SABBATH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY. THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

A Clear and Impartial View of the Question of the Day

(From The Week.) The independent enquirer, desirous of proposed policy, which the Canadian govrnment is asking the people to ratify in advance, naturally turns for light to the addresses delivered by the ministers of the crown. Of the four ministers who addressed the citizens of Toronto a few days since, Sir John Thompson especially indertook the task of unfolding the con- Mr. Lemont, were presented. servative policy. That policy was explained as in accord with the document reviously published in the press. It involves, Sir John Thompson tells us, an offer to the United States to consider the Report renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, with such modifications as the altered circumstances of the two countries might call for, to reconsider the abortive treaty of 1888, which settled the fishery dispute Chorus along with trade questions, to enter into negotiations which would settle the Recitation Behring Sea difficulty and all questions upon the Atlantic coast with regard to fisheries, and to reciprocate in the coasting and wrecking business between the two countries. There is undoubtedly Solo much in these announcements that appeals to Canadian sentiment, and that is likely to be approved by those who pride themselves on their loyalty to the Mother Address Country. But from the practical point of Solo . . . Miss Ida Simmons view they are less satisfactory. These Hymn statements are made, it must be remembered, not simply as a declaration of government policy, but as the reason why the government has seen fit to advise his excellency the governor-general to the year's work. WHITECHAPEL MURDER.

Was the Crime Committed by a Woman? There is little doubt in the minds of the police that the murder of the unfortunate woman in Whitechapel recently was done by the hand of the same monster who perpetrated the previous ghastly crimes. When the policeman found the victim under the railway arch her eyes were still opening and closing, and her hands convulsively twitching in her death throe. The officer who found the body must have been almost within 100 feet of the scene of the crime, and yet he heard not a sound of escaping footfall, or the slightest noise of a struggle. This lends interest to Dr. Lawson Tait's theory that the murderer is of the same sex as the several victims. Said Dr. Tait: "Nothing is more likely than that Jack the Ripper is some big, strong woman, engaged at the slaughter house in cleaning up, and now and then in actually cutting up meat. The fact that the police were so close upon the criminal goes to prove to a wonderful degree that the opgraph. In contrast to the large grant of money which is to be made to Professor Koch by the German Reichstag, it is of interest to recall a time when he was unable to earn more than $2 a 'month! In the reminiscences of the great physician, published recently in a Breslau paper, one of his friends writes as follows: "Years ago, there lived in Wollstein, a small village of Posen, a physician who had a peculiar close at my side and kept encouraging liking for white mice. There was, however, a special reason for this liking. White mice, as we have learned since then, are excellent subjects for certain physiological experiments, and this physician was studying, at that time, the nature of bacteria. One morning, our professor, the celebrated Dr. Cohn, announced, in the course of his lecture to the road after that. I tried another one, the students, that the young physician of but I could not trust orders, signals, or Wollstein had asked permission to make switches. I was always uneasy. "There are no negotiations whetever on foot for a reciprocity treaty with Canada and you may be assured that no scheme for reciprocity with the Dominion confined to natural products will be entertained by this government." Senator Carlisle, a leading democrat, has introduced a resolution into the United States senate to the same effect as Mr. 6. Then the Canadian government, the Canadian opposition, the United States government and the United States opposition are all agreed that reciprocity treaty between two countries confined to natural products can not be obtained? They are, and this settles the question beyond a doubt. And for this reason that there could be no demand in Canada for the natural products of the United States, and unless the treaty could embrace articles that they can send us in exchange for our products they could not be expected to admit ours duty free and there could therefore be no treaty. Sir John Macdonald himself stated this in to realize the needs and expectations of the country has given rise to a vigorous agitation for a change, and fearing amongst other things, that if the general Election were deferred until the term of the present Parliament had expired, the demand for a removal of trade restrictions between Canada and the United States would have become irresistible, Sir John Macdonald has precipitated as spread to the repule G. The Game Laws.—Caribou meat and hides still continue to be brought to market from the country district. Moose meat is plentiful and many supplies came in this week. The law on this subject is pretty plain but does not seem to be enforced against the poacher, who has apparently the field to himself.

The Conservative leader declares for keeping up the wall which closes against us the markets of the neighboring republic, which if opened would certainly enhance the value of all our products. It is true Sir John Macdonald professes to fayor Reciprocity with the United States in natural products, but this is only a pretence, since he knows the people of that country will not accept Reciprocity in this restricted form. They are ready to admit our lumber, fish, farm produce and other products including our manufactures free of duty, if we will admit theirs. parties is clear and distinct.

When, therefore, the present Dominion Government says it is willing to accept Riciprocity with the United States, but so restricted that the arrangement must be confined to natural products, that is to what we produce and have to sell, and to what either they do not produce or would not be either they do not produce or would not be able to sell to us, it is equivalent to opposing Reciprocity altogether. A TIMELY WITNESS:

THE COXSWAIN'S SENTENCE.

BY RUFUS HALE. For many long days the Dauntless, brigof-war, one of the vessels of our commodore's squadron for the suppression of and islands in search of the fierce desperadoes who were said to infest those shores. One morning, while the red sunlight was distant rock signaling the brig. The boat with its reinforcements. captain sent Mr. Marker - a rather supercilious young midshipman - with a cutter, containing a swivel and twenty armed men, to ascertain if the signaling stranger wanted to come aboard. As the boat proceeded, and the fog thickened, Mr. Marker disappearing among the rocks. began to upbraid the coxswain, Granger, for his steering, though it could not be ex-

THREE PAIRS OF SHOES.

There they are in a neat little row under the mantel in the children's bed-room, a pair of twelves, a pair of nines and a tiny pair of fives belonging to the baby. They are all more or less wrinkled and worn and the pair of twelves have holes in the toes which caused me to say a little while ago to the sturdy wearer of them that there was "no sense in his kicking out shoes like that," and if he were not more careful he would just have to go

He heard me with the utmost indifference as I know from the fact that the threat was hardly out of my mouth when he asked me if I knew whose little boy he would have been if I had never been born. "You might have been the little boy of ome papa who couldn't have bought you any shoes at all," I said reproachfully.

"Oh, well," he says, calmly, in the fullness and beauty of his childish faith, "God has millions and trillons of shoes and I could just ask Him for a pair whenever I wanted them. Don't you see, papa?" Three pairs of shoes! Three pairs of tender little feet upon the untried border of life's mysterious land.

I sit and look at the little shoes wondering where the feet that wear them will be led in the time to come, the little feet that " --- Through long years, Must wander on 'mid hopes and fears." How much I would give to know the future that I might stand between them

THE SEXTON'S STORY.

BY BLANCHE MYRTLE. It was in a pretty, old-fashioned, country church-vard that 'I heard the following story. The sexton had been at work at a little distance, but he observed the inupon a straight shaft of white marble, on which was cut the simple inscription -

They are shrewd readers of the human countenance, these old sextons, and mine must have told him that I longed to know the story attached to that brief obituary. "She wor an Italian," he began; but for the reader's benefit I will translate his queer phraseology into ordinary English, since I cannot reproduce the queer and quavering voice of the speaker. "I never beheld a prettier girl; eyes so big and dark and shiny; a complexion like ivory, and the reddest lips. She was a fine figure of a girl, too; tall and elegant, though slight; and the regular blue-black hair that I've heard belongs to that kind of beauty. Her family consisted of an uncle and aunt, and their son, to whom she was engaged to be married, and whom she seemed to hate worse than poison.

"It isn't likely that I would ever have known the family affairs of folks so far above me, even in a country place like this, where everything gets talked of, more or less, but for the circumstance that I possessed a nephew, who was about the handsomest young fellow that ever the sun shone upon. He was as fair as the Signora Morelli was dark; his eyes were blue, like violets, and his hair like gold; and, bless you, sir, when these two young people first saw each other, it was as clear a case of love at first sight as any other Romeo and Juliet, and just as natural as the flame between fire and tow. "My nephew - his name was Reginald, and we called him Rex for short - was the organist of the little church over yonder, and the young lady sang in the choir, though she was such a grand one. She had a voice like an angel, and she used to say that God gave women such voices to sing His praises. "In that way the two young people first met, and their acquaintance progressed rapidly, as you may suppose. The cousin to whom the Signorina was engaged used to come to church with her. I reckon that Italian fellow loved the girl in his fierce way as well as he could ever love They arose the tenderest instincts of one's anything, though it was thought he cared most about her money. Of course he was as jealous as a Turk, and if looks could have killed, poor Rex would not have lived long to be his rival. But neither with them. "'Come on, in God's name!' I whispered. 'It must be close on twelve o'clock, > night, and all the moon there was has gone hours ago. Come on!' "While I spoke I found a little dark lantern, and we were already descending the stairs, and next moment we were stealing through the church-yard, with my pick and shovel in hand, which I caught up as we passed by the outhouse where I kept them. It was terrible work, but in less time than I had born! We laid the body on the bed, and we chafed the cold, white hands, and listened in vain at the pulseless heart. But I saw no sign of life. She was as beautiful as a figure of alabaster and as lifeless, for aught that I could see: but Rex declared that she was not dead. So, as it was necessary that I should restore the empty coffin and fill in the grave again, I was obliged to leave him there, on his knees beside her, wildly kissing the poor, cold hands and calling on her to open her lovely eyes to see her lover by her. But I had no hope that anything but some fearful trouble would come of it, and marvelling and terrified as to what might be the end of the business, I hastened away to the work that waited me. "But they were right, and like a stupid old man I was wrong; for when I returned the trance-like sleep was broken, and the soul had awakened within that apparently lifeless form, and the lovers sat holding each other's hands, her head resting on his shoulder, while he sought to calm the fearful agitation which had taken possession of her now that she began to realize the horror of all that had happened. Ah! that was a brave girl, and a story-writer might fill a volume with her history and all she went through in those few months from the time of her first meeting with Rex till this awful night. But I must cut it short, for the night is coming on. To be brief, then: She had never told Rex half, or indeed a tenth part, of what she suffered with those wicked relations of hers, especially the cousin who wanted to marry her. "At last their persecution reached a point when she could bear no more, and she discovered a plot by which she was to be hurried away to Italy, unknown to any one, and she knew well that she would never see Rex again in this world if this plan should be carried out. She was in des pair. The Italian saw that she had discovered the plot, and she was immediately locked into her room, and all communi cation with the outer world cut off. Even her maid was in the pay of her relatives, as she knew, but the girl seemed to love her personally, and, driven to the last extremity, she found herself obliged to make a confident of her and to trust her life to this girl's discretion. She proved worthy, and gave her entire assistance to her young mistress. They concocted the desperate plan, which, by means of some mysterious Italian drug, they managed to carry out, with such result as I have described; and while I was still listening to a story more wonderful than any romance I had ever read, this same faithful servant joined us. "'I found the door open,' she said to the Signorina, 'and hearing voices, knew all was well, and came directly here.' "But it was easy to see from the young with them. You may have whipped the little hands or put the rebellious little bit for the Signor's black looks; and then, I guessed that if some change was not Call and see the Stock and Prices. ent. It was coming soon she was in danger of dying quent exhaustion. My mind was speedily made up. I knew our good minister to be one good man picked out of ten thousand and I was soon at his bedside, telling him the whole story while I helped him to dress. Never have I seen a man more dazed, but he soon took in the situation. and helped us out of our perplexity. He went with me directly, and within an hour the young couple were married and driven by me (in the minister's one-horse shay) to a distant railway station, from where they took the first train for New York, from whence they soon boarded a steamer for Europe. Of course I need not say that Maria, the maid, accompanied them. She had proved herself invaluable in bringing clothes for her mistress and a box of valu-sum of money when they reached New whom the Italians declared a thief and a monster of ingratitude: but they never suspected the real cause of the girl's running away. All this happened years ago, sir; but I hear from my nephew now that now, and perhaps you steal softly to the occur to them that this country produces his wife is at length so strong and well that they are going to make their appearance before the Italian cousin and claim the Signorina's great fortune, which that villan has been enjoying ever since his return to Italy.
