The Letter Postage includes the British and Sea Postage, as well as the internal rates in the provinces.
 The net proceeds, after defraying the expenses of the establishment in the provinces and the conveyance of the Mails, &c. is remitted to the General Post-office, London.
 The sums received for the transmission of newspapers and pamphlets by Post, have, ever since the establishment of the Post-office in British North America, been the emolument of the Deputy Postmaster-General, out of which he allows to his sub-deputies a commission, for collecting, of from 10 to 30 per cent., which allowance is in addition to their salaries or commission as Postmasters.
 For 1827 and part of 1828, materials cannot be found for making up a perfect statement of the sums received for the transmission of newspapers &c., but the above is the most correct return that can be made.

T. A. Steyner.
