

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic
Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4502

18
20 22
25
32
36
48
60

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche
Series.

CIHM/ICMH
Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

10
01

© 1982

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| <input type="checkbox"/> Coloured covers/Couverture de couleur                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | <input type="checkbox"/> Coloured pages/Pages de couleur                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Covers damaged/Couverture endommagée                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | <input type="checkbox"/> Pages damaged/Pages endommagées                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Covers restored and/or laminated/Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | <input type="checkbox"/> Pages restored and/or laminated/Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Cover title missing/Le titre de couverture manque                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Coloured maps/Cartes géographiques en couleur                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | <input type="checkbox"/> Pages detached/Pages détachées                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Showthrough/Transparence                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Coloured plates and/or illustrations/Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | <input type="checkbox"/> Quality of print varies/Qualité inégale de l'impression                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Bound with other material/Relié avec d'autres documents                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | <input type="checkbox"/> Includes supplementary material/Comprend du matériel supplémentaire                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Tight binding may cause shadows or distortionalong interior margin/La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de ladistortion le long de la marge intérieure                                                                                                                                             | <input type="checkbox"/> Only edition available/Seule édition disponible                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Blank leaves added during restoration mayappear within the text. Whenever possible, thesehave been omitted from filming/Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutéeslors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte,mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ontpas été filmées. | <input type="checkbox"/> Pages wholly or partially obscured by errataslips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed toensure the best possible image/Les pages totalement ou partiellementobscuries par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure,etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon àobtenir la meilleure image possible. |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Additional comments:/Commentaires supplémentaires:                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

10X	14X	18X	22X	26X	30X
<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
12X	16X	20X	24X	28X	32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

National Library of Canada

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol  $\rightarrow$  (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol  $\nabla$  (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Bibliothèque nationale du Canada

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole  $\rightarrow$  signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole  $\nabla$  signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

HV5091

C3

Mae Millan Inroads - 1889.

PROHIBITIONISM IN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

It is evident that English politics are beginning to be disturbed, like those of the United States and Canada, by the formation of a Prohibitionist party. The party usually calls itself that of Temperance. But though we may wish to be courteous, we cannot concede a name which not only begs the question at issue, but is a standing libel on those who take their glass of wine or beer without being in any rational sense of the term intemperate. Temperance is one thing, total abstinence is another, and coercion, at which these reformers aim, is a third. As temperance implies self-restraint, there can be no temperance, in the proper sense of the term, where there is coercion.

The "Temperance" people on this side of the water are not much inclined, so far as I have come into contact with them, to listen to anything so rationalistic as the lessons of experience. They tell you that with them it is a matter not of experience but of principle; that their cause is the cause of Heaven; yours, if you are an opponent, that of the darker power; and they intimate, with more or less of gentleness and courtesy, what, if you persist in getting in Heaven's way, will be your deserved and inevitable doom. To those however who in practical matters regard the dictates of experience as principles, and who wish before committing themselves to a particular kind of legislation to know whether it is likely to do good or harm, the result of Canadian or American experiment may not be uninteresting.

In 1878 the Canadian Parliament passed the Canada Temperance Act, more commonly called the Scott Act. The purport of this Act may be described as county and city option. It enables any county or city adopting it by a simple majority of the electors to prohibit the sale of any liquor within the district for local consumption under penalty of a fine of fifty dollars for the first offence, a hundred for the second, and two months' imprisonment for the third. When adopted, the Act remains in force for three years, after which, upon a petition signed by one fourth of the electors, it may again be submitted to the vote, and if there is a majority against it, repealed.

In this Province of Ontario there are forty-two counties and eleven cities. Twenty-eight counties and two cities adopted the Act. The other day ten counties (nine of them at once) repealed it, and in eighteen counties and two cities petitions for repeal either have been lodged or are understood to be in preparation. In Ontario the Scott Act is generally regarded as dead, and the advocates of prohibitive legislation are turning their minds to other measures. This is a genuine verdict of the people. The liquor-trade had exhausted its powers of opposition in the early part of the contest; in fact it hardly appeared in the field without doing mischief to its own cause.

The general result where the Act has been tried appears to have been the substitution of an unlicensed and unregulated for a licensed and regulated trade. The demand for drink remained the same, but it was supplied in illicit ways. It was found by those who were engaged in the campaign against the Scott Act that the lowest class of liquor-dealers were far from zealous in their opposition to prohibitive legislation. They foresaw that the result to them would be simply sale of liquor without the license fee. Drunkenness, instead of being diminished, appears to have increased. A memorial signed by three hundred citizens of Woodstock, including nearly all the principal men of business nobody trade. sa town has creased wholly pu which wa

men con discourag substitut sure and the open which di law and continud
"From
leading
"and t
tion pri
am sati illicit t that the
is grea
that th drinking
the cor county
found t
Before t
were l
was so
Act th
and o hotels lowest
men o
and clarat failed
the t able law
that the spir
cide
law
mon
und
inst
the
and bec
of

LIBRARY
NATIONAL

of business and professional men, but nobody connected with the liquor-trade, says: "The Scott Act in this town has not diminished but has increased drunkenness; it has almost wholly prevented the use of lager beer, which was becoming an article of common consumption; it has operated to discourage the use of light beverages, substituting therefore in a large measure ardent spirits, and it has led to the opening of many drinking-places which did not exist under the license law and to the sale of liquor being continued till hours after midnight." "From my own observation," says a leading physician of the same place, "and the most trustworthy information privately and publicly received, I am satisfied that the most extensive illicit traffic prevails in Woodstock, that the abuse of intoxicating liquors is greatly on the increase here, and that there is a lamentable increase of drinking among the younger men of the community." At Milton, in the county of Halton, the effects were found to be the same as at Woodstock. Before the adoption of the Act there were but five places in which liquor was sold; after the adoption of the Act there were no fewer than sixteen, and owing to the persecution of the hotels the traffic was thrown into the lowest and worst hands. Forty-eight men of business, including the Mayor and Chief Constable, signed a declaration that the Act had signally failed to reduce intemperance; that the trade, instead of being in respectable hands, was in those of the bottle-hawkers and keepers of low dens; that the effect of the Act has been the substitution to a great extent of spirituous liquors for malt, wine, or cider as beverages; that drunkenness, lawlessness and perjury were much more prevalent than they had been under license; and that the Scott Act instead of removing temptation from the young had had the contrary effect, and cases of juvenile drunkenness had become shockingly frequent. Scores of petitions were sent to Parliament from county councils or other municipal bodies declaring the failure of the Act.

Wine, beer, and cider may or may not be injurious, but at all events they are not so injurious as ardent spirits; they stimulate less to criminal violence, the evil against which, in dealing with this subject, society is most concerned to guard. A natural tendency of prohibition however, as the evidence cited seems to show, is to substitute ardent spirits, which, containing a great amount of alcohol in a small bulk, are more easily smuggled, for the lighter drinks of which the bulk is greater. It is well that the attention of philanthropy, of practical philanthropy at least, should be specially called to this point. Not only does Prohibition appear practically to encourage the use of ardent spirits; the spirits which it encourages, being sold by the lowest dealers, are apt to be of the most pernicious kind: sometimes they are literally poison.

It is true that where Prohibition prevails the liquor-shop no longer invites the passer-by with open doors. But the illicit liquor-seller is probably more active than the licensed publican in thrusting his temptation upon those who are most likely to yield to it, especially on the young. A clandestine drinker is sure to be a deep drinker. He is sure to drink, not with his meals, but in the specially pernicious form of drams. He is sure to drink in bad company. He is sure also to contract sneaking habits, and to lose respect for himself as well as respect for the law.

Witness after witness testifies to the prevalence of perjury in liquor-cases, and this evidence is supported by that of judges and magistrates in the United States and England. The people were morally dragooned by a powerful organization and strong ecclesiastical influence into voting for the Act. The pulpit of the Methodist Church, which is very powerful in Canada and has thoroughly identified itself with Prohibition, thundered in favour of the measure, and the Methodist farmers obeyed. But no pulpit-thunder will make the people in their hearts believe that to drink or sell a glass of beer is really criminal or support the execution of the law as if they did. Archdeacon Farrar himself, in his controversy with Baron Bramwell, repudiates as uncharitable and absurd the doctrine that there is anything morally wrong in the use of fermented liquor. He says that he has never preached abstinence as a matter of duty, even to confirmation classes or to national schools. He admits that moderate drinking is a perfectly lawful enjoyment, and that multitudes of men indulge in it who are wiser and better than he is himself. Agreeing at heart with this, the people, though they have voted as their preacher bade them, cannot bring themselves to take part in ruining a neighbour, sending him to gaol, and perhaps making his wife and children destitute, for that which in their conscience they do not regard as criminal. They refuse to back the ministers of the law. When forced to give evidence they prevaricate and too often commit what is morally perjury. The "Bruce Herald" declared that the Act in that county, though nominally in force, was "dead as Julius Cæsar", adding that the idea that the law would be sustained by reverence for authority soon vanished, and that prosecutions failed from the unwillingness of witnesses to give evidence against the hotel-keepers who had public sympathy on their side, the people feeling that the Act sought to destroy a business and to confiscate property erected under the sanction of previous law. Have we not in the history of the poaching bred by tyrannical game-laws and the smuggling bred by excessive customs-duties, abundant proof of the danger of putting the moral sense of the people at variance with the law? To break the law is always wrong, but it is also wrong to make laws which, as they are unsupported by any moral obligation, the people are sure to break.

The testimony borne by municipal councils in all parts of Ontario to the fact that there has been an increase of drunkenness under the Act is not invalidated by the decrease, in some counties, of the number of arrests for that offence. Under the prohibitive system the liquor-seller, his trade being illicit, is afraid to call, as the licensed tavern-keeper does, for the intervention of the police. He does his best to conceal the drunkard whose detection would be the betrayal of his own breach of the law.

The Prohibitionists themselves hardly show confidence in their own moral code. They never propose to punish a man for drinking a glass of ale, though the drinking and the selling being parts of the same transaction, both must be criminal or neither. Nor do they, with us at least, venture to propose that the manufacture of liquor shall be made a crime. They confine themselves to harassing the retail trade, as though, so long as the drink was made, it could fail to find its way through some channel to thirsty lips.

In the Province of Quebec the Act has been adopted only by six counties, of which two have now repealed it. In the French province this question, like all other public questions, is apt to become one of race. In the maritime provinces the Act has been extensively adopted, and up to this time there has been no repeal. But the organized public opposition, independent of the liquor-interest which in Ontario arrested the progress of the Act and has now turned back the tide, has hitherto been wanting in the maritime provinces. The people of those provinces, moreover, to judge from their behaviour in the political sphere, are peculiarly submissive to pressure of the sort which the Prohibitionist party and the clergy who support it bring to bear. But the Act, though not repealed, is described as practically a dead letter by provincial journals which call account.

I was n
North-We
imposed b under pre is Prohibi
giving pe
Lieutenan
on what sible aut disastrous get liquo
the only smuggling and deter liquor is quality, indemnit contraband racter a will inc
more ca
the que
the sys
contraband
lighter
are easi

Basic
perjury
with il
or po
munit
spies been necess
Dick
in his their pris
whic were
Stat
crim
for nes
to
to pe ie
tin
th w

which call for its repeal on that account.

I was myself the other day in our North-West Territories, where the law imposed by the central Government under pressure of the temperance vote is Prohibition qualified by a power of giving permits, which is vested in the Lieutenant-Governor, I was assured, on what appeared to be the best possible authority, that the law was a disastrous failure, that anybody could get liquor who wanted it, and that the only fruits of the system were smuggling, perjury, secret drinking, and deterioration of the liquor. The liquor is sure to be of the worst quality, because the dealer will thus indemnify himself for the risks of a contraband trade, while his own character and that of his drinking-place will inevitably be low. I would once more call attention to this feature of the question, and to the tendency of the system which makes the trade contraband to the displacement of the lighter drinks by ardent spirits which are easily smuggled.

Besides contempt of the law and perjury the country has been filled with ill blood. Nothing is more odious or poisons the heart of the community more than the employment of spies and informers, to which it has been necessary and will always be necessary for Prohibitionism to resort. Dickens holds up the mirror to nature in his description of the Claypoles and their trade. Men who have been imprisoned and ruined for plying a trade which, as only the other day they were holding licenses for it from the State, they can hardly feel to be criminal, are naturally not grateful for such treatment. Their vindictiveness and hatred of the spies has led to several outrages and once or twice to the use of dynamite.

To force the sentiment of the people into accord with the law is the more difficult, since all the time their Church is holding up for their imitation a model of character which is not "temperate" in the Prohibitionist sense of that term. In commenting on the miracle at Cana, Archdeacon Farrar contrasts the "genial innocence of Christ's system" with the "crushing asceticism of rival systems". By way of reconciling this discrepancy desperate efforts are made to uphold the astonishing theory that the vinos of the Gospel was not fermented wine but syrup. The ruler of the feast at Cana, it seems, expressed his surprise that the best syrup had not been produced till the guests had well drunk: the accusers of Christ in calling Him a winebibber meant only that He was a syrup-drinker: it was on syrup that the Corinthians got drunk at the celebration of the Lord's Supper: Paul advised his friend to take a little syrup for his stomach's sake; and the same Apostle enjoined the Church in electing deacons not to choose those who were given to excess in syrup! To such paltering with what every one educated enough to be a clergyman must know to be the truth, we rather prefer the preacher who said boldly that if Christ were again to come on earth and persisted in celebrating the Eucharist with wine He would have to be excluded from His own Church. To drag the Gospel into this discussion on the Prohibitionist side is hopeless. There is no more of fanaticism than there is of formalism in that volume. When St. Paul bids us not drink wine if thereby our brother is made to stumble, he couples eating meat with drinking wine, shewing that in his opinion both in themselves are innocent. The Gospel bids us have regard to the weakness of our brother; but it does not bid our brother be weak or us to countenance his weakness by unjust and unwise legislation.

The effect even of less violent and hazardous measures of coercion in Canada appears to have been pretty much the same. The supporters of the Scott Act have not ventured to put it to the vote in Toronto, but finding themselves powerful in the City Council they proceeded to wage a war of extermination on the taverns. At one stroke they cut off seventy-five licenses. They were warned that this arbitrary measure, while it might ruin the tavern-keepers, would not diminish the demand for drink, that while there was a demand there would be a supply, and that the tavern-keepers whose licenses were withdrawn would not starve if they could help it, but would ply an illicit trade. The result was a large increase of the number of cases of drunkenness before the magistrate and an unusually drunken Christmas. Nor could the Prohibitionists find any way of parrying the natural inference better than by an insinuation that drinking had been promoted by the powers of darkness for the special purpose of discrediting their policy.

It may be argued with some force that when the Scott Act was adopted by some counties and not by others the moral perceptions of the people in the counties that did adopt it would be disturbed by the vicinage of a different code. But even if the Prohibitionist code were imposed on a whole nation the difficulty though diminished would not be removed. To make an Eleventh Commandment you must obtain the concurrence of the civilized world, intercourse and communication between all the parts of which are now active for a sectional morality. Put all Canada under Prohibition, and every Canadian who visits a foreign country will be apt to come back a heretic and to propagate his heresy on his return. Literature moreover from Homer to Dickens is full of the other view.

The results of coercive legislation in the United States, wherever the experiment has been tried seem to tally with those of coercive legislation in Canada. Maine is the "banner-state" of Prohibition. It has been trying the system for thirty years, more than time enough to kill the liquor-traffic, if the liquor-traffic was to be killed. Yet of Maine Gail Hamilton, who must know it well, said in the "North American Review": "The actual result is that liquor is sold to all who wish to obtain it in nearly every town in the State. Enforcement of the law seems to have little effect. For the past six years the city of Bangor has practically enjoyed free rum. In more than one hundred places liquor is sold and no attempt has been made to enforce the law. In Bath, Lewiston, Augusta, and other cities no real difficulty is experienced in procuring liquor. In Portland, enforcement of the law has been faithfully attempted yet the liquor-traffic flourishes for all classes from the highest to the lowest. . . . In a journey last summer for hundreds of miles through the cities and through the scattered villages and hamlets of Maine the almost universal testimony was 'you get liquor enough for bad purposes in bad places, but you cannot get it for good purposes in good places'. "What works against Prohibition", Gail Hamilton adds, "is that in the opinion of many of the most earnest total-abstinence men, the original Maine Law State after thirty years of Prohibition is no more a temperance state than it was before Prohibition was introduced". It appears that upwards of five hundred people in the state pay United States retail liquor-tax, though Archdeacon Farrar was informed that the trade had been completely driven out of sight. The Maine Prison Report for 1884 says "intoxication is on the increase; some new legislation must be made if it is to be lessened. In many of our counties Prohibition does not seem to affect or prevent it". In the city of Portland (pop. 34,000) in 1874 the arrests for drunkenness were 2,318. But drunkenness is not confined to the cities. Every one of the sixteen counties furnishes its quota. The number of committals for drunkenness for one year was 1,316 for a population of 648,000, while in Canada, an area at that time not under the Scott Act, with a population of 661,000 and a town population as large as that in Maine, showed only 593 committals, less than half the number of those in the mo

rnal Ne
politic
cause, drinki
of Mai
Septem
tion c sponde affairs
stood
in his visitor
world reelin
than i
Maine
averag bad at the h peace obtain of the fancy and s places swag
in the ing d
can b
the "
as us
the g hibit incre
popu statio
incre
count
it wa
cities other
Ve
hibit
Here
tivel
the
ture
perac enac
pena
pow
war
sult

the model state of Prohibition. General Neal Dow himself, upbraiding his political party for its slackness in the cause, complains of the number of low drinking-places which infest the cities of Maine. The New York "Sun" of September 9th last, after investigation carried on through its correspondent, said, "The actual state of affairs in Maine is perfectly well understood by every Maine man with eyes in his head, and by every observant visitor to Maine. In no part of the world is the spectacle of drunken men reeling along the streets more common than in the cities and larger towns of Maine. Nowhere in the world is the average quality of the liquor sold so bad and consequently so dangerous to the health of the consumer and the peace of the public. The facilities for obtaining liquor vary in different parts of the state from the cities where fancy-drinks are openly compounded and sold over rosewood bars to the places where it is dispensed by the swag from flat bottles carried around in the breeches pockets of perambulating dealers. But liquor, good or bad, can be bought anywhere". Perjury, the "Sun" correspondent also states, as usual, is rife. Nor does Maine fulfil the golden promises held out by Prohibition of immunity from crime and increase of prosperity. Though the population of the state has been stationary, the statistics of crime have increased. In 1873 the number of committals to goal was 1,548; in 1884 it was 3,672. The pauper rate in the cities is larger than in those of any other state.

Vermont has also been trying Prohibition for more than thirty years. Here the city population is comparatively small, so that the system has the fairest chance; while the legislature, under the pressure of the "Temperance Vote", has piled one repressive enactment upon another, heaped up penalties, and at last given the police power to enter any house without a warrant in search of liquor. The result is reported by Mr. Edward Johnson in the "Popular Science Monthly" for May, 1884. He states that "for all practical purposes the law is an absolute dead letter". There were at the time of his writing in the state four hundred and forty-six places where liquor was sold, and though the population is well-nigh stationary there was a marked increase in their number. "A large proportion of the dram-shops are on the principal streets, and there is no concealment of the illegal traffic. Spasmodic attempts to enforce the law are made in the larger places, but are utterly futile. Of enforcing the law, as the laws against burglary and larceny are enforced, nobody dreams for a moment". "Such", says Mr. Johnson, "is the unsatisfactory result of Vermont's thirty years' experience of the Prohibitory liquor-laws". "One might", he adds, "go still further and speak of the perjury and subornation of perjury for which the law is in a sense responsible, of the disregard and contempt of all law which the operation of this law tends to foster and encourage, and of cognate matters which will occur to the reflective reader; but perhaps enough has been said in showing the failure of the law to accomplish the object for which it was enacted". No attempt, so far as we know, has been made to controvert Mr. Johnson's statements, or to refute the conclusion which he draws from them, and which is that men cannot be dragooned into virtue. That is not by State interference with practices not in themselves criminal, but only by State interference with positive crime.

Massachusetts also for a series of years tried Prohibition. The result is embodied in the report of a joint committee of both Houses of the Legislature (1867), which ought to be in the hands of all those who wish to be guided by experience in this matter. That report, founded on the best evidence, states that the law, if by its operation it diminishes the number of open places of drinking, does so only to multiply the secret places, that more liquor and worse liquor was drunk, that drunkenness had increased almost in direct ratio to the closing of public places of sale, and that there was more of it in Boston than there had been at any previous time in the history of the city. "The mere fact", says the Report in words to which we would call special attention, "the mere fact that the law seeks to prevent them from drinking rouses the determination to drink in many. The fact that the place is secret takes away the restraint which, in more public and respectable places, would keep them within temperate bounds. The fact that the business is contraband and liable to interruption and that its gains are hazardous, tends to drive honest men from it and to leave it under the control of dishonest men who will not scruple to poison the community with vile adulteration". In conclusion the Report submits that so long as there is a demand for liquor there will be a supply, licensed or illicit, and recommends regulated freedom as the best policy.

In Iowa again Prohibition has been on its trial. A correspondent of "Harpers' Weekly", recommended as thoroughly trustworthy by a journal itself very careful of its statements, reported that Prohibition in the cities of Iowa meant free liquor. A correspondent of the New York "Nation" testified to much the same effect, adding that the local organ of Prohibition itself admitted the failure. Dr. Dio Lewis, the Cato of dietists, said that he had touched at several of the large cities on a tour to the Rocky Mountains, and among other things had inquired into the practical benefits reaped from Prohibition. In places where he had been assured that drink could not be had for love or money he had seen drunkards reeling in the streets. In Iowa city, where Prohibition was supposed to be enforced, he saw from seventy-five to a hundred kegs of beer delivered on trucks from a brewery. His practical conclusion was that Prohibition was a wild theory; "that as a preventative it had not met the claims of its sobriety porters, and as an aid to the cause of temperance was a failure". In Kansas the state of Governor St. John, the chief of Prohibitionism, where the most stringent Prohibition had been enacted, the result, according to Gardner, was that the drug-store were little more than rum-shops, and that their number was astonishing. In one town of four thousand people fifteen of them were counted on the main street.

It seems that experience has always pointed the same way. Under James I and Charles I. a series of Acts were passed to suppress tipping, the effect of which evidently was only to suppress the respectability of the tavern keepers who at last were found to be unable to pay fines, so that Parliament had to resort to flogging as a penalty. The failure is the more significant because the Executive was so strong, and was sure to be backed in this case by the Puritan Parliament. The Gin Act of George II. was found to have made bad worse, and had to be repealed. Even in Puritan Connecticut, where the pressure of ecclesiastical authority was tremendous, the historian tells us that "rules against excess in drinking and in apparel were attempted with the usual want of success." Heaven appears in no place or time to have prospered its own cause.

The difficulty of even enforcing vaccination in places where it is widely resisted, shows how arduous a task is coercive legislation when it is not backed by popular conviction, which, if it is in favour of the principle, will produce the effect without coercive law.

On the 19th of last November, a mass meeting of the friends of Temperance, connected with the Church Temperance Society, was held at Chickering Hall, at New York. The hall was full to overflowing; speeches were made by Mr. Warner Miller, Rev. Dr. Greer, the Bishop of Delaware, Mr. Seth Low, and Father the claims of its supporters. The sense of the meeting in aid to the cause was evidently in favour of high license, a failure". In Kansas is practically the best safeguard against Governor St. John, intemperance. Dr. Greer dwelt on prohibitionism, where the failure of Prohibition in Rhode Island, declaring that "the state was not less wicked as a Prohibition state than as a low-license state; that the tactics to which reputable citizens resorted to evade the law created a spirit of lawlessness; and that, with regard to the City of Providence, numerous clubs had sprung up there, where the citizens could drink their fill and be sheltered from publicity or arrest."

By voluntary associations, such as Teetotalism and the Bands of Hope, and still more by the general advance of morality, of intelligence, and above all of medical science, great improvement has been made in Canada as it has elsewhere. Old inhabitants tell you that forty or fifty years ago drunkenness was very common among our farmers, and that many of them regularly went home from market the worse for liquor. Now the Canadian farmers are a very sober race. There is a certain amount of drunkenness as well as of other vices in our cities, but a large proportion of the cases are those of immigrants and, to put the matter delicately, must be set down to the account of English tyranny in Ireland, which causes the sons of Erin to occupy so distinguished a place in the criminal statistics of this continent. I should say, judging from outward appearances, that Toronto compared with other cities in which I have lived is sober as well as orderly. It has indeed been proclaimed from the Prohibition platform that there are seven, or even ten thousand deaths from drinking in this country every year. This would be from a third to one half of the total number of male adult deaths. But about the time when this fearful announcement was made, the Mortuary Statistics gave the total number of deaths from alcoholic causes in eight of our principal cities and towns as two. In England likewise the evil habit of drinking has been greatly reduced without any restrictive laws or restraint of any kind, mainly by the increasing influence of medical science, and in connection with the general progress of physiological reform. It should be observed that voluntary effort will be weakened by coercive legislation. Prohibition if universally enforced would break up teetotal fraternities and Bands of Hope; and unless it was itself successful in extirpating the desire for drink, that desire might any day break out again on a large scale, and find no organization on foot to resist its sway.

Before the British Parliament consents to extreme legislation let it at all events appoint a commission of inquiry to report to it on the results of prohibitory legislation in Canada and the United States. The commissioners, if I mistake not, will find that impartial opinion on this continent pronounces Prohibition a failure, and inclines decidedly in favour of the plan of high licences with stringent regulation. That stringent and exceptional legislation is required for the liquor-traffic nobody doubts. Nor do the respectable members of the trade deprecate it: for nothing can be less conducive to their interest than drunkenness and disorder on their premises. It is quite possible that a stricter code may be necessary in England than is necessary here. We have nothing, thank Heaven, on this side of the water like the gin-palaces of London.

A license fee as high as a thousand dollars (200*l.*) is being proposed, and the prospect of revenue is tempting to the municipalities. But if the system is overstrained its effect will practically be the same as Prohibition; it will call into existence an illicit trade, which of all results is the worst. To diminish the demand for liquors by moral agencies has been shown to be practicable both in Canada and among the upper classes in England: to diminish the supply without diminishing experience has always been the case. Under James I. a series of Acts were passed, the effect of which was only to supply the demand of the taverns, and were found to be so that Parliament was obliged to repeal them as a penalty. A more significant example was so strong, that it was backed in this Parliament. The Act of 1622 was found to be so, and had to be repealed. The Puritan Connecticut legislature of ecclesiastical character was so tremendous, that the "rules against drinking in apparel were so usual that there was no place where it was not observed. It was even enforcing where it is now how arduous legislation when popular conviction is in favour of the effect with-the demand seems to be impracticable, resort to what expedients you will.

November, a number of Temperance Societies held at New York. The Rev. Mr. Miller, of Delaware, and Father

It is as needless to dilate on the evils of intemperance as it is to dilate on the evils of small-pox. The only question is whether prohibitive legislation cures or rather aggravates and propagates the disease. But the advocates of coercion have surely overstated the connection between drinking and crime. From their language it might be supposed that if we could only stamp out drinking, crime of all kinds would cease, our gaols would stand empty, and we should be at liberty to disband the police. If it were so, no measures, provided they were effective, could be too strong. But can we believe that cruelty, lust, covetousness, vindictiveness, malice, and the other evil tendencies of human nature in which crime has its source, are all the offspring of drink, and that with drink they would depart? Do they not manifest themselves, in germ at least, in children whose lips have never touched the glass? Among the poorer classes seasons of distress are seasons of crime, though the power of buying liquor is diminished. Is there no crime in Mohammedan countries which keep the prophet's law? Is there none in Spain, the people of which are remarkable for their temperance? It is natural that the criminal classes should also be given to drink, as they are to gross sensuality of other kinds; but it does not follow that their addiction to drink is the sole or even the principal source of their crime. Prisoners, too, are apt to plead drink in extenuation of their offences, especially since they know that philanthropy will hail their plea. A remarkable article on diet appeared some time ago from the pen of Sir W. Thompson, in which he avowed his belief that not only the bodily but the moral evil arising from intemperance in eating was as great as that arising from intemperance in drink. Certainly I should not look for more malevolence in a drinker of any but the worst whiskey or rum than in one who, like too many persons on this continent, overeat himself daily with fat and ill-boiled pork or beef, in steak cooked in the deadly frying-pan, as well as with half-baked bread, greasy pie, washing down the whole with copious draughts of the most abominable green tea. The Massachusetts Prison Report for 1884 says: "Intemperance is not a cause of crime; it is a crime more against society than against the family than against the state". The words are a little biguous, but they certainly do not mean that intemperance is the source of crime.

Whether we or any of us ought entirely to renounce alcohol is a science to determine. If science pronounces that we ought, there can be little doubt that the growing intelligence of humanity will gradually conform to the decision, as it already conforming to the decision by other changes of habit. But one can hardly help thinking that even with regard to the physical effects of alcohol there has, at several events, been a good deal of exaggeration on the "Temperance" platform. The sort of spirits to which Prohibition drives people, as we have seen, is poison indeed. But surely it is only in a highly metaphorical sense that the name of poison can be applied to liquors which a man has drunk for eighty, ninety, even a hundred years. In Manitoba there are two bodies of Mennonites, of which one drinks spirits or fermented liquors while the other abstains; and a person who has a great deal to do with the Mennonites and whose evidence is certainly to be trusted, tells me that the section which drinks is rather superior in progressive energy to the section of abstainers. No part of our Canadian population is more industrious or worthier than the Germans of Waterloo County, Ontario, who, like all Germans, drink beer. That alcohol does not nourish supposing it to be true, is not much to the purpose. If alcohol does not nourish it exhilarates. Tea, which some prohiwho, like too many pe-ent, overeat himself dill-boiled pork or bin the deadly frying-th half-baked bread-dashing down the whdraughts of the m-green tea. The Mat for 1884 says: "ho not a cause of crim-more against society family than against words are a little they certainly do temperance is the seyond doubt grossly exaggerated the effect of moderate drinking, in tempting forward to excess. To maintain that a nan who is in the habit of taking daily a glass of wine or beer must inevitably contract a craving which will lead to his becoming a drunkard, is necessary no doubt for the justification of those who advocate indiscriminate repression; but nothing can be more flagrantly at variance with obvious facts. An ordinary English gentleman takes a glass of wine daily at dinner without feeling any more tempted to swallow the whole contents of the decanter than he is to swallow the whole contents of the mustard-pot from which he takes a spoonful with his beef. A man may play a game of cribbage with his wife without becoming a gambler.

 If Johnson found abstinence easier than temperance, it was because he had once been intemperate. He knew that his own case was peculiar. To most men, as they require physical enjoyment of some kind, temperance is easier than abstinence. The Spaniards regularly drink wine, yet Croker in his "Travels in Spain," says, "The habitual temperance of these people is really astonishing; I never saw a Spaniard drink a second glass of wine." Another English tourist says: "In all our wanderings through town and country, along the highways and bye-ways of the land from Bayonne to Gibraltar, we never saw more than four men who were the least intoxicated." Mr. Bryant, the American author, has confirmed this account. I heard a clerical advocate of our Scott Act, say that he would no more think of putting liquor within reach of the people, than of putting a knife within reach of a baby. Supposing a glass of ale to be a knife, the reverend gentleman's fellow-citizens are not babies. Among the extreme advocates of coercion are, I believe, men who have themselves been given to drink, and who cannot understand the existence of self-control.

The taste for fermented liquors, if not congenital, seems to be immemorial and almost universal. Its traces appear in all the mythologies, Hindoo, Hellenic, Roman, and Scandinavian.
 Probably the use of such liquors is coeval with cookery, which also has been the source of much evil as well as of much pleasure to mankind. It is very likely that a great change in human diet, as well as in human beliefs and institutions is coming; but it is not likely that this change will come suddenly, or that diet, being complex, will undergo a revolution in one of its elements without a corresponding revolution in the rest.
 Vegetarianism has many advocates, and there are symptoms of gradual progress in that direction since the days in which a Homeric hero devoured a whole joint of meat and the bard sang of the work of the shambles with as much gusto as he sang of the harvest and the vintage. It is certain that most people eat too much meat and are the worse for it, though it has not yet been proposed on that account to shut up the butcher's shops and send the butchers to gaol. Fermented drinks may be discarded and cookery with them: a refined and intellectual world may be content to sustain its grosser part with bread and water from the spring; and our Christmas cheer may be remembered only as the habit of primeval savages with wonder and disgust. But in questions of diet, as I have already said, it is for medical science, not for the sentiment of the platform or for Methodist enthusiasm, to decide.

We have seen how in Vermont, Prohibitionism, exasperated by its inevitable failure, has heaped up penal enactments, and at last invaded the most sacred liberties of the citizen and the sanctuary of his home. It is the tendency of all tyranny, whether it be that of a sultan, a crowd, a sect, or a party of zealots, when it finds itself baffled, to pile on fresh severities instead of reconsidering the wisdom of its own policy. Prohibitive legislation in Canada has not failed to betray the same arbitrary spirit. There is a clause in the Scott Act (sec. 12) setting aside the common legal safeguards of innocence. It provides "that it shall not be necessary for the informer to depose to the fact of the sale as within his own personal or certain knowledge, but the magistrate, so soon as it appears to him that the circumstances in evidence sufficiently establish the infraction of the law, shall put the defendant on his defence, and in default of his rebuttal of such evidence shall convict him accordingly"—convict him, in short, and send him to prison on hearsay, if in the opinion of the magistrate, who may be a strong partisan, he fails to prove his innocence. There is a clause (122) requiring a man when interrogated respecting previous convictions to criminate himself, which seems intended for the very purpose of breeding mendacity. There is a clause (122) compelling husband and wife to give evidence against each other. When the wife has sent the husband to prison, what will the wedlock of that pair thenceforth be? Which of the two is the greater sin, to refuse to give evidence under the Scott Act, or to break the marriage vow which bids husband and wife to cherish and protect each other? There is no appeal on the merits from the arbitrary decision of the magistrate, and zealots have not been ashamed to demand in the plainest terms the appointment of partisans to the bench. It never occurs to them to consider whether intemperance itself is a worse vice than injustice.

The treatment of the hotel and tavern-keepers has also been utterly iniquitous. These men have been earning their bread by a trade which when they entered it, was not only licensed by the State, but deemed everybody perfectly reputable; and therefore when their trade is suddenly suppressed they are apparently entitled to the same compensation which another trade in the same circumstances would receive. But compensation is inconvenient and migration fatally weight the measure. It is necessary, therefore, to put the tavern-keeper out of the pale of justice; and do this pulpit and platform vie with each other in kindling popular passions against him. He is represented not only as the agent of a traffic to which it is desirable to put an end, but as a criminal and the worst of criminals—as a poisoner and a murderer "steeped to the elbow in the blood of civilization." Yet money made by the poison which he sells is accepted even by the most scrupulous of the Churches for its religious objects, while one Church at least, which has synodically declared for total Prohibition, counts its dealers in liquor among its members.

We do not want a selfish and isolated liberty. Milton himself did not want a selfish and isolated liberty—at least he deliberately sacrificed his eyesight rather than decline to serve the State. But after all this struggling against the paternal despotism of kings and popes, we do want a reasonable measure of freedom and self-development. We do want it to be understood, as the general rule that,

All restraint
Except what wisdom lays on evil man Is evil.

In case of extremity, such as war or plague, we are of course ready for strong measures, provided they are effectual. Not only war or plague

United States.

of partisans to the be-occurs to them to consitemperance itself is a w-justice.
 atment of the hotel
 bers has also been utte-These men have be-air bread by a trade whi-entered it, was not othe State, but deemed perfectly reputable; a-when their trade is sudden-they are apparently entie compensation which ale in the same circu-ld receive. But compeinconvenient and mig-ight the measure. It herefore, to put the tavef the pale of justice; and pit and platform vie wn kindling popular passi-. He is represented agent of a traffic to while to put an end, but as d the worst of criminal r and a murderer "steep y in the blood of civiliz-money made by the pois-ls is accepted even by the ous of the Churches for objects, while one Church sh has synodically declarprohibition, counts manuor among its members.
 t want a selfish and is-Milton himself did not sh and isolated liberty deliberately sacrificed liber than decline to serv-But after all this struggthe paternal despotism t popes, we do want measure of freedom and ent. We do want it t l, as the general rule t any peril of such a kind that the te alone can deal with it, warrants intervention of the State. Nobody ould desire to set arbitrary and pentic bounds to the common action the community for the preservation the whole. It might be necessary d therefore lawful to close the verns of the nation, were the nation coming the hopeless slave of drunken-ss, as it might be necessary and herefore lawful to close the raceurses if the nation were becoming the hopeless slave of turf-gambling. ut in an ordinary way we submit at, whether in the hands of kings majorities, political power is a ust held for definite purposes which o not include interference with your ighbour's diet or any of his personal abits any more than they include the imitation of his industry or the con-scation of his property. The Prohibitionist thinks that by doing a ittle injustice he can do a great deal f good, and so probably have thought all tyrants who were not absolutely nsane.

If fanaticism in pursuit of the one cherished object tramples on justice and natural affection, how can it show any more regard for the claims of political duty? A citizen is manifestly bound in the exercise of his suffrage to consider all the qualifications of the candidate and all the interests of the State. But temperance-organisations in Canada have formally resolved to exclude, so far as they can, from all public offices, even from that of a school-trustee, any one who will not pledge himself to the support of their policy. There may be other issues before the country of the most vital importance, but they are all to be sacrificed to the one end of the sect.
 The man may be qualified in every respect to be a legislator: he may even be a total abstainer; but if he does not believe in Prohibitory legislation, and refuses to submit his conscience to that in which he does not believe, he is to be excluded from public life, and the State is to be deprived of his services. On the other hand, the most transparently dishonest submission is accepted as a title to support. A fierce electoral contest is going on with forces evenly balanced, and everybody is in doubt about the result.

 Suddenly it is announced that one of the candidates has consented to take the Prohibition pledge. There is no concealment as to his motive; but he gets the Prohibitionist vote, and by its help rides in over the head of his more scrupulous rival, while eminent Christians and religious journals applaud a triumph gained over public morality by fraud and lying. It is needless to say that Prohibitionism becomes a marketable commodity among politicians, and furnishes the ladder by which knavery climbs to the mark of its ambition. It is now, perhaps, after Irish clanship, the most noxious of the sectional organisations, the number of which is always on the increase, and which are destroying the character of the citizen and rendering elective government impossible by treating the State as an oyster to be opened with the knife of their vote for their own particular end.

Once more then, and with increased emphasis, let me suggest that before the British Parliament commits itself to Prohibitive legislation it should send a Commission of Inquiry to the United States and Canada.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

TORONTO, January 25.

All restraint
 wisdom lays on evil man-extremity, such as war are of course ready for ves, provided they are only war or plague

