The Land of Valleys and History

(The Busy Edge.)

To get a real travelling start on a tour of Canada, one naturally begins at Halifax, which is history and scenery. The scenery is obvious. The history is gradually being back-grounded by progress. Graphic chapters have been written about life in Halifax in the days when history was in the making. Halifax had a picturesque and somewhat bombastic life a good while before the capture of Quebec. It was the headquarters for the English military life of this country in the days when French and English were beginning to get ready for the great struggle that has made Canada so peculiarly different from any other overseas dominion. And if you stay long enough in Halifax even now you will find the history all there. Somebody has time and memory enough to recall the days when old St. Paul's Church was built on the edge of the Grand Parade just overlooking the great harbor big enough to hold the combined fleets of the world's navies without a cubic yard of dredging. St. Paul's is the best convenient museum of history for Halifax, and the traveller can employ his time to no more agreeable purpose than by spending an hour or so in that historic wooden building made of lumber that was shipped up from Boston in the days before the American Revolution made Canada build saw-mills of its own. And Halifax is to Canada what Boston is to the United States. That is in history. In charm and scenery and repose of manners in its people; in the quiet cordiality of its life and the atmosphere of classic contents that pervades the place, it is quite the equal of Boston. Halifax hangs on hard to the spirit and manners of earlier days. It is quite willing to let foot frontage dawdle in value so long as the charm of historic unity is not altogether broken. It is the one place in Canada—unless we except St. John—where history and politics are parts of the same book. But St. John is not so concerned about history and much prefers to boost the concerns of actual business. St. John is willing to concede to Halifax more historic lore and probably a better harbor; but in business and politics, let no Halifaxian imagine that St. John is willing to be left behind.

Nevertheless, the traveller is very little concerned over mere politics, which need not bother him if he keeps out of its way and keeps looking forward for the travel features which confront him at almost every turn in this somewhat quaint and beautiful city by the sea. Halifax is a character which it ought never to abandon as long as the old citadel stays on the hill. It has a rare combination of religion, history, politics, and scenery, and real human interest that it has taken generations to develop. And if Halifaxians substitute for that mere business, the country at large, thousands of miles from the Atlantic, will be so much the poorer. Halifax should lead the way—along with

Quebec City in French Canada—in the preservation of the best of elements that make a country interesting to both inhabitants and travellers.

And when you steam out of Halifax—remembering how you got to it up the famous Annapolis Valley and the Land of Evangeline, remembering the cherry trees and the apple blossoms—you have a feeling that here on the edge of things begun and still beginning in this country, you are leaving behind much that you never can see in any other part of Canada.

You came to Halifax by the Dominion Atlantic. You leave it by the Intercolonial, which is your most picturesque way of getting into it from the west. For half a day the route leads on towards Moncton, the headquarters of our only national railway; on through a country of varied local colors and never-ending charm of home-making scenery. It is a route that never tires. There is always more than enough on either side of the train to make the time pass a vain thing. You have no impatient when the train hangs up a few minutes longer than scheduled at some station. You rather wish sometimes that it would switch off for a couple of hours to give more time for the study of the town that has for so long been posturing that tantalizing picture.

But shortly after lunch time you are in Moncton, which is as different from Halifax as Halifax is from Quebec. Moncton is a city of natural phenomena, of which before natural gas at 48 cents per M. entered the field, the Tidal Bore was the chief. For as many hundred years as the mind of man is able to conceive the Tidal Bore on the Pettaudiac has been a daily miracle of second importance only to the Flood. For a good while during the recent historical era it was imagined by some legend-loving people that this remarkable influx of the tide under influence of the moon, meeting the current of the impetuous Pettaudiac and so driven into a mad upheaval of water, had some time in its making given birth to Moncton. This is a mistake. Moncton really discovered the Bore, which didn't know what itself was till Moncton came on the scene. But having for generations proclaimed itself at the home of the Great Bore, Moncton now wishes it to be understood that the Bore is but one of the sideshows to the main circus.

Nobody ever hitched the Bore up for a purpose. It never created industries or boosted the cost of real estate. So as no man can do anything with the phenomenon, except gawk at it or write poems about it, or paint pictures of it, the only hope is that some "movie" producer will some day include it in a photo-play. The benevolent guide somewhat sadly steers the tourist away from the placid picture of the Bore that hasn't yet come up to the powerhouse and electric light works of the town on the banks of the Pettaudiac. Once upon a time it might have been hoped that the Bore would generate electricity enough for Moncton. Now the power people have installed a battery of tremendous boilers that never eat a pound of coal. Gaze in to the maw of one of these boilers and you will find it seething with flames that come piping from the natural gas field down around Sussex way. That's the hope of modern Moncton, and it looks as though it would last as long as the great Bore itself.

Saint John Exhibition

Advices are to hand that the Dominion Atlantic Railway have issued circulars setting out their special rates in connection with the St. John Exhibition. These comprise three separate divisions.

General Excursion tickets will be issued September 4, and 8, with a return limit of September 14th. On Tuesday, September 8, special exhibition tickets will be sold, good until the 11th, and on Thursday, September 10, similar tickets will be sold, good until the 14th.

Judges' and Exhibitors' tickets will be on sale from September 1st, to 12th, inclusive, with a return limit, September 15. In addition to the above excursions, the regular Labor Day Excursion tickets will be available from Saturday, September 5, good until Tuesday, September 8. The excursion rates this year have as usual been put at a very low figure and particulars of the fares from any one station may be obtained from any of the Station Masters.

Mr. John Irvin Strongly Urges Patriotic Services

To the Editor of The Monitor.

Sir—The spirit which suggested and animates the united services is highly commendable and it is the duty of all our citizens of every class (professing Christians or not) to come together in these services and in this way give expression to our love, loyalty and devotion to the British Empire, of which our beloved Canada is acknowledged to be one of its most important factors.

In this connection I would suggest that the Friday afternoon service in the St. James' Church be not forgotten. It will do no one any harm and will be of much good to all who partake of it, whatever their doctrinal views may be. In this time of deadly peril and calamity, not only threatened, but actually upon the world, it behooves all of every shade of religious opinion to come to the one Father of all and implore His blessing upon us in maintaining the struggle for the right. Let no one cavil at the British peoples in thus seeking the blessing of the Deity, because the German Kaiser claims that the "Living God is with him in this contest for supremacy, as which power shall rule the world—a military autocracy, or an enlightened educated democracy, for this after all is the basic principle at stake in this world-wide convulsion.

The present struggle had to come to bring to an end the terrible armament incubus, which for the last twenty-five years has been crushing the material and moral progress of the world. In this struggle for supremacy in armament, the German Emperor, under the tuition of the Bismarckian policy, has led the pace, and Britain had necessarily to follow! Well it is, for the world, that she did so.

The sentiment prominent in the service last night was all that could be desired, even from a Christian standpoint. Not from selfish motives, not for aggrandizement, nor for mere national pre-eminence in the world is it desired that the allies should win in this stupendous struggle, but that national obligations should be honorably observed and the weak states in the family of nations protected from the strong in the mistle of mere physical force; that moral force shall rule instead of the brutal power of might. That English statesmen for the last six years, ever since the "Morocco" incident, have done all that was possible in human effort to preserve and keep the world's peace, was apparent from the admirable summary of the diplomacy of Sir Edward Grey, given us by Dr. Jost in his instructive but too brief remarks in the meeting and to which the packed audience in the Presbyterian Church listened with great interest and pleasure. Dr. Jost is always apropos when we speak, and length of days, seems not only to have widened but mellowed with wisdom his outlook upon human affairs. Of course it is all right in such a service to deplore the fact that though the Western world has passed through nineteen centuries of Christian civilization it still appears to be necessary for the nations to submit their disputes to the arbitration of the sword, but I cannot agree with one of the speakers (well meaning though) that Great Britain had sinned in keeping up her military and naval armament, or that we should humiliate ourselves in the dust because she has done so. I do not think that this speaker meant all that his words implied, but some might misunderstand him. Thoughtful students of history will recognize that physical force is one of the -ents the Divine Ruler of the world has employed for the development of the freedom of humanity.

This has been so well put by Hegel, the great German philosopher, in his work on the "Philosophy of History" that I cannot do better than close with the last grand words of the last chapter of that excellent volume.

"That the History of the World, with all the changing scenes its annals present, in this process of development (of freedom he means) and the realization of spirit.

This is the true THEODOCEA, the justification of God in History. Only this insight can reconcile Spirit with the History of world—viz., that what has happened, and is happening every day is not only not "without God," but is essentially His work.

THE WEEK'S WAR NEWS

MONITOR'S LATEST WAR BULLETIN

St. Petersburg.—War office announces Russian left wing has further captured impregnable Austrian position; 5000 Austrians left dead on field. London despatch says twelve Red Cross nurses have been killed, others wounded.

New York.—British consul here says German liner Kron Prince Wilhelm fallen prey to British cruiser.

Washington.—Turkey has half a million men mobilized preparing for any eventuality.

Paris.—British-French wing attacked by greatly superior numbers retired to prevent being overwhelmed or cut off. At no point have Germans been able to break through allied lines. Austrians have recalled all troops sent to aid of Kaiser in France, in order to defend their own territory.

A lady, a native of Bridgetown, who has been travelling in Europe with a wealthy American lady, writes that they were in Paris occupying rooms in an elegant hotel, but, when hostilities began, every waiter in the hotel left for the war, consequently they with other guests were told to leave at once, and hurried on board a steamer bound for England, but obliged to leave all their baggage behind. They expected however, to receive it later.

WAR BRIEFS

Belgium is the most densely populated country in Europe. It contains 638 people to the square mile, while Great Britain and Ireland contain only 375 in the same area.

Mr. Bonar Law, leader of the opposition in the British House, referring to the great burden of responsibility which Earl Grey must have felt when he recommended the proclamation of war against Germany, said "But this is a burden which the Right Honorable gentleman can bear with a good conscience, and every one of us can unhesitatingly put up the prayer, God defend the right."

Public Opinion, a very influential English paper remarks, "The moral wrath of the world against the Germans and the coincident approval of Great Britain's action is the most tremendous and encouraging fact of the day."

A week's rations for the German army, according to the Scientific American, Potatoes, 120,390,000 lbs., meat, 16,030,000 lbs.; Bread, 60,130,000 lbs.; Sugar, 1,365,000 lbs.; Coffee 2,009,000 lbs.; Salt, 2,009,000 lbs.

The King has offered Balmoral Castle as a hospital for wounded soldiers.

It is reported that a railway driver of Alsace, moving a train of 700 German Uhlans, purposely switched the train to another track and carried them all into France, and handed them over to French soldiers.

According to information, believed to be reliable, Russia has mobilized 2,000,000 men on the German and Austrian frontiers, half a million on the Turkish and Roumanian frontiers, and has also 3,000,000 men in reserve.

Portugal has pronounced itself against Germany.

The Crystal Palace, London, will be used as a hospital during the war.

The German West African Colony has been seized. It possessed one of the largest winter stations in the world. The Lord Mayor of Leeds says that one half of his capital is freely at the disposal of Britain, and the whole of his income if required.

The Empress Eugenie sent to Alexandra, £200 for the Red Cross Society.

The King has appointed Lord Roberts as Colonel-in-Chief of all overseas forces which may go to England.

The Ladies of Bear River raised $312.00 for the hospital ship. Two sailors, an Austrian and a Swede got into a dispute on their ship at Bridgewater, on the 26th inst. The Austrian stabbed the Swede and he died in a few moments. Lunenburg jail holds the murderer.

Germany has been supplying Great Britain with larger part of the iron and steel products required in different industries. This business will now come to Canada.

Prince Frederick of Saxe-Meiningen, a German Lieut. General was killed by a shell at Namur, Aug. 23rd. Prince William was struck and killed by two bullets before Liege.

The British naval authorities are using steamfishing vessels to remove the mines anchored by the Germans, in the North Sea. A large wire the ends of which are attached to two vessels, is dragged along the bottom and catches the mines.

The Steamer Tunisian, at Montreal is taking to England the first of 1,000,000 bags of flour which Canada contributes for the British Government. The bags are marked "Flour Canada's Gift". Several large English bakeries have offered to bake it and deliver free.

The term of the Governor General has been indefinitely extended on account of the war situation.

Twelve hundred and eight German merchant ships are tied up in Hamburg Docks, useless because of the war.

SPLENDID BRITISH NAVAL VICTORY

LONDON.—August 28—The Daily Chronicle says: "A glorious victory has fallen to the British fleet. With all the courage and fearless enterprise that distinguished our old officers, who many times went into the very jaws of the enemy, Rear Admirals Beatty, Christian and Moore have conducted the combined operations in the Bight of Heligoland, where the enemy had all its strength at command.

The triumph was complete. The German light cruisers, Mainz and another of the Koln class and a third whose name is unknown have been destroyed as well as two destroyers. The tale is probably not complete.

Evidently a concerted attack was planned just as our seamen would have planned it, to begin in the dark and reach its decisive point at dawn. The attacking force was the organic First Battle Cruiser Squadron. The light cruiser squadrons and destroyers and submarine flotillas were engaged.

To Rear Admiral Beatty, the youngest flag officer afloat, commanding the first battle cruiser Squadron comprising the Lion, (flagship) Queen Mary, Princess Royal and New Zealand, fell the opportunity and honor which make him and his officers the envy of the whole fleet. To him was entrusted the conduct of operation under the direction of Sir John Jellicoe, Commander-in-Chief.

Sir David Beatty is one of the most brilliant of our officers and with him were Admiral A. G. W. Moore, and Rear Admiral A. H. Christian, and Commodore R. J. B. Keyes, Commodore Reginald C. Tyrwhitt, and Commodore William E. Goodenough.

Complete as was the victory, we have suffered little. All our ships and vessels are afloat and in good order. We must especially note the high efficiency of our gunnery. Not a German cruiser escaped, and their destroyers wildly fled to shelter having had two of their numbers sunk.

Not only were two of their number sunk, but not a few others were damaged by the British fire. In addition to not losing a single ship, the British loss of life was not heavy.

The importance of this daring raid is the fact that the British fleet passed behind Germany's heavily armed outpost on Heligoland Island and engaged the German mosquito fleet guarding the mouth of the Elbe and the entrance to the Kiel Canal.

The speedy protected cruiser Mainz was one of four of her class. Her complement was 380 officers and men. In her armament she carried twelve four-inch guns.

Nova Scotia's Splendid Gift to Aid the Empire

Provincial Government Offers Hundred Thousand Tons of Nova Scotia Coal to Supply the Needs of the Warships on the Atlantic.

(Morning Chronicle.)

When the war broke out, Premier Murray immediately considered in what manner Nova Scotia could best assist the Empire. After careful consideration and after consultation with naval authorities, the Government decided that coal, the product of Nova Scotia, would be the most practicable gift, which this Province could offer from any of its resources, for the help of the Empire at this time. Accordingly, Lieutenant Governor MacGregor wired His Royal Highness, the Governor General, yesterday that the Government of Nova Scotia was prepared to contribute 100,000 tons of coal for such purposes as will best serve the interests of the Empire at the present time.

His Royal Highness immediately acknowledged the generous and patriotic offer of the seaboard Province, and communicated with the Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, who telegraphed that the Federal Government warmly appreciated the noble gift and he had communicated it to the Imperial Government.

This magnificent gift of fuel from the mines of Nova Scotia offered the Empire at the present time, will doubtless be supplied to the ships of the Fourth Cruiser Squadron patrolling the North Atlantic trade routes at their base at Halifax. In every respect it is the most appropriate, practicable and valuable gift which this Province could make, and ranks high among the contributions given by every part of the Empire, even from those of greater wealth and population than Nova Scotia.

Lawrencetown's Contribution to the Hospital Ship Fund

On Tuesday, the 18th, a meeting of the Women of Lawrencetown, at the home of Mrs. S. T. Jefferson, resolved itself into a committee of ways and means to raise funds for the equipment of Canada's Hospital Ship.

This was done by appointing collectors for the entire district and by having a lecture on "The War Situation in Europe." This was given by Prof. T. F. Collier on Tuesday evening. By all who attended, it was considered one of the finest lectures ever delivered here.

As Mr. Collier is the Professor of European History in Brown University, he is well qualified to put the present gigantic struggle, in its historical setting.

At its conclusion, we felt, more than ever before, that England's attitude is just and righteous.

On Friday afternoon the collectors appointed, met in the Methodist Vestry and as a result of the work done reported a generous response by the women visiting.

However, the sum of $100, was sent from Lawrencetown as our first gift. The sum of $13.50 was sent from a small section of Paradise, at the same time.

The Agricultural Editor's Poem
(By Sam Walter Foss.)
I will flee from the city's rill and law,
From its fashion and form cut loose,
And go where the strawberry grows on its straw,
And the gooseberry grows on the goose,
Where the catnip tree is climbed by the cat,
As she crouches for her prey—
The guileless and unsuspecting rat,
On the rattan bush at play.
I will watch at ease the saffron cow
And the cowlet in their glee,
As they leap in joy from bough to bough,
On the top of the cowstip tree:
Where the musical partridge drums on his drum,
And the woodchuck chucks his wood,
And the dog devours the dogwood plum
In the primitive solitude.
Oh, let me drink from the mossy grown pump
That was hewn from the pumpkin tree,
Eat mush and milk from a rural stump
(From form and fashion free)—
New gathered mush from the mushroom vine,
And milk from the milkweed sweet,
With luscious pineapple from the pine—
Such food as the gods might eat!

Ontario Boy Goes Whaling

(By Herbert Collier.) (Concluded from last week.)

The whale is a most unique animal, as different as can be from its fellow-inhabitants of the ocean, fishes. It is warm-blooded, and must have lots of air to breathe, as well as many other peculiar characteristics. In expelling the air from its lungs, with great force it passes through the spiracles, or blow-holes, and shoots high in the air in two streams of semi-liquid consistency. Four or five "breaths," as we would term it with their subsequent exhalations in the form of these "spoutings," and the whale can stay beneath the surface of the water for nearly half an hour before reappearing. That seems a long time to hold your breath, and exceeds by a long way man's ability at such a feat. And here just let me give further information about this animal which may assist you to a proper understanding of this marine monster.

Although by their mode of life so far removed from close observation that it is impossible to become as familiar with them in their natural condition as with many other animals, whales are in many respects the most interesting and wonderful of all creatures. There is much in their structure and habits which is well worthy of study, much that is difficult to understand, and much that leads to great generalizations, and throws light upon far-reaching philosophical speculations. One of the first lessons which a study of these animals affords is that in the endeavor to discover what a creature really is who were its ancestors, and to whom it is related, we find the general outward appearance affords but slight information, and we must go deep below the surface to learn the essential characteristics of its nature.

In the first place a whale is not a fish. When you consider carefully what a fish really is, what is common among this class of form, size and other characteristics which distinguish them from other classes, such as reptiles and mammals, the whale is found to resemble the latter named class. It is as essentially a mammal as a cow or a horse, and simply resembles a fish externally because it is adapted to inhabit the same element. But it is no more on that account a fish than is a bat nearly related to a bird because adapted to live and fly in the air. Careful examination of the structure of a whale indicates that long ago its ancestors lived on land, and could at least move about on shore on its four legs. Yes, you may well laugh. It does sound funny. Yet there in the whale today are its four legs—all that is left of them—every bone necessary, even to its toes. But because he changed his way of living, and stayed so much in the water, he lost the use of these legs and they shrivelled up. His forelegs became little flippers or paddles, but supplied with all the bones necessary for good legs if properly developed. The rudimentary hind legs are also to be found by careful examination. This is an excellent example of how nature demands that every organ of the body must be used, otherwise it is taken away.

The most remarkable characteristic of this animal is its similarity to human beings. It gives birth to children, and the mother provides milk for its baby. It does seem so odd for a baby whale, with its great mouth, to get its food supplied by sucking, and down under the water at that!

As we approached slowly and with engines going as quietly as possible under muffled steam, we detected some of the whales feeding. By a great sweep of the tail thousands of shrimps would be gathered together into a concentrated mass. Sometimes the whale, apparently not satisfied with the result of one such sweep, would make a second flourish, to insure that his meal was properly set before him. Then, swinging his enormous body into position, he would lazily roll over on his side and make a sudden dash through the water with wide-open mouth, in such a manner as to make the upper jaw a sort of scoop-net.

umbrella closes partly, when the lower jaw is brought up and, like a lid, covers all. Contained within is a great mass of food and water. The latter is not wanted, so the whale hurls this out through the hundreds of narrow passages, while a fringe of bristles along the edges prevents even the smallest minnow from escaping. It is simply a huge strainer. Sometimes as much as a ton of food is thus taken at one mouthful, and whales have been captured with as much as four tons of food in their stomachs.

But no time was lost by our captain and crew in watching the animals eat. Quickly and quietly had all necessary preparations been made, and now every man was at his post, alert to perform his particular duty when the moment for action arrived. Everyone seemed anxious and excited with the exception of two, Captain Macauley and the gunner. There, beside his powerful gun, stood Franz, coolly awaiting the approach to within striking distance, and to this end much skillful manoeuvring of the ship was necessary. Selecting first one whale and then another, we crept up quite near, when each suddenly decided to go below. With a flourish of the great flukes in the air he would "sound," or dive. Truly it was quite disappointing to meet with two such experiences. But with the third selection success came. Closer and closer we approached. Franz, with his eye along the sights, touched the lever. A flash and loud report followed instantly. My heart fairly stood still as I beheld the great harpoon, with enclosed bomb, speeding through the air on its journey of death. The attached heavy rope gave a merry "soop-soop-s-s-s-s" as it flew out of its porthole, and chased the harpoon deep into the vitals of the whale. About two seconds after the entrance of the harpoon the bomb exploded. The enraged animal, mortally wounded, threw itself entirely out of the water, lashing his great tail furiously. We on the vessel, of whatever size, that chanced to be within striking distance of those flukes then! Like an egg-shell would it be crushed. We were indeed near enough to meet with a sufficiently unpleasant experience. One hundred tons of whale falling back into the ocean created an enormous disturbance of water. A mountainous wave leapt up and rolled toward us. A warning cry rang out as the danger to ourselves became immediately apparent. Each clung desperately to the nearest support as the wave, towering high above us, thundered upon our decks. Our good boat, built for heavy seas, shed most of the water nicely. Not so with us, however, as our clothes held every drop possible. Choking with the brine, we took a hasty look about to see that every man was safe, and then all eyes hurried to the dying whale. His struggles caused a frightful commotion, foaming water flying in all directions. Only occasionally would we catch a glimpse of the dark skin, for the splashed water hid everything. Suddenly quiet came. The back of the huge animal showed above the surface of the calming water, and then slowly disappeared from view. He was dead.

The rope attached to the harpoon was now all that could save the valuable animal from being lost forever to us. A dead whale at the bottom of the ocean is worthless. Every eye held the question, "Is the rope all right?" as, fearful lest in the struggle this might have become detached or broken we watched the steam winches winding up the "slack." The answer came promptly, without words, in the tight rope showing the weighted end. The terrible suspense was for a time ended. Everybody was happy. In a short time the powerful machinery had drawn the carcass up under our bows. A half-dozen agile fellows trained for this particular work were ready and, grasping firmly their peculiar weapons, leaped down upon the great, slippery back of the dead whale. Pirates indeed they appeared as they took possession of this strange ship. Thrusting a tubular lance deep into the animal, a rubber hose was attached and connected to a powerful air pump. This was set in motion, and air forced into the body in such quantity as to make the animal float readily. A metal shaft was then driven in as a flag pole, and a Canadian ensign placed at its top. Such action seemed very romantic, and savored of true stories of sea warfare. Yet it was not for mere glory that the victors thus hoisted the flag of their country. The reason was so made apparent when the men scrambled back on board the steamer and cut loose from the whale. Away we went, leaving the captured whale to await our return. The flag was to enable us the more easily to locate him again.

Of course the great commotion caused by such a fight with this whale frightened the other members of this school of whales, and now none were in sight. Rapidly we steamed about, keeping a sharp lookout for spoutings. Fully three hours passed in eager searching before the watchman from his lofty perch announced that he spied one lone whale some two miles to starboard. A strong breeze had risen, and the waves, rolling high, broke in foaming crests. Our little boat seemed a mere mariner and more joyous on account of the extra struggle as, from her bows, she dashed the water in great sheets of flying spray. With full speed we rushed to within a short distance of the whale, and then continued the approach more cautiously by slowing down, so as to make as little noise as possible. The animal, however, paid not the slightest attention. He was evidently in sportive mood, enjoying himself in the waves. Placing his great body in such a position that the waves rolled along his entire length, he appeared to take as much pleasure in thus having his back rubbed as if he were a dog. If his enjoyment was in proportion to his enormous length he should be pardoned for being wholly oblivious of his surroundings. The situation suggested to my mind that amusing rhyme of the giraffe.

"The tall giraffe, with his face all aglow, As he munches his wisp of hay, Blesses his neck as down it goes, For he tastes it all the way." But Franz Naroda had no time for such idle thoughts. Upon his judgment all depended. The real target, the vulnerable spot, was comparatively small. The waves tossed our boat and its gun about in reckless manner, making aim almost difficult. Under such conditions came the real test of skill, a proving of nerves unajured by alcohol or tobacco. With his eyes on the "sights" he quietly said to me, "Be ready," for he had consented to allow me the honor of pulling the lever. It was a great moment for me. The job was really one of the smallest and easiest imaginable, yet on my fidelity utter failure or great success was absolutely dependent. I simply watched his lips and waited for one word, "Now," when instantly my hand responded.

With thunderous roar and belching flame the massive harpoon shot from the gun and disappeared in the body of the whale. Interrupted thus rudely in his play, the animal, as though to wave us a farewell, gave a flourish in the air with his great tail and rolling over on his side, sounded. It was quite evident that the wound was not to be immediately effective. Though we could not see him, his speed was shown by the trailing harpoon rope, which whirled through the portholes. A mile of rope must have been thus let out before the winches tightened in an effort to check the animal. But instead we were towed along at a lively speed. It was quite like King Neptune in his royal chariot drawn by marine steeds. Our engines were reversed in an effort to tire the whale. Yet for a time even this was not wholly effective. A pause came, and advantage was taken to wind up all the slack rope possible. Then another rush followed, in which we not only lost all we had gained, but much more with it. And so the battle waged for three hours before the lance men were called upon to perform their duties. He proved to be one of the largest of whales and a very worthy prize, measuring no less than seventy-eight feet.

After sufficient air was pumped into the body to make it easily floatable, the great flukes were hoisted by derrick so as to rest partly on the side of the boat, and all made fast with ropes. In order that the huge animal might be more easily towed, the head was turned to the stern of our boat, the mouth being tied shut. These interesting operations completed, we set out to locate our former prize, and then on to the whaling station, with its towing astern. We were told that "the cargo" approximated $25,000.

Long before you reach the whaling factory it comes to you. It announces its presence in no uncertain manner. It has a sort of wireless equipment, judging by the distances to which this peculiarly distinctive, pungent, disagreeable smell will travel. You must possess a really educated nose to live in harmony with such a plant. During the day I spent at Sechart I did my best to make my nose understand that it was not to rebel against the enforced discipline of handling bad smells. But I fear such was not a success.

Our arrival in the harbor with two whales produced a lively scene. Great steam winches were soon in operation and the big animals dragged up inclined runways to the working platforms of this modern factory. Immediately a group of men set to work with long-handled flensing knives. Marching from one end of the whale to the other, they made cuts through the blubber, which lay in thickness of from six inches to two feet. Parallel cuts, about eighteen inches apart, were thus made over the whole body, after which special machinery was used to catch hold of one end of a strip and peel it off, as one might a thread from a stalk of celery. These great strips of blubber was then passed through chopping machines into big vats, to be boiled, in order that the oil might be thereby "rendered."

For such large animals it is a surprise to find they possess so thin a skin. It is not much better than wrapping paper, and quite useless for leather. The coat of blubber of such thickness seems to be ample as a protection for this warm-blooded animal against the chilling effect of the icy waters. One can imagine the difficulty of keeping a skyscraper properly immersed in ice-cold water. Beneath the blubber is a coarse, red meat, which, among certain Indians and Japanese, is much appreciated. Especially is this so of the tail and fins of the humpback whale, which is dry-salted and packed in barrels for shipment to Japan. For a time at least a certain Newfoundland firm produced a very fine "extract of beef" with this red meat.

The head of the whale is the most valued portion of the animal, an account of the whalebone in certain species, or the fine oil in others. The value of the whalebone alone in one animal often exceeds $5,000. In the head of the sperm whale there is a great pocket, or "case," containing as much as fifteen barrels, and sometimes even forty barrels, of the purest and best natural oil known to commerce. It is used for watches and delicate machinery, and consequently commands a very high price on account of its special qualities.

In the modern whale factory not an atom of the monster whale is discarded. After the oils and other useful products have been secured, the residue is placed in drying machines and then ground to a coarse powder. This product, which is much like coffee both in color and form, is highly prized as a fertilizer, especially on the sugar plantations of the Hawaiian Islands.

The tongue of a whale will usually exceed three tons in weight, and sometimes even five tons. The size of the mouth can consequently be the more readily appreciated when compared with a roomy cave. The heart, whose duty it is to pump warm blood through those miles of arteries, weighs about a ton. Truly it is a magnificent engine.

While examining the interior of the mouth of one of the whales, naturally I recalled the story of Jonah and "great fish." As some biblical critics have freely stated that the throat of a whale is so small as to prevent the passage of a man, father and I determined to discover for ourselves the truth. Donning oilskin suits, we entered the dead whale's mouth (a sulphur-bottom), and not only one at a time, but both of us together, passed through the throat. At least we went far enough to prove the possibility of such an animal taking care of Jonah in that respect. It is true that some whales have a small throat, but there are a number of species, especially the sulphur-bottom, with ample provision for the passage of even three men together.

The Black Sheep

The Canadian volunteer citizen soldier is, if properly managed, as near the ideal as a military force can be. It is probably as little imbued with Dutch courage as any army in the world. The Russian army is excluded from vodka from the moment of mobilization. That is found necessary with such a drink-soaked peasantry as the imperial saloon-keeper has been cultivating to replenish his war chest. But the same rule would be profitable even here. Military service might be made a valuable refuge for splendid men who have been their own enemies. It is pitiful to see a lad in the King's uniform get on a street car in a silly condition. It humiliates to the great sober majority who wear the uniform to see it openly be derided. The Mayor has been the saloon-keeper refuse liquor to men in uniform after eight in the evening. This is a moderate restriction, he alleges, as the occasion of his instruction, that sentries have been drunk at their posts. This has been indignantly denied by Colonel Hughes who has done all that a Minister of Militia could under the law to have a sober army. Whether the indictment is true or not, one man was drunk on what might have been momentous duty. A soldier on an errand connected with the defence of a certain government work was seen emerging from an urban hotel so intoxicated that he was hardly able to stand. A good Samaritan took him in hand and helped him to discharge his trust. One such dereliction might wreck a railway or navigation system. Some seem to have a notion that drinking is a natural adjunct of soldiering just as swearing used to be thought necessary to the right sort of a soldier. It certainly is different from drinking in private life that so much more hangs upon it. A man who had taken the pledge never to drink nor give drink to others said he considered it no harm to treat a comrade to liquor at the regimental quarters. So a railway conductor might say it was no harm to treat his gang while running a train. The present Minister of Militia has faced much ill-humor in his determined efforts to stop all this. We could wish that Parliament before it rose had given the minister power to make our mobilized force as sober as the armies of Russia. These men certainly do Canada credit. It would be a pity if that credit should be in any case sullied by drink. For the most part the absolute stoppage of drink would be no privation, for a large proportion it would involve no change.

An amusing story is told of an officer residing in India. Returning home one day from the hunt he was encountered by an Indian tax-collector, who said to him: "Four rupees, carriage tax; five rupees, horse tax; total nine rupees!"

The Englishman was indignant, and said in an angry voice: "So you've been prying round, have you, and questioning the servants? If you don't go soon I'll set the dog on you."

And to the amusement of the Englishman the Indian replied: "One rupee more, dog tax; total, ten rupees."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 2nd, 1914

The recent history of Germany is especially interesting at the present time. It may be said to begin with the union of the German States under William I. and his great Chancellor, Bismark. This monarch died at the advanced age of ninety years, and was succeeded by his son, the Crown Prince Frederick, whose wife was the eldest daughter of our beloved Queen, Victoria. This reign was very brief. Frederick had been for some time suffering with a disease of the throat. Queen Victoria's physician Sir Morell MacKenzie, being summoned, pronounced the disease to be cancer, then too late for operation. When he ascended the throne he was unable to speak and died in ninety-nine days. But, during this brief period he made it plain that he desired to serve the interests of every class of his people. He was followed by his son, William II, the present Kaiser, who was then twenty-nine years of age. Englishmen cannot forget the disrespect which this young man manifested toward the memory of his father, and especially toward his English mother.

A friend of Frederick published a part of his diary in order to show that he had taken a more prominent part in the affairs of the Empire than had been generally believed. Bismark was displeased and made a report damaging to the reputation of Frederick. The son, to the great grief of his mother, ordered this report to be printed and distributed, discrediting as it was to his father. And in various ways he showed a similar disrespect, while evincing a great admiration for his grandfather William I.

It was not long, however, before differences arose between William II, and Bismark, which ripened, in about two years, in a quarrel leading to Bismark's resignation of the Chancellorship. Bismark invited the leader of the Catholic party in the Reichstag to his palace. The Kaiser heard of it and sent word to Bismark that if political discussion took place he wanted to be present. Bismark replied that he would choose his own visitors. The Kaiser appeared the next day at Bismark's residence and asked the subjects of his discourse with his visitor. Bismark replied that their conversation was private, and offered to resign his position, if the Kaiser so desired. Sunday intervened, and on Monday the resignation was demanded and granted.

It was then that the Kaiser revealed his real self, by saying, "There is only one master in the country, and I am he. I shall suffer none beside. Those who will help me I heartily welcome; those who oppose me, I will dash to pieces." Personal government was his ideal, and divine right was the authority he claimed. But, these ideas are out of date, and a large proportion of his people do not accept them.

The Socialists who have grown to be a large party have proved a thorn in the Kaiser's side. One hundred and eleven members of the Reichstag are Socialists, the entire membership of that body being three hundred and ninety-seven. Because they have opposed his measures, the Kaiser has characterized them as "traitorous rabble." One woman Socialist, known by the name of Red Rosa, has been particularly active in charging the authorities with cruelty to the soldiers in the barracks. A charge was brought against her of libelling the Army. But, when she declared that she was ready to produce one thousand and thirty witnesses to substantiate her statements, the charge was dropped.

Many persons believe that one reason for the hastening of the present war by the Kaiser was the fear of internal revolution. A letter, widely published, from which we make the following extract expresses without doubt, the opinion and wishes of many Germans. The writer is at present a Professor in an English College.

"I am a native German and a former German soldier. My own position in this struggle is perfectly clear. My loyalty to the British flag makes me stand against any and all enemies of Britain. If need be I should even fight against Germany, though with a bleeding heart. Furthermore, I desire disaster to the German Army in this war, for the reason that it will mean restoration of fellowship among the western nations for one of the greatest peoples of Europe. A liberated, free, democratic Germany will start on a new and lasting era of prosperity, of peace, and arm in arm with England and France.

"Germany's defeat will mean the establishment of a German Republic and the elimination of William II, and all that he stands for. Such things as 'divine right' and 'mailed fist' are anachronisms, and in the intelligence of the twentieth century. William II is the common foe of Europe, and he must be eliminated. Defeat of Germany in this war means ultimate salvation and freedom for her. Germany will be the greatest gainer through defeat."

OBITUARY

DEATH OF JOSHUA J. BUCKLER

The death of Joshua J. Buckler at his home in Dalhousie aged seventy-one years, on August twenty-fourth, 1914, removes one of the best known and most highly respected men in the central portion of the County. Last Fall, Captain Buckler was quite suddenly stricken with a serious heart weakness and for some weeks his life was despaired of, but his strong vigorous constitution rallied and at the beginning of this year he was able to come to Bridgetown and greet his many friends who in the Fall had daily inquired of his condition, as probably no man outside of the town had won more friends than Captain Buckler.

Toward Spring his symptoms re-appeared and after several months of suffering, borne with patience and gentle submission, the end came the first of last week. "Captain Josh," as he was familiarly known was a descendant of an old English family that came to this County about one hundred years ago and settled on the South Mountain. The deceased inherited much of the chivalry and manliness of his respected pioneer ancestor. Possessed of a vigorous constitution, a rugged vitality, of a kind and genial disposition and even temperament for years his life was the embodiment of the New Testament definition of greatness. "He that would be greatest among you let him be servant of all."

For many years before the days of good roads, telephones or even when there were very few horses in the settlement of Dalhousie it was Captain Joshua Buckler that every one called on to "go for the doctor" or perform other deeds of mercy for those in need, or for the whole community. None ever did it more gladly or willingly.

For more than twenty years he sat in the Municipal Council representing his district and for many years he was Deputy Warden of that body. Until he reached the age limit he was a Captain in the Sixty-ninth Battalion and his company in the annual camps at Aldershot was always among the most orderly and respectable.

In politics he was a Conservative, but always a fair and honorable opponent and one that stood for a "fair deal" with both friend and foe, and condemned mean tricks as often with his friends as with his political opponents.

His passing away leaves a vacancy in Dalhousie that will be long felt.

The funeral services conducted by Rev. Mr. Reeks was very largely attended by the entire settlement and many friends further away. All felt they had indeed lost a friend. The many beautiful floral offerings sent, indicated too, the universal sympathy for the family and the respect and esteem with which the deceased was held.

Captain Buckler was twice married, his first wife being a daughter of the late Noble Beek of Bridgetown, by whom he leaves one son, George, and three daughters, Mrs. Bartlett Gillis, Mrs. Thos. Todd and Mrs. Christopher. By his second wife, who survives him, he leaves three sons, Hartley, Avarad and Harold, all at home and two daughters, Mrs. Fred Harnish and Miss Gladys.

One brother, Mr. Milan Buckler, of Eridgetown and two sisters, Mrs. Hines and Mrs. Cleaves also survive him.

Riverside Cemetery

Just now Riverside Cemetery is looking its best. The annuals are in full bloom, and the whole cemetery seems as neat and as well groomed as a house. Mr. Lister, the Superintendent, informs us that this season he has had a great many callers and visitors, not only from this vicinity but from many parts of the province as well as a large number from the States who have friends buried in the cemetery. All are greatly impressed with the improvements and care shown by our people for this "city of the dead." It is now proposed to put in the fountain that the original plans made provided for; and we are informed that this will be done by volunteer work largely. Many of the farmers or those with teams will assist in the work by contributing stones, sand, gravel, etc., while our masons have agreed to do the concrete work as their part in the further beautification of this portion of the cemetery. It will now be in order for some friend or lover of this most commendable work to offer a suitable figure or statue for the fountain. To those who knew the condition of the cemetery two years ago it hardly seems possible that so great an improvement could have been done in two summers.

Services of Intercession for the War

In accordance with instructions from the Bishop of Nova Scotia, last Friday was observed, as a day of intercession on behalf of the war, in all the Anglican Churches throughout the Diocese. At St. James' Church three services were held, a goodly number assembling on each occasion.

It has, moreover, been decided to hold a special service of Intercession in St. James' Church every Friday afternoon at four-thirty, until further notice. It is hoped that this service will be borne in mind and largely attended. Cordial invitation being extended to all. It will last about half an hour.

In addition to these services similar to that which took place in the Presbyterian Church last Sunday evening, will be held once a month in each Church in town.

Bridgetown Defeats Wolfville at Tennis

The Bridgetown Tennis Club played the Wolfville Club at Wolfville last Friday, winning by three events. The Bridgetown Club was royally entertained by the Wolfville Club, and at a bridge party given in the evening Mrs. F. R. Fay won the first ladies' prize. The following is the score of the Tennis tournament:—

LADIES' DOUBLES. Mrs. Fay and E. Kinney defeated E. Starr and E. Tufts 6-3, 6-2. Mrs. Fay and L. Ruggles defeated M. DeWitt and Miss Chute 6-4, 6-3.

LADIES' SINGLES. Ethel Kinney defeated M. DeWitt 6-3, 6-0. Mrs. Fay defeated N. DeWitt 6-4, 6-3. M. Chute defeated L. Ruggles 6-3, 6-0.

MEN'S SINGLES. W. Landry defeated Dr. DeWitt 6-4, 6-1. J. Ruggles defeated Prof. Balcom 6-3, 7-5, 6-3. Ron. Ruggles defeated W. Chas 7-5, 6-2, 6-4. Tufts defeated F. Ruggles 6-1, 6-1. A. Chute defeated H. Hicks 6-0, 6-0.

Apple Crops

As the season advances it is plainly seen that the apple crop in most parts of this county will be a fairly good one in quantity and a wonderfully good one in quality.

In orchards that were thoroughly and intelligently sprayed, there is no black spot, but in orchards where this has not been done considerable spot has developed during the summer.

The markets this year is the most serious problem facing our growers. The European War not only limits our markets but it will so paralyze trade and industry that apples will not be used to the extent of times of prosperity and hopefulness.

We learn that our Co-operative Fruit Companies are making plans to ship Gravensteins both to England and the West and that they hope to dispose of the whole crop of early fruit at a fair price although a much smaller figure than they might have expected this year had not the war broken out. The United States apple crop is estimated by the Department at Washington to be about 210,000,000 bushels or 60,000,000 bushels more than the 1914. We understand that the United Fruit Companies has been able to secure Flour Feed at a price very little in advance of the prices before the war broke out and are supplying our various fruit companies with these necessary commodities.

Cucumbers by the Yard

We were shown by Dr. Armstrong the other day some cucumbers grown in his garden that measured over a half yard in length. These might be retailed by the foot or inch, a family taking the number of inches required according to his propensity for this cool green vegetable that has enjoyed great popularity every since the days of Moses when his people murmured and expressed a preference for cucumbers instead of quite so much manna.

After a bountiful luncheon the happy couple drove to Lawrence town, returning to their home in Clementsvalle, Saturday evening.

The bride received a large number of useful presents, including a good substantial cheque from her father.

The bride's travelling suit was navy blue with hat to match. Their many friends wish them a long life of happiness.

WHY WEAK LUNGS?

The toll of tuberculosis is claiming more than 350 victims every day in the United States, yet few realize their grave condition until the critical period arrives. Cough, weak, waxy, weakness after sickness, catarrh, bronchitis, tender throat—all exert the weakening influence that invites consumption. To guard against consumption, thousands of people take Scott's Emulsion after meals because its rich medicinal nourishment strengthens the lungs, puts vigor in the blood, and rebuilds strength to resist tuberculosis. Scott's Emulsion is nature's strength-builder. Refuse substitutes.

Mrs. Minnie Malloy, of Lynn, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Sonners.

The day was perfect so far as weather was concerned and the large company enjoyed the occasion immensely. Various games amused the young folk and after a bountiful collation was served—conists followed in which the Doctor, Rev. Mr. Williams and E. A. Porter took part. The Doctor gave a very patriotic and inspiring address upon the part England was playing in the great War—and at the close all joined in singing "God Save the King." The return trip in the evening was most enjoyable, the party landing about eight o'clock.

MIRACULOUS CURE OF ASTHMA

Suffered Terribly for 15 Years Until He Tried "Fruit-a-Lives"

D. A. WHITE, Esq. 21 WALLACE AVE., TORONTO, Dec. 22nd, 1913.

"Having been a great sufferer from Asthma for a period of fifteen years (sometimes having to sit up at night for weeks at a time) I began the use of "Fruit-a-Lives". These wonderful tablets relieved me of indigestion, and through the continued use of same, I am no longer distressed with that terrible disease, Asthma, thanks to "Fruit-a-Lives" which are worth their weight in gold to anyone suffering as I did. I would heartily recommend them to all sufferers from Asthma, which I believe is caused or aggravated by indigestion."

Taming A Shrew

With an Interruption That Brought a Climax.

By Martha McCulloch-Williams.

Pretty Kitty Clyde was not really a shrew. She had merely been born impetuous and an adoring family.

Until she was rising eleven Douglas Norton had been also of her subjects. Fate whisked him away then to inherit an uncle's fortune and go racing about the world, thereby giving Kitty her first realizing sense that things could happen otherwise than according to her will.

The process was unpleasant. By a curious mental alchemy Kitty unconsciously stored the unpleasantness as a grudge against the absent Douglas.

So when he came home ten years later and fell openly and instantly a victim to her charms she was in two minds as to what to do with him, and she yielded in favor of the mind that advised her to do something unpleasant.

He was a dear fellow, suiting her exactly in some of her moods. In others—but in those others nobody suited her, least of all herself.

Those other moods would probably have made her send Douglas about his business if he had not had the lucky misfortune to have the Ackroyds for friends.

The Ackroyds, whom Kitty loathed, gave up days and nights to warning Douglas against her. The warnings were not wholly disinterested.

Given the facts, the temperaments and the situation, the resulting engagement follows logically. Kitty excused herself to her conscience for it with the special pleading that it would change the Ackroyds and that if she finally broke the engagement the making of it would save Douglas from worse.

Of course she would not think of marrying him for years. Meantime she would revel in the Ackroyd discomfiture. Then her people were so happy over the prospect. That really meant a lot to her.

Dimly at the bottom of a very warm heart she felt that, on the whole, she had not made them as happy as she might have done.

So altogether she was not ill content with the estate in life whereas she now found herself until Douglas obstinately insisted upon her naming the day.

"Go away! The role of impatient lover does not fit you in the least," she said to him with the most fetching pout. "You know you'd be dreadfully upset if I agreed to anything so insane. We can be married when we are too old to care for tearing about."

"What a peaceful home we shall have! You know you need mastering, but I'm too generous to ask you to admit it. Come along. I want you to hear me tell daddy all about it. Mother Clyde has already agreed with me that the wedding had better be on your birthday."

Then Kitty forgot herself, her years, her grown-up estate. She screamed. He did not say a word. He only became so angry that she tried to claw his cheek, but none of her efforts or shrieks availed.

He lifted her as if she were only five years old and carried her into the sitting room, where her father rose in affront. Mrs. Clyde, pallid, but more composed, stood beside him, her hand laid deliberately upon his shoulder.

"It is hard to hear, mighty hard," she whispered. "How do you expect to hear for the child. Spelling her so is our work. But for heaven's sake keep still! Her whole future depends on it. Douglas is the man of men for her and she will throw him over if she has the least chance."

the road. The two sisters had been on watch in the front windows ever since they saw Douglas ride through the Clyde gate.

They had heard the screams and had made their incursion. "Somebody must be killing somebody over there. I'm going to find out who," Miss Alicia said to Miss Patricia, not even stopping to snatch at a bonnet as she sped through the front door and down the walk.

After one started "Oh!" she stood still, staring at Douglas, who had loosed his hold of Kitty, but kept her hand. Kitty had been in a white rage. Now she flushed brilliantly and looked at the intruder with her most infantile smile.

"Dear Miss Alicia, did I really frighten the neighbors?" she asked. "I'm so glad. Do say I did. We have just had an impromptu rehearsal. Douglas, wretch that he is, insists that I can't act, that he is not depriving the stage of a great ornament in marrying me, and I was bound to prove him in the wrong."

"Oh!" Miss Alicia said again, this time with a mighty different infection, yet one that still lacked something of conviction. Miss Patricia, fully bountied, here panted in.

When the stir of settling her ended Miss Alicia returned to the chagrined audience, dear Kitty, she said in the suave voice that always meant mischief. "But do tell me what the play was. I don't seem to recall it."

"Of course you don't. I belong to the new school," Kitty said brightly. "The new school exists, you know, to prove that until it came nobody ever played Shakespeare quite right. Maybe it's because of my name, but I've always felt that I could give a new rendering of Katharine, you know, in 'The Taming of the Shrew'."

"She did do it and was most convincing," Douglas interrupted gratefully. He had been going hot and cold, wondering if there were any escape from the valley of humiliation open before them. He knew that only by a miracle could the Ackroyd tongues be stopped.

"So convincing?" he went on. "I see I must marry her right away. Miss Alicia, Miss Patricia, will you come to the wedding? It's to be just three weeks from now."

"You are a wretch, an ingrate!" Kitty said to him half an hour later when the Ackroyds had reluctantly taken themselves away. "I saved you and in doing it trapped myself beyond escape. What punishment do you not deserve, sir?"

"Nothing short of imprisonment for life," Douglas said. "Kitty, darling, you should yourself a genius and a heroine. In reward you shall go on having your own way."

"I don't want it—except sometimes," Kitty answered, racing away to kiss the major and Mrs. Major and at last to pet old Flossy's precious puppies.

National Forest Timber. In 1905 the timber sold from the national forests aggregated 96,000,000 board feet, which brought the government no more than $85,000. In 1913 more than 2,500,000,000 feet brought in contracts amounting to $1,500,000. Not all this money was received in any one year, because national forest timber is sold on contracts which range from one to twenty-five years, and it is paid for as cut.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Treating Pain. Pain has its uses. By means of it the physician is often helped to his diagnosis. He cannot take the patient's word for the severity of the pain, for what one person will bear with comparative equanimity another will describe as intolerable anguish.

The doctor notices the patient's attitude, his facial expression and above all, his pulse rate. Real pain always makes the pulse rapid, and, as a rule, the more severe the pain the more rapid is the pulse. That is a good rule to remember.

Physicians often detect malignancies by their entirely normal pulse rate, and mothers can with safety use the same test to determine the reality or severity of the pains of which their children complain. It is not always wise or kind to give instant relief, even when the suffering is great.

In certain intestinal disorders, for example, an anodyne will quickly change the victim's groans to quiet, heavy sleep. But the symptoms are only masked, and the trouble that caused the pain may progress until it is too late for the operation that might have meant a cure.

The safest means of relieving pain until the doctor comes is the application of either heat or cold. For some pain there is nothing like a hot water bottle. When there is much congestion the same bottle filled with ice water will give more relief.

MAGIC READ THE BAKING POWDER

LIGHTNING CALCULATORS.

A Mathematical Marvel Has Been Found in a Madras Office.

There is at the present time studying at Cambridge one of the most brilliant mathematical geniuses the world has ever seen—a young Hindu, Mr. S. Ramanujan by name—whose work, although he is only twenty-six years of age, has excited the admiration of all mathematical experts.

Perhaps the most extraordinary thing about Ramanujan is that, as a mathematician, he is quite untaught. Until a year ago he was a clerk in the employment of the Post Office in Madras.

But in spite of this, he has, to quote Mr. Hardy, Fellow of Trinity, who has taken a great interest in Ramanujan, "discovered for himself a great number of things which the leading mathematicians of the last hundred years had added to the knowledge of schoolmen, although he was quite ignorant of their work and accomplishments. Indeed, his mathematical education is rather meagre, and the first I knew of him was about fifteen months ago when he wrote to me explaining who he was, and sent a large number of remarkable mathematical theorems which he had proved."

This is the second mathematical genius produced by India in the last three years. At the end of 1912 the members of the Royal Asiatic Society held a specially-convened meeting at Calcutta to hear the astounding by the arithmetical powers of a Tamil boy, Arumogam. A complicated series of sums had been prepared to test the boy's powers, each of which he answered within a few minutes. The first was "A chetty gave as a treat to 173 persons a bushel of rice each. Each bushel contained 3,431,272 grains, and the chetty stipulated that 17 per cent should be given to the temple. How many grains did the temple get? Within three seconds came the answer (which had to be translated), 100,913,709 with fifty-two as the fraction over."

Among other questions were the following: "Add together 8,556,497,713,826 and 96,268,593. "Multiply 45,989 by 864,726. "Find the fifth root of 69,343,957. "A room flooded 2 feet deep, the room being 18 feet 9 inches by 13 feet 4 inches, and a cubic foot of water weighing 62 1/2 pounds?"

To all of them Arumogam gave the correct answers within a few seconds. Undoubtedly one of the most wonderful lightning calculators was George Bidder, the well-known engineer, who died in 1878. Bidder, who was born in 1780, was one of the earliest to recognize the value of the electric telegraph, first went to school at Camberwell, and afterwards attended classes at Edinburgh University. And even as a boy of ten he could answer such questions as, "How many drops would there be in a pipe of wine containing 126 gallons, supposing that each gallon consisted of 221 cubic inches, and each cubic inch contained 4,685 drops?"

It was a favorite pastime of boys and masters to concoct the most difficult arithmetical problems to test Bidder's powers of calculation, and these he solved correctly, and within a few seconds, apparently without effort.

A Real Joby Evening. A study of Robert May's "Accomplice Cook," published in 1665, will serve to dispel the delusion fostered by many foreign critics that English is a very inferior language. May's recipe is for the construction of a chain of confectonery, with guns charged with actual powder, and a castle of pies, containing live frogs and birds. After giving directions as to the weight of the guns, he proceeds: "This done, to sweeten the stench of the powder let the ladies take the egg-shells full of sweet waters and throw them at each other. All danger being seemingly over, by this time you will suppose they will desire to see what is in the pies, when, lifting first the lid of one pie, out skip some frogs, which makes the ladies to skip and shriek; next after the other pie, whence come out the birds, who by a natural instinct, flying in the light will put out the candles; so that, what with the flying birds and skipping frogs, the one above, the other beneath, will cause delight and pleasure to the whole company."

Business Is Business. Rev. Dr. Ared has always been known for his piety, and has often been in trouble through expressing his opinions. Not very long ago he shocked many people by declaring that there was such a thing as too much zeal in religious matters. "When the heathen nor with our own people," he said, "does it do to advocate religion on mercenary grounds. For instance, I know a manufacturer who last Easter told all his hands that he would pay them if they went to church. The hands agreed, and a fine show they made. The manufacturer, scanning their ranks from his pew, swelled with joy and pride. But after the service one of the foremen approached him. 'Excuse me, sir,' he said, 'but the fellows want me to ask you if they come to church again to-night they get overtime?'"

Wanted White Man's Blood. Accounts have been received of a fierce attack on the London Missionary Society's station at Aird Hill, Fagau, by natives seeking the blood of white Christians to christen their new war canoes. The administrator sent an expedition consisting of native constables, under a white officer, to arrest the leaders of the offending tribe. Owing to alleged disobedience to orders the constables fired, killing eight blacks. A rigorous enquiry into the entire affair has been ordered by the Australian Government.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

Quakers on the Historical Position of Women in Society.

At the annual meeting in England of the Society of Friends, the other day, it was decided to issue a statement on the historical position of women in the society.

This statement, which is the result of prolonged consideration by the standing committee of the society, expressly excludes any judgment on the question of the Parliamentary franchise. Its object is to embody a testimony, based on the experience of two hundred and sixty years of Quakerism, of the essential spiritual equality of men and women.

After dwelling on the historical evidence of the equality of man and woman throughout the history of the Society of Friends, the declaration is made that "in the home, in the Church, in the wider sphere of public life, the services rendered by women is recognized as having been of priceless worth; it is universally felt among us that, had their activities been fettered by artificial limitations, the loss to themselves and to the community would have been incalculable."

"Our experience," it is added, "leads us to believe that the place of woman in the life of the world is a larger one than has generally been allowed. Women are seeking in various ways to find their true sphere, and to make their distinctive contributions for the uplift of humanity. At the same time, many are fettered, and feel that they are denied the opportunity they seek. How can this opportunity be given? What is needed that all right thinking men and women should earnestly strive to discover the will of God in relation to this supremely important issue?"

Drink Under the Pulpit. Residents of Bellevue East in South Africa are enjoying a joke at the expense of a Presbyterian congregation whose church is situated not a thousand feet from that district.

Temperance above all things has been preached in the church with unflinching insistence from the pulpit. Lately some people living in the neighborhood were interested in the fact that there was a large number of Kafirs about the church in little knots and clusters, and at last someone—a trifle more curious than the rest—asked if there was not a native mission or chapel attached to the church. They did not believe it, so it became difficult to account for the presence of the natives, to whom one would hardly suppose a Presbyterian church for Europeans to be an object of particular interest or attraction.

No doubt the church officials were puzzled, and so they set to work to solve the mystery. The solution is alike tragic, humorous, and simple. While the evils of drink and intemperance were being thundered from the pulpit the divine was, to all intents and purposes, standing over a native bar, for under the pulpit were found concealed dozens of bottles of liquor, apparently stored there by the prominent Kaffir boy in charge of the church.

Tennyson's Luck. The story of how Lord Tennyson won the Newdigate prize at Oxford is worth telling. Three examiners were selected to pass judgment on a large number of competitors' efforts, and the last of these to whom Tennyson's poem "Timbuctoo" was submitted, being of an indolent disposition and seeing what he took to be the letter "g," signifying "good," importance, value, and of the lines, affixed, without troubling to judge for himself the merits of the work, a similar mark of approval and thus secured for the future laureate the coveted prize. The same evening the three examiners met.

"Whatever," abruptly demanded he whose task it had been first to read the poem, "made you think so highly of young Tennyson's effort?" "Why," cried the others in unanimity of surprise, "we only followed your lead. You were forever marking the lines with 'g.'"

"A 'g'!" cried their colleague. "That wasn't a 'g'—that was a note of interrogation to signify that for the life of me I couldn't make out what the fellow meant."

Very Modest, Too. The following appeared a few days ago in the agony column of a London newspaper: "Of Epoch-Making Importance.—To someone who is Rich—I have a development, long desired and sought for, of enormous importance, value, and benefit to the nation and individually. It will enable the country to save probably $500,000,000 annually, whilst it will yield some millions of pounds profits to us. I desire someone who is Rich to provide about $125,000 for working capital to enable the results to be achieved, for a share of the profits. The advertiser is an able, experienced business man, forty years of age and unmarried, and therefore, can give his whole time to the matter. This is not a speculation, but a clear business proposition, the result of years of work."

King's Gallery of Honor. The King has expressed a desire to form a collection at Windsor Castle of portraits of the leading soldiers and sailors of his reign, and proposes to make a start in this direction by placing in position paintings of Field-Marshal Earl Roberts and Field-Marshal Earl Kitchener, with probably Admiral of the Fleet Lord Fisher and Admiral Lord Chas. Boreas. In cases where paintings of those whose his Majesty desires to add to this collection are not available, it is understood he will give orders for such to be prepared, bearing the cost from his Privy Purse. This is a project, it is understood, the King has long had in mind, and it has been suggested that the Waterloo Chamber would be the most suitable apartment for the collection.

The Brand D'In't Matter. The mother of a St. Joseph (Mo.) tot gave her a nickel and said: "Run down to the grocery and get me 5 cents' worth of loose salt." At the store she proudly gave the order, but was told by the proprietor that he was entirely out of loose salt. Determined not to come home empty handed, the wife customer replied: "Well, then, I'll take a nickel's worth of the tight."—St. Louis Republic.

A girl must be very, very intellectual if she does not know what another girl is on.

Some women are very dear; others are merely expensive.

"Father, this gallant young man rescued me from drowning!" "So! He ain't quite so good-looking as the chap who saved you last summer, is he?"—Detroit "Free Press."

"Some spells it one way and some spells it another," said the native, when asked how to spell Saskatchewan Creek. "and some spells it another, but in my judgment there ain't any correct way of spelling it."

"A tramp at the back door who has already eaten a piece of that pie I made yesterday wants to know if you can do anything for him?" Tell him, my dear, that I am a commission merchant, not a doctor.—Houston "Post."

A farmer riding on a certain railroad asked the conductor on a recent trip: "How often do you kill a man on this ere line?" "Just once," replied the conductor.

Sunday-school Teacher—"Once upon a time there were two rich men one of whom made his fortune by honest industry, while the other made his by fraud. Now, which of these two men would you prefer to be?" Tommy (after a moment's hesitation)—"Which made the most!"—Boston "Transcript."

Little John often covets the bellows as a toy. One morning as his mother was using them to blow a lazy fire into flame, John stood by, eager to get his little hands on the bellows, and finally said, in his most obliging, "Mamma, if you are tired I will do your bellowing for you."

Robbie and Elsie were told that there were two apples on the table for them; being taught to consider each other first Bobbie said: "Take your choice, Elsie." "No," said Elsie, "you take your choice." Each kept on insisting that the other take first choice until finally Elsie broke the deadlock by taking the bigger apple. Instantly Bobbie's eyes flashed, and he exclaimed wrathfully, "Put that back and take your choice."

A judge in a western town had declared that he would stop the carrying of firearms on the street. Before him appeared for trial a tough youth charged with getting drunk and firing his revolver in a crowded street. "Twenty dollars and costs," said the Magistrate.

"But, your Honor," interposed counsel for the prisoner, "my client did not hit anybody." "Why, you admit that he fired the gun?" "Yes, but he fired it into the air," explained the lawyer. "Twenty dollars and costs," repeated the judge. "He might have shot an angle."—Ladies Home Journal.

HOW THE WORLD SLEEPS

Most people sleep on their sides with the knees drawn up. Elephants always and horses commonly sleep standing up. Birds, with exception of owls and the hanging parrots of India, sleep with their heads turned tailward over the back, and the beak thrust among the feathers between the wing and the body.

Storks, gulls, and other long-legged birds, sleep standing on one leg. Ducks sleep on open water. To avoid drifting shoreward, they keep paddling with one foot, thus making them move in a circle. Sloths sleep hanging by their four feet, the head tucked in between their fore legs. Foxes and wolves sleep curled up, their noses and the soles of their feet close together, and blanketed by their bushy tails. Hares, snakes, and fish with their eyes wide open. Owls, in addition to their eyelids have a screen that they draw sideways across their eyes to shut out the light for they sleep in the daytime.—Canadian Churchman.

May be the dough had forgotten to rise. Or had risen quickly overnight and fallen again— To rise nevermore. 'Twas weak flour, of course. Meaning weak in gluten. But FIVE ROSES is strong, unusually strong. With that glutinous strength which compels it to rise to your surprised delight. Stays risen long. Being coherent, elastic. And the dough feels springy under your hand. Squashes and cracks as you work it. Feel the feel of a FIVE ROSES dough. Note the wonderful smooth texture—soft—velvety. Good in the broad sense of each dough— You dough it? Try this good flour.

During the past few years in pastoral work, he had been exceeding in zeal and energy, owing to ill health. More recently he had the sad affliction come upon him of losing his eye sight. But during all these afflictions he was always cheerful and hopeful, realizing, as he did, that "these light afflictions were working out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Catholics and Prohibition

Roman Catholics have recently held a convention in Niagara Falls for the purpose of discussing how best to make united warfare against the liquor traffic. That is most encouraging as in the past our Catholic brethren have not been as active in their opposition to the liquor traffic as the Protestants. They admit that themselves and are determined to lay behind no longer. The call to this convention reads in part as follows:—"The life of the liquor traffic is in the balance, and it behooves the many Catholics who are opposed to the saloon to form organizations of their own or to affiliate their efforts with the existing organizations pledged to the overthrow of the liquor traffic which is erecting its last and most formidable ramparts where Catholics are most numerous. Already the many Catholics engaged in the nefarious business which fosters what the late Pope Pius X called "the terrible scourge, the deadly evil, sowing so much shame among the faithful" constitutes a mighty hindrance to the physical, intellectual and moral progress of the American people in general and of our poor immigrants in particular." "Therefore we the undersigned, impelled by the urgent appeal of the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore to "all Catholics engaged in the sale of alcoholic beverages to quit that dangerous business" invite all Catholics who favor the removal of the saloon to meet in Conference, August 4, 1914, in Niagara Falls." It should be remembered that in the Province of Quebec there are 904 municipalities under prohibition and only 236 under license. Judging the future by the past the downfall of this dreadful business is near at hand.
