.

Mr. Towers: Don't depend on the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McCleave: The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) says we should not rely on the Minister of Agriculture, but we can at least put him to the test later and ask whether he intends to stick by the opinion that this clause of the bill is "nuts". We also got rather sympathetic statements in the House from the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), then minister of industry, trade and commerce. Mr. Speaker, I shall be taking part in this debate whenever I can, and helping others with the information I have. The file is still quite thick because I have not used much of it, although I have touched on the salient points.

It would be a sad day for this House if clause 15 were adopted as law by this parliament. It would be a blow to the people of Halifax and Saint John who work at longshoring and ask why an attempt at government economy should start with them. Why should they be singled out as a working part of the Canadian economy, when they do not have year-round employment for the most part and rely on the flour and grain trade, amongst other things, for their living? For the sake of saving about $12 million we are going to jeopardize the longshoring of Halifax and Saint John; we are going to make a dent in the business of Montreal and other St. Lawrence River ports from which flour and grain are shipped, and we are probably going to put three-quarters of the flour milling industry out of business.

The millers' association has tried to present its case, again getting a sympathetic ear from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Agriculture, but getting the deaf ear of the Minister of Transport.

● (1600)

Sir, it is always good to have economy in government, if you know what you are doing and what the result will be. But I suggest that the present measure will occasion much mischief to the shipping, longshoring and flour sectors of the economy, to say nothing of the farmer who is at the beginning of the line, as it were. I suggest that this attempted economy will do mischief so great that a word the Minister of Agriculture used—"nuts"—will be applied to members of the cabinet if they persist in continuing with this monumental piece of stupidity they are asking us to consider.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we think this is a bad bill, and we oppose it. If we are in economic difficulty, in our view the best solution is to increase production, provide employment and get our economy rolling in high gear. But if the government does not realize all this and feels that it must fall back on a program of restraint, we say that such restraint should at least be practised with some degree of equity and fairness. In our view, this government does not know the meaning of those words when it comes to practising restraint.

I shall illustrate what I mean with some examples. Before I mention them, may I say that I am not at all satisfied with the decision to ditch the Company of Young Canadians and the Local Initiatives Program. I know that the CYC was the brunt of a good deal of criticism. I also know that the young persons who worked under the auspices of the CYC did much useful work coping with social difficulties in this country. It is unfortunate that that project has been ended. Likewise, I was pleased with the number of things done under the Local Initiatives Program to help persons who needed help and could not get it otherwise. I was pleased by the initiative and innovation which that program brought out. The government is to keep the program alive for a while, but plans something else to take its place. That just shows how this government can change its mind in the few months between the time when it introduces a bill and when it gets around to dealing with it.

Information Canada for a long time was a whipping-boy around this House, and it is to go: no longer will it be a whipping-boy. I do not think we shall save much money by doing away with Information Canada, and I suspect that many Canadians already miss the services which were available through that agency. I think the main mistake made about Information Canada was that when it was set up the notion was created that it was to take the place of the public relations staffs of the various departments. The idea was that instead of having every department put out its own press releases, this would all be done by Information Canada.

We discovered that it did not happen that way. The departments increased their public relations activities, and one of the supposed aims of Information Canada was not achieved. instead, Information Canada began publishing material not otherwise available, and opening book stores—all of which I think was good. Because of criticisms levelled at Information Canada from the floor of the House, I suppose the government felt it had no option but to yield to those criticisms and, in the name of restraint, to do away with Information Canada. Now it has gone. Let mine be a voice that is not happy about it.

I move on, sir, to what I think is the main example in Bill C-19 of practising restraint in the wrong place. I refer to the cancellation, for the year 1976, of the escalation of family allowances. The government has been able to say, in effect, "We have saved over $200 million by this means." But it will have been saved mainly at the expense of families and largely at the expense of families in lower income brackets. To me, sir, this is practising restraint in the wrong place. It is making those who can least afford to pay for the government's economy measures pay the larger portion of them.

Let me mention other examples of restraint for which the poor must pay. One such example was brought out particularly in the report of the National Council of Welfare which reached us last week. I confess I was surprised today, after my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) some questions about this report, to hear the Prime Minister reply that he had not seen or heard of this document. After all, the National Council of Welfare is an important body, set up and funded by the federal government. It is not some outside agency. It was set up and funded by the federal government for the purpose of making recommendations to the Minister of National Health and Welfare on matters of welfare policy.

In the past two or three years it has produced a number of excellent reports which turned the searchlight on inequities and unfairness in our welfare system and society as a whole. The current report, which I hold in my hand, is entitled "The Hidden Welfare System." It is a timely report, coming, as it does, when the government is talking about the need for restraint. The theme of the report, "The Hidden Welfare System," is that the people of Canada are having to pay to certain individuals at least $6.4 million a year because of the unfairness of the exemptions built into our income tax system. This unfairness is documented in this report which is some 40 pages long. The inequity is highlighted extremely well on pages 16 and 17 which tell us how the hidden welfare system works. I do not wish to quote all the material on these two pages, but I will say that these two pages refer to 60 subsidies under the Income Tax Act, with respect to 17 of which the Department of National Revenue provides useful and comprehensive statistics. It is by studying the costs of these 17 subsidies that the National Council of Welfare finds that the treasury is losing, under these exemptions in the Income Tax Act, about $6.4 billion a year. I should like to read two paragraphs of the report:

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

● (1610)

An examination of the $6.4 billion cost of the 17 subsidies tells us a great deal about the hidden welfare system. To put this $6.4 billion into perspective, it is equal to well over one-fifth of the entire federal budget in 1974. It was 4½ times the cost of the Olympic Games and 19 times the total new costs of the support and supplementation programs. It was enough money to have provided every family in Canada with an extra $100 per month for food and clothing.

But this $6.4 billion was not distributed equally among Canada's families. The poorest of the poor, those with incomes below the tax-paying threshold, received none of it. For all others the rule was, the higher their income the higher their benefit.

Then follows a table which sets out various income brackets and average benefits received. There are those in the very low brackets who get no benefit at all from the 17 subsidies under the Income Tax Act. For those whose taxable income was under $5,000, the average benefit was $243.75. That sounds good, if you are a low income person. But if you are in the group from $20,000 to $25,000, the average benefit is $1,786.93; and for the group whose income is over $50,000, the average benefit is $3,989.78. Listen to this paragraph, and I am quoting again from the report.

It would be difficult to imagine any direct and visible government expenditure program which gave $244 to those with income of less than $5,000 but $2,427—ten times as much—to those with incomes of between $25,000 and $50,000, and $3,990 to those who make over $50,000 a year. No government would dare propose such a program. And yet the hidden welfare system does just that, and there is hardly a protest to be heard.

I might add that when there was a protest today from my leader during the question period, the Prime Minister did not even know what he was talking about. I quote again:

The reason the hidden welfare system can get away with it is precisely because it is hidden. The low income taxpayer saving $200 cheers his saving and remains oblivious of the $2,000 saving granted to the person with five times his income.

I might say that in this report it is suggested that if details of all the 60 subsidies or exemptions under the Income Tax Act were obtainable, instead of just 17, it would probably turn out that the total figure would be not $6.4 billion but several billion dollars higher than that. What I am saying is this: if there needs to be restraint, why not practice it here, why not practice it on those who are getting these hidden forms of welfare in the guise of income tax exemptions instead of imposing it on persons who receive family allowances and on the poor generally? It is our contention that the place to practice restraint, the place to practice economy, is where it can be done without hurt to those concerned, instead of where it really hurts our people.

Another question which was asked today raises the whole subject of restraint. My hon. friend from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) did not get very far, nor did one of the hon. members in the Conservative party.

An hon. Member: The member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He did not get very far with it, either. I am referring to the ministerial use of private aircraft. Even if a minister feels there must be some sort of privacy in which he can work when he is on his way to attend some function, government or otherwise, how can one justify spending $7,000 to transport one minister from Saskatoon to Edmonton? That journey would take all of an hour and a half. By the time the steward had served food and drink, his ministerial passenger would be ready to land; there would be no time left for him to work. We are not complaining that a minister has travelled by air from Saskatoon to Edmonton: we all have transport privileges; but we suggest he should travel by Air Canada. For the minister to have piled up, in the last several years, a bill amounting to three-quarters of a million dollars for the use of private aircraft is scandalous and it does not wash well with the legislation which is now before us calling for the practice of restraint.

That is a large amount of money to have been spent on air travel. Perhaps the item I have in mind to deal with next would not mean the saving of as many dollars. But if we intend to practice restraint, let us do it. I do not know why, every time a minister makes a speech in the House, we should all get copies of it immediately before, or immediately after he does so. It gets printed in Hansard, in the same way that this speech of mine will be printed. Why go to the expense of printing speeches in addition to what is already available? Then again, when one looks at the hand-outs which come from the ministers and their departments, and I fill a waste basket a day with them; it isn't all from the government, I know—

An hon. Member: Why don't you read some of them?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is one of the things I had to learn when I first came here: to decide what one should read and digest, what one should keep in case it might be needed, and what one should throw away without wasting time on it. That is what all new members have to learn. I think the hon. member has been here long enough to learn it. Anyway, room for economy is obviously there, and there are scads of areas like this which could be the basis for economy, instead of what the government is proposing. Maybe economies brought about by reducing the volume of printing, and so on, will not yield a great deal of money, but if savings in this direction are coupled with cuts in other expenses in which the government is indulging, huge sums will be saved.

I have one other suggestion to make. It is about this time that I expect my popularity in the House of Commons to rise to new heights; but I am used to that. Almost a year ago, when the government was first talking about restraint, one of the things it said it would do was to bring in legislation to ensure that the pay of members of parliament would not escalate in 1976 as provided in the legislation which was passed in 1975. Hon. members are aware of this. First, it was just the pay which was not to be allowed to escalate. Then, because of protests which some of us made, the bill applied to both pay and the tax-free allowances received by members of this House and the other place. Mr. Speaker, the restraint period is not over. Inflation has not been licked. Why not do the same for 1977? If nothing happens, then the increases that did not take place in January, 1976, will take place in 1977.

• (1620)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I knew I would reach new heights of popularity by suggesting that, Mr. Speaker. It means that in January there will be an increase from our present $24,000 salary to $25,600, and our expense allowance will go up from $10,600 to $11,300. Their Honours in the other place will have their indemnity increased the same as ours, and their expense allowance will go up from $5,300 to $5,600. I know all the arguments about what the money for expenses, and so on, is used for, but we are talking about restraint. We are talking about economy, because the country is in trouble; so why not practice restraint by doing for 1977 what we said was good for 1976?

Mr. Clermont: What about sending back your old age pension?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I said I knew I would be popular, Mr. Speaker, and get all sorts of support in all sorts of places.

Mr. Goyer: Let us get back to the two-party system; then we will save money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If hon. members want to put this on a personal basis, I can tell them that by staying here in the House of Commons I am saving the treasury a good many thousands of dollars of parliamentary pension that I would have to be paid if I were not an MP. If I stay on in this place long enough, I may not get any of it.

I have the uneasy feeling that the reason family allowances will be allowed to escalate in 1977 is that it would be just about impossible to freeze family allowances for another year and let our pay and allowances go up. I have seen this sort of thing happen too often for it to be mere coincidence. It happened with respect to the escalation of the pay of retired civil servants, and so on. We did not get that for a long time, but we did finally because it was time to do something for the pay of MPs. I do not think that this is the time or place to argue what the amount should be, but it is a time to discuss the government's policy of restraint. If we are to have a policy of restraint, I suggest that we in this House should give leadership. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the whole program that the government has set before us in Bill C-19 is awry, and that it should be taken back and drawn all over again, along lines of equity and fairness.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, at a time when we ask the Canadian people to cut their expenses and refrain as much as possible from making expenses which are not urgent, and to abolish useless expenses, I think it is appropriate for the government to bring forward a bill cutting some expenditures which, at a certain time, could appear essential for the good operation of government and for the services offered to Canadians but which after a number of years appear useless and even futile in a few cases because of changing circumstances.

Any good government must endeavour from time to time to direct its efforts to cut wasteful spending which finally becomes a habit in an administration like the federal government and produces expenses which become substantial in the course of the years. Therefore, the object of the present legislation is to ensure that we show the Canadian people a certain will to adjust to the present circumstances.

On December 19, 1975, the President of the Treasury Board announced that certain programs would be abandoned. Certain expenditures which were now useless would be cut, and the federal administration, including the representatives of the people, must show a certain restraint as concerned public spending.

My department was asked, among other things, to see to the disbanding of Information Canada. Originally, the creation of Information Canada was certainly a good idea. This agency rendered many services, especially in the areas most isolated from large centres in Canada. For those who live in large centres like Vancouver, Toronto or Montreal, Information Canada did not bring as many advantages as for the people in isolated centres where government information cannot reach Canadians as effectively. It was in this spirit that Informatinon Canada had been established, but because Information Canada was perhaps not managed as efficiently as possible, and mostly because Information Canada had to face a barrage of repeated and, in a sense, generally negative objections on the part of the opposition, the government had to face the fact that Information Canada could no longer provide Canadians with the same services without provoking increasing criticism. This does not mean that all services previously offered by Information Canada have disappeared. Some of them of course have disappeared, but others have been amalgamated in various departments and continue to meet the needs of Canadians but under other forms.

I would like to report now on what we have done to publish and distribute government publications. As everyone knows, through Information Canada, the government had six bookstores across the country, which operated necessarily in the larger centres and offered their services to a great number of Canadians, but still not to the majority of them.

Moreover, government publications were not, far from it, distributed solely through our bookstores since 65 per cent of the needs were met through the postal service. Therefore, many Canadians are not affected by a change in the distribution of government publications. On the contrary. In addition, because of our labour contracts, it was difficult for our bookstores to adjust to the working conditions in the private sector, that is longer working hours, the opening of our stores at night and on Saturday, when there are necessarily more customers.

[Mr. Goyer.]

After due consideration, we decided to give another orientation to our distribution service through the Department of Supply and Services.

First, we have decided to close our six bookstores which were in operation in six different Canadian cities. In so doing, we will save over $1 million a year and substantially reduce the number of man-years in the government. How will those six stores he replaced? We shall replace them by appointing agents, that is to say by designating private sector libraries that will offer the same services as government libraries, within their commercial activities. In doing so, we shall multiply the number of libraries throughout the country and even in smaller communities where we can find libraries ready to do business with us. We shall multiply the number of service centres throughout the country so that the distribution of government publications be more adequate and reach more Canadians from coast to coast. Furthermore, we shall appoint as government agents all libraries in Canadian universities. It means that every student, every university teacher who use the services of the libraries in our six largest centres will find now similar services in their own university libraries. In doing so, we eliminate annual deficits as well as positions that are becoming redundant.

As concerns the distribution of publication by postal services, we improved that service a lot, as earlier we had to wait from three weeks to one month to receive an order. Our objective is to get it in nine days; it now takes about twelve days, but we hope to reach the nine-day objective within a few months. In doing so, we improve very much what represented 65 per cent of our business volume.

We will also publish very soon a list by subjects of all publications and we shall send this list to special interest groups to avoid sending throughout the country information of no use to the people who get it and so that the people interested can get information on subjects relating to their expertise or their interest field.

In doing so we are going to increase our marketing. We are also going to expand information on government publications and make them available to a greater number of Canadians. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it may be that some publications will be considered somewhat too expensive by some Canadians. To meet that shortcoming we are sending our publications to all libraries in this country, all those that are registered with the federal government. So there is a legal depository in every library and Canadians can obtain government publications through those libraries without having to spend a penny. For those who insist on doing business with us and buying those publications, once again they will be able to do so from the lists that will be published based on their fields of interest or the expertise sought.

There is a last way which may seem somewhat more attractive for it is surely innovative. We negotiated with CARA which offers various services in several airports in Canada, notably sales services for publications, books on various subjects. So we negotiated with CARA the possibility of having a stand in their bookstores at airports in Canada. So those Canadians using planes in the various airports in this country will now be able to see in those bookstores the latest publications of the federal government and, if they are interested, buy them. So that is an innovation that will surely increase the marketing and profitability of the publications of the government of Canada.

Finally, with respect to decisions we are looking forward to being a lot more active in our efforts to negotiate once again with the private sector the co-edition of some of our publications, notably, of course, in a general way those that are not official publications of the government but that are rather published in the general or particular interest of Canadians. We want to combine with the collections of the private sector.

Why should government publish books in, say, specialized fields such as mining or botany, regardless of collections already in existence in Canada which could very well take in the different subject matters so that, in its publications, the Canadian government be considered on the same level as the private sector? This would further help create jobs in the private sector, one of the government priorities set out in the Speech from the Throne. We would like to enable the private sector to undertake certain tasks for which government has no technical expertise or cannot carry out competitively.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: What are you going to do about the redundant Crown corporations?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, we could take up this question again when the announced bill is considered in the House. Therefore, with regards to our publishing needs, we intend to rely more on the private sector to offer to the Canadian public not only these services but additional ones as well. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to touch on the subject of exhibitions without going into too much detail and taking too much of the House's time since we have not yet defined our policies in detail.

Everybody knows, as do the members of the committee which reviewed the credits of my ministry, that in the field of exhibitions our deficit ran fairly high. My aim is to eliminate such deficits and to run the exhibition service on a cost efficient basis so that we can reach a point when our spendings can be paid from our revenues so that both items be balanced.

There is no reason why we could not reach that aim if, first, there is no more overlapping in the various departments and, second, if the resources are not scattered away. Also, if my department can get clear terms of reference to offer common services to the various departments. Thus, we think that before one or two years at most, we will be able to completely eliminate the deficit. This is only one particular condition, there are many others, of course, for example we should be able to rely more on the private sector. Here again I could say that there is no reason we should do things in the government that can be done more economically in the private sector, and it is on that subject that we are now initiating careful studies to know exactly what would be the necessary corrections to make so that the deficit could be eventually eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, I could give other examples of the measures that we have taken to eliminate certain useless spendings or to restrain government expenditures such as those in the field of computers, when we created pools for buying computers and when we urged the departments to share their use so that the renting of these computers be as cost efficient as possible. Now we are planning to buy certain computers, instead of renting them, and then to rent the computers to the various departments so that we can make the best possible use of our spendings and so that we can use ourselves the renting services.

In the field of photocopying machines, not only in the public sector but also in the private sector, everybody wants to have a photocopying machine very close at hand, something which contributes to increase expenses, henceforth my department will be responsible for making expert services available to all departments so as to make better use of duplicating machines, maximize their output and lower the leasing or purchasing cost of those machines which resulted in heavy expenses for the government and whose costs were not in line with the services they performed.

I could also add that we have completed a study of all storage facilities across the country. While each department wanted that all its storage facilities be located across the land, we have calculated the number of square feet in each area, even in each city, across Canada and we realized that we could use those facilities collectively and could provide the same services to the departments but at a much lower cost.

Those instances have already been mentioned and this will result in many millions of dollars in annual savings because we have put forward a clear and precise policy whereby government services must be provided adequately to all Canadians to meet rapidly their needs. And that is possible by realizing savings and performing more effectively.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are currently asked to use restraint in their wage settlements, to reduce their expenses. Workers and industries are being asked to increase productivity, to work harder to put our economy back on the right course. Various levels of government, whether municipal, provincial or federal, are called upon to take their responsibilities, to reduce unwarranted government expenses, to eliminate waste, to ensure we give Canadians good but efficient and economical services. In this vein, I am amazed that in a province where there are now suggestions that the people should eventually separate from the rest of Confederation, that Quebecers are invited to get into absolutely unwarranted expenses in the current economic context.

For instance, urging Quebecers to separate is asking them to grossly overtax themselves to pay for unwarranted expenses. Efforts, talents, time and money are spent and civil servants are at work to undo what the governments are trying to build. In my view that is negative thinking, and Quebecers will have an opportunity to realize this is no time for adventure, this is no time to hire economists or other human resources to do demolition work, while we are trying to improve the well-being of Canadians, and thereby building a better Canada and government structures that can serve the people better.

● (1640)

[English]

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, on December 18, 1975, the president of the treasury board announced the elimination of the subsidy on the movement of flour and grain through the east coast ports. This is a very serious move and one which will have devastating and far-reaching consequences. This is in clause 15 of Bill C-19, formerly Bill C-82. If this subsidy should be removed, many aspects of the economy such as the eastern ports, the farmers, inland grain terminals and the flour industry, stand to lose. The scope of this problem is very large indeed. During the last session the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) mentioned the effect the removal of this subsidy would have on the flour industry in Canada. However, Mr. Speaker, let me refresh the memory of members of the House.

First, the removal of this transport subsidy could cause freight rates in some cases to jump by as much as 212 per cent. This is an unrealistic figure, no matter what one happens to be talking about. Second, because of these increased costs, Canada will stand to lose any competitive edge it currently holds in prices, and as a result our flour buyers will be forced to look for alternative suppliers. The alternative suppliers in this case would be the Americans and the European Economic Market. It is interesting to note that both these alternative suppliers already enjoy a competitive advantage with their various export subsidy programs.

Third, the elimination of this subsidy could mean a loss of $28 million, in what economists call the "added value processing activities", with most of this occurring in depressed areas of our country. Fourth, many plants in the milling industry will be forced to close, with lay-offs approaching 3,000 personnel. This figure is for workers directly engaged in the flour industry. Who knows how many workers will be indirectly involved. I ask the government this question: How can you adopt a plan that will increase unemployment when we are already living in an economy where unemployment is over 7 per cent?

Fifth, it is felt that our domestic price of flour will go up because of the number of mills operating at less than full capacity. As one can well see, the removal of this subsidy will have negative results in the flour industry, so much so that the flour industry might be forced into further declines and lose even more of its share of the export flour trade. Of course, there is also the significant effect the reduction in the movement of grain, as a result of the subsidy cut, will have on the eastern ports. This has been discussed in greater detail by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, but let me touch on it briefly. First the removal of financial support for shipments through eastern ports will require increased freight rates. That, in turn, will have the effect of pricing the facilities of Saint John and Halifax out of business. Naturally, accompanying this will be loss of jobs, loss of markets and reduced rail movements: the list goes on.

[Mr. Goyer.]

However, the biggest injustice here is that at the same time the government announced the plan to eliminate the subsidy to the eastern ports, it also announced that the tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway will not be raised this year, even though this is needed to meet operating costs. The government will subsidize the Seaway and the Great Lake ports, but will let the Atlantic ports fend for themselves.

The third point of discussion, and one which the government has met with weak solutions, is the question of what will be done with this extra 35 million bushels of wheat that is currently handled by the rail movement from these inland terminals to the eastern ports. One solution, as suggested by the government, is the adoption of a new system for moving grains. One that has been discussed is the concept of unit grain trains running from the prairies to Halifax or Saint John. This proposal, however unique-sounding it may be, cannot be considered as a serious alternative. It has never been heralded by the Wheat Board as an alternative mode of grain transportation to the eastern ports. It has never had practical application from the prairies to Halifax or Saint John. It has even been said that the roadbed on which these trains are supposed to be able to travel is not strong enough to support these proposed unit trains full of grain. They will not be able to support any unless a great deal of money is spent improving the roadbed.

● (1650)

The general feeling among the people affected by this proposal is that this extra grain will never see the eastern ports under any other type of grain movement. It is felt that this extra grain is likely to be moved out of the Vancouver port. This is ironic in that the facilities are already overloaded, especially with wheat, and it will not be encouraging to our export buyers if they have heard of the labour unrest there, or are from the other side of the Atlantic. The conclusion that must be drawn from this information is as follows: there may be more efficient and cheaper systems for this movement of grain, but let us carry out our experiments now before we change the present system. Let us find out all there is to know about these alternatives before any present system is replaced or subsidies cut.

Another question to ask in this discussion is: How is it that this particular subsidy is being chosen as the one to be cut? This subsidy, which is in the neighbourhood of about $11 million annually, is quite small and not all that staggering, especially when you compare it to others. For example, $150 million is being spent annually on the subsidy for the movement of grain from the prairies to Vancouver and Thunder Bay. If the government wants to make some savings, simple arithmetic tells you that $150 million is much more than $11 million. This is only one of many examples of grain being moved at statutory rates. There has been no government action to cut any of these rates.

Another question, and one that is of particular relevance, is: Why is the public outcry so loud? The reason for this is that the public was never given any indication of the government's intentions before the actual decision was announced on December 18, 1975. After the announcement was made and the people were given a chance to study the consequences, they had every reason for public alarm. It was most evident that very little time or effort on the part of the government had gone into this decision. It seemed that the government had some obscure motive for making this subsidy cut. They certainly had not made a responsible decision, taking into account the government's restraint on transportation programs. It was evident that the subsidy underlying this particular rate was easy to identify, and thus became an easy target for the cut.

It can be said that with the removal of the subsidy and a strict enforcement of the user-pay concept, with no clear alternative policy proposed, the government is abandoning the basic principles of transportation policy, that it should be a tool of regional development and an instrument for national policy. It has also been said that the decision to cut the subsidy was taken before a study of the effect was ever considered. Clear proof of this lack of study is the failure of the government to offer an alternative policy. If a study had been carried out, I am sure it would have shown how disruptive to the Canadian economy will be the action that the government proposes. It would at least have recommended that the subsidy be phased out of existence, not dropped so suddenly. It would have found, also, that despite the restraint objective of this subsidy cut, the end result, with unemployment and disrupted industry, would be increased costs to governments. It would have found that the proposed loss of this subsidy cut to the Canadian economy was estimated to be in the neighbourhood of $100 million. The final comment is that these people and industries must be given a chance to adjust; they do not need this form of shock treatment.

The last point of discussion in respect of the removal of this subsidy, and one that is of great concern to me, is the effect it will have on the inland terminals and on the people who are dependent on the services these terminals provide. The specific terminals in question are those located along Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, Collingwood, Midland, Port McNicoll, Goderich, Owen Sound, Sarnia, Toronto and Kingston. The terminals are presently being used for the movement of grain on the Great Lakes and to the eastern ports. The program in which they take part and which is of interest here is the annual movement of about 35 million bushels of grain by rail to the eastern ports. This movement takes place mainly in the winter months and is subsidized annually to the sum of approximately $10 million to $12 million.

This program is very important to these terminals and makes up most of their winter activity. If it were lost, these terminals would definitely be forced to close in the winter months. With this closure would come the characteristic problems associated with a seasonal industry, everything from the usual labour problems to the more serious problems encountered with the loss of the services these terminals provide. The whole problem here is that removal of this subsidy and the subsequent closure in the winter months would not be the end result. The end result would be in the indefinite forced closure of these terminals.

Why would the removal of this subsidy cause the terminals to close indefinitely? This is an important question, but one that can be easily answered. The removal of the subsidy will cause decreased activity in the winter months and an over-all reduction of grain movements through these terminals. As a consequence, the operating deficits of these plants will rise until it is no longer profitable for them to stay open. When they reach this point, their doors will close.

Another reason these terminals should not be allowed to close is that these facilities provide a valuable alternative to the St. Lawrence Seaway. If, for some reason, the Seaway was ever forced to be closed or shut down for any period of time, the inland grain terminals could be used to their maximum. Even now they are extremely important during times of strikes or the slowing down of grain movements to Thunder Bay. Another segment of the economy which will be affected by the removal of the subsidy, with its subsequent effect on terminals, is the Canadian grain plan. The farmers of Ontario would suffer a cut in the supply of feed grains.

At present, farmers depend on these terminals for the distribution of the majority of their feed grains. When the terminals close, farmers will be faced with having to find alternative sources of feed grains. These alternative sources will most probably supply the grains at a higher rate. The Quebec farmer who is dependent on feed grain storage at Seaway terminals will also suffer. Terminals further down the Seaway near Montreal and Quebec will not waste any storage capacity on feed grains. Instead, they will concentrate only on export grain. The higher price of rail movement of grain will dictate that these terminals accumulate as much export grain moved by water as possible. There will be no room for feed grains. The western farmer will lose the markets which are supplied by grains from eastern ports. This will be the result because of the possible price differential which grain buyers will have to pay in winter months when grain arrives at these ports by train.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Energy—Possibility of re-activation of refinery at Come-by-Chance—Government position; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Canadian National Railways—Reduction of staff and service in Newfoundland—Request for investigation; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Energy—Request for tabling of documents relating to establishment of uranium refinery in Saskatchewan.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

MEASURE TO PROVIDE RESIDENTIAL TAXES AND RENTAL PAYMENTS OF ACCOMMODATION TO BE DEDUCTIBLE FROM INCOME TAX

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the feasibility of allowing residential taxes on owner-occupied homes and rental payments of accommodation by tenants to be deductible from federal personal income tax up to a maximum allowable of $300 each year.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to propose in this session of parliament a motion seeking tax relief for the already overburdened municipal taxpayer. In reintroducing this motion, I hope to bring to the attention of the federal government, and especially to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), the urgent need to alleviate the heavy and intolerable burden of the Canadian taxpayer who is not only heavily taxed today but in most cases is also a victim of double-taxation.

● (1700)

My motion calls for an amount of up to $300 as a deductible expense from federal personal taxable income for municipal taxpayers of owner-occupied homes and tenants renting accommodation in rooming houses or in apartments. We all know that the provision of shelter is a basic one for decent living, and we are also aware of the difficulties today of obtaining adequate and affordable housing with the many services expected and demanded by people in our affluent society, especially in urban and industrialized regions. No level of government acting alone can hope to meet successfully all these demands and needs. That is why all levels of government should be involved in the matter of providing affordable housing and tax relief for the municipal taxpayer.

To be really successful in this task, the three levels of government must co-operate. As the involvement of the federal government in municipal affairs is very limited, due to the provisions of the BNA Act, provincial governments are mostly responsible for education, municipal land use, local economic planning and the provision of many other services to people living in homes in our cities and towns. Unfortunately, not all provincial governments have as yet developed satisfactory policies and programs to ease the financial burden of municipalities. As a result, municipal governments have to tax property owners to raise the money to provide more and more of those services which the people demand and which are becoming costlier every year.

Property taxes have become the major source of money for local governments, making up to 80 per cent of the total municipal revenue, exclusive of transfer payments. In turn, residential property is the main source of property tax revenue for municipalities. However, the many services provided by municipalities, especially education, bear little relationship to the value of one's property holdings, and yet educational costs today comprise from 50 per cent to 60 per cent of our municipal tax bill.

Furthermore, a property tax in isolation cannot meet the ability to pay principle in the matter of taxation, and there is no precise relationship between property ownership and ability to pay. For example, an elderly couple has no great capacity to pay taxes by virtue of owning property. Therefore, property taxes today are considered by many tax experts to be regressive, inflexible, inequitable and bearing heavily upon those who can least afford them. Furthermore, the person paying municipal property taxes is a victim of double-taxation. That is why many countries—for example, the United States—avoid this kind of injustice by allowing property taxes, mortgage interest payments and other expenses as items deductible from personal income tax. On the other hand, Canadian taxation laws allow businessmen to deduct real estate taxes and many operating expenses as items deductible from their income tax.

In the present economic crisis which our country is undergoing, I think it is urgent that the federal government take special measures to reduce unemployment, to control cost of living expenses, and in particular to cut taxes to stimulate the economy. Measures encouraging the construction and purchase of homes would increase the number of jobs and provide a much needed stimulus to our economy. Almost daily we read announcements and predictions in the newspapers that mill rates, hydroelectric rates, water rates and heating costs will be rising again this year almost to intolerable levels in spite of controls and the anti-inflation program. These developments are tragic to people on low incomes, and especially to our senior citizens on fixed retirement incomes. Renters of accommodation in rooming houses and apartment buildings will also face increased rents, as all these services will push up rents in spite of rent controls.

These problems have frequently been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance, and recently by the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities of Canada. The members of this federation expressed great dissatisfaction with the senior levels of government for not giving municipalities sufficient financial assistance to keep down municipal taxes. I am particularly happy that recently the Canadian School Trustees' Association, in a letter to me, expressed their interest in this motion and I would like to read a policy article which that association published at one of its conventions. It reads as follows:

The Canadian School Trustees' Association believes that financial measures should be undertaken by the government of Canada that will permit school-taxes on local property-owners and tenants to be deductible from taxable income.

I hope hon. members support such a policy statement. The rumblings of discontent are growing louder each year in all sectors of Canadian society faced with rising costs and heavy taxation, and that is why it is imperative that the Minister of Finance give this matter serious attention. The federal government has already recognized basic tax relief for marital status, dependants, charitable donations, special medical costs, moving expenses, and job-related expenses. Since I first introduced this motion in November of 1967, the federal government has increased its total expenditures from $11 billion annually to over $35 billion last year. That amounts to an increase of $24 billion. Therefore, the cost of the program I am proposing should not be entertained by the government or by hon. members speaking in this debate as an excuse for turning it down. I think it is high time the federal government recognized the need to grant Canadians basic tax deduction for shelter. I believe that the support and acceptance of my motion this afternoon will help ease the heavy taxation burden carried by our citizens.

I make this motion as a matter of urgent importance and with the serious intention of trying to solve some of the problems of property taxation which have been recognized before now to be inequitable and regressive. Therefore, I hope that this afternoon I will receive support for my motion from all sides of the House.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rather suspect that the time for the discussion this afternoon will be much too short, because over the past many years I have attended political conventions and policy meetings at the local, provincial and national levels and I know that this subject has come up for considerable discussion. On the face of it, this proposal does sound very attractive, but one has to consider the context in which such proposals have always been presented. Some 10 to 15 years ago when I first dealt with a proposal like this, it was put up, particularly by municipal authorities as an incentive for home ownership.

● (1710)

Civic administrations felt that if they had a higher mix of owner-occupied homes rather than tenant-occupied accommodation in their communities, they would have a more stable population and if the individual was the owner of the premises he occupied there was a greater incentive for him to maintain and improve the property. This was the chief purpose of the proposals 10 or 15 years ago, but it seems to have gone by the board today. The proposals we see are like that made by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), designed to alleviate the burden of taxes in this high inflation period. In other words, it is an income-relieving proposition. It is not an incentive program for the owner of property but, rather, is relief against inflationary pressure and ever-increasing taxes at all levels.

The Ontario tax credit provides for a variant of the formula proposed by the hon. member. On the Ontario tax credit return one stipulates the amount of taxes paid during the last taxation year on property owned or rented, and a credit is available. It must be remembered that the hon. member, although his resolution does not say so exclusively, is going for tax credit, not merely a deduction of $300 on taxable income. That would be almost meaningless for all tax credits, whether they be for interest paid on mortgages or on owner-occupied properties. We have seen this proposal many times in this House and outside, and there are various difficulties with it. With all these proposals one has to make up one's mind about the negative consequences.

I think the hon. member said he would grant a credit on owner-occupied residences or to tenants. If he understands income tax law, he will realize that theoretically the tenant has already received the benefit of a tax credit toward that rent, because if there have been expenses with regard to the rent, the owner of the property has been allowed to deduct them and therefore there is, theoretically, already an advantage to the tenant.

But how can each taxpayer be treated equitably? In 1974 my party put forward a proposal that interest rates above 8 per cent, to a maximum of a certain amount, would be deductible from income in order to arrive at a taxable income. But that suggestion had some difficulties with it. It really encouraged the taxpayer to take on a mortgage regardless of the interest rate because he would get credit under the Income Tax Act for anything above 8 per cent. It is the same with the proposals that mortgage interest beyond $5,000 per year, say, would receive some form of subsidy. This is not to encourage ownership but is merely a sort of one-shot affair to alleviate high interest rates. Personally, I do not think that would work; it would be counter-productive.

In this particular instance I wonder whether the benefits that will accrue to the taxpayer will be worth the complexities of the income tax return. With some 18 years' experience on both the government and opposition sides, I know that every exception to income tax leads to greater complexity in the return. It costs a great deal more to administer and it means more trouble and expense for the taxpayer whether the return is completed by himself or someone else. As a matter of fact, a very simple income tax system would be one that taxed revenues at all levels at a flat percentage. It would certainly be an incentive to get out and make more income and develop initiative. On the other hand, for those who are believers of a steeply progressive income tax—and I am not—we start getting exceptions. We have exceptions under the Family Allowances Act. If there were to be the elimination of the child allowance from income tax, it would mean a substantial reduction; at one time estimated almost as high as five points across the board.

There are workers' allowances, moving allowances, allowances for this and for that. As far as corporate income tax is concerned, every exception gives rise to all sorts of difficulties and to greater expense in computation of tax return. I do not think that system necessarily does greater justice in this particular instance, bearing in mind that it is used with some degree of success. I think the hon. member would have added more to his motion if he had included an allowance for expenditure of sales tax to see what the total tax burden is on the individual. If the purpose of the motion is to equate the weight of the total tax burden, it is very poor thinking to say that under the Income Tax Act persons earning $5,000 a year shall not pay income tax.

● (1720)

Let us assume that the figure is $5,000. That person may be relieved of the obligation to pay federal income tax; but is he relieved of the obligation to pay municipal tax if he owns a home? Such people may own homes which they bought many years ago when conditions were somewhat different. The owner may have built the home himself and it may be fully paid up. But the point is that the person must still pay his municipal taxes and must also bear as high a load, if not a proportionately higher one, of the retail sales tax burden in certain provinces. Such person must also pay the federal manufacturers' tax—the indirect sales tax which enters into the commodities people buy. Therefore, this proposal will do little to lighten his load.

One hears people speak of low income earners. It is hard to say just who is a low income earner these days, because today people in middle and upper income brackets are living just beyond a bare subsistence level. Only 20 years ago we thought such people were well off.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to consider the total tax package. If the hon. member were to bring forward a proposal covering the total tax package, I think we should be prepared to look hard at it. The hon. member's proposal contains an element of rough justice. Unfortunately, it does not go far enough. I suggest that it would be better to consider the total tax burden borne by the group the hon. member wishes to favour.

In addition, we ought to consider the value of a $300 tax credit to a man paying a marginal tax rate of 50 per cent. One immediately sees the difficulties of applying the tax credit to the varying tax scale brackets. The $300 tax credit is more valuable to a person paying tax at the rate of 50 per cent at the margin than it is to the person lower in the income scale or even, shall we say, to the poor chap who is not paying any income tax. After all, what is the $300 credit worth to the man not paying tax? Absolutely nothing. The cake disappears from the plate before he can eat it. Therefore, we must examine all the factors of this proposal. It is not as easy to resolve as it would first appear to be, and I invite hon. members to give further consideration to the various aspects of this proposal. We are considering a subject which some find it popular to advocate without examining closely its many ramifications. Certainly, a proposal like this could cost the treasury tremendous amounts of money. That is why we must examine its facets in detail to see whether it provides a greater degree of justice than injustice.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) for bringing forward his perennial motion calling on the government to give consideration to allowing residential taxes on owner-occupied homes and rental payments of accommodation by tenants to be deductible from federal personal income tax up to a maximum of $300 each year. This proposal will probably be talked out by the hon. member's Liberal colleagues since it has not been received well by the cabinet, especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I must say the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) treated the meaning of "deductible" somewhat charitably. There is a difference between a deduction and tax credit, and I think the hon. member sponsoring the motion spoke of deductions rather than of tax credits. I suggest that a deduction in this regard would be of little or no use to many people and a tax credit as proposed would be practically useless to those not paying taxes, including pensioners, people on fixed incomes and those earning low and moderate incomes. Perhaps when the hon. member brings forward his motion again next year he will clarify its language and speak of tax credits rather than tax deductions.

Arguments for deductibility are popular and persuasive; yet on close examination one sees that the idea behind them is expensive, regressive and a gimmick which offers little advantage to the average and low income owner-occupier or tenant. Therefore, the hon. member's proposal would be of real benefit only to those high in the income scale, to high income earners and to renters. One could best describe his proposal as prescribing an aspirin for a migraine headache, for he is considering the symptom rather than the cause.

Let us examine more closely the deductibility proposal as put forward by the hon. member. Studies show that such deductibility would be most expensive. I imagine that is why the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs do not support the idea. Allow me to quote the views of William Teron, chairman of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, on this subject as expressed in a recent edition of Executive. He is reported as saying:

> As far as deduction of interest charges or taxes, municipal taxes off peoples' incomes, etc., this is an extremely costly program, or would be a costly program. The loss of revenue by government would be something in the order of $1 billion per annum. It would be terribly regressive in that those with larger homes would benefit more than the poorer ones; which is almost in reverse to what society accepts. And we spend something like $200 million-$280 million or thereabouts right now to pay for the subsidies of all the public housing and all the sewerage treatment, etc., that we have done in Canada. And here with one item you would spend four times as much in one year to help all those Canadians who are extremely well-housed, beautifully-housed.
>
> Those Canadians well-housed don't need help. And I believe it is terribly important that we be very selective to help those who don't have good housing.

The attitude of the chairman of CMHC is supported by the government. We contend, as well, that deductibility as proposed is regressive from the point of view of the moderate and low income earner. I suppose I could best illustrate my point by mentioning the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan introduced by the former minister of finance, Hon. John Turner, in the 1974 budget, and passed. That program allows a taxpayer to deduct $1,000 from his income every year up to a maximum of $10,000, provided the money is set aside in a special account and used ultimately to buy either a home or home furnishings. Persons who already own a home are not eligible. As long as the money is to be applied to the purchase or furnishing of a home, it is deductible from income tax and the interest such money earns is not taxed. On the other hand, if the taxpayer decides not to buy a home or furnishings he or she can transfer it to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan and, likewise, avoid taxation. So much for the RRSP program.

Returning to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, in 1974 a subsidy of $65 million was provided. Who gained from that subsidy? Of people earning between $5,000 and $10,000, one in 49 participated in the program. Of those earning between $10,000 and $15,000, one in 32 participated. Of those earning $50,000 or more, one in 16 participated.

The average income earner in the $5,000 to $10,000 bracket received a grant of $264.93. A person earning between $15,000 and $20,000 would be eligible for a grant of $365, a person in receipt of between $20,000 and $50,000 would be eligible for $462, and a person with more than $50,000 could receive $571. Contrast this with the amount available to people with less than $2,000. They got a grant of $105. People getting between $2,000 and $5,000 received $203. That is what happens under a program of this type. To him that hath it shall be given, and from him that hath not, it shall be taken away.

• (1730)

The problems of housing cannot be solved by gimmicks. We have to build homes at reasonable cost. When I talk about homes, I am talking about homes for families, rental homes, public housing, non-profit housing. The former minister of state said there were 800,000 people in Canada who paid more than 25 per cent of their income in rent. These are the people we have to help. How is this to be done? By bringing down interest rates.

Last week I made a speech in the course of which I drew attention to what a person pays on a mortgage of $50,000 at the current interest level of 11.5 per cent for a 25-year period. He pays $498 a month, principal and interest. Over the 25-year period total payments amount to $143,000. This is what we have to attack. Surely there is a social responsibility on the part of governments and of all financial institutions to bring down interest rates so that people can buy homes at reasonable costs.

We have to assist tenants by bringing in meaningful measures of rent control and shelter allowances in the case of those on low incomes. We must bear in mind that most people do not pay personal income tax, which is why we must think in terms of shelter allowances rather than tax deductibility. The hon. member for Parkdale was talking about tax credit. But a person who does not pay taxes gets no tax credit whatsoever. It is important that the hon. member distinguish between a tax deduction and a tax credit.

It is time the government attacked the high cost of land. In the year between 1975 and 1976 the price rose from $6,542 to $8,520—that is the average cost of an NHA lot; it increased by 30 per cent in one year. The hon. member comes from Toronto and he knows it is impossible to buy a lot there for less than $30,000, so something has to be done. Mr. Teron, the head of the CMHC, says land costs have behaved very badly and that counter measures will be taken through a land mapping process.

What the government has to do is increase public land banking and release the land at the proper time so that the cost of land is brought down. The hon. member for Parkdale knows as well as I do that the land around the perimeter of Toronto—and this applies to land around the perimeters of almost every major city in Canada—is in the hands of land developers who release it only when it is to their financial advantage. The government should step in, acquire land, and release it at the proper time in such a way as to bring prices down.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) outlined some of the ways in which the provinces are giving help to municipalities. It is true that in Ontario tax credits are available. The system should have wider application. At the moment the limit is $90 but the scheme might well be extended to cover taxpayers with moderate incomes. I believe more tax credits are needed.

I appreciate the fact that municipal taxes are posing an increasing burden. In my view we ought to shift the portion covering education to the provinces and to the federal government—they do pay a certain amount at the moment. But they would have to pay an increased share, more especially on behalf of taxpayers with moderate and fixed incomes.

I cannot accept the proposition of the hon. member for Parkdale that a deduction with respect to owner-occupied homes and rental homes be allowed under the Income Tax Act. But if the hon. member is not successful in persuading the Minister of Finance to put forward his ideas in this respect I hope he will be successful in persuading him to adopt the proposals I have just put forward for a national house building program, a plan to tackle high interest rates, the need to impose greater responsibility on financial institutions, to provide for meaningful rent controls and shelter allowances, and so on. If he does this I shall be very proud of him, but at the moment I am not persuaded of the validity of the proposition he has set forth today.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank and congratulate by hon. friend from Parkdale. His proposal was well presented and it was obvious, even without benefit of a chest X-ray that his heart is in the right place.

As a regular member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and as one who has received a number of public inquiries on the subject, I greatly appreciate an opportunity to address myself to this subject.

This debate has to do with the need for shelter, one which is considered by many to be a basic human right for the sake of security and privacy. This is the case even in countries with the mildest climates, countries where people can live outdoors the year round if they so choose. How much more vital is it, then, to make sure that people are properly housed in a country such as Canada where one can actually perish in the cold seasons, even within shelter, in the absence of related needs such as adequate heating and clothing. This question of survival is acutely aggravated at the present time by such modern tensions as the rapidly rising cost of living, increasing expectations, changing values, social instability, and the energy crisis.

What is the hon. member proposing? He is proposing that property taxes and rental payments be deductible from income tax up to a maximum of $300. I am not sure whether he intended to include mortgage interest payments.

● (1740)

What are some of the main points of the government's position on this subject? First, proposals to allow property tax deductions or credits against personal income tax are usually advocated on one of two grounds. It is sometimes held that such a measure would aid the housing sector. Secondly, it is often held that government should reduce the high cost of housing by enacting such a measure.

The current level of housing starts is over 260,000, seasonally adjusted at annual rates. While this is slightly less than the peak reached earlier in the year, the reduction is not a result of any fundamental weakness in this market but rather a return to sustainable levels of activity. Provision of a measure of this sort is likely to have negligible impact on starts as only a small fraction of the tax savings would be in respect of new units. Any measure of this nature that stimulates the demand side of the market will have the undesirable effect of putting upward pressure on prices and rents and would thus frustrate, to some extent, the efficiency of the measures in reducing housing costs.

As it is highly unlikely that a measure of this sort would have significant positive effects on the housing sector, such a measure becomes essentially a transfer payment. Considerations of equity are thus of primary importance. Judged on this basis, even including the proposed $300 maximum, the proposal of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) does not appear too desirable.

As background to any consideration of the equity of the measure, it should be noted that in recent years the property tax component of the consumer price index has risen no faster than other prices and costs. Against this background it seems fair to say that singling out this component of the recent inflation and subsidizing these particular costs via the tax system is not generally equitable. The government has, via indexing and increases in the federal tax cut, used the tax system in a much broader fashion to compensate those who are hardest hit by inflation.

In addition, if the hon. member for Parkdale is proposing that all rent be deductible up to the $300 maximum, the proposal will be discriminatory in favour of tenants as opposed to homeowners. Equity would require that a percentage of rent, roughly equal to the property tax content of rents, be deductible. Furthermore, a simple deduction or credit approach, as recommended by the hon. member for Parkdale, would not adequately recognize the income of the recipient. Some reduction in the deduction or credit available, based on the individual's income, would appear essential to ensure that the benefits are directed to those who are hardest hit by increases in housing costs.

While modifications along these lines could be accomplished, any proposal of this nature, regardless of its structure, will involve further inequities. The ultimate beneficiaries of such a general measure will not be those who receive the initial tax deduction. For example, if house prices and rents rise as a result of the deduction, a substantial portion of the benefits would accrue to developers. A measure of this sort makes little allowance for the housing needs of different persons. It could well be argued that larger families require relatively larger dwelling units and thus should be allowed a credit or deduction for a relatively larger fraction of their property tax or rent.

In addition, the inequities between persons residing in different provinces would probably be severe. This would occur because provincial-municipal financing arrangements vary significantly from province to province. In particular, that share of services provided by provinces, and the share of municipal revenues made up by provincial grants, as opposed to property taxes, varies dramatically by province. While this is not a concern to an individual province in structuring its scheme, a federal measure related to property taxes that, of necessity, had a uniform structure across provinces would result in different benefits in different provinces, and would cover a different percentage of the total costs of municipal services in each province. In addition, property tax assessment systems in different provinces differ in their treatment of various types of property. This fact would result in inter-provincial differences in the benefits flowing to various types of housing. The inter-provincial inequities resulting from these facts would be substantial.

Several other points are in order in judging the desirability of this proposal. First, as a result of the measure, municipalities could feel less pressure to hold property tax increases down. As a result these taxes could rise, and/or provincial grants fall, from the levels that otherwise would have occurred. This effect would pervert the aims of the proposal and substantially increase the revenue cost. Such a scenario is also not the most efficient way for the federal government to transfer resources to municipalities.

Second, while property taxes are undoubtedly a cost of home ownership, they are levied by municipalities and provinces in order to pay for goods and services. Responsibility for these taxes is a uniquely provincial-municipal affair. Provision of a deduction along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Parkdale might be regarded by provinces and municipalities as an unwarranted federal intrusion into their affairs.

The precise structure that the hon. member for Parkdale has in mind is not clear. In particular it is not clear if he is proposing a deduction from income or a credit against tax paid. While most of the effects noted above would be independent of the precise form of the measure, the revenue cost, and the relative size of tax savings at various income levels would, of course, depend crucially on the structure.

It is estimated that a deduction from tax payable of up to $300 would cost something in excess of $2.5 billion. If the measure were structured as a deduction from taxable income, the cost would be some $500 million. Even with the $300 maximum, a substantial portion of the benefits of such a measure would flow to higher income persons.

The federal government allocates substantial resources to the housing sector. The CMHC budget for new loan commitments is some $1.2 billion. The main portion of these loans will benefit lower income persons. In addition, the expenditures of CMHC for programs such as grants and public housing subsidies is some $300 million. Again a substantial portion of these expenditures, under programs such as AHOP and RRAP, the assisted home ownership plan and residential rehabilitation assistance plan, go to lower income persons. In addition, in 1973 the federal government included municipal school-purpose taxes in the federal-provincial equalization formula. As a result equalization payments are currently some $200 million higher than otherwise. These payments, of course, go predominantly to lower income provinces. It is obvious that all of these existing federal measures provide benefits to those most in need. The proposal of the hon. member for Parkdale, on the other hand, would provide to some extent benefits without regard to need.

What then is the government's conclusion? A measure of this nature does not appear to be desirable. It would not provide significant impetus to the housing sector and would have the perverse and undesirable effect of putting upward pressure on house prices and rents. While the lack of clarity in this proposal makes precise determination of the equity effects difficult, it is the case that the proposal would not impinge equally on persons living in different provinces and it would not adequately account for the different housing needs of families of different sizes. As property taxes have not risen faster than the CPI, subsidizing this particular cost does not appear equitable. The measure would involve a substantial reduction in federal revenues and would not direct benefits to those most in need. Lastly, it would be construed as an invitation to municipalities to raise property tax rates.

In addition, there are a couple of other counter-arguments which have been raised. First, let me compare United States and Canadian tax systems. In response to the argument for a deduction of the expenses on the basis that the U.S. allows it, the following points should be made. It is practically impossible to make meaningful comparisons of personal income tax practices in Canada and the U.S. because of differences in the basic income tax systems. For example, although municipal taxes and mortgage interest on homes are deductible in the U.S., capital gains from the disposal of a home are taxable and the basic personal exemptions are lower in the U.S. than in Canada. While Canada allows a deduction for pension contributions, the U.S. does not. Also, the method of recognizing state and provincial income taxes for federal purposes is different in the two countries. All tax comparisons will have to be made in the context of the total tax structure and the social welfare programs in each country in order to be meaningful.

Secondly, with regard to municipal taxes and mortage interest expense of home owners from a tax policy point of view, one basic principle in Canadian income tax law is that no deduction is allowed in respect of personal expenses. Because the purchase of a home is for personal reasons, such as private living accommodation, no expenses incurred in respect thereof could ordinarily qualify for a deduction under this principle. Although the purchase of a home is a large expenditure, it is no different from a taxpayer's purchase of furniture, clothes or a car. Personally I take issue with that viewpoint but it is one that has been expressed.

● (1750)

These are the main points of the government's position on this subject. However, given the crucial need for shelter in a harsh climate such as Canada's, in a world where shelter should be a minimum basic human right for security and privacy even in areas of the world with an easy climate, the high costs of housing due to speculation and other reasons, and the social importance of stable family life, it behooves any government, and especially one like ours, to recognize persistent public concern for the cost of housing and to give thorough consideration to all suggestions to modify it.

Surely the wit of man, especially the political man, can do that much. This certainly includes the high costs of land, due perhaps to an increasing oligopoly of developers and builders, particularly in dominant urban areas, which are mounting even faster than the costs of buildings themselves.

Whether or not this motion comes to a vote, I urge governments at all levels to give it serious thought. I again commend my colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale, for championing this cause.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment briefly on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). The House may be assured that I shall not try to kill his motion, because I should like it not to be disallowed. I feel that the issue raised is of paramount importance, although the motion is very moderate, not to say nearly insignificant for the small wage earner.

I have never been able to understand why successive governments have never studied the discrimination which exists between the owner of a single-family dwelling and that of an apartment building. Even now, the owner of a single-family dwelling is unable to deduct a cent of his municipal and school taxes from his income. He must pay 100 per cent of it and, if he borrows to build or repair his house, he must reimburse 100 per cent of this loan, because it is a single-family dwelling. He must pay these taxes twice, while the owner of an apartment building will be exempted to pay two-thirds of his municipal and school taxes, as well as two-thirds of his income tax and of the interests on the money he had to borrow to build this apartment building.

He is continually favoured whereas the person who would need it does not have this opportunity. If this corporation or this individual has enough funds to build up low or high rent apartment buildings, he is favoured, Mr. Speaker, because he is entitled to all those tax deductions. He is entitled to all those deductions whereas the low wage earner wishing to build a house for his family is entitled to none of them. This is the discrimination I want to expose to the House tonight.

But they fear depriving treasury of a mere $300. If that makes the tax collector nervous, Mr. Speaker, let us tax a little more those who can afford to pay. It is said that big monopolies, big corporations do not pay more than 25 per cent of the whole taxes in Canada, whereas workers pay 75 per cent. This is asking workers to pay to enrich big monopolies, period.

The motion, although very moderate, should be accepted. As I do not want kill it, I will take my seat immediately.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very brief comment with respect to this motion as I too do not want to kill it.

I want to assure the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) that a Progressive Conservative government will carefully consider the principle that a proportion of municipal property taxes and interest on mortgages should be deductible from the federal taxable income of homeowners or should form the basis of a federal tax "credit" scheme. One condition is that a comparable tax benefit should be extended to tenants.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been some very eloquent speeches on this subject.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that the hon. member who has just been recognized by the Chair will complete his remarks prior to the time of adjournment so that the motion may be put to a vote of the House. This is an extremely important principle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) has the floor.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, the intervention by the opposition House leader is non-understandable, as are most of his remarks.

A proposal such as the one put forth in this motion by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) cannot be settled in a very short time. Of course it would not come to a vote anyway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Why not?

Mr. Railton: It has to be discussed further than just during a mere private members' hour when people are filling in time, as they have been doing. This motion has not been discussed in everyone's speech pertinently or completely.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

As far as I am concerned, this is a very good idea. The hon. member is trying to bring some benefit to the lower income group. However, that group will not be helped a great deal by this $300 difference because very few of them own houses. Their rents are usually looked after by rent policies and restrictions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, if I may continue with the remarks I was making at five o'clock when private members' hour was called on Bill C-19, I was talking about the people who would be affected by clause 15 of the bill.

Another segment of the economy that will be affected by the removal of this subsidy, with its subsequent effect on these terminals, is Canadian farming. The farmers of Ontario would suffer a cut in their supply of feed grains. At the present time farmers are dependent on these terminals for the distribution of a majority of their feed grains. When the terminals close the farmers will have to find alternative sources of feed grains. These alternate sources will most probably be at a higher rate.

The Quebec farmer who is dependent of feed grain storage in Seaway terminals will also suffer. The terminals further on down the Seaway near Montreal and Quebec will not waste any of their storage capacity on feed grains. Instead they will concentrate only on export grain. The higher price on the rail movement of grain will dictate that these terminals accumulate as much export grain moved by water as possible. There will be no room for feed grains.

The western farmer will lose the markets that are supplied with grains from the eastern ports. This will result because of the possible price differential grain buyers will have to pay in the winter months when the grain arrives at these ports by rail. Buyers will soon go to other suppliers who can guarantee the same price for grain all year round. The Great Lakes shipping fleet would also be affected when the terminals are forced to close. These ships are responsible for the movement of grain from Thunder Bay to the inland terminals and eastern ports. With the removal of the subsidy they would have to change their traffic patterns, with detrimental results to all concerned.

Presently, because the lower Seaway closes much sooner than the upper lakes in the fall, these grain ships are able to make additional trips to the inland terminals. After these additional trips are made, and in most cases the terminals are filled, the ships then make one final trip. On their return they tie up beside these inland terminals so they can be unloaded later on during the winter months. In the spring the ships docked at these terminals also get an earlier start and are able to make additional runs on the lakes while they are waiting for the lower Seaway to thaw.

With the removal of the subsidy there would be a marked change in the pattern. First of all there would be more movement of grain out of Thunder Bay directly to the eastern export points during the regular navigational season. Again the higher rail rates would dictate that as much grain as possible be moved by water. In the fall the ships will prefer to haul through to the St. Lawrence ports. If they are down through the St. Lawrence they most likely will not have enough time to get back up to the lakehead to load and then winter at the inland terminals.

There will no longer be the rail movement or the docking at these inland terminals, with the end result that there will be decreased activity in the winter. With this decreased activity will come the eventual forced closure of these terminals.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hold the same view as most of my fellow members. The repeal of section 272 should be held off at least one year until the minister can put together his new transportation policy, especially since his predecessor aptly described the existing policy as a mess. Dramatic changes in this one aspect of our national transportation system should not be made without any reference to how this will affect other parts of the economy.

Let me also say that if the government should decide it is desirable to remove the subsidy, it should be removed in such a way that the economy that is dependent upon it can adjust. Also before this political decision is made, we must be sure that all studies on the economic impact of this decision are completed and understood. Finally, should section 272 of the Railway Act be repealed as planned, and no compensating measures undertaken, the economies of the areas affected will be adversely and seriously affected. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this bill should not pass this House until clause 15 of the bill has been removed.

● (2010)

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley) as he discussed the milling industry. Coming from the east coast, I too am interested in this. However, I am waiting to hear what the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), who will be taking part in this debate later, will be saying in the House on the discussions that have taken place in the milling industry, particularly as they relate to the east coast.

My task tonight is to speak on the clauses of Bill C-19 relating to the Department of National Health and Welfare. The government has made known its intention not to escalate in 1976 the rates payable under the Family Allowances Act of 1973. The provisions for this step are encompassed in Bill C-19, and it is in respect of those provisions that I wish to speak today. Before I say anything about the actual provisions, I should like to make a few introductory comments.

No government likes to announce that a program to which it is deeply committed, and in whose worth it strongly believes, will be subject to restraint. Thus these remarks are made with mixed feelings. However, we have recognized, virtually all of us, the need for restraint and for a reduction in the rate of growth of government expenditures. We have all recognized also that all sectors of government activity have to feel the impact of this restraint. Since social programs comprise the largest single portion of government expenditures, it follows that they must bear a share of expenditure reductions.

My investigation demonstrated that the Department of National Health and Welfare had a number of possibilities for restraining the growth of government spending. Measures to restrict the growth of federal government expenditures in respect of the Medical Care and Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Acts had already been put in effect, and no further restrictions in those areas seemed to the government to be immediately desirable.

On the welfare side of the minister's department, and leaving aside the contributory Canada Pension Plan, the largest programs are family allowances, old age security, the guaranteed income supplement for OAS recipients, and social assistance and services expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan. It was on these programs in particular that the government's attention was focused.

I am told that a reduction or the non-escalation of old age security or guaranteed income supplement programs was not an acceptable alternative. It has been a major part of the social program of this government over the last several years to ensure that benefits payable under income maintenance programs for the elderly reached fully sufficient levels as quickly as possible. To pull back now from the gains that have been made seems to the government to be unacceptable. Either reducing, or not escalating old age security and the guaranteed income supplement would reduce the impact of what has been achieved by the minister and the government. Even given a diminishing rate of inflation, this would doom some of our senior citizens to fall back into grave economic difficulty.

I am told that a somewhat similar argument prevailed with respect to major shared cost welfare expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan. Under that legislation provincial expenditures on social assistance and services are shared, provided the expenditures are incurred on behalf of those in financial need or likely to become in need.

The exact definition of need varies from province to province, but in all cases the federal dollars under the Canada Assistance Program go almost entirely to those with very low incomes. To impose heavy federal restrictions upon these expenditures seemed most inappropriate to the government, and to do so would strike hardest at those least able to protect themselves in difficult economic times.

There were also other reasons for eschewing a major attempt to reduce costs under the CAP. As hon. members are well aware, we are currently nearing the conclusion of a major federal-provincial review of all our shared cost welfare expenditures, a review which it is hoped will result in a major reform and streamlining of the welfare system. Consequently the government thought that this was not the time for unilateral federal action in that field. Of course disbursements to the provinces under CAP are made pursuant to signed agreements between federal and provincial governments which cannot be changed unilaterally without one year's notice. In effect the federal government cannot act quickly without provincial consent.

I think the House will realize that among major welfare programs the federal government would have to consider cost reduction in respect of family allowances. Even here I am told the government moved with great reluctance. The 1975 family allowance level of $22.08 per child is not lavish, but it does provide a substantial measure of income support to Canadian families. Thus for most Canadians with children, the monthly family allowance cheque is an important supplement to family income. The government proposed the non-escalation of family allowances only on the grounds of the very urgent necessity to reduce the rate of increase in government expenditures and on the grounds that among the possibilities for restraint in our major welfare programs the non-escalation of family allowances would cause the least amount of difficulty to Canadians.

The minister has received representations from women's organizations about this decision and, quite correctly, they point out that the family allowance is for many women their only disposable income and the only income over which they can exercise control. The government does recognize this situation in the Speech from the Throne. But it must be reiterated that the decision was made on the basis of effecting a cost saving with the minimum possible detriment to the fewest people.

I should add that those who have been hardest hit by these changes are not left unprotected. Those who can demonstrate financial need will be in receipt of cost shared social assistance payments which do in general rise with the cost of living and which will fill the gap left by the family allowance non-escalation. Those working at minimum wages will, in most provinces, be receiving higher minima this year than last. Those who must utilize unemployment insurance to compensate for temporary loss of employment receive payments based on their wages while they were working. In general those wages are higher this year than last. Moreover, the escalation of exemptions from income tax means that all wage and salary earners in the low and middle income ranges will pay less tax this year than last.

I should add that the reduction of inflation from approximately 11 per cent one year ago to 6.5 per cent in September should clearly have an ameliorating effect on family situations.

I am told that the savings which will be effected, should the House approve these amendments, will be considerable. The statutory payments under the Family Allowance Act in 1975 were almost exactly $2 billion. The non-escalation of payments in 1976 will result in savings of $221 million and will leave expenditures in 1976 at very close to the same levels as those in 1975. In addition, of course, the $221 million annual saving will accrue to the federal treasury in perpetuity since the base for any future adjustment of payments will be the 1975 base year.

The amendments to the Family Allowances Act of 1973 which are laid before hon. members in Bill C-19 are intended to give effect to this non-escalation. There is no need to discuss them in any detail on second reading here today, but I will call hon. members' attention to two features of the amendments. The first is that they are made retroactive to January 1, 1976. In this case the retroactivity provisions are intended to avoid causing additional hardship for Canadians because we have continued since the end of 1975 to pay the 1975 rate of $22.08 per child in order to avoid the problem of overpayments.

● (2020)

The second point to which I wish to draw the attention of the members is that the federal family allowance legislation permits provinces to adopt a different configuration of payments than the federal uniform rate should they desire to do so. Such variations, by age of child, size of family, or both, are permissible provided that the total payments in a province with such a configuration are not substantially more or less than what would have been paid if the federal rate were to apply.

Thus, in addition to giving effect to the Government of Canada's intention to maintain the 1975 family allowance rates through 1976, the amendments which are now placed before the House are intended to permit provincial governments, utilizing their own configurations of family allowance payments, to make the appropriate changes in their own provincial legislation and regulations. The provinces of Alberta and Quebec are the two directly involved. The government of Alberta has agreed to pay the same allowances in 1976 as in 1975 and will adjust its legislation accordingly. The province of Quebec is paying an escalated rate in 1976 but is doing so subject to the clear understanding that the federal government will compensate it only to the level which would have applied had the 1975 rates prevailed. Thus it will be up to that province to make up the difference out of its own treasury.

I would remind hon. members that family allowances were tripled by this government as recently as 1973, rising from approximately $7 previously to $21 by January, 1974, because the government recognized the additional cost to the family of raising children and recognized the important role of the family in the fabric of our society. By means of supplementary legislation these increased benefits for 1974 and subsequent years were escalated to reflect the increase in the cost of living. I would point out that never before were these pensions indexed.

It was a difficult decision for the government to make but in the interests of fiscal restraint, in the social security field as in others, the government opted in 1976 to remove temporarily the escalation factor from family allowances since it was felt that those families in need would have recourse to other social assistance measures. I must underline the word "temporary", however. The legislation before us now refers only to 1976. The Speech from the Throne and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) have stated, and I reiterate today, family allowances will again be escalated by indexing starting in January, 1977.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the government proposed these amendments to the Family Allowances Act of 1973 in recognition of the important necessity for restraint—restraint which all Canadians must share. The government believed that this was among the most appropriate and least disruptive means to introduce some restrictions on the growth of social programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Marshall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member if she can assure the House that what is related—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) wishes to ask a question he can only do so with the consent of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell). Otherwise he will have to wait until he makes his own speech.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Woolliams: You cannot say no; she can.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is the decision of the hon. member for South Western Nova whether she wishes to answer a question.

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. member will respect the fact that if I cannot find the answer right away I will get it for him if he places his question on the order paper.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne indicated the freeze on family allowances would be lifted. I wonder if the hon. member can say that the freeze on the family allowance, which is presently at $22.08, will be removed and that in the New Year the government will bring in indexing of the family allowances again?

Miss Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I stated that in one of my last comments. I was quoting from the Speech from the Throne, that as of January, 1977, there would again be escalation based on the cost of living index that family allowances would be increased using 1975 as the base year.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, you have listened to a lot of speeches on this bill and I suspect you will hear a lot more before the debate ends. It is a very complex bill, an omnibus piece of legislation involving a number of proposals. It deals with adult occupational training, family allowances, the Company of Young Canadians, Information Canada, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and the Railway Act—some good and some bad. This makes it very difficult for an opposition party to consider its decision in regard to voting on second reading. Indeed a second reading vote is a bit of a farce and our party is looking for ways and means by which to move a reasoned amendment to highlight these repugnant provisions. We feel the legislation is nothing more than gimmickry, a public relations job.

This is not a genuine government restraint bill, Mr. Speaker. In the areas where it proposes to exercise restraint the result will probably be much more costly in terms of the human and financial resources of the country.

I was amused by the comments of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) when he introduced the bill last Friday saying it was very significant and important legislation, an important measure in the area of government restraint. The fact is that this bill was introduced last March. If it is so important and significant surely it could have been disposed of in one form or another before the House adjourned for the summer. Of course the government was occupied with the peace and security legislation and issues of that nature. It cannot be terribly important because the gun bill will never see the light of day, thanks to members on this side of the House and to a lot of sensible Canadians who made some very reasoned representations to an unreasonable minister.

Mr. Goodale: The public was distinct and different from the opposition.

Mr. Mazankowski: It was not the opposition who moved closure to curtail debate on the gun legislation so I do not know where the hon. member was when we were dealing with that legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: The mortality rate in Assiniboia is very high.

Mr. Mazankowski: This legislation represents deferrals of expenditures rather than cancellation of expenditures. Let us look at the grain stabilization fund.

Mr. Goodale: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon member is thumping his desk. I wonder if he will provide the same luxury of deferral to farmers who are being asked to pay into the fund.

• (2030)

Mr. Goodale: Read my speech of last Friday.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is the young hon. member opposite, the understudy of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, telling the House that farmers who are finding it difficult to meet commitments and obligations will be given the same privilege as is extended to the government?

Mr. Goodale: Read my speech of last Friday.

Mr. Woolliams: There speaks the $700,000 Lang boy.

Mr. Goodale: I have attended more than 50 meetings across the Prairies, talking to farmers about the grain stabilization plan.

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. member will probably have to attend another 50 if he wants to get his point across.

Mr. Goodale: Does the hon. member not talk to farmers about the grain stabilization plan? How many meetings have you attended?

Mr. Mazankowski: I meet farmers practically every weekend, but it does not cost me $740,000 to go to my constituency.

How can the people of Canada place their trust and confidence in a minister who blows that kind of money and, at the same time, talks of restraint from the other side of his mouth? It is simply foolish.

Mr. Goodale: One cannot talk to farmers in Ottawa.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is well known that the young hon. member opposite spends more time talking to a handful of Liberals than he does talking to farmers.

Mr. Goodale: That is absolute nonsense. I'll wager I talk to more farmers than you do.

Mr. Mazankowski: I probably talked to more farmers on Friday night than the minister has talked to in all of the years he has been in Ottawa.

Mr. Goodale: Nonsense.

Mr. Woolliams: Apparently the only word the hon. member knows is nonsense.

Mr. Mazankowski: I suggest that the hon. member and the fellow he is trying to emulate must pull up their trousers if they are to sell their programs and instil confidence and trust in the minds of the Canadian people.

Mr. Andras: Why not substitute the word "socks"?

Mr. Mazankowski: If the parliamentary secretary wants to defend the indefensible, that is his privilege. Obviously he and the person he wants to emulate are insensitive about the huge quantities of taxpayers' money being spent to spread Liberal propaganda among the people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And it is not going over.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Mr. Mazankowski: And it is not going over. Really, this piece of legislation will merely shift spending from one area to another and can therefore be classified as cosmetic. Finally, it represents a withdrawal of government support from certain programs, which I find indefensible. We ought to reconsider those parts dealing with research and development, especially as we have run up a deficit of $8.2 billion in the field of high technology products. Mr. Speaker, research and development are important if we are to improve our technology and productivity, and cutbacks in this field are ludicrous. Improved technology can improve our trade balance, increased productivity can improve our competitive position in trade. Therefore cutback decisions should be reconsidered.

The special training programs fulfil an important need and are one means of providing jobs and filling vacancies in specialized fields. For example in Alberta there is a serious shortage of skilled tradespeople such as plumbers, electricians, and accountants. I suggest that overly generous UIC benefits and cutbacks in training will lead to vacancies in these fields not being filled. It is interesting to note that the last Statistics Canada report indicated that already $2.4 billion has been paid out in unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. MacKay: But can you believe it?

Mr. Mazankowski: As I said, this legislation is unsatisfactory. Where the cutbacks are real, such as in the "at and east" rates, the impact will be so detrimental as to create consequential obligations for the government which will far exceed amounts saved. To me, the legislation is an exercise to disguise the government's own extravagant habits and refusal to come to grips with real issues.

I am appalled at the way in which the government can play games with figures when it wants to sell a particular philosophy or policy. The government's instincts for manipulating for political gain never cease to amaze me. You know, there is lots of room for the government to tidy and tighten its own operations. I refer specifically to the way in which the government, its agencies and departments control their internal financing. I do not suppose improvements in this area would attract too much attention in the press; nevertheless, restoring proper financial and parliamentary control is one of the gut issues we face.

The financial control and the management systems of the Government of Canada, its agencies and departments are significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness. Bear in mind that within the Government of Canada, its agencies and departments there is inadequate protection against fraud. Testifying before the Public Accounts Committee, the Auditor General said there is inadequate protection against fraud and we have inadequate mechanisms for determining the extent to which fraud occurs.

A reading of the testimony taken before the Public Accounts Committee reveals that in some departments one can obtain signed blank cheques. One member of the Auditor General's staff who worked on the investigation alluded to the fact that on the very first day of his investigation of the cheque-issuing branch of one department he found signed but unfilled cheques. The department in question issues some two million cheques per month. Also, unless fundamental changes are made, the day may soon come when the Auditor General will not be able to vouch by certificate for the accounts of Canada. If this happened to a corporation whose shares are traded on the stock market, the value of its stock would soon sink to nothing. Or if a small businessman running his business that way were to go to his banker for credit, the banker would tell him to clean up his operation. Unless he could revise the operation, such a businessman could not even get inside the front door of a bank.

I do not know how long the government expects the Canadian people to swallow the blatant inadequacies and devious techniques brought forth before the Public Accounts Committee. In the first volume of the Public Accounts of Canada one sees evidence that the Government of Canada has over-stated its financial position by some $7 million. I see the President of the Treasury Board smiling. Perhaps he thinks it is a joke, a play on words. But the government does not follow consistent and standard accounting practices acceptable to the accounting profession across this country.

The minister knows of my respect for the Auditor General. I think he is bringing some of the inadequacies to light and warning the Canadian people that all is not well with the financial control and management exercised by the government. When can we expect the government to deal frankly with Canadians and adopt an accounting and book-keeping system consistent with generally accepted accounting practices?

● (2040)

When can we expect the government to report on the progress made in carrying out recommendations made by the Auditor General, some 34 in number? I understand the government has agreed to accept 32 of them, but to date there has been no indication of the progress made in this direction. What has happened to these recommendations, recommendations which were endorsed by the Public Accounts Committee? What has happened, for instance, to the recommendation requesting the appointment of a chief financial officer who would oversee the budgeting operations and financial management of all government agencies? I support this concept because under the present system internal management has clearly been lacking. The structure which exists within the Treasury Board and the policing departments of government militates against effective corrective action.

The Treasury Board has not given control measures sufficient emphasis. The estimates and the public accounts, which are the foundation of the control system, have failed to set up adequate standards of accountability. Moreover, under the current system members of parliament are given insufficient information upon which to establish accountability. One could describe this administration as one which is incompetent and which has failed to act as a capable and worthy trustee of public funds. It has lost the will to govern and it has lost the confidence to manage.

Mrs. Holt: Those are all meaningless clichés.

Mr. Mazankowski: You see, Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of flak we get from over there. They do not care about public money. But we care. We are all trustees of public funds—all hon. members. Government needs a watchdog but we have seen our role whittled down by the manipulations of this government.

The President of the Treasury Board is a businessman. I am sure that in his days in the business world he took care, as one of the prime requisites of his operation, to exercise careful internal management control. I am sure he would want to act in the same way in his present portfolio, but I should like to know what he has been doing since he assumed that elevated position. He is in charge of the cash register and I should like to know how much progress has been made in carrying out the recommendations of the Auditor General. What advice is he giving to his colleagues in this regard? The essence of parliamentary democracy is control of the purse strings. We all know that successive Liberal administrations have not had a good record in this field.

I want to quote from the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts as reported at various dates. This is what Mr. Harris of the Auditor General's Office said, as recorded at page 66 of Issue 45.

> Virtually all the observations and recommendations in our report were provided for, to a greater or lesser extent, by the Glassco Commission in 1962. Our recommendations are consistent with Glassco; they vary only in emphasis and degree of detail. The evidence indicates that those responsible chose not to emphasize or implement most of the control-oriented recommendations.

In Issue 47, page 10, we read:

> In an environment where the government is not held accountable to parliament, it is less likely that subordinate managers will be held accountable to their seniors. If significant improvements are not made . . . in our view little progress will be made in improving financial planning and control within departments and agencies.

In Issue 48 at page 17 the Auditor General is recorded as saying:

> It would appear that the statutory provision which is available to Treasury Board is now too little used to guard against departments covering up operating inefficiencies by using funds for purposes different from those originally intended.

Here is another quotation from Issue 50, page 13. Mr. Lafferty is speaking.

> It is also our view that until departments introduce effective systems of budgetary control there is no basis for determining whether or not funds are being spent for the purposes, in terms of activities, for which they were provided.

These are stinging indictments of government administration, a stinging indictment of the way in which taxpayers' money has been wasted and pilfered. In a speech during the debate on the address the minister spoke boldly of what he intended to do. He said he would be brutal in taking action with regard to wasteful spending practices. He would tighten up on the taxi slips. Well, that is a step in the right direction. It is about time someone took on this responsibility. But what is required are basic changes and a fundamental shift in emphasis.

Most important of all is the restoration of parliamentary control. In this connection there must be changes in the form and content of the estimates—another of the recommendations which has been advanced by the Auditor General. What is the Treasury Board doing in this respect? I understand that a study group was established to look into ways and means of modifying the estimates so that they could be more readily understood. Have these changes been agreed upon? Will they be incorporated in the estimates for the next fiscal year? What input, if any, will members of parliament be making? Or will the review be undertaken solely by the bureaucrats?

The minister insists that growth of the public service will be limited to 1.5 per cent this year and one per cent in the next fiscal year. Again this is something of a distortion. It amounts to playing with figures. The use of authorized man hours as an indication of public service growth is misleading because a large gap exists between the man hours authorized and the actual man hours used. For example in 1975-76 the authorized number of man years for public servants under Treasury Board control was set at 319,000, versus 308,000 for 1974. In the same year actual permanent staff reached about 276,000, versus 260,000 a year earlier. The gap was thus reduced from 15 per cent to 13 per cent. The government claimed, and truthfully, that the growth in authorized man years had been kept below 3.5 per cent, but the actual rate of growth of permanent public servants on staff was double that, about 6.1 per cent.

● (2050)

Projecting this previous 2 per cent drop in the gap between authorized man years and actual man years to 1976-77, the real rate of growth of the public service this year could be 3.6 per cent and not 1.5 per cent, as the government would have us believe. It is certainly fair to assume that this reduction in the gap will take place because the government is making full use of the two ways by which it can be brought about.

In addition, there will be more part time employees used and more consultant and contract workers. The other fact is that Treasury Board has been transferring authorized man years from the department to which they were assigned to a department that has developed a shortage because of over-hiring. I suggest that this playing with figures is very misleading and inaccurate and should not be allowed to take place.

On the administrative side we have a similar experience, and I suspect that it is not being changed as a result of the so-called restraint program. In the last four years some 33,000 new administrative positions have been created, an increase of some 31 per cent. For the 1976-77 fiscal year there are another 3,447 additional positions that have been created. These are the kinds of oddities that occur and which we find very difficult to swallow on closer examination.

Speaking of oddities and peculiarities, I want to discuss another matter, Mr. Speaker, which becomes somewhat bewildering as I study the current estimates. It has to do with some departments which overspent rather dramatically, in the section dealing with purchase, repair and upkeep budgets in the 1975-76 estimates, by an amount anywhere from 300 per cent to 400 per cent greater than the amount in the original estimates. The 300 per cent increase over estimates and the 450 per cent increase over the previous year paled into insignificance beside some of the actual increases in departmental budgets.

For instance, the administration branch of the Department of Manpower and Immigration budgeted $36,000 for the item having to do with purchase, repair and upkeep budgets in 1975-76. The actual expenditure was $4,236,000, an increase of some $4,200,000. This was covered in supplementary estimates A, but what is most noteworthy is that the 1976-77 main estimates forecast a drop to $50,000.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, the forecast expenditure of $2,024,000 for the administration branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the 1975-76 main estimates called for an expenditure of only $23,000. The 1976-77 main estimates forecast a decline to $1,235,000. Each of these bears critical examination.

The taxation branch of the Department of National Revenue had forecast expenditures of $6,249,000, against a main estimate of $1,874,000. Again the overrun is covered in the supplementary estimates, but the forecast expenditure for 1976-77 is down to $1,544,000. The administration branch of the Secretary of State Department had forecast expenditures of $4,719,000 against the main estimates figure of $19,000. That is a difference of $1,700,000 between the amount that was spent and the amount originally forecast. Again this deficiency was covered in the supplementary estimates, but the main estimates for 1976-77 forecast a decline to $331,000, lower but still significantly higher than the estimated figure of $19,000 in the 1975-76 estimates.

The administrative branch of the Department of Supply and Services will spend $1,425,000 against 1975-76 main estimates of $21,000. Again this is covered in supplementary estimates A, but the main estimates for 1976-77 show a reduction to $491,000. The same thing applies to the Department of Transport, which shows a forecast expenditure of $1,858,000 against the main estimates of $112,000 for 1975-76. Some $1,496,000 of this is covered by supplementary estimates, but the 1976-77 estimates show a decline to $1,184,000. The ministry account of urban affairs shows expenditures of $1,085,000, against the main estimate figure of $85,000. Again this is covered in supplementary estimates A, but the forecast for 1976-77 is $130,000.

All these figures indicate, Mr. Speaker, huge spending over-runs under the object, and reduced spending forecasts under the object for 1976-77. What creates special significance in regard to all these figures is the fact that visibly they represent one-time expenditures. Practically none of the departments involved plan to spend anything like the forecast expenditures for 1975-76 in the current fiscal year 1976-77. Indeed the total main estimates for 1976-77 at $14,242,000 for these departments is less than half the expenditures for 1975-76.

I do not know whether we can suggest, Mr. Speaker, that great breakdowns occurred in all these departments, that there was an enormous amount of repairing and servicing required or that these departments tried to use funds through this particular area for use in some other category. We must ask these questions, Mr. Speaker. What buildings or what type of equipment were being repaired? What was the nature of the breakdown? Why was the repair and upkeep not foreseen in the previous year's expenditures? What steps have been taken to improve the departments' ability to forecast such huge expenditures, expenditures that bear no relationship whatever to the original estimate?

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, there are so many ramifications here and possibilities for incompetence that the whole question bears close scrutiny and requires some answers. I hope that the President of the Treasury Board will take a close look at the question and provide the House with those answers. Certainly I intend to follow it up in further questions on the order paper. It is surely an area that bears consideration and I would be prepared to provide the minister with more details if he is inclined to look into the background of these very peculiar figures as they relate to the differential between forecast expenditures and actual expenditures.

I now turn, Mr. Speaker, to a section of the bill which perhaps is the most contentious, the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act, more commonly known as the "at and east" rates. In 1961 there were four principal reasons for implementing the legislation on the "at and east" subsidy. Number one, to encourage the continued use of eastern ports. Number two, to help keep Canadian flour companies competitive in world markets. Number three, to promote and assist the development and expansion of Canada's grain industry. Number four, to benefit the Canadian economy by providing mill transportation and port employment as well as helping Canada's balance of trade position in manufactured goods.

Those four reasons were valid in 1961 and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that they are valid today. Certainly there can be no reason why this particular section of the Railway Act should be repealed at this particular time. I am interested to know that both the President of the Treasury Board and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) alluded to the fact that we could be expecting the Minister of Transport to participate in this debate and to outline some new measures that may be implemented as a replacement for this particular provision. If that is so, that should be laid before this House at the earliest opportunity in order that we can not only debate clause 15 to repeal section 272, but also consider the proposed action which the minister is advancing.

● (2100)

I do not know why the minister has chosen not to participate in the debate at this time. I invite him to do so at the earliest possible date so that we can have a look at his proposal. If his alternative approach is satisfactory, we might curtail or at least shorten the debate to some extent to allow the House to get on to other business.

Mr. Goodale: It never stopped you before.

Mr. Mazankowski: We caught the government a little short-handed last Thursday night when we had to wait two hours for them to muster enough people for a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: When there is legislation we can deal with and support, we are only too willing to provide speedy passage. However, in situations like this where there are so many repugnant provisions, it is our duty and indeed our obligation to look very closely at these measures and challenge the government on some of its actions.

The Minister of Transport has been adamant in his policy of user pay. After the visit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Atlantic Canada where he received a hostile reception I would have thought the user-pay concept would not be all that acceptable and that the position might have been modified somewhat.

That would not be the first time the government changed its position on any given policy. We have seen 180° shifts before. In fact it is becoming rather common with that group. I would not have been surprised to see a modification here.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They always change things for the worse, never for the better.

Mr. Mazankowski: They always fly by the seat of their pants. It is interesting to look at the reactions and some of the answers we have been getting. A number of hon. members have pursued this particular issue, including the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), and the hon. member for Middlesex-Huron (Mr. McKinley). We all raised this matter on different occasions and received some very weird and wonderful answers. For example, the then parliamentary secretary to the minister of national health and welfare stated at page 12040 of Hansard:

> The minister had none the less carefully considered representations made to him by the Canadian National Millers' Association but does not feel that a case has been made for the continuation of the subsidy.

We know that in a letter the Minister of Transport stated that this particular provision is a waste of money. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stated that studies were under way and that he had been in touch with the President of the Treasury Board to discuss the matter in detail. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that he was studying the matter and having discussions with the other minister. On it goes.

If there have been studies and if the government has analyzed and properly reviewed the impact of removing the "at and east" freight subsidy, these studies should be tabled in order that we can have a look at them. After completing the studies, the government is determined that the withdrawal of the "at and east" rates will not cause any significant harm. A number of representations have been made to me and, I am sure, to other hon. members. The Goderich Elevator Company stated, and I quote:

Certain of our elevators will undoubtedly close their doors for good. There will be a resultant loss of employment, but additionally valuable storage space required at times of surplus grain stocks will no longer be available.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are going to indicate that my time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Mazankowski: I simply wanted to urge the President of the Treasury Board, who I know is a reasonable person, to reconsider clause 15. If there is sufficient evidence to indicate that the repeal of section 272 will not be detrimental to the industries affected, the flour and milling industry, the grain industry and the ports, I invite him to table that information. I assure the minister that if this provision is not deleted from this bill, there will be a long tough fight both in the House and in committee. Therefore I hope that the government will yield and come forward with its alternative quickly so that we can debate this measure with intelligence, having the full knowledge available to the government and knowing what the government proposes to do.

In conclusion, I thank hon. members for their attention. I am sorry the hon. member for Assiniboia got me off the track.

Mr. Goodale: I derailed your train of thought.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, Mr. Speaker, he derailed my train of thought and I was not able to complete my comments.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate, which began earlier this year and has been continuing today. Other members have dealt with some aspects with regard to the removal of section 272 of the Railway Act which deals with "at and east" rates.

My comments will be brief and as pointed as I can make them. I have not had an opportunity to review this matter. The way in which the government House leader has treated this parliament with regard to the intentions of the government as far as legislation is concerned leaves an awful lot to be desired.

It is important that the people of Canada understand that this debate is just beginning. We have not heard anything since the government's retraction late last spring or early summer. At the time the government first brought in this legislation about a year ago, it made it clear this legislation would effect savings. On the other hand it is rather disconcerting for those who will be affected by the elimination of section 272 to have this treacherous piece of legislation thrust upon them without warning. The government is simply using it to fill in its legislative program.

The points I want to deal with, seven or eight in number, have in part been dealt with today, last Friday, and in questions asked in the last session of parliament. Since the first announcement, nothing has happened in government planning to change the opinion of those most directly affected. That opinion simply stated is that there is no need to try to effect reductions of costs to the taxpayers of Canada in this particular area. The government has admitted it is not a question of there not being any studies. Rather it is a question of the government's failure to talk about the studies.

● (2110)

I am no longer bashful or shy about documents of the Government of Canada coming into my hands. I could not care less whether the government considers them to be top secret or only partially classified. I do not care what the government thinks about them. They are of interest to the people of Canada, and my six or seven points will deal with some of the matters contained in a public document which should have been released to the Canadian public in May last year.

I hear an interjection from the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane). Does the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain want to talk about the welfare of the 400 or 500 men on the waterfront at Halifax or Saint John who are involved in the milling industry? Can he tell us how to find them jobs? Will the hon. member put the money in the millers' pockets? The hon. member never says anything. He just sits there, and makes little jibes across the floor without any background or any concern for anyone in western Canada. He has been so long away that the temperature of this place has cooled down. He has been so long away from the Atlantic provinces that he has lost concern for anyone outside of central Canada.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that I have always stood and spoken very strongly for the maritimes and have a great interest in the west. I can certainly speak for the big man and big is beautiful.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member can say that in his own speech.

Mr. Forrestall: I do not know what in God's name that has to do with unemployment on the Halifax waterfront. What we are talking about is the restoration of a little confidence on the part of the Canadian people in the central federal government. Hon. members opposite would do away with meaningful programs which have been helpful and useful, and which were not implemented on casual hearsay.

Let me ask the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain what is the point in taking away something from one section of the country and giving it to another? What happens to the people? Is he not concerned about people? He is concerned about grandiose undertakings by a decaying government which has no ideas or concepts. He is concerned about giving legislative approval to casual comments made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) a year ago. The people are not satisfied. They are right. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that. Do you want to know, Mr. Speaker, why they are not satisfied? They are not satisfied because dollars and cents and jobs are being taken away from one sector when they will have to be given to another sector, and no purpose will be served. Business will be lost. If hon. members opposite do not want the business they should stand up and say so.

Members opposite must know the alternatives if they read their own studies. I hope they are made available to the supporters of the government. We are not entitled to them, but I do admit that once in a while the alternatives are spelled out. The advisers to the government very strongly suggest that the industry is not in a fair competitive position because of the subsidies given by other governments to their industries.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) have said that the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act will mean a cost to the economy of millions and millions of dollars. The subsidy on flour costs only $3 million or $4 million a year now. Why change it; why be divisive?

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Forrestall: What question? You people over there do not have any questions. Good God, you have no answers, and that is probably because you have no questions. Talk to the Canadian millers. Once you told them to go to hell. It is the people in the mills, in the grain stores and at the storage sites who are affected from central to eastern Canada. I am speaking of the Atlantic provinces, not necessarily Ontario and Quebec, although this does affect the river ports. As a matter of fact I wonder what Bourassa is saying tonight about that. I wonder how he is apologizing for this situation.

I have a study here which is called a memorandum to cabinet. Why could we not have had this before us last May? Does anyone want to get up and answer that question?

We hear talk about classified and secret documents. We hear the comments from the new minister from Manitoba whom I congratulate very warmly. As a matter of fact perhaps he should have gone to the Department of National Defence. At least he is a man of some character and has some concern for members of the Canadian Armed Forces. On the other hand I doubt very much whether he cares a damn for the workers at the port of Halifax, the port of Saint John or the port of Montreal.

It is rather interesting that this little document indicates to the cabinet that one of the effects of the removal of section 272 of the Railway Act which might be beneficial to the government would be the diversion of flour exports—the Cuban flour—from Saint John and Halifax to the port of Montreal. Like hell—they will get that over our dead bodies. That is not the way to do it. The government was concerned enough to ask for a study. I say to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who says there are no studies, that there are studies concerning schemes and devious ways of downgrading the port of Halifax. No one over there can tell me that the government did not intend to restore growth to the port of Montreal and to hell with Halifax, Saint John and Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: Otto fly me!

Mr. Forrestall: I have friends in the Canadian merchant marine who would put it another way. Cuba is our largest customer for flour. The hon. member for Crowfoot and others have spoken about that. It also appears in briefs from the Canadian Millers Association. We have heard this from half a dozen sources. We heard it from the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley) not only tonight but on a number of occasions away back in the earlier part of this year. The cabinet has three or four alternatives. They are clear. As a matter of openness and frankness it might be a good service to let the people of Canada know what is in these highly confidential documents so that they can judge what is so secret about them.

Mr. Goyer: What is secret about it? You have a blank paper.

• (2120)

Mr. Forrestall: It is numbered at the bottom. I am not quite as intelligent as you people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Half way up page five it spells out very clearly—

An hon. Member: They are blank pages.

Mr. Forrestall: —it spells out very clearly how this government can shaft the Maritimes, how it can shaft—in that vulgar term—grain growers in Canada and people employed at grain elevators and at milling operations. I suggest to some that they get this cabinet document. It would be improper for me to read from it, I would not do that.

The document is the property of the Government of Canada, as it says here. Who in the hell is the Government of Canada? They are so far removed from the people of Canada that even this is a confidential, secret document. They do everything they can to tell the people of Canada, "We represent you, we love you". But they are so far removed from the grass roots of this country that they will never be restored to government for another 20 years. This document is so unconfidential that it does not even have a document number. Perhaps it did, but it is cut off at the top. The number appears to be 267-75.

An hon. Member: That is crap.

Mr. Forrestall: I suppose that 75 refers to the year. It is a couple of years old. I have not heard anyone discussing these alternatives.

An hon. Member: Accept the challenge.

Mr. Forrestall: To read it?

Mr. Goyer: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: I will get you a copy. Perhaps everyone in the House would like a copy of it. A Minister of the Crown admits he has not even bothered to read the recommendations.

Mr. Goyer: It is pure invention on your part.

Mr. Forrestall: Shame! I find it hard to believe from such a conscientious, concerned cabinet minister. I will tell you what I will say, and I will say it in one sentence.

Mrs. Holt: You said an awful lot of nothing in many sentences.

Mr. Forrestall: I say in one sentence: Drop your stupidity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Goyer: A diversion.

Mrs. Holt: You have not said one line that is intelligent.

Mr. Forrestall: What is the object of this bill?

Mrs. Holt: You see?

Mr. Forrestall: It is not to lend legislative substance to wild, vague campaign promises of an inept government two years ago. They said, "We will do this; we will say that." Others have talked about the shallow hollowness of this as a proposal to restrain spending. I listened to my dear colleague from the Maritimes and I am sorry she is not in the House. I am referring to the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell). She did not get into this subject. What she had to say will be on the front pages of the Halifax Herald. It will be there, let no one worry about that.

Mr. Goyer: Where is your document?

An hon. Member: Liberal front page, page 52.

Mr. Forrestall: There will be losses of $15 and $20 a ton in terms of man hours. If hon. members are concerned, let me tell them that it will cost us in the ports of Halifax and Saint John upward of 600 man years. I do not know what that means to a lot of other members, but in regions such as the Atlantic provinces where unemployment is higher than elsewhere in Canada, where it runs up to 20 per cent and 30 per cent, there is no alternative employment for men who have spent their lives on the waterfront. I can only conclude that hon. members opposite have no concern in this regard. If that is the case, then surely this entire Bill C-19—which used to be Bill C-87—is nothing but a farce, nothing but a hollow treatment of promises given and resurrected, long since ignored and forgotten by a country which no longer trusts the federal government. That is the great cost and the great sadness.

May I refer now to Bill C-61, the Maritime Code. I supported that bill very strongly—members on the government side of the House will recognize that. I continue to support it because I believe in it and I think it is in the best interests of this country. It has been rejected, and you know why? Because the people of Canada have lost faith in the federal government. They do not trust it, and that is the tragedy. Taking a subsidy away from the railways and giving it to the millers will not save the Canadians anything. If they do not want the flour business, let them stand up and say so, and let them listen to what Canadians have to say in reply. Just maybe if they listen, Canadians might be willing to pay the price and to encourage the government to continue its efforts to get other governments to stop subsidizing milling operations. The fact of the matter is that other governments do it in a heavy way.

The flour we are sending to Cuba is paid for by the Russian government and subsidized by the people of Russia. Others have spoken in this Chamber about our declining share of the world milling market. Is that the direction in which we want to go? If it is the direction in which we are deliberately going, I suggest we have no reason to question why the people of Canada have lost faith, confidence, and trust in the federal institution. There is no trust, there are no savings, and yet this is being done under the guise of a bill that will effect spending restraint. That is not what this government is for. There is always a danger of getting so far in front of the people that you lose sight of them. The government is not doing anything in respect of this.

I have a telegram here which is too important not to read into the record. It is a telegram to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) from the Halifax-Dartmouth Port Commission Chairman, J. W. E. Mingo, dated February 13, 1976. I think it makes a little bit of sense. At least it portrays the concern that we have in the ports of Halifax and Dartmouth. I am sure it echoes the concern of the port of Saint John, and I am sure it is supported in principle by concerned people in the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivieries and Quebec. It reads:

> We have been informed that you propose (i) to introduce legislation repealing the rates prescribed by section 272 of the Railway Act for the carriage of grain and flour to eastern ports by rail, thereby freeing the railroads to set their own rates, and also, effective April 1st of this year—

Of course it goes a little further than that. It is effective on April 1, 1976, or the date on which the act comes into force, whichever is later. We were pleased to get from the government early last summer an undertaking not to proceed with it. So we can assume that the effective date will be the date on which the act comes into force. That will be one of the lengthiest battles which this Chamber has ever seen because this bill will not go through without the most bitter debate that we have seen in a long time. It is a classic unconcern. I continue quoting:

● (2130)

> —(ii) To terminate the subsidy, estimated to have aggregated $11 million in 1975, now being paid to compensate the railroads for losses sustained in moving this traffic at statutory rates.
>
> We appreciate that you are acting on the advice of public servants in your department who have given such action consideration. Yet we are at a loss to understand how it can be justified and accordingly we are requesting an opportunity to discuss it with you.
>
> Termination of the subsidy and the statutory rates will cost Halifax its export flour trade estimated at 200,000 tons in 1976, and will greatly reduce the throughput of grain at its elevator, thereby increasing the operating deficit of the elevator to the point where its closure will be inevitable.

I depart from quoting here. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the port of Halifax was built on the principle that this country required a major year round ice-free port on the east coast. That is why it was built 70 or 80 years ago.

I again quote:

Closure of the elevator will curtail Halifax's port operation, close down the operations of Dover Mills, and undermine hog production in the province by permitting an increase in the rail rates for the importation from western Canada of domestic feed grains.

Nothing has happened about that yet, has it? To continue:

The justification for such damage to our economy eludes us for a number of reasons including the following:

(1) Even when it is desirable to remove a subsidy, it is ordinarily undesirable to remove it so abruptly that the economy which relies upon it cannot adjust.

(2) This is especially true where, as here, the economy is one which the federal government is seeking to strengthen in pursuit of its avowed policy to reduce regional disparity.

(3) Prairie grain moves at statutory rates to Vancouver and Thunder Bay, at an annual loss to the railroads which is now estimated at $150 million or more and which has to be subsidized by other traffic including export-import traffic moving to and from the Port of Halifax, and from Thunder Bay via the St. Lawrence Seaway at highly subsidized tolls to Montreal, Bay Comeau, and the other river and gulf ports. How is it that this $11 million subsidy on the movement of grain to eastern ports is singled out for termination?

(4) The explanation is even more difficult when it is appreciated that, in the broad sense, the enormous excess of expenditure over revenue of your department and of the Crown corporations in the transportation field which report to you constitutes a complex framework of transportation subsidies for the benefit of various constituencies of Canadians, and that the only subsidies which benefit the export-import traffic of the Port of Halifax appear to be its share of the one which you now propose to abolish and the operating loss of NHB on its Halifax facilities. This loss was $700,000 in 1975 and is forecast to disappear in 1976.

That is, Mr. Speaker, if we ever get around to some more important legislation than this piece of stupidity.

(5) We have been informed that your department is reducing its expenditures by $31 million as its contribution to the federal government's program of budgetary restraint, and that, of this $31 million, $23 million, or 74 per cent, including the $11 million subsidy in question, will come from expenditures now being made in the Atlantic provinces. If this information is correct, how is it that the least prosperous region of the country, the one with the most precarious economy and the lowest standard of living, is being asked to bear three quarters of the burden?

Why is that, Mr. Speaker? I am asking hon. members opposite why is that?

(6) The "at and east" rates were introduced years ago to encourage the use of Canadian ports. So far as we know, encouragement in this manner of the use of Canadian ports for Canadian trade is still the policy of the federal government—

Mr. Speaker, I know of no white paper or no statement to contradict that, yet the government acts differently.

—and, if this is the case, the "at and east" rates should not be eliminated until a different policy is proposed, debated and adopted. Surely this policy, if it is to be changed, should be changed on its merits, and not for reasons of budgetary restraint.

(7) To us, it seems that the "at and east" rates were selected for termination, not as part of any well conceived new national transportation policy, but because there was pressure on your department to cut expenditures somewhere and the subsidy underlying these rates was easy to identify and otherwise convenient.

(8) We suggest that the proper course is to retain this subsidy until the whole question of the movement, east and west, of grain, coal and other bulk commodities is examined from the standpoint of projected traffic, available technology, and cost to the taxpayer . . . When all federal government and railroad subsidies are eliminated, and all technological options are optimized, we suspect the most economical way of moving grain from the prairies to Europe will be by rail from Saskatchewan to Halifax utilizing a unit train composed of special purpose hopper cars.

At all events we would like the opportunity to discuss these matters with you before any irrevocable step is taken.

It would be interesting to know, Mr. Speaker, whether anybody has bothered to communicate with Mr. Mingo with respect to that program. He is a highly respected member of our community, a highly respected member of the Liberal Party of Canada, and a man for whom I have a great deal of personal respect. These are the views he expressed to a government which has frequently in the past sought his advice about political matters in the Atlantic area, particularly in Halifax and Nova Scotia generally.

If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Roy) is in the Chamber I should like him to find out whether a response was made to that telegram and, if so, would anyone table it or table a study which sets forth alternatives to dealing with this.

Mr. MacFarlane: Why do you not table it?

Mr. Forrestall: I am not allowed to. I am not the big boy around here like you.

Mr. MacFarlane: You read something from it.

Mr. Forrestall: I have not read a thing from it. I have not quoted from it.

Mr. MacFarlane: Why not?

Mr. Forrestall: It might offend your sensitivities. You might get uptight about it. There are three alternatives and I will paraphrase them. The first is that you do not do anything with respect to section 272. Second, you can be right about section 272 and provide some form of fixed subsidy, the effect of which would be to separate completely Montreal from Halifax and Saint John. The millers would just move to Montreal and eliminate the area of Saint John, Montreal and Halifax East Dartmouth. That would be the immediate implementation. Or you could drop this altogether, make no amendment and introduce a subsidy directly to the grain millers. That is taking the money out of one pocket and putting it in another, thus freeing Canadian National to get into their so-called compensatory thrust of recent years to the fullest extent. I suggest any of them rather than continue the debate this House will face with respect to clause 15 of Bill C-19. I notice that this part of the bill is similar to the previous Bill C-167, introduced in the last session. Not even a comma appears to have been changed. We suggest that the government should delete this clause and thereby secure fairly quick passage of certain other clauses.

● (2140)

The bill seeks to amend the Occupational Training Act and the Family Allowances Act. The government may face difficulties with the latter provision. The bill will secure passage much more quickly if the government listens to the best advice of its experts, and does not implement the clause of which I am speaking. The government has done no studies; it possesses no comparative analysis on the effect of shifting the subsidy. I say, you will not save any Canadian taxpayer money; so why not leave the matter alone? So far as I am aware no member on the government side is prepared to see us abandon totally the export of flour and grain.

As I said at the beginning, the course open to the government is simple. Don't do it. Do not implement this part of the bill. It is stupid. No one will benefit and you will hurt many people, from the Lakehead to Halifax. Further, if implemented, the proposal would cost us thousands of man years of productive employment. Most of the people affected have worked in their field most of their lives. They are not easily retrainable. Once their unemployment insurance runs out, most of them will be in dire difficulties. Although the government has not studied the matter, I suspect that most of them are not re-employable or retrainable. After their unemployment insurance benefits run out they will become a direct burden on their families and on the government. Therefore the bill will achieve nothing.

I appeal to hon. members opposite to bring pressure to bear on the government with respect to this matter, as I am sure they have received briefs and letters from people most directly affected. I appeal to them to bring pressure to bear on the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Transport with respect to this clause. Last spring the government did not find it difficult to retreat after introducing a similar provision. I suggest, if the government is anxious to pass this bill, that it could probably make similar changes at this time. After all, it can do this better than we can. I tell the government that the more quickly it does this the more quickly this bill will pass and, unless it does this, we may be debating this bill next spring. The only other way the government will get it through is with closure and if it wants closure hanging over its head for such a stupid matter as this it must bear the consequences. The people of Canada will not put up with it and the people of Halifax will not tolerate what the government proposes.

Since the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway we, in the port of Halifax, have seen 19 increases in freight rates. And how many have been imposed in the St. Lawrence Seaway? None. Not one darned extra cent has been imposed during the period when the ports of Halifax and Saint John have seen 19 increases. There has not been one increase with respect to ports above the city of Montreal—not one, and we talk about the user-pay concept! We in the Atlantic provinces have said, "All right, keep the Seaway open, but with our taxes we will pay for icebreaking purposes. Please leave us alone when we develop alternative uses for our ports." The government watched us do that for seven or eight years; what we did made it uncomfortable and it jumped on us again last spring, to the point where Halifax has lost 40 per cent of its business. God only knows if we will ever get it back. And we have been forced to sit here, to legislate men back to work because of the ineptitude of the government's management of relations between employees, employers, and those who use our ports.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Unless the government listens, this bill will not be given speedy passage. As the days go by others will be on their feet, speaking on the bill. Time and again hon. members will urge the government not to move in the wrong direction. I say that the government immediately ought to begin doing those things which will restore the confidence of the people of Canada in their federal government.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, Bill C-19 is a major symbol of the government's determination to do everything it possibly can to fight inflation. Inflation has no single cause. Some of our inflation is forced upon us in the prices of our imports from other countries. Some inflation results from the competitive scramble of the different parts of our society to enlarge their share of the national wealth. Some of it comes from increases in our money supply, and some of it is associated with the operations of the market place to which government programs must react.

We have taken steps to attack the root causes of inflation, including the very important element of expectations. As we now know, a great deal of inflation comes simply from the expectations of people that there will be more of it. Because people expect inflation, they are forced to bargain for higher wages. Because firms expect cost inflation, they feel forced to raise their prices. Because governments expect inflation, they feel that they too must make advance provision for it. The cumulation of all of those actions is self-defeating. It results in the inflation that we are all trying to protect ourselves from.

In view of the nature of inflation, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the major role that expectations play in it, the government has taken a number of broad steps. The one which has achieved the most prominence is the measures we have taken to prevent the undue escalation of wages and prices. That, although not universally popular, has been a key step. It imposes restraint where it has not been possible to get a voluntary consensus on restraint. It is crucial that we all should be able to see that the restraint is real, that inflation will come down and is coming down and that we need no longer expect fear and anticipate inflation. It is only when those expectations of continued rapid inflation have been laid to rest that we will be able to afford to do without positive controls.

The wage and price control program, though, does not directly deal with the government sector and it is evident that the Canadian people expect the government to exercise as much restraint as it is asking them to do. That is one of the main reasons for this bill. We are determined to show the country that we are not asking others to do anything that we are unwilling to impose upon ourselves. Restraint on the part of unions, on the part of business, and on the part of individuals must be accompanied by a restraint on the part of government.

● (2150)

I will not deal, Mr. Speaker, with all of the many important clauses in this bill. I want to focus for a moment on those clauses which deal with the areas of particular and direct concern to the Department of Manpower and Immigration. They deal with the basis on which allowances are paid under the Adult Occupational Training Act.

The present legislation, established a decade ago, set a fixed bottom allowance rate and a fixed top rate. It provided that both the top and the bottom would be escalated each year on the first of July. The escalator it established was based on a national statistic—the average hourly earnings in manufacturing.

The effect this had was that any upward pressure on hourly earnings in manufacturing had an automatic and equal impact on this important portion of government expenditures, but with a lag. If wages rose 16 per cent, allowances would go up 16 per cent in the next year, even if the rise in wages and in other income maintenance payments slackened off to 8 per cent.

The department is now spending some $200 million on training allowances. It is clear that an across-the-board increase of 16 or 10 or even 8 per cent would have a significant impact on government expenditures. The legislation made that impact virtually automatic.

The result has been that the department is faced with continually escalating costs of getting our badly-needed training done. At a time when government must restrain its expenditures rather than expand them, that does not make very good sense. It has meant that each year the department could do a little less training. It has been one of the factors which has prevented us from being able to train as many Canadians as need training or to provide as many skilled workers to industry as industry has frequently required.

At the same time as the escalator has bitten into our training budget, it has been one of the causes of the extreme difficulty that we have in controlling government expenditures.

The control of government expenditures is one of the most difficult problems that progressive governments in democratic countries face today. The real needs and the real demands are there. We must meet them. We must, though, meet them in ways which are as little inflationary as possible and in ways which do not give a further upward nudge to the inflationary spiral.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are some of the fundamental reasons why the government has decided to eliminate the automatic escalator for training allowances. It is a key part of our program to keep our day-to-day expenditures under control and let us do the most good we can with the money that we have.

I would not want to leave you with the feeling that this change is sensible only as an anti-inflationary measure. The fact of the matter is that, in training terms, this kind of change is desirable in and of itself. The old system whereby the law forced a rigid escalation of the upper and lower limits of the allowances with no regard to what was happening in respect of other forms of income support, with respect to what was happening in labour markets, or what the actual income needs of trainees really were, had begun to seriously distort our training programs. The department found, for instance, that it could not make all the adjustments that were needed from time to time. The law raised allowance levels automatically, departmental consultations with the provinces about what levels would best fit particular circumstances tended to become a bit of a sham. The fact was that the law gave us little choice in the matter.

The department wound up paying too much to some people and not enough to others. We could not provide suitable allowances to groups of people whose real need for them was modest. Too often the department had to pay a high allowance or nothing at all.

I would remind the House that these anomalies were what caused the department in 1972 to seek and obtain authority to pay allowances to people who were not the heads of households and to pay them at levels not earlier permitted by the legislation.

These amendments today are a further step in that direction. They will, I believe, permit the department to re-examine and use in a more flexible way, the scarce allowance funds. Our fundamental desire is to make sure that as many as possible have the replacement incomes they need to take training.

The amendments will permit us to pay training allowances on a human basis rather than a statistical basis. Allowances, from now on will be determined not on the basis of national statistics but on the basis of the family circumstances and living costs of the people who actually need to take training.

I need hardly say that I feel that, both on the anti-inflationary grounds and in terms of the benefits it will bring to the training program, that change will be most helpful indeed. It will give the department the flexibility to make the allowances suit the circumstance. The new legislation would let us do exactly what we are now doing or it would permit us to alter the system to meet regional and local circumstances, to let allowances bear some sensible relationship to other means of income support, and particularly to have variation in relation to the cost of living as well as to family circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but, it being ten o'clock, we must proceed to the motion to adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

ENERGY—POSSIBILITY OF RE-ACTIVATION OF REFINERY AT COME-BY-CHANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the constituency of St. John's West had not been represented by a member for 14 months, and on November 2, the district being represented again, I asked a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) in connection with the oil refinery at Come-by-Chance. There is an oil refinery there, as hon. members know, representing an investment of some $250 million to $300 million. Last February it went into bankruptcy, and the refinery has not operated since the end of February as a result of which around 600 people find themselves unemployed.

The Government of Canada has a connection with this refinery because the wharf at Come-by-Chance was financed by the taxpayers of Canada to the tune of some $20 million, a sum which is still owed to the government.

At the beginning of March the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that at his request Petro-Canada was investigating whether it might be interested in acquiring the refining complex and that consultants were being engaged by Petro-Canada to examine the situation and advise thereon. That announcement was made early in March, some eight months ago. I asked the minister the other day whether the report had been received. He said that it had but that he was unable to give the results of the study. Is the minister concerned about this situation at Come-by-Chance or not? Is the government concerned about the situation at Come-by-Chance or not? Apparently not.

● (2200)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) was in Come-by-Chance at the end of August—Come-by-Chance happens to be in the district of St. John's West—at a meeting with the union people, and he told them that it looked to him as though the refinery would be repaired, reconstituted this winter, and in operation again by spring. But what evidence have we of that, Mr. Speaker?

On November 2 I also asked the minister to advise the House what steps, if any, the Government of Canada was prepared to take to assist in reactivating this oil refinery. The minister did not answer that question. I ask again, what steps, if any, is the Government of Canada prepared to take? Is it prepared to make any grant to assist in the reopening of the refinery? Is it prepared to make any loans at a low interest rate to help reopen the refinery? Is it prepared to make any arrangements with reference to the wharf at Come-by-Chance to assist in the start-up of that refinery? Is the government prepared to consider making the area a duty free zone in order to assist the reopening of the refinery? Or what steps is the Government of Canada willing to take, Mr. Speaker?

Those are my questions. The people of Come-by-Chance and the 400 or 500 employees, many of whom are still waiting in the area and hoping the refinery will reopen so that they do not have to move to Alberta or somewhere else in Canada, are waiting for these questions to be answered.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

In my opinion it is cruel and callous of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to take such a blasé attitude to a question asked of him about this situation. The other day the minister said that he had not been approached and that he did not know of any approach to the Government of Canada by any group to see whether the Government of Canada was prepared to do anything to help reopen this refinery. Let me tell the hon. gentleman now that the largest creditor in the bankruptcy, the Ataka company which is owed some $250 million to $300 million, had a representative approach ministers of the Government of Canada to ask whether the government were prepared to take any steps of the kind I have mentioned. They approached the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald)—and I would suggest that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources consult with him—to find out whether a grant or loan might be made, or any steps taken. His advice was that this was very unlikely, that he felt that the refinery was finished and should be written off. That was the attitude of the Minister of Finance.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, who represents the province of Newfoundland in the cabinet, took much the same position when he was approached. I would now ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or his representative to inform the House, the people of Newfoundland, the people of Come-by-Chance, and the people of St. John's West, what steps, if any, they are prepared to take to assist either the Japanese creditor or any other group in getting this refinery back in operation again, so that these assets do not just rust away. They are now being mothballed by the first mortgagee or receiver and the assets are wasting away. Some 500 people have been put out of work. What, if anything, is the Government of Canada prepared to do? Is the attitude of the Government of Canada that of the Minister of Finance, that the refinery should be written off and forgotten? Or is the attitude of the Government of Canada going to be one of helping to assist this project get under way again?

This is an industry that Newfoundland can ill afford to lose. This refinery may be of very little consequence to the province of Alberta, but to the province of Newfoundland it represents 500 jobs. It is an industry we cannot afford to have shut down. About $47 million of the people of Newfoundland's money is invested in the project as second mortgagees, and the people of Canada have invested about $20 million. Will the Government of Canada assist at all by grants or loans at low interest rates? What are the results of the Petro-Can study? Does Petro-Can have any interest in this project, or is this just a cynical attempt to make it appear that the Government of Canada is taking some action?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is true that Canada has great interest in the Come-by-Chance refinery. This has been shown many times, for example, in the contribution toward building a wharf and the weekly concern with regard to the situation now prevailing in Come-by-Chance.

To date the Canadian government has not received a request or been presented with any proposals relative to its participation in the reactivation of the Come-by-Chance refinery. The government, of course, would welcome reopening of this plant by an entity that could provide the needed technical and financial resources. It would be understood that any proposal by a foreign controlled agency would require the approval of the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

Concerning the activity of Petro-Canada with respect to this refinery, I can say that the corporation has had a consultant's report prepared in connection with its appraisal of the possible business opportunities presented by the Come-by-Chance situation. This was not a report to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), but rather to the corporation. Members will realize that there are very large demands being made on Petro-Canada and, for the present, the corporation's priorities lie with oil and gas resources development rather than with refining and marketing.

The federal government will continue to keep the Come-by-Chance situation under study and will encourage consideration of any plan that would make provision for the rather large amounts of capital that would be required to reactivate the refinery and find adequate markets for its products.

I hope that within the next few days an acceptable solution will be found by the provincial authorities and the refinery.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REDUCTION OF STAFF AND SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the grievance which I want to express tonight revolves around a question I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on October 22 in connection with the announced reduction of CNR staff in Newfoundland. Notwithstanding the fact that any changes in plans by CN, as they continually suggest, might be in the interest of the public they serve, the manner in which they make these announcements leaves much to be desired.

In this particular case which prompted my question the reduction in staff of four positions at Port-aux-Basques, five in central Newfoundland, and seven in Stephenville in western Newfoundland, reductions which were rumoured and came to my attention many weeks ago, was unconditionally denied by CN's senior officials. However, the very decisions that were denied, were made and confirmed in a letter to me from the Newfoundland area manager dated October 25. It keeps being confirmed as we reflect over CN action to downgrade rail service in my province. They keep following the same pattern of degrading Canadian National tactics to camouflage their real objectives while demoralizing human beings, the staff that has served them faithfully over the years.

The action, I repeat, follows the same pattern. First they start the rumours, then they deny them, and then an announcement is made of the introduction of changes in operations as part of plans to modernize and improve methods of doing business. Usually the method of modernizing is to lay off staff or remove a service.

The most ridiculous point in their effort of camouflaging their real intentions is that they think they are believed. They are living in the world of fantasy that they are fulfilling their responsibility to Canadians. I say that they are living in the twilight zone. They try to camouflage completely their real intentions by the same old sorry method of confusion, relating that on the basis of the CN Express distribution system and the business environment in which CN operates that these are the conclusions reached which will be of benefit to the business community.

They go on to further confuse by relating that a study indicates that if CN Express is to maintain its competitive position in the package traffic market and improve productivity and service levels, alterations are essential. Then they try to impose more public relations utterances—that in order to make improvements there will be a number of changes in the traditional way of doing things.

They have been making the same noises for the past seven or eight years, in fact since the Pickersgillian sell-out of the province of Newfoundland when our citizens were used as an altar offering for the rest of Canada to start the persistent process of eliminating rail passenger service in various parts of the country.

● (2210)

I was pleased to note from the minister's answer to my question of Wednesday, October 27, that he would look into the question of statements that had been made by CN officials and then contradicted by action to deteriorate rail rate and express service in Newfoundland further and eventually to turn to rubber traffic which was the case when rail traffic was eliminated in favour of bus service. The minister further indicated he would be interested in having discussions with representatives of the province of Newfoundland and other interested people on the whole question of transportation in Newfoundland both by rail and road. I hope that in his reference to road transportation he was referring to the need for highway strengthening. The minister further stated that he is very much concerned about this issue which is a vital one in the province of Newfoundland. I am concerned particularly about the future transportation policy in western Newfoundland.

I suggested to the chairman of the standing committee that the committee visit southern and western Newfoundland to determine the needs of that area. I only hope that the parliamentary secretary will be able to disclose to me tonight that the minister has not only granted the authority to the standing committee to visit that part of the province but has taken the appropriate action to investigate the thrust by regional representatives of the Canadian National to eliminate rail service in Newfoundland by cloak and dagger tactics, and without any common sense effort to realize that the basis of any economy, particularly in isolated areas of Canada, is a fundamental, adequate transportation system which includes more than ever an expansion of the service rather than a deliberate attempt to phase out CN responsibility in the province of Newfoundland.

Let me give one example. I might point out that one of the bases of the economy of Newfoundland is a pulp and paper firm named Bowaters. A letter from that company dated November 1, 1976, states in part:

> Bowaters' concern on some aspects of the development plan that will affect our economic viability to remain in business here is as follows:
>
> i) The urgent necessity of a standard rail car ferry service to Corner Brook from some mainland marine rail terminal, for the shipping of our newsprint. Newsprint cars would normally come to Corner Brook empty but could bring in general freight. Many mainland publishers are now preferring to buy newsprint in small lots, delivered frequently by special, large, cushioned rail cars rather than ship-loads that must be warehoused and rehandled. More rail shipments would not only help us to develop and keep more northeastern markets but also would have the added advantage of more evenly scheduling the work of our warehouse and shipping personnel.

This is one example of the situation in respect of a basic industry in Newfoundland. It is obvious that the government is not investigating the thrust of the CN with regard to building an economic base and provinding a responsible rail freight and express service in that province. I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to give me an answer that indicates the intention of the minister relating to Newfoundland, and to its future which depends on transportation.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while I have moved over to assume new responsibilities as Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, I still maintain a very keen interest in Canadian transportation matters, and am glad to have the opportunity to pinch hit for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and his parliamentary secretary in replying once again to my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe on a topic which I know is of great concern to him, and which the minister has indicated is of great concern to the government. To begin with I should like to quote from a portion of the minister's original answer to the hon. member on October 27. He said:

> The question of Canadian National operations is, of course, largely for its management in a broad way, but I would be interested in having discussions with the province of Newfoundland and with other interested people on the whole question of transportation in Newfoundland both by rail and road. This is a vital issue in the province, one with which I am very much concerned.

Moments ago the hon. gentleman mentioned at least parts of the minister's original answer in the question which he addressed to the House this evening. As a result of the minister's concern about Newfoundland transportation generally and as a result of the hon. member's inquiries on this subject, a representative of the CTC has been in Newfoundland recently to examine closely the situation in question. I understand that his review has just now been completed, and I know the Minister of Transport will want to take a very close look at what this examination might reveal, and we hope that in that examination some of the answers to the inquiries which have been raised this evening and on other occasions will be found.

Furthermore, I think it is important to note that in a more general context and in co-operation with the provincial administration in Newfoundland, the Minister of Transport will continue efforts to examine a variety of different transportation issues including costs and shifting intermodal relationships which affect all modes operating in Newfoundland, as well as Atlantic transportation generally.

[Mr. Marshall.]

ENERGY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO ESTABLISHMENT OF URANIUM REFINERY IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight arises from a response that I received from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) on October 22, 1976, when I raised a question which is causing growing concern among people in my constituency and in the adjacent constituency of Saskatoon-Humboldt with respect to the establishment of a uranium refinery which appears to be destined for just outside the city of Saskatoon near Warman, Saskatchewan. I questioned the minister at that time as to whether or not he would be good enough to table the various documents and agreements that were entered into between the province of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada regarding their respective agencies.

All of us who read the Speech from the Throne will remember clearly the following statement:

> At a time of growing complexity in public affairs it is especially important to enhance citizens' rate of access to information necessary to make well informed judgments and take responsible action.

That particular declaration in the Speech from the Throne gave me some hope that finally the government might be inclined to make public its plans, particularly with respect to the kind of facility that it is apparently planning in Saskatchewan.

I raised this question in the last session of parliament when I asked about the plans of the government. The parliamentary secretary indicated to me that Warman is one of the sites being considered in Saskatchewan. He indicated in his response to me on June 17, 1976, that the decision would be made and then they would have something called a public educational program for the people. In other words, apparently the decision will be made on this project and then they are going to explain to the people of Saskatchewan, and particularly of Saskatoon, how safe it is and what a great facility this will be. I do not think that is at all satisfactory. I wrote to the minister on July 5 of this year and stated to him in the strongest terms my apprehension about the course the government was following. I pointed out to him that there are many people who were communicating with me in Saskatoon and in the adjacent area asking what the government had in mind.

Virtually no information was forthcoming. The federal government was in conspiracy with the provincial NDP government apparently, and acquiring property and land for the establishment of this particular refinery, and not letting the people in the area have any idea of what was going on. There was some suggestion by the parliamentary secretary that after the decision was made there would be a public information program. I do not think that is satisfactory enough.

I asked the minister in my letter to him on July 5 if he would outline precisely what steps were anticipated by the government with respect to the establishment of this refinery. I am sorry to say that the response to my letter was in the most general terms. The minister indicated to me at that time that we could expect a decision about the site within a matter of weeks. A number of months have passed and there has been no indication of any selection process.

● (2220)

I think the government has a lot to answer for, and also the provincial NDP government whose representatives have been howling since I raised this matter in this House. They claim it is a matter of playing politics, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I am not playing on this issue. People are concerned and they have a right to know. This is not wartime when we might be worried about the atomic bomb. People have the right to know about the kind of facility being put next to a large area of population. If the plant is going to be as safe as the spokesman for Eldorado says it is going to be, if it will be as safe as the minister has indicated, then why are they holding back and not tabling all the environmental impact studies? Why are they not telling us exactly what kind of studies are going on? Why do they not tell us what sites are being considered other than the one in Warman, which was only found out because a Conservative MLA stumbled across the information that they were picking up options through the Saskatchewan Economic Development Corporation in that particular area? We have no idea of what other sites are being considered.

No information has been given to us by either level of government about their intentions. In other words, it is another case of the government in its usual and continuing arrogant manner knowing what is best for the people in the various regions and areas of our country and not practising the participatory democracy that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talked about in 1968—not allowing people to make well informed decisions on the basis of information provided by the government. I think this kind of example does more to show the necessity for a freedom of information act than many other examples that I could quote. It is lack of information in cases like this that shows how we need a freedom of information act which would provide an independent tribunal to decide whether information was properly withheld from the people of the country.

I take very strong exception to the kind of flim-flam, delay, and evasion practised by this government—and by the provincial government as well. I should not place all the blame on the federal government. It seems to me, however, that if these governments persist in this particular attitude they will suffer serious consequences in Saskatoon and the surrounding areas in future elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reference to the question of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) of October 22, now I understand why a representative of the department of industry and commerce in the Saskatchewan provincial government said of him that he is either misleading his constituents or is misinformed. Of course he is uninformed if he does not know what the government is doing.

I will read it again for the hon. member because he does not seem to remember what was contained in that press release.

Gordon Burton, director of Corporate Affairs for the company, said the purpose of the the options is to allow Eldorado Nuclear to conduct detailed environmental and engineering studies of the site to determine whether it would be suitable for a refinery.

It is emphasized that the company has not yet made a decision to proceed, Mr. Burton said. This decision is dependant on many factors, not the least of which is the assurance of a supply of concentrates from proposed new mines in the northern part of the province.

He went on, Mr. Speaker:

The environmental studies as well as a large amount of other data will—if they support a decision to proceed—be made public before any construction begins.

I wonder if the hon. member is paying attention? Mr. Burton added:

Indeed, the environmental impact statement is subject, under government legislation, to public hearings.

If the hon. member had read page 3 of the same press release he would have noted that the Eldorado office in Saskatoon hopes to begin within the next several months a general information program on the nature of uraniam exploration, mining and refining.

The same press release also speaks of a new refinery in Ontario. For instance it says on page 2:

Plans have been announced for a new refinery in Ontario to begin production by 1980, and the company now is examining the feasibility of another refinery in Saskatchewan.

There is no wartime-like secrecy surrounding this press release and I think the provincial minister of industry and commerce, Mr. Messer, is correct. I think the hon. member is misleading his constituents.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is not correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 9, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROPOSED IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING WIDOWS' PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. During the last session, as a result of the Hermann Report, a recommendation was made to the Government of Canada to provide pensions for those widows whose veteran husbands were in receipt of a war disability pension of less than 48 per cent and who, under present circumstances, are placed in the discriminatory position of being denied that deserved assistance. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House orders that the Government of Canada reaffirm the commitment made to veterans by Sir Robert Borden in 1917, and by successive Prime Ministers since, and implement amendments to the Pension Act to provide widows of veterans pensions in line with the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can only be presented to the House with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REACTIVATION OF CAPITAL WORKS PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, since the provincial-federal conference of finance ministers is scheduled to meet at the end of this month in Ottawa, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Minister of Finance, in consultation with his provincial counterparts, reactivate the federal-provincial capital works projects to reduce and eliminate the high level of unemployment in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECOMMENDATION THAT PUBLIC BE ADMITTED TO HOUSE DURING PRAYERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important matter.

As we need more than ever the guidance of Providence to face our obligations, and as it would be advisable to associate the people with the prayers hon. members say every day at the beginning of the sitting of the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House recommend an amendment to the Standing Orders of the House allowing the public to take place in the galleries before the start of the sitting so that they might join the House in heart and in mind, in its prayer and that our deliberations might be fruitful and profitable to the well-being of the people.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, it requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Since the House is unanimous in its consent, I shall put the motion. Seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) moves:

That this House recommend an amendment to the Standing Orders of the House allowing the public to take place in the galleries before the start of the sitting so that they might join the House, in heart and in mind, in its prayer and that our deliberations might be fruitful and profitable to the well-being of the people.

Does it please the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SYSTEM OF ALLOCATING CAR RENTAL CONCESSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the misunderstandings, the confusion and the irregularities that exist in the Ministry of Transport in allocating car rental concessions at the nine MOT airports. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to call for an immediate inquiry into the Ministry of Transport's system of allocating car rental concessions at its nine airports.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1410)

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROVISION OF COUNSEL FOR MEMBERS CHARGED WITH BREAKING INTO NEWSPAPER OFFICE IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, relating to the alarming precedent of police entering the premises of a Quebec newspaper some time ago. In view of the type of treatment received in recent years by RCMP members in terms of natural justice and in view of the delay by this government in implementing any provisions in the report of the Marin Commission of inquiry with respect to the RCMP, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Solicitor General take whatever steps necessary to ensure that those officers accused with respect to the break into L'Agence de Presse Libre du Québec are provided with counsel to defend them in order to make certain that these men are not made scapegoats for that type of activity which should be the responsibility of those who make, direct and interpret police and security policy.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROCEDURE TO ENSURE PAYMENT OF ACCOUNT FOR OUELLET CASE IN QUEBEC COURTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I gave notice of this motion under Standing Order 43 with regard to a change in procedure to be used in connection with Montreal courts. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House request that the government consider an attempted solution of the impasse over the payment of certain legal charges arising from the Ouellet contempt of court proceedings by taking two steps: First, to approach the Quebec government and ask it to agree that there be a binding decision in the matter by the Batonnier of the Montreal Bar as to all disputes between the federal and provincial governments in this matter; and second, that both governments make it clear that the account will only be so considered after it is approved by the Arbitration Board of the Bar of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent for the presentation of such motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSING

PROPOSED INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, given the high level of unemployment in Canada, I rise under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to move the following motion:

That this government increase its capital budget under CMHC to provide additional housing, particularly for cooperative and low income housing, which will both provide additional jobs this winter and increase our much required housing stock.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent for such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF BRIGADIER GARBA OF NIGERIA

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I use this occasion to call to your attention and that of hon. members the presence in the visitors' gallery of a most distinguished visitor, my counterpart from the Republic of Nigeria, His Excellency Brigadier Joseph N. Garba.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—MINISTERS ESTIMATE WHEN LEVEL WILL DECLINE—EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF REVIEW

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Minister of Finance. With 784,000 Canadians out of work 53,000 more than last May, and with unemployment at 7.6 per cent, a half point higher than in May, would the minister indicate when he anticipates a decline in this tragic situation, bearing in mind that in his May budget the minister predicted that unemployment would follow:

> . . . a level trend in the near term and gradually decline as cyclical expansion takes hold.

It has not happened and now we have thousands of Canadians needlessly out of work, with many feeling severe hardship.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the member has referred to it at the end of my comments in the May budget, and it is quite clear that the cyclical trend which was hoped for has not materialized. The analysis of the October labour force survey is now underway. It indicates regional differences in Canada, in Ontario in particular, having been occasioned by the strike in the Ford Motor Company at the time the survey was taken and also indicates some severe regional problems in the eastern parts of Canada. At the moment I do not propose to make any further announcements or changes.

Mr. Stevens: In view of the minister's statement that the cyclical trend anticipated in his budget has not materialized, and as job creation has been virtually static since January, with an actual decline in employment since March, would the minister indicate if he still believes that the Canadian economy will generate more than 250,000 new jobs this year, as he stated in his May budget, and would he agree that the anti-inflation program has acted as a damper on our economic recovery and has cost tens of thousands of jobs?

Mr. Broadbent: It is your program, fellow.

Mr. Stevens: If the minister does not agree that the anti-inflation program has aggravated the problem of unemployment, would he allow—certainly before Christmas—an immediate parliamentary review of the entire program?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree that the anti-inflation program has been the reason for the slow increase in growth of the gross national product. I point out to the hon. gentleman that this is the same kind of slowing in recovery from the recession which has occurred in the United States, and indeed, in all the other OECD countries.

Mr. Broadbent: There is a new government in the United States, too.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Under the circumstances, it seems to me that our primary concern should still be the level of Canadian inflation, and I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that we should forget about inflation is really not well founded.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He never said that.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Hon. members know that I made no reference to inflation not being a serious problem in Canada at the present time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The government is a serious problem, too.

Mr. Stevens: As a contributing factor to rising unemployment has been our sagging trade position, especially in manufactured goods, where we have an amazing $10 billion deficit, would the minister indicate if he plans any new approach with respect to our trade negotiations in Geneva or elsewhere, and specifically, does he intend to alter the tariff changes made in his May budget, at which time he stated that such tariff reductions would be withdrawn if they have serious effects on employment or production in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I will correct my previous answer. The hon. gentleman says he is concerned about inflation, but his concern is that we should not take any initiatives against it.

An hon. Member: You are just concerned about power.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out to the hon. member that the budget of last May proposed reductions in tariffs on consumer goods, which would be of value in maintaining a restriction on the increase of consumer prices in Canada. It seems to me that the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that we should increase tariffs and thereby increase the cost of consumer goods in Canada—

Mr. Stevens: It is your suggestion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —is hardly a stance consistent with concern about inflation.

* * *

MANPOWER

REASON FOR DELAY IN CONSULTING PROVINCES ON PROGRAMS TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who I know is interested in unemployment, or at least in his employment strategy. Given the fact that the University of Toronto Institute for Policy Analysis and the Conference Board of Canada have indicated that in terms of 1977 and years following we are going to experience very sluggish growth and higher unemployment, which is, of course, little encouragement to those who are presently unemployed or those who will be unemployed, why is it necessary to wait until January 1977 to commence discussions with the provinces on a consultative basis regarding unemployment programs, as envisaged by the employment strategy, and has the minister actually stated that he finds it impossible to implement these programs before April, 1977?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the sincere concern of the hon. member about the level of unemployment. That is a feeling which is shared by everyone; it is not something one can treat with equanimity. At the present time we have ongoing programs. The Minister of Finance has indicated part of the reason that this particular figure is so high and has laid at least some of the blame on the strike picture. After we announce our programs and announce that there will be $100 million for LIP and $40 million or so for the training program and other programs, we run into problems. Then, there is concern that there has not been enough consultation with the provinces. We propose to do that. Quite frankly, if our analysis of the situation is such that further measures are needed and needed immediately, then I will not hesitate to recommend them.

● (1420)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in a story from the minister. I want to know why, some eight or nine months after we first heard of this program from the former minister, the government is taking so long about this consultative process. Will the minister assure this House that he will contact his provincial counterparts to see to it that the consultative process does take place immediately so that there is a possibility that the programs to which it refers, that is employment strategy, can be introduced before April, 1977? Can the minister do that or does he not care?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that I do care and that I am somewhat ahead of him in that about two weeks after I assumed this portfolio I met with the provincial ministers to discuss any other areas in which we have to share some jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: For example, there is the situation that arose in my own constituency where some 700 or 900 jobs are being filled by Americans now because we have not had proper apprenticeship programs to enable us to fill all these jobs.

An hon. Member: Whose fault is that?

An hon. Member: What are you doing about it?

An hon. Member: Get a new member.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the opposition seem to be yelling about whose fault it is rather than finding solutions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Cullen: I would simply say that my provincial colleagues and I have been able to work very closely together. Some $64 million has been spent on the apprenticeship training program alone, which is an area clearly within the jurisdiction of the provinces, so we are endeavouring to move in the areas where we have authority and where we can work together. The opposition would have us wave a magic wand and all the jobs would be created.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary. I should like to refer the minister to Hansard for October 28 with respect to this consultative process to which he has referred. At page 535 the minister is reported as saying:

> I expect we will commence our discussions with regard to programs on a consultative basis probably early in January, 1977 with a view to implementing them in approximately April of that year.

I would ask the minister if he is really meeting his provincial counterparts now on a consultative basis as envisaged, and why we have to wait so long for this particular type of consultation that he required? I am asking the minister if he can not speed it up and contact the provincial—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

REASON FOR FAILURE TO CUT TAXES TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who has told the House that the rate of recovery in Canada is about the same as that in the United States. I would remind the Minister of Finance that they have just changed the government in the United States because of the slow rate of recovery. Given the fact that we now have the highest level of unemployment in 15 years—since the last time we had a Tory government, I might add—I should like to ask the minister why the government cannot bring in a tax cut at this time which would not be inflationary because we are only operating at 85 per cent capacity in the industrial sector?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not proposing to make any budgetary change at this point. I think it is clear, as I indicated in a reply to a previous question, that the unemployment figures at the present time, high as they are, have been of a regional nature. Indeed, in some parts of the country there are very substantial levels of employment. In these circumstances, it does not appear that at the moment at least a macro-economic change such as a tax cut would have the result for which we would both hope.

INCREASED BUDGET FOR HOUSING AS MEANS OF STIMULATING EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, if the minister sees the entire country as one region, he is right in saying that we are concerned only about regional unemployment. If the minister will not consider a tax cut as one method of dealing with unemployment, will he contemplate the kinds of changes proposed earlier, namely, stimulating the housing budget at the national level? This would affect municipalities across the country, create jobs and meet housing needs.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take that as a suggestion. I have noted in the recent report that the rate of housing completions in Canada has been, I think I am right in saying, almost at an historic high. Obviously, the government will want to give close attention in the months to come to the hon. member's proposal, along with others.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BASIS UPON WHICH ANTICIPATED SAVINGS CALCULATED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my last supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration? Will he confirm that the $110 million saving which he anticipates next year from changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act is based on something printed in one of his own department's documents, namely, the assumption that unemployment next year will remain at between 7 per cent and 8 per cent?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one would have to be beaten with a stick to remember all the statistics thrown at one by the hon. member, and particularly by my department. I shall certainly look at the hon. member's question. The figures of saving are based on a series of figures to do with unemployment at particular levels.

* * *

[Translation]

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT SERVICES OF DEPARTMENT STAFF BE MADE AVAILABLE TO MEMBERS

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can he tell the House whether we members of parliament can still rely on adequate service from civil servants of his department to help people who appeal to us?

[English]

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have one of the greatest departments there is. It is made up of a dedicated group of men and women who give service to the public. If the hon. member has a particular case in mind and wants to bring it to my attention, I can assure him it will be investigated.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

Can the minister explain to the House why my riding and particularly my office are not provided with the necessary services to help constituents who pay dearly through taxes? Furthermore, how come the requests by my constituents, which are transferred to the Montreal regional office, remain unanswered for such a long time? If the minister thinks it is because of a lack of personnel, can he undertake to remedy immediately the situation to provide justice to Canadian citizens and those from northwest Quebec?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I shall look into the situation described by the hon. member.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

MEASURES TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY IN MANUFACTURING SECTOR—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY ON PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Noting that Canada will have another disastrous trade deficit this year, the fourth consecutive trade deficit which this government has posted; noting that it has been the policy of this government to promote and finance turnkey operations off shore; and noting that in almost every instance those facilities are far superior to any we have in Canada and that we end up importing such production or competing with it in the international market place, I ask, what immediate steps is the government planning for increasing productivity in our manufacturing sector?

Hon. Len Marchand (Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the hon. member's question as notice but want to assure him that the Canadian government is most interested in increasing its activities all over the world; these include various aspects of trade, turnkey operations and joint ventures. We are interested in increasing these activities.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a supplementary question? Noting recent unemployment figures, I ask, do you plan to table the study on productivity produced by your department for the DM-10 group? If so, when will we see it and will you refer it to a committee of this House for discussion?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and advise the hon. member.

An hon. Member: Are you the minister?

● (1430)

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION FORMER MINISTER TRIED TO INFLUENCE AWARDING OF ADVERTISING CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CONTRACTS WITH R.P.R. COMPANY

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What substance, if any, is there to the report that the former Postmaster General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs tried to steer a $150,000 advertising contract to a personal friend in a Montreal advertising agency?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must be referring to an article in today's Citizen by Mr. Frank Howard which apparently sets out a careful review of internal departmental correspondence of my department. I certainly felt privileged to be able to read that correspondence in this article. I understand that a certain advertising contract that was recommended to Treasury Board was later returned from that place. I was asked whether I wanted to pursue it. I said I thought we would cancel that one and review our advertising policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reynolds: In view of the fact that approximately 80 per cent of that company's business is with the government and because their only notable client is Sky Shops, will the minister table copies of all contracts between the RPR Company and the government?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is continuing to ask me about this question. As far as I know, this company is a reputable advertising agency. I do not think there is anything about it that is improper. I simply want to review the advertising policy of the department. That is all. There is no implied suggestion in what I said which would give rise to any of the implication the hon. member is trying to convey.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REDUCTION IN PENSION OF CONSTABLE EUGENE HALE—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO RESTORE AMOUNT OF DECREASE

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: It is a very serious question, gentlemen. You would be concerned too. In view of the fact that the Canadian Pension Commission admitted error in raising the pension last March of former RCMP Constable Eugene Hale from 20 per cent to 100 per cent retroactively to 1969, through intervention of Senator Perrault, former Solicitor General, and myself, and now again have cut Hales back to 20 per cent or $128 a month because his wife, a practical nurse, is caring for him at home in Rossburn, Manitoba instead of a hospital, would you intervene—

Some hon. Members: Who?

Mrs. Holt: Either the Solicitor General, the President of the Treasury Board or the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Simma to the cabinet.

Mrs. Holt: Would you intervene to reverse this insensitive if not cruel and wasteful decision or, alternatively, if the regulations preclude intervention, would you act to correct such wrong-headed regulations? To the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I want to take up the answer given by the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby in which he described our present unemployment as largely of a regional structure and therefore not susceptible to correction by macro-economic policies. Given the high level of unemployment in Atlantic Canada, as revealed in statistics released today or yesterday, will the minister be making a statement on motions outlining what additional measures he will be introducing to reduce and eliminate the tremendous economic waste and human misery associated with the high levels of regional unemployment in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely as a result of our concern for that particular area of high unemployment that agencies such as DREE and LIP are set up. They are heavily weighted in favour of high unemployment. Our Manpower consultative services are on the spot and available to meet with management and unions where difficulties occur. When in some areas of the LIP program there is a slippage of funds, we endeavour to push them into areas where they will be of most assistance.

INACCURACY OF UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS USED AS BASIS FOR LIP GRANTS

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I find the minister's answer highly unsatisfactory as these agencies have been there for a long while and our unemployment keeps increasing. As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is finally going to get around to correcting the gross national product statistics, will this minister look at the terribly inaccurate unemployment statistics used by his department to slash LIP grants to the Atlantic area this year?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is an ongoing problem that we have each year trying to determine the appropriate and fair method of computing the amount of LIP money that should be put into a particular region. I can say that complaints come from both sides of the House. In one region of a province a million dollars may be made available and in another corner of it some $250,000. However, if we suggest other methods, we are told they smack of patronage and are subject to attack. It is something we have to look at. The criticism is well founded, but it does not come only from the hon. member.

* * *

AIRPORTS

METHOD OF ALLOCATING CAR RENTAL CONCESSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with car rental concessions at MOT airports. In allocating Tilden, the third highest overall bidder, to a domestic counter and forcing them to take fifth place in the allotment of these counters, is the minister not creating a second class citizen out of this domestic car rental agency?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, clearly not because the bid from Tilden which was accepted was in the domestic category. The ranking of counters was according to the value of the bids accepted, as had been stated in the pretendering documents, and the Tilden bid was fifth.

Mr. Horner: As I understand the situation, Mr. Speaker, the Tilden bid was third in overall bidding for the nine airports. In many of the individual airports, it was third or better. Either the minister is not aware of the facts or he is misleading the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, let me try to help the hon. member understand the facts. The Tilden Company put in two bids, one in the open category and one in the domestic category. The bid which was accepted in the evaluation of the overall best returns from the car rental system, which is also dealt with in the pretendering document, was the Tilden bid in the domestic category. That bid was fifth. The other bid would have ranked higher but it was not the accepted bid.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the regulations put out by the minister when he called for tenders state as follows:

Counter space within the terminal building will be leased to car rental concessionaires for the term of their agreement with the location preference in accordance with the offers received, i.e., the highest bidder will have the first choice, the second bidder will have the second choice, the third bidder will have the third choice, and so on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

AMOUNT REQUESTED BY EMPLOYEES OF STATISTICS CANADA FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Yesterday the minister's parliamentary secretary admitted outside the House of Commons, consulting the minister's briefing book for his source of information, that StatsCan employees, whom we have been discussing in the minister's absence for the past few days, attempted to sell material to the National Capital Commission. Will the minister tell the House whether that statement is true and, if so, the amount requested in the offer to sell this information to the National Capital Commission?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I very carefully read the answer given by the parliamentary secretary which is recorded in yesterday's Hansard. Unfortunately, I cannot find the information that the hon. member seems to have given. I should say that my predecessor had already answered such a question and the parliamentary secretary has taken a position that I approve in every way.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is regrettable that the quality of the minister's answer did not match the quantity of applause that he received when he rose. My question was clear. There has been a statement made by his parliamentary secretary that this information was sold. That statement is made in the press today. It is not in Hansard. My question is, is that so? If the minister does not know the answer will he find out; and if it is so, what was the price asked for that information? That is the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the remarks made by the parliamentary secretary to the House of Commons and the information at my disposal. With regard to the amount disclosed outside the House, if the parliamentary secretary mentioned an offer of $250, that is accurate and I can confirm it.

[English]

REASON FOR FAILURE TO NOTIFY POLICE OF ATTEMPT BY STATISTICS CANADA EMPLOYEES TO SELL INFORMATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A final supplementary question. That is hardly an answer. In view of the statement also attributed to Mr. Robert Desramaux, assistant chief statistician, in which he says that if those people involved had been compiling their data in the form of estimates and selling them—and that is the issue in this matter—it would be a criminal offence, would the minister inform the House why it was decided not to call in the RCMP directly when this was ascertained, rather than following the practice of allowing a letter to be written by the then chairman of the NCC to the chief civil servant at the time, Mr. Gordon Robertson? Why was the bureaucratic route chosen in this particular matter rather than calling in the RCMP, in view of what has been stated to be the state of the law and if such an offence occurred?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot presume the judgment made at that time by this senior official. I think that the action he took was quite logical and worthwhile and that the hon. member should accept it as something he had to do.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION CANADA SEEKING FRENCH DESIGNED ICEBREAKER

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question arises out of press reports last week which implied that the Canadian government was in fact actively negotiating with French officials with respect to the purchase by Canada of a French designed nuclear powered icebreaker. In reply to a question on the subject from my colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich the minister said that he had not seen the report. Has he now had an opportunity to read through these reports, and can he without any equivocation indicate that the government has no intention of going offshore for the design and construction of ships capable of operation north of 60 degrees?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all thank the hon. member for having given me notice. I have not personally seen this news report. I have asked whether anybody else has and perhaps the hon. member would be good enough to let me see a copy of it. I can certainly assure him on the second part of his question that there was no involvement and none is anticipated in regard to the purchase of an icebreaker offshore.

I should like to explain that the situation is that an icebreaker is being designed in Canada. Government officials or perhaps I should say technicians are seeking to determine whether or not it will have a conventional power plant or a nuclear power plant. It was in relation to the possibility that a nuclear power plant might be used that the French people made representations regarding provision of that power plant. But no decision has been made as to the kind of power plant that will be used, and that is where the matter rests at the present time.

* * *

TRANSPORT

DEVELOPMENT OF NUCLEAR POWER PLANT FOR ICEBREAKER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): One brief supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that response, particularly in light of the plight in which Canadian shipyards find themselves, or will next year. Might I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should like to ask the minister what particular pressures are being brought to bear by his authorities respecting the development in Canada of the necessary technology to get on with the development of our own nuclear capacity to provide a power plant that we might desire to use in marine vessels north of 60 degrees?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to this point we have been doing preparatory work on the feasibility of such an icebreaker powered by nuclear power. Until those phases are complete it would be premature to attempt to conclude where the necessary technology could be found.

* * *

CITIZENSHIP ACT

REASON FOR DELAY IN PROCLAIMING ACT AND REGULATIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he would inform the House why the delay in proclaiming the New Citizenship Act which was given royal assent last summer, and when publication of the regulations under this new Act may be expected?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's regret that we have not yet been able to proclaim the Act. The delays are a result of the problem of drafting the regulations and translation. I very much hope that we will be able to proclaim the Act within the month of February.

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED

EFFORTS TO SETTLE STRIKE—EFFECT OF STRIKE ON STOCKS OF URANIUM OXIDE AND DEVELOPMENT OF MARKET FOR URANIUM HEXAFLUORIDE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, a Crown corporation, has the monopoly in this country for production of nuclear fuel and its employees are on strike. It reports to the House through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources so my three part question to him is this. First, what specifically is the minister doing to end this unfortunate work stoppage? Second, in view of the recurring rumours floating around that reserve stocks of UO_2, which is uranium oxide, is at a very dangerously low ebb, would he mind telling the House today what these reserve stocks are composed of? Third, how will a long strike affect the government's plans to break into the uranium hexafluoride market?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on the first point I am told that officers of the company and the union met for many hours into the very early hours of this morning trying to reach an agreement. So far no agreement has been reached but I think there is some reason to believe that the parties wish to reach an agreement and there will be a further meeting in the very near future.

As to the question concerning dangerously low levels of uranium oxide, I have not got that information but I have been assured that even with a fairly prolonged strike there is sufficient uranium oxide to look after existing requirements.

On the third question respecting uranium hexafluoride, I do not have a specific answer. I think this has to be seen rather as a temporary setback, but I do not think it will in any way affect the progress that Eldorado is making in its sales promotion efforts.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE CONCERNING SALE OF NUCLEAR REPROCESSING PLANT TO PAKISTAN

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which follows along the questions asked yesterday by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe regarding the conversations that the minister had in France on nuclear expansion. Can the minister tell the House whether he had any specific discussions with the French government about the possibility of the government of France selling to Pakistan a device for reclaiming plutonium fuel from the Canadian nuclear reactor.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will do my best to be as informative as I can while respecting to some degree the confidentiality of the discussion with the foreign minister.

First of all, the question of sales to Pakistan did arise. I inquired as to whether the new policy as outlined about three weeks ago by France now precludes the sale. The answer I was given was it did not, and France felt that it had an obligation and a contractual commitment to sell the reprocessing plant to Pakistan. Whether that sale will go through, of course, I have no way of knowing.

• (1450)

In so far as Canada is concerned I think the hon. member knows we are in the process now of negotiating with Pakistan in relation to continuing co-operation with regard to the reactor which is presently in place there and the supply of fuel. So far, we have not come to any satisfactory solution through these negotiations but they are continuing and I hope that something positive will come out of it within the next little while.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, did the Secretary of State for External Affairs communicate to the government of France that if the government of France sold a reprocessing plant to Pakistan that Canada would not go ahead with the supply of a nuclear reactor and nuclear fuel to Pakistan?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I think I can say that. I did not couch it in precisely those words but the meaning was perfectly clear. I indicated we were much opposed to the idea of Pakistan acquiring a reprocessing plant and that our continued co-operation with Pakistan would be affected and affected very adversely if in fact they acquired the reprocessing plant. I was not unequivocal to the nth degree because of the negotiations which are now going on to see if safeguards and the like can be negotiated with Pakistan, but as at the moment I report to the House that no such agreement has been reached.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

APPLICATION OF BELL CANADA FOR RATE INCREASE—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am sure the minister has received the material from Bell Canada backing up its proposed application for a rate increase, as have all other members of parliament. I would put the question to the minister as spokesman in this House for consumer interests, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs be supporting such an application for a rate increase now that he has had time to study their precise application?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member I have received the material from Bell Canada but unlike the hon. member I have not had time to read it.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, since this is a very important matter for all consumers in Canada, and since Bell Canada has a relatively monopolistic position in this regard, will the minister assure the House that he will read this documentation very soon and report to the House whether or not he supports this application for an increase.

Mr. Abbott: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly expect to read the material as it does have a very important impact on the consumers, at least in this part of the country. As to whether I would appear in the House and give an opinion I doubt very much that I would, unless questioned, but we will be looking at it and if it does have an inappropriately adverse effect on the consumers I will certainly make my views felt here or elsewhere.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF INDIAN FISHERMAN'S ASSISTANCE PROGRAM OR REPLACEMENT OF PROGRAM

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is related to the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia and their concern for the future of the estimated 1,500 native fishermen from the province. I would like to ask the minister if he is now in a position to indicate if he will extend the Indian Fisherman's Assistance Program to March 1978.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, that matter is now under review. It is my intention to go to Prince Rupert in a couple of weeks and meet with the Native Brotherhood. I would hope to have an answer at that time.

Mr. Holmes: Mr. Speaker, to ensure the future stability of the native fishing industry the minister's predecessor indicated to the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia that he would support a replacement economic development program for their industry. I should like to ask the minister what progress has been made in developing the program and specifically if he can indicate when he will announce the details of the program.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is part of the review to which I referred. I hope to have something to announce when I go to British Columbia and meet with the Native Brotherhood.

* * *

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONSTRUCTION OF INTERPROVINCIAL TRANSMISSION LINES

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the Government of Canada decided whether or not it will exercise its constitutional powers under the BNA Act to permit the construction of energy transmission lines across the territory of a province to permit interprovincial transmission of hydro energy from one province to another even if the intervening province objects as for example from Newfoundland and Labrador to the Maritimes or to Ontario across Quebec with or without the consent of that province and in a similar manner to oil and gas pipelines which the minister said he favoured in July when he made a visit to Labrador. Is that now government policy or what has happened to his opinion on that?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I answered a question yesterday for one of the colleagues of the hon. member in which I indicated there were a number of matters which were under consideration at the present time with a view to bringing on the power of the Gull Island potential site which one would hope would provide power to Newfoundland, parts of Labrador and the maritimes as well. But I am not at this particular moment in time able to state the details of those considerations.

* * *

FINANCE

PROPOSED REACTIVATION OF CAPITAL WORKS PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether at the forthcoming meeting of the federal-provincial ministers of finance he will consider proposing the reactivation of the capital works projects between the federal government and the provinces in order to have an immediate impact on the high rate of unemployment.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that subject will not be on the agenda. The agenda will be related primarily to the fiscal relations between the provinces and the federal government as now covered by legislation which will expire at the end of March 1977. However, there will undoubtedly be a general discussion of the economy at that time and it will be of extreme value to the Government of Canada to get the appreciation of the various treasurers and finance ministers on appropriate measures to deal with the economy in general terms.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—DISCUSSION OF HOUSING PROGRAM WITH PROVINCES AS MEANS OF STIMULATING EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very high rate of unemployment will the minister consider getting the question of unemployment put on the agenda and would the minister, together with his colleague the minister in charge of housing, look at the program now in operation in the province of Manitoba which provides for large-scale renovations and repairs of housing for senior citizens and people in the low income brackets and extending that to the country as a whole as a means of getting people back to work.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the second part of the hon. gentleman's question and I will make a point of inquiring further about that program to which he has referred.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ABSENCE OF HELICOPTERS FROM TRENTON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REPLACE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence after our discussion last week about helicopters. Will the minister explain why this morning there is not a single helicopter left at the Canadian forces base Trenton?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member goes to or phones Trenton he will find there is a Hercules, a Buffalo aircraft and two Huey helicopters moved in to reinforce from Petawawa as I said would happen.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the lightning swift response probably in anticipation of my question. Now, can the minister tell us when he intends to move back the air-sea rescue helicopters which should be there?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, these Huey helicopters have an air-sea rescue capability. The helicopter that was there is being refitted for night operation and that is the reason it was out. This was the purpose of this operation. The armed forces acquitted themselves admirably and the hon. member for Hastings is very much aware of this as well.

* * *

MANPOWER

TRAINING PROGRAM FOR CONSTRUCTION WORKERS IN CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Because of the high rate of unemployment in Nova Scotia and particularly in Cape Breton Island, my question refers to a statement by Labour Minister Walter Fitzgerald of Nova Scotia who has stated that a massive training program involving 3,000 workers would be launched this fall to provide qualified construction workers for a major new steel complex in Cape Breton. On the assumption that the minister is aware of such a program because of Mr. Fitzgerald's assertion that discussions have taken place with the minister's officials, would he be good enough to advise if he himself has been involved in these discussions and would he also inform the House how soon such a program will commence?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that. From the sound of it the contact has been made at the official level.

• (1500)

Mr. Muir: Would the minister be good enough to advise us either in the House, by telephone, by mail or in person, that his program will start the day after tomorrow or as quickly as possible?

Mr. Cullen: Before I communicate with the hon. member I would like to find out what it is all about.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBILITY PURCHASES OF CHEMICAL SPRAYS AND FERTILIZERS FROM UNITED STATES PROHIBITED

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It stems or is caused by rumours to the effect that measures will soon be taken by this government to prohibit Canadian producers from making direct purchases for their own use of chemical sprays and fertilizers from United States outlets. Canadian producers have to compete directly in the marketplace with their United States counterparts. Such a move would create further difficulties for Canadian producers, and savings of up to 25 per cent and 30 per cent would be lost. Can the minister indicate now what the government's intentions are with respect to this very important matter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have received no official representation that I am aware of from any producers' organization about this but, as I said before, before any decision is made I will meet with official farm organizations to discuss it with them. It is a two way street. If farmers want to place embargoes and duties on products they are producing in this country and we want to build a chemical industry, we must also ensure it has some protection so it can exist.

* * *

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

ELIGIBILITY OF MOTHERS AND WIDOWS OF NEWFOUNDLAND SERVICEMEN FOR MEMORIAL CROSS

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise what progress is being made toward making widows and mothers of Newfoundland and Labrador servicemen killed while serving with the Canadian and allied forces eligible to receive the Memorial Cross award?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, before I answer the question I should like to point out that it was the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who has shown an interest in the situation at Trenton. I believe I used the wrong constituency.

With respect to the question put to me by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, let me say that certainly the representations he has made have been listened to. An order in council has been passed and a press statement will be released this afternoon announcing that widows and mothers of Newfoundland servicemen killed while serving in the allied forces during the wars will receive the Silver Cross award. An armed forces plane is going out for four widows, and, I believe, one of the mothers who will be in Ottawa for the Armistice Day ceremonies on November 11. We are proud and pleased to honour them as they deserve to be honoured.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the question that was asked a short while ago by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I realize that Your Honour felt the question was taking rather too much time, but as one who is also very familiar with the case of former RCMP constable Eugene Hale, it seems to me that an answer to the question should have been permitted. I hope that you will now permit the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) or the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs to give an answer to this quite important and very serious question.

Mr. Speaker: Or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). Order, please.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Second report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—Mr. Cafik.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Mr. Rompkey.]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 69, 100 and 114.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the remaining questions shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

RADIO-CANADA INTERNATIONAL

Question No. 69—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. M. Mogiljansky, Head of the Russian section of Radio Canada International write a letter dated May 25, 1976, to Dr. F. Yaroshevsky of Toronto, a member of the Russian section of Radio Canada International, in which he quoted the following from a memo written by Mr. L. C. Chipman, Supervisor of East European Programming, as follows: "The Director has asked me to look into the charge reiterated by External Affairs that Yaroshevsky, apparently last fall, . . . reported on a demonstration of an anti-Soviet nature that had taken place in the city: the suggestion was that Yaroshevsky had concocted the demonstration so that he could report it" and, if so (a) what are the names and job designations of the persons in External Affairs who made such representations or charges to Radio Canada International and for what reason were they made (b) what is the name and description of the highest ranking person in External Affairs authorizing such representations or charges?

2. (a) How often since April 20, 1968, has External Affairs made representations to Radio Canada International on what it should or should not broadcast to the Soviet Union or to other Communist countries (b) have any such representations been made as a result of complaints received from representatives of the Soviet Union and, if so, what are all details and who made such representations?

3. Were the charges against Dr. Yaroshevsky subsequently proven false and (a) if so, has he received an apology from External Affairs (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Department of External Affairs as follows: 1. Yes, however, Dr. Yaroshevsky is not a member of the Russian section nor an employee of Radio Canada International, but a freelance contributor in Russian to the section's program. As for the charge against Dr. Yaroshevsky, it was not advanced by External Affairs but by a former RCI employee. No such charge has ever been made or reiterated by the Department of External Affairs. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

2. (a) We have no record of representations having been made by the Department to Radio Canada International on what it should or should not broadcast to the Soviet Union or to other communist countries. The Department is prepared to and does receive officials of RCI to discuss questions that may be of mutual interest. It does not, however, seek to influence RCI's programmes in any way whatsoever. (b) No such representations have been made. RCI is required to consult with the Department of External Affairs pursuant to Order in Council PC 1968-525, dated March 19, 1968 which directs the CBC "to provide, in consultation with the Department of External Affairs, an International Service. . .". The Department of External Affairs routinely informs Radio Canada International of any complaints about programs received by the Department, whether from foreign nationals abroad or foreign diplomats in Canada. This is done for the information of RCI and material for reply is provided by RCI, either verbally or in writing, to be passed on at the discretion of the Department of External Affairs to the person or official who complained. No directives are received by Radio Canada International from the Department of External Affairs as to what should or should not be broadcast to any country. A frank review of criticisms received from abroad is normal procedure.

3. Dr. Yaroshevsky's denial was conveyed to the Director of RCI and accepted by him. Dr. Yaroshevsky is still a contributor to RCI programs. There is no proof that he concocted demonstrations in order to report on them. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

UIC—RETIREMENT CLAIMS AND APPLICATIONS FOR CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 100—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many retirement claims have been filed with the Unemployment Insurance Commission in each of the past two years by applicants just prior to their going on the Canada Pension Plan and what is a breakdown of these in each Region of the Commission?

2. How many applications for the Canada Pension Plan from those retiring from the work force were received during the same period of time?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and Health and Welfare Canada as follows: 1. Statistics are not maintained for applicants just prior to their going on Canada Pension Plan. However, the number of retirement claims (not in receipt of CPP/QPP) is available in Statistics Canada Publication No. 73001 entitled Statistical Report on the Operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

2. Fiscal Year 1974-75, Number of Applicants 93,867; Fiscal Year 1975-76, Number of Applicants, 113,391. The above figures represent all applications for retirement pensions in these two years. As the Canada Pension Plan legislation does not require a person to be retired from the work force in order to be eligible to receive a retirement pension, it is not possible to answer the question within its specific context.

RESIGNATION OF SOCIAL DIRECTOR, VETERANS' HOSPITAL, VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 814—Mr. McKinnon:

Is the Social Director for the Veterans' Hospital in Victoria (Mr. Cassels) due to retire in the spring of 1977 and, if so, has the Department of Veterans Affairs made plans to replace him or to continue employing him on a part-time basis?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the answers given during the question period. Normally I would not raise this matter except for the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources yesterday evening. I have a number of questions on the order paper relating to plans for the development of a uranium refinery in the province of Saskatchewan. I have had these questions on the order paper for a considerable period of time, but no anwers have been forthcoming. An allegation was made yesterday by the parliamentary secretary that I was misleading my constituents on this issue. I would ask the parliamentary secretary, who is in charge of responding to these questions, to ask the minister for answers to the questions so that I will not be accused of misleading people in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, with all questions we proceed as quickly as we can to provide the answers which hon. members are seeking. In this case we will proceed as diligently as we can to obtain the information for the hon. member.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the revelation today that unemployment has reached the highest level in 15 years and will increase even further in the coming winter, resulting in having the highest number of Canadians unemployed since the great depression.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has given the Chair notice, pursuant to Standing Order 26, of his intention to move the motion. That has, of course, given the Chair the opportunity, as the Standing Order anticipates, to give the matter some consideration. Standing Order 26 reads as follows:

Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration—

Certainly, that language would indicate that a matter such as unemployment or any other matter of national concern would fall into that category. However, the practice and precedents in the House have indicated that the primary consideration which should govern the decision of the Chair in reference to this Standing Order is not so much whether a matter is one of continuing concern but, specifically, whether it is of critical proportions and constitutes a crisis as opposed to being chronic. While the matter of unemployment can scarcely be brushed aside as not qualifying under the opening paragraph of Standing Order 26, I am sure hon. members would agree that it is a matter of continuing concern as opposed to one of crisis proportions.

I am guided, in addition, by another factor, namely, that under paragraph 5 of the Standing Order the Chair must always take into account whether or not the problem is of such a nature that it is likely to be discussed in some other way. Certainly, having just completed the debate on the Speech from the Throne, one can scarcely say there has not been recently a fresh opportunity to discuss in fullest amplitude the problem of unemployment. Between now and the few weeks that remain before the end of the first trimester, a number of opposition days have been set aside, and I would be surprised, as I am sure all hon. members would, if at least on one occasion the matter of unemployment statistics, figures and the situation generally were not discussed.

Therefore, I would have to hold, in the first instance, that rather than being a matter of urgent consideration, unemployment is one of continuing concern; and second, even if the motion were to succeed under the first heading, under paragraph 5 of the Standing Order there was an opportunity during the throne speech debate, which was recently concluded, and there will be an opportunity during opposition days to discuss this matter. Therefore, I do not feel that the matter ought to be given special consideration, pursuant to this rule.

● (1510)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE FOR OPEN DISCUSSION ON FUTURE TRADE POLICY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved:

That this House urges the government to discontinue its propensity to act in secret and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, condemns its failure to provide for an open public discussion on future Canadian trade policy and to report to the Canadian people on its policy and progress respecting GATT negotiations now being carried on in Geneva and which will undoubtedly culminate in dramatic changes in world trade patterns.

Mr. Speaker: The House should note that in accordance with Standing Order 58(9)(a), not later than 9.45 this evening every question necessary to dispose of proceedings pursuant to this motion shall be put.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this motion I feel that I should first put today's debate into its proper context. I believe it is important that when we discuss the question of secrecy on the part of this government and the questions of trade, GATT and the International Monetary Fund, we must remember that there have been many worldwide meetings dealing with the important subject with which we are going to deal today. There have been many international meetings, particularly with respect to the question of international trade and international monetary matters.

Hon. members will recall that there have been meetings in Geneva, Jamaica, Paris and Manila. There have been several meetings in Geneva and in Washington, and to date this government has never come to this House or to the people of Canada and clearly outlined exactly what transpires at these lofty international meetings to which we have become parties. I believe that what is being agreed to at many of these meetings is of great significance to Canadians. We in the House will be asked to respond to various legislative matters as a result of those agreements, and this government should give this House some explanation as to what it sees in the future for the Canadian trade position in the world. That is the reason we suggested this debate today.

Many speeches have been made decrying the tendency of this government to be secretive. Nowhere has that tendency shown more than on the tremendously significant questions of international monetary conditions and international trade. Just look at the disdain this government has for the House of Commons. Look at the benches opposite.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stevens: Where is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who is in charge of GATT negotiations in Geneva at the present time?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Hiding somewhere.

Mr. Stevens: Where is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), who should be interested in this debate because it touches on trade?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Out decentralizing some government department.

Mr. Stevens: Where are the various ministers who are not in attendance as we begin this debate? For some reason there is a strange contrast between what our neighbours, the Americans, do with respect to their trade negotiations and what we in Canada do with respect to our rather secretive approach. The fact is that before the United States enters into such things as the Geneva discussions with respect to amending the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, they secure an act of Congress setting out the parameters of the negotiations and exactly what the negotiators may and may not do.

With regard to the present negotiations which are under way in Geneva and which are generally referred to as the Tokyo Round, on January 3, 1975, the American Congress passed the trade act of 1974. Surely it is time the Canadian public became aware of the second last section of the American trade act of 1974. How many in this House, and how many Canadians realize that in section 612 of the American trade act, passed in anticipation of current negotiations in Geneva, the American Congress authorized the President of the United States to enter into a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States? For the record, let me record section 612, which is entitled "Trade relations with Canada". Incidentally, we are the only country singled out in this act for specific comment. That section provides:

It is the sense of the Congress that the United States should enter into a trade agreement with Canada which will guarantee continued stability to the economies of the United States and Canada. In order to promote such economic stability, the President may initiate negotiations for a trade agreement with Canada to establish a free trade area covering the United States and Canada.

We know where the United States Congress stands with regard to free trade with Canada. What we do not know is where our own government stands with respect to such free trade. That is why we are having this debate today—in the earnest hope that perhaps we in this House will hear about some of the policies and some of the thrusts the government hopes to take in Geneva. It is strange that private negotiations are going on in Geneva in which the Americans have empowered their negotiators to enter into free trade with Canada, yet the Trudeau administration has given no indication of how it intends to deal with this important issue.

The concept of free trade is not new in Canada. The most recent advocate of such an agreement was the Economic Council of Canada which produced a report entitled "Looking Ahead". I presume most hon. members have read it. That report was produced more than a year ago, yet we who are vitally affected by this question must wait on the sidelines while the government stalls, sits silently and, presumably, searches for a policy with respect to free trade and the trade policy Canada should be following. The question of free trade is too important to be left to one party, or even to one government. The magnitude of a decision of this kind is too great. The fact is that we need nothing less than an ongoing discussion between the people and those who negotiate on their behalf.

Let us look at the American approach with respect to international trade, and how their approach differs from ours. As I have stated, in the United States the President is empowered to enter into actual trade negotiations not only with respect to the GATT negotiations but to secure a free trade area with Canada. In that context, however, we find that the president is instructed by Congress to appoint an advisory committee to deal with trade negotiations. This is mandatory, Mr. Speaker. The committee is to include representatives of government, labour, industry, agriculture, small businesses, service industries, retailers, consumer interests and the general public.

● (1520)

What do we have in Canada, that is similar to this advisory committee, to enter into the type of negotiations our government has entered into in Geneva? We have Donald Macdonald in Ottawa, Rodney Grey in Geneva, and a silent band of seven. In these gentlemen we may have the best negotiators in the world, but surely they should not be working in such splendid isolation. I suggest this is akin to a lawyer taking a case and refusing to see his client. Believing he knows best, he wants to work on the case alone, with a free hand, totally ignoring that what he negotiates might not be suitable to his client. To date, the government has been silent on our position at Geneva. Deals are being made, and we know that; but there is little review or discussion with those who would be most affected, the farmer, the miner, the logger, the manufacturer, and the consumer. How strange that we should learn, not from our own government but from the Americans, that there is a Canada-United States free trade proposition now being discussed in Geneva.

American trade negotiations began with Congress passing the trade act to which I have referred. As I have stated, this legislation sets out their approach to trade and authorizes negotiations. Let us remember, Mr. Speaker, that when the President of the United States enters into such negotiations on behalf of that country, he must consult with committees in both the Senate and the House of Representatives before entering into any trade agreement which provides for the reduction or elimination of a barrier to international trade.

Mr. Speaker, do we hear the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, proposing any reference to our standing committees so that we may review the trade policy of this nation, or that we may review such things as current international monetary conditions? The answer is no, we do not. On the other hand, the Americans, by an act which they passed, require public hearings; and they also require the President to establish the advisory committee to which I have referred which is made up of representatives of every sector of the economy.

There is no similar approach in Canada, yet millions of Canadian jobs, Canadian prices and the future of our economy may be affected by a simple order in council under the authority of section 10 of the Customs Tariff Act. All we know about it in this parliament is when the accomplished fact is presented, without debate and without any real, prior consultation. When I discussed this matter with a businessman, he said, "It is a terrible feeling to know I might be wiped out by an agreement in Geneva, not only without any change to state my views, but I will not even know it has happened until the deal is signed."

An hon. Member: Are you for, or against?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, that is the point. We in this House are not told enough to know whether we are for, or against, what the government is doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: You had better change your detective firm, then.

Mr. Stevens: It is time that some of those silent mouths who sit on the government backbenches become disturbed when they see unemployment rising as it did this month. It is time that those silent mouths that might like to, but cannot, speak when they think they are not being noticed. It is time they got aroused and realized that the "whizz kids" on the front benches are not "whizz-kids" at all. In fact, they are totally inept at running this country.

Mr. Hees: Where are they? It is an insult to parliament that none of them are around.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I note that there is only one minister in the House, the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox), who is presumably going to reply to what I am saying. I notice a former minister, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), who seems to be very keen to get into the debate. It may be that he intends later today to preach for a call back to being finance minister.

Mr. Hees: I just heard him say it was not like this in the old days.

Mr. Stevens: Since the issue of free trade is today very much a question of what is really the response of the Canadian government to the United States trade proposal, and is very much a question of this government's response to the report of the Economic Council, we in this House and the country should be the first to know where our government stands on this important question, and not the last.

I should like to take this opportunity of asking the government where our learned negotiators stand. What course are they charting for us without the benefit of any parliamentary counsel or consent? I believe this House should appoint a permanent advisory committee on trade negotiations, comprised of representatives from all sectors of the economy, to work closely with the government on all matters of international trade negotiations. Such a committee would be required to report to parliament on impending major trade negotiations and have the benefit of the feelings of this House on such negotiations.

I would suggest that in addition to having members from the general public, such committee should include representatives of consumer groups, retailers, small businesses, manufacturers, miners, labour interests, provincial governments and the regions of Canada. In short, it should be a meaningful advisory council to which the government and this parliament could turn for guidance on what is the proper trade position for the country.

In view of the government's admission in the working paper entitled "The Way Ahead", and the Speech from the Throne, that it can no longer unilaterally dictate answers for the problems of the seventies, and that it will seek a new era of public consultation and participation, perhaps it will see the merit of the suggestion I have just made. We cannot afford to have this inept government act in secret any longer. Their whims are not enough, when trade patterns are being set that may have far-reaching results for Canadian working people, businessmen and consumers.

I have mentioned what the government might do if it is serious about seeking a new public consensus. Let me touch briefly on what it certainly has not done to date. Neither the paper "The Way Ahead" nor the Speech from the Throne mentioned in any real manner this country's worsening trade position. Last year Canada had an over-all trade deficit of $5 billion and a manufacturing deficit of $10 billion. Strangely enough, the government feels that it does not have to spell out these economic facts of life at a time when the most far-reaching trade agreements in the history of GATT are being negotiated in Geneva.

• (1530)

To put these negotiations in perspective, let me repeat that the Bank of Canada Review, which highlights the magnitude of our current international trade imbalance, estimates the 1976 deficit of OECD countries to be about $20 billion. Of that total deficit in current account and trade balances, this country alone will incur the astonishing proportion of 25 per cent. Mr. Speaker, 25 per cent of the total deficit which all OECD countries expect to run up this year will be incurred by Canada. Ours will be the largest single deficit among OECD nations listed in the Review.

Contrast this figure with that applying to the United States, a country about nine or ten times our size. It anticipates a deficit of about $3.5 billion, France anticipates a deficit of $2.75 billion, and the United Kingdom a deficit of $2.5 billion, half the size of ours. At the same time, Germany and Japan will run up surpluses. The OPEC countries, the petroleum exporting countries, contemplate a surplus this year of $51 billion. The non oil-producing countries expect a deficit in the region of $21 billion. Other countries will run up a deficit of $13 billion. According to reported figures, the total world deficit will equal about $3 billion.

In short, we are in this situation: two industrialized nations, Japan and Germany, will have a surplus. The largest surpluses are being run up among the OPEC nations and the rest of the world, led by Canada, is piling up huge deficits. That is the framework within which negotiations in Geneva are being conducted. That is why we keep saying that it is time for the government to put an end to the secrecy with which it surrounds its trade negotiations. It should level with parliament and the people of Canada on the policies it will propose to correct this country's huge trade imbalances and deficits.

Mr. Paproski: Level, or resign.

Mr. Stevens: Where does Canada fit into all this? A report prepared by the general economic advisory group, economic and policy analysis, of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, dated October 6, 1976, which is little more than a month ago, entitled "Canada's Trade and Balance of Payments, 1971 to June, 1976", clearly spells out the trouble we are in. The report states, as I have mentioned, that Canada's current accounts balance fell from a surplus of $431 million in 1971 to a deficit of nearly $5 billion last year. The report add:

> The change was even more remarkable than this because as recently as 1973 Canada had a small current account surplus.

Both the merchandise and non-merchandise accounts showed marked deterioration in the period, the merchandise trade balance moving from a peak of $2.7 billion in 1973 to a deficit of $639 million in 1975. Canada's customary deficit on non-merchandise trade approximately doubled from 1971 to 1975, from $2.1 billion to $4.3 billion. The deficit for the first half of 1976 was about $600 million higher than for the same period in 1975. The non-merchandise deficit for the year as a whole is expected to be in the neighborhood of $5 billion.

The report also indicated that the service transaction balance has deteriorated for nearly all categories, although the most marked change has been the increase in the deficit on interest and dividends from $1.1 billion in 1971 to $7 billion in 1975. The freight and shipping account, which was in approximate balance in the early 1970s, has moved into a deficit of $370 million in 1975. The deficit on other service transactions went from $765 million in 1971 to $1.2 billion in 1975. For the first half of 1976 the deficits on travel account and on interest and dividends account have increased substantially. It is interesting to note that this report states that Statistics Canada has not kept records of trade with individual countries except the United Kingdom and the United States. This may partly explain why the government is so secretive. It does not know what position to take with respect to individual countries.

Something else which may help to explain Canada's position in world trade is the rate of turnover of cabinet ministers. I see few cabinet ministers sitting in the House.

Mr. Goodale: Where is the hon. member's leader?

Mr. Stevens: It is difficult for a minister to acquire knowledge of his portfolio in less than one year—

An hon. Member: The back rows on the hon. member's side are almost empty.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can make a speech if he wishes. Perhaps he will allow me the courtesy of finishing my speech. The fact is that we have had three different ministers of industry, trade and commerce since 1973. As I said, it is difficult to understand a new portfolio in less than a year, and we have had three ministers appointed in the last three years. I suggest that those ministers did not have time to discover the location of the washrooms in the department. Therefore, how can one expect them to draw up a proper trade policy on the basis of which Canada should negotiate at Geneva?

Let me refer again to the conditions which form the framework for the current round of negotiations in Geneva. The world has changed substantially since the Kennedy Round of negotiations to which I referred. We must now deal with at least three economic blocs. There is the United States block; the European Common Market, which for the first time is negotiating on behalf of all countries forming part of that market, as opposed to having each one of them take its own individual, nationalistic approach; and a third big bloc, the Soviet Union and eastern bloc countries. Japan may herald the emergence of a fourth bloc, and the OPEC nations a fifth bloc. Canada seems to be the odd country, outside of a bloc. The government must explain the reason for this. Is this what it wants? Does it want Canada to be among the few countries in the world isolated from one of the big five economic blocs which have been formed or are in the process of formation, or does it want Canada to join a bloc? In any event, we have the right to know what the government intends in this regard.

Surely the government would wish to present a bipartite policy when engaging in international trade negotiations. Hopefully, it might even consider a tripartite policy which ought to be presented to parliament when engaging in international negotiations. But the government has not done this. Instead, it has engaged in a highly partisan approach; it has dealt in secret and come back to parliament asking for rubber-stamp approval with respect to agreements entered into. Surely the best forum for consultation with respect to trade matters is parliament, the institution of which we are one part. In parliament, the people of Canada, through their elected representatives, have the opportunity to participate in decisions of the day; and, Mr. Speaker, no more important decisions than those currently being taken in Geneva will be made during the balance of this decade.

Let me now turn to tariffs. It is interesting to note the magnitude of the revenues the government derives from certain tariffs. In the 1976 fiscal year, the total revenue was $1,887 million. If we look at the American trade act, it calls for a 100 per cent reduction of tariffs of 5 per cent or less, and a 60 per cent reduction of all other tariffs. If that is the view that prevails in Geneva, and if there is such a cutback in tariffs, it will mean, for example, an estimated $1.1 billion of lost revenue as far as our Customs tariffs are concerned. The odd point is that that fact is not even known by the negotiators who are presently negotiating on our behalf in Geneva.

• (1540)

Often, when we speak in terms of tariffs on trade, we do so in the abstract. However, let us not forget that what we are really talking about is jobs—jobs for Canadians in the electronics industry, the textile field, the leather industry, the furniture industry, the china industry, lock-making and many other diverse forms of activity. That is why we believe, in proposing this motion today, it is urgent that there be a less secretive approach to what is transpiring in parliament, and certainly with regard to our trade negotiations at the present time in Geneva.

It is not just a question of tariffs. Perhaps the most important items that are going to be negotiated in Geneva are the non-tariff items, the so-called subsidies, the countervailing duties. That is where Canadian businessmen, people in the export field and consumers could have an important input in contributing to the negotiations in Geneva, if they were allowed that privilege by this government that is now, temporarily, in office.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: I thank hon. members for their patience. I should like to continue and I shall be brief. You would expect that the Canadian government is much more attuned to what Canadian producers are experiencing. This rarified approach, this attitude that somehow an elitist group in Ottawa or Geneva knows best, in today's volatile and changing world, shows once again the government's disregard for those who must bear the brunt of its policies. It is not enough for Canada to hope and pray that the world economy may turn out to our benefit. As a major trading nation, we should be aggressively in the vanguard, establishing a meaningful position for our people to allow them adequate competition in the markets of the world. This requires selling, not only abroad but it requires a review sector by sector, industry by industry, of our capabilities in Canada to determine how we may most successfully tap the world's potential trade. In this process, rather than run from the advice of Canadians, rather than shelter itself from comment—yes, even criticism—the government should actively pursue ongoing discussions so that they may better understand the wishes of Canadians.

Regardless of what the Prime Minister and his cabinet may feel, the fact is that you can trust the Canadian people. They would like to help with regard to these trade negotiations. I say to the government, why not ask for their help? Why not consult with those who are going to be most affected? Who knows, even this government may make fewer mistakes than they have been wont to make to date.

Mr. Kaplan: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is not for the hon. member to decide, as his time has expired. This can only be done with the consent of the House. Is there consent to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan) to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in his allegations about secrecy the hon. member neglected to mention a consultative process with industry of which he is very much aware because he participated in it. I want to ask whether he did, indeed, participate in this consultative process and meet with the Canadian GATT negotiators. Perhaps he can share with the House for a moment or two his impressions of that process.

Mr. Stevens: If I may reply to that, Mr. Speaker, I take it the parliamentary secretary is referring to an opportunity I had to attend a briefing given to the Canadian Institute on International Affairs in Geneva. Mr. Rodney Grey, the head of our negotiating team there, gave us the Canadian position. Mr. Long, the director-general of GATT, gave us an overview concerning the GATT negotiations in world perspective.

I say to the parliamentary secretary that the briefing I received as a member of that group is one of the reasons we are having this debate. I, and business people who were in attendance at that briefing, were shocked at the decisions that were to be proposed in Geneva with absolutely no reference to this parliament or to the people of Canada. I was shocked to hear that the negotiations are decided by the whim of one minister, the Minister of Finance. If he says, "Do," it is done. If he says, "Don't do," it is not done. It is time the government got away from this secretive approach, opened up and let the people understand exactly what is being proposed in these negotiations.

I thank the parliamentary secretary for asking me this question, because he could not have hit the quick more. The fact is that the government is totally non-committed to an open course with respect to trade negotiations at the present time. Unfortunately, it may have a devastating effect on our economy and, most important, on those who rightfully can expect jobs to be created in this country and to create a meaningful approach to trade as far as Canada is concerned. Canada's future is an international future, and it is time we ended secretive discussions such as those which have been taking place in Geneva.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) with great interest. I agree with him on the importance of this issue. However, it seems to me that if rhetoric were the coin of the realm, we would all be tinkling with prosperity instead of just clanging in confusion. The confusion is on both sides of the argument.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe accuses the government of secrecy. He should know better than that. It is not that they are secretive; it is just that they do not know what they are doing. The problem is that when we look at the statement made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, we are not sure where they stand, either. It is fine for the hon. member to say to the government that we want to know what they are doing because we do not think they are a good enough target. However, I would dispute that with the hon. member. I think the government has made itself into quite a target. It is all right to say to the government, "State your position on free trade so that we can work on it." The other question is, what is the position of the Conservative party on free trade? Let me be frank, Mr. Speaker, and commence my remarks by saying that this is a serious and important debate. I would tell my friends on the right, with the greatest respect, that it does not further the cause of this debate not knowing where the official opposition stands on this issue. How can you have a debate when you do not know where the sides stand?

• (1550)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Tell us where you stand.

Mr. Saltsman: I will tell the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) where I stand. I was expecting that, and I happen to have a note on it which I will pull out. It is quite clear that this country is heading toward free trade with the United States. I think free trade with the United States is a misnomer. Free trade is generally associated with trade in international circles and I, for one, as a member of a democratic socialist party, am not opposed to international free trade.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise not in any facetious or light manner, and I know that this would be the concern of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin). It has been the practice in this House, on opposition days and during the course of general debate, to have at least two ministers of the Crown present. There is none now. I see one just coming in. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will make arrangements to have the proper complement of ministers in the House, in accordance with our traditions.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, on that very point, the House leader for the Conservative party will, I am sure, have noted that during the course of this debate—which has been going on now for about 45 minutes—various members of the cabinet have indeed been present to listen to the contributions that have so far been made. Ministers will continue to be present throughout the afternoon to listen to what transpires.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will take account of these interruptions when looking at my time. In some ways I was not unhappy to see ministers out of the House while the hon. member for York-Simcoe was speaking because, as confused as ministers may be, I do not think they were particularly enlightened by the comments that were made. So I would sooner have them somewhat less confused than they are now.

I was saying that it seemed to me we were heading in the direction of free trade. When the hon. member for York-Simcoe says there is no consultative process going on in this country regarding trade matters, I think he is not completely aware of the enormous influences that exist at the moment in terms of consultation in government circles on continentalism with the United States. This is the other point I am making, which is a separate concept from free trade. Free trade with the United States works out to continentalism. Free trade with the United States only means that we are cutting ourselves off pretty effectively from the rest of the world, as has been demonstrated by some of the limited free trade agreements that have been arrived at between Canada and the United States.

If you look at the composition of committees in this country, like the Canada-U.S. committee, the C. D. Howe committee, the Economic Council, you find a number of token labour people on them; but by and large they are composed of the captains of industry, the people who are running the branch plant economy in this country. These are the people who are constantly giving the government advice and moving in the direction of the reinforcement of free trade in this country. I would not object to free trade if Canadian industries and companies were independent and our industry was strong and Canadian. But Canada has the highest level of foreign ownership of any country in the world. Many of our industries take their directions from across the border.

So what are we talking about when we speak of free trade? We can look at a number of examples in order to see what are the possible consequences of free trade. We are told that some commodities will come down in price, and that is true. But what about the principal concern of Canadians, that of opportunity for useful employment and for employment generally? There are a couple of questions to examine here. One area where there has been free trade for a long time now is in agricultural equipment. What has been the consequence of free trade in this area? Has it increased employment in Canada? Has it brought technological plants to this country? I am talking about Canadian companies such as Massey-Ferguson. The consequence has been a concentration of all new plants in the United States, and what has been left for Canada is the labour-intensive part of the operation.

A number of years ago, faced with a labour dispute, the Canadian people were affronted by the Massey-Ferguson company which stated that the only reason it was continuing some of its operations in Canada was that our wage rates were lower than those in the United States. All of the highly technical and automated operations were moved out to the United States and new tractors were constructed there. The tractor assembly plants and combine plants which required a lot of manual input remained in Canada. The company then stated that if the workers in Canada demanded parity with the workers in the United States, there was no point in their keeping the plants in Canada. So it seems to me that inevitably free trade means that we in Canada will have to accept a permanently lower standard of living for most people than that of the United States.

Free trade also means that when a country like Canada, which over the years has tended to be an exporter and developer of natural resources, is coupled with a country like the United States, which has a highly sophisticated manufacturing industry, what will be traded will be our raw materials for their manufactured goods, but at an accelerated rate. Trade, in itself, is not necessarily a good thing. If you trade down, or trade badly, obviously you do not get a good deal. The whole point of trading is to get some benefit from it.

When you exchange irreplaceable raw materials, as we have in the past with gas, oil, iron ore and copper, the result is that these products are not so readily available and cost far more than otherwise would be the case. I do not blame the United States for this sort of thing, nor do I say this with any rancour against the United States. They are pursuing their best interests and they expect us, as intelligent people, to pursue our own best interests. But they need our raw materials. They do not need our manufactured goods. If our two countries are put together in a free trade package, there would have to be very complete safeguards. It is quite clear that the United States does not propose to enter into any kind of free trade agreement with Canada in the future that includes even the limited safeguards that now exist in the Canada-United States auto pact; they have made that quite clear. There will be no more safeguards. If we enter into any trade agreement with the United States, we will have to do without that.

Where does the Conservative party stand on this issue? The motion that has been moved is an important one, and I want to know where the great Conservative party stands on this issue. When I heard the hon. member for York-Simcoe open the debate, I thought for a moment that he was going to coin the great and original phrase, "No truck or trade with the Yankees", and use it in the next campaign. But nothing like that was said. If you want to debate an issue, Mr. Speaker, you must know where the different sides stand. If all that is being said is, "Tell us where you stand so we can take pot-shots at you from any direction we want", then that is not debate. That does not do a service to this House or to the Canadian electorate which has to decide how to vote. We have stated our position.

● (1600)

We in this party will not agree to a continental agreement on free trade between Canada and the United States so long as we know that our industry is foreign-controlled and so long as much of that industry will have divided loyalty in any kind of free trade agreement. Over the last number of years we have seen many nations get themselves into difficulty, ours included.

What happens when we get into that kind of difficulty vis-à-vis the United States? The most logical and intelligent thing for the United States to say to its industry, at a time of high unemployment in that country, is that it should keep its production in the United States and concentrate on creating jobs there, instead of running around in someone else's country and creating jobs there. This makes trade and finance impotent in this country because we do not control it. We do not control it, and the government certainly does not make any attempt to control it.

It is fine for the government to move in the direction of free trade. It seems to me the reason they do that—and I know there are people on the other side of the House who have reservations about the consequences of free trade—is that from the government's point of view free trade means it does not have to do any planning or take any decisions, and all it has to do is allow things to drift and somehow or other the market will sort it out.

Free trade is a cop-out. It is a way in which the government refuses to face up to responsibilities and to manage the economy. For that reason, I do not think we can support such measures. Instead, we think there should be a determined effort on the part of the government to bring in a trade policy based on planning and an assessment of the Canadian situation. We also think the government should take some chances and show some courage in making decisions.

I should like to refer to the Financial Post of October 2 and an article under the heading "Break up ITC?". That is a reference to the Canadian Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It reads in part:

> Decisiveness, not more money, is what the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Ottawa needs. That was what Jean Chrétien told FP last week, just after taking over as minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: My friends on the opposite side applaud, and so they should if it were true. If it were true, I would applaud myself. The point is that it is not true. There is no evidence that the minister—and I know he is a very determined minister and a very intelligent man—is really in a position to break out of that box in which every Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has found himself.

About the only decision which seems to be coming from the government side of the House regarding matters of trade is a decision not to take a decision. What has the government ever been decisive about, or what has it been decisive about recently? It has been marching backward. It has not come out with any real measures. Sure, there have been some changes in support programs for industry—but that is not where the problem is: the problem is that we have to tackle the question of trade from the over-all approach of the whole economy, and there is no evidence that that is being done.

Let me give an example of the kind of circuituous events which take place where you start off at one point, go around the circle and wind up right back where you started, no wiser and no further ahead. The government starts off by saying it has to keep interest rates high in order to cover the trade deficit which has developed and to bring in capital in order to go ahead, very often with natural resource projects. The consequence of that is that the value of our dollar starts to rise. The value of the dollar is unnatural. There is no way the Canadian dollar is worth its present $1.03 vis-à-vis the United States dollar, and the government knows that. The consequence of the first action is that the dollar will rise. In order to keep that dollar high, the interest rates are kept high and we tend to price ourselves out of international markets. Our over-all productivity is not so great.

When I talk about productivity I am talking about not only the price of labour but also the way labour is combined with resources and the quality of management as well as the type of industrial structure we have which is often far more important than the actual price of labour. We are pricing ourselves out of international markets as a result of the high dollar and high interest rates. So we do not go on restructuring our industry, because it is very difficult to do that. First of all the government does not have an industrial strategy, and when one asks the government for its plans on industrial strategy it pooh-pooh's the idea that you can do such things and plan the over-all economy. The government says it has a sectoral strategy, that it has something going for the furniture industry, and that it has something going for the textile industry. Often they are in conflict with each other—but that is called a strategy. So there is no attempt to restructure the Canadian economy in a way that would be more helpful.

The foreign ownership goes on, and it goes on in a vacuum. I do not think it is because the government wants more foreign ownership now. There was a time, from C. D. Howe on, when perhaps it did. Now, however, it does not want it, but it cannot do anything about it. The Canadian economy has become such that there are virtually no independent Canadian manufacturers left, certainly not of sufficient size and strength to prevent the takeover of our economy. If we want to have any investing in Canada, we have, virtually, to agree to foreign takeovers. So we go on that way. Then we have to export raw materials in order to cover our deficit or do any kind of balancing at all, which means that we have to borrow again because the development of raw materials takes a great deal of money and is very capital-intensive.

There we are, right back to where we started. We have borrowed, the interest rates are high, the dollar is too high, and we have to continue borrowing. What happens? The chickens come home to roost. It is already evident, now, that the outflow of interest and dividends far exceeds the inflow of capital. The municipalities and the provinces have borrowed from the United States because of the difference in the value of our currency. We are now afraid to drop the value of the Canadian dollar even to help the manufacturing industry, for fear that some of these municipalities which have borrowed in foreign markets may be close to bankruptcy if they have to repay in terms of evaluated American dollars vis-à-vis Canadian dollars.

We have put ourselves into a pretty box. We talked earlier about what is the point in trade. Canada has close to 27 per cent of its gross national product in trade. This is one of the highest percentages of any country in the world. What is the point? Is it trade for the sake of trading? The point is not good if on balance we are losing jobs. This is what we are doing. We are exporting, basically, raw materials which cost us jobs in the manufacturing industry. This is what is happening at a time when we have one of the highest growing labour forces in the world. It seems to be entirely the wrong policy. The kind of policy we are pursuing at the moment would suit a country with a very stable or declining population—not one which is growing and needs employment. The consequence, as my leader pointed out, is that we are approaching a level of unemployment which is the highest since the great depression, and that can be laid directly at the feet of the government and its failure to come in with a trade policy.

I want to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) for inviting two members of the opposition, myself and the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), to accompany the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) on a recent trade mission to Russia. That was very helpful. We learned a number of things. Despite the fact that other countries want to trade with us, we have virtually priced ourselves out of foreign markets. This is not just because of labour, because some of the things we were trying to sell contained a very low labour content. We found that there is no one in Canada big enough to take the risk involved in going into foreign markets.

It is difficult to put together consortiums of Canadian businessmen even though some Canadian businessmen are interested. It is difficult to put them together, despite the fact that the government had underwritten some of the trade, for instance, through the Export Development Corporation. The businesses are insured in this way through the establishment of credit with the Soviet Union, and the Soviet Union was quite willing to buy from Canada. It was quite obvious to most of us that for their own reasons, for political reasons and for reasons of friendship, the Soviet Union wants to do business in Canada and yet cannot. Yet the one instrument that might have been available to the government to solve this kind of problem was shot down by the government.

● (1610)

When we in this party proposed the Canada Development Corporation, we proposed it to make up for the deficiencies of the capital market and the entrepreneurial market in Canada. We said at that time that we needed an instrument of government policy that would put together industries and enable them to take risks collectively that they could not take on their own under the leadership of the federal government. Instead of that, the CDC has been turned into a kind of penny-ante fund so that Canadian investors can put in their five bucks and get some dividends. If that is what we need, there are lots of funds in Canada for that. What we do not have is an instrument with which to do something for industry, an instrument with which to go to foreign markets, to take risks and to have the technological know-how to deal with the giants among the international corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I want to move an amendment to the motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It reads as follows:

That the motion be amended by inserting therein, immediately after the words "generality of the foregoing", the following words:

"thus condemns the failure of the government to develop the kind of trade policy best suited to maintain high levels of employment, and"—

The remainder of the words stay as they are. To us, the point of going to international markets is to create employment for our people. Of course, there are other reasons as well. We are international citizens and we have an obligation to help other countries. If trade is one of the ways of doing it, then we should be doing it. There has been a kind of worship of trade in this country without any thought of the consequences, of whether it is good or bad, or whether the terms should be different than they are. Therefore, it seems to me that it is terribly important that this amendment be accepted, to make it quite clear that the real reason for trade is to provide employment which is so desperately needed by our people and from the lack of which our society is suffering at the moment.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when I came into the House I was quite disappointed to learn that hon. members opposite referred to the fact that I was not in the House. When I came into the House I saw that those members who were complaining about me had disappeared themselves. Now I see the mover of the motion is back in the House, but not even in his seat. Yet it is he who complained a few moments ago about my not being here. I think he is in a very weak position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: His motion is one of those that does not make much sense. A few days ago he was in Geneva. I asked the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and of the Department of Finance who were there to give him a full briefing. Yet he comes to the House and his way of thanking us is to say that we work in secrecy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is always very quick to complain about everything, but he has very little consideration for what is at stake, and he is determined to score petty political points all the time.

Mr. Stevens: It is pretty easy to do.

Mr. Chrétien: I know it is very easy for him, because he is not interested in the welfare of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: When we tell them the truth, they cannot stand the heat. They are very touchy people. They like to give it to us, but they don't know how to take it. Next time the hon. member asks for a briefing, we will not give it to him, because he does not want to know anything. When we give him the facts, he comes here and complains that we are being secretive. I have been Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for two months now, but the hon. member has not been here to ask me one question during the question period. He speaks about secrecy, and yet he has not formulated any question in the House either for me or for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald).

I am sorry I arrived late today, but the reason is that I was in Montreal talking about these problems with the textile industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, they are always provoking me.

An hon. Member: You are being smart.

Mr. Chrétien: Our attitude cannot be that bad, Mr. Speaker, because I am forced to say they gave me a standing ovation at the end of my speech, and there were two times more people than usual at the meeting today. They probably knew that this government and this minister will accept their responsibilities and carry them out.

An hon. Member: And be modest.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: I told them today, dealing with the problem of multilateral trade negotiations, that my main preoccupation is that there are 200,000 employees in the textile industry and I intend to do the utmost to keep these people employed. At the same time, I said to the industry that I do not believe in carrying crippled people around in that field, and that they themselves, as an industry, will have to do their part by being efficient, productive and imaginative. They agreed with that. I was glad to tell them today that we are working hand in hand with the industry, with provincial governments and the unions. It was the first time that we managed to get around the same table the unions, the provincial governments and the federal government, because as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I think it is as important for me to be in the lunchrooms of the nation as it is to be in the board rooms of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: It is very important to have everyone together. Ten days ago we decided that because of our balance of payments problem we should build the Lear Star aeroplane in Montreal, for which we already have 61 signed contracts. I decided to take that gamble because this program is export-oriented. If it is successful, and I hope it will be, the returns in exports in five years will be $1 billion. The aerospace industry is underemployed at this time. However, when we made that decision I went right into the factory to tell the employees that it was also their responsibility, because if they are efficient and productive we will sell those planes, and Canada will be better off. If the Lear Star project is a success, there will be 3,000 jobs created in one shot in a high-technology industry.

● (1620)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Because I am a minister, and because I believe in trade, last week I approved grants to de Havilland to the tune of $7 million to develop the DASH-7 for reconnaissance, so that not only can it be used for Canada's own surveillance but also to be sold abroad. We are trying to move in the right direction but if we want to export, we have to be very careful in the negotiations in Geneva.

I am very surprised that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) should talk about secretive negotiations. When you are negotiating you do not show all your cards to the other fellow. That is probably the way the hon. member ran the Bank of Western Canada, and it was not a great success.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: When you are negotiating, you have to reserve your position. It is important to invite those Canadians who have an interest to inform us of their views, and they should also be informed. Since the new trade negotiations started, and since we made a statement after the meeting in Tokyo in September, 1973, the Canadian trade and tariff committee has been set up and so far it has received over 200 briefs from industry and has had over 70 oral consultations with firms. The CTTC has also conducted briefing sessions for the private sector, and we have brought our chief negotiator back from Geneva for this purpose.

Mr. Stevens: What have you done in parliament about it?

Mr. Chrétien: We are waiting for your questions.

Mr. Goodale: When was the last time you asked?

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member was in Geneva, and we asked officials to brief him.

Mr. Stevens: You didn't even know I was there.

Mr. Chrétien: My people keep me informed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: It is terribly dishonest for a man to talk about secretive policies of the government when we have taken the time to have our officials brief him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: How could the hon. member be minister of finance in a Tory government? The people of Canada will not stand too much double-talk with regard to a problem like this. I think the people of Canada believe that this House can be a debating place where the truth can be put on the table—and I am not shy at all about what our government is doing in this field. In tariff negotiations we have a lot to say, but we have to play the game according to the rules. If hon. members think we are wrong, let them try to make some political brownie points. The hon. member should tell us in this House what he thinks.

Mr. Stevens: That is what we are doing today.

Mr. Chrétien: I would have welcomed a positive speech as a result of which we could have learned something, but today the hon. member just tried to score points. The hon. member who spoke for the New Democratic Party at least had a position. He did not entirely agree with what we are doing, but he was contributing to the debate. He expressed his views. I do not agree with all of them, because in many fields if we become too protective we can destroy what we have.

We are great exporters of many agricultural products and other products, and in order to keep those markets we have to make concessions. As I said earlier, we have to protect the jobs of the people in the textile industry. This is a position we take—and we have stated that—but at the same time we know we have to open our market to developing countries. We cannot be the great exporter we are and be too protective, and that is why it is difficult to develop a large industrial strategy. We are not a communist state or a socialist state where everything is controlled by the government. Sometimes we have to adjust our position because it is dangerous to be too doctrinaire.

Canada is a very complex country to administer. It stretches 4,000 miles from east to west and 4,000 miles from south to north. We cannot have one single sector and one system which applies all across the country. We need flexibility. For example, I do not think the textile industry is the best industry we have because it is not highly technological. At the same time I am a realist and I know that if we close the textile industry in some parts of the country in order to have a higher technological industry, the new industry will not necessarily go to the places where the textiles were. I feel that it is not very good to have everything concentrated in certain parts of Canada, because what we have to worry about are the workers in Waterloo, in small towns in eastern Quebec, New Brunswick, or even in Winnipeg where there is now a textile industry of some substance. If we close there and all the jobs are created in other parts of Canada, we are no better off and we have to cope with unemployment problems in that industry.

The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) has always been very aggressive in trying to promote the interests of the shipbuilding industry. That is another industry in which there are some problems and we have to be protective; but at the same time there is a softening in the international market. There are fewer ships being built at this time than before. It is a very difficult problem and perhaps we will have to develop a sectorial strategy for the problem because, as the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) mentioned, we cannot have an across the board policy which plans everything, because we are too dependent on what is happening in the world. Canada is an exporting country, and we have to import. There are fluctuations in the world, and we cannot brace ourselves against every wave coming from abroad. I think the negotiations are very important for Canada. The trend will be for a reduction in the tariff, but we will have to be very careful because we need some protection for certain sectors.

A moment ago I mentioned the textile industry, but we have an interest in having a freer trade policy around the world. I am sure that would benefit Canada in the long term. If every country becomes more and more protective—and I am very surprised at the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge—how will we be able to help the developing countries emerge with new industries? Because I am the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, this morning I received the minister of external affairs from Nigeria. I receive ministers of trade and commerce from other developing countries; they want us to open some of our markets for some of their goods. How can we achieve that and be completely protectionist? I think we have to strike the proper balance. Perhaps we have been too liberal in some sectors. I am informed that in the textile industry 55 per cent of the goods which are brought by Canadians come from abroad, compared with 45 per cent only two years ago. People from Winnipeg, from some parts of Quebec and from some parts of Ontario complain that because of too many imports local employment is suffering.

• (1630)

We have to balance those things. At the same time we have to keep in mind that if we become too protective, some of the goods we are making will not find a market, and sometimes some of the goods we make here are more rewarding for us in terms of benefits than some of the jobs we are protecting.

I do not believe we can have an across the board strategy. I think we have to be practical, to look at the sectors and try to take into account all the factors involved. What is important is to ensure that in these negotiations our interests are well protected. I would urge members of the House who have specific views to stand up and make their points, and we will listen to them. I am not sure that we will be able to agree with all of them, but I would welcome the debate. The type of negotiations we are getting involved in at this time are very important.

I cannot elaborate any more, Mr. Speaker, because I am a bit off base. This motion was introduced last night and I had to make a speech in Montreal today, so I did not have time to research enough to make an extensive speech. However, I just wanted to record something of my gut feeling about the situation. I think that not only should Canadian interests be protected, but we have to look at the consequences of tariff negotiations in relation to the developing world. I have some strong feelings on that subject which I think are shared by many members of the House.

We in Canada cannot be too selfish. We have to think about people who are weaker. If we are too selfish we will pay a big price but, of course, at the same time I know we have problems. The Canadian dollar is perhaps too strong in terms of exports, but we have inflation. The Minister of Finance has put forward a very effective policy for controlling inflation and this has generated a lot of faith abroad, so now people are ready to invest money in Canada.

Of course, we have a balance of payments deficit of $5 billion this year, but a lot of money is coming into Canada. Now some people are complaining that the money is not coming in equity but is coming in bonds. I remember a long time ago that people wanted money to come in bonds so we could control more easily foreign investment and only have to pay interest and capital in due course. I am not so sure, now that we have the situation, that it is so marvellous.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge referred to the trip he made to the U.S.S.R., and I am very pleased that he went. I could not go, as I had to stay in Ottawa to cope with some problems. I am informed, however, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) did very well, and I congratulate him for his excellent work. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Marchand) replaced me. I should like to inform the House of something very interesting. Some hon. members were complaining because I asked the minister to replace me, but he is an associate minister in my department and is there to help me. On his way back from the U.S.S.R. he stopped in Poland, and a message has been received from the industry which managed to sign contracts with the Polish people, that they feel if the minister had not been with them at Warsaw, the contracts would not have been signed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: I see the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) laughing about that.

Mr. Paproski: If it was the pulp and paper contract that was going to be signed three or four months ago, it would have been signed anyway, so do not give us that.

Mr. Chrétien: I am just reporting what the private sector told me. They said that in a situation like that with the Polish government, it was very important to have a minister with them. That is why the Minister of State for Small Businesses was there. I am not saying it was I who had the satisfaction; it is the industry that expressed it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to make one point to the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge because I see the contradiction in some of the things he proposes. Whenever there is a debate about the corporate sector in Canada, great speeches are made in that corner of the House about corporate bums, and so on. Now the hon. member is complaining that industry in Canada is not big enough and that we should have bigger consortiums in Canada.

Mr. Saltsman: The Canada Development Corporation; the private sector is not going to do it.

Mr. Chrétien: We are not ready as yet to give Canada to the socialists, although I agree that it is true we need good consortiums. That is why I went to Venezuela not long ago. We stand a chance of building a railway there. Canadians are good at building railways because Canada itself was built by the railways. We can export technology in that field, but we have to put the people together, CPR, CNR engineers, car manufacturers, and so on. This is the type of specialty that suits us.

I am thinking in terms of consortiums all over the world. We have this technology and are very efficient in the field. This Friday I was supposed to go to Peterborough but I had to cancel that because of other duties in Quebec that hon. members will understand. I was to visit the factory of CGE to tell employees and management, in both the lunch room and the board room, that the effective work they are doing has helped us get a contract for almost $50 million for a generator for a dam in Venezuela. We have to be more aggressive in that field and have a consortium we need to get the market.

In the meantime there will be a little bit more intervention by the government because I do not think we can afford to send four or five different groups in one area to try to get a contract, with each of them cutting the other's throat. I was informed that in one place in the U.S.S.R. two Canadian manufacturers were trying to get a $10 million contract. The Russians managed to force them to bid against each other, and at the end of the day the Canadians left $2 million on the table. In a situation like that it would be in the interests of Canada for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to pick one Canadian company to go and make a sale, rather than to leave $2 million on the table. That would mean a little bit more intervention, but it would make us more credible in the markets.

There are billions of dollars all over the world waiting for Canadian technology, Canadian companies and the Canadian personality as such. That is why I am glad to announce that I am going to Iran next month. We are losing many markets because we are perhaps not aggressive enough.

This morning the minister of external affairs for Nigeria told me he thought Canadians were not interested because we had no spare capacity in Canada. I told him we have spare capacity and if he has any good projects in mind we will be delighted to consider them. We have good people all over Canada and some are interested in participating in such projects.

If we are to develop our business opportunities, we must develop the proper mechanism for expansion. One of the difficulties with which we must cope is known as the downside risk which is apparent when companies are involved in big ventures such as the Venezuela deal. Our Canadian companies can take so much of the risk on their own shoulders, but they have to consider the level of inflation.

● (1640)

Mr. Kempling: And changes of government in Venezuela.

Mr. Chrétien: There was no difficulty concerning the change of government. I am thinking of the Export Development Corporation's insurance plan which provides guarantees with respect to political stability. The difficulty has to do with the downside risk which involves inflation and factors of that kind. Therefore, I will need to develop a policy in this regard. I am thinking of bringing forward some kind of insurance scheme under which consortiums or big corporations will pay a fee and we will guarantee the downside risk. The risk will be spread over a number of projects. Perhaps we may need to pay out a little in connection with some projects, but we shall collect fees from other participants and the program will probably stabilize. I think programs of this kind have been brought forward in most countries of the world. Unfortunately, we have not done it in Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Is that how CIDA operates?

Mr. Chrétien: CIDA is a different operation. It is not a business. It is a billion dollar organization through which Canadians try to help some of the less fortunate countries of the world. I do not think that CIDA should be related too closely with business. It should be businesslike, wherever possible. At the same time, we should not run our charities as we would run a business.

Mr. Paproski: Charity begins at home; remember that.

Mr. Chrétien: I tell the hon. member that although we are encountering certain problems in Canada, few in Canada would trade our problems for those of any other country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member said charity begins at home. I suggest that the attitudes of some local governments, that of Alberta especially, are not an example of charity beginning at home.

Mr. Paproski: We do not spend our money foolishly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: We know where the money is going. We double-check.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: How can the hon. member say that, in view of what has happened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I say that the minister will need the unanimous consent of the House if he is to continue, his time having expired. Does the minister have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon members. I shall be brief since I know that others want to participate in this debate. I suggest to the hon. member opposite that the people of Alberta ought to remember that for many years the people of Ontario paid a higher price for oil in order to permit Alberta to develop its oil. That is sometimes forgotten.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, it is not forgotten. We cushioned the rest of Canada from world oil prices. We in Alberta cushioned the rest of Canada from world prices. We do not forget.

Mr. Chrétien: I am glad to hear that, although some of us were wondering in the province had forgotten. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make my statement and I am glad the hon. member was present to hear me. I ask him not to be so touchy.

Mr. Paproski: I am not touchy.

Mr. Chrétien: I have said all I intended to say. I thank hon. members for granting me an extension. In my enthusiasm I forgot to speak in French. Next time I shall deliver my speech in French.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for giving unanimous consent and allowing me to ask my question, which is important. I listened with great attention to the minister's comments. He singled out the Waterloo area, my area, when expressing concern about jobs for Canadians. Since Kinney Shoes announced within the last 24 hours that it will close three plants in Ontario, two of them being in my constituency, one in Mount Forest and one in Markdale, and since 150 people will be thrown out of work in each plant, is the minister prepared to intervene and do what he can to save the jobs of those 300 workers whose earnings affect directly the economies of their areas?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to look into the matter. I have not been informed of it and do not know what can be done. Factories in Canada close down for all sorts of reasons. Perhaps we have been too liberal in the last several years in the matter of exports and imports. I intend to take action.

Mr. Beatty: Will the minister look into the case I have brought to his attention?

Mr. Chrétien: I will look into that case. I hope to do my utmost in situations of the kind just brought to my attention. But the hon. member must realize that when the matter involves imports, one cannot turn a switch and expect results right away. Sometimes goods entering Canada have been ordered for several months. The market may be flooded and buyers do not want to buy. There is always some lead time between when you decide to stop the flood and when you see results. I shall certainly look into the matter and hope that not too many similar cases will arise.

Since the hon. member raised the matter, may I give an illustration of the sort of difficulty one encounters in different fields. For example, let us consider double-knits. Double-knits are no longer in fashion. What can one do if one has a stock of double-knits? The use of double-knits in Canada has been reduced fantastically. The market for double-knits has shrunk to about 20 per cent of the market of three years ago.

Therefore, even if one stopped all imports, one could not generate the market for double-knits, as I said. Double-knit fabric is made in my area and I bought two suits. I found them comfortable, but Canadians are no longer buying the material. I have imposed quotas. Now people making the suits tell me that because we have stopped the import of double-knits from the United States, the price has risen. It is too high, and retailers cannot sell stocks on hand. Therefore, one cannot look for simple and cosy solutions because the market does not work that way. I wanted to give this illustration to show some of the difficulties with which we must deal.

As for the shoe industry, the matter the hon. member raised, I shall look into the question. I must tell the hon. member that I have encountered similar problems in my own area, there being textile and shoe industries in the district I represent.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I assume the minister flew in from Montreal to participate in this debate. I hope he stays for the rest of it. The minister spoke of what he had accomplished in the past few months; actually, he bragged about his accomplishments. Unfortunately, what he said makes little sense if one views his remarks in the context of present-day business conditions in this country. The minister spoke in glowing terms of the government's accomplishments.

[Mr. Beatty.]

I can say with 100 per cent accuracy that his speech will not enhance the government's standing and will not convince this country's businessmen that the government will support them in the search for new markets. To use a colloquialism, the government has not put its money where its mouth is. I also think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) ought to be present to participate in the debate this afternoon.

• (1650)

What we are saying is that our motion has far more direct implication on the Department of Finance than on the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I hope that either the minister or his parliamentary secretary will give us the government perspective in the debate this afternoon.

I, too, was in Geneva for a few days talking directly with our people involved in the negotiations on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Regardless of the members of parliament who journeyed to Geneva to discuss international trade, the point is that industry officials, those who run the plants and employ people in this country, have not been adequately informed. That is the problem—but it was not mentioned by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien).

Today's debate will be one of the more important during this session of parliament. To begin my portion of the debate, I wish to outline how I view the Canadian economy at the present time. I will then move to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade as it pertained to the Kennedy Round in the sixties and what has gone on in the seventies vis-à-vis the so-called Tokyo Round now being held at Geneva.

By any standard, Canada's economy at the present time is in poor condition. Our deteriorating balance of trade at this time is an important and disturbing aspect of Canada's economic performance. Over the years, international trade has become increasingly important to the standard of living in most countries. It is certainly true for Canada which each year imports no less than $1,520 per person. Those exports are mostly in manufactured goods. That shows the magnitude of our imports and the importance of them to Canada. It is not widely known that Canada is the largest per capita importer of manufactured goods among the major trading nations of the world.

The Conference Board of Canada recently issued a report by Professor Charles Barrett entitled "Canada's International Trade, Trends and Prospects". Although the report does not suggest policies to remedy the situation, the implication is clear. I wish to quote briefly from that report. I do so because the Conference Board of Canada is one of the most prestigious bodies in this country when it comes to the economy. I quote:

> The weakening trend in our balance of trade has been evident since about 1970, and although things looked good temporarily in 1973-74 because of the cyclical high prices of our resources, the underlying weakness was still there and resulted in an overall deficit of $5.4 billion in 1975.

I may add that by carrying that kind of deficit in 1975 there is every indication the deficit will be carried into the eighties and will increase as time goes on. I again quote:

The reasons for this trend to a deficit in trade relate to fundamental factors such as the declining availability of our high price energy export and the 1970 exchange rate revaluation.

However, the composition of the flows of trade is much more important. Our deficit in fully manufactured products was about $10 billion last year, the result of the high inflow of manufactured goods which will not be offset by exports of our resources.

The environment for developing new resource based exports has become markedly less attractive in Canada because of the burden of taxation and escalating construction and financial costs.

That is one of the reasons I would like to see the Minister of Finance state his position in this debate. Quoting again from the Conference Board report:

Finally it is clear from the evidence available that our cost performance in manufacturing has deteriorated considerably during the early seventies.

As I mentioned before, the implications are certainly clear for the Canadian economy. Because of the seriousness of our situation, the Tokyo Round of talks, as they are being called in Geneva, take on an added dimension. We have a situation in this country that was alluded to in today's question period as well as in speeches in this debate. Unemployment, because of a slowdown in construction, among other things, is starting to inch its way up once again. This winter we will have an unemployment rate of over 9 per cent, which is truly shocking for a country like Canada.

I hope the government will make some effort to reply to this kind of criticism, namely, that we have self-inflicted wounds throughout our export field. Our deteriorating export position is most serious. Over the past few years it has been rapid. What is happening is that Canada is pricing itself out of competition in a good many world markets. Over the past year, attention from our economic problems has to some extent been diverted by the Anti-Inflation Board and by general statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the economy. This has caused business confidence to be at an all-time low as far as rapport between the business community and the present government is concerned. That is one of the major problems this government has to overcome.

I wish to mention briefly the Kennedy Round of talks in order to set the stage for discussion as far as the Tokyo Round of talks is concerned. After that gloomy, but realistic picture, of the Canadian economy, hopefully we can view the discussions that are coming up in the proper context. In general, the Kennedy Round of talks that was completed in the sixties was favourable to Canada. The volume of trade effected by concessions in the Kennedy Round has been estimated at $40 billion. Therefore, the Kennedy Round did have a positive effect on world trade. In general, for Canada the results of the Kennedy Round meant easier access to foreign markets for many goods being exported. While tariffs on many of Canada's primary products were already low, the changes offered new potential, particularly in the area of manufactured goods. The most significant reductions were for industrial and manufactured goods, and the resulting tariff did retain a significant degree of protection for Canadian industry in the domestic market throughout the sixties and since the Kennedy Round of talks concluded.

Tariffs for most manufactured goods were reduced from a range of 22½ per cent to 25 per cent to a new range of 17 and a half to 20 per cent. Canadian concessions were generally less than 25 per cent of the existing rate on a selected list of commodities, in contrast to the general reduction of 50 per cent for broad groups of items by the United States. As a point of general interest, the United States tariff rate on most manufactured goods is less than 10 per cent, while the EEC rate ranges from 5 to 8 per cent. That is past history and it has been generally favourable for Canada, although the present economic outlook for our economy would not indicate that we received any benefit during the Kennedy Round of talks.

● (1700)

When you look below the surface at the reasons for this, the main reason being the government's misdirection in handling the economy, the short-term strategy the government has adopted for political reasons, and not for the good of the Canadian economy, and the general unsettling of the economic situation in Canada caused by a number of factors, some of which admittedly are outside the control of the government, any gain that we might have thought was attained during the Kennedy Round has been lost.

In turning from the Kennedy Round to the Tokyo Round and looking exactly at what we will have to be facing in the next few years, it is certain that Canada will be forced to take a more positive position than it took during the Kennedy Round of talks. Throughout my remarks on the Tokyo Round of talks I will draw a comparison between the United States and ourselves. It is clear that we trade more goods between our two countries, and that the United States is far more important to us than any other country. What is done at the Tokyo Round of talks will have more impact on Canada than most other countries. Canada will be forced to take a more positive position than it took during the Kennedy Round. The United States will be pushing Canada toward an exposed front-row seat at the forthcoming Tokyo Round of multilateral tariff negotiations. The United States is apparently going to make sure that Canada takes its place among the leaders, rather than hang back while other nations do most of the bargaining and give up most of the tariff ground.

As I mentioned before, in the past Canada's strategy seems to have been to maintain a largely passive role, coming forward mainly in reaction to other national proposals or to protect and promote its own interests. The United States trade officials clearly think that if they can pressure Canada and a few other reluctant players to commit themselves early—and I think they will be doing this very shortly—and then involve them in the main negotiations, the chances of a free ride which Canada is said to have gotten will be greatly diminished.

Because of this fact there appears to be less concern in working United States circles about the actual content of various tariff-cutting proposals than there is about the need to force it on to the table at the negotiations. The United States and EEC proposals, for example, differ markedly in both the depth of the tariff cuts suggested and the extent of the products covered. The EEC wants the major tariff-cutting formula to exclude its highly-protected farm products where some of the highest tariffs now exist. The United States, and I hope Canada, too, wants Common Market agricultural products to be part of the over-all tariff-cutting formula. The United States has also suggested that major nations cut tariffs by 50 of 60 per cent for many categories.

Despite denials, the alleged Canadian tactic was very much in the minds of Congress when it was dealing with the trade act of 1974 which really empowers the president to negotiate at the Tokyo Round of talks. This legislation provides the United States President with specific authority to negotiate in GATT. One portion of the act, section 126, known in inner circles in the United States as the Canadian section, aims to prevent any major industrial nation from using the United States to hitch a free tariff ride. The section provides that after the negotiation ends, if the United States thinks that any major industrial nation has not made sufficient concessions equal to what it will gain from the United States, it can exclude that country from sharing the benefits until further equalizing concessions are made. It is understood that one of the preliminary drafts of the Senate finance committee report actually named Canada as a past example of a free-rider, although such reference was deleted from the final report.

There is little question that this approach has created considerable resentment among the Americans both within the administration and also in Congress. The United States is convinced that during the Kennedy Round of tariff negotiations Canada won a free ride on the backs of the United States, giving up much less than they gained in tariff and trading advantages. It has been contended that Canada managed this by holding off until the last minute and avoided, compared with other nations, major tariff concessions in areas that it wanted to protect.

It is interesting to note that under the rules of the game Canada was granted the same tariff advantages that the United States painstakingly worked out with other nations. Canada, of course, has denied this allegation of a free ride and is still very clearly sensitive to the issue. The implication running through all of the negotiations, through speeches that have been made, and certainly the recent speech of Mr. Enders, the U.S. ambassador, is very clear for Canada, and it is that in the new economic order which will be established after the Tokyo Round of talks are concluded, which will be some time at the end of the 1970s or the early 1980s, Canada, regardless of what we in the House of Commons think, will have to be more competitive in the area of international trade. So much for how we are perceived by other trading nations.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Murta.]

[English]

Mr. Murta: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not be much longer. As I understand the Canadian position, it is to eliminate tariffs under 5 per cent and to cut, on what is called an unspecified trade-weighted basis, those tariffs between 5 per cent and 20 per cent, and to reduce all remaining higher tariffs down to a floor of 20 per cent.

In addition, the Canadian position must be regarded in light of the sector approach which Canada has put on the table, which is really Canada's initiative in this particular area. The object of negotiating through the sector approach is the upgrading of Canada's resource development within Canada by eliminating tariffs and non-tariff barriers. The sector question, like those involving multilateral rules on which products to exempt from the negotiations, and safeguard to ensure that countries comply with the outcome of the tariff negotiations, are also up for debate in the coming months.

I should like to touch very briefly on one of the most important, and certainly toughest areas in the present round of negotiations, and that is agriculture. This is the first time our negotiators will sit down and deal in a meaningful way with agriculture and its subsidies. It is hoped that Canada will be backing the move of the United States to reduce tariffs in the economic community. I believe Canada's position is generally along that line. There will be significant benefits from any reduced agricultural barriers to trade. This is because one of the major areas where Canada is an efficient exporter of any type of commodity is agriculture. About 40 per cent of our total farm cash income in Canada comes from the export of agricultural products, so freer trade is very important.

● (1710)

The negotiations will be complex because many of the countries use farm policies for social as well as economic goals, as shown by the farm income policies of the Economic Community. The United States maintains that the objectives must be to create an agricultural trade environment which is based on income support divorced from the price mechanisms, low tariff, as the only form of import protection and export subsidy prohibition. Since the present EEC policy is not compatible with these objectives for progress to take place, the EEC and U.S. positions will have to change or solidify to some extent. The EEC, on the other hand, feels that a move away from its painfully constructed common agricultural policy would destroy the adhesive force which holds the Common Market together.

As I have said before I think one important area is agriculture. I certainly hope, and I believe all hon. members of this House hope, that Canada can make some progress in the area of reducing these barriers to trade. The possibility is that we will be odd man out of negotiations—not being associated in any way with any of the big three, the U.S., the EEC or Japan—in the new economic order that we can expect in the early 1980s. It can easily be seen that competition will be more intense when one looks at past negotiations and what may take place in the future.

The current round of multilateral trade negotiations aimed at cutting tariffs and other barriers to trade will not be completed until some time in 1978 following a period of ratification by participating countries, namely because of the slowness of the negotiations in respect of agriculture. The changes in tariffs and other trade practices would be phased in between 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Speaker, because I know there are certain other members who wish to speak, I want to close by saying that in viewing the Canadian situation in relation to the negotiations that will be going on at the present time in Geneva, what one sees, having been over there, is a great gap. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce certainly did not close that gap this afternoon. The business community is totally lacking in faith in the government. As I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, the government's position over the next few years will be extremely difficult because of its preoccupation with the Anti-Inflation Board and because of the general philosophy of the Prime Minister which he espoused around the first of 1976. Because of this, the Canadian business community will have to be shown in no uncertain terms that the government means business in the upcoming round of the Tokyo talks. This will mean that the government will have to encourage and help business to become more competitive, while demonstrating that it does not want to become a permanent fixture in the life of Canadian business.

There are some thorny problems which must be resolved before we can move ahead as a dynamic trading nation which we would all like to see. I will state four of the problems briefly. First, Canada cannot generate adequate wealth and create the quantity of the right kind of employment through resource industries and service industries alone. We need a strong awareness from the government and unions and a commitment from Canadians generally that we must build and cultivate manufacturing enterprises. This has not been done to the extent it should have been up to this time. Then we need the determination to pursue the kind of policy to build a strong manufacturing industry.

Second, our interest must be refocused on the problems of high costs and high taxes which have cut into Canada's productivity performance over the past year. It is unlikely that we will arrest the exit of Canadian firms which are establishing new facilities in the United States instead of Canada until we take measures to correct the cost disadvantages relative to those of our trading partners, such as interest rates, wage rates, relative productivity and the cost of plants and equipment. Third, the federal government must begin to realize that the purpose of the Anti-Inflation Board ought to be redefined as a vehicle to aid our economic recovery, not simply to burden companies with higher administrative costs while controlling prices. The immediate priority is for Canada to work itself clear of controls as soon as possible. Finally, the federal government should look at pursuing a selective tariff policy to reinforce the sectors of the economy which offer the greater potential for growth and exports.

I look forward to listening to the remainder of this debate today because, as I said before, it is a most serious and important matter. I thank you, Mr. Speaker and the House, for the additional time.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to open my remarks in the debate this afternoon by addressing myself to some of the comments made earlier by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). I think we all understand that this is indeed an opposition motion with which we are faced today. It is a motion which I assume is sponsored by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the financial critic of the official opposition. It is a motion which in my view would seem to ask the government to encourage its negotiators at GATT to cease their role as negotiators and substitute therefor the role of messenger or of some sort of weather-cock.

I suggest the hon. member cannot really be serious. I am sure he understands far better than many members of this House the difficulties and sensitivities involved in international negotiations of this sort. Surely he must understand the need for quiet and speedy negotiations in such international settings.

Mr. Stevens: After discussion with those concerned.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member refers to discussion with those concerned. I think we all heard earlier the speech by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) in which he indicated that there were no less than 200 briefs received by his department and 70 oral consultations with people particularly from those industries which would be affected by any GATT negotiations which might take place. How can this be termed secretive? What does the hon. member mean by "consultation"? I believe there is a limit to which government can go in the consultative process. When 200 briefs are received and studied by senior departmental officials, and when there are 70 oral discussions with industry people who would be affected, surely that is meaningful consultation.

I suggest that, as usual, the official opposition party this afternoon has indicated that it has no policy and no position. As the minister said, this is more an attempt to simply score some sort of brownie points for the record, which I suggest are rather cheap shots. In my view, the hon. member for York-Simcoe is speaking with a complete misconception or an apparent lack of conception concerning what makes this country tick. There are many international implications which we have as a nation within an ever-shrinking world. We have international responsibilities that cannot simply be turfed aside based on whether we have free trade or not.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge indicated some of the difficulty in this area. Certainly, the government has not come down hard with a policy either for free trade with the U.S. or other countries, or no free trade in the long-term. It is a very difficult and complicated area, and the hon. member for York-Simcoe, I suggest, as the hon. member for Waterloo-

Cambridge pointed out, has made no positive contribution to this debate. He has not indicated what his party's position will be and in what direction they would move.

● (1720)

Mr. Stevens: We started the debate. That is more than your government did.

Mr. Martin: I want to speak for a moment on one or two of the comments made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge. He touched on some of the sensitive issues involved in the negotiations, and on the determination of an ultimate position for Canada—whether we move more toward free trade, or less in the direction of free trade. He indicated clearly that in his view many consultations have taken place. I think he appreciated the degree of consultation in which the government has been involved. I was glad to hear him confirm that in his view trade negotiations are not a simple matter. In effect, it is not our opinion only on this side of the House that trade negotiations are not a simple matter, but it has been clearly stated in the House by the financial critic of the NDP that he sees these implications as well. I suggest the hon. member for York-Simcoe also sees them. You cannot tie the hands of the negotiators in the way in which it has been proposed.

Mr. Stevens: That is why you need help.

Mr. Martin: Trade negotiations are not taps to be turned on and off at a whim. Again I say that the fact remains that the official opposition has no policy in the area. It is completely devoid of policy in this as in many other areas. I tend to agree with the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge when he indicates that one of the chief objectives of increased trade must be to create added employment opportunities in Canada. I do not think any of us question that.

But I would like to come back for a moment to the comments made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. What I detect is a continuing negative approach by the official opposition to matters relating to the Canadian economy. I would like to talk positively about our over-all economic situation. I believe that members on this side of the House tend to conduct themselves in this way, which indicates a differing point of view. We recognize the economic problems that face this nation—and there are some serious ones—but at the same time we on this side of the House are proud, and in my view rightly so, of the positive factors in our economy which are in a number of cases the envy of people even outside Canada.

Let me start with the leadership which, I suggest, has been given to this nation and its people by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet colleagues in the area of controlling the plague of inflation which was besetting us a year ago. I repeat, I think we on this side of the House should be proud of our positive and non-secretive action in this area. Let me quote one noted columnist from outside the country. I am referring to a column on October 19 of this year written by Joseph Kraft. It is very seldom that a noted foreign correspondent, particularly from the United States, would take time to devote an entire column to Canadian affairs, especially in the closing weeks of one of the closest presidential contests that we have seen in recent years. I want briefly to quote from the opening and closing paragraphs of the column he wrote. He opened with these words:

Last week saw the first anniversary of an exceptional effort by perhaps the world's most gifted leader to put the lid on inflation.

He ends his column with the following words:

No one can look at the Canadian experience and be optimistic about the rest of the world where presidents and prime ministers are so much less intelligent and so much less willing to sacrifice popularity to principle than Trudeau.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Obviously, he does not live here.

Mr. Murta: You read that with a straight face? You should say that on the radio, where they cannot see your face.

Mr. Martin: This excites the official opposition. They do not like to see the Canadian nation receive strong leadership, as it has for several years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin: I will say no more on the subject of inflation other than to point out to the hon. member for York-Simcoe and his party that their failure to appreciate the extent of the problem facing the Canadian economy in October, 1975, and their action in voting against the anti-inflation policy was, in my view, an act of gross irresponsibility on the part of that party which wishes to hold itself out to the Canadian electorate as an acceptable alternative to provide leadership to the nation.

Let us talk for a moment about some of the facts relating to the present state of the Canadian economy. We have talked of inflation. What is the situation? The current rate is approximately 6½ per cent. This is not bad at all in relation to the almost 12 per cent in vogue a year ago. It is not bad in relation to the current wholesale price inflation rate of 7.2 per cent which is the October figure prevailing in the U.S.A., and it is not bad—indeed, it is extremely good, I would say—in relation to the rate of 14 per cent or so prevalent in the United Kingdom. No one progresses anywhere without having inflation under control. Canada is bringing it under control. This government is bringing it under control and will continue to do so. I suggest that this is extremely important in terms of our over-all economy and in the long-term interest of trade, jobs and the well-being of average Canadians.

Let us talk for a moment about growth. Our economy is growing reasonably well on target for 1976. There is an annual growth rate of approximately 5 per cent in real terms in the first half of the year. This rate matches the rate of a year ago. Yet it is a rate that prevails during a difficult time when we appreciate that one of the penalties paid for endeavouring to keep inflation under control is that growth is more difficult to achieve. I suggest that a 5 per cent rate in the first half of this year must be examined in terms of the other kinds of things we are trying to do in the area of combating inflation. Consumer spending is up about 15 per cent in personal expenditures in the first half of 1976 over last year. There has been a large gain in residential building. Admittedly, business investment has been somewhat sluggish, and I suggest, again, that this is to be expected during a period of controls. We cannot have it both ways. There is a temporary setback in the area of business investment which, I suggest, will be overcome once the inflation bug has been brought within reasonable grounds.

Merchandise trade provided a welcome boost to the economy, with our merchandise exports up substantially in value over last year. At the same time, our import rise was much smaller. There has been a moderate improvement in employment, due largely to the gradual business recovery that we have experienced; and I think we should understand that in these times of wage and price controls, increases in employment will not be massive. In other words, that again is somewhat of a penalty we have to pay during this period of keeping prices in line. Our unemployment figure is still too high. I think we would all agree with that. I believe it is currently at about 7.8 per cent, yet a small notch lower than the current rate in the U.S.A. Compared with the U.S.A. we continue to stand up well.

● (1730)

With regard to prices, there has been a significant lessening in the rate of inflation. As indicated a moment ago, consumer prices have gone up only 6.5 per cent from a year ago against a target, I might say, which the government set of 8 per cent. Also as mentioned earlier, in each of 1974 and 1975 the annual rate of increase in the consumer price index was in the area of 11 per cent. There has been a levelling out of food prices. There is sometimes a tendency to say that this factor has nothing to do with the anti-inflation measures, but we have to remember—and I think the Prime Minister made reference to this in the throne speech debate—that some 60 per cent of the cost of food we buy is incurred after the food leaves the farm gate. So indeed there is a large element of labour involved, and that is a major factor which is controlled by our anti-inflation policies.

In the third quarter collective bargaining agreements reflected average annual increases of 9.7 per cent, and I might say that this is the lowest quarterly rate since 1972. The increases in industry selling prices have also tended to moderate. The industry selling price index shows a rise of about 4.5 per cent in September compared with a year earlier. The Anti-Inflation Board targets of increases of 8 per cent for this year and 6 per cent for 1977 now seem reasonably likely to be realized, and this again indicates the kind of leadership this government is showing.

In the areas of trade and balance of payments in 1976 Canada's export performance has been encouraging to date. Our merchandise exports were up some 15 per cent on a customs valuation basis, and most of the improvement has been in volume items, as prices have not gone up very much this year. As against this, imports were up by only some 8 per cent.

We still have a serious problem in our current account deficit and in our balance of payments situation. Last year we recorded a balance of payments deficit of some $5 billion, and that figure is going to be high again this year. There are many factors involved in this, not the least of which is our inability to continue exporting our natural resources, which at one time were bringing in very substantial amounts of money. We know the double feature which has come into this: our own recognition of fewer resources being available than we had earlier anticipated, and also the extreme increase in prices imposed by OPEC.

There is no question that further efforts must be made in the area of Canadian exports, and I suggest that in his address this afternoon the minister gave some very positive indications of what he is doing in this area. He talked of agreements which are currently being signed, about trips he is taking to the Middle East and elsewhere, and I suggest that this minister and this government are very conscious of the need to promote export industries in this country.

Many of our government programs are geared to assisting those in the export business. More exports mean more jobs, and that is extremely important. We have to continue to show some improvement if our country's dependence on foreign capital inflows to finance a large current account deficit is to be lessened. As long as we have these substantial balance of payments deficits the only way they can be offset is to bring more capital into the country. That is not a very desirable situation, and I suggest that over the next few years it will probably become our key problem on the economic front.

On the matter of consultation I would like to refer to reports which have recently come forward indicating that not only have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his predecessors met with industry leaders, and not only has the minister reviewed 200 applications or submissions and interviewed 70 groups of business leaders, but the Prime Minister himself is sitting down with industry leaders in this country. He himself is becoming involved in this process, and he is listening to the concerns they are expressing. Any suggestion that the government does not consult, or moves without consultation, has to be backed up with better evidence than we have heard this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: You guys have been in power since 1968.

Mr. Martin: I hear comments from across the way about 1968. The party opposite wants to live in 1968; on this side we do not. This is 1976, and we are concerned about the problems of 1976, not those of 1968 or 1698.

Mr. McKenzie: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin: Mumble, mumble, mumble; that is all we can get out of them.

Mr. Goodale: How come they keep losing elections?

Mr. Whiteway: Call one now. We'll see.

Mr. Goodale: We'll just see. Your greatest worry is that you can't last for two years; a flash in the pan.

Mr. Martin: I understand the difficulty of the party opposite. I understand its difficulty in coming up with a meaningful opposition motion which can be backed up with substance. They seem to have failed to have put any substance behind the motion. However, there will be more speakers later on in this debate, and perhaps we will hear some yet.

Some of the problems which are facing the economy of Canada are very serious. They are being dealt with by the various ministers in the government, by the Prime Minister, and by those of us on this side of the House who are equally concerned, and I would simply like to say that in my view we are in a far better position to deal with these problems than those who seem to be completely devoid of any positive policy whatsoever with regard to our economic problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I think the only thing which could be less exciting than speaking in the House of Commons at 20 minutes to six would be to speak here at 20 minutes to ten. The galleries are overflowing, and everyone is all steamed up!

As has been said, this is a very serious debate, and this is a very complex subject. The concern which has been expressed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is that in his view, in the view of many people in parliament and in the country, the negotiations on GATT and our general trade policy have just not been open enough. It is all very well to say that the government has received 200 briefs and had 70 oral consultations with people in industry, but after all the House of Commons is a forum. Matters as important as trade and tariffs should be brought into this House and discussed openly.

The Economic Council of Canada has produced a very detailed document on the subject of free trade, but it has not even been referred to a committee of this House. Other hon. members have mentioned the United States trade act of 1974 which was passed in 1975. They made reference to a section in that act dealing with the authority of the President to negotiate a free trade pact with Canada. Surely, Mr. Speaker, those two points alone would be enough to bring this subject into the open and into this House for discussion. I do not think a discussion on trade and tariff rates should be limited to a couple of hundred briefs and 70 oral conversations in a country as large as Canada.

● (1740)

Very few economists and not too many lawyers or accountants make a success as businessmen. To be successful in manufacturing or trade either at home or abroad perhaps the best qualification is a sense of history, and I think this is what we need today. We need to know how our trade developed and how we arrived at this stage in trade negotiations, and the level of unemployment and inflation that we face at the present time.

There has been mention of this party's position on the matter of free trade, but we are not the government, Mr. Speaker. We expect the government to come forward with a position on free trade and to bring it out into the open. That does not mean the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) calling bankers a bunch of bitchers, professional people gougers, and saying that he is going to clobber labour. The matter should be brought into the House for debate and reference to committee where witnesses would be heard.

In order to understand our position in industry and trade in this country today, we need to know how industry evolved. One can go back a hundred years and look at it then, but to most people the significant period is the postwar period to the present. As everyone knows, a good industrial complex was built during World War II. Then a lot of people returned from the forces and wartime industries closed down so there was a great push to keep industry going and keep people employed.

We must also look at the matter of taxation. People talk about how industry is foreign controlled, about how we allowed industry to come to Canada, but I am glad we did because it created employment when we needed it. We fell down, however, because we did not have parallel taxation laws with the United States and much of the capital inflow came into Canada because of the differential in taxation legislation between United States and Canada.

The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) referred to a shoe industry in his riding that is closing down, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) referred to the textile industry. We should review these, Mr. Speaker, and that is why it is important to have an open forum debate. These matters should be reviewed in the context of the history of the industries.

As I mentioned, we should examine the legislation which pertains to the depreciation and capitalization of industries. The textile industry and the shoe industry have been going down hill for some time. As a matter of fact some of the largest importers of shoes today are the manufacturers. If they find a line of shoes equivalent to what they are producing but which can be imported more cheaply, in many cases they close down that line and import the shoes. Today 55 per cent or 60 per cent of the shoes used in this country are from offshore. The shoe industry built up to a point where buildings and plant machinery were totally depreciated, and management, perhaps because they wanted to withdraw the investment, sold out. Somebody bought it, capitalized it all over again, and began depreciating it all over again, and the government never made a move to upgrade the industry. They did not decide they were going to have a presence in that particular industry for some time.

We have the skills necessary for that industry, Mr. Speaker. We produce the bulk of the raw materials. We have a good chemical industry which produces the oil and gas to look after the components that go into the commodity. The government should have been looking at this industry with a view to upgrading it and retaining the Canadian presence by giving write-off privileges which would bring it up to a competitive level.

A great deal has also been said about production capacity and I should like to relate an incident which happened this summer. A company from Sweden approached me during the recess about a product. We did some pricing and I said we could not import it because it was too costly. It was a heavy casting. I told them that we have a large foundry in Canada and I would be more interested in a licensing agreement on the product. I was told it was no longer made in Sweden but is cast in Portugal because labour in Sweden is so costly. Then I found they had been negotiating with a firm in the United States which could produce the same casting at 20 per cent cheaper than Portugal. I contacted one of our large foundries and found that we could produce it even cheaper than the United States because our technology in that particular type of casting is even more advanced than theirs. We are going ahead in negotiations with this company and hope that by early next year we will have a licensing agreement. We hope the product can be made totally in Canada and some of the production exported to Sweden. The labour cost is not so great where there is advanced technology.

A great deal has been said about productivity, and the government had had a study prepared by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the DM-10 group. I should like to see that study and the whole subject brought into the House of Commons for debate, and then go to the committee for discussion.

Too much nonsense is talked about productivity today, Mr. Speaker, and people who do not understand the productive process make remarks about low productivity. They imply that Canadian workers are not productive when in many cases they are using worn out plant and machinery while trying to be productive in line with other countries. We should define productivity. The scale being produced by the OECD is phony as a $3 bill. We need our own definition related to our economy. I do not give a damn what other countries say about productivity; I am concerned about what is going on here.

While some people in industry have made submissions to the government on their position at the GATT negotiations, in many cases there has been no consultation whatsoever. A matter so important should be brought into the open. Seventy oral conversations across the country are not an adequate base. The government produces studies but we do not see them and this is part of the whole secrecy syndrome.

● (1750)

A study was produced on business and government relations. We want it to be tabled in the House after the government has examined it so that we can consider it. The working paper on consensus should be brought forward and tabled in the House. As well, there is a memorandum on initiatives for small business which should be brought before the House, debated, and referred to a committee to enable us to consider that important question.

The secrecy syndrome is all-pervasive. For instance I learned that the Ministry of State for Science and Technology produced a study on the ramifications and implications of the 200-mile offshore limit. Would it not have been proper to give a copy of the study to hon. members who participated in discussions on the law of the sea? Would it not have been better if they could have read the report and then attended the Law of the Sea Conference? Would they not have understood better what was going on and been better equipped to engage in dialogue? Would they not have been better informed? In my travels outside this country I have discovered that parliamentarians and legislators of other countries are better treated in most cases by their governments than we are, and better informed. Other governments are more willing to provide information than our government is. Let me add that Statistics Canada produces every quarter, I think for the Ministry of State for Science and Technology a special study on manufactured products. At any rate, Statistics Canada regularly produces a secret report which is provided to the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I submit that it should not be secret; we should be entitled to examine it.

Business evolves, Mr. Speaker. Most businesses in this country did not grow up in the last two or three years, or even the last seven or eight. They have evolved over long periods. Mistakes can be costly. Let me illustrate my point by telling hon. members a story I often tell people of my town. It concerns the Steel Company of Canada, now located in Hamilton. One division of that industry is the Stanley Works. The Stanley Works used to be located in Dundas, where I presently live. Some years ago an argument arose between the company and the township as to who would pay for a drain to take away water flowing off a certain roof. The industry said it would not pay and the town said it would not pay but would build the drain and bill the company. The company said, "If you do this, we shall move out of Dundas." It did. It moved to Hamilton, expanded, and became one of this country's major industries.

I am surprised that the NDP should treat my party as if it were the only opposition in this House. Instead of criticizing the government, that party spends much time criticizing my party, as if it perceives us as the government of the future. NDP members spend much time asking for our position on this and that. Hon. members opposite have talked about free trade and the U.S. Trade Act of 1974 has been mentioned in this House; yet not one NDP member asked what is the government's position on that United States act. My party wants to know what is the government's position?

The minister mentioned the difficulties of consortiums and industries operating in foreign countries. Consortiums, because of their very nature, much each be different, because each individual negotiation is different from all others. After all, the purpose of the consortium is to enable various companies and entities to bring their resources and talent together in order to complete an industrial undertaking.

When all is said and done, perhaps it is easier to criticize by hindsight than to make constructive proposals. I say that for this reason, and will close on this note: we must take advantage of our own initiatives. The snowmobile was developed and built in Quebec and led to the creation of a large snowmobile industry. But the spin-off benefits of that development are being realized in Indonesia, of all places, where no snow falls. Practically all snowmobile suits on the market in this country come in from off-shore. We must avoid this sort of thing in future. The suits are made wholly out of synthetic fibres, mainly nylon. If we had retained the manufacture of snowmobile suits in Canada, our textile industry probably would not be in its present difficulties. Therefore in future we will need to plan ahead in case similar circumstances arise. We do not want the fruits of our own development, the spin-off, as it were, to be harvested by other countries. Such spin-off benefits should be retained in this country. The same could be said for snowmobile shoes, boots, mittens and hats. They are made outside this country but ought to be made in Canada. I hope we shall plan ahead and not allow this to happen again.

I have nearly finished, Mr. Speaker. I close with a word regarding the GATT negotiations. Generally I think we are all in favour of freer trade. Increased free trade is the trend in the world. This country has erected relatively few non-tariff barriers and pays few hidden subsidies. For that reason some of us are greatly concerned, and I include people in industry, because many countries with whom we trade pay hidden subsidies and have erected such barriers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member whose allotted time has expired. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp).

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I do not wonder that you are not too familiar with the name of my riding. I am not very familiar with it myself. I have very seldom heard myself referred to in this way, although I must say it is a great tribute to my riding. I have not had an opportunity, as have many other members, of making a speech on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne extolling the virtues of that great riding in the centre of Toronto. Perhaps I will do that sometime in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: This evening I want to participate in the debate on the motion put down by the opposition on trade policy, particularly negotiations respecting GATT. I begin by offering a comment, not so much on the substance of this motion as on the rules of the House and the way they are being used.

[Mr. Kempling.]

It is quite true that an opposition motion does not require more than a very short notice to the government or to the House. However, if a matter like this is to be taken seriously, more notice should be given so that ministers can prepare their replies.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) complained when he came into the House about the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) and of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). However, the hon. member for York-Simcoe is not here now. However, I see he is just about to arrive.

Ministers have many important engagements. If the official opposition wants them to be in the House, they can give more than 24 hours' notice. I hope that in the future, when motions of this kind are proposed, 48 hours' or more notice will be given. I have been a House leader. I always tried to urge the House leaders for the opposition to give us a lot of notice on these motions, not because the government cannot reply, but if we are going to have a useful debate let us have reasonable notice so that ministers can prepare themselves properly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: The second point I would like to make is this. I was looking at this motion which complains about the propensity of the government to act in secret, and condemns its failure to provide for an open public discussion on future Canadian trade policy. I searched my memory to find if there was any occasion recently when the opposition had placed any questions on the order paper, or orally in the question period, about the Canadian position in the GATT negotiations. It may be that buried in some of the questions on the order paper are some questions dealing with the GATT negotiations. I could not recall them. I have sat in this House during nearly every question period for years and years, certainly since 1973 when the Tokyo round began, and I do not remember a single occasion when the opposition in its search for facts asked any questions on this subject, to which we could respond.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: How many questions have the opposition asked orally during the question period? This is the first time I have heard the subject mentioned in years. I find it difficult to take seriously the charge of secrecy on the part of the government, or of not giving an opportunity for an open public discussion. There have been 75 or 100 opposition days since the Tokyo round began. Not one was devoted to this subject. Now at this late date, after three to four years, the opposition complains about the lack of a public discussion. It is a phony.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I listened very carefully to the speech of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, waiting for him to express the views of the opposition on trade policy. I waited to hear him make some suggestions as to what line we ought to take in Geneva, or wherever it happens to be we will be meeting. I waited to hear what the official opposition would like to see by way of policy. I did not hear a word. All I heard were complaints and grievances against the government, but no suggestions of any policy whatever. Not one.

Mr. Stevens: Let's hear the government's position.

Mr. Sharp: The opposition has no policy. It simply expresses grievances in the hope that when they have to place themselves before the public in an election campaign, the people of Canada will not notice. I can assure the members of the opposition that the completely negative attitude of the opposition is beginning to sink in.

If they have some suggestions to make, let us hear them. Let us hear their social policy. Let us hear their trade policy. We have not heard from any spokesman of the opposition, least of all the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), any indication of the thinking of the official opposition.

● (2010)

Mr. Stevens: Tell us your position.

Mr. Sharp: I challenge the official opposition on one very simple proposition.

Mr. Woolliams: It will be simple.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member for York-Simcoe failed to indicate whether the official opposition is in favour of moving toward freer trade or toward more restrictive trade. I listened to the speech of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He would be in favour of restrictive trade if it would gain him a few votes here, and he would be in favour of free trade if it would gain him a few votes somewhere else. But there was no indication from his party, or from any member on the other side of the House, of what their position is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: I heard the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) speak on the motion before the House, and he made a very constructive speech, I must say a good deal more constructive than that of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

We Liberals are quite clear on this subject, and I speak now as a private member of the Liberal party and no longer as a member of the government. The Liberals have always expressed themselves quite clearly on this issue. Our view was expressed today by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have no doubt that my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), will express similar views. The Liberals believe in moving toward freer trade. If the official opposition are restrictionists, if they want more restrictions, then let them say so, so the public can judge. So far we have had no indication from the official opposition at all of what their position is.

Mr. Stevens: Let us hear the government's position.

Mr. Sharp: I am expressing the position of the Liberal party and I know it is a view shared by all my former colleagues in government. I expect the Minister of Finance will support the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in expressing a preference for moving toward freer trade if we can persuade the rest of the world to go with us. That is our position.

I had the great privilege when minister of trade and commerce of initiating the Kennedy trade round. At that time the government had a certain policy, which was to make concessions in our tariffs of equivalent value to the concessions that we obtained elsewhere. I think it is generally agreed around the world that at that time the Canadian government made an excellent deal. The value we obtained from the concessions made by other countries was at least as great as the concessions that Canada had to make in return, and that is one of the reasons why over the years there has been such an enormous increase in the volume of Canadian trade.

One has only to go back to the period since 1963 to realize what a transformation there has been in trading patterns in the world. This began with the Kennedy trade round. The attitude of the Liberal government has been amply demonstrated in the position we took in the Kennedy trade round. Now we are in the Tokyo round and our position is the same. We are looking for concessions to open the way for the export of Canadian goods. We are prepared to make concessions, and to make them in such a way as to do the minimum of damage to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Woolliams: Tell us about the deficit, Mitch.

Mr. Sharp: The trade record of Liberal governments over the years is one of the great success stories of the world. This came about because Liberal governments have always been in favour of promoting freer trade.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the volume of our trade today is many times what it was in 1963? It is because we were successful traders. We obtained concessions for the sale of Canadian goods.

Mr. Stevens: And the deficit has never been higher.

Mr. Sharp: My colleague, the Minister of Finance, will deal with the question of the trade account; he is much more familiar than I with the most recent figures. However, I make no apologies for the trade record of the government. It is a most extraordinary one, one in which we Liberals can take great pride. It came about as a result of the successful negotiations that we concluded under the Kennedy round, which was the last of the great trading rounds to take place. Now we are entering another round.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe referred to the United States trade agreement which authorizes further negotiations on tariffs. I am sure he is as familiar as I with the nature of the problem that we as a country now face in negotiating this next round, the Tokyo round. The heart of the negotiations lies in the United States, the European Common Market, and Japan. These are the big three that will set the parameters generally of the negotiations. For Canada the task will be within those parameters to gain the best possible deal for this country.

I listened to the hon. member for York-Simcoe talking of secrecy, but what would he do? Would he have the Canadian government set out now the concessions that we are prepared to make in order to gain concessions from another country? I knew the hon. member for York-Simcoe when he was in private industry and that was not the way he operated. I am quite sure that he was not serious when he said that.

Moreover, in dealing with the U.S. legislation he referred to a clause at the conclusion of the legislation which authorizes the United States to enter into a free trade agreement with Canada. I listened to what he said with great interest and I waited for him to give us an indication of what his attitude was toward this proposal, which comes from the United States, not from us. But I heard nothing. All I heard the hon. member for York-Simcoe say was "The government doesn't know it's there".

This is simply untrue, Mr. Speaker. What I was waiting for was to hear whether the official opposition had a view on this question. I can tell the House that the Canadian government has. When I was secretary of state for external affairs, and before that minister of finance, and prior to that minister of trade and commerce, the attitude of the Canadian government toward this proposal was very clear. We were not in favour. At that time the Canadian government made it quite clear that we were not interested in negotiating a free trade agreement with the United States. That was our position while I was minister of trade and commerce, and the position was reiterated when I was minister of finance.

When I became secretary of state for external affairs I put the proposition in the form of a government paper. This appeared in International Perspectives and set out three options in our economic relations with the United States. The first option was to continue as we had been doing. The second option was to move toward free trade with the United States. We clearly rejected both of those and came out in support of the third option, which was to live distinct from, but in harmony with, the United States.

We rejected a free trade agreement with the United States as the goal of Canadian trade policy. That is the view of the Liberal party and of this government. I challenge the official opposition to make clear their position. Do they agree with the third option or with the proposal of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, which was to have a free trade agreement with the United States?

Mr. Stevens: I did not propose that.

Mr. Sharp: Then you are opposed to it?

Mr. Stevens: No, I am not.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, what do you make of a party like this which has no policy?

Mr. Stevens: Just speak for yourself.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: —to indicate the bankruptcy of the policies of the opposition parties. I challenge any speaker on the other side to tell the House on behalf of their party where they stand on the issue of a free trade agreement with the United States, or on the position we have taken on GATT, whether they are in favour of freer trade or more restrictive trade. I say let us have a little more clarity and fewer words.

• (2020)

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this opposition day debate on the motion "that this House urges the government to discontinue its propensity to act in secret and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, condemns its failure to provide for an open public discussion on future Canadian trade policy."

This has developed into quite a wide ranging debate. We have heard some conflicting statements today. I should like to comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) to the effect that GATT has never been brought up in this House by the opposition. In referring to the Commons debate on GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, I find this has been brought up according to the index at pages 652, 1222, 1313, 1365, 1373, 1377, 1379, 1421, 1665, 1666, 2514-5, 2519, 2542, 2546-7, 3184, 6214, 6218, 7021, 7258, 7599, 7749, 11370, 11378, 13830, and 14119. Then in respect of farm products at page 13114, and on the United States tariff cut proposal at page 12184. The list goes on and on, and yet the hon. member is telling us tonight that GATT has never been discussed in the House of Commons. This is a typical Liberal comment.

Also it was interesting to listen to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) tell us that he will be scurrying around the country. He told us that he has been to Geneva, that he has been to Montreal today, and that he is going to a number of countries to expand Canada's trade. I am happy to see that he is taking a page out of the Conservative handbook which was designed by the former minister of industry, trade and commerce under the conservative government, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). In those days he worked on a theory. The initials of the theory were YNGADBSOYB, which means you never get anything done by sitting on your butt.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings will go down in history as the most successful minister of industry, trade and commerce. The present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is just in knee pants compared to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings in respect of accelerating industry and trade for Canada, and we will see whether he will be anywhere near as successful. He was a failure in the Treasury Board. He called himself "Mr. No", the man who was really going to control the heavy government expenditures, but he was an absolute failure in that department, and we certainly hope he is more successful in his new role.

The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) this afternoon referred to the Anti-Inflation Board and was very critical of the official opposition for not having voted for the anti-inflation program that was brought forward last year by the Liberal government. The reason we could not support the government's anti-inflation proposals are set out by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark). I would like to use the words of the Leader of the Official Opposition who put it so well in a recent speech when he said:

One remarkable fact about the throne speech is that the government now proposes 'to begin' consultations with the other partners in the Canadian economy. They are going to begin consultations 12 months too late.

It was interesting to hear the comments of the hon. member for Scarborough West this afternoon in respect of the consultation process, which certainly has not been a priority of the Liberal government in the past. The Leader of the Official Opposition went on to say:

That demonstrates the difference between the Stanfield proposal of controls with consultation, and the Trudeau program of controls by surprise. We proposed a program that would start with a freeze to allow all the partners to participate in designing controls. When Mr. Trudeau stole that program, he rejected the process of consultation which was the mechanism essential to make the program work. He did not talk to labour, or to business, or the provinces. Apparently he didn't even accept the advice of the officials of the Department of Finance whom, we understand, told him that if he was going to steal the Stanfield program he should steal all of it, including consultation.

It is also very interesting to note that the present government is very anxious to consult with everybody now that it has the latest opinion polls. The government certainly was not interested in consultation with anyone prior to the results of the latest Gallup Poll.

The Leader of the Official Opposition also said:

But Mr. Trudeau preferred his own advice to that of everybody else, and he rejected consultation when he imposed controls. Now he is prepared to begin, after 12 wasted months. If there had been consultation at the outset, as we proposed, there would have been no need for a day of protest. There would have been less need for the constant changing of the rules of the Anti-Inflation Board. There would have been less hostility, and much more partnership.

There are many areas which are not covered by the Anti-Inflation Board regulations, such as public utilities. The low income people are still under the Anti-Inflation Board rules and regulations, but we see that water rates have doubled and that hydro bills are going up, none of which are under the guidelines of the Anti-Inflation Board. This is what makes it such a farce.

The hon. member for Scarborough West, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the hon. member for Eglinton gave great praise to this government and the brilliant job it is doing. It is too bad they were not in tune with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It is interesting to note that the Prime Minister when he was in Saint John stated that the Liberals had lied on the controls issue during the 1974 election. He went on to say:

'Why did we lie to you? Unless we can explain the flip flop they have the right to say this' government has lost its credibility.

That is an understatement.

Then just recently in Montreal the Prime Minister, when speaking to the Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations, said:

. . . before we can even begin to solve the problem of your business and our laws, we have to solve a much more basic problem—the understanding between government and the people.

People are not satisfied, and God knows they have cause not to be satisfied in our country—the way we've bungled things.

So, Mr. Speaker, by the Prime Minister's admission this country is being governed by a bunch of bungling liars. Members of this government stand up today praising this brilliant administration, while the Prime Minister goes around the country saying that they are liars and bunglers. What can we expect from them next?

● (2030)

On this great performance of this government we see that in the first six months of this budget year the deficit will be $3 billion, and at the end of September of this year the federal government has spent $3 billion more than it has received. I did not hear any comments on this today and I do not see anything brilliant about this. This is unreal. The estimate of the total deficit for this year will be $6 billion. When the Liberals took over in 1963 the total budget was $6 billion; now we have a $6 billion deficit, and they sit over there glaring and patting themselves on the back. Look at the hon. member for Scarborough West who is smiling. He thinks this is just wonderful. It is an absolute disgrace and it should wipe that smile off his face.

What do we get? We get cabinet ministers going around the country talking about bilingualism. I would like to see them come out to Winnipeg. Let us talk about the $6 billion deficit. What will they do about that? Never mind bilingualism which everybody in this country is opposed to in the way it is implemented, and let us get down to the real issues, the economic issues. They are afraid to discuss these.

Then there is the matter of government secrecy. One of the essentials of a true democracy is that the people and their representatives have the knowledge, and that the political opposition be able to challenge the government on the basis of that knowledge. Do the citizens of the Yukon have the right to know which restaurants were serving them food with unsafe levels of bacteria, and should not the people of Pickering be given a fair start on their airport battle at Pickering by being given access to government reports prepared with the people's tax dollars? The government rejects its duty to account for its actions and is telling its critics that they do not know the facts and it is better for them not to know. In that sense we do not have good government in Canada. Of course this is an admission by the Prime Minister himself. A long step toward making government responsible to people could be a law spelling out and enforcing the public's right to know.

I should like to comment on an article contained in the October edition of The Parliamentarian. It is an excellent article that has been submitted by the Leader of the Official Opposition in which he comments on freedom of information. He states:

A bill should be introduced to promote a more open attitude to freedom of information within government. Information gathered at public expense should be available for press, public, and parliament. We can no longer accept the present practice allowing the government itself to decide what can be released and what cannot. Open to secret abuse as this conduct is, it should be replaced by a legislative code establishing criteria for the release of information, and the criteria should be supported by a neutral appeal tribunal which would apply the guidelines in cases where the government withheld requested material.

If we were in government, we would implement open government.

Secrecy in government also has its humorous side. The hon. member for Eglinton was recently at a meeting in Toronto where he was on a panel with the former minister of finance, John Turner. I should like to quote from a news description of this particular meeting which reads:

It is clearly an issue whose time has come. Why else would former finance minister John Turner have chosen to appear on a panel to discuss the issue—with his one-time cabinet colleague Mitchell Sharp and U.S. consumer activist Ralph Nader—at last month's Bar Association meeting? Turner seemed well aware of the public's concern about government secrecy as he watched Sharp move uncomfortably in his seat during the CBA debate.

That is a big joke. I can remember when this man was finance minister here. You could not get a straightforward answer out of him at any time. Now he is the great proponent of freedom of information and he is going to release all government secrets. I wonder what he is up to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: I understand it upset the hon. member for Eglinton to hear what Turner was saying. The article goes on to read:

Sharp and Turner sat at the opposite ends of the horseshoe, giving a visible indication of where they stand on the issue. Nader, by contrast, sat close to Turner.

It seems that we are only getting all this criticism of government from people once they resign from the cabinet. It is unfortunate that more cabinet ministers are not speaking out. It would certainly be more beneficial than the secrecy which this group is exercising right now.

Now I should like to say a few words about the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is the great defender of the government today. I should like to quote a recent question which I posed to him on November 2. It was with regard to Canadair. It reads:

As Canadair is now owned by the taxpayers of Canada and as the board of directors has a majority of senior civil servants presumably representing the taxpayers' interests, will the minister table the document whereby the government authorizes the loan guarantee so that the taxpayers of this country can see what kind of deal the government is getting them into?

The minister's answer to me was:

Mr. Speaker, last Friday in Montreal I held a press conference on this matter during which I gave all the information. We guarantee a loan of $50 million, the government of Quebec a loan of $20 million and the balance of the program will be financed through two Canadian banks. Until now the Learstar program is extremely interesting. Fifty-three orders have already been obtained by Canadair's sale committee. I think we must all be pleased that Canadair landed such an interesting program.

Nobody could disagree with that. My supplementary question was as follows:

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Will the minister table the documents which show that Canada has firm orders for 53 Learstars and has extracted deposits from customers for this number of aircraft, who are these customers, and at what price has Canada promised to deliver these aircraft?

I believe it is a perfectly legitimate question. If the deal is finalized, why cannot the official opposition or the Canadian people see these documents? This is more government secrecy and it creates suspicion. It creates suspicion in my mind because I do not feel that governments should be in the aircraft industry at all. It is one of the most precarious businesses.

We are well aware of the situation of the aircraft industry in Manitoba. The government got into the aircraft building industry there and it ended up being an absolute, total flop. It cost the Manitoba taxpayers $50 million. When you look at large airplane manufacturers such as Boeing and Lockheed you find that when they run into problems they lay off thousands and thousands of people and they suffer great financial losses. I think we pose perfectly legitimate questions when we ask about this government being in the airplane manufacturing business to the extent it is. This government should table all documents regarding Canadair and Learstar aircraft.

Another question comes to mind in regard to this. This is a company wholly owned by the government. Before proceeding with the design and development of a Learstar 600 jet, I think the minister should explain what the authorization means in terms of taxpayers' money and how many tax dollars the minister has committed to Canadair. That is a perfectly legitimate question which he should answer. The minister announced that market surveys show that Canadair should expect sales of between 250 and 300 aircraft in a five to seven year period. He should tell this House what the government guarantee will cost the taxpayer if Canadair fails to capture the one third to one quarter of the luxury jet business which 250 to 300 planes represents. I understand that private industry in the United States is experiencing great trouble selling these executive jet aircraft, so why is the Canadian government getting into the business? I think we deserve some concrete information. Let us have all the documents tabled. However, I certainly hope it is successful now that we are into it to the extent we are.

● (2040)

Does the government's authorization of Canadair's development of this aircraft mean that every plane surplus to any commercial requirement will have to be bought, no doubt at a grossly inflated price, by the government, and that in addition to the Falcon jets available for ministerial travel we will end up with 50 Learstars for no other reason than that the government has been sold another of Canadair's white elephants?

Mr. Epp: Otto will even have a choice of planes.

Mr. McKenzie: Even the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) might have to expand his fleet.

Mr. Epp: One for every week of the year.

Mr. McKenzie: Also with respect to this aspect—Mr. Speaker, has my time run out?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the time allotted to him has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this debate, at which I have been present from the beginning until now, has covered many subjects and issues, but there are two in particular which have generated a lot of heat, from the opposition, particularly from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). These are the two issues with which I want to deal because they reveal the tremendous extent to which the hon. member has tended to over-state his case. He has done it before, and he has done it again in this debate. He talked at some length and with considerable heat about the current economic performance of the economy.

It is no secret that the government is not content with the current performance of the economy, and we are working to change it and to improve it, but to argue, as the hon. member did, that there are deficits all over the place is just wrong. He argued that we had a deficit in trade. He should know better because figures have been available to him showing that the merchandise account of Canada is now in a surplus position and that the Canadian economy is performing there at a surplus. That doesn't mean that will continue—

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Kaplan: —but when he went on to say that we had adopted shortrun policies with the objective of winning popularity, how far from the truth could he be? We know that the controls policies which have been introduced are not popular. We chose them because we think they are the right policies. We hope that in time, and with additional measures, the Canadian economy will begin to perform to the standard all Canadians would like, but to argue that we play the short term to win popularity is really ridiculous.

In any event if the Tokyo Round, which is only just under way in Geneva, is successful, it will produce an agreement which will not come into effect until the middle 1980's. To relate current economic performance to charges about the negotiations now going on at Geneva is to introduce an element of hysteria into this subject. The business community and all sectors in Canada affected by whatever agreements are reached will have years and years to organize their affairs in an orderly way, with full knowledge of what is coming, to take advantage of whatever agreement we are able to negotiate in the interests of the Canadian economy. There will be lots of time.

The second issue on which the hon. member attempted to generate quite a lot of heat was the issue of secrecy. He began by saying that the government's negotiations were being carried out absolutely in secret, with no one being taken into our confidence and with no one in the economy having any knowledge of what is going to happen, of what is going to be done and what is being proposed. He did not admit, until I asked him a question after he had completed his speech, that he himself was briefed in Brussels by the negotiating committee.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member did not indicate that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has also been fully briefed by the negotiators. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) indicated today that the briefing had been a full briefing and that he had instructed his officials to tell them as much as there was to tell, to tell them the whole story, and when the hon. member indicated in his reply to my question how angry he was about what he had learned, I think what he was angry about was discovering something he perhaps had not realized, and that was that these negotiations are terribly important to the future of Canada.

Perhaps the anger of the hon. member should have been directed somewhat to himself and to members of his own party for their failure to recognize a long time ago that this is an important issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: It is an issue upon which they ought to take a position, and they have not done so. They have continuously been saying to us in their heckling and in their comments that they want to know the position of the government. Well, that indicates that they have not paid any attention to anything which has been done by way of preparation for the Tokyo Round, because back in 1973 when the Tokyo agreement was signed by the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, who is now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), he set out very clearly what our objectives would be, where we stood on free trade, where we stood on non-tariff barriers, and where we stood on the sectorial approach.

I want to argue that we have put more on the table than has the American government, for all the structures the Americans have established. I want to come back and talk about those in a moment, but for all those structures any Canadian—even a member of the opposition—who wanted to take the trouble to read the public record would have a better idea of where we stand on the upcoming round at Geneva than the Americans do about their own government's position.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): They don't know.

Mr. Kaplan: Five major objectives were laid out with respect to the Canadian bargaining position at GATT.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You think GATT is a firearm, Joe.

Mr. Kaplan: The first objective was the reduction or elimination of the trade restricting or distorting effects of non-tariff measures and bringing such measures under more effective international scrutiny and discipline. That was our first goal, stated back in 1973. Hon. members will be interested to know that a panel which has been working in this area has been studying the DISC measure introduced in the United States recently. I think most hon. members are familiar with that. Other European tax concessions have also been studied by the same panel and are now in the process of being reported publicly to the negotiators at Geneva.

Our second goal, the goal which was outlined very clearly by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), is a substantial reduction of tariffs on both industrial and agricultural products. Does the opposition agree? Perhaps we will never know.

Our third goal is a significant improvement in the terms of access for agricultural exports, resulting in a greater role, over time, for comparative advantage and increased stability in international trade.

Our fourth goal is to select sectors for a comprehensive attack on all barriers to trade, especially where these impede the processing and upgrading of resources in the country of origin. One hon. member opposite referred to the sectoral approach. This is what goal No. 4 refers to. We introduced the idea of the sectoral approach at Tokyo, as this country ought to be aware. We have been advocating that position ever since, and our position on it at this point in time is far more clear than is the position of the United States, for all the machinery Congress has set up to guide the administration.

Our fifth goal is improved opportunities for developing countries to increase their export earnings.

Those are our goals, but it should be obvious when looking at them that there is a lot left unsaid. We have not put our final cards on the table. We have not indicated, at the negotiating table or in the country, what is the final, hard, tough and last package we are prepared to accept, but can hon. members opposite seriously argue that we should put our final position on the table? What interest would it serve if other parties such as the United States or the European Common Market came to the negotiating table, as they are, with their cards pretty close to their chests? They are not yet ready to state what their final bargaining position is, but they would certainly like to know ours. What could be more prejudicial to Canadian long-term interests than having all our cards on the table at this point?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I think that is a wrong-headed notion. There ought to be a close to the chest element at this point in time, and it ought to continue for some while yet. However, as I mentioned, hon. members opposite had their opportunity to be briefed by our negotiators.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

• (2050)

I want to describe the whole process involving and consulting the public, for making sure that the sectors interested in various aspects of the negotiations are consulted. In November, 1973, the government announced the establishment of the Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee to receive the views of all Canadian interests with respect to Canadian participation in the trade negotiations. The then minister of industry, trade and commerce said that the negotiations would be of vital importance to all sectors of the Canadian economy and to all regions in Canada. He emphasized that, in view of the complexity and potential scope of the negotiations, the government was anxious to receive the views of all interested groups. So that people in all regions would have a better opportunity to put forward their views it was decided that the Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee should hold sessions in different parts of the country. He also emphasized that the CTTC would remain in existence throughout the negotiations and that there would be continuing opportunities for further consultations as the negotiations evolved.

This is exactly what has been happening. Indeed, since its establishment, the CTTC has received and considered over 200 briefs. In addition to these written briefs it has also held detailed discussions with many organizations which have requested such consultations. These consultations have provided an opportunity not only to assess and discuss the views of the organizations concerned on individual aspects of the negotiations, but also have provided an opportunity for a continuing exchange of information on the progress of the negotiations. The regular contacts which many departments have with unions, companies and trade associations, have continued and indeed have been intensified during this period, so that this has provided another channel of communication.

The government also established a Trade Negotiations Co-Ordinating Committee. This committee, which meets at the deputy minister level, provides a direct link between the government and the delegation in Geneva. Its role is to make sure the ministers are kept informed of the progress of the work and that instructions are provided to the delegation on particular issues. And of course the ministers are here, in Ottawa, totally accessible in a number of ways to the public and to the House.

In order to ensure that the CTTC plays an effective role in the consultation process, the chairman of the CTTC is a member of the co-ordinating committee. I refer to these arrangements because they reflect the concern of the government to ensure that the views expressed to the CTTC are taken into account in the decision-making process and are reflected in the advice and recommendations provided to ministers. I would have thought that hon. members opposite would comment about this structure, but they did not. Perhaps they do not know of its existence. Perhaps they did not take the trouble to look into it.

The actual negotiations are being conducted by a delegation which is headed by Ambassador Grey, former assistant deputy minister of finance. Deputy head of the delegation is Mr.

Clark, a senior official of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Other departments are, of course, directly represented on the delegation. The resources of the delegation are supplemented as required by senior personnel and experts on particular subjects from Ottawa.

I might add that both the head and assistant head of the delegation have been brought back to Canada on a number of occasions to provide direct briefing on the progress of the negotiations. They have made it a practice on those occasions to speak to a number of groups here, in Ottawa, as well as to visit the different provincial capitals and hold discussions with both provincial government officials and local business interests. Their advice has been made available to the sectors most vitally concerned about the tariff negotiations. This is a two-way street, Mr. Speaker. Many businessmen, and indeed some members of the House have had occasion to visit Geneva and receive more detailed briefing directly from the delegation.

Hon. members should know that the government has made special efforts to keep the provinces informed, and indeed to seek their detailed views on the matters under negotiation. It is perhaps significant that while in the Kennedy Round the then minister of finance only received formal briefs from three provinces, in this round of discussions eight provinces so far have submitted detailed views to the government. Arrangements have also been made for formal and informal contacts between federal and provincial officials at all levels. In addition, there have of course been contacts at the ministerial level. I think therefore I can assure the House that every effort is being made to make certain that we fully understand the concerns and aspirations of the provinces and that they too are kept fully informed about the progress of the negotiations.

I should point out that since the negotiations began there have been a number of speeches made by ministers and by officials which dealt with the questions at issue in these negotiations and their implications for Canada. As hon. members are aware, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce recently spoke on these matters to the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers Association in Ottawa last month. I might also mention that Ambassador Grey himself gave a very detailed and public assessment of where we now stand in these negotiations when speaking to the Apparel Manufacturers Institute of Quebec in September. The speech was widely reported.

Hon. members opposite referred to the advisory committee set up in the United States under its legislative jurisdiction with respect to consultation. They referred as well to legislation which limits the authority of the President of the United States to negotiate on behalf of the United States. Having illustrated the procedures which apply in Canada, I think I have show hon. members that at least as much access is available in Canada as in the United States.

The opposition's real grievances are that they have provided no input into the GATT negotiations, that they have not had any voice in determining what the policies of the Canadian government ought to be as put forward in the negotiations at Geneva. Mr. Speaker, the reason for this failure is clear. They have nothing to say on the subject.

An hon. Member: Then why do you keep asking for our views?

Mr. Kaplan: All day not one tariff proposal came forward from hon. members opposite to match the government's five goals. We have heard nothing on international trade, except current statistics. Hon. members opposite proposed nothing on which we could agree. Of course hon. members are entitled to have their say. They are entitled to discuss the tremendously important negotiations presently under way involving a tremendously important proposed international agreement. But they must give the House and country some idea of where they stand. If they do, their ideas will get the attention they deserve.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate this evening in this debate dealing with Canada's foreign trade. When I first entered the Chamber this evening the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), the former government House leader and president of the privy council, was speaking. Since the question at issue involves secrecy and foreign trade I wondered why he was speaking, until I remembered that at one point this afternoon not one cabinet minister was present in the House. The only minister who saw fit to defend the government's record with respect to foreign trade and secrecy was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Goodale: Where are the members of your front bench?

• (2100)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I think I heard some noise from the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale). After his record of a couple of weeks ago when he failed to say "no", which is his sole responsibility, one would think he would hesitate to be noisy tonight.

I was interested to note that no minister except the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could be enticed to defend the government's policies, so the government was forced to disinter the former president of the privy council to defend them. I think it is appropriate that the former government House leader should take part in the debate because it centres on the question of secrecy. No one has had such an extraordinary record in this House as has this former minister who is known for dragging his feet on the question of freedom of information during his tenure as government House leader. That would not bother him, I know. Now they put him into the breach to give a stirring defence of government policy on secrecy. The former government House leader, the hon. member for Eglinton, is the sort of person who would chop down a giant redwood tree and then mount the stump to give a speech on conservation. It is appropriate that he should be the one to give a speech tonight on secrecy.

I think it is appropriate that we debate the question of foreign trade today when Statistics Canada released the figures for the October unemployment rate. Those figures tell us something about the government's failure.

An hon. Member: I wonder who they were sold to first.

Mr. Beatty: My colleague wonders who they were sold to first. If they have been selling Statistics Canada figures to the private sector, that is about all the government has done to stimulate business in Canada.

When we look at the figures I think it is appropriate that we think about the effects of foreign trade on jobs. Foreign trade means the creation of the thousands of new jobs necessary to produce the goods and services and to ensure that our people have the standard of living to which they are entitled. The figures show that seasonally adjusted unemployment is up 31,000. In October the figure was 784,000. Mr. Speaker, that is enough people to fill three cities the size of Kitchener-Waterloo. And that is just the number of unemployed; it does not include the families of the unemployed who suffer equally.

In my home province of Ontario which led the jump in unemployment, we felt the effect of the government's policies when unemployment went up by some 20,000 in Ontario in October. For young people in Ontario at the present time the figure is 10.4 per cent, a whole percentage point above last year. It is tragic when, because of the government's failure to bring in sensible economic policies, one in every ten young people in the labour market in Ontario is without a job.

The government should recognize that without foreign trade, and without aggressively searching out foreign markets, little will be done to create new jobs. And without giving protection to domestic industries and Canadian markets little can be done to protect the jobs of those who have them today.

It is fitting that we should talk about this matter today also, because secrecy is a subject which has often been raised in this House. I am opposed to secrecy in government, and so is my leader. Our party would bring in a freedom of information act and an open administration. The people of Canada would know what the government was doing and how their money was being spent. The history of this government is one of secrecy. The attitude of government ministers is that information belongs to the government and they may or may not choose to let the people have it. When it is inconvenient they will destroy it.

I see the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guay) laughing about that, Mr. Speaker. I am a little unclear about his responsibilities but he is the most highly paid attendance taker in the history of Canada. In the latest cabinet shuffle he was given the portfolio and the salary but no responsibilities. He has the same old job.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are just jealous. You will never get there.

Mr. Beatty: I think a lot of Canadians would be jealous because they cannot have their jobs reclassified to get around the control guidelines.

[Mr. Beatty.]

During last summer I spoke with thousands of people in my constituency, to find out how they viewed the government's economic record and the problems they thought should be addressed by the federal government. One message was brought home to me: people in the business sector of our economy are frightened because they are uncertain about the future. They are tired of the situation where the rules change behind closed doors and where they are not consulted about what is going to take place. They are concerned because they expected the government, if it was anxious to improve trade and anxious to take people into its confidence as it said in the throne speech, to give an indication of how long controls would last and what would happen following their termination. Of course no indication was given. They are concerned because the government has two sets of behaviour, one for itself and one for everyone else. Certainly this is the case with controls and with many other policies the government has followed in the last several years.

Business people in my constituency are suffering from the government's neglect, its neglect of foreign trade and of any protection for our markets from foreign competition. Farmers suffered while beef was brought in from Australia and New Zealand, depressing Canadian prices. This applies to industry after industry when the government dragged its feet at a time when there was need for action. It must be apparent to everyone in the private sector that the government is hostile to business and that means it is hostile to the jobs of several thousand Canadians.

Time and time again business people in my constituency have expressed their concern about having to work in a climate of uncertainty because the government is not taking the people of Canada into its confidence. I do not think my constituency is much different from other rural constituencies. The industries located in the small towns are typical of the industries locate in other small communities in Ontario, dependent on trade and the auto pact, the textile industry or the furniture business. The thing that distresses me is that I see signs now that the jobs of thousands of people are in jeopardy because of the government's inability to take action in the area of trade and to be open, taking the Canadian people into its confidence about its plans for the future.

According to the figures prepared by the Department of Manpower and Immigration last year which were used to allocate money to each constituency for local initiatives programs, my constituency tied for the second lowest unemployment rate in Canada. Within the last year one industry which was considering expansion was forced to build a plant outside the constituency because of the labour shortage. But within a year, Mr. Speaker, the government had changed the picture. It is worth looking at what happened in my constituency because it is similar to what happened to other similar constituencies in Canada in the last couple of months.

In Fergus, GSW was forced to close one plant and 60 jobs were affected. In Palmerston the only industry of any size, Heritage Kitchens, which employed 60 people closed two weeks ago and the people did not have other jobs to go to, and within the last 24 hours Junior Footware announced they would be closing their plant in Markdale and Mount Forest with a loss of 150 jobs in each instance. I referred this problem to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce this afternoon and I appreciate his indication that he is willing to look into the matter. I hope he will do what he can to protect those jobs. In the small community of Arthur where Bell Thread is the major industry, it has been forced to cut back substantially on employment because of uncertainty about the government's textile policy caused by the importation of cheap textiles.

• (2110)

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce today launched into a lengthy and partisan attack on our party and a very strident defence of his government's policy as it concerned the textile industry in Canada.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A defence of the indefensible.

Mr. Beatty: A defence of the indefensible, my colleague from Ottawa-Carleton says.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He does not even know your riding.

Mr. Beatty: It will not be very difficult in Ottawa after the next election because they will all be Conservative.

The minister made mention of the fact that this afternoon he spoke at a luncheon to the Canadian textile industry in Montreal. He said they concluded by giving him a standing ovation. I can understand the audience getting to their feet, but not for a standing ovation. More than likely they were getting ready to leave. Perhaps it may be worth while to put on record a letter from one of the people in the audience, the president of Bell Thread. It reads as follows:

> Further to my recent letter calling your attention to the serious condition that exists in the textile industry, mainly because of imports from the U.S.A. and low wage countries.
>
> I regret to advise the situation has deteriorated as far as Bell Thread is concerned. One department has been closed permanently causing the loss of 25 to 30 jobs and other departments are also being severely cut back causing a further loss of jobs. In addition, we are now on a four day work week. Needless to say this is creating hardship to our employees and their families.
>
> How can one plan with confidence for the future with this type of situation? Here we are on a direct contraction course when it should be one of expansion to create more job opportunities. We are mindful some efforts are being made by the government through certain recommendations, but we have seen no direct benefit.
>
> I might also add at the present time the Clothing and Textile Board is conducting an inquiry into injury caused by imports. We hope you will do everything possible to assist our cause when this is presented in the near future.
>
> May I respectfully once again request your co-operation to ensure the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, is fully aware of our precarious position. If we allow these imports to continue at the present level, then one wonders how much longer our industry will survive.

That is the reason I raised this question in the House of Commons a week ago. The jobs of literally tens of thousands of people throughout rural Ontario are in jeopardy, but the government does nothing more than sit on the sidelines and issue news releases. In fact when I directed my question to the minister more than a week ago he suggested that I read his news releases issued over the past few weeks. I do not doubt that the minister issued news releases. However, I suggest that the issuance of copious news releases does more for the pulp and paper industry in Canada than the textile industry.

I talked to members of the industry in my constituency about the problems from which they are suffering. They made a number of points. It is worth contributing them to the debate because I hope there will be an open public debate in Canada. They stressed the fact that the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar was much higher than the American dollar, making it easier for foreign competitors to compete in our market. Time after time they were faced with the situation when shipping to foreign markets that their goods were subject to duties but there were no tariffs on goods in their lines being shipped into Canada.

A case in point is Uniroyal in Elmira, which manufactures agrichemicals. In many ways a company in the agrichemical business would be better off locating in the United States. They could ship into Canada without being subject to tariffs, whereas if they ship from Canada to the United States they are subject to tariffs. In addition there is the exchange rate on the dollar and the lower productivity in Canada.

The same situation applies in the case of companies which supply the auto industry. Throughout rural Ontario jobs are dependent upon supplying the auto industry. What has the record been under this government? The share of the market controlled by Canadians has been in a steady decline. It is worth looking at the figures. With regard to supplying parts to the automotive industry in Canada, figures made available by the U.S. International Trade Commission show that between 1963 and 1975 the percentage of the contribution made by Canadian industries or Canadian captive industries declined from 42 per cent to 18.2 per cent. This is in the Canadian market. The percentage contribution of the United States industries or American captive companies increased from 57.8 per cent to 83 per cent in 1975. Unless we give protection to Canadian industries in the Canadian market, there is no way they can survive.

My time has pretty well run out. However, I think it would be worth while to summarize the matter. Our party is concerned about the government's record in the whole field of trade, and its propensity to secrecy. Canadians are entitled to an open government. They are entitled to be consulted about the government's plans for the future. We believe industry has the right to have some confidence in future planning and some knowledge of what the government's policies will be.

We intend to do whatever we can in the House of Commons to bring pressure on the government to open up the doors, to allow Canadians in, to let them see the government's policies and to know the plans of the government. We intend to do what we can to provide a competitive position for Canadian industry, both in the Canadian market and abroad.

Canadian Trade Policy

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) give a summary of the Liberal party's contribution to the debate on free trade and protection. He accused the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) of not taking a stand with regard to free trade with the United States. He went on to say that the Liberal party wanted freer trade, promoted freer trade, and had been the party that was instrumental in increasing freer trade. We had a very biased and simplistic incursion into what is referred to as the commercial economic history of this country, involving both trade of goods and services and the monetary point of view, namely, the exchange rate policies followed by this country.

From the way in which the hon. member for Eglinton put his argument, it is plain that the Liberal party has been in favour of motherhood during the time he has been attached to it. As I understood him, the Liberal party has never been in favour of free trade in the sense of free trade with the United States. Obviously in modern times they have not been. Because of what happened in 1911, they never raised the matter again. I would not want to quibble with that.

The hon. member stated that our economy depends upon the export of natural resources. He stated that this accounts for roughly 25 per cent of our Gross National Product. Using the multiplier effect, there are millions of Canadians whose jobs are involved.

We had a special alliance with Britain when they were at the height of their colonial power in the nineteenth century. Orthodox arguments on free trade put forward by nineteenth century economists such as Ricardo were adopted as policy because it suited their colonial structure. It allowed them to get something that is still sought after today, cheap raw materials and cheap food from other countries. We understand that perfectly. In another sense we have been tied into a colonial structure because of the policies that have been followed vis-à-vis the United States. So it seems to me you gain nothing by asking members of the opposition whether they are in favour of free trade with the United States.

● (2120)

The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) made a great ado of the fourth goal that was set out in 1973 when the Tokyo round was first discussed, namely moving toward freer trade through sectors. Again this is a motherhood argument. If you do not have free trade with the United States in the textbook sense so that you have continentalism, for example, or some kind of trade such as that existing within confederation between provinces, you either take a protectionist stance or something in between. The hon. member for Eglinton seemed to be pointing out that this was the great virtue of the Liberal party. As I see the situation, international constraints have forced the government willy nilly into that position. Despite protests to the contrary, the government has not gone a long way to give us free trade.

The facts of the matter as I see them, Mr. Speaker, present a slightly different picture. First of all, in the Canadian context it must be admitted that the west, and the Atlantic region in particular, have paid one hell of a high price for the tariff protection measures implemented, first by a Tory premier of this country in 1879, which finally did not grip the country until 1890 and which have been pressed with abandon by Liberal governments.

If the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) is talking about rural and small town industry today collapsing in Ontario, let me tell him that he is not talking about the merchandise sector. As the hon. member for York Centre pointed out, there is a surplus of merchandise. However, it indicates that the tariff structure that has been part and parcel of this country is finally catching up with many industries which have been over-protected in Ontario. The textile industry is at a comparitive disadvantage, not advantage, in Quebec because it too has been over-protected.

Who has paid the high price of all this, Mr. Speaker? Of course the people of Canada have, especially those in the outer regions. They have had to buy these high-priced, protected goods, despite the claim of the government that it is all for free trade. It negotiated the auto pact and in the name of protecting the jobs of workers, or presumably so, the government refused to allow cars made in the United States to cross the border to be purchased by Canadians at the same price Americans pay plus distribution costs. No, the government has insisted on protecting that which does not need to be protected, unless it is that the government is protecting, as is so often the case, the shareholders of that industry. Certainly the government is not protecting jobs or helping the Canadian consumer.

Another argument of the hon. member for Eglinton seemed on the surface to be superficially acceptable. However, at no time did he put a dollar figure on what exactly this type of protection that he said was freer trade would cost the Canadian taxpayer. Nor did he make reference to any studies made while he was minister of trade and commerce.

Professor John Young, before becoming head of the prices and incomes board which has now gained some kind of ill-repute, did a study in British Columbia—I do not know whether one has been done since—and estimated that the protective tariff in its effective application, as opposed to what the hon. member for Eglinton argued, was costing Canadian consumers over $1 billion a year, and that was in 1960. I called an economist friend of mine and asked him today whether there had been any studies done recently. He said no, but there had been debates and suggestions to the effect that protection costs something close to $2 billion. I want to suggest to the hon. member for Eglinton that this is hardly something to boast about in support of freer trade.

The reason, or one of the reasons our manufacturing sector is in so much trouble now, and the reason we have such great difficulty freeing ourselves completely from our dependence on staples and natural resources, is that the government has followed a policy of overprotecting industries. I do not think that anyone at this stage would be senseless enough to argue that we should throw our whole trading patterns open to a free trade arrangement with the United States. But as the hon.

member for York Centre said, it is obvious that we should approach the question on a sectoral basis.

If I have one criticism to make of the hon. member for Eglinton and his party, it is not so much that of secrecy, though the general level of secrecy in government in the western world is now subject to criticism. Admittedly I came to this parliament two years ago idealistically, but I have been quite shocked at the amount of secrecy not only in government but throughout the whole bureaucracy.

Let me digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and tell the members of the House of an experience I had before ever entering politics. The Hawker-Siddeley Corporation of England owned a steel plant in Sydney which they left high and dry after milking it for as much as they could. It should have been nationalized long ago, but the federal government ran away from that and forced the provincial government of Nova Scotia to take it over. As a result we are still bothered by immense problems down there. Then the government set up the Cape Breton Development Corporation in 1967 in order to help correct Cape Breton's historic economic ills. But the government did not include the most important industry there, the steel industry. This was left to the small provincial government that did not have the expertise required to own it. The government said; "Look, we will throw DREE grants your way every now and then, but we will not actually put it under a Crown corporation".

I wanted to find out what type of subsidies were given the Hawker-Siddeley Corporation in their last five years of existence in the Cape Breton area as opposed to the help given under public ownership, and I wrote to the dominion bureau of Statistics, now Statistics Canada, which more and more is suffering ill-fame, and, so far as I can see, with good reason.

Mr. Gilbert: And notoriety.

Mr. Hogan: Yes, notoriety. I was told to whom to write. I wrote and told them I wanted information about this company, which at that time had departed two years ago. Do you know what they told me, Mr. Speaker? They said that according to the Official Secrets Act they could not disclose anything, even though this company was no longer there, unless I got permission from the head of that corporation. That is just nonsense, but it gives hon. members an idea of just how deep this whole secrecy business goes.

My major point of criticism of the government is that it does not seem to be giving, at least openly, any positive leadership so far as freer trade is concerned. Granted that we are all against free trade in the textbook sense because of the historical pattern of protection, but as I said before, and as hon. members opposite know, history finally catches up to you. They know that if one has an infant one is protecting, and allows that infant to grow up without letting it become really efficient, then one has to keep feeding and protecting that infant or person not at the nominal rate but at the effective rate. The hon. member for Eglinton seemed to skirt that issue.

• (2130)

In the manufacturing area in the western world we have one of the most highly protected economies. I would defy members on the other side to produce statistics to show that this is not true. The manufacturing sector of the Canadian economy is one of the most highly protected in all of the western world, so we do not have this type of freer trade or a tendency toward freer trade about which the minister talked. I admit that when we have a dependence of 20 per cent or 25 per cent of our Gross National Product in this area then we have to go along with the other countries. But as I see the scenario now I think there is time for Canada to try to give some leadership at GATT, whether they publicize it or not, because what we are seeing now is a very strong resemblance in many ways to the thirties, on the international scene.

The economists of the major countries are advocating that the major economies, the United States, Japan, and Germany start stimulating their economies so that the rest of the world's economies will pick up. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who has followed John Turner, who in turn followed the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States, will take cognizance of the fact that our economy and the economies of the free world in general need some stimulation, and that we must take some kind of a chance on the inflation end.

We might look at what is happening in Italy and France. Each of these countries is following inflationary policies, with little or no growth, to try to get their exchange rates in balance. We can see the scenario now. Britain, Germany, and Japan will try to get into these markets and will not be able to get into them with freer trade. They will be forced to go to the United States. There is to be a new President there who wants to go into freer trade and who wants to stimulate the economy and so on. But the industries in the United States and the lobbyists and the pressure groups, despite the President's good intentions and philosophies, will push him into a more protectionist position. Therefore it is time that Canada and the countries of the free world really assert themselves because we are at a very important turning point in the international economy.

While one cannot draw too close an analogy between the depression of the thirties and the present, certainly despite the changing evolution and the application of fiscal and monetary policies, the free world now stands in a very precarious position if we are to turn more and more protectionist. It is not enough to say that we are over there at GATT and are trying to get the best deal. We should be establishing a position in which we firmly come out for more liberalized trade and a stimulation of the economy so that we can avoid the protectionism which destroyed the economies in the 1930's, and which some of the countries of the world, in an effort to protect themselves and stabilize their economies, are rushing into willy-nilly now. This might seem to be a pessimistic scenario but it is a very probable scenario. Given the present policies that are being followed by Britain, Italy, and France, and with the assumption that two of the most important countries, including the second most important country in the western world from the point of view of economics, Germany, and Japan, will be effectively locked out from many of these markets, I repeat that they will attempt to get a larger share of the American market. But they will find all kinds of protectionist sentiment there.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this debate is worth while if it highlights this type of thing, that the international economy is at a turning point and there is no way that Canada should go except toward freer trade, not free trade, and that we should plainly enunciate that as our position as a nation, not only for our own survival but for the survival of the free world.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of members of the House that from July 3, 1975, to April 6, 1976, a sub-committee for international development held 30 meetings and heard a number of witnesses, including Mr. Joe Morris, President of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Maurice Strong, Ambassador Mills from Jamaica, John Turner, Professor Brecher from McGill University, and Professor Sabourin from the University of Ottawa regarding international trade and Canada's position in respect of the developing nations. We have discussed many aspects of trade and I should like to bring to the attention of the House some of the conclusions reached by this committee which was composed of members of all parties and which reached a unanimous position regarding its report.

Regarding the lowering of barriers to trade the committee stated:

> Determined international action will be needed if the developing countries are to obtain a fair share of the world's industrial activity and reverse the unacceptable trend in which they have a declining share of global trade in manufactured goods. Barriers to their products in the rich markets of the industrial world are among the principal causes for this situation and the reduction and removal of these barriers must be high priorities.

The committee also stated:

> The expansion or trade opportunities for developing countries in manufactured and semi-manufactured products will bring substantial benefits to Canadian consumers, in terms of lower prices on a wide range of goods. However, it will also involve major adjustments in Canada and elsewhere. If properly managed, this process will support and complement the kind of economic re-orientation which Canada must undergo in any event (as the recent work of the Economic Council of Canada has argued). This kind of adjustment will, over time, benefit Canadian workers as well as the many millions of unemployed and underemployed people in the developing world.

Then we have the following paragraph in the committee's report:

> One of the principal points emerging from the sub-committee's work was the need for predictability and reliability in the access which developing country producers enjoy in world markets. If there is to be a constant danger that exporters achieving any success in penetrating new markets will suddenly be confronted with new obstacles in the form of tariffs, non-tariff barriers, or quotas, this undermines the incentive for developing countries to make the tremendous effort and investment required to launch new export industries.

Regarding multilateral trade negotiations the committee recommended:

> Concerted multilateral action to reduce existing tariff and non-tariff barriers is an essential means of expanding the trade opportunities of the developing countries. Yet the process of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations is a slow and complex one, and the special trade concerns of developing countries do not appear to receive adequate priority.

[Mr. Hogan.]

● (2140)

This is especially true since the existing tariff system is specifically loaded against the developing countries in two important respects. First, the types of goods on which tariffs typically remain highest are those of principal interest to developing countries; and second, tariffs escalate markedly on processed or manufactured goods in contrast with the relatively low rates which apply to the raw materials from which they are produced. Canada clearly shares an interest with the developing countries in eliminating this tariff escalation, and Canada's own sectoral approach in the trade negotiations is designed to attack the escalation problem.

I know my time is very limited, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to discuss also the committee's report on adjustment assistance. The benefits of trade liberalization to the developing countries and, in the long run, to the Canadian economy, should not be allowed to obscure the fact that it will involve tough new competition for certain Canadian industries. Canadian industry is, of course, already highly competitive in many areas, and can be made more so in others. In some sectors where Canada cannot become economically competitive, there still may be sound reasons for maintaining a residual industrial capacity. But it must be recognized that some Canadian industries will have to be radically reorganized and some will probably have to be abandoned.

One of the principal themes of the subcommittee's evidence has therefore been the need for greatly expanded and improved schemes of adjustment assistance to help workers, industries, and localities most affected by low cost competition from developing countries to shift to new, more productive activities.

I should also like to read the subcommittee's recommendation that an early start be made on serious and extensive schemes in certain sectors, and that intensive planning should begin now to prepare for the more comprehensive adjustment challenges which will certainly arise from the multilateral trade negotiations. One of the first steps must be a serious and realistic study of which industries are threatened, of which can and should specialize in more competitive activities, and of which show no realistic prospect of survival without massive protection.

I have one or two minutes left and if I may I should like to conclude by commenting on the general economic climate in Canada and abroad. It is generally recognized that Canada's economy is highly dependent upon the growth rate of the major industrialized countries in the OECD, and particularly that of the United States. In this connection it should be recognized that while the economies of the major OECD countries have recovered from the worst recession of the post-war world, the recovery has as yet been moderate and is now showing some hesitancy. The OECD secretariat's mid-year outlook forecast that real GNP growth in the 24 member nations would slow to an annual rate of about 4½ per cent in the second half of 1976, after rising at 6½ per cent in the first half.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings now before the House, in accordance with Standing Order 58(9)(a).

The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Saltsman) which was negatived on the following division:

● (2150)

(Division No. 8)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Allard
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Beatty
Beaudoin
Broadbent
Cadieu
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Crosbie
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dinsdale
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Fortin
Fraser
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Jarvis
Jones
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
Marshall
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Nystrom
Orlikow
Paproski
Patterson
Pigott (Mrs.)
Ritchie
Rondeau
Saltsman
Schumacher
Stanfield
Stevens
Symes
Towers
Wagner
Whiteway
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—79.

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Fox
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacFarlane
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Young—118.

● (2200)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the amendment lost.

● (2210)

The question is on the motion of Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Stevens) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 9)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Allard
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Beatty
Beaudoin
Broadbent
Cadieu
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Crosbie
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dinsdale
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Ellis
Elzinga
Epp
Fairweather
Firth
Fortin
Fraser
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Holmes
Jarvis
Kempling

Messrs.

Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
La Salle
Lavoie
Lawrence
Marshall
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCain
McCleave
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Murta
Neil
Nowlan
Nystrom
Orlikow
Paproski
Patterson
Pigott (Mrs.)
Ritchie
Rondeau
Saltsman
Schumacher
Stanfield
Stevens
Symes
Towers
Wagner
Whiteway
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—78.

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
De Bané
Demers
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Drury
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Ethier
Faulkner
Fleming
Flynn
Foster
Fox
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Goyer
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Isabelle
Jamieson
Jones
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacFarlane
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Munro (Hamilton East)
Nicholson (Miss)
Olivier
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Poulin
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Roy (Laval)
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Young—119.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore I declare the motion lost. It being after ten o'clock this House stands adjourned until two p.m. tomorrow.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 10, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE TO DEAL WITH MOTIONS RELATED TO REMEMBRANCE DAY

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has resolved that tomorrow it will not sit in order that members can be at the Cenotaph, and that members will not sit here on Friday to facilitate that very important activity by federal members. There are several notices of motions related to Remembrance Day pursuant to Standing Order 43.

Order, please. May I ask those in the galleries to please keep silent.

A number of indications have been given to the Chair of the intention on the part of private members, which is quite understandable, to put motions related to the recognition of Remembrance Day. It is certainly not the intention of the Chair to interfere with that; however, it does seem to the Chair that such an expression should come from the House as a whole as opposed to it being at the initiative of any one member. This places the Chair in the somewhat invidious position of singling out the first among several members who might want to take the responsibility to move a motion in the House related to such an expression. I sought advice and am now informed that at three o'clock this afternoon a minister of the Crown proposes to rise to make a statement, which will be followed by appropriate statements from each of the parties. So, I wonder if I might invite the co-operation of hon. members to await that event rather than putting individual motions forward pursuant to Standing Order 43 on this very important subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the consumer price index figures for three months reflect an annual rate of 8.3 per cent and an astounding annual rate of 10.8 per cent in the past month while real growth increase stagnates, and in view of the fact that 748,000 Canadians, 7.6 per cent of our work force, are now out of work—an increase of more than 53,000 since the May budget, a figure we predicted in our response to that budget—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to consider the advisability of introducing a budget which will more effectively encourage job creation, export development and stable prices, and to consider whether such a budget could be presented before our Christmas recess.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PERMIT ANNUAL ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND MOUNTED POLICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask leave to present a motion of serious urgency to many Canadians. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

● (1410)

That this House urges the President of the Treasury Board to introduce at an early date the necessary amendments to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, so that retired Canadian Armed Forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel will have their pensions escalated annually, in accordance with the rise in the cost of living, commencing in the year following the year of retirement, regardless of age, thus ending the unfair discrimination that applies to many of such personnel.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hydro Rates

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS FOR THE UNEMPLOYED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that yesterday's Statistics Canada figures disclosed that the unemployment rate in Canada in October was the highest in 15 years and that the unemployment rate in October for young people between the ages of 15 and 24 has reached the rate of one out of every nine people in that age group, I ask for leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House regrets the government's failure to provide the stimulus needed to create jobs for Canada's unemployed, and particularly for young people who are unemployed, and instructs the Minister of Finance to make a statement on motions at the earliest opportunity disclosing what special measures the government intends to take to deal with this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTION BOARD REVIEW PROPOSED RATE INCREASE BY ONTARIO HYDRO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Ontario Conservative government is planning to implement a 30.3 per cent increase in hydro rates in Ontario, and in view of the fact that such an increase makes a mockery of the federal government's so-called anti-inflation program, and in view of the fact that such a large increase would literally wreck the budgets of low income Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House instruct the federal Anti-Inflation Board to review this increase with a view to rolling it back, in line with the guidelines which have been established for wage increases.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ANNOUNCE OPENING OF FRENCH STATION IN REGINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an urgent matter of national interest concerning specifically the duty of the CBC to promote national unity and reflect the Canadian reality.

Considering that on Monday November 8 the CBC refused to broadcast on the national network the inauguration of another link in the chain of local French-speaking stations in Regina because, according to the directors, this was not a matter of national interest, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That the house refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts so as to reconsider the priorities set by the directors of the CBC French-speaking network in the light of the specific duty imposed on it by the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROPOSED RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT OF TASK FORCE AND AMENDMENT OF SECTION TEN OF ACT

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. My question arises out of the massive power rate increases proposed by the Northern Canada Power Commission, which will total 89 per cent for Yellowknife consumers and 100 per cent for those living at Fort Simpson. As the minister knows, many of the people involved there are either pensioners or native people living on fixed incomes. As he also knows, these proposed increases will take effect only with the approval of the Cabinet. I should like the minister to tell us whether the cabinet intends to approve this unfair increase on the people of the northern territories.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, these rates which were announced yesterday by the NCPC were given notice of one year ago. What is being done at the present time is that the rates have been referred to the AIB for examination and also within our department the former minister set up a task force to examine them to see what sort of relief might be given. I expect to get their report next week.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question. I should like, first of all, to have a guarantee from the minister that once the task force reports, its recommendations will be made available to the House of Commons forthwith and not hidden, as has happened with so many reports made available to this government. I should like also to ask the minister whether, in light of the recurrent problems involved in NCPC and the recurrent unfairness to the people of the north, the government will consider making changes in the legislation regarding the NCPC, in particular whether they will amend section 10 of the act which requires a self-sustaining capacity for NCPC?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in examining the task force report, which I hope to get next week, that suggestion will be examined as well.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO STOP PRICE INCREASES IMPOSED ON RESIDENTS OF NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): A final supplementary for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. We understand from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that there has been a reference of this matter to the Anti-Inflation Board. That simply draws attention to the inconsistency of the government's approach whereby on the one hand they have been using the Anti-Inflation Board to restrict increases in wages of people in northern Canada while through another agency they are pushing through the system and imposing upon consumers in that region extravagant power rate increases. Will the Prime Minister give the House a guarantee now that action will be taken by his government to change that situation, where unfair increases are imposed upon consumers in northern Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to the AIB action as regards wages but seems to neglect the fact that they also act on prices and that the Consumer Price Index is considerably lower—almost half the rate it was last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS OF COMMISSION—REPORT OF TASK FORCE ON COST OVER-RUNS ON AISHAK AND STRUTT LAKE PROJECTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that northerners will pay from 12 cents to 15 cents per kilowatt or nearly four times the price paid by people in the south for electricity, will the minister grant the demands of many northern Canadians and initiate a fully fledged, exhaustive public inquiry into the operations of NCPC?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think I would want to consider all these suggestions when I consider the report of the task force next week.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. The minister refers to the task force and I understand there is also a task force set up to investigate the over-runs of costs in the Aishak and Strutt Lake projects. I wonder if he has received that report and if so would he table it? If he has not received it would he undertake to table it as soon as it is received?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall receiving it but I will look into the suggestion.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT OF JOB CREATION PROGRAM DURING FIRST HALF OF 1977

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Tables were delivered to me this morning which were produced by the minister's department. They show that during the first half of 1977 his officials anticipate unemployment will average 7.5 per cent and that during the same period they anticipate a significant drop in the number of jobs created. I just passed a copy of the table over to the minister. Given this information would the minister not agree that the paltry program of his colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, which will not even come into operation until April 1, 1977, will not alleviate—could we have order please? I know you have just discovered unemployment. Would you listen?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1420)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that the program brought in, as announced by his colleague, will not affect the unemployment situation during the first six months of 1977?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. gentleman refers to as a paltry sum amounts to $358 million, so that it is a question of the order of values. To me at least, that is an impressive sum of money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With regard to the rate of unemployment during the coming winter, as I indicated in response to questions yesterday we are giving this matter close analysis at this time and considering what program changes we might bring about, bearing in mind, however, that in our undertaking to restrain the increase of growth of government expenditures we have a relatively narrow margin within which to act.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in order to get the full implication of the minister's policy before the House, may I ask this: Is the minister saying that the sum of money to which he referred, most of it being simply a re-introduction into the system of cutbacks which were announced in connection with other government legislation and earlier policy decisions, will be adequate to provide jobs for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are out of work now and for those Canadians who, as his own officials indicated, will be increasingly unemployed in 1977?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there is $100 million coming in this winter, and as I indicated $358 million coming in during the course of the spring. These are significant sums of money in relation to public expenditures at any time. Therefore, I suggest to the hon. gentleman that it is distorting the order of values to refer to more than $400 million as paltry.

UNEMPLOYMENT—PROPOSED NEW BUDGET INCLUDING TAX CUTS TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that we have lost $6 billion in production because of unemployment, I say to the minister that the sum is peanuts. May I direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Since the Prime Minister, in reply to a question I had directed to him as reported at page 141 of Hansard, said that forecasting unemployment rates in Canada is "beyond our power to state"—the Prime Minister was referring to the cabinet—and since both the Department of Finance and the Department of Manpower and Immigration according to information I have obtained have miraculously acquired the ability to forecast rates for next year and say we are going to have unemployment rates between 7.5 per cent and 8 per cent for the year, will the Prime Minister positively assure the House that before Christmas the government will introduce a new budget which will include measures to deal with this serious situation, specifically a tax cut for medium and low income Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the very evidence the hon. member is bringing forward indicates that the Department of Finance and the Department of Manpower and Immigration are concerned about that particular economic situation. If they are concerned about it, the reason obviously is that they are discussing policy responses. The hon. member will hear of the policy responses in the House just as he hears other news about the government.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

MEASURES TO STIMULATE INVESTMENT IN EASTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Considering the increasing pressure in the Canadian economy, particularly because of the rising cost of energy which results in great hesitation in the area of investments, in particular among private companies, which does not help at all in the fight against inflation, can the Minister of Finance tell the House whether his department intends to come up with new ideas to improve the situation so that these companies can be more confident in the future, particularly those which operate in eastern Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not follow the hon. member's argument completely, but I can assert that the government is now giving a subsidy of nearly $1.4 billion to reduce the cost of energy in Canada. We have other programs under the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, particularly in eastern Canada.

DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING INVESTMENT IN DISADVANTAGED REGIONS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the minister in charge of investments.

Can the minister advise us whether his colleague and his department are prepared to consider regional disparities more thoroughly? We may face now a very difficult situation. Western Canada does not look very much like eastern Canada, economically speaking.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I could answer the hon. member that our department is indeed continually considering regional economic disparities, including those in the regions he is mentioning. That is why our programs in conjunction with provincial governments are established with a view to developing the economic potential of those regions over a lesser or longer term. That is why we are making arrangements with provincial governments including the province of Quebec. Particularly, with the development of his own region's industrial sector in mind, we have established industrial areas and industrial structures and infrastructures which have already had results. New industries will provide jobs in a far more dynamic endeavour than the traditional industries which exist in those communities.

* * *

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. It has to do with the financial management and control mechanisms of the government of Canada. In view of the fact the Auditor General's last report highlighted, and indeed stressed, the very serious deficiencies in the financial management and control mechanisms of the government of Canada and recommended the appointment of a chief financial officer or controller general as well as in light of the refusal by the previous President of the Treasury Board to implement this recommendation, will the minister assure the House that he is not afflicted with the same intransigencies as his predecessor and advise what steps are being taken to implement this very important recommendation.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I addressed myself to this very same question put by the hon. member two or three weeks ago. I will repeat for his benefit that the recommendation of the Auditor General is indeed being considered very seriously. We have taken very specific steps in the meantime. My predecessor took very important steps to appoint a deputy secretary with this responsibility within the Treasury Board and to augment the facilities of that deputy secretary to better enhance his ability to provide financial and audit management. Indeed, the whole series of measures which are now known by the House and contained in the Auditor General's bill, given first reading the other day, is further indication of concrete action that we are taking and, in fact, there will be more.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): The Auditor General stated "I consider this the single most important financial executive job in the whole of Canada." While the minister has at least recognized the problem and has established the financial branch, the fact remains that this is not an adequate answer to meeting the deficiencies set out by the Auditor General. When can we expect the minister to table a progress report in this House on the implementation of the recommendation so that parliament and the people of Canada can see just what steps the President of the Treasury Board is taking to overcome this very serious mess?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think we are going around in circles to a degree. I already indicated and the House is aware of very specific and significant steps that have already been taken. Indeed, more will be forthcoming. I will seize a pertinent opportunity to acquaint the hon. member and his colleague about those details, probably on the occasion of second reading of the Auditor General's Act that is now before the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Auditor General has already warned Canadians that unless some basic and fundamental changes are brought to the financial control mechanisms in Canada, the day may come when he cannot give a clear certificate on the accounts of Canada. Is the minister now assuring this House that day will not become a reality or can we expect another stinging indictment from the Auditor General when he brings forth his report due to be tabled before the end of this year?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there is an element of a hypothetical question in the hon. member's comments.

• (1430)

REASON FOR FAILURE OF ACCOUNTS TO SHOW LOSS FROM SALE OF ATOMIC REACTOR TO ARGENTINA

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the consequences of the sale of a nuclear reactor to Argentina, disastrous in terms both of morality and of the financial implications, would the minister tell us why, in the accounts of the Atomic Energy of Canada, no provision is made for the losses sustained in that sale?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): I would have to refresh my memory as to what has been tabled but I believe I am safe in saying the figures will show up before too long.

Mr. Gillies: Inasmuch as the Auditor General has already drawn attention to this omission, may we have an assurance that in the next tabling of the public accounts losses by Crown corporations will be shown?

Mr. Andras: I will certainly take that under advisement.

* * *

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO ALLOW VOLUNTARY RETIREMENT AT AGE SIXTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Bearing in mind the alarming increase in the numbers of unemployed youths, and because many of the older members of the labour force are physically worn out yet unable to afford early retirement, can the minister tell the House whether a study has been made of the question of allowing voluntary retirement at age 60 with relative payments under the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This is a question which was studied rather extensively during the course of the social security review. I have asked my officials to update that particular study; indeed, I believe it has been recently updated. If the hon. member is interested in the conclusions of that examination, I will be happy to make them available to her.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDED CHANGES IN FORM OF ESTIMATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Given the recommendations of the public accounts and the Auditor General in 1975 regarding the form of the estimates, and in the light of the statement by the Auditor General's office that there is at present inadequate information to enable parliament to establish the accountability of government, I ask the minister whether it is his intention, now that we are about to be faced with supplementary estimates which are in themselves an example of government spending out of control, to bring in specific recommendations with regard to the form of the estimates so that the House can at last have some information about the free spending habits of this administration?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): The supplementary estimates about to be tabled will give a clear indication of the stringent degree of control which has been exercised, since they are considerably less than was the case in previous years.

An hon. Member: We hope so!

Mr. Basford: Yet day after day you want more money spent on something.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Andras: Leaving that aside, the whole form of the estimates and the information conveyed to the House is being examined, as I indicated to the hon. member for Vegreville in answer to a similar question a few days ago.

PROPOSAL THAT ESTIMATES OF ONE DEPARTMENT DESIGNATED BY OPPOSITION BE EXAMINED BY HOUSE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Given the seriousness of this matter and the total frustration felt by the House in its attempt to deal with it and in light of the statements by the Auditor General, may I ask the minister whether he is prepared, notwithstanding the work of the committee on procedure and the standing orders of the House, to recommend that the estimates of at least one department of government to be designated by the official opposition be brought back to this House for examination without any limitation as to time?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I find it difficult to see how that falls within the administrative competence of the President of the Treasury Board.

ALLEGATION DEPARTMENTS ENCOURAGED TO SPEND ALL AVAILABLE FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of a statement by Pat Lafferty of the Auditor General's office to the public accounts committee on March 23 to the effect that managers have been specifically encouraged to ensure that all available funds are spent by the end of the year, and since this clearly shows there is no incentive for public servants to be efficient with the public's money, but, rather that there is actually a strong incentive built into the system to the contrary, would the hon. gentleman inform us whether he has any plans to rectify this scandalous situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): If, in fact, such a practice ever existed, the restraint program and the monitoring system now in process will certainly eliminate any tendency in that direction. But I do not believe this is a widespread practice.

ALLEGATION BY AUDITOR GENERAL NO WAY OF DETECTING FRAUD

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): If the President of the Treasury Board would care to look at the proceedings of the public accounts committee for March 23 he would understand what I am talking about. I would draw his attention, now, to the following statement by the Auditor General:

> What worries me quite a bit is that if there is fraud occurring there is really not much evidence of important ways by which it can be detected.

With that statement in mind, will the minister inform the House of the steps he will be taking to remedy this appalling situation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): As usual, the hon. member, like some of his friends, is indulging in overkill and over-statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Andras: Notwithstanding this, we take a very serious view of the matter. But I would point out that the same question has been floating around during the question period in a different form for a long time.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

ILLEGAL TRANSFER OF OPERATING COSTS TO ENERGY SUPPLIES ALLOCATION BOARD—DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question, also, is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Since there is evidence from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that the action taken by the National Energy Board in transferring $90,000 of its operating costs to the operations of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board clearly contravened the provisions of the Financial Administration Act and was illegal, and in view of the fact that the committee recommended in its sixth report that disciplinary action be taken immediately by the minister, can the hon. gentleman now advise the House what action has been taken in this matter; specifically, who was disciplined and to what extent?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): I am informed that on August 16 my predecessor wrote to my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, drawing attention to this recommendation of the standing committee. I do not have details as to the disciplinary action which was taken in the matter but I am advised by my colleague that he has taken an extremely serious view of the situation and introduced measures to ensure it will not occur again.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ACCOUNTS OF ALL CROWN AGENCIES AUDITED BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): A further question to the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker. According to the 1976 public accounts, the financial statements of certain Crown corporations were checked by private accounting firms. Will the minister arrange that in future the accounts of all Crown corporations and government agencies are dealt with by the Auditor General?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): That matter has been considered and there have been discussions with the Auditor General with regard to it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Everything is under study.

Mr. Andras: For the very good reason that this is not as simplistic a subject as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would imply.

Mr. McKenzie: Can the minister tell us whether the government intends to implement recommendation 17 contained in the report of the independent review committee of the Auditor General which recommends that the Auditor General should have right of access to the financial records and documents of all Crown corporations such as Air Canada, and will he be instructing the Auditor General to carry out detailed and complete audits of the accounts of all Crown corporations and government agencies, not just general reviews?

Mr. Andras: The detailed answer to that question will be available to the House when I make my comments on the second reading of the Auditor General's bill.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REASON FOR HOLDING MONEY IN REVOLVING SURPLUS ACCOUNT IN CONNECTION WITH AIRPORTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): I might preface my question by saying, Mr. Speaker, that our "overkill" cannot possibly match the government's over-spending. My question, too, relates to the Auditor General's report but it is directed to the Minister of Transport. It should be the cardinal rule of governments everywhere—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would ask his question.

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the treasury board regulation which prevents the slop-over of surpluses from one one department, agency or program to another, what possible justification can the minister have for holding back, in a revolving surplus account, the sum of $65 million this year for use in relation to airports?

An hon. Member: That is for travelling expenses.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the airport revolving account was set up for the purpose of making sense of our investments in our airports across the country and to assure, from an accounting point of view, we were able to have the air mode completely responsible for the costs associated with it.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTION DEPARTMENTS NOT HOLD OVER SURPLUSES FROM YEAR TO YEAR

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, as this item is specifically criticized by the Auditor General, along with another one in the Department of Supply and Services for $3 million, I now ask the President of the Treasury Board whether at long last he will enforce the regulations of the Treasury Board so that there will be absolutely no surplus held over from one year to another which effectively destroys any possibility we have in this House of getting to the reasons for any surplus or deficit in any such fund as that of the minister.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I could give that assurance except where it affects a policy decision. But there will be such revolving funds which I do not think is a bad practice at all.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REASON BOARD FAILED TO PREVENT INCREASES IN HOUSING COSTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since the consumer price index which was released this morning shows that the housing component has increased 11.1 per cent in the past year compared to a 10.4 per cent increase when the government's controls program was brought in, can the minister indicate to this House the reason for the increase? Will he make a statement to the House on motions next week presenting information from his department why the Anti-Inflation Board has not prevented the further escalation in housing costs?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I could draw the hon. member's attention to the release of Statistics Canada this morning, he will note that the principal reason for the increase in the housing component of the consumer price index was the increase in municipal taxes in Canada which comes into the October figure. As I have had occasion to mention to the House before, the government of course is not in a position to control the taxation policies either of the provincial or municipal governments, and for this reason the anti-inflation program has not been in a good position to restrain those increases which it is true the consumer must pay.

REASON FOR REVISED GUIDELINES ON PRESS AND PROFITS OF LAND DEVELOPERS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister realizes it is not only municipal taxes but is also the land profits that have been made. Since the major Canadian land developers are reporting huge profit increases such as Cadillac Fairview up 64 per cent, Markborough Properties up 30 per cent and Genstar up 21 per cent, can the minister indicate to this House why the government approved last Friday the revised Anti-Inflation Board regulations which widened even more significantly its guidelines on prices and profits of land developers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the principal reasons was that the land realization price of course would not be an increase in price which has occurred only during the control period. It may well indeed reflect the ownership of the land extending well before the period of controls became effective. We have indicated for the period of the controls that any increase that occurs during the period of the controls, on the contrary, would not be entitled to be taken out of income or be exempt from excess revenue.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON CORPORATION FAILED TO ANNOUNCE OPENING OF FRENCH TELEVISION STATION IN REGINA

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for Canada who is undoubtedly concerned about national unity and upholding minority rights.

I would like to know if the minister intends to ask the CBC why its news service did not see fit to include an excellent news about the opening of a French television station in Regina, that is CBKFT, on November 8, 1976? Would it not be an arrogant attitude on the part of the CBC?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly pass on the concern of the hon. member to the CBC and seek an explanation. Perhaps I could indicate to the hon. member that there is today another station opening in Vancouver. I am sure this House will be happy to know that the CBC is extending its facilities in this way.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PURPOSE OF MEETING OF OFFICIALS IN MONCTON—POSSIBILITY OF PARTICIPATION BY BUSINESS AND LABOUR

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can he confirm that meetings have been held in Moncton in the last few days between his officials from Ottawa and the local department of DREE? Would he advise what the purpose of these meetings is and if they have been behind closed doors whether consideration has been given to inviting participation from business and labour organizations in the region.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly confirm that my department officials hold regular meetings with provincial authorities and representatives of private enterprises under their jurisdiction. Unfortunately the hon. member did not give enough details so I cannot link those meetings with any specific case he might have in mind. If he wants to be more specific, I may be able to give him a clearer answer.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON AGRICULTURAL TRADE AT GATT TALKS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In past years—and when I say past years I am thinking back in the fifties—at times Canada's farm exports saved the country quite large trade deficits. I should like to ask the minister if he would indicate to the House the position the government has taken on agricultural trade at the GATT talks that are going on at the present time in Geneva.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants this in complete detail it would take much too long to do that during the question period. There are the consultations which are taking place between the provinces and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and so on. I also want to inform the hon. member that at the present time the members of the Canadian Grains Commission are in different parts of the world outlining the different grades of grain that we have for sale to the millers and the grain dealers in the world. They are doing this type of thing all the time.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, that was not any answer at all. The minister knows full well what I was asking him. I would say further that if he does not have a policy he should say so publicly at the present time. I should like to ask him to pursue this point a little further. It seems that with the world food prices levelling off it will be vital to push for improved access to world markets for our agricultural products. The minister obviously could have said that himself had he wanted to. I should like to ask the minister if the government is prepared to take a tougher stand on the need for a freer trade policy so far as agricultural products are concerned. I have narrowed it down and maybe he can answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member will realize that this is a question of much too general a nature to be considered in the question period.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST SITUATION OF EMPLOYEES AND TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the Statistics Canada matter. Last week the minister left the impression that what was being reported in the press was a relatively minor matter and now we know there is a full internal inquiry going on and that Mr. Kirkham, the Chief Statistician, has asked his senior staff to file financial and interest statements with him. In fact that was to have been done last Friday. This is really quite a change in the circumstances from last week to this week. Would the minister report to the House whether or not he has any new information concerning this matter today.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. I have talked to Mr. Kirkham. He tells me there is no problem, that the people have filed their reports if they had any. Some of them are teachers at the university. I do not see any problem about that. A few of them have investments in other businesses. I am told that one has invested some of his savings in a hairdressing business and I do not see any conflict of interest there. So I am quite satisfied that the Chief Statistician has made sure he is taking all the necessary steps to remove any doubt and to re-establish the integrity of this very good institution.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that that is the report the minister can make to the House with regard to the matter. However, there is continuing speculation on the part of the public with respect to this matter. If I may say so to the minister I think it would be in the best interests of Statistics Canada and perhaps even of the minister if this public speculation were laid to rest once and for all. With regard to that matter, would the minister agree now to table in this house publicly and openly all correspondence and other documents that have been the subject of questioning in this House of Commons and speculation so that judgment can be ultimately and finally made.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, you know I think the best way to stop any speculation is not to ask silly questions like those of the hon. member.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

AGREEMENT WITH MANITOBA ON CONTROL OF CABLE TELEVISION—CONFLICT WITH DECISION OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Has the minister made an agreement with the province of Manitoba so that the province, through its own phone system, will own and control the cable system of that province, and is this agreement to be a precedent to be followed in other provinces.

Will you boys keep quiet. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to communicate with the Minister of Communications.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the hon. member has adequately communicated with the minister. Perhaps he would give the opportunity to the minister now to communicate with him.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): I hope I understood the question well enough, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the hon. member is asking me if I have signed an agreement with the government of Manitoba. I can tell him that yes, a few hours ago I did sign, in the name of the government of Canada, an agreement with the government of Manitoba relating to new arrangements between the two governments in the field of cable. Let me tell him what it is all about if you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker. This arrangement provides for guaranteed access for cable operators to the cable. It provides for priority of the broadcasting signal over other services on the cable, and it provides a guarantee that only CRTC licensees will have access to that cable. It also provides a possibility for cable operators to rent some of their hardware from the telephone companies, thus facilitating certain problems we have had with the condition of hardware ownership set out by the CRTC. I think this whole agreement shows the desire of this government to accommodate the provinces and its desire to establish an efficient and economical system of telecommunications, provided that the unquestionable jurisdiction of the federal government over broadcasting is recognized.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the minister for her full answer on this complicated subject and unique arrangement. I should like to ask the minister very seriously, since this agreement appears to be in fundamental conflict with CRTC decisions on cable on September 15 awarding cable licenses in Manitoba, whether the minister can tell the House if this unilateral de facto reversal of CRTC policy means that the commission for all practical purposes is presently "defunctus"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —until the minister brings in new legislation setting herself up as the czar of communications.

Some hon. Members: Czarina.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, section 23 of the Broadcasting Act gives the governor in council authority to either set aside or refer back a decision of CRTC. Two of the decisions of CRTC have been set aside, and I am sure that the existence of this new agreement will allow the CRTC to take all the new facts into account when they call for new applications for those licences.

* * *

CUSTOMS

ARRANGEMENTS FOR IN-TRANSIT PASSENGERS AT GANDER AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue and also, in part, for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration following the questions I put to the Minister of Transport the other day regarding the situation at the airport in Gander. Would the minister advise the House what arrangements have been made, in conjunction with the department of her colleague, to handle in-transit passengers on the basis that they shall not be released at the airport or into the surrounding territory, and also whether the customs and immigration controls may be applied to incoming passengers to Mirabel or to Malton?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, for the time being the Gander airport facilities are still what is called in the jargon, a sterile airport—I mean, a fertile airport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: There was never a woman minister of national revenue. I would like to tell the hon. member that there is no sterile area where passengers can be helped in transit. With the development of other airports in Canada I understand the Minister of Transport is proposing to locate an in-transit lounge at the mezzanine level which will accommodate up to 250 passengers.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wonder if the minister or her colleague could indicate to the House how it is that their administration has tolerated conditions over possibly the last ten years whereby in-transit passengers were allowed to wander in and about Gander airport and into the town of Gander contrary to the regulations of IATA and our other international air obligations?

Mr. Speaker: May I point out with respect that that information should perhaps be sought in another way.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR ABSTENTION FROM VOTE ON UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION CONCERNING ARMS EMBARGO AND ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he explain why at the United Nations General Assembly yesterday Canada abstained from voting on a resolution calling for an arms embargo against South Africa, considering that Canada has imposed an embargo since 1963 and an embargo on spare military parts since 1970?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can give the hon. member a brief answer, but I would also be glad to provide him with a more detailed written explanation.

An hon. Member: Try one here.

Mr. Jamieson: I certainly will try one here if the hon. member would give me the opportunity. The resolution has many different component parts in it. In the case of the one to which the hon. member referred, there were certain portions which were not acceptable to Canada. However, it did not change the policy, as the hon. member has said, that we have been following for quite some time. I might point out to him that on at least four aspects of the resolution we did in fact continue to vote against apartheid and its effects in South Africa, but in the specific case in question there were certain elements of the resolution that were objectionable to us.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the written answer from the minister, but for the moment would he explain to the House why Canada abstained on two resolutions condemning economic co-operation with South Africa, and what is the government policy with regard to Canadian investments and trade with South Africa?

Mr. Jamieson: It is for precisely the reason I mentioned a moment ago. However, our policy has been quite clear and consistent throughout the years with regard to trade in non-sensitive materials, non-sensitive goods. We have continued to do this with South Africa and there is no change in the situation. Of course, we have not had any restrictions against trade with any number of other countries such as, for instance, the Soviet Union or a number of others with whom we have idealogical differences. The only people with whom we will not trade are those against whom the United Nations has a specific embargo, witness, for instance, Rhodesia.

* * *

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR STUDY OF ALTERNATIVE PRICING POLICY AND CHANGE IN DEBT STRUCTURE

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns inflation about which this government professes concern. On November 20, 1975, in reply to a question of mine the then minister of indian affairs and northern development said that any electric power rate increase imposed on northern consumers by the federal government's Northern Canada Power Commission would have to be approved by the minister. Would the present minister direct the task force which is now studying the power commission to devise an alternative pricing policy which will not create such hardships for the people of the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As I have stated in answer to a previous question, the task force report on power rates in the north will be presented to me next week. I will review the entire question at that time and take into account the suggestions made by the hon. member.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same minister. Given the fact that residents of the Northwest Territories already suffer the highest cost of living in this country, will the minister propose to cabinet an amendment to the Northern Canada Power Commission Act so that NCPC's huge capital debt will not have to be borne by a relatively small number of northern residents?

● (1500)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would like to look at all the alternatives, and particularly the recommendations of the report, before I choose a solution.

* * *

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

ALLEGED FIRING OF CHAIRMAN AND RESIGNATION OF ASSISTANT CHAIRMAN

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As a representative of one of the leading dairy areas of Canada where milk producers are anxious to see stability and to have confidence brought to the dairy industry, I ask the minister to confirm or deny the well-founded rumour that the chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission has been fired and that the assistant chairman has resigned.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will just have to wait a little while because as Minister of Agriculture it is my job to make sure that the dairy commission is run as efficiently as possible.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: I am not denying that there will be some changes made, but as of this hour no change has been made.

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE FOR IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING ADMITTING PUBLIC TO GALLERIES DURING PRAYERS

Mr. Speaker: Order. Yesterday the House passed the motion presented by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) pursuant to Standing Order 43. The motion is self-explanatory. It is designed to allow the public to take places in the galleries so that they can attend the reading of the daily prayers of the House.

Still, the motion does not say specifically how its purpose can be implemented. It provides for an amendment to our Standing Orders when in fact the time at which the doors leading to the galleries are opened is set by practice and not by our rules.

In addition, the motion was presented in the form of a recommendation and not an order. Consequently, the Chair would appreciate instructions from the House as to the implementation of the object of the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

To that end, it seems to me we should proceed by asking the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to look into the ways in which the purpose of the motion can be achieved, as soon as possible, and report to the House.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. KORCHINSKI—PRESS INTERVIEW BY MR. LANG

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a result of an interview granted to the Canadian Press by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of November 9, with regard to the use of government aircraft.

This subject was first raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt); however, reading the article without knowing the background, one would conclude that it was raised as a result of the inquiry by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). However, that is not the main point of my complaint.

My complaint is that the minister, as quoted in the article, stated that other members of parliament are welcome to travel with him, and that many have siezed the chance, "including Stanley Korchinski, PC, Mackenzie, two weeks ago".

Anyone reading this article might justifiably conclude that there was some advantage to me as a member in taking this particular flight with the minister on a Jetstar, when in actual fact the minister is only insulation himself from public criticism by providing misleading information.

The facts as they transpired are these: New airport facilities were to be opened on October 15 at La Ronge. Hon. members will appreciate the importance of this occasion since I represent an area approximately 600 miles by 150 miles, and La Ronge happens to be in my constituency. It is 350 miles from my home base, which is in the constituency,—incidentally and I can fly three hours straight north and still be within it.

This new airport is the first airport in the riding, other than the gravel or sod strips and lakes which we use for landing. I received a letter dated October 1 from the minister informing me that the new facilities would be officially opened by him and by the Premier of the province of Saskatchewan. This letter pointed out the services which would be provided and very graciously extended an invitation to me to join the official party for the opening. Nowhere in the letter was there an invitation by the minister to me to accompany him on the Jetstar. I could have used a commercial airline to fly to Regina or Saskatoon via Air Canada and then on to La Ronge by Norcanair, but if I had done so I would have sought a government warrant for the flight, which is my right, and which would have been a cost to the treasury.

Instead I chose the cheapest method, and I asked my office to inquire whether it would be possible for me to be aboard the Jetstar which the minister would be using anyway. The minister gave his consent to this and, in fact, offered to return me to the capital after a stopover at Saskatoon.

[Mr. Speaker.]

There were four passengers besides the crew aboard the flight on the morning of October 15. The minister was accompanied by two members of his staff who deplaned at Winnipeg. The purpose of their visit to Winnipeg was unknown to me. From Winnipeg to La Ronge the only passengers aboard the Jetstar were the minister and I. I was offered a flight from La Ronge to Saskatoon after the ceremonies, with a further offer of a flight from Saskatoon to Ottawa on the following day at 4 p.m. I declined this offer. Instead I worked my way back to Regina where I picked up my car and headed for my home, which is in my riding. I returned to the capital on Monday and was in the House on that occasion as the recorded vote on that day will attest.

The minister's flight schedule did not call for his immediate return to Ottawa from his official duties, and I agree that it is within the right of the minister to use a government plane on official duties. Instead he diverted to Saskatoon, his constituency, for the balance of the day, and until 4 p.m. the following day, or the time of his departure for Ottawa, whichever was the latest. Since government aircraft are charged on the basis of time lapsed rather than actual miles travelled, I presume the minister owes an explanation as to what activities he participated in during the time lapse from the departure from La Ronge to the time he left Saskatoon for Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Korchinski: Although I am not aware of his activities—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Korchinski: —during those 24 hours, it may be that an investigation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As has always been my practice I have allowed the hon. member, pursuant to his notice of his question of privilege, to go on for some time now in raising his question of privilege. I think all hon. members are aware that this question, as with many previously proposed questions of privilege, has been raised as a result of some kind of disagreement or difference in interpretation of the language used either in the House or, in this case, outside the House, which makes it more difficult.

I do not like to cut a member too short in attempting to develop whatever question of privilege may exist; however, the hon. member has gone on now for quite some time to develop a disagreement with the statements which are attributed to the minister, and if there is no further development of the matter which relates to the privileges of the House I think the matter ought to be discontinued. If, however, the hon. member proposes to raise anything which relates to a question of privilege, I would be pleased to hear it. If not, I do not propose to hear the hon. member any further, nor do I propose to hear any other hon. member who may want to make a contribution to this particular debate.

MR. LANG—COMMENTS OF MR. KORCHINSKI

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, do I understand correctly that you will not allow me to comment on that long, elaborate talk—

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unless I am prepared to hear the hon. member further, I do not propose to hear the minister either. It seems to me that the hon. member has given a description of the events. I am not able to find in them anything on a prima facie basis which raises any allegation against the minister; quite to the contrary. If there was something in the nature of an allegation with regard to what the minister said or with regard to what was described in the House, I would be prepared to hear both sides; however, I think the matter ought to cease unless I am prepared to hear several arguments on both sides.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a legitimate question—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lang: It is—

An hon. Member: Order. Stanley had to listen to the Chair; so should you.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is based on the imputations and the comments of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) to the effect that there was something improper in the use of this particular aircraft.

Mr. Clark: User pay.

Mr. Lang: As the hon. member comes from the west I should have thought he would understand that it is important for ministers to get into the west of this country, and into the Atlantic. He may not understand this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Clark: Abuser pay.

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the minister, I listened very carefully, and I heard nothing in the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) which in any way imputed improper actions. Rather, it seems to me that the remarks of the hon. member imputed quite a proper use of the aircraft by the minister. I refer to the attendance at the opening of an airport, which is the minister's responsibility, and the hon. member accompanying him in that function. Accordingly, if the question only relates to imputations of impropriety, I see none. Unless there is another point that the minister wishes to speak on I would be prepared to close the matter forthwith.

Privilege—Mr. Lang

• (1510)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there were suggestions that I could not have had government business which would cause the delay. I think I am entitled to make the point that my government business is very extensive throughout the week ends, in Ottawa and in other places. In short, I used that aircraft only for government purposes and it is very important that I do so. I would ask hon. members to take my word as a member on that. The pure and simple fact is that I have no personal business; only government business, except for my family in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the same question of privilege to which the hon. minister has just addressed himself.

An hon. Member: He has just flown off.

Mr. Broadbent: If Your Honour has recognized that the minister has the right to enter a comment on that question of privilege, then I think members on this side are entitled to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) was given the floor on a question of privilege and I had to hear him. His remarks referred to a statement alleged to have been made to the press by the minister. I have said before that the hon. member for Mackenzie seemed to me to describe a series of events which did not raise any impropriety in the use of the aircraft by the minister. The minister saw fit to make one comment, and that had to do with the day following the event referred to by the hon. member. I cannot find a question of privilege in either contribution.

The last thing I would want to do would be to extend the discussion under the guise of a question of privilege to other than the two principal combatants. In has been the custom of the House to try to recognize some basic principle in such matters. To allow the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to speak now would be a loose application of the rules as far as privilege is concerned and it would be inviting a full range of debate on a matter which I am sure is going to be raised in many other ways in the course of this parliament, but hopefully not by way of a question of privilege.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order. It is an urgent matter and I hope Your Honour will give me the floor for a few moments to develop it.

The House is about to be presented with hundreds of millions of dollars of supplementary estimates. I directed a line of questioning, as did my colleagues today, to the President of the Treasury Board. In my second question I asked if the minister was prepared, as an interim measure, to recommend to his colleagues that at least one department be brought back into the House for examination by committee of the whole, without limitation under Standing Order 58, which is the guillotine rule. I was careful to preface my question by saying that notwithstanding the work of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, which is now seized with drafting a report to the House on rule changes, I would nevertheless go ahead with my question based upon what I consider to be the urgency of the matter, which is the presentation of the estimates to the House, and the evidence given by the Auditor General and his department with regard to the fact that the House and parliament as a whole have lost control over government spending.

I wanted the minister to take leadership and recommend this to his colleagues since he has responsibility to parliament for government spending as President of the Treasury Board, and to recommend on a trial basis that the estimates be brought back into committee of the whole.

I raise this matter because we are all concerned that since the rule changes we have unwittingly become a rubber stamp for government spending. The word is out that parliament has lost control over government spending, and this is a serious matter. Since the new rules came into effect in 1968 government spending has increased by over 300 per cent, yet we as a parliament have no control. The minister should take some initiative in this regard. I know he shares the same concern, as does the Auditor General and as does the Public Accounts Committee. My question to him was merely to suggest that perhaps the supplementary estimates and the main estimates for this year could be brought back into the House since it is evident that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization will not act upon this unless there is some direction from the government. I should like to hear from the minister on this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I am sure the hon. member would like to hear from the minister, but he is referring to a situation where the Chair had to make a ruling on the propriety of the question. The question was directed to the President of the Treasury Board, who is intimately concerned with the presentation of estimates and the whole process. But the question was directed to a change in the procedures of the House. It is not a new suggestion and it may have great merit. As the hon. member has developed his point, it would find sympathy in several corners of the House. A fuller examination of the estimates on the floor of the House may be a better way than that followed in the recent past.

My decision was based on the fact that for the purposes of explanation it is a procedural matter that has considerable support, and not a matter of substance with respect to estimates, which is the responsibility of the President of the Treasury Board. As a procedural matter it seems to me the question might better have been directed to the President of the Privy Council, the government House leader. I am sure such questions will be put in due course and other efforts will be made in the Committee on Procedure and Organization to see that estimates are examined in this way. I felt it was not within the administrative competence of the President of the Treasury Board.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as this is Wednesday and we will not be here at the usual time to ask about business of the House, may I ask the Acting House Leader, the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais), about the government's legislative program for next week?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we will proceed today with Bill C-19, the expenditures restraint bill, and we fully expect it will be dealt with until six o'clock this evening. We do not expect it to be completed today so we will come back to that bill on Monday.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, is the minister in a position to advise what legislation will follow that at the beginning of the week? While he is thinking about that, could he advise if the government is aware now when the supplementary estimates will be brought in? There has been some interesting discussion with respect to this.

Finally, although he has not direct control over it himself, would the Postmaster General bring to the attention of the government House leader the fact that the Public Accounts Committee has not yet been organized? Would he urge the government House leader to take some action with respect to that, particularly in view of the fact that, unfortunate as it may seem, there has not been a House leaders' meeting called since the first one in the second week of this parliament? It was erroneously reported in Maclean's magazine that we manage to meet every week, but that is not so. I should like to meet every week, but it is not the case. Could the minister take these questions to the government House leader wherever he is so that we can get on with the business of the House?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the supplementary estimates I shall be presenting a motion which refers the supplementary estimates in the usual form during routine proceedings today.

With reference to the business for Monday, Bill C-19 is exciting a great deal of interest and I expect it will continue to excite a great deal of interest. We propose to carry on with this legislation and dispose of it. If, through greater co-operation than we have had in the past, we can dispose of the bill prior to Tuesday, we would proceed with the Surveys Act. We would then consult with my hon. friend on any additional legislation that we might want to present subsequently.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS ON FUNDING PROPOSALS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I should like to table documents from the Canada Pension Plan Advisory Committee on the funding proposals of the Canada Pension Plan for an increase in benefits.

* * *

● (1520)

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) FOR YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1977

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (B) with regard to the sums required for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1977 was presented by Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

* * *

[English]

REMEMBRANCE DAY

TRIBUTES TO MEMBERS OF CANADIAN FORCES WHO SERVED IN WARTIME

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my role as Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs I would like to remind hon. members that our annual service of remembrance will be held at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning at the National War Memorial. This service, organized by the Royal Canadian Legion, will be duplicated in cities, towns and villages across Canada. Everywhere in our great country citizens of all ages will stand in reverent silence remembering the more than 100,000 Canadians who made the supreme sacrifice to safeguard our way of life, the envy of the world. The human costs of Canada's wartime sacrifices can never be calculated but they will never be forgotten. Mr. Speaker, this parliament, this government, has made sure of this. We have not forgotten them. Our veterans are taken care of better than the veterans of any other country in the world.

In many other countries around the world tomorrow is also a day of mourning for the young men and women who died for their freedom. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will be attending the service at the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, as the guest of his counterpart in the government of France. He will also attend the Commonwealth Memorial Service at Notre Dame Cathedral in the afternoon. Because of his absence from Canada the Legion has invited his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), to represent him at the national ceremony here in Ottawa.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat the words which will be used tomorrow in every remembrance service: "We will remember them."

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is unfortunate that, on the one day of the year when we remember our war dead and duty, the ceremony in Canada could not take more precedence. I am privileged on behalf of my party to reply to the statement of the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs on this day, a few hours before the touching Armistice ceremony which will take place at Canada's National Memorial here in Ottawa. We, on my side of the House, endorse fully the statement of the acting minister. We also pay tribute to the Canadian Legion and to all veterans' organizations across this great land who hold dear the true meaning of remembrance as we all remember our fallen comrades on Armistice Day. While we pay tribute to the fallen, we must remember our duty to those who remain.

It is probably difficult to imagine that in 1976, some 60 years after World War I, there still remain almost one million Canadian veterans who served their country with honour and distinction, whether on the battlefield of foreign countries or here at home, always ready to defend our proud nation.

Many of these veterans still need our help, because they returned maimed and incapacitated. Unfortunately, as the years go by, the recognition of the sacrifices of veterans diminishes; but it is all-important that we should recognize that as our veteran population grows older and passes on we must renew our efforts for increasing the needed care and attention we give to the old veteran who is left alone and to the widows who cared for their loved ones while they suffered because of war.

Finally, it is timely that this House should re-affirm Canada's commitment to its veterans. May I repeat the words of a former Prime Minister who said at Vimy Ridge in 1917:

> The government and the country will consider it their first duty to see that a proper appreciation of your effort and of your courage is brought to the notice of the people at home—and it will always be our endeavour to so guide the attitude of public opinion that the country will support the government to prove to the returned men its just and due appreciation of the inestimable value of the services rendered to the country and empire and that no man will have just cause to reproach the government for having broken faith with the men who won and the men who died.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I on behalf of the New Democratic Party across Canada join with all members of the House in recognizing tomorrow as Remembrance Day. We appreciate the words spoken by the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Whelan) and by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). We join with them in reaffirming our obligation to those who paid the supreme sacrifice for this country. We add that we believe it is part of our obligation to try to build the kind of world for which they gave their lives.

I like the use every Remembrance Day of the words with which the minister closed his statement when he said, "We will remember them." I liked the way in which the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe underlined that expression. We have tried to do so in what we have done for our veterans and their families. We can be proud of what has been achieved, but much remains to be done. I hope that even yet we will find ways to make life better for those who suffered disabilities. I hope that in this House we shall soon do something the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has recommended on a number of occasions, namely, improve the pension position of the widows of all of Canada's war veterans.

Sir, we are honoured to join in this moment of recognition of the fact that tomorrow across Canada all Canadians will remember those who died.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, together with the preceding speakers, including the minister, I want to point out that tomorrow is Remembrance Day. As I already told the House, these men died for their country. Those who are still with us are the living mementoes of these unfortunate wars. May the surviving veterans, disabled or not, have the sympathetic ear of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (M. MacDonald) and particularly get quick responses, in keeping with the great sacrifices they made for their fellow countrymen.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1976-1977—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting pursuant to Standing Orders 58(15) and 59(1), a motion calling on supplementary estimates (B), 1976-77, tabled this day, to be referred to the standing committees of the House, as follows, and with the indulgence of the House I will ask that this particular motion be printed in Hansard as if read. It is in the usual form.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with that practice may I ask if it is the will of the House that the motion for the reference of supplementary estimates to the usual standing committees shall be tabled and printed as if read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The motion above referred to is as follows:]

Mr. Blais, seconded by Mr. Andras moved that the Supplementary Estimates (B), 1976-1977 tabled this day, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture
Agriculture Vote 35b

To the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts
Communications Vote L6b
Secretary of State Votes 10b, 15b, 20b, L21b, 35b, 40b, 65b and 70b

To the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence
External Affairs Votes 10b and L16b
National Defence Vote 5b

To the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs
Consumer and Corporate Affairs Vote 30b
Finance Votes 1b, 2b, 5b and L13b
Industry Trade and Commerce Votes 1b, 5b, 6b, L36b, L37b and 55b
National Revenue Votes 5b and 10b

To the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry
Environment Votes 5b and L16b

To the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs
Consumer and Corporate Affairs Votes 1b, 15b, 20b and 25b
National Health and Welfare Votes 25b, 26b, 45b, 50b and 60b
Urban Affairs Votes 10b, 15b, 20b and 30b

To the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Indian Affairs and Northern Development Votes 5b, 11b, 25b, 35b and 75b

To the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs
Justice Vote 10b
Solicitor General Votes 1b, 5b, 15b and L17b

To the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration
Labour Vote 1b
Manpower and Immigration Votes 1b, 5b, 10b, 15b and 20b

To the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates
Finance Vote 15b
Governor General and Lieutenant Governors Vote 1b
Privy Council Vote 25b
Science and Technology Votes 10b and 35b
Secretary of State Vote L107b
Treasury Board Vote 1b

To the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works
Energy Mines and Resources Votes 5b, 6b, 30b, 35b and 75b
Public Works Votes 10b, 20b, L30b and 40b

To the Standing Committee on Regional Development
Regional Economic Expansion Votes 1b, 25b and 31b

To the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications
Post Office Vote L7b
Transport Votes 51b, 80b, 107b and L108b

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 52, 54, 61, 63, 64, 78, 83, 85, 88, 89, 90, 91, 94, 102, 106, 108, 209, 299, 300, 488, 513, 599, 615, 622, 633, 634, 637, 638, 686, 693, 695, 698 and 704.

[Text]

PERSONNEL AT FEDERAL BUILDING, BROCKVILLE, ONTARIO

Question No. 52—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names and job designations of all persons hired by the Department of Public Works at the Federal Building in Brockville, Ontario, since January 1, 1974?

2. In each case, was a competition held and, if so (a) on what date (b) how many applicants were involved (c) what are the names of all persons placed on the eligible list?

3. Were there any cases where competitions were not held for either temporary or permanent employment and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) what are the names and job designations of all persons hired?

4. What is a general description of the hiring practices used by the Department at the Brockville Federal Building?

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): 1. All of the employees hired since January 1, 1974 have been temporary replacements for sick leave or vacation. The names of the employees and the dates employed are listed below: Scale, L. M., GS-BUS-2, Cleaner, 8-8-74 to 13-8-74; 22-7-74 to 2-8-74; McIsaac, N., GS-BUS-2, Cleaner, 28-10-74 to 1-11-74; 22-8-74 to 7-9-74; Euverman, C. A., GS-BUS-1, Cleaning Service Woman, 25-8-75 to 29-8-75; 15-12-75 to 30-12-75; 14-10-75 to 20-10-75; 7-7-75 to 25-7-75; 17-3-75 to 1-4-75; 28-10-74 to 30-10-74; 16-9-74 to 27-9-74; 19-8-74 to 30-8-74; 16-12-74 to 21-12-74; 15-7-74 to 2-8-74; Bellinger, D., GS-BUS-2, Cleaner, 9-7-74 to 12-8-74; Todd, B., GS-BUS-2, Cleaner, 5-1-76 to 30-1-76; 6-10-75 to 15-10-75; 23-6-75 to 29-8-75; 9-6-75 to 13-6-75; 2-12-74 to 31-12-74; 23-8-74 to 23-8-74 (8 hrs); Van Rijswijk, E., GS-BUS-2, Cleaner; Reid, D., GS-BUS-1, Cleaning Service Woman; Phythian, H., GS-BUS-2, Cleaner.

2. (a) In each case an open competition was held in the sense that referrals were obtained from the local Canada Manpower Centre. (b) We have no permanent record of the number of candidates involved as it is not departmental practice to maintain such records on casual appointment actions. (c) In each case, only the successful candidate was placed on the eligible list.

3. There are no cases where an open competition was not held. As each vacancy arose, referrals were obtained from the Canada Manpower Centre.

4. It is the practice of the Department to approach the Department of Manpower and Immigration's Canada Manpower Centre in Brockville to request that individuals be referred for vacancies as they arise. Once referred, these individuals are assessed against predetermined selection criteria and a decision is made as to who is the most suitably qualified for the position.

UIC—MR. J. DONOGHUE

Question No. 54—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. J. Donoghue, Executive Director of Operational Planning for the Unemployment Insurance Commission of Canada, formerly Regional Director for the Province of Ontario?

Order Paper Questions

2. On what date was Mr. Donoghue appointed Regional Director for Ontario and until what date did he hold that position (a) what was the exact number of dollars paid to him in salary during the time he held this position (b) what is his exact salary in dollars in his present position (c) was Mr. Donoghue stationed in Belleville, Ontario when he was Regional Director for the Province?

3. During the time that Mr. Donoghue was Regional Director for Ontario did he commute on weekends on a more or less regular basis to and from Ottawa (a) was this commuting done via Toronto (b) what means of transportation was used for all aspects of this commuting (c) what was the entire cost paid by the government (d) was a daily meal allowance paid by the government to Mr. Donoghue during his term in Belleville and, if so (i) for what reason (ii) what was the total amount paid (e) did the government contribute towards rental of accommodation for Mr. Donoghue in Belleville and, if so, what was the total amount paid while he was there?

4. What is the total of all expenses of any kind whatsoever paid to Mr. Donoghue while he was Regional Director for Ontario?

5. (a) Is Mrs. A. Humphreys acting at the present time as secretary to Mr. J. Donoghue in his position as Executive Director of Operational Planning (b) did Mrs. Humphreys act as secretary for Mr. Donoghue while he was Regional Director for Ontario (c) what is the total of all expenses paid to Mrs. Humphreys while she was stationed in Belleville including specifically (i) transportation (ii) meal allowances (iii) accommodation (d) what was the exact annual salary in dollars of Mrs. Humphreys while she was stationed in Belleville and what is her exact salary now?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. Acting appointment October 1, 1972 to August 30, 1973. Confirmed in the position September 1, 1973 until April 18, 1975. (a) His salary ranges were as follows: October 1, 1972—December 31, 1972, ($25,000-$31,000); January 1, 1973—March 31, 1974, ($26,750-$33,750); April 1, 1974—March 31, 1975, ($29,000-$37,000); April 1, 1975—April 18, 1975 ($31,500-$41,500); (b) $35,500-$47,500—Salary range for his present position. (c) Yes, after being confirmed as Regional Director on September 1, 1973.

3. Yes. (a) Travel to Toronto was dependant upon the need to meet with the Toronto Metro management, weekend meetings with unions, the media, etc. (b) Train, air, private motor car, and bus. (c) Approximately $3,240 to cover travel costs from October 1972 to August 24, 1973. The figure includes travel to Ottawa for purposes of attending to Commission business. (d) Yes—the employee was in an acting capacity and (i) on extended travel status in accordance with Treasury Board Regulations (ii) $650.00 (e) No.

4. Acting Appointment	Paid to	Paid on Behalf of	Total
1972 Expenses	1,770.68	Not Available	1,770.68
1973 Expenses	3,311.90	756.00	4,067.90
Confirmed
1973 Expenses	2,015.76	177.00	2,192.76
1974 Expenses	4,959.69	4,457.00	9,146.69
1975 Expenses	1,382.25	2,743.00	4,125.25
	$13,440.28	$8,133.00	$21,573.28

5. (a) No. (b) Yes. (c) (i) $28. (ii) $93. (iii) Nil. (d) Belleville, $11,395 to $12,987—salary range for the position. Present, $12,762 to $15,138—salary range for the position.

UIC—MR. D'ARCY REZAC

Question No. 61—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. D'Arcy Rezac, at any time, Regional Manager of Operations in Belleville for the Unemployment Insurance Commission and, if so (a) on what date was he appointed (b) until what date did he serve in the position (c) what is his present position with the Commission?

2. Prior to his appointment in Belleville, did he serve with the UIC in Toronto and, if so, in what capacity?

3. (a) During the period of time he was in Belleville, what was the total of all expenses paid on his behalf, including any hotel expenses prepaid (b) was he on full expenses and (i) if so, for what reason (ii) if not, what expenses, if any, was he on (c) did he take up permanent residence in Belleville during his term there and, if not (i) for what reason (ii) for what reason were his expenses paid (iii) did he maintain actual residence in Toronto at the time?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes. (a) September 29, 1974 (acting as of April 1, 1974). (b) July 15, 1975. (c) Deputy Director General—Pacific Region.

2. Yes—District Manager, High Park Office, Toronto.

3. (a) 1974, $5,416.25; 1975, $2,770.62; Total, $8,186.87. (b) Yes, as allowed by regulations; (i) Working in Belleville and living in Toronto; (ii) Not applicable. (c) No; (i) Operation exigencies were such that a very experienced person was required in Toronto during the winter of 1974. Mr. Rezac, although an employee of high potential was assuming his first senior management post in UIC and it was felt that the Commission's best interest would be served by assigning him to the smaller central area with an office in the Belleville Regional Office for a period of 6 to 10 months prior to assuming duties in Toronto; (ii) He was on assignment; (iii) Yes.

UIC—SPECIAL INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 63—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was any evidence gathered, or any investigation or examination made, before it was abolished, by the Special Investigation Division of the Unemployment Insurance Commission of the Regional Office Pay Centres and the possibility of infiltration of the pay system itself to produce cheques for non-existent claims by means of the issuance of such cheques without them showing up on the Current Master Record Data Tapes and, if so (a) which of the following pay centres were involved (i) Moncton (ii) Montreal (iii) Belleville (iv) Winnipeg (v) Vancouver (b) was a more extensive examination carried out at the Montreal Regional Pay Centre (c) what action in all cases was (i) recommended (ii) taken?

2. Since the Special Investigation Division was abolished have there been any further such investigations or examinations by UIC personnel and, if so, what are all details similar to those asked for in Part 1 of this question?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. There was no evidence gathered or any investigation conducted by the former Special Investigations Division into the possibility of infiltration of the pay system in the Regional Pay Centres.

2. The Regional Pay Centres have been audited both before the special Investigation Division was formed, during its life and after its disbandment. The audit function was carried out first by the Operational Audit of the Commission and later by the Audit Services Bureau of D.S.S. In addition, the RCMP have carried out audits of the physical security. No evidence of infiltration has been found.

UIC—SPECIAL INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 64—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Where were or are all files of the now abolished Special Investigation Division of the Unemployment Insurance Division (a) between the date of its abolition and June 28, 1976 (b) the date the answer to this question is prepared and what is that date?

2. Have any files of the Special Investigation Division been destroyed since the decision was made to abolish the Division and, if so (a) on whose order (b) on what dates (c) what files (d) for what reason?

3. Will the government agree to the preservation of any existing records of the Special Investigation Division indefinitely for possible future examination by a (a) Parliamentary Committee (b) Judicial inquiry and, if not (i) for what reason (ii) what are all reasons such files should not be preserved and eventually made public?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. (a) All master files of the former Special Investigations Division have been maintained at Head Office since inception of this unit and are still maintained. Working copy files were maintained at five regional offices. (b) The files are still at Head Office.

2. No. Some working copy files were destroyed. However, the information contained therein is available on the master file at Head Office.

3. All files are maintained and stored in accordance with Public Records Order PC 1966-1749 dated October 1, 1966. It would not be within the public interest to release information contained on these files as much of the information is of a classified nature.

UIC—INVESTIGATION OF RETIREMENT CLAIMS

Question No. 78—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the Unemployment Insurance Commission been investigating three week retirement benefit claims at various offices across Canada and, if so, what is the total number found to be fraudulent during the past year and, in all such cases, how many persons involved are (a) outside UIC (b) employed by UIC?

2. How many persons who had not actually attained the age of 65 years have either collected or applied for retirement claims representing themselves as being age 65 and what is the breakdown by various UIC regions across Canada?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. In the normal course of their duties, benefit control officers investigate claims in this group to guard against the possibility of fraudulent claims; however, separate statistics on the number of such cases investigated and results obtained are not separable from general control statistics.

2. See 1.

UIC—BENEFIT CONTROL INVESTIGATIONS

Question No. 83—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In 1975, did benefit control officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the Ontario Region complete 180,124 investigations of claims and, if not, how many were completed?

2. In the same period, of the claims investigated, were there 107,303 disentitlements, for various reasons and, if so (a) did disentitlements represent approximately 58 per cent of all claims investigated in that period in the Ontario Region (b) does this indicate any possibility that the percentage figure of all improper claims, investigated or otherwise, would be approximately 58 per cent of all claims made in 1975 in the Ontario Region?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Two hundred one thousand six hundred ninety-three investigations were completed.

2. One hundred fourteen thousand five hundred ninety-seven disqualifications and disentitlements were imposed. (a) This represents 56 per cent of cases completed. (b) No, it only indicates that 56 per cent of those cases completed resulted in either a disqualification or disentitlement.

UIC—BENEFIT CONTROL INVESTIGATIONS

Question No. 85—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Between January 1 and April 30, 1976, did benefit control officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the Ontario Region complete 78,353 investigations of claims and, if not, how many were completed?

2. In the same period, of the claims investigated, were there 41,235 disentitlements for various reasons and, if so (a) did disentitlements represent approximately 52 per cent of all claims investigated in that period in the Ontario Region (b) does this indicate any possibility that the percentage figure of all improper claims, investigated or otherwise, would be approximately 52 per cent of all claims made during this period of time in the Ontario Region?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. No, 84,395 investigations were completed. An additional 4,928 cases of Post Audit were completed by benefit control support staff.

2. No. 44,516 disqualifications and disentitlements (D/D) were imposed. 3,968 D/D's were imposed on the Post Audit cases. (a) The D/D's represented 52 per cent and 80 per cent respectively of cases completed. (b) No. It only indicates that 52 per cent and 80 per cent respectively of those cases completed resulted in a D/D.

UIC—C. L. R. GRAY'S MEMORANDUM

Question No. 88—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. C. L. R. Gray, Director, Legal Services of the Department of Justice for the Unemployment Insurance Commission, Ontario Region, write a memorandum dated August 13, 1975 to Mr. D. Brown, Regional Director of UIC for Ontario, on the subject of a UIC employee named Bernadette Pelletier and, if so, did the document deal with alleged falsification of an Application for Benefit by Ghislain Gareau on the part of Bernadette Pelletier?

2. Did Mr. Gareau receive more benefits than he was entitled to receive and, if so, has this overpayment been recovered and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date?

3. Did Mr. Gray's memorandum state in part "We cannot prosecute the claimant unless we call Bernadette Pelletier as a witness. If we do that, she will testify that she made the "X" and that Ghislain Gareau did not know she made the "X". I suggest you do not want to have Bernadette Pelletier appear in court as a UIC witness who would probably declare the whole mess in public" and, if so (a) was Bernadette Pelletier prosecuted and, if not, for what reason (b) what is the exact meaning of the words "whole mess"?

4. Is the memorandum an indication that the Department of Justice has a policy of advising the UIC against prosecuting its own employees who break the law in order that the public will not become aware of "the whole mess" and, if so (a) on what date was such policy established and by whom (b) was Bernadette Pelletier (i) dismissed by UIC and, if so, on what date (ii) transferred to another job within UIC and, if so, to what job and on what date?

5. How many employees of the UIC have been prosecuted for infractions of the law pertaining to UIC in each of the past four calendar years?

6. Are any figures available as to how many occasions the Department of Justice may have recommended that prosecutions against UIC employees should not take place for reasons that "the whole mess in public" would be undesirable?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. No. He received no benefit. (a) N/A. (b) N/A.

3. Yes. (a) No. Success of prosecution under the Criminal code or U.I. Act was doubtful. (b) The expression "whole mess" referred to the circumstances surrounding the suspected attempted defalcation of funds by Bernadette Pelletier.

4. No. (a) N/A. (b) (i) No. N/A. (ii) No. N/A.

5. 1973, 2; 1974, 0; 1975, 4; 1976, 2.

6. Yes. There are none, other than the case referred to above.

UIC—SPECIAL INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 89—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the total amount of all expenses including salaries of the Special Investigation Division of the Unemployment Insurance Commission from the date of its establishment to the date of its abolition?

2. What was the date of its (a) establishment (b) abolition?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. The expenses for the Special Investigation Division were paid out of the total of the Benefit Control activity and cannot be identified separately.

2. (a) April 16, 1973. (b) April 30, 1975.

UIC—MEMORANDUM ENTITLED "RESTRICTION ON INVOLVEMENT IN CERTAIN CLAUSES"

Question No. 90—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a memorandum circulated to all employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission across Canada entitled "Restriction on Involvement in Certain Claims" and, if so, was this decision made at the May meeting of the UIC executive?

2. Was the memorandum dated June 30, 1976, sent to various offices in the Province of Ontario, signed by Mr. B. L. Murphy, Area Personnel Adviser?

3. Did the memorandum request all employees of UIC to sign and return it to their supervisors?

4. Did the memorandum state in part "It is not permissible for employees to be directly involved in the recording, processing or adjudication of a claim for a relative or a friend or for one in which they have a personal interest" and, if so (a) for what reason was this type of instruction sent at that particular time (b) for what reason were such instructions not standard practice?

5. Previous to June 30, 1976, were employees permitted to become directly involved in the recording, processing or adjudication of claims for relatives, friends or other persons in whom they had a personal interest?

6. In each of the past four years, how many cases have been discovered of UIC employees involved personally in such claims and for what reasons were such instructions not issued until questions on the subject were raised in the House of Commons in May by the honourable Member for Leeds?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. No. The subject memorandum was circulated only to employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the Ontario Region. The decision to circulate the memorandum was made by the Ontario Regional Director General, but was discussed at the May meeting of the UIC Executive where its usefulness was generally agreed to. Other regions have since reminded their employees of this requirement but not necessarily on the same format.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. Yes. (a) As a reminder to employees of the policy of the Commission in this regard. (b) This restraint has existed since the inception of unemployment insurance in Canada and has been contained in operational manuals since that time.

5. No.

6. 1973, 1; 1974, 2; 1975, 3; 1976, 7. Instructions on conflict of interest in claims processing and adjudication are released periodically to remind employees of their responsibilities. The decision governing the release of the instructions in question was made at the UI Executive meeting of May 5th prior to the matter being raised in the House of Commons.

UIC—SPECIAL INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 91—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since Question No. 5,825 of the First Session of the 30th Parliament appeared on the Order Paper on June 28, 1976, requesting information on the whereabouts of files of the now abolished Special Investigation Division of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, has a search for the files been instituted under the direction of the Headquarters of UIC at 222 Nepean Street, Ottawa, and, if so, has there been difficulty in locating any of the files?

2. Have any of the files been destroyed or are any missing and, if so, for what reason?

3. Have any of the files been dispersed to various entities including the RCMP, benefit control officers, etc., and, if so, which files and on what dates?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes, the working files maintained by the regions were requested. No difficulty was encountered in locating the files.

2. All files are maintained and stored in accordance with Public Records Order PC 1966-1749 dated October 1, 1966. Some working copies of files were destroyed, however the information contained therein is available on the master file at Head Office.

3. No.

UIC—DOCUMENT ENTITLED "1977 ONTARIO REGION BUDGET GUIDELINES"

Question No. 94—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a document, dated June 29, 1976 entitled "1977 Ontario Region Budget Guidelines" distributed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and, if so, what is the name and job designation of the highest ranking UIC official who authorized distribution of the document?

2. Did this document state in part "when preparing your budget, a target of twelve prosecutions per year per Benefit Control Officer should be considered. This will include employer prosecutions. It is considered that eleven benefit fraud and one employer prosecution per year per Benefit Control Officer would be a good mix" and, if so (a) is it the policy of the UIC to prosecute fraud on the basis of quotas set down the year before rather than on the basis of all frauds as they occur regardless of number (b) what is the name and job designation of the highest ranking official of UIC who arrived at the conclusion "that eleven benefit fraud and one employer prosecution per year per Benefit Control Officer would be a good mix" (c) what are the reasons that it is considered "a good mix" (d) for what reason is no mention made in the so-called quota of prosecutions against employees of the UIC itself who contravene the law or is it the policy of the government not to prosecute in such cases (e) how many employees of the UIC were prosecuted in each of the past four years and in what regions did such prosecutions occur?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes. Director General, David Brown.

2. Yes. (a) No. The figures were not quotas but guidelines, intended for use in estimating the cost of benefit control activities in 1977. (b) Director General, David Brown. (c) The "good mix" or ratio of claimant to employer prosecutions was determined using historical data. The "good mix" criteria was sent to district offices for use as a guideline estimating the proportion of the Benefit Control Officer's time which ought to be set aside for work associated with prosecutions. (d) The prosecution of UI employees for contravention of the Unemployment Insurance Act is turned over to law enforcement agencies. There is no government policy of non-prosecution in such cases. (e) 1973, 2—Quebec 1, Ontario 1; 1974, 0; 1975, 4—Quebec 3, Ontario 1; 1976, 2—Ontario 1, Prairie 1.

UIC—H. WILLIAMS

Question No. 102—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. H. Williams now Chief of Security at the head office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission at 222 Nepean Street, Ottawa, Ontario?

2. Was Mr. Williams formerly employed by the now abolished Special Investigation Division of UIC and, if so (a) for what dates (b) in what capacity?

3. While with the Special Investigation Division, how many trips did he make to the Vancouver area (a) on what dates (b) at what total cost (c) for what purpose in each case (d) which trips included visits to the regional pay centre in Vancouver and what was the purpose in each case?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. Yes. (a) March 1973 to April 1975. (b) Co-ordinator of Ontario, Prairie and Pacific Regions.

3. Four. (a) March 31, 1973; September 21, 1973; November 30, 1973; January 9, 1974. (b) Expenses, $449.60; Air Fare, $1,024; Total; $1,473.60. (c) Organization, liaison, monitoring of operations, computer programs and selection of personnel. (d) November 30, 1973. Familiarization Tour of Regional Pay Centre in conjunction with other duties.

UIC—MR. F. E. LEBLANC

Question No. 106—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On or about May 19, 1976, did Mr. F. E. Leblanc receive a telephone call from the honourable Member for Leeds requesting information concerning the subject of alleged defrauding of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and also asking about charges laid against former UIC employee Mr. Gordon Gunn of Ottawa and, if so (a) did Mr. Leblanc decline to comment (b) did he refer the Member to his superior, Mr. J. Third?

2. Are managers of UIC offices under instructions not to discuss any matters with Members of Parliament and, if so (a) for what reason (b) who authorized such a regulation?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes. (a) Yes; (b) Yes.

2. No.

UIC—MR. J. THIRD

Question No. 108—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. J. Third, Director of Operations, East, Unemployment Insurance Commission, receive a telephone call on or about May 19, 1976 from the honourable Member for Leeds concerning alleged defrauding of UIC and charges laid against former UIC employee Mr. Gordon Gunn of Ottawa and, if so, what was his reply respecting the furnishing of any details?

2. Was Mr. Third advised by the honourable Member for Leeds that the matter would be raised that same day in the House of Commons and, if so, what was his reply concerning the significance of the case and the involvement of the so-called bogus company?

3. Did Mr. Third, approximately thirty minutes later, telephone the honourable Member for Leeds and, if so, what was his advice respecting (a) the seriousness of the matter (b) the raising of the matter in the House (c) the involvement of the so-called bogus company (d) the lack of awareness by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of the situation?

4. Did Mr. Third state that within a few minutes of the matter becoming public in the House there will be a great burning of files and, if so, to what files was he referring?

5. What were the reasons for the second call in a period of thirty minutes and what is the name and job designation of any person that he contacted to discuss the matter during the interval?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. Yes. Mr. Cossitt was referred to the RCMP regarding the charges laid against Mr. Gunn.

2. Yes. Details of the case were not discussed.

3. Yes. (a) The case was not as serious as the honourable member seemed to think. (b) The raising of the matter in the House could jeopardize the on-going RCMP investigation. (c) It was suggested that the naming of a specific company at this time could jeopardize the RCMP investigation still underway. (d) Mr. Third had reported the case to his superior, however, he was not in a position to know whether the Minister had been briefed on the case.

4. Yes. The files referred to were those of the bogus company.

5. To re-emphasize that the success of the investigation would be jeopardized by premature publicity.—D. Brown, Director General, Ontario Region. U.I.C.

TREATMENT FOR SEXUAL OFFENDERS

Question No. 209—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Are inmates in the penitentiary system being treated by aversive conditioning methods and, if so, how many?

2. Are sexual offenders presently being treated with aversive conditioning, using electric shocks to the genitals as the aversive stimulus and, if so (a) how many (b) how is "informed consent" obtained from the inmates for these procedures?

3. What review procedures are used to determine whether (a) consent is truly voluntary and informed (b) the treatment is effective and should be continued?

4. (a) Does an Ethics Committee exist to consider, in each case, the use of the procedure and the nature of the consent considering the experimental nature of such treatment (b) does such a Committee have inmate representation?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. Treatment for sexual offenders is available at the Regional Psychiatric Centre (Ontario). The program lasts for twelve weeks. During the first half of the program, aversive conditioning is given and in the second half of the program, the patients receive group therapy. Some fifteen patients are involved in each program.

2. Aversive conditioning using electric shock is not applied to the genitals as the aversive stimulus. It is applied to the index and middle finger. (a) and (b) not applicable.

NOTE: Re: "Informed consent"—The patient's file is first studied to ensure that he is not mentally ill or suffering from mental retardation. In other words, this is done in order to ensure that there is no problem with regard to his being able to give informed consent. Next he is given an outline of the treatment program to study and may, of course, not wish to enter it. The program is then discussed with him by a staff member and videotapes of equipment, etc., are shown. If he wishes, he may then sign the consent form and following this he may withdraw from the program whenever he wishes to do so.

3. (a) Review procedures are not presently in effect to determine whether the consent is truly voluntary and informed. (b) While those released are followed up by research staff of the Centre, insufficient numbers have been so released to enable a decision to be made as to whether or not the treatment is effective and should be continued.

4. There is no Ethics Committee as described in this question.

NUMBER OF WAR DISABILITY—PENSIONERS

Question No. 299—Mr. Marshall:

In graduations of 5%, how many (a) single (b) married war disability pensioners are there with disabilities between 5% and 100%?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

(a) Single Pensioners
Percent	5	10	15	20	25	30	35	40	45	50	55	60	65	70	75	80	85	90	95	100
W.W. I	545	826	438	528	246	285	117	219	15	237	35	97	16	59	31	232	34	82	16	385
W.W. II	3537	4481	1810	2268	986	1118	474	847	70	1059	169	454	104	215	109	247	50	93	36	924
Special Force	115	124	39	63	25	23	11	25	2	19	5	8	2	4	3	8	1	1	—	14
(b) Married Pensioners
W.W. I	833	1494	764	905	477	559	228	375	32	436	72	188	41	118	60	433	53	158	28	615
W.W. II	7541	11755	5163	6404	2996	3454	1324	2223	222	2936	547	1263	373	777	339	824	262	348	123	1786
Special Force	83	91	48	61	16	23	7	26	6	27	4	13	3	4	8	4	1	2	—	16

COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

Question No. 300—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many applications have been received since the implementation of the Prisoner of War Compensation Act?

2. (a) How many have been processed for which payments have been sent out (b) are there any still on hand and, if so, for what reason?

3. Has the Department of Veterans Affairs received letters from First World War prisoners of war complaining of their exclusion from compensation and, if so, what are their (a) names (b) disabilities?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. At October 21, 1976, 6,128 applications for compensation under the Prisoner of War Compensation Act had been received. Benefits were paid automatically by the Commission to 1,117 Hong Kong veterans and other persons imprisoned by the Japanese for one year or more.

2. (a) At October 21, 1976, 4,953 claims had been approved for payment. (b) 853 applications are currently in various stages of processing. (322 applications were received from persons not eligible to receive compensation).

3. A number of letters and phone calls have been received from First World War prisoners of war. Complete statistics on these inquiries have not been maintained by the Commission.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REPAIR AND CAPITAL COST IMPROVEMENTS TO BASES 1974-75

Question No. 488—Mr. Hurlburt:

For the fiscal year 1974-75, what was the dollar value of repairs and capital cost improvements to military bases in (a) British Columbia (b) Alberta (c) Saskatchewan (d) Manitoba (e) Ontario (f) Quebec (g) Prince Edward Island (h) Nova Scotia (i) New Brunswick (j) Newfoundland?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): The dollar value of repairs and capital cost improvements to military bases by provinces in Canada for fiscal year 1974-75 was as follows:

	Construction	Maintenance
British Columbia	$7,534,338	$8,374,877
Alberta	7,636,220	8,781,455
Saskatchewan	1,407,425	2,244,618
Manitoba	5,313,348	6,201,217
Ontario	19,204,269	12,272,499
Quebec	10,215,572	10,864,633
New Brunswick	1,509,443	8,052,351
Nova Scotia	9,694,030	15,025,638
Prince Edward Island	566,165	2,513,402
Newfoundland	212,989	579,173
	$63,293,799	$74,909,863

1974-75 BUDGETARY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 513—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the chart indicating percentage distribution of 1974-75 budgetary expenditures by function, indicate 3% for internal overhead expenses?

2. What is the dollar make-up of this figure and to what departments are the amounts applicable?

3. What criteria are used to distinguish between overhead expenses and the administrative costs of (a) general government services (b) departmental administration costs (c) programme administration?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of Treasury Board): 1. Yes.

2. 1974-75 budgetary expenditures for the Internal Overhead Expenses function were $875.4 million. The amounts attributable to specific departments are presented in Appendix A.

3. Costs are assigned to the Internal Overhead Expenses function when: (i) they are incurred by certain departments and agencies, as listed in Appendix A, in providing support services for the operations of other government departments, and (ii) it has been found impractical to attempt to attribute them directly to the actual programs to which they pertain. All other overhead costs associated with the administration of government departments, programs and services, are attributed directly to the appropriate program.

1974-75 Budgetary Expenditures
Internal Overhead Expenses Function
($ thousands)

Government Support Services
Accommodation, Public Works	434,355
Administration, Public Works	22,604
Professional and Technical Services, Public Works	25,197
Grants in lieu of taxes on federal property, Finance	71,930
Legal Services, Justice	13,016
Public Service Health, Health and Welfare	3,551
Public Service Staff Relations Board	2,975
Translation Bureau, Secretary of State	23,920
Records Management and Technical Services, Public Archives	3,025
Public Service Commission	53,960
Administration, Supply and Services	9,039
Services, Supply and Services	70,254
Canadian Commercial Corporation	6,423
	740,249	740,249
Contributions to Employee Pension and Medical Plans
Public Service Pensions, Treasury Board	36,311
Public Service Insurance, Treasury Board	91,943
Public Service Employees Compensation, Labour	6,904
	135,158	135,158
		875,407

Order Paper Questions

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—REGIONAL OFFICES

Question No. 599—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. (a) How many regional offices are maintained by the Department of Finance (b) where is each located (c) for what area is each responsible?

2. On what date was each established and with how many personnel?

3. What is the present personnel strength of each office?

4. In addition to regional offices, are district or other sub-offices maintained and, if so (a) in what locations (b) how many?

5. Are the duties performed by those manning the regional and/or district offices line functions, in the chain of command from Ottawa to the operator in the field, or do they have other functions to perform and, if so, what are such functions?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned: 1 to 5. Not applicable.

MINISTRY OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS—REGIONAL OFFICES

Question No. 615—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. (a) How many regional offices are maintained by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs (b) where is each located (c) for what area is each responsible?

2. On what date was each established and with how many personnel?

3. What is the present personnel strength of each office?

4. In addition to regional offices, are district or other sub-offices maintained and, if so (a) in what locations (b) how many?

5. Are the duties performed by those manning the regional and/or district offices line functions, in the chain of command from Ottawa to the operator in the field, or do they have other functions to perform and, if so, what are such functions?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): For the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs: 1. (a) One. (b) 2001 University Street, Montreal. (c) Mirabel peripheral lands.

2. April 1, 1976—6 man years.

3. Six permanent employees, five agency employees and 13 contract employees.

4. No.

5. The duties performed by the regional office are not line functions. The regional office is responsible for the planning of development for the peripheral lands of Mirabel International Airport.

VETERANS SENNEVILLE LODGE

Question No. 622—Mr. Herbert:

Is it the government's intention to proceed with the construction of new facilities at the Veterans Senneville Lodge in Quebec and, if so, what are the details of such construction?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Planning for the replacement of Senneville Lodge in Quebec has been deferred while discussion is continuing with the Province of Quebec with respect to the transfer of Queen Mary Veterans Hospital. When these discussions are completed, the Department will undertake definitive planning for the replacement of Senneville Lodge.

MR. DOUGLAS DURHAM

Question No. 633—Mr. Beatty:

1. Did the US Federal Bureau of Investigation notify the Royal Canadian Mounted Police of the covert intelligence activities conducted in 1973 by Mr. Douglas Durham, a former FBI undercover agent, in Edmonton, Alberta and, if so, on what date?

2. Did the government give American authorities permission to let Mr. Durham into Canada for the purposes of conducting a covert intelligence operation?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. On October 1, 1973, the Federal Bureau of Investigation notified the R.C.M.P. of Douglas Durham's intentions to enter Canada and on February 14, 1974, the Bureau reported that Durham had been in Edmonton, Alberta on or about October 4, 1973. The R.C.M.P. is not aware of any "covert intelligence activity" conducted by Durham while in Edmonton, Alberta.

2. No.

MR. GILBERT TALMA LAVOIE

Question No. 634—Mr. Beatty:

1. Did the RCMP list Mr. Gilbert Talma Lavoie in CPIC as "unlawfully at large" in (a) October 1972 (b) February 1973 following his escape from Stoney Mountain Penitentiary on June 17, 1972 and, if not, then by whom and on what date was he listed?

2. (a) Was a warrant issued by the RCMP for Mr. Lavoie and listed on CPIC in late January or early February, 1975 for failing to appear for trial and, if not, then by whom and on what date was it issued (b) did the RCMP enter a notice of a warrant on CPIC for Mr. Lavoie's failure to appear at his January 26 trial and again on May 20, 1976 and, if not, then by whom and on what date was it entered?

3. Is it common practice for police authorities to enter information into CPIC which had already been entered into the computer on an earlier occasion and, if not, for what reason was this done in Mr. Lavoie's case?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. (a) No. CPIC became operational for Wanted Persons only in November of 1972. (b) Yes.

2. (a) No. (b) No. A Canada Wide Warrant was issued for Lavoie for the original offence in 1972 under Section 133 c.c. (unlawfully at large) by R.C.M.P. Stonewall Detachment, Manitoba, on May 20, 1976.

3. No. The original Stonewall Detachment entry of November 1, 1972, for Lavoie was removed from CPIC by Stonewall Detachment on August 8, 1973 following Lavoie's arrest by the Vancouver Police Department on August 3, 1973. On May 20, 1976, a new Canada Wide Warrant was issued for Lavoie for the original offence in 1972 under Section 133 c.c. (unlawfully at large) and a new CPIC entry was made by R.C.M.P. Stonewall Detachment.

ACTIVITIES OF FORMER CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

Question No. 637—Mr. Beatty:

1. Has the Minister of Finance made inquiries arising out of his commitment as recorded on page 14758 of Hansard, of the First Session of the 30th Parliament, to determine whether the former Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal reimbursed the public treasury for time spent on private business while on the public payroll or for the use of government-paid travel or any other government facilities for private business purposes?

2. What was the amount, if any, that was repaid to the public treasury and what expenses did it cover?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Yes.

2. In so far as can be determined, there is no evidence that would constitute the need for any restitution to be made to the Crown by the former Chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal in regard to conducting personal business while on the public payroll. Furthermore, all travel expenses paid to him by the Crown were in connection with Anti-Dumping Tribunal business and were in accordance with Treasury Board Travel Directives that were in force at the time of the audit of those travel claims.

ELECTRONIC PAYMENT SYSTEMS

Question No. 638—Mr. Beatty:

What individual or bodies within the government currently have a responsibility to make recommendations to the government relating to electronic payment systems and, in each case (a) who is the individual or members of the body involved and for which department or agency does he or she work (b) to whom are reports made (c) on what date was the responsibility for electronic payment systems first given to that individual or body (d) on what date does the mandate of the individual or body expire (e) what reports or recommendations have been made to the government prior to June 16, 1976 and, on what date (f) what action has been taken by the government as a result of the recommendations and, on what date?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: In April 1973, the Government published a Green Paper entitled "Computer Communications Policy, a Statement by the Government of Canada." That paper contained a number of statements indicating the government's "current perception" on various computer/communications issues. Statement 16 of this paper said in part: "Recognizing the critical and pervasive role of financial institutions in the functioning of the economy, it is very important that, in the rapid evolution of computer/communications involving the payments system of the nation and other financial services, a competitive environment should be maintained and that developments be consistent with the general policies outlined herein." The Department of Finance, with the assistance of the Receiver General for Canada, the Bank of Canada, the Departments of Communications; Industry, Trade and Commerce; Consumer and Corporate Affairs; and others was given the task of preparing recommendations to ensure the continuing development of an efficient and equitable payments system. The Working Group responsible for preparing these recommendations was chaired by the Director, Capital Markets Division, Department of Finance. The Working Group's recommendations were presented to Cabinet jointly by the Ministers of Finance and Communications. Subsequent to their evaluation by Cabinet, the government, in January 1975, published a position paper entitled "Towards an Electronic Payments system—A Statement of Government Policy concerning Computer/Communications and the Payments System." In this paper, the government announced its support for a common user communications network for the payments system and the creation of four committees with responsibility to make recommendations relating to an electronic payments system: 1. Interdepartmental Steering Committee on the Electronic Payments System. This Committee, chaired by the Director, Capital Markets Division, Department of Finance, is responsible for the overall coordination of government policy on the electronic payments system, including the maintenance of liaison with Committees 2, 3 and 4 as described below. (a) In addition to the chairman from the Department of Finance, this committee includes representatives from the Bank of Canada and the Departments of Communications, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Supply and Services, and Justice. (b) The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Communications. In addition, each departmental representative reports to his or her Minister. (c) January 1975. (d) No expiry date. (e) No report to date. (f) Not applicable.

2. The Canadian Payments System Standards Group (CPSSG), a private sector committee, whose mandate is to develop standards and performance criteria that would be used in a common-user communications network for the payments system. (a) The CPSSG is made up of representatives from deposit-taking institutions, common carriers and computer equipment manufacturers and others, as required, including retailers. It is chaired by Mr. Roger Charbonneau of L'école des Hautes études, Montreal, whose services are provided through the auspices of the Bank of Canada. (b) The CPSSG reports to the Interdepartmental Steering Committee on the Electronic Payments System. (c) January 1975. However, the chairman was not appointed until September 25, 1975 and the Group's first meeting was not held until April 27, 1976. (d) No expiry date. (e) No report to date. Interim report expected by December 31, 1976. (f) Not applicable.

3. Justice Study on Legal and Consumer Issues. This Study is being conducted under the leadership of the Department of Justice and is charged with the responsibility to ensure that the legal and consumer aspects are considered and the legal framework for the payments system evolves in line with new payments methods. This Study is being conducted in consultation with interested parties, including the Departments of Finance, Communications, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Supply and Services, the Bank of Canada, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. (a) See above. (b) The Minister of Justice. (c) January 1975. (d) No expiry date. Interim report is expected by December 31, 1976. (e) No report to date. (f) Not applicable.

4. Committee on Credit/Payment Cards. This committee, chaired by an officer of the Capital Markets Division, Department of Finance, was established to examine the financial markets structure and composition policy aspects of generalized credit card systems and payment cards. (a) This Committee, in addition to the chairman, includes representatives from the Bank of Canada and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and the Department of Justice. (b) The Minister of Finance. (c) January 1975. (d) No expiry date. (e) No report to date.

COMMODITY NEGOTIATIONS

Question No. 686—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

What will be the nature of the participation of the government in negotiations and discussions which will take place during the next two and one-half years on the world commodity pact agreements which took place at the recent UNCTAD IV Conference in Kenya?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canada will take an active part in consultations and negotiations both on the individual commodities which were listed for priority attention at UNCTAD IV earlier this year, and on a Common Fund or other financing mechanism. The extent and level of our participation in individual meetings will vary according to the significance for Canada and for the developing countries of the commodity concerned. We shall be guided by the principle that both producers and consumers should be represented in any commodity agreements or associations resulting from these negotiations, and we shall continue to support the principle of joint producer-consumer responsibility for buffer stock financing within commodity agreements which establish such stocks.

STAFF IN OFFICE OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Question No. 693—Mr. Fortin:

What (a) are the names (b) were the description of duties (c) were the annual salaries of persons employed in the office of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (i) on July 8, 1974 (ii) since July 8, 1974?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—as at October 18, 1976:

(i) Exempt Staff in Ministers' office as at July 8, 1974 (Hon. H. Gray).

Order Paper Questions

(a) Name	(b)Description of duties:	(c) Salary in range of:
Aronson M.	Special Ass't	$15,000-17,500
Connolly P.	Executive Ass't	$17,500-20,000
Klie P.	Special Ass't	$10,000-12,500
Sampson A.	Clerk	$9,280-10,146
Sheffield M.	Clerk	$7,777-8,499
Vienneau M.	Research Ass't	$15,000-17,500
Wright T.	Special Ass't	$15,000-17,500
Ages J.	Special Ass't	$15,000-17,500
Lapointe F.	Private Sec.	$11,043-12,086

(ii) Exempt Staff in the Minister's offices since July 8, 1974 (Hon. A. Ouellet Hon. B. Mackasey)

Name	Description of Duties	Salary in range of:
Gilbert C.	Clerk	$4.75 per hour
Beaulieu L.	Private Sec.	up to $14,500
Dupré M.	Secretary	$10,532-11,519
McCoy R.	Special Ass't	up to $21,000
Burke T.	Special Ass't	up to $21,000
McBride M.	Executive Ass't	up to $25,000
Davidson J.	Special Ass't	up to $21,000
Leblanc P.	Special Ass't	up to $21,000
Bourgouin G.	Constituency Secretary	$8,324-9,092
Maguire L.	Secretary	$500. per month
Lafontaine R.	Special Ass't	up to $21,000
Grossman A.	Executive Ass't	up to $25,000

Exempt Staff in the Minister's Office as at October 18, 1976 (Hon. A. Abbott)

Mills C.	Private Secretary	up to 17,900
Moore, M. P.	Special Assistant	up to 22,900

SPECIAL ASSISTANTS TO MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Question No. 695—Mr. Fortin:

What (a) are the names (b) were the duties (c) were the salaries of the persons employed as special assistants to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (i) on July 8, 1974 (ii) since July 8, 1974?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Please refer to the answer to Question No. 693.

THE DIVINE LIGHT MISSION

Question No. 698—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Was "The Divine Light Mission", permitted to administer to the spiritual needs of prisoners in federal penal institutions and, if so (a) on whose authority (b) at which institutions was authority granted?

2. Was the group or their representatives permitted to use the penitentiary chapels and, if so, on whose authority?

3. Have any reports been received by the Solicitor General's Office relating to the activities of the group in the penitentiaries in which they are operating and, if so, is the general tenor of the reports neutral, commendatory or condemnatory?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. Yes, on two occasions, to visit two inmates who have since been released. (a) Institutional Administration. (b) William Head Institution.

2. No.

3. As far as the Canadian Penitentiary Service can ascertain there have been no neutral, commendatory or condemnatory reports received by the Solicitor General's office concerning The Divine Light Mission.

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK—TOLL FEES

Question No. 704—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount of tolls or fees collected by Parks Canada in the St. Lawrence Islands National Park, including the mainland section in (a) 1975 (b) 1976?

2. (a) What was the total cost of operation of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976 (b) in each case, what percentage was covered by tolls or fees?

3. If there was a decrease in the amount of tolls or fees collected between 1975 and 1976, what are the reasons accounting for such a situation?

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) 1975, $42,578. (b) 1976, $25,743.

2. (a) (i) 1975, $399,115; (ii) Forecast for 1976 up to March 31, 1977, $430,300. (b) 1975, 11 per cent; 1976, 6 per cent.

3. Decreases in 1976 are as follows: Camping: decrease of $2,595 due to the wet summer. Motor licence: decrease of $6,701 due to the fact that the entrance fee was reduced from $2.00 to $1.00 and also due to the wet summer. Docking: decrease of $7,539—a revised fee schedule allowed lower docking charges for most boats. In some cases, the fee was 50 per cent lower than in 1975. The wet summer also reduced usage.

* * *

● (1530)

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 776 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—COMPLAINTS RECEIVED

Question No. 776—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. As at March 12, 1976, what number of complaints were received by the Anti-Inflation Board concerning price increases by (a) month (b) type of complaint (c) province?

2. Have any such complaints been investigated by the Board and, if so (a) how many (b) in what manner (c) what was the disposition in each case?

3. Did such complaints result in Board action which rolled back, reduced or eliminated the increase and, if so, how many?

4. Did any complaints involve pre-notification to the Board in advance of the price increase and, if so, how many?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 1, 15 and 23?

[Text]

COPIES OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO CANADA'S CLAIM AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE

Motion No. 1—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams relating to Canada's $11 million claim against the Government of France as a result of the opting out by France of the NATO military alliance and the eviction of participating units in 1966.

Mr. Paproski: Stand.

COPIES OF ALL REPORTS OR REVIEWS RELATING TO NATIONAL FOOD POLICY

Motion No. 15—Mr. Nystrom:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of any reports or reviews with respect to a national food policy prepared by or under the direction of the group known as the DMs Ten.

Mr. Broadbent: Stand.

COPIES OF ALL TASK FORCE REPORTS, REVIEWS OR STUDIES WITH RESPECT TO LEG HOLD TRAPS

Motion No. 23—Mr. Whiteway:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of any task force reports, reviews or studies with respect to the use of leg hold traps.

Mr. Paproski: Stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed, from Monday, November 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments I would like to make about this bill—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With no restraint.

Mr. Stanfield: —with not too much restraint and a good deal of emphasis. I am particularly interested in clause 15 which, among other things, relates to the movement of grain and flour into the Atlantic ports. I hope anything I say will not be taken personally. This clause of the bill concerns the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in particular. I assure him I do not rise today to attack him. I think he is doing a sufficient job himself without any assistance from me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The bill in general is substantially an exercise in public relations. It is not that it does not affect anything. The clause I am discussing clearly has some very detrimental effects. For example, it has a substantial impact with regard to eliminating for the time being the indexing of family allowances. The point of the exercise, as I see it, is to try and pick out a few things that people will feel in order to try to persuade the Canadian public that the government is making a real effort to exercise restraint and control its expenditures.

I wish to say just a word about eliminating for the time being the indexing of family allowances. I can understand why that move by the government is so annoying to many members of this House. During the election campaign the government made a real point with regard to indexing family allowances. It now turns around a year or so later in an effort to convince the general public that it is trying to save money, and suspends the indexing. It will, of course, restore the indexing before it has to face the public again. In other words, insincerity runs throughout the whole of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The bill is insincere. It is designed to persuade the general public that this is only the tip of the iceberg, and simply indicates the kind of savings efforts the government is making. The fact that it is by and large a public relations effort does not mean that particular parts of the bill are not harmful or damaging. I refer in particular to clause 15 which relates to the Railway Act and which the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) and others have conceded will be very damaging to milling interests and others.

I have not been able to be in the House during the most of this debate, but I have read what has been said. I read the very able presentations by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

An hon. Member: Any from this side?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, I read with great care the remarks made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. As far as I can judge, he seems to think this is really a question of whether or not we want to trade with Cuba.

Mr. Goodale: That was Horner.

Mr. Stanfield: The parliamentary secretary made a great point that the members of the Conservative party should decide whether we want to trade with Cuba. I say to the parliamentary secretary that I can understand why he might adopt such a myopic attitude toward this bill.

Mr. Paproski: Good old tunnel-vision Goodale.

Mr. Stanfield: I can understand why he might find it difficult to see anything beyond the interests of his part of the country. He and his party are an endangered species in that area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) has the floor. I suggest we all listen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Besides all the things the parliamentary secretary said about Cuba, he indicated it was his understanding that the Minister of Transport would be making a statement with regard to the milling industry. He said, and I quote:

It is interesting to examine the kind of grain movement this particular section of the Railway Act—

He went on to talk about that and he said:

Bill C-19 proposes that section 272 of the Railway Act be repealed. It has been mentioned earlier today, and it is recognized by this government that such action would have an impact upon the Canadian milling industry. Various ministers of the government have been engaged in intensive discussions with representatives of the milling industry in the last few months in order to try to deal directly with the economic and industrial problems facing millers. The mechanism needed to provide the assistance they claim they require has been under intensive discussion inside government, and outside with industrial representatives. These discussions have borne fruit, Mr. Speaker. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), will, I understand, be participating later in this debate to explain to members opposite and to the industry the details which have been worked out to provide a more sensible, economic, and effective method of dealing with the problems of the milling industry.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I want to make two points in connection with this. First, this statement by the parliamentary secretary, and the concerns that he indicates the minister in charge of the wheat board has, do not go beyond the milling industry. They do not concern themselves with what this is going to mean to the Atlantic coast ports.

● (1540)

In particular, Sir, I want you to recall the history of this bill and its predecessor. We have been discussing this subject for many, many months. We were discussing it before the recess. In other words, the government put forward a predecessor to this bill, one which it now admits would do serious damage to the milling industry and which it now concedes should be revised so as to reflect proposals which the parliamentary secretary has said the Minister of Transport intends, some day, to disclose to us.

The point is that this arrogant government took us all round this subject in the course of the debate on Bill C-87 without once disclosing what its alternative would be. It asked us to accept the proposition that sections of the Railway Act be eliminated without giving us any indication of what the alternative would be. It did not even suggest it had an alternative. Now the second reading of Bill C-19 has been called. We debated it last Friday. We debated it on Monday. And we are debating it again today. This arrogant government has placed a bill before the House asking us to accept a proposition without even yet disclosing to us what alternative is necessary. And members on the other side wonder why they don't get more accomplished in the House.

Why has the minister declined to disclose his proposal? He and his parliamentary secretary knew perfectly well the degree of concern which has been felt by many of us and what is more important, by many of our constituents. Why did not the first speaker for the government on the second reading of this bill disclose quite frankly the alternative which the department intended to pursue? Why did the government take the time of the House if it did not propose to give us this information? I have to ask myself, of course, whether the Minister of Transport or the first spokesman for the government failed to put forward this proposal because they did not know what it was to be, or because they did not believe it would be effective, in any case. Or perhaps their attitude was: we intend to push this measure down the throats of the opposition, anyway.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So what's new, anyway?

Mr. Stanfield: If the minister has a concrete alternative to the section of the Railway Act in question as it affects the milling industry and the movement of grain and flour through east coast ports, I ask him again why he did not disclose it in the course of the first speech made from the government side so that we could debate government policy intelligently? As things are now, we have no choice but to oppose this bill until, at least, the minister puts forward his alternative and we have a chance to consider whether, by chance, it is a suitable one.

It is almost unbelievable that a government which purports to take parliament seriously, a government which pretends too much time is taken up in debate, should refrain from placing this alternative before the House so that we could assess it. After all, we might possibly decide that it is good enough and that it would take care of the situation. There is no way in which the government can excuse itself in this respect, no way in which it can expect us to agree to the passage of this bill on second reading. Incidentally, I understand that a press conference is going on outside this House at the present time—perhaps it is finished by now—concerning the vexed question of General Steel and Westinghouse.

Mr. Paproski: Shameful!

Mr. Stanfield: Nothing can justify this—this thoughtlessness; perhaps I should not use the word "arrogant". Nothing can excuse this ineffectiveness and indecision.

Let us see what the minister has up his sleeve. Until he discloses his alternative to clause 77 the government should withdraw the bill because, as things stand, it is simply wasting the time of the House. I cannot understand how the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), the government House leader, a member of parliament from Nova Scotia, could let this happen. I cannot believe he takes such a light view of what might happen to the milling industry in the east, and to the milling industry in Halifax in particular; to the work of the stevedores in the east coast ports and to the effect of the disappearance of the apparatus down there on a viable feed industry. I find it impossible to understand how the President of the Privy Council, if he is paying any attention to the business of the House—I regret to say this in his absence, but it has to be said—could have let this bill come forward without insisting that the Minister of Transport should inform the House what the alternative is.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Right off the top!

Mr. Stanfield: It should have been done last Friday. Unless the minister is prepared, right now, to disclose in some detail what he has in mind, this bill should no longer be debated at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise after the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) to enter the debate on Bill C-19. This is a bill which was first seen in the House last session although it did not make progress then. It is my intention to follow the indication given by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader in the second speech made from this side on the bill that a specific proposal in relation to clause 15 would be forthcoming.

The fact of the matter is that we have conducted a whole series of discussions with the milling industry over a long period concerning the maintenance of significant flour exports, with particular reference to the ports of Saint John and Halifax. When the earlier bill was on the order paper I stated it was our intention to do some serious work on the question of the movement of grain and flour which could and should take place after the old section 272 of the Railway Act was no longer in existence.

• (1550)

I should say first of all in a general way that the opposition is in the strange situation—and I heard the hon. member for Halifax again follow this pattern—of looking at those matters in the bill which were temporary restraint measures in non-spending, where in other words the specific item being cut was being cut for only one year, and labelling that somehow as a lack of sincerity. To save money in one year is a specific thing being done. Perhaps what he was highlighting was that many of these programs such as family allowances, which were created and improved by Liberal governments, are considered very important by us in this country and it was only with regret that we felt that the balance of fiscal restraint required any cut in that particular program for even one year. But when we come to other clauses of the bill which are permanent in their nature in terms of expenditure restraint, hon. members oppose them on a basis of the politics which perhaps originally made then exist without, I think, a very thorough investigation of their impact.

If the government on behalf of the taxpayers in this country wants to cut expenditures, as it does, one of the clearest places to go to work is where expenditures have unfortunate impact and where the spending is unwise or leads to extra cost than is otherwise the case. This is a general issue which, as hon. members know, I am facing in transportation from one end of the country to the other. It is a general proposition which we are having to follow in order to try to bring transportation to a modern state, in order to have the dollars to invest in transportation most effectively. We have to stop spending those dollars on transportation which in some way is ineffective.

One of the general propositions is that when costs are hidden by being charged to the taxpayer we actually quite frequently end up incurring more transportation costs than would otherwise be the case. We are apt to have a heavier movement of goods or over greater distances than would otherwise be the case. I notice that this theme is taken up in a very effective way by the spokesman for small business in this country, John Bullock, who emphasizes that the very costs of transportation will gradually, if they are indeed allowed to be borne in the sector where they occur, again encourage the development of small business and smaller enterprises. I think the theory he stresses is that while some economies of scale result from bigness one of the problems with that kind of single location production may very often be transportation costs, which result in the redistribution of processed goods rather than the direction of the raw materials as quickly as possible to a particular point for their production into final form and their use and consumption closer to that particular point. He talks about costs. But of course for people doing business, rates very often are the guiding principle rather than actual costs.

If the taxpayer is asked to bear part of the cost, then those rates are lower than the real cost, and the impact of regionalization of smaller businesses being developed is less likely to be felt. In other words it is not particularly because we want to adopt a principle of the shipper being the more appropriate person to pay the costs than the taxpayer, that we maintain that it is better if that is so, but rather the reason it is better is that when it is borne more directly by the person considering the shipment of goods it is likely that the least costly alternative will be followed, and the total amount spent on transportation will be lower. That really means it is not just a matter of who pays—between the taxpayer and the person who is asking for the service or using it—but whether the lowest possible amount is in fact incurred. That, in other words, says that we would want to protect against excessive costs being charged by any mode of transportation. I am talking about real costs which are incurred and which therefore have to be paid by someone if the goods are shipped at all.

I use the example in the travel modes of the contrast between the bus, the train, the airplane, and the car where by and large the bus pays more fully its own way while each of the others are subsidized to different degrees. Why should we encourage a particular person to choose one mode against the other if, left to his own devices, he would prefer not to spend the extra money in order to save the time that, for example, the airplane would allow him to save?

If you had been able to give a man $50 and give him his choice as to whether or not he pays it out on plane fare, or spends $15 to go the same distance by bus and have the $35 for other purposes, then it would be a fair choice for him in terms of the value he puts upon his time and on the other things he could have with that $35 which is left over. But if we put different levels of subsidies or taxpayers' money on different modes of transportation then we really say to him that he does not have the choice of the alternative use of that money. We put out taxpayers' money if he goes one way, but do not put out anything for him if he goes the other way. If we thereby induce him to take a method of transportation that he would not on his own choose, we end up also having to pay additional money for airports and facilities which become over-burdened, and for which of course great expenditures are required. That is an example which I think is particularly pertinent in any area where transportation methods are sufficiently mature, to use the term which is in use, so that a legitimate alternative and choice can be offered to individuals.

Where there are not enough people moving between points, such as in a remote area, or where for developmental reasons only two modes of transportation are possible, different arguments can apply, and of course we stress at all times that it is our hope as we see these changes of real costs being reflected and that remote and developmental areas and regions will be kept very much in mind. This example of higher costs being employed when money is paid out was outlined by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), when he described how the existence of the "at and east" rates meant that particular money from the treasury was available for a very particular movement of grain and flour, and that that involved several more handlings of the grain and flour than might be required in other means of transportation.

To take grain as an example, it goes by truck to an elevator in the prairies, then proceeds by train to Thunder Bay, then is placed in an elevator, then is placed on a ship, then is transmitted to the bay ports of Georgian Bay and is there put into an elevator; then it is put on a train and is moved to Saint John or Halifax. That has to be compared with an alternative movement which would be direct by train from a prairie point, to Saint John or Halifax without another handling of the grain in between. So long as the subsidy is on one of the many handling methods it is obvious that that method may continue to be used where it is simply uneconomical in terms of cost and yet, because of the rate being important to the person shipping the goods, where with the subsidy it continues to make sense. We are aware, of course, that as changes are made from a system where subsidies exist to a system where charges are more adequately reflected, so judgments can be made on the basis of real costs, adjustment problems will be involved.

● (1600)

It will not always be possible simply to make a change having no regard in the intervening period for the effect upon particular industries, consumers or producers, individual human beings who will have predicated their practices on the existence of the pattern. Therefore, if changes in various freight charges are made and we find that industries were established on the basis of the artificial situation, we will be concerned about the impact in the intervening period on people accustomed to the old rate structures. That is why in this case, while we were satisfied that the retention of the rate was a cost to this country which was out of proportion to any benefit that flowed back to it because it was simply an encouragement to use additional labour and capital for non-productive purposes in moving grain to a particular place, and while it was desirable to change that, it was worth examining together with the flour milling industry the question of their continued ability to meet export commitments and the export sales which they would like to make. These discussions went on for a long period of time and have only come to an end now.

Today I received from the millers an indication that the proposal which we have been developing would be accepted by them and that they would indeed conclude that with it, at least for several years, the flour exporting business will be secure. The proposed plan makes available to the milling industry $9 million in the first year, decreasing it progressively over a five year period. It relates to flour for commercial export and for multilateral aid. We will work out the exact formula with the milling industry for the payment of this amount of money in relation to the hundredweights of flour exported in these two categories, considering, so far as we can, in proportion to hundredweight the impact that the removal of the "at and east" rate, or the removal of section 272 of the act, has upon the business of the particular miller.

Many of the mills in Canada are working at full capacity, particularly in certain places in central Canada and in the east. This would ensure that mills in other locations which, in the short run, might have been threatened by the simple removal of this section, will continue to compete for the export market and for multilateral aid shipments.

I am confident that the method of moving this flour and grain will change in time, and that is the reason for the progressive reduction in the amount of money contained in the proposal. Adjustments can be made where the possible elimination of stop-offs, the extra handling of flour that is involved may allow direct shipments of flour from mills at a prairie location through to Saint John or Halifax, much as has been discussed in relation to grain. In any case the millers are confident that for two years their exports will be assured, and while they wish to reserve the right to reconsider the situation at that time, I am confident that we will find that the adjustments which are required will take place and that, to the extent that exports are possible at that time, they will be continued by the flour industry without the permanent existence of "at and east" rates.

In a similar way I should say we have continued our work on the concept of moving grain by train direct from the prairies to the elevators in Saint John and Halifax which, over the years, have done a significant winter handling of grain. While these discussions are not completed, I believe that they look promising. I have seen some of the cost analyses and I believe that there is a real possibility of the railways and the Canadian Wheat Board coming to an arrangement which will allow this movement to continue in future years. I will certainly encourage the Canadian Wheat Board and the railways to get trains into operation in this way for the good of the whole country.

I have had many expressions of concern from members in the House. Among my own colleagues I can think immediately of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), and the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers), who are concerned about flour production and export. In the case of the latter two, they are concerned about the movement of the flour through the ports in their provinces. I believe that this important action will tend to ensure that that will happen, but at the same time adjustments to the removal of section 272 will take place which will allow flour and grain to be exported from Canada at lower cost to the people of Canada in total. As I said at the beginning, that is the important objective in shifting the cost from the taxpayer to the user. The purpose is not particularly to reduce the burden of the taxpayer, who after all is another Canadian to be considered, but because the shift tends to mean that the costs will be lower because with all costs having to be borne by the person who makes the choice as to the method of transportation and the technique of developing business, he will tend to favour the lower cost alternative wherever one exists.

The interesting thing is that quite often as we look at the transportation system of this country we find that taxpayer subsidies instead of user charges have often had a counter-developmental tendency, that is to say, they have actually, as John Bullock tends to say, discouraged small businesses and enterprise, and quite often they have encouraged the movement of goods out of Canada in bulk or unprocessed form. It would be better if these goods were processed in areas where, according to our policies aimed at developing remote areas such as the north, the west and the Atlantic area of this country, we would like the employment to be.

I therefore ask hon. members to recognize this problem as an assurance regarding the movement of our flour, about which they were concerned, and to see the advantage of taking this further step in removing an artificial subsidy on transportation which has had the impact of producing higher transportation costs than required for the movement of Canadian products, and therefore a net loss for all Canadians.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate on Bill C-19 I want to say, first of all, that I lend my support to the very timely remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), especially those portions of his remarks that dealt with the history of this bill as it relates to Bill C-87. It is perhaps unfortunate that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), in making the remarks which he just completed, did not make the same comparison. I am sure that it would have been very helpful in sustaining a much more knowledgeable debate on this subject, and the remarks on flour milling which he just enunciated and which evidently related to a meeting with the Canadian National Millers' Association, I presume today, would have been very much appreciated by all of us who are deeply concerned about this subject if they had been made much earlier.

● (1610)

However, I want to proceed with my comments on this subject. This is a very important piece of legislation, if only because it was carried over from the previous session when it was known as Bill C-87. My remarks will be quite specific and about only two aspects covered by clauses 14 and 15 relating to the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the "at and east" freight rate for grain and flour. The western grain stabilization clause, to quote the explanation in the bill:

> . . . would authorize the Minister of Finance to postpone crediting amounts in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the Stabilization Account under Section 41 of the Eastern Grain Stabilization Act until a later time, at which time interest would also be credited.

Since this bill claims certain "restraints of government spending", the government obviously feels that this specific clause will indeed do just that. Surely it is quite clear that this device is only a bookkeeping entry which postpones the government's 4 per cent contribution. In the interim this contribution very likely will be spent elsewhere. At least, that seems to be the implied intent. Who knows, maybe it is for promoting the metric system for grain or for some other such project.

The grain stabilization program is a new program which has had its problems being accepted by western grain producers. In spite of the two for one contribution by the government over producers, there are still some 35,000 prairie grain producers who have stayed out of this scheme. One of the reasons for this must be a lack of confidence or distrust in the concept and, of course, in the government. Certainly clause 14 seems to promote such distrust. Why should farmers not ask for the same postponement deal for them? Why not credit their 2 per cent share to their account and allow them to use the money elsewhere? I think that makes sense, if the other proposal does.

I want to devote most of my comments to clause 15 of this bill. There are only eight words in this clause which are: "Section 272 of the Railway Act is repealed". What a story there is behind those eight words! The clause would abolish the subsidy on the movement of export flour and grain through eastern ports and lift the freeze for grain rates set at 1960 levels, and for flour rates set at 1966 levels. If permitted, this action would strike very close to home for me.

The flour milling industry was one of the earliest in my home city of Medicine Hat, in southern Alberta. It was at its peak some 20 years ago, although it started in the early part of this century. There were three thriving flour mills in Medicine Hat employing about 300 people. There were also secondary jobs, mostly in transportation. Now, thanks to the falloff in export demand for flour, our local production is off by perhaps 30 per cent, and now the industry employs only about 150 people. One of the three mills has been closed for a number of years. It may or may not be significant that this mill which has been closed, is presently being converted into a combination hotel and pub. What a solid foundation and structure it will have! No doubt its name will include the phrase "Old Mill" or some other connotation of that. I am not downgrading Medicine Hat's newest hotel and pub, and I am sure it will be a successful venture, but the point is that, with the removal of these "at and east" flour rates, our two remaining flour mills may face this same option.

This proposal would hurt western flour mills the worst, since their products must be transported to the east coast for final export shipments, mostly to Cuba. Our western mills would be hurt on a year-round basis, not just in winter when the Seaway is closed.

Canada's flour exports have been dropping consistently for the last 20 years, in spite of an increase in world demand for flour. That increase in world demand is up by over 50 per cent. In 1954 Canadian millers were exporting about 20,142,824 cwts. of flour annually. By 1975 these exports were down to about 8,426,370 cwts., and that is considerably more than 50 per cent. During this same interval the number of active Canadian flour mills dropped off from a peak of 78 to the current 31. This dramatic downturn in Canadian flour production and export is due mainly to subsidy policies of foreign governments, especially the United States and the European Economic Community.

With the exception of these "at and east" rates Canada has chosen not to give further assistance to our flour milling industry. In addition, Canadian export flour always has had to contend with higher seaboard costs compared with our chief competitor, the United States.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

The repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act represents increased railway rates from $17.64 to $22.05 per metric ton on flour exports, and that, in the opinion of the Canadian National Millers' Association, and I quote, "will virtually guarantee the speedy demise of Canada's already eroded export flour trade", and even more so, that of our western flour mills.

If this proposed action to bring an end to the "at and east" freight rates is an example of the user pay concept of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), then it is most apparent that this action will impose a cruel hardship on a small sector of our total Canadian industry, which is completely unwarranted and very shortsighted.

The 1961 statutory flour rates were established for four principal reasons: first, to encourage the continued use of existing eastern seaports; second, to help keep Canadian flour mills competitive in world markets; third, to complement, promote, and assist in the expansion of Canada's grain industry, especially in western Canada; and fourth, to benefit our entire Canadian economy with obvious spinoff benefits, not the least of which is improving Canada's balance of trade position with regard to our manufactured goods.

Fifteen years later these same reasons are still every bit as valid as they were back in 1961. Surely in its zeal for restraint of government spending this portion of the bill cannot really be considered as such because of the total net effect it will have on loss of production and loss of jobs to our entire economy, and let us not forget the loss of what is left of our export flour markets. That is why I say the policy is short-sighted. Russia has made it clear that in its opinion, even before this bill becomes law, Canada is no longer competitive in world markets. The Russians have also indicated they will look elsewhere for Cuba's flour supply or, as another alternative, will finance their own flour mills in Cuba. In any event, the result for Canada is less export demand for our flour which is produced by an industry that worked at only 76.6 per cent of its capacity in the 1975 crop year. I would think the biggest part of that shortage in capacity is in the flour mills in western Canada.

• (1620)

We should not overlook another aspect of the implications of this freight rate increase. The new higher rates will be commercial tariff rates, not subject to the same government scrutiny as are the existing compensatory rates.

In his contribution to the debate last Friday the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) said the Minister of Transport would be contributing to the debate later, and indeed we have just heard him. The parliamentary secretary said that the minister would explain to the opposition, and to the industry, the details which have been worked out to provide a more sensible, economic, and effective method of dealing with the problems of th milling industry. It is unfortunate that these remarks were not made at the beginning of the debate, for rather obvious reasons.

The minister has just finished saying that the net effect of these would be perhaps to lower the cost of transportation to the Canadian people. I wonder at what expense. If it means the demise of the flour milling industry in western Canada, and I see this possibility, then it is a short-sighted policy. I am sure there are ongoing discussions on this important matter with the Canadian National Millers' Association, and the minister indicated that. I hope that when the bill goes before the standing committee the association will be called so that we can hear their evidence on why the Canadian flour industry cannot continue to compete with export subsidies offered by other countries when ours are being eliminated.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is appropriate to point out an inconsistency between the probable net result of clause 15, if implemented, and the recent proposal for future action by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) when he announced a $358 million program to stimulate future employment some time next year. Surely clause 15 would have just the opposite effect—that of reducing employment in the flour milling industry and other ancillary activities. I have to come to the conclusion that clause 15 should be deleted from the bill.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take much of the time of the House this afternoon, but I was prompted to try to get in a few minutes on the particular subject discussed by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who just spoke. Before doing so, however, may I make a few general remarks.

I am continually amazed when hon. members opposite from all parties, but particularly the official opposition, speak with great expression of concern about government spending, overspending, waste, spillage, and so on. When we come to deal with that general question, however, as we do in a bill like C-19, they can see nothing right or proper in it. They speak with forked tongues, as the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) says.

This is a very important bill, Mr. Speaker, and is of concern to all members regardless of their political affiliation. It is important that the tax dollars we spend are well spent. A bill of this kind affords an opportunity to review some of our programs. It is always painful to reduce or delete a government program, whether it is the Company of Young Canadians or any other. There are many good things to be said for the expenditures as well as the criticism of them.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat referred to two subjects that I should like to deal with briefly. One is the fact that through this bill the government's contribution to the Grain Stabilization Fund will be deferred. He was correct when he pointed out that there is absolutely no change in the government's obligation to make payments into that fund. I do not think it is a fair comparison to say, as perhaps farmers can justifiably say, "Why do you not do the same thing with our 2 per cent?" On the one hand we are talking about a government commitment in the legislation to double the total producer contribution into the fund each year and we are asking, in trying to find government revenues and put them to best use, for the right to defer those payments. There is certainly no question about the government's obligation in this respect.

Perhaps my hon. friend would agree that the time may not be very distant when we might be making payments out of that fund in view of the current price of wheat. I am glad there is a stabilization plan in effect that will help meet that situation, when and if we run into it, as we have in the past. The clouds on the horizon indicate we might be back in that situation sooner than we would like. The government's obligation has not changed in any way, however.

I regret that more than 30,000 western producers have decided to opt out of the plan. I do not put that down to the fact that farmers are not prepared to accept the trust or confidence of this government; however, they have been listening to some of the chatter and nonsense in the discussions that led up to this bill, although I certainly cannot say that of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. Many members of the NDP and provincial NDP governments, however, have belittled the government's effort to shore up the grain farming industry in the west. If a number of farmers are opting out I would say it is due to the kind of negativism that preceded the debate on the grain stabilization bill.

The other point raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat referred to the "at and east" rates and what is happening to the flour milling industry in eastern Canada, and the downgrading of that industry that has taken place over the years in western Canada. I am sure he is much more familiar with this matter than I, but I have seen mills close in Saskatoon over the last few years and certainly that is a concern of the government as well as of my hon. friend. I do not see how the "at and east" rates could influence that one way or the other, however. It cannot in western Canada. I suspect my hon. friend had his speech written on the subject before he came into the House.

• (1630)

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), in response to a question of legitimate concern raised by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) in his remarks, spelled out that a subsidy will be paid to the milling industry to make sure it will not be harmed. Further, I suggest that the present method of subsidy payment which involves several seemingly unnecessary stops in the movement of the grain from western Canada is not a method the hon. member for Medicine Hat would wish to see continued, since it rules out further possibilities. For instance, I am going to Rosetown on Friday to attend, with many others, the opening of a new inland terminal. I know that this subject will raise political arguments with my hon. friends opposite; but it represents a new, innovative approach, and a different way of doing something. We shall try using the new system and are looking at it. Under the "at and east" rates there is no room for that kind of operation to succeed at any point.

I hope the hon. member for Medicine Hat will review the remarks of the Minister of Transport this afternoon, reconsider his own position and agree with me that in deleting that particular section of the Railway Act we are not harming the milling industry of eastern Canada or western Canada but are attempting to apply the subsidy in a different way, in a manner which will not rule out other methods of operation.

I suggest that members from western Canada on both sides of the House will support a concept providing for the direct shipment of grain to Saint John and Halifax during the winter months. The Canadian Wheat Board and the railways have such a concept in mind. If that kind of grain movement is viable, surely members on both sides of the House want to encourage the Wheat Board and the railways to bring the trains into operation, hopefully before the year is over. Let us try some innovations and try to get a better return for the subsidies we pay in transport. Hopefully we shall be able to do some new things which will bring better and beneficial results to users at the western end of the system, and shippers, and to receivers at the other end, be they domestic consumers or exporters.

I hope hon. members opposite will support the proposals put forward this afternoon. I am sure the hon. member for Halifax will after he reads Hansard, for I am certain the measures we are considering deserve his support.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the introduction of Bill C-19 on second reading gives us a chance to discuss specific recommendations the government has brought forward in this omnibus bill, and a chance to criticize government expenditures.

At the outset of my remarks let me say that the subsidy for flour is not well understood, one reason being the change in the rules whereby consideration of estimates was taken out of this House. I think this bill could have been discussed with greater accuracy and knowledge if the estimates had been considered in this House. As it is they are considered in committee, and the committee is a government organ. Further, in committee one cannot examine adequately all government spending, and it is impossible for the opposition to pin ministers or officials down in a way which was possible in previous years.

Remember, this bill deals with relatively minuscule amounts of money. This is all the more apparent if one remembers that the three levels of government in this country spend over 50 per cent of our Gross National Product. We hear much talk of emotional issues like bilingualism but forget that federal government spending is responsible for a great deal of the divisiveness apparent in the country at present. Government policies have harmed the financial stance of this country and imposed serious strains on confederation. As I say, much of our divisiveness is the result of Ottawa's attempt to impose a uniform level of health, welfare, and education on this country. There has been an attempt at income redistribution, as is evident if one examines the family allowances program. The government felt that in theory every person should be entitled to the same level of social services across the country. The theory has not worked well and has created stresses and strains in Canadian confederation.

[Mr. McIsaac.]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has just returned from Japan, suggests that we need increased trade; he also suggested that after the government had laid the groundwork it was up to business people to take over. Considering that all levels of government take more than 50 per cent of our Gross National Product in taxes, some of which they try to redistribute, and considering that Crown corporations like Air Canada, Canadian National, provincial hydro commissions, Petro-Canada and others all have a big stake in how this country is run, the emphasis the Prime Minister places on what private enterprise can do is amusing.

It has been said that if any government of a country takes through taxes more than 35 per cent of Gross National Product the free market in that country will not function. We see an example in the United Kingdom where the standard of living has been forced down because of the breakdown of the economy. This in turn will lead to lower productivity which will be reflected in a still lower standard of living for all in that country.

If I may turn to family allowances, I note an article in a recent edition of the Financial Post datelined Ottawa which suggests that top people in the Income Tax Department, under the direction of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the deputy minister, are looking at the federal government's income transfer programs to decide which ones can be removed or transferred to the income tax system. It is hoped that this might curtail the large number of bureaucracies required to administer existing social programs. The idea is that Canadians would become their own bureaucrats, as it were, by virtue of a new set of deductions; and that those earning too little to pay tax would receive a direct payment from the government.

Although the article suggests that all aspects of transfer payments are being considered, it is obvious that the government has narrowed its consideration. For instance, perhaps through the tax system it could provide an oil subsidy for low income people; or money could be provided mainly for family allowances and old age pensions. Perhaps this amendment to the Family Allowances Act is the forerunner of some such provision.

When the white paper on taxation was debated, Ontario suggested tax shelters for poor people but the government of the day was not susceptible to such arguments or did not view them with favour. Theoretically, although such a program might slash several billion dollars from federal government spending, the program would not be without its costs. There might be some saving in reality, but the net costs of the program would still need to be met. The only saving that would come about would be a saving in bureaucracy. What the plan really looks at is whether there would be a form of guaranteed income or tax credit to give the impression that great savings are being made. This runs into problems at the time of elections when governments like to give out goodies in the way of new programs. At the present time the government is under fire for spending too much.

● (1640)

I want to detail some of the problems of a negative income tax or a minimum income such as has been proposed. In my town there was a joint dominion-provincial plan whereby the residents were given a minimum income. After careful analysis of families, the two governments paid a supplementary income to those who were employed in order that they might have an acceptable standard of living. This was an interesting experiment, and it certainly had its problems. According to newspaper reports, the federal government cancelled the program. There was also a pilot project in the north end of Winnipeg. Most pilot projects were cancelled after the government spent a reputed $17 million, according to press reports.

While there are many unfortunate social events flowing out of a minimum income, as I observed it in my community, it is too bad it was terminated before a final decision could be made and the test project analyzed as to the effects of giving a guaranteed income to a controlled group of people. A scientific assessment could have been made of the project.

It is interesting to observe a minimum income project. In the one which I observed there was a definite upgrading of the standard of living for those on low income. As I understand it, in order to qualify you could not be on welfare, but working a good part of the time. Some people left full time jobs for part time employment. Others, faced with the prospect of losing unemployment insurance benefits and a minimum income reduced the amount of their part time work in order to continue enjoying the benefits. Labour was somewhat scarce for unattractive jobs such as pick and shovel jobs, or other jobs people did not want because they were dirty, messy, or at the low end of the work schedule. It allowed people to have a higher standard of living without increasing their production or income.

One of the obvious problems in a rural area in particular was how to deal with the self employed. It seemed difficult. As I understood the official report, it was difficult to assess the income of self employed people. Money could be earned through the sale of produce. Income could be gained by making sales in the names of other members of the family and not reporting this. An enormous amount of administration was required. It is unfortunate that the program was terminated before the scientific results could be ascertained.

The financial outlook for this country, and indeed for the western world, is serious. This was voiced by Mr. Arthur Smith when speaking in Winnipeg last week. He suggested there is more than an even chance for a severe economic slump. The present upturn is weak and we could well slide back to an economic depression. He suggested that Canada would suffer more than most other countries because it is in a generally very weak domestic and international economic position.

Conflicting views of the economic outlook are causing growing uncertainties amongst consumers, businessmen, and government officials. Further, gloom is spreading in the business and financial centres of Europe over the prospect of the world economy to tackle the problems of debt management, sluggish growth, and rising unemployment. Britain and Italy with their problems are little worse off than a whole series of industrialized countries such as France, Denmark, Ireland, Belgium, Australia and New Zealand.

The poor nations of the developing world are in even worse shape with a mountain of $135 billion in debts and no one can see how this can be paid back. It has been suggested that if the debts to the private banks are not forgiven, there could well be a collapse.

I wish to speak for a moment about grain stabilization. This bill seeks a delay on putting money into the fund. It has been stated that 30,000 wheat board permit holders have opted out of the plan. This is because it has not been on a person-to-person basis. It can be said that any farmer likely to retire within five to ten years has little to gain by staying in the plan. That may be wrong, but I say to the parliamentary secretary that this concern has been voiced to me many times. The plan is seen as an over-all plan for communities and the economy at large.

If a farmer is not in a wheat growing area, and if wheat is not the main grain which he is growing, he is faced with the problem of payment for his grains, primarily barley, wheat and flax, which may be quite remunerative, being made on the basis of how the industry fares with regard to how much it grows and what it sells for, if it does sell.

If the plan had been for the individual, and I see no reason why it could not have been, many more people would have been willing to accept it. For those nearing the end of their farming career, the plan provides little way of getting their money out when they retire. This is one of the major difficulties in connection with the plan.

● (1650)

Second, stabilization plans are made in advance on the basis of past experience; when the time comes to use them they are often found to be deficient, circumstances having changed. We find this happening in the case of grain stabilization arrangements. The $25,000 limit applicable to an individual under grain stabilization is not nearly sufficient, and unless it is raised the reaction of many farmers will be less than favourable.

I should like to mention now a development in the selling of grain which is causing considerable comment in the farm community. The grain stabilization program is, of course, vitally concerned. The Wheat Board, in its assessment of selling prospects for the coming year, concluded that the opportunities available to us were pretty slim. In these circumstances the board made special sales to the private grain trade, there being few government-to-government contracts available—the outlook for sales to the Chinese and to the Russians did not seem very promising; perhaps the Chinese, preoccupied with the changes taking place within their political system, are waiting before they buy. In any case it is reported that forward sales covering 165 million bushels were made to private grain traders at a low price of around $3.75 a bushel. But the private grain trade has hedged. The grain is still in the elevators and on the farms. The traders are betting that the price of grain will rise.

It is significant that the sales are made by Canada on the exchanges in Chicago and Kansas City, taking advantage of facilities in those places which are not available to the Wheat Board in this country. But it is not possible for dealers to hedge without a cost being incurred. The profit will be made by those who took the hedge. Supposedly the Wheat Board sold on the market to preserve the price. However, the action of the board had the effect of lowering the price of wheat on the Chicago market where prices are largely set.

I notice that Mr. Kristjanson, one of the commissioners, suggested that United States traders were too pessimistic with regard to the price likely to be paid for wheat on world markets in the coming year. But, surely the Wheat Board was pessimistic when it sold almost one third of its normal deliveries on the private market, an action which appears to contribute a significant departure from normal Wheat Board practice. The course followed by the Wheat Board is one of great interest. It means that the board is using directly, or more likely indirectly, the facilities of the Chicago and Kansas City grain exchanges. For those who are interested in orderly marketing this process seems to be at odds with the stated aims of the board. I am looking forward to hearing an explanation from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Speaking of the flour subsidy I will say only that the events surrounding it are an illustration of what happens when we try to upgrade resources. According to what some people tell us, the best thing for Canada would be to export our flour in the form of baked goods and sliced bread. But we cannot do that, as we have now found out. We have gradually lost our markets for flour over the years because one of the first things countries do when they become industrialized is set up flour mills and grind their own grain. Some economists, as I have just mentioned, assert that we should export only products which have been upgraded. The lesson with respect to flour is a timely one. I followed with interest what the minister had to say on this subject and, for my own part, I hope we can keep our flour exports at a satisfactory level because, during periods of slow wheat sales, income from sales of flour has been of great benefit to western farmers.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us outlines various changes to implement the government's restraint program announced some time ago. I want to speak about a number of those changes, two in particular. I want to call attention to what I consider to be a blatant lack of leadership by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in ensuring restraint in this country and also to another one of his policies, namely, the subsidy referred to by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), the "at and east" rates.

We have heard a great deal about restraint in the last few years. There was the anti-inflation program brought down by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his now famous Thanksgiving evening address. There are now to be changes in a whole series of programs, the stopping of indexation in family allowances, the elimination of Information Canada, cuts in the LIP program, the OFY program and the like. We also have a minister of transportation—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Minister of Transport.

Mr. Nystrom: We also have a Minister of Transport—and this is very relevant because it deals with the "at and east" rates and it deals with the farm stabilization bill—who is talking about the user-pay concept in the transportation field. He is saying that those who use a transportation vehicle, be it a train, a plane or what have you, should pay for it; they should not be subsidized. He is talking about scaling down the Crow rates which subsidize the movement of western grain. This bill eliminates section 272 of the Railway Act and would eliminate a subsidy called the "at and east" rates, a move which could hurt people in the Atlantic provinces.

All this comes from a minister who is not setting a very good example to the rest of the country, a minister who in the last three years has spent some $742,000 on government aeroplanes, a minister who has cost the taxpayers more than any other minister in the cabinet by flying around on government aeroplanes whether Viscounts or jet aircraft. That type of thing warrants a few words when we are talking about restraint and about a bill introduced by a minister who intends to eliminate programs which affect citizens in my constituency and, indeed, right across the country.

I do not think the minister had to spend so much money in flying around the country. He, like other ministers and party leaders, possesses a first class air pass enabling him to fly anywhere in Canada if he wishes. He has not only flown long distances in government aircraft, he has flown short distances as well. Some people say, and I agree, that on long flights, from here to Vancouver, for example, the minister should perhaps travel in a government plane where he could confer with his aides or study something important in terms of government policy. I do not argue with that but I would think when a minister makes a short flight, such as between here and Montreal or Toronto, there is no reason in the world, provided commercial flights are available—and there are many between here and Toronto and Montreal—that any minister should have to fly there on a government Jetstar.

• (1700)

I wish to take a few minutes to place on the record these figures which I think are scandalous. I have here a return to the questions asked by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), who I think did the country a great favour in placing these questions on the order paper. There was a flight made on May 26, 1976, from Ottawa to Montreal on a Jetstar. This flight to Montreal and back cost $1,212. I heard the minister talking about buses and people travelling on buses. If he is going to advise the ordinary citizen to travel on buses why does he not do some of that himself between here and Montreal? Then on July 21, 1976, the minister went from here to St. Catharines on a Jetstar at a cost of $1,853. The next is September in the same year when the minister flew from here to Toronto on a Jetstar at a cost of $1,940.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is cash, not Chargex.

Mr. Nystrom: As the hon. member says, that is cash and not Chargex, and this minister has a pass on Air Canada. You no sooner get in the air and have a drink and a sandwich before you land in Toronto or Montreal. There is no reason why the minister would need a private executive jet to make that flight, especially when he talks about restraint. This minister shows the least restraint of any Canadian. I think that is totally repugnant.

There is another flight from here all the way to Montreal on a Viscount on August 1, 1975, at a cost of $1,235. Then there is another flight on November 10, 1975, between Ottawa and Montreal and Toronto at a cost of $2,745. Yet there are dozens of flights back and forth between these two cities, as well as plenty of trains and buses. We then have January 14, 1976. This time it is a flight from Ottawa to Montreal on a Viscount at a cost of $1,235.

Then we have the super flight which took place on February 25, 1976. I am sure all hon. members will be interested in this one. This is a flight from Ottawa to Toronto on a Viscount at a cost of $8,027. This is a flight to Toronto and back by the Minister of Transport when there are many commercial flights going to Toronto and when he could have saved the taxpayers several thousands of dollars on a 50-minute flight. I think that is totally scandalous and something every Canadian should be ashamed of in respect of a minister of the Crown who is supposed to be a leader in the country.

There then is another flight on March 24, 1976, from Ottawa to Toronto in a Viscount at a cost of $1,958. There is another on April 23, 1974, again from Ottawa to Toronto costing $2,105. Again on August 28, 1974, there is another flight to Toronto on a Viscount at a cost of $2,175. On November 22, 1974, there is a flight from Ottawa to Toronto on a Viscount at a cost of $2,105, and another on December 10, 1974, Ottawa-Montreal, again a ridiculously short haul, at a cost to the taxpayers of $1,375. On December 27, 1974, a flight is listed from Ottawa to Toronto at a cost of $1,810, and another on January 31, 1975 Ottawa-Toronto, at a cost of $1,620. Again on January 16, 1975, we have Ottawa-Toronto at a cost of $1,957.

These are actual expenditures as tabled in the House by the departmental people in the Department of Transport in answer to the question put by the hon. member for Leeds. Here is a minister who is telling us that the users should pay the cost of transportation, and who is saying to the farmers that the Crowsnest rates which are important to western farmers probably have to go, and who says in this bill that the "at and east" rates have to go in terms of shipments of flour and wheat from central and western Canada to the Atlantic provinces. I do not think that is good enough for a minister of the Crown. I think this minister is being very hypocritical and dishonest with the people of this country.

Not only do we have these short flights which, as I said, the minister could have done on a commercial jet, taking his aides along with him and saving thousands of dollars, but we also have several flights taken by this minister which have cost the country over $10,000. First of all, on March 13, 1976, there is a flight from Ottawa to Toronto and Vancouver on a Jetstar at a cost of $11,233. We have another on July 15, 1976, from Ottawa to Saskatoon to Edmonton to Saskatoon on a Viscount at a cost of $12,180. The minister flopped around from Saskatoon to Edmonton and back to Saskatoon. One is only up in the air long enough to have a sandwich and a drink from the time one leaves Saskatoon until one lands in Edmonton, and the same thing going back. Yet the minister spent $12,180 of the taxpayer's money when he had a pass on Air Canada and could have taken his aides with him on a commercial flight and saved thousands of dollars for the people of this country. That is bad enough, but it becomes worse when this minister preaches restraint and suggests to the farmers that the user should pay the total cost of the transportation bill.

I could go on and on listing the flights the minister has taken at public expense. We have one on August 24, 1975, when the minister flew from Saskatoon to Quebec City on a Jetstar at a cost of $13,900. As I said at the beginning, it has cost about three quarters of a million dollars in the last three years to fly this minister across the country. He is the most extravagant minister in the House of Commons. There are many ministers across the way who are very frugal in respect of the use of government aircraft. I have seen many ministers travel on Air Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: The former minister of national defence always flew on a regular aircraft.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes. Other ministers often fly on regular aircraft. This minister thinks that his time is valuable. Perhaps it is valuable. I would agree with that, but I do not think the taxpayers should shell out a quarter of a million dollars a year for the minister's time even if it is valuable. I do not think he should spend $7,000 on a weekend in Saskatoon when he could use his pass to travel on Air Canada. If the government wishes the people of Canada to take it seriously, surely it should start showing some leadership.

The members of the government should set an example in the way they conduct themselves and their own affairs. I realize that most ministers across the House conduct themselves in this way.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In their private lives certainly they are very frugal.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, and I think most of them in their public affairs are very frugal. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), after going on a Seagram's plane, learned a lesson. I understand that now he mostly flies on commercial flights.

● (1710)

I wish the Minister of Transport would learn from some of his colleagues how to conduct himself. I want to point out that not only could he have flown to Saskatoon by air and brought a few aides with him and saved several thousands of dollars a trip, but for a $7,000 bill for travelling between Ottawa and Saskatoon and back you could go 75 times by passenger train from Ottawa to Saskatoon and back.

Mr. MacFarlane: How many times have you gone by train?

Mr. Nystrom: I often travel by train. I am just drawing an analogy.

Mr. MacFarlane: Nobody goes by train these distances since Stanley went 100 years ago.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to ask whether any member in this House can justify the Minister of Transport on any other minister going by Jetstar from here to Montreal and return. If any member can justify that, I invite him to rise and speak now. The Minister of Transport has done that time and time again. You could almost run to Montreal, and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) could do so in a couple of hours, or you could travel by bus in two hours, and certainly you could run in two or three hours.

Here is this guy who talks about restraint and who says to my farmers that the Crowsnest rates will probably have to go, and who tells them that the user should pay the total cost of transportation, setting the most extravagant example of any minister. I say to hon. members that Jimmy Carter, the president-elect of the U.S., had the chance to take a government aircraft to his vacation spot a few weeks ago, but he said that was not proper and he was going to pay his own way when on vacation because he was not going on official government business. If that is the practice in the United States, why cannot the ministers in this government set that type of example to our people? It is beyond me why they cannot.

Perhaps I could make one more point on that subject. Some of the trips that the Minister of Transport has made are not, in my humble opinion, on government business. Last weekend he addressed a meeting of young Liberals in Saskatchewan. I understand that that type of thing has happened in the past. When he addresses a partisan political meeting of either young or old Liberals, that proportion of the flight should be paid by the minister or by the Liberal Party of Canada. If he has four meetings and one is with Liberals, the party should pay for one quarter of the cost. That would be fair.

The other point I wanted to make is that under this bill there will be a repeal of "at and east" rates. This is the rate that deals with shipment by rail of grain and flour from the Georgian Bay elevators and other elevators in Ontario to the city of Halifax and the city of Saint John in New Brunswick. The movement involves about 30 million bushels of western grain per year at a cost, in the form of a subsidy, of about $11 million to the federal government. This works out to a subsidy of about 33 cents per bushel of wheat.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

There are many effects this may have on both the prairie economy and the economy in the Atlantic provinces. First of all, the Canadian Wheat Board, because of the lack of a subsidy, may halt all rail shipments from inland ports to Atlantic ports during the winter months, and they will do it because of the straight economics of moving that grain.

Second, a loss of business and employment in the elevators in Halifax and Saint John will result. We all know that the Atlantic provinces have a high rate of unemployment. The Halifax elevator is owned by the government, but CPR which owns the Saint John elevator is expected to close it down.

Finally, elevators at Georgian Bay will be put out of business since the storage and forwarding of western grain is their major source of income. It will also create additional difficulties for the Canadian Wheat Board in meeting export targets.

While the federal government people say that the Canadian Wheat Board will off-set the discontinuation of shipments in the winter months through Atlantic ports by increased shipments through Vancouver, it is obvious that in years of high volume exports the west coast ports area is already strained to capacity. Second, it does not seem reasonable to ship western grains destined for Europe through Vancouver. It would seem therefore that from now on shipments of grain to Europe will be interrupted for three months or more each year.

For reasons such as these, reasons which I think will cause difficulties to the prairie farmers and the prairie economy, and which will cause unemployment in areas where these elevators are located, particularly in Halifax and Saint John, I hope the government will reconsider the provision in the bill which deals with "at and east" rates.

In conclusion I want to say that a number of other members in my caucus have talked about other aspects of the bill before me, or will be doing so in the days to come. But I want to say that if the government seriously expects the Canadian people to support the anti-inflation program, it must start showing leadership in the House. The Minister of Transport himself must start acting like an adult, not like a little child with a toy. He has to show some leadership in the House. If that is done, then perhaps more Canadians will have confidence in the government and will not be as cynical about the political system that we have in our country. It is the type of example set by the Minister of Transport that makes people really cynical about the federal government and federal institutions. This country is too important to me and to all of us in the House for us to allow it to fall apart for reasons such as I have stated today, for lack of leadership and lack of a good example.

There are many other things that could be referred to and about which other hon. members in my party will be talking. One of them is the unemployment rate which is very high. This means that there should be more stimulation in the economy and that the government should show leadership in that direction, which it is not doing.

My time is running out, Mr. Speaker, so I will take my seat and listen to the speeches of other hon. members in the hope that the Minister of Transport will perhaps rise and apologize to the House for his conduct, and perhaps one of the members opposite will take up my challenge and speak up on whether or not he thinks the minister should be using a private government jet to fly from here to Montreal and back.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter this debate to support this bill which seeks authority for the government in specific ways to restrain its own expenditure program and to reduce it in certain items. I do not propose to debate the relative merits of this or that item which is being restrained, nor the over-all size of the restraint program so far as it is expressed in government expenditures.

There is no doubt that the restraint and reductions by this government are important elements in the battle against inflation and in giving the private sector confidence that the total program is going to work, because government expenditures are one of the main elements that have to be brought under control in order to rebuild that confidence.

There is no doubt that the restraint in government spending is taking hold and I would like to give the House some evidence of that. First, there is the $1.5 billion of expenditures less than had been planned. Second, there is the holding of hirings in the federal civil service to levels well below the growth of total employment in our economy, levels of 1.5 per cent increase in this fiscal year and 1 per cent increase in the next fiscal year. These are evidences of a serious intent to reduce the size of the claims of this government on the economy.

● (1720)

Again, the total expenditures of this government in the current fiscal year are estimated to grow by 13 per cent. That is at the same rate as the general economy. That is a significant reduction over previous recent periods, and the total expenditures in our next fiscal period are scheduled to grow at an 11 per cent increase. That also will be at or, indeed, below the increase in the general economy. I cite these as evidences of the serious intent to get the government's share of the economy under control and to hold it under control.

The main points I want to make this evening are that these measures will not be sufficient in themselves to rebuild long-term confidence that the total size of the public sector, as reflected in government spending, will, over the long term, be contained and grow at no greater rates than the economy. To put it another way, confidence requires that the size of the government's claim on the economy will be of no greater proportion than the increase in the total economy; that is, it will have to come out of increased productivity. Why is there not that confidence today? If I can give a few figures, I think it will be somewhat clearer. What is the record of the past ten years? I want to cite only a few figures.

If we go back ten years to fiscal year 1965-66 we find that the total outlays of the federal government were $9.4 billion. Seven years later, in fiscal year 1972-73, they were $20 billion, and three years later, in the fiscal year just ended, they were $37.3 billion. In the fiscal year in which we now find ourselves they are expected to be over $42 billion. There is here a 10-year growth from $9.4 billion to $42 billion.

How do we cope with these kinds of magnitudes? Let us relate these figures to the total economy. Let us consider the government's expenditures as a percentage of the gross national economy. Ten years ago, in the years I have quoted, the federal government was spending 17 per cent of total expenditures. That rose to 19.1 per cent three years ago and to 23.1 per cent in the previous fiscal year. Through this restraint program it is stabilizing at 23 per cent. However, over the 10-year period the proportion of the Gross National Product spent or taken by this government rose from 17 per cent to 23 per cent. That in itself is one of the factors behind the unwillingness to have confidence in the government, even though it has entered, in a short-term sense, into a restraint program.

The actual increases I have mentioned are readily accounted for. They do not come about just by slippage or lack of efficiency; they do not come about by lack of design; they are the result of deliberate policy choices that we in parliament made and which we on this side of the House supported. So the question is not simply one of not being able to manage. It is a question of deliberately letting the state, for certain policy reasons, take a larger share of the economy.

What were the basic elements in the increase? In the seven years from 1965 to 1972 the government's share grew by 2 percentage points of the national economy. That increase can be accounted for totally by the following three programs: hospitals and medicare, which grew by 0.9 per cent of the economy; old age security and guaranteed income supplement, where we did make the choice that we should increase pensions and index them to the cost of living, and that accounts for 0.7 percentage points of the 2.1 per cent increase; and the third major factor is the equalization payments to the provinces which increased by 0.5 per cent of the total 2.1 per cent increase.

Hospitals and medicare, pensions, and equalization payments to the provinces, which in turn go to the people, are the three programs which account for the growing size of this government's expenditures in that 7-year period. All those increases were payments to people, and not many of us would say that we should not have made them.

In the next three years, the three years which come down to the year which has just ended as a fiscal year, the growth in government spending was four percentage points, a much greater rate of increase than the 2.1 per cent increase in the previous seven years. The major share of this increase was taken by programs which are readily accountable for. We all know how oil transfer payments worked. The export tax on exports to the United States was levied. It flowed through this government's treasury and was paid out to equalize the price of imported oil into the eastern part of Canada, but it reflects a rate of increase in our expenditures. Family allowances accounted for another half of one per cent, and we know that those family allowances trebled in the 10-year period from $600 million to $1.9 billion. We trebled those family allowances as a policy initiative, of which we are all very proud, and we indexed them to the cost of living.

Revenue guarantees to the provinces account for another major share of the increase, and the unemployment insurance program accounts for 0.5 percentage points of the total of four percentage points. Agricultural programs, the investments we had to make in energy exploration through Petro-Canada and other means, and the investments we are making in better housing for Canadians are all legitimate areas of concern, and they are readily accounted for.

I wanted to say these things because the matters I want to put before the House now are not related to the temporary or passing phases of stabilization effected by moving government expenditures up and down but are related more to the longer term assurances—and ways of giving credibility to those assurances—that this thing is not going to keep growing and growing and growing as a bigger part of the economy without cease, the assurances that even if we are now restraining, the general movement is not going to reassert itself. I want to mention three or four ways in which I think we could usefully address ourselves to that problem.

First, I will remind hon. members, if they will allow me, that on October 14 in this House I argued that we in parliament do not effectively control the growth of government spending.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Right on, Martin.

Mr. O'Connell: We should not delude ourselves that in those standing committees where we consider estimates we are really controlling government spending. I have made proposals, and I know there is support on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has made some very interesting proposals with regard to how we might do a better job in this House. I remind the House that I suggested a 5-year expenditure forecast, that is, looking ahead, and a related five years review of the past so we can have an overview of what is happening over a 10-year stretch. Then we can consider whether we think it is moving ahead too quickly. I suggest a single committee to carry out surveillance over government spending rather than fragmenting our view of it in the 20 or more standing committees that now consider it. I will not dwell any longer on that role which I think parliament itself should be performing better.

● (1730)

Let me turn now to collective bargaining. The general advice that has been given to government by economists over the past generation, stemming from the economic theories of Lord Keynes, has been that government can act as the balance wheel in the economy; that it can move its expenditures up, then move them down, and by so doing can level out the fluctuations in the economy that have pervasive social and economic results. That theory has grave limitations. It is relatively easy to increase spending but very difficult to decrease it. There comes to exist a built-in growth factor and the level of increase continues. There is a built-in bias.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

I think Lord Keynes and we ourselves neglect the role that collective bargaining, as we practise it, plays in leading the economy into inflation and therefore requiring this kind of reactive and unstable government activity which I think is wrong. It is as if the adversary system of collective bargaining operates outside the economy; as if it takes place on the margins and from time to time gets out of hand.

I want to consider one aspect of collective bargaining that is under our control, and that is public service collective bargaining. Seven or eight years ago we imported into public service bargaining the adversary conflict system that is practised in the private sector. I do not think that system belongs in public service bargaining. One reason is that the government is not an employer like any other. Governments cannot be put out of business. If they are pressed for higher salaries or better conditions and grant them they are not going out of business because they simply turn to the tax system to regain the revenues. They are not in the market where there are constraints that bring discipline to bear on collective bargaining, as is the case in the private sector. The services supplied are often monopoly or essential services and, when disrupted, there is grave injury to the third party, the public, in a sense that does not apply to the private sector.

The rate of increase in public service collective bargaining settlements has been such that recently they have been leading the private sector bargaining to ever higher levels. We must find some way of containing those elements in the inflationary spiral and not rely exclusively on fiscal and monetary techniques or raising and lowering government expenditures.

I should like to propose that we consider an alternative system to the adversary system; a system known as fair comparison with jointly selective outside analogues—that is, employees working in comparable employment in the private sector. I will not describe this in detail, but the principle is socially just and more economically sound than the adversary system now practised which we deliberately brought into the public service. Under the fair comparison principle, public service unions and the government jointly would agree that the compensation for public employees is not what they fight each other for or the maximum they can get, but they agree that what they are seeking is a fair comparison with what employees with similar responsibilities are getting from good employers in the private sector. A pay research bureau would make the comparison.

The system is socially just because our employees would be receiving what good employers are paying, no more and no less. If we pay them more—and we are likely to do that at present because we are not restrained by the market and when there is a disruption in service we are under very severe political pressure to concede—if we pay them more we are in effect taxing employees in comparable positions in the private sector. That means the public sector would lead the private sector to higher and higher levels of compensation, with adverse implications for our international competitive situation. I think I need say no more about the difficulties involved.

All I want to suggest as an anti-inflation measure which is socially just and economically sound, is that we move to fair comparison as a basis for collective bargaining in the public service.

Then what about the private sector? I do not want to talk about collective bargaining in the private sector in the same way, but I want to suggest that we will be intermittently in and out of controls and in and out of government expenditures if we do not use this year of the controls program to build the consultative institutions that will help us with consensus policies for the future and therefore prevent future blowouts in the economy.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) made some suggestions about consultative institutions and I think his are the very minimal proposals. I do not know if they have enough structure in the institutional sense to give credibility to the consultative process which he is proposing. I am going to take a few minutes to suggest that we need consultative mechanisms with more institutional structure to them than the minister has suggested, but since my time is expiring I shall just run through them rapidly.

What we require is social and economic consultative council in which business, labour, consumers, agriculture, the scientific and other communities are included, but not the government because the government is going to consult that body. These are the main elements in the economy that should be brought face to face with the facts. But where do they get those facts? Before going on to that, Mr. Speaker, I should say that by law the government should be required to consult such a body and to lay before us in this House the results of that consultation. All these lines should lead back to parliament and not just represent some powerful, organized bodies that are carving up the pie, so to speak.

I suggest that we amend or change the structure and role of the Economic Council of Canada; that in future it be an agency of forecasting and of analysis of the economy; that it include government representation and, by invitation, include provincial government appointees. Looking at the economy as it is performing, considering the policies that are in place, and looking at the potential of the economy, this body would provide data and advice to the consultative council but not necessarily to the government. The Economic Council of Canada now advises government and I am suggesting that we alter its position, increase its role, and make it an adviser to the consultative council by providing it with the basic data. It would become a workshop and provide data at which all parties could look.

● (1740)

Third, to return to my basic theme, the public sector is not sufficiently co-ordinated to play its role in a consultative process. Similarly we, in parliament, are not equipped to control government spending; nor are governments able jointly to play their role effectively in the Canadian economy. I say that because of this. We, in this parliament, could adopt one course, the provinces could adopt a contrary course, and each side could frustrate the programs and policies of the other. Meetings of finance ministers are not enough; the ad hoc meetings of other ministers are not enough. Therefore if we are to make the consultative process credible and enter into dialogue with business, labour, consumers and others, we need to obtain a consensus and then undertake commitments.

Mr. Speaker, we in the public sector are not in a position to fulfil our commitments because we do not have all the levers of government at our disposal. Some of them are dispersed among our provinces. I therefore propose the setting up of a federal-provincial stabilization and growth committee whose members would be senior economic ministers. They would consult among themselves, be the main elements representing government in its dealings with the consultative council, undertake commitments, and seek to co-ordinate the responses of the public sector with those commitments made in the consultative process. Only if we establish some such structure will consultation bring substantive effects.

Hon. members may ask, why consultation? I suggest that unless we adopt that kind of approach we shall see collective bargaining driving the economy in various directions, with prices mainly going up; we shall see the government over-utilizing fiscal and monetary policies to cope with that situation; and we shall see government expenditures moving upward and downward. We know that if the economy sags we push expenditures up for economic and social reasons. Once expenditures have risen it is hard to bring them back down. That game is becoming obsolete. If we are to correct it we must adopt the refinement and stabilizing effect of a credible consultative process. At present, any such proposed processes lack structure. I am merely suggesting a few ways in which we can be helpful.

Let me add that I am not discussing tripartism. I am discussing only consultative and not decision-making arrangements. I suggest, however, that there is a place for tripartism in the administration of some of our programs and agencies. For example, the Unemployment Insurance Commission might well be administered by government, business and labour; the same applies to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I could name other programs and agencies with respect to which this could be done.

The question is, why do it? By participating in the implementation of such programs all parties concerned would come to have confidence in themselves. After all, they would be administering that which parliament has already enacted and with respect to which guidelines exist. They would not be making fundamental decisions. By working together the parties would come to know each other and understand the need for restraint.

Again, I suggest that the proposal of the Minister of Labour for more collaboration in the work place is sound. I refer to such things as works councils, co-determination, the making of decisions jointly by labour and management, and sharing in managements' decisions at certain levels. Why is all this important? It would involve the grass roots, where the parties can enter into relationships other than adversary relationships.

At the grass roots all the parties concerned may collaborate for greater productivity. That is where the labour side of the equation takes an interest in the success of an enterprise and where the management side gains some understanding of the concerns of labour. As I say, this would happen at the grass roots level where both sides would learn to place confidence in the consultative process and allow central bodies representing them in the major consultative council to negotiate on their behalf.

I am suggesting ways in which consultative institutions and mechanisms could be developed, to give future economic activity greater stability and help to avoid the kinds of destabilizing activities in which we are currently engaged.

My final point is this. The public sector has grown to its present size because in some cases the private sector has not been able to perform certain functions. The greatest challenge we face is giving scope, stability, confidence, and strength to the private sector. Only if that sector grows, prospers, provides jobs and incomes, will we be able to restrain the growth in the public sector. Therefore our policies must encourage productivity. Consultative institutions are the best path we know to increased productivity. They mitigate adversary relationships. They arouse interest in both parties in productivity; they are our means of escaping from an ever-growing public sector.

We cannot afford the notion of slow growth in Canada. Slow growth will mean increasing public sector involvement, something we must face. We need high, sustainable growth if we are to restrain our own roles. We should reject slow growth. I would only add that we are on the wrong tack—I was going to say pursuing the wrong trade policies, but I will not put it so bluntly. We will need to reexamine our economic policies and focus attention on the private sector, because only if the private sector prospers will we restrain our own role.

In my view the greatest source of economic growth in Canada lies in the west. I am not unsympathetic to those across the aisle who complain about specific items in this restraint program. To me they reflect a basic difficulty in the government's perception of economic opportunities in western Canada. In the processing of commodities for example we see value added. There is an interface between transport and processing. For instance, why do we ship oil seeds to Japan? We shipped 15 million bushels and the Japanese processed the oil seeds and made end products. Are we subsidizing Japanese employment? We ship seed to Japan because it is cheaper to send seed than to send the oil. And in this regard one can discern the interface between raw materials, processing and transportation.

Transportation is the key to unlocking economic development in the west and raising "value added." The same may be said for livestock which is turned into meat, grain which becomes flour, and other commodities. We can consider an entire range of economic policies which would be good for Ontario and good for all Canada. Such policies would increase the size of our internal market and trade between our regions and so fulfil the aims of policies designed 100 years ago when our transportation system was established.

• (1750)

However, the destiny that was allowed to western Canada was a resource destiny. That is passé. All the frustration in the west is not psychological. The frustration is transportation and certain trade and tariff policies which do not permit the western economy to rise from the resource destiny to the secondary manufacturing and technological industries that are available today. That is where the private sector could find its greatest expansion. That is where our economic policies should be focused.

I conclude as I began by saying that the temporary measures that came about for stabilization reasons will not rebuild confidence in the long term that the public sector is being restrained. We need longer term measures. I have suggested a few.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. O'Connell: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McRae: It has to do with a debate he and I have had for some time. In his desire for greater growth does he foresee great difficulties because of energy shortages and the cost of energy, making necessary a different kind of growth, a slower growth?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. The answer is not all that difficult. I am suggesting that we can have high sustained growth by shipping less oil and more petrochemicals. That would not use up our energy resources any faster than at the present time. In fact it may be a slower use.

What we need is the highest values. That is where the growth is. I am suggesting, for example, the growth would come out of processing oil seeds. A bushel of rapeseed is worth $5 shipped out as rapeseed. It is probably worth $30 shipped out as oil. That is growth, from $5 to $30. What have we expended in energy? Some, yes, but we have gained a lot in terms of income and we can redistribute some of that income.

At the rate we are going, we hear people say let us accept slower growth. I agree you have to protect the environment. To do so contributes to growth. That is an industry in itself. It will come back to us in revenue if we do it. We have to respect the ecology and conserve resources. I say we move them to higher values. That is all I am saying. That is growth. The Gross National Product would rise very rapidly if instead of $5 being added by a bushel, $30 were added by oil. That is growth. That is what we are looking for.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, possibly my colleagues will agree that we have just had a very thoughtful speech. It is now four minutes to six and I would prefer not to break the train of my carefully prepared notes. Therefore I would like to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Restraint of Government Expenditures

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday, November 15, at two o'clock, p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, November 4, 1976.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, until Monday, November 15, at 2 p.m., pursuant to Special Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

•Monday, November 15, 1976

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS

PROPOSED DENIAL OF RATE INCREASE TO BELL CANADA UNTIL BETTER SERVICE PROVIDED TO NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The continual deterioration of telephone communication to the province of Newfoundland indicates a lack of responsibility by Bell Telephone with regard to serving all citizens of Canada on an equal basis. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House orders that the recent increase announced by Bell Telephone be denied until it can prove that it can provide reasonable and adequate service in line with its responsibility to all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The matter concerns the firing of the chairman and vice chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission and the subsequent appointment of the executive assistant to the Minister of Agriculture to fill the position of chairman of that commission. This is an act of blatant political patronage, and I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That, because of the actions of the Minister of Agriculture, this House approve unanimously a motion calling for a full public inquiry into the operations of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PERMIT INDEXING OF PENSIONS OF MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND MOUNTED POLICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a question of urgent and pressing necessity before this House. It is the question of whether some members of our Canadian forces and members of the RCMP should be further discriminated against and treated as second class citizens because of the subsequent amendments to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act in 1973 which provide the accumulated cost of living increases on a qualification date when a minimum age of 55 plus—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43, will he put it forthwith.

Mr. Whittaker: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House urge the government to consider amending the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act to provide for the reduction of the magic 85 formula to 70 and the indexing of the new formula to the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be presented to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON OPERATIONS AND POLICIES—REASON FOR SEARCH OF PUBLIC ARCHIVES BY CHIEF STATISTICIAN

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of strong and continuing indications that the general situation at Statistics Canada is much more serious than the minister was first aware or willing to concede, as evidenced by complaints about data interpretations relating to the measurement of the gross national product, complaints from metropolitan Toronto officials about census procedures and so on, I want to ask the minister when he is going to or if he intends to come out of his defensive position and provide more positive and factual information about the operations and policies of Statistics Canada, before the credibility of calculations such as those upon which the cost of living allowances in labour agreements come into question and other areas of Statistics Canada purview such as the dairy industry statistics are discredited.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I feel there is no point in changing my position, as I am expected to go shortly before a House committee to account for the supplementary estimates of my department and, at that time, if the hon. member wishes to ask me questions in all those areas, I shall be happy to answer them.

This morning I had a long talk with Statistics Canada, chief statistician Dr. Kirkham who told me he would be very pleased to reply to all questions hon. members of this House may put to him, because he is as concerned as I am over the image projected by Statistics Canada. However, I do not think it is very helpful at this moment to go and rummage through files which were reviewed four years ago by the RCMP whom I trust absolutely and who concluded that there may have been a conflict of interest but there was no criminal act. Under the circumstances, I do not see any point in continuing that way but Dr. Kirkham and myself shall be glad to appear before a House committee at the first opportunity.

● (1410)

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, as usual I thank the minister for his courteous reply but to put it on a current basis and not go back four years, may I ask why a search has been ordered recently in the public archives by the chief statistician? Would the minister care to indicate why this was done?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have asked the chief statistician of Canada to take all necessary steps to advise me of all incidents which may have occurred within his organization. He must of course carry out a full investigation, and I have asked him to go as far as possible to prevent any likelihood of his organization breaking up through innuendos. I think that, under these circumstances, Dr. Kirkham has acted with utmost diligence and he has taken all necessary steps to advise us of all the conflicts of interest he might find. I can only thank him for that.

As to the report on National Product Figures, I should like, with leave of the House, to table a statement providing the technical explanations requested by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), and as it is fairly long, I seek the consent of the House to table this report which was provided by Dr. Kirkham, explaining the problems and the remedies he intends to propose.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed the minister shall have leave to table the documents referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRESERVATION OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO ALAN JEFFERY ASSOCIATES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate whether all the internal memoranda related to Alan Jeffery Associates such as those documents between Messrs. Snyder, Andrews, Berlinguette and Dr. Ostry as well as communications to Statistics Canada security and legal officers are being safeguarded and will be available to any sort of impartial inquiry such as the minister agreed to earlier, should he decide to proceed and need those documents?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have a few documents here and I hope to be authorized by those people involved to table them in the House. Of course there are some traditions to be respected in that area as in the case of RCMP reports, for example. Those reports cannot be submitted to the House. Concerning the internal organization of Statistics Canada, Dr. Ostry and Dr. Kirkham have authorized me to table them. I have a few other permissions to obtain from people involved and it will be a pleasure to table these documents in the House in as much as the Official Secrets Act is not contravened in any way given the present circumstances.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL GUARANTEES BY GOVERNMENT TO CONSTRUCTING COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources having to do with statements made by Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. to the effect that one year ago they made formal representations to the cabinet with respect to financial guarantees for the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline. In view of the fact that the treasurer of that company, Mr. William Stewart has said before the National Energy Board hearings that such guarantees would be absolutely essential before the company could proceed with its financial arrangements, may I ask the minister this simple question: Have any guarantees been given or does the government intend to give such guarantees and if so, what is the nature of those guarantees?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I should correct part of the preamble to the hon. member's question when he said formal representations were made to the federal government by Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. About a year ago they did provide to the interested department an assessment of the situation. This assessment would require guarantees on the part of the government but at that time no request was made to the government for such guarantees, nor have any guarantees been given. On the second part of the question as to whether guarantees would be given in the future, that of course will have to await the outcome of the hearing.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. According to the treasurer of the company guarantees were implied in the financial proposals placed before the National Energy Board and according to one member of the board, "to some extent the application of the company is hypothetical." May I ask the minister if it is not necessary either to decide now with respect to these guarantees or suggest to Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited that they should withdraw their application since, if the National Energy Board should decide to give approval to this company, the Canadian government may find itself in this position: That approval has been given to a company on the assumption that guarantees will be forthcoming and both the government and the Canadian parliament may find themselves in an awkward predicament?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it would be premature at this time to speculate on whether guarantees should be given. I am cognizant that this particular applicant has also conveyed to the administration in Washington the view that, if that happened to be the particular gas line chosen or approved, similar guarantees would be required from the United States government. It is clear that the United States process has by no means run its course yet; nor has ours. Therefore, I think a further statement on my part at this time would be premature.

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR DEBATE PRIOR TO APPROVAL OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? In view of the uncertainty with respect to guarantees both by Canadian and the United States governments and since a member of the National Energy Board said the other day that no firm gas supply contracts have yet been entered into, will the minister assure the House that if the National Energy Board makes an affirmative recommendation with respect to building the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, no action for proceeding with the pipeline will be taken until the matter has been placed before parliament either in the form of a resolution or in the form of legislation, so that we will not debate a fait accompli in this House with respect to a matter so important as the Mackenzie Valley pipeline?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my predecessor made it clear that he would welcome, as I would, a thorough examination of the whole issue. Indeed, I believe the standing committee has made it its business, and the hon. member is a member of that standing committee, over the past year to bring before it from time to time various spokesmen for the various applicants. I hope the standing committee will decide to do the same thing during the course of the ensuing months so that it will be in a better position to assess recommendations, when those recommendations are provided to the government.

On the question of whether there should be a particular debate in the House or whether the discussions should take place in committee, I think we will need to consider that matter further.

* * *

[Translation]

WHARVES

POSSIBLE TRANSFERENCE OF JURISDICTION TO QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

During the last session, through you, Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister on several occasions to give us a progress report on negotiations with the Quebec government on the transfer, from the Quebec government to the government in Ottawa, of the jurisdiction over a number of wharves. On those occasions, the minister replied that he would inform the House of the results of negotiations which were making good progress. Is the minister in a position today to tell the House whether negotiations have been completed and what their results were?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to give me more specific information about the items he has in mind and I can try to give him the specific information.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, to be more specific, I am thinking here of the transfer of jurisdiction of the wharf at Montmagny and other wharves located along the St. Lawrence River, which are used by the inhabitants of the islands to maintain contact with the mainland. Those negotiations, according to the minister, were entrusted to some of his officials and their counterparts of the Quebec government.

As the matter is extremely important because those wharves are deteriorating for lack of maintenance and communications are that much more difficult I must say it is urgent for the islanders to know what decision the Department of Transport has come to in this regard. If negotiations are at a standstill, obviously there will be no transfer. What does the minister then intend to do to keep those wharves in good shape which are absolutely necessary to ensure good communications?

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Lang: I will report as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST FOR REPORT AND TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO FELLEGI AND SUNTER PARTNERSHIP

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I thank him for tabling the response to the question put by the hon. member for Vegreville, although I am sorry he did not take the opportunity to give us advance notice in order that we could look at it before the question period. I have given the minister notice of this question. Has he had an opportunity of investigating the circumstances behind the Fellegi and Sunter partnership? Is he now in a position to report to this House with regard to their activities and whether they have put out any advertisements? If so, will he table these? In addition, will the minister advise whether they were involved with any private firms outside of universities?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, according to the information made available to me concerning several incidents mentioned, I think that in the case of the deputy chief statistician, Mr. Fellegi, there is nothing more than the fact that he helped some universities and worked for a company. I stated that under those circumstances I had no reason to believe that there was a conflict of interest, but I will prepare a more complete written answer which I will table in the House so that the hon. member will be satisfied with my answers.

[English]

DATA ALLEGEDLY OFFERED FOR SALE BY ALAN JEFFERY ASSOCIATES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more appropriate if a statement were made on motions in order that we could have a proper debate on this issue. Nevertheless, with regard to the answers the minister has tabled to written questions by my colleague from Central Nova relating to the activities of Statistics Canada employees and a possible conflict of interest arising therefrom, will the minister inform the House whether he has received information on any data derived from Statistics Canada sources which was offered for sale to any other organization or individual by Alan Jeffery Associates or any other employees of Statistics Canada associated with Alan Jeffery Associates? The minister failed to answer that part of the question in the written response. Accordingly, the response was incomplete.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I tried to give the most complete answers to all those questions, and I said earlier, in reply to the hon. member for Central Nova, that I would be willing to appear before a committee of the House when supplementary estimates (A) or (B) will be considered. I think there will be a vote for my department. I know that, under those circumstances, hon. members of the opposition as well as those on the government side will have the opportunity to ask me questions. I talked with Dr. Kirkham this morning and he told me he would be happy to answer all those questions. Everyone will understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite difficult to answer such questions during the oral question period. There are so many matters to cover that I will be happy to answer all those questions before the committee. In the meantime, I would be happy to table a written answer to the questions of the hon. member which covers several specific points, but as his question does not appear on the order paper, I did not think I could answer it this way. I thought he would be glad to hear that I expect to appear before the committee to answer all questions.

* * *

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

AUTHORIZATION OF MR. SNYDER BY CHIEF STATISTICIAN TO ENGAGE IN OUTSIDE ACTIVITIES—ACTIVITIES OF ALAN JEFFERY ASSOCIATES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get involved in a debate about the shortcomings of the committee system with regard to obtaining information from the government. If I may, I will direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Were the RCMP informed that Mr. Snyder had received authorization for other moonlighting activities regarding other shopping centre sales data from the then chief statistician, and is the minister in a position to detail the suggestions she may have made or authorization she may have given in that instance? What other outside activities of Alan Jeffery Associates, other than the University of Toronto and Ontario government projects were known in the course of that investigation by Statistics Canada officials?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any knowledge of the specific facts the hon. member has brought to the attention of the House. I will be pleased to check into them. I would like to say, however, in answer to his more general question of two weeks ago and that of his colleague, after looking into the matter the RCMP informed me there was no suggestion whatever of any interference or hindrance brought to bear in the investigation of this matter.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, with permission, I have some information to give the House on this subject. The questions to which the hon. member referred were looked into by the RCMP at the time of the investigation of Alan Jeffery Associates and no evidence of any impropriety was found. In fact, what Mr. Snyder was trying to do was repeat a type of study he had conducted in 1962 with the authorization of the then minister of trade and commerce.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Privy Council. When does the minister intend to introduce the government's bill setting forth proposals with regard to access to government documents so that the House can get on with the business of passing a workable freedom of information act which would have the revolutionary effect of eliminating or diminishing official deception and the hiding of documents, so that situations of the kind referred to by my hon. friend are not likely to recur.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): We are, of course, awaiting some good advice from the committee which has been studying this matter, but quite apart from the operations of that committee a good deal of attention is being paid within the government at the present time to the possibility of taking further steps in the direction we have been following consistently over the past several years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: A good thing you are not on the road!

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ENVIRONMENTAL REPORT ON NANISIVIK LEAD-ZINC MINE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question will be directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the environmental assessment of the Nanisivik lead-zinc mine located on Baffin Island, reportedly prepared by Mr. P. S. Blackall, a federal environment inspector. In view of the fact that the report, citing unacceptable environmental practices, is alleged to have recommended the cancellation of the mine's industrial water licence, will the minister tell us what plans have been made to ensure that the mine meets federal environmental standards? Further, has he set any deadline by which the company concerned must meet those standards?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the company has agreed to rectify the situation. They will file a compliance schedule with us by November 19 and that schedule will have to be implemented before next spring.

Mr. Jarvis: Is the minister aware that according to Mr. Blackall the mine has yet to implement a number of other recommendations in addition to those concerning water quality? What steps does he intend to take to ensure that the additional quality control structures required are installed? I think Mr. Blackall has indicated that only 33 per cent of the recommendations have been implemented.

Mr. Allmand: I was not aware of those other deficiencies but I am pleased they have been brought to my attention. I will pursue the matter.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF REPRESENTATIONS TO OPEC COUNTRIES ON INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister knows, the ministers of the OPEC countries are meeting in Vienna to discuss a possible increase in the price of oil. Has the government of Canada made any representations to OPEC on that subject?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The International Energy Agency met last week, and Canada is, of course, a member of that agency. A strategy, if that is the proper word, was devised at that time and I am sure an appropriate message has been effectively conveyed to the OPEC countries.

Mr. Gillies: Given the fact that the government of the United States has made two separate presentations to the OPEC ministers on the ground that a rise in crude oil prices would have a most deleterious effect on the world economy, and particularly on the economies of third world countries, does the minister not think it would be useful and valuable for Canada to make its views known on so important a matter? Indeed, could the minister tell us what Canada's position is?

Mr. Jamieson: I agree with what the hon. member has said. Not only do I agree, but we have anticipated him in the sense that my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has made representations to several of the OPEC countries. I have personally done so, and our position has been conveyed to the OPEC countries per se. I think it is fair to say that we are in the same position as the United States in hoping there will not be an increase decided on by OPEC at its meetings in December.

● (1430)

GARRISON DIVERSION—UNITED STATES POSITION ON MORATORIUM ON CONSTRUCTION OF LONETREE RESERVOIR

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did the government of Canada send a diplomatic note to the United States government on October 12 formally asking for a moratorium on the construction of the Lonetree reservoir as a part of the Garrison irrigation project, and if this is the case, what response has been received?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that on October 12 we did indeed submit a formal note to the Secretary of State's department in the United States along the lines indicated by the hon. member and as reported over the weekend. To date we have not had a reply from the United States administration. I have been advised informally that that reply may be forthcoming within a matter of a couple of weeks, but up to the present time there has not been a reply. Incidentally, if the hon. member or the House so desires, I would be glad to table the note.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his offer to table the note, but in view of the fact that the government had decided to wait for the report of the IJC before taking further action on the matter, is the new Canadian posture based on evidence that there will be pollution and degradation of boundary waters as a result of the construction of the Lonetree reservoir?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I think our posture is that we simply do not know if that is going to be the case. Because of the uncertainties, and because these cannot be resolved in the absence of the detailed report of the IJC, this is precisely why we requested the United States administration to refrain from any further construction. In other words, we are not clear, and I doubt very much if anyone can be specific at the moment, as to what impact the construction of Lonetree will produce. That is why we felt that a moratorium should be decided on by the United States pending completion of the IJC report, which I think hon. members are aware will not be completed, because of its complexity, until some time late in the spring of 1977.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED REVISION OF GUIDELINES FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of public concern at the travel arrangements of the Minister of Transport over the last few days, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he is now considering revising the guidelines dealing with the use of government aircraft, and would he make these guidelines public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I stated in the House the other day the intent and the effect of the guidelines. They are that planes, government transportation, can be used only when the public duty of a minister is involved. Unless the hon. member has a better guideline, I think that is the one that should continue to be practised and which has been practised in this country for 30 years.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would not the Prime Minister agree that flights such as the one taken by the Minister of Transport in April, 1975 to Saskatoon—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely, the hon. member is prefacing his question with an argumentative assumption. It may have acceptable substance but perhaps he would try again.

Mr. Nystrom: Can the Prime Minister say whether or not a trip taken by the Minister of Transport in April, 1975 to Saskatoon, after which he took a group on a sidetrip to Regina on a government plane to attend a private party at—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a very legitimate line of questioning for another forum at another time, but certainly not for the question period.

Mr. Fairweather: I have a legitimate supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: I just want to ask the Prime Minister whether or not the guidelines include a clause that would prohibit the minister from taking a government aircraft to a party at his brother-in-law's place, as he did in April, 1975?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister let us know whether he preferred tea, coffee or milk on his—believe it or not—Air Canada trip to Saskatoon last weekend?

* * *

SEARCH AND RESCUE

REPORT OF TASK FORCE—DATE OF PUBLICATION AND POSSIBLE TABLING

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a reasonable question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister indicate whether he has had an opportunity to discuss the task force review report on search and rescue with the Minister of National Defence? In view of the fact that time is of the essence, would he indicate when he will table the report and can he report any progress to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to learn that when the hon. member says he has a reasonable question it is a reasonable one, unlike the illegitimacy of his colleague's "legitimate" supplementary question. I am happy to say that the Minister of National Defence and myself have been having discussions concerning the search and rescue facilities, and moves are already underway in relation to the various improvements which will be in the hand. A fuller statement and announcement about all of this will be made in due course with the appropriate background material at that time.

* * *

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF "SAN JUAN"

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Transport will remember, some two weeks ago he spoke to the leader of the opposition in Newfoundland, Mr. Roberts, and said that he would reconsider whether or not to order a judicial inquiry into the sinking of the San Juan off the coast of St. John's West last February. As the minister knows, there are many people in Newfoundland who are not satisfied with the private inquiry that was held by the Department of Transport. The minister then said that he would reconsider whether or not there should be a judicial inquiry. Would he now tell the House whether or not he has now reconsidered and what his decision is?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I indicated at that time that I would certainly investigate the several facts, which were the first facts which had been brought to my attention, which seemed inconsistent with anything that had been contained in the earlier summary report. I have had those facts further investigated, particularly the allegation that the radio on the San Juan was not in working order, which certainly was contradictory of the statements which had appeared as the basis of the report to me on the circumstances surrounding the San Juan incident.

I have since ascertained very firm confirmation of the fact that there was radio contact between the Bartlett and the San Juan at that time. I have also received further very firm information from a person very knowledgeable about the San Juan that the radio did not work well when the engine was running but worked very well indeed when the engine was not running; and of course the particular problem with the San Juan was that the engine was not running, and that explained to me the discrepancy.

Mr. Crosbie: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister agree that justice needs to be seen to be done as well as done? There are many tens of thousands of people and authorities in Newfoundland, including the churches, who are not satisfied there has been a proper inquiry into the loss of the San Juan and who think there is evidence—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a supplementary would he put it?

Mr. Crosbie: How does the minister propose to lay those questions to rest?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I propose to conclude the further investigations I have had undertaken and then make a very full and complete examination of the report which has been made to me and the further report which will be made to me. There were two basic elements concerning the San Juan. One was our search and rescue facilities, and this question is being dealt with in terms of a major overhaul and improvement in our approach. The other concerns the actual facts of the incident. While it is important to have those facts and to have them known, I did not favour a simple second guessing of the judgment of the master of the San Juan and those involved at the time of the crisis. I do not think, in a general way, that persons involved in coast guard duty and the like should be faced with the plight that every time they make a judgment in connection with a very serious circumstance they will be second guessed months afterwards by people using hindsight.

* * *

FINANCE

MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS ON COST-SHARING AND EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF PRESENT FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would he tell the House if, prior to the first ministers conference in mid-December, there is to be a further meeting of federal-provincial ministers of finance to try to arrive at an agreed upon formula for cost-sharing, equalization and revenue guarantee payments, and if so when this meeting is to be held?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker; it is on November 29 and 30.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say if there are any contingency plans to extend the present fiscal arrangements act past March of next year in the event that agreement cannot be reached with the provinces on all aspects of these complex fiscal arrangements, or is it still the government's intention to proceed unilaterally, as it has indicated, say with the termination of the revenue guarantee?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the meeting on November 29 and 30 will discuss the whole package of proposed changes in federal-provincial fiscal relations. The hon. member uses the term "unilaterally". Of course, any legislation of this kind is inevitably legislation only of the government of Canada. We are not talking about any joint, mutual or matching legislation.

● (1440)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out that the payments are all made by the government of Canada to the provinces, so why would there be provincial legislation? On that basis, we see no necessity for any contingency. There have been extensive discussions at the official level through the fall to determine many of the issues that have been discussed in this regard. We think it would be desirable to put this question of the various kinds of fiscal changes to rest as soon as possible and on that basis to enact legislation in this Parliament early next year.

Miss MacDonald: I wonder if the minister would undertake to approach these discussions in a posture of reconciliation rather than in one of continuing confrontation with the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST OF TABLING OF INTERNAL MEMORANDUM DEALING WITH INACCURACIES IN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT ESTIMATE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. First I should like to thank him for tabling the document which he did earlier in the day, a document which is essentially a technical rebuttal to the contents of the memorandum which was circulated in Statistics Canada. Would the minister be prepared now to table the internal memorandum in order to clear the air because it seems to me that the inaccuracies which were alluded to in the memorandum can only be cleared up by pointing directly to the memorandum so that those people who use the statistical information of StatCan will be able to interpret it with some degree of accuracy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into that request with much sympathy.

* * *

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

REASON FOR FIRING OF CHAIRMAN AND VICE-CHAIRMAN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that the Minister of Agriculture is not in the House today to answer questions on the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please put his question.

Mr. Murta: My question is directed to whoever is answering for the Minister of Agriculture today—

An hon. Member: They are all out campaigning.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Murta: —who can shed some light on the situation which has arisen in the Canadian Dairy Commission. I should like to ask whoever that person might be, possibly the Prime Minister or the acting minister if he would be prepared to tell the House the reason for firing the chairman and vice-chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): There is no particular reason for it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I might say that the Minister of Agriculture is in New Brunswick meeting with various groups in that province. Of course, as you know, it is an all important province and an all important subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): The person who was appointed chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission is a man by the name of Mr. Gilles Choquette. He is highly qualified. There is no doubt about the move made by the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: That is the greatest non-answer we have heard in the House today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS OF COMMISSION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Because of the apparent lack of confidence in Mr. Choquette as well as in the Minister of Agriculture and the real danger that the supply-management agreement which has been worked out between the provinces and the federal government might fail because of what has happened in the last few days, is the Prime Minister prepared to recommend a public inquiry into the Canadian Dairy Commission in order that credibility in that body may be re-established and also that dairy producers in Canada may come to know exactly what is going on within the commission?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I disagree completely with the premise of the question in which the hon. member suggested that Mr. Choquette will not have the confidence of the producers and the consumers. Mr. Choquette is a well known expert in this area, and I think the least the hon. member could do is to watch him and judge him by his operations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT STATIONS ON CHAMBORD-DOLBEAU BRANCH BE OPENED EARLIER

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is a kind of S.O.S. sent out to the Minister of Transport.

Since the timetable was modified on November 1, the passenger train for Chambord-Dolbeau operates between 4 a.m. and 6.30 a.m., at a time when any transportation system is discontinued. As the people who are responsible for the stations do not come to work before 8 a.m., all these stations are locked when the train goes through and passengers must stay outside in the bad weather of winter.

Would the minister make a representation to CNR authorities to have these stations opened when the train arrives so that passengers can at least use the phone and wait in a warm place?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I will take note of the hon. member's representation and look into the matter.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEATH OF ANNA AQUASH IN UNITED STATES—REPORT OF FBI INVESTIGATION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House Leader. In view of the fact it is some five months since the government assured us that there would be an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the murder of Anna Mae Pictou Aquash, and in light of the fact that this House was told on June 29 of this year that the FBI was conducting an investigation into the death of this native Canadian, can the minister tell the House if the FBI report has been received and, if so, will the contents be made public?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member had in mind the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Jamieson: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Firth: In view of the fact it is some five months since the government assured us that there would be an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the murder of Anna Mae Pictou Aquash, and in light of the fact that this House was told on June 29 of this year that the FBI was conducting an investigation into the death of this native Canadian, can the minister tell the House if the FBI report has been received and, if so, will the contents be made public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have seen a document in relation to this matter within the last week, but if the hon. member would be so kind as to give me 24 hours in which to look into it, I will try to give him a more detailed answer tomorrow because I am not sure whether or not it did constitute a report from the FBI. I will find out and let him know.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PRESENCE OF MINISTER AT MEETING OF ADVISORY BOARD—POSITION TAKEN ON DROP IN PRICE OF WHEAT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Has there been a meeting of the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board in the last six weeks and was the minister present?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the advisory committee ordinarily meets every month. I did meet with the committee at a meeting which I think was second to the last, but whether or not it was within the last six weeks I will have to check to make sure.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): At the meeting which the minister attended was the question of the unusual practice of dropping the wheat price so quickly discussed and what was the advice given by the advisory board?

Mr. Lang: As I recall the timing, it did happen shortly after the public complaint by Under Secretary Bell in the United States concerning the Wheat Board action. So, of course, the Canadian Wheat Board discussed the matter with the advisory committee. Essentially, the comments to the advisory commission were exactly the same as those subsequently made by me and the Canadian Wheat Board commissioners to the public to the effect that the Wheat Board's action was not an undercutting of American prices but a very competitive operation within the market to make sure that we stay in markets where we ought to be.

* * *

CUSTOMS

PURCHASING OF GROCERIES IN UNITED STATES BY RESIDENTS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. First, I wish to commend the minister for showing interest and taking some action regarding traffic problems at Douglas customs station at Surrey, B.C. One of the solutions she has introduced is a new tariff classification for groceries, presumably to facilitate quicker processing of travellers at the customs office. Since at best this can be seen as only a stopgap solution, can the minister tell the House whether she is proposing, together with her cabinet colleagues, any long range solutions to deal with that flow of traffic, which is costing Canada $6 million a month?

● (1450)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to correct one of the assumptions of the hon. member. It is true that we do our best to correct the situation but I did not initiate a change in tariff classification with a view to introducing a new tariff item for casual importation of mixed groceries. This would be done by the Minister of Finance. By doing that we might be interpreted as encouraging travelling to buy to the United States at the expense of small businessmen and Canadian producers. I do not think the hon. member would like to see that done, and I am anxious to hear his exact views as to what he wishes us to do.

Mr. Friesen: I remind the minister that I have a letter from her to the effect that a new tariff classification is being negotiated with the Minister of Finance.

However, since grocery stores in Bellingham are posting signs over their produce displays advertising their produce as duty free, and since the farming community in B.C. is being wiped out by these shopping practices, can the minister say whether she is working with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture to see whether GATT or any other agreements are being violated by the American merchant community?

Miss Bégin: We have informed the Department of Finance about the problem. We are not negotiating any change in tariff classification at this time. Separately, we have added four man-years on a casual basis to help process Canadians travelling and buying in the United States.

However, the last news I received, first from the hon. member and later from other hon. members of this House, is that Amtrak is developing a program of excursions for 48 hours into the United States. With Christmas approaching I am afraid we will have more problems, and it would not be proper for me to make promises in this connection. I still am not sure what kind of action the hon. member would like us to take. There is a paradox, and I do not know whether he is trying to help the passengers or the producers and farmers. Where does he stand?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HEALTH

ASBESTOS FIBRES IN WALL PATCHING COMPOUNDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ELIMINATE HEALTH HAZARD

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the finding of the National Resources Defence Council and the Consumers Union in the United States that wall patching compounds containing asbestos expose users to a substantial risk of cancer from concentrations of asbestos fibres significantly higher than those permitted by the occupational safety and health administration, has the government taken steps to prevent the sale of these products in Canada, and if not, what measures are planned to eliminate this health hazard?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer this question to the minister for a full answer.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST THAT BOARD INVESTIGATE PROPOSED INCREASE IN PRICE OF CHOCOLATE BARS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that Cadbury Schweppes Powell Limited will raise the price of their chocolate bars from 20 cents to 25 cents, a 25 per cent increase, and in view of the fact that other major chocolate companies plan to follow this procedure, would the Minister of Finance, a good family man, have the AIB look into the possible rollback of these prices and make the chocolate manufacturers of this country give the kids a good five cent chocolate bar?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already received substantial representations on this question, particularly at home, and as a result of those representations I can advise the hon. member that the AIB has indeed examined this important area of public consumption. It has been confirmed to me that it is the 51 per cent increase in the price of cocoa which has occurred on the world market which has been the reason for this increase. The board advises me that having examined the costs involved in the assembly of a candy bar, it feels that under the circumstances the companies have made an effective argument that the prices are justified by cost increases.

Mr. Paproski: Tell that to your daughter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Explain it to Justin.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I present these arguments to my hon. friends opposite, and now with some temerity I will have to take them home.

Mr. Paproski: The kids of this country are going to hate you, Macdonald.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Just like everybody else.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ALLEGED SALE TO PRIVATE TRADERS AND SUBSEQUENT HEDGING ON UNITED STATES EXCHANGES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board following the question asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. Can the minister confirm if upwards of 165 million bushels of wheat were sold to the private grain trade at the price of something like $3.25 or $3.35 per bushel, and were these sales hedged on the Chicago and Kansas City grain exchanges?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would ordinarily not want to comment on either particular volumes or prices at which the Canadian Wheat Board sells grain. I was informed, however—and I think I have no problem in relaying this information—that significant volumes of grain were sold by the Canadian Wheat Board at the time to which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain referred at prices which were then current and posted from time to time by the Canadian Wheat Board. The question of how those sales were then handled by the buyer is, of course, something which would not be within the purview of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Ritchie: Will there be a change in policy whereby the Canadian Wheat Board will be using these hedging facilities of the American markets either directly or indirectly through the private grain trade?

Mr. Lang: I know of no intention on the part of the Canadian Wheat Board to use hedging facilities. It would have been the buyers who would have used them.

* * *

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DECENNIAL REVIEW OF DEVELOPMENT OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On November 25 of last year I addressed a question to the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerning a recommendation within the Carrothers report regarding a decennial review of the political, economic and social development of the Northwest Territories. At that time the minister's reply was that he was giving the matter consideration. I am wondering whether in the short time the minister has been in his portfolio he has had time to consider this question.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That same suggestion was brought to my attention when I was in the north, and I have asked to be briefed on that as soon as possible, but there has been no decision as yet.

Mr. Neil: Can the minister advise whether he has received a copy of a resolution passed by the Northwest Territorial Council in which it proposes establishing a committee to consider the future social, economic and political development of the territories, and if he has, does he approve the resolution, is he prepared to give it support and is he prepared to give it funding?

Mr. Allmand: I believe I have received the resolution, but it is presently under examination, and as yet no decision has been made.

* * *

GRAIN

QUARTERLY PAYMENTS TO GRAIN STABILIZATION ACCOUNT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that by law the government should have by now made three quarterly payments to the grain stabilization account which, according to the minister's figures, could amount to $25 million each, has the minister contacted the President of the Treasury Board to ensure that these payments were made on time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the law was carefully followed.

* * *

STATUTORY HOLIDAYS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION PROVIDING FOR HERITAGE DAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Can the minister now say when he will be introducing the government's omnibus or all-inclusive holidays bill? In view of the fact that this bill will include provision for Heritage Day in February, will the bill be placed before parliament in time so that if we pass it the holiday can be celebrated in February, 1977?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): That would depend on how long it took the House to pass the legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I get the minister to come back to my question? Will the bill be introduced soon? Let us leave the rest to the House.

Mr. Roberts: Soon, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DIVERSION—TABLING OF NOTE TO U.S. GOVERNMENT

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in line with my undertaking during question period I would like to submit two copies, in each official language, of the Canadian government's note to the government of the United States in relation to the Garrison diversion.

● (1500)

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief point of order with respect to a matter on which I should like your advice. It concerns the reply to my question No. 764 on the order paper, dated October 21,1976, and, specifically, part 9 of the reply. The question is brief and, I submit, quite clear. Part 9 reads as follows:

> Was data derived from Statistics Canada sources sold or offered by the four employees or Alan Jefferys Associates to any other organization or individuals and, if so, (a) what data, (b) to whom, (c) what were the actual or proposed amounts of transactions?

Your Honour, since my question was clear, and the answer to it not complete, only stating that the RCMP investigation indicated that Alan Jefferys Associates produced studies for five other clients, apparently in order to provide complete details the order paper went on and listed some of these, but a key item was omitted. That answer ignored the essential word "offered" in my original query, thereby conveniently failing to deal with an integral part of the question. To this extent, the answer is misleading.

My point of order is simply to ask if Your Honour could possibly clarify, for my benefit and the benefit of other members of the House, whether it would be in order to request the minister to cause the answer to be enlarged so as to reflect more accurately the true situation, or whether it is within the rules of the House that answers which are not complete and which could be misleading can be put forward with impunity. I realize that the answer need not be given at all, but my submission is that if it is given, it ought to be reasonably complete. In view of the fact that I have placed more questions on the order paper today and there are a considerable number outstanding, I am bringing this matter to Your Honour's attention so that I may, hopefully, receive more accurate and complete answers to these questions in the future.

Mr. Chrétien: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point of order, dealing as it does with an answer to a written question on the order paper, ought to have been raised when that item is called later in the day during routine proceedings. It has been raised now, however, and I note that the hon. minister responsible for the answer presumably wants to make some comment. Perhaps I should hear that before making any observation.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member is not completely satisfied with the answer, and I shall look into that aspect of it. I tried to reply to all aspects of the question and today I offered to appear in front on a committee of the House where the hon. member can ask me as many questions as he wants. I have a very grave responsibility here. The questions are perhaps put in the House with good motivation. The civil service of Canada is first-class, but they cannot come here and defend themselves, so as minister responsible it is my duty to make sure that I protect their characters.

[Mr. Roberts.]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are not doing a very good job.

Mr. Chrétien: Scandals, and so on, have already been mentioned. We have asked the RCMP to investigate, and they have reported nothing wrong. No criminal charges have been laid, but some penalties were given and the names of the people involved were published. But they cannot defend themselves, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is the responsibility of the minister to get up in this House to protect the integrity of the civil servants in Ottawa if others do not want to do so. I am ready to do that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition on the same point of order.

Mr. Clark: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the minister and his colleagues are interested in protecting the reputation of the public service in Canada, as we on this side of the House are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —one way that can be done is for them to reply completely and in a fashion that is not misleading to questions asked either orally or placed on the order paper. That is the point of order raised by my colleague the hon. member for Central Nova. If the minister would simply answer questions completely and not attempt to avoid his responsibility, members on this side of the House believe that would not only help the House but would help preserve the integrity and reputation of the public service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think hon. members on both sides of the House realize we have been on a non point of order from the very start. There is no jurisdiction in the Chair to comment on the length or incompleteness or quality of answers given. The hon. member for Central Nova finalized his argument with the point that there is no obligation to answer questions. If they are answered, the completeness of the answer or the quality could perhaps be commented on at another time when debate is permissible or further questions arise. Those further questions in some cases can be put on the order paper, and in some cases by an oral follow-up, but the point raised is not a valid point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 40, 165, 185, 196, 199, 202, 700, 777, 778, 782 and 841.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

DISCLOSURE OF NAMES OF OFFICIALS WHO PERFORM TASKS IN THE COURSE OF THEIR DUTY

Question No. 40—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answers to Questions numbered 4,094 and 4,095 of the First Session of the 30th Parliament, which state in part "It is not in the tradition of a non political public service to disclose names of officials who perform tasks in the course of their duty" (a) when was this tradition established (b) who established it (c) what are the reasons for the government to withhold from Parliament the names of public service officials and the tasks that they perform (d) is this a policy of secrecy on the part of the government (e) will this policy be changed immediately so that Parliament's right to full details will be allowed?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): This is a fundamental convention of ministerial government and the hon. member may therefore wish to read, inter alia, Parris' "Constitution and Bureaucracy", Birch's "Representative and Responsible Government", and, of course, Jennings' "Cabinet Government".

NATIONAL DEFENCE—NAVY LEAGUE RECOMMENDATION TO DESIGN FLEET REPLACEMENTS IN CANADA

Question No. 165—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government aware of the resolution of the Navy League of Canada that the ship replacement programme for the Department of National Defence includes, "as a matter of paramount importance" a maximum Canadian content?

2. Does the government accept that any requirement for Canadian design work would guarantee higher ultimate Canadian content than off-shore design?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Department of National Defence is aware of the Navy League of Canada resolution.

2. The Department of National Defence intends to include maximum Canadian content to a realistic level.

KEJIMKUJIK FISH HATCHERY

Question No. 185—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has the government any plans to re-open the Kejimkujik Fish Hatchery in North Queens, Nova Scotia and, if so, on what date?

2. Have any funds been allocated for this purpose, leading up to the restocking of our rivers and lakes and, if so, what is the amount?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. Continued budgetary constraints have prevented the development of any plan to reopen the Kejimkujik Station.

2. No special funds have been set up. The stocking of Nova Scotia rivers and lakes is a continuing program undertaken by the six hatcheries operating in the province.

PUBLICATION "POLICY FOR CANADA'S COMMERCIAL FISHERIES"

Question No. 196—Mr. Marshall:

What was the manner of distribution of the publication Policy for Canada's Commercial Fisheries in (a) Newfoundland (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Prince Edward Island and, in each case, to whom was it distributed?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): (a) The publication was sent out on a request basis to Fishermen's Groups, the Fishing Industry, Memorial University of Newfoundland, University students, High School students and teachers, the business community, community development organizations, municipal and community councils, commercial fishing suppliers, Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, Department of Fisheries and Environment employees, other Federal Government Departments, and the general public. (b), (c) and (d) The publication was sent by mail to all Field personnel of Fisheries and Marine Service in Maritimes Region, all Maritimes news media (radio, television, etc.) all industry in the Maritimes Provinces, all Provincial and Federal Departments and Agencies, public requests and public distribution at Fisheries Festivals and Exhibitions in Shediac, Shippegan and Lunenburg.

WEATHER STATION—CORNER BROOK, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 199—Mr. Marshall:

In regard to the proposed weather station to be located in Corner Brook, Newfoundland (a) where will it be located (b) how many employees will be required to man it (c) how many square feet will be required (d) what service will it offer?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): (a) Location within Corner Brook not yet decided; (b) Two; (c) Approximately 1,500 square feet; (d) The provision of climatological advice and weather information in support of the fishing industry, other marine users, the forestry industry and agriculture as well as weather information for the general public, radio and TV stations and newspapers in Corner Brook or the surrounding area.

RAIN ENHANCEMENT EXPERIMENTS

Question No. 202—Mr. Marshall:

1. Have any experiments to create or increase rain been carried out in Newfoundland and, if not, are there any plans to carry on such experiments at a future date?

2. What were the results of the Yellowknife rain enhancement experiment which began on June 26, 1976?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. No experiments to create or increase rain in Newfoundland have been reported under the Weather Modification Act, and DFE has no plans to carry on such experiments in Newfoundland.

2. This preliminary experiment yielded encouraging results. The results were not conclusive and more experiments are needed to give scientifically meaningful answers.

DISTRIBUTION OF PAMPHLET ENTITLED "INTRODUCTION TO HABITAT"

Question No. 700—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

Did the Habitat Committee produce and distribute a glossy pamphlet entitled Introduction to Habitat and, if so (a) what was the cost (b) which departmental budget was charged with the cost?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): A booklet entitled "Introduction to Habitat" was produced by the Canadian Habitat Secretariat to provide basic pre-conference background information to countries who might send delegates. It is customary for the host country of a United Nations conference to issue and circulate such a booklet. (a) Total cost was $72,937.76 for 100,000 copies. (b) This cost was charged to the budget of the Canadian Habitat Secretariat.

CREDITS GRANTED TO CHILEAN JUNTA

Question No. 777—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. What position was taken by the Canadian representatives to the Inter-American Development Bank with regard to the credits granted to the Chilean Junta on (a) March 30, 1974 (b) April 25, 1974 (c) March 13, 1975 (d) June 19, 1975 (e) December 11, 1975?

2. Have any votes been prompted by loans to Chile since September 1973 and, if so, how has Canada voted?

3. Has the Chilean debt to the IDB been renegotiated since 1973 and, if so, what are the terms and circumstances of renegotiation?

4. What is Canada's position on the $86 million IDB credit currently being negotiated with Chile in view of the serious questioning by business and economic sources of Chile's "financial stability" and its capacity to repay its debts?

5. What Canadian exports have gone to projects financed by IDB loans since 1974?

6. Have any studies been made of the net costs and benefits to Canada of participation in the IDB?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. To date, all loans have been considered by the Canadian Directors of international financial institutions on the basis of their economic and technical merits. Respecting loan agreements to Chile signed to date with the Inter-American Development Bank, all such loans since 1974 were considered economically and technically sound.

2. Yes, there has been one such vote. On June 18, 1976 an official vote was called on a Bank loan to Chile. Canada voted in favour along with all the Latin American members of the Bank.

3. No.

[Mr. Marshall.]

4. There is no credit to Chile for $86 million currently under negotiation between it and the IDB.

5. Engineering and consulting services, construction services, electrical generating equipment, control equipment, transmission equipment and materials, agricultural equipment.

6. The costs and benefits of Canadian participation in the IDB are monitored constantly by officials.

$33 MILLION WORLD BANK LOAN TO CHILE

Question No. 778—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. What is Canada's present policy toward World Bank loan credit applications from Chile?

2. (a) Did Canada vote on the recent $33 million World Bank loan to Chile and, if so, how did it vote (b) what was the Canadian position on the particular loan in question, in view of the serious questioning by business and economic sources of Chile's "financial stability" and its capacity to repay its debts?

3. Does the government have any intentions to review its policy toward foreign loans so as to reconcile the contradictions that exist between the concern for humanitarian principles that have been expressed by External Affairs, on the one hand, and the previously stated criteria by the Department of Finance, which does not take these into consideration?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. All loans made by the World Bank are currently considered on a case-by-case basis on their economic and technical merits.

2. (a) Yes, in favour. (b) The loan in question was considered economically and technically sound.

3. The Canadian Government agrees that loans made by international financial institutions should be considered on economic and technical grounds. Its aim with respect to such loans is to promote the well-being of the people of the country to which the loan is extended. To adopt other than objective technical and economic criteria would have an adverse effect on the financial viability of the institutions themselves. The Canadian Government's concerns regarding humanitarian questions are made known bilaterally and through the appropriate international bodies.

CONTRACT FOR NEW BANK OF CANADA BUILDING

Question No. 782—Mr. Bawden:

1. What is the name of the contractor for the Bank of Canada Building on Wellington Street?

2. On what date was the contract awarded and at what price?

3. Will the Building be completed at the original bid contract price and, if not (a) by what amount has the completion cost increased and what are the details of such increases (b) in what manner was the bid contract renegotiated?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): See reply to Question No. 3,229 tabled in the House of Commons January 26, 1976.

DASH-7 STOL AIRCRAFT

Question No. 841—Mr. Horner:

Has the government decided to purchase any of the DASH-7 STOL aircraft and, if so (a) has a contract been signed between the government and DeHavilland Corporation (b) on what date (c) what are the details of the contract?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): No. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable; (c) Not applicable.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Bill C-19 is very much a bill about the style of this government. It is a bill about how far the government judges it must go in order to restore some measure of confidence among the people of the country. It is a bill which consists, it seems to me, in a large amount of vagary and, to use the current fashionable expression, it is a purely cosmetic operation. It is because of this sham, because of this posturing, that the government finds itself in deep trouble with the public of Canada, a matter that I think should worry us whether we sit on this side of the House or on the other.

Canadians do not mind shell games at some fall fair or agricultural exhibition. They are amused by the sleight-of-hand and the speed of the operator. They are prepared to lose a dollar or two as the game goes on. But they care very deeply if the sleight-of-hand is perpetrated by ministers of the Crown. If any bill has evidence of this, it is Bill C-19 which is one of the most interesting shell games outside an agricultural fair that I have ever seen. What has happened, of course, is that the columns of figures have been moved from one page of government ledger to another. In clause 15 the government notes that basically this part of the bill will affect people who do not have as much clout and who do not have as much power and cannot bring as much pressure to bear on the government as others. So the cosmetic operation continues.

Members of parliament on this side of the House are asked to buy this bill. I may say that if it had not been for the most eloquent and positive speech of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) last Wednesday, I do not think we would yet have heard the government's proposal which was given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) about the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act.

When ministers move millions of dollars from one column of government ledgers to another, the public understanding, the public cynicism, the general malaise of the public of Canada is only accentuated. This is why I wanted to take a minute or two to discuss the bill and explain why I characterize it as a measure of the style of this government. It is a style which has effectively disillusioned the vast majority of Canadians who doubt the government's capacity for leading the country. Bill C-19 which we are now debating is, in the vernacular, the son of Bill C-87, with the same inherent defects. The government has brought the bill forward because it persists in its arrogant assumption that the people of Canada will swallow anything. That is partly why members of the opposition, in discharging their obligation to the people of Canada, must take a day or two debating a bill so patently phony in conception.

● (1510)

Let us talk about clause 15 of the bill which, as I said, seeks to repeal section 272 of the Railway Act. In the name of restraint the government sought to abolish the subsidy on the movement of grain and flour through the ports of Saint John and Halifax. Many members—I shall be more generous than the Minister of Transport—on both sides of the House reminded the government how serious the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act would be for those eastern Canadian ports. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Halifax finally smoked out the government. As my colleague said on November 10, as reported on page 957 of Hansard:

> Nothing can justify this—this thoughtlessness; perhaps I should not use the word "arrogant". Nothing can excuse this ineffectiveness and indecision... Unless the minister is prepared, right now, to disclose in some detail what he has in mind, this bill should no longer be debated at this time.

The hon. member for Halifax threw down the challenge, and I must compliment the government because the challenge was taken up; the big guns participated in the debate. Following the hon. member for Halifax, the Minister of Transport said, as reported at page 957 of Hansard:

> When the earlier bill was on the order paper I stated it was our intention to do some serious work on the question of movement of grain and flour which could and should take place after the old section 272 of the Railway Act was no longer in existence.

I am prepared to congratulate the government for belatedly and reluctantly facing the facts, namely, that opposition to the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act made it impossible, and properly so, for the government to secure passage of Bill C-87 in the previous session. Such opposition threatens to delay the progress of Bill C-19 of the present session. Although I am not privy to all the secrets of the Minister of Transport, and I shall disclose one or two of his secrets in a minute or two, I think he will agree that the extensive criticism and debate of the previous session was not in vain for it brought about a deathbed repentance on the part of the government.

The minister, in his somewhat restricted vision, could only remind the House that the hon. members for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), and Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) were concerned about this bill. I prefer to take a more generous attitude than that of ministers who think that nobody but government backbenchers could support such an important bill.

May I interpolate this: if the government had been more generous in accepting opposition suggestions and criticisms, its legislative program would have enjoyed easier passage in the House. As I say, I prefer to take a more generous attitude and would add the official opposition and New Democratic Party members to those who resisted the government's blandishments and its vague promises that it would work to see what the effects of amending the Railway Act would be. It is apparent that in the intervening months it did not do this work. In my opinion, such work should have preceded the introduction of Bill C-87. That is why I talked about the style of government.

I was fascinated to note that despite recommendations made to the government, despite suggestions made by government backbenchers and put on record by members of my party, the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit party about the serious effects on the economy of the deletion of this section in the Railway Act, the government paid no attention, as was evident when it introduced the bill. Months went by. The bill was introduced, but little progress was made. Then the bill was brought forward for debate. Finally, on November 10, 1976, after the hon. member for Halifax had challenged the government to put up or shut up, the Minister of Transport stepped out of his hangar, if I may put it that way, and with an attitude of "full ahead go", if I may use the expression, said action would be taken and that the Canadian Millers' Association had accepted a government proposal.

In a memorandum to the cabinet dated May 25, 1976, the following recommendations were made for cabinet approval. They involved, first, the introduction of a new program of assistance to the Canadian milling industry, based on a direct payment for all export flour shipments except aid and shipments to U.S. destinations equivalent to the benefits of "at and east" rates, the level of payment to be announced following discussion with the Canadian Millers' Association. Second, the initiation of an inquiry by the Canadian Transport Commission to establish the actual cost of "stop-off" for milling in transit purposes. Third, the announcement of the above initiatives before further progress was made with Bill C-87.

I will never know why the cabinet did not accept those recommendations until November 10. During the question period a member of the cabinet spoke of the efficiency of the public service, an observation with which I am happy to agree. Yet here was a memorandum prepared for the cabinet by senior civil servants and it had to wait until November 10 for acceptance. Apparently the government is riding roughshod not only over parliament but over advice given to it by senior public servants in the form of a memorandum. This, I believe, accounts for some of the cynicism abroad in this land.

If the government had accepted the sensible recommendations made to it, by now either Bill C-87 or its progeny, Bill C-19, might be the law of this land. It is reasonable to expect that if the government had followed the advice it got from the public service, or parliament, Bill C-87 would now be part of the law on our statute books. But because that is not the government's style, because the government expects parliament and the public to take it on faith—and never before in our history has such faith been more fragile, because the government did not have faith in the advice of its public servants and did not follow the advice of parliament—it has found it difficult to secure quick passage for its legislation.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

I say all this because hon. members opposite keep asking the opposition if it wants restraint. Mr. Speaker, the opposition wants it, but it wants some genuine, hard evidence to show that the government is concerned about restraint. Second, in the concept of the amendment to the Railway Act, the public wants evidence that the government wishes to keep viable the two large ice-free ports of Saint John and Halifax, wants to continue the movement of grain and wants those two ports to continue the movement of flour as has occurred in other years. As I say, this comment is made with a great amount of graciousness to the Minister of Transport, who was smoked out by the hon. member for Halifax, that all sides of the House wanted to get on with this legislation when the government's intentions were known.

• (1520)

I have another minute or two and I want to go back to the matter of faith. If I can be philosophical for a minute, faith is a concept that needs underpinning; it needs evidence to support it. This government keeps trying to bring down the faith of the Canadian people. It keeps saying it will do this, it will do that, and it will give certain undertakings. Then the government, because it does not take its own advice or the advice of its public service, makes it impossible for those of us who feel very deeply that faith is an essential component in the democratic process. We end up unable to have any faith in the government. In a way, we become accomplices to the cynicism that is abroad in this land. It is abroad largely because of the indecisiveness, rudderlessness, lack of leadership and Johnny-come-lately, cosmetic style of government that should, in my opinion, for the sake of Canada, go to the people for their opinion so that needed changes can be made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly happy to enter the debate at this time, following the very eminent member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). Outside the political context he and I usually agree. However, before getting to the substance of the matter I wish to take up a few of the points he mentioned. First, I do not believe the hon. member is serious in his suggestion that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) did not listen to or work on the difficulties with regard to reductions and subsidies under the Railway Act which had been provided to millers. He cannot be serious in suggesting that that decision was made in the House last Thursday after the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) spoke. If the hon. member had listened to or had read the minister's speech, he would have known that it was only on that day the minister received an indication from the millers that the program which had been discussed and offered to them was workable and that their exports were secure.

Mr. Fairweather: That is exactly the point I was making.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Halifax was very opportunistic. I do not see anything wrong with that. The hon. member for Funday-Royal also wanted to take a bit of the credit. I agree that when they speak in the interest of the Atlantic provinces they should get some credit. However, I want to put on the record that the Minister of Transport had been discussing the problem with the millers for a long period of time.

What the hon. member for Fundy-Royal expounded on this afternoon proves that the government was correct in questioning the process by announcing, in Bill C-87 last year, some reduction in subsidies. What happened was that an alternative that apparently was more efficient in economic terms, in terms of marketing and in many other ways, was subsequently developed by the millers and the government. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal said that the government was acting by fakery or in a cosmetic manner. In fact, the hon. member confirmed that sometimes when a program has been in existence for a long time it should be looked at. For example, it is sometimes necessary to say that a subsidy which has been in effect for a period of years is being looked at, it may have to be reduced and we will discuss a more efficient way of dealing with the situation.

In dealing with this bill, the hon. member spoke about fakery and cosmetics. When he does that he is, in fact, saying that during the previous election campaign the Conservative party was engaging in fakery and cosmetics. They talked about the elimination of Information Canada. I do not recall any talk about the abolition of the Company of Young Canadians. However, they talked enough about government spending to lead people to believe that government spending is waste. If this bill is fakery, then the Tory platform for the past six or seven years is also fakery and cosmetics. They cannot have it both ways. I cannot let my honourable friend, and I use the word "honourable" in the best way, get away with the comment about fakery in government. I know where he stands with regard to public accountability and the honesty with which he deals with politics. However, he is part of the political game, like I am. He knows that to talk about fakery, in the terms he talked about it, is just an illusion.

I do not believe that ordinary people have an overwhelming faith in their government. Let us not forget how the British people defeated Winston Churchill as the last world war was ending. During the war it was easy to attract people and tell them they had to defend the country. Because of the adversary position of politics, the credibility of our public institutions is impaired. However, that is the price we have to pay for what I think is the best system in the world.

I want to again rub the hon. member a bit. While he may not personally be one of those who acts in dishonest ways, he is a member of the Conservative party. When he says that no government in history has had a worse problem with regard to credibility than this government, I remind him there is a government in New Brunswick with which he is at least indirectly associated.

Mr. Fairweather: And proud to be.

Mr. Breau: It is suffering from credibility. It has deceived people in the recent past. Looking at the honesty of positions taken by this government, and the honesty of positions taken by the government of New Brunswick, if I were the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and had his public respect, I would not engage in this kind of attack against this government when the honesty of the Tory government in New Brunswick is being seriously questioned.

I will now get to the substance of the bill. Most of the debate this far indicates one thing. People, particularly those in the Conservative party, are concerned about the government's share of gross national product. The standard question we have put to them over the years has been, which program would you cut out? I do not necessarily want to deal with that; however, when people make a big case about the government's share having increased from one-third some to 40 per cent in the last decade, they are not being totally honest in their comparisons, or they do not have the facts. It is one or the other.

• (1530)

A great deal of government expenditure in the past decade is not expenditure in the conventional sense. It is, rather, a shift of resources from one group of taxpayers to others. Take medicare, for example. People were paying for medical services before the act was passed. The difference now is that the cost is shared, instead of being borne by individuals, and that the administration is in the hands of the federal government and the provinces. Thus, if the intention is to make an honest comparison, the cost of medicare services should be left out.

The same holds true in the case of the Canada Assistance Plan. It is true that hospital insurance was in effect before the beginning of the last decade, but a tremendous increase in cost has taken place since then. So this component should also be excluded from the calculation. The same applies to such allocations of funds as the oil subsidy to cushion the effect of rising prices in eastern Canada. This is not government expenditure in the true sense of the word; it is a transfer of funds from one part of the country to another, a re-channelling of resources for the purpose of ensuring greater equity.

Consider government participation in the Syncrude project. This expenditure was undertaken in the national interest in view of the uncertainty of future oil supplies. When some of the original investors pulled out, governments, both federal and provincial, bought equity in Syncrude to ensure that the project went ahead. So perhaps, when making a comparison, one should exclude this component also. There are many other elements of government expenditure, if hon. members want to call it expenditure, which ought to be excluded.

To sum up my position on this, I say it doesn't matter a damn—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Breau: Well, it doesn't matter a darn—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order. Parlez en français.

Mr. Breau: Well, cela ne fait pas une maudite difference—it doesn't matter one iota—what percentage of the gross national product governments take. The essential consideration is the way in which the money is being spent: is it being spent productively? I hear the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) growling. I could not find a better example. I cannot think of anyone more likely to growl when I mention something like this.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Where does the money come from? You get it from taxes.

Mr. Breau: Yes, by taxing the productive sectors of society and by taxing people on the basis of their ability to pay. I am not saying that all government expenditure is wise, nor am I asserting that the ever-increasing share we are taking is being spent all that productively. That is not the essence of my argument. My point is this: the main thing is not the level of the government's share, but how well it is being spent. The hon. member can growl all he pleases. I can give example after example of government intervention in the economy where the effect has been productive both in the immediate future and in the long term.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, and there have been as many boondoggles, too.

Mr. Breau: I will come to the boondoggles later. But once the objective has been decided on, how are the mechanics of implementation working? One of our difficulties, as a western democracy, is that very often a worth-while objective can be "faussé"—the word is French—by the manner of administration. One thing of which I am certain is this: when we intervene in the economy, we should make very sure we intervene in areas which are productive economically, socially and culturally.

A great many people suggest that the channelling of funds through unemployment insurance is unproductive. I challenge that assertion today, as I have in the past. In an area like mine, it is an accepted fact of life that not everybody can be permanently employed. Many individuals have been brought up to accept the custom of working for only part of the year and staying home for the rest. These people receive unemployment insurance benefits. But the fact that they are, as it were, unemployed does not mean the funds they receive are being spent unproductively. It is part of a tradition that a lot of people repair their homes during that period. If they are fishermen, they repair their gear. If they are loggers, they repair their logging equipment. What happens in other levels of the economy? Similar repairs are made from time to time and the expense of doing so is included immediately in the cost of the product. So what is the difference if an individual carries them out in the course of the winter while receiving unemployment insurance benefits?

It seems to me that when we are talking about the percentage of the gross national product the government should take, we should bear in mind what I have said. Instead of being 30 per cent or 40 per cent, it could be 50 per cent and the process would still be productive. I do not believe it is necessarily bad when government intervenes, nor do I believe that government should necessarily intervene. There are, of course, areas in which intervention is necessary. The arrangements under which federation was agreed upon do not, in any case, make economic sense. The present political fabric is a result of a series of deals made between various regions or economic areas to unite under a parliamentary form of government. In accordance with this overriding decision, one of the first things to be done was to direct the economic affairs of the country east-west. In my part of the country that does not make any sense at all, economically; but it was upon such considerations as these that confederation was made possible. The final result, however, was the emergence of a country in which there was a singular need for intervention at government level if the country was to flourish and survive.

I cannot complete my remarks on this subject without mentioning the hypocritical attitude adopted by some members, particularly those in the Conservative party, when they continue to blather about the evils of government intervention. It is nonsense to suggest that government intervention could be avoided in the context of the Canadian reality. Absence of such intervention would mean prosperity for only a few special areas; the rest of the country would face disaster and eventually confederation would break up. This becomes evident in other fields. What, for example, should be the response to inflation? The traditional response is to tighten up fiscal and monetary measures, a strategy which worked effectively in Japan. Some people say that it worked effectively in the United States. I am not so sure about that. It worked in economic terms, but I should like to study the social cost of having fought inflation by fiscal and monetary means in the United States. It worked in West Germany. I do not think it works in Canada.

• (1540)

Surely we do not have to start giving these kind of fundamental lessons on political economy in a House like this. The economy must serve the people first, not vice versa. The simple fact is that if you fought inflation, in the Canadian reality, with fiscal and monetary policies alone, you would have five provinces bearing the brunt of fighting inflation while the other five continued to produce and to prosper.

I mentioned the ambivalence or hypocrisy of some. If you read the speech of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and others, they talk about the terrible effect of eliminating the subsidy under the Railway Act. They talk of the terrible effect of the stabilization act and say that payments will be delayed. They talk of the terrible effect of a few other things. On the other hand, whenever the president of some bank or some big corporation gets upset and says that there is too much government intervention, we see the Tories popping up in support of him, pursuing their particular point of view. That is what I call ambivalence. Tory members speak of the necessity of intervention to provide grain stabilization, to stabilize prices and to give a subsidy to the millers, but the simple fact is that you need government intervention in the economy.

Mr. Gilbert: Right on.

Mr. Breau: I have another example of where—

Mr. Elzinga: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Breau: Surely.

Mr. Elzinga: I could not help noting the hon. member's comment regarding government intervention. I might ask whether he supports his government's throne speech which was recently brought down, in which the government themselves state that they believe there should be less government intervention? Would he tell us whether he is advocating his own policy or the policy of the government?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member is new to the House, but he has been here long enough to know that I cannot speak for the government. I speak for myself.

Mr. Paproski: I thought you were a parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Breau: That was a year ago. Government policy as put forward in the Speech from the Throne is not that there should necessarily be less government intervention. What the government said was that we have to be more careful about the kind of intervention, that we should make sure that when we do intervene, we intervene in a productive way. That is precisely the point that I was making. I should like to give the House an example of what I mean. I believe that today and forever more this country is going to need a network of day-care centres, not only for social reasons but for economic reasons. I suggest this should be obvious to anyone unless they live in an area unlike mine and do not have to deal with the kind of welfare cases I get in my constituency office and here. The Economic Council of Canada, in its recent report, stated that somewhere between 1982 and 1985 there is going to be a shortage of productive labour in this country. The fact is that a lot of mothers and women today who could be productive have to stay home to look after the kids. It would make more economic sense, quite apart from the social value of this, for the federal government and the provinces to set up a network of day-care centres.

Another area of concern is unwed mothers. We must accept the fact that morality and behaviour have changed, whether we like it or not. We are not a church; we are a political body and are limited in the extent to which we can impose morality upon the people. While some members would like to do that, I do not think that we can. We have to respond to moral behaviour and the comportment of society.

A lot of marriages are breaking up and mothers and fathers are left with one or two children; or sometimes the whole family splits up. There has been a change in attitude and in the lives of people, and this is one further reason why we need government intervention. Lately I have come across case after case of marriage breakdown and either the father or the mother is really put in the position of being unproductive. They cannot work or hold a permanent, productive job precisely because there are no day-care centres in their community. This is why we need more government intervention; the economy of and benefit to the country demands it.

It seems to me that it is all right to question the means by which government intervenes, to say that there is too much bureaucracy, or that the return we get from the bureaucracy is not productive enough. But in this regard I should like to hear hon. members put forward ways in which the bureaucracy can be made more responsive and productive in the kind of society in which we live. I think this is a problem most western societies have to deal with. It is not a simple one; it is a very complicated and complex one. It may be okay in a certain area to say that the mechanics of implementation become too complex and complicated, that they are too much borne down by procedures, that we should eliminate them and start afresh. But it is illusory to talk about the dangers of too much government intervention, and in the Canadian context it would be a disaster, generally speaking, if government were to decide massively to reduce its intervention in the economy.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: Don't take us for a trip to the outports.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is making his maiden speech, and therefore should not be interrupted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some maiden!

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; that is certainly a wonderful suggestion. In making my first address to this House of Commons, it is, of course, a great occasion for me to speak in this chamber with so many years of history and tradition behind it. I hope I will be able to meet the standard of debate in the House and make some contribution.

In making my maiden speech, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be remiss if I did not congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Jamieson), on his elevation to that post. As all hon. members know, he is a Newfoundland member, and every Newfoundlander is very proud of the fact that he has been promoted; I think it is a promotion for him to go to that post.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: On a personal note, may I say the hon. member was a very good friend of my father and was associated with him in business many years ago. They always had a very close relationship, and I know he would be thrilled to know that Don Jamieson is today Secretary of State for External Affairs for Canada and making such a good job of it. That does not mean to say that I am not going to be critical of the minister, Mr. Speaker, because I am, and I will be on other occasions. He is not perfect, but all Newfoundlanders appreciate the job he is doing and the fact that he has had this confidence placed in him by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

● (1550)

If I am allowed to stretch the rules a bit on this occasion, I should like to pay tribute to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. member for Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), my Progressive Conservative colleagues in this House from Newfoundland, for their very distinguished record here, the hon. member for St. John's East since 1957 and the hon. member for Humber-St.George's-St. Barbe since 1968. It is a great pleasure to be in their company in this House and to have them advise and guide me.

I should also like to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) for the reception he had for myself and the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) when we were sworn in. It was a great occasion for me and my family. I should like particularly to thank the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), both of whom attended. It was a great privilege to have the former prime minister, the former leader of our party, and the present leader of our party—who will be the next prime minister—present on that occasion.

I do not wish to try the patience of hon. gentlemen opposite, but I want to speak on the restraint of expenditures bill and say that in my view the policy of this government with regard to the restraint of expenditures is a pernicious one, a phony one and one which ignores the realities of life in Canada and ignores the needs of our disadvantaged areas, in particular the Atlantic provinces. It is a policy which I will not support in this House of Commons. I believe, as we all do, that inflation has to be fought. I believe, also, in the concept that expenditures must be restrained. But surely we must look at the various areas of this country and see where expenditures need to be restrained and where they do not need to be restrained as much.

It is beyond my comprehension how any government can restrain expenditures in an area of the country which has an unemployment rate of 13.9 per cent. It is, in fact, positively cruel and inhuman for any government to apply a restraint policy equally across this country as though every section of it is the same. It may be a policy of restraint that is quite apt for provinces like Ontario, Alberta or Saskatchewan, perhaps, where there are now high employment figures, but it is not proper to apply it blindly to Newfoundland which has an unemployment rate of almost 14 per cent.

There are two things on which I should like to speak, Mr. Speaker: the restraint of government expenditures in connection with the services which the government of Canada gives directly to people, and the restraint of the moneys it transfers to other governments in Canada, because in both respects this government is ignoring one of the basic premises on which it was elected in 1968 and since then. I think there were supposed to be two great themes, one being bilingualism and dealing with the French question, and the other the Prime Minister's statement that he would overcome regional disparity. The Prime Minister has not overcome regional disparity one jot or tittle. He has now apparently despaired of that policy and is casting it aside, because no effort is being made now by the government of Canada to try to overcome regional disparity.

I mentioned the unemployment rate in Newfoundland. Construction is down. New car sales are down. There is no recovery there. Payments of unemployment insurance are up. The economy keeps going because of the transfer of payments and pensions and payments in other directions which they are entitled to as are other Canadians.

When we look at government expenditures and compare the two governments, we find that the provincial government is strapped, it does not have great financial resources, and is borrowing what money it can to keep the economy operating in Newfoundland. It is borrowing more than it should to keep some construction and some employment going in the province, while the other government, with unlimited resources, with the Bank of Canada in its captivity and with power over currency and credit, ignores our conditions and treats us in the same manner that it treats every other part of Canada.

We might just look at the record. In 1974-75, DREE spent in Newfoundland, together with the provincial contribution, $67 million. That was two years ago. Last year, 1975-76, the expenditure declined to $62 million, and in the present year, 1976-77, the expenditure has declined to $55 million as the estimated cash flow from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in Newfoundland. At a time when the government should be expanding its spending, at a time when it has before it many proposals from the government of Newfoundland, at a time when the people in Newfoundland are spending in order to help overcome regional disparity, the federal government has reduced its expenditure by $12 million compared to two years ago.

For the government of Canada to spend the same amount, taking into account inflation, as it spent two years ago it would need to spend $80 million this year in the province of Newfoundland and Labrador through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. When we look at that department which is supposed to carry out the great policy of overcoming regional disparity, we see that the effort is less, not more, and is considerably less when we take into account inflation. When we look at public works, we see the same thing. The public works agency in Newfoundland of the government of Canada is strangled for funds and unable properly to maintain the facilities it has there because its spending has been cut back and restrained in an area where it should be spending more to create employment for the 26,000 Newfoundlanders who are out of work.

In respect of small craft and harbours we have the same story. Two years ago, in Newfoundland, the expenditure for small craft and harbours was $6,801,000: that was in 1974-75. In the following year it was reduced to $4,200,000. This year they are spending something like $4 million on small craft and harbour works. There are excellent people in charge of that agency, but they can only perform if they have the money with which to perform. Why would any government cut back the spending on projects like that which create employment and which are useful services needed at a time of high unemployment? That is a question this government should answer. We have cut-backs in DREE, in public works and in small craft and harbours.

One thing I cannot fathom about this government is its parsimonious attitude, its mean attitude with respect to the question of offshore mineral jurisdiction in Newfoundland. When we entered confederation we brought with us the oil and the gas and the claims to the continental shelf which Canada now has. Sixty-five per cent of the whole offshore area on the east coast of Canada was brought into confederation by Newfoundland. If Newfoundland had not joined, Canada would have had to take a back seat at the law of the sea conference. Canada would have no claim to the oil and gas that lie offshore in Labrador and northeast Newfoundland. One would think that the central government would be delighted that a have-not province like Newfoundland would have a chance to become self-sustaining through the development of those resources if that government would recognize our ownership and control of them. But rather than that, the government of Canada says that it owns and controls the natural resources that Newfoundland brought with it into confederation.

The government bases its position on the legal possibilities involved in a case in British Columbia some eight or nine years ago. Why would not the government say it recognizes that the province of Newfoundland, a have-not province, has a great chance to be financially self-sustaining, so that it would not need tax equalization and transfer payments, and welcome that possibility and confirm that the province owns and controls the use of those resources? Rather than that, the government of Canada wants to keep us dependent upon it. It wants to keep us under its power and control. That is the only reason I can see for the policy the government adopts with regard to our main economic chance in Newfoundland. That is why this government has to be changed.

There was no spending by the government of Canada in our province on defence or search and rescue until the last several weeks, as a results of the efforts of hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. The government's transportation policy is brutal with respect to Newfoundland. The letters "CNR" stand for "Canned Newfoundland Railwaymen". Those letters also stand for "Cannibalize the Newfoundland Railway", because the present government of Canada is permitting the CNR to do as it likes in Newfoundland and to lay off men as it likes, to reduce its services as it likes and to force the freight and express traffic on to the highways.

• (1600)

The pitiful little two-lane highway we have across Newfoundland must now endure tremendous quantities of freight and express traffic because the CNR wants to fix the situation so that they can argue to the government of Canada that it need no longer operate a railway in Newfoundland because there are not sufficient goods being transported in that province. Their labour policy is brutal and shameful. There is not an employee of the CNR in Newfoundlad now who knows his job is safe for the next year or for the next five years. There are 3,900 people working in the CNR, in dry dock and rail service in Newfoundland, and not one of them has job security. They have seen the shameful manner in which they have been abused by the CNR in Newfoundland over the last ten years. We will fight that and we will change it when the next government takes over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I should like to speak for a few moments on government to government transactions, I have painted a bad enough record of cutbacks and restraints of expenditures by the government of Canada in Newfoundland when they should be helping to combat our fantastically high rate of unemployment. Many hon. members here do not have the experience I had when I was involved in the political campaign with dozens and dozens, if not hundreds, of men and women coming every day looking for jobs. One cannot find them jobs because there is no new construction and there are no jobs. I know there are abuses of the unemployment insurance system and of the welfare system, but the fact remains that 90 per cent of the unemployed men and women want jobs, they do not want to be sitting idle, they are looking for work in Newfoundland, but the government of Canada is doing little to help them.

What did it do with the Opportunities for Youth program, another program which was cut back? The government is knocking down the Company of Young Canadians in this bill. They became too dangerous or radical for hon. gentlemen opposite. In 1975, in Newfoundland, OFY brought jobs to 2,950 young people, at the cost of $2.8 million. There is nothing wrong with that. It gave people in universities a chance to work in the summer. In 1976 this was eliminated, but not because the unemployment rate had gone down. I do not know the reason. This year we have the same high unemployment, which will be higher in the next few months, yet we are offered a measly $8 million for LIP projects, not even matching the $12 million spent last year. We are offered some $4 million less in Newfoundland, with unemployment just as bad, and likely to be worse. What kind of humanitarian instincts motivate the government opposite? Why do they cut down on the Opportunities for Youth program? Now we hear this palaver of propaganda that it will be replaced by something much better. Let us see it where it counts. I cannot tell my people in St. John's West that there is anything better coming, because it has not been proven to me yet.

These are some of the problems of government-to-person direct programs. The capital winter works program was eliminated. It is bad enough for the government to eliminate the direct services of the government to individuals who live in Newfoundland and in other disadvantaged areas, but now they are going to squeeze provincial governments. They will squeeze the governments of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. I have been lucky enough—or perhaps unlucky enough—to attend most federal-provincial conferences in the last five years. I found in the last two years a noticeable change in attitude. The change is that the government of Canada does not care any longer whether the weaker provinces in Canada sink or swim. They have given up hearing. Every time we look at a government program, we see the squeeze being applied, such as on tax equalization. The government of Canada wants to change that program because expenditures have been escalating more than was originally contemplated. In Newfoundland that is a very important program.

The programs I will speak about now account for 52 per cent of all the revenue of the government of Newfoundland. So the federal government want to change the tax equalization formula, and a few months ago they announced they would change the revenue guarantee program in connection with the reformed income tax structure, and change it retroactively. That will cost Newfoundland $8 million if it goes through. It will cost Ontario a lot more. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is unbending; he will not bend one iota, although I am informed that he is bending slightly now. He will soon be broader bent than Ed Broadbent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman will have to give, Mr. Speaker, because the government has recognized that across Canada, not only the ordinary people but governments, no matter of what political stripe, whether Liberal, P.C. or NDP, will be called an anathema. They are all fed up with the performance of this government.

First there was the revenue guarantee, then there was medicare. The government of Canada instituted the medicare plan. They followed the example of the hon. gentleman who sits in the House now, the former premier of Saskatchewan. For provinces such as Newfoundland, with our low ratio of doctors, a large part of the expenditure for the first few years came from the government of Canada under the provisions of that plan. But now that is changing. Now we have to pay about 64 per cent of the cost of medicare. Along comes the government which instituted the plan and suggests they will put a ceiling on it.

This government does not have to bargain collectively with CUPE or with other unions which represent hospital workers; it does not have to deal directly with the fantastic increase in hospital costs. Who could argue that hospital wages should not be improved, compared with what they were three or four years ago? So they want to leave hospital insurance to the provinces and they want to leave medicare to the provinces. They put their ceiling on the plans, a ceiling which has no relationship to the cost which the provinces have to bear in operating hospital insurance and medicare for many years to come. The result will be that provinces such as Newfoundland will no longer be able to carry on even the services they now have, much less improve them. If these plans and schemes come into effect, the province of Newfoundland will not be able to maintain its present services because more and more of its budget will have to go into medicare and hospital insurance programs already in effect.

The government of Canada put a ceiling on post-secondary education expenditures. I believe they will permit an increase of up to 15 per cent a year. Last year, post-secondary education cost Newfoundland $1.6 million more than it would have if that arbitrary ceiling had not been imposed. If the federal government had met its original obligation, Newfoundland would have had $1.6 million for those programs. That is not calculated to help the disadvantaged provinces in providing proper post-secondary educational services to their people. So in every direction we look, whether government-to-person or government-to-government programs, the record of the government opposite is a sorry one, and it is getting sorrier every day.

Another change that has brought major consequences with it is with respect to the RCMP. The RCMP is the police force in Newfoundland. Hon. gentlemen opposite are squeezing the government of Newfoundland and other provinces where the RCMP is operating. Formerly they shared 50-50 with the provinces the cost of the services of the RCMP. This year the government wants to change it to 52 per cent. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that when I said that you thought the government of Canada was going to take 52 per cent itself, that this great big, wealthy and healthy government was going to pay 52 per cent of the cost. Not at all. They are saying to the provinces that they want their share to decrease to 48 per cent, and our share to go up to 52 per cent this year. Next year it will go up another percentage point and this will continue until it reaches 56 per cent. They are not even prepared to continue to pay half the cost of the RCMP in the provinces where they now operate. What kind of policy is that? Of course they need the RCMP. They should have had more RCMP on duty last weekend when 11 prisoners escaped. However, that is another story. We do not know where they are headed for today—probably a polling booth in Quebec. Eleven of them escaped in one weekend alone. If this keeps up another few weekends, there will not be a prisoner left in Canada's prisons. So even with respect to a minor service like the RCMP, the federal government is squeezing the provinces. It does not matter whether one province can less afford it than another; the same policy is being applied to them all.

• (1610)

The former premier of Newfoundland is still actively engaged in politics.

An hon. Member: He is now back with the Liberals.

Mr. Crosbie: We will see what a circus there will be in the next ten months and we will see how long he will stay after the next leadership convention. The hon. gentleman once said that you should not treat Canada like the bed of Procrustes. He always had a very apt illustration. I believe Procrustes was a gentleman who was longer than his bed, and to get people into his bed they had to be broken up. At least, I think that was the point. That is what is happening here. The present government has gone back to the policy of Procrustes, that we all have to suit its mould and we all have to suit its financial restraint programs. That is where it has ended up, and if this policy continues the disadvantaged provinces will be in serious financial straits within the next year or two; there is no question about that.

To come back to transportation, not only is there an attempt to downgrade our services, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), with unparalleled arrogance, last July whipped out from under the jurisdiction of our public utilities commission the CN buses which operate in Newfoundland. Hon. gentleman will remember that a few years ago the Liberal government of Newfoundland agreed that if the government of Canada helped finance the TransCanada Highway, and finally gave 90 per cent of the cost, they could phase out the CNR passenger service and replace it with a bus service. It was agreed that the buses would come under the jurisdiction of the Newfoundland board of commissioners of public utilities for regulation purposes, and that continued. In fact, there were appeals, even to the Supreme Court of Canada which confirmed that. However, a few months ago the CN tried to raise its bus rates in Newfoundland by 130 per cent—and there is no rail passenger service left—but the board of commissioners of the public utilities reduced that increase to 30 per cent or 32 per cent.

The response from the Minister of Transport, the bionic minister who is headed for $6 million in travelling expenses before this operation ceases, was to snatch the buses out from under the control of our public utilities commission without any warning or consultation. He passed an order in council and put them under the Canadian Transport Commission. They will certainly have a cosy nest under the arm of the CTC, which knows nothing of conditions in Newfoundland, which could not care less, and which is 1,600 miles away. Of course, we know who the chairman of the CTC is and from which ministry he came. This is unparalleled in the history of Canada. The government thinks that Newfoundland is a small, puny little province which is afraid, which will not fight back and which can be treated with contempt and arrogance. The government thinks that Newfoundland does not matter, that the people in central Canada will not know about it and that they are the only ones who count.

The thing which matters to the government is how it can put itself over on the media in Ontario and Quebec. Newfoundland and its problems are booted around and do not get much attention here; but Newfoundland is going to get some attention as long as I can be heard in this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In every way the record of this government with regard to transportation in Newfoundland is terrible. I said today that I would not criticize my hon. colleague for Burin-Burgeo, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I will pass over his misdeeds and misdemeanours and leave that for another occasion. I will pass over how things have been arranged so that Port aux Basques gets all the transportation money in Newfoundland, and St. John's West, St. John's East, Gander, Twillingate, Bonavista, Trinity and Conception and the rest get the left-overs. That is something I will expand upon on another occasion; I do not want to mention it today. I am not sure what the time limit is in this House.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want to be partisan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I thank hon. gentlemen opposite for being so quiet while I am making this speech. After this, of course, I expect no mercy. The record of the government is a sorry one, one which has to be changed. It is too late for the government to change its ways. There is no way it will survive the wrath of the electorate when it comes to meet its maker in the next 18 months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I believe the facts I have laid before the House today should illustrate that the present government is arrogant, lacks feeling, is unbending, is uncaring and casually assumes its own superiority. That is its hallmark. The government assumes that it is superior and that it will be here forever. The government will be disabused of that notion very shortly. The government is cynical. It first fights against wage and price controls and brings them in 16 months later. That is what disturbs the people of this country. They are not disturbed by wage and price controls themselves.

This reminds me how delighted I was to see Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan when I was in Saskatoon this weekend. He admonished the federation of labour out there and told them that as a socialist he believed in a planned economy and that a planned economy meant controls on income. He asked the federation why it was fussing so much about wage controls, because a true socialist believes in income controls. All this charade of labour unions across the country beating their gums about wage and price controls, when the NDP supports it, is but a laugh. They do not understand that the party they support supports controls on income and if that party ever gets into power we will have our incomes controlled; there are no two ways about that. Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan is a clear-thinking man who says what he believes, and he made it quite clear what he believes in. In my opinion, he put the union people out there in their place. What tripe for them to support the NDP and then fight against an income controls program. They can fight against this House and the ministers, but not against the concept of the program.

We accuse the government of this country of economic mismanagement, and we accuse the government of giving up the attempt to overcome regional disparity, as I mentioned when I started. This is not a new situation; it is the same kind of situation as that which existed in 1957. In 1957 there was a confident, smug Liberal government which thought it was destined to rule forever. Mr. St. Laurent and his colleagues went to the people of Canada, and the right hon. member for Prince Albert led the revolution of revulsion which had been brewing and simmering in the people of Canada for the previous couple of years and swept them out of office. The right hon. member for Prince Albert was from Alberta—

Some hon. Members: Saskatchewan.

Mr. Crosbie: —and in a year or two years, or perhaps 15 months—it cannot come too quickly; perhaps it will come during the winter or spring—the hon. member for Rocky Mountain will lead another revolution of revulsion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: No partisan speeches.

Mr. Crosbie: My next speech in this House will be from the other side.

An hon. Member: Is that all the speeches you are going to make?

An hon. Member: Are you going to change party again?

Mr. Crosbie: Hon. gentlemen opposite have enough of a leadership problem. The worm soon turns. I do not believe that the main issue in Canada is bilingualism, and the people of Canada do not believe that. We are not going to be fooled by it; we are not going to have the wool pulled over our eyes. The people of central Canada may visualize that as the main problem, but they are fooling themselves. We in Newfoundland believe in the policy of bilingualism, but our belief in that policy has not helped our energy differences with the province of Quebec. Bilingualism does not help us there; it is a problem of provincial or interprovincial politics. We do not think bilingualism is a problem.

• (1620)

I believe that the problems are, first, the nature of Canadian federalism. Are we going to have a unitary state, as the Prime Minister and the government seem to be heading toward? They are at full gallop toward having all power centred in Ottawa. That is the impact of their policies. They do not care about the regions, or want strong regions. That is the true nature of federalism. Are we going to have an overwhelmingly strong federal government with five or six weak counties and a couple of strong provinces, or a true federal state? That issue will be decided in the next election, as our leader believes in the second alternative.

Overcoming unemployment is another problem and it is much greater than bilingualism. It is true that 7.6 per cent unemployment may not be a fantastic rate across Canada when you take into account that today there are a lot of two-job families with women working, and so on. These excuses can put unemployment to 14 per cent, but unemployment in any part of the country is unforgivable and there have to be ways of overcoming regional unemployment. That is why in St. John's West, on October 14, the New Democratic Party candidate did so well. It is why I was elected, and why the Liberal candidate was completely trodden underfoot with only 16 per cent of the vote in a province that has been Liberal since confederation. It is a sign of what is to come, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is the true nature of Canadian federalism, Mr. Speaker. There is the question of overcoming unemployment and keeping inflation under control. No area of this country should come anywhere near 14 per cent unemployment. The third problem is regional disparity. The government is tired of wrestling with that difficult problem, but hon. members over here want a chance to grapple with it. The right hon. member for Prince Albert made a breakthrough when he was in power, and this party is ready to tackle that problem again and overcome it.

The fourth problem is to make Canada productive again. I put that well ahead of bilingualism. The so-called Canadian nationalism is, in my view, merely a reflection of Ontario provincialism. We are supposed to be Canadian nationalists over whatever issues excite the people of Ontario. But they are provincial in their view and think that the Foreign Investment Review Act and such things are the greatest issues that interest the people of Canada. But they are far more interested in the things I have mentioned.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank hon. members for being so patient. I know I may have been a bit more partisan than was expected, but the people of St. John's West have not had a voice here for 14 months because the Prime Minister shivered and shook in his boots.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: They have not elected me to come here and be quiet for the next six months. Their problems are too great, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to express those problems here, as will members opposite and members on this side. In Newfoundland, 530,000 people feel aggrieved because they have not been looked after properly by the federal government. They think it has gone off the rails. They are concerned about bilingualism, about feeding their families, about having jobs, proper services and transportation, and about keeping the jobs they have. Those are the things on their minds, not bilingualism. They are prepared to deal with that question, too, but after the more fundamental things.

If the government keep on with its present policies of restricting expenditures as illustrated by this bill, if they continue with their policy of squeezing the provinces as they are doing at the federal-provincial conferences, then in Newfoundland the theme song is going to be "Throw out the lifeline". Someone is going to have to rescue them, and that is going to be the hon. member for Rocky Mountain when he forms the next government.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) on his maiden speech. It seemed to me to exhibit both poise and expertise, but hardly the undue modesty that one attributes to maidens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Bill C-19 is entitled an act to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures. The very basis of the bill is the obligation of the government to restrain spending. In the days of inflation this is obviously a desirable and urgent objective, but the restraint must be applied in the right places in order not to destroy constructive efforts to expand production or cause great hardship to those who can bear it least. My colleagues have discussed the detailed provisions of the bill and I should like to deal with a related matter which is not covered by the bill itself, that is, the whole question of restraint in government spending in the area of defence.

The point I wish to emphasize is that restraint in connection with government expenditures on unnecessary defence installations should be given serious consideration. The tendency of nearly all modern governments—and not only governments but the press and some parts of the public—is to treat government expenditures on defence as sacrosanct, that is, touch everything else but do not touch defence expenditures. It is not a popular subject, but it is an important one. On the other hand, I suggest there is no more inflationary expenditure than that on defence. It produces no consumer goods and does not produce extra goods. As we have all observed, defence spending has a self-perpetuating tendency. Defence installations go on and defence alliances go on whether they are necessary or unnecessary. I think this is a subject which requires careful consideration.

In Canada, not only have we embarked already upon substantial expenditures for military purposes whose usefulness may be doubtful, but the former minister of national defence spoke triumphantly in this House about a year ago saying that his department was not to be subject to a ceiling on expenditures but was to be allowed an increased capital expenditure of 12 per cent per annum for five years. I suggest that was clearly inflationary.

The tendency is the past has been to make these expenditures taboo and not a subject for discussion. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence can examine the details, but in this chamber in the past, with the governments we have had, there has been no tendency to consult with that committee on the major projects that are contemplated. A notorious example is the purchase of the Orion, the LRPA, from the Lockheed Corporation. This was sprung on the Canadian people, with a minimum of discussion about its basic purpose, at a price that turned out to be over $1 billion. There was a lot of discussion about the details and the ineptitude exhibited in handling the negotiations by the government which did not have a word in writing.

There has also been discussion throughout the world about the mismanagement in Lockheed and its worldwide system of bribery. I hasten to add, Mr. Speaker, that no one suggested any Canadian was bribed. It would appear that our defence department was ready to accept the advice of American officials with an interest in the financial stability of Lockheed without serious question. The fact is that the Orion had different purposes and roles. One major role assigned to it was participation in long-range and submarine warfare in the Atlantic. The scenario provided for an attack by superior conventional forces of the U.S.S.R. and Warsaw pact in Europe, followed by a protracted war in Europe in which the North American continent would seek to send supplies by ship to Europe. This method of supply would be countered by submarine warfare in the North Atlantic. It was proposed that long-range patrol aircraft could be used to fly across the Atlantic to detect and destroy submarines and thereby protect the sea lanes of the Atlantic.

● (1630)

The weakness of this scenario is that it is hardly credible. It is most unlikely that such a war would emerge in the missile age. Indeed, in the two great wars fought in the past the containment of the submarine menace was of the utmost importance, and strenuous measures were taken for dealing with submarines. It would be a grave mistake to transfer to the present day the thinking which applied to the totally different circumstances existing during those wars. It is hard to believe that if, as assumed, the U.S.S.R. were to launch even a partially successful attack on Europe, the war would not quickly develop into a nuclear war.

This situation has been foreseen. For example Air Vice-Marshall Stewart Menaul, head of the Royal United Services Institute for Defence Studies, London, says that present NATO strategy means that only immediate use of nuclear weapons would stop a Warsaw pact assault. In the series called "Power at Sea," one of the Adelphi papers submitted by the institute of strategic studies—by Professor Hedley Bull who is well known in the field—analysed what small powers can do in naval warfare and recommended that their role should be the defence of coastal waters and fishing zones out to the anticipated 200-mile limit. By the same token, he gives reasons for thinking that extended submarine warfare is not a suitable role for the forces of a small or medium power. So far as Canada is concerned, preparation for this sort of submarine warfare is a waste of time and money. In addition, we are committed to spend some $184 million on German Leopard tanks which are to be used mostly in the central plains of Europe. If it is necessary for Canada to continue this role, perhaps that is a reasonable expenditure. In any event, that proposition, too, requires review either by parliament or the defence committee.

The former minister of national defence, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson) made it clear that Canada is interested in substantial purchases of fighter aircraft. I hear that the government contemplates spending approximately another $1 billion on this item. I hope that the newly appointed Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson), who is not now in the House and whom I congratulate on his appointment, will review not only the capital spending plans as set out in our defence proposals but will make to parliament or to the defence committee a complete statement with regard to Canada's future spending plans in this field. We have never heard such statements made in the past.

If such plans have been worked out within the Department of National Defence, and no doubt they have been, they should be brought forward by the minister for consideration. I hope that our newly appointed Minister of National Defence will bear in mind the white paper on defence which was published when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) was minister of national defence in August, 1971. It purported to set out the priorities for Canada's defence expenditures. Indeed, the priorities of defence policy were issued by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 3, 1969. They included quite properly, as the first item, the surveillance of our own territory and coast lines, that is, protection of our sovereignty; the defence of North America in co-operation with U.S. forces; the fulfilment of such NATO commitments as may be agreed upon; and the performance of such international peacekeeping roles as we may from time to time assume.

A major chapter in the white paper on defence deals with the protection of Canada and the surveillance required and points out how essential this is not only to ourselves but to our allies as well. The same chapter deals with the defence of North America and speaks of the only military threat to Canada as being that of a large-scale nuclear attack on North America. The only answer to such threat is the threat of retaliation. Canada's contribution in that field is confined to providing surveillance and early warning. The manned bomber defence is no longer needed and is rightly given low priority in the missile age in which an attack by manned bombers would be almost unthinkable.

Not only Canada should take a careful look at defence expenditure. The whole world is demonstrating a collective insanity in arms expenditure. Estimates of total, worldwide expenditure in arms vary from $300 billion a year to $350 billion a year. As Barbara Ward said so clearly in her book, we require a fraction of that sum to meet basic essentials for humanity; the arms expenditures are distorted. In her book, "The Home of Man", published at the time of Habitat, she deals with the cost of meeting some essential needs. She puts forward estimates which the World Bank made some time ago. She says that worldwide we would need to spend $42 billion on food and nutrition; $25 billion on rural and urban water supplies; $28 billion on urban housing; $16 billion on urban transport; $8 billion on population and health programs—altogether, about $125 billion over ten years or $12.5 billion a year on all these items.

[Mr. Brewin.]

We can compare that sum with the $300 billion to $350 billion the world spends annually on arms and see that relatively small amounts of money need to be spent to change the lives of people who are not properly fed, not properly educated, who are unhealthy and scourged by sickness. When we consider how little, relatively, we need to spend in the world to correct these problems and how much we spend in the world on arms, it is not difficult to see why Barbara Ward said that expenditures on arms are unwarranted and badly distorted.

Let me make it clear that I do not advocate that troops to which we have assigned various roles should not be adequately equipped, trained and remunerated. I am advocating a far more searching and open look by the government, parliament—indeed, by the people of Canada—into the roles and priorities we choose. I hope the government will reconsider giving carte blanche to the armed services to break through restraints and so free their expenditures. It is one thing to take account of inflationary developments, but it is quite another to add to the consequences of inflation the additional figure of 12 per cent for capital defence expenditures per annum for at least five years. The figure would be cumulative. Clearly, it would be inflationary, and a review of this figure would do more to restrain expenditures than any other measure proposed in this bill.

● (1640)

When you make the sort of speech I have made, some people try to scare you about Soviet defence expenditures, saying you have to meet that. Very distinguished people, including the Secretary General of NATO, are not immune from this tendency. They try to frighten us with this sort of talk. I have a very interesting article taken from the Washington Post and published in the Manchester Guardian. It was published on October 17 of this year, so it is up to date. I wish to read it:

> The Soviet Union is spending much more on defence and armaments than previously realized, but lags far behind the United States in military technology, and industrial and agricultural capacity, according to new U.S. intelligence estimates released last week.
>
> In congressional testimony, directors of the Central and Defence Intelligence Agencies described a Soviet Union which cannot feed itself, which is technologically backward, which is suffering through a sort of Soviet-style recession, but which nevertheless is outspending the U.S. on defence by a large margin.
>
> Neither agency—

There are two agencies referred to that gave evidence to the United States Senate committee.

> —claimed that Soviet spending has actually endangered U.S. security, and George Bush, director of the CIA, emphasized that the upward revision of CIA estimates of the Russians' defence spending did not mean their defence programs were bigger than previously realized. An important explanation for the upward revisions, the CIA said, is the apparent fact that "Soviet defence industries are less efficient than we formerly believed... about half as efficient as we thought."

It goes on to give some figures.

> The agency's new estimates are based on new information, some presumably from recent Soviet emigrants who have worked in Soviet military industries.
>
> Bush told Senator William Proxmire's subcommittee that the Soviet Union does not have a single weapons system which is technologically superior to a U.S. system.

On the other hand, Bush said, the U.S. has many weapons systems that the Russians cannot duplicate.

That is enough to illustrate my point. It is not that these figures are necessarily correct. They may well be wrong. It is not that we should close our eyes, drop our guard, or any other expression you want to use with regard to a careful study of what is required—an awareness. We live in a world that could turn very hostile. Therefore, I am not asking that that be done. What I am asking is that we do not rush into every heavy expenditure proposed by certain defence sources merely because of some panic created about what is supposed to be the situation in the U.S.S.R.

I conclude by making an appeal to the House, especially the Minister of National Defence, to start a new era in this matter of defence spending, an era in which the policies of the government shall be open. I know there are secrets that cannot be divulged, secrets that have military significance. However, the over-all purpose and the over-all role we have to play can well be discussed by intelligent people. There is a lot of expertise required in this field. People who know what they are talking about have often stated that intelligent people directing their minds to these matters can come up with rational, common sense and worth while conclusions. We in this House have not been given the opportunity to do so.

I hope the new Minister of National Defence will usher in a new era, partly through the committee and partly through statements in this House. I hope he will make sure that what we do is needed to be done, that the people of Canada understand why it is being done and, if it is not necessary, the restraint which we urge in other fields will be applied in this field as well.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Saint John's West (Mr. Crosbie) on his maiden speech. I can honestly say that I have a certain affinity with the hon. member. Coming from British Columbia, we are used to the idea of people changing political parties like they change their socks. Therefore, I can understand the hon. member for Saint John's West. I hope that hon. member follows the example of Joey Smallwood who, as a Liberal, brought Newfoundland into confederation. He wavered at some point, but recently announced he has rediscovered that the Liberal party is the party of mainstream Canada, and he has rejoined that party. I only hope the hon. member for Saint John's West will have a similar happy reconversion in his political life. He will find out that the Liberals are a forgiving party and do not hold animosity against people who wish to change their party at any given time.

I wish to comment briefly on a particular point raised by the hon. member for Saint John's West. He discussed where DREE money goes within his very beautiful province. If I am not mistaken, the hon. member was a former finance minister in the province of Newfoundland. It is the provinces which decide where DREE money will go. They set the priorities. Therefore, the hon. member for Saint John's West is criticizing himself for not having put DREE money in the right areas of that province. I have had similar experience with the province of British Columbia. I cannot get a sou of DREE money on Vancouver Island. It is not because the federal government will not pay it; it is because it is not a priority of the provincial government. The hon. member spoke about DREE money going into certain constituencies. That amazes me, because obviously it was his government that put it there. I realize this was his maiden speech, but I had to make a few comments regarding his remarks. It is not being done with any malicious intent, but merely to set the record straight. It is the province that sets the priorities, not the federal government.

If I had my way, I would like to have a lot more say about where this money is spent, rather than have the provinces have all the control over how the taxpayers' money of Canada is spent within the provinces. I may be from Missouri, but I sometimes wonder if the provinces are being honest on occasion in putting money into areas that might meet their priorities for several reasons but are not in the best interests of their provinces, at least from the federal point of view. If we are going to spend money in the provinces, we should have a lot more say than we have had in the past.

I do not like to see members come here, especially an ex-minister of finance of a province, and say that the federal government is directing it, when the truth is exactly the opposite. As a former minister of finance, the hon. member for Saint John's West would have had more say about this than probably any other cabinet minister in that particular government. I wanted to make those few remarks before dealing with Bill C-19.

I, too, would like to express the problem that I have as a new member of parliament. Whether you are a new or an old member of parliament, or whether you are in provincial or municipal politics, I am sure one meets the same problem. Day after day the opposition chastises the government for spending too much money. They ask why the federal government has such an enormous budget which has grown by 300 per cent in the past ten years. They say that if they were in power they would certainly do something about it. They say they would bring in legislation which would do one of two things. The hon. member for St. John's West says we do not spend enough money in his area. However, generally speaking, the position taken by the official opposition is that we should cut down the amount of money spent by government and be more prudent with the taxpayers' money. But whenever we do this members over there complain we are at fault and should, rather, be making our economies in some other direction.

● (1650)

Is this politically honest, when a definite effort is made to restrain government spending? Surely the opposition should cheer these efforts and pound their desks. Or is it a fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has so far failed to produce a policy? Are members over there still trying to decide where they stand? Must we wait two more years until they come up with an answer? At least the official opposition should have the courtesy to let us know whether or not they have made up their minds. I do not care which way they decide to go; I only wish they would go one way or the other. The people of Canada expect the opposition to take a stand on questions of national interest. I do not think the people are getting a fair deal from the official opposition at this time. I suspect they are taking money under false pretences. As an official opposition, members over there have a duty not only to oppose but to offer constructive criticism. I have been listening to this debate for several days and I have not heard a single concrete suggestion from over there. How is it possible to carry on a debate when only one side has a position?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: I should like to take a few moments to discuss one of the clauses of Bill C-19 which has to do with family allowances. Instead of being negative, perhaps one of the speakers for the Conservative party would like to comment on the question whether the government should be tying family allowances in with family income; in other words, whether a family with an income of $50,000 a year or more should be getting a family allowance amounting to $22 or $23, or whatever it is, as opposed to a family with an income of around $7,000 a year.

We have set precedents in the past under the old age pension program and other government programs. We recognize that some people have less money than others, and we say to them, "When it comes to federal funding, we shall place the main emphasis on the needs of those with lower incomes." We do not give equivalent grants of money to those who have been successful in life. Rather, we have concentrated on those who, in many cases through no fault of their own, have lost the ability to make the same kind of income as more fortunate citizens enjoy.

What does the official opposition say about this? It would obviously be possible to save money by withdrawing the allowance from high income earners and redistributing it among families which are finding real difficulty in meeting the burden of inflation, families in which the breadwinner might have serious problems about holding a job in present economic circumstances. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether it would not be better for us to address ourselves to this problem rather than to the question whether the $22 should be frozen or not. Ought we not to be asking ourselves whether the money which is presently going into the economy under this plan is being used to the best possible advantage? Speaking for myself, I have some doubt as to whether this money is being directed to those who most require it.

We all know that the costs of raising a family have increased tremendously in the last few years. Young people starting out in marriage today often decide that both shall work for the first five or ten years, not because the wife particularly wants to go out to work, or because the husband wants to come home and cook TV dinners, but because it is very costly to bring up a family during times of inflation. If we accept this situation, should we not be asking ourselves, as members of parliament, whether the many millions of dollars which go out in the form of family allowances are going to the right people? Is the present egalitarian basis of distribution, in accordance with which the same amount is sent to everyone, regardless of income, in direct proportion to the number of children in a family, really in the interests of those who could best use a helping hand in the raising of their families?

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Veterans Affairs; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Statistics Canada; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Energy.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

SUGGESTED HOLDING OF NATIONAL REFERENDUM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider holding a national referendum for the purpose of making a survey of public opinion on the issue of capital punishment at the time of the next federal election.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have submitted this motion to the House because I believe that many Canadians feel they were betrayed by parliament last summer. Never before has there been such a consistently uniform expression to all members of parliament by their electorate as on the issue of capital punishment. For about the past five years every reliable indicator has shown that about 80 per cent of the Canadian people wanted to see a return of the death penalty. Members of the House were fully aware of this desire, yet chose not to ignore it but to recognize it and then to override it. This is why people all across Canada today feel that their elected representatives have betrayed them.

The Liberal government achieved the majority vote it sought on that issue by using the age-old tactic of the decoy and thereby fragment the opposition. The Liberal cabinet voted as a block and were, in fact, expected to show solidarity behind a government-sponsored bill; but each other member of the House, on the surface at least, was supposed to vote independently. This gave the government not only the advantage of an immediate block of about 28 votes but also the influence of that block for persuading others.

The decoy strategy centred on promoting the idea of a "free" vote or "conscience" vote, incidentally thereby absurdly implying that none of the other votes taken in parliament are either "free" or "conscience" votes. In my mind, Mr. Speaker, this is what has destroyed the respect Canadians ought to have for the institution and the elected members who make up this body. It is this superseding of private wishes over the wishes of the Canadian people that is making every thinking and feeling elector distrust all those men and women who run for public office.

I can well imagine that during the 1974 election every member of this House, in one way or another, said to their electorates, "Vote for me; I want to be your representative in Ottawa". Two years later they had their greatest chance. They were faced with a vote that was openly non-partisan, a vote that gave them the clear opportunity to represent the wishes of their constituents without any prior commitment to any party policy. Every member was aware of the numerous national polls on this subject; probably all members had approximately the same ratio indicated in their mail when the public was speaking out on this issue. The government, faced with this reality, had to find some way to defeat the will of the majority. They found it by declaring that the vote on capital punishment would be a "conscience" vote, again implying that members do not exercise their conscience on any other votes.

So the debate on capital punishment as a subject itself was really an exercise of diminishing importance, except for the very important factor of providing the electors with information on how each member established his position and justified his vote. In the end, the vote was really not on capital punishment as much as it was a test of whether or not parliament was an expression of the will of the people. Clearly, we failed. We failed because all of us, to one degree or another, bought the validity of the concept of the free vote. Faced with the choice of representing their electors or representing themselves, many chose to represent themselves.

I said during the debate that such a response was nothing but elitism. It is, in effect, saying that regardless of what the majority of Canadians think on this issue, and regardless of how definitively they have expressed themselves on it, the members here know better and, therefore, can override the will of the majority. I am not forgetting, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes this is the case, that it is in fact the job of the member to study issues in detail, to use all the resources at his disposal, resources that may not be available to the general public, and then as a result perhaps arrive at conclusions that are unpopular and possibly misunderstood. But the issue of capital punishment has been the most talked about, the most studied, and the most thought-out issue by the public in recent years. The public was not uninformed or unthinking on this issue.

Is it not curious, Mr. Speaker, that when the Liberal government were elected in 1974, they took pride in how intelligent and insightful the electors were in choosing them to govern, yet within two years they were saying that those same electors, who two years previously were so smart, were now so dumb they could not be trusted with such an issue. I think the public now knows it has been used, that it has been had. Is it any wonder we face a problem of voter apathy in this country? Too many voters have been convinced by such decisions as this one, isolated from the will of the voting public, that such candidates and members of parliament come to them only out of necessity at election time. Such actions by parliament have convinced voters that their vote will have no real effect on the destiny of Canada.

I know that those who disagree with what I am saying will counter by saying, in effect, "What do you want a member of parliament to be, an automaton, slavishly repeating what he has been told by a partially or ill-informed public? Are we to have parliament made up of a delegate system, where members go home to a committee to receive instructions as to how they should vote, making parliament a kind of council of supreme Soviets, or presidium or, at best, a convention? Not at all; that is nothing but argument by the ridiculous; and the Canadian people don't expect that: they expect members of this House to be capable of intelligent and independent decision-making. But they also expect to be listened to and to be heard, and heard in earnest. Also, they expect honesty at election time. If candidates and members plan to ignore or disregard the will of their electors once they are elected, they should be honest enough to say so at the time.

If ignoring the will of the majority can be justified in any way at all, then why, pray, go through the expense and ritual of redistribution? Why enlarge the scale of possibilities to disillusion the electorate? This House seems to be perfectly capable of acting autocratically with its present size. Presumably we plan to enlarge the House to give better representation to the Canadian people. Presumably the additional members will permit all of us to get closer to the people and thereby get a better indication of the wishes of the people. But, Mr. Speaker, with this kind of rationale, all the increased size of the House will provide is an increased number of opportunities to disillusion our people.

For the past two years members of the cabinet have been travelling across Canada trying to get a consensus from various sectors of our economy. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has been seeking this for the government's anti-inflation program. The former minister of finance met with groups of business leaders all across Canada trying to enlist them in a voluntary restraint program. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has been seeking the same kind of co-operation from labour leaders.

No one would agree that this is not important or that the approach is not a useful one. But why does the government take this approach only on economic issues? Why not get a much broader consensus on so-called moral issues? There is precedent for it. The Mackenzie King government had a referendum on the issue of conscription during World War II. It could be done again on this issue.

I do not think anyone wants to see government by referendum. Members of this House have been elected to be decision-makers. But on this issue I believe parliament has won the distrust of the Canadian people by disregarding their wishes. I see no other way to restore the confidence of the people that parliament deserves. I see no other way but to give them a direct and personal voice on this decision. Let them decide by referendum. This will relieve parliament of the onerous burden it now bears. If the people vote in favour of the death penalty, they will also carry the responsibility. If they reject it, they join themselves to the present decision. Either way, they will at least know that the will of the majority rules.

One last point, Mr. Speaker. In a democracy it is easy to be caught up with the notion that the majority is right. It may be, but not necessarily. In fact, in some cases it is probably not. "Broad is the road that leads to destruction and many there be that go in thereat". As a matter of fact, the majority of the world is now under totalitarian rule, but does that make it right? Obviously not. While we must always be concerned with the rightness of issues, and wrestle with them in a democracy and make our individual decisions on the basis of what we think is right, it is the majority which rules, not the rightness of the majority. And the majority has the right even to be wrong. Obviously the majority exercised that right at the last election.

In my maiden speech in this House just over two years ago I referred to the statement and the concern of John Stuart Mill, that great Liberal member of the British House of Commons 100 years ago. Always concerned that government should always be sensitive to the rights and feelings of minority groups, he spoke out strongly about the tyranny of the majority. But on the vote on capital punishment this concern has been reversed. We must now worry about the tyranny of the minority over the majority. It is time that the so-called "conscience" vote of the members was transferred to the collective conscience of the Canadian people.

• (1710)

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the people of Canada deserve to have, and must have, confidence in parliament. They have lost it. I believe a referendum on this issue at the next election would go a long way to restoring that confidence. I trust the government will give the people that opportunity. I believe it is fortuitous that the one who will respond to this motion is the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) who also voted in favour of capital punishment and who, therefore, I believe will support me in this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I say that I am very happy the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) introduced this motion, because there was an explosive situation threatening this House and I hope we will take drastic measures this afternoon to overcome the crisis.

I think I should explain why I am speaking this afternoon and the context in which I do so. Indeed I have taken part in the deliberations of the Committee on Procedure and Organization when it was considering the matter of parliamentary reform. I then said that since the procedure followed for private members' business, was so outdated, I had decided that as long as the House did not accept to amend this procedure, I would participate as little as possible in the private members' business hour.

As a matter of fact, I think I must now correct this statement a little. I intend to stick to my remarks about bills introduced during private members' business hour, special business reserved to members, and I think that in the case of notices of motions, as the one introduced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, the situation is somewhat different and that the procedure such as it is, with all its faults, is valuable for these motions. When it comes to bills, though, I think that to make this hour really meaningful, the amendment proposed by the Committee on Procedure and Organization should be passed by the House.

This aside being over, I would like now to concentrate on the contents of this motion which, under a rather naïve, even oversimplistic appearance, is in my view a real menace for our institutions and more particularly our electoral process. In fact if one cannot object to the idea of a referendum to find out and probe the majority opinion on this issue, I still think that the framework within which this motion is presented is a serious danger. I shall return to this point shortly when I draw a parallel with the present Quebec situation, in which, with the polarisation of votes, as far as a referendum is concerned, we end up by distorting the electoral process, that is the fundamentals of our institutions.

As far as the contents of the motion is concerned, as I said previously, I have nothing against it. It amounts to going directly to the people to find out what they think about the death penalty. As far as I am concerned, as far as my party is concerned, I do not share the same preoccupations as the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). I think and I hope that the House has solved this problem once for all. We are the representatives elected by the population. I think we have the responsibility to act on behalf of the population, when the need arises. We do so each day in the House, especially on the questions which are debated here, as finances, consumption, the protection of the consumer, justice. By the way, we acted similarly as far as the death penalty was concerned and, again, I say I do not make the same reservations as the hon. member when he said that the decision that the House took on the subject of the death penalty was almost an abdication in the face of undue pressure from inside or outside. I think most hon. members took the decision in their own conscience, taking into account the pros and cons and I for one accept this decision, whichever way I voted on that question.

[Mr. Friesen.]

Consequently, the hon. member wants to leave it to the citizens for them to decide, for them to reverse the decision of the House, if they really decide to reverse it, for them to overrule the elected government, for them to take the place of their own members of parliament, in order to take an extremely serious decision, with multiple consequences, as human lives are at stake, and, without willing to come back on the substance of a very long debate we had in the House on that question, I will say once again that, as far as I am concerned, this question has been solved, members of all parties have presented their arguments to each other during the debate. I think that everything has been said on this subject and there is no need to start again an extremely emotional debate on the death penalty.

This being said, I am not opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock on a matter of substance but rather on a matter of form because it is the form of the motion that is dangerous in these circumstances. Let us read it again. It is important! The hon. member proposes:

That in the opinion of this House the government should consider holding a national referendum for the purpose of making a survey of public opinion on the issue of capital punishment at the time of the next federal election.

There are two extremely important words, "national referendum" and there is also the words "at the time of the next federal election". Let us talk first about the referendum. Canada has never made it a tradition to hold referendums. Certain societies, certain systems are used to this practice of referendums but it necessitate a high degree of discipline, that we be highly accustomed to the process of referendums, that the population be very mature, and as this system has not been used regularly in Canada, I do not think it would be appropriate to use such a dangerous tool, because a referendum is very dangerous, it can divide the population into two clans, two factions, and afterwards it is extremely difficult to heal the wounds.

● (1720)

So I do not think that in our system the technique of referendum should be used to settle once and for all such a fundamental, emotive and personal problem as capital punishment is. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the capital punishment issue is one that is settled here, within one's heart; this is not something which can be reasoned. One has to weigh the pros and cons and decide whether he is prepared or not to sacrifice a human life for such and such reason. Some say yes, and I respect their opinion. Some say no. I am one of them, and I also think that this opinion should be respected by those in the opposite faction.

But if this debate is transferred to the public place, I can imagine what will happen. We will see the professional opinion makers come and go across the country with petitions, buy full pages in newspapers, and try to fill the debate with emotion. And how can you expect an individual who has certainly other things to do to examine all possibilities and choose among other alternatives, how can you expect him to come up with an enlightened decision on a situation such as this, when he is the object of conflicting opinions and excessive advertisement. Again, there is evidence of this in other jurisdictions, whenever there is a referendum—and I am referring here to the entry of Great Britain in the European Common Market—there is absolutely unheard of propaganda from both sides.

How can you expect an individual to come up with an enlightened decision when he is the object, as undoubtedly he will be, with conflicting opinions? I put myself in his place and I say that this is impossible. Of course, under the present circumstances and in view of his own perception of events, with bloody titles published every day in newspapers and broadcasted by the news media, which, as a matter of fact, are to be blamed for stirring the emotions of the public. How anyone, Mr. Speaker, can expect the individuals concerned to reach an enlightened decision is beyond me.

The hon. member alluded to some statistics a while ago. I could quote him others, but it is a fact, I believe, that in the present situation, according to the information at our disposal, the majority of the people seem to be in favour of capital punishment. That is true. Let us admit it. Let us admit as well that we may not necessarily have all the facts. Now, what is a referendum? It is a two-edged sword.

If they are informed, they are enlightened; and if they are too well informed, they are completely lost. When one does not have the experience of the principle of the referendum, of the instrument it is, one does not realize it is a means to feel the pulse of the people. Without that experience, and, on such a touchy subject as that one, it is inadvisable to experiment, and that is what the hon. member would have us do, experiment. Let's go ahead and have a national referendum, a widespread debate on capital punishment! Mr. Speaker, I am not ready to tackle that adventure. And why not? I shall tell you right away. The idea of a referendum is not new. In Quebec, we know what referendums are because some people have been talking about them for six years now.

And to come back to the fact that the hon. member would have us hold a referendum on the occasion of a general election. Can you imagine that? The hodge-podge the Canadian people would have to face if a referendum on capital punishment were to be added to a federal election? How could we hold an intelligent election when every time problems, financial, economic or, as I mentioned a while ago, environmental, or anything else for that matter are approached, capital punishment would hold the center of the stage and its pros and cons be brought up again. How can an election be held under such circumstances? It is impossible.

It is impossible to hold a referendum at a federal election. I see that the hon. member opposite is smiling. It is true that I insist on a matter of form, but it is precisely this point which concerns me in his motion. Thus, each member would run for election and try to advocate, in the case of the official opposition, an alternative to the government program and, in the case of the government members, to defend the plans already implemented and all of a sudden capital punishment would be back on the floor. Each time we would want to discuss an intelligent matter, all of a sudden people would talk again about capital punishment. Mr. Speaker, the issue of capital punishment has been settled here in the House of Commons. That's it! And if the hon. member is not satisfied with the decision of the House, there is nothing which keeps him, given our actual system, from presenting a bill. Let him introduce his bill we will debate it once again since it has to be done. But let us not rely on a referendum during federal elections. It is not possible. We cannot do such things; we cannot proceed blindly, trying small experiments, new systems, approaches or mechanisms to consult Canadians and thus jeopardize our democratic institutions. I am definitely against that.

That is exactly what is now going on in the province of Quebec. There is one particular political party which recommends a certain option. This option, Mr. Speaker,—facts and figures prove it—is rejected by the majority of the population. What did this party do? It is very smart. They said: we are going to set aside for a while the fundamental option which is the very reason for the existence of our party. We will set it aside for a while and when the time comes to discuss it we will then proceed by referendum. So here we go for the referendum.

But what is happening practically? During the provincial election of 1970, of 1973 and even today, Mr. Speaker, every time they come back to the same thing—referendum. What is happening? The real concerns of Quebecers are shelved. Economic problems, consumer issues, problems relating to industry, fishing, transportation, all that, Mr. Speaker, is thrown to the basket because what is important is the referendum, the basic option: people voted in 1970, in 1973 and again in 1976 for or against that option.

Do you see the danger, Mr. Speaker, of putting an issue before the people, at the time of a federal, national or municipal or provincial election, and of telling the people: We have to hold a very serious election, but for the time being the election is not important, because we must find out if you are in favour or against such and such a thing. It is not an election according to our system, it is not a matter of voting for or against something.

We know what happened for instance—I was not born yet at the time—but I learned what happened during World War II regarding conscription. But what happened? The conscription issue divided the country, Mr. Speaker. Why? Because the people were asked to vote for or against conscription. What happened? A segment of the population and, in this case, once again a certain province of the Canadian Confederation said no, and because it was a majority decision, it resulted in strike and unrest among the population. There were arrests, there were conflicts and wounds, and it took a long time before they healed.

Mr. Speaker, a referendum is dangerous. I am not against it in principle, but we cannot throw it before the public and say: Let's try it and see what will happen. It is something that needs preparation, that cannot be improvised. It is serious, and when 22 million people, are involved, Mr. Speaker, experiments are out of the question. A referendum is dangerous but a referendum on the occasion of a general election is inadmissible. It is not even dangerous, it is inadmissible because it completely distorts the system. And I want to insist again on this subject. I do not want any referendum but still less on the occasion of an election because then you have the situation we are witnessing in Quebec: People do not have any choice; they no longer vote for a party, they no longer vote for ideas, they vote for an option, Mr. Speaker.

And what happens over the years? In the case of the province of Quebec, this creates dissensions, factions, and the province can no longer operate with factions. And if factions are created in Canada on the basis of the results of such a referendum, or of one option, or another Mr. Speaker, there is no room for Canada in the world.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of rising in this debate, but certain things were said that I absolutely cannot leave unnoticed.

First of all, I congratulate the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) for giving us this opportunity to speak on the matter of the capital punishment. The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) said earlier that the people had already forgotten all about that. I wish he knew how much the people have not forgotten. As an illustration, let the Progressive Conservatives come to power and bring forward capital punishment, and we will see how the liberals will lose on that issue. They forced abolition upon this House. They found a way so that the opinion of the minority could win in this House. This prime minister (Mr. Trudeau) moved heaven and earth to have his idea accepted because when he has something in mind, there is no way anyone can take it out. He tried four times—I was here every time—and the last one, when he saw he would not get a majority because some of his own supporters would not vote with him and had the courage to stand up, what did he do? He called for Cabinet solidarity. He forced all his ministers to follow him, some of them against their own wishes. He forced them to. We saw that, I do not have to give names because everyone knows them. He did not have a majority, he forced his will and everyone said the minority had won. Because 80 per cent of Canadians, as the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont rightly stated, favoured retention.

Each time the matter came up, I took polls in my constituency and others as well. Every time 80 per cent favoured capital punishment. But someone's mind was on abolition. The government had sworn to abolish capital punishment despite everything and everyone else. And so they did. We asked for a referendum, and like the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont I feel that a referendum as part of a general election, is manipulating both the election and the referendum.

You have the same thing, the same result as in today's Quebec election. Mr. Bourassa's election issue is the patriation of the constitution, and look what happens: Mr. Bourassa's administration is entirely forgotten; all the other parties were trying to put that subject back into discussion and they did, so that Mr. Bourassa has completely lost face. The people wanted to discuss his administration.

Come election time that is what ought to be discussed, the administration of the government in power, in order to point to the good aspects, if any, and denounce the bad ones. There is always something good or bad in any government. I have no worry in that respect. Having to vote against a motion like the one before us is an impossible task. It would be defeated because I do not want capital punishment or issues as serious as that to become the issue of an election when an election should mainly deal with economic issues. An issue like that must be deal with individually, separately, through a referendum only. The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) suggested that it is such a personal question that it must not be interfered with. It is up to everyone's judgment. That is why I always blamed the government for going against the judgment of the majority of the people. And it is all very well to say that the people are too ignorant but, Mr. Speaker, the heart, as the hon. member suggested earlier, cannot be ignored.

It is all very well to apologize for voting against capital punishment because the general public was uninformed. I do not accept that. I did not say so, the hon. member who spoke before me said so when he suggested that it was a matter of feeling. The feeling was too strong. It was a personal question. That is why we must go to the people and ask for their assent. And as we say in democracy, if one really want to be democratic . . . Furthermore, I always considered that this government could not care less about democracy in all its actions either with the provinces or with associations. If you want to be democratic you start by meeting the wishes of the majority of the people on capital issues. And then the people will start saying that you are being democratic and that you want to remain so. That is why I am and I have always been in favour of a referendum on that issue, and I will always be. The day a government decides to be honest by calling a referendum on that issue, I will start to take it seriously.

We saw what happened in the United States. It was said that it was settled and dealt with. Other U.S. states restored it; they had abolished capital punishment and they were forced to reinstate it. You will see that the French-Canadians in a few years will be forced to restore it, as will the Canadian government. Let us wait and see who is right. But that will never stop me from speaking for the people on those issues, and as long as they express the wish to have a referendum on that issue, whether for or against, I will follow the thinking of the majority of the people. Those are the few comments I wanted to make and I am sure that even if this hour ends inconclusively as all the others we will still have the opportunity to discuss that question later.

● (1730)

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) has eloquently stated his reasons against a national referendum. I will add only a few words.

Public Opinion on Capital Punishment

[English]

I find it very interesting that the two speakers who have spoken in favour of referendums, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) and the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), have spoken really about the substance of capital punishment. Apparently they were on the losing side of the vote on that question, and it appears, judging from their arguments, that for that reason alone they want to reopen the question.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacGuigan: I am not rising to speak on the subject of capital punishment. We have expressed our views on that in this parliament; a vote has been taken, and I have no desire to challenge that here. I find it hard to understand that hon. members could rise in this House and urge us to change our whole parliamentary system merely because they are not satisfied with a particular vote. But this is somewhat easier to understand when we consider the confusion which is latent in the motion as introduced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. I must draw the attention of the House to the words of the motion, which are as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider holding a national referendum for the purpose of making a survey of public opinion on the issue of capital punishment at the time of the next federal election.

● (1740)

In the language of political science the word "referendum" has reference to a binding expression of national opinion. You can clearly see that the author of this motion does not have that concept in mind. He uses the word referendum where he should use the word "plebiscite", which is a non-binding expression of national opinion. Worse than that, and this gives an indication of the kind of problem that can arise, we do not have the mechanism in our system to make a referendum legally binding. If we were to have a referendum, it would have to be followed by an act of parliament, with the members of parliament being bound by the referendum not having the right to vote independently on the issue. In effect they would be bound by something that happened outside this House, and that would be destructive of the whole parliamentary tradition.

In those places where they have referenda they are part of the constitution, and the free vote of the electors itself changes the law. They do not have a subsequent vote by the state assemblies in the United States to ratify what the voters have done by the referendum. The voters do it by vote. But that is a different system.

What I find most astonishing is that this innovation which our friends would introduce is the type of thing that they would decry in other circumstances. They are the first party to complain about any departure from the British tradition, and yet they are trying to introduce an aspect of the American system which would have the effect of entirely vitiating the system we hold so dear.

I repeat that the issue before us this afternoon is not capital punishment. I can appreciate that feelings on capital punishment are strong in the country. Feelings are always strong on moral issues. Why have a referendum on this one moral issue? Are we going to have another one on abortion? We could hardly distinguish between these questions. If the hon. member were to say the distinction would be based on the precondition of a free vote, I would point out that his system would replace the vote entirely. Then do we have a referendum on the questions of divorce, of gun control— where do we stop? If we were to introduce a device of this kind we would be in a position where at least all issues of moral content, in the generally accepted sense of the word, would have to be submitted to the vote of the people. There is no possibility of isolating a single vote of this kind and treating it as something separate.

It seems to me that in our system the only case in which a referendum could be justified would be one dealing with the system itself. There are various ways of changing the constitution. If what we are talking about is something which is in effect a change in our system, if it is like the vote in Great Britain on entering the Common Market, which is a limitation on the sovereignty of parliament and does change the course of British history, then perhaps there is a case for it. If we had a similar case here which was changing our future course, or a vital question dealing with the government itself, that would be different, but if we are dealing with ordinary moral issues they are all on the same plane. While some people are concerned about capital punishment, others are concerned about abortion. Sometimes they are the same people, and sometimes separate groups, but one group has as much right to have its issue put to a national referendum as another. In my view no group has that right in a parliamentary system.

I do not have to explain to hon. members opposite the historical genesis of parliamentary government and how we fought for it in Canada with the result we see in the party caucuses. We were the self-governing dominion in the British Commonwealth which developed the party caucus because we were all united against the governor. The higher-ups in all parties met with the ordinary representatives because they were all together in their struggle against the governor. From that arose our caucus, which has few parallels in the world, where frontbenchers and backbenchers meet together. It functions very effectively in our system—almost all of our system is functioning very effectively, or it was until our friend, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, got into it.

I appreciate the fact that hon. members opposite, not having the responsibilities of office, do not have to be responsible in the motions they put forward, but on this side we have to take the longer view, especially when it is a question of responsible government itself.

I can see that this debate is provoking great concern in the House. Members on both sides would not want to lose the privileges they have attained through centuries of struggle for responsible government. Even members opposite, as a result of the things that are being said, may be persuaded to reconsider this thoughtless and unwarranted suggestion that in one aspect would change our system in a way that could drive a wedge that would eventually change its character entirely and run the risk of creating in Canada, or importing, the kind of institutions that have been developed in the United States.

I am sure most hon. members know, and certainly those on this side do, that there is a considerable difference between the spirit of the people and the spirit of government in Canada and the United States. We have a more relaxed notion of freedom and a different concept of government. We do not believe that everything should be put to a popular vote all the time. We think representatives should be elected to make decisions for the people on an orderly basis, themselves responsible to the people and the government responsible to them, so that throughout the system there is a chain of responsibility.

The American system is different. They believe in what many would refer to as an excessive democracy—that everything should be decided by everybody all the time. It is in that kind of spirit that referenda came to be part of the American system but I do not think it is a characteristic we would like to duplicate. There may be some things for which we envy our friends, such as their more material achievements, but I do not think members of this House want to ape their governmental institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: Perhaps I have said enough to indicate to members opposite the necessity for reconsidering the views they have so lightly put forward this afternoon. I should like to allow other members to add their indignation to that which I have already expressed on this suggested change in our system.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that this motion has come before this House today. Earlier this afternoon we heard one of the greatest flights into fancy, presented by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), that I have heard since I have been in this House. A few minutes ago the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) went on one of the greatest flights of sophistry it has ever been my lot to witness since coming here.

• (1750)

Mr. Friesen: What does that mean?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It means talking out of both sides of your mouth. Parliament expressed its will last spring on the issue of capital punishment.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Not with a free vote.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock claims the people of Canada have been betrayed by parliament.

Mr. Friesen: Right on!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): How a member of parliament can make a claim like that and retain his seat in this House I cannot understand. That is what I mean by sophistry, Mr. Speaker. He went on to say that over the last five years every credible indicator in this country indicated that 80 per cent of the people were in favour of capital punishment. I wonder what he means by a credible indicator. Is he one of them? Polls have been conducted for many years on many issues. Thank God this country is not governed by polls.

It is obvious from their reluctance to put forward a stand on any policy that hon. members opposite would like to see a referendum on any issue which is the least bit contentious. Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the elected member of parliament to take his place in this House and vote on issues, whether or not they are contentious. The member of parliament must look at all aspects of the issue, study all aspects in detail, and then make a judgment. I want to make it clear that when I cast my vote on capital punishment it was not a vote of conscience; it was a vote of judgment.

An hon. Member: It was a free vote.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No, it was not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite raised a point with which I shall now deal. It is a point raised by those who voted against the abolition of capital punishment. Many such hon. members, including the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) say repeatedly that it was not a free vote. Nobody has ever suggested that the cabinet did not have to show solidarity; it was a government bill. That was clear from the beginning. Unfortunately some of the opponents of the bill, including some members of the press, tried to create the impression in the public mind that pressure was brought to bear on Liberal backbenchers to vote in favour of the abolition of capital punishment.

An hon. Member: There was.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That is an absolutely shameful, spurious charge which cannot be defended. The hon. member wants a referendum, according to what he says. In his own words a referendum would relieve the member of parliament of responsibility for making a decision. That is what I mean by sophistry. We are here to exercise responsibility in the making of decisions.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not mind the hon. member's paraphrasing what I said but he should not say that he is quoting me when he so garbles my words.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that is a point of debate and not a question of privilege.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): After one has listened to the kind of garbled logic put forward by the hon. member this afternoon it is hard not to garble one's paraphrasing of it.

The issue of capital punishment involves complex questions which must be dealt with. I suggest that the hon. members for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) and Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) dealt in detail with some of those issues. They are complex and cannot be resolved by plebiscite or referendum.

As the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville said, a referendum implies a binding decision by the electorate; yet the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock requests a referendum for the taking of a survey. I suggest that Dr. Gallup has taken many surveys without the authority of a referendum. A number of complex issues to do with the questions at issue cannot be solved by referendum. They must be solved by hon. members of this House who must look in detail at the questions at issue and make conscious decisions. Some of those issues involve the judiciary itself, the functioning of law enforcement agencies and the prison systems. Such complex questions cannot be dealt with by referendum.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): How about conscription?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hon. member opposite mentioned conscription. It seems to me that the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont dealt with the question in his speech. Obviously the hon. member opposite was not listening. Not only do hon. members opposite garble their speeches, they seem to suffer from garbled hearing as well.

Mr. Paproski: Question.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Some questions to do with capital punishment, such as powers of discretion and the caprice with which that form of punishment has traditionally been applied over the years, require much detailed study. Whether capital punishment is a deterrent in itself is a complex question requiring much study and detailed information. Where is the electorate to get this information?

An hon. Member: From Benno.

Mr. Friesen: I will give it to them.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hon. member no doubt is referring to the sort of information which came forward during the debate in the spring. But we must deal with other issues as well having to do with capital punishment, issues concerning which it is difficult to obtain information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' hour having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, this is becoming a habit. The last three times I have spoken in the House I have been interrupted by private members' hour. It is sometimes difficult to resume at exactly the same point you leave off. In any event, at five o'clock I was discussing redistribution of income through the family allowance plan.

The government, the official opposition, and other parties in the House may want to comment on whether it can be justified that family allowance be paid to all families in Canada regardless of income. I would rather see a cut-off point and the moneys not go to families with adequate or large incomes, but redistributed to families with lower incomes. If we look at Statistics Canada figures or other statistics we see that the larger families are at the lower end of the income scale. That is another reason why more money should go into that area, especially during times of high inflation when the costs of raising a family are increasing and families must make the purposeful decision of whether to have children.

Although this is not the total reason for having a scheme where money will go to those families that require it the most to have more children, certainly it is something this House could well consider. All parties should look at it. I hope there will be comments on this.

In discussing a bill like C-19 you get into the whole philosophy of government spending. There are several ways you can look at it. First, the government should spend less or spend more, depending on which side of the table you are on.

One of the interesting aspects of government spending is what it should be directed toward. Should it be for increasing services such as medical and various other services? Should the money be utilized in areas which will increase employment and increase our national revenue? I wish to use an example. With regard to the salmon enhancement program, the federal government will have to decide whether to spend $300 million for the doubling of the salmon catch in the next ten years. It is an interesting concept. If that $300 million goes into this program on the west coast, it is estimated by fisheries officials that this will double the salmon catch within a ten year period.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

Doubling the salmon catch will do a number of things. First, it will provide more jobs for fishermen. It will spur the construction of new fishing boats and cause new processing facilities to be built. In general it will affect the economy of the province of British Columbia to a large extent.

This will have to be a government program. How could the fishermen or the processors become involved in a program which requires the reclaiming of streams, the conservation of the resource and people patrolling to ensure that laws are not being broken? The answer is that the private sector of industry cannot do this.

This is an area where government spending can well be directed rather than the money going down the well to provide short-term employment which may be finished after six or eight months. Hon. members are aware that we do have programs like that which try to take us over the peaks of unemployment such as during the winter months, or for the unemployed students during the summer with programs such as LIP.

Although it takes a longer period of time to bring the benefits on stream, I suggest that governments are well advised to put their money into long term projects such as the one I mentioned, the salmon enhancement program. This will double, triple and quadruple the amount of landed value of the catch. The money will go through the Canadian economy having a greater impact over the long term than a program set up for a short period of time. It may cost $100 million such as the LIP program, but will have a more long lasting effect. The LIP program does not generate itself through the economy year after year.

In addition to the intent of Bill C-19, to reduce government spending by $1.5 billion, this House should direct its attention to how this money will go from the federal government into our economy and ensure that we get a reasonable recovery of that money. We should make sure we recover at least part of this money annually, just as in the forest industry they replant to ensure that the harvest continues—not just one harvest, and that's the end of it.

• (2010)

I would also suggest that government money might well be spent on improving small craft harbours and docking facilities on the west coast to provide better landing for the commercial fishermen as well as improved facilities for the growing number of pleasure craft owners. A program of this kind would bring people to the west coast. It is thought by many that the forest industry has now reached its peak and cannot be expected to expand much further. But we on the west coast have a plentiful supply of fish available to us and a climate which is the envy of all Canada. This being the case, we might be well advised to direct our attention away from the exploitation of primary resources which have reached the point of maximum utilization, or close to it, and take advantage of those other features of west coast life which I have mentioned.

I refer to the tourist industry, the recreation industry. The opportunities available in British Columbia already attract people from every part of Canada and are certainly the envy of the United States. Would it not be a wise move on the part of the government to develop small craft harbours and launching facilities for small boats in conjunction with the fishing industry, one which is itself an unexploited industry capable of playing an increasingly significant role in the economy as time goes by.

Again, in building up the economy of areas such as Newfoundland or Vancouver Island, care must be taken to put money into search and rescue facilities, services which are closely related both to the fishing industry and, in increasing measure, to the tourist industry because tourists are taking to the sea in ever-increasing numbers. The saving of life is a matter of great concern to any government; it is a subject which cannot be approached in terms of dollars alone. Admittedly an effective search and rescue service is expensive. It costs money to build 65-foot cutters, ships which are able to accommodate helicopters and stay at sea for lengthy periods. When an incident does arise at sea it is important that help should arrive quickly, that a ship equipped with a helicopter can put out in a matter of minutes rather than hours, since a person struggling in the water, especially during the winter months, can survive only a very limited time, and unless help arrives quickly I suppose it can be argued that it is pointless sending any help at all.

Hon. members who come from maritime constituencies are aware of the expenses involved in search and rescue equipment. They are also aware that during a time of monetary restraint it is difficult to pry money from the public treasury for what is basically an unglamorous project, especially when one considers that the majority of Canadians do not live on the coast line. It is hard to convince the people of Quebec, say, or of Ontario or the other inland provinces of the importance of building up an adequate search and rescue fleet. Hon. members will recall, however, that the House did spend a considerable time discussing a subject which involved human life—not on the same plane, admittedly, but certainly a life is a life no matter how it is saved. In one case it might mean imposing deterrence upon certain classes of society; in another it might mean providing a safe and reliable rescue service on our west and east coasts. It behoves the House to spend some time considering this proposal, since in doing so we shall be talking about lives, not talking about dollars and cents.

While on the subject of the way in which the government should spend, or refrain from spending, public money I should like to mention briefly an area which up to now has had more impact upon the city of Ottawa than upon an area such as mine, the riding of Comox-Alberni on Vancouver Island. I refer to expenditure in connection with the location of government departments and related costs of building and so on.

The government has been criticized both in the press and by the Mayor of Ottawa for proposing to move government departments away from Ottawa instead of centralizing them here. As a member of parliament from another part of the country I can only say it would be the height of folly at this time in our history, given all the means of communication we have at our disposal, to contemplate having the administration in one central point. It would not matter if one took the Department of National Defence and stuck it at the north pole: you would get exactly the same service as you get now with the department located in eastern Canada, in Ottawa.

An hon. Member: Better.

Mr. Anderson: It might even be better. Perhaps there are fewer distractions at the north pole. On the other hand it is an act of common sense to have the civil service spread out in various parts of Canada rather than being centralized in one place. I might say there are, I am sure, people on Newfoundland and on Vancouver Island who would swear to God there is no government because they never see a government official from one year to the next. They do not hear about government from one year to the next. Ottawa, to them, is just a fairy tale land because it has no bearing upon their lives.

Those who suggest that staff should not be moved from Ottawa because civil servants might be disturbed or because there might be accommodation left over are being unrealistic. I need not tell hon. members from the west that the people of Alberta have a tremendous feeling of empathy with the provincial government. It is something one can almost touch. Their signs are up on the bloody roads.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order!

Mr. Anderson: The people are aware they have a government. But what do they have in Churchill, Manitoba, or Alert Bay in British Columbia? They don't have a bloody thing to do with the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order!

Mr. Anderson: The only thing we do down here is write laws which cause them problems. That is their only connection with the federal government. I am not thinking about decentralization alone. Taking departments to Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton is equally a waste of time, money and effort. The city of Edmonton does not require any more civil servants and neither does the city of Winnipeg.

• (2020)

If we are to have a federal presence outside the Ottawa area, Mr. Speaker, for goodness sakes let us put it in smaller communities and not provincial capitals. Vancouver has a population of over one million people and there is no point siting the revenue department on the outskirts of Vancouver when, in the city of Vancouver, there is a housing problem and a shortage of land. Both federal and provincial governments have been saying for years that it should be the object of government to move people outside the greater Vancouver area. Yet what does the provincial government do? It wants to construct its buildings inside the city of Vancouver.

What has the federal government done in this regard? If you look at the Vancouver telephone book, Mr. Speaker, you will find page upon page of federal government agencies listed within the city of Vancouver, agencies which should be in places like Courtenay, Campbell River and Nanaimo, where they could do the job equally as well with their tie-in computers and telephone lines. It does not cost any more to send a letter to a small community than to the city of Vancouver.

In my area this winter unemployment is going to reach 15 per cent of the population. Putting one or two government departments in my constituency would significantly cut down that rate and provide jobs for the area.

The leader of the NDP would transfer massive amounts of federal money to given areas of low unemployment, such as Vancouver. Moving these departments into areas of high unemployment would result in lower building costs and would stimulate the economies of small communities that will be in the doldrums this winter. There would also be a federal presence and people would say, "Yes, I guess we do have a federal government".

Speaking only of western Canada now, Mr. Speaker, if we continue to put mints in provincial capitals, if we continue to put search and rescue into Vancouver and Vancouver alone, the decentralization program of this government or of any other government is not going to be worth the powder to blow it to hell. All you are doing, Mr. Speaker, is sending departments into other large areas that did not need further growth in the first place. People will say, "The bureaucracy has done it again. It has taken departments out of the greater Ottawa area and put them into the greater Vancouver area, the greater Calgary area and the greater Edmonton area, which does not benefit any of these communities". In this way we have shown we are not intelligent enough to formulate a policy that puts priority on moving federal departments into areas of high unemployment, and thus solving some, at least, of the unemployment problem.

What are we saying to the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps we are saying to them this: "Look, you guys, you might as well get out of Newfoundland and vacate the bloody place—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Anderson: —because you aren't going to get any money there anyway; move to Edmonton or Calgary because you guys will always be sitting at the backside of the cow". Is this what we are trying to say to these people, Mr. Speaker? I hope not.

I would ask my hon. friends in the official opposition to make a few comments on what they want to see happen in Canada. Either they do not know or they will not tell us. They are entirely mute on the subject, except for the hon. member who represents an area of Ottawa who asks whether a few office buildings are going to be left vacant. I do not care if there are 10 office buildings vacant in the city of Ottawa; I say get government departments into other parts of Canada. I guarantee that the city of Ottawa will continue to thrive and grow whether we move some departments out or not.

Since we are talking about government expenditure, what can we do as a government to make sure that money is shared equally among the people of Canada but that areas that need help are given some assurance that we are at least aware of their problem? Let us not talk about saving $1.5 million when we can put this money into, say, fisheries in Newfoundland, I will not say in St. John's because there are better places in other parts of Newfoundland. Let us spend money in some of the outlying areas of Newfoundland and British Columbia, instead of crowding into centres and accentuating our urban problems. Is that planning? No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so.

I hope that out of our discussions on Bill C-19 we will arrive at a more rational way of making sure that the money we spend as a government, whether it be $42 billion, $39 billion or $36 billion, is spent wisely and in the best interests not only of larger centres but of the small communities that I consider are the backbone of Canada. Unless we start helping them pretty soon, Mr. Speaker, we will not have to worry about these areas much longer because no one will be living in them.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of listening to spokesmen for the government side and I can appreciate the fact that they have been pleading with members of the official opposition to come forward with some answers to the problems facing Canada today. We have all realized for quite a long time that the Liberal party is completely bankrupt of ideas, and the results of their programs throughout the nation have caused their popularity to nosedive so far as public opinion polls are concerned. I think this is an indication of the Liberal party's frustration and anger, and they are now trying to turn the tables on the official opposition by saying we are not helping them out or telling them what to do, and this is why they are stumbling around.

With all due respect to my colleague from British Columbia, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), we do sympathize with him. We know he is labouring under severe handicaps. The Liberal party has followed the same course it followed previously. The Progressive Conservative party would propose programs, and in desperation the Liberals would pick them up, put them into operation and get something done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Patterson: It was reported a short time ago that a meeting of Liberals was held to try to figure out why their showing in the public opinion polls had indeed taken a nosedive over the past few months. It seems to me that that is a completely unnecessary exercise, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet ministers do not know what the problem is, then all they have to do is mingle with the grassroots Liberals, or the former grassroots Liberals, and they would certainly tell them what was what. They are not hesitant about telling us, and I am sure they would be quite willing to pass the information along to the government in an attempt to try to rectify the situation we find ouselves in today.

• (2030)

In reviewing my correspondence from my constituents I am reminded that one of the main criticisms of the Trudeau administration is its mad spending spree at the expense of the taxpayers of the nation. The resources of our people are not inexhaustible, yet the government is engaged in a spending program that has enraged Canadians. They are enraged because of the magnitude and the nature of many of the projects. In the past the government finally reached the conclusion that it had been less than successful, to put it rather mildly, and has decided to endeavour to put in place other programs that will work more effectively and efficiently in meeting its goals and objectives.

I fully realize that some of the programs we have had in the past, some of which the government has already indicated are to go by the boards, were created to meet certain critical situations and problems. But instead of defusing those issues and problems we find that the government has created others, some of similar and some of greater magnitude.

I must say that some of the programs have brought some benefits to the Canadian people. I think particularly of the Local Initiatives Program. It was a horrible mess at first but as time went on, after the government listened to some of the suggestions made by some of the people in the various communities, some effective and efficient work was accomplished. We find, however, in the over-all picture that these programs have not been adequate to meet the need, and therefore the government has indicated its intention to replace them with other types of programs.

The government had been making noises about reducing government expenditures, but actually these have only been noises. The estimates which are tabled from time to time indicate a substantial increase in expenditures over the previous year. Certainly this does not appear to fit in with the government's proposal for a reduction in expenditures. We admit there may be a reduction in the amount the government had intended to spend, that it had programmed, or that the departmental officials and ministers had asked be allocated to their departments, but that is a far different story than a reduction in expenditures as viewed by the Canadian people.

When we think of this particular issue I say that the people of Canada have placed almost in the number one slot government expenditures as something that has created a great deal of distrust and resentment right across the nation. It has been placed on the record that the habits of the government are so excessive that its spending has practically quadrupled in the last ten years. One of my colleagues pointed out that it took the government 100 years to reach a budget level of $9.9 billion in 1967, that this administration doubled that figure in the next three years, and in the last four years doubled it again to the present $42 billion spending estimates we have before parliament. So we see just how far we have gone and the extent to which the government has increased the expenditures of this country.

One of the main concerns of the official opposition on the matter of restraint is that when we look at the proposal before us we see that it is too little too late. I should like to point out that in 1965 the total government share of the Gross National Product was 30.3 per cent. In 1974 the total government share of the Gross National Product had risen to 40.4 per cent. In other words, over the period of a decade the government's share of the Gross National Product had increased by one third. It is granted that there are many factors which lead to inflation but I believe it is recognized and acknowledged by authorities from coast to coast and in various parts of the world that unreasoned government expenditure is by far the most serious factor in the inflationary cycle.

I should like to refer to an editorial by Mr. Edward Belitsky, Editor of the Canadian Automotive Trade magazine. Talking about the tax-hungry government he said:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau is running the federal government very much as Jean Drapeau is running the Olympics. The money we sink into it seems to be disappearing at an ever-increasing rate.

That is the first paragraph. The concluding paragraph of the editorial states:

> Every time the minister of finance or head of the treasury board or any one of Trudeau's other torpedoes goes on TV to tell us the latest bad news regarding taxes, budgets or whatever else is currently amiss, we get the feeling that the country is being run like the world's biggest protection racket.

We can understand something of the feelings of the Canadian people when we consider some of these quotations and references I have brought to the attention of the members of the House.

I should like to refer to some of the make-work programs the government has indicated will be eliminated, and the reason given. Surely when the government frantically tries to put in place programs to give people work there must be some reason for this, and some objective the government has in mind. I suggest the reason for so many make-work programs is the government's bungling and ineptitude in providing leadership for the nation. The responsibility of the government is not to provide jobs but rather to create the economic climate in which private enterprise can work to its full potential in utilizing the human resources of the nation in productive and remunerative employment. I suggest this is something the government has failed dismally to accomplish. I say the opposite is true.

Restrictions, undue interference, and confiscatory taxation have all tended to undermine initiative, limit development, and undermine the will to succeed in chosen fields of endeavour. I believe this is the reason why the government has so readily resorted to make-work programs in order to try to pick up the slack. I refer to the government's bungling and ineptitude in creating the climate conducive to a developed and orderly policy in our nation.

We recall that some time ago the Prime Minister stated that the free enterprise system in Canada had failed and that the result would be greater government involvement and interference. There was quite a reaction to that statement, as we know. It came from the business community. It came not only from the larger business area but also from the small business community and from a great many organizations and agencies, as well as from individuals right across the nation.

● (2040)

Then we found, when the government brought in its Speech from the Throne, that the Prime Minister seemed to reverse himself, whether it was a death bed repentance I do not know, but he came to the conclusion that, after all, the private enterprise system is very worth while and therefore he ought to draw back a bit so far as government involvement is concerned. So as we consider some of the statements made by the Prime Minister we begin to realize that perhaps the government is finally realizing that possibly it has been making a mistake, it has been following the wrong line of endeavour and it should consider some other activities.

With regard to government expenditure I should like to refer to a speech made by my leader. This might be of some interest to those who are asking what is the thinking and what are the proposals of the official opposition. I have here the notes for remarks made by our leader to a public meeting in Whitehorse, Yukon, on July 9. It is worth reading the entire speech into the record, but I will not do that. I will just commend it to the reading of the Liberal members. Perhaps it will enlighten their minds a little on what course should be followed and what might be more beneficial to the Canadian nation than the course which their leader has been following.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) stated:

> The most visible inflationary hot-spot to all of us, no matter how many thousands of miles away from Ottawa, is the area of government spending.

He went on to point out:

> The Trudeau administration . . . has increased its spending by over 35 per cent over the last two years. My government . . . would put a restraint on that spending. But that kind of restraint doesn't necessarily mean fewer jobs. We will not accept that kind of simplified premise on the part of the Trudeau government. Restraint can and will mean new jobs, if the savings are passed along to the taxpayer through personal tax cuts to lower income groups and through direct incentives to the private sector. The enterprise system is in danger of erosion in this country because of increased government intervention in the economy and also because of a denial of the need to stimulate and support a decentralized economy based on personal commitment and willingness to take risks and try new ventures.

With reference to small business he said:

> The small business entrepreneur has an important part to play in the decentralization of our economy and the need for strengthened development in our regions. The people willing to take risks need our support. We should be offering incentives to stimulate that kind of development.

He went on to point out that what is needed is leadership in the development of our national economy at present. We can understand the frustration of the Liberals and their pleadings with the Progressive Conservatives to give them the answers. I remember when not too long ago they had all the answers and they told the people they knew better than anybody else. Of course they still try to tell them that, but the people are catching on. This is the reason that there is such a decline in their support across the country. Of course it is accentuated when we read in the paper that the Prime Minister referred to the lack of understanding and the credibility gap between government and people. He said that he can understand why there is such a credibility gap when they consider the bungling that they have been doing.

It is not necessary for me to impress upon the supporters of the government what the problem is. Their own leader admits it. I hope that for the good of Canada he will come to the point some day when he will try to put into operation some of the plans that will help to pull the nation out of the doldrums in which we find ourselves, but I must say I am rather cynical on that point. I cannot see how he is going to do it and I cannot see any possibility of that happening under the present government.

The government has announced its intention to eliminate some of the make-work programs to reduce expenditures.

Mr. Benjamin: What programs?

Mr. Patterson: I know your party is bankrupt of ideas. If you had been listening to the speeches made by members of this party in the House in the last several days, you would have a lot of answers.

Mr. Benjamin: What would you reduce?

Mr. Patterson: Possibly you are not paying much attention.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Address the Chair.

Mr. Patterson: As I was saying, the government has announced its intention to reduce expenditures, but it is going to introduce in another form year round programs to the tune of $350 million in the first full year of operation, or so we are told by one of the government spokesmen. To me that does not sound like restraint. It seems to me it is just a transfer of money from one pocket to another or from one portfolio to another. It is not a reduction, it is a transfer.

Mr. Railton: Explain how you can do that.

Mr. Patterson: How do I do that? Is that what the hon. member is asking? Why does he not ask his own party leaders who are talking about restraint on the one hand and who are transferring one type of program to carry on what has been done by other programs?

Mr. Railton: Give me an example.

Mr. Patterson: I know that hon. members over there are confused.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) has the floor and he should be heard.

Mr. Patterson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the interest that is being shown over there. I assure the hon. member that not only are we interested and are they interested but the whole country is interested in what the government will do and in how it will fulfil some of the promises it made through the years that it would wrestle unemployment to the ground and it would fight inflation, but every time a budget or a throne speech comes along we hear a rehash of the same things over and over again. We find that we are not making too much headway under this government.

In this connection I should like to offer a suggestion. When we talk about make-work programs I suggest that in working out the details and in putting the plans and programs into place and establishing the goals for the development of their area, municipal authorities should be taken into careful consideration because I believe in this way something really worth while can be done. I am not saying that nothing was done under LIP or other programs, but I suggest that if the government worked in closer co-operation with municipal governments it would find it could move forward to the realization of those objectives that representatives on that level of government have been studying and trying to put in place. If the federal government will co-operate along that line, we will see something really worth while being done. There are plenty of opportunities for activities of this kind.

We can go back to the winter works program of some years ago. Very worth while work was done under this particular program, but while we find the government spending a great deal of money in other types of operations, we find that municipal governments are strapped for finances, and they are not able to carry through to the realization of their objectives.

● (2050)

I listened to a talk show just a few days ago, and a mayor was the guest on the show. He remarked that he would be very happy if he could provide the residents of his district with recreational facilities equal to those provided in one of the penal institutions by the penitentiary service. I suggest that spending money in providing facilities in communities would be much more beneficial and productive than spending money on so-called rehabilitative programs and facilities which have failed to achieve their objectives.

I am just pointing out in this connection that if these programs were operated in conjunction with programs at the municipal level, we would see the fulfillment of some of the dreams of the people in these communities, and there would be some facilities which would be for the benefit of all the people.

Be that as it may, the fact remains that this is not a bill to facilitate restraint of government expenditures. It only transfers to other programs amounts that are now being allocated to the old types of programs. My colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), pointed this out quite clearly in his intervention a few days ago when he talked about how much the government was proposing to save by cutting off the cost of living increase in a certain type of program. Then he pointed out that in all likelihood if the people were not able to qualify and fulfil their objective of being retrained for other types of work, they could conceivably fall out altogether and go on unemployment insurance or on welfare, and the money would be taken up and spent in that way.

We could go on with many other things, but in conclusion I would like to say that Canadians do not object to the introduction of programs designed to assist those who, through a variety of reasons, are unable to compete successfully at a highly competitive time. Canadians do not object to the financing of programs which contribute to the over-all development of our national economy. They do not object to being called upon to provide those services which we as individual citizens are unable to provide for ourselves. They do not object to providing assistance to underdeveloped countries, if that aid is carefully and effectively disbursed to alleviate human suffering. But Canadians do object to the squandering of their money in ways which undermine the will of some individuals to pull their share of the national load. They object to governments implying by their policies that the citizens are not intelligent enough to spend their own money, care for their own needs and discharge their own responsibilities, and that therefore government has to withdraw their money from their pockets and hand it out again in some other form.

Canadians object to being looked upon as an inexhaustible source of dollars to support governmental programs which have been growing wild ever since this government took office in 1968, and the benefits from those programs have been extremely limited.

My colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), this afternoon laid out special priorities which are essential in his area of the country, and when we talk about curtailing expenditures, immediately the government raises the cry: "What do you want to cut out?" It is not exactly a matter of cutting out; it is a matter of setting priorities in a way which will enable people to understand what is being done and in a way which will prove to the people that something worth while is being accomplished, and the government should be sincere in its desire and in its effort to pull the economy out of the doldrums and lead the nation on a path of progress and development.

I am not hopeful at all that this government is able to do that, but I believe that when the next election rolls around, the people will effect a change—a change which is indicated very strongly in the polls across the country today—and I believe that the government which will be installed under the leadership of our leader, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), will be able to set in place the type of program which will get the country on the road again to development and progress, and which will enable this nation to reach some of the objectives which incorporate the aspirations of its people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as I am rising to take part in this debate, the voting is over in the Province of Quebec and the TV networks are broadcasting the results of the election. This is probably the reason why I am the only French speaking member from my province to be in this House at this time. In any event, it is evident that the whole of Canada is watching most attentively the development of this political campaign which is a source of enormous interest and understandably so.

However, Mr. Speaker, we, the hon. members present in the House of Commons, have responsibilities which are particular to us, and I for one intend to assume them and do my best, in co-operation with other hon. members, to provide our country with the best possible administration, so that families, individuals and business may survive, to make sure that our people as a whole enjoy a decent standard of living and to preserve everyone of our individual and collective rights.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-19 which is now before us, is an omnibus bill.

● (2100)

We have seen omnibus bills introduced before in the House, bills which put the members in an excessively difficult situation. Indeed, we are in favour of some part of the bill, but we are at the same time opposed to another part of it. And when we want to accept what is good in the bill, we are forced to accept what is bad also, and when we refuse to take it all, we are accused of being opposed to what is good. This is a most unfortunate situation, but we have to make do with what we have. With this bill, it is proposed to change the Chapter 14 of the Adult Occupational Training Act, 1972. Secondly, it is proposed to change the Chapter 44 of the Family Allowance Act, 1973, to change the Industrial Research and Development Incentive Act, to abolish Information Canada, and to change the Western Grain Stabilization Act, all this in the very same bill. We could easily agree with some of the provisions in the bill and disagree with others. However I feel this is done deliberately. And I regret once more, Mr. Speaker, that the government still tries unfortunately to generate confusion with omnibus bills. However, it seems to me that with the army of civil servants and advisers working for the government, it could proceed as expeditiously and less confusedly. There is always too much confusion. We particularly need clear and precise legislation because it is the public that has to cope with the legislation we pass in the House, and if we want the people to cooperate with the administration, we must first of all give them precise and intelligent legislation so that the public can accept, in the proper time and place, less beneficial legislation, and under other circumstances, beneficial conditions.

Mr. Speaker, on November 5, I had the honour to introduce in the House and to propose Bill C-206 which is at second reading and which, I hope, will be referred in the House at the proper time for debate. I consider that this bill contains provisions which should be discussed more fully in the House, in committee and at the report stage so that situations which precisely compel the government to introduce Bill C-19 in order to restrain government spending be corrected. During the debate on second reading of Bill C-206, one member said: the member for Bellechasse did not spend much time preparing his bill because it is not thick. Mr. Speaker I always beware of thick bills, of bills which are really confused, which compress too many things at the same time.

I would rather have fewer pages and know what they contain because I understand what the Canadian people are likely to understand. That would really be interesting and would prove to the people of our country that we really mean well, that we want to take concrete measures that are easy to understand. The population must be able to use laws in the same sensible way we use to develop and pass them.

Bill C-19 is intitled an act to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, it is terrible. It reminds me of the banker who gives an umbrella when the sun shines, but when it rains, he takes it away. The government offers us some programs when private enterprise is ready to provide jobs; when the economic activity is in full swing, the government has programs. It is precisely when the economic activity slows down, when private enterprise is no more able to absorb the available labour, that we need government intervention to counter-balance the lack of jobs. It is then that the umbrella is taken away by the government, that it deprives us of the benefit of certain laws, such as the family allowances act and that providing for a job-creation program which is commonly called LIP. Mr. Speaker, I think that the provision of the bill designed to save money at the expense of families is bad for Canada, because Canada is made up of families, and we have to make sure that our legislation always protects the rights of families, and even more so. And when families will be in good economic health we will have a country in good economic health.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to be surprised that young couples today refuse or nearly refuse the arrival of a newborn in their homes. But why? Is it because they are worse than the generation which preceded them? Not at all! It is because they must suffer overly difficult economic conditions that we now see a decrease in the birth rate in Canada and more particularly in my province of Quebec of which I am proud indeed. I have difficulty realizing that Providence gave us so much, so many resources of all kinds and that we should administer in a way that creates concern among the young and that they should not want to accept the continued existence of our people in a normal way. We must reflect on that and think about it twice.

Yet I had a bit of hope when on October 12 in the Speech from the Throne one could read—we are not told the year but simply:

On January 1 family allowances will again be indexed to the increase in the cost of living in 1976. I am prepared to take it that they meant January 1, 1977, but until then there will still be a period of twelve months in between. Until then I think the families of this country will be deprived of a necessary income, an important income that would have helped put economic blood in our system. When families have supplementary incomes in general they spend those incomes on neccessities of life, and when those families buy more milk, more clothes, more necessities of life they help directly to dispose of production. And when production is disposed of, industries operate at fuller capacity and automatically families help create employment, reduce unemployment and circulate in our society the economic blood of the nation—money.

Mr. Speaker, I am offended that in 1976 a bill should be introduced to reduce the increase in family allowances that had been provided for in 1975.

● (2110)

Mr. Speaker, a 7 per cent reduction in the income of members of parliament during 1976 is acceptable because this is only affecting 264 families, but a reduction in family allowances directly affects a huge number of families, and this is more serious.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the members have accepted that their income, their expense account be reduced by 7 per cent since last July, when Bill C-81 was passed and every member gives back $58.33 to the federal Treasury each month. Did the newspapers report that fact to the people? Were the people told on television that the members of parliament were setting the good example? Did the radio stations broadcast that information? Never. If our income had increased by 2 per cent, that increase would have made the headlines on the newspapers: "Members of Parliament are having it good, they increase their income by 2 per cent". We accepted to make a sacrifice to set a good example but nobody mentions it. Furthermore, a bill is introduced to reduce the income of our families, of those who accept to bring up children, and perhaps somebody will say that this is a scandal.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I met at least 1,000 people in my riding. I attended the Remembrance Day ceremonies, when everyone displayed a reverent silence, following the church service. In the evening, I met about 500 mothers, members of the Daughters of Isobel Order. We did not meet just for fun, we met to think about the future of our country, about the role of the mothers and, Mr. Speaker, we came to the conclusion that we must take the necessary steps to guarantee them a sufficient income. They have an important role to play in our country because without them, there will be not Canada.

The rights of the mothers, those who accept to give birth, must be recognized with legislation. We must make sure that they will not fear tomorrow, that they will have enough clothing or enough money to buy food for their offsprings.

However, if our country was lacking natural resources, one could say: We must share, we must deny ourselves for one another, but this is not the case. Mr. Speaker, in our country, we are presently punishing those who produce, he or she who gets up early in the morning to go and work for 10, 15 or 20 hours, we punish these persons more than the ones who refuse to go to work. Let us take the case of the dairy producers in Canada. I do not want to indulge in petty politics but I would like us to be realistic. Those people have been managing their businesses for years, looking for ways to improve them, to make them more profitable, to provide a livelihood to their small communities. Automatically, they had to expand with time, the business was sound, with a climate favourable to farming entrepreneurship. But now we have a policy punishing those who produce. Not only are they punished, but revoltingly the milk they produce is not paid, and on top of that they incur a penalty for producing.

This is totally irrational, when it is known for a fact that even in this country there are families and small children that are not provided on a daily basis with enough food to fill their stomachs. Some may point to Christ saying that there will always be poor people among us. But he never said to the House of Commons; Thou shall enact laws to be poor people. We must not make Christ lie. What is our role? It is to look after those people, those groups of Canadians who do not have the talents, the opportunity to get out of a situation which we might not accept ourselves. What is our role? It is to accept what Providence sends us, to distribute it in a fair way satisfactory to the people.

Admittedly, we are facing difficult times, but those who lived through the 30's should remember those years. I remember something that happened on October 29, 1932 when I had nothing to eat in my hut. I remember I had the good fortune to see a deer two acres away from my house. I had a gun, and I got it. But one hour later came a game warden, asking if I had a permit. I said yes, my permit is being able to get the game Providence sends me. He told me: I have to seize your deer, because you have no permit. Well, I was not a revolutionary, but this I answered: "My friend, I don't know you. You may have authority, but I will tell you this much: The man who will carry the deer, away, the man who will take it away from my stomach, he isn't born yet. Do you understand?" Well, we understood each other, and finally he decided to leave it there. I shared it with the families around, because it was a gift of God. So we must now do the same thing.

Today, circumstances have it that I am here as a member of this House, like every other member, to speak and make laws in the name of my fellow citizens, in the name of Canadians. We must always make laws to ensure minimum of security to the smallest person in our society. Let others be millionaires, that does not matter as long as the smallest in society is assured of the bare essentials. Canada can do that.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that family allowances are not indexed to the cost of living. Surely there are numbers of other ways to practice restraint other than at the expenses of Canadian families. The government should refer to the Auditor General's reports which I had the opportunity to read since I came to this House. The Auditor General of Canada has made suggestions year after year to indicate to the government where there is squandering, where savings could be made, but the government has failed to act upon them. The Auditor General does mention in his reports: "I do not have the necessary staff to work more efficiently." And he has been requesting additional staff to enable him to perform a truly responsible work and ensure an adequate management of our national affairs in co-operation with the government. It is stated in the Speech from the Throne that the government is willing to grant additional staff to enable the Auditor General of Canada to do his work in the best interests of the nation without consideration for the government.

● (2120)

Mr. Speaker, I cannot bear the sight of so many young men and women whom we have raised, educated, clothed and sheltered, their arms full of diplomas wander from one Manpower centre to another. Some of them call on the personnel directors of various companies and are given this answer: Sir, do you have any experience? Miss, do you have any experience? One must be naive, Mr. Speaker, to ask that question to a student who tells you: I have just completed my studies. I have a diploma, I did my best, so I am available now on the labour market. And then, he is asked stupidly: Do you have any experience? It is simply killing. They do not understand anything! That is the kind of reasoning. If we really want to develop our labour, our youth for the benefit of this country, let us start by giving them a chance. Let us start by opening them some doors, and then we will see whether they are likely to acquire some ability. They will probably do, and we will then have an opportunity to use our human resources for the benefit of the development and advance of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that a government prefers to hand out unemployment benefits which are often more costly than wages paid in local industries, that they agree to support strong young people through welfare, whereas we spend half a million a day, or if we spend $1 billion a year to pay for benefits, for allowances to people who do nothing, why should we not be clever enough to take the risk of paying the same amount and enable these people to use their intelligence, their skills, the diplomas they have received? It seems to me this would be appropriate in difficult situations.

I, for one, do not always blame private enterprise, Mr. Speaker, because according to available data, the private sector provides 60 per cent of all jobs in Canada. But because of the various pressures it is subject to, this sector ends up being less effective, and this is why the number of unemployed increases, even though some governments boast that they have created 100,000 or 200,000 new jobs this year. This is not what is important, Mr. Speaker. We must consider each year how many healthy people are really at work and productive. This is why I am not very pleased with the provisions of this bill, if we have to impose restraints of this kind under the pretence of saving some money.

We have something tremendous to build in Canada. We have lakes, the St. Lawrence River, the oceans. God has been good to us. We could very well have our own merchant marine. But to build that, we need human resources. We have men, qualified solderers, mechanics, why not put them to work building a merchant marine for our country? It seems to me quite logical.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to act like a demagogue and accuse governments of all the sins of Israel. Not at all, but let us make it quite clear that basically, the actual problem is a dollar problem, a money problem. And if we are aware of this money problem, aware that our financing system up to now has not adequately safisfied our country's needs, let us be honest and reform it. Let us take a chance, things could not be worse than they are now, because, Mr. Speaker, this government, the government of Canada, under the pretext of helping the provinces, I explained it on November 5, under the pretense of helping Quebec build low rental housing for retired people, they are claiming a 17 per cent interest rate. When a government has to pay 17 per cent interest rate to build public utilities, how could private enterprise survive with a competitor like that? It is in that direction, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to direct our research.

We shall find out things pretty quickly. All we have to do is follow the indications of the Auditor General of Canada, and listen to the well informed opinions of some free economists, I do not mean economists who allowed themselves to be bought out, who are working for loan sharks, I mean really free thinking economists, objective economists who are able to view the economic situation in its real context and provide public administrations with means to make our economic system and all our activities more efficient, so that we stop talking nonsense, wasting away our energies to try to put bandaids on a wooden leg.

There was an old beggar in my parish who had a wooden leg. Even if he had put bandaids on it every day, it would still have been a wooden leg. The same goes for us. If we put bandaids on this and that, on things, means, systems that give no results, what do we achieve? Let us change method.

That is what I am suggesting to the government, this evening, on the occasion of the debate on Bill C-19. Mr. Speaker, you who are listening to me, for the love of God ask His Honour the Speaker of the House to bring back to Parliament Bill C-206 as soon as possible that we might continue to study it in depth, in order to find some solution or other that would enable the government to give administrative results of which the people can be proud. I could not care less what party does it; whether it be the Conservatives who perform the reform, I would rejoice, whether it be the NDP, I would rejoice, and whether it be the Liberals, I would be happy; just as long as something positive, concrete is done. It is the results that count. It is the results that we want.

I do think, Mr. Speaker, that we have here an intelligent assembly. In fact I know all my colleagues of the House quite well; I have always had considerable respect for each and everyone of them.

We can have different opinions but we must not disagree on the means to meet the objective. I worked a lot in the building industry and I happened to have foremen who had opinions which were different from mine on how to erect a scaffold, but the objective was not the scaffold, the idea was to be able to put the roofing and the last layers of bricks; this was the objective. If we are in Parliament, it is to build, no matter what materials we want to use; it is our objective that matters.

The objective, Mr. Speaker, is to give our country a sound administration, to give our young people, our children who are going to survive us, a heritage of which they will be proud and then they will say among themselves: do you know that these people were not that foolish; they did not have the education we have, they did not have the advantage to wear out as many seats in universities, but they used the little education they had to make something really positive and then they will say: it is not as bad as all that; we must do better.

And with this in mind, they will go on with renewed vigour instead of being discouraged as they are now because it is discouraging to see them act the way they do. I see it every weekend. I meet the man on the street, Mr. Speaker, because we must go down to the grassroots level, hear what people are saying and open our eyes. We must be able to understand them better.

I am not pessimistic by nature, you can be sure of that. I have faith in my country's future, but we must wake up, bring about the necessary reforms while it is still time. And one such reform would be to eliminate the provision with regards to family allowances so that they can be indexed even for 1976. If we could finally realize this, we would show that we really intend to build our country on that most precious, fundamental unit that we call the family and Canadian mothers would not be afraid of having another child and perhaps we would hear a little less of suicides and abortions.

● (2130)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to be as eloquent or as boisterous as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), partly because I acquired a head cold while attending ceremonies on November 11. Nor shall I attempt to say much about the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) whom I congratulate on his maiden speech in the House today. However, since he was not able to stick to the facts and, I would say, distorted the position of the federal government in the field of expenditure, I shall return to the hon. member shortly.

I intend to follow the line taken by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni who drew attention to certain very beneficial aspects of Bill C-19. I do not mind telling the Canadian people that I am happy to enter the debate this evening to speak in favour of that bill.

On December 18, 1975, among the many steps the government was taking to bring inflation under control, certain reductions in planned government expenditures for the fiscal year 1976-77 were announced. These reductions were categorized as the deferral of planned expenditures, the elimination of planned expenditures, and the elimination of activities. This was not something the political party which happens to hold power was anxious to do. Obviously, with the majority we have in the House and the able politicians we have in this party, we were not interested in bringing in restraint legislation. However, I am satisfied that the Canadian people appreciate the beneficial effects which will come about economically as a result of the steps taken. This bill is an example of leadership, which is what the Canadian people wish us to exercise.

The steps taken to reduce expenditures involve measures to terminate various programs which were felt, in some instances, to have worn out their effectiveness, for example, Information Canada, the Opportunities for Youth program and other agencies. We shall see them, no doubt, in the not-too-distant future in other forms as various aspects of those programs are reintroduced in co-operation with the provinces, picking up where we have left off.

The total reduction in planned expenditures on these and many other items was about $1.5 billion, of which slightly more than half corresponded to reductions in budgetary expenditures; the rest were reductions in non-budgetary expenditures. Had these reductions not been imposed, the main estimates which were tabled on February 18, 1976, would have been about $1 billion higher than they were, and the capital budgets of Crown corporations, which are approved by orders in council and which are tabled in the House, would have been about half a billion dollars higher.

Levels of expenditure affecting some of the items involved in these reductions are regulated by specific provisions in acts of parliament. To effect the reductions it is necessary to amend these provisions.

Hon. members will recall that the bill before us, or a similar bill, was given first reading on March 8, 1976, but was not proceeded with prior to the summer recess or the end of the last session. Consequently a bill with minor revisions, but substantially the same, was given first reading on November 1, 1976. The revisions relate to the effective dates of certain amendments. The purpose of the omnibus legislation now before the House is to provide the authority necessary to enable certain reductions in planned expenditure to be made.

One area of attention is the Adult Occupation Training Act. As one coming from the province of New Brunswick, I say, of course, that anything which can be done to assist our people in preparing them for jobs is to be encouraged. As hon. members know, the Company of Young Canadians is, of necessity, eliminated along with other large programs which we all supported; however, ways will be found, in co-operation with the provincial governments, to provide effective assistance for young people through various other programs.

I do feel we have shown an example of good leadership in being able to put the lid on certain programs and bring in these restraints. We are asking the Canadian people to understand that these measures are absolutely necessary in order to maintain the stability of the economy.

I turn my attention again, to the hon. member for St. John's West. A former Liberal, he sits now as a Conservative who was minister of finance in the province of Newfoundland. This afternoon he took it upon himself to criticize the regional development program introduced by this government. What else could this be but blatant hypocrisy when one considers the amount of federal money being poured into the Atlantic provinces?

In New Brunswick, 50 per cent of the total budget of about $1 billion is provided by federal dollars through the equalization grant. In Prince Edward Island it is 75 cents on the dollar. In Nova Scotia one third of a total budget of $800 million is federal money. The same situation exists in Newfoundland where something in the order of 50 per cent of the budget consists of federal money. What has the hon. member for St. John's West got to complain about or criticize when assistance is given to his province on that scale? I fail to understand how the hon. member could take the opportunity afforded by his maiden speech to make such contradictory statements as he did, attacking the very government he has just left, attacking the Moores administration.

If the Moores administration is poor, why should the hon. member come into this House and criticize the federal government without mentioning the billions of federal money which are going into Atlantic Canada to assist provincial governments in almost every phase of their activities—education, health and welfare, infrastructure, transportation and so on? Identify any area you like and you will find that the majority of the dollars going into that program are federal dollars.

I have talked about equalization payments but I have not said a word about the DREE money which is going into his province. It is time it was stated publicly that we should be proud that we are putting this money into places like eastern Canada to assist people in Atlantic Canada attain the same standard of living as the people of Alberta.

● (2140)

I wonder why the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) does not talk with the premier of Alberta and some of his people in that province who last year told us in the east to freeze in the dark. Has he said anything about assisting us through the use of natural resources, which are Canadian natural resources? As Canadians we are entitled to share in the benefits derived from those resources. But no, Mr. Speaker, the premier of Alberta wants to salt the money away and get interest on the investment at the expense of Canadians. I submit there is a heavy onus on the Leader of the Opposition to speak to the premier of Alberta, since they are of the same party faith. The hon. member for St. John's West would also be well advised to speak to those in other provinces if he wants to cry about the problems in his own province.

As I said earlier this evening, I support Bill C-19 because these are measures that the Canadian people want the government to take. We have reduced federal expenditures to the tune of $1.5 billion. It would be nice to spend $2 million, $5 million or $10 million in some of these small municipalities, but people will always keep demanding more and more services, more of everything, and we all know there is no bottomless pit. There must be a halt to these kinds of pressures.

When one realizes what it costs to operate this House, Mr. Speaker, it is sad that no reasonable suggestions come from the other side. I wonder why the official opposition do not put forward reasonable alternatives if they are concerned at the expenditures of the federal government. Why do they not come to grips with the realities of life in Canada today? Why do they not accept their responsibility and be serious about providing a reasonable opposition in this parliament?

I am convinced that the steps being taken today as a result of the dynamic leadership being shown by the government will be proven in years to come to have been necessary measures to take at this particular time. In the province of New Brunswick federal money is pouring in, but what is the Hatfield administration doing with its allotted federal funds? Some $9.5 million are being allotted to bilingualism over and above the half billion dollars provided New Brunswick in the form of equalization payments, and over and above all the DREE grants, the $35 million spent on water and sewage systems, the $60 million poured into route 11 for the construction of the highway between Moncton and Campbellton, in regard to which that particular Conservative administration has been dragging its feet, refusing to accept its responsibilities, its promises and commitments to the people of the province. The members of that administration have failed miserably in carrying out their duties in office, duties they promised to perform at the last provincial election.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that all members must accept the fact that large amounts of money must be poured into areas such as Atlantic Canada. The day will come when the hon. member for St. John's West will have to reconsider some of the statements he made this afternoon. He did not take the opportunity to tell the House that Mr. Smallwood and the two or three members of his independent party have just recently returned to the Liberal party in Newfoundland. In view of the stature and character of a man like Mr. Smallwood, the hon. member for St. John's West should get in touch with him and discuss his political philosophies. Perhaps he will see the error of his ways and, having gone from Liberal to Conservative, come back to the Liberal side again, where obviously he should have remained in the first place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): La même chose.

Mr. Harquail: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says, "La même chose." I would agree with him, as I have the pleasure of doing from time to time when he brings forward reasonable suggestions in the House.

I want to take the opportunity this evening to say how important it is that the money saved through the cutback in expenditure be directed to those areas that need additional financial support. We have talked about provinces that are better off than other provinces, and in the riding I represent we need every dollar we can get in order to survive and to develop at a pace that will ensure our survival in the future.

I agree with the government that it should make cutbacks in the civil service. In view of the over-expenditure and abuse that has taken place in the civil service sector, there is no question that we must take dynamic action and see that various positions are analysed and, where feasible, cutbacks are made. In almost every department one can find inefficiency and low production. We would be well advised to make some additional in depth studies in this regard because I am confident that there are some more savings to be made which would reduce federal expenditures in this time of restraint.

In recent months even people in the labour movement have spoken of the benefits coming from the restraint program. Recent statistics bear this out. I am not referring to political statements by the government; these are facts, and they show that the program is working and that the people are satisfied with the action that has been taken by the government.

I would not want to miss this opportunity as a member from New Brunswick of saying I support the decentralization program. Not only do I support it but I am very interested in where jobs will be relocated. One of the first moves that was made was to Matane, Quebec. Then another section of the civil service moved to the greater Moncton area and then into the Bathurst area. I think this is good. Not only should the government go to Atlantic Canada but also I agree with some of the previous speakers who suggested that some of these offices and departments should be moved to western Canada.

● (2150)

I am certainly convinced that the offices which are being decentralized can work very efficiently for the Canadian public in New Brunswick, in Prince Edward Island, in Nova Scotia, in Newfoundland or indeed on the west coast, just as they can here in the nation's capital, Ottawa. I understand the concern of the local people. Naturally there would be concern by the mayor and the people in the area about space being left vacant because of the movement of the people. I understand this and am most sympathetic about it. No one wants to be moved or disturbed, but of course there must be some understanding and realization of the situation. There are the realities of the thing.

The government has not said it intends to move all the departments from Ottawa. However, when the media and others become involved it sometimes seems as if the government is moving toward decentralization of all agencies, Crown corporations, and departments to some other part of Canada. This is not true.

There has been a well considered plan in respect of the movement of some branches and departments to other sectors of Canada. Why not? As I mentioned in respect of fuel, Canadians in eastern Canada are entitled to enjoy the benefit of the natural resources in Alberta, just as the people of Alberta, British Columbia or Manitoba would want to enjoy the natural resources we have in Atlantic Canada. We share these things. It is a two-way street, and should be. This is the way it should be if we are to have a good strong country.

Notwithstanding the results, I was surprised that throughout the election campaign which was conducted in the province of Quebec we did not hear much reference to the federal money that has gone to that province, and to the specialized programs such as DREE and so on through which the federal government assists the provincial government. Depending on the final result we will have to take a serious look at all these projects and the way in which they affect all the provinces and the territories.

To use an expression used by members of the opposition, it seems passing strange that it is very convenient to talk all around something and not tell the truth about the actual programs that are being implemented and the number of dollars that go into the provincial programs from federal funds.

It certainly can be said in respect of my province that the Conservative administration in New Brunswick has not said one word about the 50 per cent of the budget that comes into the province is federal money and DREE money. The administration conveniently forgets to mention the number of federal dollars involved in provincial programs.

I want to conclude my remarks by re-stating that I support Bill C-19 just as I support all the other comprehensive federal government programs that are being administered today.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to correct the record in respect of statements made by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). The hon. member for Restigouche used the phrase "tell the truth". It is encouraging to hear one member on that side of the House use such phrases. Now all we have to do is impress on members opposite that they must understand the meaning of such phrases so that Canada and Canadians will have an opportunity to enjoy the benefits which should be ours as a result of an intelligent government. This government has just become a leaky utensil which can no longer hold water. It plugs a hole here, and then the water runs out somewhere else. This is what has happened.

This afternoon the hon. member for Gloucester said that the government had to have increased revenue. I should like to refer to the increased revenue that has fallen into the lap of the government. In 1969 from all forms of tax, municipal, provincial and federal, the Canadian people paid $24,914,000,000. In 1974, five years later, this figure had almost doubled to $48,461,000,000. The question we as legislators have to decide is how this money will be spent. This is a very important issue. Perhaps the government does not understand how this money should be spent.

There are many ways in which money can be wasted. The vessel is leaking so badly it can no longer hold water and it is therefore spewing out all over the place. We must realize that this government probably is one of the most wasteful governments Canada has ever had trying to govern this country. Every member on that side of the House is living a lie because of the fact that he was elected by misrepresentation, both in respect of the issues and otherwise, because of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated time and time again that he was opposed to controls in Canada and then, a few months after the election, the government brought them in.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask someone on the government side what the business will be for tomorrow and possibly for the balance of the week if the Prime Minister does not plan to issue a writ and go to the people after the results of this evening in Quebec? Is there someone over there who can tell us the business of the House?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I understand that tomorrow we will continue with the discussion of the bill we have had before us today.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—SUGGESTED PRORATA PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF VETERANS WHOSE PENSIONS WERE LESS THAN FORTY-EIGHT PER CENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, one of the things I have learned during the years I have been in this House is that if one has a good cause and stays with it long enough he will win. The sad part of it is that sometimes it takes a lot longer than it should but in the end persistence pays. So it is that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and I are here tonight to discuss a good cause and I dare to hope that he and I agree that it is a cause that must be won.

● (2200)

My appearance on this late show arises out of a question which I put to the minister on Thursday, November 4, as reported in Hansard at page 756. My question was in the following terms:

Since Remembrance Day is only a week away, will the minister consider, in honour of that day, the introduction of legislation to provide prorata pensions for widows of veterans where the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent?

The answer was as follows:

HON. DANIEL J. MACDONALD (MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS): Mr. Speaker, it is under consideration by the government, as is other legislation.

I had a supplementary question which pressed the point that something might be announced before Remembrance Day. I regret to say that that did not happen, but I hope that the delay with regard to this matter will not last much longer.

As most hon. members know, certainly all of us who are interested in veterans affairs, there is a provision in the Pension Act for a widow's pension for widows of veterans who were in receipt of or were entitled to receive disability pensions. However, the very strict provision in that act is that if the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent, there is no pension as a matter of right for the widow. Let me repeat it. If the veteran's pension is 48 per cent or more, the widow gets the full widow's pension provided under the Pension Act, but if the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent, she gets nothing under that legislation.

For many years it has been felt that this is unfair, and it has been recommended a good many times that this unfairness be corrected. One of the most thorough examinations of this question was made by Mr. Justice Mervyn Woods, and in the Woods report there was the clear recommendation that the 48 per cent rule be changed. In a more recent report, namely that by Dr. J. Douglas Hermann on prisoners of war in Europe, there was an ancillary recommendation that this 48 per cent rule be altered and that prorata pensions be provided for widows where the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent. To my knowledge, at least three or four times the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has recommended in favour of the very thing that was proposed by Mr. Justice Woods and by Dr. Hermann. Each time that the committee have voted on this issue, we have in fact taken our stand for prorata pensions for widows of veterans in the case where the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent.

The rule that is there now comes from a day when, generally speaking, pensions for widows were a lot less generous than they are today. They are still not generous enough, but this rule comes out of a bygone day. In these days we realize that if equality between men and women is to mean anything, we have to do better for our widows. I suggest that the best place to start to achieve full equality and a proper deal for widows is by action of the government itself under the Department of Veterans Affairs. I firmly believe that we will win this some day. I believe that the minister in his heart wants it just as much as I do, but he has trouble with those cabinet colleagues of his who are forever holding him back and telling him he has to practise restraint. There is no fairness in this provision which denies widows any pension at all if the veteran's pension was 48 per cent or less, and it must be changed.

Let the minister not tell me about the War Veterans Allowance Act. I know all about that and I know the other provisions that are available, but it means something to a veteran's widow, as it does to a veteran, to have a pension as a matter of right under the Pension Act, and I want to see it extended to cover all widows, including those where the veteran's pension was below the 48 per cent level. That would seem to make sense, at least as a start, and I hope the minister will be able tonight to indicate that he does agree with what Mr. Justice Woods, Dr. Hermann and our committee have recommended, and that just as soon as he can get his fellow cabinet ministers to see the light he will bring in the necessary amendment to the Pension Act to provide adequate pensions for the widows of Canadian war veterans.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to reply to the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) regarding the suggested provision of prorata pensions for widows of veterans where the veterans' pensions were less than 48 per cent.

The government is aware of all the recommendations which have been made to provide prorata pensions for widows of disability pensioners. At the present time a widow would be pensioned if her husband's death was attributable to service or was incurred during wartime. In addition, if her husband's pensionable disabilities were assessed at 48 per cent or more during his lifetime, she would be eligible for a widow's pension.

This percentage was selected because at that rate the veterans were obviously seriously disabled, and it was considered that the pensionable condition might play a part, however small, in the pensioner's death. On the other hand, if someone is pensioned at 5 per cent for flat feet and dies from a different cause, his death bears no relationship to his pensioned condition, and the question arises as to whether a pension should be paid for an unrelated death.

Canada does not take a back seat to any country in so far as our pension legislation is concerned. The benefits we provide for the disabled servicemen or women or their surviving dependants are far greater than those provided by most other countries. I am not aware of any of our major western wartime allies who pay automatic survivor benefits to widows approaching the 48 per cent basis which we in Canada use.

Having said that I must also say that the entire matter of veterans' benefits—and that includes prorata widows' pensions—is always under constant review by the Department of Veterans Affairs, by the Canadian Pension Commission and by the other agencies of my ministry to see what changes can be made to improve the lot of veterans and their dependants.

ENERGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONSTRUCTION OF INTERPROVINCIAL TRANSMISSION LINES

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with a question I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) on November 9 concerning whether he was taking any action to follow up on the statement he made in Labrador last July that he favoured the approach of the federal government exercising its powers under the BNA Act to declare hydro energy transmission lines to be in the national interest, or whatever the wording is, so that they can be built across provinces, without the consent of the provinces, if necessary, in the same manner as oil and gas pipelines are and have been built.

The reason for asking the question is the very unsatisfactory position in which the province of Newfoundland now finds itself with respect to its hydro energy potential in Labrador, particularly at Gull Island, which has a potential of 1,800 megawatts of power and Muskrat Falls just downstream which has a potential of 600 or 700 megawatts, which project has been brought to a halt because of the attitude of the Government of Canada and the attitude of the government of the province of Quebec. It is somewhat a coincidence that I am speaking tonight at the moment when the government of Quebec is changing, but there is no reason to expect or hope that the new government of Quebec will be any different from the old one in this respect.

The Gull Island project would have provided 1,800 megawatts of power, of which it was planned to bring a great deal to the island of Newfoundland through a transmission line by way of a tunnel under the Strait of Belle Isle and then, of course, to distribute it within the island of Newfoundland. As the project was originally conceived, there would have been surplus energy which would have had to be sold to someone for a period of 10 to 15 years in order to make the rest of the project feasible. The only possible customer was the province of Quebec, our neighbour, adjacent to the land mass of Labrador.

• (2210)

When the project was first mooted in 1974 the estimated cost, not the detailed cost, was $1.1 billion. The Government of Canada was requested to assist in the project because the province could not finance it with its own credit. There was plenty of precedent for this, including the Nelson River development in Manitoba where the federal government advanced the total financing for the transmission line by way of loan. The government of Newfoundland requested treatment less generous than that.

In the event, after the estimates had gone to $1.47 billion for both the hydro generation and transmission part of this project and the tunnel, the federal government agreed on February 10, 1975, to lend 50 per cent of the cost of the transmission line up to $343 million, at Crown corporation interest rates. That was a loan, not a grant. It agreed to defer principal and interest repayments for five years after completion if a case were proven to show that was necessary, and to capitalize the interest during construction. All of this would have given us a benefit of $425 million out of the then estimated cost of $1.47 billion.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, inflation is rampant. When the final estimates on that project were completed by June, 1975, they showed the cost rising to $2.1 billion, including interest during construction, escalation of costs and the rest of it.

Any financial review showed that the province could not undertake the project without greater financial assistance from the federal government. At the end of August, 1975, the then minister of finance was contacted by letter, and I will not go into the details, with a request for greater financial assistance. In the meantime we had not received any commitment from Quebec Hydro to buy the surplus energy. They would not give us a commitment because they said they did not need the surplus energy and could not use it with James Bay coming into production, although their network to take it from Labrador to the other provinces and the United States could take all the surplus.

The authorities in the province of Quebec have always taken the position that no other province can transmit electricity across its boundaries unless it buys the power and resells it. They are in a position to dictate price to Newfoundland and to keep all the benefits for themselves if they so wish.

Since it was not possible to sell the surplus energy to Quebec and it was not possible to get an immediate answer from the federal government as to whether it would give more financial assistance, the government of Newfoundland had to discontinue the plan to generate hydro at Gull Island. It had to change the plan and ask Quebec whether it would sell sufficient power to us to construct one transmission line from the upper Churchill project so that we could bring that down and go ahead with the transmission line and the tunnel, with our energy to come from that source which they have under contract from Hydro Quebec.

The federal government told the province that it could not consider any greater financial assistance until they had settled all these matters with the province of Quebec. The federal government put us in the hands of the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. That province took advantage of its neighbour and adopted a "beggar thy neighbour" policy. They finally said that for them to consent to us getting in excess of 300 megawatts from the upper Churchill project, which they had to agree to under the present contractual arrangement, they would want a boundary change in Labrador. In the alternative they wanted us to sell them 20,000 square miles of Labrador, the watershed of five rivers running into the St. Lawrence, for one dollar, and they wanted us to pay the same price for the power to be recalled from the upper Churchill as it would cost us in 1982 in Newfoundland for power. This would be 30 to 40 mills, Mr. Speaker, because in 1982 we would have to get it from oil fired generators. That is the position we were put in by the province of Quebec. They had us by the throat and did not hesitate to choke us.

The project is now halted on both counts. We cannot go forward with the transmission line and we have had to stop the hydro generation. If we are to develop the hydro generated energy at Gull Island, Muskrat Falls and other sites in Labrador and sell what we do not need to other provinces, we must have some way of getting over the territorial boundaries of the province of Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, whose allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) I am pleased to reply to the question raised by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I hope that he, representing a constituency in Newfoundland, recognizes that the encouragement of co-operation between neighbouring provinces has long been an objective of the government's energy policy and is reflected in the existing regional electrical interconnection policy which offers grants for studies and loans up to 50 per cent of the cost for approved projects. Such conditions together with a grant justified by special considerations have enabled the construction of an interconnection between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The same program provided the basis on which an offer of loans totalling $343 million was made to Newfoundland and Labrador for a transmission system between Gull Island and the island of Newfoundland.

The essential element has been the assumption that, given appropriate incentives, neighbouring provinces would co-operate in their best mutual interests, and in this connection I am encouraged by progress made at a recent meeting in Halifax. At that recent meeting federal representatives and officials of the Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island electric power utilities agreed to work out terms of reference for a study aimed at the co-ordination of electrical energy development in the Maritime provinces through extended co-operation of the three provinces and the federal government. The study will evaluate procedures and possible new corporate structures to deal with such matters as regional generation and transmission development, regional energy dispatch, and regional system planning. The study will lead to recommendations on organization, financing and decision-making on joint regional projects, and will consider co-operation with neighbouring regions.

The hon. member is envisaging a situation when the conditions for such co-operation are not present. While constitutional jurisdiction might provide some leverage in such situations there are many other factors beyond the physical construction of transmission facilities if mutual benefits are to be obtained, including co-operative planning, joint participation in selected generation facilities, and possibly shared financing. The government has a strong preference to explore the co-operative approach, and to consider exercising constitutional leverage only as a last resort.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 16, 1976

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed, from Monday, November 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, last evening I commenced my remarks just prior to ten o'clock. I want to impress upon the House that the statements I make reflect my opinion and also, I am sure, the opinion of many hundreds of people across Canada, that this government is nothing more than a leaky vessel which can no longer hold water. In looking back over the statement made in the House of Commons by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), as recorded at page 957 of Hansard, I find he stated:

> If the government on behalf of the taxpayers in this country wants to cut expenditures, as it does, one of the clearest places to go to work is where expenditures have unfortunate impact and where the spending is unwise or leads to extra cost than is otherwise the case.

The first question I would like to put to the minister is: How can he prove that the government wants to cut expenditures, in light of the recent publicity that was given to his travel expenses? It is almost idiotic, in my opinion, for the minister to say in the House that the government wants to cut expenditures when a minister of the Crown is spending a quarter of a million dollars a year in taxpayers' money. This has to stop. We just cannot afford it. The taxpayers of Canada cannot stand that. Further on he says that where expenditures should first be cut is where they have an unfortunate impact. This is exactly what the government is doing; it is cutting expenditures where they are having an unfortunate impact.

Take, for instance, the withdrawal of the subsidization of the flour milling industry in eastern Canada. I want to impress upon hon. members the fact that not only eastern Canada is suffering as a result of this policy of the government, but also the millers in western Canada. I have been informed that millers in western Canada will suffer more than millers in eastern Canada. I think the government should explain to this House just where this burden will fall.

When the minister found out he was in trouble on the issue, he said the government would institute a new program which would cost $9 million. I have seen some of these programs which the government said would cost so much. Let us consider AIB which employed 200 people to administer its program at first. Now the personnel number around 1,000, five times the original number, within the first year. When the minister says in the House that the new program will cost $9 million, I just do not believe him, neither do a great many Canadians. The minister went on to say, "... and where the spending is unwise or leads to extra cost than is otherwise the case."

● (1110)

What could be more unwise than an hon. member spending money to travel back and forth to his constituency by private jet when there is accommodation provided by common carriers? We have Air Canada and CP Air. There are two means of travel open to the minister, and there is travel accommodation to the city of Saskatoon. The statements of the minister do not hold water, and I am sure the people across Canada recognize that. The minister went on to say the following:

> That really means it is not just a matter of who pays—between the taxpayer and the person who is asking for the service or using it—but whether the lowest possible amount is in fact incurred.

If that is not a joke, I have never heard one. When the minister can spend $7,000 on a trip from here to Saskatoon, when he could take a common carrier for less than $300, how in the world can he say that he is using the least expensive means and that the lowest possible amount is incurred? That is nothing short of a joke. That is why I say that the government is becoming nothing more than a leaky vessel.

The government is pouring cold water on incentives to work. People are losing faith. There is distrust in Canada. We are suffering a rate of inflation which is not acceptable, and it has put us beyond the cost factor in other countries in production and living. We cannot survive under that and we have to realize that the policies of governments have a great deal to do with the problems we are undergoing at the present time. The taxation policies of governments are very important. That is why we are debating this bill at such length. There are many ways in which the government could move in order to implement policies and means of taxation which would be beneficial to the people and not necessarily an increasing load for them.

In my remarks yesterday I stated that in 1969 the accumulated taxation by all levels of government totalled $24 billion. Five years later, in 1974, the accumulated total was $48 billion. The people of Canada cannot stand this kind of taxation without getting some return. When I say that the government is pouring cold water on incentives, this is exactly what is happening. It is destroying the incentive to work and to produce. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) came into this House he went across the country asking farmers to produce to beat the band. We all remember that. Now he is telling them to cut back. What better way is there to destroy incentive than to do that? When a minister does that, he destroys the faith of the people in any form of government. When we cannot find honesty in the higher echelons of government, how can we find honesty in other segments of our society? One of the worst things which could happen to Canadians would be to learn how to be dishonest. Once people become dishonest, they lose their worth—and this we cannot afford.

How can we measure the worth of the programs governments are instituting? This is one of the main problems the Auditor General has to face. How do we measure the worth of any individual in a department? How do we measure man-hour worth? This is a very complicated subject which deserves consideration, and this government would do well to work in conjunction with the Auditor General to devise programs which can be set in place whereby there can be a certain measurement of the man-hour worth of civil servants within departments. We, as members of parliament, are a cost to the taxpayer, and when I discuss the worth of anyone, members are included. I have to think about the expenditures which are paid by the taxpayers. Certain publications come to our desks and sometimes I think that the government is penny wise and pound foolish. How do we deal with items which the government considers petty, when $1 million means so little to it? In many ways there could be a considerable amount saved.

The press carried a story to the effect that a grand move had been made by the government to save paper by using both sides of every page. I suggest that the number of pages should be considered first; then using both sides might have some impact. I doubt if any member of parliament could estimate the number of tons of paper delivered to his office by hand or by mail in any given week. I want to mention a few unnecessary documents or papers which could be eliminated or decreased. Perhaps this will make government members realize that we on this side are making observations and suggestions to the government which it can use in order to cut down expenditures. We do not need copies of speeches or statements delivered in the House of Commons. That is a waste of time and a complete abuse of paper. Hansard gives us this information.

I have here a speech in very colourful form. It was a speech by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott)—who is a good fellow—at second reading of the borrowers' and depositors' protection bill given on November 1, 1976. All that is in Hansard, so why do we have to have it delivered to our offices? The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) addressed a national conference with regard to mental retardation. We received that address in both English and French. There are few hon. members in this House who read both versions. Surely they read only one or the other. Hon. members should request which version they want. I agree that they should have either one, but I think it should be the responsibility of hon. members to request whether they want English or French speeches delivered to their offices. That would prevent much paper from going into waste-paper baskets.

I suggest that speeches delivered by members of the cabinet, their parliamentary secretaries or representatives should be supplied only to hon. members who request them. Even if hon. members had time to use documents and speeches in either English or French, no one should receive copies in both languages unless there is a specific request. A circular to each office with simple questions would take care of that duplication.

Large numbers of envelopes come to our offices, and they are sized 8½ by 11, 15 by 9½ and even bigger on occasion. They are used to deliver just one sheet which, if folded, would fit into a No. 9 or No. 10 envelope. That happens on a continuing basis. The Public Service Commission is one of the chief offenders. Time and again competition posters of one or two pages are sent out in 15 by 9½ envelopes. Thousands of them go out across Canada daily. The waste is incalculable. I have one here. There seems to be no will on the part of government departments to cut back this extra cost.

Then, of course, there is other dressing-up which is wasteful. I refer to the use of heavy and unusually glossy folders which enclose pamphlets, speeches and other information from departmental branches or government offices, usually of ministers. These are useless and unnecessary and I wonder why they are ordered at all. I and other hon. member have examples of these. I have one here. It is from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Another is from Information Canada. So it goes, Mr. Speaker. While I realize and understand the importance of publishing reports, background papers, books and other documents in two languages, surely every person, whether in parliament or not, would be satisfied with one copy in one language. More often than not, one copy is thrown out if for no other reason than to save space in the office. I am sure I am speaking about something of which all members are aware. As members of parliament, we have to take issue with this because if we are to cut back we have to do it in these areas where it will not affect the development of our country.

• (1120)

I am very sure that these are the areas governments will have to look at in order to get away from the terrible deficit which faces us at the present time, and possibly again next year. Canadians are getting sick and tired of being taken for a ride—whether it is by "Langair," "Lang rent-a-car", "Lang's fliers", or what have you. They are just sick and tired of the way their tax dollars are spent.

After those preliminary remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to get down to why I oppose this bill. One year ago the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board was adamant about bringing the grain stabilization bill before this House. Now he wants to renege on the government's payments into that stabilization fund. He is demanding that producers pay their share, which could amount to $50 million per year according to his parliamentary secretary. The government must—and I emphasize this—be held responsible, and this portion of the bill must be deleted, because grain producers are going to lose faith in the government if they do not receive fair play.

Promises are not good enough—promises that three, four, five or six years ahead the government will have not only to pay in their portion to the fund but also will have to reimburse the treasury for that portion for which the producers may be liable. I am sure everyone realizes that our economy will not be in good condition if the time ever comes that we have to pay out from this fund. It means our economy is going to be in the doldrums and will be a load on the taxpayers if it has to pay back money which should have been paid in this year or next year as the program continues.

If the government cannot afford to make the payments now when times are good, how will it make them when the going gets tough, Mr. Speaker? It is irresponsible for any government to bring in this type of legislation and renege on payment. This is not the way business operates in Canada. What would happen if a business reneged on payment of income tax? The Department of National Revenue would move in and freeze its bank account. I am sure all members of parliament have had to deal with such situations.

If the federal government, through the Department of National Revenue, has the right to freeze bank accounts and finances of citizens, those citizens should have the right to move in and freeze a certain part of the revenue of Canada. We have to hold this minister responsible for at least this part of the bill, Mr. Speaker. It is of fundamental importance that we do not allow the government to adopt this unbusinesslike practice of delaying payments which are due. I am sure even the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) would agree that at all costs the government must make its payments current, and keep them current, because the fate of producers is at stake.

The cost of farm labour is increasing and it is becoming more and more difficult to get people to work. I think that is true of industry as well. I am sure all members realize that it is becoming difficult to get educated people, trained people and technologists to do the jobs which are required in business in this country. It has been said, and I think correctly so, that a person has to be re-educated, that life is a continuing sphere of education and that we have to develop certain educational attributes five or six times during a lifetime.

It would, therefore, seem penny wise and pound foolish for the government to cut $20 million from the Manpower training program when labour, business and agriculture are demanding a higher degree of technical ability. While this $20 million is being cut from the training program, the budget of the unemployment insurance fund is being increased by $700 million. This just does not make sense, Mr. Speaker. Surely we are moving in the wrong direction. We should be retraining personnel and giving them the opportunity to work into our technical system. If we are to continue in the forefront of technology in the world today, we must continue to train people. We must adapt to situations and circumstances and participate in the development of this land of which we are so justly proud and in which we all have the right to participate.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the opposition criticizing and attacking. That is their function, I suppose; but if they would be a little more practical and offer some real suggestions, I think they would be well received not only by the government but by the people of Canada.

As far as the restraint policy is concerned and the way it is outlined in Bill C-19, it embodies a firm intention to reduce spending, not only the budgetary and statutory items but also non-statutory items. The budget has been increasing at a rate of 20 per cent to 24 per cent, but it will be cut down to 16 per cent.

Of course, the government does not admit, nor does any economist, that government spending is the cause of the present level of inflation. We must keep repeating this because people try to cloud the issue by saying government spending is the cause of the trouble. I repeat, inflation is worldwide and it was going up at an acceptable, although deplorable, rate even before the OPEC countries quadrupled oil prices. Since that price rise came into effect, inflation has run rampant. Even so, this government has led this country down a well-lit path of economic stability. It is about time hon. members opposite realized this.

• (1130)

The government is being criticized for its record on unemployment, but one must realize that our record with regard to the rate of increase of unemployment is still one of the best in the industrialized western world. Naturally, an unemployment rate of 6 per cent or 7.5 per cent is not acceptable or desirable, but if you want to be honest you will concede, after examining all the facts, that our record is among the best. The same can be said of our rate of inflation and standard of living.

Mr. McKinnon: We are not number one in that regard. The United States is number one.

Mr. Railton: The hon. member says the United States is number one. I expect hon. members opposite to criticize us, but I would prefer hearing good advice which we could follow. I have heard hon. members opposite offer much criticism, but since 1972 I have heard few suggestions as to what they would do if they were in our place. One wonders how gullible the opposition thinks the people of Canada are. Of course, not only opposition members opposite criticize us; the media also acts as a secondary opposition, taking it upon itself to criticize the government when it thinks we are not doing an adequate job. Mr. Speaker, we can take criticism because we know we are providing good government.

We must realize that democratic government in any country of the industrialized world is a most tenuous affair these days. I should like to know what the opposition would do if they were in our place. I keep asking the opposition that question because it is important to know the answer. I think opposition criticism leads to misrepresentation of certain facts and this troubles our electorate. If the opposition were honest, it would say what it would do if it were the government. As soon as we hear honest criticism we will provide the appropriate answers.

Mr. Mazankowski: You people are not experts in that field.

Mr. Railton: The people of Canada are in favour of stable government and do not believe conditions are nearly as unstable as hon. members opposite make out. Part of our present-day troubles may be blamed upon the absolute misrepresentation of facts and twisting of truth. This must stop. We need statesmen—and I do not see many on the other side of the House. Actually, I should like to know when hon. members opposite are going to produce one statesman.

Mr. Towers: There are more on my side than there are on yours.

Mr. Railton: Let me now deal with the government's proposed cutbacks. The government, in trying to reduce spending, will divert certain expenditures, eliminate others and cut down on certain activities. The first step was taken some time ago and was rather painful. The salaries of members of the House of Commons and the Senate, of judges of the Supreme Court, the Federal Court and provincial superior courts and of senior public servants were frozen. That was supposed to be a good example for the rest of the country, but perhaps it went unnoticed. I do not know if we received any thanks for our gesture.

The government has decided to terminate the Opportunities for Youth program, Information Canada and the Company of Young Canadians. Opinion on such programs and agencies was somewhat divided. Perhaps they would not be discontinued if there were no need for restraint. I think they were all examples of a broadminded approach to certain Canadian social difficulties.

By not indexing family allowances, the government hopes to save $221.3 million in a year. I think most Canadians are satisfied that with unemployment insurance and other social security programs such as old age security, widows pensions and the guaranteed income supplement, we are doing our best to look after those in difficulty because of unemployment or lack of income. If we can save $221.3 million without creating hardship, I think we should do it, although I do not like cutting back on any kind of pension.

The government has also decided that it will defer or reduce loans to Crown corporations in the hope that they will get their financing from the commercial sector. We look on our Crown corporations much as we look on our LIP projects. We look askance at people who come to us in the third year of a LIP project and say they want a hand-out to keep this or that good work going. We expect people operating LIP projects to make them self-supporting within the first two years. We are applying the same reasoning to our Crown corporations and reducing the loans which will be made available from the central government. We feel that they, too, should work toward independence and prosperity. But please remember that many Crown corporations were set up in the beginning because their activities were important to all Canadians. They were financed by the government because in the beginning they could not be profitable. I am thinking of Crown corporations like the CBC, Air Canada and the CNR. Now we are urging them to become self-supporting.

There is to be a reduction in planned expenditures, the total of budgetary and non-budgetary items amounts to $1.5 billion. These reductions are being carried out on target. In other words, without such reductions the main estimates brought down in February this year would have been $1 billion higher, and the budgets of the Crown corporations would have been $500 million higher. In order to reduce expenditures we must amend several laws which give statutory authority for money to be spent on certain programs. For instance, we are to amend part of the adult occupational training program. The provision for granting certain annual increases is to be repealed and the government will substitute a provision which will permit the setting of these allowances by regulation. There will not be an automatic indexation. Then there is the Company of Young Canadians Act. We have to amend that act. I was not greatly gripped by that act in the first place. I thought it was somewhat far out.

I mentioned family allowances. That act will have to be amended also. I am rather sorry about the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. When I first saw this legislation I thought we were taking away from our eventual prosperity by reducing money to research and commercial and manufacturing industrial development. There is no doubt that the National Research Council does provide a great deal of industrial research. It was not considered that the research and development incentives to private companies added a great deal to the improvement of technology.

• (1140)

The government has been giving manufacturers and industry in general, including primary producers such as oil companies and resource industries, a very good thing by allowing them the 10 per cent incentive deferral. The only thing we request, and we still keep this in force, is that the corporations reinvest in their plant and machinery; in other words, incentives have to be based on profitability, productivity and reinvestment.

Then we have the Supply and Services Appropriation Act of 1970. That item was Information Canada. Many people in this country regarded Information Canada as nothing more than a frill we could live without. Its abolition shows the serious intention of the government with regard to cutting out expenditures that are not necessary. The only thing done to the Western Grain Stabilization Act was to defer it. No one is going to lose anything; everyone will be paid their interest on the amount which is being deferred.

Then we come to the Railway Act. We have to realize that transportation companies must work toward becoming self-supporting, the same as any other company. I mentioned that fact with regard to Crown corporations and similar institutions. This act will remove the subsidies for removing grain and flour for export to the east. It will give us breathing space until the whole matter is organized. This is one of the greatest things the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is now busy doing.

I have some figures which will be of interest. All ministers are cutting many millions of dollars out of their budgets: Agriculture, $10 million; Consumer Affairs, $1 million; Energy, $16 million; Environment, $11 million; Industry, Trade and Commerce, $13 million; Labour, $6 million; Manpower and Immigration, $56 million; Health and Welfare, $223.8 million. I could go on and on. The total for budgetary items amounts to $828.5 million, and non-budgetary items to $726.8 million, for a total of $1,555.3 million. This shows that the government's intentions are serious and that they are carrying them out.

Many things have been said about this government by members on the opposite side, as well as in various articles which have appeared in the press. When the people of Canada hear this, they think about what "that terrible government" is doing. For example, it is claimed that in the ten-year period just past, Ottawa increased its spending by 600 per cent. Actually, this increase was 388 per cent, which is quite in line and parallel with the growth of the gross national product.

I am going to quote Richard S. Malone, the publisher of the Globe and Mail. He wrote a scathing article about the government and its expenditures. Practically everything he said was incorrect. If you are going to criticize this government, for goodness sake be accurate. We will then do our best to make it right. There is no way you can make right in people's minds a misrepresentation which has been intentional. People fall for it and believe it. If members opposite are responsible, they will stop this.

Mr. Malone stated that overspending could only be done with devalued dollars or legal counterfeiting. That is a ridiculous statement. The budgetary policy is not determined only by the requirements of the federal public sector, but also by the imperatives of macro-economic management; in other words, what is necessary to sustain growth and to check inflation in the Canadian economy as a whole. One of the factors which led the government to introduce price and income controls a year ago last October was precisely the need to avoid, at this juncture, changes which are too abrupt in our economic policy; in other words, that accusation was demagogy. He further said that the financial estimates and budget in Ottawa will call for an even greater increase in spending, an increase of 16 to 19 per cent, quite apart from the supplementary estimates. He was quite wrong, assuming that the figure will be 16 per cent not only for budgetary but for non-budgetary amounts and all the expenditures which will be contained in the main estimates.

Another statement was that a recent estimate shows that 43 per cent of Canadians who are employed are on government payrolls. What an asinine statement! I will go through a little exercise to illustrate why I say that. Public servants in Ottawa and members of the armed forces total 412,000. That is, the number of Canadians directly employed by the federal government. It represents 4.4 per cent of the country's employed labour force. Therefore, his figures are wrong by ten times the actual amount. There are 346,000 provincial public servants and 267,000 municipal employees. If they are included, the total number of government employees is 1,025,000—11 per cent of the total number of employees in Canada, not 43 per cent.

There are approximately 637,000 employees in the hospital and welfare sector, and in the educational sector—such as school teachers—there are 662,000 employees. These are not direct employees of the federal government. However, even if we included those figures in the number of employees of the three levels of government, the total is something over two million, which is about 25 per cent of the employed labour force in Canada.

● (1150)

What happened to the Crown corporations? Employed in that field amounted to 270,939. That brings us up to 28 per cent, or 2,595,000. In other words, that criticism of the federal government was ten times wrong. If the hon. member wants to be nasty and include all governments, national and provincial, and all the agencies which work for the government, he is still wrong: Even in the totals we supplied he has doubled the figure. I believe we are entitled to fair criticism. We should not hear any more of that type of nonsense.

It is rather interesting to note that for the last 10 or 15 years our gross national product has been increasing at the rate of about 5.5 per cent. Canada's growth performance is better than that of the majority of OECD countries including West Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States. In 1974, while real growth contracted by 2.1 per cent in the United States and by one-tenth of 1 per cent in the OECD as a whole, the GNP in Canada rose by 2.8 per cent. In the recession of 1975 only five OECD countries were expected to achieve any degree of real growth and the GNP was forecast to decline by 2 per cent or more in France, the United Kingdom and West Germany. In Canada, the GNP was expected to fall by only 1 per cent. But instead of experiencing a decline of 1 per cent, we increased the GNP by 0.2 per cent. In fact, we were the only country in that small group of countries to experience an increase.

Hon. members who consider the figures will realize there is a great deal of misinformation being given to the Canadian people. I deplore the misinformation which emanates from the opposition and from the media.

An hon. Member: You are paranoid, doctor.

Mr. Railton: No. That is a very difficult diagnosis for a member on the back benches over there to make. Our living standard is the third best in the whole world. For a long time we were second only to the United States, but we were edged out recently by Iceland. I do not wish to take up any more time of the House. I realize my speech might have been a little difficult for members on the other side to listen to because I might have sounded partisan. But I am not partisan; I like to regard myself as being fair-minded.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I know there will not be much publicity given to anything I have to say today on Bill C-19, or anything else for that matter, since the news on everybody's mind comes from the province of Quebec. I have been watching the faces of members opposite this morning, as I did last night. They are asking themselves: What happened? In discussing the bill before us, I shall attempt to put forward some ideas hon. members may wish to consider even though they are very few in number over there. I can understand that; the shock to them must be unbelievable.

I intend to show how bills such as C-19 which are so often slipped through the House after a discussion directed to details, such as we have heard this morning, often contain principles of great substance, principles which are somehow lost sight of. If hon. members would read the speech which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) made last Wednesday, and then read the maiden speech of the new member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), I believe they would better understand the significance and the danger of this type of posturing bill. The measure before us is in several parts, but the part which draws my attention—I hope it will draw the attention of all Canadians who believe in one Canada—is clause 15 which simply repeals section 272 of the Railway Act. Mr. Speaker, that clause is a direct attack on the very foundation of the federal system.

Every schoolchild, when they used to teach history in schools, learned that our country became a country because the various colonies across the eastern part of this part of the continent did not want to become absorbed into the country to the south, the United States, and the only way in which it was possible to tie those colonies together in an economic as well as political unity was through the provision of transportation. Those of us who know the history of our country in that early period understand the importance of the intercolonial railway system in bringing those eastern colonies into touch with central Canada and each other. That railway system was the tie which brought those six colonies together: admittedly, Newfoundland did not come in until much later, but that was the tie. Those of us who come from the west and know the history of that part of the country are aware that it was the decision of the government of the day to build a railroad which was uneconomic, marginal and difficult to construct, which brought the four western provinces into confederation.

Any person who is familiar with these Parliament Buildings knows that the largest committee room in the place is the railway committee room. Every member of parliament who comes here should walk into that room, look around in silence, and ask himself why they chose so large a room to be the railway committee room. It was because transportation is the very foundation of this country. That is why the railway committee room is so large. For the great bulk of our history it was the most used room in this entire building. It has not been used very much in recent years because the government has forgotten that Canadian history has been largely concerned with bringing great regions, far from the centre, into one Canada, one nation.

Those words are not just an empty slogan, Mr. Speaker; they are the basis of our political thought, the philosophy which makes the economics of this nation viable. Yet we find in the bill before us, a bill which professes to deal with the saving of money, an attack on the very foundation of our unity. There are, of course, other expressions of the same philosophy, for example, the St. Lawrence Seaway in more recent days. Though it is hardly ever mentioned in the House, the building of that seaway was an effort to make it easier for goods from the eastern part of the country to reach the central regions. For years no one has mentioned the fact that for the great northern regions of Quebec and Ontario and the northern parts of the four western provinces, together with the Yukon and the Arctic Islands, transportation was the key. The people of Canada as a whole have paid, without question, for this northern transportation system. We are still doing that, and I hope will continue to do so.

• (1200)

If we are to hold this country together, it must be recognized by our political leaders in the federal government and each province that transportation and communications are the key. That is how our federal system developed. The key to making the system work was the recognition that wherever one lived, wherever areas were opened up, there would be equal treatment. Basically, Mr. Speaker, it is transportation inequity that forces the westerner to be alienated from the central part of this country. Basically, it is transportation inequity that forces the Atlantic provinces to feel forgotten. Basically, it is transportation inequity and remoteness from communication which make our northern people so hostile to those of us who live in the south. We have built this nation by recognizing that if we want political union, one Canada, we must have economic union. The key to this is transportation, along with harbours, docks, search and rescue and all the other facilities. This has been our history, and it will be our history for many decades to come.

The attack on federalism by the government in this bill, using the excuse of saving money, is not an isolated one. In the last three years, just think of the attacks we have had in this House on the part of the government on the basic foundations of our federal system. No matter what kind of scare campaign you run, Mr. Speaker, you cannot get away from the fact that there is the belief in the minds of the people that this principle which builds our country and makes it strong is being forgotten. Let me give the House an example or two of what makes this seem so devilish. Just three years ago the government introduced the petroleum administration bill which was a direct attack on the wealth of the provinces. The government said that because it represented all the people, it had the right to break the constitution and take ownership and control of the resources in the provinces of this country. I opposed the petroleum administration bill, as did all my colleagues.

When the mines ministers met in December, 1974, nine out of the ten mines ministers of the provinces, led by the mines minister of the province of Quebec, opposed the bill and the minister had to hold it up so they could consult with the provinces whose resources they were stealing. In mentioning that to the House I direct my remarks particularly at members of the Liberal party who, after the results last night, must be wondering what is wrong.

You cannot safely attack the basic principles of this country unless you know what makes the people tick. What makes the people of rich resource provinces like Newfoundland and Quebec angry is that they sense that this government is constantly attacking the powers and taking the wealth of the provinces, trying to centralize them. I do not find any difference on this issue between the Liberals and the NDP; both believe they know better than the people how to run this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilbert: Poor Alvin; he cannot understand the difference.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I love to hear the suckers roar. This is one example, along with this bill, of an attack upon the federal system. Many members have been around here long enough to remember what happened in 1974 when we had a budget in the spring and a budget in the fall. We called them the Turner budgets. The Turner budget in the spring and the Turner budget in the fall were attacks on the basic foundations of our federal system. The government has a majority in this House—but not across the country—and feels it represents all the Canadian people. It feels it has the right to take away the wealth of provincial governments and their people. Sooner or later, Mr. Speaker, when that budget is overturned, it will be safe for Mr. Turner to come back into the House. But until it is, he will not come back because he knows that in those budgets of his of 1974 he attacked the basic economic foundations of all provinces.

I mention these points because this bill pretends to appeal to us to do something that we have to do, namely, reduce government expenditures. But when you read the speech of the Minister of Transport it is apparent this is not just a one-year shot. He knows that if he gets rid of section 272 of the Railway Act he will blast the people east of Montreal, because this bill affects only those east of Montreal. Let me read to hon. members section 272 since it is important not only to the Atlantic provinces but to the whole country:

> (2) For the purpose of encouraging the continued use of the eastern ports for the export of grain and flour,
>
> (a) rates for grain moving in bulk for export to any eastern port from any inland point over any line of a railway company subject to the jurisdiction of parliament shall be maintained at the level of rates applying on the 30th day of November, 1960, to the movement of such grain to eastern ports—

The rates that we set up as a government in 1960 allowed these ports to be used by the railways not only to keep people in the Atlantic provinces at work but to give us access to markets year-round. This founding principle of the economic security of ports east of Montreal is now being attacked in this legislation. They want to repeal section 272, so let me just drive this point home. This bill may be an attempt to pretend that they are cutting back expenses, but it is really part of an over-all program to reduce the power of the provinces and to turn all decision-making over to the government in Ottawa.

If the government was elected to make its own decisions, there could be an argument for it. But the truth is that this government does not run the country. The country is run by a small group of civil servants who seize the decision-making powers in each major department and run the country. They know best and they tell ministers what to say and what to do. I ask all westerners, all people from Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, and all northerners in Ontario, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, to rally to the fact that this attack on the "at and near" rates going to the maritimes is an attack on them all, and I ask them to throw the bill out, and this section in particular.

I have related my remarks to the political situation. It must be abundantly clear that just as once upon a time Saskatchewan and Quebec were the political heartlands of the Liberal party, provinces on which they depended for their massive support to overcome the votes of other provinces and form the government of Canada, today those heartlands are disappearing. The Liberals are pretty well subdued in Saskatchewan and now it looks as if after 90 years of domination in the province of Quebec their heartland there is beginning to shake.

• (1210)

I should like to advise my Liberal friends across the way that Saskatchewan is gone from them, that Quebec is going and it will not be long before they go, too, unless they start taking control of their government. They have the voices of the backbenchers; they can tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what to say and what to think. He will not kick them out. He does not dare. Everybody who has been kicked out comes back. I say to them, "Stand up and express your views."

In 1974 the cattle industry was in trouble. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) asked us to support him in amending the price stabilization act. All parties supported him in the committee. We put it through. Then when the bill went before the cabinet and treasury board, the minister was turned down in respect of the very act he had put through on behalf of all parties, the Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives, the New Democrats and the Créditistes. We know who runs this country. It is not those on the back benches—but the people in the back benches have the chance to stand up. I think their Prime Minister will listen today. He was an angry man last night when he realized that one cannot, by propaganda, fight the whole country. Some people will stand up against that kind of thing.

I say to members opposite, "Put the fear of God in your Prime Minister and speak up for these areas—the northern part of Quebec, the northern part of Ontario, the Atlantic provinces and the far north. Speak up, because this is the basis of our federal system." I do not want to embellish the point any more. I put it before you seriously, Mr. Speaker, that by the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act the government is attacking one of the basic foundations of our federal system. If members opposite cannot hear my voice and are frightened to speak up in front of their Prime Minister, there is not much I can do. But at least I have put forward my views, and I intend—like the hon. member for St. John's West—to continue putting them forward because we on this side of the House do not intend to sit down and let this matter lie.

We have heard from the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) that we are not putting forward ideas. I have gone back over my speeches in the last 15 years in the House. I have laid ideas in the laps of government members. Last December, before the Christmas adjournment, I rose in the House and quietly asked the Prime Minister, in view of the budget and the price and wage controls brought in in October, whether during the recess he would quietly consider the posture the government was taking vis-à-vis the monetary and fiscal situation in this country. The government had brought in wage and price controls and I could see the economy slowing down to a stop and levelling off.

Now we sit on the edge of a precipice and may be going into a lengthy period of recession. The Prime Minister said he would consider that proposal. But then he stood up on December 28 and said we had to have permanent controls because we could not trust the people to make their own decisions. He said we were such a greedy nation that we had to have controls imposed by the elite of the country. I throw that at the House because this is another attempt on my part to remind members opposite that there are proposals on the record.

One can fiddle around with all these little things and get peanuts. What is the cause of inflation? It is caused by the government. This is what embarrasses politicians. We talk about the necessity to cut down on everything. All members had their incomes frozen at $24,000. Aren't we good boys! Yet we have a minister running up and down the country at $750,000 a time to see his constituents rather than ride on Air Canada. I think maybe it is cruel and unnecessary punishment for ministers to have to ride on Air Canada, but at the same time this is what destroys our posture that we are trying to save money.

This bill is another issue which is just a posture. Let me give you a list, Mr. Speaker, of some of the proposals I have put forward in this House. You can look it up if you really want to get at the causes in the western world for this inflation. Let us get interest rates down. Our interest rates in Canada are 4 per cent higher than in the United States because we have a group of economic nitwits who believe it is necessary to have higher interest rates in this country in order to keep money flowing into Canada. What a mythology to impose upon the Canadian people, the greatest saving people in the world!

We must get the interest rates down. That is fundamental in getting at inflation, price and wage controls and this type of legislation. Second, get your land costs down around the cities. Housing costs have gone up, but greater than that has been the unbelievable escalation in the price of land around the cities. If you do get the people who are doing it, you only get half a dozen in each city. Just because they are Liberals does not mean they should dominate the whole country and force prices up. Get your land costs down around the cities. The legislation is in place to do that.

Third, we have tremendously costly universal social welfare programs which cost $18 billion to $20 billion a year. The people want those programs, but common sense and knowledge should tell the government that positive individual incentives should be put into these programs or we will lose them. That is the subject of a speech I have made here on several occasions.

Fourth, in trying to get at the cause of inflation and all these costs, you force men and women in the cities to ask for higher and higher wages in an effort to keep up, and they never manage this. The government should use the knowledge and precedents that are available and end this wasteful labour-management confrontation. Everyone has heard of the theory of productivity and how it is rewarded. Everyone has heard of the portability of pensions and insurance. Everyone has heard of the formula methods of achieving wage settlements. Strikes are as outmoded as the dodo bird. They cost not only billions of dollars but smash the labour man and the businessman at the same time. The knowledge and the precedents are there. Members opposite should not walk into this House and say that we never put forward ideas.

The fifth point I want to mention is that if you want to get at inflation you should use the monetary and fiscal systems of this country to help the economy, and not fight them. It is said that 40 per cent of all revenue of our gross national product goes through government hands. That 40 per cent can be utilized in a way to reinforce the other 60 per cent and we would have a 100 per cent economy, or we could use that 40 per cent of government financial control, to work against the economy and reduce the net to less than 60 per cent. There are all sorts of proposals. The Porter royal commission recommended several. No one pays any attention to the Porter royal commission. That report was published in 1964. Some members think it is a dirty book. That is wrong, because if it was a dirty book they would all read it. Look at the proposals there. I quoted them to the Prime Minister in the House on one occasion. There was no reaction.

Members opposite are not interested in economics. All they are interested in are these posturing devices of exposing themselves on every occasion so that they will be seen, rather than getting at the economic problems. If they have not learned any lesson from yesterday, they should have. A government goes along trying to amaze its people by posing as their great defenders, becomes involved in discussions which arouse the emotions of the people, and then takes away their civil liberties that government will be defeated. We still cannot get away from the fundamental fact that what changed that government in Quebec was the failure to deal with economic matters. You cannot ask people to accept a low level of living year after year and decade after decade without their asking themselves whether they could not have a government of the people who sometimes gave them economic well-being. So I suggest that the government should use the economic and fiscal system to work with the economy, instead of against it.

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker, I think I have made my point, which is that no one in any party in the House is opposed to restraints on superfluous spending, but when the government slips into this bill a proposal which undermines the basic foundation of our federal system, the pledge made 109 years ago and renewed by government after government of all political stripes since that time, a pledge with regard to transportation and communication which is now attacked by this government, and when we see the attack in 1974 on the ownership of resources which are in the hands of the provinces, an impression is created across the country that the government is not really concerned with helping the people and the provinces but is only concerned with one thing, that is, control over and restriction of the minds and pocketbooks of the people.

Any parliament will support reasonable proposals to reduce the spending of money, but not when the government attacks one of the basic agreements that we have made with the people east of Montreal in the "at and east" rates. Every government has respected this agreement since then, but now we see the government sneaking in a clause to section 272 of the Railway Act, and this we cannot support. I hope you Liberal backbenchers opposite rally in caucus and tell your Prime Minister to take that nonsense out of the bill.

We hear all these little arguments about user-pay. If it could be done by a person who paid all the time, it would be different. If the government wants our support in reducing expenditures, let it not attack our federal system. We believe in Canada, we believe in our nation, and we believe that people in all parts of our country should have an equal right to opportunities. When you destroy that for the Atlantic provinces, you destroy it for the west also. Westerners know that if you take out that section 272, our Crowsnest pass rates will go next and subsidization of the north will go after that. If you look at the price of things in towns such as Thunder Bay and Kenora, you will know what I am talking about. These people take a heck of a beating because we have a government which thinks of public relations and of getting control into the hands of a few civil servants here in Ottawa, rather than of the interest of the people. That is not why we are here. For a rich country like Canada, which is coming out of a recession, to be sent back into it by the stupidity of the advisers of this government is plain stupid and should not be tolerated.

If I were a backbencher over there, I would be yelling my head off, not just on issues of language, which are important, but also on economic issues. Tell your Prime Minister, who is not a stupid man, to take control and tell his Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to read and find out the facts, and to show some leadership, instead of surrendering to this tendency whereby they think they have everything in their hands because they know best. It is not only the dairy farmers and the chicken farmers who get it. They are taking every taxpayer in the country and wringing him and her like a wet cloth. Let us stand up as parliamentarians and speak up for the concept that every person in Canada deserves an equal opportunity. If you take out section 272 of the Railway Act, you will know what trouble is.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope that today, for the first time in a long time, members of the old-line parties are in a mood to listen.

Mr. Paproski: Are you taking credit for the victory?

Mr. Benjamin: I hope that a lesson has been learned, but I note there are only 13 members on the government side, which would indicate they are still losers. I am glad to see what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) is here. However, I am sorry the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is not here.

An hon. Member: "Jet" Lang!

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is here. He has his version of "at and east" rates. I was interested to listen to the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I agree with some the things he had to say, but I disagree with the way he wants to do it, because it is no different from the way the Liberals want to do it. He still believes in free enterprise which is neither free nor enterprising. He still believes you should have competition in transportation across Canada, as do the Liberals. He even believes that our modes of transportation should show a profit, as do the Liberals, when in fact no mode of transportation has ever shown a profit without public subsidization. I wish the hon. member would add one additional step—which would have brought him to the 1980s instead of the 1880s—and would agree that all modes of transportation are an essential public service and a public utility, and that goods, services and people should be treated fairly in Canada no matter where they are located.

This bill is a typical old-line party, free enterprise attack on those who do not cause inflation. It is a typical failure to show restraint in areas where they could show restraint without hurting the country and hurting the low and middle income families, without hurting primary industry and without hurting regions of Canada that are located somewhere other than south of North Bay between Windsor and Quebec City. In this bill, the government is even attempting to hurt people in that area for the sake of saving a paltry $11 million.

The government did not allow the indexing of family allowances last year on the premise, I suppose, that these young families with two, three or more children somehow or other cause inflation. The removal of the indexing of family allowances in 1976 cost Canadian families about $230 million. Why the government should stop this transfer of income to families is unknown and does not make economic sense. In fact, the government's own economic review in April of this year states:

There is no doubt that the strength and timeliness of the income support given to Canadians between November, 1974, and June, 1975, were among the most important factors in the milder recession experienced in Canada compared to the United States.

It went on to say:

Personal expenditures on goods and services were a major source of sustaining strength during the cyclical decline and a further support during 1975.

The government chose to rob Canadian families of $230 million in 1976 in the name of so-called fiscal restraint. Why did they not attack those who cause inflation? Why does not the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), for example, suggest that the president of Massey Ferguson, whose income is now in the order of $330,000 a year, be required to show some restraint? Why was his last year's increase not taxed away, instead of taking away a few dollars a month from families? The family allowance with full indexing for the high and upper middle income families should be taxed away through income tax. There is no real cost to the taxpayer and there is no real increase in inflation when family allowances are indexed. But the old line parties still attack people. They have not changed. They promise to take money from the rich and votes from the poor, and then they promise to protect them from each other.

● (1230)

I want to get to the matter of freight rates and make reference to a remark of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. I do not recall his exact words, but he said something about the NDP and the Liberals being the same. I am not sure exactly what he meant.

Mr. Brisco: Look at the voting record.

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend says, "Look at the voting record". I remind him that all the Tories present voted with the Liberals against all grains being under the Canadian Wheat Board. If that is not an unholy partnership in bed, I have never seen one.

I would like to give two examples of the betrayal of Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Canada by the Grits and the Tories. They fundamentally agree in principle. There is no basic difference between them on how to order the economy of this country in the area of transportation when it comes to passenger trains. The minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) says he is going to revitalize and improve the passenger trains' service by reducing their number. I do not know how he can do that, but that is what he says. Then I will be darned if the Tories didn't agree with him. The Tory transportation critic appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and said that we should reduce the service to one transcontinental passenger train, although he would run it over a slightly different route. He left out the riding of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I am sure the folks at Jasper, Edson and Hinton will be glad to hear that.

The Tories agree with the Minister of Transport that there should be only one transcontinental passenger train and inland terminals, an item of economic exploitation which will mean the death of scores of towns and villages in the prairie provinces which would otherwise be viable. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and the minister of agriculture of the Tory government in Edmonton agreed that we should have inland terminals. They not only agreed that we should have them, but also that they should receive incentives. So Tories agree with Liberals on inland terminals. In fact, they even want to help outfits like the Cargill Grain Company.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain had best be careful. Let us look at the Crowsnest rate, the statutory grain rate. By golly, hon. members of the opposition have fought that battle for many years in this place. I want to give credit to a former member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale for his work with regard to rapeseed and rapeseed products, as well as his predecessor, a CCF member from the same riding, who led that fight, and a former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who arranged that rapeseed and rapeseed products would be under the statutory rates. Now the Minister of Transport arranges that, after all the appeals and hearings, the cabinet's decision is that the railroads will receive compensatory rates on rapeseed products.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): You could call that "statutory rape rates."

Mr. Benjamin: That is to be expected, but I will be darned if the Conservative minister of agriculture in Alberta does not agree that the compensatory rates on rapeseed products should apply, and not the statutory rates. I warn the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that he had better be looking over his shoulder at who is supporting the Liberals and who is agreeing with the Minister of Transport.

As I mentioned, the Conservatives chose to get into bed with the Liberals on the matter of all grains being under the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and they screamed at the NDP saying that it is undemocratic and that it will try to force it down the farmers' throats. Far from that, in fact if my hon. friends in the Liberal and Tory parties would like to attend the National Farmers' Union convention in Edmonton next month, or the Saskatchewan, Alberta or Manitoba wheat pool conventions, they will find that they have had their plebiscite many times in forty years. The overwhelming majority of grain producers have said time and time again at their subdistrict meetings and at their annual conventions that that is what they want. It has been an article of faith with the overwhelming majority of grain producers since the early 1930s. The plebiscite has been held many times, and I suggest that hon. gentlemen who belong to the Liberal and Tory parties should wake up and quit living together in the 1890s when it comes to farm grains being under the Canadian Wheat Board and orderly marketing for any farm product. Farmers who produce other kinds of agricultural products have repeatedly asked for orderly marketing, but the Grits and Tories cling to 1890 concepts of the free and open market. It is free and open for middlemen and end retailers, but not for primary producers.

Let me turn now to clause 15 of the bill which proposes to repeal section 272 of the Railway Act. In a country like ours, with a large geography, a diverse and often harsh climate, and a population which is widely scattered, much of it isolated, we submit that the nation as a whole has to share in the cost of all modes of transportation. Canada is about the only country left in the world in which this does not happen. Even the United States now recognizes this to some degree. But in the rest of the world transportation costs are shared because it is an essential public service; it is something everyone has to use. Trying to implement a concept of user-pays is not only lunacy but—and I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain here—it will also lead to more break-up in this country. It will lead to more disparity, unequal treatment and discrimination.

Let us remember that in the main, grain is produced in the three prairie provinces. It is produced far away from the people who buy most of it. It is produced far away from seaports and inland ports, and that puts our country at a disadvantage compared with the United States, Argentina or Australia where most of the grain production takes place near a sea coast or near an inland waterway. They have the benefits of much denser populations lower transportation costs and certainly shorter distances. However, even where they have the same or longer distances, those nations as a whole share those costs and they are not just laid on the backs of primary producers or processors of those primary products.

The "at and east" rates are described in the legislation and the purpose of the subsidy is to encourage continued use of the eastern ports of Halifax, Saint John, West Saint John, Montreal and any of the ports on the St. Lawrence River east of Montreal for the export of grain and flour. The subsidy applies to rail shipments only. It applies to shipments of grain from railway points along Georgian Bay—I hope hon. members who hold constituencies along Georgian Bay will have a chat with the Minister of Transport—along Lake Huron and east of Prescott but not including Prescott. That is, from those points to eastern port that I mentioned earlier. In the case, of flour, it applies to shipments from any point in Canada east of Thunder Bay to eastern points in the Atlantic provinces; flour from western Canada goes to Thunder Bay under the Crowsnest or statutory rates.

● (1240)

The legislation requires the Canadian Transport Commission from time to time to determine the level of rates compensatory to the railway companies. I do not mind if they do that, Mr. Speaker, provided they do not leave the cost of the compensatory rates on the grain producers and the milling industry. That cost should be shared by the whole country. If we are to compete in selling grain and flour, and if we are able to pay a good price that will ensure those sales, we have to share the cost of transport. This is necessary in a country with our kind of geography. The actual rates paid by shippers of grain and flour is based, in the case of bulk grain, on the rate which was in effect on November 30, 1960, and in the case of flour the rate in effect on September 30, 1966.

While there has been no public announcement of the government's intention in regard to the "at and east" rates in December, 1975, the then president of the Treasury Board suggested in the House that elimination of the subsidy was a possibility. The Canadian National Millers' Association asked the Minister of Transport for a statement of government intent and received a telegram from him dated January 13, 1976, in which he finally said that the government intends to abolish the "at and east" subsidy effective April 1, 1976. The bill says that repeal of section 272 is effective the day the bill passes. At least that would save the farmers and the millers some money for several months. The telegram continued:

I would therefore suggest that your price in upcoming negotiations with Exportkleb for sale of flour make consideration for the inclusion of freight rates at compensatory levels.

It appears that abolition of the subsidy can be done only by amendment of the Railway Act, and the government has finally brought in this amendment. But what will be the effect of the removal of the subsidy, Mr. Speaker? On flour milled in western Canada, shipped to Thunder Bay at statutory rates and then on domestic rates to export ports on the lower St. Lawrence and Atlantic, if exported from Montreal the subsidy amounts to 39.15 cents per hundred pounds, and if exported from Halifax 69.35 cents per hundred pounds. On flour milled in Ontario and shipped from railway points along Georgian Bay, Lake Huron and Prescott, if exported from Montreal but milled in Bay ports the subsidy is 42.25 cents per hundred pounds; if milled in inland western Ontario, 52.65 cents per hundred pounds; if exported from Halifax but milled in the Bay ports, the subsidy is 71.15 cents per hundred pounds; and if milled in inland western Ontario and exported from Halifax, it is 81.55 cents per one hundred pounds. With respect to wheat shipped from Bay ports, Georgian Bay and Prescott, if exported from Montreal the subsidy is 35.58 cents per hundred pounds, and if exported from Halifax the subsidy is 51.75 cents per hundred pounds. The loss of these subsidies would make Canadian flour shipped during the winter from eastern ports to Russia, Caribbean area countries and others, non-competitive with flour from United States. It would have a similar effect on grain which is shipped by rail from Thunder Bay or the Bay ports during the winter when navigation on the St. Lawrence Seaway is closed.

Let me quote now from a letter sent to the Minister of Transport on February 16 by the Canadian National Millers' Association, as follows:

This policy change has come without warning to the flour milling industry and, it would appear, without careful analysis as to the impact this action will have on overseas flour/grain sales, employment and economic activity both in the milling industry and in the ports concerned, or on government revenues and expenditures. It is our view that a cost/benefit analysis will prove that the subsidy and the "hold down" are financially and socially sound and should be continued.

In my communications with you prior to going to Moscow on January 15, I indicated we would likely experience difficulty in negotiations due to the potential new freight factor. The representatives of Exportkleb found it difficult to understand why Canada could not sell at a firm price for calendar year 1976. As anticipated, they absolutely refused to close the contract. So, while they have indicated a requirement for 375,000 tons of Canadian flour during 1976 they have insisted on new negotiations should we need to adjust the current prices for additional freight costs.

The U.S.S.R. representatives stated that Canada is no longer competitive in world markets and that further price increases will require them to look for alternative suppliers. Those of us who have negotiated with Exportkleb over the years judge this situation as serious and that our further business with them is definitely in jeopardy.

Eliminating the subsidy and the "hold down" will visit disaster upon Canadian millers and damage a substantial export market for Canadian wheat in the form of flour. We cannot believe that these and other foreseeable consequences are in the public interest.

We cannot understand how this change can be of any benefit to Canada other than by achieving a short term but ultimately illusory reduction in government expenditures.

In an attempt to examine the impact of this policy change we are enclosing a submission on the subject. We urge you to give this matter very close consideration.

In spite of the evidence that this places Canada's flour exports to the U.S.S.R., the Caribbean and a few other places in jeopardy, the Minister of Transport and this insensitive government who up until last night refused to listen, still insist on including repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act in this legislation. The least they could do is withdraw that clause. Their saving will be $11 million, but if they examine the other side of the coin the cost will be many times that.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, a user-pay concept is not feasible in a country like ours. It is only feasible in a country with densely settled population, a compact geography and uniformity of distribution, but in a country with a large geography and a harsh climate, you cannot get away with it. It simply cannot, and does not, apply in a country like Canada. For us to be able to deliver our primary products and processed primary products in competition with the United States, Argentina, Australia or the European Economic Community, we must share the costs of transportation over the whole country. The "at and east" rates did that: maybe not as well as it should be done, but they made a contribution toward sharing the cost and putting Canada in a position to have a viable milling industry. I hope the hon. member for Assiniboia will sit down with Mr. Sarasen in Saskatoon—

Mr. Goodale: I have.

Mr. Benjamin: Well, he was not listening so I suggest the hon. member should go back and discuss it with him again, especially after what occurred yesterday. Maybe now the hon. member's hearing will be a little more sensitive. I have received correspondence from Mr. Sarasen and I think I understand him. I have had conversations with him. I agree with him. I do not agree with the hon. member for Assiniboia and the government.

● (1250)

The removal of the "at and east" rates, if you are talking in terms of restraint by the federal government, is sheer window-dressing at best, and outrageous discrimination at worst. I know the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) and other Tories are interested in helping the inland terminals. They have visions of unit trains loading up at the Cargill terminal or at Rosetown and all 100 cars of each train rushing through almost non-stop to Halifax. They have that vision. They want the grain to be hauled at a compensatory rate for which grain producers will pay. It will be done at the expense of the milling industry. But, of course, Mr. Speaker, according to the Liberals and Tories that is free enterprise. They believe in that nonsense. They have been governing this country for about 110 years and the disparities and discrimination in Atlantic Canada and the Prairie provinces continue. It does not matter which one of those two parties is in power.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It seems as if they have governed this country for 1,000 years, not 110.

Mr. Benjamin: It has made no difference at all. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain spoke in glowing terms of what he and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) tried to do when they were in government in the 1960s. Mr. Speaker, they had the golden opportunity of the century to change all these things, and they blew it. Their government fell apart and they ran around stabbing one another in the back. The boys who are really running the Tory party in central Canada got their own way again. The same thing is happening today.

Mr. Paproski: Where?

Mr. Benjamin: It is happening right now.

Mr. Paproski: Name one example.

Mr. Benjamin: I will tell my hon. friend, if he wants to know. When the Tory minister of agriculture in Alberta says that rapeseed products should not be under the Crowsnest Pass rates, that is an example occurring right now. When the Tory transport critic in the House of Commons says that we should, have only one transcontinental passenger train, that is an example occurring right now. When the Tories say that feed grains should be on the open market, and they even write a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) endorsing the policy of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), that is an example occurring right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: Come off it.

Mr. Benjamin: When the Tories believe that family allowances should come under the means test, that is an example happening right now. I don't want to hear any more nonsense from the Tories, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: Hogwash!

Mr. Benjamin: We have a list of Tory proposals as long as your arm, Mr. Speaker. They are even worse than the Liberals, if you can believe it, and that's saying something. It means that they are really working at it.

Mr. Towers: Oh, boy, you people are really scared of the Tories.

Mr. Paproski: Why are you laughing, Benjamin? What do you think is so funny?

Mr. Brisco: Remember what happened in British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who has the floor?

Mr. Goodale: Who is in charge over there?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I know I touch a tender nerve when I show there is little difference between Grits and Tories. In Saskatchewan the other day a Grit switched over and joined the Tories without any difficulty, ethical, moral or conscience. He said on television that it was an opportunity. The interviewer did not have to mention the word "opportunism." The whole operation was designed to protect his own backside, and to hell with his party. Of course, that's the kind of thing that happens among the Grits and Tories. They have little difficulty making such switches back and forth. If they are proud of that, fine; that is their problem.

Mr. Brisco: Tell us what Barrett did to Strachan in British Columbia.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, not only are we prepared not to support this legislation; we are prepared to hold it up as long as we possibly can, or at least until clause 15 of the bill is deleted. We want a commitment from the minister or the parliamentary secretary that the government will not do away with the "at and east" rates. If the government is not prepared to do that, I am afraid it will be some time before the bill passes, if it ever passes. This is not restraint, Mr. Speaker; this is shifting costs far greater than the amount of the subsidy. It is shifting costs on to the shoulders of the milling association and the grain producers, on to the shoulders of workers and operators in the ports of the Great Lakes, the lower St. Lawrence and the Atlantic and that is all.

Actually, the government's proposal will result in costs greater than the amount of the subsidy being so shifted. I know the hon. member opposite is thinking about the $9 million in the first year which the government proposes to give the milling industry and the phasing out of help over five years. Mr. Speaker, you do not consider the milling of flour and the export of wheat from Atlantic ports merely within a five-year time-frame. You think about such matters in terms of 50 or 100 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, this is some big deal! The government is merely helping the milling industry to take that much longer to go broke and lose its export market. It is like chopping a dog's tail off an inch at a time instead of doing it in one clean motion. This is nothing less but an attempt to buy off the milling industry and the people working in it, and it is a damned cheapskate attempt to buy them off. You cannot soften the blow with that kind of nonsense.

Wharves

Mr. Speaker, the $11 million-odd which the government provides is not really a subsidy. It represents a sharing of costs by the nation as a whole. By providing the money, the government is playing its proper role in transportation. It is making sure that growers and processors in western Canada and handlers in the Atlantic ports can compete with overseas millers and have equal access to our own markets in central Canada. If the Minister of Transport, with the support of the hon. member for Assiniboia, gets his way I suppose we can look for flour mills in downtown Toronto and Montreal because no doubt you can make money there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at two o'clock.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

WHARVES

POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important question of pressing necessity.

Considering that urgent repairs are needed to the St. Lawrence wharves used as means of communication and that the lack of maintenance is due to the lengthy negotiations between Ottawa and Quebec over the transfer of those wharves to Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House urge the government to intensify its negotiations with the new Quebec government to settle the matter without delay and that the Minister of Transport be asked to report to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent ?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE ECONOMIC STABILITY IN QUEBEC—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN DATE OF CONFERENCE OF PREMIERS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and I want to preface it by noting, as, I think is agreed by all parties in the House, that the essence of yesterday's election in Quebec was that the people of that province voted according to democratic principles to change the government of their province. But following appeals last night by the leader of the Prime Minister's party in Quebec for the economic milieu to remain calm, can the right hon. gentleman advise the House what steps he has taken or intends to take to make sure that this important message reaches investors in Canada or abroad?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure the statement I made last night, and which I would willingly repeat today, is a clear indication that this government is dedicated to an inseparable Canada, a Canada which is indivisible. And we have only one mandate: it is to govern the whole country, including Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Whatever financial concerns the Leader of the Opposition may be referring to should know that this will continue to be our mandate and that we do not intend to negotiate any form of separatism with any province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I take it, then, that the Prime Minister is not planning to take, or has not taken, any special steps to try to deal with the concern about investment which was expressed last night by the leader of his party in the province of Quebec. If he should decide that it is necessary, on behalf of his government, to take any action of that kind, will he make the nature of that action known to the House? In the meantime, can he advise us whether, in the light of the change in the government of Quebec, there is any intention to revise the timing of the meeting of first ministers planned for next month?

Mr. Trudeau: As to the first part of the question, I believe the best way of making sure that no panic reaction takes place is to refrain from speculating upon it or asking hypothetical questions as the Leader of the Opposition has just done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I have stated the basis on which the federal government will operate. As far as the second part of the question is concerned, I have already written, as is customary, to the premier-elect indicating we are planning to go ahead with the conference in mid-December but that I would be writing to him, as I shall be writing to the other first ministers, to discuss the precise agenda.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Clark: I simply wish to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the concern expressed was expressed by the leader of his party in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If the Prime Minister considers it hypothetical, he should perhaps speak to the leader of his party in Quebec.

Mr. Fairweather: Or tell Lalonde to speak to Bronfman.

Mr. Clark: Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to take the initiative by meeting with the new prime minister of Quebec prior to the meeting of the heads of government?

• (1410)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I failed to get the second part of the question; it seemed to be a repetition of the first as far as I heard it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In respect of the repetition, the question was rather definitive. It was whether it was the intention of the Prime Minister to have a special meeting with the premier-elect of the province of Quebec prior to the prime minister's conference in December.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not given that any active consideration yet, but if the premier wishes to meet with me I will, of course, be open to meet with him on the basis I have just stated. As far as the preface to the question is concerned, I did not realize that it was a justification for the Leader of the Opposition to be quoting the person he calls "the leader of my party in Quebec". Obviously, he has no leader of his party in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question also for the Prime Minister. Given the fact that the Liberal government in the province of Quebec was defeated precisely for ignoring basic, real problems like the 10 per cent unemployment level in that province, and given the fact that the national government here in Ottawa has been following precisely the same kinds of policies at the national level, I would ask the Prime Minister whether this election and its real and serious implications have caused him and his colleagues overnight to rethink the unemployment situation in particular, in such a way that the Prime Minister will now assure the House that the government will bring before the House a budget prior to Christmas announcing a full employment program.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not admit the premises of the question. If they were correct, it would be difficult to explain why the hon. member's party in Quebec did not do any better than it did. Surely, he must be communicating with the NDP members in Quebec.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST THAT QUESTION OF FULL EMPLOYMENT BE PUT ON AGENDA OF PREMIERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): It is precisely that attitude, Mr. Speaker, that defeated a man named Bourassa. You have got two years to go, maybe. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, since unemployment has been running nationally at more than 7 per cent for more than 19 months and it is over 10 per cent in the province of Quebec, and since we have a first ministers' conference scheduled for early December, whether he would get in touch with the premiers, including the new premier of the province of Quebec who does want to do something about the real problems of the people in his province, and put on the agenda for that conference a discussion of full employment in which the Prime Minister would show some leadership and try and get the support of all the premiers to deal with this pressing issue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have just indicated a couple of answers back that I would be communicating with the provinces to learn what items they wanted to see on the agenda. Obviously, in our minds there is one item, which will be the economy, and I am very glad that the hon. member is beginning to realize the importance of that item too.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBILITY OF SPECIAL MEASURES TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must say the Prime Minister's condescension is touching. I address my supplementary to the finance minister. Given the fact that his own officials have forecast a level of job creation during the coming winter months which is the lowest in ten years, would the finance minister now tell the House whether he has reconsidered the answers he has given in the House in the past couple of weeks, and will be prepared to bring before the House special measures which will ensure a higher rate of job creation in the coming winter months, a winter which will see the highest level of unemployment since the great depression in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the underlying facts of the Canadian economic situation remain the same today as they have for many weeks. We have, and must have, a concern about the rate of inflation in Canada which over any period of time will be far more damaging to job creation in Canada than any of the other difficulties we face. The leader of the New Democratic Party shakes his head. He presumably is not concerned about inflation but for this government it remains a primary concern.

I said last week and repeated this week, that indeed in dealing with the inflation problem in Canada we have a very narrow margin within which we could take additional spending measures or make taxation changes given the importance of overcoming inflation. That continues to be the reality. My colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and other colleagues and I have been analyzing the various ways in which specific programs may be directed to those specific members of the work force who have been in a particularly difficult situation in respect of employment. But I am not proposing at this time general economic measures which might work against the over-all policy of the government against inflation.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED EFFORTS OF COMMISSION TO DISQUALIFY BENEFICIARIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Considering that an increasing number of applicants are declared ineligible by Unemployment Insurance Commission officials, pursuant to sections 25(a) and (b) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and Regulations 164 and 166 of this act, although those applicants are actively seeking employment, would the minister advise the House whether or not special instructions were given to the officials for stricter enforcement of the law and its regulations in view of making as many applicants as possible ineligible for benefits?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question.

Would the minister inform the House whether he deems it reasonable to turn down an applicant who has been trying to find a job but did not succeed because employment is getting increasingly scarce?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked for an opinion; it is not easy to answer this question in the House.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORECAST OF RATE OF GROWTH AND BUDGETARY DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT'S SUCCESS IN CURTAILING SPENDING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Minister of Finance. Now that we have last week's disappointing statistics on current unemployment which is running high across the land, and indeed ranges between 10.1 per cent in Quebec to 13.9 per cent in Newfoundland, and also have rising prices, in spite of the minister's comment that inflation is still his number one priority, would the minister indicate if he still sticks to his budgetary forecast of a 5 per cent real growth in the economy this year or may we anticipate bad news on that front as well?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the experience in Canada will very likely parallel the experience in the rest of the OECD nations; that is to say, the levels of growth hoped for in the fourth quarter of this year may well not be attained.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again addressed to the Minister of Finance. As the economy stagnates as the minister indicated in the current quarter, and with the budgetary deficit for the first half of the fiscal year reaching $3.3 billion, 50 per cent higher than the same period last year, would the minister indicate if he holds to his May budget forecast of a $5 billion budgetary deficit or does he believe the trend shown in the first half of this year and into the third quarter will carry on and that there will be a budgetary deficit in 1977 of over $6 billion, the highest in our history?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the minister has said that inflation is still his number one priority and, based on the finance department figures in the first six months, it would appear that federal spending may be up as much as 16 per cent or 17 per cent this year, would the minister indicate if he expects federal spending increases will taper off in the balance of the year so that the minister's commitment to a 14 per cent ceiling on federal spending increases will be met or may we expect federal government spending will be higher than the 14 per cent ceiling the government undertook to achieve in the May period?

● (1420)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we anticipate being able to keep expenditures within the goal or framework set out in the budget.

[Mr. Cullen.]

PUBLIC WORKS

PROPOSED METHOD FOR SHOWING PROPERTY COSTS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In his opening speech to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance he stated that alternative methods for recording and displaying real property costs to departments will be adopted, instead of the charging for services concept, which until now has only been talked about. What method, other than the charging for services concept or the method employed, does the minister intend to use?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): As I indicated at that same meeting of the Senate committee, my personal inclination was to use "charge for services". I think that is still the most valid principle to pursue.

* * *

FISHERIES

METHOD OF SELLING PRODUCTS IN EXPORT MARKET—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO IMPROVE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Is it his intention to establish single desk selling for Canadian fish products abroad, as hinted in press reports of the statement he made in Sydney, Nova Scotia, yesterday?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the report referred to single desk selling, it is erroneous. What I said was that the Canadian industry, like our main competitors, should move to the concentration of our efforts in the foreign markets instead of competing against each other in export markets.

Mr. McGrath: May I preface my question by saying that I support the minister's intentions. Could he perhaps expand on what role he sees for the federal government in rationalizing this highly competitive situation which, in many cases, is hurting our exports?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I do not know what the hon. member describes as "highly competitive". Surely, one of the reasons that in many cases we are price takers instead of price setters in the export market is the competition we talked about, that is competing among ourselves. The federal role is to encourage by voluntary means. I hope that the industry will see the wisdom of this. At present I do not envisage introduction of legislation in this area but I hope that the industry will encourage us to do so when they see the possible benefits.

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the interest we hold for the representation of those ridings without members in the House, and since our organizers—particularly in Quebec—have been quite well trained for the last five or six weeks, could the Prime Minister tell the House when he will announce the holding of by-elections, because I think this moment is quite appropriate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intend to announce that date in the House.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED PAYMENT TO OBTAIN LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Because it is my duty both as a Quebecer and as a member of parliament to defend my fellow citizens, and in view of the fact that a Canadian individual of Portuguese origin anxious to obtain landed immigrant status has been forced to pay $150 for some formalities to be filled on his behalf by the Liberal representative for Montreal-Saint-Louis in the Quebec National Assembly, can the minister advise the House whether such action is acceptable on the part of either a provincial or federal elected representative and also whether he intends to investigate this matter in view of the large number of people who have been victimized in this way and about whom I shall let him know as soon as I am in possession of the documented evidence?

[English]

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I will be happy to receive the information which the hon. member has indicated he will provide and I will turn it over to my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, if such action is in fact taking place.

* * *

ENERGY

DECISION ON REFINERY FOR ELDORADO NUCLEAR AT PORT GRANBY—REASON COMPANY TAKING UP OPTIONS ON LAND

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister inform us whether there has yet been a ministerial or government decision with regard to the request that the new refinery of Eldorado Nuclear be built at Port Granby, Ontario, which is just outside Port Hope? If that decision has been made, will the minister tell us what the decision is, and if the decision has not been made, will he tell us why not?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member always tries to make his questions very simple with "if not, why not", and so forth.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A simple minister; that's why.

Mr. Gillespie: It is never quite as simple as the hon. member would like it to be. The hon. member must know that there are a number of agencies which would have to approve any new plant in the Port Granby area. I refer to the local authorities with respect to zoning, the provincial government with respect to health and the environment, the federal government with respect to health and environment and the Atomic Energy Control Board and approval with respect to the question of the capital budget of Eldorado itself. Against that background it is quite clear that the approval of all of these bodies has not as yet been obtained nor have applications been made to all of them. The answer is that no approval has yet been given.

If I understood correctly, the second part of the question was with respect to waste management. I think the hon. member implied this. The federal government will be taking steps to provide for a permanent waste management facility in that area.

Mr. Lawrence: I gather from that that the ministerial decision has not yet been made. If that is so, I wonder why this Crown agency, for which the minister is responsible, is now very actively taking up options on the land and in effect is buying the land needed for the refinery. If the Crown agency does not believe the minister has made the decision, why is it buying the land for the refinery today?

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member had listened to the last part of my answer, I think he would have found the answer to that question. The reason is that under its terms of reference the corporation is perfectly free to make an acquisition and to exercise an option for the purchase of land. It is under very stringent constraint orders from the Atomic Energy Control Board to provide a permanent waste management facility with the existing waste management facility at Port Granby. The corporation has exercised its option, which is perfectly legal.

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST FOR ATTENDANCE OF FORMER CHIEF STATISTICIAN, DR. OSTRY, AT COMMITTEE HEARING

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which arises out of an answer he gave to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Central Nova. The minister indicated his willingness to bring the matter of Statistics Canada before a committee of the House, and he said he would also be willing to have Dr. Kirkham come forward and answer all questions. Aside from the question of the appropriateness of that forum, which is another matter, since Dr. Kirkham was not the chief statistician during the time these alleged questionable practices took place—and perhaps his testimony alone might not be sufficient—would the minister undertake that if the committee requests it, he would use his good offices to ensure that the committee could have the attendance of Dr. Sylvia Ostry, who was in fact the chief statistician at the time these alleged matters took place?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think that Dr. Kirkham will be able to satisfy the committee's curiosity, because the record is quite clear, and also that hon. members will be satisfied with his answers. Should Dr. Kirkham be unable to make his points clearly enough, we might then examine the suggestion made by the hon. member; in view of the circumstances, however, I feel that it is the person in charge who should answer for the department.

* * *

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REDUCTION IN PENSION OF CONSTABLE HALE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister aware of the matter of ex-RCMP constable Eugene Hale, whose disability pension was cut back from 100 per cent to 20 per cent because he was taken from hospital to his home to live out the final days of his life, and if so, will he now intervene to correct this cruel cutback and also move to change the Canadian Pension Commission regulations so that this situation will never again arise?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will take very careful note of the comments and recommendations of the hon. member and have my department look immediately into rectifying any injustice or error which may have occurred. I should like an opportunity to check the facts fully before making a final decision.

* * *

● (1430)

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

ALLEGATION BELL CANADA RETAINING AS PROFIT PART OF FUNDS ALLOWED FOR LABOUR COSTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that members of the Communications Workers Union of Canada have been attempting to negotiate a new contract with the Bell Telephone Company for over a year now, and in view of the fact that this company, Canada's richest and largest communications corporation, received a rate increase last fall, approved by cabinet, which included provisions for a labour cost increase of $80 million, what personal intervention is the minister prepared to take to prevent Bell Canada from keeping as a windfall profit, up to $52 million of the $80 million which was approved for increased labour costs, by hiding behind the anti-inflation guidelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be advisable for the Minister of Finance to become involved in the negotiations in that labour contract and it would not be my intention to do so. It is, of course, a matter for the parties involved to negotiate their collective agreement. We have heard a lot of discussion about free collective bargaining in recent months. The hon. member seems to be saying the Minister of Finance should take it over; I do not propose to do that.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

LENGTH OF TIME NECESSARY TO APPROVE RATE INCREASE FOR BELL CANADA

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that it took Bell Canada only two months to negotiate and get approval from the CTC and cabinet for their last rate increase of $102 million, can the minister assure the House that the CRTC and cabinet will take as long to negotiate Bell Canada's present rate increase application as it has taken the company to negotiate a new contract with the Communications Workers Union?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC has to look into demands for increases in rates by Bell Canada and that demand has been deposited with the CRTC which, according to its new procedure, is asking Bell Canada to come forward with the detail that will allow the commission, as well as other people who are interested in intervening, to look into all the facts. Then the CRTC, I hope, will be able to come to its final decision. The CRTC follows the guidelines of the Anti-Inflation Board and will make allowance for any new expenses or any new expansion which Bell Canada has. As a regulatory body, the CRTC looks into those questions very rigorously.

* * *

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH URANIUM REFINERY IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the very severe rebuke given to the provincial government of Saskatchewan at the New Democratic Party convention last weekend respecting its uranium policy, I wonder if the minister could run through the situation with respect to the establishment of a refinery in Saskatchewan, the studies that are under consideration and when a decision will be taken with respect to the establishment of a refinery in Saskatchewan, if ever?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member, he said the New Democratic Party convention had given a strong rebuke to the government of Saskatchewan. If the hon. member is asking me to answer for the government of Saskatchewan, he is asking the wrong man.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realize the minister wants a simple question so I shall put a very basic one to him. What is happening in the province of Saskatchewan with respect to the establishment of a uranium refinery? I hope he can answer that simple question.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to take any liberty with the hon. member, other than to suggest that he read the public release which sets out in some detail the arrangements that have been made by Eldorado, and the kind of discussions that have taken place between Eldorado and the government of Saskatchewan.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—POSSIBILITY SAME TYPE OF AGREEMENT AS THAT MADE WITH MANITOBA WILL BE MADE WITH OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Communications. In view of the unique arrangement and agreement the minister announced last week between the government of Canada, the government of Manitoba and the telephone system which will give a cable plant to Manitoba, is the minister going to use this as a precedent for other provinces, particularly Saskatchewan and Quebec which also have telephone companies interested in the ownership of cable plants?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that the company which gives the greater part of the telephone service in the province of Quebec is Bell Canada and it is regulated by the CRTC. As for the first part of his question, if any other province has an interest in the kind of agreement which I have negotiated with the province of Manitoba, I am willing to enter into discussion. I feel that agreement sets forth the way the two governments decided to administer a particular area where the provincial government has an interest as well as the federal government.

RESUMPTION OF ADJOURNED CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that in future negotiations there will be some consistency in the type of agreement made between provinces where there is an interest by a provincial government, through its telephone system or a private system, in the ownership of cable plants. Since the communications conference which was to be held in November was adjourned because of the election in Quebec will the minister take the initiative with her provincial counterparts to get that conference back on the road so that the question of jurisdiction and other matters, particularly cable, can be resolved?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have every intention of resuming discussions and planning for a future conference with the ministers of communications. I feel it is important for the provinces to have an input into the federal government's policies of telecommunication. As for the hon. member's worry about my being consistent, I can assure him that I will be. The agreement that was negotiated between myself for the government of Canada and the provincial government of Manitoba dealt with problems between us. The situation in other provinces might be slightly different. I can assure the hon. member that I shall be as consistent as I possibly can.

PROVISION IN AGREEMENT WITH MANITOBA FOR EXTENSION OF CABLE TO RURAL AREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications. In the agreement she signed on behalf of the government of Canada, with the government of Manitoba on behalf of the Manitoba telephone system, were guarantees given by the government of Manitoba that the investment of the two cable operators would be guaranteed? Also, were formal commitments made by the Manitoba telephone system that they would expand cable into rural areas if this agreement could be signed? Was a commitment made by the Manitoba telephone system or the province of Manitoba that this cable extension would take place as an integral part of the agreement signed with the communications minister?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that agreement was signed between the provincial government of Manitoba and the government of Canada. The government of Manitoba will deal with the Manitoba Telephone Company as it feels it should. I have secured in the agreement guarantees for the federal jurisdiction over broadcasting matters. That was my specific function and my specific mandate. As for the modifications or future planning of Manitoba telephone and the relationships it should be developing with cable operators, that is a matter between them.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Manitoba government being the sole negotiator and also the sole owner of the Manitoba telephone system—in other words they are negotiating with themselves—has the minister given guarantees that the private operators will have the ability and the license to expand into markets that at the present time they have not been able to expand into because the CRTC has withheld licences, even where hearings have been held two years previously? They have frozen any decision.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know the CRTC is on schedule as to the examination of applications for cable.

Mr. Epp: No. Two years.

Mrs. Sauvé: No, sir. They are on schedule. They come down with their decisions and I have nothing to do with the decisions of the CRTC as they apply to specific applications.

* * *

TRANSPORT

DANGERS PRESENTED BY TANKERS IN STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Transport. During the past fortnight there have been two incidents involving foreign flag tankers wandering about in the most dangerous fashion in the waters of the straits of Juan de Fuca—the Panamanian flag White Poppy and the Kuweiti flag Warbah. I hope the minister has recovered sufficiently from his trip on the people's airline which so many of us are obliged to take as a matter of routine. I wonder if the minister has now recovered and is prepared to look into these infractions of good seamanship and tell the House what steps he plans to take to make sure they do not occur again.

● (1440)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to look into the first incident and discovered that the vessel in question was under the voluntary control of United States authorities, under the existing arrangements. The voluntary system is due to be replaced with a compulsory system as soon as discussions between the United States and Canada in that regard can be completed. We look forward then to having one of the best possible systems of navigation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I gather from the minister's reply that he suggests an accident on the United States side would not affect our beaches and fisheries. I wonder if that is the purpose of trying to place the blame on the American side.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any reasonable person could draw that inference from what I said. I simply indicated that in that particular situation the vessel was under the guidance of American authorities.

[Mr. Epp.]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But it was in Canadian waters.

Mr. Lang: I made no comment about what damage it might or might not do.

* * *

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

REQUEST OF ONTARIO PRODUCERS FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER FOLLOWING FIRING OF CHAIRMAN AND VICE-CHAIRMAN

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Agriculture arises because of the sudden firing of the chairman and vice-chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission. Has the minister received the telegram sent on behalf of some 18,500 dairy producers in Ontario by the chairman of the Ontario Cream Producers Marketing Board and the Ontario Milk Marketing Board which states in part that as a consequence of the reported appointment of a new chairman with little knowledge of the national dairy industry, "We are requesting immediate consultation with you" regarding the strong and respected leadership required of the Canadian Dairy Commission in these difficult times? If so, has the minister set a date for the meeting which was requested by Mr. Smeltzer and Mr. McLaughlin?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the telegram but my office has an open door policy and we will discuss anything with them at any time. Let me say that they make appointments from time to time. I do not think I have ever discussed this matter with them, but what they do affects the policy for which I am responsible and for which, on behalf of all Canada, I must answer. I do not object to what they do. After I explain what I have done and why I did it, I am sure they will not have any further objection. I am not aware of the telegram alluded to. As I have said many times in the past, their concern is my concern. This Minister of Agriculture and this government have given the dairy farmers of Canada the best income and the best dairy policy they have ever had in the history of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ALLEGATION CHAIRMAN PROMISED HE WOULD RETAIN POSITION FOLLOWING SICK LEAVE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The telegram was sent on Thursday and I think every member of parliament from Ontario, except the minister, got a copy. I can send the minister a copy of it. Can the minister confirm that when the former chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission began his sick leave, he, the minister, promised him that his job as chairman would be awaiting him on his return, but that he, the minister, changed his mind and broke that promise by attempting to demote Mr. Powers to the position of vice-chairman, a demotion which Mr. Powers refused to accept?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Powers and I have been friends for a long time. We made this decision and we are still friends. Mr. Powers has agreed to meet me in January, to discuss other responsibilities which I feel he is capable of fulfilling in Agriculture Canada. He has made a tremendous contribution to Agriculture Canada. He is a tremendous individual; but the workload in today's dairy commission is most demanding. I talked to him about his own and his family's position. We discussed these questions in total before the decision was made. When I offered him the vice-chairmanship of the commission, he said he would rather not be a member of the commission because he did not think it would be fair to the new chairman of the commission if the old chairman were to sit at his side as vice-chairman.

I respected Mr. Powers for that position. Let met say that I also talked to his doctor and discussed Mr. Powers' position in an attempt to learn if Mr. Powers could fulfil the full-time obligations of this board. It is a demanding job and needs someone working at it full time. Mr. Powers agreed with what we had decided. As I said, we parted on amiable terms and we still have respect for one another.

Mr. Beatty: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister confirm that when Mr. Powers took his sick leave he was promised by the minister that his job would be waiting for him when he returned? Secondly, may I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect to the hon. member, I suggest that he has precisely repeated his earlier question.

* * *

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING ACCELERATED WRITE-OFF PROGRAM FOR ANTI-POLLUTION EQUIPMENT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance relates to accelerated capital cost allowances for purchasers of anti-pollution equipment. Since the accelerated write-off program is scheduled to end on December 31, will the Minister of Finance say if he intends to extend this provision for the 50 per cent per annum write-off and, if so, for how long a period would that extension be in effect?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certain of the provisions in this regard were dealt with at the time of the budget this year. Perhaps it would be better if I talked to the hon. gentleman about specific items he has in mind, because the treatment is not necessarily uniform.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINISTERS' VIEW OF ACCELERATED WRITE-OFF PROGRAM FOR ANTI-POLLUTION EQUIPMENT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment? Is it the minister's view that the accelerated capital cost allowances program has been successful and does the minister think that the program should be extended for at least one more year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, that is seeking an opinion of the minister rather than information.

* * *

PERFORMING ARTS

SALUTE TO NATIONAL BALLET ON TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could risk a diversion to a happier aspect of life in our country and ask the Secretary of State if he will join with me in a salute to the National Ballet of Canada on the twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding, an event brilliantly celebrated in its home city of Toronto?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join in the remarks of the distinguished hon. member. Last Friday I was at the performance of the National Ballet, to mark its twenty-fifth anniversary. On that occasion I made a short speech to congratulate Celia Franka for her splendid work over the past twenty-five years in making this company one of the most extraordinary and important parts of Canada's cultural heritage.

* * *

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED IMMINENT DEPORTATION OF CHILEAN FAMILY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could the minister tell the House what his department intends to do in the case of the Chilean citizen, Mr. Romeo Humberto Ponce Bustos and his family who, although they have been living in Montreal for more than a year, will soon be deported and who would undoubtedly be in danger if they had to go back to Chile after being deported from Canada?

[English]

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his representations on behalf of this particular family. I had looked into the matter personally. They have gone through all the appeal procedures and a deportation order has been made. Consequently, my department is bound by that order. However, in the light of the facts as I have studied them in that particular file, I can say that there is a procedure whereby the deportation order may be executed, but they may be able to arrange, on that particular basis, to be re-admitted under a minister's permit. I am looking into that at present.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED APOLOGY BY PRIME MINISTER TO JAPANESE FOR ACTIONS DURING WAR—INQUIRY AS TO AID FOR JAPANESE CANADIANS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the Prime Minister concerns the apology the Prime Minister made to the prime minister of Japan recently for the conduct of the Canadian government and Canadians toward Japanese Canadians during the last world war. Would the Prime Minister advise the House if he intends to apologize in Canada to Canadians of Japanese descent for the conduct of the Canadian government at that time? Also, will he advise if he has anything more tangible in mind than an apology, considering the decision of the Supreme Court, which dismissed claims by Japanese Canadians against that injustice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would be better informed for his question if he read what I stated in Japan rather than reading apparently the many reports and letters to newspapers on the subject. I never used the word "apologize." I never used "intention of apologizing." I explained that part of our history and its relation to people of Japanese origin. I was doing it in the Canadian embassy, on Canadian soil, to a largely Canadian audience. I was reciting part of our history. It is well known to everyone. It was not stated by way of apology. It was stated by way of explaining that relations between us have indeed improved since the days when they were not very good at the turn of the century and since the days during and following the second world war, when certain regrettable actions were taken. But the thrust of the speech, the toast I was making, was to indicate that Canadians of Japanese origin were indeed good citizens and had attained prominence in every part of Canada and in every part of Canadian life. I wish the hon. member would refer to that statement if he wants to ask some further questions.

● (1450)

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for asking me to refer to his statement, which I have in front of me. He indicated that Canadians had deprived Canadian Japanese of their civil rights during World War II. If that is not an apology, I do not know what is. The Prime Minister did not indicate whether he would do anything more tangible than use words to describe the injustice upon Japanese Canadians at that time. At that meeting, did the government of Japan or the Prime Minister of Japan apologize to Canadians for the conduct of the Japanese government in terms of their treatment of Canadian prisoners of war during World War II?

[Mr. Cullen.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says he has the statement in front of him. If he refers to it, he will see there is no indication of an apology. There is a statement of facts which are admitted on all sides. I do not think it is beyond our capabilities as a country to realize that some things in the past were not very glorious. There is no great mistake in referring to it. If the hon. member would like other countries to do the same, he could refer to them. Maybe he will get them to recognize things in their past which are not very glorious.

* * *

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CONTRACT FOR PURCHASE OF LEOPARD TANK

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence have announced the purchase of Leopard I tanks. Leaving aside the relative merit of the Leopard I tank, as opposed to other main battle tanks, and the impossibility of up-gunning the Leopard I, will the Minister of Supply and Services table the contract as was done with the LRPA?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I see no objection in making available to any hon. member any contract we pass with our suppliers. However, each time we negotiate a contract I have to table it before the House. I think that the situation is thus more complicated. The hon. member may well ask my department to consult the contracts and he will get the full cooperation of my officers. If not, he just has to tell me and I will look into it personally.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTION MASSIVE SPENDING NEEDED TO SOLVE PROBLEM IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister confirm, as stated in today's Ottawa Journal, that last week he had been briefed by the Minister of Finance to the effect that massive federal spending will be needed to mop up unemployment in Quebec and Atlantic Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what rumour or item the hon. member is referring. I would make it quite clear that the Minister of Finance and I from time to time, do discuss the economic situation of the country. We intend continuing bringing answers to the most pressing economic concerns of the country.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES ON USE OF BUILDINGS AT ARGENTIA NAVAL STATION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister will recall that the United States forces moved out of the north side of the Argentia naval station several years ago, leaving vacant various buildings and facilities having potential for industrial development in the area. They imposed a stipulation that they can reclaim these with 30 days notice, preventing any development. Has the minister had any discussions with the United States authorities on this in an attempt to get that condition changed? If so, when will those discussions be concluded? When will there be an announcement of some change or is there likely to be a change in that stipulation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the discussions are certainly taking place, in fact as recently as three weeks ago. That is why I can respond by saying I was encouraged by the results of those discussions and expect to get some word soon from the United States authorities. However, I have no idea as to the specific date or time when I will hear from them.

GARRISON DIVERSION—REASON FOR GRANTING INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ADDITIONAL TIME TO MAKE REPORT

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister. It has to do with the Garrison diversion project and the recent diplomatic note sent by Canada to the United States asking for a moratorium on construction. On what fact did the government base its decision in August to allow the IJC an extension of eight months for its final report, a decision that was made after the subcommittee on appropriations and after the President of the United States signed $23.5 million for next year's construction? What facts led the government to agree to an extension with the knowledge that next year's construction funds had already been appropriated?

Mr. Speaker: With due respect, I am sure the hon. member will realize that is a matter not to be pursued here in that manner but before the committee.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

INCREASE IN ITEMS FOR PURCHASE, REPAIR AND UPKEEP—POSSIBLE MEANS OF SECURING ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Given the fact that the purchase, repair and upkeep category of spending has increases averaging 16 per cent proposed in the Supplementary Estimates (B), and having regard for the phenomenal increases experienced in purchase, repair and upkeep for 1975-76 over 1974-75 averaging a staggering 450 per cent, most of which was also put through by the use of mid-year supplementary estimates, can the minister advise the House whether this was a legitimate mid-year breakdown in various departments of government or whether this route is being used as an illegitimate way of securing funds for additional government expenditures within the departments?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my impression that it is a totally legitimate method. I will be glad to go into detail or have somebody do that when those supplementary estimates are before the appropriate committee for full examination.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the minister considers an increase of 450 per cent in this category to be legitimate, is he reviewing the guidelines and perhaps recommending to the departments that they buy machinery which is less prone to breakdown? Is he investigating the manner in which this appropriation is taking place? In particular, can the minister advise why this category for the Anti-Inflation Board has increased 460 per cent in this year's Supplementary Estimates (B)?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member usually asks the question, have you stopped beating your wife. I will give a detailed answer so it will be percisely on the record when I appear or when that item appears before the committee.

* * *

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF TARIFF ON APPLIANCES DURING NEGOTIATIONS FOR ACQUISITION OF WESTINGHOUSE APPLIANCE DIVISION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the negotiations on the merger of Canadian General Electric and General Steel Wares and the proposed acquisition of the Westinghouse appliance division announced last Wednesday, was there any discussion regarding tariffs on imported appliances with CGE and GSW?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question of tariffs as they apply to household appliances was not brought up during the negotiations I have had with the people concerned.

Order Paper Questions

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN TARIFF ON APPLIANCES AFTER WESTINGHOUSE APPLIANCE DIVISION ACQUIRED

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): In view of the dominant position this proposed new company will have in the appliance industry in Canada and noting that it was stressed at the press conference, the export potential of the new company, was there a quid pro quo that once the new company is established and operating and production rationalization achieved that tariffs on imported appliances would be adjusted to allow the new company to offer a full line of appliances for sale or to assist it exporting some of its lines?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, there has never been any talk of giving that industry a special status. I even believe that the president of one of the two companies observed that, because of the general negotiations now in progress in Geneva with regard to tariffs, he felt that lowering the tariffs internationally might even improve competition for that group of companies, both in the domestic and the export markets.

* * *

● (1500)

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S VIEW OF EXTENSION OF ACCELERATED WRITE-OFF PROGRAM FOR POLLUTION CONTROL EQUIPMENT

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Has the hon. gentleman recommended an extension of the accelerated write-off provisions affecting pollution control abatement equipment to his colleague, the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of the Environment): My officials, at my request, are now engaged in conversations with officials of the Department of Finance, and the minister and I will be discussing this matter.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 283, 362, 635 and 646.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

[Text]

FERRY SERVICE OPERATIONS TO PEI

Question No. 283—Mr. Huntington:

1. For the ferry systems from (a) Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick to Borden, Prince Edward Island (b) Caribou, Nova Scotia to Wood Islands, Prince Edward Island, what was the (i) total annual revenue (ii) annual cost (iii) annual loss for the years 1971 to 1975?

2. If there was a loss, was the loss subsidized (a) directly and, if so, from what source (b) indirectly and, if so, to what account was it charged?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) For the ferry systems from Cape Tormentine, N.B. to Borden, P.E.I. the revenues, expenses, and deficits paid by the federal government for the calendar years 1971 to 1975 inclusive are:

Year	(i) Revenues	(ii) Expenses	(iii) Deficits
1971	$2,318,684	$ 7,824,392	$ 5,505,708
1972	2,590,063	8,578,070	5,988,007
1973	2,732,503	11,080,198	8,347,695
1974	3,232,525	13,965,147	10,732,622
1975	3,696,171	17,220,457	13,524,286

The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. (b) (i) (ii) (iii) This is propriety information relating to the operations of a private carrier and as such is not made public.

Transport Canada advises as follows: 2. Deficits arising from the operation of the ferry service from Cape Tormentine to Borden were paid by the Department of Transport to the operator of the ferry service, Canadian National Railway Company, and are reflected in Department of Transport Vote 40. The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: The Wood Islands, P.E.I. to Caribou, N.S. service receives an operating subsidy administered by the Water Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. The subsidy for the last four years has been in the amount of: 1971-72, $1,000,000; 1972-73, $1,449,000; 1973-74, $2,000,000; 1974-75, $2,400,000.

RADIO BEACONS AT VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 362—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Are all radio beacons installed at Victoria International Airport in working order and operating and, if not (a) how many (b) in each case (i) which one (ii) where is it located (iii) on what date was it taken out of service and for what reason (iv) on what date will it be re-activated?

2. What alternative guidance devices, if any, were put in temporary service to assist aircraft in their approach and transit movements?

3. Were all regular and potential users of these beacons notified in an appropriate way of the change or changes?

4. How much in advance was notice given of de-activation, and by what method (a) domestically (b) to foreign operators?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No. (a) One. (b) (i) The Victoria Very High Frequency Omnidirectional Range (VOR); (ii) Magnetic bearing 335°, distance 4.9 nautical miles from the Victoria International Airport; (iii) July 26, 1976 for Doppler VOR installation; (iv) Estimated November 30, 1976.

2. The low frequency Gordon Head non-directional beacon was installed at the Victoria VOR site as an alternative guidance device.

3. Yes.

4. Three days. (a) Class I Notice to Airmen. (b) Class I Notice to Airmen.

AIB DECISIONS AND NEWS RELEASES

Question No. 635—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the distribution policy of the Anti-Inflation Board concerning copies of its decisions and news releases?

2. (a) How many names were on the AIB's regular mailing list prior to June 23, 1976 (b) what categories of individuals and organizations are included?

3. What was the unit cost of the envelopes customarily used by the AIB for public mailing of news releases and similar material prior to June 23, 1976?

4. What was the total cost to the taxpayer including supplies, labour and postal expenses for an average mailing by the AIB in the month of May, 1976?

5. What is the practice of the AIB concerning sending more than one mailing a week to weekly newspapers?

6. Was the AIB, prior to June 23, 1976, aware that some of the individuals on their mailing list had been receiving as many as five or seven separate mailings on one day and, if so, does it intend to eliminate this practice in future?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. News releases and decisions of the Board are distributed on a selective basis to those with interest in particular subjects.

2. (a) The AIB has no regular mailing list. Each individual mailing is selective. (b) Daily newspapers, 113; weekly newspapers, 725; individuals, 705; arbitrators, 441; associations, labor, 267; industry and business, 246; professionals, 242; consumers, 50; construction industries, 101.

3. $34 per 1,000.

4. $332.

5. Since June 7, the AIB has made one mailing per week to the weekly newspapers.

6. Yes. Once a week mailings were established beginning June 7 for all except the daily newspapers.

PURCHASE OF BEEF AND AGRICULTURAL GOODS

Question No. 646—Mr. Beatty:

1. Did the government purchase any foreign beef for use in federal institutions and, if so (a) what was the dollar value of any such beef purchased over the twelve month period prior to July 12, 1976 (b) in what institutions was it used?

2. Does the government make a conscious effort to purchase Canadian agricultural goods over foreign imports for use in federal institutions and, if so, what are the guidelines dealing with such purchases, by whom were they issued and on what date were they issued?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: 1. No. (a) Not applicable; (b) not applicable.

2. Yes. It is the policy of the Department of Supply and Services to consider foreign content in the assessment of tenders and to give preference to Canadian products to the extent of 10 per cent of the difference in the foreign content. The guidelines is Cabinet Directive dated May 18, 1950, confirmed by Cabinet Decision dated June 8, 1965.

* * *

[English]

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions Nos. 319 and 320?

[Text]

*WAGE AND SALARY AGREEMENTS RECEIVED BY AIB

Question No. 319—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many wage and salary agreements reached between employers and their unions have been received by the Anti-Inflation Board for approval by (a) May 1, 1976 (b) June 1, 1976 (c) July 1, 1976 (d) August 1, 1976 (e) September 1, 1976 (f) October 1, 1976?

2. How many were decided upon by the Board and the decisions conveyed to the applicants by October 1, 1976?

[English]

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Perhaps I might answer question No. 319, Mr. Speaker. 1. Wage and salary plans and agreements between employers and their employees required under the Anti-Inflation Program are known as Compensation Reports (AIB-2). The number of Compensation Reports received by the Anti-Inflation Board for approval by the date indicated was: May 1, 1976, 8107; June 1, 1976, 10512; July 1, 1976, 13373; August 1, 1976, 16531; Sept. 1, 1976, 18271; Oct. 1, 1976, 21733.

2. The number of Compensation Reports decided upon by the Anti-Inflation Board and decisions conveyed to the applicants by October 1, 1976 was 15004.

[Text]

*WAGE AND SALARY AGREEMENTS RECEIVED BY THE AIB

Question No. 320—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many wage and salary agreements reached between employers and their unions have been received by the Anti-Inflation Board for approval by (a) January 1, 1976 (b) February 1, 1976 (c) March 1, 1976 (d) April 1, 1976?

2. How many were decided upon by the Board and the decisions conveyed to the applicants by April 1, 1976?

[English]

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): 1. The number of Compensation Reports received by the Anti-Inflation Board by the dates indicated was: January 1, 1976, 230; February 1, 1976, 400; March 1, 1976, 651; April 1, 1976, 4510.

2. The number of Compensation Reports decided upon by the Anti-Inflation Board by April 1, 1976 was 2706 and the number of decisions conveyed to the applicants was 327. Up to July 1, 1976 the Anti-Inflation Board was not signifying approval of Compensation Reports that were found to be within the guidelines.

Restraint of Government Expenditures

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to use my remaining seven or eight minutes to expand on the remarks I made before the lunch hour in which I indicated that the loss of the subsidy, the At-East rates on flour milled in western Canada and exported through the Port of Halifax, amounts to more than 69 cents per hundred pounds, on flour milled in Ontario and exported through Halifax, amount to more than 81 cents per hundred pounds, and that the removal of these rates handicaps our grain producers and millers to the point at which they will likely lose sales on the international grain and flour market.

The milling industry and those engaged in grain production have enough problems as it is without the government attempting to show restraint in the wrong direction. International sales have been declining steadily. The Canadian share of international sales of commercial flour has fallen from 31 per cent to 11 per cent in the 20 years between 1954 and 1974. Yet what do we find? We find the government trying to save about $3 million on flour exports and $8 million on grain shipped to the Atlantic ports and to the St. Lawrence ports, a paltry $11 million, while on the other side of the coin, the loss of those rates will mean unemployment in the mills and in the terminals on Georgian Bay and on the Atlantic coast; it will mean lost flour sales, and I submit that these costs, when added together, will prove to be far in excess of any amount which the government might save through the cancellation of the At-East rates.

The government wants to show restraint. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has the nerve, on this pretext, to try to do away with part of the Railway Act, one of the few things the grain processors and the people of Atlantic Canada have left to them. The minister is trying to do away with it in the name of restraint. Yet he himself flies his friends to his brother-in-law's party in Regina via Saskatoon at the cost of some $10,222. Of course, he had, naturally, to take some fellows from the press gallery along with him. He had to take some musicians along from the press gallery to his brother-in-law's birthday party; he went to Saskatoon first, and then down to Regina on that little jaunt. No restraint was shown there, Mr. Speaker. Maybe he was trying to help his brother-in-law who is running for the leadership of the Saskatchewan Liberal Party. I do not know what kind of relationship exists there, because the hon. gentleman's brother-in-law now says that the Saskatchewan Liberal Party should separate from the federal Liberal Party. What effect that will have upon this relationship, I don't know. But I do wish the Minister of Transport would quit talking out of both sides of his mouth.

He wants the grain elevator operators of Atlantic Canada and the lower St. Lawrence and Georgian Bay to show restraint, to pick up the tab and compete on their own against the United States and the EEC. The reality is that in all industrialized nations flour milling is subsidized. Both the United States and the EEC, our main competitors in the international market, give heavy support to their flour industries. The loss of the At-East rates, bearing in mind this sort of competition, means that our millers' share of what they have left of the international market is bound to suffer. Surely, this is the worst time of all for even the present Minister of Transport to take the kind of action he proposes.

This is an item which must be deleted. I hope the government got a message last night. The people of Quebec sent a message to the Government of Canada. Indeed, they sent a message to all of us. They are demanding fundamental changes in their economy and in their society. They intend to get things like an automobile insurance plan which will save the average motorist in the province $500 or $600 a year. They intend to get social and economic changes on a scale never known before in the province. In the light of a message of that kind, it seems to me the Minister of Transport, or at least his colleagues from the Province of Quebec and Atlantic Canada, should insist that clause 15 be deleted from this bill when it comes before the committee. To ignore the geography of our country, to ignore the distances that flour and grain for milling purposes has to be moved is to fly in the face of all good sense and economic reality. Surely this is not an area in which to try to exercise government restraint. What is involved here is an investment rather than a subsidy. What is really happening is that all the people of Canada are sharing in the cost of delivering flour and wheat for milling purposes to export positions where they can compete on a fair basis with exports from the United States and the EEC. To ask those millers and grain producers to pick up 69 or 70 cents a hundred pounds of flour milled in western Canada, and in Saskatoon in particular, or 82 cents a hundred pounds for flour milled inland in western Ontario or at the bay ports in Ontario, is to deny them any success in flour sales outside of our borders. It just is not fair to ask them to compete by themselves against the treasuries of the United States and the kind of financial resources the European Economic Community has.

● (1510)

Surely this is a time when the government of Canada should provide additional aid and comfort, not detract from what minimal support the "at and east" rates gave the milling industry of Canada. We know that it is the intention on the part of Maple Leaf Mills, a large multinational corporation owned in the United States, and Lever Bros. who are a subsidiary of Unilever of Belgium, another multinational corporation that brings us Lux toilet soap and so on, to build a mill and storage depot at Windsor, Ontario. This may be great for them but it will not be great for ports along Georgian Bay, or the ports of Halifax, Saint John, Montreal and Quebec City. It will not be great for the flour mill that the wheat producers own in Saskatoon. This effort to destroy the small benefit that our milling industry and grain producers get out of the transportation act is outrageous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will be through very shortly and I thank my hon. friends for their kindness in allowing me to continue.

The Canadian Millers Association and its chairman, one Mr. J. F. Blakeney—no relation, by the way, to the premier of Saskatchewan—has also written to the minister expressing their distress at the government's announcement that the subsidy will be removed or abolished. In his letter to the minister he cites why they are distressed. I would have thought that the minister, this great friend of the Canadian farmer and of the producers of processed products from the grain industry, would have much greater concern as a western member of parliament than this. I do not see where they can arrive at any significant element of restraint in government spending by abolishing this kind of rate. The cost through lost export sales and the increase in unemployment will be much greater than the subsidy. Surely, this is some kind of backward economics.

I also want to suggest that the whole movement of grain by water through the St. Lawrence, with some attempt to increase the amount going through Vancouver, has been vital in the winter months for flour and for the movement of grain for milling purposes. While the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and some of his people who support inland terminals might have visions of grandeur about unit trains, once they have tried them for that kind of distance for any length of time they will find that the costs are greater and will be greater than what the "at and east" rates cost the national treasury.

From whatever way you look at it, Mr. Speaker, this attempt at so-called restraint is not going to save money for the people of Canada. In fact, it will cost them more money than the cancellation of the rates would cost. Movement through the maritime ports and through several of the bay ports is very important. They have no extensive feed grain traffic. Traffic in grain for milling purposes and for flour is extremely important to them. There seems to be little disagreement with the predictions made by the millers association, of which all of us have received a copy, that rail rates will increase by roughly $18 a ton, an increase that they have been advised will likely mean the loss of their Cuban market, and thereby the loss of most of our remaining commercial market for export. This would affect mills from Saskatchewan to Halifax; and the producers will have lost a market for about 20 million bushels of wheat that the millers exported commercially last year.

Our customers seem to have little alternative, Mr. Speaker, and our millers seem to have little alternative. The Cubans insist on carrying flour on their own ships and refuse to pick up on the west coast. They cannot use unit trains, as the need for bagging flour precludes the bulk loading and unloading which is required to make the concept of a unit train viable. So unit trains for the movement of flour are going to be much more expensive.

The value of exports of mill products last year was $132 million, and 12 per cent of that was food aid. This government wants to remove the "at and east" rates, which relieved the cost of those products, some of which went for food aid, by as much as 82 cents per hundred pounds. It is difficult to know whether the removal of the subsidy would eliminate the movement of grain through the maritime ports. The rates for moving this grain already exceed the cost of shipping via Vancouver to Europe by over 20 cents a bushel. Removing the "at and east" rates just compounds that felony to the tune of 60 to 80 cents per hundred pounds.

The actual impact will depend on other developments. If the unit train is viable, then the current volume through the maritimes would continue and the producers would suffer no loss. But I doubt that they are going to be viable. Certainly, I do not believe they will be viable for the movement of flour. If unit trains do not work, then the current volume could continue, but at decreased return to the producers because the Wheat Board would have to absorb the increased rates.

If transport manages to clear up traffic snarls and jams at elevators on the Vancouver route, more winter shipments could go via Vancouver. But Vancouver is already congested and has all it can handle. It will be a while yet before any increased storage is in place at that port. In the meantime the government is prepared, in order to try and save a few million dollars which will not really be a saving, to victimize ports along Georgian Bay, the ports of Halifax, Quebec City, Saint John and Montreal, by placing in jeopardy the viability of what remaining Canadian owned flour mills we have, turning them over to the tender mercies of multinational corporations who are not interested in the welfare and good order of Canadian producers and Canadian millers. What appears to be a possible $11 million saving in so-called subsidies for grain and flour movement to Atlantic and eastern ports would in effect, mean a far greater cost to Canadian taxpayers, workers and farmers.

I repeat my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker. Our freight rate system must recognize our geography, our climate, where it is our crops are raised and where our flour is milled. It must take that into account when we attempt to make sales in Europe, in central and southern America and in the Soviet Union. The only way we can do that is through a system of transportation rates that allows us to compete with other countries which are already subsidizing their flour milling industry to a great extent.

● (1520)

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, although you know that quite frequently we in this party vary considerably in respect of party philosophy with our good friends sitting to our left, before I begin my remarks may I make the comment that what has been said by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) in criticism of the government has been quite right. His comments with reference to this legislation, particularly in respect of Clause 15, the repeal of Section 272 of the Railway Act, are quite right as well. However, I wish to caution the hon. member that what he said concerning my colleague from Moose Jaw and the rest of my colleagues is quite wrong.

We on this side of the House, and indeed the Canadian public, have called upon the government time and time again to demonstrate by deed and action some restraint in government spending. The record clearly shows that this government talks about restraint, preaches restraint and expects the segments of our society to practise restraint, while in reality it continues to spend more and more itself. In other words, I am sure there would be unanimous agreement that this government does not practise what it preaches. The government tells people in all regions of the country to do as it says but not as it does.

In general this bill is a pretty good example of government window-dressing designed to make clear that it is spending less money when exactly the opposite is the case. The over-all effect of Bill C-19 will be of little or no significance. It brings into law certain measures already in practice and indicates other measures that are to be taken. Given the record of this government in the general area of belt tightening, one would be tempted to say it is losing the battle of the bulge. Is it any wonder people become skeptical about a government bill termed "the government expenditures restraint act"? The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) has indicated a reduction of $1.5 billion of expenditures would result from the passage of this bill. Given the past record of this government one is encouraged to say, as a result of these measures at least, that this simply will not happen. Upon review of this bill and in light of other planned programs, it is obvious that what will really take place is a reshuffling of dollars and a deferral of payments. Only time will reveal the exact savings if any, and I detect a distinct absence of optimism in the minds of many Canadians.

Usually it is difficult in respect of bills this type which cover a wide range of subjects to arrive at a position, be it for or against. This bill, however, contains one clause that resolves our difficulties in this regard. In fact, because of this particular clause and its rather surprising presence in this bill one is left with no choice but to oppose the entire piece of legislation. I must admit that I am genuinely surprised the government has not seen fit to eliminate Clause 15 which calls for the repeal of Section 272 of the Railway Act commonly referred to as the "at and east" rates.

On many previous occasions I have spoken in this House about the lack of concern this government has shown in respect of the agricultural industry. I have spoken about the lack of effective programs, the lack of government action to resolve pressing problems in the agricultural industry and the low priority given by this government to industry generally. Clause 15 is simply another glaring example of this government's attitude toward Canada's farm community. On the same subject one now continually hears the comment across this country that the influence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) within cabinet has eroded to the point of insignificance. That has been obvious to us on this side of the House for months. The fact that the people in the industry now recognize this to be the case simply proves that although you can fool some of the people some of the time, there is no way that you can fool all of the people all of the time, especially when the people happen to be those involved in our agricultural industry.

I was glad to read in the speech of my colleague from Halifax-East Hants that he had reviewed the minister's performance before the standing committee on May 4, 1976. Certain aspects of the minister's statements concerning the removal of the "at and east" rates are very interesting and revealing. During that meeting both the chairman and the vice-chairman of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, Dr. Perrault and Mr. Sonneveld, made it abundantly clear that if the clause was not withdrawn some very major problems would result.

Such action would compound the already hazardous situation with respect to available storage of feed grains for emergency purposes in the St. Lawrence region, particularly at the Montreal and Quebec City ports. I am certain that Quebec livestock feeders will not take kindly to any such measures and rightly so. It was made clear by the chairman that such a move would prove detrimental to the ports in the Georgian Bay area as well. The Minister of Agriculture also made interesting comments on that very subject. He stated in response to a question from my colleague from Red Deer that he was not in agreement with the measure and went on to indicate that he thought it was "absolutely nuts". I asked the minister if he would be supporting our motion requesting that this clause be withdrawn. The minister did not reply to that question directly but commented to the effect that I must have had a private detective watching his mail because I knew exactly what he was doing. This was May 4, 1976, six months ago, and was in relation to Bill C-87 which provided for the repeal of Section 272. Six months later Bill C-19 was introduced and Clause 15 reappeared.

The result of the representations of the Minister of Agriculture can now be determined as having been absolutely nil. He has of course been swept aside before by such cabinet ministers as finance, industry, trade and commerce and now by transport. Because of the fact that Clause 15 reappears today in this bill we are led to believe, as my colleague from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain commented this morning, that we should not be surprised if in the not too distant future, given the track record of this government, a bill would be introduced calling for the repeal of the Crowsnest Pass rates. When the committee is considering this bill we will all look forward to the minister speaking in defence of the industry he supposedly represents. It is true that a program has been announced to assist Canada's 39 milling plants, down from 78 only 20 years ago. However, this program will not ease the situation of tight storage for feed grains in eastern Ontario and Quebec, nor will it resolve the problems of the inland elevators.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the Minister of Agriculture might suggest that additional storage be built for this purpose. That was promised at the time of the change in the feed grains policy last summer. That promise was not kept and no such additional storage space is in existence today nor is it likely to be for some time in the future. The addition of more storage space would in fact only alleviate some of the difficulties experienced by the St. Lawrence ports. Again, it would accomplish absolutely nothing toward solving the dilemma of the Georgian Bay region elevators.

This is not a minor issue as it might seem to be on the surface. It is a major and vital concern of a national nature. The eastern ports will be adversely affected if this subsidy is removed. I refer specifically to the ports of Halifax, St. John's, Montreal, Sorel, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. The western wheat farmers in all three prairie provinces as well as the wheat producers in my province of Ontario stand to be adversely affected if this ill-conceived legislation is allowed to pass. Canada, as a whole, stands to lose, not only because of the damage I have just mentioned, but because of the very real possibility of a loss of export sales due to the increased grain prices which will ultimately result if the transportation subsidy is removed.

● (1530)

At a time when export markets are increasingly hard to come by, the government has made a decision which will sharply worsen our already eroding position in export flour markets. I cannot understand how this decision can be of benefit to Canada, and I am certain that if a thorough cost-benefit analysis had been undertaken, this legislation would never have seen the light of day.

According to the Canadian National Millers Association, this piece of legislation represents proposed rail rate increases of $17.64 to $22.05 per metric ton on flour exports. This completely unexpected and ill-advised restraint measure will virtually guarantee the speedy demise of an already eroded export flour trade. This will ultimately result in increased costs to the government and subsequently to the economy of Canada.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has suggested that more and more countries are milling their own flour, thus implying that there may be decreasing demand for flour exports. This is certainly not the case at all, although if this subsidy is removed, there will undoubtedly follow a further decreasing demand for Canada's high prices flour exports. As it is now, only Canada and Australia have experienced substantial declines in this regard. The United States level has held fairly constant since 1954, while the European Common Market has expanded its exports over a ten year period from 15 million hundredweight to 64 million hundredweight.

As a matter of fact, some countries such as those in Africa and the West Indies have no flour milling capacity so that the only way our grain can enter those countries is in the form of flour. Contrary to what the minister may say, a world market still exists for flour and what we now have to decide is whether or not Canada is going to remain in a competitive position as an exporter to this market. As we are all aware, Russia has been purchasing a substantial amount of flour annually from Canada. However, each year's sale must be negotiated on an individual basis, and export business can only be maintained if Canadian wheat and flour prices remain competitive. The Canadian National Millers Association judge this situation to be critical and maintain that further business with Russia could be in serious jeopardy. A cost-benefit analysis would no doubt illustrate that savings made in eliminating the subsidy would be more than offset by the subsequent loss of export sales that would surely follow.

What about Canada's food aid program? A large proportion of flour exports, almost 12 per cent, is CIDA sponsored. If we assume that this international aid is to be continued, then we are dealing, in this instance, with a straight transfer of the extra costs from one departmental budget to another.

Another aspect of this legislation which must be seriously considered is the impending unemployment and hardship that must inevitably result if the subsidy is removed. There would be more plant closures in the milling industry, which worked at 76.8 per cent capacity in 1975, as well as more layoffs of the 3,000 persons directly engaged in the industry. Export flour is one commodity which generates significant employment for labour in eastern ports and a reduction in flour exports will have a telling impact on employment in an area in which unemployment already is far in excess of an acceptable level. Side effects such as unemployment and direct effects such as loss of revenue, would not come into play, of course, if Canada could maintain, rather I should say regain, its competitive position. What is needed, Mr. Speaker, are not measures to further erode that position, but measures to breathe new life into our sagging position as an exporting nation.

Canadian flour exports have been steadily declining for the past 20 years in spite of a growing pattern of world demand for this product. In 1954, Canadian millers were exporting over 20 million hundredweights of flour annually. By 1975, exports had dropped over 50 per cent to approximately 8½ million hundredweights. The commercial component of export flour sales alone, which totalled over 19 million hundredweights in 1954, amounted to less than 1½ million hundredweights. In 1975, during the same period, world demand for flour rose from 64½ million hundredweights to 95 million. In percentage terms, Canada's share of the world flour trade has declined from 31 per cent to 11 per cent.

The implementation of subsidy programs by many foreign governments, especially the U.S. and EEC countries combined with the lack of any similar assistance from the Canadian government, is the single most important factor that has led to the deterioration of Canada's position in the world flour trade. Virtually all other major flour exporting nations have recognized the need to support their milling industries and in recent years have moved to bolster export performance with a full range of subsidy programs.

In competition with American mills, Canada almost invariably has had higher seaboard costs. Even with the subsidy on the movement of export flour and the hold-down on flour rates, the comparative cost of American export flour remains below Canadian export prices. This government's proposed action will only serve to aggravate this competitive disadvantage as Canadian flour will be an additional $17.64 per metric ton out of line should the subsidy and the "hold-down" be eliminated. I am informed also that the elimination of the present subsidy could mean the loss to Canada of about $28 million annually in "value-added" processing activities, much of this in already economically depressed areas. I might add that this amount is not adjusted by conventional economical multiplier factors or it would be considerably higher.

As the milling industry is a purchaser of goods and services, the loss of the export flour trade will lead to corresponding declines in a number of complementary industries. These industries include manufacturers of bags, machinery and equipment, transportation services, dock labour and pilotage. Total expenditures in this regard have been estimated to approach $65 million a year. Here again, no conventional economic multipliers have been applied.

Some markets for grain can only be met by the export of flour. If Canadian flour cannot remain competitive, these grain sales will be lost. This is especially true of markets where there is no milling capacity as lost sales in these areas will not be exchanged for purchases of grain. Canadian millers are a major consumer of Canadian wheat, milling an average of 90 million bushels a year. This means, in effect, that Canadian millers process one entire wheat crop every five to six years.

So far, the bulk of attention has been focused on the unnecessary hardship that will be imposed on the western grain farmer and miller, and upon the port facilities of Quebec and the Maritimes. I would like, at this point, to add a few brief words about the potential damage this legislation will inflict upon the farmers, the inland terminal workers of Ontario, Ontario wheat producers, as well as the hardship it will cause on inland terminal workers, particularly in Ontario and the Georgian Bay region.

The Ontario wheat growers are going to be subject to reduced returns as a result of this legislation. In order to avoid lost sales through increasing the price, if indeed that can be done, the producer will be forced into picking up the tab in making up the difference in transportation costs. The Ontario wheat producers marketing board has made a strong protest to the government on this matter, a protest which apparently has fallen on deaf ears—or at least it might have fallen on ears attached to a head which has no influence on the federal cabinet. Inland terminals which stand to be adversely affected are located along Georgian Bay and Lake Huron and in such places as Prescott, Collingwood, Midland, Owen Sound, Sarnia, Port Colborne, Toronto and Kingston.

● (1540)

In conclusion, I ask the government to delete clause 15 from Bill C-19. It has been clearly illustrated that jobs, revenue and valuable export markets will be in serious jeopardy if this clause should become law. The amount of money which could be saved is extremely insignificant. The saving is not a worthy one when equated with these damaging results, particularly when there are so many other areas of federal spending which could be reduced without the harmful effects which will surely accompany the passage of this bill, particularly with respect to clause 15.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak about Bill C-19, the restraint legislation. I do not think there is anyone sitting in this House who is not in favour of restraint. I think that is a universally accepted notion, but the question appears to be where we are to restrain ourselves. The guiding principle seems to be that we want restraint, but not restraint on anything affecting our own sphere. That is becoming a Canadian principle. We would like to see the other guy cut back, but not ourselves. That is a problem facing us all.

I have heard members of all three opposition parties talk about restraint. Particularly I have heard members of the Tory Party say that almost the only reason for inflation is high government spending. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) talked about how he could cut literally billions from government spending, but I have not heard any concrete examples of how this could actually be done. Let us talk about a couple of examples in the last year.

An hon. Member: Talk about Otto Lang.

Mr. McRae: Let us talk about Bill C-68 of last winter. It actually took a whole year to get this bill through from the time it was introduced to the time it was completed. What did that bill do? It was to limit the increase in medical expenses to 13 per cent from the previous open-ended arrangement. We were saying that in the first year the provisions of that bill would be applicable we would allow an increase in medical spending of only 13 per cent; in the second year, 11 per cent, and in the third year, 9 per cent. At the same time inflation was being reduced to 6 per cent or 6.5 per cent. It was a reasonable proposition.

I understand the NDP because for years and years it has been saying that we should spend more money in some areas.

However, if we were to add up the cost of some of the programs they have proposed over the years, the results would be astronomical. There is, however, a humanity in that party in this respect. On the other hand, the Tory Party has been saying that we must restrain, cut spending in every way and leave things to the private sector. Yet both those parties took the same action and opposed the bill. A better way of putting it would be to say that they filibustered the bill. I think the Liberal Party and the government showed humanity with respect to that bill, but it was humanity with responsibility and that is the role a government must play.

Let us take a look at something a little more recent.

An hon. Member: Otto Lang.

Mr. McRae: There was a motion under Standing Order 43 moved the other day by a member of the NDP which had to do with pensions in the civil service. It had to do with widows' pensions or spouses' pensions, and one of the features of that motion was that spouses' pensions should eventually rise to 100 per cent of the pension of the two people in a given family. That would have amounted to a definite increase in the cost of the civil service and in the cost of civil service pensions. When the vote was taken, the party of restraint, the Tory Party, voted for that motion. They thought that the government should consider granting a pension of 100 per cent of the amount that it would be for both parties to the remaining spouse. Was that an act of restraint? It certainly was not.

Mr. Dick: How about Otto Lang? Is that an act of restraint?

An hon. Member: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Standing Orders provide that a member should be allowed to speak without interruption. I suggest that we listen.

Mr. McRae: I would prefer not to get into a long argument, but if we would like to compare—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, since there seems to have been an interruption for that purpose. It is also a rule that one cannot reflect on a vote taken in the same session. The hon. member can talk all he wants about what happened last session, but he cannot reflect on a vote which was taken in this session.

Mr. McRae: I can accept that statement. I would like to deal with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) since some of this occurred in this session. Without getting into a long argument about individual trips—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Don't be too specific.

Mr. McRae: —in one case we voted for an item which would likely cost something in excess of $50 million, and in an other we are talking about a total government expenditure for a year of $3 million. There is a difference between $50 million to $100 million and $3 million, so without defending Mr. Lang—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. McRae: —because I am sure he can defend himself extremely well—

Mr. Mazankowski: He is the Minister of Transport.

Mr. McRae: I am sorry. That is not the way he was referred to by hon. members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest that the hon. member refer to all hon members in this House either by their title or by their riding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I got carried away because I heard the minister's name used often on the other side.

If we are looking for methods of restraint, we should be looking at how governments can restrain themselves. We must look at government spending in toto, the kinds of government spending and the amounts governments spend. Of the $42 billion, $43 billion or $44 billion this fiscal year, which will be the amount the government will likely spend, in round figures 30 per cent of that is used to operate the total government. It provides for the armed forces, the Post Office and all activities of the federal government. It provides all the services for which this government is responsible. Transfer payments account for the remaining 70 per cent. Where do these transfer payments, which amount to over $30 billion, go? Other levels of government receive 8.1 per cent in the form of the Canadian Assistance Plan, in the form of health and welfare payments and in the form of equalization. There is some feeling in the country that in terms of equalization this all goes to the province of Quebec which, of course, is not true.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Don't be silly.

Mr. McRae: Equalization payments go to seven of the ten provinces. On a percentage basis the Atlantic provinces get the most, and although Saskatchewan and Manitoba also receive some, they get the least.

• (1550)

The second item is payments to individuals totalling about $9 billion or 23.6 per cent of the total. This is paid in the form of Canada Pension Plan, Old Age Pensions, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and so on. One of the major factors contributing to increased government costs over the last three years has been the need to increase the amount of money going to individuals because of inflation in the economy. We have had to substantially increase old age pensions, widows' pensions, veterans' pensions and so on, and we have had to index them so that the people will have enough money to live on. To say that these are contributing factors to inflation is to say that old age pensioners, veterans and such people are causing inflation. It was necessary to increase considerably the amounts of money in these areas. It was especially necessary to introduce the guaranteed income supplement to make sure these people had enough to sustain them in inflationary times. This is something a humane government does but it has to be done with some restraint and responsibility.

Another big area involving payments to people is family allowances. I have heard members of the opposition speak about cutting back but I have never heard anybody specify where they might cut back except in this one area. I have heard discussions about cutting back in the area of family allowances or paying family allowances on a needs basis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) on a point of order.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. parliamentary secretary rather than just being vague would have the courtesy to be specific about where he has heard such a thing. I know it was our party that proposed indexing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. That is not a point of order; that is a question.

Mr. Dick: Will he answer the question? He cannot.

Mr. McRae: No, I cannot place the names.

An hon. Member: It was the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), one of your own.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I shall look up some references I have.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I am sure it is well within the rules of the House to inform a colleague. For his information, the member who indicated the position that he has just accused us of taking, quite wrongfully, was the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), his colleague.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yesterday.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to look at my references. I believe I can furnish the information about the reference to paying family allowances on some kind of needs basis or changing them so that they only go to those who need them. I will say in this I am referring to the Tory opposition, not the NDP, because we can be sure where there is money to be spent they want to spend even more.

To continue, if we are to cut government spending in a big way then it has to be in some of these areas. The next area is subsidies. In this fiscal year the federal government paid out something in the neighbourhood of $2.2 billion; close to 6 per cent of the total federal budget goes to subsidies. When I refer to subsidies, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about subsidies to all groups and not just to Crown corporations because they are dealt with in another clause of the bill. We are talking about subsidies to do some of the things that many members of this House feel must be done.

I was not happy to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) suggest that we be concerned about subsidies in terms of the user-pay concept. I am afraid I do not agree with that concept because Canada has been built on the opposite concept. In some way this has to be a nation which shares. The user-pay concept might not work and I have a great deal of difficulty with it. I therefore have difficulty in criticizing most of the subsidies as the whole country is based on developing some equality between all regions. In my opinion, user-pay is an unethical concept.

To move on to some other items, Mr. Speaker, $4.6 billion or 12.1 per cent of federal spending is for Crown corporations. In this area we have had a hard fight in the last two or three years to get an organization like Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation, to do something for Canadians in the field of petroleum. I feel that Petro-Canada, Panarctic, Canadian National Railways, Air Canada and so on are Crown corporations which should be supported with subsidies or some kind of funding. These transfer items make up 70 per cent of the total federal budget. The last item is the national debt which takes $4.6 billion or 12 per cent of the total federal budget. No one would suggest we could cut very much there. As a matter of fact, the increasing expenditures there stem mostly from the fact that inflation has caused increases in interest rates and therefore government expenditures have increased.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that government spending is the only, or even the most important, cause of inflation. I think a good deal of government spending is inflationary but the vast majority of increases in government spending have been as a result of inflation. They may contribute but because of inflation they have been necessary. If we look at inflation in the year 1973-74 we find we are talking about world inflation caused basically by an excess of demand over supply. The demand seen in 1973-74 was extremely heavy. That is why I think the Tory Party was wrong in the spring of 1974 and the election of 1974 in saying they would bring in controls—although I admit a change was occurring. At that particular time, we were trying to control something which was caused by an excess of demand and a shortage of supply. Controls at that point probably would have made the situation considerably worse.

● (1600)

However, there was a distinct change between the spring and summer of 1974 and the fall of 1975, and this is the key to the matter. During the summer of 1974 one could still say that inflation was caused by excessive demand. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in the throne speech debate of the fall of 1974, wages were not a major contributing factor to inflation at that point. Nevertheless, between October, 1974, and October, 1975, wage settlements averaged 21.8 per cent, or more than double the size of average wage settlements in the United States. Therefore, in the fall of 1975 we faced some serious wage demands.

Mr. Brisco: There was pressure from the people.

Mr. McRae: We faced the sort of demands we had not faced earlier. For example, the postal workers were asking for 71 per cent more, certain teacher groups 40 per cent and more, and so it went. In the summer and fall of 1975 we faced a great many unreasonable demands on the economy. In the spring of 1975 we asked the labour movement and the business community to restrain their demands voluntarily. Unfortunately, our endeavour did not succeed, so that by the fall of 1975 we faced cost-push inflation and had to deal with it. It then became necessary to introduce controls.

Without question, in the little more than one year which has elapsed since October, 1975, we have contained inflation. The inflation rate for the period October, 1975, to October, 1976, was about 6.2 per cent, as compared with 10.6 per cent for the period October, 1974, to October, 1975. Clearly, the inflation rate has declined substantially. True, many factors are responsible for the decline, but controls are a major factor. At the same time, wage rate increases which were running at slightly under 22 per cent in the first half of 1975 declined one year later to around 11 per cent. Clearly, since wage increases average about 11 per cent and inflation about 6.2 per cent, even if one does not allow for some productivity gains one can say that the workingman and the average Canadian is now basically better off—and this improvement can be largely attributed to controls.

Those who say we are controlling only wages but not profits I say are mistaken. It is not true. In real dollars, profits declined in the order of 7 per cent in the past year. We have considered wages and squeezed profits in our attempt to cut back the rate of inflation. Although some may claim they have been dealt with unjustly, generally speaking Canadians have benefited from this government's anti-inflation program. Therefore, it can be said that the government's anti-inflation program has reduced inflation.

Other cost factors have yet to make themselves felt and we shall need to control them if we are to keep inflation under control. This coming winter we face the alarming prospect of more than 7 per cent of our work force being jobless. We shall need to create jobs. This will involve government spending which in turn will create inflationary pressures.

Other capital programs which will arise in future will create distortions in our economy. Specifically I am thinking of the $180 billion in capital which it is projected we shall need during the next 15 years to develop energy. That sum, on a reasonably amortized basis, works out at something over $3,000 per family per year in this country in terms of present-day dollars. Such expenditures could well create tremendous inflationary pressures.

I think it is well to remember what has happened with respect to the James Bay project. When I was first elected to this House it was said that the James Bay project would cost between $3 billion and $4 billion. Now one hears that the project will cost between $15 b illion and $16 billion. One can see the effects of inflation—and such costs are quoted in present-day dollars. I think the Liberal government of Quebec was defeated in the recent election partly because the enormous cost of the project was distorting the economy of Quebec. The project was creating tremendous expectations in Quebec, expectations which were inflationary.

Therefore, when we consider that we shall need to spend $180 billion over 15 years for energy development, it is clear that we shall see many distortions in the Canadian economy. If we are to avoid such distortions, we must consider a reduced use of energy, and energy conservation. Only if we cut back on energy demands will we survive unscathed. But that is another story. As I say, the $180 billion we shall spend on capital needs over a 15-year period will create tremendous inflationary pressures in our economy. This means that we shall not be able to do many of the things we want to do and we shall need to change many of our ways.

Let me repeat my point. Although we can solve some of our difficulties with a certain amount of restraint, there are real limits to the amount of restraint we can tolerate without totally distorting the economy. As I said, 70 per cent of the federal budget is spent on various kinds of transfer payments; only 30 per cent is spent on the operation of the government. Therefore, if there is to be restraint in spending, it will have to come in the area of transfer payments and I do not believe we can cut spending in those areas without substantially hurting the Canadian public. In future we shall face continuous inflationary pressures, particularly from capital spending for energy development. Consequently, I foresee a long-term need for a government anti-inflation program. We must restrain the demand of both the private and public sectors on our resources. As a nation, we must all restrain our demands.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member who just sat down believes what he said—and I think he is sincere and usually believes what he says—one can only say that the government operates on the basis that it can fool some of the people most of the time, and fool its own backbenchers all of the time.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): And the opposition tries to fool all the people all of the time.

Mr. Baldwin: This bill seeks to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures. Its short title is "government expenditures restraint act". The operative words in the full title are "restraint of government expenditures." I agree with the objective, intention and reasons of the bill. Inflation is the number one problem in this country and in other parts of the world. The government has not done a great deal about it and is not doing very much with it in this bill. This is cosmetic legislation designed to deceive, delude and fool people.

● (1610)

Let us talk a little about inflation. That is what the hon. member was doing. To a large extent, inflation is a question of psychology. It was obviously with that in mind that this government, little more than a year ago, produced the anti-inflation program and the legislation on which it was based. The government had fought an election 14 months before, challenging and denying the validity of the proposals advanced by this party and other people in Canada. A short time before October 13, 1975, the government said it was categorically opposed to controls and had no intention of introducing them. That is the most certain reason the program was doomed to failure.

It is psychology upon which inflation feeds itself. I do not think there is any doubt about that. People have a very understandable desire to protect themselves from the storms of increasing prices, from the danger of prices of goods and commodities being increased. They want to protect themselves to ensure they have adequate savings against that sort of situation. When they demand increases either in wages or in the price of the commodities they sell, they not only make allowance for the current year but the next year as well. The cumulative effect is the reason for inflation.

On October 13 and 14, 1975, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) solemnly announced to the people of Canada that he was going to bring about the end of inflation. He stated that we were to have controls, and explained the way they were going to work. If at that time there were some fairly well indexed and buttressed reasons for the government's position, that might have been a saleable proposition. However, the people of Canada do not believe this Prime Minister; they do not believe this government, a government with a record of deception, slyness and an incapacity to tell the truth about situations dealing with inflation. They are just not believable.

When the anti-inflation program was announced and the legislation brought down, the people shrugged their shoulders and turned away from it. The psychological aspect which should have been the standard core of the program was eliminated from the beginning. When over the years a government practices organized deception, it is not easy to persuade the public that they have changed their attitude. That is one of the reasons a provincial government was defeated yesterday.

The hon. member asked us to believe that this government is taking logical, reasonable and believable steps at this time to deal with the program which will bring about a cessation or diminution of inflation. He stated that Bill C-19 is a vehicle designed to achieve that effect. He cannot expect the public of Canada to buy that kind of proposition.

There are ways in which it can be done. It will not be easy. The public has become cynical. People do not accept the word of government at this stage. They have been told on many occasions, over many years, by the Prime Minister and by successive Ministers of Finance that inflation is beaten. That is almost like a cease-fire in Lebanon which seems to happen every two or three days. Therefore, the public do not believe this government when it tells that story. It would not be impossible for this government, if it were really determined, to deal with the question of inflation by trying to create in the minds of people an honest and sincere belief that they are going to exercise restraint in government expenditures.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

The hon. member spoke about James Bay. I am glad he did. It reminded me of a statement which I made not very long ago and which I will again call to the attention of the House. Practically all the programs initiated by governments in Canada over the past 20 or 25 years, with one or two exceptions, have more than exceeded their estimated cost. When these programs are brought down, whether they involve construction expenditures or are social benefit programs, some indication is given as to what the cost is likely to be. On every occasion, with one or two exceptions, that estimate has been exceeded. I do not know whether the estimate was made falsely, with gross negligence, from ignorance, or outright lying: that, I cannot tell. I could list the programs but I do not have the time. However, in each and every case they have more than exceeded, by a substantial amount, the original cost. When you pile these programs one on top of another, it becomes the basis of inflation which has racked this country and other countries of the world. The belief that you can have guns and butter was one of the reasons that led the Germans into the last war, thinking they could finance an operation of that kind.

When these programs are finally brought to fruition the costs are infinitely increased. Add them together and you find you need more taxation to pay for them. Taxation means that the people providing the goods and services in this country have to charge more. That creates inflation. That is not a bad situation for the wealthy or the powerful unions which have the capacity of obtaining higher wages or better prices for commodities. However, for the old, the infirm or those on small, fixed wages it becomes an impossible situation. There is no question about it; we are going to be faced with this problem until a government of this country comes to grips with the question of restraint.

I want to suggest to the government one or two things they can do if they are sincere. They can tell the public the truth about what it costs to operate this country. It is impossible for even an intelligent person to examine the blue book on estimates and come up with any firm knowledge about what is intended. Over the last eight or nine years the number of votes in the estimates has increased. The language has become unintelligible. There are a great many $1 items which provide for the expenditure of money by order in council or regulation about which we never get to find the facts.

● (1620)

There has been foisted upon the taxpayers of this country a system by which moneys are taken out of their pockets in connection with estimates which in many cases we are unable to examine with any degree of clarity. Even if the estimates have been extended and made intelligible to us, there is no system available to parliament for conducting a reasonable examination of them to determine whether they involve the expenditure of money in which the country should be engaged. There is no system at all. There is a fixed calendar date on which estimates are deemed to have been passed. The main purpose of parliament, which is to refuse to grant supply until all grievances have been ventilated, has gone by the board. If this government wants to persuade the people of Canada that it finally wishes to exercise restraint, it will take the initiative by providing ways and means by which control can be exercised. My hon. friend from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has been questioning members of the treasury bench for some time with these things in mind. The reaction has not been very favourable, and if the reaction to my proposals is the same as it has been to his questions, I do not think much notice will be taken of them.

There is one other suggestion I would make. It is that we find some means whereby, when the government is introducing legislation or planning programs of any kind, it is compelled to make known to the House precisely what expenditure is involved. If the government reintroduces, for example, a bill varying the unemployment insurance benefits, or dealing with immigration, no such legislation should be considered unless it contains a clause setting out the probable cost. Such open disclosure would have a salutary, wholesome effect in restraining government expenditure.

We forget, now, how much we were told 25 years ago what the St. Lawrence Seaway would cost. Were we ever told the probable cost of the medical and hospital insurance schemes, both of them intrinsically useful proposals? We were never told the truth about what they would cost. It might well be that had we known what those costs would be, restraints would have been placed upon the degree to which they were implemented. It is this failure on the part of the government to be honest and truthful in connection with public expenditure which has made the public so unwilling to accept half-measures such as those now before us.

I submit that my proposition makes sense. If you or I, Mr. Speaker, decide to write a letter to one of our constituents, we know that such a letter might very well be published and we are careful to state the facts as they are. I feel the government should be compelled to follow a similar course when it comes to legislation and new projects. Take, for example, Bill C-20, the next bill on the order paper, the bill concerning the Auditor General. This is a bill of which I am very much in favour and it is one to which a price-tag could be attached. It is my strong belief that in order to persuade the public that the government means what it says, more truth must be conveyed to them with regard to programs of expenditure.

I offer those two suggestions to government and government members and, in conclusion, I say to them that if Bill C-19 is the only answer the government has to the refusal of the public to accept its sincerity when it comes to the question of restraint in government spending, they have lost the case before it has even come to court.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief comment on the complaint of my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that government estimates are not spelled out clearly. This is a matter which has been of concern to me since my arrival in this House four years ago. I have often wondered why the government did not issue a true budget. Maybe it should be 50, 60 or 70 pages long, with the various programs, the number of man-years in each program, the number of personnel and the expenditure set out so that people could scrutinize closely each department and what they proposed to spend—much as they would do in the case of a corporation budget or even a family budget—so they might know what was planned. Then if more than was necessary was spent, they could zero in and find out exactly why that program was over budget. Indeed, if a program did not make use of all the funds allotted to it, the funds for the program could be trimmed in future years to what was actually needed. I have often felt this would not only help members of parliament in their scrutiny of government affairs, but would clear away secrecy by putting the figures in the books in an intelligible form so that most members of parliament would understand them in addition to the public.

Today we are discussing Bill C-19 which is part of the government's program of restraint. The government decided, on the day before Thanksgiving last year, 1975, that they had bungled the job, that they were going to swallow themselves and reverse their former position, introduce controls and at the same time exercise restraint in government spending. This bill is laughable if it is really going to deal with government restraint. It is a bill which is going to wipe out some provisions which cost some money, but it does not go to the core of the problem. The core of the problem is that the government embarks on programs and does not reassess older programs to see whether they should be continued or, in fact, discontinued. Last year we heard the government was going to cut out the CYC, the Opportunities for Youth program and cut down the LIP program. Then, of course, we heard in the Speech from the Throne and through the Minister of Manpower that they were going to introduce new programs which virtually would pick up the slack which they had originally cut out a year before in their so-called restraint program.

There is one aspect of this bill which greatly concerns me. I think it is a phony issue which the government has included in its restraint package. That is something that is false and misleading. The fact is that the government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), has stated on previous occasions that one of the best ways of increasing industrial productivity is to encourage development of high technology and innovative new processes. At that time the Minister of Finance went on to say that this was a high-risk business and a difficult one into which to attract venture capital. However, the minister promised to look at the problem and to do so on a priority basis, whatever that might mean. I suppose that means whenever a new government is formed to take over from the tired bones that are presently on the treasury benches.

● (1630)

Clause 10 of the bill would wipe out the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. This seems, to me, to be a retrograde step. On March 10 of this year the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced that after providing more than $220 million in research and development funds to some 3,000 Canadian companies during the last nine years, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, known as IRDIA, would come to an end this year. The fact is that the government is announcing it is going to wipe out the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, and this after the Minister of Finance has stated that the way to increase industrial productivity is to encourage the development of high technology and innovative new processes. So it seems that the government are speaking out of both sides of their mouth at the same time. I say clause 10 is a very retrograde step.

It strikes me that over the last nine years many industries in this country, especially those involved in the technological area of computers and new electronic hardware which is so commonly used, have taken advantage of this kind of government support to improve their products and to make themselves more competitive in markets throughout Canada and overseas. We have heard that the government is going to replace the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act with some other new legislation. But what, Mr. Speaker? The government has not had the guts to tell the House with what they are going to replace this legislation. The government is so secretive that it does not want to tell the Canadian people how it is going to increase technology, research and development in this country by some new legislation or through some new proposals. By passing this bill the government wants us to wipe out the existing support that is provided, and leave us in the dark as to what new programs it has in this very important area.

Is this because the government is in the habit of being so secretive about all its programs? Is this because the government really does not have a program with which to replace the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act? Or is the program such that the government is afraid to let the Canadian people scrutinize it to see whether it is as good as the one the government wants to do away with? I believe the government is afraid of scrutiny. Perhaps it is going to wait until the next budget or till some other time when it will try to introduce a program and have it shoved through parliament in short order without thorough examination. That program may not be as beneficial to Canadian industry and to the Canadian economy as the present program.

At the present time we are approaching an unemployment level in Canada of 8 per cent, and will probably be at this level next May. We have this level because industry is not producing at capacity or anything like capacity, and because the economy is on a downturn. I would say that both of these unfortunate situations are to a large extent the result of the ineptitude of the present government in handling the economy by putting the country first rather than wanting to do the best for all its citizens.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, the government has from time to time taken a rather partisan view and has put the Liberal party before the country. They have taken a number of politically expedient steps, such as swallowing themselves on the anti-inflation measures when only a year before they had been saying they would not want to freeze prices at high levels and freeze wages at low levels. They said the leader of the Conservative party had advocated this during the campaign, and that they had counter-attacked.

During the 1974 campaign the Liberal party used the advertising gimmick of showing a picture of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) pushing an ice cream cooler around and saying, "They are going to freeze your wages at a low level, and zap!". That is the kind of "intelligent" comment that the Prime Minister uses all the time. Perhaps this is what happens with governments which are corrupt, which are bungling and which are feeding upon themselves for their own political purposes. Then, finally, the populace wakes up and throws them out for whatever alternative is available, in the hope that they will get truthful and open government.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the government had to swallow itself. Having denounced one program, a year later it introduced that which was denounced. This government is afraid to come clean with the Canadian people as to where it intends to go. This government has created a climate in which business and free enterprise are not willing to expand. This government has created a climate in which people are not investing in the expansion of existing facilities or in new facilities. People in Canada and outside Canada who might be interested in investing in this country are reluctant to expand the manufacturing capacity of the Canadian economy.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, more and more we are finding manufacturing concerns which might have expanded in Canada going south of the border or to other countries where the economic environment is better for them. Indeed, it appears that a subsidiary of Northern Telecom, a company that used to be called Bell Northern and which is 66 per cent owned by Bell Canada, the mother of all Canadian telecommunications firms and which we liked to think of as "Mother Bell", a great Canadian enterprise, is opening a plant in California which will employ 12,000 people. Why is it that those jobs are not here in Canada? We have many more Northern Telecom plants in Canada, but this new facility is going to California, their having phased-out their microsystems plant in this country.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, the reason is that they cannot get the productivity they require. They cannot have the wage rates that are necessary in this country to be competitive in world markets, and the environment, created largely by this government, has not been of a sufficiently strong nature to encourage business. I believe that business and manufacturing are important to this country. If Canada is to grow and to prosper, we will need jobs so our people can be employed. Canada cannot afford 8 per cent unemployment. Canada cannot afford to have a situation where 46.7 per cent of the 780,000 people who are unemployed today are the youth of this country between the ages of 16 and 24. They represent almost 50 per cent of the unemployed people in this country.

● (1640)

The youth with whom I have spoken are not interested in grants such as through the LIP program, OFY or the suggestion that they be quiet this year and see what will be done next year. They are interested in a growing economy, an expanding economy which will produce jobs so there will be a place where they can go to obtain a job with a future, security and opportunities for advancement. They want a worth-while form of employment rather than a make-work project. But this government continually falls back on these make-work projects because it has not created the climate for business and enterprise in this country. Indeed, the businesses and enterprises which might have expanded have postponed their expansion until the climate improves. As I have indicated, one can talk to many businessmen or people in the financial sector who will indicate that many businesses have decided to carry on their expansion outside Canada, perhaps in the United States, in the Caribbean, in Malaysia or in Ireland where there are tax-free zones. They certainly are not doing it here.

If we are to prosper and retain a high standard of living, Canada needs a manufacturing industry with high technology which is competitive in the world. What do we have? We have a government which would wipe out one of the only important programs we have, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. We read comments in the press to the effect that Canada is stumbling along without a science policy, that Canada's science policy is headed for disaster and that the government has only played with a science policy. A former Liberal member in this House, now Senator Maurice Lamontagne, headed a royal commission in respect of a science policy for Canada. Yet this government is not doing anything about this.

At that time the minister indicated that he believed Canada needed an investment in science and technology. The Senate Special Committee on Science Policy, under the chairmanship of Senator Maurice Lamontagne, made an exhaustive study of Canada's research and development efforts with respect to this country's economic needs and issued a three-volume report entitled "A Science Policy for Canada". The third volume recommended that Canada should steadily increase its support of research and development, such as through the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, I may suggest.

As I was saying, the third volume recommended that Canada should steadily increase its support of research and development and achieve by 1980—only 3½ years from now—2.5 per cent of our gross national product. It indicated that a corresponding increase should have been made for support of basic research, scientific research in our universities and other research institutions. A recent Statistics Canada survey of leading performers shows that the in-house research and development expenditures, as a percentage of the gross national product, declined in terms of current dollars to about .37 per cent in 1973 from .44 per cent in 1967.

Although the government set up the Senate Special Committee on Science Policy under Liberal Senator Maurice Lamontagne, a former cabinet minister in the Pearson days, to look at a science policy, as recently as 1973 our contribution has been declining to a point where it is .37 per cent of the gross national product. Again may I suggest that .37 per cent is a long way from the figure of 2.5 per cent which, as has been indicated, is what we need if we are to be a technologically-based industrial nation.

Because we do not have our manufacturing on a proper base, Canada ends up selling more resources. We say we will mine a little more of our natural resources and send them abroad in the unprocessed form. We say that we will cut more of the trees in our forests and send them abroad in the unprocessed state. We say that we will take whatever we can for our wheat crops and send them abroad. This country has not advanced in the way of becoming a nation truly based on an industrial technology. Instead, the government takes the retrograde step of cutting out one of the acts which is most beneficial.

Earlier I heard the parliamentary secretary from Fort William indicate that this bill is a step toward cutting out excess government expenditures, that it is a restraint measure. He said that no one has suggested ways in which the government could cut down on its spending. Of course, I was so bold as to interrupt him at that point and suggest that perhaps the government could cut down its spending by disallowing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to spend $750,000 flying around in his private jet. He did not like that. I doubt that the head of any other corporation in this country spends so much money on his personal travel habits.

On many occasions members of this party have pointed out that we do not believe the government needs to spend $1 billion a year on consultants. Why does the government hire consultants all the time? Is it because the expertise is not available in the public service? Of course not. Our public service is filled with competent, able people who want to do a good job. They have the competence to analyse and to make studies and projections in respect of projects which are to go ahead; but instead the government goes outside and hires private consultants in the belief that in that way it can get off the hook. If the government follows the recommendations of the consultants, and the advice should turn out to be bad, then it can say that it followed the advice of the private consultants.

The fact is that the government is spending the money twice, because it already has the expertise. We do not think Canada needs to spend $1 billion a year on outside consultants when we have competent civil servants who want to do a good, thorough job. The minister mentioned Petro-Can. I believe our party advised the government that it did not need to spend money setting up its own private Crown corporation. We felt that the private sector could perhaps do a better job than Petro-Can.

• (1650)

Of course, the minister talked about PanArctic. He felt that Canadians had a good investment in PanArctic but, again, it required the government to put out money. It also required the government to put out a great deal of money to set up the Canadian Development Corporation. Perhaps the government should reassess its priorities rather than delving into the private sector. Perhaps the government should spend its money on running the affairs of the country rather than dabbling in areas in which it will probably not do nearly as well as the private sector is doing.

Of course, the government may be able to achieve some restraint in DREE. I happen to come from a constituency a large part of which was especially designated for a number of years under DREE and now, under the Regional Development Incentives Act, is eligible for DREE grants. But the strange thing is that of the 16 or so companies that received DREE grants in my constituency, over 50 per cent have gone bankrupt. I am not sure that the successful ones really needed government money to make the investment, such as Union Carbide, that small international firm, Chase Nuclear, Noranda Metals—all very small firms. They are the ones which received DREE grants and which are successful in my area, but the other firms went bankrupt. Of course, the promoter did not lose his shirt, but he did not advance much money, anyhow, when he tried to follow on a government grant.

That is what is going on in DREE. The first DREE grant that was made in New Brunswick went to the McCain food people who, of course, were the people in New Brunswick who supported the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was running for leadership. I am sure there was no pork-barrelling done in that situation. It is just that my eyes keep deceiving me when I see these big firms getting the money, and I wonder why they always support the Liberal party.

Perhaps there should be some cuts in the DREE area. Perhaps the government should reassess itself. We now have 32 cabinet ministers, the largest number of cabinet ministers we have had at any time since confederation. Is the government more complicated, or do they just need more idiots to do the bungling job they are doing? A lot of them do not appear to have any responsibility. I understand that there is one minister without portfolio whose only responsibility is to be the whip of the party, and that was his position before he was appointed minister. I do not know whether he has any other responsibilities in the House, but perhaps they will think of something in the near future. I wonder if he gets double salary!

What the government needs to do is put forth what they have in the way of policy to replace the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. I think they should tell the people what they can expect from the government before they wipe out what was in the past. If you are on an island, you want to build a bridge in front of you before you cut down the bridge behind you and isolate yourself.

As I indicated earlier, Senator Lamontagne, in his report, indicated that Canada had to make a sizeable investment in science and technology so as to maintain our standard of living and build a good industrial base for our society. Perhaps I should also say that the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development indicated that of the 12 most prosperous countries in the world which it had surveyed and which were spending various percentages of their gross national product on research and development, Canada stood tenth. There were nine other countries ahead of us, namely, the United States, France, the United Kingdom, Sweden, Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, Japan and Norway. So we end up with those who really believe in making the investment, but, oddly enough, among those countries are a number of countries which happen to be ahead of us in their standard of living.

In saying that Canada is tenth in line and that we are flying by the seat of our pants, I am trying to express concern about the small amount of money that the Canadian government has encouraged should be spent on research and development. In order to show the concern that many people in this country have had about this, I should like to read an extract from a letter written to me by a constituent, a small company which started a year and a half ago with four founders and which has now grown to the extent of employing 19 people. In its second full year of operation it appears that this company will have a capital of half a million dollars. Perhaps I can sum up by indicating that it got its start because it had $19,000 in the form of an industrial research and development grant and is now employing 19 people rather than four. I believe this is the type of program which business needs in this country.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Allegation borrowers asked to use lawyers selected by corporation; the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave)—Agriculture—Request for assurance beef quotas applicable only to meat in transit to Canada on October 17; the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan)—Energy—Reason for failure to subsidize cost of electricity in Atlantic region.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR THE USE OF HUMANE TRAPS FOR ANIMALS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Item No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin)?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand at the request of the government. Item No. 3, in the name of the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington)?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand at the request of the government. Item No. 7, in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand at the request of the government.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved that Bill C-208, to amend the Criminal Code (humane traps) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising at second reading of this bill I want to make it clear that I have no intention of speaking at great length, and I also want to express my appreciation to those hon. members from all sides of the House who have indicated their support for this bill.

There is support for this bill from hon. members on both sides of the House and among citizens of the country, and from associations such as the Association for the Protection of Furbearing Animals. I have also received petitions from a number of parts of the country. For example, I have a petition from Nepean High School here in Ottawa signed by a number of students. There is also a petition from Kingston, Ontario, signed by 1,586 members of the Humane Society of Kingston.

My desire to be brief is motivated by the hope that others will also speak briefly in support of this measure and that before six o'clock we can vote to have it referred to a committee, or at least to have its subject matter referred to a committee.

This bill is designed to meet a variety of Canadian demands. There is a general demand for a device which will trap animals in a manner which does not cause them agony and suffering nor cause them to die of starvation, bloodletting, or as victims of predators. Second, the demand is for a device which will enable those whose livelihood depends on furs to continue their trade in the knowledge that they have not been the cause of agony and suffering nor of condemning living creatures to die of starvation, suffering, or as victims of predators.

I want to make it very clear at the outset that it is not my intention to destroy the trapping industry or to interfere with it in any way. I know Canadian history and the role trapping has played therein. We need to apply modern technology to this long standing Canadian enterprise.

There is a third demand which I am hoping to meet, and that is the demand of Canadian trappers for a device which will give them a good pelt and not a damaged one.

Of the traps in use today, the most common are the leg-hold and the wire snare. These do not serve the purposes nor meet the demands I have already recorded. Both these devices produce results such as those this bill is trying to avoid: agony, suffering, starvation, victimization and, frequently, damaged pelts.

How, then, do I propose to meet these demands and replace these vicious instruments with better ones? The bill seeks to encourage the development of alternative trapping devices. The simple purport of this bill is to develop alternative trapping devices which can be rated by the Minister of State (Fisheries) and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) as preferable to the ones now in use. Once these alternative devices are available—and it may be a different device for each size or kind of animal—the existing devices will be banned, whether they be leg-hold traps, snares, or any other type of trap which inflicts cruel and unusual punishment on furbearing animals. By banning, this bill stipulates that the very setting of such a device causing unnecessary cruelty, when a better device is available, is a criminal offence and punishable accordingly. It also stipulates that the manufacture, import or sale of the less desirable device is likewise a criminal offence and therefore also punishable accordingly.

One is bound to ask how such devices are to be developed and brought to the attention, first, of the ministry for testing and approval, and subsequently, to the attention of the trade and the industry?

In September, 1973, a federal-provincial committee on humane trapping was established to test and develop better trapping devices. This committee was set up and funded by the ten provinces, the federal government and the two territories. It has had at its disposal something like $75,000 per year for a five year program, but only 30 per cent of that allocation goes toward trap development. Most of the remainder, unfortunately, goes toward administrative costs. It does seem to be underfunded. In the first two years of its existence no funds whatever were allocated for trap testing. To the best of my knowledge some 100 traps have been submitted to the committee, but less than ten devices in the short time following those two years have been found worthy of further tests. Therefore halfway through its term the committee offers very little hope of real achievement, judging by its performance so far.

We are bound to ask ourselves whether the committee is under-funded or whether it is well administered. We do not know. I think this bill and this reference to a committee will offer us an opportunity to find out.

I should therefore like the bill or its intent to be referred to a committee where we can summon spokesmen of this federal-provincial group and secure from them an accounting of their activities. We should also be able to have interested organizations appear before the committee and give evidence and advice.

It seems to me that this federal-provincial committee ought to be providing, in addition to its other services, incentive grants for invention, as well as testing devices already on the drawing boards. One of the traps tested by the committee was invented, I am told, without financial support from the committee by an elderly experienced trapper who, for lack of funds, was obliged to scavenge the material for his working model from junk yards and secondhand shops. This enterprise ought to have been assisted and encouraged. The inventor ought at least to have been recompensed for his input.

Another way of getting things done and of getting proper devices developed would be for the committee to offer inducements to private and public research communities to inquire more closely into this important activity. There are people who rely on it for their livelihood. We are not denying that, and we are not trying to deny them their livelihood.

The two suggestions, together with extended funding from the same sources, are the only ones which can possibly produce results which all desire. In order to get this process under way I most earnestly request this House to let us proceed, before six o'clock, to a vote on this measure and to get it into a committee where the desired action and publicity can be obtained.

In conclusion, if this does not meet with the approval of hon. members on the government side, I would like to make a suggestion. If the government is not prepared to let the bill go to a committee, perhaps some hon. member opposite could be induced to move a relevant motion to have at least its subject matter referred to a committee, and I hope an hon. member opposite will so move. In that event I hope no objection will be raised on any side of the House to this procedural device, it being understood, of course, that once the motion is moved, discussion can continue. It would not cut off discussion, provided also, of course, that we end discussion just before six o'clock.

● (1710)

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to commend the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), whose constituency is not too far down the road from Comox-Alberni, for raising the subject he has briefly discussed.

I think all of us in this House would agree that the present inhumane way of trapping in Canada is something of which we are not very proud. It would be fair to say that for several hundred years we have used a method of trapping which is inhumane and barbaric and which we would not allow in killing domestic animals for consumption. I think the hon. member should be commended for drawing the attention of the House to this matter and to the fact that for the last two years a federal-provincial committee has been studying the subject. The present effort to develop traps which would be more humane than the traditional leg-hold trap is an example of the useful role the federal government plays in an area which is basically under provincial legislation.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

The Canadian Wildlife Service of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, following provincial requests in 1973, assisted in establishing a federal-provincial committee for humane trapping and has provided considerable expertise and financing for this very worthy project. Traps selected by the committee as worthy of serious study are presently being tested by the Canadian Wildlife Service. From the results of the early phases of this testing program the Canadian Wildlife Service will develop scientific criteria for the committee by which the committee can evaluate other traps.

After the first phase of laboratory work and field testing the Wildlife Service will help the committee to develop scientifically valid standards for humane traps. These standards can then be used by provincial governments in their regulation of trapping. I emphasize that the provinces will be charged with the ultimate responsibility of bringing the regulations into force regarding humane trapping.

The federal-provincial committee for humane trapping has a five-year program due to be finalized in 1979. The committee has a difficult task because the technology of steel traps has been extensively developed over a period of 100 or 200 years without producing any satisfactory alternative to the use of the leg-hold traps. I think it is unrealistic to expect a replacement of this within one or two years. The need to replace the leg-hold trap is clearly indicated, but to expect the necessary technology to be developed in a short space of time is unrealistic.

The Department of Fisheries and the Environment fully supports the work of the federal-provincial committee for humane trapping. When this program is complete, national standards for humane trapping will be available to all Canadian jurisdictions vis-à-vis the question of regulating trapping. I think that would be the time to consider legislative means of enforcing the use of humane traps in Canada. In my opinion, such legislation, prior to the completion of the committee's work, would be to act without the required knowledge.

Having some doubt about whether the hon. member's bill is constitutional and whether the federal government has any jurisdiction over the use of leg-hold traps, I would like to propose an amendment that the subject matter be referred not to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs but to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, and I realize this can only be done by unanimous consent. I was pleased when the hon. member remarked that this was satisfactory to him and that it would not end debate which would continue until the appointed hour. Mr. Speaker, I would therefore ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Anderson: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail):

That the motion be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the word "that" and substituting therefor the following:

Bill C-208, an act to amend the Criminal Code (humane traps), be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall the motion, as amended, carry?

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to state my opposition to Bill C-208 as it now stands. While I can appreciate the motives behind this bill, I feel that the House should consider the full implications of this legislation. As a northerner and one who has spent some time on the trapline, and who has frozen his butt a few times when out trying to make a living, I am particularly concerned with the effect this bill will have on the trappers and their traditional means of making a living in the north. If the bill is passed as it now reads it will place severe burdens on individuals who have enough problems meeting day-to-day working conditions as hunters and trappers.

The hon. member who introduced this bill may not realize that most trappers operate individually. They have no big corporation to provide operating capital and expense accounts. The trapper must finance his entire enterprise out of his own pocket. Hon. members may be interested to note that the trappers of Canada are one of the few genuine private enterprisers left in this country. There may be fewer of these individual enterprisers left if this bill becomes law.

For the information of hon. members I would point out that a dozen standard six size 1½ traps cost $28.80 at the Hudson's Bay store in Inuvik, Northwest Territories. The average trapper needs at least 200 or 300 traps. This means that the trapper will have to pay out over $500 to $600 to obtain a new line of trapping equipment. This would be about $600 over and above all of his other operating expenses. I believe the average income of a trapper in the north is around $1,500 or $2,000 per year.

As it is now, the trapper has to invest a lot of his money to replace traps each year that are lost, that are worn out, that are broken, and in some cases maybe even traps that have been stolen. Now the hon. member from Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) wants to add a new financial burden for hard-working individuals.

I should point out to this House that the trapper, for all of his hard work in the field, only makes a small percentage of the sales price of the finished item. Any trapper in Canada can quickly tell this House how tiny is the trapper's share in the price of a fur coat, for example.

● (1720)

The cost of traps is only a small part of the trapper's operating expenses. He must furnish his own transportation in order to operate. His transportation could consist of a dog team, which is costly to operate, or of a motor toboggan, and I do not need to tell hon. members how costly they are. I expect most hon. members already know. The trapper must buy a lot of camping equipment, which is most expensive, and lots of expensive winter clothing if he is to survive and operate in the extreme northern temperatures. And it gets very cold; temperatures go to well below zero. As well, food is expensive in all of northern Canada. For example in Yellowknife food costs at least 30 per cent more than in Edmonton which is only 1,000 miles away by gravel highway. The trapper must buy large quantities of food in order to work for long periods on his traplines and earn his living.

Trapping is a traditional way of life in northern Canada. As it is the trapper makes but a meagre living from his hard work. I have known many trappers, and can assure hon. members here that they are hard workers who enjoy their line of work. They are not interested in welfare but many could be forced on to welfare rolls if this bill were to pass, since their operating costs would rise.

I feel that in this proposed bill the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has his priorities completely confused. The effect of the bill would be to punish trappers for pursuing their traditional way of living. The bill would class as criminals trappers who do not have money to invest immediately for a new line of traps.

The bill, if passed, would place an unfair burden on the RCMP, members which would be required to patrol trap lines across the north. It would place a great burden as well on game officers, conservation officers, and environmental inspectors. All of these people have better things to do than harass hard-working individuals pursuing a line of work which has long been traditional in the north.

I submit that the bill uses a negative approach to gain a positive response. Its logic is all wrong. Why not use a positive approach to gain a positive response?

If the hon. member wants trappers to purchase a new kind of trap the federal government should provide an incentive for the purchase of such traps and not punish those trying to make a living under difficult conditions.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I never introduced the kind of bill the hon. member describes.

Mr. Firth: I would recommend an amendment to the Regional Development Incentives Act. The government could provide grants to all trappers using the new humane traps mentioned earlier, if the new traps become available. In so doing the government would be encouraging a line of work which has enjoyed a long tradition in this country, and would not be punishing people for wanting to work at something they have known all their lives. Trapping is the only means of making a living that some northern people know.

Humane Animal Traps

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for bringing forward Bill C-208 for discussion. I subscribe to its purposes. The explanatory note reads:

The purpose of this amendment is to prohibit the use of leg-hold snares and other inhumane types of trap where a practical alternative is now available or becomes available in the future, to promote the eventual phasing-out of such traps, and to encourage the correct setting of traps meant to cause instantaneous death.

I should like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to voice my support for my colleague's efforts to prohibit the use of leg-hold traps and other cruel trapping methods. It is sometimes necessary to provide a stimulus for change and this is one of those times. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich should be congratulated for providing us with a reasonable bill that should commend itself to the House.

The bill before us now has two key aspects. The first is to eliminate a method of trapping which can only be described as inhumane, namely, the leg-hold snare. The second and by no means less important feature is the provision made for practicality. The proposed amendment is not a wild-eyed reform; rather, it is a considered solution to a serious problem. The hon. member calls for the prohibition of certain traditional methods of trapping only where practical alternatives are now available. This approach is laudable because the hon. member has made the necessary distinction between traps specifically and trapping generally. The proposed amendment would not destroy the livelihood of trappers. It does not prohibit trapping, just the use of those traps which cause the animal prolonged suffering. Because of this the enforcement of this amendment would be both reasonable and practicable.

As hon. members know, a number of Canadians—and here I refer to our native people as well as white trappers—depend on the hunt or the fur trade for their livelihood and in some cases for their existence. An industry as long established as fur trapping should not be lightly disturbed. The seal hunters of Newfoundland are all too familiar with this phenomenon. No, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides, instead, for the needs of the people most directly involved in any alteration in the terms of the fur trade. It will not deprive the trapper of the essential tools of his trade at the stroke of a far-off pen.

The burden of change does not lie merely on our consciences and our attitudes, sitting as we are in the relative comfort of an urban environment. It lies on those who must bear the cost. For example, a fur trapper with an income of about $7,000 a year finds it necessary to invest some of that income in the purchase and maintenance of his equipment. A leg-hold trap runs in price from $2 to $5. Multiply this by 30 or 40 and the cost, if the average price per trap is $3.50, is about $105. Moreover, the weight of the leg-hold trap is one and a half pounds; multiply this by 30, and the trapper must transport 45 pounds of traps to his trapline.

One alternative to the leg-hold trap is the Conibear trap. It has been argued that this trap is a reasonable replacement. However, there are two basic points that must be looked at. First, this type of trap will cost from $14 to $25; 30 traps at $25 each will cost the trapper $750. You will recognize that this is a considerable expenditure indeed. Furthermore, this trap weights four pounds ten ounces. The total weight of 30 traps would in this case be 123 pounds. I would not like to be the person, Mr. Speaker, who had to carry 30 or 40 Conibear traps through woods in winter. We wish to show, therefore, that we are not simply enacting a reform in a small economic sector whose importance is relatively small. We are trying, through this bill, to take into consideration the needs and the interests of the people directly and indirectly involved.

I have already mentioned the Conibear trap as an alternative currently available to the leg-hold trap. I have pointed out that its weight and cost disqualify it as a reasonable and logical choice to replace the leg-hold variety. There are, however, other types of traps which have to be considered.

The federal-provincial committee on humane trapping has advertised for and has received a number of designs. In fact over 100 proposed patented models have been submitted to the committee for their consideration. Testing and evaluating are a painstaking process and, as a result, the committee will not present its final recommendations for another three years. However, there are also four types of traps that have been mechanically tested for the committee by the Canadian Standards Association. These traps are the Bigelow, the Hanson, the Dahlgner and the Instant Killer traps. Each of these traps has its commendable points, not the least of which is that each is a non-leg snare; but each is also exceedingly heavy. The Bigelow, for example, weighs two and a half pounds. The Instant Killer weighs about six pounds. Multiply that by 30 again and you will come up with another impossibly heavy load. This may seem like an excessively gloomy presentation of the actual situation in the trapping industry. Nevertheless, the existence of several varieties of substitutes shows that the problem has been solved in principle.

The requirements for an alternative trapping method are known; they are cost, weight, force, and holding technique. Refinements are necessary but the basic technology exists. While current models are not practical replacements for the leg-hold trap it has been shown that substitutes do exist in theory. What is required is a concentrated effort to refine the present possibilities, to remove those features that make the traps mentioned and others, unrealistic. By putting the force of law behind this proposal the impetus will exist to effect these changes.

● (1730)

As Canadians we pride ourselves on being civilized and humane. We also take pride in our equitable nature. The passage of this bill will allow us to continue to extol these virtues. However, if the leg-hold trap is allowed to remain, our sincerity and integrity will be subject to question. By passing this bill, Mr. Speaker, our concern will have the force of action to its credit and it will not simply be dismissed as a series of platitudes.

At present the efforts being made by the federal-provincial committee are most commendable. By carefully considering each proposal the committee is maintaining its credibility as the legitimate testing agent for new types of traps. By careful consultation with the Ontario Veterinary College at the University of Guelph the medical integrity of its inquiries is being preserved. By passing this bill, force will be given to the concerted efforts of the members of this committee and it will provide a good example for provincial governments.

I think it is necessary to make clear that the provinces must take an active interest in this issue. The committee is in the process of developing standards and methods of safe trapping. These standards, when they are formally tabled, will be enforced in all federal jurisdictions where trapping is carried out. It is necessary for provinces to see that the federal government is not making idle jestures. By passing this amendment, the provincial governments will have to take action. It is, after all, the provinces that are responsible for the management and control of fur-bearing animals. The federal government can provide the data for a restructuring of the trapping policy. It can make adjustments in its own legislation, in keeping with the spirit of the data. It cannot, however, change provincial statutes. By force of example, this amendment will provide the necessary impetus for change.

This bill is a rational, well-thought-out proposal. It is reasonable in tone and it combines the idea of humane treatment of animals with practicality. It sets a precedent for provincial governments to follow. Finally, and perhaps most important, it protects both the trapper and people concerned with humane trapping.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues in the House to support the measure brought forward by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich to prohibit the use of leg-hold traps. I congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), on moving the motion that the substance of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for drawing to the attention of the House this very serious matter and for giving leadership in doing some thing constructive about it. He has given consideration to the whole trapping industry.

My interest in this subject was prompted by my admiration for the work of the wife of a former member of this chamber, Mrs. Hugh John Flemming. Mrs. Flemming is a great Canadian who lives in my constituency. She founded the Kindness Clubs whose good work is now international in scope.

I would like to voice my strong support for this bill asking for an amendment to the Criminal Code to prohibit the use of leg-hold snares and other inhumane types of traps. The leg-hold trap is the most barbaric form of torture man has inflicted on the animal kingdom. As its name suggests, the trap catches its victim around the leg or paw and holds it in a vice-like grip between steel jaws. The trapped animal or bird awaits death by thirst, starvation or exposure, torture that can last for days and even weeks. Another way of dying is for the victim to rip off or chew off a foot or leg.

About three million fur-bearing animals are trapped each year in Canada during the five month trapping season. It has been estimated, however, that six million unwanted birds and animals—eagles, owls, porcupines, woodpeckers, etc.—are accidentally caught and die needlessly because of the continued use of the leg-hold trap.

The primitive leg-hold trap is the main method of catching our fur-bearing animals in Canada. A trap was invented and has been on the market for almost 20 years, called the Conibear trap, with the use of which animals caught in it die either instantly or in a matter of seconds. This trap does have disadvantages such as cost and it is not really effective for the dog family; wolf, fox, and coyote. Fox is the most important of these commercially and only accounts for 1½ per cent of pelts sold. More research is needed to improve this trap, and even though it is better than the present leg-hold trap, still it is not widely used.

In September, 1973, a federal-provincial committee for humane trapping was called for, and an eight-member committee was created by the federal-provincial wildlife conference. After a full six months, a co-ordinator was hired to organize its work, so the Committee could not begin operations until mid-1974. Eight months after it was formed, the committee decided upon its aims and objectives.

The committee's mandate is to co-ordinate and encourage the development of humane trapping methods and devices; and to recommend to the provinces traps and trapping techniques which will provide, in so far as the state of the science and the art will allow, the greatest "humaneness" in holding or killing fur-bearing animals.

This sounds all very well and good, but what has the committee accomplished? To date, over 100 devices have been submitted to the committee for consideration. Of these, only three are undergoing final testing, and four are in the initial stages of testing for mechanical and biological suitability. If the results from these tests are satisfactory, the committee will submit these devices for field testing. In other words, not one device has arrived at the final stages of testing. The reason for this is simple. This worth-while committee does not have enough money to finance its operations properly.

It is good that the government has initiated a committee to look into this matter, but it would be showing real concern if it were to finance the committee's operations properly so that a solution could be found quickly and thereby stop the needless cruelty to our wildlife.

In concluding, it states in the proposed bill that the government should amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the use of inhumane animal traps where a practical alternative is now available or becomes available. This definitely receives my support, and this is where the government's financial support is needed to alleviate the problem of the lack of progress in the development of a quick-kill trap that would improve the humaneness of trapping and also satisfy trappers' needs.

I would also support the phasing-out period as it is recognized that it is not practical to have immediate banning of existing trapping methods where no completely viable alternative is available to the trapper. The government could also assist by subsidizing part of the cost of replacing old traps with the new more humane type.

It is not enough that the government recognize the inhumanity of the leg-hold trap, but is should take a stand by giving enough financial support so that the necessary research can be done as quickly as possible and with the incentive of financial assistance in helping the trapper to replace the old traps. A time will come when this primitive form of trapping will become a thing of the past. There should be no more delays.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on his initiative. However, we have seen in the last half hour or so that Bill C-208 as it was presented no longer exists. However, with the unanimous consent and agreement of the House its subject matter will be referred for consideration to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

There are two points that should be identified when discussing a matter such as this. One is with regard to consideration for those people who are gainfully employed in the fur industry. No mention has been made of any discussion that might have been undertaken with regard to protecting the position of those who secure their livelihood through this industry. All too often, although with good intention, we move in the direction of bringing ourselves to a point where some harm can be done to Canadians who rely completely on this type of livelihood.

The other point is that more consideration should be given to taking action with regard to education. More educational programs should be encouraged. I hope this point will be considered by members of the standing committee and that they will make some recommendation or suggestion. Funds could be made available to encourage the presentation in the media, and through educational television programs, of the whole story of the use of leg-hold traps in Canada. Perhaps progress might be quickly made if programs on television were to show the agony these fur-bearing animals must endure when caught in traps of the type described.

● (1740)

The government should certainly be concerned about the type of trapping to be permitted in Canada. Something certainly should be done. The government has made its position clear. I understand that the University of Guelph has received some $60,000 for work in this field, and I would recommend that more be done in this regard in addition to reaching whatever areas we can through educational programs to train people who will eventually earn their living by trapping. I understand that a committee has already been set up, with federal input, to look into this subject. Despite the possibility of some difficulty with regard to jurisdiction, I believe this is a topic which can very well be brought up by a private member in an effort to move more quickly, through co-operation and discussion, to bring about the result we all desire.

I conclude by restating that when we consider this question we should deal not only with the method of trapping used but with the whole question of employment or unemployment. I am always a little concerned when we talk about acting in a way which might solve one problem only to create or worsen another. I personally am hopeful that various departments of government, such as the Department of Fisheries and the Environment or the Ministry of Science and Technology could find a more humane method of trapping animals. One might think that in these days of advanced technology there would be no need to be concerned about the use of out-dated trapping devices. I would hope that this measure, when it is brought before a committtee, will be studied with the help of specialized witnesses, people who are experts in the field, so that action may be taken to correct the situation which presently exists.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak in this debate, but I have heard so many fine speeches that I am tempted and inspired to speak. The reason I am tempted and inspired to speak is that I wonder whether we should not widen the reference with regard to the topic. The topic at the moment is inhumane leg-hold traps, and the committee is going to discuss this topic.

I have had the opportunity to see other types of inhumane killing. Two years ago I went to the Magdalen Islands to see the seal hunt. I saw little seals being struck on the head with clubs and very little has been done with regard to that. Some of us in this party are strongly opposed to it. At the same time we realize the economic difficulties which confront people who hunt the seals. Our leader went down to Newfoundland and spoke to some of the sealers, and they told him about the financial hardship which would be caused if the seal hunt were banned.

The hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) has drawn attention to the financial hardship which would be caused if there were some form of prohibition against hunting, more especially the hunting of the fox and other fur-bearing animals.

It is important that any study should include the economic consequences which would follow total prohibition. I hope that when the measure gets to the committee its terms of reference can be widened to include consideration of the economic and financial consequences which would follow total prohibition. I notice that one of the members from Newfoundland appears anxious to get up and speak on this subject. He is probably familiar with the seal hunt and familiar with the economic and financial implications of the seal hunt for Newfoundland. I hope that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—it is always a very difficult riding to pronounce. It almost sounds like Eskimo sandwich.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Saanich. S-a-a-n-i-c-h.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you. I always thank my colleagues for their kindness in helping me. I hope the hon. member who introduced this bill will bring forward another bill dealing with kindness to human beings. One of the members who preceded me talked about Hugh John Flemming's wife forming a kindness to animals club. It is about time there was a kindness club directed to human beings. I would think that a former diplomat, a member who has been attached to diplomatic missions across the world, would bring forward a bill abolishing nuclear weapons which kill people by the thousands. When I think of Nagasaki and Hiroshima it occurs to me that his next bill should be concerned with kindness to human beings.

I also hope the hon. member will widen the parameters to include killing in slaughter houses. What is humane about hitting a cow over the head with a big hammer, or slashing the throat of a chicken or turkey? I notice I have the support of the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young). Therefore, although it is important that the hon. member has brought the bill before the House at this time, it is rather narrow in scope. It should really include the wider sphere of the humane treatment of other animals, more especially the humane treatment of human beings. I look forward to the hon. member introducing other bills in the House dealing with human beings, but I am very happy that this bill is going to committee.

● (1750)

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) for noticing my nod of agreement with him. My thoughts are somewhat in line with part of what he said, and I shall explain what I mean. I am not going to speak for a long time because I want to be off my feet before the hour of six o'clock to allow the subject matter of this bill to proceed to committee.

I heard some speeches this evening, Mr. Speaker, which made me want to make a few comments that might put the situation in a little bit off balance. We have spoken about the killing of animals. The hon. member for Broadview referred to this exactly as I would have said it. There is no really nice way to die, whether it is in terms of humans or animals. It is death, and that is pretty final.

I heard the hon. member who originally proposed the bill this evening talk in terms of "cruel and unusual punishment", which is something that usually comes up more in a debate on capital punishment than in terms of leg-hold traps for animals. I wonder whether he would have brought out some of his sentiments in that other debate.

I grew up on a farm, Mr. Speaker, and I have seen birth and I have seen death. I have lived with animals, and I have had to put down animals as humanely as possible when they have been injured or born deformed. It is not a nice thing to do. But I want to disabuse the House of the notion that all those people who trap and all those who manufacture and sell traps are unfeeling, bloodthirsty, and blood lusting, that they are uncaring monsters.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I did not say that.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are some who seem to feel that. I did not say that that was an exact quote, but there are some people, whether in this House or outside in the country, who seem to feel that way. I happen to come from a riding which has within its boundaries the largest manufacturer of animal traps in this country, so I think I can speak with some knowledge.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Ah!

Mr. Young: I am not speaking entirely on their behalf either. The hon. member says "Ah!". I have spoken to them several times about the products that they are selling and about the upgrading of their traps and the revisions they are trying to make.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They could build better mousetraps.

Mr. Young: They tried to build better mousetraps. They tried to build all kinds of better traps. This firm—I will not name it—I can tell the hon. member was the first to bring the Conibear trap on to the market, the most humane trap that we have today. They have also sold for many years the Victor leg-hold trap. I can tell the hon. member, who may not know this, that the Victor leg-hold trap has now been revised to the point where there are offset jaws, where there are inset pads, where there are no teeth in the jaws which close on the trap. All of this makes a trap more humane for an animal, Mr. Speaker, but it does not come out in the bill the hon. member is talking about.

I do not necessarily like to see this, but I can also point out, from checking market sales, that about 20 per cent of the sales of traps in this country today are made up of the Conibear trap, or more humane trap, and about 80 per cent are made up of the leg-hold variety. I think that says one thing to all of us here and to the people in this country: the market rules. Sales rule. If there is not a suitable alternative, the trapper is not going to buy it. He just cannot buy it today.

The hon. member's bill would subject manufacturers, sellers, and importers of traps to criminal punishment. I do not think it is fair to do this in the absence of a viable alternative. That is what I did not like in particular about the hon. member's bill, which I would have spoken very heartily against, because I think it is unfair treatment to those who are trying to produce a better trap.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The bill has been withdrawn.

Mr. Young: The bill has been withdrawn, but I know from conversations with some of these manufacturers over the past couple of years, and as late as this afternoon, of the number of committees to which they belong. I know of the number of study sessions that they go to, and I know the amount of expense they go to in trying to develop more humane traps. So I do not think we should just load this all on to the backs of the trap manufacturer or the trapper, as was so well pointed out by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth).

Those people do not have a large association to do their bartering and bargaining for them, to plead their case; and I think the hon. member for Northwest Territories did an excellent job this evening of putting that point of view forward.

I just wanted to bring a bit of balance to the discussion, Mr. Speaker. More of these points can be brought out in committee. I know that the manufacturers, the industry and sales people would welcome this kind of discussion in committee because it might give a lot of fresh air to a discussion of the matter and allow both sides of the picture to be brought out.

I have a great deal of sympathy and feeling for the hon. member's plea on behalf of animals. I much prefer to go to the zoo. I am not a hunter or a trapper myself. I have not shot a gun for years, and I much prefer to see wildlife on film or through the lens of a camera than I do through the sights of a rifle. But let me just say this to bring a little balance to the discussion. I am glad that the subject matter can go to committee and not the bill itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)) as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Accordingly, the subject matter of the bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES RESTRAINT ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING TRAINING ALLOWANCE RATES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andras that Bill C-19, to amend or repeal certain statutes to enable restraint of government expenditures, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, as one who enters this debate after it has gone on for some time I am sure part of what I have to say will be repetitive. In my opinion, however, it bears repeating. Let us hope that some of these comments will not fall on deaf ears.

I read with interest the speeches in respect of Bill C-19. I wish to comment on two of them. My good friend, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), gave an excellent speech on government mismanagement. Some of his remarks are worth repeating. His comments in this House are always well researched and I wish to commend him on his valued contribution to this debate.

This is not a genuine government restraint bill. In the areas where it proposes to exercise restraint the result will probably be much more costly in terms of the human and financial resources of this country. My good friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), also commented that this bill does not contain very much so far as restraint is concerned. He was right. Governments are notorious for not practising what they preach. But the gall of a federal government which preaches, and indeed forces, restraint on everybody but itself is becoming truly indefensible.

The latest example of the "do as I say not as I do" theory is in the supplementary spending estimates announced by the federal government, together with suggestions of what the year's total federal outlay will be. The recently announced estimates total $594 million, which prompted the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) to gloat that they were significantly lower than in previous years. This, he said, reflects the government's determination to restrain the growth of federal expenditures, an integral part of the anti-inflation program.

In the next breath, and before rejoicing could take place at such a marvellous example of belt tightening, the President of the Treasury Board estimated that federal expenditures this year may total $42.2 billion, $6 billion more than the year before. That implies that another $2 billion supplementary spending is still to come, and that total federal spending for 1976-77 will have risen by an astounding 16 per cent. This is what we have from a government which has been urging restraint on business and industry, which has been cutting back wage increases to 10 per cent or less, and which has legislated a reduction in profits; a government so committed to restraint that it managed to keep the watchdog of it all, the Anti-Inflation Board, down to a budget merely double the original one.

It would not have been so had had the supplementary estimates included a large amount for programs desired to relieve the cripplingly high unemployment rate; but they do not. Of the $594 million only about 15 per cent will go for manpower programs such as local initiatives and training schemes. Much of the remainder will go for vital undertakings such as a $25 million loan to Jamaica, $63 million in subsidies to railway companies, and $33 million for further bilingualism development payments!

The government may find it impossible to hold the confidence and the attention of Canadians the next time it preaches restraint but practises wild over-spending. What we on this side of the House want is a united Canada, a Canada that includes Quebec and which offers equality of opportunity to all the people of our great nation. I believe the great majority of westerners are moderate, open-minded, and good willed in their perception of fellow Canadians everywhere, including French-speaking Canadians. These reasonable views are being corrupted and debased in terms of perception elsewhere, not by westerners, but by a belief, fostered indirectly by Liberal politicians and adopted without examination by other citizens who ought to know better, that any breath of opposition to either the Liberal party or to its official bilingualism program is by definition racist. That just simply is not so.

● (2010)

The Trudeau administration has been despised in western Canada for more than five years, not because of its bilingualism policies, but because it has provided astonishingly bad government. It has failed to comprehend, let alone face, some of the deep-seated western anxieties about that region's own role in Confederation, and Bill C-19 is a fine example of that. It has failed to provide even a modicum of sensible government for the nation as a whole.

In a more local sense, the government has plundered Alberta's natural resources in a manner which, had it tried even a fraction of it in Ontario or Quebec, would have led to the fall of the ministry within a few weeks of the attempt.

It is important to restate a western view and to refute some of these dismal propositions at this time because the growing mythology has implications far broader than just a general smear of western Canadians. It suggests that the national Conservative party under our capable leader cannot by definition lead this divided country, and it merely panders to the Liberal notion that they, and they alone, are fit to govern.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, lots of westerners regard aspects of the bilingualism policy with disfavour—not so much because those aspects are sinister but because they are silly. The packaging and labelling regulations, in combination with the grim dictate that the dismal chemicals that comprise so much of modern food be listed in the two languages, produce a two-tongue clutter in this region to the general benefit of no one.

The expensive attempt to educate civil servants in a second language was known to be a failure in western Canada long before the government acknowledged it. Westerners argued for years that the way to approach language was through the schools. Instead of learning about these things and seeking to assist them, the new Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) sits in Toronto and gives interviews, including the hoary old yarn about the westerner who supposedly believed that a mountie would one day tell him that he must learn French. This man, Mr. Speaker, promises to succeed fittingly his predecessor as a promoter of narrow nationalism which is as repugnant to western Canadians as it is to Quebecers because it seeks to bottle up all Canadians in their own juices and insulate our tender minds from people in other parts of our country.

There are many perfectly legitimate points of discussion surrounding Quebec's relationship with the other nine provinces. There always have been, there always will be. We know that in Alberta with particular force, because many of Quebec's positions are also Alberta's positions. The two provincial governments had a relationship that was among the closest of any that has existed between two governments in this all too often squabbling nation. That relationship is perfectly well known to Lougheed's voters, and they do not attack him for it.

One constant western preoccupation is with transportation of people and goods. It is surely self-evident that mutual understanding between people would be greatly enhanced in this vast country by the provision of cheap and easy travel. Instead, the Liberal government doggedly espouses a user-pay transportation formula which militates most strongly against those in the extremities of the nation. They have increased the obstacles to travel, not decreased them, except for members of their own jet set.

We have a Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who has cost the Canadian taxpayer some $740,000 for his air transportation, when commercial flights are available to him which would cost the taxpayer a great deal less, flights that the majority of other MPs use. Of this $740,000, some $8,000 was used by him to attend last year's Grey Cup game, and in excess of $10,000 was used by him to attend a party put on by his brother-in-law.

What kind of credibility can the government possibly expect when we see one of the ministers of the government wantonly spending tax dollars whenever the whim strikes him to take to the air? After all, Saskatoon is not exactly an isolated, inaccessible outpost that cannot be reached by regular daily flights.

Bill C-19 is insincere, Mr. Speaker. It is designed to persuade the general public that this is only the tip of the iceberg, and simply indicates the kind of savings efforts the government is making. I am appalled at the way in which the government can play games with figures when it wants to sell a particular philosophy or policy. This government's instincts for manipulating for political gain never cease to amaze me.

We all know there is lots of room for the government to tidy and tighten its own operations. I refer specifically to the way in which the government, its agencies and departments, control their internal financing. I do not suppose improvements in this area would attract too much attention in the press, nevertheless restoring proper financial and parliamentary control is one of the gut issues we face.

The financial control and the management systems of the Government of Canada, its agencies and departments, are significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness, and I do not know how long the government expects the Canadian people to swallow the blatant inadequacies and devious techniques that it has fostered. What we want in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a government that is willing to deal with its citizens openly and honestly, not a government that hides the truth.

I am willing to bet that the Canadian leader who first talks simply and clearly to the Canadian people will draw a fair number of doubters to his side. People nowadays are sophisticated. They will hand the palm not to those who promise perfection or who claim never to have failed, but to those who, despite their limitations, will try hard to do the best they can, and do so with integrity and intelligence. Doing otherwise reveals either the politician's own insecurity or his contempt for the people he is elected to serve.

I believe that the Canadian people are seeking new voices, new ideas and new leaders and, although the government has its limits and cannot solve all problems, we as Canadians reject the view that we must accept failure and mediocrity. That is not our Canadian heritage.

Admittedly our party has not been perfect; none is. We have made mistakes and we have paid for them, but ours is a party with a tradition of leadership, compassion and progress, ours is a party that makes its major investments in people, and we strongly believe that the test of any government is not how popular it is with the powerful, but how honestly and fairly it deals with the many who must depend on it. Business, labour, agriculture, education, science, and government must not struggle in isolation from one another but should strive towards mutual goals and shared opportunities, and that is the type of government we would have under the leadership of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with Bill C-19 which repeals certain statutes thus enabling the government to restrain government expenditures, I would like to comment on the necessity for cut backs in government spending. This message from voters across Canada in the last several months has been loud and clear. We need help in fighting inflation and we need it from all parts of the country. We must convince the public that the government is serious in its intention, and the best way to convince people is to show them by example.

In times of restraint we must decide which programs can be eliminated or cut back so that we can reduce our own spending. These must be programs, the elimination of which would not materially reduce the well being of Canadians. Therefore one of the things we can do is to eliminate spending on programs which have outlived their usefulness or programs which we cannot afford in times of restraint.

Some programs have fulfilled the intentions which they were designed to fulfil and funding should not be continued by the federal government, but if desired can be replaced by other forms of funding such as from the private sector. There are other programs that started off as good ideas but that did not quite work out the way the government had intended them to work out, and this fact must be recognized and the programs ended.

● (2020)

There are other programs the objectives of which the government had a specific intention to fulfil, and these objectives have been fulfilled. Therefore once a program has fulfilled its objective, it should be terminated. Three examples of this are the Company of Young Canadians, Information Canada, and the program relating to the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, commonly known as IRDIA. I think the termination of these programs demonstrates the approach of the federal government in reviewing its policies; looking at what can be done; and discontinuing programs which outlive their usefulness.

I would like to deal in a little more detail with the IRDIA program since that is the one with which I am most familiar, having dealt with it for most of the ten years of its existence. It began in 1966 and had a definite positive effect on industrial research and development for most of the last ten years. It was intended to encourage industrial research.

The program provided that any increase in research expenditure by a company over a base level determined by an average of the previous five years would result in a benefit to the company of a tax credit of 150 per cent. So as long as companies increased research and development, there was a benefit involved. This benefit was used by many industrial establishments in Canada. Most of the research laboratories which have been built, have been built in the last ten years, and the companies involved have benefited directly from this legislation. However, companies cannot keep building new laboratories just to take advantage of this tax benefit, and there are very few companies which have taken advantage of this in the last two years.

Essentially companies do not keep increasing their research and development efforts indefinitely. There is a levelling off in research expenditures. When that happens, the base level climbs up to the expenditure level, and therefore no amount of research expenditure qualifies for this tax benefit. As a result, the program has outlived its usefulness. It has done its job. There are no benefits being derived from it by way of tax rebates. With one or two exceptions that is where we are today. I think the maintenance of that program would only create increased and unnecessary paperwork, and both government and industry can well do without that.

In the whole area of industrial research and development the incentives which have been provided have been reviewed in this last year. Gordon Sharwood, a consultant on contract with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has conducted a comprehensive study with the cooperation of M.O.S.S.T. officials to look at government programs on research and development to see how they could be updated and made more effective. One of the suggestions has been to terminate programs which are no longer effective. Other suggestions relate to changing the format of programs now in existence, and these suggestions are being considered and new programs are currently being worked out.

Reviewing past legislation, we find that the IRDIA program has certainly done its job and has outlived its usefulness, and I think it is completely incorrect to conclude that the government is not interested in or is not supporting industrial research and development. This was the comment some people made when they read the intentions of the government in the budget earlier this year relating to the termination of the IRDIA program.

I would like to refute the argument that the government is not interested in supporting or encouraging industrial research or development and express my support for the termination of this program. This indicates that we are cleaning house, reviewing our legislation, trying to improve the efficiency of our programs and cutting down government expenditures where we can, in this very crucial time of restraint.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on Bill C-19, the government's program to restrain government expenditures. I do not think anyone who has a feel for the economy will disagree that expenditures have to be cut back and that government spending is one of the problems we have.

Mr. Hogan: I disagree strongly.

Mr. Kempling: The thing which bothers most hon. members on this side is the method used to cut back programs and the effect that will have on certain parts of the country. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) spoke about the IRDIA program, and as far as that program went, it did a pretty good job. The major beneficiaries of that program were very large corporations which had research and development facilities and which were able to make use of such a program. I do not think very many small companies or medium sized companies in this country really took very much advantage of IRDIA. I am not saying it is the fault of the government that those companies did not take advantage of it. Perhaps the department failed to realize the difficulties which faced small and medium sized companies.

I am looking forward to learning what new programs will be introduced, and I know many people in small and medium sized companies who are very interested in research and development programs. One of the problems is that they do not have the means to accumulate the funds required to carry out a research and development project. I think this is the key to the problem they face. Many small and medium sized companies have the desire to grow into larger companies which would have know-how, which would have market sense, and which would want to sell products, but in fact their problem is cash and cash flow, and I suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) should consider this proposition seriously.

Small and medium sized companies should be allowed to accumulate a sum of money over a period of three to five years. The mechanism for saving that money is beside the point. That can be worked out; it is a matter of regulation. However, the problem is that they cannot undertake to develop a product to sell in the domestic market because they just do not have the means to accumulate the money required. The only time they really spend money on research and development is when they are at a very high level of earnings. Then if the market happens to turn down, the first thing they scrap is any research and development they have undertaken.

I think it would be possible and realistic to put a provision into our Income Tax Act which would allow these small and medium sized companies to accumulate a sum of perhaps $35,000, $50,000 or $100,000 over a period of three to five years with a specific purpose in mind. We must, of course, be sure that they carry it through because if they are going to accumulate money to use for research and development, we want to know it is used for research and development and not for something else.

• (2030)

This is one of the problems facing the small and medium sized industries in this country and one of the reasons why we do not have a strong secondary industry base. These companies just do not have the wherewithal to undertake realistic research programs. I know this from personal experience with companies I have been associated with in my business life. Periodically someone would suggest that we could make an imported product in this country, but it always came down to a question of where the money would come from for the tooling, etcetera that was required. It becomes a matter of dollars and cents and it is a pretty dismal prospect trying to raise money for an idea in the private sector.

Companies should be allowed to accumulate money in a special fund for research and development so that they would have the opportunity to complete their projects. This would help produce goods for the domestic market and perhaps reduce imports, thereby over time helping our balance of payments position. It would also help build the secondary industry base we so desperately need.

I think we all agree that the effects of government spending are part of the over-all problems which face most countries in the western world, though perhaps they are felt more acutely in Canada than elsewhere. The people of this country are very well aware that we must do something to reduce government spending. The effect on the economy and the business community's lack of confidence in the economy are apparent.

Just last week a company in my constituency gave one year's notice to its employees. They say they are going to pull out of Canada and go back to their home country because they do not like the atmosphere and the economy here. If we made a list of the companies that have decided to pull out of Canada or who are talking that way, it would be quite a significant list.

The lack of confidence in the government and the economy in general is tied to several things, and of course the whole spectre of inflation is at the root of it. People on the street see the government asking everyone to tighten their belts but notice the government does not appear to be tightening its own. As I said earlier, cutting out some of these programs will have a disproportionate effect on certain regions of the country. We have to look at this question because for several years we have been proceeding on the concept of universality, but if we make across the board cuts the disadvantaged areas of the country will be affected very dramatically.

We should ask ourselves how effective the DREE program has been. It would be interesting to do a study of these programs and the industries that move from one part of the country to another. How many are still operating today? The theory behind the program was good—moving industry from an area where there was difficulty getting labour to an area where there was a surplus of labour. In fact, however, many of the industries that moved either could not find labour in the new area or were not able to train people, and ended up importing labour from their original location. DREE is something that has to be considered when we examine the effectiveness of government spending on industry, jobs, and so on in this country.

We must also look at the whole area of inflation and its relationship to the reduction of government spending. It is argued that wage demands are causing inflation but I think we should try to lay that one to rest. Wage demands are only reacting to inflation, not causing it. People do not know what the rate of inflation is going to be when their contract ends, so instead of signing a three year contract they sign for one year and try to get the most out of it.

It comes down to a matter of putting confidence back into the economy, Mr. Speaker, but the question is how is this to be done? Some people argue that increased prices cause inflation, but this is not reflected in company profits across the country so I do not think that can be called a contributing factor.

Very little has been done to reduce high interest rates and this is of very real concern to anyone who is in business or is contemplating a research and development project. The high cost of money prohibits many companies from undertaking such projects, particularly in view of the uncertainty in the economy.

The debates in this House and in committees should reflect what must be done to lower inflation, and what cuts must be made in government spending. I hope the matter will be taken to committee for thorough discussion.

Little has been said by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or anyone on the front benches about the relationship between the money supply and government spending. If you examine all the economic theories preached by the classical economists one thing comes through, and that is that in any country the money supply should not increase beyond the increase in the Gross National Product. In this country, however, as in most western countries, we have allowed this to happen. We have been printing vast sums of money for a number of years. Every time we do that every dollar in circulation is worth less.

● (2040)

We have run up serious balance of payment deficits and imported money from off-shore to offset those deficits. At present we face the prospect of paying about $740 million a year interest on that off-shore money. If projections come true, because action with regard to the money supply was not taken earlier and government spending not cut back earlier, by the end of this year or the first quarter of next year we shall be paying out interest at the rate of $1 billion a year. As one can see, there is an important relationship between the money supply, the level of government spending, trade deficits, and industrial activity in this country.

I find most disheartening the decline in the number of active manufacturing concerns and the decline of employment in manufacturing industries, some of which, not possessing the resources for competing in the market place, have become service companies. For example, we hear of the shoe industry crying out that it cannot compete with imports, yet the largest importers of shoes are shoe manufacturers themselves. Not being able to compete with imports, such companies have cut back on manufacturing. The net result of inadequate depreciation allowances, the taxation syndrome of the last ten or 15 years, and the pressures of inflation, has been a scarcity of funds available for replacing machinery and updating plant for competitive purposes. Such companies, not being able to keep abreast of current technology, have become service industries.

Some entrepreneurs in this country have engaged consulting engineers and built turnkey plants which have been shipped overseas. I do not oppose this as I think we must share our technology with others, but I am bothered by knowing that many of the plants we have erected off-shore are more productive than similar plants operating in Canada. We end up competing with the production of those plants on world markets. That I find disturbing. We must correct this situation.

We must allow our industries a number of years in which to upgrade their facilities and expand operations. We must make available generous tax allowances and funds for research and development. We must allow our companies to acquire, either domestically or elsewhere, the best available technology, in order that they may compete and offset to some extent the very high labour rates we pay in this country.

Earlier this year when I was in Japan I recall talking to some Japanese industrialists; we were talking about labour rates, technology and like matters. Possessing few natural resources, the Japanese must import 90 per cent the resources they use in the manufacturing industry. They said to me, "We have to be better managers and use superior technology to compete on the world market." I must say they are doing an excellent job. That must be our attitude. We must use the most advanced technology available if we are to be competitive on world markets. We have the resources in this country but pay very high labour rates. In order to offset the effect of these high rates, we must use the most advanced technology possible in industry.

I sincerely hope that when the Minister of Finance brings down the budget he will consider allowing our small and medium-sized industries to accumulate money over three to five years which they can spend on research and development. I hope he will also make provision for allowing our industries to upgrade their technology and the quality of machinery in plants, for only in that way can we be more productive. Unless we do this we may face the prospect of asking workers in certain industries to take pay cuts of 25 per cent, 30 per cent, and even 40 per cent.

The only way out of the dilemma is to set in motion mechanisms whereby our industry, our small and medium-sized businesses—I am not forgetting our large industries, but mention small and medium-sized ones because they are of particular concern to me—can upgrade plant and equipment and acquire modern technology. Our companies must be allowed to accumulate funds with which to undertake the development of industrial projects in Canada. If we do this we shall take a giant step forward in providing employment. But before this can be done we must restore confidence in our economy. People must be confident that our economy is going forward.

I suppose that what I am saying the Minister of Finance has heard many times; nevertheless it bears repeating that we must control government spending and control expansion of the money supply. Normally when one mentions the control of the money supply one is perceived as talking of a tight money policy. But curtailing the money supply need not result in a tight money policy. We can increase the velocity of money in circulation, but only if we restore confidence in the government and in the economy—in other words only if people are confident that we are going to move ahead economically.

We have on deposit in this country vast amounts of money in savings accounts. Many of our small and medium-sized businesses have retained undistributed, surplus moneys. Many businesses would like to invest such money in energy projects, for example, but our present taxation rules make it impossible to do this to advantage. We have within our company accounts and savings accounts vast sums of money for doing those things I suggest must be done, but they will only be done if people regain confidence in the economy and the government were to be forward looking and say, "In three or four years we shall work toward a balanced budget and control the money supply; the money supply will not increase at a rate greater than the growth in the Gross National Product." If the government were to do this, confidence in the economy would be restored and money available for investment released.

I have spoken at length in an attempt to convey my point of view. I do not like to be emotional in debate; I try to be constructive, not destructive, and like to feel I am making a useful contribution to the deliberations of this House. I hope that those opposite who must wrestle with these matters will take my remarks into consideration when new legislation is put forward.

● (2050)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-19 which gives legal authority to the Government of Canada to restrain government expenditures. It is the wrong program at the wrong time, being implemented in the wrong way.

Yesterday an election took place in the province of Quebec. It may have been the most important provincial election ever to take place in Canada. I do not believe that any of us can assess the consequences of that election at this time. I am, as are all members of the party to which I belong, a believer in one Canada. I cannot willingly accept the idea that one province, be it Quebec or any other province, should want to separate from the rest of Canada.

Many polls were taken in the weeks preceding yesterday's election in Quebec. Those polls were right on in predicting the percentage of the votes which one party, the Parti Québécois, would get, 40 per cent. But that was not the only poll. People were also asked what they thought of the idea of a separate state of Quebec. The results which were published were very interesting. They showed that less than 20 per cent of the people in Quebec desire a separate state.

I have to ask myself, as should the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), and the rest of the government, if 20 per cent of the people of Quebec want a separate state, why did 40 per cent vote for the Parti Québécois? The reasons are obvious.

First, they had a very corrupt government. One need only look at the history of the Olympics. The federal government was involved because it helped finance the Olympics. There was one illustration after another of corruption and thievery. The people of Quebec, and quite properly so, saw that they could not get anything else from that Quebec Liberal government. The people of Quebec were tired of the large scale unemployment which they had, unemployment foisted upon them by a provincial Liberal government and a federal Liberal government.

Today questions were directed to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. They were asked whether in light of yesterday's election and in light of the unemployment situation right across the country they were giving fresh consideration to job creation programs. We got the same answer we have been getting since October, 1975, that inflation is more important than unemployment.

Years ago we protested about the waste created by unemployment. We protested about the misery and poverty it created. We were told it was not a serious question. That was in 1973 when, under the former minister of Finance, Mr. Turner, unemployment was 6 per cent. What do we see now? I wish to quote from the November 10, 1976, edition of the Globe and Mail:

> The unemployment rate for October hit 7.6 per cent, the highest seasonally adjusted rate since an equivalent figure in May, 1961, Statistics Canada reports . . .
>
> This year's previous highest jobless rate was 7.4 per cent last April . . .
>
> The government agency said all provinces, with the exception of British Columbia, Newfoundland and Alberta showed increases in their unemployment rates . . .
>
> For men aged 15 to 24 the jobless rate rose by two percentage points to 13.3 per cent while for men 25 and older the rate climbed by 0.6 of a point to 4.9 per cent.

Let us look at the provincial figures. In Quebec, which has the highest number of unemployed of any province, some 234,000, the rate is 10.1 per cent, up from the previous 9.7 per cent. In my province of Manitoba the rate rose to 4.9 per cent. In Saskatchewan it jumped to 4.2 per cent, and in Alberta remained steady at 3.7 per cent. The prairie figures do not include the very large percentage of 70 to 90 per cent of native people living on reserves. They have never been included in our unemployment figures.

Is it any wonder that people in the province of Quebec say that they have had enough? They felt they had to vote for a party which had separatism as one of its main principles. Even though they did not agree with that principle, they had no other alternative at this time.

Today and on earlier occasions the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance were asked what they intended to do. They said that unemployment is not serious, that it is regional. The fact is that every region has the same problem. They say that it is temporary, they have to worry about inflation and, in fact, they are winning the fight against inflation. The government and the Minister of Finance are wrong on both counts. When I make this kind of claim the minister will say that I am being partisan and political. Therefore I will put on the record the views of two people who are quite well known in this country. They hold responsible positions and can by no stretch of the imagination be called radicals, left wing, socialist, or whatever epithet the Minister of Finance is using at the present time.

I wish to first quote a former chairman of the Economic Council. He has done much better for himself in his present position as vice-president of International Nickel than the recently resigned chairman of the Economic Council who will be an opposition member in the National Assembly in the province of Quebec. Here is what Arthur Smith had to say in Winnipeg less than ten days ago. I quote from the Globe and Mail:

> There is close to a 50-50 chance that Canada is heading for the worst period of economic slack since the 1930's, according to Arthur Smith, of Toronto, a vice-president of Inco Ltd. of Toronto and a past chairman of both the Economic Council of Canada and the Conference Board in Canada.

Don McGillivray, the national economics editor of Southam Press, was reported in the Montreal Gazette of November 10, 1976, where he was discussing the unemployment figures which I just put on the record. In dealing with the job the present Minister of Finance is doing he writes, and I quote:

> Mr. Macdonald's economic policy, as set forth in his budget speech only five months ago, is in tatters.
>
> Rising unemployment is not the only chilly breeze blowing through the holes in his costume.
>
> He forecast in May that 250,000 new jobs would be created in Canada this year. He is going to fall a little short. In first 10 months of the year, 114,000 new jobs have appeared.

● (2100)

That is less that half the figure the minister predicted in his budget speech a few months ago. He says:

> Mr. Macdonald was relying on business investment to sustain "the expansion" next year. But the latest investment survey by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce shows a pattern of postponed investment with failure of market demand as the most frequently cited reason.

The article goes on to say:

> The minister rejected suggestions . . . that the anti-inflation program had anything to do with the slow growth of the gross national product despite the fact that the investment outlook survey had just reported that 13 per cent of companies cut back their investment plans because of the program.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

> But when it is a question whether the anti-inflation program has cut inflation in Canada, Mr. Macdonald and other members of the government give the program a generous helping of credit despite the fact that the same kind of slowing in prices had occurred in the U.S. and elsewhere.

Mr. McGillivray concludes his column by saying:

> Perhaps Mr. Macdonald's attempt to maintain that "our primary concern should still be the level of Canadian inflation" is just a holding action. Perhaps he is really considering a change of policy to get the economy out of its stagnation but has not had time yet to work it out in detail and so is not ready to announce it.
>
> It is to be hoped that this is so. Usually Canadian governments wait so long to make sure that the trend is clear that the trend—whether to inflation or recession—becomes unstoppable.

That is precisely where we stand at the present time. Later, I shall discuss what we believe could be done and should in the field of job creation. I want to deal now, with another aspect. Why do the people of Canada, including the people of Quebec, feel so dissatisfied with governments whether federal or provincial?

In the last 25 years we have seen a host of income distribution programs—health insurance, hospital insurance, family allowances and so on. One could go through a whole alphabet of programs which have been inaugurated in this country, most of them by Liberal governments because Liberal governments have been in power for most of the past 30 or 40 years. But if one looks at the studies carried out by Statistics Canada with regard to income, one comes across a very disturbing fact, at least it is disturbing to me. It is that in the last 25 years there has been no significant improvement in the terms of income distribution. If anything, the distribution of income among the various income groups has become less equitable.

In 1951 the income received by the bottom fifth of the population, the percentage of the GNP which went to the bottom 20 per cent, was just 4.4. In 1974, the last year for which we have figures, despite all the things we have done, despite the belief of most Canadians that we have improved the relative share enjoyed by the bottom 20 per cent, the percentage which went to that least wealthy segment was, not 4.4 per cent as in 1951, but just 4 per cent.

What about the top fifth? In 1951 the top 20 per cent of income earners got 42.8 per cent of the Gross National Product. In 1974, 23 years later, despite all the income distribution programs, despite all the welfare programs and health programs, despite the change in old age pension scales, the Canada Pension Plan and everything else, the top 20 per cent were still getting over 42 per cent of the Gross National Product. I am not saying that the bottom fifth of the income earners are living more poorly now in absolute terms than they were 25 years ago. What the figures show is that we have not moved toward a more equitable distribution of the goods and services which we produce in such great abundance.

This is not surprising, I suppose, bearing in mind the conclusions of a rapport which came out this month, a report prepared for the National Council of Welfare which is an agency funded by the federal government whose members include 21 organizations representing social service professionals and welfare recipients across Canada. The study is entitled

"The Hidden Welfare System". What does it show? It shows that our present tax system allows the federal government to transfer billions of dollars through inequitable income tax deductions and exemptions. The report estimates that there are 17 subsidies such as education deductions and registered home ownership plans which cost the government $6.4 billion in lost revenue in 1974, the bulk going to high income taxpayers.

The Council prepared a chart based on information from the Department of National Revenue which showed that the average benefit per taxpayer from the 17 subsidies in 1974 was about $244 for those with incomes of less than $5,000. But persons earning more than $50,000 realized a tax saving of about $4,000. Well, "to those who have shall be given", as I have heard hon. members say on other occasions.

The Council gives a number of illustrations of the way in which the system works. It points out, for example, that a person earning between $5,000 and $10,000 a year who places $1,000 in a registered home ownership savings plan is entitled to a tax saving of $264 a year, while a person earning between $15,000 and $20,000 saves $365 under the same plan. The chairman of the committee which prepared the report, Mr. Douglas Barr of Toronto, says:

> It makes sense that the wealthy should pay more than the poor. What people do not realize is that the system of subsidies is totally regressive and allows the rich who can take advantage of interest income deductions and RHOSP to pay proportionately less tax.

We have heard a great deal about the way in which this government and governments in general have been too hard on the business community. One would think that business in Canada is being driven to the wall. Well, a former Liberal cabinet minister, Eric Kierans, made a speech about a week ago to a very respectable organization, The Conference Board. Let me put on record some of the statements he made in the course of that speech which he entitled "Is the Mixed Enterprise System Dying?" Mr. Kierans stated:

> With the exception of the United Kingdom, I doubt that any nation in the world has given its corporate 1000 a more handsome gift package of subsidies, tax allowances, two-year write-offs, deductibility of merger costs, cheap loans, export credits and insurance than our present Trudeau government.

Later he went on to say:

> The goal of the corporation is profit, or at least 99½ per cent profit since a half cent of every profit dollar is given away for charitable purposes. One cannot say that the corporate sector has not achieved its purpose during the last five years.

● (2110)

May I point out that these are five years in which we have had a Liberal government headed by the present Prime Minister.

He went on to point out that profits increased 12.8 per cent in 1971, 23.3 per cent in 1972, 34.4 per cent in 1973, 27.2 per cent in 1974, before they levelled off with a slight decline of 2.9 per cent in 1975. In other words profits increased from $7.7 billion in 1970 to $17.8 billion in 1975, or 131 per cent. Yet unfriendly Ottawa, in the words of one outstanding Canadian chief executive, does not understand free enterprise.

Despite the popular impression, corporate income tax rates declined during that five year period. In 1970 corporations paid an effective federal rate of 29.6 per cent on their $7.7 billion of profits; in 1975 the effective federal rate was 26.6 per cent on profits of $17.8 billion.

Then Mr. Kierans went on to give four examples of corporations—the Royal Bank, the CPR, the Noranda group, and Imperial Oil—which in the years from 1970 to 1975 increased the value of their assets by almost as much as in the 50 to 75 years of their existence prior thereto. It is no wonder that when we have that kind of tax system you get people so desperate, so disillusioned with Liberal governments both federal and provincial, that they vote for a party with whose basic principles they do not agree.

I want to talk for a few moments about another reason why the people of Quebec voted the way they did. Again let me say I regret that the people of Quebec felt it necessary or advisable to vote for a party which is separatist. I want to quote from the The Canadian magazine, June 7, 1975, issue carried in the Winnipeg Tribune. In an article entitled "The Real Losers", by Mary Kate Rowan, she writes about what life is like in the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec, for which we were able to find over $1 billion for a two week extravaganza. This is the kind of thing she puts on the record about the city of Montreal which Liberal governments, federal and provincial, have permitted and still permit:

> In Canada it's estimated that 25 per cent of all children live in poverty. In the city of Montreal, the figure is 46 per cent, almost double the national average.
>
> In Montreal, the same city that is spending $320 million on the futuristic Olympic stadium, 15,000 dwelling units don't have hot water. In 10,625 homes people live without a bathtub or shower.

Then she writes that when the school council of the Island of Montreal had $3.4 million to give to schools in low income areas, they decided to send out three researchers to find out exactly where the poor areas were. They found that in greater Montreal just under one quarter of the children under 15 could be classed as poor. In the actual city of Montreal the figure rises to 46 per cent.

According to the Montreal health department which did a survey at one low income parent, downtown public school, they found that half the children lived in a home that had either no bathtub or no hot water, or lacked both; that 21 per cent of the children were considered to be malnourished, and over 25 per cent were underweight or short for their age. And so on, Mr. Speaker.

Why do governments permit this, Mr. Speaker? Why do Liberal governments become involved in an Olympic spectacular rather than building housing for the poor? Why did the government get involved in constructing Mirabel airport rather than undertaking a school lunch program? They did so because they convinced themselves that what we need to do is to fight inflation, and they are fighting inflation on the backs of the poor, the poverty stricken and the unemployed.

The bill we are discussing legalizes the cutting off of job creation programs such as OFY, and cutbacks in programs such as LIP and LEAP. This is not the time to discuss some of the very fundamental criticisms we have made of those programs, but it is obvious to most people who want to be objective and realistic that the government's manpower programs are in a shambles. One does not have to be an opposition politician, or in a provincial government, the Department of Manpower, departments in colleges and universities, or a department of education expert, to know that government programs are in a shambles.

The C.D. Howe Institute, which is no radical, revolutionary organization—

Mr. Hogan: A very right-wing organization.

Mr. Orlikow: "A very right-wing organization", says my colleague from Cape Breton-East Richmond—commissioned a study of job creation programs by a Barbara Goldman, a former associate economist at the institute. She found that current manpower programs are heavily weighted toward training, even though the training given does not often match labour market requirements. Anybody who walks around any city in Canada and talks to the people knows—I hope that the minister will pay some attention at some point, even if not tonight—that direct job creation programs help to cut unemployment without exacerbating inflation. She found that Canada has not been stingy in its manpower policies. The department is expected to spend, she says, $830 million in the current fiscal year, but the money has not been efficiently spent, partly because of the stop-go policies of the government. Those were political decisions that were made by the government.

She then gives some examples. In June, 1975, the then finance minister announced a $450 million direct employment program to last two years. When he did that the unemployment rate was 7.1 per cent. In December of 1975, when unemployment was 7.3 per cent, the then president of the treasury board announced cuts in manpower programs of over $100 million. Similarly, this year unemployment in the month of May was back at the level of 7.15 per cent, the Minister of Finance reaffirmed the government's interest in direct job creation, but the then manpower minister had already warned that no new programs could be expected before this fall. And we have not had any, Mr. Speaker.

● (2120)

Miss Goldman pointed out that the spending cuts were heaviest in the innovative job creation programs and that the reductions came there because those programs did not have the built-in bureaucratic safeguards and inertia that the older training programs have. She pointed out that at the peak in 1972-73 only 32 per cent of Ottawa's manpower budget went to job creation. Most of the rest, she said, goes to training and to Canada Manpower Centres, even though CMC's are known to have a poor placement record and the training all to often equips people for jobs that do not exist. She went on to illustrate how much of the money for training is spent for training people in farming and fishing when there are not sufficient jobs in those fields.

She makes some very concrete suggestions. She proposes a program giving long-term jobs to people who otherwise would not be able to work at all. This would be similar to the present Local Employment Assistance Program. She proposes a second program providing short-term jobs in community services for people in transition to the regular labour market. Services would be provided on a permanent basis, but the jobs would be short-term. This would be similar to the former Local Initiatives Program. She suggests a third program to be used only when unemployment hits a cyclical high, to provide short-term jobs on special projects involving recreation or environmental cleanups—projects which can be easily started and stopped.

I find it interesting that the C.D. Howe Institute would sponsor a study which in many ways reaches precisely the same conclusions members of our party have been advocating for some considerable time. We have argued, and will continue to argue, that this country cannot afford the kind of unemployment we have, and in fact cannot afford unemployment. The Minister of Finance of course will say that he cannot in this period of inflation inaugurate programs which would put the populace to work.

It is obvious to us that when we have the kind of unemployment we have, with over 700,000 people out of work, we are losing approximately $4 billion a year in terms of lost production, and that the taxes which would be derived by the three levels of government, if we had full employment, would represent something in the neighbourhood of $1¼ billion to $1½ billion, and that the money therefore would be much better spent than in the way we are spending it now dealing with unemployment through unemployment insurance and welfare at the local levels.

We believe, as does the President elect of the United States, Mr. Carter, that this country can have and should have full employment. We want to end the frustration and humiliation suffered by the unemployed. We want to end the alienation in the community, the family disintegration, and the social confrontation which accompany long-term unemployment. We want to end the waste in human resources which reduces our potential wealth as a nation. We can see that a Liberal government has not adopted the principle of full employment and will not adopt that principle.

As I said at the beginning of my speech, we were not surprised that the people of Quebec rejected the Liberal government of Quebec which was a partner in this policy of encouraging and permitting the kind of large scale unemployment which this country had not seen since the hungry thirties. This government has shown itself to be unwilling and unable to end unemployment. In 1970 the government sought to fight inflation by creating further unemployment. Its success in fighting inflation then, as now, was an illusion. However, the government did create high unemployment at that time and therefore encouraged the growth of social problems while reducing the potential wealth of the country.

In recent years the Liberal government has paid lip service to the objective of full employment. The government had its LIP program, its LEAP program, its OFY and so on, but it has not operated these in a serious, broad and consistent attack on unemployment. It has used these as political ploys too often manipulated for partisan purposes. These have never been part of a serious mass campaign against unemployment. The programs they have permitted and which we are discussing today reflect this. They bear no consistent relationship to national unemployment or to the needs of this country.

Now we are getting a new approach. Instead of the 4 per cent unemployment which some ten years ago was considered by the government and by members of the Economic Council to be full employment—or as the Economic Council said in 1965, 3 per cent—now we are given the rationale that probably 6 per cent unemployment is full employment. Why? Because there are two members of a family working, as if people work only because they want to, as if they do not work in order to buy a house in these days when two incomes are required to meet the mortgage payments with an interest rate of around 12 per cent.

We believe, and have outlined on many occasions, that this country can and must have full employment. I think the lesson of the election of yesterday is that the people of Quebec will not stand for unemployment of 10 per cent or more, and that is what forced them to vote for a party with which they do not agree on a very fundamental issue, the question of a separate status for Quebec.

We believe that if the country is to be kept together and is to meet the needs of the Canadian people, is to do the things which are required to make life comfortable and enjoyable for all the people of this country, we must adopt programs which will insure full employment, not just full employment in the city of Toronto, the city of Hamilton, but also in the Maritimes, in Quebec, and in the inter-lake area of Manitoba. We believe this can and should be done and we believe this government has completely misunderstood the needs and desires of the Canadian people. We believe the government must change its course. I suggest that if it wants to survive politically it must change course very quickly of its fate will be that suffered by its party in Quebec yesterday.

● (2130)

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in making a number of comments on the contents of Bill C-19 I want to show members of the House that for all intents and purposes this bill is another cosmetic approach by the government to cover up what has become a long standing problem between the government and the Canadian people, that is, that this government is correctly perceived by the Canadian taxpayers as having become in the last years the spender of the public purse to such a degree that it has completely lost control of the amounts of money that are being spent. Now that the government is preaching restraint one can almost compare it to a drunken sailor trying to preach temperance.

The government has not committed itself to a restraint program on government spending, but rather it has committed itself to doing something about its perceptual problem, that is, the perception which exists among Canadians that the government has lost control over its spending. The government does not want to stop spending, although it may make slight modifications in it, and it wants to continue on the path which it has set for itself, but it hopes that the Canadian people will not perceive it as the high finance spender which it has turned out to be.

Let us take a look at some of the clauses in Bill C-19. First of all, let us take a look at the repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act. By repealing this section I understand the government would like to abolish the subsidy on the movement of grain and flour to ports in central and eastern Canada. In testimony before the Standing Committee on Agriculture the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) indicated that there would be a saving of approximately $11 million. One must say that any attempt the government makes at saving money, if it is a well thought out and considered plan, must be lauded, but when you look a little further you find that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) then gave a $9 million subsidy, which offsets the saving which the government was going to make. The irony of this is that in the cabinet they cannot agree on whether or not the section should be repealed in the first place.

The Minister of Transport wants the section repealed, but what does the Minister of Agriculture say, who supposedly should have some say in the management of the ports on the Great Lakes and the movement of grain to central and eastern Canada? In report No. 84 of the Standing Committee on Agriculture dated May 4, 1976, the Minister of Agriculture had the following to say about this bill. I should indicate that the same clause was before the House before the summer recess, but it was brought back. The Minister of Agriculture said the following at the meeting of the standing committee:

> The ships will not stay loaded in the ports because it is the last run they can make in the fall, if they are down to the St. Lawrence they will not have time to get back to the lakehead to load and come into the bay port elevator. So you can rail that grain out in the winter because you will lose the subsidy on that movement of grain by rail. That amounts to about $11 million, if I remember correctly.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) then said:

> You are in agreement with that bill then.

And the minister replied:

> No, I am not. I think it is nuts. I want to clarify that; that part on which I voiced my opinion, I think, is very wrong.

Mr. Parent: Who said that?

Mr. Epp: I hear an hon. member opposite from the province of Ontario questioning that statement. I suggest they check with the Minister of Agriculture to see whether or not he said it because it is on the record, or they could check with his executive assistant or a few other people. Who speaks for agriculture, the high flying Minister of Transport, the Minister of Agriculture, or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald)? The point to be made is that eastern interests, farmers in Ontario and Atlantic Canada, do not want a subsidy such as has now been offered by the Minister of Transport to the flour milling industry. What they want is the retention of section 272 and the retention of at and east rates.

We in western Canada have learned to know the Minister of Transport and we do not trust him. I say to him that if there is any further erosion of the Crowsnest rates, he will be in mighty trouble. I do not believe this is the first step in his demise. He took it himself when he stepped into the plane, but this is another step. I repeat to the minister very clearly that in no way will western, central, and eastern Canadians accept his continual tampering with freight rates without any compensatory action, and they will not accept his attitude that he is always right even though the world is against him. That is the attitude which he is continually portraying. Everybody is out of step except our Otto.

Who speaks on the question of the repeal? Is it the Minister of Agriculture who has said in committee, and it is on the record, in the way that only he can say it, that the bill is worthless, or is it the Minister of Transport who is trying to convince the Canadian people that the government is saving the taxpayers' money? What kind of flim-flam shell game is this? I agree that this is a significant sum, but it pales in comparison with the $740,000 for a public aircraft that the minister has used. If the minister is travelling specifically on government business and he cannot fit into commercial airline schedules, then government planes are there for the use of ministers, but what did the minister use that plane for? I guess that must have been one of the highest flying cocktail parties in Canada's history. Also he went to the Grey Cup game to represent the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who at that time had the responsibility for fitness and amateur sport. I find it surprising that he went to a professional game in that capacity. But be that as it may, I wonder why the Minister of Transport had to fly there when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was already there representing the government.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He was there to hold the flower.

• (2140)

Mr. Epp: We are now talking about restraint. The minister has flown to exotic places! He keeps on mentioning Grande Prairie. There is nothing wrong with Grande Prairie. In our modern age when people travel long distances by jet, a condition called jet lag develops. We do not have jet lag with this minister. We have jet Lang, but not jet lag.

Mr. Lang: You should try that one back home.

Mr. Epp: The minister says I should try that one back home. Well, we have, and we find that our constituents agree with us. They think it is unconscionable that the minister has spent the money he has.

Mr. Parent: What about when you flew back with him?

Mr. Epp: I did not fly back with him.

Mr. Parent: You have never flown back?

[Mr. Epp.]

Mr. Epp: Never. I was not even invited, and after I am finished with my speech hon. members will see why.

Mr. MacFarlane: That's what's wrong; he didn't invite you.

Mr. Epp: We will get to that in a minute. The point I am making—and obviously it has struck a responsive note opposite—is that Canadians will follow leadership but not the kind of leadership that the high-flying minister has shown.

Let us go on to another program, the Company of Young Canadians. This bill would end the existence of the CYC but in fact it ceased to exist on April 1, 1976. The CYC programs received much criticism, and many of the programs of the CYC could be described as social animation. Frankly I believe that the CYC should never have been started, and when it was abolished and given a decent burial, that was one of the best things which ever happened to it.

It is interesting that the last time the representatives of the CYC appeared before our committee, we asked them specifically about their projects, and they were not quite sure about the projects they had, but they said they would give us a list in due time. Approximately ten days ago, even though the CYC ceased to exist on April 1, 1976, those representatives finally came in with their annual report. But for what year? 1974. How can the government continue to fund groups, literally giving them carte blanche, and then go back to the Canadian people and say that it has a firm hand on the till and that it has control of its spending? The government obviously does not have that control. The lesson of the CYC is one all of us should keep in mind, and it is this: it was much easier to establish the CYC with its minimal cost benefit for the communities in which it served than to give it a decent burial, because once programs have been established by the government—

An hon. Member: It supported education.

Mr. Epp: If the hon. member is capable or rising and making a speech, I would be pleased to give him the floor. He probably needs the exercise.

The point is that programs initiated by the government are not easily discontinued, because people get locked into programs, and they become self-perpetuating. It is very difficult, from a political point of view, to end a program once it is established, and it behooves this government and every political party and every provincial government not to accept at face value every program which might look good on the surface, and to institute it, only to find out that over the years those programs cannot be ended.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Your constituents bought that idea.

Mr. Epp: No, they did not. They elected me and defeated the former Liberal member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): They bought something that looked good on the surface.

Mr. Epp: That hon. member makes more speeches sitting down than on his feet. I wonder if tonight is his night to make his debut.

The government has introduced programs like CYC, and they have gone on year after year. Finally I can give the government credit for ending CYC. The point is, why start it in the first place? Was it a political sop for a specific group of people to gain their support?

Mr. Brisco: The Prime Minister's friends.

Mr. MacFarlane: He is your best resource, more important than oil or anything else.

Mr. Brisco: The Prime Minister?

Mr. MacFarlane: No, you.

Mr. Epp: I think we should be careful when we talk about the Prime Minister's friends in this august body.

Mr. Neil: He hasn't any friends left.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Don't bet your last buck on that.

Mr. Parent: Call it ten o'clock, Jake.

Mr. Epp: I thank the hon. member for St. Catharine's (Mr. Parent). He just showed us that he does have some intelligence, a trait he has not shown here before.

The point which has to be made is that the type of student who applied under programs such as the CYC was not from lower income groups. Lower income students needed summer jobs and part time jobs while they were going to school. They needed summer jobs if they were to continue their studies the following year. Applications to CYC were made after the New Year, and very often approvals were not announced until just before the end of the university year at the end of April or beginning of May.

Students from lower income groups who had to have money to continue school the following year could not apply anyhow, and more often than not students of middle and upper income families were the ones who received grants under OFY or CYC. Those programs were not helping those students who could not further their education if they were unable to get summer employment which paid them adequately.

What about the Local Initiatives Program? That is another program for which the government is very famous. Last year before the standing committee the former minister, who is now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), said that LIP would be phased out and that last year was the last year we would see it. He then talked about an ongoing year round full employment strategy. Well, LIP is back with us for this year, and it had to be brought back because of our high unemployment rate.

Mr. Parent: Did you get any grants in your area?

Mr. Epp: I will talk about that in a minute. The government had to bring back LIP simply to reduce unemployment in specific areas. Those of us who have seen LIP programs finish at the end of May or June know that the tragedy of such programs is that people become dependent on them. There have been many good programs, Mr. Speaker, and I am not going to condemn them. Community halls and arenas have been built. Indeed the list is as long as you would care to make it. Very often because of the short term nature of LIP we find that we have created a dependency on government funding and that the people involved have not made arrangements to step into a permanent job. Sometimes they will take a summer job or go on unemployment insurance with the hope of getting back on a LIP program the next winter. As a result the dependency factor is built in. This is not only degrading to the individual but places him and his family in tremendous difficulty because there is no permanency.

• (2150)

An hon. Member: Are you for it?

Mr. Epp: The hon. member asks if I am for it. I guess that is how Liberals operate—as long as there is payola they are involved. They think that is the essence of government. That is not the essence, Mr. Speaker. Government is not the only vehicle which creates jobs; they are created through the private sector.

The Speech from the Throne talked about a year-round strategy for breaking new ground. I guess what that means is that we spend more and more. But it is taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker, and as long as we create jobs, short term or long term with taxpayers' money, the dependency factor is there. We have created a dependency factor through UIC, LIP, OFY, CYC, LEAP, and any other program the government has at the present time. This is degrading because it does not allow the individual to function on his own initiative.

Bill C-19 will also put an end to Information Canada, the propaganda institution established by the government to spread the good word about what is happening in the land. Now that it has been abolished and given a burial—I do not believe it was a decent burial because it did not deserve it—the individual departments have picked up the slack and are turning out the propaganda on their own letterheads. The most glaring example was circulated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He made a partisan speech—which he is entitled to do of course—and it was circulated across Canada under guise of a release from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) just made the second longest speech of his career—five words.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): At least I know when to quit.

Mr. Epp: He has just proved again, Mr. Speaker, that he does not. I should like to ask the minister why, if the government is truly committed to restraint, are public funds spent by his department to disseminate information concerning public health and why does the minister use those funds to send out Liberal party propaganda under the guise of departmental information?

Mr. Neil: He was talking about the sickness of the Liberal party.

Mr. Epp: My colleague says the minister was sending it out through the Department of National Health and Welfare because he was speaking about the sickness of the Liberal party. Maybe that is the best reason yet.

We must get back to the question of how much government spending can be justified. I have heard members of the New Democratic Party speak about employment strategies and the need for more spending. I imagine they are already heating up the printing presses in Manitoba in the riding of St. Boniface which is represented by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guay). The NDP have a grandiose program but they have not put a price on it yet—they will do that later. At the same time the NDP premier of Manitoba has brought in a restraint program to cut back spending. Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—ALLEGATION BORROWERS ASKED TO USE LAWYERS SELECTED BY CORPORATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, for a few minutes may I pursue a theme that I have turned to on other occasions in this House concerning the practice of a Crown corporation, namely, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with regard to patronage.

First of all I say there is a time for patronage, and a time when it should not be exercised. Unfortunately during the lifetime of CMHC there has been an occasion when patronage should not have been exercised. I do not fault the present government any more then I do the previous government or the one prior to that; I simply say the practice is morally wrong and indefensible.

[Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi).]

If you or I were in charge of a government department, Mr. Speaker, and had to choose a lawyer to conduct some case in the courts, it would naturally be expected that we would look to those who had vigorously seen to it that we were sent to this place. We would not want to look to those who had tried to keep us away from it. In that sense, all other things being equal and the lawyers being good, I think nobody would fault our sense of discrimination.

● (2200)

On the other hand if you or I were in charge of a lending agency and a person came to us to borrow money secured by a contract or mortgage, it would be wrong of us to tell such a person that he or she must choose from among a certain number of lawyers who would transact such business, and deny to that person the right to choose his or her own lawyer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Shame!

Mr. McCleave: That is what Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is doing today, and what it has done for years.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We will have to change that.

Mr. McCleave: Other mortgage companies used to follow such policy. If you or I went to them and wanted to borrow money, they would say to us, "You will have to choose a lawyer from this list," and you would have to use one of the lawyers on the list. That used to be the practice in days of yore. Now, Mr. Speaker, every lending corporation across Canada of which I know allows the borrower to use the lawyer of his or her choice. And so it should be, not only from the standpoint of freedom of choice but also because most of our legal societies are now protected by good insurance schemes, which means that nobody really gets hurt in cases of mistake. Under such schemes all the lawyers in a particular province pay money into a bar fund and, if mistakes are made in the course of a year either through carelessness or negligence, money is paid out from the common fund and nobody suffers the consequences of a sharp blow.

I say to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, it is time they lost their maidenly timidity and ventured forth into the mainstream of practice, as followed by other lending institutions. They have nothing to fear. However, knowing something about CMHC I must go further than that and say it is time the corporation told the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) who reports for the corporation in this House, to tell the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) that it is simply unacceptable for a lending corporation in this day and age, given all the protection available to CMHC, to insist on the right to name the lawyer who shall act on behalf of the borrower.

May I also make it clear that such lists of lawyers are drawn up with great care. Knowing my hon. friends opposite, it is safe to say that the best Liberal lawyers across Canada will be on the list. I say nothing about that, since I know the public will not suffer harm. I know all due attention will be paid to those who are told they must choose a lawyer on such lists. But when a person is so told to choose, it derogates from his or her right of free choice and in that sense is wrong. Further, I would think such practice offends the basic principles of liberalism or free choice, if such principles are still practised by hon. members opposite.

Finally, in presenting my mildly worded case, may I say this: When I raised the question initially in the present session of parliament a lady called me up and said, "Mr. McCleave, you are on the right track absolutely; they showed me a list"—this lady was from Dartmouth—"I had to choose a lawyer from the list and he charged me $200 more than my neighbour in the same subdivision was charged, who also took out a CMHC mortgage." She said, "I just guessed wrong, Mr. McCleave; I hope you win this war." So do I, Mr. Speaker. We will find out from the parliamentary secretary if I have won.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, contrary to the allegation made by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on November 1, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation follows the normal practice of mortgage lenders in selecting the legal agent to process mortgage documents. He is employed to search and report on title, to register the mortgage and advance the mortgage funds, and to certify to CMHC that its mortgage constitutes a first charge on the property. In the case of loans for the provision of housing to persons of low income, requests for the employment of the borrower's solicitor or notary are in many cases granted where the employment will produce a financial advantage to the borrower. In addition, in the case of loans on existing housing, where the borrower has employed a solicitor or notary to carry out the work of acquiring the title to the property, CMHC may employ the borrower's solicitor or notary to act on behalf of CMHC.

CMHC has, as a general rule, followed the practice of all government departments and agencies and employed agents approved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). The present practice with respect to CMHC is that, with the approval of the Minister of Justice, as the hon. member so generously stated, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) from time to time provides the corporation with the names of legal agents who may be employed for these purposes in various municipalities throughout the country.

In summary, of the 231,000 new housing units started in Canada in 1975, less than 6 per cent would require the services of legal agents selected by CMHC.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE BEEF QUOTAS APPLICABLE ONLY TO MEAT IN TRANSIT TO CANADA ON OCTOBER 17

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my remarks tonight relate to some further comments on the subject of offshore beef imports from Australia and New Zealand. In particular they will deal with my question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on October 27.

I commend the minister most sincerely for three comments he made in his response to me on that occasion. First is his statement with respect to negotiations that are "still being discussed with both New Zealand and Australian officials." It is important that these discussions should continue with regard to offshore beef imports into Canada.

Second is the minister's admission, finally, that these imports had been entering Canada prior to the "six cent under" agreement "for as much as 31 cents per pound less than it was selling in the United States". That is a significant admission in that the minister and his senior staff people would never admit to any discount in price until after the agreement last June which introduced the "six cent under" rule.

Third is his firm statement, and I quote:

> New negotiations will take place; I hope the result will be that meat shipped to Canada will be sold at a price no different from that of meat shipped to the United States under the quota system which has been imposed—

I hope the minister can convince his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), that this is the only way these offshore beef imports can be regulated as to price. After all why should a pound of offshore beef be worth any less in Canada than the same pound of beef in the United States?

That "six cent under" rule as it now operates on offshore beef imports represents a total loss already sustained by Canadian cattle producers of somewhere between $30 million and $40 million. This admission to me in that reply of October 27 is a clear indication that the minister was over-ruled in cabinet by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or that he, the Minister of Agriculture has since changed his mind on the fairness of this "six cent under" rule.

While I agree with the three comments of the minister in his response to me in the House on October 27, I continue to disagree completely with his continued reference to the United States cattle and beef industry as a supply management system simply because that country has its own meat import law with power to impose quotas by presidential order. American cattle and beef producers continue to have complete freedom of choice as to how they wish to market their production and there is absolutely no supply management of their production.

It is very reassuring to note that in a recent speech to the Canadian Simmental Association on November 12 the minister finally admitted that these offshore beef imports do affect our prices. In that speech he made this statement:

> Beef imports into Canada, particularly from Oceanic countries, have been large this year. They affected our prices somewhat.

He could have been just a little more specific by saying the effect was to depress our prices somewhat. That would have been the understatement of the year. After all, why was this new import quota imposed last month if it was not because of depressed cattle prices in Canada?

● (2210)

In the same speech the minister stated he had imposed import quotas on beef from the U.S.A., Australia, New Zealand and Argentina until December, 1975—last year. Let us set the record straight. As early as April, 1975, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association requested the removal of those 1975 quotas because we were then on an export fat cattle market basis and it was on August 7, 1975, that the minister lifted those earlier quotas, not in December.

In the minister's speech to the Canadian Farm Writers' Federation in Toronto on this subject of offshore beef imports, commenting on the failure of the United States and Australia to live up to the "gentleman's agreement" he warned—and here I am quoting from the London Free Press of November 13—that Canada would "respond accordingly to those countries next year for breaking the agreement." Surely we should understand by now that retaliatory action at the border is no way to bargain successfully at the negotiating table. Canada did not sign the voluntary import beef quota agreement though other countries such as Australia, New Zealand, and Mexico did sign. And when Canadian beef exports exceeded our allotment of 64.5 million pounds, set by the United States, is it any wonder that the United States finally triggered its meat import law?

It now seems that the minister is considering the establishment of a new import-export corporation to regulate the flow of all products, including eggs. Could this be an admission that our existing import-export permits legislation is not able to do the job? Canada's recent counter-quota on beef imports was imposed under this authority, and this is the vehicle which the report of the Beef Inquiry Commission recommended. Whatever authority is devised or used to restrict present unlimited access to Canadian beef markets, that is to say after the end of 1976 quotas, it is surely time that the new legislation was administered completely by the Minister of Agriculture and not by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The minister is well aware of the representations on this subject of import controls which have been made to him on several recent occasions by the CCA. These are well considered and detailed examinations of the entire subject and are certainly worthy of his attention. Until now he has failed to indicate why Canada should not employ a meat import law. If he does not intend to use such a device I think he owes it to Canadian cattle producers to explain why he will not do so. The CCA has recommended that a Canadian beef import law could deal with the import situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on October 27, the hon. member put a few questions to the minister about the steps that had been taken to protect Canadian beef producers following the U.S. decision to set up quotas. I hope the hon. member will find tonight's answer satisfactory.

In a press release on October 13 last the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced that the federal government was acting to safeguard the Canadian market from any disruption which might follow from those U.S. measures. That clearly indicates our intention to limit Australian and New Zealand beef imports should they threaten the Canadian market. That announcement, of course, is contrary to the comment the hon. member made on October 15, and I quote:

The announcement in no way indicates any intention to limit or reduce Australian or New Zealand beef imports.

Since at first the full effect of the U.S. measures were not obvious as regards Canadian exports and the possible movement of beef to the Canadian market, the first step of course was to establish a working basis in the form of consultations with the United States, Australia and New Zealand and put beef and veal under individual import permits. Afterwards, as announced on October 19, an import quota of 17.5 million pounds was set for the period of October 18, 1976 to December 31, 1976. The Canadian quota is based on average imports in the last quarter of the years 1971, 1972 and 1973 adjusted to provide for reductions in exports to the United States and distributed over the period of October 18 to December 31. The share alloted to each country will be based on their past performance vis-à-vis that base. Products already in transit will be included in the quotas. If the quantities exceed the country's quota the products will be kept in bonded warehouses thus respecting quotas. The clearance of meats will be controlled to reduce a possible market glut. Individual import permits will be required for each shipment under this regulation. This quota is less that of the last quarter of 1975, 20.6 million pounds, whereas there also were import quotas much lower than those of the last quarter during the period between 1971 and 1973, 31.1 million pounds. Consequently, it is obvious that imports will be reduced, and the government took measures to protect the Canadian cattle industry and avoid any glut on the market.

In order to be imported to Canada pursuant to the regulations, the documents must indicate that the meat was in transit at midnight on October 17, 1976. No importat is allowed if the destination is not specified. Diversion of meat to Canada from a third country will be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member indicated several times that Australia and New Zealand ignore the 6-cent agreement. The Minister of Agriculture said to the House on October 27 that he had no evidence to show that meat had been sold in Canada outside of the Agreement. Of course, there might be cases when beef meat was stored in Canadian warehouses before the agreement was put into force. Any reduction of the price of this product would be partially modified by the storage costs.

Canada kept its border with the United States open to answer the wishes of the Canadian beef producers. Up until December 1975, there were import quotas on beef meat coming from the United States, Australia, New Zealand and Argentina but at that time the beef producers asked that these quotas be withdrawn. However, since the United States have applied an import quota system, the situation has changed and we quickly took the necessary measures to offset the adverse effects of these quotas on Canadian prices.

[English]

ENERGY—REASON FOR FAILURE TO SUBSIDIZE COST OF ELECTRICITY IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in answering my questions on the failure of the federal government to subsidize increasing costs of electricity in the Atlantic region, especially Nova Scotia, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) claimed that his department has to consider not only the present prices of imported oil but also the future increases. He said to me that his department has to look at the whole question in terms of a longer period "than the period to which the hon. gentleman referred".

In my first question I had dealt with the fact that a surplus of funds that were intended to be used by the federal government for oil import subsidies is allowed to increase quarter by quarter, month by month, and day by day. Part of our so-called energy policy includes an oil import compensation scheme whereby the federal government compensates oil companies for the higher cost of imported oil in return for their undertaking to sell oil at the Canadian wellhead price.

The funds for this purpose come from the export tax on oil and petroleum products, as well as the proceeds of a ten cents a gallon excise tax which was brought in last year. In my question I noted that the surplus for the third quarter of 1976 was a little less than $100 million.

The picture for the first three quarters of 1976 looks like this. In the first quarter the oil export tax was $812 million, in the second quarter $820 million, and in the third quarter $542 million. The gasoline excise tax in the first quarter was $510 million, as it was in the second and third quarters. The oil import subsidy in the first quarter was $1,268 million, in the second quarter $1,188 million, and in the third quarter $958 million. The surplus in the first quarter was $54 million, in the second quarter $142 million, and in the third quarter $94 million. We are now in the fourth quarter. The quoted surplus shows that indeed there is a significant amount that can be paid out to Nova Scotia in order to help low income and middle income power users in that province.

The minister is arguing that there might be an increase by the cartel of the oil producing export countries next year and that time dimension has to be considered. We agree with him to some extent and we know that there is a strong possibility that there will be an OPEC oil price increase of at least 5 to 10 per cent in the new year. I wanted a guarantee though that any surplus that would still be in that fund would go to help offset future needs of the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, especially, at least for the next three to four years until they get their energy program, including the use of more Cape Breton coal and their new rate structure and their conservation program into full swing. The surplus figures I have read show that the moneys are already available for a special subsidy for next year in any case.

● (2220)

The minister, once again in answering my questions refers to the fact that the federal government will have provided very close to $1 billion to Atlantic Canada to offset the increases in oil prices. Now, the minister has used this figure in the House before and I have challenged him, as I do again, to prove this figure because the figure really relates, as far as I can find out, to all of the area east of the Ottawa Valley, which is the dividing line for the oil import compensation subsidy, and includes a good deal of the province of Quebec. If this is not the case, let the minister tell us so unequivocally tonight, but as of this date I consider the minister to be deceiving the people of Canada, deliberately or otherwise, when he keeps referring to this $1 billion figure as having been the compensation for Atlantic Canada alone, since the province of Quebec is valued, to some extent, in that figure.

The minister has further said in one of his answers to me that an automatic increase in the equalization arrangements entered into by the federal government and the province of Nova Scotia, including an automatic increase in equalization this year, can be applied to offset the oil price increase. Again the automatic increase he refers to is, I think, in the neighbourhood of $10 million. But surely the minister, in taking this interpretation of how the equalization grant increase might be applied in Nova Scotia, is grossly misinterpreting the meaning behind the equalization grants.

These equalization revenues, which are raised by taxation from all Canadian taxpayers, including corporations, come out of the general revenues of the Government of Canada. They were meant, and are still meant, to provide for such fundamental services as education, social services, and health care. The idea was that these services would be much more inferior in the lower income provinces without these equalization grants. Thus they were meant to guarantee that in respect to these services there would be no second class citizens in the Canadian confederation. To ask, at a time when the federal government is reducing its cost sharing agreements on health and hospital care, and when these and education demands are needed in the low income regions, that any automatic increases in the equalization grants be put towards decreasing power costs is, to my mind, a very serious distortion of the meaning of equalization.

The minister should know that one of the most important characteristics of the equalization of revenues notion under our Canadian federal setup is that equalization is a non-conditional transfer. In other words, the federal government cannot, and does not, have any say in the use of those funds for special emergencies such as the increase in power costs.

The minister has, time and again in this House, brought up the fact that the Premier of Nova Scotia has refused to allow him to make public their submission to his department in seeking a special subsidy arrangement. We, who represent Nova Scotia constituencies in this federal House, find it very difficult also to accept why Mr. Regan does not allow this to be made public. We were indeed shocked to find out recently on the Wreck Cove power project in Nova Scotia that the Nova Scotia Power Corporation has not yet signed a contract, which amounts to an open-ended one with the major contractor. Our party in the province has demanded, and rightfully so, a special public investigation of that project.

The minister has, from time to time, also mentioned other criticisms of the Nova Scotia government's energy policy and energy conservation policy. I am not really interested, Mr. Speaker, in any squabble the minister has with the Nova Scotia government, or the Nova Scotia Power Corporation, and who said what or who should have done such and such. The major reason for an interim subsidy for Nova Scotia is because the power rates have increased 50 per cent last year and will likely average another 50 per cent this year.

Thus it is of great importance for the federal government to give an interim subsidy of $15 million to $20 million a year for the next four or five years. This is the best way to keep the low income groups from being tagged with too heavy a payment for power costs. The federal government should insist that any subsidy be used to relieve the bills of low and middle income people. After all, the AIB does not control the sales taxes and the property taxes and other types of licensing services, which are increasing in a very real way for these people.

The need for the subsidy has to be related to the general effects of the federal restraint program on Nova Scotia, where there is now some 10.8 per cent unemployed and where there is increasing unemployment, even in the relatively well-off Halifax metropolitan area. Unemployment in Cape Breton Island is about 20 per cent now. It is a national scandal to see people running out of UIC benefits and forced on welfare, and with LIP grants slashed and no major job schemes in the offing. We in Nova Scotia and the Atlantic region are generally, along with Quebec, paying a proportionately higher price for the government's attempt at stability through the restraint policy than any other provinces of Canada.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan). He and I both have similar interests in protecting those Canadians who are least able to protect themselves from the high cost of energy. Indeed the government's policy has been to protect all Canadians from the massive increases of 1973 and since and, as far as possible, to protect them with respect to the possible forthcoming increase next January.

The government has moved up the price of oil in Canada in measured steps significantly below the international price. Indeed the international price is approximately 50 per cent higher than it is in Canada and, I am pleased to say, no group of citizens has benefited more from this policy than the citizens of Nova Scotia and the Maritimes.

The hon. member asked me to confirm whether or not the figure of $1 billion was correct. I can confirm that by the end of this year it will be very close to $1 billion for the four Atlantic provinces, and that the highest per capita assistance has been to the citizens of his province.

He also referred to the automatic increase with respect to equalization payments. There would not have been close to $10 million increase in the equalization payments this year if it had not been for one reason, that is, the increase in the price of oil which was to provide, under the terms of the federal-provincial arrangements, an equalization strictly related to oil, and $10 million is the increase which the province of Nova Scotia will attract for purposes of generating electric power from oil.

In the last minute or so I have and I would like to make one or two other points. The hon. member has suggested that there is some degree of symmetry between the costs of the excise tax on the one hand, the export tax on the other hand, and the oil import compensation. I would point out to him that virtually all government expenditures are met out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and it is not usual to attribute particular revenue streams to particular uses. This principle holds good for the oil import compensation program. Indeed if he goes back over the years he will find that revenues from the two sources I have mentioned have not been sufficient to meet the expenditures of the oil import compensation fund.

Second, I do not think he recognizes that the excise tax was also introduced as a conservation measure, a disincentive to the wasteful use of energy which for too long has been regarded by Canadians as cheap and therefore to be wasted. I do not think, in other words, that he can make the argument that if there is a temporary surplus during the course of a fiscal year, that is any more reason to expect a reduction or an additional payment. If that principle were adopted, the federal government during that period of the year would have to provide some kind of tax reduction because the national accounts were in temporary surplus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gillespie: I think we have to look at the whole oil import compensation fund in a much longer time frame than the hon. member has mentioned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has gone beyond his time.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

END OF VOLUME I