

THE MIRROR.

no difference with you, dearest. You can go in Mrs. Horton's carriage, or if you prefer it, I will call and wait upon you so far as the door on my way to the Lodge."

"Pat Miss Rogers' brow did not brighten. A cloud, dense and dark, seemed suddenly to have settled over it. "Strange that I never heard a lisp about all this before, Mr. Marshall," she said in a haughty tone. "I never dreamed of such a thing. I have a decided and rooted aversion to the Freemasons. I have said that I would never marry one, and I meant what I said. I cannot be chained for life to a man who goes off periodically to the Lodge-room; who sets aside everything else in order to accomplish this; who will have secrets which no persuasion can induce him to impart to me. No! no! dear Hal, you must give up Masonry or give up me."

Young Marshall felt at that moment as if a thunderbolt had fallen at his feet and suddenly exploded. He looked into the girl's face to see if she were indeed in earnest. The shadow that rested there convinced him that she was firm and decided in what she had uttered. There was no jesting in the matter.

"Why! dear Margaret," he said, as he drew his chair up beside her, and attempted to take her hand. "You surely do not mean what you say. You cannot be silly and weak enough to entertain hatred against a benevolent association of men who choose to follow the Scripture injunction, and not let the right hand know what the left one does in the way of charity. You are far too sensible, too noble-minded for that. I never mistrusted that you would care whether I was a Freemason or not."

"But I do, nevertheless," said the beauty in the same chilling tone. "I do care, though you are pleased to pronounce me silly and weak for doing so. I can never marry one of the Order. If you take me you will have to withdraw. You may as well begin by staying away from the Lodge room to-morrow night."

Marshall sat for hours patiently trying to overcome this singular resolution on the part of his lady-love, but all in vain. She was as inexorable as death. She was wholly, and to Marshall's eyes, fearfully in earnest.

Not a muscle relaxed in her face—not a smile came to eye or lips. She sat upright and stubbornly maintained her cause.

"Margaret," said the young man, after he had exhausted every argument and talked himself almost hoarse. "Margaret! I did not apprehend any such encounter as this—any such clashing of wills and sentiments—when I came in here to-night. I thought at first that you were jesting—that you could not be in earnest—but I see my mistake. I love you better almost than life itself. For three months past you have been continually in my thoughts. Your image has been painted on the God-woven canvas in my heart. I love you, but I cannot leave the Masons. I am indebted to them, in part, at least, for my present position in society. Listen while I tell you a tale."

"There was a poor widow who lived in a humble cottage and spun and wove cloth for her daily bread. She had but one child—a little feeble boy—and she was herself an invalid, not by any means able to undergo the physical toil to which she daily and nightly subjected herself; but she kept on at her tasks, singing to cheer the sad heart of her boy. She was pious, and pious as, observation has taught me, in all of its lineaments cheerful and beautiful. But, finally, she succumbed to helplessness. A fearful paralysis seized her. The hum of her wheel and the stroke of her loom no longer resounded throughout her cabin. Her poor boy crept to her bed-side and wept as if his heart would burst. But she was too far gone to speak the soothing words which she had many times before stilled his grief. In that hour of gloom and darkness Masons entered, like angels of mercy, the widow's humble dwelling. They provided for all of her necessities. They took care of and comforted her sensitive child. When the widow died they buried her, and they placed her boy in a situation where he could, by active exertions, rise in the scale of social and physical well-being. That boy grew rapidly to manhood, watched over and protected on every hand. He took an honorable stand among his fellow men, but he has not forgotten his friends; he has not forgotten those Masons who ministered to his mother's dying wants and shielded her child. God willing, he never will forget or desert their ranks. Margaret, that poor widow's child sits now by your side. Do you still ask him to relinquish that to which he owes so great a debt of gratitude?"

"I did not know before," said the girl, rising, "that I had engaged myself to one belonging to so noble a family. I did not know that I was so near marrying a beggar's son. But such, it seems, was the case. You will please excuse me, Mr. Marshall. Our intercourse may as well end here. I shall return in the course of a few days to my friends. I wish you good night!" and Margaret Rogers swept haughtily from the room. Marshall sat like one petrified. He did not respond to her "good night." He did not move. He scarcely breathed. It seemed to him that his heart stood still in its pulsations.

"Yes," said he at last, in a bitter tone, arising and taking his hat, "I can excuse you, Margaret Rogers. I do excuse you for life. I thank heaven that my eyes have been opened before it was forever too late!" He went out, closed the door gently and noiselessly behind him, and walked with a firm step homeward. The next night found him at an early hour in the Lodge-room, with a brow as calm and untroubled as if no golden rope had a few hours fallen, like some precious vase, and become shattered at his feet.

In a few days after Mrs. Sawyer's soiree Miss Rogers left for her home in the South; and Marshall said mentally: "I shall never see her again!"

Time flew on rapid wings, as time, alas! will fly, and Marshall forgot his first love and married his second—the little blue-eyed creature whom Philip had essayed to entertain on the night of Mrs. Broughton's party. She was a gentle loving being—a violet half hidden in the nook where it chose to expand, and sent out its breath of fragrance on the air. Our hero's home was a happy one. Fair golden heads up about his table, and there was no trace left in his heart of the queenly figure of his first idol. But life for him had another

"I hear," said Philip, one day, coming hastily into the counting-room, and stopping beside him while he was adding up a long string of figures, "that there is a poor woman living three miles out of the village on the Byington road who is suffering for the necessities of life. She is not in any way connected with the Freemasons, so no help can be looked for in that quarter; but it has struck me, Hal, that although she may not be a claimant on our liberality still we had best not let her die there without aid. We are too good Christians for that. Suppose you take your little wife, Hal, and ride out there this afternoon. You can find out what she needs, and if it is more than we two feel able to provide out of our private pockets we will take up a subscription and apply the money to her relief."

Marshall acceded very cheerfully to this arrangement, for he had a kind benevolent heart. He accordingly that evening handed his wife into the buggy and started out on his mission of mercy.

The Byington road lay in a wild neglected spot, and they had some difficulty in finding the object of their search. They stopped, however, in front of a miserable tenement at last, and entered. A middle-aged woman lay helplessly in a rude pallet in one corner. She was an inebriate's wife. That most sorrowful of all conditions had overtaken her. An inebriate's wife—those words rightly understood and thought upon, are enough to melt a rock to tears. But this it seemed in her case was not enough. Pale disease had come to struggle at her hearsting and sap away the fountain of life.

Mrs. Marshall went toward her and inquired of her wants. It did not occur to her that she had ever seen her before, but Hal, somehow, after the first glance at the deathly face, and at the large bright proud-looking eyes grew pale and sick at heart. He, too, had started to approach her bed, but he paused midway in the room, and finally went back to the open door, and stood there irresolutely for some minutes.

"He heard his wife while she inquired into the invalid's wants. Heard her promising to send a servant with a basket of necessities that afternoon. Heard the woman's feeble inarticulate replies, and wondered if he was not in a dream. But he roused himself at last. "Emma, my love," he said to his wife as she came toward where he was standing in the open door, "order what you think proper for the woman. It shall be sent up this evening; but the dew will be falling presently and I think we had best go home, love. Let me assist you into the buggy. Good evening, madam!" and Hal turned away. During all his homeward ride, and for months afterward, he never whispered to his wife, or to any other human being, that he had recognized at a glance in that wretched hovel the yet proud face of his First Love.

PRINTING OFFICE RULES. The following have been almost unanimously adopted by the "craft," and are expected to be observed:

- 1. Enter softly.
2. Set down quietly.
3. Subscribe for the paper.
4. Don't touch the poker.
5. Say nothing interesting.
6. Engage in no controversy.
7. Don't smoke.
8. Keep six feet from the table.
9. Don't talk to the printers.
10. Hands off the papers.
11. Eyes off the manuscript.
12. Keep eyes off the matter.

Gentlemen observing these rules when entering a printing office, will greatly oblige the printers, and need not fear the devil. The ladies, who sometimes bless us with their presence for a few minutes, are not expected to keep the rules very strictly, and indeed, it will be agreeable to us to have them break the fifth and ninth rules as often as convenient.

Boys, unless accompanied by their fathers, are particularly requested to keep their hands in their pockets.

A murderous outrage was perpetrated on the Grand Trunk train going West on Saturday night last, when about three miles about Prescott, Ontario. A drover named Sykes, from Canton, N. Y., was enticed to leave the car in which he was sitting to join a party in the smoking car. When he reached the platform of the first mentioned car, the man who invited him out closed the door behind him and held it fast, and just at the same moment another man came out of the smoking car and held the door of that fast, while a third man, who concealed himself, jumped up from the steps, and presenting a pistol at the head of the drover, demanded his money and his ticket. The drover, being in fear of his life, delivered up both, and was then told by the robbers that he must jump from the train. This he refused to do, whereupon they pushed him off, cutting his hands to make him let go of the railing.

The train was going at a rapid rate at the time he was thrown off. Sykes lay where he fell till he was found next morning by the trackman in an almost senseless condition. He was at once removed to the nearest house, and medical assistance was called. His injuries are very serious. He lies in a precarious condition.

The Entertainment at Onslow on Thursday evening last was a very creditable affair. We regret that we were unable to be present.

BUSINESS NOTICE.

Having engaged the services of Mr. Isaac Baird as General Agent for the Mirror, and to manage all business connected with the publication of the said paper, all communications, whether for insertion in the Mirror, or items of business, addressed to Isaac Baird, Box 65, Post Office, will receive due attention, as heretofore. Subscribers and friends will please take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

In one of our recent numbers we alluded to that excellent institution the Young Men's Christian Association, connected with discussion as a means of self-improvement. "Reading makes a full man," says a great author, but speaking makes a ready man; and many of our distinguished orators have had their first training for the more spacious arena of public life, in a youthful debating society. Yet in some points of view debating clubs have an unfavourable aspect. They are too apt to encourage vague declamation, and to award their applause rather to dexterous management of an argument than to its substance, to pay too little regard to the inexorable logic of facts; hence instead of encouraging reading, they induce young men to read a little in order to spread the few facts they so acquire over a good deal of talk, whereas the talk should be rather the connecting link for the facts which are to prove their arguments—assertion without proof, which as the adage says is no argument, is one defect, and reasoning in a circle is the other to which we all are very prone.

What we desire to say before we begin often leads to a palpable begging of the question which in the heat of debate is apt to escape notice. Then again the choice of subjects for discussion is not easy, the title of the Association might perhaps lead some to think that religious subjects should have their share in the selection. But we have to bear in mind the distinction that exists, one very necessary, and shortly to be defined, between religious discussion and religious exercises: very little of any of the first we should judge to be expedient as much of the latter as you please as often as the temper or fervor of the meeting feels honestly inclined for, nay a minority should rather will in favour of such a proposition, for an earnest desire to study sacred things in union with others; to interchange good thoughts should never meet a check in such an assembly, but an interchange of doubts, a suggestion of difficulties to be cleared up, are there, we submit out of place. It is not in the moment of debate, in the hurry of argument or in the midst of an excited crowd that such difficulties are solved.

This is indeed excluding a wide field, for somehow or other no great question of the present day, or indeed of the past, whether history, political economy, politics or social organization but has its religious aspect and that is precisely the side of the fort which one or other of the combatants will choose for attack: partly because the difficulties of that side have not been well weighed, and partly it is to be feared from a certain glibness men have, from being familiarized with a form of words and with certain ideas which they hurl like weapons in argument, often without due regard to their significance, without charity in their application of due reverence in their use. Independently of this doubtless religion is the great question of the day, underlying every other—the whole world is yearning after certainty while wallowing in doubt.

When political subjects lead to religious discussion great caution is needed in handling them, and the same with scientific topics but here we are safe if we remember that the so called antagonism of science to religion exists only in men's minds not in either science or religion. Science deals with facts, and necessary conclusions drawn from them, men generalise on these and find their generalizations contradict some of their preconceived ideas on religion—Who is to blame?—Must science be wrong? Not by any means—Or is religion belied? By no means—men's own minds are in fault, they measure their powers by the little that they know rather than by the infinite amount of their ignorance. It is only on the outsiders and smatterers that scientific speculations have the effect of casting doubts on religion. But this kind of scepticism is very much the idle trifling of the day: it disturbs no one's appetite and interferes with no one's digestion. But it really does do a great deal of harm by irrelevant discussion in which the science is very superficial and ad infinitesimally small—a halfpenny worth of bread to an intolerable deal of sack.

Steering clear of these breakers, a well regulated debating society is most useful in making young fellows read and digest their reading; it utilizes their studies it makes them think and arrange materials in their drains like specimens on the shelves of a cabinet to be produced at will, it brightens up their faculties generally and makes them ready men.

Don't forget the Band Concert on Tuesday night.

BY TELEGRAPH. FROM CANADA.

OTTAWA, 1st April. The Militia bill divides the Dominion into nine Militia districts—Nova Scotia forming one district—subdivided into Regimental Divisions—two hundred in all. The whole Militia population, from 18 to 60 will be included, divided into four classes. First—Single men from 18 to 30. Second—Single men from 30 to 45. Third—Married men, and widowers with children, from 18 to 45. Fourth—All married or single men from 45 to 60. The active force to be drawn from first class. If not sufficient to furnish quota, then from second, &c. If Regimental Divisions do not furnish quota of Volunteers the balance will be drafted. Annual drill not less than 8 nor more than 16 days. Officers of Reserve force to be drilled with active force. Allowance—50 cents per day, without rations, for officers and men. Nova Scotia to furnish 5000 to active force of 40,000 for the whole Dominion. Total annual cost nine hundred thousand dollars. OTTAWA, March 30, 1868. In the Commons to-day Sir Sir John A. Macdonald introduced independence of Parliament Act.

Hon. Mr. Rose—Bill regulating contingent expenses of the Government and establishing Stationery office.

There was a long discussion on the inefficiency of the Judicial Bench in the Province of Quebec. Several questions were put by members, but they elicited no answers of importance. The Contingent Committee of the Commons propose reductions equal to saving $250,000 annually.

An attempt will be made to reduce the salary of the Governor-General to $32,000.

In the Senate Hon Mr Wilmot has a motion for to-morrow, recommending a general reduction of salaries beginning with Governor-General, and proceeding downwards, including Ministers, Members, and Officers of Departments.

FROM THE STATES.

BOSTON, March 25.—The steamer William Tibbets, from Bangor for Boston, went ashore at Otter Island Ledge, near Portland, last night. Passengers and crew saved.

NEW YORK, March 25.—The impeachment trial of President Johnson has been assigned to commence on Monday, March 30.

NEW YORK, March 31.—The trial of President Johnson, on the impeachment charges, began yesterday afternoon before the United States Senate, Chief Justice Chase presiding. Gen. Benj. F. Butler opened the case against the President in an argument, presenting all the facts, occupying four hours. The President appeared by counsel.

Mr Perry, late Consul for Tunis, has received a letter from that place dated Feb. 27, announcing the death of General Osman Hasmeh, who, in 1865, was Ambassador from Tunis to this country. The letter also speaks of a frightful distress in Tunis and Algeria from famine. In the latter place had been killed and eaten by the starving people.

The house of a farmer named Lambert at Marham, 25 miles from Ottawa, Canada, took fire on Wednesday night. Mr Lambert, with seven of his children and a man servant, were burned to death.

LONDON, April 1st.—The debate on the Irish Church Bill was continued in Parliament last night, and postponed to 2nd April.

King Victor Emmanuel is confined to bed by serious illness.

A despatch from Rome says the Pope is sick; the nature of the attack is not stated. LONDON, April 1st, forenoon.—Consols unchanged. Sales 25,000 bales. Breadstuffs quiet; Corn 4s. 9d.

VIENNA, March 25.—The new Free Press, in an editorial on the recent visit of Prince Napoleon to Germany, asserts that his object in going to Berlin was to hold a conference with the signers of treaties of 1815, for the purpose of urging them to unite in a remonstrance against the absorption of the kingdom of Poland by Russia in violation of terms of these treaties.

LONDON, March 24.—Emeutes are reported to have occurred at Bordeaux, and seditious placards have made their appearance at Paris. Lyons, Marseilles and Rouen, and the reforming of the "Guard Mobile" is assigned as the cause of these disturbances.

Advices from Manchester are unfavorable, the market for goods and yarns being dull and drooping.

LONDON, March 30.—The War Office has despatches from Gen. Napier's headquarters in Abyssinia to the 9th inst. The General expected the first brigade to arrive at Lake Ashangi on the 16th March. The despatches report King Theodore posted with heavy guns and mortars defending his position on the Table Land near Salanto, in the neighborhood of Magdala. The British captives held by the King were safe and in good health on the 17th of February. The baggage of the British army of every description has been reduced two-thirds by orders. Forage for cattle is scarce, the roads being very bad and difficult to travel, the country being for the most part dry and of volcanic formation. The soldiers are suffering from dysentery and fever.

LIVERPOOL, March 30 (eve).—Cotton buoyant, and prices the same. The best estimates say the sales amount to 20,000 bales.
