PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE" OF MARCH 2

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I am again compelled, Mr. Speaker, to rise on a matter of personal privilege, but I hope it can be disposed of without raising any uproar, because it has to do with the rethreshing of old straw.

The Montreal Gazette of this morning has on the front page a column with this heading:

Serious Charges
Misuse of R.C.M.P. Laid to St. Laurent as Secrecy Ends
"Methods of Gestapo"
P.C. Leader Urges Prime Minister be Called to Account for "Prostitution"

The article is written by Mr. Arthur Blakely. It goes on to say:

Serious charges against Prime Minister (then minister of justice) St. Laurent, involving the misuse of the R.C.M.P., are contained in the famous secret letter on Hong Kong which opposition leader Drew wrote to ex-Prime Minister King in 1942, and which Mr. Drew made public today.

The letter charges Mr. St. Laurent as justice minister with having attempted "to suppress the truth" in the Hong Kong debacle "by imitating the methods of the gestapo." It urged that he be "called to public account without delay" for "this shameful prostitution" of the R.C.M.P.

A little further down the article continues:

The Drew letter accuses Mr. St. Laurent of having used, through the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, questionable methods to secure evidence which would counterbalance testimony that the twenty military vehicles which were to have accompanied the troopship to Hong Kong could have been loaded had they been made available.

Editorially the leader writer of the Gazette makes this comment, under the title, "'War secrecy' concealed strange actions":

These are charges which would seem to require a full and detailed reply. But Mr. St. Laurent says that no reply can be made . . . This irregular use of the R.C.M.P. in Canada has never received the examination which the charge would seem to deserve. The delay in making the matter public has been prolonged for seven years.

I am afraid the inaccuracy must be attributed to the fact that Mr. Blakely was probably not here in 1942, and I do not know where the leader writer of the Gazette may have been at that time. But I wish to call the attention of those who may be interested—if there are still any who are interested—to the fact that on July 28, 1942, this matter was fully gone into, as reported at pages 4868 and following of Hansard of that year. Mr. Bruce, the then member for Parkdale, raised this question, among others:

How can the government ever justify using the authority of the criminal investigations branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a great and honoured force, to obtain evidence in a civil inquiry...

At page 4869 Mr. Bruce went on as follows:

I am asking the government to justify its action in using the criminal investigation branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the purpose of getting information in a civil inquiry—not a criminal inquiry.

Then on page 4870:

I think it is a prostitution—

The word is not new.

—of the great Royal Canadian Mounted Police to ask them to assume a responsibility of the kind which they were asked to assume, and which is a direct responsibility of the minister of justice (Mr. St. Laurent) for having done so.

I went fully into all the facts in that connection, as appears on pages 4870, 4871 and 4872; and when I got through, the hon. member for Parkdale was generous enough to make this statement, as reported at page 4872:

Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. As the minister of justice in quoting from a Vancouver newspaper has cited portions of a letter submitted by Colonel Drew to the Prime Minister, to my leader and to the leaders of the other groups, I may say that I also was quoting from that letter and I was not attacking the minister of justice personally.

In reply I said:

I thank the hon. member for Parkdale for the withdrawal of the implication at least which his former words contained.

Anyone who may be interested at this time in these events will find that the matter was fully gone into, with the result that the then hon. member for Parkdale made the statement I have just quoted.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred to an earlier discussion of this matter, and I should think he might now wish to have the letter tabled so that the record may be complete. If that is his wish, I am prepared to table it. In any event—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Drew: In any event, Mr. Speaker, may I simply say that the letter has been published, and I stand by every word in it.

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is not now prepared, and never will be prepared, to break a confidence until such time as the one who stipulated that confidence relieves him of the responsibility involved therein. If others choose to take a different view of the obligation with respect to information received by them in confidence, it is their responsibility, and I do not wish to share it.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Graydon: Fair play.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask hon. members to listen to the leader of the opposition, who has risen on a question of privilege, and let him state his question of privilege. I would ask the leader of the opposition, however, to state his question of privilege and not to make any statement.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege is very clear. The Prime Minister has left the impression that in what has been done there is a breach of secrecy. I would point out that there has been no breach of secrecy; anything that has been said was said in the proper way to the then prime minister of Canada, and was placed in the possession of this house. The information was received here through the regular channels.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

QUESTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE—TEMPORARY AND PERMANENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Fleming:

How many persons were in the employ of the dominion government (a) on a temporary basis; (b) on a permanent basis, on each of the following dates: May 1, 1945; January 1, 1946; January 1, 1947; January 1, 1948; January 1, 1949?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. (a) May 1, 1945, 83,971; January 1, 1946, 106,761 (includes employees for Christmas rush, 20,000); January 1, 1947, 121,673 (includes employees for Christmas rush, 22,000); January 1, 1948, 92,392 (includes employees for Christmas rush, 9,793); *January 1, 1949, 102,397 (includes employees for Christmas rush, 18,000).

(b) May 1, 1945, 30,477; January 1, 1946, 31,038; January 1, 1947, 30,060; January 1, 1948, 32,497; *January 1, 1949, 37,706.

*Includes November figures for the administrative and lands and development services of the Department of Mines and Resources, which are the latest available.

FREIGHT RATES—REFRIGERATED CAR AND HEATING CHARGES

Mr. Hatfield:

1. At the time the increases in freight rates were authorized, were there any increases authorized on services such as refrigerated car charges and heating charges?

2. If so, under what authority were the increases on services authorized?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Yes.

2. Increases authorized by board of transport commissioners by order 70425, dated March 30, 1948, under their powers expressed in the Railway Act.

CIVIL SERVICE—RECLASSIFICATIONS IN GRADE OR SALARY

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has a reclassification taken place within the last year of civil service positions?

3. In how many cases were there reductions made in the case of civil servants receiving less than: (a) $2,000; (b) $3,000?

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West):

1. Yes.

2. (a) 5,049; (b) 865.

3. (a) Less than $2,000, 533; (b) between $2,000 and $3,000, 280.

CUSTODY OF NAZI SYMPATHIZERS

Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia):

1. How many persons in Canada were taken into custody during the war for their nazi sympathies or activities?

2. What were the names of these people?

3. How many are still in custody?

Mr. Garson:

1. Germans and pro-Germans, 847; Italians, 632; communists, 133; National Unity party, 27.

2. It is considered that it is not in the public interest to supply this information at this late date.

3. None.

WHEAT—UNITED KINGDOM—TRANSFER OF CREDITS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How much wheat has been (a) purchased; (b) delivered; (c) bargained for, by the British government or by British purchasers, month by month, since the first day of January, 1948?

2. Was any of this wheat bought and paid for by foreign aid funds transferred or credited direct from the United States?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. (a) The purchase and sale of wheat and wheat flour to the United Kingdom is covered by the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement.

(b) Delivery of wheat is made to the United Kingdom at seaboard and delivery of the wheat for milling of flour is regarded as completed when the imported cereals division books the flour with the Canadian mills. Deliveries in the January 1948-January 1949 period were as follows:

Wheat and Flour Deliveries Under United Kingdom Agreement

(c) Nil.

2. Not known; the payment for Canadian wheat and flour is arranged by the United Kingdom authorities. See also question re purchase of Canadian wheat by United States appearing in Votes and Proceedings No. 5, page i, and answer thereto, Hansard, volume 88, No. 11, pages 380-381.

*AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT BOARD—POTATOES

Mr. Hatfield:

How does the agricultural prices support board propose to dispose of the grade one potatoes they are now surveying and entering into contracts with the farmers for payment of $1.15 per hundredweight in the bins on the farm?

Mr. Gardiner: It is not my understanding of the arrangement, Mr. Speaker, that the agricultural prices support board secures any potatoes to dispose of; but it is their hope that the private organizations which have been handling the potatoes of farmers for some considerable time will make such a good job of handling them this year that the potatoes will be well taken care of.

INCOME TAX—CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Argue:

1. What amount of tax was collected from co-operatives under the Income War Tax Act for the years 1946 and 1947?

2. What was the amount of tax collected in each province for each of the above years?

Mr. McCann:

1. Up until the year 1947, the taxation division did not maintain statistics on the amount of tax declared by, or collected from, co-operatives. The statistics are being compiled for 1947 but will not be completed until midsummer.

2. See answer to No. 1.

INDIANS—RATIONS CHARGED TO BAND FUNDS

Mr. Campbell:

1. Are rations to aged Indians now being charged to band funds?

2. If so, since when and on whose authority?

Mr. MacKinnon:

1. Yes, but only where such costs can be met without seriously depleting the revenue account of the band concerned; otherwise such rations are purchased from moneys appropriated by parliament for Indian welfare. There is also granted from appropriations a special allowance to aged Indians.

2. The authority to grant assistance from band funds to aged Indians has been provided for in the Indian Act since it was first passed; see section 95 (d).

BUILDING PERMITS

Mr. Fleming:

1. What was the aggregate value of building permits issued in Canada by months in the year 1948?

2. How much of such aggregate value in each month was for (a) residential; (b) commercial and industrial construction?

1 and 2.

1948

(1) Includes institutional and miscellaneous permits.

(2) As reported by 507 municipalities in Canada. No account is taken of the building activity outside of registration areas.

DRAINAGE AND RECLAMATION—BRITISH COLUMBIA—LILLOOET LAKE

Mr. Fulton:

1. Has a contract now been let for the lowering of the level of Lillooet lake in connection with drainage and reclamation at Pemberton Meadows, British Columbia?

2. If so, who was the successful bidder, and what was the amount of the tender?

3. Were other tenders received?

4. If any, who were the tenderers, and what was the amount of the tender in each case?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Yes.

2. Highway Construction Company, Limited, Vancouver, B. C. $404,000.

3. Yes.

4. Campbell-Bennett Limited, Vancouver, B.C., $407,000. Assiniboia Engineering Co., Ltd., Calgary, Alta., $486,700. Dawson, Wade & Co., Ltd., Vancouver, B.C., $540,000. Fred Mannix & Co., Ltd., Calgary, Alta., $1,215,000.

POSTAL SERVICE—RATES TO NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr MacInnis:

1. What are the postage rates to Yellowknife and other areas in the Northwest Territories on (a) letters; (b) newspapers and periodicals; (c) printed matter; (d) parcels?

2. Is the postage rate on any of these items different from rates to other parts of Canada?

Mr. Bertrand (Laurier):

(1) First class (letters)—4 cents first ounce, and third class (printed) matter, 2 cents each additional ounce or fraction thereof; second class matter (newspapers and periodicals) when mailed by the public—1 cent per 4 ounces or fraction of 4 ounces to each separate address; when mailed from the office of publication or from newsdealers to subscribers—4 cents per pound.

Parcel Post

30 cents per lb. or fraction of a lb.—Bitumount, Camsell Portage, Embarras Portage, Fond du Lac, Fort Chipewyan, Fort Fitzgerald, Fort Smith, Stony Rapids.

70 cents per lb. or fraction of a lb.—Fort Providence, Fort Resolution, Hay River, Port Radium, Rae, Yellowknife.

$1.20 per lb. or fraction of a lb.—Coppermine, Fort Good Hope, Fort Norman, Fort Simpson, Norman Wells, Wrigley.

$1.40 per lb. or fraction of a lb.—Aklavik, Arctic Red River, Fort McPherson, Port Brabant, Reindeer Depot.

Note: Small parcels weighing up to 8 ounces may be prepaid at the air letter rate of 7 cents for the first ounce, and 5 cents each ounce after, if the sender so desires.

(2) Yes. All mail for Yellowknife and the other offices mentioned above must be carried by air. Special rates of postage were established for printed matter, parcels, and newspapers and periodicals mailed by publishers to subscribers with the object of keeping the volume of printed matter, newspapers and parcels to a minimum so that there would be sufficient space available on the planes at all times for the conveyance of letter mails.

Questions

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ST. MAURICE, QUE.—EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONNEL

Mr. Caouette:

1. Were certain local employees or officers of the Canadian National Railways (St. Maurice division) employed on the recommendation of the minister or through the patronage of their member of parliament?

2. If so, what are the names of such employees; what are their respective duties and what recommendations were made by the minister?

3. What recommendations were made by members of parliament and what is the name of the member in each case?

Mr. Chevrier:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. There is no operating division or subdivision bearing the name of St. Maurice, but if the question were of general application the answer would be no.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

The management of the railway state that individuals taken into the service of the Canadian National Railways are engaged having regard for their age, their physical fitness, their educational standard, their character and the feeling of employing officers who will be capable of performing the duties assigned to them. Recommendations from individuals can only be considered in applying the foregoing tests. Certainly no employee or officer is engaged merely because of a recommendation by anyone in public life or otherwise.

IMMIGRATION—DR. MICHAEL SEIGNEUR

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. By what mode or modes of transportation did Dr. Michael Seigneur, his wife and children enter Canada and what were the dates of arrival of each of them?

2. If transportation was by ship, give name of ship and steamship line?

3. Did the Canadian immigration authorities examine their credentials and screen them prior to embarkation or departure from Europe?

4. At what Canadian port or ports were they admitted to Canada?

5. Were they in possession of landing cards? If so, who signed the same?

6. If entry was made by way of the United States by them, or any of them, who were the Canadian immigration authorities who admitted them?

7. When did any of the immigration officials first become aware that Seigneur and/or wife and family were in Canada?

8. Have any documents been issued legalizing the the entry into Canada of the said persons?

9. If so, what is the nature thereof?

10. Was an order in council passed? If so, what is the number and date thereof?

Mr. MacKinnon:

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. There were no immigration officials in France at the time. Dr. Seigneur, under the name of Vincent Desgarets, did apply to the Canadian embassy at Paris for a non-immigrant visa as a student for temporary entry to study at College Stanislas, Montreal. This was granted.

4. Dr. Seigneur entered Canada at Lacolle, P.Q. Mrs. Seigneur and her children entered Canada at Montreal, Dorval airport.

5. Non-immigrants are not required to be in possession of a landing card under immigration regulations.

6. As no individual record is kept of non-immigrants entering Canada from the United States, no record was made of the entry of Dr. Seigneur and his family.

7. On February 26, 1948, when Dr. Seigneur applied for landing for himself and family.

8. By order in council P.C. 2920, dated June 29, 1948, the provisions of P.C. 4849 and P.C. 4851 were waived in respect of Dr. Seigneur and his family.

9. Answered by No. 8.

10. Answered by No. 8.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

LEGAL SERVICES—CHAPLEAU AND PONTIAC COUNTIES

Mr. Caouette:

1. What are the names of the lawyers and notaries residing in the counties of Chapleau and Pontiac who have acted as agents for the different departments or boards of the federal government during the years 1945 to January 1, 1949?

2. What amount of fees has been paid annually to each of them?

SHIPMENT OF GOODS TO CHINA

Mr. Lennard:

1. Have shipments left Canada for China since January 1, 1949?

2. If so (a) what goods and in what quantities; (b) to whom; (c) how are they being paid for?

3. Are shipments still going forward?

DAIRY INDUSTRY—OLEOMARGARINE—IMPORTS OF VEGETABLE OILS AND FATS

Mr. Hatfield:

1. Has the international emergency food committee ceased to function in regards to oils and fats entering Canada?

2. What steps have been taken by the government to protect the dairy industry in regards to vegetable oils and fats entering Canada for the manufacturing of margarine?

DOMINION BONDS—PURCHASES IN 1948 BY BANK OF CANADA AND OTHER AGENCIES

Mr. Fleming:

What amounts of bonds issued or guaranteed by Canada were purchased by months in the year 1948, by the Bank of Canada and each of the other federal government boards or commissions or departments authorized to purchase government bonds?

RADIO BROADCASTING—HAVANA AGREEMENT—APPLICATIONS FOR INCREASED POWER

Mr. Ross (St. Paul's):

1. How many applications for increased power have been received by the (a) Canadian Broadcasting Corporation; (b) Department of Transport, and from what stations, in the years 1944, 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?
2. What are the frequencies allotted to these stations?
3. What is the minimum power for security of occupancy of these channels under the Havana agreement?
4. What is the maximum power allowable for these channels under the Havana agreement?

RADIO BROADCASTING—HAVANA AGREEMENT—CHANNELS ALLOTTED TO CANADA

Mr. Ross (St. Paul's):

1. What is the effective date and term of the North American regional broadcasting agreement or so-called Havana agreement?
2. What was the date set at which time the channels allotted to Canada had to be occupied with minimum power?
3. Have there been extensions of this date?

YARMOUTH CENTRE AND FINGAL, N.S., AIRPORTS

Mr. Coyle:

1. Is the government using the airports at Yarmouth centre and Fingal?
2. If not, what disposition has been made of these airports?
3. Are either or both of these airports being used as farm lands?
4. If so, to whom are they rented and under what terms?
5. Are taxes being paid on these lands?
6. If so, to whom, and if not, why not?

CROWN COMPANIES

Mr. Green:

1. What crown companies continue to function?
2. What is the nature of the work carried on by each of such companies?
3. To which minister of the crown, if any, is each of such crown companies responsible?
4. What crown companies remain in existence but are not functioning?

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

SUBSIDIES ON VARIOUS COMMODITIES, 1946-47-48

Mr. H. W. Timmins (Parkdale): On February 9, 1947, an order for return was made to a question of mine which appears on page 389 of Hansard, and which had to do with subsidies on various commodities. I have not yet received that return, and I wonder whether the Minister of Finance would look into the matter.

Motions for Papers

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, probably it does not concern only my department. I shall make inquiries however, and see what the situation is.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA—CANADIAN DELEGATION

Mr. Pearkes:

For a copy of the report of the Canadian delegation which attended the international conference on safety of life at sea, in 1948.

Mr. Chevrier: The only report brought to my attention in this connection is that of the international conference on the safety of life at sea, signed at London on June 10, 1948. I presume that is what the hon. member wants, and I now table it.

Mr. Pearkes: I thought perhaps the Canadian delegation would have put in a special report of their own.

Mr. Chevrier: There is no special report.

CANADIAN MARITIME COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATIONS OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Green:

For a copy of any recommendations made to the government or to the Canadian maritime commission by the national advisory committee of such commission.

DRAINAGE AND RECLAMATION—BRITISH COLUMBIA—PEMBERTON MEADOWS

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of the report known as the McGugan report on the costs, etc., and method to be followed in carrying out the program of drainage and reclamation at Pemberton Meadows, British Columbia.

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, and recommendations (other than the McGugan report) between the Department of Agriculture and any other department or agency of the federal government and any individual or committee of citizens with respect to drainage and reclamation at Pemberton Meadows, British Columbia.

TRANSPORTATION

INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF HEARINGS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Transport tell the house when the hearings of the royal commission on transportation will begin? I ask the question because when the appointment of the commission was announced on December 30 the Canadian Press indicated that the hearings would begin in approximately two months. It is now more than two months since the commission was appointed.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): In a conversation which I had some weeks ago with the chairman of the royal commission on transportation he indicated that he was anxious to proceed with the hearings as quickly as possible, and stated that he thought the commission would be ready to proceed by the end of April. Since then I have been informed that some of the provinces have sought some delay in order to prepare their cases. I cannot give any further information.

Mr. Green: Does the minister know which provinces have asked for the delay?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not able to say.

Mr. Green: Will the minister find out?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

HOUSING

FAIRCRAFT FLAT-ROOF HOUSES OCCUPIED BY VETERANS—QUESTION AS TO DEFECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the soldier settlement and Veterans Land Act branch of the minister's department done anything to correct the defects in the Faircraft flat-roof houses occupied by veterans across Canada?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I shall take note of the hon. member's question and give an answer later.

COARSE GRAINS

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Probe (Regina City): On Wednesday, February 23, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) addressed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to which the parliamentary assistant replied, stating in effect that it would be dealt with by the minister upon his return to the house. The hon. member's question was:

> In view of the conclusion last month of the conference on coarse grains between the federal government, provincial governments and the Canadian federation of agriculture, can the minister indicate when he will give a statement to the house as to what was accomplished, and what decisions were reached?

Will the minister indicate whether an answer is being prepared?

[Mr. Green.]

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The matters referred to in the question are still under study. I hope to be able to make a statement to the house within the next two weeks.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHANGES IN SEATING ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier). Now that the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) has been moved forward, when will the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case) be moved to the front ranks?

Mr. Fraser: After you uncrook your shanks.

POSTAL SERVICE

NEW STAMP ISSUES—ENTRY OF NEWFOUNDLAND —HALIFAX CENTENARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Probe (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Postmaster General. For the purpose of answering inquiries by Canadian and other stamp collectors, will he inform the house whether his department has planned a special stamp issue to celebrate the entry of Newfoundland into confederation, when this is achieved? What other commemorative or special stamp issues are planned for this year by the Postmaster General?

Hon. Ernest Bertrand (Postmaster General): The answer to the first question is in the affirmative; a stamp is now being printed. We also have another historical stamp which is to come out in commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the founding of Halifax.

FISHERIES

SUPPLY OF BAIT TO LOBSTER FISHERMEN, DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): Yesterday the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) asked a question about seining for herring in Digby basin. I should like now to answer the question.

The department has received two telegrams with reference to winter seining in Annapolis basin. The department's information is that of six weirs licensed in the basin, one only operated this winter, and it has operated only partly. Three seine boats had been operating up to recently in the basin, but ceased operations at the end of last week.

No shortage of bait in this district has recently been reported to the department. The department is informed that if bait were required, the seiners would gladly sell it on request, as they have done in past years.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

TOWNSHIPS DECLARED INELIGIBLE FOR PAYMENTS —QUESTION OF REINSPECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture, having to do with the fact that some 600 townships in the prairie provinces have been declared ineligible for payment of the prairie farm assistance allowance. Has the minister given consideration to the reinspection of these areas, or to any alteration in the area of qualification? This is a matter of great interest to large areas, particularly in Saskatchewan.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): As the hon. member knows, there is a board to which all these applications are referred. Whenever a question arises whether a decision by the board is correct or otherwise, reinspection is made, and I presume that where any such question has arisen, that has been done. If, however, there are any districts in which reinspections have not been made, and about which there is question, the board will reconsider them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister would make a general statement in regard to the whole situation, it would be beneficial, because, as he knows, all of us on the prairies are in receipt of letters from many farmers who believe they are entitled to payment.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

INQUIRY AS TO CHOICE OF ROUTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. C. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Mines and Resources about his reply to my inquiry as to the route of the trans-Canada highway. A certain route had been recommended in the early thirties by the federal government and by the different provinces. That is the information for which I have been asking, rather than the results of the request recently made to the provinces as to the route of the highway. What routes were recommended by the different provinces from 1930 on; what routes were approved by the federal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): —and what expenditures have been made?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that as the hon. member's question is a lengthy one, it should have been placed on the order paper.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I think it should be answered. May I have an answer from the minister?

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): I shall be glad to look into the matter and see whether there is any such information in the files of the department. If there is, I shall produce it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. C. E. Stephenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, in availing myself of this opportunity to speak I intend to bring to the attention of the government some of the serious problems that face agriculture across Canada, and in particular I should like to refer to those who are engaged in this basic industry in the county I have the honour to represent. Before proceeding I should like to join with others in congratulating the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address and to say to them that they did a very fine job.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is far too much disturbance in the chamber.

Mr. Stephenson: When I spoke last year in the debate I found myself in the same position as I am in today. At that time I asked if it might not be possible to arrange for an interval after the orders of the day have been dealt with during which time hon. members who wished to leave the chamber might withdraw. Then it would not be necessary for the speaker who had the floor to compete with all the confusion that arises.

As I was saying, I should like to join with others in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address. I think they did exceptionally fine jobs with the meagre material they had at their disposal. I should like also to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) upon attaining the high position he now holds. It might be timely to remind the youth of Canada that under our democratic system they have the opportunity of attaining to that same high position. It might also be timely to warn Canadian parents who have the interests of their children at heart, and who wish them to attain to high office in this country, that they should take cognizance of the actions of those people who would attempt to bring dictatorship to this country and deprive our children of the great opportunities they have.

I should like also to congratulate the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). I believe it is becoming more widely known every day that he is a great statesman and a great defender of freedom. I am sure that in the near future he will attain to the great position to which I have just referred.

One thing is noticeable this year—the continuity of the debate on the address. It will be remembered that in recent years the debate was interrupted every few days in order to permit the government to bring down bits of legislation which they claimed were of an emergency nature. In my opinion those bits of legislation were brought down for no other purpose than to distract the people and to divert from the government the criticism being leveled at it. This year instead of bits of legislation being brought down we find that cabinet ministers are being injected into the debate in an effort to redeem the government and to make excuses for their sins. However, I am sure that that has not had a a great deal of effect on the country.

I was much interested in listening to the fine reading by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). It was a reading and I understand that copies had already been given to the press in order that they might not miss anything. I noticed the great effort the minister made to pat himself on the back, so much so that I thought he might break his arm, when he told the country what a wonderful job he had done with our money. Someone said that it had been the provinces that had done the good job, but the minister said, "with our money." He should have said the hard-earned money of the taxpayers.

I should like to pay a tribute to the press of Canada. I think they try to present without bias the different views on political issues. In particular I should like to pay a tribute to two publications in my riding. The Port Hope Guide is a daily paper that has been published since 1831. The Canadian Statesman is a weekly paper which has won distinction across Canada. It has been awarded the national editorial trophy and the certificate of merit for the past two years, and this in competition with all the weeklies in Canada. I think that is a record to be proud of.

It has been said by the Liberal party that this paper has considerable political bias. I will admit that it has seen fit to support the policies of the Progressive Conservative party, but as an indication that it is not biased I should like to refer to the fine picture of the former Prime Minister of Canada which it published over the following statement:

> Honoured today as Canada's greatest statesman, crowned with the record of the longest tenure in office of any Prime Minister in the long history of the empire and commonwealth, Prime Minister Mackenzie King retired from his high office on Monday, November 15, 1948.

Then they went on to state that every Canadian would wish him well-deserved leisure and congratulate him upon his long years of service. I do not think that a paper which would publish a statement like that could be said to be altogether politically biased. Another political party in my riding has claimed that this paper is politically biased. The C.C.F. party have also claimed this paper to be biased because it does not support their policies. When they could not get support, the leaders of that party had notices posted in the factories forbidding their supporters to buy this paper. This is the first time to my knowledge that any political party has boycotted the freedom of the press. I would say that those are communist tactics.

Mr. Fraser: Trying to suppress the truth.

Mr. Stephenson: I hear some remark.

Mr. Fraser: Trying to suppress the truth; that is what they were trying to do.

Mr. Stephenson: In order to show that this paper is a staunch supporter of agriculture I should like to quote some of the articles that appeared in a recent issue with regard to the achievements of farmers in the county I have the honour to represent. The articles which refer to the royal winter fair read as follows:

> W. Carruthers Takes Apple Prizes at Royal
> Wilfred D. Carruthers, Bowmanville, surprised the usual large exhibitors of apples at the royal winter fair by capturing five prizes on his small displays of Spy and McIntosh varieties. His ribbons included two firsts, two seconds and a third.

Here is another heading:

> Reserve champion for oats goes to Garnet Rickard.

He is from Bowmanville. Here is an excerpt from an article in the same paper:

> Maurice Baker, Hampton, fitted and showed the grand champion and junior champion shorthorn bull.

Then there is part of another article to which I wish to refer:

> Latest lists received show Fred Trewin, Nestleton, winning the junior championship on a Tamworth sow.

The junior Durham county team had great success at the royal winter fair, winning one first, six seconds, one third and one fourth in recent years, and many other winners whom time does not permit me to mention.

The whole paper is more or less filled with the achievements of the farmers of Durham county at the royal winter fair in Toronto. I have given these quotations to show that I represent a truly agricultural district.

I should like to make a few remarks now on agriculture in general. In saying that agriculture is a basic industry of the country, I believe that to be so because our great country was built upon it. We know that our forefathers depended on this basic industry for their very livelihood, and the great advance Canada has made is due to their efforts. As I said, they also depended on agriculture for their very existence. That is true today, but people living in urban and metropolitan areas give very little thought to this fact. They assume the attitude that agricultural products just grow on the shelves of the grocery stores, that all they have to do is to go into the store and pick them off the shelves, and the shelves will be restocked from some storage plant. These people give little thought to the long hours and the hard work that the farmers have put in to place these products on the shelves of the grocery or butcher stores.

I think the farmers should be commended for their great war effort. It has been said that an army marches on its stomach, which is true. If it had not been for the effort of the farmers there might have been a very different ending to the last war. At the time farmers were making this great effort to produce the necessary products of the farm, industry was offering higher wages than the farmers could pay their help. As a result of the attraction of high wages in industry, farm labourers left the farms and went to the urban and metropolitan centres. The farmers' sons did the same thing. The result was that pop and mom and the little children were left to carry on as best they could to try to satisfy the great need for farm produce. They worked twelve hours a day before they lost their farm help, but afterwards it was necessary for them to work fourteen and fifteen hours a day.

Nothing was done by the government to see that farmers were given assistance to secure labour, although every other industry seemed to receive some consideration. As a result the farmers found they had to purchase special machinery in order to maintain production, and they purchased tractors, combines, and so forth, at considerable expense. They made a gallant effort. A great many of their products had to be sold at controlled prices, something that I do not think we should forget. I hope the farmers who borrowed money to buy machinery now have it paid for, because the outlook at the present time does not appear any too bright for the future of agriculture.

We now find the government going back years and digging out taxes from these people who worked so hard, but who were allowed nothing extra for their long hours of labour and the work performed by the wife and the children on the farm. They were not given one cent's consideration by way of reduction of income tax for the extra services they performed. The department is now trying to dig out the odd dollar from these people, who gave such great service to their country. It is even going to the extent of asking whether the farmer's wife may have an extra bill shoved down her stocking. When they go to see if the farmer may have an extra nickel hidden away some place, they are demanding it of the farmer in spite of the fact that this government boasts of a surplus of over $600 million.

On an expanding market we always find that the products of agriculture are generally the last to increase in price. We also find on a receding market that they are the first to feel the effect of any change. That is what is happening today. On the Toronto market last fall beef sold for $28 to $30, and the price now is from $18 to $20. I have a letter from one of my constituents who is in the beef cattle business. He says that at the present time he stands to lose $2,500. We see that chickens have gone down 14 cents a pound. Eggs were selling for 70 to 75 cents a dozen a while ago, and just the other week I bought grade A eggs for 44 cents a dozen. We find that potatoes are now selling at $1 to $1.25 a bag. This is the reward of the farmers after the great effort they made on behalf of Canada, and I would say that in great part it is due to the bungling of the government.

Mr. Grant: That is a broad statement.

Mr. Rowe: Broad but it is true.

Mr. Graydon: It is not a narrow one either.

Mr. Stephenson: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made a political speech the other night. I am sure it is not the kind of speech that the farmers have been waiting for. He took great credit for the expanding trade Canada had enjoyed since 1935, when the Liberal party came into power. He said it was all due to the Liberal party.

Mr. Gardiner: And in spite of the Tory party.

Mr. Stephenson: The minister has made his statement. Let us see what happened. What is the true reason that we had expanding markets practically from the time that the government came into power in 1935? The reason is that we had just come through the greatest depression the world has ever known, a world-wide depression. By 1933 or 1934 markets had started to move upward, and when the government came into power in 1935 they were able to enjoy the returning markets. That was the reason there was an increase at that time. During the war we find that the market was expanded owing to the great demand for the goods that were necessary for war. After the war was over those countries that had been devastated by it were not in a position to produce the goods they needed. Canada was fortunate enough not to be touched by the war, and we were in a position to supply what was needed. All the government had to do was to shovel the goods into the market. In many cases they were sold at less than the world market price. It is not hard to go out and sell goods on the market at less than the world market price. If I were a salesman I could easily go out and sell an article for less than the other fellow was asking for it. That is hardly salesmanship, and it requires no great effort. That is exactly what happened; that is why this government had these expanding markets and why Canada enjoyed those exports. But now we find a different position. These other countries are getting back into production and are competing in the world markets, and as a result we are losing them.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, no.

Mr. Stephenson: Oh, yes, we are. We cannot get the markets, that is all.

Mr. Gardiner: What unsold surpluses have we?

Mr. Stephenson: If the minister will not admit that, let us see what is actually happening; let us take a few of the statements that have been made. Here is one that appeared in the press a short time ago:

> Under the agreement with the Netherlands, the United Kingdom will obtain sorely needed supplies of bacon and eggs to compensate in part for reduced purchases of these foods from Canada.

Mr. Gardiner: That is because we ate them all ourselves, or sent them to the United States.

Mr. Stephenson: Here is something that has actually happened. Between 1939 and 1949 we negotiated over 125 contracts with the United Kingdom for foodstuffs, and had as many as 22 in force in one year. Today we have four: wheat, covering 160 million bushels at $2; cheese, covering fifty millon pounds at 30 cents a pound, an amount less than the total shipments of cheese in any single year during the past thirty years; a contract for 160 million pounds of bacon at $36, grade A Wiltshire, f.o.b. Canadian seaport, the lowest bacon contract we have had in the past ten years. This portrays a situation of such gravity that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) felt it necessary at the last dominion-provincial agricultural conference to state that the Canadian government can no longer assure farmers of a market in Britain for all the hogs we can produce.

Mr. Gardiner: All they produced were sold.

Mr. Stephenson: If the minister wants to make a speech he may do so later.

Mr. Grant: Leave him alone and let him do it.

Mr. Stephenson: He would like to be left alone, I know. Then our contract this year for 46 million dozen eggs represents a reduction of 62 per cent from last year. It is said that the reason for this situation is the shortage of dollars in the United Kingdom. We will admit that this has been an important factor, but I still say this government has been sitting on the doorstep, paying hardly any attention to export markets, and as a result we have lost them. Are they going to continue to just sit here and wait for these people to come and knock on our door?

Mr. Cruickshank: Let us blast our way in.

Mr. Stephenson: I am afraid I forgot to include the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) in the list of people I should congratulate. May I congratulate him now on these great, statesmanlike interjections he makes in this House of Commons. I am sure his people back home read them with a great deal of interest.

Many people have thought that we might be losing these markets because other countries are selling their goods to Britain at lower prices. I want to correct that impression. In the latest issue of Foreign Trade, which came to our desks just the other day, I find this statement:

> With the exception of condensed milk, the average values, declared for customs purposes, of the principal foodstuffs obtained from Canada were lower than the values of similar products imported by the United Kingdom from other countries. As indicated in the table below, the average value for Canadian wheat in 1948 was £1 per hundredweight, whereas that for wheat from other sources of supply was £1·5 per hundredweight. The average value for bacon from Canada was £10 per hundredweight compared with £11·4 per hundredweight for bacon from other countries.

The article goes on to give a whole list of items, and in each case the prices paid to other countries are higher than those paid to Canada. So it is hard to understand why we have not been able to retain those markets. It might be interesting to have this table appear in Hansard, so everyone may see it, and I would ask the privilege of tabling it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stephenson: We have been told by the minister also how much better off Canadian farmers were under these long-term agreements. Well, how many long-term agreements have we now, as compared with what the farmers thought they were going to get? Now we find the minister presenting to this house the Agricultural Products Act, which would give him a virtual monopoly over all agricultural products in Canada.

Mr. Gardiner: That is the bill on which you should be making this speech.

Mr. Stephenson: In reading that legislation I find that if a farmer should violate any of its provisions he may be subject to a fine of up to $5,000 or six months in jail or both. I am going to ask the minister if he still thinks that is a good act.

Mr. Gardiner: Which act?

Mr. Stephenson: Surely the minister is not going to say, like some others, "I did not hear you." Do you still think it is a good act as far as the farmers are concerned?

Mr. Gardiner: Which act?

Mr. Stephenson: The Agricultural Products Act, which you have on the order paper now.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, it is a good act.

Mr. Stephenson: If it is good, how do you reconcile the statement apparently made by you at the meeting of the Ontario concentrated milk producers association on October 10, when you were reported to have said:

> Mr. Gardiner said that consumers do not appreciate wartime sacrifices of farmers and . . . that farmers have not been able to make consumers realize how much farmers sacrificed under a government controlled price policy during world war II.

Mr. Gardiner: That is why we need the act. If the consumers realized that we would not need it.

Mr. Stephenson: The minister says the farmers suffered under this control policy, but now he wants to bring in legislation which will give him control over everything. The farmers in Durham county were not much interested in the political speech made by the minister the other evening, but they would like to know where our markets have gone for hogs, eggs, apples, honey, tobacco, potatoes and many other commodities. Incidentally I would like to ask the minister again when the department intends to carry out T.B. tests in my county. I have been asking for this during the last three years. I have had promises from the minister that it would be done, but nothing has been done. We heard the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair) tell us that cattle were one source of tuberculosis in human beings. Then on the other hand we have the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) standing up and saying what a wonderful job has been done in chest X-rays for the detection of tuberculosis; yet here we have nothing being done at the source in order to prevent the spread of this disease.

Mr. Gardiner: If the hon. member will produce the veterinarians, we will do it for him.

Mr. Stephenson: I now want to say a word about the Minister of Agriculture's applesauce.

Mr. Cruickshank: We are getting plenty of it.

Mr. Stephenson: If there ever was an instance of applesauce being handed out by a responsible minister, the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), to the effect that we cannot sell our apples in the United Kingdom because she is now producing enough of her own, hit an all-time high as the following official United Kingdom import figures show.

Mr. Gardiner: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. Stephenson: The official United Kingdom import figures. Here they are. From Australia, in 1947, imports to Britain were 92,707 hundredweight; in 1948 imports apparently were 1,108,995 hundredweight. From New Zealand there were no imports to Britain in 1947 but in 1948 she sent 357,529 hundredweight. In 1947 Canada shipped to Britain 663,145 hundredweight of apples. But in 1948 Canada did not ship an apple to Britain.

I should like to table that report also, if I may have the permission of the house to do so.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stephenson: My riding being particularly an apple-producing area—and by the way, some of the best apples in Canada are grown there—what I say to the minister is this. When the government saw fit to spend $1,500,000 in the Annapolis valley to root up some of the trees before an election, the people in my riding want to know why some of this money was not spent to procure markets for their apples, or why they did not get a little slice of this money which apparently was spent.

Mr. Gardiner: They got a great deal of it indirectly.

Mr. Stephenson: Instead of having to go around and peddle their apples from door to door in order to get rid of them.

An hon. Member: There is no by-election in Durham.

Mr. Stephenson: I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) is not in his seat because I understand that he is going into my riding tomorrow night in order to oil up the Liberal machine.

Mr. Green: It needs it.

Mr. Graydon: They will have to get a new one.

Mr. Stephenson: I shall be unable to be there because I have my duties here in the house, which must be attended to.

Mr. Cruickshank: We can spare you.

Mr. Stephenson: But the minister apparently can go to a political meeting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stephenson: I cannot be there to welcome him as federal member for the riding, but on behalf of the good citizens of Durham I would at this time give him a welcome to one of the finest counties in Ontario. I should also like to say that although there is good fishing in Durham county—

Mr. Rowe: Not political fishing, though.

Mr. Stephenson: —I would warn him that possibly the fishing for votes will not be so good.

Mr. Cruickshank: Your fishing was not bad down in Nicolet-Yamaska, with Sauriol.

Mr. Stephenson: We did fairly well.

In conclusion I should like to say this. During the time the government have been sitting back and allowing the markets to come to their door, without making much effort to procure markets for the goods we have to export, had they done a little bit of looking for those markets we would not find ourselves in the position we are in today. We would also find that, instead of having our surpluses piling up here at home, we would be able to dispose of them in other countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): Order. The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Stephenson), during his address, asked for leave of the house to put on Hansard certain statements. Has he the permission of the hon. members to do so?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. MacInnis: What was the source of the papers that he wanted to put on Hansard?

Mr. Rowe: He told the house.

Mr. MacInnis: I would ask the hon. member just to keep quiet. Other members in the house have rights as well as he.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, but the hon. member should listen to what is being said.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to know the source of the figures the hon. member wanted to put on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) is quite correct. Will the hon. member for Durham state what he wishes to have put on Hansard?

Mr. Stephenson: If the hon. member for Vancouver East had been in the house he would likely have heard what I said.

An hon. Member: Hold it up.

Mr. Stephenson: Here is the article. It appeared in a government publication entitled Foreign Trade.

Mr. MacInnis: That is all right with me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stephenson: The other is the British or rather the United Kingdom import figures.

Mr. Grant: That is one the hon. member made up himself?

Mr. Stephenson: No.

Mr. Grant: Where is it from?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): I would ask hon. members to refrain from interrupting. It is not fair to the member who has the floor, and it is not fair to whoever may be acting as Speaker, when he is trying to get the opinion of the house on a matter of this kind. I should like to ask hon. members if they are agreeable to having these tables put on Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stephenson: The tables are as follows.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): This debate has now been in progress for some two weeks, Mr. Speaker, and the general line of approach of the different groups in the house to the problems which we are facing in Canada today has become quite clear. I should like to comment briefly on them, as I see them, and as they have been expressed in the various speeches made.

In the first place, we have the Progressive Conservatives' ideas which have been almost invariably looking backwards. They want to go back to the old wheat board which we had before 1943, and under which we operated on a floor price. Grain was sold in the grain exchange. Unless the exchange went below that price, the grain exchange made any profits that were to be made out of speculation and the people of Canada paid the bill if there was a loss. Others have stated that they would like to go back to the gold standard and the depreciated currency that we have known in the past. I lived in western Canada during the 1930's when we were operating under a depreciated currency, when we were getting approximately $3.86 for the English pound, when we were exporting our wheat, pork and beef to Great Britain and getting back from eighty cents to eighty-five cents on the dollar. And when we went to purchase the things that we had to purchase from the United States, such as farm machinery and many of the household articles which we use, we had to send there $1.17 to get the means of production which we had to have on the farm to produce our wheat at eighty-five cents a bushel and pork at four cents and five cents a pound. Therefore I am not anxious to go back, and I do not think the people of Canada are.

Then they would like to go back to a complete free economy. What does a complete free economy mean? It means monopoly at home and cartels abroad. That is what it means. Certainly neither we of this group, nor do I think the people of Canada, would like to go back to a complete free economy again.

We have the government's approach. They appear to be looking both ways. Some hon. members' speeches would appear to be progressive. They are looking forward; they are looking to the future. Others are looking back. If it is not presumptuous, I should like to give a bit of advice to the government. I was quite a young man when I first went out west. Out there at that time there was a very smart horse dealer who sold me a team of horses. When I got them home and hooked them up and picked up the lines there was one that looked over his shoulder, looked back, and backed up. The other one wanted to go ahead. I never got very far with that team of horses until I traded off the one that was always looking backwards.

Mr. Fulton: Something like your party.

Mr. Wright: I suggest to the Liberals that they should trade off some of their members who are always looking back. They should trade them off to the Progressive Conservatives and then they might get somewhere.

I should like now to turn to western Canada, which has always been a country in which we have looked to next year. It is a next-year country. We have always looked to the future. Today we in this group are looking to the future. We believe that there is a great future for Canada. There is a great future for us in this country if we would just grasp the opportunities we have.

In making their reports—the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) yesterday, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) a few days ago—the ministers gave a fairly glowing account of production in this country. They used dollars as the basis of their reports. We have a gross national production of something over $15 billion and a gross agricultural production of some $2,800 million this year, but I do not think we should use dollars as the standard in measuring our progress. A fairer way would be to give the volume production of goods. So far as volume production of goods in Canada is concerned, we have today approximately the same volume of production that we had during 1944 and 1945. There is a greater dollar value but actually in volume production of goods there has been little increase. That was to be expected, because during 1944 and 1945 we were producing mostly standardized goods, war production. Even the goods which we were using in home consumption were standardized and naturally we were able to get a greater volume of production. Immediately the war was over, we as civilians demanded a more diversified production in this country, and naturally that production, because it was diversified, became less. The government are to be congratulated on the fact that they have brought the production back to where it was in 1944 and in 1945.

However, in spite of this increased production, if we read the financial papers, if we read the annual reports of the chartered banks, if we read the reports of the Canadian chamber of commerce, the manufacturers association, the Canadian federation of agriculture, and the labour organizations, we find a note of doubt as to the future. In giving their reports so far in this debate, the ministers have brought us up to the present, but they have not given any indication of what the future may hold in store for us. We find some of these organizations to which I have referred saying that we are going to have a recession. Others say that that recession may even become a depression. The surest way that they can make it into a depression is to keep on talking about it until they get everybody scared to death, and then they will have a depression. They have not been following a wise course in that respect.

Let me quote a statement which appeared in the Monetary Times—and I think it is fairly typical of the expressions which we find in our publications:

> Businessmen are complaining that there was never a time in their memory when it was so difficult to form an intelligent estimate of the state of things to come. So manifold are the imponderables in the international situation, they contend, that about the only way to pick your way through the maze of the future is with a bent pin, like the Chinese do at the race track.

If big business in this country is in the state of mind where it is prepared to admit that it has no plans for the future, that it is just sitting there waiting for something to happen, it is time that we had a government in this country which is prepared to do a little bit of planning for the future and to let the people know what these plans are.

Why do we find the situation that we have today? Why are manufacturers, the farmers and the labouring people in doubt? If you follow it up you will find that almost invariably the statement is that we have become a great trading nation, and that from 30 per cent to 35 per cent of everything we produce in this country goes into the world markets, and we do not know what these markets may do; we do not know whether the people to whom we are selling are going to be able to continue to buy from us.

Great Britain became a great trading nation in the latter part of the nineteenth century and the first part of the twentieth century. She became a great trading nation because she was prepared both to sell and to buy. I say that that is the only way that we in Canada can ever become a great trading nation. We can become a great trading nation only when we are prepared to import as well as export.

In his speech the other day, the Minister of Agriculture spoke of England in the days of Gladstone when she was a great trading nation, but that was seventy years ago. Today the world is changed, and the position in Great Britain has been changed greatly, changed mostly by two world wars. In the first world war Britain had to dispose of some of her assets which she had throughout the world. In the second world war the situation was even worse. In the first two and a half years of the second world war Great Britain carried the load of the defence of democracy in the world, and she did it by disposing of every asset that she had all over the world to get the means of carrying on the war until the United States came in and we instituted lend-lease. What happened at the end of the war? Within three months of the end of the war we stopped lend-lease. The United States stopped it first, and we, like Charlie McCarthy, followed along—"me, too." Then what happened? It was only about three or four months later that we realized the foolishness of the move and that we were not going to be able to dispose of our products. So we made a loan to Great Britain. The United States made a loan of $3,750 million, and our loan was $1,250 million. Immediately that loan was made the United States removed controls, and almost overnight the loan lost about 40 per cent of its value, so far as the purchasing power of Great Britain was concerned. We followed suit, with the result that almost immediately the loan we had made became worth about 70 cents on the dollar.

Then we got into difficulty ourselves with our exchange situation; so we froze $225 million of the loan, thereby placing Great Britain in an even more serious position. After that we had Marshall aid, better known today as the European recovery plan. Under ECA we are again supplying large amounts of goods to Europe. We seem to forget however that war is not over on the day the shooting stops. A war is never over until the damage caused by the war has been repaired. The sooner people throughout the world realize that fact, the better. It matters not who wins a war; everyone must pay for it.

It is just the same as if, living on an island, we found one group in towns and another group in the country. The people in the towns may become dissatisfied with what the people in the country are doing, so they decide to go out and beat them up. We go out and beat them up; we burn a few barns, destroy some stock and come back to town, saying, "Well, we really told those fellows off." But the next day the milkman does not come around; there is no milk. There are no eggs. We are told that the only way we can get milk or eggs is to go out and milk the cow while the farmer is in the hospital, or go out and do the chores required for the supply of eggs. Then we must deliver them to town.

Exactly the same thing is taking place in Europe. We have destroyed Europe in two wars; and until Europe is rebuilt, until she is back in production again, we will not be able to trade with Great Britain or with other countries of Europe. When we have rebuilt Europe and have established trade relations there on a fair basis, we can hope for some prosperity in our own country.

As I have said, as a result of two wars Great Britain has not the dollars with which to buy the surplus we have on the American continent. But she must eat; so she makes barter arrangements with her neighbours. In that connection I should like to tell a story about my own community. We have one of the best agricultural districts in western Canada, one which produces an abundance. Around the fringes however there is an area of bush country. During the depression years, in the thirties, many of our people were sent from the cities to homestead in that bush country. Those of us in the better areas had an abundance; our granaries were full; we had hogs; we had cattle—we had everything. But a few miles away our neighbours had only some cordwood and lumber. They received a dollar a cord for the cordwood, delivered in the car, and $10 a thousand for the lumber. But when we in the other area wanted to buy lumber it cost us $30 a thousand. When they wanted to buy any of the hogs which we sold for $7.50 they had to pay $20 or $25 for them. It took four of our hogs to supply enough money with which to buy a thousand feet of their lumber. It took 3,000 feet of their lumber to buy one of our hogs.

Eventually some of the people got wise, and thought it would be a pretty good idea if we were to trade direct with our neighbours. The result was that one would see a farmer put a couple of hogs on his sleigh, drive away with them, and come back loaded with a thousand feet of lumber. We were practically on a barter basis, because certain people who had control of the finances of this country made money scarce.

The only people who got anywhere during that depression were those who did trade on a barter basis. They built new barns and new homes. Those who traded with them were able to stay off relief. There was in that community, however, another group who followed the old method. They went to the mortgage companies, borrowed money with which to build, and undertook to pay six or seven per cent interest. They then obtained some more credit from the lumber company, and the result was that in about five years the lumber and mortgage companies owned their farms; they were out on the road. There were others who sat down and did nothing, and there were still others in the bush area who did the same thing—nothing. They went on relief.

That is the situation we see in Europe today. When I listen to that program, which is broadcast every Saturday night, and begins "Gold, silver, dollars; gold, silver, dollars"—

Mr. Bentley: "Share the wealth".

Mrs. Strum: "Money, money, money."

Mr. Wright: —it makes me think of the situation in Canada and throughout the world today. Someone is sitting on top of all the gold, silver and dollars, with the result that we cannot exchange our goods. We could not exchange them in the thirties.

I am not saying the barter basis is the only one under which trade should be carried on. But I am saying that it works, and in our own community we proved that it works. I believe England is going to prove that it will work in Europe, and that we had better get wise to ourselves and get in on some of that trade while it is going on—or we will find that we, too, will be on relief, just as were some of those people who refused to barter in the thirties.

Mr. Bentley: Or we will be mortgaged to the hilt.

Mr. Wright: Yes, or we will be mortgaged to the hilt.

What happens when a country exports more than it imports? If the United States and Canada continue to export more than they import, and refuse to bring back goods to Canada for those exports, they accumulate pounds and francs in Europe. The only good those pounds and francs can be to us is for purposes of investment in the industries or resources of Europe. That was the procedure in the nineteenth and early part of the twentieth centuries, with the result that some of the exporting nations owned the basic resources of many other countries.

That has happened right here in Canada. We have imported more from the United States than we have exported to that country; and as a result of the accumulation here of dollars owned by Americans we find that about 50 per cent of our basic resources are owned by Americans. The condition is not so bad in Canada: we know the Americans. They are our neighbours and our friends; and we can trust them. But let me tell you this, that the people of Europe are not going to trust the people of North America who will come in there and attempt to own the basic resources of Europe—their railroads, their power sites, their manufacturing plants. And if the United States or Canada believes it can carry on on that basis, it is in for a disappointment—and it is not because there is no market for our goods.

The food and agricultural organization tells us that only one-fifth of the people of the world have a reasonable standard of living. Today we have a surplus of food, but that surplus is only in areas where production has been high, while in areas where the purchasing power is low there is still a great need for food.

Here is what the food and agricultural organization has to say:

> However, the total supply of food available comprises only part of the picture. Availability per person is another major factor. The world's population has been increasing, and at different rates in different regions. These population increases, over the eleven-year period 1936 to 1947, vary from 3·5 per cent in Europe to over 24 per cent in Latin America. As a result, per capita food supplies have fallen more rapidly, compared with pre-war, than absolute quantities of food produced.

I do not think we will ever reach the point where there is hope for peace as long as there are surpluses of food in one section of the world and starvation in another. We must devise ways and means of distributing the wealth that can be produced on the North American continent. Unless we do that we will find ourselves in the same position as in 1936 and 1937. How did Hitler get the courage to try to conquer the world? He believed the democracies were too weak to resist him, that they could never get together. At that time we were in a depression, we had millions of unemployed, and he thought we were weak.

Exactly the same situation will develop in the world again unless the democracies get together to solve some of these problems of distributing the tremendous productive capacity of the North American continent. This is needed for the development of Asia and India and the Middle East. We must find some method, barter or otherwise, to distribute our production. If we cannot do it in one way, then we must find some other way. There is no ground for the fear of overproduction. In my opinion, we can never really overproduce in this world.

What about our own country? Have we reached maximum consumption here? I do not think we have. I do not know what most people think, but I cannot help thinking of the old age pension of $30 per month that is paid by the dominion government. Some of the provinces pay supplementary amounts of $5 or $10, but mostly there is a means test attached. Out of that money these people must pay rent and clothe and feed themselves. Yet we have sufficient production to give them a better standard of living. It does not make common sense to me. I do not think we have nearly reached our consuming capacity in this country.

What about housing? We need probably 150,000 to 200,000 new houses this year every one of which will require furniture, kitchen equipment and all the things needed to furnish a home. There is a market for the tremendous production of this country, but apparently we cannot build houses. What about the war veterans allowances? This government is paying $30 per month to men who fought in the first year, an amount even lower than the old age pension. Some of the provinces supplement the old age pension, but the dominion government cannot even match that as far as the war veterans allowances are concerned.

Certainly there is a market for what can be produced in this country. I could go on indefinitely referring to groups of people in Canada who could consume more if they had the necessary purchasing power. We have the wealth to distribute; why not do the sensible thing? Why have a depression when there is a market for our goods, both at home and abroad? It does not make common sense.

We could undertake a tremendous construction program. I was astonished the other day when figures were tabled in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). They showed that the government had on the shelf a program that would give employment, on the job and off the job, to some 40,000 additional workers.

Mr. Winters: I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to say that the figures I tabled covered projects for which the drawings and specifications were completed, but there are other projects under active consideration and the shelf is being increased.

Mr. Wright: I am glad to hear the minister's explanation, but I submit that he has left it dangerously late to get his plans in order. It is now four years since the war, and if those are all the plans he has prepared it does not seem to me that they are adequate. Employment could be given to 40,000 people for the next ten years on constructive work in my own constituency. There is need for a power site at Fort à la Corne on the Saskatchewan river where some 80,000 to 100,000 horsepower could be developed.

There are three uncompleted lines of railroad in the constituency. One runs from Regina through Melfort up to Gronlid. When it was first built it was intended to be extended through to Nipawin and from there on to meet the Hudson Bay railroad to Churchill. This line was built back in the twenties by the Canadian Pacific and I suppose the government cannot do anything about it.

But there are two Canadian National lines. One runs to Arborfield and another runs from Saskatoon through Melfort up to Carrot River where it stops. Settlers have gone in to points fifty miles from those railroads to open up the country, but the government apparently has no intention, at least in the immediate future, of extending these lines. The line which ends at Carrot River should be extended through to The Pas in Manitoba to meet the Hudson Bay railroad. That extension would open from ninety to one hundred miles of the best farming country left in western Canada. Three years ago the Saskatchewan government took certain lands out of the forest reserve some thirty miles from Carrot River and established co-operative farms. Two years ago they had under cultivation 2,500 acres of land; this year they put another 4,000 acres under cultivation, and next year they propose to have a further 6,000 acres under cultivation in that area. There is easily twice that much land which has been broken up by individuals who are located 30, 40 or 50 miles from the railroad.

These lines should be constructed because they would prove to be an asset. They would open up new country and give employment. Why should we worry about a depression in Canada? Why should we worry about places to spend our money? We have plenty of places. What I have said applies also to the line that ends at Arborfield. It should be extended through to meet the Hudson Bay railroad. This extension would open up new country and provide additional employment.

The line that ends at Gronlid should be extended to Nipawin. The area through which this extension would pass is one of the best mixed farming areas in western Canada. They have a greater diversified production in that area than in any other area in the west. We produce honey, five million to six million pounds of alfalfa seed a year, red clover seed, grass seeds, peas, rape, registered grains. The land has been tested for the production of sugar beets. We could have a sugar beet factory there. The land is suitable for the production of sugar beets without irrigation, and would justify the establishment of a factory. We have power on the Saskatchewan river. We have everything there except—

An hon. Member: Government co-operation.

Mr. Wright: Government co-operation to go ahead with these schemes and make that province a diversified one instead of a one-crop province as it is at the present time. Those are some of the things which I should like to bring to the attention of the government. I am one of those people who do not believe in hollering blue ruin. I believe we have a great country, and I think all we need is the courage to go ahead and develop it.

Mr. Roch Pinard (Chambly-Rouville): In rising to participate in this debate, it is my intention, while trying to adhere strictly to the rules of the house, to discuss some aspects of the political situation in Canada today in the light of recent developments and circumstances. Amongst the many changes which have made of the year 1948 one of the busiest and most active in the political life of Canada, an all-important event has taken place. I refer to the change in the leadership of the Liberal party during the month of August. If one recalls that our party has experienced such changes only three times since 1893, a period of fifty-five years, one is bound to admit that the event of last August is of very great significance.

It is true that a similar change has also taken place in the Progressive Conservative party, but one is not surprised if in this case the event did not attract the same attention or offer the same interest to the political observer. The reason for such indifference is easy to understand. Even to the most enthusiastic of moving picture fans the sixth or seventh marriage of a Hollywood star cannot offer much interest. Likewise, even to the most devoted, or should I say the most hardened Tory, the advent of the tenth or eleventh leader in the last forty years, to take charge of the opposition, could not but leave him quite cold, or at least very skeptical.

In the case of the Liberal party the election of our new leader, the present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) coincided with the retirement from leadership of one whom, I am sure, the history of this country will confirm as having been one of Canada's greatest servants and statesmen, the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King). The people of the country and everyone in the house were pleased to realize that our former Prime Minister had chosen to remain with us as a simple commoner in order to give the country the benefit of his long and unique experience, not only in Canadian but in world affairs. It is indeed comforting to see that the former leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Bracken), has also decided to remain with us. He too has made a great contribution, and fortunately the house will continue to benefit from his experience. Such an attitude on the part of the former leaders of our two great political groups, in deciding to remain in the service of their country in this house, offers a much better example than that which was given some time ago by another leader of a political party. I refer, of course, to the late Lord Bennett, who was Prime Minister of Canada for five long years.

The leader of the Conservative party at that time launched before the public in the 1935 election his famous slogan "Canada first", which he defended with his usual emphasis. After suffering a crushing defeat in 1935, a defeat which we all remember, he decided to leave his country of birth and origin, which had bestowed upon him such great honours, and he went overseas to England. He changed his slogan, "Canada first", into the strange declaration, "I am going home."

It is doubtful, however, whether the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) will follow such an example after he has experienced the same political adversities. Even if he decided to go back to the province of Ontario in order to become again premier of that province, it is possible that the electors would not accept his change of decision. Then the leader of the opposition would be left with the possibility of offering his services to the premier of Quebec as a friend unless, of course, the latter has then disappeared from public life.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He would not accept it.

Mr. Pinard: Or possibly, as my friend says, the offer would be refused because the Quebec premier would try to find better political advice. Let us return for a moment to that great event of last August when a new leader was chosen to take over the direction of the Liberal party. On that occasion once more the people of Canada understood the two main reasons that are behind the continued success of our political group. Those reasons are competent leadership and sound national policy. Ever since its inception, the Liberal party has indeed enjoyed competent leadership. I think everyone in the house, even my friends opposite, will agree that it is not necessary for me to demonstrate that fact. No better and more decisive proof could be brought than that of simply recalling that ever since the end of the last century, or if you prefer since the advent of Laurier in 1896, the Liberal party has been in power all the time with the exception of the decade from 1911 to 1921, and the sad period that I recalled a minute ago, from 1930 to 1935.

What better demonstration is there of the brilliant leadership which our group, and I would also say the Canadian people, have enjoyed under Laurier and the right hon. member for Glengarry? On the 7th of August last Liberals from all parts of Canada elected their new leader, the present Prime Minister of our country. Since that date the Canadian people have once more realized how fortunate indeed our group has been that there should be a man so highly distinguished, of so great ability, to carry the emblem of Liberalism and follow the path traced out by these great figures who shine in the history of our nation.

The prodigious ascension of the Prime Minister to the highest political honours is a tribute paid by the Canadian people to his sincerity, competence and ability. The fact of his choice by all Liberals throughout the whole country is also proof of the spirit of unity and good understanding which has always prevailed in our political group. This gesture in selecting once again a Canadian of French origin is another recognition by Liberals of the fundamental principle of equality of the two major races of the nation. It is one of the numerous reasons which justify the contentions of our group, that it really represents the aspirations, ideals and thoughts of everybody in Canada, and justify its claim to being a truly national party.

But, Mr. Speaker, I said a moment ago that not only good leadership but also a sound national policy throughout has been one of the reasons for the continued achievement of our political group in the past. A great French statesman once said that politics should be a fight for ideas rather than a struggle of intrigues. Unless a party is willing to base its political actions on intangible principles; unless it chooses to remain faithful to a living doctrine; unless it devotes all its energies to the defence of national ideas; it cannot survive.

It is true that other groups have been formed, even in our country, which preferred to count on opportunism or on trying to achieve power by making appeals to the weaker instincts of the masses; or who in their bid for office have resorted to promises or flattery; but inevitably such groups, after agitating public opinion for a while, have had or will have to crumble and disappear under public contempt. Ever since its origin the Liberal party has been faithful to its principles and doctrines, and has tried successfully to adapt its course of action to the continuing and changing needs of our time. Many definitions have been given by our party leaders of such principles and doctrines. All such definitions, though they may vary in terms, have expressed the same idea, for which so many Canadians in the past have been willing, and so many are still willing, to fight. Laurier, who is often referred to as the father of Canadian Liberalism, gave a sound and complete definition of Liberal principles when he stated that Liberals should pursue reforms through moderate and democratic means; that they should try to obtain an extension of the political freedom of the people, and also that they should work towards a vision of a greater independence for our people in the international community. He also admirably summed up those principles when he spoke of the superiority of Liberalism when it tries to favour, by its actions, the attainment of an easier life by a larger number.

It is through constant adaptation of such ideas to our ways of life by Liberal leaders ever since confederation that the whole legislation of our country—I refer, of course, to that legislation which is permanent, not to the transitory legislation—is imbued with Liberalism. For that reason I was pleased to realize, when reading the speech from the throne this year, that under its new Liberal leader this government intends, in carrying on its task, to apply the same principles and doctrines as they were expressed anew in the resolutions adopted by our party at its convention last August.

Under our present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and this government, we find in the speech from the throne that other reforms are proposed which after this session will form part of our legislation. The legislation thus enunciated is entirely in conformity with the principles already defined, and one has only to recall some of the measures already proposed or to be proposed to realize that they are in complete accord with the ideals of Liberalism. For instance, in order to facilitate an easier life for a greater number the government has decided to introduce legislation to modify and extend the scope of the Family Allowances Act, and legislation also will be introduced to supplement the national health program which was undertaken last year. Again, in order to give Canadians greater freedom, a measure will be introduced to establish our Supreme Court of Canada as the court of last resort for this country. No doubt it was also in pursuit of this ideal of making our country more powerful, so that it may enjoy greater influence, that a few days ago we decided to sign an agreement by which Newfoundland is to become the tenth Canadian province. In 1905 two great provinces entered confederation, at a time when another great Liberal leader was at the head of government. Now our new Liberal leader welcomes another province into our midst. To add special significance to such a great venture, on both occasions it has fallen to the lot of members representing the same historic constituency of Quebec East, two Canadians of French origin—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Louis St. Laurent—to welcome the entry of these new provinces into the Canadian confederation.

Again, following the traditions of our party and the policies advocated by former Liberal leaders, the government has expressed itself in favour of the opening of new markets and the expansion of trade. In 1911 Laurier was saying, "Our policy is advance. Our policy has been and will be to seek markets wherever markets are to be found." So I was very pleased the other day to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) express the same views, and state that this government will continue to try to secure new markets and new openings for our products throughout the world.

But, Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal party has always enjoyed competent leadership it is because it has constantly followed the same sound policies and has constantly defended the same doctrines. Thus I say that today the Liberal party enjoys the confidence of the whole people of Canada. During that time our Tory opponents have been satisfied to criticize, to make appeals based on opportunism, or to change from destructive criticism to electoral appeals. The reason for their constant failure in the last few years, however, has been their refusal to adopt a national policy which could represent the aspirations and ideals of every Canadian. It would appear from some of the policies they have advocated that their aim and intention has been to bring about a divided country instead of trying to have a united Canada. While constantly opposing the needs of one section of the country to those of another, or again while trying to antagonize one province against the others, on other occasions by their attitude they have tried to create unrest and at times even hatred between the two great races. Thus they have become in fact, even though perhaps unwillingly, the real enemies of Canadian unity. Not only in their speeches but in their writings our friends the Progressive Conservatives seem even today to have some sort of dislike or aversion for the words "Canadian unity." You may look through the declaration of policy that party adopted last October, and in the whole twenty-three pages of what I would call the Tory tale of promises to the people you will not find one word about unity. This pamphlet contains almost everything as far as offers to the people are concerned except an undertaking to work with the people to bring about unity in Canada. Yet after the recent by-election in Nicolet-Yamaska the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) interpreted the result as an expression of gratitude by the people of that riding for the great work accomplished by the Progressive Conservative party in the direction of Canadian unity.

After that election we saw in the press that we Liberals who had participated in the campaign were accused of having raised religious or racial cries on various occasions.

I am asking you, Mr. Speaker: Who has in fact raised such an appeal? Is it the members on this side of the house who have constantly worked to establish unity, tolerance and better understanding between the races of this country? Is it the Liberal governments under Laurier and Fielding or is it the government led for so long a time by the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King) and his former colleague Ernest Lapointe, or is it this present government which has raised religious or race cries in this house? On no occasion have you heard that, Mr. Speaker. I would refer hon. members to some words that were used in this very house by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) on January 31 of this year, as reported at page 89 of Hansard:

> We have always been able to put forward the same policy and to make the same appeal in both languages. There has never been a Liberal government since confederation which has not recognized at all times in its ranks the principle upon which this nation was really founded, the principle of the partnership of the two races. Our party is the only one which has been able to have leaders from both races; and our party has always practised the precept of unity—which is desired I think by most Canadians.

A little further on he added:

> We also stand for national unity, unity based upon the fundamental equality of all Canadians whatever their race or wherever their province.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the leader of the opposition should not be called the real enemy of national unity or whether it should not be he rather than we who should be accused of raising religious or racial cries, in view of the declarations that the leader of the opposition himself has made on many occasions in the past—and I quote his own words as they were reported on one occasion:

> Are we going to permit one isolationist province to dominate the destiny of a divided Canada? I hope that each one of you will answer with a resounding "no" which will be heard in every part of the province of Quebec.

This was said by the leader of the opposition on the occasion of the discussion concerning family allowances; and I could cite many of these expressions by the leader of the opposition along the same lines. For instance, if we are accused of raising the religious cry, I would refer this house to a declaration that was made by the leader of the opposition at one time in his own province. He said this, and I quote his own words:

> If the Roman Catholics say they are going to bring their faith into the political scene by organizing as a political party, then I say "the war is on." If they do, they are starting something that may end in the abolition of the separate schools in Ontario. If it appears that the Roman Catholics have decided to operate as a political group—

Which has never been the case, by the way, and the hon. gentleman knows it only too well.

> —then the contract of 1867 is forfeited and I will be ready to fight to the last ditch.

Those were some of the appeals made by the leader of the opposition. I am surprised to find that today we are the ones who are being accused of raising religious and racial cries. It has never been done by the Liberal party. Nobody on this side of the house has ever tried to do such a thing. Because of the fact that most of the members from the province of Quebec belong to our group, it is untrue to say that the religious or race cry has been raised by anybody on this side of the house.

It is so true that the leader of the opposition has become a real enemy of Canadian unity that he did not go and participate in the election in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska.

An hon. Member: He was not obliged to.

Mr. Pinard: In fact, he was invited to stay out by the candidate of the party at the time.

Mr. Hodgson: Twenty-three leaders of the Liberal party were down there. He did not need to go down.

Mr. Pinard: I am pleased to find out that the hon. gentleman knows that. If he knows, he should have gone there. And if he had gone there with his Tory friends, I am telling him now that his friend from Nicolet-Yamaska would not be sitting in this house today.

I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that when the other day we saw the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska coming into this house arm and arm with the leader of the opposition and the Conservative member for Argenteuil (Mr. Heon), it was indeed a strange combination—an extremely sad scene, I should say.

Mr. Hodgson: You did not like it.

Mr. Pinard: We remember what he said during his campaign when he refused, in his radio addresses, to give his confidence to the one he today considers to be his own leader. But as was said at the time by some hon. members of this house—I think it was said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and also by our own Prime Minister—our Tory friends know quite well that one swallow does not make a summer. They will certainly find that out at the next general election, when it is time to go and ascertain whether the people are in favour of this government or not. They will find then, and we will find, that the government still enjoys the confidence of every province, of every race, and of the majority of the electors in this country.

Mr. L. W. Skey (Trinity): In view of the unfortunate nature of some of the remarks made by the hon. member who preceded me, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I should point out to the house now, for the sake of the record, that the leader of the opposition is not in his place and he was not present to hear what was said by the hon. member who has just spoken.

An hon. Member: He should have been.

Mr. Skey: I will not spend any more time on that matter. I should like to offer my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the motion for an address in reply. I congratulate them on making the best of what was not too good a speech from the throne. At the same time I should like to extend my personal welcome to the new members who have entered the house since we prorogued last June.

May I also add a word concerning a new constituency in Newfoundland. The name of the new constituency is Trinity-Conception. As the member for Trinity, Toronto, I shall be pleased to extend my personal welcome to a new member from another Trinity constituency as soon as that member is elected from that grand old dominion.

Before I go on with the general tenor of my remarks, which will deal with housing, I should like to refer to another unrelated matter, namely, Christie Street hospital in Toronto which has just recently been handed over to the city. It has been renamed and is now called Lambert Lodge. It is about three years ago that I first made the suggestion that, when the hospital at Sunnybrook came into full operation, perhaps the government would see fit to extend the hospital facilities in our part of the province by handing Christie Street hospital back to the city of Toronto. I am extremely pleased that, through the tenure of two ministers of veterans affairs, two prime ministers and two different mayors of Toronto, my original suggestion has survived. I am pleased that it is now a fact that the city owns Christie Street hospital and that the facilities and hospital beds, which are so greatly needed at the present time, will be available to the people not only of our city but of York county and the part of the province surrounding the city. A few days ago I was happy to participate in the ceremonies, with several members of the city council and many of the hospital staff of Christie Street and the Prime Minister, at the time the key was handed over. It was following that ceremony that the Prime Minister spoke interestingly on the housing problem in Toronto. Judging from his remarks that day, he has changed his mind considerably from the stand he took on October 28, 1947, when he was reported by the Ottawa Journal to have said that he would have no part in passing any legislation to assist subsidized housing in any way. On the latter occasion the Prime Minister said, and I quote from the Telegram of Monday, February 21:

> We feel that the proper policy for the federal government is one which is limited to extending financial assistance to individuals and corporations, whether home owners or landlords.

Because the remainder of my remarks will be devoted to housing, I do hope that the government are going to go forward in the general way outlined by the Prime Minister on that day, and that there will be the most vigorous prosecution of, and action on, the housing front in Canada that we have ever seen. I should like to see it equal in some ways the efforts put forth by industry during the war, because I think it is the most acute problem in the country.

According to the Toronto Star of Monday, February 14, the financial editor asked this question:

> What has been accomplished in meeting the demand for adequate housing (since 1945)?

His answer was:

> The simple answer to this question is "not very much." In fact, it is not unfair to say that we have failed and failed badly.

It is not amiss for me to point out at this time that, immediately following the war, the housing problems of our country were largely under the control of the federal government through the wartime powers that they had assumed. In 1945 they gave the electorate to understand that they intended to deal with the housing problem. It was not many months after that before they almost threw up their hands in despair and handed it back to the municipalities.

May I turn to another phase of this question, Mr. Speaker? In Toronto on February 13 the veterans held a meeting in Earlscourt legion hall, which was reported in the Telegram of February 14, 1949. The report reads:

> At the meeting attended by representatives from Ottawa and Queen's park as well as local housing officials, the veterans aired hundreds of cases of poor accommodation for which returned men are paying high rents, and other housing complaints.

If there is any group in this country to which this parliament and the people owe a fair deal, it is the veterans, and yet they have been those most penalized. I need only remind the house that after we rose on August 31, 1946, the Veterans Land Act was amended and the acreage provisions were raised from half an acre to something close to three acres. With that one stroke of the pen literally thousands of veterans in Canada were denied the thing that they wanted most, namely, a home, a home in which to settle themselves and their families. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) is in his seat and I am sure that he will not deny the fact that the effect of the alteration made by order in council was to stop thousands of building projects and building plans for veterans across the country. Perhaps the government could argue in this instance that the Veterans Land Act was a small-holding act, and was being used for purposes different from those intended by the government. But what it was doing, even though it might not have been used for the purpose that the government originally intended, was meeting the veteran's greatest need at that time. His greatest need was a home, and he was using the half-acre provision to get himself a home. Since then there has been practically no assistance to this group, which deserves it above all others.

My constituency is in the most crowded part of the metropolitan urban area of the city of Toronto. There we see the full effects of inadequate housing. Hardly a week goes by that I do not get a number of appeals from my constituents, asking me for help in the housing field. I think I can speak with authority when I tell you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members, that it is causing broken families. It is placing a tremendous strain on the budgets of veterans and the workingmen. With high rents and high costs for makeshift accommodation, with the number of restaurant and outside meals that have to be paid for, the crowded housing conditions are causing problems of health which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) should be aware of. In some ways it is contributing to juvenile delinquency. Recently it was reported in the press that one family was using sleeping drugs on their children in order to keep them quiet so that they would not be evicted from accommodation which they had secured after great difficulty. That is certainly bad for the children; it is seriously affecting their health and the well-being of that family. But that is not all, Mr. Speaker. It is contributing to another social and political problem. It is contributing to communism.

Yesterday I was interested when the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) spoke of communism and referred to it as "organized desperation." I do not think that that is a bad description, because people get to the point in this housing problem where they say to one another: "Things could not be much worse for us. We are ready to try anything." That sort of thing is true not only in my city but also in Montreal. I am sure that it is true in Vancouver and from coast to coast.

May I give you some insight into that, Mr. Speaker. When we had a provincial election in Ontario last year, in my constituency the returning officer looked for polling stations. In some parts of the constituency he found that there was no place in which to place a poll for the people to vote, because the people in those sections were sleeping in shifts. They were on the twenty-four hour shift, and every bit of accommodation was being used in these parts of Trinity-Bracondale.

Now where is the individual to find any help with these problems? He has not received it from the federal government up to the present time, because, just when the young men and the young women need most to save, they find themselves subjected to taxation which can be described as extortionate or confiscatory, and they cannot put aside anything with which to pay for a new house or to provide any part of the cost of a house under the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation plans. Not only has this taxation been imposed on his or her savings or earnings, but the government's financial policy has led to a cut in the purchasing power of the dollar which amounts to 50 per cent over 1939. In 1939 the Canadian dollar would buy 65 cents worth of goods, using the year 1901 as a base. Now, on the same basis of comparison, in October of 1948 the dollar would buy only 32 cents worth of goods. I have here a table showing the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. It has been prepared by the very reliable firm of George A. Touche and Company, the auditors for the Canadian National Railways. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and with the permission of the house I should like to place this table on Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to put this document on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Skey: The table is as follows:

Since at the moment I am directing my remarks to the government I think I could not do better than to read what they said in 1945 when they appealed to the Canadian electorate. Plank No. 12 in the Liberal platform of 1945 stated:

The Liberal government will gradually reduce taxation, now the European war is over. Taxes will come down to free spending power and to give Canadians every opportunity for prosperity, employment and freedom.

That was a fine plank all hon. members will admit. My only wish is that they had stuck to it; because now we have a Minister of Finance who talks about "draining off purchasing power" and who regrets that he cannot "allow private spending to increase." All these things are happening today, while this very creditable promise is forgotten.

Up to this point I have tried to set forth the general problem of housing. I should like now to go a step further and refer hon. members to a document prepared by the community planning association of Canada. This document is entitled What is Government Doing About Housing? The covering letter is signed by Mr. Alan H. Armstrong and is dated January 1, 1949. I believe the house will admit, therefore, that it is up to date.

The federal government, which had the full control of this problem at the end of the war, saw fit to hand it back to the municipalities. However, the municipalities were not equipped to deal with it as completely as I know they would have wished to. What was the result? The result was that—if I may use the word—the two most urbanized provinces of Ontario and Quebec have been driven into the field of housing legislation.

At page 9 of this pamphlet mention is made of provincial housing legislation in Quebec. It is pointed out that the Quebec legislature has had to pass four separate bills, the first of which was to provide a commission of inquiry; the second to empower private employers to make loans to men in their industries in order that they may build homes for themselves; the third to help municipalities by permitting them to provide free lots and free local improvements, half rate taxation and other concessions; and the fourth was a bill sanctioning thirty-year loans by credit unions and lending institutions up to 100 per cent of the appraised value of low-cost homes, and to provide for payment by the provinces of any interest above two per cent on such loans.

That is what the province of Quebec has been forced to do in this problem. I turn now to page 17 of the pamphlet which deals with the province of Ontario. We find that Ontario, too, has had to go into this field. I know the house is aware that Ontario is providing additional credits for those who build houses under the National Housing Act to the extent of $1,000 per unit. They have also special conditions for veterans. This pamphlet reports that Ontario has been forced to guarantee municipally sponsored rehousing schemes up to a limit of $15 million. The province will grant $300 per lot to veterans housing programs; and the province will guarantee building development corporations up to $2 million. Loans on 10,000 dwelling units will be guaranteed up to an aggregate sum of $10 million.

Here we have the provincial governments wrestling with a problem in connection with which it seems to me they have practically no help from the federal government, up to the present time. I am sure British Columbia is having the same problem but I have no information on that province at hand. However I make the statement because I do not want hon. members to think I am speaking only as a Toronto urban member, because I know the problem is one which extends from coast to coast.

When the Progressive Conservative party met in national convention in October last we recognized this situation as an emergency. In our platform we wrote several planks on the subject, one making provision for the extension of the National Housing Act, the second making provision for an extensive research by the government on buildings costs, and the final one a recommendation of dominion-provincial-municipal co-operation in tackling the problem. I believe there is no one in the house today who does not realize that all three levels of government are involved.

When a national highway became a political issue, the federal government was quick enough in calling a conference of the provincial premiers to discuss this worth-while project, one which I favour, but one which in my opinion is not nearly as important in our national life as is the housing problem in the cities of Canada. I should like to see the federal government call a housing conference and back to the limit its Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) at such a conference, giving him power to negotiate with the provinces and municipalities in order to find a solution—not just to produce a nice draft of what can or cannot be done. I should like to see this problem really tackled, so that Regent park would not be the only housing project in Canada that has been developed as a co-operative venture by the dominion, the province and the municipality. We are proud that the city council of Toronto have carried out the Regent park development, the only one of its kind in Canada. But it is a shame that it is the only one; it is a shame that this type of co-operation has not been extended to other communities, as well as in our own, in an endeavour to deal with this urgent national problem.

I have completed my remarks except to say that I hope the new minister of reconstruction will succeed. I hope he will be permitted to meet with the provinces and the municipalities in a conference of the type I have described. There is no doubt that he understands the problem because he said so in Toronto when he spoke there on February 22. But he must do more than understand it; he must fight it and beat it. I hope the government will put its full financial strength behind his department and that we will make the same rapid progress in this field that we were able to make when we turned out munitions of war during a time when we faced a national crisis.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Gingues (Sherbrooke): Allow me to join those who have already spoken in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, which is now under discussion. The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), who is already an old hand in parliament, displayed much talent in moving the address, and the new member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers) showed that his constituents have selected as their representative a man of worth, a man who will surely succeed in Canadian politics.

I also wish to join those who believe as I do that the best parliamentary system is the two-party system and congratulate the new leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). Although I do not share his views, I hope that he will hold that office longer than his predecessors.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to speak on behalf of the people who live in that beautiful Quebec district which is called the eastern townships, to congratulate one of our fellow citizens on his success and to thank him for the great honour he is bringing to our wonderful region.

I should like more especially to tell you, Mr. Prime Minister, on behalf of the Borromeans, that is the former pupils of St. Charles Seminary, that the professors, the former students and all the pupils of the seminary have been proud of you at each stage of your brilliant career as a lawyer and as a statesman. But on the day when you were sworn in as Prime Minister of Canada, the rejoicing was complete "on the top of the high hill"; the joy was ecstatic; your alma mater was jubilant.

All those who know your old seminary will easily understand that. To all those from other parts of the country who do not know it, I must say that you were a bright student, always getting the highest honours in your class, and that since you left St. Charles, you have been the model of all Borromeans. As the Bishop of Sherbrooke said one day, and I quote:

> Your conduct has made of you an example to follow, a model to imitate, and all this because of the integrity of your life, of your frankness, of your fondness for truth.

The eastern townships, your seminary and Sherbrooke are proud of you. You can rely on our support. We know you and we like your frankness. Politics needs men like you.

Mr. Speaker, in 1945, a federal-provincial conference was held in Ottawa during which the federal government made certain proposals to the provinces. Unfortunately for the aged, the sick and the invalid, unfortunately for the economic future of the country, the two wealthiest provinces refused to co-operate and, in the case of Quebec, counter-proposals were not even submitted. Since then, the government is being branded as a centralizing power, as the enemy of the provinces.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, if we consider the generous way in which the federal government have contributed to social security, assistance to the young, and through many other pieces of legislation, we must recognize the fact that the central government have only performed those functions which are assigned to them in the constitution, and that they never attempted to encroach upon provincial rights.

I sometimes wonder why the provincial government has not yet called a provincial-municipal conference. The time has come for provincial authorities to invite the mayors to discuss municipal finances. The provincial government should restore their autonomy to the cities and towns of Quebec.

Recently, the cities of the eastern townships attempted, one after the other, to introduce a bill in the Quebec legislature in order to obtain the power to amend their charter and levy a 2 per cent sales tax. They were compelled, however, to withdraw the measure on account of the protests from their citizens. They will have to solve their financial problems in some other way. The 2 per cent sales tax levied by the provincial government in the city of Sherbrooke yields about $300,000 per year.

Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that if a provincial-municipal conference were called where the Quebec government would offer to share this revenue with the cities, the latter would be able to meet their present obligations and plan for their future development?

The same applies to the tax on gasoline, which brings in good money, half of which is paid by city dwellers. Since cities must undertake the building and upkeep of their streets, do you not think that the provincial government infringes upon municipal autonomy in refusing to share this revenue with them?

Those who loudly clamour for autonomy should, to my mind, start by having regard for the autonomy of the government closest to the people, the municipal government. We know our cities are hard put to it to balance their budgets, that they cannot further increase the real estate levy and are duty bound to pay adequate wages to their employees.

How can they be expected to carry out all their responsibilities if the provincial government keeps on draining the sources of income at their disposal? I suggest that the municipalities demand a conference with the provincial government. We shall then see which government most encroaches on the autonomy of others.

Such a conference would also compel realization of the fact that, in our country, all governments—federal, provincial and municipal—must co-operate. This co-operation, on the part of every government, is indispensable if the true interest of the country is to be served. That is, after all, in the interests of every Canadian.

The federal government, it seems to me, has been, up to now, worthy of its responsibilities. However I feel it to be its duty today to alleviate the burden of taxation which the Canadian people have borne with so much courage. Speaking for my constituents, I request the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to increase the income tax exemptions so as to raise the morale of our people, inspire confidence in the future and bring about those undertakings upon which depends the future development of our great country.

It must not be forgotten that a disheartened people is a people whose collective will may obey any impulse and may accept any belief, even communism, whilst a people whose morale is excellent pays no attention whatever to any dangerous ideology, because such a people is confident and is constantly striving to better its position without fearing that its efforts will be futile.

If the Minister of Finance should object that he will have to find other revenue sources, I would strongly advise him to find them and to rid our people of this disheartening method of taxation, the income tax.

We could, for example, levy a higher tax on alcoholic beverages and luxury goods in general. We could even organize a national lottery and place it under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department which, I am sure, could sell national lottery tickets as easily as it sells money orders. Such a source of revenue alone would permit the Minister of Finance to exempt from income tax hundreds of thousands of Canadians, freeing them from all the red tape of the Department of National Revenue, and the government would still be in a position to meet the requirements of its social legislation and the national debt.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Income Tax Act is a demoralizing measure and I wonder whether the time has not come to look for something better. Those who direct the taxation policy of the government should ponder and endeavour to obtain revenues by other means.

Any word liable to demoralize another person is an evil word and should never be uttered. Likewise and with greater reason, any law which tends to demoralize a people is an evil law and deserves to be suppressed.

The people are aware that they must pay taxes and are ready to do so. They know the government needs revenue but they hate the present taxation methods. Let us find other methods such as I just mentioned. I have already taken the liberty of writing to the ministers concerned to suggest certain methods. I hope they have studied them and that the next budget will bring forth these reforms. The people will be satisfied, their spirits will be better and they will face the future with confidence.

And now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all that it has done to promote the building of houses, I would like the government to improve the National Housing Act. We all know that this act is nearly perfect. If it has not produced the expected results, it is only because of the high cost of building.

The cost of building, however, is about to become stabilized and the government should, in order to make the National Housing Act more complete, absorb part of the interest. At present, a worker is unable to build a house for less than $6,000 to $7,000. The interest on $6,000, at 4½ per cent, amounts to $270 per annum. In other words, on $6,000 the interest alone would amount to $22.50 a month.

In addition, the Sherbrooke property and school taxes amount to $125 per year. If we add insurance and upkeep, the rent comes to approximately $40 per month.

A labourer will be unable to keep his home if he has to build under such conditions. However, it would be much easier for him to purchase a house and keep it if the government absorbed the difference between 4½ per cent and 2 per cent, because there his rent would only amount to some $30 per month.

I therefore urge the government to look into the matter carefully and follow my advice. I am convinced that it is the only way to help thousands of Canadians who wish to buy a house. Being property-owners they will be better Canadians.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I deal with various matters of particular concern to the constituency I have the honour of representing. A Sherbrooke industry employing some 500 workers, male and female, prospered during the first great war. Right after the 1918 armistice, however, hundreds of glove workers were dismissed and had to look for employment elsewhere. Not only did the industry lose thousands of dollars, but these workers, who had spent many years acquiring the precision which is essential for glove making, were left at loose ends. Glove imports from Czechoslovakia and western Germany were the cause of the trouble.

Remembering this experience, I felt it my duty, as early as 1942, to bring to the attention of the government the importance of this industry to the city of Sherbrooke and to the country at large. At the time the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) visited the present industries—the Julius Kayser and the Austin Gloves plants. We then supplied the Department of Trade and Commerce with all the information required in order that the government might protect, after the war, an industry that had contributed its share from the economic viewpoint and had given some five hundred local workers steady employment. Unfortunately, I am afraid that imports from certain European countries will again help to nullify the efforts of hardy Canadians who invested rather substantial amounts, only to find that their efforts were useless and that they had better turn to other industries.

Canadian manufacturers are not seeking any favours, Mr. Speaker. All they want is honest and loyal competition.

However, that is not possible with European countries, since the glove-making industry on that continent does not operate the same as it does here. Over there, it is a family industry. A man will cut the parts necessary to make hundreds of gloves a day and will then distribute them in homes where members of the families will sew them up, at ridiculous wages. Here, our manufacturers must own huge plants, install therein costly equipment, pay good wages and ensure good working conditions. All this compels them to sell their goods at a higher price than imported goods, in spite of the duties imposed by Canada. This importation, it seems to me, is getting unjust and disloyal. There is still time however, and I today request the government to take every available means to protect the industry and to keep these 500 workers employed. The government can, I think, through conferences with the interested countries, arrive at an agreement which will keep this industry in our midst so that it may continue to progress and to make of Sherbrooke the "cradle of the glove-making industry in Canada."

I read in the newspapers a while ago that a group of Esthonian immigrants were to come to Sherbrooke to work for the Dominion Textile Company. These immigrants were technicians, which would enable the company to take on two Canadian workers for each immigrant it would employ. I hear, Mr. Speaker, that these immigrants are here and that the Dominion Textile Company has taken on six Canadian workers for each one of the Esthonian experts. If it is true, it is not so bad then. But they say that the wives and daughters of these foreigners are employed in other industries. If that be true, it is intolerable because we already have here men and women who are looking for work. I read also in the newspapers that the city council of Sherbrooke had allowed that company to accommodate these people in the former military camp "Lord Sherbrooke."

I shall put some questions on the order paper in order that my constituents may get the necessary information on that subject. If I mention it in this house, it is that I want to disengage myself from any responsibility as far as the arrival of these immigrants is concerned. The answers I shall get will show that I had nothing to do, directly or indirectly, with the coming of these immigrants to Sherbrooke.

I am not against selected immigration but I do not believe that the government should grant entry permits to Canada to anyone while there is unemployment in Canada. I trust that before taking action in the future the authorities of the Department of Mines and Resources and of the Labour Department will refer to the member for Sherbrooke.

The member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon) said the other day during the course of this discussion that he was afraid that the taxes might lead to revolution. As I said a while ago, I want a reduction of income taxes but I believe that the attitude of the present premier of Quebec (Mr. Duplessis), that dictator, towards organized labour could lead to revolution more than the taxes could.

I was very much amazed to learn that Mr. Picard, chairman of the Catholic Federation of Labour, had been called a "saboteur". I know Mr. Picard and several leaders and chaplains of the Catholic Syndicates. I am well acquainted with their patience and tolerance and with the contribution they have made for the betterment of the position of the Quebec workers and I know that they do not deserve to be called "saboteurs". When a man, speaking on behalf of his government, describes in such terms people who are so honest and so anxious to preserve the good relations which must exist between capital and labour, he simply does so, in my opinion, in order to destroy the labour organization, and I say that he acts as the No. 1 organizer of the communist party. Yes, Mr. Speaker, when the labouring classes have lost confidence in their present leaders, they will choose others, and you know which ones they will select. Our province and the whole country will then see the masses turn to plain socialism, which in my opinion is communism's spring-board. The one responsible for that situation will be the man who, through his dictatorial attitude, will have succeeded in destroying the confidence the workers had in their leaders. This is no time for dictatorship; in this period of readjustment the workers need first the confidence of their leaders and especially the honest and sincere leadership of a government having all the autonomy required for the protection of their rights.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am myself a worker, more than anyone else in this house. I know by experience the countless difficulties we had to overcome during the last twenty-five years in order to defend the legitimate rights of workers. The Canadian and Quebec worker enjoys today conditions better than those I have known myself scarcely a decade ago.

That is due to the Liberal governments which have always given fair play to the working class, both by placing social laws on our statute books and by enacting measures enabling workers to discuss on equal footing with their employers. Mr. Speaker, the saboteur is not Mr. Gerard Picard, president of the C.T.C.C.; it is the dictator of Quebec, who sabotages the Liberal legislation protecting our workers.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken part in many struggles during the past twenty years, but never have I witnessed an election such as that of July 28 last in my province. When I went actively into politics, I laid down a policy for my organizers in the matter of electoral manners. This policy was complied with and I am convinced I have improved electoral methods in my constituency.

Personally I have always believed and I still believe that candidates must appeal to the electors' intelligence. That is what I did. However, those who took part in last summer's election know that some people do not hesitate to resort to all sorts of means to corrupt and buy human consciences. I wonder if those methods will not lead us quicker than anything else to the revolution which the member for Chicoutimi seems to fear.

In my opinion, the methods used during the latest provincial electoral campaigns are far more dangerous than taxes to stir up indignation. The people of my province are now crying over their mistake of July 28.

In conclusion, may I say that although the present government is not perfect, taking its administration as a whole it has faithfully fulfilled its mandate.

Today, under our new leader, we may rightly feel confident, for, as I pointed out earlier, he is a man who loves frankness and truth. With him, we know where we come from and where we head for.

I am satisfied with the way of frankness and truth. I shall fully support my leader and begin by casting my vote in his favour when the motion for the address in reply to the speech from the throne is put before the house.

On motion of Mr. Weir the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 3, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

IMMIGRATION—COURTESIES EXTENDED TO PERSONS FROM BELFAST

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. MacKinnon) for extending courtesy to my two fellow Irishmen from Belfast for one year. He thinks it will take a year for them to make good. They will make good long before the year is up, and again we thank him.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): On the same question of privilege, I wish to join the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) in what he has said, and to extend my thanks to the Minister of Mines and Resources. It is well known that the Irish are a peaceful race and likely to make good.

INCOME TAX—REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO QUESTION ON MARCH 2

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that yesterday the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) indicated that a question standing on the order paper in my name had been answered. The question, and the answer, so far as it was given, are to be found at page 1059 of Hansard. The question was as follows:

At January 1, 1949, on how many income tax returns, by years and by district offices, had assessment not been made?

The answer gives information as to four years individually, 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948, but as to earlier years, it gives in one sum the figures for 1917 to 1944 inclusive. That is not an answer to my question. I ask the minister to see that the information which was asked for is given. The numerous non-assessed returns, totaling about 43,000 from 1917 to 1944, should be broken down by years.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN VANCOUVER—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON FEBRUARY 18

Mr. Rodney Young (Vancouver Centre): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that as reported in Hansard on February 18, I attributed to Mr. Hugh Allan of Vancouver, a statement that there might be serious riots and disturbances in that city in event of unemployment continuing. In order that no injustice may be done to anyone, I should like to read the actual statement of Mr. Allan. It is as follows:

Mr. Allan pointed out that the agencies are able to obtain firsthand knowledge of the suffering and distress which is caused by this situation, while others feel that if the situation is allowed to develop and get out of control, riots or other disturbances may possibly occur.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INCOME TAX—RURAL TELEPHONE COMPANIES

Mr. Burton:

1. Do rural telephone companies organized on a non-profit basis have to complete income tax returns?

2. If so, for what reason?

Mr. McCann:

1. Yes.

2. Sections 33(1) and 35(2) of the Income War Tax Act and section 40(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act require all corporations to file returns. It should be noted that in order to qualify for the exemption, a company must not only be organized, but must be operated, on a non-profit basis.

CATTLE—COMPENSATION FOR T.B. REACTORS

Mr. Robinson (Bruce):

1. Does the Department of Agriculture pay compensation for cattle which are T.B. reactors?

2. If so, what amount do they pay?

3. What steps have been taken by the government towards raising the amount of such payments?

Mr. Gardiner: Stand.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Will the minister take another look at this question, with a view to making an early answer? The farmers of Bruce county are interested in the matter; several of them are losing heavily. The question is important, and an answer should be given.

Mr. Gardiner: The matter is receiving consideration, but the point of final decision has not yet been reached.

Mr. Speaker: Question stands.

Questions

WAR ASSETS

Mr. Moore:

1. What was the total value of government property turned over to war assets, since the end of the war?
2. What was the value of such property disposed of in Canada?
3. What other countries purchased from war assets, and what was the value of goods purchased by each country?
4. What is the value of goods still in the hands of war assets?

Mr. McIlraith: It is not possible to get the information asked for in this question. I have discussed the matter with the hon. member who asked the question, and he has agreed to drop it.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

INCOME TAX—REFUNDABLE SAVINGS

Mr. Fleming:

What amounts of compulsory savings by years (a) have been refunded; (b) are still retained by the government?

Mr. McCann:

Cheques in the following amounts have been issued as advance repayments to individuals over 65, estates and bankrupt corporations, on account of 1943, 1944, 1945 and 1946 compulsory savings:

1944	1,637,505.95
1945	50,463.89
1946	4,030.55
	$5,965,317.67

The following estimated amounts of compulsory savings cheques will have been issued on or before March 31, 1949:

1944	89,350,720.64
	$318,370,941.63

(b) The following estimated amounts of compulsory savings are still being retained by the government in accordance with section 18 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940:

1944	$ 73,000,000
1945	71,000,000
1946	17,600,000
	$ 161,600,000

IMMIGRATION—JAPANESE

Mr. Green:

1. Are persons of the Japanese race being permitted to enter Canada from Japan?
2. If so, what group, or groups of such persons are given permission to enter Canada?

Mr. Maybank: Readmission or admission into Canada of persons of Japanese origin is granted only to those who fall within the following categories:

(a) Those whose claim to Canadian citizenship is established and who are admissible to Canada as a matter of right under the Immigration Act;

(b) Those who have established that they possess Canadian domicile and who are admissible as returning residents;

(c) Those who wish to enter Canada for temporary and approved purposes.

The total number involved is very small. Persons readmissible under the law are required to produce acceptable evidence of their right to readmission. Temporary admissions are restricted to students and delegates to approved conferences whose admission would be of assistance in the democratic re-education of Japan and whose visits abroad are approved by supreme commander allied powers.

INCOME TAX—REFUNDABLE PAYMENTS

Mr. Bradshaw:

1. On what basis are refundable income tax payments to be made during the fiscal year ending March 31 next, and what amount of such payments will be made during the said current year?
2. For what year or years is refundable excess profits taxes owing to corporations being repaid during the said fiscal year?
3. What is the total amount of such payments and in respect to what year or years is it being repaid?

Mr. McCann:

1. Cheques for the 1943 and 1944 refundable portion of income tax for individuals have been issued in an estimated amount of $250,570,941 and will be distributed by March 31, 1949.

2. 1943.

3. The 1943 excess profits tax, corporation refundable portion, is due and payable by March 31, 1949. Until assessments are complete, no accurate figure is available but it is estimated that the total will be approximately $65 million. In addition, there is an estimated amount of $2,800,000 payable to individuals on account of excess profits tax refundable portion.

NATIONAL HEALTH—FEDERAL GRANTS

Mr. Coldwell:

1. What percentage of the health grants available has been approved for expenditure in each of the provinces for each of the types of grants?
2. How much money has the dominion given to each of the provinces for each of the types of health grants to date?
3. What percentage of the health grants available has been given by the dominion to each of the provinces for each of the health grants to date?

Mr. Martin:

1. See table 1 on page 1087.
2. See table 2 on page 1088.
3. See table 3 on page 1089.

VETERANS LAND ACT—PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Mr. Jutras:

How many veterans have been established as full time farmers under the V.L.A. in (a) Manitoba; (b) Saskatchewan; (c) Alberta; (d) the federal constituency of Provencher?

Mr. Gregg: Return at January 31, 1949, of number of cases where financial assistance for full-time farming has been approved under the Veterans Land Act: (a) 3,254; (b) 6,125; (c) 5,741; (d) in the subdistrict of Winnipeg, 1,307. Records under the Veterans Land Act are not maintained according to constituencies.

The answer is complete, with the exception of paragraph (d). We do not maintain a record of constituencies as such.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ST. MARY-MILK RIVER DAM

Mr. Wylie:

1. What has been the cost to date of the construction of the St. Mary-Milk river dam?

2. What was the cost of the diversion tunnel?

3. What was the contract price of irrigation tunnel?

4. What are the names of the firms or individuals who submitted tenders or bids and the amounts of each tender or bid on (a) the dam; (b) the diversion tunnel; (c) the irrigation tunnel?

VALCARTIER ARSENAL—PERSONNEL

Mr. Lennard:

1. Who are the personnel employed at the arsenal at Valcartier?

2. What are their positions?

3. How many of them have had overseas service?

Mr. McIlraith: Return tabled.

ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN NATURAL RESOURCES—COMPENSATION FOR LANDS

Mr. Dechene:

1. What amount of money was paid to each of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan in lieu of lands and natural resources from the year 1905 to 1930 inclusive?

2. What amount of money was agreed upon by the said provinces and the federal government as further compensation for lands alienated when the natural resources were transferred to them?

3. Did the administration of these natural resources for these provinces for the years as above result in a profit or a deficit to the federal government?

FLAX

1. How many bushels of flax were grown in Canada during the calendar year 1948?

2. How much of such flax has been sold for consumption in Canada or to purchasers abroad?

[Mr. Martin.]

3. How much of such flax now remains unsold in Canada?

4. Was the flax grown in 1948 subject to a floor price? If so, what was the floor price?

5. How much of the 1948 flax crop was purchased by the government or by a government agency at a floor price, and how much of the flax so purchased still remains in the government's or a government agency's hands?

VETERANS LAND ACT—ALBERTA—BOWNESS PROJECT NEAR CALGARY

Mr. Smith (Calgary West):

With respect to the Bowness project, under Veterans Land Act, near the city of Calgary, Alberta:

1. Were any negotiations entered into by the director or his agents prior to the building of the Bowness project to come to any agreement with the tax authorities to obtain a maximum of $60 per year for this project?

2. Did the director or any of his agents have any knowledge of what the taxes might be at the time the veterans were being moved to this project and, if so, what was that knowledge?

3. Is this project an "exceptional case"? (Under the V.L.A. 1942 revised 1944, it states "only in exceptional cases will settlement be approved on less than an acre and with exposure to property taxes in excess of $60 per year".)

4. Were any veterans refused purchase of privately owned property because such property was taxed at more than $60 per year? If so, where?

5. Was it known by the director or his agents at the time of building that the water system would be subject to taxation?

6. What was the full cost of the water system on this project?

7. Was the water system taken over from the contractor when it was known to be in very poor condition with excessive line loss?

8. What will it cost to put the water lines in good condition and will this expenditure be authorized?

9. Was the property on which the Bowness project was built at any time condemned or considered unsuitable for the site of such a project?

10. Were any other sites suggested as more suitable at this time?

11. What was the original number of houses intended for this project?

12. What was the original price per housing unit quoted to the purchasers?

13. What was the original price per housing unit quoted to the director?

14. Was the price per housing unit increased above the figure quoted to the director? If so, by how much?

15. Was the price per housing unit increased above the figure quoted to the purchasers? If so, by how much?

16. Is the director aware of the condition of these houses both inside and out? If so, what conditions did he find?

17. Were the septic tanks left far out of the ground, and in some cases built in front of basement windows?

18. Does this conform with the specifications supplied the contractor by the director?

19. If not, was the contractor allowed to continue to install equipment in this manner?

20. Will all drainage systems be properly installed so as to give trouble-free service for the usual time considered fair for proper installation?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REFERENCE TO PROGRAM "AFTER-BREAKFAST BREAKDOWN"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas G. Ross (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister aware of that program of meaningless ravings and tripe, couched in the poorest possible illiterate English, an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian people, which is being broadcast—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ross (St. Paul's): —which is being broadcast—

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the hon. member that the purpose of asking a question is not to make a statement or to give information to the house; it is to get information.

Mr. Ross (St. Paul's): Does the minister know that that broadcast over the C.B.C., "After-Breakfast Breakdown," by Max Ferguson, known as "Rawhide", is taking the place of "Musical March Past" in the morning from eight-thirty to nine? What does the minister intend to do about it? Does the minister think this broadcast is up to the standards of the C.B.C.?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am aware there has been a change in the program, although I do not know that I have listened to it personally. I am not in a position to compare it with the program which it has replaced. It is a matter of individual judgment.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—BASIS OF COMPUTATION—BASIC HERDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Will he be in a position in the immediate future to make a statement as to the outcome of the conference with representatives of the western beef producers respecting the basic herd? Can he say now whether the outstanding questions have been settled to the satisfaction of the beef producers?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Yes; a statement will be made shortly in the form of a directive from the department with reference to basic herds. As to the second part of the question, I would say that the points at issue were fairly well resolved as a result of the conference.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—RADIO BROADCASTING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): In view of the Canadian Press dispatch of today to the effect that the Minister of National Revenue will shortly announce a government plan to make a loan to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to permit the inauguration of television broadcasts, two at Montreal and one at Toronto, will the minister make his statement now, or will he outline government policy in the matter?

Will the minister also tell the house when the government will take steps to set up a special committee of the house on radio broadcasting, which has already been asked for during this session on three occasions?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): The matter of policy with reference to television is still under consideration, and in due course will be announced by the government.

The committee on radio broadcasting will be set up in due course—which will be before very long, when hon. members are prepared to proceed with that work.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REMOVAL OF EMPLOYEES FROM WINNIPEG TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask one more question about the proposed removal of Trans-Canada Air Lines employees from Winnipeg to Montreal. In view of repeated representations, including a resolution passed unanimously by the Manitoba legislature two days ago, calling for reconsideration and abandonment of the proposed removal of a large group of Trans-Canada Air Lines employees from Winnipeg to Montreal, is it not possible for this removal to be deferred until the matter can be brought before the parliamentary committee on railways and shipping owned and operated by the government?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have said on two or three occasions that the move is a matter of internal management in which as minister responsible I do not intend to interfere. I remember distinctly reading a published statement by Mr. McGregor in which he said the move would not take place until October, 1949. That being so, I hope we shall have a committee before that time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

LAKE WINNIPEG—QUESTION AS TO SALE OF WINTER CATCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister aware of the fact that lake Winnipeg fishermen face a serious situation in not being able to sell their winter catch of fish? Will the government use the Fisheries Prices Support Act to relieve this situation so that thousands of pounds of fish will not be left to rot?

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): The hon. member was good enough to send notice of his question. I should like to tell him that the attention of the fisheries prices support board was drawn to the situation of the lake Winnipeg fishermen who, we are informed, have been unable to dispose of part of their winter catch through the normal trade channels in Winnipeg.

As the hon. member is aware, the administration of the Manitoba fisheries is a provincial matter; accordingly our information on the situation has been limited. The prices support board, however, on the first intimation of the problem sent two investigators to Manitoba to assess the situation and to provide the board with the facts of the case. This review is in progress, and until a report is forthcoming the hon. member will realize that I am not in a position to make any further statement.

BUTTER

PRESS REPORT AS TO REDUCTION OF PRICE—QUESTION OF FLOOR PRICE FOR SECOND-GRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the announcement in the Globe and Mail of today, which states that, according to a government source, the price of butter is about to crack, will the government state its policy to protect the dairy industry?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the reference in the Globe and Mail, I understand, is to some discussion they had with provincial dairy authorities, not with federal dairy authorities; therefore I am not in a position to make a statement.

In answer to the other part of the question I may say that throughout this whole year there has been a floor price under butter, which was established by this government. A contract has been entered into with Great Britain by this government for the sale of all surplus cheese. The control over fluid milk sales is under the provincial governments.

Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the government use the Agricultural Prices Support Act in order to place a floor price under second-grade butter?

Mr. Gardiner: The Agricultural Prices Support Act is available in connection with the regulations that are already there. I have stated already that there is a floor under No. 1 butter, and of course it will be lower on the other grades.

PRICES AND TRADE BOARD

DECISION OF ONTARIO SUPREME COURT IN MCGINN CASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Timmins (Parkdale): Will the Minister of Finance take the house into his confidence with respect to the McGinn case, which has been referred to before? It has to do with a wartime prices and trade board order. Will the minister inform the house whether an appeal has been or will be taken?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): The answer is that an appeal has not been taken. The judgment was a verbal judgment. The appeal related to the "just and reasonable" provisions in section 8 of the wartime prices and trade board order. A seller of nails was convicted of selling at prices that were higher than reasonable and just, having regard to the provisions of the order. He appealed on two or three grounds, including the ground that the evidence adduced did not justify the finding of the trial court. I am informed that the court of appeal maintained the appeal on that particular ground I am bringing to the attention of my colleagues the question whether an appeal should be taken, but my own personal view is that one should not be taken.

POSTAL SERVICE

CENTENARY OF DISCOVERY OF COAL AT NANAIMO, B.C.—QUESTION AS TO COMMEMORATIVE STAMP ISSUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): Will the Postmaster General consider striking a special stamp to commemorate the centenary of an event which was of tremendous importance to western Canada, namely, the discovery one hundred years ago of coal at Nanaimo?

Hon. Ernest Bertrand (Postmaster General): I will ask the hon. member's permission to read the question before giving an answer.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

SWIFT CURRENT-SIMMIE, SASK.—REDUCTION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. Bentley (Swift Current): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if it is the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to reduce the train service between Swift Current and Simmie, Saskatchewan, to one train a week, and if so, why?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I have no intention of being discourteous to the hon. gentleman, but I would point out to him that I have no responsibility in this house for the Canadian Pacific Railway; neither is that railway responsible to me for its schedules or train services. I think the hon. gentleman could get the information he wants just as quickly as I could, by writing to the offices of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If he does that and cannot get an answer, I shall be glad to communicate with them.

RED RIVER

OPENING OF ST. ANDREW'S LOCK DURING PERIOD OF HIGH WATER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fernand Viau (St. Boniface): I should like to direct two questions of an urgent nature to the Minister of Public Works. The matter I wish to discuss affects, as to floods, not only the city of St. Boniface, but the city of Winnipeg and all the surrounding farming area of the Seine, Red and Assiniboine rivers. Would he consider sending a qualified engineer from his department to review the decision of the local engineer at Winnipeg with respect to the opening of St. Andrew's lock in the province of Manitoba before the period of high water in the Red river has been reached? Second, if not, would he give to this house as early as possible a complete report of the technicalities which compel the engineers of his department to refuse the opening of St. Andrew's lock during the period of high water in the Red river?

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): I certainly will consider sending out another engineer from the department to look into that situation and see if the decision of the engineer in Winnipeg is correct. As to the second part of the question, I shall have to await the report from that engineer before making an answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED KINGDOM

DOLLAR EXCHANGE FOR PURCHASE OF UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce how much additional dollar exchange was granted by the United Kingdom government to the British West Indies for the purchase and import of United States and Canadian goods, as was indicated in the minister's statement on January 4 last?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The amount is $3 million.

RECONSTRUCTION AND SUPPLY

REFERENCE TO QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): On Monday, as reported on page 958 of Hansard, the hon. member for Vancouver South asked a question with respect to the tabling of reports of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. The Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act does not require the tabling of an annual report. The former minister reported orally to parliament from time to time, and written reports of various agencies which report to the minister have been tabled, but the tabling of an annual report on the general departmental activities is not required. If the hon. member wishes specific information with respect to the operations of this department, immediate steps will be taken upon request to provide it.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver South): I think if the minister will check up the act which originally set up the department he will find that in section 7 there is a provision requiring that the annual report be tabled. It may be that that subsection has been subsequently repealed, but I am sure it is in the original act, because I read it myself before I asked the question.

CAMP HILL HOSPITAL

QUESTION AS TO CONTRACT FOR ALTERATIONS TO ANNEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, or the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Were public tenders called for the alterations to Camp Hill hospital annex at Halifax, and if so when, and what was the contractor's price?

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Speaking to the best of my knowledge —I have not had time to look over the file— I believe tenders were called for and the contract awarded to G. M. Cape and Company. I do not know offhand the date and the amount, but I can give that information later.

HOUSING

FAIRCRAFT FLAT-ROOF HOUSES OCCUPIED BY VETERANS—QUESTION AS TO DEFECTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yesterday the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) asked a question with regard to Faircraft flat-roof houses occupied by veterans. The Veterans Land Act administration has corrected defects in a total of thirty-five Faircraft houses. There are about eight more to do.

IMMIGRATION

ORDERS IN COUNCIL LEGALIZING ENTRIES INTO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources, following the answer he gave yesterday in connection with Dr. Seigneur. Will the minister table immediately all orders in council passed since July 1, 1948 which in any way legalize the entry of persons who have come into the country illegally, or which in any way alter the provisions of the Immigration Act having to do with the qualifications of immigrants?

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): I shall see what is involved and take the question under advisement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Those orders in council should be tabled.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising to take part in this debate is to deal with certain matters affecting shipping and the shipbuilding industry; to refer at the same time to certain misconceptions which seem to be present in the minds of hon. members concerning these industries; to deal with statements that have been made by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) and the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), and, if time permits, to make reference to the statement made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) about the royal commission on transportation.

Prior to the war practically no deep-sea cargo ships were built in this country, and certainly none were being operated under the Canadian flag. We had a ship repairing industry but we had no shipbuilding industry. When I say that, I mean it in the sense that we had no shipbuilding industry engaged in the construction of deep-sea dry cargo vessels.

Twice in the last thirty-five years, as a part of our war effort, we have been called upon to build up these industries at considerable expense to the country. These industries, like many others in Canada, were the product of war necessity. The ships which we built were munitions of war. They were good ships, but they were built for a purpose, and they were built to a standard type in an emergency.

At the cessation of hostilities there were in Canada some 109 dry cargo vessels of the 10,000 ton type, and forty vessels of the 4,700 ton type. These vessels had been built in Canada. They were owned by the Canadian government and operated by the Canadian government under the Canadian flag. In addition to these 149 vessels there were 104 ships built in Canada which were lent to the United Kingdom under the mutual aid program, or chartered to the United Kingdom for operation under the United Kingdom flag to assist in the war effort of that country. That made a total of 253 ships. Twenty-six of the 104 ships have now been returned to Canada; fifty-eight more will be returned in 1950, and the balance of twenty is being retained by the United Kingdom. Of the ships owned by the government of Canada at the cessation of hostilities, eighteen were sold foreign, and twenty were retained by the United Kingdom under the mutual aid settlement. The remainder, including fifty-eight vessels yet to be returned by the British government, a total of 215 ships, were sold to Canadian operators with the proviso that they should not be transferred to foreign registry without the consent of the government.

The member for Vancouver South—and I am sorry he is not in his seat at the moment —accuses the government of lack of policy. I am delighted to see him coming into the chamber now. These ships were sold by the government to private Canadian operators, at reasonable prices, under a deliberate and carefully-outlined policy of creating a merchant fleet under the Canadian flag.

For the first two years after the sale the operation was profitable and provided good wages for Canadian seamen. Furthermore, late in 1947 an independent body, the Canadian maritime commission, was created for the very purpose of advising the government from time to time on policies relating to the maintenance of the shipping and shipbuilding industries. Shortly after its creation the commission, at the beginning of 1948, foreseeing the time when competition for cargoes would be keen and would become keener as freights declined, advised the government to adopt a replacement plan. That time has now arrived. Freight rates have declined by about twenty per cent on a general average, and world shipping today has become overtonnaged.

Even during the war years, foreign nations were planning on replacing the tonnage destroyed. Nearly three years ago they initiated a construction program which was limited only by the capacity of their yards and their ability to secure or produce steel. In the two-year period from December 31, 1946, to December 31, 1948, the United Kingdom and other traditional maritime nations added over ten million deadweight tons to their dry cargo merchant fleets. It is evident that the introduction of such a volume of tonnage, including many newer and speedier ships, must put the Canadian wartime-built fleets at a decided disadvantage in competing for available cargoes.

The statistical position is that in spite of a contracting international trade, world shipping tonnage seeking employment is now about thirty per cent greater than it was prior to the war. Up until recently the increased tonnage of the United Kingdom and other foreign nations has been absorbed into international shipping at the expense of the United States. It must be obvious that all of Canada's 215 war-built vessels cannot hope to compete under these conditions, and that owners in liner trades particularly must replace their vessels with faster and more modern craft in order to compete with foreign vessels. The government is willing to help these operators to do this, but the desire and the incentive to remain in the shipping business depend upon the operators themselves. I submit that the wisdom of the replacement plan, which is one of the means devised to assist operators in obtaining new and modern tonnage, is fully justified.

I should like to say a word in explanation of the replacement plan. If an owner, feeling the need to improve his competitive position, desires to sell a ship which he has purchased under the restrictive flag covenant, he applies to the commission for permission to do so. The commission considers all aspects of the application, including the effect of the proposed sale on Canadian trade and employment. If the commission is satisfied that the sale is in the interests of the country as a whole, it recommends to the government that permission be granted. As a condition to the sale, however, the owner must place the whole of the purchase money in escrow. If the owner still owes money to the crown on the original purchase of the ship, the commission permits him to borrow out of the escrow funds sufficient money to enable him to pay off his mortgage, but the loan must be replaced. In effect the plan creates a compulsory building reserve to secure replacement within five years from the date of sale, with a possible two-year extension.

Under the plan thus far, twenty-six vessels have been sold, twenty-one 10,000 tonners and five 4,700 tonners. These sales have been approved for transfer out of Canadian flag. The gross proceeds of the sales, amounting to $16,602,250, are being paid to escrow. The policy in this plan is to provide the Canadian merchant marine with modern fast vessels which will be able to meet foreign flag competition.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister whether the ships which have been sold have been put under foreign flags, or are they still under the Canadian flag?

Mr. Chevrier: The twenty-six ships I have reference to have been placed, or are in the process of being placed, under foreign flags. Some ships were sold months ago, and they are now operating under foreign flags. At the moment there may be one or two, perhaps five at the most, that have not been transferred.

Mr. Green: But they are to be?

Mr. Chevrier: They are to be. In my view it is far better to have fewer ships, which are capable of meeting foreign competition, and which will give steady employment to Canadian seamen, than to have a large number of ships which cannot be employed owing to their inability to compete with vessels of other flags.

The design of the plan is to see that the replacements are built in Canadian yards, thus providing work for Canadian labour, and maintaining our shipbuilding and ship repairing industry at a level that will meet our needs should we face another emergency, as we have done twice before.

I am aware that there are pressure groups in the country which seek to bar any constructive effort to build up a modern and efficient Canadian merchant navy. I am amazed that some members of the house have been misled by that propaganda.

Mr. Green: I hope the minister was not referring to me.

Mr. Chevrier: We find paid advertisements appearing in the press.

Mr. Green: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I understand that in opening his remarks the minister referred to my speech during this debate. At that moment I was out of the chamber, speaking to the Minister of Finance. Now the minister says some members have been misled by listening to pressure groups. I have asked him whether he is referring to me, and I think I should have an answer to that question because I was the only one named by the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, no. The hon. gentleman was not in the house when I began my remarks, but I said I intended to deal with his remarks and those of another hon. member, and if permitted to do so I intend to deal with those remarks within the next few minutes. But before I come to that—

Mr. Green: Were you referring to me when you made that statement?

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member will find that out in a few minutes, if he will just restrain himself.

Mr. Green: That is not fair.

Mr. Howe: What question of privilege is this?

Mr. Green: It is a question of privilege because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) said certain hon. members had been listening to pressure groups and had made misstatements as a result. I want to know whether the minister was referring to me. If so he is entirely wrong, because I made my own statement on my own investigation of the circumstances. I am sure the minister did not mean to be unfair, but in effect he has been.

Mr. Chevrier: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no question of privilege here. I made a general statement, with no reference to the hon. gentleman other than saying I intended to deal with his remarks in the course of the debate, and if I have your permission I propose to do so. Then the hon. gentleman will know whether or not I was referring to him.

It becomes more and more apparent to me, Mr. Speaker, that the type of criticism brought forward by these pressure groups is much more intended to be destructive than constructive. I was going on to say that we find paid advertisements appearing in the press to the effect that the Canadian government is sabotaging the merchant fleet. In this debate we have heard hon. members of this house talk about men being thrown out of work, indicating that men were being laid off on a wholesale basis. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) read a letter which stated that the Canadian companies were selling their ships, and that there were no more jobs. It is hardly necessary for me to point out the absurdity of this propaganda—

Mr. Green: You just said twenty-six ships have been sold to foreign registry.

Mr. Chevrier: —when I say the last report of the commission to me shows that only twenty-six ships out of a total of 215 have been approved for sale to foreign owners by the Canadian operators, as at the beginning of 1948. It therefore becomes apparent to me that this type of criticism is destructive and the replacement plan is intended to assist the seaman as well as the shipping and shipbuilding industries.

Mr. Young: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: May I be allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker? I have far more than I can deal with in forty minutes, but if I have time afterward I shall be glad to answer the hon. gentleman's question.

I submit that the replacement plan has been carefully thought out. It deserves consideration and a trial. It has been fully publicized in the press, and labour also has received full details through the union representatives.

Mr. Green: Of course no ships are being built under it yet.

Mr. Chevrier: In deciding whether owners may sell vessels abroad, due regard is had as to whether the ships can obtain profitable employment under the Canadian flag, and whether the sale would have detrimental effects upon Canada's trade. In some cases permission to sell has been refused. The replacement will proceed on a gradual and orderly basis and is not a wholesale slashing of the Canadian fleet, as some would like us to believe. Surely it is better, instead of having a ship laid up—when it rapidly deteriorates, and gives no employment to Canadian crews—to allow it to be sold and the proceeds used to secure a better ship built by Canadian labour.

This brings me to the question of how large a Canadian-flag fleet we can reasonably expect to support in this country. After the war Canada operated the fifth largest fleet in the world. As our war-built fleet did not appear on the high seas until about 1943, we were fortunate enough to escape the heavy losses suffered by the United Kingdom and our other allies. We therefore jumped from having practically no fleet at all to the position of being a major maritime power. The United States likewise built a tremendous fleet for war purposes the like of which had not been seen before. Since the war the United Kingdom, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Sweden and other countries have been rapidly replacing their war losses, since their very existence depends upon their fleets. Not only these but other countries such as South Africa, Australia, Argentina and India, who were not substantially engaged in seafaring, are now embarking upon a maritime program. The result is that at this immediate moment, as I have stated before, the world is overtonnaged.

It has been suggested that Canada should adopt restrictive practices, such as attaching conditions to her export trade. The hon. member for Vancouver South suggested that fifty per cent of our exports should be carried in Canadian bottoms. I wonder how much thought he has given to that suggestion. I wonder if he knows the difficulties and complications which have attended a similar restriction as it was put into effect in the United States. Under the conditions I have outlined, the policy as it is in operation now in the United States is hurting the trade of that country. The United States is giving away vast sums of money for the rehabilitation of Europe; and in its wisdom congress has laid down that part of the money so given must be spent in American shipping services. You may ask why Canada does not do the same thing. Canada is still straining her economy to the utmost to restore the buying power of her customers abroad. If, however, we say to the foreign buyer, "You must ship in Canadian bottoms, using scarce dollars," he will go elsewhere; and this at a time when we are anxious to sell our surplus Canadian goods. Such a policy would drive away trade rather than encourage it.

It is startling to find the hon. member for Vancouver South making this suggestion. The United Kingdom must find means of paying for our grain and timber. One such means is by way of her shipping services; but if we were to follow the hon. member's suggestion that fifty per cent of our exports to the United Kingdom must be carried in Canadian-flag bottoms it would mean that our farmers and our producers generally would have still greater difficulty in disposing of their products. It would mean that the lumberman in British Columbia would have the same difficulty in disposing of his goods. The suggestion of the hon. member involves further restrictions on British buying power in Canada. Our Canadian shipping must be the tool of trade, rather than a means of preventing trade. It is all very well for members of the opposition, who have no responsibility, to make these suggestions. As far as I am concerned I have no intention of being a party to any scheme which would prejudice the interests of Canadian producers, and of the country as a whole, in order to benefit any one group.

Another suggestion made by the hon. member is that it may be necessary "to have some provision for government subsidies." Again I wonder how much time he has spent in research on this subject. Having regard to the size of the Canadian fleet at the present time, and having regard to the number of ships that will be returned to Canada in 1950, does the hon. gentleman have any idea what it would cost per annum to subsidize a fleet on that basis? It would cost the Canadian people at least $20 million a year to put our ships on a competitive basis with other British ships, and still provide no guarantee that they would be employed.

Mr. Green: What is your policy?

Mr. Chevrier: I am giving it to you.

Mr. Green: No, you are not.

Mr. Chevrier: I say here and now that I am not prepared to ask the Canadian taxpayer for any sum of this magnitude unless there are far more cogent reasons for such expenditure than those already given. We should be foolish, Mr. Speaker, if we did not realize and take into consideration the serious obstacles which must be overcome in maintaining a Canadian-flag fleet. First, there is the high cost of building it in Canada as compared with the United Kingdom. I am not prepared to say what it is with reference to proportions, but roughly speaking the cost of building an ordinary 10,000-ton ship in the United Kingdom is approximately seventy-five per cent of the cost of building it in Canada.

Mr. Green: How does it compare with the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: Secondly, there is the high cost of Canadian operation, which exceeds the cost of British operation by forty-nine per cent. Then, there is the question of the availability of cargoes. Even if it were subsidized to the extent I have mentioned, it is very doubtful if we could keep our present merchant marine employed—

Mr. Green: What are the United States figures?

Mr. St. Laurent: Will the hon. member let the gentleman who has the floor make his speech?

Mr. Green: The Prime Minister is very good at interrupting, too.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) to abide by the rules.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to interruptions, provided I am allowed—

Mr. Green: You will not answer any questions.

Mr. St. Laurent: Is it not a rule of this house that a member must rise before addressing any remarks to the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Hon. members must realize that deep-sea shipping is an international market, at present severely restricted by the exchange difficulties of other nations. Canadian ships must earn dollars to pay their wages. The suggestion that fifty per cent of Canadian exports should be carried in Canadian ships is obviously completely unrealistic in the light of today's world trading conditions. Do not think for one minute the government is not actively concerned in seeing that the Canadian fleet is employed. Had it not been for the activities of the Canadian maritime commission last year, I think it can safely be said that a number of Canadian ships would be laid up and lying idle on account of inability to procure cargoes.

I am glad to say that at the moment no Canadian ship is permanently laid up for lack of employment. The policy of the government is that a reasonable proportion of cargoes purchased in Canada should be carried in Canadian-flag bottoms. What that reasonable proportion is, must of necessity depend upon a number of circumstances, and particularly upon the circumstances of the trade. The Canadian maritime commission is in constant negotiation with shippers and buyers on this subject. As I said before, no Canadian ship is idle at the present time, but Canadian owners must realize it is up to them to modernize their fleets. The government is prepared to assist them, but they must first show their determination to help themselves and thus help the country maintain a Canadian-flag fleet.

It is likewise up to those employed on our Canadian ships to see that Canadian ships are operated with the same skill and efficiency as the ships of other flags. I regret that in the last few years a number of minor disputes and stoppages of work have impaired the efficiency of the Canadian-flag ships, especially those engaged in liner service. If the differences between owners and labour cannot be resolved, the outlook for the future of Canadian shipping is not good.

From what I have said so far, it will be seen that there are so many factors involved that it is impossible to give an accurate estimate of the future size of the Canadian-flag fleet. It must depend upon the pattern of world trade and the ingenuity of the Canadian operator. Whatever the future may hold, the scheme of replacement as propounded by the Canadian maritime commission is a wise and constructive plan in its long-term implications. If some seamen are forced to seek other employment by reason of the operation of the plan, that is surely preferable to a situation under which the whole fleet grows gradually obsolete and can give no employment.

Let me say a word about the Canadian coastal trade. The member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) said that Canadian shipowners were selling their ships either to Great Britain or to Greece; that Canadian seamen were being beached, and that these ships were not only taking our overseas trade from us but also were operating from port to port along the Canadian coast, thereby depriving us of our coastal trade. That statement is incorrect. There is not one Canadian vessel sold foreign with government approval under the replacement plan which has been or is now operating in the Canadian coastal trade. There has been no change in our coastal laws.

In the Canada Shipping Act we find the term "British ship registered in Canada", which of course means a vessel flying the Canadian flag, a Canadian ship. Such a vessel also falls within the ambit of the expression "British ship" as used in the act, which means a vessel owned and registered in any part of the commonwealth.

A ship which is not a British ship may not transport goods or passengers from one place in Canada to another place in Canada, either directly or by way of a foreign port. Furthermore, under part 13 of the act no foreign-built British ship—that is to say, a ship registered within the commonwealth but built outside the commonwealth—is entitled to engage in the Canadian coastal trade unless she pays a duty of twenty-five per cent of her value and is thereupon licensed to engage in coastal trade. Subject to this, every ship which engages in coastal trade must be built, registered and owned in some part of the commonwealth.

The act does give the governor in council the power to suspend those provisions, but this is only done in case of emergency, in an isolated case where no British ship is available to carry the cargo. In practice what happens is that an application to use a non-British built ship is made to the customs and excise division of the Department of National Revenue. The application is referred to the Canadian maritime commission, which investigates the circumstances of the application and only recommends that permission be granted if it is urgent that the goods be carried, and if there is no Canadian or British ship available. When permission is granted to a non-British built ship, it is assessed and pays a proportionate share of the twenty-five per cent import duty, depending on the length of time of the particular voyage or voyages. An exception is made where the movement of grain from the head of the lakes to the bay ports is urgent and sufficient Canadian lake ships are not available. Then the Canadian wheat board is permitted to charter United States bottoms. The same situation exists in connection with the transportation of petroleum cargoes on the lakes, but the twenty-five per cent is still paid. Apart from the lake trade, in all the innumerable coastal voyages which took place in Canada during 1948, there were only eighteen cases in which such recommendations were made, and then only because it was in the interests of the country that the goods be moved and no suitable Canadian or British bottoms were available at the time.

These provisions were inserted in the act for the purpose of restricting the coastal trade in Canada to vessels built and owned in the commonwealth. The member for Cape Breton South, in his mistaken effort to prove that Canada was sacrificing her coastal trade to vessels of foreign flag, stated that Great Britain prohibited foreign vessels from engaging in her coastal trade, and recommended that we follow her example. He is again mistaken. There is no statutory provision in the United Kingdom which debars foreign shipping from participation in the United Kingdom coastal trade. This trade is open to the flags of all nations. There is, in fact, a considerable amount of foreign tonnage engaged in the United Kingdom coastal trade, and it will probably continue to be so engaged. Thus we see how confusing and misleading are the statements made by the members of the opposition on this subject.

Members of the opposition are undoubtedly trying to create the impression, for their own purposes, that the government is careless of the interests of shipowners and Canadian seagoing labour. Nothing could be further from the facts. To any reasonable person who knows the true situation, it is obvious that the government is doing everything in its power to maintain the industry on a sound basis and to give permanent employment to Canadian seamen.

During the course of his remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the leader of the opposition referred to the royal commission on transportation, and I should like to quote his remarks as they are reported at page 45 of Hansard:

> Royal commissions have a very useful and very important function, if they are given terms of reference which clearly define their responsibilities, and if they are given a task which can be performed in a way that will lead to some useful results. There is reference in the speech from the throne to a royal commission to deal with transportation, which at the present time is being used mainly for the purpose of diverting public attention from the fact that this government has failed to deal effectively in any way with the problem of freight rates, something which should be dealt with by the government with the information now available instead of setting up a further inquiry into this very subject.

After that statement the leader of the opposition went on at great length to deal with dominion-provincial relations and to chastise the federal government for its failure to co-operate and to consult with the provinces. Later he gave us a lecture on how he understood his duties as leader of the opposition, and told us that he intended his criticism to be constructive and not in the slightest degree destructive. Since the leader of the opposition has been in this house I have not seen much evidence of constructive criticism, but I have seen a great deal of evidence of politics.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fraser: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Graydon: When he sees it, nobody knows it better than the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say that this statement applies clearly to the references which the leader of the opposition made to the royal commission on transportation. In the first place, the leader of the opposition complains about the establishment of a royal commission on transportation, but that is exactly what the provinces wanted.

Mr. Green: Only because the government did not deal with the freight rates.

Mr. Chevrier: On at least two occasions the provincial premiers came to Ottawa and in their submissions to the federal government—

Mr. Green: Where was the minister then? Over in Europe.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: —they demanded a royal commission on freight rates. They were told that their submission would be carefully reviewed. Now that the government accedes to their request, the leader of the opposition is critical. That is his privilege, of course. But let me go on to see how constructive he has been in his criticism. In the second place he complains about the terms of reference of the royal commission. Let me say to him that the terms of reference, in almost their entirety, are the same as those submitted by the premiers of the provinces to the federal government. Here again there has been consultation with the provinces. If we consult the provinces, the leader of the opposition criticizes us. If we refuse to consult the provinces, we are accused of riding roughshod over them. I wonder when it will be possible to do anything that will meet with the approval of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of interrupting the minister's train of thought on this subject.

An hon. Member: Why are you doing it then?

Mr. Drew: I would simply point out—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the leader of the opposition that he ask the minister's permission to interrupt him.

Mr. Drew: I was assuming that the minister wished to be corrected.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; the leader of the opposition may interrupt me.

Mr. Drew: I wanted to point out to the minister that this was not a consultation with the provinces but was a request made by seven of the nine provinces. I wish no impression left that, as premier of Ontario at that time, I was a party to this recommendation or that I approved of it.

An hon. Member: You stuck your neck out.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: I will deal with that matter in a moment. But before I come to that, let me say that the hon. gentleman asked for permission to ask a question. But, faithful to his tactics since he has been in this house, he has not asked a question, but made a speech.

Mr. Drew: I rose, Mr. Speaker, to say that I expected I would be able to correct the minister. I have done so. That is exactly the purpose for which I rose.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not mind being corrected when I am in error; but when I am not in error, Mr. Speaker, I object to being corrected.

Mr. Graydon: The minister is never out of error.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Green: Why did the minister run off to Europe?

An hon. Member: Very smart.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Let me tell the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) that he is faithful to the tactics of his leader. Instead of dealing with the question at issue, he goes off at a tangent and starts to talk about something else.

Mr. Green: Why did the minister not stay here?

Mr. Cruickshank: Why did the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) not stay here for the veterans affairs committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would again call the attention of hon. members to something that should not be forgotten, namely, freedom of speech. Hon. members should abide by the rules, and the hon. member who has the floor should not be interrupted without his permission.

Mr. Chevrier: When I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was saying that when the federal government consults the provinces it is criticized by the leader of the opposition, and when it does not consult the provinces it is accused of riding roughshod over them. May I add that I can come to no other conclusion than that, if we had consulted the right province, perhaps the leader of the opposition would have had no fault to find. As a matter of fact, we consulted the premier of Nova Scotia, who had been selected by the provinces as the spokesman for them. On more than one occasion we had conversations with him, and I am sure that the leader of the opposition will have no fault to find with that action on our part.

Mr. Drew: Does the minister want to know whether I have or not?

Mr. Chevrier: I am making the statement.

Mr. Drew: And the statement does not mean anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: The leader of the opposition should be extremely careful and cautious in his statements concerning the royal commission on transportation. I say that because when he was the premier of Ontario he had the opportunity of sending counsel to the freight-rate hearings. He saw fit neither to do that nor to send counsel with a watching brief. That, of course, was his responsibility, so he will be obliged to answer for it. I say to him that should the board of transport commissioners, in their wisdom, decide to do away with the mountain differential, the result will be an accentuation of the transcontinental rate and, incidentally, an accentuation of the rates in central Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Green: Time.

Mr. Chevrier: I am almost through.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chevrier: I have just one more word to say. May I add this, that because of the interruptions at least fifteen minutes of my time have been taken. However, I was going to tell the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) that he should not be too critical of royal commissions, because when he was minister of education in Ontario he set up a royal commission known as the Hope commission—

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Chevrier: —and that commission has been in existence for three years.

Mr. Graydon: Is this debating the speech from the throne?

Mr. Chevrier: It has not reported and—

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Chevrier: —so far as I can see it looks like an everlasting Hope.

Mr. Graydon: Is that in the speech from the throne?

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West): You can't take it.

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Cruickshank: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Garson: A great sporting bunch! Sportsmen all!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has exhausted his time and, unless he has leave of the house, he cannot go on.

Mr. Low: Carry on.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order—

Mr. McGregor: No, no.

Mr. Jackman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Coldwell: On a point of order, may I say that the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) the other night was given some twenty minutes beyond his time. I should like to hear the end of the minister's speech. I should also like the minister to discuss—

Mr. Case: You will see the end soon enough.

Mr. Coldwell: Where I was brought up I was always told that the Conservative party was the gentlemen's party.

Mr. Graydon: Order.

Mr. Coldwell: I only wish these members would behave like gentlemen.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Graydon: Ask him to come across the floor.

Mr. Coldwell: I wish to ask the minister a question—

Mr. Speaker: I would impress upon hon. members the necessity for order and decorum in the house. During the four sessions I have acted as Speaker, I have succeeded, without great difficulty, in keeping order. I hope to be able to do so at this session. I would ask hon. members on both sides of the house to add dignity to our proceedings, to preserve decorum and to respect freedom of speech.

Mr. Coldwell: I rise to ask the minister a question.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I must tell some hon. members, without naming them, that I will not tolerate certain remarks which come to my ears from a certain side of the house. The next time I notice who has made such remarks against the Speaker, while I have always tried to be fair to both sides of the house I shall have only one thing left to do, something which would be most disagreeable to me, namely, to name the member or members who are doing it.

Mr. Coldwell: I rise—

Mr. Baker: We in the maritime provinces are interested in this.

Mr. Coldwell: I rise to request that the minister be given time to deal with the allegation that Canadian ships have been placed under Panamanian registry to escape fulfilment of the conditions laid down by our laws affecting seamen.

Mr. Jackman: On a point of order, when the time of an hon. member, whether he be a member of the government or not, is exhausted, and the house, through courtesy, allows him to continue, it is a well-recognized custom that the minister or member shall not indulge in pure politics.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jackman: Well, if hon. members do not like it, I for one would insist, as is my right, upon not allowing the minister to have extra time—if he is going to indulge in politics, and not going to contribute information to the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the house that the minister be given a few minutes to conclude his speech?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Since the minister has been interrupted at different times, I believe that would be fair.

Mr. Casselman: He is fifteen minutes past his time now.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): On a point of order, the standing order reads that no member shall speak for more than forty minutes. I am sure the minister did not speak for forty minutes. The leader of the opposition took up at least two or three minutes, and the cat-calls and interruptions have taken up more time. If Your Honour is to apply the rule, I would ask that the minister be given that time. He has not spoken for forty minutes.

May I make this further comment, that ever since this debate began nearly every member on the opposition side of the house has asked for time, and we have given unanimous consent.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now, if I may—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Under protest.

Mr. Chevrier: —with the statement made by the leader of the opposition at page 45 of Hansard, particularly that part which states as follows—and I am sure if hon. members will hold their patience they will see that this is not at all political. It is entirely legal, in the sense that it has to do with the act itself. I refer to the statement that at the present time the investigation "is being used mainly for the purpose of diverting public attention".

Mr. Jackman: On a point of order, may I ask for a ruling as to whether or not the minister's time has expired?

Mr. Cruickshank: Shame.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The members from the maritime provinces are very much interested in this.

Mr. Cruickshank: Let it go.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister has not unanimous consent he may not proceed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Garson: Congratulations!

[Mr. Jackman.]

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West): Now we go from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Mr. Park Manross (London): Mr. Speaker, have I the floor? I am sure hon. members who were shouting "shame" were not looking at me.

Mr. Garson: Looking at your party.

Mr. Manross: I was listening willingly to the minister, but not so willingly when he got off the ship.

After extending the usual congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply, may I say I am pleased to see so many new faces in so many new places in the house. And, speaking of these new faces in new places—and, Mr. Speaker, there is quite a commotion in the chamber; are they holding a convention over there?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Manross: Thank you. New members freshen us up; they do us good. Of course, I am sure we did better at our convention than the Liberals did—and the members opposite know, sir, that I would not be prejudiced.

Some of the terms we use in the house with respect to other places strike me as being funny. For instance, we refer to the Senate as "the other place". When I was a boy and my grandmother had occasion to admonish me she would say, "If you are not a good boy, you will go to the other place." I always imagined it was red; but I thought it was hotter. However, after looking at it, I am ready to go. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) will make a note of that.

This debate gives an hon. member an opportunity to say a few words about his own riding and I want to speak about the city of London. I should like to see the dominion government do something in the city of London to unleash our business district. This is not the fault of the dominion government. London has grown, the dominion has grown, and the departments of government have grown. The dominion government now occupies buildings which block the growth of our retail district.

If you go north from the main corner you run into the Prevost, which is the navy training station. Then there is a dominion public building and the old customs house which blocks off any more retail business on that street. When you go south you run into the subway of the Canadian National Railways. When you go east you find a whole block on the best part of the main street taken up by the armouries, and retail trade cannot go that way.

Now is the time for the dominion government to get out of some of these spots and let business take its regular course. It may be thought that I am placing a lot of emphasis upon this, but the facts are that there are 1,329 employees of the dominion government with a pay roll of $2,858,000 per year and a rentals and upkeep cost of $98,000 a year. These buildings could be sold for about $1 million at present real estate values. As a matter of fact one building just about half the size of the armouries was sold for $436,000. I called this to the attention of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) and he replied to me by letter as follows:

—the accommodation at present occupied by both the navy and army in London is not satisfactory, but it will have to be retained until alternative accommodation can be secured. A survey of available accommodation in London would indicate that it will eventually be necessary for this department to erect a new building or buildings—

And again:

—this department will implement the plans it has made.

There is vacant space at Carling Heights and Wolseley barracks at the north end of the city, and I think the government could dispose of the armouries and permit our business district to grow.

The other day the minister of national health and fanfare, or welfare, gave us quite a talk in connection with his one paragraph in the speech from the throne, the one that has to do with a national health program. Incidentally, he spoke in London the other day and said that if you want to keep healthy you should do what he does, that is to lie down for a half hour at eleven o'clock, for a half hour at one-thirty, and for a half hour at four-thirty.

An hon. Member: It is just about four-thirty now.

Mr. Manross: That is probably where he is. That is something for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) to muddle over and try to get incorporated in the labour code. Perhaps we should try it out here first. We all want to keep healthy and perhaps we should have three half-hour rests each day. But that is just in passing, because I noticed it in the paper.

Coming to a serious subject, I should like to say a few words about the blind. As hon. members know, previously in this house I have dealt with the blind. The reason I bring up this matter again is that in his speech the minister of health did not forecast the introduction of a blind-persons act. As perhaps all hon. members know, the Canadian council of the blind are sponsoring a six-point plan.

As their first point they ask that there should be a blind-persons act rather than the Old Age Pensions Act. They feel that their problems are entirely different and I agree with them. They are not old age pensioners. As point No. two they ask that the word "pension" be discarded as far as the blind are concerned. They would like to have it called a blindness allowance. It is not a pension, it is not insurance against old age, it is simply a foundation for future enterprise.

No. three in their six-point program is the elimination of the means test. There should be no means test as far as the blind are concerned.

No. four is the request for an adequate blindness allowance in relation to the cost of living. We all know what that means under present circumstances. These people cannot get along on the regular pension rates. They are asking for an increase and I think they should have it. Between the ages of 20 and 40 years many of these people are learning Braille and craftwork and it is necessary that they have an allowance so that they may be able to live the kind of independent life lived by the normal citizen.

As No. five, they ask for a reduction of the residence requirement. Under the present regulations they must have lived in this country twenty years before qualifying for an allowance. Hon. members can understand how someone might be here only five years—we are after immigrants—and he might have an accident or something might happen to his eyes. They feel that as long as a person is a Canadian citizen he should be entitled to the allowance, whether he has been here one year or twenty years.

Their sixth point, which has to do with medical or surgical treatment for blind conditions, has been pretty well conceded. Most municipalities and provincial governments are assisting in this work.

The blind are a happy people; they are fine people to get along with. They do not want sympathy; they want to be independent. But they do feel that they should have a special blind-persons act, and I agree with them. I do not know how many hon. members have seen the Canadian council of the blind magazine Outlook, which is edited by the president of the council, who lives at 174 Devonshire street in my riding. She edits this magazine in an office in her home and is one of the two blind editors in Canada. She is doing a fine job.

According to the order paper, we are supposed to be talking about the speech from the throne. As usual, there are a lot of things that were not in the speech. I have underlined one or two sentences in the speech from the throne, one being as follows:

At home we have been blessed with good crops.

That is quite fine. It is too bad that we were not blessed with a good government to sell those crops. However, that was left out. If we had had a government that had so arranged that those crops could have been sold at the right prices to increase the national income, so that the farmer got his proper share of that income, we would have been much better off, instead of having to cut down trees and throw away potatoes.

I was rather amused at the speech made the other day by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), who had just come back from England. I was reminded of an apple dumpling—a lot of apples surrounded by crust. The minister had crust enough to try to make the Canadian farmers believe that England grows all the apples she needs, that she does not have to import any. Of course it has since been proved by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) and the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Stephenson) that the minister was wrong.

Then I would term the parliamentary assistant to the minister the whipped cream on the apple dumpling. He came up to London and Middlesex West and said that England was a land of milk and honey, that the people there had everything, that they were the best dressed and best fed people he had ever seen. The picture he painted was that the country was in great shape. Was that not a foul ball to pitch to the women's council or the women's club when they were engaged in collecting food parcels to ship to England? It took the wind out of their sails because they thought they were sending something that was needed. Of course, he thought that his statement would get out into the back concessions, and serve more or less as an alibi for the failure to sell our apples, potatoes and farm products. He thought that, if he could make them believe that England had everything, that would be a perfect reason why we could not sell anything. But they did not accept it. He should have gone over to his neighbour in the next farm, talked it over in the barnyard, and then left it there. Of course, you cannot expect a professional politician—I have not reached that stage yet—to make his bed and lie in it. Most of them make up their bunk and lie out of it.

The next paragraph of the speech from the throne has to do with the report of the royal commission on prices. I do not know whether I can talk about that under the rules, but there were many meetings of the prices committee before these royal birds were appointed with their big salaries. There was one fellow receiving $125 a day, which is not peanuts. We had hearings on bread, milk, butter and all those things, and the cost of living kept going up all the time because more taxes were required from the people to operate the committee. There are interruptions, Mr. Speaker. It is a great thing to have a lot of assistants. There is one thing I wish you would arrange, Mr. Speaker. I have a lot of parliamentary assistants but they do not get paid. If you will give them $1,000 apiece I am sure we will go great guns.

There is a provision in the speech from the throne for governmental assistance to the producers of iron and steel. What does that mean? It means that we have to assist the industry. But what is the purpose of the industrial development bank? Do they not, by lending money, attempt to fill the gap between the regular bank and the stock promoter? Oh, no; they will not do that because they want the situation handled in such a way that they can nationalize the steel industry. They want complete control over it.

There is a section of the speech from the throne which reads:

> You will be asked to make the customary provision for essential services. Prosperous conditions now prevailing are being reflected in the buoyant level of national revenues; a condition to which due consideration is being given by my ministers in the preparation of forthcoming budgetary proposals.

I do not know what that means. The optimists say it means that taxes are coming off, and the fellows who are not optimists, who think they know the top sources of authority in the government, say that they are going to keep the taxes on. Having been in the soft-drink business, I should perhaps make a special plea in that connection and ask the government to take the taxes off soft drinks and chocolate bars for the benefit of children. You cannot say that is selfish interest on my part, because I was in the business. Now the bank is; but the trouble is, it is not the industrial development bank.

Then there is another paragraph of the speech from the throne which says something about communists, and warns us about them. There is something that is really up to date. Our leader was talking about communists in 1938 and 1939, and everybody said that what he was saying was far-fetched and that he had a lot of funny ideas. Having known him for a number of years, however, I can say that he is not quite as funny as some people think. He usually thinks ahead pretty well. He projects his mind into the future. Of course I know that there is no one in the house who wants to increase the communist element in Canada. In my estimation the best way you can overcome it is by improving our own way of life. The more we can produce, the more we can have in our democratic way of life, the more envious the communists will be, and the more they will think that democracy is a pretty good ticket. It is a strange thing, but you never see a happy communist. I do not know why that is, but you never see one. I suppose the reason is that communism is a sour ism based on envy and hatred of successful people. If the communists would spend less time hating and more time loving and pushing, as genuine Canadians do, they would not have any cause for envy. They would be happy then, but they would not be communists. Everybody is worried about communism, and we have to do what we can.

The people of your ridings and the people of my riding are worried about many things. No. 1 is the cost of living.

Mr. MacNicol: Housing.

Mr. Manross: No. 2, housing. Do not get ahead of me. No. 2 is housing, and No. 3 is taxation. Nos. 4 and 5 are freedom and espionage. Why do I mention such a thing as that? There is a feeling in the country today that you hate to go out of your front door and walk down the street because you feel that somebody is watching you. The farmer hates to go out in the open because 250 new spies have been appointed to come around and see what he is making. They want to know how many pigs he had last year, how many died, and what he did with the rest of them. It is a form of control spirit. My hon. friend the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) was in Toronto the other night, and I noticed in the paper that he said that under communism you are counted, and under democracy you count. I thought that was pretty good logic. The people feel that there is a lack of freedom, and they should not.

I did not think that a fellow from a town would be talking about the farmers because, as you know, I do not even get out into the country where I live. My riding is entirely urban. I thought that the fellows in the cities were the only ones who had weird forms to fill out, and who were under control. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics sends a representative around and he tells you that you had better send in such and such a form if you do not want to pay $100. They want to know how many pounds of coal you used last year, and how many kilowatts. I do not know what a kilowatt is, but I put a figure down just the same because I have not $100. I thought that the people in the cities were the only ones who were troubled in this way, but I was talking to my roommate, the member for Middlesex East (Mr. White), the honey man, and he tells me that the farmers are subjected to controls. I told him that was a lot of rot, that I did not believe it. I went over and picked up the income tax form that a farmer has to fill out. This may be the one used by prairie farmers. I do not know whether there is any difference in the forms. If any of you fellows on the farms have not an accountant you are out of the picture right at the start. You are finished, because you would have to have an accountant and a lawyer to understand this form, and no two lawyers can agree on one thing.

Here are some of the items on which they have to supply information: crops and seeds, wheat, oats, barley, hay. It does not say whether it is tons of hay or hayseeds. There are an awful lot of hayseeds in London. Then there is an item for livestock, cattle, hogs, horses, sheep. You have to give information as to how many little piggie wiggies you had last year, how many of them died, and how many were sold. Then you come to the part dealing with mama. You have to show how much she used on the table last year. You have to show the value of the stuff you ate. How can you figure what the value is? Wheat is $1.55 and then you may get 20 cents more, and then 20 cents more. Pigs are so much one time and a different price another time. How are you going to know what she ate? Talk about controls; boy, the farmers are really under them. The next heading is "Livestock held for sale." For now, or the future value? Say I have two pigs and two calves; what are they going to be worth next year? You have to put that down or one of these 250 spies will be banging on your door. Then they will charge you not only what you did not pay on your income tax, but interest on what you should have thought you should pay. It is a great thing, this control.

Then we come to "Income tax not paid; how much?" You do not know when you make it out, but you have to answer that question. Can you imagine anyone putting that in? Living in the city, I do not have to put it in; that is done for me, but that is just another example of the magnitude of these powers under which they are trying to control the lives of all of us. A farmer does not only get this form, which is a complicated thing. He also gets this big book, twenty-seven pages long; and the last paragraph is headed, "If a farmer dies during the taxation year, who files the income tax return?" You may as well say, "If I should die before I wake, who my income tax will take?" And we pay for that; the taxpayers pay for it. That is something else wrapped up in all these emergency powers and controls. I do not wonder that the farmers are crabbing. I always thought they were the luckiest people in the world, though I know some now who are down to two cars. They are controlled just like us in the cities, so we need not think we are being picked on. We are all picked on under this system, and we want to get out of it. We are through with it.

Mr. Townley-Smith: There is still another sheet, a nice blue one.

Mr. Manross: Well, you can take up that one for your riding. On January 26 of last year I said that by April 1, 1949, the dominion government would have a surplus of $50 for every man, woman and child in Canada, through these excess taxes. Well, I used to prepare budgets for a business, and I was not very far out. Nor was I very far out in that statement, because $50 for every man, woman and child in Canada would be about $600 million, and they tell us that is the surplus. That is the money of the people of the country. They do not understand seven hundred million dollars or eight hundred million dollars or even one million dollars, but if you have $50 of somebody's money and they cannot get it, they understand that. Put that in your campaign book.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I do not take myself as seriously as some people think, which is probably a good thing. But only the other day I found my picture in the London Free Press.

Mr. MacNicol: That is a good paper.

Mr. Manross: A dandy paper. Under the picture it says simply "Park Manross" and below that, "London M.P. critical." That is all; but when you go further down the story deals with something I said about the government. At the top of the page, however, there is just my picture, with the comments I have noted; and I had flowers sent to me at the hotel by wire. You know, your good points have to be in the headlines or no one reads them. The story was that the King regime is the top profiteer. They should have paid some attention to that when they were investigating the profiteers in Canada, because the biggest profiteer in this country has been the dominion government, taking $50 out of the pocket of every person in Canada, even little Billy and Joe.

Then I looked at the speech from the throne; I thought something might be there. I hope I am not trespassing on the ground of the hon. member who is going to follow me if I say a word about old age pensions, because I know that is one of his pet hobbies. However, I will not go very far with it. He asks what is the government's attitude in regard to old age pensions. Why, they made that clear last session in a bill they introduced. Here it is. A diplomat works for five years and gets a pension of $3,000 a year. If he works ten years he gets $5,000 a year. That is their pension plan. And who gets the jobs? Henchmen. That is their policy in regard to old age pensions. They do not pay any attention to anyone else, because the old age pensioners do not go out and do anything for their party. They should think a little more about the deserving citizens of this country, the crippled, the invalids, the old and the blind. As you know, my pet hobby is the blind. I have worked with them and had the pleasure of being with them for a long time. It seems to me that this sort of thing is wrong, saying to certain diplomats, "You have been a good boy, Mr. So-and-So. You have done a lot of good for the party. We cannot send you to the Senate, but we will send you to Trinidad or Shangri-La and in five years you will be eligible for $3,000 a year for the rest of your life". That is a nice job. They buy tickets and charge them up, and we do not even see them on the boat. To me that is a kind of monkey business and monkey business is for monkeys. We should not indulge in that sort of thing; it is not good enough for Canadians, who are sick and tired of being pushed around.

I have not much more to say; I know hon. members will be glad of that. There has been a lot of double talk so far, and I hope the government will become more definite in their policies. They should have been more definite in the speech from the throne, because after all they write it and somebody else reads it. But they do not want to tell you what they are going to do. They will tell us before the election, no doubt; they will tell us a lot of things they are going to do, but if they get in they will never do them. But if they do not get back to their original role of being small "l" liberals they will not even form the official opposition. Some of the answers they give you remind me of something I saw in a Toronto paper the other evening. A chap was in talking to his banker, asking for a loan. The banker replied, "Well, Mr. Graham Towers is head of the industrial development bank, which is part of the Bank of Canada", and so on, and the fellow got pretty disappointed in the end. Finally he said, "Mr. Banker, does Graham Towers know more than God?" The banker replied, "I think so, but I doubt it". That is the sum and substance of some of the ministers' statements. I will not take up more time today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker was perfectly correct in his guess as to the subject on which I would speak in this debate, namely the right to old age security.

Since the end of last session I have been able to collect a considerable amount of new material on this subject though, as all hon. members are aware, the subject itself is not a new one for the representative in this chamber from Winnipeg North Centre. I mention the name of my riding to remind older members of this house that for a good many years my predecessor, the late Mr. Woodsworth, pressed the claims of older Canadians and fought for and won the beginnings of an old age pension system. Since coming to this house as his successor I have felt that this is indeed one of our most important domestic problems.

At the outset, I want to join with the large number of members on all sides of the house who have asked for some immediate relief for our present old age pensioners. The amount of pension varies from province to province across this country. In some provinces, it is only the $30 provided by the federal statute. I regret to have to say that is still the case in my own province of Manitoba. In other provinces provincial supplements are being paid. Even so, in no case can it be said that Canada's elder citizens are being properly treated. I sincerely hope that the government may see fit before this session ends to introduce legislation increasing the amount of the pension to at least $50 a month and bringing the eligible age down to sixty-five.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to go a little bit further into this question of old age security and to argue once again, as strongly as I can, the case for putting old age pensions, indeed all forms of social security, on a firm foundation. This would mean moving in the direction of two things: on the one hand, an over-all social security scheme and, on the other hand, a contributory plan to make it possible to pay adequate benefits. As I proceed I shall have something to say about the details of what is involved in a contributory plan, but at the moment I simply outline that as the theme of my remarks this afternoon.

Without delay we should get our old age security, and our social security generally, on a much firmer foundation so that, on the one hand, people will receive proper benefits and, on the other hand, those benefits will go to all our people as a matter of right. We simply must get away from this degrading means test which is so unfair and so hard on so many of our people.

In connection with the demand for proper old age security, I would point out that labour is asking for it today in even stronger terms than ever before. Indeed, labour is responsible for the emergence of the idea of an old age pension in this country. At the present time, many unions that are renegotiating collective agreements are concentrating on pension and retirement plans. In addition to the demands of labour on the employer on the one hand, and on the government on the other hand, for retirement plans, we have the counterpart of boards of trade and chambers of commerce passing resolutions, urging this government to get on with the business of setting up a proper old age pension and social security plan. In addition to what is being said by these bodies, industry, through its various publications, is claiming it is moving in that direction. Whatever industry's motive may be does not concern me at this moment. I am pointing out the fact that the idea of retirement or pension benefits for all the citizens of this country is becoming an accepted idea in all quarters.

Not only is it accepted by those groups to which I have referred, but some form of over-all social security is now in the platforms of all political parties. I shall not take the time to indicate when those ideas got into the various platforms. I should say to the government, though, that the idea of old age pensions has been in the Liberal platform since 1919, which makes it shameful that they have done so little to put old age security on a proper basis in all those years.

I would say, also, that the experience of our older citizens at the present time, in their efforts to keep alive on the meagre amounts allotted to them, makes this question a vital one to us. All of us are human enough to be concerned for those who are now our elder brothers or sisters, and the amounts they receive simply do not sustain life properly at all. We all realize too, that sooner or later this problem is one we all must face.

I should like to suggest one other reason, Mr. Speaker, for the urgency of this problem, and that is the world situation. We are all conscious of the fact that we are in a world which is being subjected to a conflict of ideas. Basically, that is what is happening between the east and west. We who feel our idea is the superior one, who want our democratic idea to prevail, must face the fact that, if it is going to prevail, our people must become more thoroughly convinced that it is the correct one. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that so long as that freedom about which we are talking contains so much insecurity, our people are not thoroughly convinced that ours is really the better way, and that is the most serious weakness with which we are faced in this conflict of ideas. I suggest that nothing could contribute more to our determination that our democratic way of life shall prevail than the building of security into the fabric of our life. I propose that the place to begin is with an old age security program as part of an over-all social security plan.

Last year, during the debate on the address I spoke on this same subject. That was on March 2, 1948. On that occasion I gave figures, which I obtained from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and which indicated that the problem of old age security is increasing as the years pass by. Some hon. members may remember that the house gave me permission to put on the record quite a few tables which I felt were useful to anyone studying this question. I am not going to repeat those figures, as there were too many of them. But I should like to refer to one set of figures which I gave the house at that time. These figures came from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and they indicate that in 1941 there were in Canada 767,815 people of 65 years of age and over. This represented 6·7 per cent of the total population of Canada in that year. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics forecast for the future, in 1971 the people of 65 years of age and over in Canada will be twice that number, namely, 1,523,000. This will represent 10·4 per cent of the anticipated Canadian population in 1971. It so happens that, in the same period in which there is this tremendous increase in the percentage of older people, there will also be a decrease in the percentage of children. On the other hand the group in between, namely the working population, will increase both in numbers and in percentage, according to this official forecast.

As I pointed out last year this means that, although the problem of old age security will be greater because of the larger number and the larger percentage of older people, it is also the case that there will be a larger group in the working brackets. This means the working group can produce extra wealth to make possible an adequate retirement for our older people. I pointed out last year, and I think it is worth repeating this year, that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which looks at these things objectively, made a most interesting comment. I quote from Bulletin No. F-4 put out by the bureau:

> This trend—

That is, the increase in the number of older people.

> —together with the increase of productive workers, suggests that the burden of dependency will be spread over a greater number of people, and hence the effect of an increase in the aged population with the heavier burden which it entails will not be so costly a problem per capita.

[Mr. Knowles.]

There is one other paragraph from the comment on this matter by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that I should like to quote:

> The trend toward an increasing proportion of old people in the population implies an intensification of the problems of the aged. The emphasis upon change and the depreciation of tradition prevalent in modern industrial society, and the social structure which such a society engenders have placed the aged in a precarious economic and social position in which more of the responsibility for their welfare is being of necessity assumed by the state.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we should keep ourselves conscious of this problem that is ahead of us in the next few decades. On the one hand, the number of our older people will increase, and we must be concerned with their welfare and their right to security. On the other hand, it is not an insoluble problem because our working force will increase, and we can produce more wealth. Therefore a larger proportion of current wealth can be used to provide a proper old age pension. It behooves us to consider what is being done today in a country like the United Kingdom. We are all conscious of the lack of resources and of the difficulties that country is facing. Despite those difficulties, if that country is doing what it is in terms of social security for all the people, from the cradle to the grave, surely we, with our much greater resources and with our expanding working force, should do not less —as is now the situation—but a great deal better.

In the face of this growing problem, as I thought about it and studied it between sessions, I asked this question: What are we doing? What are the statistics—indeed are there any—that would show whether or not we are making any headway in the matter of providing old age security? As I was pondering that question last summer, there came to me in the mail a copy of Industry, published by the Canadian Manufacturers Association. I found it to be a most interesting document. I look at it every time it comes, and I shall be quoting from other copies of it in other debates this session, for I must take issue with some of its statements. But this one which was issued in July, 1948, had on the front page an interesting article entitled "Without fanfare." The first paragraph reads as follows:

> Many things socialism is promising labour are already in existence because capitalism has extended to thousands a great many employee benefits without any brassy publicity or fanfare of political trumpets.

As I read through the article I found that it gave figures indicating what private industry is doing in the matter of employee retirement plans, health benefit plans and so on. Let me say that it is quite an impressive story. But having read that story, I wondered what the total picture might be; so I took the liberty of writing to the research division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and set out a number of questions. At this moment I wish to express my thanks to the employees in that research division for the work they did. Considerable effort was involved on their part, and as a result of it, and of the references they gave me to other departments, I was able to put together a table that shows what we are doing in terms of providing for our own old age. As I say, I have this information in the form of a table which I should like to read to the house; I am not asking that it be put on Hansard without my reading it. But I hope that Hansard will be willing to put it in tabular form. After I have read the table I shall make comments about some of the items so that hon. members and others who study the matter will know whence they came. The table is as follows:

Contributors to Old Age

A. Railway companies		181,788
B. Through life insurance companies
(a) Ordinary and industrial	68,303
(b) Group	101,606
Total		169,900
C. Annuities branch
(a) Pension plans, excluding persons covered under other items in this table	5,631
(b) Personal contracts, excluding those under which no serious effort to save is evident	47,000
Total		52,631
D. Armed forces		36,191
E. Industrial plans		447,445
F. Federal civil servants		31,585
G. Provincial employees		26,409
H. Municipal employees		25,978
Gross total		971,936
Less allowance for duplications in above table		175,000
Net total		796,936

I should now like to go back and comment on some of the items. I would point out that this information has come from the research division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics or from other government sources. I changed only one figure, namely the number allowed for duplications. This figure I reduced considerably, to make sure that any error would be on the safe side. There has been produced, as a matter of fact only within the last few days, a survey of industrial pension and welfare plans, a preliminary report, put out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics under date of February, 1949. That report came to my desk only today, but it corroborates the figure that I have given with regard to industrial plans.

With regard to the life insurance figures that are in this table, I would point out that they do not include the kind of life insurance policy that pays a lump sum on death. What I was concerned about here was to find the number of persons who are contributing to any kind of plan that will give the contributor a monthly payment for life when he retires. As will be noticed, the figures under the annuities branch are less than the total figures of the contracts that are in existence; but they have been reduced by the annuities branch themselves on the basis of their examination of these contracts. They point out that there are quite a number of contracts which have been taken out, but the holders of them are not pursuing them diligently, no doubt because they are unable to do so.

In the matter of industrial plans, hon. members will note that I have separated railways from other industrial plans, but those two figures taken together would give the total figure shown in the bulletin to which I just referred.

As to provincial employees, I must point out that Quebec is not included. Those who did this work for me were unable to get figures with regard to Quebec. I would also point out that these figures do not include school teachers and other employees of school boards across the country. Solely on my own, I am suggesting figures so that we may try to build this picture up as nearly as possible to what it actually is. For example, since there are in Ontario 8,000 provincial employees contributing to pension plans, I suggest that it might be fair to take that figure for Quebec. It is just a guess, but I am sure that there are no more than that.

With regard to school board employees, including teachers and others, I suggest that we add roughly the same figure as would represent those who are contributing to municipal plans. I know in my own city of Winnipeg, for example, the school board budget is just about half the total city budget. This would seem to suggest that the number of employees is about equal as between school board and other municipal departments. I should imagine the figure of 25,000 would be an outside figure—but I would wish to err on that side.

Add those two amounts of 8,000 and 25,000 —or a total of 33,000—to the figure of 796,936 as shown in the table I read a minute or two ago, and we arrive at the figure of 829,936. That figure then, so far as I can get it together, becomes the total number of Canadians who are contributing to some sort of plan for their retirement or their old age.

Please note that I am not going into the question as to how many of these plans to which people are contributing are adequate. My fear is that many of them will prove to be inadequate. However, I have no way of finding out what the amounts are. I point out however that at the present time we have a large number of superannuated civil servants who are drawing retirement benefits which are now hopelessly inadequate, but to which they contributed in the years gone by.

In response to a question of mine figures were placed on Hansard a few days ago showing that 1,031 superannuated civil servants or widows are drawing pensions today of less than $20 a month; and, in fact, that a total of 3,743 superannuated civil servants or their widows, federal in all cases, are drawing pensions of less than $40 a month. These figures can be found in Hansard of February 16 at page 584. I interject that example as I go along only to indicate that one must not assume that the 829,936 people who are contributing now to their own old age will automatically have sufficient retirement when that time comes.

Getting back to the figure itself, I suggest that this 830,000, to use a round figure, does represent the figure I have been trying to discover. I shall be perfectly fair and admit that there might be some others who should be added to this; because the figure does not include those persons who are able to save enough money in bonds, or to get together enough property to live on. I do not know just how one would find out what that figure would be. I took a shot in the dark and said to myself that it might be 50,000. I doubt if it would be that high in this country.

Mr. Jackman: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: And the hon. member for Rosedale supports my guess; I shall accept his judgment that that is an outside figure. But even if I were to add that 50,000, it would bring the total up to only 880,000.

Now let us look at this number of people who are providing for their own old age in relation to the number of people in the ages known as the working bracket at the present time. There are in Canada today—

Mr. Jackman: May I ask a question? When the hon. member was giving his calculation for his figure of 830,000 people who came under pensions or annuities plans of one kind or another, he did mention people who had insurance contracts, particularly on the endowment plan, but where no annuities schedule was set out. I do not believe he gave the house any figure for that. Many people will have contracts with insurance companies, and when they retire they will be able to elect to take their money in the form of a pension. Did the hon. member have any figure at all to show how many endowment contracts are held with insurance companies?

Mr. Knowles: No, I was not able to get that figure. But if my hon. friend has it I should be glad to accept it. I believe my figure of 50,000 people, outside of the 830,000, who would be able to live on such income as they put aside, including endowment insurance, is probably a pretty generous figure. However, if the hon. member can produce evidence to show that it should be more, I shall be glad to accept his figure—because I am trying to present a true picture of the situation.

The hon. member will see in a moment, however, that it would have to be a tremendous figure to alter the basic situation in any way. Here it is: There are in Canada today between the ages of twenty and sixty a total of 6,676,700 people. I have shown that there are only 830,000, or perhaps 880,000, including these other groups, who are making some provision for their own old age. The former figure is 12½, the latter 13 per cent.

That is the problem facing us now, and which will face us in the future—that with all the work being done by private industry and by superannuation and retirement plans of one kind or another, and with all the acceptance there is behind the idea that this sort of thing should be done, only 12½ or 13 per cent of the number of people between twenty and sixty in the working brackets are now providing for their own old age.

This means that when we reach the year 1971, out of 1,523,000 people who will be sixty-five years of age or over, not more than 13 per cent of them—in other words, less than 200,000—will have any retirement benefits; and in this I am not dealing with the question as to whether or not such benefits as they have would be adequate, although that is a very real question. This means that 1,300,000 people sixty-five years of age and over in 1971 will have no provision of their own for their old age.

Mr. Brooks: Does the hon. member mean that none of these people is making provision through savings, and so on, to provide for old age?

Mr. Knowles: I included that group in the 50,000 I mentioned, and which the hon. member for Rosedale thought was an outside figure. But you can add 100,000, if you like.

Mr. Jackman: I do not wish to be held to that.

Mr. Knowles: Another 50,000 raises the amount by only one-half of one per cent; so you may raise it by 200,000, if you wish, and you would still have only 15 per cent.

Mr. Jackman: There were 3,000,000 purchasers of victory bonds at one time. Have you overlooked them?

Mr. Knowles: But the hon. member knows that the extent to which purchasers of victory bonds are able to convert them into retirement moneys they could live on for the rest of their lives is extremely limited.

To get back to my figures, this means that instead of 41 per cent of our elderly citizens receiving old age pensions, as obtains today, in the event of there being no change in the meantime we would have from 70 to 75 per cent of our elderly people in 1971 having to go on the old age pension.

Of necessity many of these figures are estimates; but they are estimates prepared by people who are in the business, and they cannot be very far out. As I have already indicated, however, 50,000 one way or another changes the figure by only one-half of one per cent. So that, in the main, that is the picture—namely 70 to 75 per cent or perhaps more of our elderly people in 1971 having no provision for themselves, despite all the good work private industry claims it is doing —and in this speech I am not detracting one iota from what is being done by way of making provision for old age by any agency whatsoever.

Surely this makes it evident the time has come to put our provision for old age security on a firm foundation. The only way it can be done is by an over-all contributory plan which calls for one contribution from the people of this country, in return for which there will be coverage for all the things which hit individual citizens from the cradle to the grave.

In addition to the argument which I have advanced already, that there are so few who are able to make provision for their old age, I would say that the other side of the argument holds true as well. We have reached the point where 15 per cent of our people are able to make provision for their old age, but it should be noted that many of those people are contributing to plans into which contributions are made by industry, and by the state or from the consolidated revenue fund. That means that many people are helping to provide pensions for others when they themselves are not able to qualify for a retirement plan. The only answer is an over-all scheme that includes everybody.

There is another aspect of the problem which is becoming quite acute. I refer to the man over forty years of age who finds trouble today getting employment. One reason, among many, that makes it difficult for such a man to get employment is that in many industries retirement plans are in operation. Employers are ready to admit that in many cases the man over forty may have more ability than a younger man, but they contend that if they employ the older man it ups the cost of their pension plans. The result is that a plan which is essentially good becomes a barrier to employment. The only answer again is an over-all plan that will take in everyone.

In connection with the need for over-all coverage I would cite the experience we have had in connection with a good piece of legislation now in existence, namely, unemployment insurance. I speak as a protagonist of that kind of legislation, but I would point out one serious difficulty that has been encountered. No matter how much you explain to a man who is out of work because of ill health that actuarially he is not covered, it still does not go down. You can tell him that unemployment insurance is like fire insurance in that you are lucky if you carry it for a number of years and do not have to draw on it. But, if a man has paid premiums for a number of years and becomes unemployed because of poor health and is unable to draw benefits, such explanations do not go down. I know because I have tried to give that explanation of the act as it now stands. The only answer to that is what I am proposing, that we move on from the kind of social security we now have in unemployment insurance to a wider scheme that provides protection against unemployment, ill health and old age, all in one piece of legislation.

I stated earlier that I intended to say something about the meaning of the word "contributory" in relation to social security. There are some who think of contributory social insurance only in terms of private life insurance set-ups which provide for the contributor getting back only the amount that he has paid in, plus such interest as that money may have earned. That creates all sorts of problems when you realize the varying amounts that people might pay in and the varying number of years during which they might contribute, and so on. But that is not the meaning of contributory social insurance when you talk in state or national terms.

What we mean by contributory social insurance is that those who are working shall contribute to a fund out of which benefits are paid to those people who need them, whether because of ill health, unemployment or old age. In return for those payments we who contribute now while we are earning would be entitled to benefits when we reached old age or when we found ourselves in some other situation where we needed them. In other words, it is quite different from setting up a fund into which money is put and out of which can be paid to each individual only what he has put in. A contributory scheme is in effect an arrangement whereby we plan our total production in any one year or in any one decade so that enough of that production can be used for the maintenance of those who need it because of unemployment, sickness or old age. In other words, social insurance is a charge on current production, and a contributory scheme is an arrangement to give effect to that principle.

A short while ago a very worth-while round table was held at the university of Toronto on this whole question of social security and a very interesting report was prepared by John S. Morgan, associate professor of social work at the University of Toronto. I should like to quote a few sentences from that report, as follows:

> There was considerable argument as to who really pays the costs of social security, although all schemes have different apparent distributions of costs through employer's contributions, employee's contributions and state subsidies. It was recognized that, in the end result, all social security costs are a charge upon the productive capacity of the community. They may be hidden in the cost of repairing neglect, as for example in hospital costs, public assistance, prison and reformatory expenses and mental health expenditures; or they may be openly met by preventive and insurance measures. So far Canada has, in large measure, shirked the problem and preferred to keep the real costs of having no integrated plan for social security hidden in a complex tangle of federal, provincial and municipal responsibilities for patching and repairing the neglect of her human resources. The Canadian people are beginning to awaken to the need for something more constructive and more positive in their approach to social welfare.

I submit that that language is very much to the point. However, I should like to offer another quotation in connection with this matter of over-all social security and this time my authority is none other than Winston Churchill, who had something to say about it on March 21, 1943. I intend to quote from one of Mr. Churchill's many broadcasts made during the war years.

Mr. Mitchell: Could the hon. member indicate the source for the record?

Mr. Knowles: I am referring to Mr. Churchill's "Onwards to Victory", and I quote from pages 53 and 54:

> The time is now ripe for another great advance, and anyone can see what large savings there will be in the administration, once the whole process of insurance has become unified, compulsory, and national. Here is a real opportunity for what I once called "bringing the magic of averages to the rescue of the millions." Therefore, you must rank me and my colleagues as strong partisans of national compulsory insurance for all classes for all purposes from the cradle to the grave.

Incidentally Mr. Beland Honderich of the Toronto Daily Star recently pointed out that the life insurance companies are fond of quoting that sentence of Mr. Churchill's as though it was an endorsation of private life insurance. But I ask hon. members to note that "bringing the magic of averages to the rescue of the millions" is done by national compulsory social insurance, according to Mr. Churchill.

Mr. Martin: Just as a matter of interest, does the hon. gentleman recommend that we should have a compulsory system in this country? The solution of the problem is not just as easy as it seems.

Mr. Knowles: If the minister will only do what was suggested a little earlier today and hold his patience for a minute, I will answer his question. There is one other quotation that I want to give before I make my concluding remarks:

> Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

That is from article 25 of the universal declaration of human rights which was passed by the general assembly of the United Nations last December, and for which Canada voted. I submit that the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), when he expressed Canada's views on this declaration of rights, should be accepted. He said that we accept this document "in the hope that it will mark a milestone in humanity's upward march." I strongly urge the government of this country to consider the wishes and desires of the Canadian people by giving full implementation to that article of the world bill of rights.

As members are aware, I speak on this subject repeatedly. I have done so a good many times on the basis of human interest. As the war came to a close I pleaded for old age security as a part of the new order that had been promised to us. Two years ago I spoke of it in relation to plans in other countries. Last year I made my case on the basis of the growing problem as shown by figures from the bureau of statistics. This time I have tried to document my plea by giving figures as to the inadequacy of the plans now in effect, good and all as they are. Indeed, I am convinced that it is our most important social problem.

In conclusion I would urge the government to do two things. One of them can be done immediately. The other, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) realizes from the question he interjected, does take a bit of time, but a beginning can be made immediately. The thing that can be done without delay is to increase the old age pension at this session to $50 a month payable at age sixty-five. That can be done by parliament by amendment of the Old Age Pensions Act. There is no question about it; we are all for it; it is up to the government to bring in the legislation. The other thing that takes time is to get a contributory plan under way. I am fully aware of the fact that that involves consultation and co-operation with the provinces; but the point is, it has got to get started some time; and if this government will give the lead, I am sure the provinces will agree. I insist that now is the time for action on this all-important question of proper old age security.

Mr. C. T. Richard (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in offering my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I am not attempting to continue the time-honoured custom, but I believe that I express the opinion of everyone in the house when I say that both members acquitted themselves very creditably in their difficult task. The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) dealt with the subjects of his discourse in a masterly way, and showed that he had made a deep study of them.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I regret to notice that the new member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers) who seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne is not in the house. I should be very happy if I had his eloquence and fluency to tell him with what pleasure I listened to his maiden speech in this house.

As regards those who did not understand him, because they do not know his language, they certainly cannot have failed, while listening to him, to admire the beauty and harmony of the delectable French language.

He does honour to his province, because he has, in delivering his speech, given irrefutable proof of the fact that true education includes more than a mere smattering of sciences, certain other elements being indispensable, especially a deep knowledge of sound philosophy.

Consequently, if there are still among his own compatriots some who question the efficiency of the Quebec educational institutions, I believe his speech fully refuted their view and I am quite confident that Quebec is in no danger of being surpassed by the other provinces.

(Text):

There have been some notable changes in the house since we last met, changes which are probably unprecedented in our political history, because at one session we are welcoming the new leaders of the two major political groups. Although the session has only begun, they have shown great qualities of leadership. Incidentally, they are both possessed of very good looks, and they grace the front benches so well that it would be unfortunate if any event should disturb them. There is always a danger in transplanting, especially if either of them should be a little sensitive to any rough handling.

To the former Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King), I have not much to say, because so many eloquent voices have been raised in the house to extol his qualities of mind, and the great achievements of his career, that I could not add very much. He has the consolation that his fondest dreams have been fulfilled. During his tenure of office and his long public career, he has seen enacted those measures which have brought such help and assistance towards banishing poverty and suffering, and bringing security to those in privation. There is no doubt that there are thousands and thousands of aged people, widows and orphans, who will bless him in years to come for having taken them out of the category of forgotten people.

I choose as the theme of my remarks the economic situation of the maritime provinces. In doing so I want to assure the house that I do not blame any political party for our situation. But while not blaming anybody, I will not spare any either. I do not believe that we can attribute our economic situation in the maritimes to any particular regime, to any fixed period since confederation, or to any act or measure during those years which brought about such a change that, from being the most prosperous provinces at confederation, we have become the weakest link in the chain. Let me warn the house also that when I speak of the economic situation in the maritimes I mean the conditions which existed during normal times, and to which we will have to return after the effect of the boom years of the war is over.

There may be some who will take the recital of our grievances with no more consideration than complaints from any other province, but I want to say to the house that our grievances are real. They are of just as much concern to the people of Canada as a whole as they are to the people of the maritime provinces. This situation was recognized last year by the three major political parties when, at their respective conventions, they passed resolutions dealing with the problems of the maritimes.

In support of my argument that it is the concern of the whole nation that a solution be found, and that the million people inhabiting the maritime provinces be given a fair hearing at the bar of public opinion, let me quote from a survey which was prepared last year by the Department of Trade and Commerce, the data of which speak for themselves. I find this very significant paragraph in the report:

> That area, speaking of the maritime provinces, has been beset by a long history of adverse economic conditions, small scale and near subsidized industry, vulnerability of specialized industry in Nova Scotia, and relative lack of urbanization and of accumulated wealth.

This survey also points out these very disturbing facts: that the income per capita in the maritime provinces ranges from 68 to 74 per cent of the average national income in Canada; that the total production per capita in the maritime provinces in 1945 was $533, compared with a national average of $963, or a difference of almost one hundred per cent; and that the total production of the maritime provinces was five per cent of the total for Canada, though we possess ten per cent of the population. The survey continues to show the great disparity between income, wealth and production in the maritimes and the figures for the entire dominion. Therefore anyone studying these figures must come to the conclusion that the economic situation in the maritimes is alarming.

There are those in the two largest provinces of this dominion who, viewing the growth of this country, its emergence from a colony to a full-fledged nation, its mounting population and so on, think of the smaller provinces, including the maritime provinces, as fortunate indeed to be associated in this confederation so they may profit by the overflowing wealth of the two great provinces. But let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that the maritimes did not always depend on others. The position of the maritime provinces at the time of confederation was quite different from what it is today. No better proof of that can be found than in a comparison of the figures I have cited as to wealth, production and income with the figures available as at the time of confederation. Let me point out also that contrasts always have the effect of making each of the contrasted objects appear in its strongest light. No better judges of the true position of the maritimes at confederation can be found than the leading statesmen of that day, who are now called the fathers of confederation. The maritime provinces were self-sufficient. They possessed natural ports open to world trade the year round. They were in a favourable position to trade with the American states; and if they were barred from that market, all other markets in the world that could be reached by our ships were open to them. This enviable position was recognized by the most ardent advocates of confederation. I have quoted from the survey on economic conditions in the maritimes. Let me give by way of contrast the situation that existed at the time of confederation, and I quote Galt, at page 63 of the debates on confederation:

> Taking the census of 1861, this trade represents thirty-five dollars per head of the population.

He is speaking of the trade of Upper and Lower Canada.

> The value of the import and export trade of New Brunswick, for the same year, is $16,729,680, amounting to sixty-six dollars per head of its population.

That is, it was almost one hundred per cent greater than that of the upper Canadian provinces.

> The aggregate trade of Nova Scotia for the same period amounted to $18,622,359 . . . and in the case of Prince Edward Island the import and export trade amounted to $3,055,568 . . .

Thus it will be seen that at the time of confederation our trade was more than fifty per cent higher than the trade of Upper and Lower Canada. As far as the revenues of the maritime provinces at the time of confederation were concerned, let me again quote Galt at page 66 of the debates:

> It will be observed that as regards these provinces their income and expenditure are such that they will enter the confederation with a financial position in no respect inferior to that of Canada.

By "Canada" he meant the upper provinces.

> If an objection were made with respect to any province in regard to its financial position, it would be against Canada. The lower provinces have been and are now in a position to meet, from their taxation, all their expenses, and cannot be regarded as bringing any burden to the people of Canada.

We are in a much humbler position today, Mr. Speaker. Time and again since confederation we have been forced to come to the central government to plead for increased subsidies in order to maintain our services, which always have been below the standards of those in other provinces. Let me repeat that we will never solve the economic problems of the maritime provinces by increased subsidies. That is a palliative which relieves the tension for a certain length of time, but it is never a cure. Bear in mind that at that period of our history we in the maritimes were not torn by strife, disunity and discord. We had already reached a spirit of compromise and understanding. Our leaders at the meeting at Charlottetown already were formulating a maritime union. When representatives of the upper provinces reached Charlottetown during those deliberations, they were welcome but uninvited guests. They came as onlookers, not as negotiators for a federal union. They found so much progress had been made among the maritimers toward a maritime union that they decided if a federal union were to materialize they must act at once. It was then that offers were made for a federal union.

On the other hand, what was the position of the upper provinces at that time? They were torn by dissatisfaction and disagreement; and again I quote Galt during the debates on confederation:

> The house must not forget that it will forever remove the great and crying evils and dissensions which have existed in Canada for the last ten years, and which have threatened to plunge the country into the most disastrous and lamentable state of discord and confusion.

That was the situation in the upper provinces. I want to quote again from the debates on confederation. I hope I am not tiring you, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to prove my case from the very sayings of the fathers of confederation. Here is another extract:

> Because just so surely as this scheme is defeated—

The speaker was referring to confederation.

> —will be evolved the original proposition for a union of the maritime provinces, irrespective of Canada . . . They will form themselves into a power which, though not so strong as if united with Canada, will nevertheless be a powerful and considerable community, and it will then be too late for us to attempt to strengthen ourselves by this scheme.

These are not the words of a maritimer speaking to his people; they are the words of the great Sir John A. Macdonald, addressed not to the maritimers but to his own people. Those words were meant to apply to the people of the upper provinces, as the next quotation from Sir John A. Macdonald shows:

> If we are not blind to our present position, we must see the hazardous situation in which all the great interests of Canada stand in respect to the United States. I am no alarmist. I do not believe in the prospect of immediate war. I believe that the common sense of the two nations will prevent a war; still we cannot trust to probabilities . . . .
> Our trade is hampered—

That was because of the civil war and differences between England and the United States.

> —by the passport system and at any moment we may be deprived of permission to carry our goods through United States channels—the bonded goods system may be done away with . . . Our merchants may be obliged to return to the old system of bringing in during the summer months the supplies for the whole year. Ourselves already threatened, our trade interrupted, our intercourse, political and commercial, destroyed, if we do not take warning now when we have the opportunity, and while one avenue is threatened to be closed, open another by taking advantage of the present arrangement and the desire of the lower provinces to draw closer the alliance between us, we may suffer commercial and political disadvantages it may take long for us to overcome.

This was the situation in the upper Canadian provinces. Without an outlet to the sea, their foreign trade was bottlenecked and depended on the whims of our neighbours to the south.

In the confederation debates Cartier gives a clear comprehension of this handicap when he says, and I quote him:

> Twenty years ago our commerce for the year could be managed by communication with Great Britain in the summer months only. At present, however, this system was insufficient and for winter communication with the seaboard we were left to the caprice of our American neighbours through whose territory we must pass. Canada having two or three elements of national greatness, territory and population, wanted the maritime element, and as he said, the lower provinces had this element and the seaboard.

Therefore, these words are applicable only to the upper Canadian provinces. We in the maritime provinces possessed that seaboard and had the choice of the United States or the overseas market. The entrance of the maritime provinces into confederation assured the provinces of upper Canada of this maritime element, as Cartier calls it, and assured their future prosperity which was then so precarious.

I have quoted copiously from these debates on confederation to show the exact picture of the maritimes at the time of confederation. Some people may consider such a review inappropriate, since it is all water under the bridge. However, we have to have recourse to such a study if we want to understand the real purpose of confederation. Macdonald called it a treaty, and as such it must be regarded. The pact of confederation must be read in the light of the conditions and circumstances in existence at the time it was effected.

Now, we maritimers have knowledge of all these facts. It is therefore somewhat galling to be always treated as if we were the adopted provinces of the two greater provinces, and that we should therefore be grateful to these more prosperous provinces for the bountiful munificence which overflows their boundaries. To use a common expression, we are getting sick and tired of it. I have quoted from the surveys certain figures which show that our economic situation is due to a lack of accumulated wealth and the growth of any industrial centres. The fathers of confederation felt that confederation would bring an increase in our industrial centres. This was held out as an inducement to the maritime provinces to sacrifice their wonderful position and enter a pact of confederation about which they were somewhat doubtful.

Have the cities of our Canadian seaboard had such a growth? The answer is to be found in a consideration of the expansion of the United States cities along the United States seaboard. When we consider that our cities have the same geographical position and the same climate, and that only an imaginary line separates the two of us, and when we consider the way our cities have steadily fallen behind, it is hard to understand how progress has passed us by.

There is a great deal of history connected with this matter of accumulated wealth and the development of our industrial centres on the Atlantic seaboard. Some may say this situation has come about because of uncontrollable events and that, confederation or no confederation, we would be in the same situation.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

Mr. Richard (Gloucester): Before the dinner recess, Mr. Speaker, I was trying to prove that the economic situation of the maritime provinces was not due to any events beyond our control. I maintain that this economic situation which has followed from confederation to our own day is the result of the adoption of certain tariff and fiscal policies which concentrated capital, and therefore industry, in the two dominant provinces of the dominion; and those two provinces hold that dominant position because they possess size and population. In our desire to protect and promote our industries I maintain that policies have been adopted which were quite beneficial to certain provinces but quite detrimental to others. Let me point to a few examples.

First, there is our banking system. It may be the soundest in the world but yet it tends to gather the people's savings from the most remote parts of the country and centralize them in focal points of the dominion. It is encouraging corporate financing on a large scale and is promoting amalgamation to the point where we in the maritimes have been deprived of certain industries. Some of them have been completely wiped out.

The same thing may be said of our insurance companies which are great gatherers of the people's savings. I dare any of these institutions to deny that in the maritimes the ratio of our savings employed for commercial purposes is the lowest of any in Canada. I am not the only one who holds these views, and maritimers are not the only ones who hold them.

An exhaustive study of economic conditions was made by the Duncan commission. What was the result of that study? It is contained in this significant finding:

> We are far from saying that the dominion, within its sphere of control, has done all for the maritime provinces which it should have done.
> It must not be overlooked that the task which has been placed upon the federal authorities in bringing such a vast territory as Canada to its present point of growth and prospect has been colossal. The calls made upon its attention and resources by that task may well have prevented it from rendering to the older and well-settled communities of the east as much help as these communities were entitled to expect, or as much help as it has afforded to other parts of Canada. It is not possible in such an undertaking as the making of Canada, with its geographical and physical conditions, and its variety of settlement and development, to maintain always an accurate balance, apportioning to every section of this extensive country the exact quality of benefit and quantity of advantage which would be theoretically and justly desirable. But reasonable balance is within accomplishment if there be periodic stock-taking.

I should like to quote also from the White report, which followed the Duncan commission inquiry:

> We are in accord with the claim of the maritime provinces and with the finding of the Duncan commission that these provinces have not shared proportionately with the other provinces of Canada in the economic advantages accruing to the dominion as a whole from confederation.

In other words, in this great and rapid growth which has brought Canada in such a short period of time to the position of being one of the leading nations of the world, we of the maritimes became the expendables.

I have shown that no selfish motives prompted the people of the maritimes to enter confederation, and that their sole aim was to contribute their share to the building up of a great nation. The attitude of the people of the maritimes has not changed since. We have supported every move and every expenditure made in other parts of the dominion where such expenditure would tend to its greater development, even when at times such support was to our own detriment.

We contributed to the great development of the west by supporting wholeheartedly an expensive colonization policy. We realized however, that we could derive little benefit from it because in the maritimes we had nothing comparable to offer in the way of attracting settlers.

We have contributed our share to the building up of our vast railway system. We have contributed to the construction of inland water routes and the deepening of the St. Lawrence river even though this was injurious to our own ports. Maritimers, in other words, have been Canadians first and have never stood in the way whenever anything was to be done for the benefit of Canada.

Let me cite another example of our spirit of co-operation whenever the interests of Canada were paramount. When the provincial and federal authorities made a study of the reallocation of taxing powers, the maritime provinces were among the first to throw in their lot, even though we felt we would not derive as much benefit as would the other provinces, owing to the fact that our population would not increase as much as theirs would.

Vast industrial projects which were postponed during the war are being proposed, and these are attracting our attention. In the distribution of capital for the carrying out of these projects we in the maritime provinces demand our share. I cite the Chignecto canal project as an undertaking which would give us cheaper hydro power, an advantage which we in the maritimes need. I also cite the Quoddy bay power project, about which I might speak at some length if time permitted me to do so.

I think it was Johnson who said: of joy and grief, the past is the object; the future, of fear and hope. We in the maritimes entertain the fear that we may be left to our own resources and may continue to lag behind in the national march to greater progress. But we also cherish the hope that all Canadians will join with us in trying to solve our problems. We do not begrudge the prosperity which has come to the other provinces, but we wish an opportunity of sharing in that prosperity.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that we in the maritime provinces do not possess any great natural resources, but what we have we wish to have developed to the fullest extent. I cite the fishing industry as one example; to the maritime provinces it has a value of some $28 million a year. Until a few years ago this industry was languishing, but now with the assistance given by this administration in the construction of boats and in the establishment of freezing and processing plants, a great change has come about. We also give credit to this administration for the construction of breakwaters and wharves which afford protection to our fishing fleets. We hope that many more will be constructed, as they are greatly needed.

Let me also point out that we in the maritimes depend on the New England market; it is our natural market. We cannot hope to have the upper Canadian provinces take our exportable surplus. As I say, the New England states market is our natural market, and we hope that trade treaties will be entered into with the United States so that we may be able to seek that market. We had that opportunity in 1911. We missed it, probably, and we know what happened then. But should the opportunity again be presented, I assure this house that we will not again be deceived.

Some may say that I am criticizing the administration which I am supporting, but I might point out that the Liberal party was the first to recognize the situation in the maritime provinces. In proof of that, I point to the Duncan commission, whose findings were implemented by the grant of increased subsidies, the restoration of proper freight rates, bonuses to coal mining, and in many other respects. Moreover, the assistance given last year for the reclamation of our marshlands has been of great benefit to the maritime provinces.

In conclusion, I contend that the bringing up of the economy of the maritime provinces to the level at which it should be is not the concern of one administration or of one political party, but is the concern of all Canadians. There are in the maritimes a million Canadians who wish to see the day when existing inequalities of opportunity may be wiped out and when we may have the fulfilment of the real object of the confederation pact.

Mr. Alan Cockeram (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all welcome to the house those new members who were elected during the recess and say that they have come to a great fraternity, and that we are all very pleased to see them here. Also may I extend my congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) upon his election to that high office, the highest office this country has to offer.

I want now to offer my congratulations to my own leader, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Drew), whom I have known since the first war, who has come to this House of Commons and has shown what an excellent leader he is. During all the years I have known George Drew I have never had any doubt about his ability, not only as a man who sticks to his principles, but as a fighter. And I believe those who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker, must realize that this time they are up against an unbeatable opposition.

The question facing parliament today is, as I see it: Are we to trust our future to the planners by further delegating powers of this parliament, or are industry and business, which have the ability to expand and to utilize the vast natural resources of this country, to be given the opportunity to do so.

Neither the government nor the planners have the ability or the means to develop this country as it should be developed, unless we continue our present high rate of oppressive taxation. It would be a costly experiment, which the country could not stand, because neither the government nor the planners have the ability in industry that the trained industrialists possess.

During the past few years there have been discovered and confirmed in Canada large bodies of natural resources such as iron ore, titanium, uranium, and petroleum. These natural resources will require hundreds of millions of dollars to develop in the years that lie ahead. There are approximately up to the present time 475,000 square miles of the prairie provinces which are considered as prospective oil lands with a petroleum potential running into billions of barrels of oil. It is estimated that to develop this large oil field possibly a billion dollars will be required in the years ahead.

Allowing for the fact that 50 per cent of this money will be generated internally, we will still require $500 million, which must be raised in the capital markets. The maintaining of an artificial value for our dollar, which has resulted in an outflow of capital every year since it was established, will not develop the petroleum industry in this country.

In Quebec and in Labrador, which is shortly to become part of Canada, there have been discovered tremendous bodies of iron of a suitable quality, and it is estimated that it will require something like $300 million before this area is fully developed and the ores can be delivered to the steel mills.

There are large deposits of titanium which have been discovered in Quebec, and the recent method of separating titanium from titaniferous ore, not only makes possible a titanium industry only thirty miles inland from the gulf of St. Lawrence, but will give this continent a large second-grade supply of scrap iron. These great resources are today awaiting development, but the extent and speed with which they will be developed depends on the amount of risk capital that will be available.

By continuing the artificial value of our dollar we are hindering the development in this country so essential at this time, if we are, first, to utilize our resources to the fullest extent; second, to prevent a recurrence of the depression which followed the first great war; third, to stabilize our economy by increasing our productive capacity of materials and goods that will be in demand in the future; fourth, to make the contribution we should make and may expect to make some day to hemispheric defence; fifth, provide security of supply of essential goods in the event of global war, when many of these resources, known to be available in Canada but at present undeveloped, are cut off from present other world sources; sixth, provide for the industrial expansion of this nation, and thus assure employment for those of our people who toil in our factories.

The effect of the action of the government in establishing and maintaining an artificial value of our dollar has been very pronounced in the mining industry of Canada, particularly the gold industry.

The last report the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. MacKinnon) tabled in the house only a short time ago, states:

> The restoration of the dollar to parity early in July, 1946, reduced the price of gold to Canadian producers to $35 an ounce from its previous level of $38.50 an ounce. As a result of these adverse influences there was only a slightly higher output of gold in 1946 and an increase in the value of output from $103,823,990 in 1945 to $104,096,359 in 1946. At the close of the fiscal year, the gold industry was entering a depressed phase, more especially in reference to exploratory drilling, which was showing a marked decline, and to prospecting. Nor was there any substantial improvement in production.

I should like to point out that that is the report of the Minister of Mines and Resources. This was the effect on an industry of placing an artificial value on our dollar, the primary importance of which industry is its function in strengthening the foreign credit position of this nation, particularly in relation to the United States.

That was the effect on an industry wherein, for every man employed underground, ten other Canadians are provided employment to service the industry, on our farms, in our factories and elsewhere in the Canadian economy.

This action not only resulted in decreasing the number of jobs in the industry itself, but reflected itself ten times over elsewhere in the Canadian economy. Today, with unemployment showing itself because of our loss of export markets, it is time to ask ourselves as Canadians whether we can afford the luxury of maintaining an artificial value for our dollar, when without it we could have greater activity in the gold mining industry, producing a product for which there is stable demand and which strengthens our foreign credit position.

Today in Canada there is concern as to the adequacy of future risk capital for the development of this nation's natural resources. Looking at our present position in terms of jobs, and seeing our export markets falling off on the one side, and an outflow of capital on the other, is it any wonder the press carries stories to the effect that Canadian authorities are belatedly concerned about the effect of their own policies and about inadequate sources of risk capital for Canadian development? When the present artificial value was placed on our dollar I pointed out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) that such action would almost certainly destroy the confidence of foreign investors in the money policies of this country. The warning at that time went unheeded.

Now, almost three years later, the wisdom of this accepted policy of the bureaucrats is being questioned, and the effect of it upon our economy is forcing the government to recognize how important the flow of risk capital is to Canadian production, employment and development. It is apparent that Canadians themselves cannot provide the flow of risk capital that could be employed to advantage in the development of this great country. In spite of the position the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has taken on this matter in the past, will he not now admit that one of the greatest needs of this nation at the moment, if we are to provide continuing employment and to give our people the standard of social security the government is always promising, is to give freedom from foreign exchange control that will permit capital to flow to and from the United States.

If that is done and parliament is given assurance that there will be no more tampering by the bureaucrats, there will be an adequate supply of capital which will ensure development and utilization of our resources, which will provide employment for our people, which will make reductions in taxation possible and provide a continued high standard of living for the Canadian people.

The constituency which I have the honour to represent, namely, York South, is composed largely of the class of people who are dependent for their livelihood upon continued gainful employment. During the last depression that riding was hit as hard as, if not harder than, any section in the Dominion of Canada. But in spite of that, during the two wars there was no riding in the Dominion of Canada that had a greater percentage of voluntary enlistments.

At the present time the people in York South are beginning to see layoffs in some of the factories and they are becoming fearful that, as a result of government policy, there will be less and less employment in our factories. If we as a country fail to develop and utilize the resources which God has given to us, with which we are so well endowed, we will not be able to maintain employment in the future.

The people of York South are interested mainly in employment, but they are also interested to a large extent in the subject that was discussed in the house this afternoon, old age pensions. They are interested in housing and many other things which can be provided only if employment is kept at the highest possible level. As the people in my riding and throughout Canada read government reports, which indicate that employment is less secure because our export trade is undoubtedly diminishing, they ask what steps this government is taking to guard against unemployment. We did hear the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) state the other day that the government had elaborate plans for a public works program if, as and when there was a slackening in business. But I suggest that there are better ways of achieving the desired result.

I think it is generally recognized that when the government spends large sums of money the people do not get the greatest value for the money that is expended. No matter whether the amount is large or small, it must come out of the taxpayers' pockets. I suggest that one way of ensuring employment is to liberate ourselves from the objectionable feature of exchange control. In a country in the early stages of development, such as Canada is today, in a country with an abundance of natural resources and with people who are honest and industrious and motivated by an inherent desire to live as free people, I believe we have come to the position where it is neither desirable nor necessary for this parliament to continue to delegate to any board powers such as we have conferred under the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

During wartime, under an entirely different set of circumstances, all parties were prepared to delegate the powers of this parliament in an effort to divert as far as possible the nation's resources and manpower to an all-out war effort. Today, four years after the cessation of hostilities, these powers are still being delegated. Parliament is being asked to extend the Foreign Exchange Control Act, not for one year but for two years until 1951.

Leaving unanswered all the questions that a free people have the right to ask, why is it necessary, in specific relation to Canadian conditions as they now exist, to continue to delegate such powers for a further two-year period? What special facilities has such a board to see and act upon problems which business itself would or could handle in the normal course of events? How does controlled exchange affect the Canadian economy? One thing is certain: we are losing our overseas markets, and once lost they will be hard to regain.

Before this house is asked to pass upon the extension of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, the bill should be sent to the banking and commerce committee where experts of the Department of Finance could be questioned as to the relevance of the various sections to conditions at the present time. When the Foreign Exchange Control Act was passed in 1946 it was intended, largely if not wholly, to deal with our exchange position with the United States. When the bill was before the banking and commerce committee on July 15, 1946, Mr. Rasminsky, alternate chairman of the foreign exchange control board, was asked the following question which appears on page 87 of the minutes of evidence:

Mr. Fleming: I formed the impression from an answer given by Mr. Rasminsky that the reason for the bill is confined to our exchange relations with the United States? Am I correct in that?

Mr. Rasminsky: I would put it in this way, that in the whole world situation as it appears at the present time, the character of our exchange relations with the United States causes a certain amount of preoccupation which is, as I understand it, the reason for the bill.

At the time the foreign exchange bill was before parliament such a measure may have been necessary because our trade balance, excluding gold, was then adverse and that adverse balance had been increasing from the first of that year. That adverse balance has been changed from the $38·5 million when the present act was passed in 1946, and from a high of $102·7 million in May 1947, to a favourable balance of $1·5 million in November, 1948. I have not the figures for the last two months, but I presume our balance of trade with the United States, excluding gold, continues to reflect our heavy exports to that country and purchases under ERP.

Our official holdings of gold and United States dollars, which were a matter of grave concern when the foreign exchange control bill was passed, have shown a definite improvement in the past year, which is due largely to three things. First, the government has at last modified its policy of imposing embargoes against the export of our products. Second, purchases made by ERP have amounted to $593 million. Third, there was a borrowing of $150 million from the United States. Judging from statements by responsible government sources, it is reasonable to assume that our holdings of gold and United States dollars have more than doubled in the year just past. It is interesting to note the holdings of United States dollars and gold from the early days of the war and from the time the Foreign Exchange Control Act was passed.

From the date of establishment of the Foreign Exchange Control Act to September 1948 the Canadian holdings of gold and United States dollars amounted to:

The improved condition of our foreign exchange position with the United States gives rise to the question how much longer this nation should continue to carry on its statute books a law such as the Foreign Exchange Control Act, which in effect strikes at the very core of the economic freedom of Canada.

Under the authority of this act Canada today, by maintaining an artificial value of the Canadian dollar, is subsidizing imports from the United States, and at the same time the government tells the Canadian people, burdened as they are by unwarranted taxation, that the reductions they are demanding in taxes may not be possible for the reason that the budgetary surplus for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1948, of $640 million is not really a surplus because the government, among other things, had to advance the foreign exchange control board $370 million during that year. This $370 million was used to purchase United States currency. In other words, money collected from the Canadian taxpayers in excess of the cost of government is being used to gamble in foreign exchange, and not being used for domestic debt retirement. Total purchases of United States funds during 1948 amounted to $402,631,226. Will the government tell the Canadian people what premium, if any, was paid on the purchase of these funds?

When the Foreign Exchange Control Act was before the banking and commerce committee in 1946 Mr. Rasminsky stated as follows, as recorded on page 83 of the minutes of evidence:

Whether the existence of foreign exchange control is an undesirable deterrent to foreign investment in Canada—I think the answer to that lies in the results.

This bill in its present form has been on the statute books now for over two years, and the government is asking parliament to grant another extension until sixty days after parliament reconvenes in 1951. Before doing so, however, I think, as Mr. Rasminsky suggested, that we should look for the answer in the results. Let us examine what has been happening to the flow of capital between Canada and other countries.

A review of the flow of capital between Canada and other countries for the past ten years indicates unmistakably the adverse effect of the present policy of maintaining an artificial value of the Canadian dollar. The figures on the flow of capital from and to Canada since 1938 are as follows:

1938	+ 28·9
1939	+ 72·1
1940	+ 28·8
1941	+ 33·0
1942	+105·5
1943	+172·2
1944	+ 97·0
1945	+191·0
1946	+134·6
1948 (11 months)	— 17·2

The year 1946 was the year in which our money was placed on parity with that of the United States. In that year we still had a surplus of United States money coming to this country. The money coming from outside sources amounted to $134·6 million. In 1947, instead of having capital coming in to be invested in Canada, we find that we lost $18 million, and in 1948 we lost $17·2 million in eleven months. These figures demonstrate that since the government put our money on a parity basis there has been no new investment in Canada, and what money was invested is being withdrawn.

The record shows that following the placing of an artificial value on our dollar, and the enactment of the Foreign Exchange Control Act, Canada has been an exporter of capital, which is an amazing thing for a country as young as this, a country that requires so much money to bring about its full development. The adverse effect on the inflow of capital was reflected in the annual report of the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) tabled in this house on January 14 last. There it is stated that a greatly increased sale of corporate securities would aid our economy at this time but the government is making it impossible for outsiders to buy any of these corporate securities.

In this report the governor of the Bank of Canada pointed out that only one-fifth of recent expansion by private business had been financed by new security issues. The balance had been financed out of current depreciation allowances and retained current earnings. Some companies in Canada, such as Imperial Oil Limited, are selling some of their current established business interests in order to finance business expansion in Canada which they now have in hand. This company disposed of their holding in International Petroleum to the extent of $80 million in United States funds, which helped the Minister of Finance.

What further evidence is required that Canada today faces the need to assist rather than to deter capital expansion, especially for developing this country and to provide employment, increase production, and hold inflation? During the years prior to July, 1946, when the artificial value was placed on our dollar, we increased our liquid reserves of gold and United States dollars, and the bulk of this increase was due to transactions on capital account. The real control exercised under the present act, and exercised in accordance with government laid-down policy, is with respect to capital transactions. The adverse effect this measure has had, and will have in the future if allowed to continue, by maintaining an artificial value of our dollar, is the responsibility of the present government, and for this they will have to answer to the Canadian people.

The adverse effect of the parity action of the government in 1946 is evidenced on every side. The tremendous cost to the nation in the future, if this policy is pursued, it is impossible to estimate accurately. If we are to get our house in order so as to weather the economic storm that some people think lies ahead, and evidence of which is appearing on all sides today, it is now certain that we cannot depend on the planners or the bureaucrats to do it for us. One characteristic of the planned economy provided for in the foreign exchange control legislation is that policy changes come as bolts from the blue. In this regard it runs true to all planned economies. Planners never like to admit they have made mistakes, but hold on to their powers and policies in the hope, like Mr. Micawber, that something will occur, something will "turn up" at some other point of the plan which may provide a good alibi.

They cover up deficiencies when the promises of the planners fail to materialize and that failure becomes obvious to all. Then the situation becomes a crisis, such as we had in November, 1947. In that connection I would remind hon. members that right after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) had come out with a glowing statement in respect to the exchange position, I pointed out that, in spite of the pleasure he seemed to derive from presenting the report of the Bank of Canada with respect to foreign exchange, he had only enough United States funds to last until the end of October or November 1947. The statement I made at that time proved to be true, and in November the minister had to put on his radio program of taxation and embargoes.

Regard is seldom had for the fact that a board of planners just cannot see the problems of every business in the economy as those problems are seen by those who have to stand or fall by their success in the business world. As a result the country pays dearly for the experiment of having the government handle business.

My final question is: Can the government, on its record, be trusted to use such powers in the way they represent to parliament that they are to be used? The former leader of this party, the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Bracken), in a statement found at page 54 of Hansard for December 8, 1947, repeated a statement which had been made by the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Ilsley, at page 2547 of Hansard for June 17, 1946, in which Mr. Ilsley said:

> We have no intention of using this exchange control legislation to restrict anything but certain types of capital movement.

In spite of that statement, however, through the present Minister of Finance this government has used the Foreign Exchange Control Act as authority for its radio decrees. Certainly when that matter was before the house not one hon. member had any idea that we were giving the Minister of Finance power to put on special taxes over the radio. It seems to me the Minister of Finance has brought to this parliament a degree of levity unknown to this house in one holding so responsible a position. Within the short period of two years he has assumed mastery of all problems of business and finance that have taxed the ingenuity of economists and political scientists through the ages. The truth is that he has become so indoctrinated by the invisible government to whom the destinies of this country are entrusted that he holds in contempt the experience of the average business man; but he has failed to convince this house that he is really in control of the financial policies that determine the fate of the people of Canada. He recalls to me the statement made by one famous British statesman about another: "He is indebted to his memory for his jokes"—which we hear so often in this house—"and to his imagination for his facts".

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of this debate is that it gives hon. members an opportunity to bring to the attention of parliament and the government the problems of the people of their constituencies. In that connection I must say that not for many years have I found, at the opening of parliament, the people so upset by immediate worries and so fearful of what the future may have in store for them. My ground for that statement is that seldom have I been approached by so many individuals and organizations before leaving Vancouver to come here for the opening of the session; and I regret very much that the people in my city who find the going tough will find very little hope or comfort in the speech from the throne.

It is not my intention tonight to analyse the speech from the throne paragraph by paragraph. I have not the time for that, and I doubt very much whether it would be worth the time if I had it. However, I do wish to draw attention to one paragraph, about which I want to say a few words. In the third paragraph we read:

> Employment is at higher levels than ever before. In striking contrast with communist countries, the free economy of our country is demonstrating its ability to provide for all a high standard of living, social justice and individual freedom. It is the view of my ministers that a steady advance toward the goal of social justice for all is an effective safeguard against the influence of subversive doctrines.

I agree with the last sentence of that paragraph. But the economy of this country, free or otherwise, is not providing for all a high standard of living, social justice and individual freedom. The mover of the address, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), said:

> The year 1948 was good to Canada. In that year the highest peacetime levels of production and external trade were achieved, and the levels of income and employment were the highest on record.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) took part in the debate he made a similar assertion. These statements, I suppose, are based on facts, and I am not going to dispute the facts; but if the mover of the address draws the conclusion or wishes the house to draw the conclusion that, because Canada has had record production and record income in the year just past, all the Canadian people are better off than they were before, I do dispute that because it is not the fact. For large sections of our people this increased production and increased national income do not mean anything because they do not participate in their benefits. They not only do not participate in those benefits, but their position is worse than it was last year, and the year before that, and the year before that. So what rot it is to say we have a high standard of living. Some of us have, but there are many people in this country who have not a high standard of living and whose standard of living is going down day by day as the cost of living goes up. Persons on fixed incomes such as old age pensioners, recipients of war veterans allowance, blind pensioners, persons on small superannuation such as many superannuated civil servants, unorganized workers, wage and salary earners, small farmers, and a host of people who are unable to increase their incomes as the cost of living goes up, are worse off in 1948 than they were in 1947. They were worse off in 1948 than they were in 1944 and 1945 when nearly half of our production went for war purposes; that is something that ought to make the members of this house and the members of this government sit up and think.

Let me give one or two examples of what is happening to those people with low fixed incomes. In 1945, the maximum old age pension was $25; in December, 1948, it was $30. The value of the pension in 1948 in terms of 1945 dollars was only $22.50, which means that the old age pensioner was $2.50 worse off in 1948 than he was in 1945. Two dollars and fifty cents may not mean very much to the members of this house, but $2.50 per month means a great deal to a person who has only $30 per month. The same thing applies to the blind people.

Turning to war veterans allowances for a moment, we find that in 1945 a married man received $60 per month. In December, 1948, he received $70 per month. The value of the $70 he received in 1948, in terms of 1945 dollars, amounted to only $52.50. This left him $7.50 worse off in 1948 than he was in 1945. The position of those in the other groups I have mentioned is similar, that is, they are poorer in 1948 and so far in 1949 than they were in 1945. This is true despite the fact that, according to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the mover of the address (Mr. Brown), Canada had a higher national income in 1948.

Let us see what that means. It carries its own implications. If these people are receiving less of the national income than they were in 1945, others must be receiving a larger share of the national income than they did in 1945. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is not social justice, whatever else it may be called. Indeed, it is the very opposite of social justice, it is social injustice.

I think it was the leader of the opposition who, in complaining of high taxation, said that taxes were so high people had nothing left for savings. Perhaps the leader of the opposition and I are not speaking for the same people. Tonight, I am speaking for the people who do not pay taxes, at least do not pay direct taxes. I am speaking for that large section of the nation whose incomes are too low to bring them within range of income taxes. Do not forget that the Minister of Finance in his 1947 speech said that this group comprised more than half of those who received incomes in Canada. Not only have the people I am speaking for nothing left for savings; they do not get enough for a decent living. Because of the fact that they do not get enough for proper nourishment, they are daily drawing cheques on the bank of life which will mean a shorter life.

The contradictions in our system of production and distribution are again becoming apparent. One contradiction is that the more productive we become the less secure all but a very few are. Today the ability to produce is catching up with and overcoming the ability to consume. We are building up surpluses and the more surpluses we build the more insecure the people are. It is for that reason so many people are worried and in distress. Once more we are entering a period of surpluses.

I shall now deal, Mr. Speaker, with the particular situation in my own city. Before leaving for Ottawa I was invited, along with other members of parliament from Vancouver, to attend a meeting called by the officers of the community chest and council. The heads of several of Vancouver's welfare agencies also attended the meeting. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the problem of the employable unemployed who, for one reason or another, such as waiting for unemployment insurance or the exhaustion of unemployment insurance benefits, find themselves in difficulty. The municipality looks after the unemployables. After the employable unemployed have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits, there is nothing for them but charity. In this group I have mentioned, one finds married men with large families who cannot get along on their unemployment insurance.

I want to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this is not a condition that applies only to Vancouver. In the Montreal Gazette of March 1, I noticed a report of a meeting of the federation of Catholic charities in the city of Montreal. The director of the organization was reporting to the annual meeting of the directors. In part, this is what he said:

Meagre unemployment insurance payments to Canadians out of work were described as "a crime against justice and charity" last evening by Father Patrick J. Ambrose, director of the federation of Catholic charities.

Then, he said this:

It is to be deplored that to date unemployment insurance has not kept pace with the rising cost of living. People today who are in receipt of this insurance are unable to live,—whether they be single or married and with dependents.

That is just the situation we have in Vancouver, where perhaps it is even worse than it is in the city of Montreal, or in any other part of Canada. The situation became so serious that the government had to take cognizance of it and send a minister out to the Pacific coast to investigate.

I have in my hand a news item from the Vancouver Sun reporting an interview with the Minister of Fisheries when he was in Vancouver about ten days ago. In the four cities of Vancouver, Victoria, Nanaimo and New Westminster there are 50,000 people out of work, and from 35,000 to 40,000 of those are in the city of Vancouver. Some of this unemployment is seasonal. A great deal of it is due to falling markets, particularly in the lumber industry. Some of it is due to the lack of work in the Vancouver shipyards. The shipyard workers have been unemployed since early fall. As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) indicated when I questioned him in the house recently, some of the unemployment may be due to an influx of settlers from other provinces. But whatever the cause, the point I wish to make is that the situation in Vancouver is serious. I greatly regret that the Minister of Labour seemed so unconcerned about the matter when it was brought to his attention. But if he is unconcerned about it, responsible people in Vancouver, whose job it is to look after the homeless and the jobless, are not unconcerned; they are worried.

At the meeting to which I have already referred, and which was attended by some of the other Vancouver members and myself, the executive secretary of the community chest and council stated that the welfare agencies were worried about two aspects of the situation. In the first place, as men and women with feeling, they were concerned over the human suffering and distress with which they were obliged to deal daily; and in the second place they were afraid that if something were not done to relieve the misery and frustration of the people they might overflow human endurance and result in riots or other disturbances. It is a long time since we had unemployment demonstrations in Vancouver, and we do not want to see them come back.

With all the experience the government has had in the last twenty years, with all that we have learned about how to plan, to produce, and to distribute, surely we shall not sit by now and see men, women and children suffer for the want of the essentials of life which we have in considerable abundance.

Specimen cases were brought to the attention of the meeting, at least they were attached to the minutes of the meeting which I received. I wish to mention one or two cases which I think are typical. The first is as follows:

This family consists of father, age forty, mother, age thirty-four, and seven children, ranging from two to thirteen.

In October, 1947, the man was injured while working as a longshoreman and after a period of hospitalization was pronounced capable of light employment by the workmen's compensation board. He was allotted a compensation pension of $20 a month.

May I say that is one of the sad features of workmen's compensation. A person doing heavy manual work will be adjudged, by doctors of the compensation board, capable of doing light work. But there is no light work for people of that kind. I know because for years I have been dealing with cases of that class.

This man is registered with the handicapped section of the national employment service, who have told us that at present no jobs are listed at their office. His own efforts to find employment have been unsuccessful apart from a few days at Christmas with the Vancouver post office. He is not drawing unemployment insurance benefits.

The total family income is $20, workmen's compensation—

I would ask hon. members to note this income for seven people.

—and $35, family allowance. Out of the total of $55, $22 is paid for rent, leaving $33 a month for all other living expenses.

I figured that out and it comes to about twelve cents per day per person. If this were happening in other parts of the world—and it does happen elsewhere—it would excite our pity and we would be sending assistance to such people. But when it is at our own door, it is almost impossible to get anything done about it. I continue:

Public assistance has been refused on the grounds that the man is employable.

The children of this family seem to be suffering from malnutrition—

It is amazing that such should be the case, on twelve cents per person per day for food!

—and the mother, who is pregnant, is not getting the kind of food she should have. One of the children, who has been hospitalized, is ready to come home but will not be able to get an adequate diet there.

I am reading this for a purpose. I will read one other case, and it will be much shorter:

When this man, a highly skilled English technician, decided to come to Canada, he states he was encouraged to do so by the officials at Canada and British Columbia houses in London. However, when he arrived in Vancouver, he found that the only place where he could practise his skill had an age limit of employment that absolutely debarred him.

He too is on charity, not having acquired sufficient unemployment insurance to carry him over. I do not want to paint the picture worse than it is, but I want this house and this government to understand that for the last three months in British Columbia the situation has been serious. I know that it has been aggravated by abnormal weather conditions, but most of it is due to the normal operation of our economic system. As I said, lumber mills are shut down because of the lack of markets. Unemployment among the shipyard workers was bad before winter set in. The government has no excuse in this matter. They cannot say that this situation came upon them unawares. They knew, if they knew anything at all—which I sometimes doubt—what was coming. Previous actions show that they knew years ago that supply would sooner or later catch up with demand and that there would be unemployment which could not be met by the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. That is made quite clear by the proposals made in the green book to the provinces in 1945. If the government was sincere in making those proposals, then I suggest there is something it can do to meet situations such as exist in British Columbia. They can make agreements with those governments which are prepared to make agreements; then they will be able to pay the unemployment assistance they proposed in 1945. If all the provinces do not agree—and it seems that some do not want to—agreements could be made with those who do. We do not want to have a veto applied here, no matter from where it comes. British Columbia is one of those provinces with which an agreement is possible.

It was my intention to speak at some length on the shipbuilding and merchant marine situation on the Pacific coast. However, after listening this afternoon to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), I have decided to omit some of the things I intended to say. I do that because I find myself in agreement with much of what the minister said, and particularly his general approach to the question. However, the minister did not answer all my questions.

The situation on the Pacific coast at the present time—and I believe the minister is aware of it—is that our shipyards are idle. Many of the ships the government built and sold to private companies have been sold to foreign owners and are under foreign register. Our sailors have been replaced by foreign crews. Other ships, though still under Canadian register, are manned by foreign crews; and the displacement of Canadian crews by persons of other nationalities is continually going on. It is not incorrect to say that Canadian sailors are walking the streets of Vancouver looking for ships, while persons of other nationalities are manning our ships. I do not know what solution the minister has for this situation.

This afternoon he told us there is a stipulation in the agreement of sale of government-owned ships that, if a resale of the ships is made outside Canada, the purchase price must be set aside for the construction of new ships. However, what worries me in that connection is the length of time allowed in the agreement before the money must be used for new shipbuilding.

Although I have not seen it, the minister pointed out this afternoon—and I do not doubt his word—that the agreement of sale states that building need not begin for five years, and that an extension of two more years may be granted. That is seven years altogether. I suggest to the minister that seven years in this fast-moving world is an awfully long time; and if there is no building of ships for the Canadian merchant marine for seven, or even five years, there may be very little merchant marine left at the end of that time. Not only that, but the skills acquired by our shipbuilders and sailors will have been forgotten. I suggest to the minister that something more than what he proposed today is necessary before it will be satisfactory to a great many people in the part of the country I come from.

The minister also said this afternoon that this was not a good time for the building of ships, and that perhaps there was too much tonnage now. The minister may be right, but I shall make two observations: First, Canadian ships now being sold by the people who bought them from the government are, I am told, being sold at a higher price than their past owners paid for them, or that the government received for them two or three years ago. Secondly, the shipbuilding and ship-repairing association news letter of December 15, 1948, states that according to Lloyd's latest returns 1,160 merchant vessels of over 100 gross tons each were under construction in world shipyards at that time, but that of that number only two will fly the Canadian ensign, neither of which will be engaged in overseas trade.

This may be a bad time for the building of ships. I am not an expert in the matter, and if the minister says so I shall accept his word. However, there appears to be a great deal of opinion on the other side. May I say, I made these notes before I heard the minister speak this afternoon, and I made a note to propose to him and to the government that without delay they undertake a modest shipbuilding program of fast cargo ships. I have used the words "modest shipbuilding program" because I do not believe a large shipbuilding program is indicated at this time. I make that suggestion to the government, because I am convinced that, if the government will not do it, the shipping and transportation companies certainly will not. They are great free enterprisers, every one of them —provided the government supplies the funds.

I shall close with just one further observation. I agree with the minister—and I made my position quite clear on this point at a meeting of shipyard workers in Vancouver before I came to Ottawa—that it is not necessary for Canada to have a large merchant marine in order for her to hold her position as a leading trading nation. As a matter of fact, if Canada expects to continue as a great trading nation, it is folly of a major order to think that we can become self-sufficient in everything. The nations of Europe today are short of things to exchange in trade with us. Trade is the exchange of goods for goods, or goods for services, or service of one kind for service of another. If we are going to trade with, let us say, Norway, or even with Great Britain or many other countries in Europe, it is quite possible that if we are to make a deal we will have to sell our goods for services—perhaps shipping services of one kind or another. To that extent I agree absolutely with the minister.

The time has come when we must have more economic co-operation than we have had in the past. In my opinion there is no use in trying to co-operate in political and military matters so long as we are competing on the economic front. After finishing with this point I would suggest three things to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) which I think the government should do. One, Canadian registered ships should be manned by Canadian officers and crews. Two, the government should start at once a modest program of shipbuilding. Three, labour should be given representation on the maritime commission. I recommend those three things for the consideration of the government.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the government—housing. Representing as I do a constituency in the city of Vancouver, I make no apology for saying something about housing. Indeed, I think I would be subject to censure if I did not refer to the urgent need for housing in the strongest possible terms. Today, nearly four years after the war, housing is still British Columbia's most urgent problem. Despite the amount of new construction, and it has been considerable, the situation is not improving. I shall refer for the most part to conditions in Vancouver, but I know that conditions are bad in other parts of Canada, in all parts as a matter of fact. This is indicated by an item which appeared in the Listening Post, published by the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities. In the issue of December, 1948, it states:

> A year ago, when the November, 1947, edition of the Listening Post was issued, housing was Canada's biggest headache. Six months ago when the Gallup poll completed a coast to coast survey, housing was Canada's biggest headache. And today, housing is Canada's biggest headache.

It seems to me that after such a definite assertion has been made by such an authoritative source, no more need be said for the necessity of action on housing. But if the government wants more evidence as to the need for housing I shall draw attention to a source that is very close to the government itself, Mr. Mansur, president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Speaking at a meeting in Kingston, I believe some time in November, he said:

> Our estimates today show that 800,000 household groups in Canada are sharing accommodation. Of those about 250,000 families wish to have a place of their own.
> Our surveys indicate that 17 per cent of houses are shared by more than one family. In small towns in Ontario, it is as high as 20 per cent.

Speaking later at a meeting in Toronto, as reported in the Vancouver Sun of January 25, 1948, he said:

> The number of people who need front doors of their own exceeds by 350,000 the number who have them . . . It is my guess that the immediate need is of the order of 150,000 units.

I notice that the Canadian construction association estimated that the number of housing units that will be constructed in 1949 will be around 83,000, which would be 67,000 short of what the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation said was needed immediately.

Having referred to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation I must commend the corporation for the work it has done in providing homes for veterans in Vancouver. Many of these houses have been constructed in the constituency I represent. One project of some 800 homes was completed at the beginning of the winter. I have heard many complaints in the house since I came here about poor construction of homes constructed by Central Mortgage, but I have received no complaints in connection with poor construction.

There is another project just starting in Vancouver known as the Fraserview project, where Central Mortgage is to build 1,100 homes. Construction has not started as yet, although clearing has. They took over a whole area and some property had to be expropriated. I am sorry that at the beginning the corporation did not have that regard for the feelings or rights of the private property owners that it should have had. But amends have been made and I think the property owners' interests will be safeguarded, and the project when finished will be appreciated by the people of Vancouver.

I urge the government to do without delay what it should have done years ago. Conditions, I believe, are more favourable now than they were last year or even six months ago. On February 11 the premier of British Columbia said that he was ready to attend a dominion-provincial conference on housing. The city of Vancouver has applied for charter amendments to enable it to set up a housing authority and to discharge whatever share of obligation may fall upon it in the matter of building homes for those who cannot build for themselves.

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, as I represent a riding which is vitally interested in the construction and repair of vessels, I learned with the greatest satisfaction from the speech from the throne that the government proposes to come to the aid of the Canadian shipbuilding industry. I should not like to allow this occasion to pass without taking a few minutes of the time of the house to draw to the attention of the ministers concerned the importance of this question. I do not know exactly the manner in which this question will be resolved and submitted for our consideration, but at the same time I hope that the aid will be adequate and forthcoming immediately for this great national industry, which during the course of the war recently terminated employed more than 75,000 workers.

I hope that the maritime commission, which was formed in 1947, has been able to study the question in the intervening period, and to submit any necessary recommendations in order to demonstrate to the government that this important industry should continue to exist for very good reasons. This industry, which played a role of the greatest importance during the war, also has a role no less important in time of peace.

At the beginning of my remarks I stated that the shipbuilding industry is one of vital importance to my constituency. Those who have had occasion to visit the shipyards at Lauzon know that they are ideally equipped for the construction of ships of all kinds up to a tonnage of 16,000. Situated in a remarkable location for the building of ships, the yards have the most modern equipment, enormous launching slips, and also two drydocks, one of which is considered to be the finest in Canada. As to our workmen, I am happy to be able to say again in the house that in my riding we have expert men who demonstrated during the last war their willingness to give their best in the service of their country, and who only hope that in time of peace they will have the opportunity to render further service.

In passing I also wish to say that our workmen are skilled craftsmen and good citizens. The best evidence of their fine spirit and ability is shown in the quantity and the quality of the ships constructed by them in the course of the last conflict, and by the great appreciation which was expressed to them by those in charge of our wartime shipbuilding program. The recognized ability of our workmen is easily explained by the fact that for generation after generation they and their forefathers have been engaged in shipbuilding.

(Translation):

Incidentally, I should like to put on record the number of workers employed in our shipyards during the last war, as well as the amount they received in salaries for those same years. In 1941, the total number of people employed in the two shipyards—I only mention the two most important yards we have in the constituency of Levis, but there is a small one known as Davie Brothers, which however I shall not mention in so far as the statistics I am now submitting to the house are concerned—was 1,696, and they received $2,787,396.63 in salaries; in 1942, 3,673 workers were paid salaries of $6,484,448.23; in 1943, 5,069 employees earned $8,119,736.90; in 1944, 5,319 employees received $10,557,599.96 in salaries; and in 1945, 4,526 workers were paid salaries amounting to $9,241,605.15.

Mr. Speaker, I must point out that I have not mentioned the years 1939 and 1940 for which I have been unable to obtain accurate figures.

It has been intimated on various occasions that during the war all shipyards were naturally going at full capacity on account of the circumstances. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to quote other figures which will prove that the government's policy has enabled our workers to obtain employment involving good salaries. Here are the figures: in 1946, 1,584 workers were paid $3,325,468.72; in 1947, 2,599 employees earned $6,081,354.52; in 1948, 2,432 workers were paid $5,677,414.98. Thus, for the years 1941 to 1948, we have a grand total of $52,274,625.09 for salaries paid in the county of Levis alone, where there are but two shipyards.

On many occasions, the opponents of the Liberal government here have tried to spread among the public the notion that the Liberals were only giving assistance abroad. The figures I have just quoted show to what extent this government's policy was wise and that it has helped in making work available for thousands of our workers.

At the present time, our two shipyards, Davie Shipbuilding and George T. Davie & Sons, employ, according to the latest reports available, nearly 1,500 workers. Naturally this offers a contrast with the 5,500 who were employed by these companies in 1944, when the peak of employment was reached in our district. And today—as I said earlier, I am offering these remarks so as to get the ministers to grant more contracts in my constituency—the heads of those companies tell me that they still have work for a few months but that, failing other contracts in the near future, they will be compelled to reduce drastically the number of their employees.

You will readily realize, Mr. Speaker, what a disastrous effect this laying off of hundreds of workers would have upon the economy of our district, which depends almost exclusively on the operation of these shipyards for its living. It might also be proper to remind the house that these shipyards, as well as any other industry, necessarily need a minimum number of employees, without which they cannot operate normally.

For that reason, I must urge as strongly as possible, upon the ministers concerned, that they take the necessary steps to avoid the unfortunate situation which would prevail should the activities of these yards be further curtailed.

The hon. members will readily understand that these areas, where industry was intensely active during the war, are now in a precarious position owing to the rapid growth of their population during the war years.

As far as my own constituency is concerned, thousands of workers came for employment from all parts of the province of Quebec. These workers, having been employed five, six, seven and eight years, are now permanently established in our midst. I feel, therefore, that in all fairness, the governments, both provincial and federal, have the foremost duty of providing special assistance to the areas or constituencies affected.

I understand that it would be difficult, as far as shipbuilding is concerned, to have the same activity as during the war. On the one hand, in view of the fact that we need to replace many obsolete merchantmen, I feel it would be proper to begin replacing them now. On the other hand, I understand that the Department of National Defence intends to order several new ships for the Royal Canadian Navy. I hope that its program will be carried out without delay.

It would be disastrous to let our lack of interest or foresight jeopardize an industry in which the government invested millions of dollars during the war. We must also prevent our technical experts and skilled labour from going elsewhere or emigrating to the United States. I feel confident that the government will take the necessary steps to avoid such a disaster. A country like ours, which must export over 35 per cent of its production, can surely keep its industries in operation and should logically have a faster and more modern merchant navy to sustain the ruthless competition that exists in the field of shipping. It is therefore fitting, under the circumstances, to build new and better ships if Canada wishes to retain its leadership in this field.

According to the data I have obtained, Canada's exports by water, in 1947, amounted to the sum total of 18,001,435 tons. Canadian ships carried 19·9 per cent of these goods, British ships, 43·5 per cent, American ships 21 per cent and those of other countries, 15·6 per cent. In the same year, Canada's imports by water totaled 9,836,283 tons. Canadian ships carried 27·9 per cent of these goods, American ships, 45·9 per cent, British ships, 7·3 per cent and those of other countries, 18·9 per cent. I feel changes are in order if we wish our development to equal that of other countries in this regard.

I hope that in the legislation they intend to lay before the house, the government will include some solution to this shipbuilding problem, a major one not only in my constituency but in several others in practically every province. I understand that south of the border the government is helping this industry through a system of subsidies. I do not know that it is the ideal solution; at any rate this industry must be supported and helped somehow. We should also keep in mind that it could prove very useful and even essential in a national emergency.

Considering the acknowledged necessity of preserving this industry, I believe you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that from a psychological and social standpoint, it is much better that the government should give this industry direct or indirect assistance rather than pay millions of dollars in unemployment insurance benefits to employees made jobless by its closing.

There is also another matter to which I should like to refer briefly, since it was mentioned by my good friend and colleague from Simcoe East (Mr. Robinson) and is closely related to shipbuilding. This matter is steel. I hope that the government, as announced in the speech from the throne, will also help this basic industry so that our shipyards will not be delayed in fulfilling contracts they have already secured or might secure in the future.

While on this subject, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to draw most particularly the attention of the government of my province to the establishment of a steel industry in Quebec. We all know of the rich discoveries of high grade iron ore in New Quebec. According to studies made by two eminent professors of the science faculty of Laval university, this ore might be treated in electric ovens in our own province. It has been shown that we have the necessary water power to generate enough electricity to process over ten million tons of ore per year. I am confident that the provincial government will have enough foresight and patriotism to prevent such an economically promising industry from moving elsewhere. We would then become independent of foreign countries for the steel requirements of our present and future industries.

Mr. Speaker, since the budget is to be brought down earlier this year, I wish to take this opportunity of asking once again on behalf of my constituents that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) reduce taxes to an appreciable extent. As I pointed out in an earlier speech, I believe that the national debt burden incurred during the last war should not be borne entirely by the present generation but that a large part of it should be paid off by future generations who may have the good fortune—I sincerely hope so, at any rate—of enjoying better times than the years we are now living through. I would also ask him to be so good as to grant a special exemption this year to family men whose sons and daughters over the age of 21 are taking advanced courses in colleges or universities. During the war it could be alleged that such students could easily work their way through college but I believe that during the next and subsequent holidays—this is not a hope but merely a statement of fact—they may find it harder to get a job. As a rule it costs a college student an average of $1,000 a year for his keep and tuition. Therefore, I do not doubt that all members of this house, regardless of party, will support my suggestion and that the minister will comply with my request, because the loss in revenue which these exemptions would entail would be compensated by the valuable asset this country would acquire thanks to the training of an elite that would greatly contribute to this country's development.

Mr. Speaker, I would not like to bring my few remarks to a close without paying my humble tribute to the one who with such dignity directs the destinies of our party. Scornful of financial advantages which he might have gained through an active law practice, he has placed all his talents and energy at the disposal of his fellow countrymen. May I say, Mr. Speaker, in a spirit of true Canadianism, that all true Canadians are proud of him and are grateful for the sacrifices he has imposed upon himself in order to bring honour upon the racial group of which he is one of the worthiest sons.

On behalf of my constituency and in my own name, I wish to thank him and to tell him how much we admire him. I hope that divine Providence will grant him the health and the courage necessary to carry out his heavy responsibilities. His moral greatness will cause him to find his reward in the discharge of his duty. The history of our country will reckon him as a brilliant Prime Minister and a great Canadian.

(Text):

Mr. T. B. Barrett (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like, first of all, to conform to the usual practice of this house by paying a tribute to my friend the member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) and to our new confrere the member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers), the mover and seconder of the address. I should like also to extend my good wishes to the new members who are sitting with us for the first time this session, three of whom have brought a great deal of pleasure and gratification to the members of my own party. Finally, I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister, my own leader—who without doubt will be our next Prime Minister—and the new members of the cabinet.

From my observation there is another feature of this debate which seems to be traditional and that is for each member to refer to his own constituency as being more favored than any other place on earth. To a man taking an objective view of this thing, for instance one of the friends of the Minister of Justice from Tasmania, these contradictory claims would appear to be ridiculous. Looking at it another way, however, it might be due to the fact that:

> Such is the patriot's boast where'er we roam,
> His first, best country, ever is at home.

If, therefore, in the course of my remarks, I seem to imply that my constituency of Norfolk is particularly blessed and the most pleasant place in which to dwell, it can be taken to mean—it is just that for those of us who live there. If it were otherwise, we would no doubt move elsewhere.

Norfolk is not like that country, described in holy writ, whose rocks are iron and out of whose hills you could dig brass, although in the early days, I believe there was an iron mine there which provided iron for the first foundry in upper Canada. Ours is not a rocky land. Our hills are wooded and the slopes are gentle, making for easy cultivation. In other words, it is mainly a county of diversified agriculture. It is the heart of the great flue-cured tobacco-growing area where the bright-leafed Virginia tobacco is grown. We also have a great deal of the area devoted to fruit growing. Apples, peaches and many other types of fruit can be grown, and all of a quality unexcelled. Other areas are devoted to dairying and general farming.

In addition to this, there are many spots which are attractive to tourists, especially along the lake shore. Many years ago a forestry station was established in that part of the country by the Ontario government. It is a place of great beauty and interest to visitors as well as being an institution of great value. A great deal of marginal land has been reforested, not only by individuals but by municipal bodies as well, through the influence of this station. It is a great mecca for tourists from far and wide. Only this year two very enterprising men from Delhi established a restricted area for a game preserve on a tract of land which, until a few years ago, was wasted by erosion. They reforested that spot, dammed the stream, and stocked the forest with game and the stream with fish. Now that area is an attractive spot for tourists.

Bounded as the constituency is on the south by lake Erie and Long Point bay, we have an important fishing industry. In fact, Port Dover is the home port of the largest and best equipped fresh water fishing fleet in the world. Fishing and farming have many problems in common. Both are subject to uncontrollable and natural hazards in the way of weather and uncertainty of markets. Fishermen also have another problem and that is the uncertainty of the incidence of desirable species of fish from year to year.

The Ontario government, with the co-operation of the Ontario federation of commercial fishermen, is making an extensive study of this matter and is carrying on experiments. It is hoped that, with greater knowledge, many of these difficulties will be overcome. This, of course, is not the concern of this government. But I would point out that an extremely severe blow was dealt to the fishermen when the Canadian dollar was raised to parity with the United States dollar. Most of the catch is sold in United States markets, and the premium which the fishermen received on United States funds often meant the difference between a profit and a loss on the year's operations.

Another thing which is the concern of this government is the upkeep of the harbours and wharves along the lake. I have taken this matter up before in the house and I am happy to say that last year considerable work was done in the matter of dredging and repairs at Port Rowan harbour and Nanticoke harbour which lies east of my constituency. A couple of years ago in Port Dover harbour, some dredging was done which provided much-needed anchorage; but the wharf at Port Dover is in a deplorable and dangerous condition. I have mentioned this matter before. I do not intend to pursue the subject now, because I have had assurance from the minister that it will be looked after this year, and I am confident that it will be.

While I am on this subject, though, I should again like to bring to the attention of the government the matter of a ferry service between Port Dover and Erie, Pennsylvania. This is a matter of concern not only to my own constituents but to the cities and towns to the north of us in the Grand river valley, which are greatly interested. It would be a great boon to the tourist trade. It would provide a short route across the lake for the people in the thickly populated areas of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio. It would also provide a short route from Port Dover to a great many points in our own north country which holds such great attractions for the United States tourists.

In the opinion of the government there seems to be some physical handicap which makes prohibitive the cost of dredging for this purpose. I do not altogether subscribe to this view, but it is a debatable matter. I am inclined to think that the benefit which would accrue from this service would more than offset the cost. I understand, however, that the boards of trade of the cities and towns north of us, together with the Norfolk chamber of commerce, at the present time are looking into the possibility of overcoming this difficulty and of providing a harbour where such expensive dredging will not be necessary. I would at this time bespeak a sympathetic hearing for them when their survey is completed and they present their plans to the government.

I shall now turn to the agricultural side of the picture. I know that it is the opinion of a great many people in the country—and maybe even of some hon. members in this house—that the farmer is a chronic kicker, that he would not be satisfied even with the Garden of Eden, even if he did not have to pay any taxes. I myself do not subscribe to that view. From my observation, I do not think the farmer in this respect is any different from anybody else; and often his kicks may be far more warranted than those of others.

In the first place, the average farmer is not in the business for the purpose of making a great deal of money in a hurry. I am not arguing that some of them do not make money. At the present time, I think most of them are getting by fairly nicely. But they are farming because they like the kind of life farming provides. They like the independence and freedom of it. They do not want to be bossed around by somebody else. They want to run their own little show in their own way. They know that they must pay for this independence. They realize that they must derive their income from the sale of their goods in an open market. They realize that if they are efficient and industrious their return will be greater and that, if they are not, it will be less. They cannot go on strike and demand wages which will give them a standard of living to which they think they are entitled. They realize that this is part of the price they must pay for their independence, and I do not think they complain too much about it. What they complain of is the modern tendency to control and regulate them, to hold down the prices of their goods in order to provide cheap food for those people whose wages they are obliged to help to pay.

They know that the average farmer could probably take the money he could realize from the sale of his farm, equipment and stock, put it into some good security, go out and work for ordinary wages and make far more money, with far less work, than he can make by running his farm. I am not speaking of the specialized farmer, but rather of the average small farmer. Because he loves this independent life, he does not do that. Therefore anything that interferes with his independence is most annoying to him.

Another thing that is worrying him at the present time is the fact that he sees his markets slipping away; and he is extremely fearful that the prices for his products will drop at a much faster rate than will the prices of the things he must buy. He blames this government—and I think rightly so—for bringing this condition about.

There is another matter which makes the farmer see red, namely, the methods of the income tax department in collecting this tax. The average farmer does not object to paying his fair share of taxes; but when he receives a threatening letter, often followed up by an inspector who comes around and threatens him with heavy penalties for not filling in his income tax form for several years, he is not only worried but mad.

I was talking with one of those men only last fall. I shall not quote him verbatim—I wish I could. However, his language was most picturesque and lurid when he was referring to some of these men clothed with a little brief authority who had come pestering him to fill out these forms. As my colleague from London (Mr. Manross) pointed out this afternoon, the average farmer cannot begin to answer the hundred and one questions asked on these income tax forms. He may have a general idea as to whether he broke even in a certain year; but when he has to tell how many hens' necks he wrung, or how many shingles blew off his barn, or how many apples the old sow ate, he just throws up his hands in disgust. Then when he receives these threatening letters for not having filed his income tax, when he knows very well he was not taxable—and I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) will bear me out in this, because he has said that not one in a dozen of them is taxable—he can see no reason why he should be troubled in this way.

The man with whom I was speaking last fall told me he had received one of these letters. Speaking with me, he said, "I cannot answer those questions, and I am not going to try". I said, "Well, you should file a return; that is the law, and there are severe penalties for not complying with regulations". He said, "Well, they cannot fine me $25 a day, because I have not got $25. If they want to put me in jail all winter, and feed me, it is all right with me". But the majority of them do not take such a philosophical view of it.

There is another feature of the income tax regulations which has proved irksome, particularly to the European-born farmers in my constituency, of whom there are a great many. These are thrifty, industrious people, and very desirable citizens. It is due largely to their industry that the tobacco-growing business has become such a success in that area. They have transformed land which only a few years ago was practically worthless into what is now the most valuable land in the county, or probably in the province.

Their farming methods, however, are slightly different from those of the average Canadian farmer, because they operate in family groups. They draw up agreements among themselves, and while these are informal they are nevertheless binding. The agreements state that the sons, when they become old enough to work, will work with the fathers on the farms until they reach the age when they wish to get married or start working on farms of their own. The fathers will set them up with sufficient capital to start out on their own responsibility. The trouble they now have is that the income tax regulations provide for taxation not only of the farmer in respect of the income derived from his own labour, but also on that derived from the labour of the whole family. He feels that an allowance should be made by way of a deductible expense in respect of the wages they would have had to pay out if they had engaged outside help. Or, failing that, they should be allowed to file their returns on a partnership basis.

I understand that last year regulations were made providing that the only way they could take advantage of this partnership basis scheme was to have a written agreement, and to have it registered. The regulation was made only last year; but these inspectors and income tax authorities are trying to make it apply as far back as 1941. These are honest people; but they are not familiar with our ways; indeed, we do not understand these things ourselves. They are worried and upset, and they are disgruntled over the whole thing.

Another matter was brought to my attention recently. I refer to the procedure of bringing curers up from the southern states. The curing of tobacco is a technical operation and requires the services of men with great skill, if it is to be done properly. For many years it has been the practice of these growers to engage the same curers, year after year. Prior to the war, all a man did was to write or wire to his curer and give him the approximate date upon which their leaf would be ready to be brought into the kiln, at which time the curer would come and go through the ordinary regulations at the border, following which he would go to work.

During the war it was necessary of course to tighten up on the immigration regulations. As I understand it, the farmers here in Canada had to apply to the Department of Labour for permits to get these men. Then the permits had to be sent to the men themselves who, in turn, would have to take them to a county agent, or the equivalent in the southern United States, thus entailing a great deal of delay and red tape. A man often had to lose a day's working time—and their time is valuable—to comply with these regulations.

This procedure is still being carried on, and the growers feel that, now that the war is over, the regulations are not necessary. They are anxious to have them eliminated so that there may be a return to the old simplified system which obtained before the war. This delay often means that the curer either arrives several days before he is needed, and has to be paid these high rates of wages or, having to go through all these regulations, he may arrive a day or two late. This is almost as serious, because when the tobacco is ready to be harvested it has to be done at the right time, and taken to the kiln as soon as possible.

Another matter has been brought to my attention, and seems to be one worthy of consideration by the Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand). I refer to the bringing up to date of the rural mail delivery service. As we know, this service was inaugurated away back in the horse-and-buggy days, when there were very few good roads. In those days the mail was delivered by horse and cart, the chief idea being to serve the greatest number of farmers by the shortest possible route. At that time the average farmer received his mail only about once a week. Yet the delivery was a great boon. However, we have now advanced a long way since those days. Most of our roads in settled districts today are well surfaced. The mail is delivered by car and the farmers feel that they should have their mail delivered at their door or their gate. It would mean very little more by way of time and mileage to the driver, but would be of great convenience to the box-holder. Often a farmer has to walk a mile to get his mail. While that might be all right so far as exercise is concerned, the ordinary farmer really does not need exercise.

Another matter was dealt with at considerable length by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes). I refer to the poultry council. I am particularly interested in the requests made by this council because the chairman lives in my constituency. The council is made up, not only of poultry men but of hatchery men, feed men, processors and dealers. They have come together to try to solve the problems of the poultry industry. They were induced by the government to expand their business during the war and since in order to take care of the overseas contracts which entailed considerable investment, and now they are greatly worried because they see that the overseas markets are likely to be lost. I just want to bring this matter to the attention of the minister, who is conversant with the requests that have been made.

Another matter which my constituents have referred to me was dealt with quite fully by the hon. member for London (Mr. Manross). I refer to the incurables and blind. We all realize that the needy old must be looked after and I think everybody is quite satisfied that an adequate pension should be paid. But after all, old age in itself is not a calamity; it is something that we are all striving to attain to, and in the ordinary course of events we can provide for it. But, when fate strikes in the form of blindness or incapacity brought about by disease or accident, it is a terrifying disaster. If anyone deserves help and comfort and assistance, it is these people.

I have also had representations from the jewelers association in my constituency. I wrote to the minister and received the answer I expected to get, an answer which I realize was the only one he could give, that the matter would be taken into consideration. I should like to add to what has been said already on behalf of these men. The men who came to see me were principally young veterans who are trying to establish themselves in business. They find themselves severely handicapped by what they consider, and I think rightly consider, an unjust and discriminatory tax. They pointed out that other luxuries are not taxed, and also that many of the things in which they deal are not luxuries but must still pay this tax of twenty-five per cent. I recommend to the minister that the tax be abolished.

Finally, there is a group of people for whom we on this side of the house have pleaded on many occasions. I refer to the imperial veterans who are denied war veterans allowances. There are a few in my constituency and there are a small number spread all over Canada. It has always seemed to me to be hard and unreasonable that the department should not grant these men, who are past the age for heavy work—many of them are not able to work at all—and who have spent their most productive years in this country, this war veterans allowance. I know that certain technical excuses are made for not doing it, but I feel that they could be overcome. The amount of money entailed would be small when compared to the millions being spent by the government on other things. For example, the Department of Veterans Affairs puts out a periodical every month. It is a nice paper, but it is mainly to advertise the department. I think it could well be done away with, and the funds required now to publish it could be put to better purpose by providing for these old imperial veterans.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Wood Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because I feel that there are many important matters that the people of my constituency would wish me to bring to the attention of the house. There are many important matters affecting the Canadian people at the present time which need to be emphasized in this house. Since last session a number of changes have taken place in the personnel of this parliament. We have a new Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. St. Laurent) because the Liberal party had a convention and chose him as their leader. We have a new leader of the Conservative party in the house, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Drew).

But there are other changes that affect the people in some localities probably as much as the changes that have occurred in the leadership of these two parties.

As hon. members know, the constituency of Wood Mountain, along with the constituency of Weyburn, was wiped out by the redistribution last year. A new constituency of Assiniboia was formed from parts of the two old constituencies. I have the pleasure and the honour now to be the candidate in the new constituency of Assiniboia. As I have said, that constituency includes a large part of the present constituency of Weyburn. I am sure hon. members will agree with me when I say that the present member of parliament for Weyburn (Mr. McKay) and his predecessor, Hon. T. C. Douglas, now the premier of Saskatchewan, have both represented this constituency in a very excellent manner. My only hope is that, should I be successful in the election, I shall be able to represent this new constituency in the same way that Weyburn constituency has been represented in the past.

We have heard many speeches in this debate, and presumably we shall hear more. We have heard a number of speeches by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). We have heard a number of speeches by the various cabinet ministers on the government side of the house. We should realize that those speeches were made following recently held national conventions of those two parties. Neither the leader of the opposition nor any member of the government has yet stated what the respective policies of the two parties are on the main issues that face the Canadian people at this time. We do not know their agricultural program; we do not know their health program if they have one, except for the speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) the other day, which I believe depicted a totally inadequate program. We do not know their policy as to old age pensions, social security, and so forth.

In two of his main speeches in the house the leader of the opposition dealt with his stand during the dominion-provincial conferences. These conferences are now in the past, but the matters discussed at them are still important issues at the present time. At that time the federal government was asking the provincial governments to abandon the income tax, corporation tax and succession duty tax fields. In return a fixed minimum grant would be paid to the provinces, which grant might be increased, depending upon changes in population and the gross national production. I submit that of equal importance to the taxation proposals submitted at that conference were the proposals of the government for the implementation of a program of better health services and better old age pensions. While the conference broke up without agreement, the government has used that reason as a convenient excuse for not going forward with the social security program it placed before the conference at that time.

I want to point out that, out of ten governments assembled at that conference, eight were in agreement, seven of the provinces and the federal government. I was sorry at that time to see the present leader of the opposition, then the premier of Ontario, and the present premier of Quebec, Mr. Duplessis, would not come to an agreement with the federal government—not that their not having come to an agreement should make any real difference. But the fact that they did not agree has given the government a convenient alibi, though not a very good one, for not proceeding with its social security program.

It was stated by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. J. L. Ilsley, that the federal government wanted to maintain certain taxation fields—the amusement tax field, the gasoline tax field and the pari-mutuel tax field. He said that the fact that the provinces wanted the federal government to get out of those fields entirely was one reason why the conference broke down. However, since that time the government has withdrawn of its own volition from those particular fields. The retention of those taxation fields in 1946 by the federal government helped impede an agreement, but since then the government itself has abandoned them.

In 1946 the Minister of Finance announced that separate agreements would be signed with the provinces. As a part of the conditions of those agreements, the signing provinces agreed to levy a 5 per cent corporation tax in addition to the federal government's corporation tax, but the agreeing provinces would have the amount collected by way of the 5 per cent tax within their provinces deducted from the amount of their annual grants. This provision does not therefore affect the agreeing provinces in any way, but it means that the province of Ontario can charge a corporation tax of 5 per cent, and the corporations within the province of Ontario are no worse off than in other provinces because the Ontario government levies a tax of that amount.

The same thing applies to the succession duty field. Any non-agreeing province may levy a succession duty of 50 per cent of the federal tax, and people paying succession duties may have that deducted from their federal succession duty tax. This means that the federal government offered to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec revenues to an extent that would make it possible for them not to sign the agreement. I think the federal government did that for a purpose. They were not interested, in reality, in implementing the proposed social security program. Therefore they made it possible for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to remain financially solvent and thus find it unnecessary to sign the agreement.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked the leader of the opposition, at page 459 of Hansard, whether or not his party believed in a contributory plan of over-all social security, and there was no answer to that question. Today the people of Canada want to know where the official opposition stands with regard to a social security program. In spite of the fact that they had a convention not many months ago they are not telling the country what they propose to do. At the time of the conference the federal government also said that they had a vast shelf of public works projects ready which could be launched the moment there was unemployment in Canada. Today there are almost 200,000 persons in Canada obtaining unemployment insurance benefits, and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) stated not so long ago in the house that the shelf of construction projects would only employ a little more than 40,000 people within a year. There are 200,000 unemployed in Canada today, and the government has a program for the employment of 40,000. I submit that shows that the government either cannot or will not face up to its responsibility, and is not prepared to meet a depression if and when it comes.

Mr. Knowles: Put the government on the shelf.

Mr. Argue: I believe the people of Canada will put this government on the shelf, and I think the government knows it.

Mr. Gillis: Don't take off a dirty pair of socks and put on a dirtier pair.

Mr. Argue: I was interested in the speech the other day by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). You know, I like the minister; he seems to have a big heart, and when he tells a story he tells a pretty tall one. It was a very tall story he told parliament the other day. He spoke of the vast amounts of money being made available for a health program in this country. Well, let us see what sums of money are being spent on health, not what the minister stated or appeared to state were being spent but the amounts shown in answers tabled in the house today in reply to questions placed on the order paper by the leader of this group (Mr. Coldwell).

On May 14 of last year the then Prime Minister announced that $30 million was being made available for a health program during the present fiscal year. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that the government which announced that $30 million health program last year is the same government that said in 1945, "We have $150 million that we will spend on a complete health program for the people of Canada." They waited from 1945 to 1948; then instead of announcing a $150 million program they announced a $30 million program, thereby carrying out twenty per cent of their undertaking to the people of Canada. But the $30 million, though little enough, would be helpful if the people could have any assurance that they were going to get it this year.

Some hon. members make a great point of the government spending by order in council money which has not been voted by parliament, and every member of this group condemns that practice. This government is continuing the practice in connection with its health program. Order in council P.C. 3409 of July 28, 1948, allocates among the provinces the $4,395,000 voted by parliament for general health grants on the basis of the 1947 intercensal population estimate; and the order in council sets forth the amounts of money that will be made available to each province. But the total amount made available to all nine provinces by that order in council is $300 more than the amount approved by this house. Here is another example of the government authorizing the expenditure of money in excess of that voted by parliament. Such a practice cannot be too strongly condemned.

Then there is another order in council, P.C. 5504 of November 30, 1948, amending P.C. 3403 of July 28, 1948. In that order in council the $13 million for hospital construction is divided among the provinces in proportion to their population according to the 1947 intercensal population estimate. That is a fair enough basis for dividing this money; but only one of the provinces has yet had approved anything near the total amount made available by that order in council. I refer to the province of Quebec. That order in council makes available to Quebec a hospital construction grant of $3,842,650. But lo and behold; in reply to the question of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), the minister says that instead of $3,842,650 having been approved, the grand total is $5,427,552. Somebody is approving grants to the province of Quebec for the construction of hospitals far in excess of the amount allocated by parliament and apportioned by order in council. This gives to Quebec 142·7 per cent of its share of that hospital grant. New Brunswick has had approved absolutely nothing. The province of Saskatchewan has allocated to it the magnificent total of 1·1 per cent of the grants approved by the order in council. Up to February 28, 1949, the total amount made available and paid to the provinces for purposes of hospital construction was $1,194,693.15. A few days ago in the house the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that approval of grants had been given for the construction of 6,401 hospital beds which, on the basis of the money so far made available to the provinces, is at the rate of $186 per approved hospital bed. At the time the statement was made last year as to the government's program, the house was told that $1,000 would be made available per hospital bed for the treatment of ordinary cases and $1,500 per hospital bed for the treatment of chronic and convalescent cases. Surely what has been done is far short of an adequate health program.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the $30 million approved by parliament last session, if it is to be available this year must be spent before March 31. Eleven months of the fiscal year have passed and we have one month to go. In the eleven months that have passed the minister has spent only $2,086,957.29. In 1945 this government said to the people of Canada, "We have ready a program which will give you $150 million for health services". They waited until 1948 before doing anything, and then cut the $150 million to $30 million. Then they waited until now and, with only one month left in the present fiscal year, the $30 million has become $2 million. I say that kind of deal for health services is wholly inadequate.

If the government had initiated its complete health program, the province of Saskatchewan, which has attempted to go forward with a hospital program of its own, would have found the cost of that program very much less. Today families in Saskatchewan must pay for hospital services up to a maximum of $30 per family, but if the federal government had implemented its promise to the people of Canada the $30 could be cut by sixty per cent or from $30 to $12. The people of Saskatchewan want a health program but they are getting little help from this government.

[Mr. Argue.]

This government, Mr. Speaker, has done very little in the way of providing adequate health services and has done almost nothing by way of providing adequate pensions, but it is still collecting enormous income taxes from many poor people. Imagine the exemption today being as low as $750 for a single man and $1,500 for a married man. These exemptions were first applied on January 1, 1947, more than two years ago. The exemptions have not been increased within that time, yet the cost of living has increased from 127 to 159·6. There has been an increase of 32·6 points in the cost of living within the last two years, but the government maintains the same income tax exemptions that it applied two years ago.

The income tax, Mr. Speaker, is a heavy burden on farmers, on workers, and on small businessmen alike. The average person cannot live decently and buy the necessities of life when the exemption from income tax is as low as it is at present. The C.C.F. group believes the exemption should be increased to at least $1,250 for a single person and $2,500 for a married man.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to a discussion of the government's wheat program. No member from the prairies can do his duty in this house if he does not bring before parliament the thoughts of his constituents about this most important commodity. The British agreement has been receiving a lot of abuse. The Conservative party has now come out for the opening of the Winnipeg grain exchange and for a dual system of marketing grain. One would think, from their speeches, Conservatives had nothing to do with the wheat agreement, that they had condemned it wholly and completely from the start. The present member for Neepawa (Mr. Bracken), then leader of the Conservative party, said, referring to the wheat agreement in this house on August 14, 1946, as recorded at page 4811 of Hansard:

> Any agreement such as this which tends to level out the inequalities, and the wide fluctuation of prices in the past, is a step in the right direction.

That is what he said about the agreement, that it was a step in the right direction. The members of this group supported that agreement. We shall always support, Mr. Speaker, commodity agreements between governments for the sale of agricultural products, but we say now, as our leader said at that time, that the farmers of Canada should be given parity prices. An international agreement for wheat, amongst other advantages, is one very effective instrument for closing the Winnipeg grain exchange. You can talk to any farmer in the west and you do not have to go into a long discussion about the advantages or disadvantages of the grain exchange. He will tell you very quickly that he has always been skinned when selling his grain by that method in the past and he does not want it now. And he will not want it at any time in the future.

On motion of Mr. Argue the debate was adjourned.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the acting leader of the government what the business tomorrow will be?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will continue with this debate.

At 10.30 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on February 22, 1949.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 4, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

Mr. KARL HOMUTH

WELCOME TO MEMBER FOR WATERLOO SOUTH ON HIS RETURN AFTER SERIOUS ILLNESS

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West): Mr. Speaker, the house frequently takes time to pay tribute to one of its members who has died. This day I should like to pay tribute to one of its members who has refused to die.

The presence here today of my deskmate, the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth), is a tribute not only to Canadian surgery, but also to a great and fighting heart.

HOUSING

INTEGRATED PLAN—STATEMENT AS TO MODIFICATIONS

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, February 24, I advised the house that the integrated housing plan was under review in the hope that some modified form could be arrived at to overcome certain difficulties which had occurred in isolated cases during 1948. For reasons which I will mention, no applications for integrated housing contracts have been accepted since December 31, 1948. It has now been decided, however, to proceed with the plan, with certain changes.

The integrated housing plan was developed in 1945 to encourage builders to construct moderate-priced houses for sale to veterans. Under the plan the builder entered into an agreement with the corporation by which he agreed to build a specified number of houses of a certain type or types, and to offer them for sale to veterans at or under the maximum selling price set out in the agreement.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for its part agreed to arrange priority assistance for the builder, and to purchase any house that he was unable to sell to a prospective house owner, at a price which would cover the estimated costs of construction and the cost of the land upon which it was built.

The agreement required that the builder should finance the construction of his houses by loans under the National Housing Act. Thus the plan consisted of an agreement between the contractor and the corporation, which refers only to the sale price to the purchasers and the corporation's commitment to repurchase. On the strength of the agreement, the builder obtained the financing from lending institutions who were doing business under the National Housing Act.

More than 13,000 units have been undertaken under the plan, and almost all of those completed have been sold. We have acquired under our repurchase commitment forty-three housing units, as of the end of the year. Despite the fact that the plan has for the most part gone well, there has been adverse criticism because of the fact that some veterans —about one hundred in all—have been in danger of losing down payments made to the builder, or have had to pay higher prices than contemplated by reason of the contractor being unable to complete the house because he experienced financial difficulties. The plan is in essence a price-fixing arrangement, and there is no direct contact between the purchaser and the corporation. Nevertheless some purchasers have relied on an assumption that the agreement between the builder and the corporation would give them protection, and have not taken normal precautions in their dealings with the builders. While there is nothing in the arrangement that justifies this assumption, the government feels that it would not be prudent to proceed with the plan without taking steps to correct this situation by reducing the possibility of its recurrence and making provision for remedial action where failure does occur in the future. To accomplish this purpose I believe that contractors should not accept down payments before completion of the house, or alternatively, that down payments accepted before completion of the house and its delivery to the prospective purchaser should be trusteed. In addition a provision must be included which will permit the corporation to obtain control of the property as soon as difficulties of the kind mentioned occur, so that remedial action may be taken.

Because of the foregoing, and because it is desired to have the integrated plan proceed, the following modifications will be made:

(a) Provision will be made in the integrated agreement that sales shall not be finalized until the house is at least ninety per cent completed.

(b) That down payments by the purchaser shall be placed in trust immediately by the contractor until the completion of the sales transaction and the delivery of possession to the purchaser.

(c) That in support of his application for mortgage advances the builder shall produce paid bills for construction materials that have gone into the house, or lien waivers from the suppliers of such materials.

(d) That the builder shall deliver to the corporation, when the house has reached the first-floor joist stage of construction, a conveyance of the property, to be held by the corporation until a sale has been arranged to a prospective house owner, or until the property is taken over by the corporation under its commitment to purchase it from the builder. This will give the corporation effective control of the property during the period of construction.

(e) Because most builders rely upon down payments, now to be trusteed, for working capital, the corporation shall advance to the builder at the time it gets the conveyance—that is, at the first-floor joist stage of construction—the difference between the loan under the National Housing Act and the sale price to the corporation. This amounts to approximately half the down payment that will be made by the purchasers. This sum will be recovered by the corporation from the builder on sale of the property to the prospective house owner.

The arrangement which I have outlined introduces a number of new features which are restrictive to builders, and we have not yet received the reaction of the trade. Accordingly we will again review the plan as to its manner of working and in the light of the veteran demand for houses under it.

Mr. Lockhart: May I ask the minister one question? He has completely overlooked any mention of inspection.

Mr. Chevrier: Where is the question?

Mr. Lockhart: Now, don't get in the mood you were in yesterday.

Mr. Chevrier: The mood was on the other side, not on this side.

Mr. Lockhart: I should like to know if the matter of inspection is covered, because the minister knows that some serious things have happened in my district. Is inspection being looked after?

Mr. Winters: The same conditions with respect to inspection prevail.

Mr. Johnston: May I ask the minister a further question in that regard?—because this serious condition has prevailed for some time. I thank the minister for the statement he has made, outlining the revision of the plan, but I should like to know whether the new arrangement will apply to buildings now under construction under the integrated plan.

Mr. Winters: If the down payment has already been made to the contractor, this arrangement cannot be effective.

Mr. Johnston: Was it contemplated that assistance would be available under this housing plan where a builder should find himself in difficulty? Is any arrangement being made to protect him?

Mr. Winters: All these cases are under review, such as that of the Bow River Construction Company in Calgary.

Mr. Timmins: Will the minister state how many applications by builders have been made in connection with integrated housing since the department stopped accepting applications?

Mr. Winters: I cannot answer that question now.

CAMP HILL HOSPITAL

REFERENCE TO QUESTION AS TO CONTRACT FOR ALTERATIONS TO ANNEX

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Yesterday the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure) asked the following question, as reported on page 1093 of Hansard:

> I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, or the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Were public tenders called for the alterations to Camp Hill hospital annex at Halifax, and if so, when, and what was the contractor's price?

Public tenders were called at the beginning of 1945, and were received on April 18, 1945. The following are the bids that were made:

E. G. M. Cape and Company Limited	$1,934,921
Fundy Construction Company, Halifax ...	1,991,000
Nova Scotia Construction Company	2,133,600
Foundation Maritime Limited	2,192,837

On May 15 the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, E. G. M. Cape and Company Limited.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. To those of us who come from the farthest parts of the country the date and length of the Easter recess may be of greater interest than they are to those who are privileged to go home over the week ends. In view of the variety of opinion expressed in the press as to the possible length of the recess, is the Prime Minister in position to let us in on the secret?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There is no secret about it. I have been talking to the whip on our side, and he tells me that he has been discussing the matter with various members but finds that there is perhaps as great a divergence of opinion as there is in the newspaper stories. No decision has been arrived at, but it does seem to me that we have to choose between a short recess at Easter, perhaps from Good Friday to Easter Monday, and one that would give hon. members from all parts of the country an opportunity to go home if they saw fit to do so, thus necessitating a recess of a couple of weeks.

I think if we are to have the longer recess it might be just as well to take both the week before Easter and Easter week. In any event they are both only partial weeks. Such a recess would give hon. members from all parts of the country time to get to their respective homes and have a few days there before being required to come back. The choice between the alternatives will probably have to depend upon what progress we can make in the meantime, because the business of parliament will have to be discharged. I hope we shall have made such progress that the longer recess will appear to be justified, not only to ourselves but to the public.

TRADE WITH BRITAIN

REPORTED DECLARATION OF WHEAT AS SURPLUS IN UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. Church (Broadview): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) a question. Has the government any statement to make on the recent report by Charles F. Brennan, secretary of agriculture in President Truman's cabinet, that he was declaring wheat a surplus commodity in the United States under the European recovery program? What reduction will it make in—or will it eliminate entirely—Marshall plan dollars for the purchase in Canada of non-American wheat? How will it affect Canada?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Information did come to us this morning, although not officially, about this statement by the secretary of agriculture in the United States that wheat was surplus. We were somewhat disturbed about it, although it would appear that the appropriations being urged upon congress at the present time for United States dollars in aid of the recovery of the United Kingdom are not being reduced.

Of course those United States dollars are important, perhaps essential, to the recovery of the United Kingdom; but they are only a portion of the dollars the United Kingdom government has for its requirements abroad It may be that it is more important to the United Kingdom that the number of United States dollars under ERP remain the same than it is to have them attributed to any special commodity.

I hope that whatever is done will not affect the capacity of the United Kingdom to carry out those contracts it has made with us, both for 1948-49 and for 1949-50. It should not affect the capacity of the United Kingdom to carry out those contracts if the same number of ERP dollars is available to pay for part of the requirements of commodities the United Kingdom must import.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the government consider making a statement to the house, as requested by me some time ago, as to ways and means of increasing British exports to Canada, in order that Great Britain may have the dollars to meet her needs for the commodities which we have to sell?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): If I may reply to the question, I had it in mind to speak on that question in this debate, because it has been raised on a number of occasions. I had intended to outline to the house the numerous ways in which for a number of years past Canada has made special efforts to encourage the importation of United Kingdom goods. I am not prepared to say whether I will do that in this debate or at a later stage—possibly in the course of my budget remarks. But I want to make the statement now: there is no real impediment to the importation of British goods into Canada, other than the difficulty which, understandably, the United Kingdom is experiencing in expanding her production of goods which we require, and placing them in the Canadian market at competitive prices.

Mr. Coldwell: What about the non-discriminatory clause of the Geneva agreement?

Mr. Hackett: At competitive prices.

Mr. Abbott: I said that.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Thursday, March 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Wood Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose last night I had been dealing with a number of subjects, one of which was the policy of the government in respect to improving health facilities throughout Canada. I had referred to a number of orders in council that had been passed by the government. One particular order in council provided for an increase—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must say to hon. members that there is so much noise in the house that the hon. member who has the floor cannot be heard.

Mr. Argue: One of those orders in council authorizes an expenditure of money in excess of the amount appropriated by parliament. Such a practice cannot be too strongly condemned. Another order in council divided the appropriation for hospital construction grants among the provinces according to the population of the province based on the 1947 intercensal estimates. Of the total of $13 million available, that basis of division gave $3,842,650 to the province of Quebec; but, according to answers tabled yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), the province of Quebec has had approved not $3,842,650 but $5,427,552. I do not object to the province of Quebec getting that sum of money if it is voted by parliament. I would support such a move, but I do object to the government's approving for hospital construction in any province an amount of money larger than the amount approved by parliament and allocated by order in council.

I should like to refer to another part of the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in which I think he was attempting to take unto himself and the government a great deal more credit than they deserve. On page 839 of Hansard he said:

> I feel I may say that the new energy put into research by the national cancer institute and the national health program brings the money available for health research this year to an all-time record of more than $1,250,000.

Last session the government asked parliament to approve for health research an amount of only $100,000. Of the $100,000, up until the end of the first eleven months of the present fiscal year only $5,850 had been spent. The minister is shaking his head, but if he will look at the return that was tabled yesterday he will see that is correct. I have it in my hand, and it shows that the total spent for public health research is something less than $6,000. With an expenditure of less than $6,000, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is attempting to take credit for an expenditure of more than one and a quarter million dollars for health research. I submit that the whole speech of the minister was a gross exaggeration when dealing with the government's supposed accomplishments.

I also discussed to some extent last night the wheat policy of the government, and I was about to refer to the stand taken by the leader of the C.C.F. group, the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), when the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement was being debated in the house. I quote from page 4825 of Hansard of August 15, 1946:

> I believe the government would be well advised to consider this suggestion: that, in the event of the costs of production rising for the next few years, as they will do largely because of the government's failure to maintain the ceilings, any difference there may be between what the farmer receives for his wheat and the increased cost of production should be made up out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Costs of production were much lower in August 1946 than they are today. The general wholesale price index, which is the index of the prices of all commodities, was 109·3 at that time. The index for January 1949 is up to 159·3, an increase of 50 points. The C.C.F. group believes that a compensatory payment should be made to farmers, and if it is made on the basis of the increase of 50 points in the wholesale index, then farmers should be given at least an additional payment of 71 cents a bushel.

Our farmers believed that when the price for the last year of the wheat agreement was being discussed a figure would be decided upon taking into consideration the "have regard" clause, the clause which says that towards the end of the contract a figure for the last year will be arrived at which will take into consideration whether or not the prices in the first years of the contract were below world prices. We shall soon be facing a general election. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) knows very well that the most important issue in the prairie provinces in any election is the question of wheat prices. If he expected to obtain a substantial payment on account of the "have regard" clause, I think an announcement would already have been made. I submit that the "have regard" clause amounts to very little, and possibly will amount to nothing—not through any fault of the British, because Britain cannot pay dollars she does not possess. I say, however, that the government should have regard to the farmers of Canada, and because of the "have regard" clause in the contract the government should see to it that the farmers receive a fair price for their wheat, a price in accordance with world prices that have prevailed for the duration of the contract.

I was sorry to hear the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in which I understood him to state that wheat was being declared a surplus commodity in the United States. I am afraid this action may place our whole British market in jeopardy. As I have understood it from press reports in the past, as soon as any agricultural product is declared surplus in the United States, ERP dollars cease to be available for the purchase of that commodity in any country other than the United States. If that policy is followed I am afraid our whole wheat market is in serious danger.

Another question of deep concern to the people of the prairies is the adoption of a scheme which will adequately protect them in time of crop failure. At every session since I became a member of parliament I have asked for changes in the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which would make payments available on an individual basis. The government surely know that under the present act many farmers are discriminated against, though in fact they have crop failures, because they cannot come within the provisions of the act. One farmer may have a complete crop failure, but because the farmers around him had good crops he cannot qualify for the prairie farm assistance payments. I have received a number of complaints about this legislation in the past, but this session I had a new one. Farmers in a particular township where the yield was just over eight bushels per acre complained that other surrounding townships received prairie farm assistance payments, but that since none of the townships directly alongside them qualified, they were unable to qualify under the act. These farmers pointed out that townships diagonally across from them received the payments, and that portions of townships alongside them were declared within the bonus area, but they were excluded. Therefore while blocks of other townships in the immediate vicinity were brought under the provisions of the act, the farmers in the particular township of which I speak could not qualify for these crop failure payments.

The whole act needs to be completely revised. There have been many inequalities in the past, and there will be many more in the future if the act is not completely overhauled so that payments may be made on an individual basis. Only in this way can fairness and equity be brought about. On the basis of present prices and costs of production the maximum payment of $2.50, even if it is obtained, is far short of being sufficient to provide the farmer with enough money to carry on his operations. Again this session, as I have done at every previous session since I first came here, I urge that the payment should be increased from a maximum of $2.50 an acre to at least $6, and that payments should be on an individual basis.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that my time has expired. There are many other problems I should have liked to discuss, but I shall deal with them at another time.

Mr. Thomas Reid (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, while there are other matters I wish to deal with, I should like first of all to make some comment on the remarks made by the last speaker, the hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue). Last evening, just as he was beginning to deal with the national health program, I came into the chamber from a conference; I listened intently to what he had to say; I read his remarks carefully in Hansard, and I have listened this afternoon. I cannot help coming to the conclusion that he must be so much interested in the new riding he is going to contest that he has been blind to the actual facts of the case.

Mr. Argue: Then you tell me.

Mr. Reid: Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are to be any interruptions, let me in on the free-for-all; I think I can take care of myself.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): And everyone else.

Mr. Reid: You know that, too. Not only was the hon. member for Wood Mountain eager to condemn and criticize the dominion government; he is one of the few men belonging to that party who by his remarks has actually condemned the government of the province of Saskatchewan, as I shall prove very shortly.

In his remarks this afternoon the hon. member covered somewhat the same ground that he covered yesterday. You know, Mr. Speaker, that doctrine came from Europe; if you tell a certain kind of story often enough and loudly enough you will get some people to believe it. Perhaps that is why the hon. member went over the same ground this afternoon.

When he began his remarks yesterday the hon. member uttered one of those left-handed compliments which really looks like a compliment until you get the rest of it, and then you see it is really a kick in the pants for the one he is speaking about. He said he liked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin); then he went on to refer to the minister's statement in the house last week as a tall story. Well, I can tell you that it was a story of accomplishment by the dominion government, a statement of actual facts; and I think that any fair-minded man reading the speech of the minister would agree that he was careful to give every bit of credit possible to the various provincial governments for what they have done in the matter of health. I do not think it is fair to say the minister was taking glory to himself.

The hon. member said that the $30 million health program had been in effect for eleven months. That is the first error in mathematics I am going to correct. The $30 million was approved on June 30, 1948; and why a member of parliament would rise in his place and deliberately say it had been in effect for eleven months, when any schoolboy of eight or more would know it was not eleven months from June 30 to the beginning of March, is something I cannot understand.

That was the first misstatement. Then the hon. member went a little further and tried the old trick we have seen before of setting one province against another. He mentioned the province of Quebec and what it is getting, but there again he was all wrong. If he had been more careful and not so biased, with his mind made up to simply damage and criticize the government, he might have noticed the difference between allotment and expenditure. Under the new national health program introduced and being carried out under the able administration of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the allotment for hospitals is on a cumulative basis. This enables any provincial government to come forward with a one or even five year hospital scheme if that is their desire; but no provincial government will receive more at the end of five years than it is entitled to under the national health program.

To make the statement that the province of Quebec has got away with more money than the province of Saskatchewan is untrue, Mr. Speaker, in the light of the actual facts. If the hon. member was not aware of it, he should have been.

Mr. Argue: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Reid: I do not mind answering questions. I know the hon. member was making a speech for the backwoods last night, so I kept quiet.

Mr. Argue: You can't take it.

Mr. Reid: I can take anything you can ask.

Mr. Argue: If the parliamentary assistant does not want to answer a question, I shall not press it.

Mr. Reid: Let us have the question. I hope it is a sensible one.

Mr. Argue: Is the parliamentary assistant aware of the fact that the minister stated on page 835 of Hansard that projects had been approved for the province of Quebec to the amount of one hundred per cent of this year's grant, when in fact the projects approved amounted to more than one hundred and forty per cent?

Mr. Reid: I have not that copy of Hansard before me. I do know, however, that if the minister so stated, it is correct. I repeat that what the hon. member stated is not correct.

Coming back to the province of Saskatchewan, it surprised me a little to listen to a member of the C.C.F. group condemn his own province. Is any member of this house going to insist that the dominion government, under the national health program, should go to every province, prodding the authorities and ask them if they will come under that program? Under the British North America Act, health and education are entirely within the provincial prerogative. Not having reached an agreement with the provinces, the provinces might have had to wait, but under the new plan the dominion government has gone far in an endeavour to assist the provinces. Wherever it appeared to be necessary, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been good enough to send efficient officers to the various provinces to explain the dominion scheme to them.

Everyone who knows anything about what is happening in Saskatchewan must give the authorities and the people of Saskatchewan a great deal of credit for what has been accomplished in the matter of hospitalization and social services. I say that in all fairness. The province from which I come is endeavouring to emulate what has been done in Saskatchewan, because we believe a fair standard has been set by that province. It is true that according to the table appearing at page 1087 of Hansard, Saskatchewan has only received 1·1 per cent of the hospital construction grant. This is simply due to the difficulties experienced by that province, as well as other provinces, in sending in accounts for projects. This table reveals the exact picture of the projects that had reached the hands of the minister at the time it was made up.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask the parliamentary assistant a question? Is it not a fact that the province of Saskatchewan completed so many projects at its own expense that it is now being discriminated against because it cannot get part of this grant?

Mr. Reid: The question of discrimination in hospital grants is a matter of debate. For instance, under the national health program there is $30 million available, and there is an allotment for the various schemes, as the leader of the C.C.F. knows. He may argue, as some do, that in Saskatchewan more hospitals have been built than in most of the other provinces, and that the province is therefore unable to reap the benefits of the scheme as other provinces are able to do. Would the hon. member say that Saskatchewan has reached the ultimate with regard to hospital construction and hospital beds?

Mr. Coldwell: No.

Mr. Reid: I do not think he would. I am merely pointing out, to the member who made the derisive remarks last evening about the dominion government's scheme, that all the government can do after providing the $30 million is to hope that the provinces will come forward and accept these grants as quickly as possible.

Today I have received a copy of a telegram from the province of Saskatchewan. If the table presented by the minister were presented next week, it would show that twenty-eight additional hospital projects have now been approved by the Department of National Health and Welfare. These projects were approved only the other day. It would also show that a cheque for $234,000 had been sent to the province of Saskatchewan, which would materially alter the schedules we produced in Hansard. I am bringing this fact to the attention of the house, because I believe the member for Wood Mountain, wittingly or unwittingly, overlooked the fact that there is a difference in the schedule, as anyone could see who turned the page to the table showing commitments and expenditures. Commitments are one thing, expenditures are another. But is any member of parliament going to say that the dominion government should hand over money before the province is entitled to it? It would be a most unfair thing if the government were to hand out funds before the projects were approved and expenditures made.

Mr. Gillis: What about New Brunswick? It drew a zero.

Mr. Reid: That is another story. We are hoping that not only New Brunswick but the other provinces which have not yet reached a high scale of health facilities will be encouraged and enabled under the $30 million program to bring up the standards of health of their people.

Mr. Gillis: I did not mean that as sarcasm. I merely wanted the explanation.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, two or three statements have been made about hospital schemes not being adopted in my province. I do know that schemes are being considered in many parts of the province, and in my own constituency a project is being considered which calls for the building of a hospital that will cost nearly a million dollars.

Mr. Brooks: One of the reasons is that we need a new health department in New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I take advantage of this occasion to suggest to hon. members that it would be fair to allow the hon. member for New Westminster to speak for more than forty minutes, because of the interruptions that have occurred.

Mr. Reid: In answer to the last member who spoke, I may say that I can find little fault with what is happening in New Brunswick. Judging from the information which I have received, it is my opinion that the minister of health in that province and his deputy are among the finest in Canada.

I now come back to where I left off regarding misstatements made by the hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue), and point out to him that it was not eleven months. It was only eight months.

Mr. Argue: Eleven months of the fiscal year.

Mr. Reid: Yes, but that is a cute way to put it for the people in the backwoods, Mr. Speaker. All hon. members know that it is put out for the consumption of the men in the backwoods. It was eight months of the fiscal year. We were setting up a program.

Mr. Coldwell: Saskatchewan is not in the backwoods.

Mr. Gardiner: Saskatchewan was under a good Liberal government for a long time.

Mr. Coldwell: We shall talk about that at some other time.

Mr. Reid: He is just a little wrong in his arithmetic, because on page 1136 of Hansard he said:

> Up to February 28, 1949, the total amount made available and paid to the provinces for purposes of hospital construction was $1,194,693.15. A few days ago in the house the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that approval of grants had been given for the construction of 6,401 hospital beds which, on the basis of the money so far made available to the provinces, is at the rate of $186 per approved hospital bed. At the time the statement was made last year as to the government's program, the house was told that $1,000 would be made available per hospital bed for the treatment of ordinary cases and $1,500 per hospital bed for the treatment of chronic and convalescent cases. Surely what has been done is far short of an adequate health program.

This is a gross misrepresentation of fact. The hon. member has divided money actually paid out by the number of hospital beds approved, instead of dividing the amount of construction approved by the number of beds approved, which would mean about $1,000 and not "$186 per approved hospital bed."

Mr. Argue: How many beds?

Mr. Coldwell: That was not clear in the return.

Mr. Reid: These are facts, Mr. Speaker. A proverb in the country from which I come says, "Facts are chiels that winna ding".

I think I have covered most of the statements made by the hon. member in his criticism of the dominion program of national health. I spoke of the $30 million program; He however chides the government for offering a $150 million program in 1945, and then he says that all we got was $30 million. I think every hon. member is aware—but again the man in the backwoods might not be aware of it—that there were two provinces which would not agree. The hon. member told us that in his speech. Having stated that, he keeps on saying that all we got was $30 million. I agree that, until we got the nine provinces to agree, the offer made in 1945 could not be carried out because health and education are two matters within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. Argue: Offer separate agreements.

Mr. Reid: When the dominion government found itself up against the impossibility of reaching an agreement with all the provinces, should it have sat down and done nothing? Should it have said, "Well, we cannot do a thing about it until all the provinces agree"? No. The dominion government, realizing that it had an interest in national health, and that many municipalities were in need of assistance, made available $30 million. But they could not go to the provinces and tell them that they must do this and that, but they did the next best thing. The sum of $30 million was appropriated under certain definite agreements, of course. Every inducement has been offered to the provinces to take advantage of the $30 million; I can say without fear of successful contradiction that there has been an uplift already in the health services of the people of this country since the inauguration of the new health plan.

I think I have pretty well covered the remarks made by the hon. member, but I want to repeat, as he repeated in his statement, that it is a little unfortunate that he takes a left-handed crack at the province from which he comes, because that province is having some difficulties, as are some of the other provinces, in the matter of commitments, expenditures and finances. When he says that Saskatchewan has allocated to it the magnificent total of 1·1 per cent and that Quebec has received a great deal more, I say that he has done his province a great injustice.

Mr. Argue: Nonsense.

Mr. Reid: Yes, a great injustice.

I wish to deal with one or two other matters before I take my seat. This is my nineteenth session in the House of Commons. I have sat under three Prime Ministers, two leaders of the Liberal party, and six leaders of the Progressive Conservative party. There is no doubt that the house has taken on a little more life this session; some say it is because it is a pre-election year. That may be so; but it has taken on some life because of the fact that we have two new leaders in the house. I am not going to criticize the many statements made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), except to say that he comes into the house at a little disadvantage when compared with the present Prime Minister, the new leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. Jackman: We won't swap, though.

Mr. Reid: I wish the hon. member would read a little more scripture. There he would find that he that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city. Mind you, they must have had somewhat the same kinds of men back in those days. There is one thing I shall say about the new leader of the Liberal party. Whatever the new Prime Minister says in Quebec or in any other province, he will say exactly the same in British Columbia. I well remember, and so does every other hon. member from British Columbia—I think they will agree with me in this, if not openly, at least in their hearts—that as members of the Liberal party, at almost every election when the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King) was the leader and Prime Minister, we were told by electors, for example, "We think you are all right, Tom, we have nothing against you; but that leader of yours is always catering to the province of Quebec. And so I do not think we can very well vote for him." When we ask them now about the province of Quebec under the new leader of the Tory party they are silent out there. They will not tell you anything about—I was almost going to say—the alliance with Duplessis. It comes very close to that. In the forthcoming election we shall not now be accused or have the same kind of misstatements that have been thrown at us previously.

I do not know whether it would be wise to say what I am about to say, but I see my hon. friend sitting across the way. We as Liberals in British Columbia would be a little more uneasy in our minds if the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan had obtained the leadership. I think the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) was right in his address when he said that people clear across the country were crying, "We want John; we want John!"

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I think the hon. member is trying to insinuate that the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), and perhaps myself, were not loyal to the present leader of this party.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Reid: They are using the old Tory tactics. No reasonable man could take that out of my speech, and he knows it. When the Lord accused His disciples they all began to protest: "Lord, is it I?"

Mr. Fulton: We have watched your tactics too long not to know what you intend to do.

Mr. Reid: Well, I heard a voice over there, but it did not say a great deal.

Some hon. members in the debate have delved into the past. The imperial conference has been brought out again. I am not one who likes to delve into past history, because I do not believe the people are interested in it. Let me give a striking example. During the last by-election in Yale, letters were sent throughout the constituency from Mr. Grote Stirling and from others telling about the imperial preference on apples, and blaming the Liberals. One has only to look at the results to realize whether they did any good. Now we hear it being raised again. I have mentioned it simply because an hon. member has been interrupting me—and one who was not in the house at that time. But I did have the privilege of sitting in the house all through that debate; and let me tell him there is some difference between sitting here, listening to it and taking part in it, than there is in reading it. I was one who at that time listened to and took part in that debate.

Sometimes I think those who came to the House of Commons later, and who have read about these things, misconstrue the stand taken by the Liberal party of that day. Our stand was that the late Lord Bennett endeavoured to put a ring around the British empire, to the exclusion of all other countries. As a matter of fact, in Calgary he said on October 26, 1932:

> One thing was certain, that nations outside the empire will be asked to pay some tribute for the privilege of trading with the empire.

And if anyone wishes to read about that, let him go to the library and read the debates of the House of Commons for 1932 and 1933. He would find out what British statesmen thought of that conference. He would learn what some of the finest newspapers of that day in Britain thought of the conference. But the one interesting thing about that debate, and about those years in the House of Commons, is that the Conservative party of that day were telling us all the time that the condition between 1930 and 1935 in Canada was due to world conditions. But the minute the Liberal party took office in 1936—"Oh no, the Liberal party was to blame". So long as they were sitting over here it was due to world conditions; but when we assumed office —well, of course it was all switched, and it became the responsibility of the Liberal party.

I have listened in this session to many speeches which, I must say, somewhat amazed me. Speaker after speaker has risen in the house and in the same speech has advocated in one breath more and greater expenditures and, in the next breath, a reduction of taxes of all kinds—luxury taxes, income tax and excess profits tax. I am frank when I say that I just cannot understand that kind of doctrine, at all, not but what some changes will have to be made.

What are some of the things they have asked for?—to build schools; to help with teachers' salaries; to build the trans-Canada highway. And, in passing, let me say something about that. If anyone will look at the records of the House of Commons for those years he will find that many Liberal members, then sitting in opposition, pleaded with the then government to build the trans-Canada highway and thus employ the thousands upon thousands of men who were on relief, rather than keep them in camps. The dominion government of that day spent $176 million—and today there is nothing to show for it. There is nothing at all to show for it.

But now they come along and urge the dominion government to build a trans-Canada highway. In addition to that, we hear some advocating expenditures for irrigation dams, higher family allowance payments, pensions and assistance for incurables, increased old age pensions, which I am in favour of, the building of more low-rental houses, the building of ships for a merchant marine. All this takes money. I must confess, if I knew more about social credit perhaps I could explain how this could be done without increasing taxes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Reid: But I do not know. And I am one of the few members in the house who have never ridiculed the Social Credit party. I have always maintained I did not understand it.

Mr. Blackmore: Too bad.

Mr. Reid: But when the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) was speaking the other night and gave us the glowing account of oil wells brought into production, the thought went through my mind: They are going to get their $25 in Alberta yet.

Probably it will not be from social credit, but it might be from those good oil wells to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Harkness: They may pay more than that yet.

Mr. Reid: I maintain there are some members of parliament who are leading the people up false channels. We have heard a lot about bribery to win elections. When I came to this land away back in 1909, a land which by the way has been very good to me, I was told that I was going to the land of promise. It seems to me however that it is becoming of late a land of promises. I can speak freely of it because, since I entered public life since 1922, I have made only one promise in my life, and that one has been faithfully kept. That was a promise to give the utmost of my services to all the citizens. There again I think of the old Presbyterian doctrine, that it is better not to promise, and do, than it is to promise and not fulfil.

We hear hon. members rise in their places and dangle promises before the people, and yet they talk about bribery. Is there any name for these false promises except bribery? No; it is worse than bribery. Because, if a government has spent money here or there, the people have got it; but many of these things which are being promised, the people may never get. Shortly I shall challenge any member to get up and tell me which expenditures of government he would reduce. However, before asking him to do so, may I say there is one other procedure I cannot understand, when people say, "Do not pay your debts. Just leave the national debt, and pay no attention to it at all." Well, I am one who has endeavoured during a lifetime to pay his debts, and this suggestion does not appeal to me greatly. At the present time the interest on our public debt is $445 million; then we have subsidies to the provinces of $100 million; family allowances, $270 million; veterans payments, $300 million; old age pensions, $65 million; post office, $75 million; public works, $70 million; national health program, $30 million; defence of Canada, $250 million. All these total $1,605 million. Then, the total taxes in 1948, taken in excess profits and income tax amounted to $1,286,878,849. That is away below even the ordinary commitments at the present time.

I challenge any member to rise in his place and tell me which of the items I have enumerated he would be in favour of reducing. When he gets up to speak he can tell us how you can reduce taxes and increase expenditures.

An hon. Member: What about old age pensions?

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. Reid: I have never changed my position on old age pensions. I am glad the hon. member mentioned this matter, for I want a better deal for these pensioners. Some interesting speeches have been delivered this session against communism. I am one of those who believe that we can never stop the growth of communism in this country by merely crying "bad wolf". Let me give another illustration. During the Yale by-election both the Liberals and the Conservatives devoted a lot of time, both on the platform and over the radio, to an attempt to warn the people against communism. One has only to look at the results of the vote to see how much attention was paid to that cry.

I do not generally refer to it as communism. I have asked some of those who belong to the L.P.P. in what countries communism is being practised today. I know of no country where it is being practised. It is true that some countries started out under Karl Marx doctrines, but no country has so far operated that way. What they have in Russia today is Stalinism, not Karl Marxism. I would say that the great menace facing the world today is soviet imperialism.

I was astounded at the attitude of certain men in the greater Vancouver area over a statement which I had made with regard to a proposed visit of two Russian scientists to investigate what the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission had done at Hell's Gate and throughout the province. Word to that effect came from the United States embassy to the embassy here and each member of the commission was asked if he was agreeable to this visit being made. As one of the three Canadian members I was asked and I said, "No, I have no objection to anyone coming, but if they come I think it would be only fair to ask the soviet to allow two of our scientists to go there to see what they are doing in connection with fisheries". As I say, I was astounded at the reaction of that statement. I received terrible letters of abuse from certain people in and around the greater Vancouver area. I was called all kinds of names. I did not think there was anything unfair in saying to a country, "We will show you what we have if you in turn will show us what you have". I was abused for taking that attitude.

I have linked up these two questions for the moment. There have been many faults in capitalism or free enterprise. Looking back over history we find that there are some pages that are not so bright. However, up to the present time that system has given man more of this world's goods and more freedom than any other system. But we will have to adopt some new rules in the game, in order to control the greed of some men more than we have in the past. Coming now to old age pensions, I believe that the people of this country are demanding more along the lines of social security. I should like to see far more of it in this country. I am of the firm belief that if that were done we would stop the spread of this thing that is termed communism.

Before I close I should like to say just one word with regard to trade. I am sorry I have not the time to go into this more fully because I feel it might be a contribution. Great Britain has been our best customer. What I say now is in no carping sense to the members of the C.C.F. I am delighted to see that they are now great supporters of the British, but there were times when that was not quite so evident. I want to remind them that we on this side of the house have just as much good feeling for the people of the British Isles, even though they are now under a Labour government, as any other group in the house. It is to our benefit and interest that we do everything we can to see that that great market for our wheat and other products is not lost.

I am not a financier, but there have been times when I have spoken in this house about silver bimetalism. There were days when we were pinning our faith on metals, but I have learned since that the faith of man can be used to successfully carry out the exchange of goods between nations without the use of precious metals. But we are now faced with an impasse. Contrary to general opinion, I am one of those who believe that our Canadian dollar is not tied to anything. Many believe that the Canadian dollar is tied to the United States dollar, but I contend that we have a dollar of our own. However, all you have to do is to try to exchange it across the line and you will find that they are not ready to take it. With our adverse balance of trade we have to pay the United States the coin they want.

Many countries including the soviet union still put their faith in gold. No one knows the gold holdings of the soviet empire, but accounts come out of that country that they are searching feverishly for gold. It may well be that they are able to do a lot of trading with gold. I wonder what the United States is going to do with the 25,000 tons of gold it has buried in vaults? That is what it works out to. The United States has eighty per cent of the world's gold and with gold valued at $35 per ounce they have a total value of $25,000 million. Without knowing what the Russian holdings are, the world's gold supply is said to be around $28,000 million.

I am just wondering if we are going to continue forever to pay men to dig into the earth to find gold and then transport it across the line to bury it again in the earth? That seems to be all that can be done with it. In the case of most countries—Switzerland is one exception—and this applies to Great Britain particularly, the supply of gold for exchange is gradually dwindling. I am wondering if the United States should not break the impasse by again redistributing the gold chips, shall I say, to the various nations? So long as we continue to talk about sterling and United States dollars, so long as we do not get any closer than that, there is little hope for an improvement in our trading position.

Let me remind my friends in the C.C.F. that the Labour government has departed from the old traditions. Great Britain was built up with free trade, but now the Labour government is carrying on by means of quotas. That is not generally recognized. Trading by quotas means that they pick out from that country or this country certain quantities of goods. Therein lies some of the difficulty in connection with our trading relations with Great Britain.

I am sorry my time is exhausted as I would like to have dealt with this matter in detail. I rose principally to correct the record and to put it straight as to the government's national health program.

Mr. W. G. Blair (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, it is quite apparent that this Friday afternoon is health day in the House of Commons. I am delighted that the debate has taken this form. For years I have tried to use the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne as a vehicle to talk to the members, and to try to bring before them the necessity for some action to bring about betterment of health conditions in Canada, and a definite health plan for Canada. For this I offer no apology. It is not so much because of my own interest in these matters as it is that I realize there are conditions in Canada, the high cost of hospitalization and the lack of opportunity for treatment, that make it a matter which should receive the attention of all members.

We must recognize today that, with nations as with individuals, we are faced with the fact of the survival of the fittest, and if Canada does not raise the standard of health of her citizens to a maximum equal to that of any other nation she will fall by the wayside in international affairs. We must recognize a nation's health at its full value, not only from the human point of view, but from the economic side as well. We must realize that money spent on health is money saved.

Sickness and disease do not stop at provincial boundaries. A disease of epidemic proportions in one district may readily spread to another province. Only those who are not conversant with the facts will quarrel with the spending of public money to care for the health of the people. Surely no one thinks that we can afford to go on losing money as we are today on account of sickness, simply because we are spending such a small amount publicly on prevention.

Death, disease and sickness are proportionate to the amount of money spent on health services. Society has two responsibilities with regard to sickness. One is the adoption of curative measures, and the other is the adoption of preventive measures. The history of our health services in Canada shows that up to the present time we have been paying more attention to curative measures than we have to preventive measures. We have not achieved the results that will follow if we pay more attention to preventive measures.

It is almost 200 years since Jenner discovered vaccination and made the conquest of smallpox possible. At that time the average duration of life was thirty years; now it is close to seventy. But still there are thousands of people who are dying unnecessarily each year, largely because they lack the opportunity for treatment. I emphasize that phrase, "the opportunity for treatment." There is a growing demand from the public for release from the ever-present possibility of the high cost of hospitalization or sickness.

The doctor in general practice today is very often faced with the problem of giving adequate treatment or adequate diagnosis. The facilities are not there for him. The duty of the state is to care for those who by reason of infirmity are incapacitated as far as gainful employment is concerned, and those who unfortunately cannot afford to pay for treatment.

We recognize today the importance of education and health. These two subjects are very close together, and the standard of living is also an adjunct. It may be said that people are becoming too prone to take advantage of free clinics, and that they try to get as much as possible for nothing. This is not a reasonable attitude. Most of us wish to give them the best in legislation for the benefit of all people without breeding a class of people who lose their self-reliance. We are aware of the deficiencies in our present health set-up, but we must be careful to take the proper steps towards the right kind of program. We should be aware of the financial plight of our hospitals, and the necessity both for new buildings and for extensions. We should be aware of the prohibitively high cost, to patients, of hospital care. We should be aware of the difficulty of a large part of our population in obtaining treatment services, both curative and preventive.

Hospitals should be houses of healing with a sound financial atmosphere. Unfortunately that does not exist in Canada. Hospital boards are left in anxiety and despair to maintain their institutions. We have been too prone to think that hospitals are philanthropic or charitable institutions. There is a crippling shortage at the present time, and we must not ignore the needs of our citizens.

Before I enter into a discussion of health problems, there is another matter closely allied with the question of health, and which was discussed by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) in his speech in this debate as reported at page 218 of Hansard. He was referring to refugee doctors. On behalf of the medical profession of Canada, may I say that I strongly resent the speech he made in Toronto, a report of which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of January 31 last. He is quoted as saying:

> The Canadian medical profession has actively worked to discourage the entry of refugee doctors into Canada.

The same type of statement was made by Dr. Keenleyside, the deputy minister of mines and resources, and it was repeated in an article in Maclean's magazine of February 1. Dr. Keenleyside said:

> The only trade union that has been adamant in its official opposition to the admission of competitive D.P.'s has been the medical profession.

Such a statement is inaccurate, mischievous and misleading. To clarify the situation I intend to present the facts to the house. Severe criticism has been directed towards the medical profession, and there has been considerable controversy over the admission of doctors from central Europe. This has taken the form of a rash of speeches, editorials, and even sermons. There are potent reasons for caution in opening the gates to all who have had some training in dentistry or in medicine.

In Canada and in the United States medical schools are graded by a rigid standard set up by the American medical association. Under this classification the nine Canadian schools at present giving full courses are fully approved and classed A. There are no standards for medical schools in Europe. A graduate from Europe may be from a good school or he may be from a school that is completely unknown to the licensing bodies in Canada. Some of them are known to have very low standards. Some of the European schools, which were of a high standard a generation or two ago, have fallen far below the standard of our own Canadian universities.

There was a time when Vienna and Berlin were important post-graduate centres in medical teaching. In fact, they were a mecca as far as post-graduate training was concerned, but they no longer hold that position. You can understand why that is so apparent. Medical standards in Canada are high. They are probably as high as can be found in any country in the world. We cannot afford to lower our standards with medical imports of low standard, or imports who have been out of practice for so long a period that they are not competent to practise their profession without further training. Public interest does not permit a double standard of qualifications; and all physicians, whether trained in Canada or elsewhere, must measure up to the licensing requirements in effect.

Let me make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that a doctor whose medical degree has been obtained anywhere in the world can establish himself in Canada, provided: first, that he enters the country legally; second, that he obtains an enabling certificate; third, that he passes the examination of the medical council of Canada; and fourth, that he registers this certificate with the provincial licensing body. The statement of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) that the medical profession is actively working to discourage the entry of refugee doctors into Canada is utter nonsense. The Canadian medical association is not uncharitable or unkindly toward these members of the profession who are in such a sorry plight. They are glad and happy to render any assistance in their power. The matter of competition is not a factor. The public should be informed that medical acts are designed not to protect the doctors but solely to protect the public. There are in Canada areas that are medically overpopulated, as well as those medically underpopulated; but I would point out that of the sixty refugee doctors who came into this country in 1947 and were licensed, only five have taken up practice in rural areas. It has been suggested that refugee doctors be admitted on the understanding that they must reside in country districts. Canada has never compelled any of her new citizens to live in any circumscribed areas; and there would be a hue and cry if the authorities should devise regulations compelling any doctors to live in the country if they wished to live elsewhere. We do need doctors in certain rural areas; but the fact is that doctors are not there now because of the conditions of practice and the question of remuneration.

For the benefit of the house I have looked up certain statistics in regard to D.P. doctors in the camps of Europe. The world health organization has been concerned over the displaced members of the medical profession, and the following statistics were presented at a meeting of that organization in Geneva in September, 1947. The figures were as follows:

	Germany		Austria		Italy
	U.S. Zone	British Zone	U.S. Zone	British Zone
Dentists	750	150	15	3	10
Physicians and Surgeons	881	413	139	17	45
Ophthalmologists	24	9	2	2	2
Paediatricians	72	33	1	..	70
Nurses	2,077	1,452	..	..	246

I would point out that the figure for nurses includes nurses of all kinds, registered nurses, practical nurses and those in training, and that where no figures are given it means there is no record. The records of the Middle East, India and Shanghai have not been completely filled out, but the estimated totals are:

Dentists	958
Physicians and surgeons	1,612
Ophthalmologists	40
Paediatricians	176
Nurses	3,775

These statistics show that it is necessary to make a complete inventory of every professional person in a displaced persons camp; and when this is brought up these points should be considered: first, what professional training did they have, what sort of school did they come from, where were they educated; second, what proficiency do they possess now; third, when did they last practise; fourth, why have they not returned to their native land; fifth, where would they like to live? Many of these people require post-graduate training. The world health organization is making a survey of the need throughout the world for these displaced persons and especially for displaced doctors. When we consider some of the other countries of the world we discover these facts. Ethiopia, a country of 12 million persons, reported at the close of the war that not one native doctor or nurse was left; they had been entirely liquidated by the enemy. Czechoslovakia reported that, of the 12,000 doctors in that country when war began, some sixty per cent or 7,000 were either killed or missing. Now we turn to the Far East. China, with over 400 million people, had less than 12,000 trained doctors. During the war the Chinese army was served by 30,000 medical officers, and of these only seven per cent had any medical training whatever. India with 400 million people reported 40,000 doctors to serve that population. Liberia, with a population of 2,500,000, has only one doctor.

In Canada we are served by 13,000 doctors, which with an estimated population of 13 million gives an average of one doctor per thousand people, an average higher than anywhere else in the world. This number can take care of the medical needs of our country, and can also make allowance for those who come to our shores from time to time from other lands. In addition, the university of Saskatchewan is well on its way to developing a faculty of medicine. Ottawa university has a faculty of medicine, well equipped and with classes which will soon graduate. The university of British Columbia is considering establishing a medical school. There may be some argument about areas that are overpopulated, and it may be said that the distribution might be improved. But it is very apparent that in comparison with the rest of the world Canada is reasonably well off for doctors. I would draw attention also to the fact that a large number of young veterans of the last war who came back and started in medicine will be graduating from our schools in the next year or two. So it might be well for people whose statements show they are totally unacquainted with the facts to become fully conversant with such matters before making inaccurate public utterances.

Now, sir, I come back to the matter under discussion when I entered this debate. When I came into this house a week ago Wednesday, the day of the speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), I could see that something unusual was going to happen here. I wondered what it was all about. Perchance it was some grave international incident or something of that kind. The press had copies of papers and were going over them; the galleries were full; the diplomatic gallery was filled with officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Then I realized just what was going to happen. Finally the minister came upon the scene; he was the principal actor, and he rose to speak on the health grants which were introduced last spring. From his description of those grants I gained the impression, which I think was general, that they were a personal gift from the minister or from a beneficent government. Sir, we of this party believe that this or any other government is justified in spending money on public health. Let there be no argument about it. We do reserve the right, however, to criticize the administration when we feel the money is not being spent to the advantage of the Canadian taxpayer.

I listened with interest, sir, but with a growing sense of resentment as the speech proceeded. The minister was very confident about himself. During this speech he exhibited—and I am going to talk plainly to him—a manner of braggadocio not in keeping with the ideals or traditions of those who throughout the centuries have sought to heal. I remember, sir, the wonderful accomplishments of the provinces when they were working with their own resources in the field of health. I remember the sacrifices made by physicians and surgeons, nurses, men and women who have devoted their lives to healing and the elimination of misery. I remember the work of those other voluntary agencies which have been responsible for so much good in the field of health during the past years. The ethics of the medical profession and those who are associated with them in the art of healing have never permitted advertising. Throughout the whole speech the minister did not hesitate to use the pronouns "I" and "we" when referring to his work and that of the officials of his department. I might point out to the minister that he has only held this position for two years. His whole speech showed a misconception of the picture of health in Canada, and especially of the other agencies which have been responsible in the past decades for the fight against the inroads of disease, misery and suffering.

On the 30th day of June last year, in the dying hours of the session when everyone was tired, hot and anxious to get home, I dealt at length with these grants. It will be impossible to cover them today, but I am going to touch on one or two. First, the grant for crippled children is praiseworthy. But, in view of the fact this grant only amounts to $500,000 for the nine provinces, I should say it seems to be a small amount when compared with the expenditures of the provinces at the present time. The various service organizations have supported the provincial effort. If the best possible results are to be obtained, I believe credit should go where credit is due.

I am familiar with the background of the promotion and financing of a crippled children's camp, "Merrywood on the Rideau", in my constituency of Lanark. I happen to know that this camp was substantially financed by Rotary clubs as well as by a grant from the province of Ontario. From my knowledge of the money that has been spent on this one small project, the grant given to the provinces by the federal government for this purpose is entirely inadequate.

I now come to the question of arthritis. It is an old question and one that has been discussed in this house very often.

Mr. Matthews (Kootenay East): It is an important question.

Mr. Blair: Yes, very important. I cannot find myself in agreement with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) in his approach to the subject. During the past year the public press has contained many reports concerning a recently formed Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society. There are many inaccuracies in these reports. Before further discussion of this society I shall give you something of the history of it.

The Canadian rheumatism association, which is a counterpart of the American rheumatism association, had always met annually along with the Canadian medical association. The exception to this rule was during the war years. This society was a branch of the Canadian medical association. In 1947 the meeting of this association was held at Sunnybrook hospital, Toronto. In that year the Canadian medical association met at Winnipeg. There were nine members present and they were informed by the president of the association that the dominion was sponsoring a new arthritis society and that the Canadian rheumatism association had better get in on it. This is the manner in which the government was approached by the Canadian rheumatism association.

At the next annual meeting of the Canadian rheumatism association in June 1948, the fact that the new Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society had been organized was not even brought up for discussion. The organization meeting of the new Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society was held in Ottawa in 1947 and January of 1948 under the chairmanship of the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). No preliminary discussions concerning this new national society were held in any open meeting of any medical society in Canada.

Mr. Martin: The deputy minister was the chairman.

Mr. Blair: The Canadian medical association was represented by the secretary, Dr. T. C. Routley, and one delegate. Most of the doctors present were from governments, the Department of Veterans Affairs, health and research agencies and institutions. Very few general practitioners were present, and they are the ones who come in contact with arthritis. On the official program, three of the four speakers were associated with the Department of Veterans Affairs. There were no elections, and the committees were all appointed. Few of the doctors had any previous training in arthritis work.

The new Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society has existed for thirteen months. To date, there has been no public meeting of the society. It is presumed the original committee is still in charge. There has been no discussion of this society in any open meeting of the Canadian medical association or its provincial branches. The only information that doctors have concerning this new society is what has appeared in the public press and the bulletins of the Department of National Health and Welfare. A combined lay and medical arthritis society had previously been organized in British Columbia and it offered to join forces with the new society.

It has been my opinion that the Minister of National Health and Welfare made a great sacrifice when he entered parliament. In the financial world, as a promoter of stock companies, he would have been a success. His promoting abilities were fully shown when he organized the Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society and printed the first prospectus for his stock. He sold off all the common stock of no par value and retained the preferred shares with promise of interest and profits for himself.

The reports in the public press appearing at infrequent intervals dealing with the new society and its officers make reference almost exclusively to Sunnybrook hospital. It is reported that this hospital now functions as an arthritis centre and has special equipment and new treatments for arthritis. Apparently the press is under the impression that the Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals give courses of instruction for general practitioners. No notices of these courses ever appeared in any of the medical journals of any medical society in Canada. It is well to look into the true situation. The Department of Veterans Affairs doctors have no better training in arthritis work than any other doctors and it is doubtful whether they have any new treatment. It is doubtful whether these hospitals have any new equipment. Other general hospitals have much the same type of equipment. I mention the equipment in the Queen Elizabeth hospital in Toronto, which has one of the two Hubbard tanks in Canada. The Toronto Western Hospital is well equipped, and the patients there receive special attention in an outdoor arthritis clinic. It is doubtful whether there is in Canada any teaching hospital; that is a hospital connected with a hospital school that has an arthritis clinic used for teaching purposes. There are few doctors in Canada who have received any specialized training in the treatment of arthritis.

I have a few suggestions to make as to how this matter could be handled. I am making these suggestions because I have criticized the set-up. I made the suggestions before in this house. The first thing that is essential is a correct diagnosis, and correct treatment in the early stages. This would reduce the number of patients with crippling conditions, and it would decrease the number of hospital beds for chronic cases. There is an immediate need for information and assistance for doctors and especially general practitioners because they are faced with the problem of treating patients with arthritis.

The problem of arthritis should be part of general medicine. These patients are found in all hospitals across the country seeking relief. The matter of specialized treatment is so important that there should be specialized teaching of the care of arthritis in all the medical schools where there are medical students and internes. It should be taught in general hospitals where there are patients of all ages and both sexes. In Sunnybrook there is only one age group, principally male, except a few nurses who are unlucky enough to contract this disease. I have suggested in previous speeches in this house that there is a necessity of refresher courses.

The objectives of the new society, when announced at the organization meetings, were commendable. It is obvious, sir, that the new society was organized in close co-operation with the Department of Veterans Affairs. This leads the average practitioner in Canada to fear that the society, in using D.V.A. doctors, may sponsor a form of state medicine, and they actually are afraid. Health matters, sir, are still under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and state medicine has not yet been adopted in Canada. The problem of arthritis is too big and too far-reaching to be controlled by a small group. It demands the attention of the whole medical profession, and especially the general practitioners who are in touch with it from day to day. It should be discussed with the Canadian and provincial medical associations. Medical schools should be consulted, because it is necessary for them to teach the care of arthritics. A survey of the whole situation should be made, giving the number of patients and the present requirements for attacking the problem. Above all, sir, a stop should be put to this ill-advised publicity which is giving misleading information to the public. To raise false hopes is a cruel type of propaganda. At the present time the propaganda is taking the form of such headlines in the papers as "war on arthritis", "tackling the arthritis problem", and so on. I know where these press reports come from. These are the headlines that we read every once in a while in the papers.

I noted that in the bulletin put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare, volume III, No. 6, March, 1948, there were eight pages devoted to arthritis. That is praiseworthy. I shall tell you something further. Three of the pages in this bulletin show pictures of Sunnybrook hospital. That is the only place in which they have seen arthritis that they know anything about. That is the impression they give. Before statements are given to the people with a build-up such as "war on arthritis" it would be well to remember that there are six hundred thousand people across Canada, of whom one hundred and twenty-five thousand are crippled in bed or in wheel chairs, who are looking for relief from this terrible condition. They are begging for something to be done now.

We have had a lot of propaganda so far but we have had very little action. Mention has been made several times in this debate of a national health plan, and something was said about it in the speech from the throne. It is discussed and glibly talked about. The Prime Minister talked about it when he introduced the health grants last May. He made a statement which will be found on page 3935 of Hansard. One hon. member on this side of the house quoted it the other day. He told us what these expenditures would mean in the preservation of health and the saving of human life, to say nothing of the lessening of human suffering and misery, and not infrequently despair. He told us it was beyond calculation. No hon. member in this house could disagree with that; no hon. member could say that it is not true of any sums spent for health reasons; but I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that these conditions have been waiting for thirty years before the party which forms this government took any action. It was on their program in 1919. It would be difficult to estimate the casualties which have occurred and the misery endured during those thirty years before the Liberal party made any attempt to deal with this situation.

At the time of the introduction of the health grants in May 1948 a full debate was promised. That debate was left to the last day of the session. The minister kept promising all through last session that we would have a chance to debate this matter. At two o'clock on the afternoon of the last day of the session we got a chance to say something about it. We approved these grants; we approved grants to raise the health standard in Canada; that is, we approved the spending of the money to raise health conditions in Canada, and we voted for them gladly.

This party has long realized the necessity for a plan of health in the Dominion of Canada. Let there be no doubt where this party stands on that now. We stand in favour of a plan which, in co-operation with the provinces, will give the people the maximum of services, and yet be a plan of freedom, where the doctors will not be civil servants, and which will allow free choice between doctor and patient. We have got a full realization of the deficiencies in treatment services in Canada and in our preventive services, and we stand ready to implement a plan to overcome these deficiencies, and which will raise health standards in Canada to the equal of that in any other country of the world.

(Translation):

Mr. Gérard Cournoyer (Richelieu-Verchères): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to express my congratulations to the new members of the cabinet: the former prime minister of Manitoba (Mr. Garson), the former Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) and the young minister of reconstruction (Mr. Winters). Their experience and their brilliant qualities, applied to the service of Canada, will surely give very good results.

I now want to say a word about the leader of the opposition and member for Carleton (Mr. Drew); he has been outstanding in several ways, some more or less brilliant than others. He succeeds a long line of leaders of the opposition. The seat of the leader of the opposition has been in unstable equilibrium these last few years. I therefore wish him success in his career and I trust the members of his party will make his reign as leader of the opposition long and agreeable and on behalf of the Liberals I can assure him of our fullest co-operation.

I wish every success to the member for Nicolet-Yamaska. I have known him personally for many years and our relations have always been most friendly. His integrity in the practice of his profession, the devotion with which he discharges his duties as protonotary, will certainly be of use to him in the exercise of his mandate. I know what principles he expounded during his election campaign; I believe he will soon realize that he has come to the wrong parliament and that the man who is today foisting his leadership upon him is merely Dr. Jekyll's Mr. Hyde.

I also congratulate the new member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers). His speech on the address has shown that his services will be useful to his party and that the people of his constituency had every right to give him their confidence.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne this year is a complete, constructive and realistic synthesis of each and every one of the problems which are presently troubling the minds of our people as Canadian citizens and citizens of the world. Seldom has a sessional statement of government policy been submitted for our consideration with such concision and lucidity, such clearness in presenting the facts and such determination in planning for the future. In short, this document reveals the qualities of logic, sincerity and deep wisdom of the man who personally inspired it in his capacity as adviser to His Excellency, our Prime Minister.

Under these circumstances, as a member of this house, I share the hopes of our people. Like so many Canadians, I was labouring under the illusion that the Conservative party, having a new leader, would carry out constructively its task of criticizing the government's policies and shed about that amount of light which our democracy has a right to expect from the official opposition, whose duty it is to co-operate in the good management of the country.

To me and to all Canadians that was a sad disappointment.

So far, we have seen the leader of the opposition delve into his own past for the sole purpose of disowning it. We have seen him rummage about for old speeches. We have seen him endeavour, quite clumsily at times, to resuscitate past problems and demand solutions for matters settled long ago.

Provincial autonomy is his main theme. On that note the leader of the opposition sings, as Roosevelt would have said, from both sides of his mouth. He demands autonomy with a great show of eloquence, but when he was the leader of his party in Ontario, he was demanding the abolition of provincial governments.

Another of his themes is communism; he merely amplifies what all people say just as sincerely and with much more practical common sense.

Finally, he refers to a letter dating as far back as 1942 and dealing with the Hong Kong tragedy; he is the only one who has not forgotten all about that letter or perhaps who has read it.

The satisfaction which the leader of the opposition takes in handling his old papers, in reading old letters, could easily be understood if it were but the harmless foible of those who enjoy evoking their past because they no longer have the strength to live their present.

Those are men of another era, and the Canadians will never entrust the destinies of their young nation to a group of mummies, however eloquent the latter may be.

The bold and dynamic policies of the Liberal party, which marches resolutely and fearlessly toward the future, is noticeable throughout the speech from the throne.

Let me point out a few examples, in connection with the Atlantic pact, with the development of our merchant marine and our shipyards.

If the Progressive Conservatives have thought they could win over the province of Quebec and gain votes through their silence and their equivocal stand on the Atlantic pact, they have made a mistake which can only be expected from tenth-rate politicians.

To think that the French Canadians refuse to take their place among free men who oppose communist slavery is to be greatly misinformed as regards their intelligence, their fundamental vigour and their Christian spirit.

Never perhaps has there been such a degree of unanimity among Canadians of both great races as to the ultimate aims of our international policy. Never has their confidence been greater in their Prime Minister who, taking the lead among the rulers of democratic nations, has sounded the call to all men of good will and issued to the western nations that slogan which the French Canadians know so well: "Let us unite!"

Only the Tories, these men of a bygone century, still think they can wave the old bugaboos to reap votes in the province of Quebec. Quebec considers these vulgar tactics as an insult. Just as the people of Quebec opposed imperialistic wars where they considered that Canada's interests were not at stake, so today they join with enthusiasm the movement of free humanity to save peace without neglecting justice, and to maintain Christian values, which are so deeply Canadian, even if this entails preparing for war.

It seems to me, however, that we attach too much importance to the purely military aspect of the Atlantic pact. In a radio speech the Prime Minister gave the democratic alliance an economic and cultural meaning which corresponds to the pacifist sentiment of our people as well as to the new needs of our national economy.

The constitutional evolution of Canada, the crumbling of the former world order have shattered the framework of the British empire; in other words the framework within which were formerly brought into play our economic, cultural and international relations with other countries is now disappearing.

India and Pakistan are precariously accepting dominion status; Burma is no longer a colony; Ireland becomes a republic; South Africa is subjected to a nationalistic storm; even Newfoundland, that old colony, is severing its ties with the mother country to become the tenth province of Canada.

In addition to these geographical disturbances, there are the monetary struggles, the conflict in currency and the dollar situation. Our imperial trade routes in the sterling area threaten to close up. Thanks to the tremendous efforts of the Liberal government, they are still open to the greatest advantage of our farmers and manufacturers. The very framework of the British empire is crumbling, according to some people. So much the better, will say all true Canadians who consider that their young nation was cramped and paralysed in this association which was too seclusive and too much dominated by its sister, and equal, Great Britain. Let us now replace this old order by a new order. Let us replace the free association of British nations with a larger association of free men from all races. Amongst this enlarged commonwealth, amongst this alliance, which would not be imperial but human in character, Canada would play, unrestricted, her part as an adult nation, respected throughout the world because she aims only at promoting the ideals of peace, and has no other imperialistic designs than that of expanding the domain of human happiness.

The economic and cultural alliance brought about by the Atlantic pact does not stop at promoting Canada's peace-loving dreams and humane ideals. It can become the framework of our own national economy which depends on our export trade to such a fantastic extent. Our Prime Minister has said that it will take more than the pooling of our armed forces to bring peace to the world.

Canadians keep close watch on those world markets that spell for them prosperity or unemployment. More particularly have my constituents in Richelieu-Verchères—shipbuilders, sailors, farmers, dealers—grasped the real economic significance of our international problems. They are peace-loving people, but they are determined that their stamp of manhood and their Christian faith shall survive.

They are also realistic and patriotic. That is why they rejoice over the fact that Canada is no longer bound by a too narrow imperial framework, and put their trust in the new economic, social, and cultural order pledged by the Atlantic pact.

The signing of the Atlantic pact will contribute not only to the peace for which we are all yearning, not only to our material well-being, but also to the development of our navy and our shipyards.

I represent the constituency of Richelieu-Verchères, where are located the most important shipyards in the country. Those yards have been developed and improved during the war, as a result of the Liberal government's policy. I wish to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to the workers of my village, of the town of Sorel and of the whole district. Their industry, their technical knowledge, their ability and especially their willingness to co-operate, have permitted the employers' spirit of enterprise to make an admirable contribution to the creation of a Canadian navy and to the victory of the allied forces.

As a matter of fact, at the very beginning of the conflict in 1939, Canada only had 35 ships with a combined capacity of about 240,000 tons. These vessels were left-overs from world war I. My older compatriots remember seeing the few shipyards of that time close their doors one after the other. This almost complete shut-down of the shipbuilding industry, during the whole period between the two wars, explains why our navy had so few units in 1939.

But during the war our shipyards, especially that of St. Joseph de Sorel, were so extensively developed that in 1946 our navy included 448 merchant vessels of various tonnages without mentioning the corvettes, mine sweepers, tow-boats and invasion barges. These figures indicate the productive capacity of our shipyards.

The vessels were placed at the disposal of Canadian companies. Unfortunately the latter are experiencing certain difficulties. I trust that the Canadian maritime commission which was established on November 6, 1947, due to the initiative of the genial Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), will soon suggest the necessary steps to be taken in order to ensure the survival of our marine industry.

Section 6 of the act creating it provides that the commission shall recommend to the minister such policies and measures as it considers necessary for the operation, maintenance, manning and development of a merchant marine and a shipbuilding and ship-repairing industry commensurate with Canadian maritime needs.

The task of the commission is not as simple as it looks on the face of it for, although our prosperity rests fundamentally on our trade, our Canadian merchant marine and our shipbuilding industry have not been sufficiently encouraged in the past to compete with others. The minister has pointed out the difficulties himself.

Practically all countries whose ships ply the seas have enacted rigid laws to control coastal navigation, that is to say, water transport of goods within their borders. Since 1789 in the United States and since 1793 in France, to mention but those two countries, ships of foreign registry are not allowed to transport goods between two ports within their respective boundaries. These countries have reserved for themselves their boats, their seamen, their waterways and their coasts. In Canada, not only does the British navy enjoy the same privileges as the Canadian navy, but in addition, ships of other countries may carry on coastwise trade on our shores, subject to the maritime commission's permission.

Until the provisions of the shipping act are made more rigid for all boats not built in Canada, and until the provisions of subsection (i) of section 12 of the 1930 imperial conference's report are acted upon, I do not think our navy will be able to survive. The trade between two points in Canada should be restricted to ships registered in Canada and manned by Canadian seamen.

I shall support this statement with a striking example. Hon. members know that Sorel is about to become one of the great steel producing centres in Canada. The titanium ore treated there comes from Havre St. Pierre and not from Ungava as many are led to believe. It means that millions of tons of ore would be shipped from Havre St. Pierre for treatment in the Sorel plants. The American company which will operate this plant will surely need ships to transport this material. But not a single Canadian company will be able to compete with foreign shipowners, the British or Norwegian companies, for example.

True, in England ships can be built for less, because of lower labour costs and different working conditions. Moreover, the operation of a Canadian ship costs $680 per day, while that of an English ship only amounts to $460 per day. Under such conditions no Canadian operator can tender with any hope of success.

If we let commonwealth and foreign ships compete with Canadian ships in coastal trade, we can easily see what will happen. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Langlois) who spoke of this matter last year, as reported on page 4150 of Hansard for 1948, said, and I quote:

The least we could do would be to charge duty on ships built outside Canada. Only by legislation reserving coastal trade to our own ships and levying duties on foreign-built ships will Canada promote the organization and maintenance of a Canadian merchant navy and at the same time establish in our country a sound and prosperous shipbuilding industry.

If it is to survive, our merchant marine must be protected by legislation. Because of the type of labour to whom they provide employment and a means of livelihood, shipyards need state assistance.

It should be recalled that during the war, the shipbuilding industry, apart from subsidiary concerns, employed as many as 53,000 men and, last year, still kept 16,000 on the pay roll.

Regulations dealing with our coastal trade should be a boon to sailors, operators, workers and shipbuilders. It is not a matter of sentiment but a case of survival.

Realizing the full import of this problem, the Liberal delegates meeting at the party convention held in Ottawa in August, 1948, passed the following resolution:

1. The Liberal party is in favour of supporting the efforts of the Canadian maritime commission to strengthen the Canadian merchant marine and to protect it against any foreign competition in Canadian waters.

2. The necessary amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, to establish a separate registration system for Canadian ships.

I hope the day is not far off when the people of my constituency will see a Canadian merchant marine, proudly flying a Canadian flag, sail the majestic St. Lawrence and the seven seas.

The present government has brought about great achievements in the field of the shipping industry, for which the people will be grateful.

On behalf of my constituents, I wish to thank the government for having allowed the continuation of shipbuilding at St. Joseph de Sorel, where the Marine Industries' shipyards, a concern which is a credit to our province and to Canada, are located.

At the end of the war, we were worried. Our population had considerably increased as a result of the opening of the Sorel Industries' and Marine Industries' shipyards. Thanks to the millions of dollars lent France by the present government, our men have been able to work since the end of the war with the same spirit and the same devotion they showed during the war for an equally noble cause.

[Mr. Cournoyer.]

These ships are finished, the yards are almost closed, but once again the government helped us, and, through the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton), the shipyards of my constituency and its workers got an order for a new icebreaker. Unfortunately, due to circumstances over which the government—or for that matter, anybody—has no control, construction has not started on this project. I hope that before long the people of Sorel and of the surrounding district will forget the hard times and worry they have known throughout this winter.

I also wish to thank the present Minister of Transport. If the Sorel Industries concern, which produced so much ordnance, is still in operation today, it is because of the contracts received from the Canadian National Railways. Those splendid workshops are now repairing used railway cars, but I am sure it could build new ones. I earnestly request the minister to take this request under consideration.

There would be much to say about government policies since the war. The Liberal party is not perfect; it is a human institution. But it must be admitted that, in every field of Canada's political activity, much has been achieved in the general interest of the public.

If the senior member of this house, the distinguished member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King) was prime minister of his country longer than any other man in the world, it is because his economic and social policies were considered best for the people.

At the beginning of my remarks, I referred to the difficulties encountered by the world in its search for a new order. The people of Canada are seeking a new social and economic order just as the world is also seeking a new order.

This is where the matter of taxes comes in. Taxes are high; they must be lowered. As a matter of fact, the real hardships caused the taxpayer by the high level of taxation are enlarged and magnified by irresponsible politicians who, for electoral purposes, strive by every possible means to induce among the people a psychosis of resentment and discontent.

Nobody likes taxes. To ask for their reduction requires neither imagination nor heroism, as everybody favours this theory. But I maintain that the Progressive Conservative party should be the last to blame the government in this respect. Indeed, if that party had been in power during the war, we would be paying three times as many taxes, and I shall prove it.

The house will recall that during the war they were never satisfied with the Canadian effort. Billion dollar expenditures on behalf of Great Britain were too scarce; army estimates were never high enough and Canadian fighters always too few in number. They blackmailed the government by pitting the other provinces against Quebec. Had their advice been followed, full conscription would have been in effect at the beginning of the war. In short, expense was never too high. Moreover, after Germany's defeat, they began clamouring for conscription to fight Japan. That is why there were no Progressive Conservative candidates in Quebec for the 1945 election.

Mr. Pouliot: They felt that our soldiers never went far enough.

Mr. Cournoyer: I am in full agreement with the hon. member. I do not think the government has anything to learn from these shortsighted Progressive Conservatives. They seek only to bring the people back under the yoke of the Bennett administration; at that time, workers did not pay income tax, but as the fable goes:

Though they did not all succumb, all were afflicted.

Taxes are heavy, unquestionably, but we must not forget that already Canadians have received a billion dollars since family allowances have been in operation. Taxes are high, but all veterans have been re-established; taxes are high, but the Liberal administration covers the nine provinces with hospitals and fights disease more daringly than any other country ever did. Our government wages war on cancer, mental diseases and other ailments that lower the productivity of our people. Taxes are indeed high, but the government has undertaken a vast and essentially Christian program whose purpose is to distribute more evenly among all Canadians the wealth of the nation.

Canada's farmers and workers realize that low-income earners and farmers are not the most adversely affected, especially if family allowances are taken into consideration. The wealthy and large corporations are the ones who benefit most from lower taxes.

Besides, this taxation situation is not peculiar to Canada. While all nations of the world are being taxed more heavily than we are, while nearly all foreign governments have increased their taxes, the Canadian government was able to manage the affairs of this country and reduce taxes on three different occasions.

Mr. Truman has just increased the taxes in the United States. Mr. Dewey, the up and coming man during the last election for the presidency of the United States, is fighting against his own supporters, in the New York legislature, for an increase in taxation. The provincial government, just recently approved by the electors, raised the sales tax by 1 per cent. It took over the 3 cent gasoline tax that the Ottawa people had just surrendered; it again prescribes a monthly school charge; it raised the corporation taxes; school text books are no longer free.

In Canada, the government has surrendered the 3 cent gasoline tax, duties on estates of less than $50,000, the 25 per cent amusement tax, besides granting three successive tax abatements. In addition the government refunded, with interest, approximately $240 million, last year, and $270 million this year, of compulsory savings.

Well, notwithstanding what goes on in the world, we have every reason to believe—and I hope for it and ask for it eagerly—that the government will reduce taxes, thanks to their good administration, without giving up their social security program but by getting the money necessary for its application from those who possess the largest share of the wealth of the nation.

The Liberal party, under the guidance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Louis St. Laurent), that great Canadian of whom we are proud, will direct our country in the difficult search for a new world order through our alliance with the democratic nations, and for a new social order through justice for all social classes in Canada. On problems as important as that of our merchant marine, they will apply the solution of the national interests of Canada, and their internationalism will always be enlightened by the nationalist care of a young nation with faith in its future.

(Text):

Mr. Rodney Young (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I have had the honour of taking part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. As I look around me I see a great many empty benches. Naturally I regret that, but I am proceeding on the hypothesis that what we lack in quantity we make up in quality, and that I am addressing the most intelligent portion of the membership of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lalonde: What about your leader? He is absent.

Mr. Young: Before proceeding with my main subject, I should like to make some comments in a humble way on the remarks that were made by the member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). We listened to scorn and a certain amount of sarcasm being heaped upon the head of the member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue) earlier in the afternoon. Apparently he had made an error in calculation on the matter of the eleven months or less than eleven months that had elapsed since the government health program went into effect. The comparison was made that a six year old child would know better. I remember that only a few days ago the member for New Westminster, in answer to a suggestion from this side of the house that smaller chocolate bars were a way of gypping the youngsters of Canada, made the statement that smaller chocolate bars were healthier and, said he, "I venture to say I can prove that it is a fact." A fact is a very important thing. As the member for New Westminster said this afternoon, facts are chiels that winna ding. My pronunciation of the dialect is not as good as his because I am two generations removed from the old sod, but nevertheless I, too, would venture to remark that chiels are facts that winna ding, and that the children who listen to his statement are bound to misinterpret it, to say the least. They will not think of the hon. member in a very kindly way. If they had been able to vote for him I am afraid they would be likely to vote against him in the coming general election.

The reproach was made that we on this side of the house are in favour of better old age pensions, that we want to look after the incurables, and that we want to take care of a certain number of veterans who are not very well cared for at the present time, and that at the same time we are in favour of a reduction of taxation. The comment was made that that seemed to be contradictory. Let me say that we think that exemptions of $750 for a single person and $1,500 for a married person are much too small. The exemptions should be much higher than that because of present high prices, and because of conditions in the country. At the same time we do not feel that if our policies were carried out it would necessarily mean a cut in social services, limited as they are, or that it would prevent the improvement of existing social services. We propose to cut taxes at the end where taxation is hurting the most people, who can least afford to pay, and increase taxation amongst that small section of the population which has the most money and can most afford to pay. It seems to me that it is reasonable, that it is logical, that it is humanitarian, and that it is plain common sense.

The suggestion has been made in this house, and it was made again this afternoon, that one of the causes of communism is the lack of social services, and that if social services were improved we would have less to fear from the growth of communism. I do not deny that statement but I would suggest that we in the C.C.F. group have advocated that social services should be extended to those countless thousands who need them, and need them desperately, not because we are afraid of communism but because we think it is the decent, humane thing to do. Psychologically that seems to me to be a much worthier reason, and I would suggest that it is the point of view that should be adopted by the government in relation to the problem.

In the days of the depression it used to be a common saying amongst our people that the poor get poorer and the rich get richer. But the days of the depression have gone, we have come through a war, and we have been in the piping times of peace for the last five years. During that period the poor have still got poorer and the government has got richer. The poorest amongst the poor are the old age pensioners, and every time they pay for food, shelter and clothing they pay a part of that taxation which has accumulated to the point where we expect a surplus of at least $500 million, and we have had larger surpluses annually for the past two or three years.

When the government come to us and say that they are engaged in cyclical budgeting, and that they want to save during the fat years in order to take care of the lean, I say to them that paying off the national debt is an excellent piece of business and it is good law, but they should remember their fathers and their mothers before they remember the bondholders. I believe in the statement in the good book: remember thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land that the Lord thy God has given thee. I believe that is true today, and that it is a better rule than remembering the bondholders and paying off the national debt. I believe that any surplus should go where it is so urgently needed.

In this debate I have listened to members of the Conservative party, the Liberal party, the Social Credit party and the C.C.F. All have agreed that something should be done for the old age pensioners; and I believe that year after year, if asked this question, they would be so agreed. Yet nothing comparable to what is necessary has been done to date. However, we are looking forward with the thought that a general election is in the air. We hope the government, with the sort of generosity that is always shown before a general election, will move in the interests of these old people who have spent their lives building up our country, who have made it possible for us to enjoy what we are enjoying today, and who at this late stage of their lives should be given some ease and comfort and some security in their declining years.

I want to deal also with the matter of superannuated civil servants. When asked why something cannot be done for these people the reason is always advanced that superannuated civil servants are paid out of a fund that is on an actuarial basis. Of course, to some of us who understand insurance and know what an actuarial basis means, this may sound very logical. But to the individual who is trying to live on $40 a month, all this talk does not mean very much. Financially it may be the correct thing; but from the point of view of the human being, he neither understands it nor will he tolerate it. We employed these people in the service of the state in various activities, whether humble or important. They gave years of service to our nation, and we are an honest people who wish to pay our debts. We will not lightly forgive a government which permits the superannuated civil servants of the country, in their grey hairs, to suffer as these people are suffering today; and I say that, despite actuarial bases or any other kind of financial excuse for not coming through with what is absolutely necessary for our retired civil servants.

In the course of my remarks I should like to deal with the situation that has developed in my city of Vancouver. Out there our people have returned to the period of the depression. It is as though the years in between have vanished; the piping times of peace, when we enjoyed high wages, full employment and full pockets have gone, and we are back in the days of the soup line. I have newspaper pictures here showing men lined up at a long table, and the headline is, "Soup kitchen business brisk." The writer goes on to say:

> "Soup kitchens" are operating in Vancouver to fill the stomachs of hungry men who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits or are not eligible for any. Shaven and unshaven, clean and unkempt, with the haggard look that comes from weeks of desperation, hundreds of forlorn men haunt the premises where social agencies ladle soup by the bowl or hand out meal tickets.

Now in my province they run to over fifty thousand, many of whom are not eligible for unemployment insurance or who have exhausted their eligibility and have no means of maintenance. I have here a news report which should interest the house, because it quotes the chief of the community chest, a very responsible person chosen from other responsible people in our society, who is capable and willing, and who has the leisure and possibly the security to interest himself in carrying on where government social security ends and where the need is still felt. In his speech, which is reported in the Vancouver Sun of March 1, he says:

> The retiring president said at the chest's annual meeting Monday night that "hungry and cold people get a bit impatient when they wait on the enactment of statutes." He said both single and family men have used up their unemployment insurance benefits and have no income. The matter must not be "smugly smoothed over" for another year, he said.

This is not an impatient C.C.F.'er, but the head of the community chest in Vancouver.

In my constituency we have one of the most beautiful natural parks in Canada. It is known from coast to coast and all over the continent. Wherever you hear tell of tourist paradises, you hear mention of Stanley park in Vancouver. It is an area which was left for our leisure, for our enjoyment; and before I left Vancouver I walked through that park, which is close to my home. Sitting on the benches in the bitter wind were the unemployed men, homeless and foodless. Under their clothes were stuck newspapers to keep out the wind. That is the sort of thing that is transpiring.

Mr. Cruickshank: Ugh!

Mr. Young: Did I hear the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) say "Ugh"?

Mr. Cruickshank: You heard me say you were talking utter nonsense.

Mr. Young: Thank you; happily that will go into the record.

Mr. Cruickshank: I hope so.

Mr. Young: And no doubt the seven thousand unemployed in the hon. gentleman's own constituency will appreciate the grunts that he uttered in this house a few moments ago.

Mr. Cruickshank: They will also recognize what I have done in their behalf.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to be interrupted by the hon. member at length, though I do not mind the odd interruption. I should like to go on and say that the Canadian society of incurables has sent most hon. members, perhaps all of them, a letter setting out their case, part of which I am going to present to the house because I believe it is worth listening to. They say:

> We cannot forget that thirty years have elapsed and the cycle of Mr. Mackenzie King's premiership has been completed since the desperate need of our Canadian incurables was first presented to our federal government. Members of parliament are still agreeing whole-heartedly that something should be done for them and yet nothing is being done.

And a little further on:

> Much has been said about an over-all security plan. That sounds reasonable if it could be brought into immediate existence. We are told that it cannot be done, and in the meantime our incurables are existing shamefully or else dying in poverty.

Then the letter concludes:

> We do not believe that the social and economic security of our incurables depends upon a proper relationship between our provincial and federal governments. That excuse will not pacify us any longer. If that were so, right thinking men would have remedied that difficulty before this. We believe that if the federal government so desires they can see that every incurable in Canada is receiving a proper pension of at least seventy-five dollars or more before this session is over. We believe that you do want to, otherwise life is not worth living for the thousands of people for which you are directly responsible clear across Canada.

I have had a great many letters similar to this, but if I were to present them all I would not have time to speak on any other subject. So I am going to present just one other letter dealing with this matter of the necessary social services for which this nation has looked to our present government over the years, as they are related to the $500 million the government is sitting on for the future, and which possibly they used to reduce our national debt last year. Here is a resolution from the Canadian non-pensioned veterans' widows, of which I shall read only part:

> that all non-pensioned veterans' widows whose late husbands served in any of His Majesty's forces during the great war, 1914-18, be considered under the War Veterans' Allowance Act, whether said husband served in an actual theatre of war or otherwise.
> We appeal to the dominion government for the necessity of making prompt provision for the non-pensioned widows of imperial veterans, by the extension of the War Veterans' Allowance Act under the same conditions as the Canadian non-pensioned widow, providing that such widows have been domiciled in the Dominion of Canada for a reasonable time. For example, —

This is a good example, I think.

> —the immigrant who has resided not less than a period of three years, can apply for the family allowance; we would urge that the imperial veterans' widows have the same privilege when applying for allowance.

It seems to me that what I have read is reasonable. It comes not from people who, if we support them, will reach a stage where they will not want to support themselves. These people cannot support themselves. These people are a crying shame to our country and to our civilization. It is a shame that a land such as Canada, one of the wealthiest in the world, rich in natural resources, despite its enormous wealth and with only twelve million people as compared with Great Britain which has forty-eight million people in that tight little island, is unable to inaugurate a social security program.

On a previous occasion the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said that some of these social services enjoyed by the British people were instituted by a Liberal government. More honour to the Liberals of Great Britain and less honour to the Liberals of Canada. The final touches were put to the program the British people now enjoy by a parliament just as we have here. If I stood up in that parliament and looked around, however, I would not be able to say to myself, as I am able to do here, every fourth man I see is an honoured and learned member: almost every third member is a member of the legal profession. In the British House of Commons I could look around and see bricklayers, ditch diggers, coal miners and sailors; I could see the representatives of a democratic people and they would represent every form of energy devoted to the interests of humanity, whether it be the energy of the brain or the energy of the muscles. I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to seeing that happen in this house. The reason I look forward to it is that the needs of the people have not been met.

In deciding what is going to happen in our country in the next few months, Mr. Speaker, it would be well to look at the history of elections in Canada since confederation. It is a notable fact that, before any party has taken office federally, that party has been in office in a majority of the provinces. The sole exception to this rule was the last election, which was a victory election. When the party in power federally has lost office in a majority of the provinces, then it has gone down to defeat at the next election. An examination of the political situation in Canada today shows that the Liberal party is no longer in office in a majority of the provinces. If the political rules that have developed in this country have any validity, then this government is like Belshazzar at the feast. It sits sated before the political tables from which it has eaten so long and the handwriting is on the wall, "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin."—You have been weighed in the balance and found wanting; your kingdom will be divided amongst your enemies.

I say to the government, that is about to happen. On the other hand, I look at the official opposition. I look at them in the early afternoon when they are all in the house. I see men who have been out in the political wilderness for many years. I find that the average age of that group is probably much higher than the average age of the house as a whole. I find that they look extremely senatorial and dignified. Had the Conservative party been in office, it is quite possible some of them would have occupied seats in that other place ere now. I watch them and see that they have a hungry eye when they look at the front benches on the government side. During the war years they were the greatest patriots. Amongst that group there are two holders of the Victoria Cross. These are the gentlemen who called for an all-out effort during the war and called for conscription. They said "Everything for our country." Today, with those hungry eyes fastened on the government front benches, they are in an alliance with Duplessis. Men are working for them in the elections who, only a few years ago, the Conservatives cried out should be in jail. At that time they said these men were opposed to patriotism—traitors to our country. But today they have compromised, and what a compromise!

I say that the people of this country have no choice between the official opposition and the government. It is impossible for a group to straddle the fence as the official opposition proposes to do. When the records of the debates in this house are examined it will be found that the official opposition has not brought up the economic conditions of the immediate future or the problems that face the country from the point of view of bread and butter. They have dillied and dallied with the ancient history of our country and the more recent history of our country in the form of dominion-provincial relations. Worse than that, they propose to bring up the story of Hong Kong. I would say this, Mr. Speaker, that the men and women who survived but who lost brothers and sons in the Hong Kong disaster have suffered enough. To bring this up now in order to make political capital out of it is a stab in the back to the people of Canada. The object of this move is headline hunting. I say that the people of Canada will not thank the Progressive Conservative party for it and will make that fact known at the next election.

In my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we have fine homes and beautiful gardens. As I said before, we have one of the great parks of Canada. There is also the business section and, in the eastern section, there is a slum quarter. As the member for that constituency, I have frequented that quarter, I have called upon these people and discussed their problems with them. I have examined the record and found that, when that area pays rates to the city of Vancouver, the city of Vancouver has to pay back additional money to that area in the form of the cost of juvenile delinquency; in the cost of crime; in the form of providing policemen; in the cost of hospitalization for the various social diseases; in the cost of tubercular prevalence; in the cost of infant mortality. All of these things cost more than the city receives from that area. I say this, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come when we in this country are getting into the plight of the people in Europe, we are developing slum dwellers.

I believe that the children of our country should live normal, natural lives. I believe that every child in an ideal society, such as that for which I hope we are struggling—and I include every member in this house—would rise at dawn and sleep at dusk. It would run in the grass. It would stand in the streams in its bare feet, and standing on the round stones it would feel the water rippling and enjoy the sunshine. It would be able to smell the grass, and it would be able to take part in the natural earthbound existence which the natural person has. The children in the slums in my area are cut off from that. They are cut off from anything normal and natural. When they grow up they are foredoomed. Society is against them. Many of them go into the criminal courts. They appear in those courts as pleaders, as vagrants and as criminals. They are there on petty crimes which are always prevalent in an area where an individual has no chance. I believe in equality in a real sense. I believe in equality of opportunity. I believe that everyone in this country has the right to a break, when they are small, anyway. They will all grow up differently. We are all built differently. But if they are given an even break we shall have a better Canada and it will be a more worth-while Canada.

We who sit in this house have these responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, and after we leave this house, nothing that we do or say in the way of an explanation as to how this could not be afforded and that could not be done will redeem that. We ourselves will be responsible, when we go before the people, more for what we have failed to do than for what we have done. And especially responsible will be this Liberal government, and the hon. members who sit on the back benches will be just as responsible as the hon. members who sit on the front benches, because no government survives without the support of all its members.

I do not want to dwell too much on this, but I do want to point out that a special committee on housing was set up by this house fourteen years ago. That committee on housing brought in a report which reads in part as follows—I shall read section 4 first:

The formation, institution and pursuit of a policy of adequate housing should be accepted as a social responsibility.

Section 5 reads as follows:

There is no apparent prospect of the low-rental housing need being met through unaided private enterprise building for profit.

Section 13:

The slum areas which have been shown to cast very heavy expenses on many branches of public administration such as health, welfare, fire prevention, administration of justice, et cetera, may justify public assistance, which is likely to prove as sound financially as it is certainly desirable socially.

Therefore all the remarks I have made on slum conditions, all the reasons that I propose to urge on this house for low-rental subsidized housing, were made fourteen years ago by a committee of this house, and yet where are we today? We still have not got it.

There was a report in the newspapers dealing with some of the figures of the experiments which have been made in subsidized housing in the United States. In San Francisco some of the most significant figures came to light. The revenue and expenditures situation in the slum area compared with an equal non-slum area were as follows: Revenues from the non-slum area were $555,600. From a slum area of equivalent size the revenues were $368,000. But the expenditures in the non-slum area were only $86,000 and in the slum area they were $741,000. I have not time to give a breakdown of these figures although I have them here.

May I say this, especially to the Prime Minister, whose published statements in the press of late have shown some slight departure from his original statement made, I believe, some time ago in which he implied that he would not be himself a member of a government that went into the housing business. His more recent statements tend to show that there is a possibility that there is something in this need of people being housed, which is a responsibility of the government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

EXPLANATION OF STATEMENT MADE BY HON. MEMBER FOR NEW WESTMINSTER

Mr. Thomas Reid (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. My attention has been drawn to the fact that from my speech this afternoon the inference might be drawn that I had suggested that the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Jones) had leanings toward communism. It will be recalled that I referred to the by-election in that constituency, and to the kind of propaganda used.

Let me assure him that I had no such thought in mind. The hon. member for Yale has no more thoughts of or leanings toward communism than I have, or than most hon. members of the house have; and I should not like that impression to remain. What I meant to say was that we no longer can use the word communism as something frightening, or a word to frighten people.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. Rodney Young (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like in the few remaining minutes of my time to refer to the matter brought up yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). He referred to the sale of Canadian ships to foreign flags, the reduction of our merchant marine and the consequent unemployment which would follow if that procedure was very far spread.

I should like to say that the house would expect—and I presume it will receive from the minister concerned—some assurance that Canadian companies are not retaining ownership of shipping and transferring it to foreign flags. Because there is abroad among the sailors on our ships a very definite impression that that has taken place in at least one instance. I have letters on my files to that effect.

We all realize that during the period of the war many young men from Canada went to sea for the first time. They did so in order to help us win the battle of the Atlantic. They had their ships sunk from under them —not once or twice, but sometimes three or four times. Those men have adopted seafaring as a means of making their livelihood, and as their way of life. They received adequate training.

It was suggested that there had been labour trouble in the merchant marine, and that this had an ill effect on the prospects of the industry. Let me say this, that the labour troubles over a period of years have given to our sailors a higher standard of wages and conditions than are to be found in other merchant navies. The minister himself said that the average wage of a Canadian mariner was $49 higher than that of a British mariner. A Liberal government is liberal, not only in name but, I hope, in its outlook upon the standard of living of the Canadian worker. And it is in the interests of liberalism, as it is in the interests of Canada, that when a standard of living has been achieved no private corporation should be allowed to whittle down that standard of living by hiring cheaper foreign labour. Every effort should be made by the government, when ships are sold, to see to it that pressure is brought to bear to have new keels laid to maintain the standard of labour.

Mr. Mayhew: I know the hon. member would like to be fair. I am quite sure the Minister of Transport did not imply that labour was the cause, any more than the owners of the ships. He did not make any charge against labour.

Mr. Young: I do not wish to be misunderstood.

Mr. Mayhew: That was the inference you left.

Mr. Young: The minister will bear me out when I say that in industrial struggles there are two points of view. I am sure the minister believes that, too. However, I would say that I do not speak because I am subject to any pressure group. Everyone here knows that that would be unlikely, in view of the party with which I am associated. It is not likely I would be subject to the pressure of any group which seeks to gain orders for the building of new ships at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer.

But I have been to sea; I have been in the black gang; and I know many of the conditions and the great effort which has been made through the years by our Canadian seafarers to get decent conditions and wages in their particular vocations. I want to see it maintained, and I am sure the minister also would wish that.

Mr. Cruickshank: May I ask a question?

Mr. Young: Owing to the shortness of time at my disposal, it would not be fair if I were to permit the question.

Mr. Cruickshank: I would ask it now, or at the conclusion of your speech.

Mr. Young: Before taking my seat I should like to draw the attention of the government to the safety regulations on the Vancouver waterfront. May I draw their attention to the fact that for that whole waterfront area at the present time the federal safety inspectors number only two. It is the opinion of people who should know, and who are experts in longshoring, that it requires a minimum of six safety inspectors.

The provincial government has jurisdiction over safety regulations, through the workmen's compensation board, as far as the highwater mark. But as the longshoremen in Vancouver work mainly on the ships and on the docks a good deal depends upon the safety regulations being carried out by the federal inspectors. I am given to understand by all sides that the inspectors who are at present engaged on the Vancouver waterfront are doing an excellent job, so far as it is within their power, having due regard to the fact that there are only two of them. It is by no means their fault, individually, that accidents have occurred. However, the rigging used in longshoring is cumbersome in many ways, and if it is to be properly inspected and found to be in good condition we must have a better safety inspection.

I should like to draw attention to the fact that the men who are used for first-aid work are often recruited from among the longshoremen who, after many years of service, have reached an age which is too far advanced for their jobs. That is, they cannot carry out the extremely heavy labour of longshoring. Very often these men are recruited as first-aid men. If they go on the job and a piece of tackle is missing, they are sent back to the yards to pick up that tackle. They may be absent two hours or perhaps a day. If anyone were hurt during their absence no first-aid man would be on the job. In my view the regulations should be more strict respecting the knowledge of first-aid men on the waterfront. I feel this will bear some investigation on the part of the minister concerned.

Then, if I may be permitted, I should like to thank the authorities responsible for the offer of assistance in starting a steel plant in British Columbia. We need a steel plant out there. We have the materials; we have the coal; we have the iron; we have the mines. If it is possible—and I hope it will be—to make financial arrangements whereby the money will be furnished dollar for dollar with the government, it may go a great distance toward relieving the present unemployment situation, and will give us what we need so badly on the west coast, a primary industry to provide employment to thousands of people who come in from other parts of Canada to enjoy our climate, and also people from stricken Europe.

We wish to have a satisfied citizenry, and we also hope that we may not be inflicted with a continuance of the terrible condition of unemployment existing today. In our view the government would be well advised to give every possible support to this endeavour.

Mr. Cruickshank: As the hon. member's time has not expired, would he permit a question now?

Mr. Young: Yes.

Mr. Cruickshank: I know the hon. member wishes to be fair. He said in his address that in the Fraser Valley constituency there are some 7,000 unemployed. I believe he will agree that most of those are loggers unemployed because of weather conditions.

Mr. Young: I wish to be fair, as the hon. member has said. While it is true that I could answer by saying yes, if I were to do so I would be only partly fair. These loggers are domiciled in the Fraser valley in most instances. It is true that they are employed in the lumbering industry; but in most cases they are residents of the Fraser valley.

Mr. Cruickshank: Quite true; but, by way of a supplementary question, the unemployment is due mainly to the weather conditions, is it not?

Mr. Young: It is not due to the weather mainly, because it was announced that the probability was that the logging camps would be closed down in British Columbia for as much as four months; and if the hon. member will look at the figures of the bureau of statistics—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Young: —he will find—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will understand that I cannot allow him to go on indefinitely.

Mr. H. W. Timmins (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset of my remarks extend my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. These two hon. gentlemen have been given the privilege of taking a leading part in a time-honoured tradition and to them belongs the satisfaction of a job well done. The speech from the throne occupies a real place in our parliamentary system because it provides an opportunity for members of parliament to speak on behalf of the people back home. In the United States they call this traditional speech the speech on the state of the union. In Canada it is the speech from the throne. It is, in fact, a national stock-taking.

In my constituency of Parkdale the cry is for tax relief. The people contend that the income tax and the hidden taxes are getting to be more than they can bear. There is something wrong with a government which takes from the people a surplus of upwards of $700 million in one year and a surplus of upwards of $600 million the next year. In the army we used to call any additional thing "buckshee." These taxes are buckshee taxes, they are something additional, they represent something that is not needed. The people back home are asking about these buckshee taxes. These taxes have become too heavy and the people are very resentful.

Among these taxes is one that has been referred to a number of times in this house, the tax on soft drinks. A return which I have received shows that in 1946 the revenue from this tax was $17·5 million. In 1947 the amount was even more, and in 1948 it was still higher. This tax has reached the point where the industry is being stifled to some extent. The tax is stopping the people from buying. That means the possibility of unemployment in the industry. I am told by representatives of the industry that if the tax were taken off the saving would all be passed on to the public so that they would be able to buy their soft drinks at the price they paid before the war.

I spoke to the minister about some of these indirect taxes and he gave me to understand that when they got to the point where they were interfering with industry, where there was a likelihood of unemployment, he would have to do something about them. Despite what may have been said by others in this house about this tax, the fact is that this industry is finding the going pretty tough and there will be unemployment if something is not done about the tax.

There is another tax we have not heard so much about, but it is quite important. I refer to the 25 per cent tax on toilet articles and cosmetics which used to be only 10 per cent. In 1941 during the war it was raised to 25 per cent. This tax is getting to the point where it is stifling buying by the public. I know of one United States firm which came here in 1932. They have done a lot of business and employed many people but they are considering seriously giving up because of the results of this tax. It will not be long before you find other companies giving up by reason of the tax. I know another smaller firm in Toronto which finds the going pretty hard for the same reason.

I think all of us want our women folk to look their best and we expect them to purchase cosmetics. They feel resentful over this tax and I submit that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) should reduce it at least to the point where it was in 1941 when it was only ten per cent. Those of us who were overseas during the first great war remember the comedienne, Elsie Janis, who was the toast of London in those days. She used to sing a song which went something like this: I want a man, a determined man, determined to do what I want him to do. I say to the Minister of Finance that the women of Canada are saying that they want a determined man who will reduce this tax to the point where it was in 1941.

There is also an anomaly in connection with this tax. Shaving cream, hair shampoo, shaving soap and toothpaste are all subject to the 25 per cent tax. I imagine that every one of us uses every day probably those articles upon which we have to pay tax of 25 per cent. They are just ordinary necessities used to cleanse the human body. But toilet soap, another article used to cleanse the body, bears a tax of only five per cent. Why should not this heavy, irritating tax of 25 per cent be reduced, at least to five per cent, so that it would be in line with the toilet soap tax? I see no reason why necessities like shaving cream, shaving soap, toothpaste and hair shampoo should not be reduced, preferably by taking off all the tax, but in any event to five per cent in line with toilet soap.

I come now to the matter of income tax. Right now people are striving to the limit of their resources to pay this tax, and by the end of the year they have very little to put away for old age and so on. I think we are all finding it increasingly difficult to pay this tax year by year without getting behind. The present exemption of $1,500 for a married man is worth only $750 at the present day value of the dollar, and that is a pretty small exemption. I ask the minister to take cognizance of the platform of the Progressive Conservative party in which we recommend that the exemption be raised to $2,500 for married people and $1,250 for single people. Then we urge a further exemption of $200 for dependent children.

There is one more tax to which I should like to refer, the tax on widows' incomes. Today under certain circumstances a widow who has brought up a family and who is maintaining a home is entitled to an exemption of only $750. She must maintain herself the same as a married person who has an exemption of $1,500. I submit to the minister that that exemption should be raised. At the age of 65 years the widow's exemption is by the Income Tax Act increased to $1,250, but we must remember that a widow who has brought up a family and who is maintaining a home may find her expenses just too heavy in the years before she reaches 65. I submit that the age limit should be reduced from 65 years to 50 years, so that the exemption would apply at the earlier age.

For the greater part of my time tonight I should like to speak on the subject of the desperate need for housing in this country. In the face of increasing population—and there were over 83,000 new family formations in 1948—and in the face of increasing immigration—and there were over 125,000 new Canadians who came here last year—the Liberal government has assumed a negative and defeatist attitude to the production of housing in Canada. The records show that in 1946 only 65,000 houses were built. In 1947 the figures are 72,346 housing units, and in 1948 81,000 housing units. Of the number built last year only 26 per cent were rental units whereas rental accommodation is the type most in demand. As building costs go up, and the size of down payments increases, there are fewer and fewer people who can buy houses. Actually the builders who were building under the integrated housing plan have now run into certain difficulties.

The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) advised the house today of an amendment to the integrated housing plan, but I can tell him that, although his changes are laudatory, as a matter of fact they are not going to help the ordinary builder very much in building more houses in 1949. Some of the things that the minister has suggested, and which must have been given to him in good faith by his advisers, are rather difficult to accomplish in the housing business. I want to tell him that when he expects a builder part way through his job to present bills that have been paid and waivers of liens in respect of the job that is being performed he is asking for trouble. There is nothing more certain in the world than that he will run into trouble, if his department asks for that sort of thing. There are also new features of the National Housing Act which have caused trouble. I have seen clippings from the papers and I have had letters from builders who tell me that the National Housing Act is not working out to their satisfaction, and is not working out to the satisfaction of the general buying public. We are running into very serious difficulties in that regard at the very beginning of 1949.

We should remember that at least 90 per cent of the housing units which have been built in Canada in the last four years have been constructed by private builders. They have been constructed by private enterprise, and in spite of the building priority system because, and as a matter of fact, in most cases the builders get no priority at all for materials. They obtain materials wherever they can find them. The private builder has been carrying the load in spite of the government. It is my considered opinion that the problem of housing in Canada will only be solved when the government gives private builders the materials to do the job, and gives them the green light to go ahead no matter what.

I should like to trace the attitude of the government on the question of housing as it has been indicated to the public since before the 1945 election. We can well remember those things that were said by cabinet ministers, and the promises that were made that, when the Liberal party was elected to power, houses would be turned out like tanks off a production line. They also said they had a housing program for Canada. The years have shown there is not any housing program for Canada. There has just been a series of expedients, of little things that are supposed to fit together, and they have not fitted together at all. There is no such thing as a housing plan for Canada even today.

Since 1945 we have heard the various utterances of the cabinet ministers and responsible parties. For a few minutes I am going to take the time to review them. The first was in July, 1947, and was a pronouncement of the then minister of reconstruction. He said:

> The government takes no responsibility for solving the entire housing problem for this country. It is perfectly ridiculous to suggest that it is a government responsibility. Every city has its own housing responsibility, as has every province. The government is responsible for the returned men, and its responsibility stops at that point.

I am going to suggest that the quotations I am about to give the house indicate that statement apparently still stands. "The government is responsible for the returned men, and its responsibility stops at that point."

In May of 1948 the then minister of reconstruction had this to say at page 3642 of Hansard:

> Because of very high construction costs and because the building industry is now working at capacity, I do not think that the present is an opportune time to attempt the initial steps into the low-rental housing field. Certainly at this time I am not prepared to recommend capital subsidies or contributions to a rent reduction fund by the dominion.

To carry on a little further, the present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) became leader of his party, and very shortly afterwards he made a statement which has been quoted many times in the house, and which fits into the chronological order of the things I have to say. I will therefore read it. He said:

> No government of which I am a part will ever pass legislation for subsidized housing.

He watered that down a short time afterwards, when he gave a press statement in which he said:

> For the present the government will not consider subsidized housing for the low rental groups since it is convinced that no further money put into housing programs could build a single additional dwelling.

[Mr. Timmins.]

I wish to take issue violently with that statement because it shows a complete lack of knowledge of the subject. As a matter of fact, commencing in 1949 there are a good many factors which indicate that, given some leadership and direction, we could build a great many more houses in 1949 than were built in 1948. The first factor is that the lumber situation is a great deal easier. Throughout the country one can get lumber now, and it was hard to get last year. Then again labour is a good deal easier to secure. A year ago you could not get a labouring man on a building job. The boss had to do the labouring work himself. In addition to that, carpenters are now coming into the residential field. I know of one builder to whom three carpenters came in a period of two days within the last two months, and he took on two of them. The labour situation in residential building is getting better every day.

As to steel, from the information I receive, and the reports that come out from time to time, steel will be easier to obtain this year. By the third quarter of this year there will be a great deal of steel on the market. Steel goes into the manufacture of bathtubs, sinks, piping, hardware, and many other things that go to make up a house. In addition to all that, if we look at a little booklet, "Supply of Building Materials in Canada" which was sent to us by the Department of Trade and Commerce yesterday, we find at page 14 that they have this to say about building materials:

> Increased production of twenty-one of the thirty building materials covered here is anticipated in 1949.

I would say to the Prime Minister, if he were here, and I say to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, who must now have these matters at his finger tips, that there is real hope for additional building in the year 1949. I have the temerity to say to him that if he wants any help from this side of the house and he thinks we can help him, and if he does not place too much weight upon what the Prime Minister tells him about the lack of building materials, or labour, or whatever it may be, we will give him the necessary advice, gratis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to two paragraphs in the speech from the throne. The first is:

> The provision of housing has received and continues to receive close attention. More new housing units were provided during the last calendar year than ever before.

That was in 1948, and we have no new thought for 1949 there.

> Your approval will be sought for the establishment of a department of reconstruction and development to continue the functions now vested in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, including the ministerial responsibility for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The only new thought I can find in that paragraph is that this department now is going to be called the department of reconstruction and development. In other words, apparently the minister is going to be given some authority and some powers in respect of development. We on this side of the house admire the new minister very much and wish him good luck in the job he has undertaken, but I really feel he has just been handed a bag of tricks. I do not believe he has been given the authority he is entitled to. It seems to me, from the statement of the former minister of reconstruction, that this was not the time to start any new program, that this very direction or instruction has been handed on to the new minister, and he is stalled before he starts. He spoke in Toronto on January 24 of this year. Unfortunately I was not able to hear him, but I believe he made a very good speech. But in that speech he did not say anything new. I was rather surprised, because those of us on this side expect to hear a lot of good things from him, a lot of new things. All he told the people was that about eighty thousand houses had been built last year and he hoped about one hundred thousand would be built in 1949. He also said that if we had one hundred thousand additional housing units available right now there would be occupants for every one of them. That is what we have been telling them on the other side, that we are one hundred thousand houses short.

Then the minister said something which some assistant must have put into his brief, I am sure. He said there was a sort of backlog of $100 million for public investment, which his department had to fall back on, some of which was going to be used in future for housing. Well, as a matter of fact we have all known about the public investment fund since 1944. I have seen letters saying to a certain industry, "We believe your project should fit into this public investment undertaking. When the proper time comes, if your project measures up we will see that you get some of this money". I know the minister is going to have some of that money to use for housing; but after all that is a hedge against bad times. I am sure none of those on the treasury benches and none of us on this side of the house are looking for those bad times to come, and we do not want to have to dig into this public investment fund for a long while, if ever. So there is nothing very much in the pronouncement of the minister that this fund is there, ready to fall back upon.

However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to get down to some other practical matters in respect of this housing situation, and to take you back to the city of Toronto for a few moments. In that city on or about May 1 or June 1 next there will be a bad time in housing by reason of the recent amendment to regulations under the wartime rental order. The report of the welfare commissioner is to the effect that more than 4,500 families will have been served with eviction notices, and that 1,000 families may soon require emergency accommodation which the city does not have. In my hand I have a picture of Little Norway, one of the places where many of these more or less displaced persons have been put, people who had to go into emergency housing. The only way you can get into this housing is through a foot of water. In this picture I see people paddling to their homes; I see children playing in the streets in rubber boots. Those are the conditions under which they are living.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) knows all about this. He was in Toronto two weeks ago and spoke at a civic dinner. He had been taken around to see these places, and in his speech he mentioned that it was unfortunate that these emergency shelter projects had to be carried on, but that they were only intended to be temporary and that something would have to be done about it. He made quite a good speech, to which I shall refer in a few minutes. As a matter of fact, the situation in Toronto can be duplicated all over the dominion. I am told that by June 1 perhaps 13,500 people in eastern Canada will have been served with these eviction notices, so it is easy to see where we are getting with respect to housing.

When the Prime Minister was in Toronto on February 19 he devoted every minute of his speech at the civic luncheon, about thirty-five minutes, to housing. So I do not need to tell the house that the right hon. gentleman is pretty well seized of this question. Last evening he also spoke on the national network, when again he had a good deal to say about housing. These are some of the things he said in Toronto, first with respect to housing for veterans:

Housing for veterans he admitted to be a national responsibility, but Mr. St. Laurent declared that "it is not a part of the present plans of the federal government to move from veterans' rental projects into rental housing for civilians."

As a matter of fact, if the government would only do something about veterans' houses, if they only had a plan about veterans' housing, if they would only start there and do something about it, then we could go on to the next paragraph. But they have no plan, and there was nothing concrete in the speeches of the Prime Minister either last evening or in Toronto by way of a plan for veterans' housing. In the army we used to have a saying, "Let George do it." We have the same saying now in the party opposite. The fact of the matter is that in his speeches the Prime Minister really was saying, "Let George do it;" let the other fellow do it; let the municipality or the province do it. We will come to that in a moment, however. He also said:

"We feel that the proper policy for the federal government is one which is limited to extending financial assistance to individuals and corporations, whether home owners or landlords."

Federal participation at present is limited to slum clearance grants and loans to limited dividend companies for low-rental housing, but the Prime Minister said that "it may be that experience will show that other forms of federal assistance will be desirable."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I point out that in what the Prime Minister has said, and in what the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) has said either in or out of the house —and he has not really said very much about it in the house, though I presume he will do so later in this debate—there is nothing concrete by way of a plan for veterans, in the first place, and certainly there is nothing by way of a plan for any other citizens of our country. I quote further from his newspaper report:

The Prime Minister said his government is ready at any time to meet any provincial government in order to work out housing problems as between municipal, provincial and federal authorities.

In the house the other day the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) asked the minister of reconstruction a question. He asked whether the government was willing to discuss long-range housing programs with any of the provincial representatives. The answer the minister gave, as reported in the press, is that he was not in favour of a dominion-provincial municipal conference on housing at this time. You see, Mr. Speaker, there is a certain amount of buck-passing taking place. The Prime Minister says the responsibility rests to some extent with the municipality. I am sure that each of the municipalities that have veterans who need houses would be willing to do its share. I am sure that every province in the country will be willing to do its share, too, but some leadership must be given. In so far as the veteran is concerned, the Prime Minister admits that the responsibility rests upon the federal government. Why can we not have a plan? Why can we not have a start? Why must we go around looking for someone to start the ball rolling?

[Mr. Timmins.]

Mr. Winters: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to say that I think it would be helpful to the house if he were to read my answer from Hansard rather than from a report in the press.

Mr. Timmins: I stand corrected if that was not the correct answer. Perhaps the minister would like to read it from Hansard now or when I have finished my speech.

A start must be made in all these things and I firmly believe that the start should be made in veterans' housing. I firmly believe that, if a start were made and we did have plans, the solution of the other problems connected with housing would follow right along. Something would then be done about emergency housing and, following that, would come the matter of slum clearance. In respect of all these matters, however, a start must be made.

The minister has also said, outside the house I believe, that he proposes to make a survey of housing in Canada so that he might know where to start. As a matter of fact, I presume every city and every town in Canada has a housing register. I believe such a survey could be made in a matter of two weeks. Certainly, it could be made by the end of this month. If housing is to be had in 1949, a start must be made almost right away. Following the survey I suggest that plans should be made immediately for the production of veterans' houses in every city and town in Canada where veterans' houses are needed. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has plans which have been going through its office for many years. This corporation has been dealing with the various expedients relating to housing such as land development, integrated housing plans, National Housing Act loans and all that sort of thing. I see no reason in the world why a plan for veterans' housing could not be produced within a matter of a few weeks after the survey is made.

Then, I think a conference of the mayors, provincial premiers or their deputies, along with the representatives of other municipal bodies should be called so that a start could be made, first of all, in respect of veterans' housing; secondly, for emergency housing; and thirdly, for slum clearance. I do think a start must be made now. Since we have a new minister and he has a new department with a new name, one word of which is "development"—which means dig, produce, erect, construct—all that is needed is more assistance from the treasury bench. The ability of the new minister should enable him to get that help. I do not often quote scripture here, but there is a verse in the bible in which St. Paul is speaking to some of his followers in a distant city and he says:

> Stand not upon the order of your going, but go at once.

I am saying to the minister that he should get started at once.

Mr. Ronald Moore (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne did not contain any legislation which might be termed controversial in nature. No doubt this is strategy on the part of the government since 1949 is likely to be an election year. The government candidates will find it sufficiently difficult to explain the policy of the government over the past three years without, at the same time, having to explain any controversial legislation which might have been disclosed in the speech from the throne.

It is unfortunate, however, that a side issue has been introduced into this debate, and that is dominion-provincial relations. I am not for one moment saying that dominion-provincial relations is not an important subject. It is. But I do insist there are before this government and before the country many other problems which should have precedence in this debate. One of those problems is the high cost of living in this country. I venture to say that the cost of living today is the main problem before the Canadian people. It is the main problem because it affects a larger number of people than any other problem in Canada. We have a housing problem and the possibility of an unemployment problem. We also have the problem of developing and finding markets for our agricultural products. At the moment, however, I insist that all those problems are subsidiary to the one problem of the high cost of living.

It is to be regretted that the government did not see fit to bring down legislation to deal with that all-important problem at this time. Reference has already been made in this debate to the high cost of living. As I say, it is unfortunate it did not receive more consideration. In previous sessions of this parliament, in 1946 and 1947, reference was also made to the high cost of living. Statements have been made by members in this house and by other people throughout the country that the reason for the high cost of living is the demands of labour for increased wages. I am not saying that when increases in wages are granted they will not increase the cost of living, but I do say that when people talk in that manner they should also give the other side of the picture. They should also deal with the extra profits obtained by large corporations which have also helped to raise the cost of living.

When these two subjects are considered side by side, I think it must be admitted that the increased profits of industry contributed a great deal more towards raising the cost of living than the increase in wages to the workingman. For a minute or two, I should like to develop that point. Unfortunately, I could not obtain figures dealing specifically with the Canadian situation. The figures I have, which deal with the situation in Canada, relate to one of our largest industries, namely, the iron and steel industry.

In the iron and steel industry, between 1945 and 1947, the workers received an increase in wages which amounted to nine per cent. During the same period of time the increase in the profits of the corporation amounted to sixty-six per cent. I submit that, when we are studying the reasons for the increase in the cost of living, we must give as much consideration to the increase in profits as to the increase in wages. I submit that up to the present time that has not been done. You can review the facts in connection with the pulp and paper industry, and a number of other industries in Canada, and you will find that the situation is similar to a greater or lesser degree; but the most important figures in connection with a study of this problem come from the United States. The Congress for Industrial Organization, one of the largest unions in the United States, has made a special study of this situation. They have carefully calculated how much a percentage increase in wages to the workers cost the plants which gave the increases. They have also calculated how much extra money the companies received by virtue of an increase in the price of the things which they had to sell. Here is the situation with respect to the United States, and I submit that I am being fair in presenting these figures for the United States, because the industrial picture of the United States is similar to the industrial picture in Canada. The standard of living in the two countries is somewhat similar, and generally speaking the economy of both countries is the same. Therefore, once again I submit that I am on solid ground when I say that the situation in the two countries can be considered on a par.

Take the iron and steel industry as an example. The iron and steel industry gave an increase in wages to their industrial workers, and at the same time an increase in the price of steel was given to the companies. The increase in wages cost the companies $170 million a year, but the increase in the price of steel netted the same companies $640 million a year extra.

Take the coal companies. They gave an increase in wages to their workers. That increase in wages cost these coal companies $150 million a year, but the increase in the price of coal netted the coal companies an additional $500 million a year.

Take the automobile manufacturers. Five of the largest corporations in the United States producing automobiles gave an increase in pay to their industrial workers. That increase in pay cost the companies $152 million a year; but, at the same time that the increase in pay was given, the price of automobiles was raised on the United States market, and that extra price netted the corporations an additional $540 million a year.

In calculating the increase in the cost of living in the United States you must take into consideration the fact that the owners of the industry get a much larger share of the excess prices than do the industrial workers, and that also explains the reason why we have a spiral in an inflationary period: A strike, an increase in wages, followed by another strike and an increase in wages.

I submit that the government have not dealt fairly with the people of this country because they have failed to deal with that situation. They have not dealt with the combines in this country. If all the legislation which is on the statute books of Canada to deal with the combines had been put into effect we should not have combines at this time. The first legislation enacted in Canada to deal with combines was enacted in 1889. Another act was put on the statute books in 1897. A combines investigation commission was set up in 1910. It was revised in 1919, and again revised in 1923. I believe a new act was brought into effect in 1935, amended in 1937 and again amended in 1945. After putting all that legislation on the statute books one would have thought that combines would not have got very far in Canada, but that is not so. The real problem before the people of Canada today is the control of these combines. I submit that both old parties have failed to bring about this control which would be in the interests of the average consumer in Canada.

I note one statement in the speech from the throne which said that there was a great danger in the world today from the spread of communism. Undoubtedly there is some truth in that statement; but I would have expected that the speech from the throne would contain another statement, namely, how they intended to deal with the situation in Canada. If they intended to deal with it, one of the first things that they would have said is, we are going to socialize or nationalize the large cartels and corporations which are now in operation in Canada. If they had done that, they would have solved those problems which are the only ones that can lead to the development of communism in this country.

I am not a bit afraid of communism in this country. I am certain that it has not got a chance because the conditions which exist in Canada are entirely different from the conditions which existed in Russia at the time of the revolution, or the conditions which exist in China at the present time. A study of the economic factors in connection with these things will soon prove to anyone that communism cannot develop in a state as highly developed as Canada or the United States is today.

I now wish to deal for a moment with some of our other problems, some of the problems which I think should have been mentioned in the speech from the throne. It is often argued that the cost of living does not affect the farmer to the same extent that it affects the industrial worker. There may be some truth in that statement, but it must also be remembered that the cost of living has also increased for the farmer just as much as it has for the industrial worker, and more in some cases.

According to the bureau of statistics the average cost of living on farms today has increased by 38 per cent since 1945. But, in addition to that cost of living increase for the farmers, there is another increase, namely, an increase in the price of farm machinery and particularly an increase in the price of spare parts. It would naturally be argued that the farmer does not have to spend his money every year on renewing his machinery. That is quite true, but he must spend money every year to keep it up, and that involves the buying of spare parts. The costs of these spare parts at the present time are very high. I submit that the increased costs all the way down the line have taken from the people almost all that was gained during and after the war years in the increased level of operation of our national economy.

I am not going to review the history of the high cost of living; I am simply going to say that it is to be regretted the government saw fit to abandon price control at this time. The experiences of the government and the people of Canada were such as to prove that price control was the best possible method of maintaining the standard of living of the various groups throughout the country. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, when price control was lifted in 1947 on three hundred commodities in this country. These three hundred commodities were selected which did not figure too much in the actual cost of living. When the price ceilings were lifted the result was a decided increase in the cost of living, sufficient to prove to this government and to anyone else that any abandonment of controls would lead to an unprecedented rise in the cost of living. But despite that information, which was available to everyone at the time, the government apparently yielded to the wishes of someone and gradually did away with price controls. In 1947 this was a pretty live issue. There was a possibility, when price controls were lifted, that great profits could be made from the sale of consumer goods. Naturally, some of our larger companies were extremely anxious that price control should be abandoned at the earliest possible moment. One of these gentlemen was the president of the Robert Simpson Company. This gentleman spoke to the shareholders of the company at a meeting in 1947. At that meeting he made this statement dealing with price control. I wish hon. members to listen to it, and decide who was more correct in judging the economic situation, the president of the Robert Simpson Company or the leaders of labour unions and leaders of farm organizations. Here is what the president had to say at that time:

> An over-all and immediate lifting of ceilings would quickly react to the benefit of all consumers. The considerations which the government took into account as necessary in applying the over-all price ceiling in 1941, are now working to the disadvantage of consumers. In spite of subsidies, in some cases running into hundreds of thousands a year, standard lines at popular prices, many of them household and personal essentials, have not been produced except in token quantities, simply because a producer could keep workers employed making substitute articles which could be made at a profit in spite of the price ceiling.

And it goes on:

> Even if these standard popular priced lines were produced to sell at a price somewhat higher than the ceiling the real cost of living would be less in total than at present. There has been such continuous propaganda on one side of this question that it is difficult for many to believe the truth of this "price" situation.

In view of what has happened since that speech was made, I leave it to any hon. member to decide who was the more correct, the president of that company or the leaders of the unions and farm organizations throughout Canada. With the cost of living where it is today, our decision can go only in one direction—against the company.

I should like now to say a few words in connection with agricultural marketing. Despite the expansion of our industrial production in Canada, agriculture remains our basic and our chief industry. It is also true, however, that agriculture depends to a very large degree upon a foreign market to maintain the standard of living of our agricultural producers and workers. At the present time almost 50 per cent of our agricultural production must go abroad. That means we must have a foreign market to take delivery of those goods.

At the present time, I believe, the British foreign market is the best possible market we can develop for our agricultural products. I believe that, not because I am of British parentage, but because Britain is the largest single market anywhere in the world for the delivery of agricultural products. I think all possible steps should now be taken to develop that market to the utmost for our agricultural industry.

At the present time there are great trading difficulties between this country and Great Britain, something which has been termed a dollar shortage. Britain's purchases from Canada are limited to the availability of United States dollars. At the present time it would appear that Great Britain may even have to cut down on her imports from this country.

A few days ago I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) if the government thought there was any possibility of Britain's adopting an austerity program toward this country because of her unfavourable balance of trade. He replied that he did not think there was that possibility. However, in view of the fact that, when we had an unfavourable balance of trade with the United States, we adopted an austerity program toward that country, I do feel the government here should immediately take steps to deal with the trading situation which exists between this country and Great Britain and do everything possible to retain the British market for the sale of agricultural products.

I should like to take a few minutes to express again a view which has been expressed by other hon. members. I do so because I think it is of extreme importance to the agricultural industry in western Canada. A few days ago the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) and the member for Skeena spoke about the necessity for developing barter trade between this country and Great Britain. I want fully to support what the hon. members said in that connection. I feel quite firmly that this government should take all possible steps toward developing a long-term agreement with Great Britain on a barter basis. I am not going to say for what period of time the trade contract should be made; but if the British government feel they would like a ten-year contract, I would say we should go ahead and arrange a contract on the basis best suited to them. Once again we must remember that the British market is the largest single market in the world, and the easiest one to develop so far as Canadian agricultural products are concerned.

Then, in connection with foreign trade, I should like to advance another argument. I am sure hon. members on all sides of the house are aware of the great development now taking place in India. Since the end of the war India has become a self-governing dominion. It is true that part of the country has divided itself from the other, and set up a separate government in Pakistan. Nevertheless great developments are taking place in that country. Iron and steel mills are being built. Textile plants are being built. A pulp and paper industry is being developed. I am told that just recently the government of Pakistan has undertaken to institute a housing program, if you please; and that within eight years they hope to build approximately a million homes in that country. If this development takes place it will raise considerably the standard of living of the people in that country, with the result that there will be available a very sizeable market for the export of goods from this country; and I urge the government to bend every effort toward developing trade with India. If their standard of living is increased, the huge population of that country would provide a great market not only for Canada but for other countries as well.

I should like now to say a few words concerning the importance of the housing problem in this country. A number of speakers in the debate have already dealt with that subject; and at the risk of repeating what has been said already I shall deal with it for a few moments. It is important to remember that housing is not a problem of recent years in Canada. If anyone is interested, he or she may go down to the parliamentary library and look at newspapers as far back as 1911 which reveal that a housing problem has existed in Canada since that time.

There are editorials in the Montreal papers of 1911 which deplore the fact that in that year slums were developing in the principal cities of Canada—Montreal, Vancouver and Toronto. The problem was not solved during the first world war, and was not solved in the years between the two wars. In 1938 we were still short by some 400,000 of the number of housing units required in Canada. In addition to that, according to the Curtis report there were another 175,000 homes which could be described as slums and which ought to have been destroyed and rebuilt.

Why is it that ever since 1911 we have not had sufficient homes adequately to house our people? I believe the reason is that there was not a large enough percentage of the working people of Canada with sufficient means to build homes. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the average income of 45 per cent of our population does not come within any taxation bracket. Those are the people in Canada who are not in possession of homes. According to the same authorities, less than one-third of the people in Canada receive incomes greater than $2,100 per year. So the construction of homes in this country is limited to that small group of people whose incomes are above $2,100 per year. From 20 to 25 per cent of the working people in Canada have to provide homes sufficient for the whole of the country. Our experience in the past has proved that it cannot be done.

If we are to have sufficient homes in this country they can be provided only by the institution of a national housing program. That program will have to be put into effect by co-operation between the federal government, the various provincial governments and the local municipal authorities. Until that is done our housing problem will still be with us.

There is another point I should like to consider in connection with this housing program. The argument is often advanced that it will cost a great deal of money to carry forward this program. That is true, but at the present time the federal government is spending a great deal of money on a national health program—I want to hasten to say that I am thoroughly in agreement with it—but if nothing is done about our serious housing problem we will soon approach the time when the lack of housing will jeopardize the success of the national health program.

If this problem is to be solved, I urge that action be taken along the lines of the recommendations of the Canadian welfare council. I am going to quote the recommendations of that council because they have made a thorough study of Canada's housing problem and I think the recommendations will be of some concern and of much interest to hon. members in this house. They are as follows:

(1) The objective of national housing policy should be a supply of housing sufficient to provide a decent home in a healthy environment for every Canadian family. The responsibility of the national government does not cease until this objective has been gained.

(2) In order to overcome the high costs of residential building the federal government should:

(a) Intensify its research activities for the development of more economical and efficient fabrication techniques.

(b) Finance the establishment of industries for producing and assembling houses.

(3) In order to overcome the lack of decent housing available to low income families and their incapacity to pay for new housing, the federal government should inaugurate a long-term program of public housing with the co-operation of the provincial and municipal authorities. This program should be started immediately in order that the whole administrative organization may be put into action in readiness for further expansion when required. For this purpose:

(b) The loan facilities of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should be made available to local public housing authorities to be established by the municipalities.

(4) The provincial government should provide enabling legislation for the establishment of local public housing authorities and define their areas of operation so as to encourage the greatest possible collaboration with local planning boards. Provincial governments should also be prepared to operate housing projects in rural areas and wherever local governments are inadequately equipped to assume such responsibilities.

(5) The local housing authorities so established should assume responsibility for the development, ownership and management of public housing estates and should assume control of the wartime housing projects and other publicly owned housing within their communities.

(6) The public housing program should be expanded and developed in such a manner and at such times that the nation's supply of new housing may be maintained at the required volume and so that the plant and personnel of the residential building industry may be kept in continuous operation.

I should like to say one word in connection with this proposed national housing program. If such a program is set up its purpose should be, first, to take care of the serious backlog of housing needs that exists in Canada at the present time. When that problem has been coped with, then arrangements should be made to meet the annual requirements of the nation out of new production. If that were done I believe it would contribute a great deal to the success of the national health program.

I want to say a word about a problem which exists in my constituency. I took this matter up last year with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) and also with the provincial department of education of Manitoba, but I regret to say that as far as I know no action has been taken up to the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman to say that action has been taken and I understand that this matter is about to be straightened out satisfactorily.

Mr. Moore: I am pleased to hear that. I shall make just one short statement in order to inform the house of what I was talking about. I was referring to the school problem in Churchill, Manitoba. I thank the minister most heartily for his co-operation in finding a solution to this problem, although I have not yet been informed that the situation has been dealt with.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), whichever is more concerned. Last fall several announcements were made that the wages of civil servants would be increased. Naturally that announcement was most acceptable throughout the country and I want to congratulate those who were responsible for it.

However, there is a large number of people working in post offices who are not within the civil service. The increase to which I have just referred was granted to postmasters and those who come under the civil service, but these people who work in the post offices and who do not come under the civil service—incidentally they are as much in need of an increase as the others—have not received an increase. I should like the responsible authorities to look into this matter carefully and grant additional allowances to these people as soon as possible.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in rising to speak on the amendment to the amendment to the motion made by the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) and at the same time to congratulate him upon his very fine speech when he moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I had the pleasure last week of being in the constituency of my hon. friend and I want to tell the house that I had a most enjoyable and successful visit through his hospitality and that of my equally good friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). I want also to congratulate the seconder of the address, the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers). He made an outstanding address and I am sure we shall hear more from him as the session progresses.

I rise at this time to deal chiefly with the shelf of public projects in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. I do so because of the fact that I recently tabled some information in the house and several members have commented that the government has, to quote one of them, "a meagre, puny and inadequate plan to deal with the potential unemployment in this country". If this shelf of public projects were the government's overall plan for dealing with potential unemployment in this country, I would heartily concur in the sentiment expressed. That, however, is not the case. The building up of a reserve shelf of public projects is only a part of the government's policy for maintaining high levels of employment and income. Another aspect of that policy, and closely related to public investment, is the encouraging of private investors, by tax concessions and credit provision, to take advantage of the tremendous field of industrial expansion that is still ahead of us, and to improve the amenities of life by better housing, well planned communities, and the enlargement and improvement of facilities for social and cultural development. To help maintain high levels of employment and income, the government is also helping substantially to increase the economic stability of the internal economy by such means as floor prices on farm and fish products, and special assistance to industries that are encountering difficulties. Recent examples of this are assistance to gold producers, the establishment of the maritime commission and the coal board, and the government's proposal to assist the production of steel. In that connection I refer to the speech from the throne, and I read:

> You will be asked to make legislative provision for governmental assistance by loan to the producers of basic steel for the purpose of increasing production.

The government is also seeking to assure favourable and expanding markets abroad for our surplus production by supporting international efforts to unfetter world trade, and much has already been done directly by export credits and export credit insurance. Finally, the social security measures of the present government, unemployment insurance, family allowances and pensions for the aged and the blind, by increasing the stability of personal income, would help maintain consumer spending if we should run into a period of recession. This many-sided approach to the problems of employment and unemployment was the basic program laid down in the white paper of 1945.

The hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Knight), who expressed the opinion that the shelf of public projects was meagre and puny, also stated that "the famous white paper on reconstruction held out hope for a tremendous program of public works for any possible period of unemployment". I find nowhere in the white paper where the hope is held out of "a tremendous program of public works". On the contrary, what I do find is the statement that "the post-war employment problem is not to be solved by huge expenditures on 'public works'. Efforts to increase and stabilize employment and income must pervade all economic policies".

Mr. Gillis: You are very careful with your quotations.

Mr. Winters: I would say to my hon. friend that I try to stick to facts.

Mr. Blackmore: Let us hope you continue to do so.

Mr. Gillis: I wonder if the minister would mind answering a question.

[Mr. Winters.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): Order. I would ask hon. members to refrain from interrupting the speaker who has the floor.

Mr. Gillis: I would not want to embarrass him.

An hon. Member: You could not.

Mr. Isnor: He can take care of himself.

Mr. Winters: The white paper does say that "all governments, dominion, provincial and municipal, have a considerable backlog of public projects", and goes on to say that "the dominion proposes to press ahead with the planning of its own deferred works and invites provinces and municipalities to do the same".

The role of public works in combating unemployment should be kept in proper perspective. These projects, if properly used, can make a valuable contribution to maintaining the level of economic activity. The projects themselves should be economically and socially desirable. They should be undertaken when they can make a real contribution to alleviating a specific unemployment situation. Among other things, this involves consideration of the type of employment they will provide, both on site and off site, and the locality and the industries in which the employment will be provided. The timing in launching projects is also important if they are to produce a maximum effect. In general this means that public works should be used to maintain a reasonably high level of activity in the construction industry itself. The construction industry is one of the least stable of all our industries, and experience shows that when it is strong it contributes an important expansionary effect on the level of activity and employment in many other industries.

Public works programs cannot be used to make work for all kinds of unemployed persons. To illustrate, we cannot put watchmakers to work as sewer diggers without destroying their efficiency and potential contribution to the economy, and ultimately increasing the direct and indirect costs to the community.

The thought of the government at the end of the war, in proposing that public investment should be planned and timed, was that the dominion, the provinces and municipalities together would build up a reserve shelf of fully planned projects which would be roughly the equivalent of about one full year of public investment in reserve for implementation when the occasion arose. On the basis of the distribution of public investment that prevailed before the war, the dominion's share of the total is about one-third. The dominion has now reached between one-half and two-thirds of the objective aimed at then, and is still adding to its reserve of planned projects.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the reserve shelf of public projects does not constitute all the public works that the dominion has in hand or can put in hand. These are the projects that are fully planned, that is, on which plans and specifications are completed, the site acquired, and all other details attended to with the exception of calling for tenders. Behind this shelf of registered projects there is a larger pool of projects in varying stages of development. There are many worth-while projects that various departments have been working on but which have not been advanced to the stage qualifying them for registration on the shelf. The planning of this additional backlog of public works is being advanced as rapidly as government engineering staffs are available to work on them. This work will be expedited as necessary. In other words, we are planning a steady development for many years ahead.

While in no sense passing the buck, or avoiding responsibilities that rightly fall on the dominion government, I should point out that, in thinking of public works projects as a buffer against unemployment, we must also consider the public works to be undertaken by provincial and municipal authorities. These authorities have not pushed forward their programs of planning during the past few years as vigorously as they would no doubt have liked to do if there had not been a shortage of engineering personnel. It was the proposal of the federal government in 1945, and it is still our hope, that an understanding will be arrived at with the provincial governments whereby the fluctuating portion of the public investment program of federal, provincial and municipal governments could be planned and timed to balance a decline in private investment.

It should not be inferred that the government envisages the passive role of merely increasing or decreasing investment to counteract fluctuations in the level of private investment. The government will continue in future to encourage actively a high level of private investment. One of the most important fields of private investment, and one that will provide a good deal of employment in future, is housing, where a large backlog of work is required to house the people of Canada adequately. A very large investment will be required in low-rent housing projects, slum clearance and community planning. This is a program to which the government attaches great importance and in which we stand ready to give the fullest co-operation. Since the war some 278,000 homes have been built in Canada at an over-all estimated value of roughly one and three-quarter billion dollars, providing direct employment of various types to about eighty-five thousand men per year on the average. New houses are now being built at a rate in excess of eighty thousand units a year, and the requirement is a continuing one. As long as it remains we shall have employment for a sizeable number of men annually. I mention this because it illustrates the type of government effort or government-encouraged effort that is not included in the list of projects on our shelf reserve, but which nevertheless provides a substantial safeguard against unemployment.

I shall not elaborate on the subject of housing at this time, because I shall have occasion to speak of it more fully when the estimates of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply are under consideration. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Timmins), and his quotation which he attributed to the bible, it is my understanding that the quotation is from Shakespeare—

Mr. Timmins: That is true.

Mr. Winters: —from his well known play "Macbeth." I say that because it probably indicates to the house the tenor of some of his remarks. The hon. member said that in my speeches I had said nothing new. I should like to pay him the same compliment. By way of correcting what might be a wrong impression, and with the memory of the hon. gentleman's quotation fresh in mind, I should like to refer to my answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) at page 770 of Hansard. The remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale might well leave the impression that the federal government is unwilling to discuss with provincial governments the problem of housing. In my reply I said:

> With respect to the matter of a conference, the government is of the opinion that at the present time more progress can be made by discussing with each province or municipality its own particular problems on their merits; and as the Prime Minister said in Toronto on Saturday, the government stands ready at all times to discuss this problem with any provincial government in an effort to work out satisfactory long-term arrangements among the municipalities, the provinces and the dominion.

You will be interested, Mr. Speaker, in learning some of the details of the federal government's shelf of public projects. This reserve shelf has been built up as much as a measure against inflation today as a protection against unemployment tomorrow. All capital investment projects of over $5,000 from all federal departments are screened by the public projects branch of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. The labour and material content of each project is analysed in relation to local supplies and conditions. The branch reports on cases where a proposed project would impose a serious strain on the local labour and materials situation.

In addition to the projects which are considered useful but which it would be uneconomic to proceed with at present, there are a number of long-range programs on which different departments of government are continually working and on which plans are being filed with the public projects branch.

Mr. Gillis: Would you mind elaborating on them?

Mr. Winters: These are programs such as natural resources development or national park improvements which will take years to develop and which can be accelerated or retarded in their development according to the general level of employment in the country. The result is that the government now has a reserve shelf of fully planned projects. In addition there is a large number of potential projects on which preliminary planning has been done, and a number of broad programs for resources development which will extend over a period of years. Obviously it is not possible to set an exact dollar figure on this combined volume of work at any time. It is, however, an illustration of our general approach to our public investment policy as an important factor in maintaining a high level of employment and income in Canada.

It has been my intention in making this statement this evening to indicate the purpose for which the reserve shelf of public projects was designated, since there seems to be some misapprehension as to both the role and the importance of the shelf in government plans for maintaining income and employment in this country. Behind the registered shelf stands a very much larger potential of government investment plans which would be put into effect in the event of any major and national recession. The public projects shelf was conceived when the end of the war was in sight and people were talking about and expecting recessions. It was intended as a part, and only a part, of our plan to take steps against possible unemployment.

Mr. Hodgson: May I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): Order.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Winters: The war has been over for about three and a half years—

Mr. Gillis: Exactly; he is talking in parables.

Mr. Winters: —and there has been no recession. The best proof that the government's policies have been effective and have done what they were intended to do is that there has been no general unemployment—

Mr. Hodgson: Give us an example of those wares you have on the shelf.

Mr. Winters: —and that, over the entire period—

Mr. Gillis: The shelf has not been built yet.

Mr. Winters: —since the war the number of people employed has increased, until in this year it reached the highest level ever attained in the history of Canada.

Mr. Julian H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it was indeed refreshing to hear from one of the most recent appointees to the Liberal cabinet. To listen to the minister one would almost think they had unearthed a Moses to deliver them out of the chaos in which they now find themselves. I only hope the energy and enthusiasm of the new broom is not killed by the practices which have been adopted by this Liberal government for the past four or five years. I am afraid, though, that the predominance of neglect and mismanagement will override the enthusiasm of our young friend.

I would like now to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address. They did not have much material about which to talk, but they did a wonderful job. Probably one of the reasons for that is that the second name of the member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), is Ferguson. The practice of having the speech from the throne is followed in order to enlighten the people of the dominion to some degree as to what legislation may be expected from the administration during the coming session. In opening his address, the Governor General stated that the first concern of a government is to ensure peace and security. He went on to mention that attention would be paid to the development of the great navigation and power project on the St. Lawrence river; that public health projects would have due consideration and that the great mining industry of this country would be given some thought.

From the past performances of this administration, let us see what might be expected in connection with the items mentioned in the speech from the throne. Let us consider the very much discussed topic of housing. I believe that the great shortage in housing in Canada today is primarily due to the fact that this government at no time laid its cards fairly and squarely before the people of this country responsible for producing construction materials or those responsible for the actual construction of the houses. During the war I found labour willing to work eight, nine, ten and twelve hours per day. Never at any time did labour shirk a duty when faced with a reality. This government has all the statistics necessary to point out the dire necessity for housing in this country.

This government brought forth glowing ideas in this House of Commons as to what was going to materialize from year to year, but what has really materialized is that people lack roofs over their heads and the country is still faced with a perplexing housing problem. I do not believe this government has laid the information it possessed squarely before the people who construct houses. Houses do not grow on trees. They are produced by the sweat of the brow of the carpenter and the bricklayer. The taxation imposed on these labourers has been so heavy, there was no incentive for them to put forth their best efforts. The longer they worked, the less pay they received. With that handicap and the lack of knowledge these people had as to the situation, the shortage of houses has grown. The failure to produce these homes that were discussed year after year is definitely at the feet of this government. No concise or definite plan has been formulated in co-operation with the people who actually construct houses which would enable this shortage to be overcome.

Members of parliament are not forced to come to this parliament, Mr. Speaker; they come here of their own volition. They volunteer to go before a group of people at election time and solicit their vote. They should all feel, irrespective of religion and politics, that it behooves them to do their duty towards their constituents on all occasions. Has this been done by the members of the Liberal government? Their actions in the past speak louder than any words of mine. The war has been over since 1945, and what has confronted this country? It has been one problem after another.

Let us consider the agricultural situation. I have a great deal of respect for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). He is an energetic politician. He has an answer for every question. He gives a very forceful speech in the House of Commons and is almost convincing in the manner in which he can cover up his shortcomings. His explanation of the situation in connection with the export of apples is almost beyond conception. During 1947 Canada shipped to Great Britain over 400,000 hundredweight of apples. In 1948 not one pound of apples was shipped to Great Britain. A pamphlet was published under the direction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) which stated that the prime reason the British isles did not import apples from Canada was the fact that the people there were able to work a miracle, never worked before, and produce more apples than ever before. This all took place in the period of one year. Now the apple growers of this country, and I come from a part of the country that grows the finest apples in the world, as judged by the apple judges of the greatest apple show in the world—

Mr. Cruickshank: British Columbia.

Mr. Ferguson: That is not British Columbia; it is Simcoe county in the province of Ontario. My interrupting friend will not deny that the prize was awarded to Simcoe county growers for the finest apples in the world.

What is the true picture of this apple situation? Did Great Britain grow all the apples she needed in 1948? The people of Canada want to know. The fact is that in 1948 Great Britain imported over 400,000 hundredweight more apples than were imported in 1947. Australia shipped to the British isles over a million hundredweight of apples in 1948, and in 1947 Australia shipped to the British isles a little over 90,000 hundredweight. New Zealand shipped no apples in 1947 but shipped over 300,000 hundredweight to Great Britain in 1948. The British isles purchased from foreign countries, apart from those within the British empire, over 300,000 hundredweight. Almost two million hundredweight of apples were shipped into Great Britain during 1948; yet we were told by the pamphlet, published by this government at the taxpayers' expense, that the British people were growing sufficient apples and that it was for that reason Canada did not ship apples to that country.

I come from a farming district and, to my knowledge, neither during the war nor since the war has this government properly informed the farmer about the requirements necessary for export purposes or the prices that might be received for farm produce, with the possible exception of wheat. The government has never informed the farmer about the price of feeding livestock or what the net result might be if the farmer specialized and produced large quantities. This is the very information which the Minister of Agriculture and the government had, and the fact that it was not imparted to the farmer left him completely befuddled and dubious about what crops he should grow.

I say this is one of the weaknesses of government policy in regard to agriculture. Certainly for the first two years after the war they did know, and they were the only people in Canada who knew approximately what the farmers would have in the way of an export market. But I defy anybody to go into my constituency, or into the greater part of Ontario, and have a farmer give the figures that have ever been given to him as a guide. This government should be a guide for agricultural work, for labour for mines and for all the various occupations necessary for Canadians to earn a livelihood.

Mr. Gardiner: We would be centralizing control if we did that.

Mr. Ferguson: Guiding is not controlling. The opinion of this government is that guiding is controlling and that they must be one. That is not true at all. This government should guide the people and stop controlling. They should let some person do the job who knows how to do it. The people of Canada will do that at the next election. The Conservative party will guide and not control. It will release the shackles of bondage from the people of Canada; it will relieve the shortage of housing, assist farm exports, and do all the other things that are necessary for a better Canada for Canadians.

Public welfare is mentioned in the speech from the throne. A few evenings ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) did enlighten this house considerably on things for which the government should be commended, which they are undertaking in order to relieve suffering in this country. This suffering is brought about because of a lack of proper facilities to look after the welfare of Canadians. But I should like to make one sincere plea to this government on behalf of the permanently disabled people who have no source of income, people who from childhood have been incapacitated, crippled through infantile paralysis and so on. A few years ago, at the instigation of the Conservative party in this house, the blind unfortunates of Canada from the age of twenty-one on were placed in a position to receive a pension. As a member of the Conservative party, I implore this government immediately to bring in an order in council—and they are experts on that—to provide a pension for every single man, woman and child in Canada who cannot provide for themselves owing to incapacitation through no fault of their own. This government has passed orders in council dealing with many things that were not as vital or as necessary. I do not think they would meet with any repudiation, condemnation or opposition from any man, woman or child in Canada, or from any hon. member, if tomorrow or within a week from today they were to pass an order in council saying that they were going to investigate and, where they found it necessary, provide the wherewithal, in the form of protection, to ease the burden of the men, women and children of this country who are not able to look after themselves.

There is another matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the government, namely, the foreign or immigrant child coming to this country. Until he has been here for a period of three years he is not qualified to receive family allowances. In my opinion that was a splendid piece of legislation, designed as a contribution to the betterment of the children of Canada. The thought was that, by aiding the child whose parents could not properly provide the necessary wherewithal for his welfare, the Canadian taxpayer would help in providing the necessary means to produce a better type of citizen as an adult to carry on in the service of Canada. If that contribution to the Canadian-born child is necessary, I believe we should recognize immediately that the immigrant child, who is brought to the shores of Canada not at his request but by the whim of his parents, should receive the benefits of the family allowances so that that child, who will undoubtedly become an adult citizen of this country, will not be handicapped in the slightest degree. We should never have it on our conscience, if we see a man or woman who does not reach the desired standard of Canadian manhood, that it was through our fault that this or that child did not receive such assistance, in common with every other child in Canada. It is nothing but gross negligence and shortsightedness on the part of this government to say that this little tot should have help and that little tot, a potential Canadian citizen of the future, should not get the same treatment.

As we sit here from day to day the C.C.F. members take great pleasure in referring to us as members of the Tory party. They speak of how we back up private enterprise, how we never try to solicit votes by weeping and gnashing our teeth. I should like to be fair. I might suggest to the members of the C.C.F. party that they cultivate a little fairness themselves. Rather than have one of their party on one occasion solicit from this government all imaginary possible public contributions for those who are not as fortunate as others, and then on another occasion have another hon. gentleman of the C.C.F. party say that private enterprise is sponsored by the Tory party, that private enterprise is a great octopus which takes from the poor and never shows any degree of kindness or gives any reward at any time, I suggest that if they look at such concerns as the Bell Telephone Company they will find that private enterprise such as the Bell company merits the respect of every man, woman and child in this country. I have never owned a share of stock in the Bell Telephone Company, but I desire to be fair; and as I read over its financial statement I find it has some 38,000 stockholders in Canada; that over ninety per cent of these stockholders reside in Canada; that over five thousand of that number are either pensioners or present employees of that corporation; that that company provides some of the finest working conditions, second to none, for employees; and that it pays a dividend to those willing to invest and take a chance on their investment. Yet, I believe, the advocates of the C.C.F. party would like to see that corporation taken over and managed by dear knows who—not, I should hope, by members of their party, because I am quite confident that, irrespective of the party to which he belongs in this house, there is no man capable of managing the Bell Telephone Company better than it is managed at the present time.

The pulp and paper industries in this country, which consist of nothing but private enterprise, employed over fifty-one thousand people in Canada last year. They paid over $100 million in wages to the employees working in their plants. They paid $100 million to the men working in the bush, under private enterprise.

Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia): What was the profit?

Mr. Ferguson: Their profit would be about the same as that of Canada Packers. You get up on the hustings and you try to get up in the House of Commons and mislead the public by saying that Canada Packers were bleeding the public. I will give you the true picture of that situation. And if you can read a financial statement, you had better read it.

Mr. Gillis: By their own admission.

Mr. Ferguson: Now I don't mind taking you on one at a time One at a time, if you please, and I will give you a chance. Last year Canada Packers made $2 million net profit.

Mr. Cruickshank: They did not have margarine then.

Mr. Ferguson: Now we have heard enough from you for the session. They did it at a profit of one-seventh of a cent a pound on all products sold. At the end of the year, after all the butter profit you are talking about, and with a profit of one-seventh of a cent a pound, they paid their stockholders a million dollars. The other million went to reserve.

And I will tell you what else they did. They paid to their employees as a bonus $6 million over and above the union rate of wages. This cost somewhere near three-sevenths of a cent a pound. Maybe you begrudge that three-sevenths of a cent a pound to the workingman.

Mr. Gillis: A million dollars illegal profits, according to Mr. McLean's evidence.

Mr. Ferguson: I defy you, or any of your party in this country, to get up and say that you would like to give that three-sevenths of a cent a pound to the consumer, and take it away from the workingman. Yet you always claim you are the great champions of the workingman. But that is what that private corporation, without your aid or solicitation, gave to its employees as a bonus—three-sevenths of a cent a pound on all goods sold. But their net profit, what they paid to their stockholders, was only one-fourteenth of a cent a pound on all goods sold.

Mr. Gillis: Thank you very much for the admission.

Mr. Ferguson: And don't continue to come to the House of Commons and cry blue ruin and criticize, to deceive labour. I know about this, because I have employed labouring people. I have paid them higher than union wages. I know labouring people. They vote for me, and they give me a big majority because of my fair and unbiased treatment of both capital and labour. You must know that, from the results obtained by your C.C.F. candidate in my riding. You fellows tried to flim-flam the shipyard workers; but you did not make much headway with those men. They cannot be fooled. They think for themselves and they are on to you. Let us get the facts.

Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Ferguson: You did not permit me to ask one the other day.

Mr. Graydon: He just said they were on to you.

Mr. Gillis: He cannot answer the question.

Mr. Ferguson: Then, about provincial rights—

Mr. Cruickshank: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ferguson: I am glad one Liberal member has pulled himself together sufficiently to shout "Hear, hear" when provincial rights are mentioned. I can see that my leader has apparently made some impression upon him, and that he now greets with some enthusiasm the mention of provincial rights in the House of Commons. And I am positive there will be many more points introduced by my leader in the House of Commons about which members of the Liberal party will shout Hear, hear—and with honesty and enthusiasm. It is most gratifying to see the enlightened expressions on the faces of many Liberals in the house since my leader has come here.

Mr. Cruickshank: Now will you have Duplessis or Drew?

Mr. Ferguson: I do not know why hon. members on the government side bring in the name of Duplessis when they cannot handle even the present leader of our party. Dear knows what they would do if they had two ultra-intelligent men to face. How would you ever handle Duplessis in this house, when you cannot handle him even in Quebec? It is pretty nearly time you gave up trying, even down there.

Mr. Cruickshank: We admit we cannot deal with him.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Duplessis must laugh at your efforts and your remarks.

Mr. Cruickshank: Tell us about Duplessis.

Mr. Hodgson: What is wrong with him?

Mr. Cruickshank: That is not the party we believe in. Do you believe in him?

Mr. Ferguson: You remind me of a story—

Mr. Cruickshank: We do not want Duplessis; you can keep him.

Mr. Hodgson: How much you need him!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ferguson: The hon. member has reminded me of a story. It concerns a farmer in Idaho, where farm help was hard to obtain. However, one fortunate farmer did manage to get a hired man. Whenever this occurred neighbours would try to take the hired man away—with promises of better working conditions, and so on, if they could succeed.

Mr. Cruickshank: Keep it clean.

Mr. Ferguson: On the first Saturday evening the farmer walked into the store at the four points. His curious neighbours said, "How are you, Zeke; I understand you have a hired man. Any good?" Zeke said, "Not worth anything." But the neighbours were not content with that. They followed him into the store, and they finally said to him, "Zeke, do you mean that hired man is no good?" Zeke said, "No, he's no good. And I will tell you more than that. He takes two hours to hitch up a horse—with me helping him."

That is like the Liberal party in this House of Commons. They could not even win in Quebec when they all helped down there at the last federal by-election.

Mr. Cruickshank: I can tell a better story than that.

Mr. Ferguson: Mining was mentioned briefly in the speech from the throne. But what has this government done, apart from making promises?

Mr. MacNicol: Nothing.

Mr. Ferguson: What has it done for the great mining industry of Canada? They were able not many years ago, along with other countries tied to this monetary standard, to raise the price of gold from $20 an ounce to $35. Every working man and woman on the North American continent and in England, on that particular day, went about his or her daily business. Potatoes or other commodities did not go up or down in price. We heard there was going to be blue ruin. But it did benefit this country to the tune of about $70 million. That was due to the increase in the price of gold.

Today the cost of operation in the mining industry has increased by about 50 per cent. Yet this government has sat back for the last four or five years and watched that pegged price of $35 an ounce. I contend that the government could have done something to help the mining industry by increasing the price of gold to $50 or $70 an ounce, and thereby encourage the mining of gold in Canada.

Certain countries may say that the Canadian dollar, paper money, is not on a par with their money. But I do not know any country in the world that would refuse gold produced in Canada as payment for any commodity we might wish to purchase. This is an industry which provides millions of dollars in a commodity which is acceptable throughout the world. We have the gold; let the government encourage gold mining. Let it create opportunities for labour and produce wealth with which we can reduce the cost of living for our people.

Mr. Gillis: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Ferguson: The hon. member said so much prior to the question he wants to ask that I think he should sit down.

Mr. Gillis: The hon. member cannot take it.

Mr. Ferguson: I cannot take continuous nonsense, your blathering and blithering. That is pretty hard to take. How can we hope for a reduction in the cost of living—

Mr. Gillis: I intended to ask a sensible question but I did not expect a sensible answer.

Mr. Ferguson: The hon. member would not understand it if he did get a sensible answer. Just when the people were thinking a year ago that they could see a slight ray of sunshine, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) announced over the radio, without any authority from the parliament of Canada, that he was going to impose, and he did impose illegally, a 25 per cent tax on a great number of commodities that were absolutely essential to the proper living of the Canadian people, such as refrigerators, irons, stoves, purses, fountain pens—

Mr. Cruickshank: Cosmetics.

Mr. Ferguson: Probably I do not know as much about those as the hon. member. He should be an expert on cosmetics; I am not. But the government was not satisfied just to place a 25 per cent tax, which was prohibitive, on these commodities. They did not want to see our factories kept going. They did not want to permit private enterprise to reap the benefits of its research and effort. This 25 per cent tax was not enough as far as the government was concerned. Do you know, if you buy a fountain pen in Canada today the tax over and above the actual retail price is 43 per cent. If around Christmas you felt that you wanted to give your wife a small leather purse costing $5, the tax over and above the retail price was not 25 per cent, it was 43 per cent.

Mr. Gillis: What about steel plate?

Mr. Ferguson: Rather than the government gouging the public the public of Canada should control the government. This government should act on behalf of the people of Canada and for the people of Canada. Why should a small group tell the people of Canada that they must pay 43 per cent tax on fountain pens or on leather purses? These things are essential. Why should that be done in order to give pleasure to the Minister of Finance?—although I imagined it gave displeasure to most members on the Liberal side. Why should that have been done to the great discomfiture of the Canadian people?

I think the government received a warning recently in the province of Quebec in spite of all the excuses they offer. That warning should be sufficient to indicate that the people want a common-sense reduction in taxation. Instead of waiting until the coming election the government had better try to get into the good graces of the electorate by introducing immediate tax reforms. Even then their defeat will be certain, but it may not be an avalanche.

Through mismanagement and flagrant neglect of the people's welfare, the government have created high prices which have resulted in slight unemployment which no doubt will rapidly grow worse unless they take immediate steps to remedy the damage already done. The government will remember what I am saying tonight when this house resumes after the next election and the Conservative party is in power with the C.C.F. completely annihilated.

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West): Stop dreaming.

Mr. Ferguson: I am offering these words of warning, which I am sure will be well remembered and most emphatically admitted after the next election.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the remarks of the last speaker I am reminded of a joke. When the hon. member was up in his own riding he attended an auction sale. He was looking around for a place from which he could tell his constituents what a good job he was doing. The only place he could find to stand was on a manure spreader. Someone said, "Better stay there Fergy", and he said, "Set it up; this is the biggest load it ever had".

Mr. Ferguson: That is Hepburn's old joke.

Mr. Sinnott: I think the house will listen to that story for a long time. Being almost the last today to take part in this debate, I feel that I am a little late in congratulating the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. However, I do wish to express to both these gentlemen my sincere congratulations. I should like also to congratulate the new members who have taken their seats in the House of Commons.

First of all I should like to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) on the announcement he made recently in regard to the twenty-cent payment on western wheat. I also wish to offer my sincere thanks to the government for having placed a floor under coarse grains and butter.

Consistent efforts have been made by some members of the house to again have the open market system for the handling of western grain. One hon. member said that the farmers had lost what he considered was the astronomical figure of $2,000 million as a result of the grain having been marketed through the wheat board. At this point I should like to indicate what would have been lost if we had been dealing in the open market during the five years we have had wheat contracts with Great Britain—approximately $5,350 million.

Statements of this kind are unfounded and it seems to me that men who make such statements are only goaded by a desire for dollars, having no sense of reasoning in connection with humanity itself. The government of Canada was successful in obtaining a long-term contract with Great Britain, thereby establishing for the first time in history a really stable market as far as western grain was concerned. That had such a stabilizing effect that more farmers than ever before have been able to pay off their mortgages, improve their farm buildings, and buy better machinery. And, having a higher standard of living, they are in position to give their children an education.

It has never been stated by those who have advocated marketing grain by the open-market system just how much the farmers would have lost if the open market policy had been followed in the years after the war. I only need to refer to the figures which were put on the record by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce). These figures indicate that wheat sold in August, 1920, at $2.73 per bushel; in August, 1921, at $1.11 per bushel; and in October, 1923, at 95 cents per bushel: averaging $1.59 per bushel during those three years. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that when the present contract is completed we will have an average of far more than $1.59 per bushel for the whole five years.

You will see from the figures just released by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that conditions will remain stable for a considerably longer time than after the first world war. It should also be possible to remind the house that the present government will have given to the farmers, at the completion of the five-year wheat agreement with Great Britain, every dollar obtained for wheat sold, over and above the contract with Great Britain, to other countries under class II wheat, which has realized considerably more money. It was also put in the pool, giving the farmers a very substantial payment this spring, and $214 million will be distributed throughout western Canada.

I also wish to draw to the attention of the house the fact that the $214 million is not coming out of the consolidated revenue fund but from payments received by the government for their wheat, and only their wheat. In saying that, I wish to make it clear to eastern Canada that they are not contributing towards the stabilizing of western wheat growers. In view of what I have cited, I cannot help praising this marketing system. It has enabled western farmers to regulate their business for the first time in years. They know what they will receive when their crop is harvested, and it also gives them ready cash for threshing bills, fuel, wages, taxes, interest on mortgages, and so on.

During the period of the open market when grain was handled on the grain exchange, and especially during harvest when a great volume was handled, prices would be depressed for the first two months, and then, when the grain was in the hands of the speculators, up the prices would go.

As I have stated before, when farmers were in need of money to pay their immediate bills they were forced by their creditors to sell a large amount of wheat in order to make payments. Under the present system the creditors of the farmer have no hesitation in giving him a line of credit as long as he is able to substantiate that he has in his granary numerous bushels of grain to take care of his debts. In other words, prices will not fluctuate the way wheat is handled now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Read more slowly.

Mr. Sinnott: If these remarks are kept up I will take on the interrupters one by one inside the house or outside. I also wish to thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) for the broad health scheme which he has presented. Possibly what I said, as reported in Hansard of July 15, 1946, did no harm. What I said is as follows:

> No one can say that the need was ever greater than it is now for hospitals in every small community. The town in which I reside has been pleading for a hospital for the past twenty-five years and is still without a hospital.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Sinnott: You can have your laugh first; I will have mine last.

Mr. Gillis: A coalition government.

Mr. Sinnott: Let me say through you, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to thank the minister at this time because through his health scheme the town in which I am interested, Beausejour, is going to receive $16,000 from the dominion government this coming spring for a 16-bed hospital. A little farther east, the town of Whitemouth is to have a 12-bed hospital, and is receiving $12,000 from the dominion government. Therefore the constituency which I have the honour to represent is benefiting from this scheme in the amount of $28,000 from the dominion government alone. The province of Manitoba is contributing a like amount, making a total of $56,000, before the people themselves are asked to contribute a dime. No doubt the people residing in these districts feel very grateful to the government for extending to them this amount of money, and a program of this kind. The last vote in Whitemouth, which was taken on the 28th of February, carried by 92 per cent.

Mr. Gillis: Coalition co-operation.

Mr. Sinnott: I should like to deal now with the matter of old age pensions, something that my friends on the other side have been harping upon, but if you will follow Hansard throughout the years you will see that I have been advocating the same thing, and I will continue to do so tonight. With the cost of living as high as it has been in the last couple of years, those who are receiving old age pensions are having a very difficult time trying to exist. With the high cost of food, clothing and shelter, I do not see how it is possible at all for these old people, many of whom have contributed largely to the early pioneering of Canada, to get along. I believe there are some 280,000 men and women in Canada who are at present receiving the old age pension, and there are many more who would like to receive the benefits. But, owing to their pride in being able to possess their own piece of land at the present time without any government help or interference, they are reluctant to make application for the old age pension. The government have been continually reminded by the opposition of the pitiful conditions of old age pensioners. The opposition has been encouraging the government to spend more and more and at the same time criticizing the government for their heavy taxation, and one is at a loss to know just how speeches of that calibre can bring any relief. I may say at this time that I believe the government always welcomes just criticism, but for many people who are here the criticism which has been leveled has not offered any remedy. There are some thirteen million people in Canada today, and they are able to produce twice as much as they can consume. Therefore if there is starvation among some—

Mr. Gillis: Two hundred thousand unemployed.

Mr. Sinnott: —it is not because Canada as a nation cannot produce. It is because there is a lack of proper distribution. Therefore I want to draw this matter to the attention of the government. I think it is their duty to pay close attention to the matter of distribution, and I should like the government to give these old people an increase in the pension which they now receive. I am suggesting that, with the present cost of living, their pension should not be less than $50 per month. Some people will say this will actually mean an increase in taxation. This need not be so. As I said before, there are 280,000 old age pensioners. An increase of $20 per month would mean that $5,600,000 would have to be distributed towards old age pensions. This in turn would provide that amount of spending power in Canada. Old age pensioners do not keep their money. They naturally go to their nearest store for their provisions. This in turn gives the storekeeper an opportunity to buy more goods from the wholesaler, and gives the wholesalers an opportunity to buy more from the producers. In other words, it stimulates Canada's consumption.

There seems to be a trend towards trying to provide help today to everybody from Shanghai to Timbuctoo. I believe it is high time that we started to provide for our old age pensioners first. I wish to submit to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) that this money should be injected into the economy of Canada, or this purchasing power should be provided through the Bank of Canada. It would add additional distribution without any further taxation. I believe further that our health and social welfare schemes should be provided for from the same source. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if we are able as a nation to provide twice the amount we consume, a little more attention should be paid to the distribution of the wealth in the country.

I would like to say a word in connection with education and what the dominion government is doing to help finance this most important field. We have heard much talk about dominion-provincial relations, and at this time I wish to point out the benefits Manitoba has received since the last dominion-provincial agreement was signed. Formerly the dominion government contributed to Manitoba some $8 million and the province in turn did not see fit, with this small amount of money, to contribute very much towards education. However, since the last agreement was signed, Manitoba has received from the dominion government $13,500,000 or a gain of $5,500,000 over the previous figure. With this general increase the province saw fit last year to pass a larger amount of money on to the municipalities, thereby reducing their taxation. It is therefore quite plain that the dominion government is at the present time contributing $5,500,000 towards education in Manitoba.

Of all expenditures paid out of municipal budgets, the largest, most important and most continuous is in connection with education. In almost every school district education costs amount to almost fifty per cent of the total taxation, and many of the less wealthy municipalities find it most difficult to carry the cost of education. Last year, after this additional money was received from the dominion government, tax cuts were quite noticeable throughout the municipalities. However, I do not believe it has been pointed out to the rural districts or to any of the school districts that the dominion government has contributed largely to these school grants. For most of the municipalities this plan will substantially ease the burden of educational costs which they have been carrying. It is a help which they need. Educational costs have been increasing over recent years; moreover, if the municipalities are to take advantage of other programs which will be available to them, in the way of road building, health and the like, the burden of education costs which they have been carrying must be reduced, if land as the main municipal tax base is going to carry the whole load successfully.

I may point out that the province is not allocating the full amount of this $5,500,000 to the schools, but is keeping some of this money in reserve to meet such services as technical education and other items which may develop in the future. If the municipalities think they are deserving of a larger amount, it will be up to them to make application to their provincial government for a further share of the amount the dominion government is contributing.

Before I conclude I should like to say a word about the urgent need for the early completion of the trans-Canada highway. I happen to be in this fortunate position, that this highway comes through my riding of Springfield regardless of where it is to be built. At the present time No. 1 highway extends from Winnipeg to the Ontario boundary and is hard-surfaced all the way. Therefore it will be very easy for the government to come to a satisfactory deal with the province. As has been stated before, a country like Canada, which is regarded as one of the major powers today, should not be looked upon as a country which cannot develop a national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A highway of this kind will not only save us American dollars; it will bring an enormous tourist trade to the west. It will also enable the east and west to become greater friends. Having to travel through the United States in order to reach the western part of Canada, as we do now, is in large measure, I believe, why the east and west are so divided on certain issues. I trust that the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. MacKinnon) will therefore lose no time in taking steps to complete this national highway. He is a man of foresight and vision and will not hold up this large undertaking on account of provincial economy. Some of these so-called men who are advocating provincial rights have asked the dominion government to take the lead in this national undertaking, and I would therefore urge the completion of the trans-Canada highway at as early a date as possible.

I should like to offer one condemnation of the government; and it is something very easy to adjust, because this morning-glory that has blossomed during the last month or so will soon fade. I blame this government for not taking proper steps through its public relations department to place before the people of Canada the great social security plans which have been developed. I blame the government for not placing before the people many of the things it has done in the past. The federal government has been giving large grants to the various provinces, but in return what do we see? There is nothing at all in the press. Anything we see there would indicate that this money comes from the provincial governments themselves, and that is not so. This government is dishing out the money to the provinces, who in turn are doling it out to the municipalities. I believe this government should have far more publicity, so the people throughout the country will know where the money is coming from. I have seen speeches made in this house by various cabinet ministers who have placed their programs squarely before the people, but in the newspapers the next day we do not see a word about it. On the other hand, I have heard foolish speeches which have been published under headlines. If we are to have a sound administration I believe the newspapers should pay attention when a cabinet minister gets up and places an honest-to-goodness program before the people.

Mr. D. King Hazen (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, a statement of government policy is outlined in the speech from the throne on which I want to comment this evening, as it affects the future welfare and aspirations of the people of the maritime provinces.

That statement is contained in the sixth paragraph of the speech from the throne, and reads:

> You will be asked to approve, subject to the approval of the United States authorities the agreement concluded in 1941 for the development of navigation and power in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin.

This statement of government policy has been received with a good deal of apprehension in the maritime provinces, for it means that another nail, perhaps I should say several more nails are being driven into the coffin of maritime hopes and maritime economy.

It means that another big step is being taken to centralize industry and power in upper Canada. It means that the promises made to the maritimes at the time of confederation are to be set at naught; that maritime ports are not to take their place among "the great emporiums of the world", and that all the resources of the west are not to flow to the bosoms of their harbours, as Sir John A. Macdonald promised and as successive governments planned.

It means that the geographical disadvantages of the maritime provinces are not to be overcome, and that these provinces and their seaports will not be placed on a transportation footing to compete with the other ports for the trade of the great west as was promised.

It means that the maritime ports and maritime interests will be by-passed in the interests of the mid-western part of the United States and of another part of Canada.

It is all very well for the member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), who moved the address in an excellent speech upon which I congratulate him, to say, at page 19:

> The co-operative development of the great foreign trade route by our two great countries for the purpose of sharing the benefits of new commerce will be a landmark in the history of international relations.

That sounds very well, but I am under no delusions about the matter. If canals are built to a depth of thirty feet from Montreal to the great lakes to enable ships of 20,000 tons to navigate that stretch of water, as the hon. gentleman stated is to be the case, not only will our railways which are having difficult times today suffer, but it will be only a matter of a few years before powerful interests will commence a powerful political movement to have that waterway kept open during the winter months—for some weeks past icebreakers have been busy below Montreal opening up channels which will take work away from our longshoremen in the Atlantic ports—and in the end the ports of Saint John and Halifax will be deprived of business in the winter season, business upon which the welfare and livelihood of many of their citizens, their longshoremen, their checkers, their port workers and merchants are dependent to a very great extent.

We have heard a great deal about the centralization of political power in the federal government and the threat to provincial rights. There is no doubt in my mind that this policy of centralization has been fostered by the present government and that it received a great impetus during the war years.

I am opposed to the centralization of power in the federal government at this stage of our development, as I believe it is a menace to our federal system and a danger to national unity. But I am opposed also to the government adopting policies that will result in the future centralization of economic power in Ontario and Quebec at the expense of other parts of the dominion, particularly at the expense of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia who entered confederation in the belief and on the understanding that they were to receive a fair share of the benefits and profits that were to result therefrom.

I admit, and I admit quite readily, that some parts of Canada have greater resources than other parts; that, in the very nature of things, there are bound to be larger centres of population, greater wealth, more industries and better markets in some parts of this country than in others, as is the case in most countries. I admit also that distance and economic forces cannot be ignored. But I am opposed to a policy that would establish our Atlantic ports on the great lakes and deprive our longshoremen of work, and our people of business, and violate one of the promises that induced the maritimes to enter confederation.

No one can object to the development of electric power along the international portion of the St. Lawrence river for the benefit of Canada and the United States provided that development pays for itself. But to enter into the development of a deep-sea waterway from Montreal to the great lakes at great cost to the taxpayers of this country is quite another matter and I do not think any member of this house who represents a maritime constituency and who has the welfare of the maritimes at heart could conscientiously support it.

The governments of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia protested most vigorously, but so far without result, against a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent in freight rates granted to our railways not very long ago. It seems to me that these governments should give serious consideration to the policy upon which the dominion government proposes to embark in connection with the deepening of the St. Lawrence to the great lakes. Its effect upon the maritime economy will be more serious than any increase in freight rates could possibly be.

I admit that the development of this country must continue, that it cannot be stayed. I acknowledge that I have read with approval Burke's address to the electors of Bristol, but I am not dealing with any one constituency when I speak of this matter. I am dealing with the two provinces by the sea and I deem it my duty to call to the attention of the government what I believe will be the effect of this policy on the maritime provinces, and to tell the government that if it goes ahead with this policy at the expense of the taxpayers of this country it should see to it that the people in the maritime provinces and the maritime ports receive a quid pro quo. Perhaps I might better express it in this way, that the government should see to it that policies are adopted that will have the effect of developing the resources and the industries of those provinces and promoting the business of the maritime ports. What we really need in this country is a new national policy.

On motion of Mr. Hazen the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move that the house do now adjourn. On Monday we shall continue with this debate.

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at ten twenty-two p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 7, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROVISION FOR EVENING SITTINGS 7.30 TO 10.30 UNTIL LAST SITTING DAY IN APRIL

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker: I should like to submit to the house a motion which has to do with the business of the house and of which notice is to be found on page 38 of Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day. It reads:

That, except on Wednesdays, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair at six o'clock p.m. until seven-thirty, and shall adjourn the house at ten-thirty p.m. without question put, unless the closure rule (standing order No. 39) be then in operation, this order to be in effect until and upon the last sitting day of the month of April.

In making this motion I do not submit it as a recommendation to the house. As hon. members know, the motion under which we now sit in the evening from seven-thirty until ten-thirty has to do only with the period during which the address in reply to the speech from the throne is under discussion. If at the conclusion of this debate there were no motion before the house to continue these hours of sitting, the house would automatically revert to the eleven o'clock rule. I have heard comments on both sides, some as to the advisability of reverting to the eleven o'clock rule, and some in favour of continuing for a further period with the ten-thirty hour of adjournment. For the purpose of allowing the house to make its preference known in that regard, I am submitting this motion.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at the time the earlier motion was presented I made an observation which I repeat now. There have been long-established practices as to the hours of sittings of this house, and it seems to me that if they are to be changed they should be the subject of discussion among representatives of the different parties to the end that more satisfactory hours be arranged than those which obviously are not entirely satisfactory to most hon. members. It seems to me that that is a simpler method of dealing with the matter than this slipshod practice which does neither one thing nor the other. It makes the dinner recess half an hour shorter and the final adjournment at night half an hour earlier. It does not diminish the non-attendance at the opening of the evening sitting, for the obvious reason that there are many hon. members who have more to do than eat between the time the house rises at the end of the afternoon and the time it reconvenes after dinner.

It seems to me that the more the hours of this house are made to accord with the necessity of doing certain work in our offices as well as fulfilling ordinary requirements, to say nothing of retaining some measure of social contact outside the house, the better it will be for everyone and the better it will be for the attendance in the house. Instead of adopting a compromise between something and nothing—which is all this motion amounts to—it would be much better if the house met at two o'clock, adjourned at six, reconvened at eight and adjourned at ten. If the house would give me the opportunity of putting it in written form, I would move by way of amendment that after debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne is concluded the house meet at two o'clock, adjourn at six, reconvene at eight and adjourn at ten.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): In view of the divergence of opinion represented by the motion and the suggested amendment, I think what should be done is to accept the original proposal of the leader of the opposition, and have a discussion among the representatives of the various parties in the house. I am not in favour of either of the proposals made today, and to vote suddenly on them is not the way in which to settle the matter. I suggest to the Prime Minister that the motion be held over for a day or so in order that members may think about it.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I have not changed my view since the matter was first discussed in the house by the Prime Minister some ten days ago. I still think a committee should be set up to discuss the whole question and bring in a recommendation which will resolve all the various opinions into a resolution acceptable to the house. If the Prime Minister desires to proceed with his motion today, I am afraid I shall have to support the amendment of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): If a backbencher may enter a discussion among the leaders of the various parties—I lead my own party—may I say that I do not approve the motion. I understand it is not a government measure. If there is to be an amendment—and I hate to be in accord with the leader of the opposition or the leaders of the other two parties—I think we should go all the way. Why not consider the maritimes and the western provinces? Let us sit on Wednesday evenings, and, so far as I am concerned, Saturday as well, and finish the session. If the motion is not a government measure I do not think it should be proceeded with at this time. I suggest that an amendment be introduced to provide that we sit on Wednesday evenings, and let us finish the session.

Mr. St. Laurent: I do not want to insist upon having the motion put, but it is apparent that if we have a committee there will be as many divergent views expressed as there were last year, and the result will be no change. I have no objection to that, because I am perfectly willing that the present standing order be applied. I felt, however, that it was only proper, in view of the experiment that had been made, that the members be given an opportunity to express their preference in the matter. If it is desired that the question be held over until tomorrow, I have no objection. If it is the desire of the house that the standing order apply, I shall be satisfied. My only purpose was to try to meet the desires of the greater number in the house. But I do think it is only fair to be realistic, and to admit that if we set up a committee we shall simply be going back to the standing order which has been in effect for a long time.

It is immaterial to me whether the motion be dealt with now or be allowed to stand until tomorrow. I think that the setting up of a committee would have the same result that was reached last year: we would not be able to bring in an agreed recommendation for a change. That might be the better result. We have the standing order, and unless there is an overwhelming desire to change it, perhaps it should be adhered to.

Mr. Low: How does the Prime Minister feel about the two o'clock proposal?

Mr. St. Laurent: The two o'clock proposal would create extreme difficulty for the cabinet. We have to meet in council every day at two o'clock. That has been going on since the first day of the session. It would be difficult to substitute the hour between ten and eleven at night for the hour we now use, between two and three, for the purpose of dealing with the business of the government. I have not consulted my colleagues, but I believe it would interfere with the proper and expeditious conduct of the business of government if the house were to meet at two o'clock instead of three. We shall never get 245 minds in agreement, and if we set up a committee there will not be agreement. We have at least had agreement in practice under the standing order and it may be best to leave it as it is. If it is the desire of the house that the motion be withdrawn, I am prepared to withdraw it, because I put it forward not as my view but for the purpose of ascertaining the views of the members of the house.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that, without formally appointing a committee, the whips of each party might meet? From some of the comments made as to different hours of sitting, it is obvious that there is a divergence of opinion. It is possible that as a result of the experiment which has been made some new views may be indicated. The Prime Minister has stated that two o'clock would be an inconvenient hour for the house to meet in the afternoon. After all, it is the business of the house to decide its own affairs, and that should be done with recognition of the problems of the government and its administrative responsibilities. I would point out, however, that the House of Commons of Great Britain, which also has very heavy responsibilities, meets even earlier, and they adjust the hour of meeting of their cabinet council. It would seem that the time might be so adjusted here. This suggestion would approach the matter with some sense of reality. At the moment I do not think the present practice accomplishes anything, except to provide a disturbing break in the dinner hour, and not a very conclusive advantage at the end of the day. I suggest that the whips meet before tomorrow and see if any general opinion is taking form.

Mr. St. Laurent: That is quite agreeable to me. I would remind the leader of the opposition that there is no dinner adjournment in the British House of Commons.

Mr. Drew: I know.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I do not think this is a matter that the whips can settle. They may be good whips, but they cannot meet all the private members and find out what their opinions are. I suggest to the Prime Minister and to the leader of the opposition that the matter be allowed to stand until Thursday afternoon. In the meantime the caucuses of the various parties will have been held, and this is a proper subject for them to discuss. This proposal will not interfere with consideration of the amendment offered by the leader of the opposition or the motion of the Prime Minister.

Mr. St. Laurent: Perhaps we might leave it until tomorrow. It may be that tomorrow we shall wish to accept the suggestion of the hon member for Vancouver East and put it over until Thursday.

Motion stands.

COARSE GRAINS

DISTRIBUTION OF OATS AND BARLEY EQUALIZATION FUNDS

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I wish to make an announcement to the house in regard to the oats and barley equalization fund for the year ending July 31, 1948, as administered by the Canadian wheat board.

The final accounting in regard to these two funds has now been completed. After allowing for payment expenses, the surplus in the 1947-48 oats equalization fund is $4,269,706.84, and the surplus in the 1947-48 barley equalization fund is $4,402,527.75. On the basis of 1947-48 producers deliveries, as reported to the board by handling companies, the per bushel payment on oats will be 5·881 cents, and on barley 6·780 cents per bushel.

These payments will be made in two parts. Cheques to individual producers delivering oats and barley to country elevators or authorized dealers from August 1, 1947 to October 21, 1947 have been prepared and will be distributed through elevator companies commencing on March 7, 1949. Delivery records for this period were already in the hands of the board, since the board made the dominion government payments of 5 cents per bushel on oats and 11 cents per bushel on barley applicable to deliveries of oats and barley during the period when price ceilings were in effect.

The board now has on hand the record of deliveries from October 22, 1947, to July 31, 1948. Cheques covering oats and barley deliveries during this period will be written at an early day and distributed to producers through the various elevator companies.

As the collection of equalization fees on exports of oats and barley was discontinued on August 1, 1948, the present payment will represent the last distribution of oats and barley equalization funds.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

ANSWER TO INQUIRY AS TO CHOICE OF ROUTES

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): On March 2 the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) asked for information on a certain route of the trans-Canada highway which I believe he said had been recommended in the early thirties by the federal government and by the different provinces.

From the information available in the department I cannot find any record of the federal government having designated a coast-to-coast route, or of the provincial governments having designated complete or continuous routes in the provinces during the period mentioned by the hon. member. Between 1930 and 1939 various provinces selected certain sections of their main east and west roads as part of a trans-Canada highway when requesting financial aid from the federal government under unemployment relief acts for main road improvement.

I understand that the sections of road designated by the provinces were generally along the main east and west roads as then established across Canada, and beginning at Nanaimo on the west coast the route went through the following cities or towns: Victoria, Vancouver, Kamloops, Revelstoke, Golden, Banff, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Moose Jaw, Regina, Brandon, Winnipeg, Fort William, Schreiber, along the north shore of Lake Superior to Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, North Bay, Pembroke, Ottawa, Hawkesbury, Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec, Riviere du Loup, Edmundston, Woodstock, Fredericton, Saint John, Moncton, Amherst, Truro, New Glasgow, Antigonish, Port Hawkesbury, and Sydney.

Federal assistance to the provinces on the above route is totaled at some $28,650,000. I wish to add further that this material has not been depended upon in any consideration recently given to the matter of the trans-Canada highway.

HOUSING

VETERANS LAND ACT—COST OF REMEDYING STRUCTURAL DEFECTS

On the order for motions:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Timmins) has given me notice of the following question:

> Where a veteran purchases a house under the V.L.A. and subsequently structural defects occur, which the department gets repaired, and when subsequently the veteran vacates the house and the department proceeds to consider the amount of his reestablishment credit, does the department propose to rule that the cost of remedying such defects constitutes a benefit to the veteran concerned or not?

This matter has been under consideration by the department, and we have felt it desirable to ask the Department of Justice for an opinion. If the hon. member has a specific case in mind, I should be glad to let him have further word, if he will give me the particulars.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*CATTLE—COMPENSATION FOR T.B. REACTORS

Mr. Robinson (Bruce):

1. Does the Department of Agriculture pay compensation for cattle which are T.B. reactors?
2. If so, what amount do they pay?
3. What steps have been taken by the government towards raising the amount of such payments?

Mr. Gardiner: May I be permitted to answer this question orally? The answer to part 1 is yes. The answer to part 2 is that the maximum amount upon which the payment is based is $60 for grades and $150 per head for purebred cattle.

As to part 3 I do not think it would be possible to give a definite answer for some little time. All I can say at the moment is that a recommendation has been made to the government and legislation in respect to the matter is under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Answered.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Could I not have some more information from the minister? If the government do recognize that these amounts should be increased, will the higher rates be made retroactive?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—TAXES

Mr. Ross (St. Paul's):

1. Are any taxes paid to the dominion government by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?
2. Are sales taxes, excise taxes and customs duties paid on purchases made by the corporation?
3. What is the amount and nature of the taxes payable by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to each provincial government?
4. What is the amount and nature of the taxes payable by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to each municipality on premises owned by the corporation?

Mr. McCann:

1. Yes. See answer to No. 2.
2. Yes.
3. Nil.
4. No taxes are paid by the corporation to municipalities. Payments are made, however, for such services as water and sewage in some localities.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY IN TORONTO

Mr. Henderson:

1. What was (a) the purchase price; (b) the sale price, by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, of the property on the east side of Yonge street, between Jackes avenue and Summerhill avenue?
2. From whom did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation buy this property, for what purpose, and at what cost?
3. What was the cost to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the old Havergal college on Jarvis street, and the adjoining property to the north?
4. What has been spent on these properties per annum, for improvements, since purchase?
5. Were buildings formerly used for housing units torn down and others built on this old Havergal site? If so, at what cost?
6. What has been the total expenditure on this property in (a) capital expenditure; (b) maintenance charges, per annum?

Mr. McCann:

1. (a) $50,000; (b) $65,000.

2. North American Life Assurance Company. Contemplated as a site for studios and offices. See 1 (a).

3. $120,000.

4. (1) Conversion and alterations to adapt property to meet technical requirements for broadcasting purposes, $204,095.32.

(2) Fiscal year 1946-47, improvements, $14,298.85.

5. No.

6. (a) Exclusive of purchase price, the expenditures on building and property alterations and improvements to January 31, 1949, amounted to $243,915.95.

(b) Annual maintenance charges for buildings and grounds:

1944-45	$ 469.50
1945-46	5,013.85
1946-47	5,685.17
1947-48	17,305.10
1948-49 (to Jan. 31, 1949)	7,559.33
	$36,032.95

IRRIGATION—LILLOOET, B.C., AREA

Mr. Fulton:

1. Are any negotiations under way for development of irrigation projects in the Lillooet, British Columbia, area?
2. What representations have been received to date from the province of British Columbia with regard to development in this district or any other district in accordance with the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, made on May 14, 1947? Give particulars.
3. What action has been taken and what is the present position with regard to each of the projects referred to in such representations?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. No. The need in that part of the Lillooet area where we are operating is for diking and drainage, and the sum of $282,137 has been spent by the dominion since 1946 on such works.

2. The province of British Columbia submitted the following list of projects for consideration under the policy announced by the Minister of Agriculture on May 22, 1947: Westbank, St. Mary's Prairie (Kimberley); Winfield Okanagan Centre, Camp Lister, and North Creston; Kelowna (Mission creek), Duck Lake reclamation; Similkameen, Columbia river reclamation; Penticton West Bench, South Thompson pumping; Armstrong (Grandview flats), Niskonlith (Pritchard); Salmon Arm, Campbell creek; South Okanagan, Merritt flats; Okanagan Falls, Balmoral flats; Midway Rock Creek Balfour, Tappen; Walhachin, East Lillooet; Ashcroft.

The following specific requests have been received from the province since that time: for construction of the Chase irrigation project; for construction of the Johnson-Western Canada ranching irrigation project; for construction of the Westbank irrigation project; for construction of the Okanagan Falls irrigation project; for survey of the South Okanagan irrigation project; for construction of the Niskonlith irrigation project; for construction of the Cawston Benches irrigation project.

3. Chase irrigation project—constructed; Johnson-Western Canada ranching project—constructed; Westbank irrigation project—under construction; Okanagan Falls irrigation project—approved and awaiting completion of land control by the province. Survey of South Okanagan project—completed as requested. Niskonlith irrigation project—surveys and designing completed. Cawston Benches irrigation project—surveys and designing completed; Mission Creek irrigation project—preliminary surveys under way; West Bench (Penticton) irrigation project—exploratory surveys for dam site under way. It is the intention to examine and survey additional projects in order that a suitable priority of construction may, in consultation with the province, be established.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL—REMITTANCES TO U.S. BY LABOUR ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Pouliot:

How much in American dollars did the foreign exchange control board furnish (a) the Trades and Labour Congress and (b) the Canadian Congress of Labour for remittance from Canada to the United States (i) during each one of the war years of 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945; (ii) during each one of the following years?

Mr. Belzile: Since the commencement of exchange control it has been the policy to provide foreign exchange for payments of fees or dues in connection with the membership of Canadians in international labour unions, trade and professional associations, fraternal societies and other similar international bodies. The foreign exchange control board does not maintain records of remittances made by or to particular organizations or classes of organizations within this general category.

NATIONAL HEALTH—HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANT

Mr. Coldwell:

1. Of the hospitals listed on page 836 of Hansard of February 23, 1949, which hospitals were planned prior to (a) April 1, 1948; (b) May 14, 1948; (c) June 30, 1948; (d) after June 29, 1948?

*HEALTH GRANTS—PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Coldwell:

Under what authority has the dominion committed itself to the province of Quebec for 140 per cent of the amount authorized by P.C. 3403 dated July 28, 1948?

Mr. Martin: The order in council to which my hon. friend directs attention provides that payment of the federal share of the provincial hospital construction project is made not when the project is approved but in successive instalments at specified times during the progress of construction. Each instalment is paid from the provincial allotment of the grant for the year in which it falls due.

Accordingly, while the total of all projects which have been approved under hospital construction for Quebec is greater than the province's share of the grant for this year, the actual expenditure and commitment for the fiscal year 1948-49 do not exceed the amount provided under order in council P.C. 3403. The actual expenditure of federal funds for hospital construction will be spread over a considerable period of time during which the construction of the approved projects is taking place. In no year will the province receive an amount greater than its share of the grant for that year.

Mr. Coldwell: What I had in mind was, first, the authority; second, how can the present parliament possibly commit succeeding parliaments?

Mr. Speaker: Answered.

*COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. Coldwell:

Under the health plans now developing in the Department of National Health and Welfare, by what year could Canada put into effect a comprehensive nation-wide health insurance plan concerning all health hazards?

Mr. Martin: I cannot answer this question better than by referring my hon. friend to what I said in this connection at page 835 of Hansard for February 23 of this year.

Mr. Speaker: Answered.

HOSPITAL BEDS FOR PATIENTS SUFFERING FROM CERTAIN DISEASES

Mr. Coldwell:

1. By provinces, how many hospital beds per thousand of the population are there for (a) those with acute diseases; (b) those who are convalescing; (c) those who are critically ill; (d) those suffering from tuberculosis; (e) mental cases?

2. Has the government made an estimate as to how many hospital beds per thousand of the population there should be in each of these categories?

3. If so, what is the estimate in each of these categories?

Mr. Martin:

1. (a) Prince Edward Island, 4·82; Nova Scotia, 4·09; New Brunswick, 4·74; Quebec, 4·23; Ontario, 4·28; Manitoba, 5·40; Saskatchewan, 5·44; Alberta, 6·37; British Columbia, 6·34. Canada, 4·73.

(b) Hospital statistics indicating the number of hospital beds for persons who are convalescing are not available separately.

(c) Hospital statistics indicating the number of hospital beds for patients who are critically ill are not available separately.

(d) Prince Edward Island, 1·54; Nova Scotia, 1·43; New Brunswick, 1·73; Quebec, 0·98; Ontario, 0·89; Manitoba, 1·05; Saskatchewan, 0·95; Alberta, 0·57; British Columbia, 0·82. Canada, 0·97.

(e) Prince Edward Island, 2·66; Nova Scotia, 4·19; New Brunswick, 1·83; Quebec, 3·64; Ontario, 3·60; Manitoba, 3·33; Saskatchewan, 4·36; Alberta, 3·09; British Columbia, 2·91. Canada, 3·51.

2 and 3. The following is a rough guide for the country as a whole of the number of hospital beds per 1,000 population in each of the three categories given in part 1 above. These ratios may be higher or lower for any particular province. The health surveys now in progress will provide a careful assessment of the adequacy of hospital accommodation in any given area.

For acute disease and incurable patients, excluding tuberculosis and mental patients: about seven beds per 1,000 population.

For tuberculosis patients: about three times the average number of deaths, annually, from tuberculosis over the previous five-year period for which information is available.

For mental patients: about 5·75 beds per 1,000 population. This includes four beds per 1,000 population for the mentally ill, 1·5 beds for mentally deficient persons and ·25 for epileptics.

MINIMUM PRICE FOR UNMARKETED APPLES

Mr. Fulton:

1. Has the Minister or the Department of Agriculture received any representation from the B.C. Fruit Growers' Association for the establishment of a guaranteed minimum (floor) price for unmarketed apples of desirable sizes, varieties, and grades, consequent on the loss of the British market?

2. If so, what action is being taken to meet the request?

3. If none is being taken, why not?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Yes.

2. The agricultural prices support board has been authorized to guarantee a return of $2 per packed box (to a maximum of 200,000 boxes) for the varieties Newtown, Stayman and Rome Beauty of sizes 180, 198, 216 and 234, and for the variety Winesap of sizes 216, 234 and 252. This is in conformity with the recommendation of B.C. Tree Fruits Limited.

3. See answer to No. 2.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION—IRRIGATION FACILITIES IN B.C. TREE FRUIT AREA

Mr. Fulton:

1. Has the Minister or the Department of Agriculture received any representation from the B.C. Fruit Growers' Association for the extension of the provisions of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to assist in enlargement of irrigation facilities within the tree fruit area of British Columbia?

2. If so, is any action being taken to meet this request over and above the separate projects in the course of development as at January 21, 1949?

3. If no action is being taken as requested, why not?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Copies of records of annual conventions of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association have been received containing resolutions recommending construction of the Westbank project and the Cawston Benches project.

2. The resolutions, as stated above, referred to specific projects. The Westbank project is under construction; the Cawston Benches project has been surveyed and allocation of the necessary water from the Similkameen river is under review by the international joint commission.

3. See answers to No. 1 and No. 2.

ROYAL NAVY MANOEUVRES OFF TRINIDAD—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. Church:

1. Will the Canadian navy be represented at the joint manœuvres of the Atlantic and West Indies squadrons of the Royal Navy off Trinidad this month?

2. If so, by what type of ships and submarines?

Mr. Baker:

1. Yes.

2. One light fleet carrier, one cruiser, three destroyers, one frigate. There are no submarines in the Royal Canadian Navy.

U.S. ATLANTIC FLEET—MANOEUVRES IN CARIBBEAN SEA—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Mr. Church:

Was Canada represented when the United States Atlantic fleet began six weeks of manœuvres on February 14, last, in the Caribbean sea, testing submarines?

Mr. Baker: The Royal Canadian Navy is being represented at these manoeuvres by an observer, Lieut. Commander (P) T. C. Brock.

CANADIAN NAVY—PACIFIC MANOEUVRES

Mr. Church:

1. What ships and submarines has the Canadian navy in the Pacific?

2. Are any manoeuvres contemplated there this year, and will any submarines of the Canadian navy take part?

Mr. Baker:

1. Cruisers, 2; destroyers, 6; frigates, 3; Algerines, 4; auxiliary vessels, 2; submarines, nil.

2. Normal training manoeuvres are contemplated during 1949 on the Pacific coast. There are no submarines in the Royal Canadian Navy.

Questions

WHITEHORSE, YUKON, FEDERAL BUILDING

Mr. Black (Yukon):

When is the federal building at Whitehorse, Yukon, for which plans and specifications were made several years ago, to be built?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The answer to this question remains the same as that given to a similar question asked last year, and is as follows:

Sketch plans and estimates only were prepared in 1946 for use in determining the magnitude of the project. The whole question of when projects such as this one shall be proceeded with is one that depends largely on the supply of labour and materials, which, at present, are being directed primarily to veterans housing, and, secondly, to the expansion of industry.

The priority that is given to the construction of new public buildings is very low. The present policy is to restrict new construction to an absolute minimum and to proceed only with maintenance and repairs of existing structures. At a later date, when the aforementioned demands have been satisfied, attention will be given to the construction of new public buildings.

This is the policy that is being followed with relation to new buildings throughout the country. As the building at Whitehorse is a new project, it is felt that it should remain in the deferred class as there is no greater urgency for this particular structure than for others of a similar nature throughout the country.

VETERANS—DISABILITY PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

Mr. McKay:

1. What is the total number of veterans at present receiving pensions for disability of (a) 100 per cent; (b) 95 to 99 per cent; (c) 90 to 94 per cent; (d) 85 to 89 per cent; (e) 80 to 84 per cent; (f) 75 to 79 per cent; (g) 70 to 74 per cent; (h) 65 to 69 per cent; (i) 60 to 64 per cent; (j) 55 to 59 per cent; (k) 50 to 54 per cent; (l) 45 to 49 per cent; (m) 40 to 44 per cent; (n) 35 to 39 per cent; (o) 30 to 34 cent; (p) 25 to 29 per cent; (q) 20 to 24 per cent; (r) less than 20 per cent?

2. What is the present yearly liability with regard to veterans pensions?

3. How many veterans are in receipt of war veterans allowances?

Mr. Mutch:

1. Return as at December 31, 1948

(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)

[Mr. Baker.]

IMPORTS OF HOUSE BROOMS

Mr. Brooks:

1. What quantity of brooms (house) have been imported into Canada during (a) 1947; (b) 1948?

2. From what countries have these imports been made and what quantity from each?

Mr. McIlraith: Brooms not separately classified. Statistical item reads "brooms and whisks". Quantity not recorded under this item. The value as shown in import statistics during calendar year is as follows:

	1947	1948
United Kingdom	$ 1,401	$ 69
Hong Kong	81	1,433
Italy	33,446	417
Sweden	171	829
United States	15,761	49,675
All others	50,860	52,423

POTATOES—FLOOR PRICES, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Nowlan:

What steps have been taken by the government to provide, on and after April 1, 1949, a system of floor prices for potatoes grown in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. McCubbin: Under order in council P.C. 5488, potatoes grown in the province of Prince Edward Island and in the counties of Carleton, Victoria and Madawaska and the Hazen settlement of Restigouche county in the province of New Brunswick are eligible for sale to the agricultural prices support board at a price of $1.15 per 100 pounds in the bin. With this price available growers in the defined area need not sell their potatoes at a lower price. Since nearly all of the surplus potatoes grown in the eastern provinces are in the defined area, the effect of the price support program is to enable growers in other areas to sell their potatoes on the market at the equivalent of the support price. This effect extends equally to Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec and those parts of New Brunswick which are not within the defined price support area.

PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia):

1. What was the amount of the gross national debt for 1947?

2. What was the total amount of interest for 1947 on this debt?

3. Total liabilities, March 31, 1948, $17,197,348,981.17.

4. Interest on the public debt paid in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1948, $455,455,203.64.

Questions

IMPORTS OF TRACTORS

Mr. McKay:

1. Since the discontinuation of the duty on imported farm implements have any tractors been imported from the United States?

2. If so, how many have been imported for each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta up to December 31, 1948?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Yes.

2. Imports from United States through customs ports in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta:

Calendar year	Manitoba No.	Saskatchewan No.	Alberta No.

2. W. C. Wells Construction Company, of Saskatoon, Sask.

3. $287,000.

4. Cost plus fixed fee.

5. Yes—$16,500 (the fixed fee).

NATIONAL HEALTH—ESKIMOS IN CHESTERFIELD INLET AREA

Mr. Isnor:

Has the Minister of Health and Welfare any recent information regarding the epidemic among Eskimos in the Chesterfield Inlet area, which has recently been mentioned in the press and over the radio?

Mr. Martin: Yes. A telegram was received last week and a report by long-distance telephone today from departmental officers in that area. The situation briefly is as follows:

Late last fall, Dr. J. P. Moody, the doctor employed by the Indian and Eskimo health services directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare situated at Chesterfield Inlet, reported some cases of a disease which was causing paralysis and which had occurred in the Eskimo Point and Padley areas. Dr. Moody visited both these points, which are located in the area between Churchill, Chesterfield Inlet and Baker lake. One case was brought to Winnipeg for further investigation.

During February a few cases occurred in the Chesterfield Inlet area and, lacking facilities for diagnosis and treatment, Dr. Moody requested assistance. Through the co-operation of the R.C.A.F. a plane was made available and a well-equipped medical party was organized.

Dr. A. F. W. Peart, head of the epidemiology division of this department, flew to Winnipeg and joined Major Smillie, R.C.A.M.C., and Professor J. D. Adamson of the university of Manitoba, who is recognized as a leading authority on virus diseases. Dr. W. J. Wood, regional superintendent of Indian and Eskimo health services, co-ordinated the efforts being made, and this party, with considerable equipment, arrived at Chesterfield Inlet on March 2.

The telegram received last week stated that there were then 60 cases (half of whom were suffering from some degree of paralysis) in the Chesterfield Inlet area and that there had been 13 deaths, the last occurring on March 2.

The report received today by long-distance telephone from Winnipeg was to the following effect:

No new cases have developed.

[Mr. Bowerman.]

Thirteen cases—those suffering from the worst degree of paralysis—have been flown to Winnipeg and admitted to the King George hospital. During the flight a nurse was in attendance, and the patients were accompanied by Dr. Peart, Professor Adamson and Dr. Wood. These cases will continue to be under the professional care of Professor Adamson.

Dr. Moody has remained at Chesterfield Inlet in charge of the balance of the sick there, all of whom have recovered sufficiently to allow their return to their homes. Equipment for the treatment of paralysis by physiotherapy has been flown into Chesterfield Inlet from Winnipeg and an attempt is now being made to secure the services of an expert physiotherapist to treat those at Chesterfield Inlet who are suffering from paralysis.

The Department of Mines and Resources has arranged for relief issue of necessary food, supplies, etc. to all stricken families.

Dr. Moody will keep this Department and Dr. Wood fully advised of any developments. The epidemic seems however to be fully under control.

Professor Adamson thinks it probable that the disease is anterior poliomyelitis, but this is not entirely confirmed. Apparently the Eskimos have no resistance to this disease, as almost every family in the area has been attacked. Although no white persons have been seriously ill, it is possible that some may have had the disease in a mild form.

VETERANS LAND ACT—PRAIRIE PROVINCES—SMALL HOLDINGS

Mr. Juiras:

How many veterans have been established on small holdings under the V.L.A. in (a) Manitoba; (b) Saskatchewan; (c) Alberta?

HEALTH GRANTS—TORONTO HOSPITAL ACCOMMODATION—VETERANS AND CIVILIANS

Mr. Church:

Under the national health grant for 1948-49, how much has been allocated towards the expense of the hospital accommodation in the city of Toronto and to what hospital units has this fund been applied so far, for (a) soldier veterans; (b) civilians?

Mr. Martin: No moneys have been allocated for hospital construction under the national health grant for 1948-49 for the city of Toronto.

A request from the Ontario department of health for assistance in the construction of an addition to the Toronto East General and Orthopaedic hospital for civilians, in an amount of $145,000, was received by the Department of National Health and Welfare on March 4 and is now receiving consideration.

The national hospital construction grant does not provide for assistance towards the construction of veterans hospitals.

Mr. Gingues:

1. How many Esthonians immigrated to Sherbrooke, Quebec, in 1948 and 1949?

2. By what company are they employed?

3. Are the wives and other members of the families of such immigrants working for other employers?

4. Has the city of Sherbrooke rented the former barracks of the Lord Sherbrooke military centre to house such families?

5. Who applied for permits of entry for these immigrants?

6. For what reasons were these permits granted?

7. Has the Dominion Textile Company guaranteed, at the same time, more employment for Canadians?

VETERANS AFFAIRS—OPTOMETRISTS

Mr. Lennard:

1. Have any optometrists been employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs since January, 1948?

2. If so, how many were employed and on what basis?

Mr. Mutch: I understand that the hon. member who asked this question has agreed to a return giving the number of optometrists as applied to Canada only. Subject to that, the question may pass as an order for return.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL—WAR MEASURES AND EMERGENCY POWERS ACTS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many orders in council were passed between (a) September 1, 1939 and September 1, 1945; (b) September 1, 1945, and date hereof?

2. Of these orders in council, how many were passed under the provisions of the (a) War Measures Act; (b) the several emergency powers acts?

AGRICULTURE—PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION BRANCH—EMPLOYEES

Mr. McKay:

How many officials and staff are now in the employ of the prairie farm rehabilitation branch, Department of Agriculture (a) in Canada; (b) in Saskatchewan?

IRRIGATION—EAST AND WEST BERRY CREEK, ALTA.

Mr. Quelch:

1. What has been the total cost to date of building the two main dams on the east and west Berry creeks?

2. What will be the acre feet of storage available in the reservoirs created by the dams built on (a) the east Berry creek; (b) the west Berry creek?

3. What is the estimated acreage that can be irrigated from (a) reservoir on east Berry creek; (b) reservoir on west Berry creek?

4. What is the map location of each dam?

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—PAYMENTS TO PERSONS WITH OTHER OCCUPATIONS, ETC.

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Was payment made of the prairie farm assistance allowance to any persons in 1948 who (a) for a major portion of the year did not live on the land farmed by them; (d) had an occupation or carried on business additional to farm operations?

2. If so, how many cases are there in each of said categories?

Mr. Gardiner: I should like to point out to the members asking these three questions that we must write to western Canada for the answers, so there will be a delay in securing the information. I should like to have these made orders for returns, and I will give an undertaking that the information will be brought down as soon as it is received here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As to the question standing in my name, that is all right, provided that the information is brought down quickly. I have been waiting since February 7 for the answer to another question about prairie farm assistance.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

RED DEER RIVER DIVERSION PROJECT

Mr. Quelch:

For a copy of the surveys to date of the proposed Red Deer river diversion project, along with a statement showing an estimate of cost of project. Also copy of map showing location of dam on Red Deer river, canals and storage reservoirs with area that may be irrigated under this project.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of each of the following orders in council: P.C. 859 of March 2, 1948; P.C. 938 of March 6, 1948; P.C. 1051 of March 16, 1948; P.C. 1101 of March 16, 1948; P.C. 1186 of March 23, 1948.

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of order in council P.C. 465, of February 9, 1946, approving the agreement between the crown and Sorel Industries Limited.

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of orders in council P.C. 209/2066, and P.C. 210/2066, dated May 14, 1948.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LILLOOET LAKE, B.C., LAKE LEVELS—CONTRACT WITH HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION COMPANY

Mr. Fulton:

For a copy of the contract awarded by the prairie farm rehabilitation administration or the Department of Agriculture to the Highway Construction Company Limited, of Vancouver, B.C., for work in connection with the lowering of Lillooet lake, British Columbia.

COMMUNISM

QUESTION AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO DEAL WITH TREASONABLE STATEMENTS OF COMMUNIST LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statements made during the past two weeks by the national leaders of communist parties throughout the world, to the effect it is their intention to sabotage preparations for defence and assist the soviet union in the event of war, is the government prepared to announce any steps, by way of legislation or otherwise, to deal effectively with this pattern of treason which has been disclosed?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The leader of the opposition was kind enough to write me a lengthy letter dealing with the background which prompted his question. In answer may I say that these matters are constantly under careful surveillance by the Department of External Affairs. I am sure the leader of the opposition will not mind my saying that his letter contained a suggestion that a statement had been made in Canada by Tim Buck. I should like to ask him if he would indicate to me when that statement was made, because I have inquired about it and we have no knowledge of any recent statement by him. The exact form and terms of any such statement would be a matter of concern, because it might constitute an overt act which would come within the existing provisions of the Criminal Code.

I might add that there is a bill on the order paper—it is being carefully examined by the law officers of the Department of Justice—dealing with the possibility of taking effective action to counteract the activities of communist parties. The Department of Justice has not yet made its report on that proposed legislation or on like measures adopted in other countries, and the practical effect of such legislation. I should be obliged to the leader of the opposition if he would call to my attention, either here or by some other means, any recent statement of a communist leader in Canada, because it would be given careful scrutiny to ascertain whether it fell within the provisions of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Prime Minister will object if I read one sentence in my letter to which he referred:

The uniform pattern of these statements gives a new meaning and an entirely different significance to a similar statement made by the leader of the Canadian communist party, Tim Buck, some time ago.

The occasion to which I referred was a speech Tim Buck was reported to have made in Vancouver on November 13, 1946. As I pointed out, this was not a recent happening—

Mr. St. Laurent: In 1946?

Mr. Drew: It occurred in 1946, but it gains a new meaning in the light of this recent pattern which has been announced. The reports of that speech stated that Tim Buck had publicly stated he would not defend Canada in the event of war with the soviet, but would in fact follow the same course as he had followed during the past war. This report was carried extensively by the press at that time. I would be glad to furnish the Prime Minister with the reference to the clippings, if they are not already available to him.

Mr. St. Laurent: I am sure the clippings are available, and I will have them looked at. My chief concern was whether it was something as far back as that, or something more recent.

TRADE WITH BRITAIN

REPORTED DECLARATION OF WHEAT AS SURPLUS IN U.S.—COMMENT IN News Chronicle

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. Church (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the attention of the government been called to an article appearing in this morning's Ottawa Journal, headed "Sees possibility of Britain severing wheat agreement", and reading in part as follows:

London, March 7 (Monday) (Reuters)—The News Chronicle says today that if the United States were to declare wheat a surplus commodity, "we might be compelled to ask for a release from our obligations under the Canadian wheat agreement."

Is the government in a position to make any comments on this article, and is there any possibility of Britain's severing the wheat agreement with Canada?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There has been no official communication to the government in that regard. The only comment I would care to make is that it has not been the practice of the government of the United Kingdom to repudiate its contracts or to ask to be relieved of them, and we have no indication that this will become its practice.

CABBAGE

REMOVAL OF IMPORT RESTRICTIONS—STOCKS IN WINNIPEG WAREHOUSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Finance, notice of which I have sent to him. In view of a press report that western Canada will soon import cabbages from the United States, will the minister investigate the situation with a view to seeing if anything can be done to sell the large stock of cabbages now in the warehouses of the Manitoba Vegetable Producers Association in Winnipeg?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Before the decision was made by the import control division to permit resumption of importation of United States cabbages, officers of the board made inquiries throughout Canada, through the trade and otherwise, and ascertained that the supply of domestic cabbages was close to exhaustion, and that the ones that remained were in most cases of inferior quality. It may be, of course, that there are in stock some which were kept a little longer than was necessary, in the hope of obtaining higher prices. I do not suppose that is so with regard to the situation referred to by the hon. member for Springfield. But speaking generally the supply of domestic cabbages in Canada is pretty well exhausted. It was for that reason that the import restrictions were lifted.

Mr. Sinnott: I had a delegation down to see me a few weeks ago, and my information is that there are thirty carloads now on hand.

An hon. Member: Good cabbages?

Mr. Sinnott: Good cabbages.

NAVAL SERVICE

QUESTION AS TO "ATHABASKAN" INCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Probe (Regina City): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I sent to him a few hours ago. In view of conflicting statements being circulated about a reported mutiny aboard the Royal Canadian Navy destroyer Athabaskan, will the minister please indicate to the house what the facts are with respect to the Athabaskan incident?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): As reported to me, the facts are as follows:

H.M.C.S. Athabaskan is one of the Canadian vessels proceeding to the manoeuvres to be held in the Caribbean. On Saturday, February 26, while the Athabaskan was taking on fuel at Manzanillo, Mexico, a number of junior ratings asked to see the commanding officer. There were no petty officers, leading seamen or senior ratings in the group.

After the commanding officer of the ship, Commander M. A. Medland, had met the men concerned and spoken with them, they carried on their duties without hesitation. The commanding officer's interview with the men lasted twenty minutes. Ten minutes later, normal routine in the ship was resumed, and there was no further incident. The ship completed refueling and sailed from Manzanillo according to her schedule without interruption of her program. Since then, normal leave has been given; the ship was open to visitors in Acapulco, and the conduct of the ship's company has been in accordance with normal good standards.

On the basis of reports so far received here, it would appear that the incident was a minor one which was settled by the commanding officer in short order and without difficulty.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

PRESS REPORTS AS TO ARRANGEMENTS FOR MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver South): Apparently the Daily Telegraph of London, England, this morning carried a dispatch which has been reprinted in certain Canadian papers, to the effect that the adjourned commonwealth conference to deal primarily with Pacific and Far Eastern questions, which was to take place in Ceylon in May, may now be held in Ottawa in April. Is the Prime Minister prepared to make a statement with regard to that dispatch?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I am prepared to state that no such arrangements have been made.

Mr. Green: May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question? Can he say whether the conference is to take place in May? If so, where is it to be held, or is there to be any further meeting?

Mr. St. Laurent: There was a suggestion that a conference of ministers of external affairs might be held in Ceylon some time in May 1949. It is not to be held in May 1949. Correspondence is proceeding at the present time to determine whether it will be held at a later date, or whether there will be an opportunity for something that would take its place at the time of the meeting of the United Nations in the autumn of 1949.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GOLD

SALES BY SOUTH AFRICA AT PREMIUM—INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance, notice of which I have sent to him. In view of the reported success of the South African government in selling gold on the open market above the pegged price set by the international monetary fund, is the government prepared to take steps to negotiate for relaxation of the restrictions on the marketing of gold imposed on Canada by the international monetary fund?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his question. I am not, of course, aware whether or not the transactions referred to were successful. I have been informed that the matter is still under discussion between South Africa and the international monetary fund. Other than that, I am not prepared to make any statement.

WHEAT

USE OF TERMINAL FACILITIES AT PRINCE RUPERT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. G. Archibald (Skeena): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it the intention of his department to use the terminal facilities for handling wheat at the port of Prince Rupert during the forthcoming crop year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am unable to make a commitment at this time. The use of the Prince Rupert facilities will depend on the size of the crop, the availability of shipping, and other factors that cannot be determined now.

IMMIGRATION

ORDERS IN COUNCIL LEGALIZING ENTRIES INTO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources. On March 3 I asked him whether or not he would table the orders in council passed since July 1, 1948, legalizing the illegal entry of various people into this country. He said he would take the matter under advisement. I now ask him whether or not he will table those orders in council.

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): There are two questions on this subject, I believe, one from the hon. member for Lake Centre and one from the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Ross). Consideration is being given to them, and a statement will be made shortly or a return tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why is it so hard to pry loose these orders in council?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I do not think that is a comment that is justified by the circumstances. The hon. member has asked a question which in its present form cannot receive the kind of answer he would accept. There have been no orders in council legalizing the entry of anyone who entered illegally. There were some orders in council which permitted persons who have entered Canada illegally to remain, notwithstanding the fact that they had entered illegally. But that is not the same thing at all.

The second part of the hon. member's question was for orders in council changing the statute. There have been none changing the statute. The statute provides that regulations may be made, and there are regulations made under that authority. There have been orders in council waiving certain of the provisions of those regulations, in certain cases. All those orders in council will be brought down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have not been tabled yet?

Mr. St. Laurent: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Or published in the Canada Gazette?

Mr. St. Laurent: Or published in the Canada Gazette. The hon. member the other day had an order made for a return, which will be brought down. I inquired for it today, but it is not quite ready. There are several thousand orders in council, and I am having a consecutive list prepared—I am not choosing them at all—of the first one hundred, descriptive of each, with a note as to which were tabled, which were published in the Canada Gazette, and which were considered as merely executive decisions not requiring to be published or tabled. When that return is brought down—and I think it will be tomorrow or the next day—if the hon. member wishes to have us give a description of more than the one hundred, that will be done. But I think when he has seen, from that one hundred, which will be the first hundred of the period, what the distribution is, he may consider that it will not be necessary for us to continue the work and make a description of the others.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—BASIS OF COMPUTATION—BASIC HERDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Owing to the dissatisfaction and misunderstanding with regard to the principle of the basic herd in computing income tax for farmers, has the government taken steps to clarify the principle of the basic herd? Will the minister make a statement to the house in this regard?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, as appears at page 1091 of Hansard, a question similar in substance was asked by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). I then said that a statement would be made shortly in the form of a directive from the department with reference to basic herds. The question just asked by the hon. member is: "Has the government taken steps to clarify the principle of the basic herd?" The answer is yes. I repeat that a directive dealing with the matter will be issued shortly.

BASIS OF INTERIM 1949 RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of National Revenue. Should persons who are this month filing their interim 1949 income tax returns estimate their tax and pay their March 31 instalment on the basis of the same tax rates as prevailed in 1948?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): I should say that they should let their conscience and the provisions of the statute be their guide.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is he prepared to make a statement today as to the conditions he found in Vancouver, where I understand he went for the express purpose of investigating the employment situation? I should also like to know the remedies that are proposed.

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): In the first place I did not go for the express purpose of making an inquiry into labour conditions. I had many purposes, and that was one of them. Either the Minister of Labour or I will make a statement on labour conditions some day soon.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

DEPORTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): On February 9 this house passed a motion of mine for the production of certain papers. It is now March 7. Can the Minister of Mines and Resources give me some idea as to when these papers may be produced?

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the return is in course of preparation. I hope it will be ready shortly.

CATTLE

COMPENSATION FOR T.B. REACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, arising out of an earlier answer to a question of mine. Will the government consider making retroactive any increase in compensation which may be made for tuberculosis reactors, in order to cover the heavy losses sustained by owners in the last couple of years?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I think my answer was perfectly clear on that point, namely, that a recommendation has gone forward, and of course the recommendation would not be for anything other than a possible increase. The question whether there will be any increase, and if so what that increase will be, is a matter which will be decided by the government when the legislation comes before it.

SILVER FOXES

QUESTION OF ESTABLISHMENT OF FLOOR PRICE ON PELTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct three related questions to the Minister of Agriculture. I apologize for not giving him notice of these questions. Have any applications been received for establishment of a floor price for silver fox pelts? If so, by whom? If these applications have been made, what is the government's intention?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I will have to take the questions as a notice, and give a reply later.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, March 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. D. King Hazen (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, there is another matter in connection with the Atlantic ports with which I want to deal briefly. On February 6 of last year, in the debate on the speech from the throne, I charged that the government had failed to live up to the well-established policy of shipping Canadian goods through Canadian ports when it permitted the Canadian National Railways officials to reduce rates over the Grand Trunk lines to Portland, Maine, a United States port.

I protested against the reduction that had been made and asked the government to have the railway policy of this country lived up to. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), when he replied, said:

The traditional and historic policy of successive governments of encouraging trade through national ports and national harbours had never been violated.

He said also that I based my whole argument on a false premise and upon facts that were not accurate. I have yet to learn that facts are not accurate, but I do not propose to quibble with words.

My protest was based on the fact that on November 17, 1947, the Canadian National Railways reduced freight rates over its lines to Portland on eleven different export commodities. For instance, it reduced the rate on newsprint about 30 per cent; on wood pulp about 24 per cent; on lumber 24 per cent; and on other commodities, rubber tires and parts, acetone and acetic acid, sewing machines and liquors, about the same amounts. These were substantial reductions. These reductions made the freight rates to Portland, Maine, on these commodities the same as the rate to the Canadian seaports of Saint John and Halifax.

This encouraged the transportation of Canadian export freight through a foreign port, and put our maritime ports at a disadvantage, as the rail haul to Portland is shorter than the rail haul to Saint John or Halifax over the Canadian National railway lines.

In reducing these rates the officials of the Canadian National Railways were not encouraging the transportation of freight through Canadian ocean ports, nor were they using "their utmost endeavours," to develop trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ports.

When the annual report and accounts of the Canadian National Railways were presented to the committee on railways and shipping in April of last year I had an opportunity to obtain some enlightenment about this reduction in rates by questioning the officials of the railway.

The reason the Canadian National Railways took the initiative in this matter, Mr. Alistair Fraser, one of the vice-presidents of the railways said, in reply to a question I asked him, was:

The situation was this: Moore-McCormack had a service all during the winter operating between Saint John and Halifax, a sailing a month. In April (1947), they had a ship destined for Halifax but they gave public notice that the sailing was cancelled, that the ship would not go to Halifax but would proceed to Boston. We went to Moore-McCormack and suggested that was a hasty decision and urged that perhaps they would not have to go to Boston but could continue their service to Halifax and Saint John.

They flatfootedly refused to do it.

Thereupon, we said to them "If you will not come to Halifax or Saint John, will you go to Portland?" The reason for that was that the Canadian National Railways could participate in the business to Portland. They said, "We will go to Portland instead if you will give us, as you have always done in the past, equal rates with Halifax and Saint John." We said we would and they changed from the port of Boston to the port of Portland.

I asked Mr. Fraser:

Was it in consequence of the rates being reduced that Moore-McCormack Incorporated used Portland?

He replied:

Yes, I think I answered that, Mr. Hazen. They agreed to leave Boston and come to Portland if the rates were reduced by us.

He said that the reduction was a purely voluntary one on the part of the Canadian National Railways officials, that there was no law that compelled them to reduce the rates to Portland. In reply to the question:

Q. Does the use of Portland as an ocean terminal of a railway owned and controlled by the government of Canada give employment to United States workers?

Mr. Fraser replied:—

A. I would think so, yes.

Mr. Vaughan, president of Canadian National Railways, had the following to say, as reported on page 87 of the minutes:

The statement has been made and repeated time and again that Moore-McCormack were going to Boston or New York. All our officers did, and it was a proper thing for them to do, was to endeavour to hold the business for the Canadian National Railways, which is owned by the people of Canada. Our people would not be true to their duty if they had not made every attempt to get the business for the Canadian National Railways, so long as they did not divert it from Canadian ports. It has been proved beyond doubt that the Canadian National Railways officials took no action to divert business from Canadian ports.

There is one further portion of evidence that I want to place on record. At page 77 Mr. Fraser was asked:

Did the action of the Canadian National Railways in reducing freight rates to Portland, Maine, in the United States of America encourage the transportation of trade through American ports?

His answer was:

No, it did not.

He was then asked:

You say that the officials and directors of the Canadian National Railways were in all respects and in good faith using their utmost endeavours to have Canadian goods carried to Canadian ocean ports as the law provides and to develop trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ports when they lowered the freight rate to Portland.

He answered:

Yes. I am satisfied that it is so and the reason why I say that is this: The business was in Boston, and the only question was one between Portland and Boston.

This evidence shows the mental processes and the point of view of the Canadian National Railways officials in dealing with this matter. The reason the Canadian National Railways officials reduced these rates is stated quite clearly in the words of Mr. Vaughan, which I have already quoted and which I shall quote again. They are:

All our officials did, and it was a proper thing for them to do, was to endeavour to hold the business for the Canadian National Railways, which is owned by the people of Canada. Our people would not be true to their duty is they had not made every attempt to get the business for the Canadian National Railways, so long as they did not divert it from Canadian ports.

I join issue with Mr. Vaughan on that statement. The reason given by Mr. Vaughan, while it might be a good business reason under certain circumstances, violates the well-established railway policy of this country that has been put into statutory form by this parliament. That policy was referred to in this house by me on February 6, 1948, and the Minister of Transport replied on February 11 when he quoted section 13 of the Canadian Northern Railway Act of 1911. The minister's statement is to be found at page 1112 of Hansard of February 11, 1948 and is as follows:

I refer to that act particularly, because it contains in essence what parliament intended the policy of Canada and of the railways should be:

The company must agree (1) that all freight originating on its lines, not specifically routed otherwise, shall when destined for points in Canada be carried over the railways within Canada; (2) that the through rates on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports; (3) that all such traffic not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper shall be carried to Canadian ports; and (4) that the companies shall not in any matter within their powers directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall in all respects, in good faith, use their utmost endeavours to fulfil its conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely, the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

Can it be said that the officials of the Canadian National Railways were encouraging the transportation of freight to Canadian ports, as this act provides, when they reduced the rates to Portland, a reduction that was purely voluntary on their part, one that they did not have to make?

Can it be said that the officials of the Canadian National Railways were using their utmost endeavours to develop trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ocean ports, as the act provides, when they voluntarily reduced freight rates over a line that runs to a foreign port?

It seems to me that the answers to those questions must be in the negative.

It is my contention that the evidence I have quoted clearly establishes that in their efforts to obtain this freight and carry it to Portland these officials either overlooked or neglected to live up to the well-established railway policy of this country.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the hon. member allow me to make an interruption? The hon. gentleman is asking two questions which have nothing to do with the reduction of rates. His whole statement is based upon the fact that rates were reduced, but the railways did not reduce the rates to Portland; they equalized them, which makes an entirely different argument.

Mr. Hazen: It seems to me that we are just quibbling with words when the minister says that the rates were equalized rather than reduced. I quoted Mr. Fraser's answers to the questions I asked him and he said that they were reduced. It seems to me that that is just quibbling with words. It clearly was a reduction in that they were reduced 24 per cent, 25 per cent, and in one case 30 per cent. I have quoted some of the figures.

The policy states positively that railway officials shall use their utmost endeavours to have Canadian goods carried to Canadian ocean ports, and develop trade through Canadian channels and through Canadian ocean ports.

It is my submission that, when these officials reduced the rates to Portland, or gave an advantage to Portland that it did not previously have, they were using their utmost endeavours, perhaps unintentionally but certainly without regard to the well-established railway policy of this country, as enacted by parliament, to have freight carried to a foreign port and to develop trade through a foreign port.

I did not claim, and I do not claim now, that there was any discrimination against the ports of Saint John and Halifax, as the Minister of Transport alleged, any more than I would claim that the manufacturing industries of Ontario and Quebec would be discriminated against if the government removed all tariff barriers against importations from the United States. I do claim, however, that the well-established government policy was violated as a result of the officials of the Canadian National Railways reducing these rates.

I bring this matter to the attention of the house for one reason only, because I think that the officials of the Canadian National Railways have been forgetting what our railway policy really is. I want to bring the matter to their attention again, and to the attention of the Minister of Transport, and I ask that the policy be lived up to.

I should like to point out that the amount that was earned by the Canadian National Railways by the reduction of these rates did not justify the violation of policy. I asked Mr. Fraser this question at page 83:

> Now let us suppose you did not reduce the rate to Portland; how would it have affected your business and to what extent?

Mr. Fraser answered:

> Instead of hauling it all the way to Portland we would have had to hand it over to another line at some junction point—one of the lines serving Boston and New York—the Boston and Maine—and taken less revenue than by hauling to Portland.

It appeared from page 84 of the evidence that the additional amount that the railway made by hauling to Portland was only $15,000, but Mr. Fraser said, "$15,000 is not to be sneezed at". As the operating revenues of the Canadian National Railways in 1947 amounted to $438 million, the sum of $15,000 that was earned does not justify a violation of the traditional railway policy of the dominion, a violation that has the effect of building up a United States port at the expense of maritime ports, and that has the effect of depriving Canadian maritime longshoremen and maritime port workers of employment.

There is another angle to this matter to which I wish to refer. Mr. Fraser stated that the question of the reduction of rates to Portland was never placed before the directors of the Canadian National Railways, and that the directors of the Canadian National Railways never gave their approval to this reduction in rates. Mr. Vaughan said the matter was never submitted to them. Mr. Fraser said:

> I can hardly imagine any case in which a change in rates of this character would ever go to the board of directors. It is an adjustment which would normally be made by a rate clerk.

Mr. Vaughan, the president of the board, said:

> I did not know that the reduction had been made. It was purely a routine matter. Those things do not come before the president—all of them.

I submit that it was intended that matters of this kind affecting railway policy should come before the directors of the railway. The law so provides. The Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act of 1933 provides by section 14 that the directors:

> —shall so direct, provide and procure that all freight destined for export by sea which is consigned within Canada for carriage to national railways either at point of origin or between that and the sea, shall, unless it has been by its shippers specifically routed otherwise, be exported through Canadian ports.

The clear meaning of the section is that the directors shall see to it, shall direct, provide and procure, that all export freight be exported through Canadian ports unless it has been specifically routed otherwise by the shippers. If the directors fail to have this done they are, in my opinion, guilty of neglect of duty.

There is another matter I propose to deal with if time permits. It has to do with the amending of the British North America Act, which forms a very important part of our constitution. I want to say a word or two on this subject because of the argument that was advanced in the house by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) a week or two ago. The province of New Brunswick has taken the position that, before any proposed amendment to the constitution can be implemented by legislation, the approval of the provinces that were consenting parties to the original agreement must be first obtained.

An instance of the provinces' stand is found in the correspondence that passed between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of New Brunswick in 1937, when the Prime Minister requested the consent of the province to an amendment to the British North America Act that would place unemployment insurance within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament.

The New Brunswick government, the premier said, fully appreciated the ultimate object of improving the social security of the individual. Nevertheless the proposed constitutional amendment, or any similar proposal, must necessarily be submitted in definite form. Only on this basis might a decision be reached, since the different provinces might have varying conceptions of what was proposed. The premier said that the legislative assembly alone must speak—not the government of New Brunswick but the legislative assembly of that province alone must speak.

In taking that stand the government of New Brunswick was not invoking a new principle. The stand was taken because of the fact that confederation was based on a compact or treaty that was sanctioned and given legal permanency by the British North America Act.

An examination of the history of the confederation movement during the years preceding the passing of the British North America Act, and the spirit in which that act has been interpreted from time to time in connection with the relationship and status of the federal and provincial powers, confirms this view.

The attitude of the imperial government prior to the passing of the British North America Act also supports the view taken by the province of New Brunswick that confederation was based upon the agreement and consent of the provinces concerned. The attitude of the imperial government is shown in a dispatch—

Mr. Sinnott: I must insist on the rules of house being carried out, Mr. Speaker. Those rules and regulations provide that a member may speak for forty minutes. The other evening the opposition was not good enough to let the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) complete his remarks, though he was interrupted eighty-one times, so I ask that the rules of the house be respected.

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful for the assistance of the hon. member, but I must call his attention to the fact that it is the responsibility of the Chair to see to the enforcement of the rules. The hon. member has not yet exhausted his time.

Mr. Sinnott: Time!

Mr. Hazen: I was referring to a letter or dispatch from Downing Street to the Hon. Arthur Hamilton Gordon, lieutenant governor of New Brunswick, dated March 18, 1865. In this letter cordial approval is given the proceedings of the Quebec conference. Measures based upon the plan drawn up by the delegates to the Quebec conference would be submitted to the imperial parliament if—and here is the important part—the provincial legislatures should sanction the plan. It is evident from this undertaking that the right was conceded to the provinces to conclude an agreement which would be in the nature of a treaty among themselves. In 1866 the province of Canada, that is Ontario and Quebec, sent a delegation to London to ask the imperial government to force the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia into a union based upon the Quebec resolutions. The imperial government refused to do so, saying in effect that it would not sanction a union unless the provinces first arranged a properly authorized agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Ralph Maybank (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I desire to deal shortly with two matters this afternoon, with one of them very briefly. Some references have been made already in this chamber to the possibility that Trans-Canada Air Lines may remove its headquarters staff from Winnipeg to Montreal. Just a short time ago the president of T.C.A. made a public statement to the effect that no removal would take place until October of this year; still I understand that the decision of T.C.A. is what is called in commercial life a firm decision.

I concur in the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in reference to direction or non-direction of crown companies by the government. When a corporation is set up and the crown gives it a set of officers to look after the business of that organization, I do not think the government should interfere in administrative details. It should leave those matters to the responsible officers. However, I do question whether a decision involving the movement of probably 140 families from one city to another can be classified as an administrative detail. Despite statements to the contrary, I rather fear that this may be not the end but the beginning, and that further transfers of personnel may follow.

The members of this parliament might be said to be a special body of shareholders of Trans-Canada Air Lines, appointed by a larger body of shareholders, that is, all the people of the country. We are charged with the responsibility of examining the affairs of that crown company. We have done it every year, and we will be doing it again this year. So, as I say, while I concur in the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce about non-interference in administrative matters, I believe we have here something too large to be classified as a mere administrative detail. For that reason I urge that the officers of this crown corporation be directed that no firm decision should be made on this matter at present and that, if they have made what they would call a firm decision, it should be unmade and the question should remain completely open. Trans-Canada Air Lines should be told that this matter should not be finally disposed of until the parliamentary committee of this house examines the affairs of that corporation this year, and particularly that no commitments should be made and no plans should be advanced or developed by T.C.A. in reference to such a movement until an examination of the kind I have mentioned has taken place. I think it would be a very welcome statement from Trans-Canada Air Lines at this time if they would say the matter will be held completely in abeyance until such time as their report is considered by the committee of this house.

That is the first matter about which I wish to speak. There is no other way in which I can declare my views, and for that reason I am placing them before this house and making them a matter of record.

I should like to turn now to a subject which has been dealt with in the house a great many times and which I suppose will come up from time to time as long as this session and probably as long as this parliament lasts. I refer to the question of federal-provincial relations. I am not going to deal with the question whether offers made by the central government to the provinces were sufficient or whether the supposed offer of the then premier of Ontario, now the leader of the Conservative party, computed by some algebraic process, was better than some other offer. Nor am I going to deal particularly with the question of who scuttled the conference. A voice from the rear reminds me that everyone knows that. The leader of the Conservative party, premier of Ontario at the time, unquestionably scuttled the conference. He can deny it from now until doomsday—

Mr. Fraser: That is only your thought.

Mr. Maybank: The Tory claque has commenced with that one still voice: I expect it will grow, as usual. As I say, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) can deny it from now until doomsday, but the fact of the matter is that he waited until it was quite apparent that no further raising of the federal offer could be made, and then came forward with something that could not possibly be considered by any responsible government. When a man waits until he knows there is no possibility of improvement and then offers a fantastic proposal as the price of settling, then if the meeting then breaks up there is no question about who ended the conference. But it is not with that aspect of the matter that I wish particularly to deal. As I understand the position of the Tory party at the present time, it is that they do not want the payment of subsidies at all, or at least they want them kept to the minimum.

In one very long speech, the Tory leader indicated that subsidies were the ruination of federations. He said that several times during the course of his remarks. The only instance which he gave of that having happened was towards the end of his speech when he said that, in the Grecian peninsula about two thousand five hundred years ago, there was a federation which was ruined because of too much subsidization. The Tory position has been made clear throughout the country as well as in this house. Instead of subsidies, they would rearrange the taxing powers of the various provincial governments of this country. Jurisdiction would be so distributed then that all the provinces could get through taxation the moneys that are necessary to carry out their responsibilities under the terms of confederation. I think that is a fair statement of the Tory position as it has been advertised from time to time.

Mr. Harris (Danforth): That is your statement.

Mr. Maybank: I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. Harris (Danforth): The interjection was, "That is your statement."

Mr. Maybank: Yes, of course; I was not attributing it to the hon. member who just rose. I am glad we are in agreement. He understands it is my statement as drawn from the various declarations his party has made. I think it is a fair representation of the Tory position.

I shall deal shortly with one difficulty in their position, and that is that you cannot make any changes in the constitution except with the complete agreement of all parties to confederation. From the statements they have made in the house, that necessarily follows. The hon. member who preceded me this afternoon spent some time making that point clear, that the only way changes could be accomplished by way of enlarging the field of taxation would be by all the provinces agreeing to whatever proposals might be advanced.

In other words, if it was desired to enlarge the field of taxation for the province of Manitoba, it could not be done unless every premier from one coast to the other agreed. If there were to be any enlargement of the field of taxation, the Tories' ally in the province of Quebec, Mr. Duplessis, would have to agree. This was made plain a short time ago when they said, with reference to another matter, there should be a conference with all and a satisfactory conclusion to the conference. When they say they would, in preference to subsidies, enlarge the fields of taxation for provinces, they are only offering something which they know they can prevent the provinces from attaining. Some person will always disagree with a proposal and, of course, any conference which they institute can be scuttled. If the Tories had not said so much about this compact theory of confederation, it would not have been so clear that they are offering to do something which they know they will never be called upon to do.

Setting that constitutional difficulty aside for a moment and disregarding entirely the difficulties the party puts in its own way in order to guard against the implementation of its promises, there are important substantive reasons why the Tory offer is useless to all the provinces of Canada, excepting the two central provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Those two tax-wealthy provinces might benefit by certain tax field changes, but none of the other provinces could benefit. The new province of Newfoundland, of course, could not benefit either. As a matter of fact, I think the Tories know quite well their offer is valueless; they know they are offering a stone when a loaf is asked or giving a serpent instead of a fish. I think they know it, but if they do not, it is time they wakened to that fact.

It is a fact that certain changes would help the wealthy corporations in the central part of the country, but it could not help anyone else. A widening of the bases, as I say, will accomplish nothing. The provinces will not be able to obtain any additional tax money because the base has been widened. In this respect, the prairie provinces can be taken as an example, as could any of the other provinces. The prairie provinces produce wealth. The wealth in the hands of those provinces is not taxable. Certain types of taxation, of course, could be levied on the wealth produced in the provinces, but they are objectionable forms of taxation which no responsible government would ever impose. For example, no person would ever think of imposing a tax on production such as a certain number of cents on a bushel of wheat, oats or barley, or a certain tax per pound on livestock. Such taxes on production would never be countenanced by any responsible people.

In the prairie provinces, as I have said, a reasonable measure of wealth is produced. Taking it year in and year out, man for man, they produce just about as much wealth as is produced in the tax-wealthy provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Any table showing the per capita production of wealth from 1925 to the present will illustrate this. I have before me a few figures which I have obtained. In 1925, the central provinces per capita production of wealth was $365, while in the prairie provinces for that year it was $392. For some few years the production per capita figures were in favour of the prairie provinces. During the depression years the position was reversed. The prices of primary products dropped to a very low point.

An hon. Member: That was during the Tory regime.

Mr. Maybank: Yes, it was during the Tory regime. At any rate, the fact is that the prices on primary products dropped very low, but the price of manufactured articles did not drop so rapidly. In 1932, the per capita production for the central provinces was $225, while in the prairies it was $158. I should say that I am using round figures in most instances. In some cases there will be a few cents taken off or a few cents added in order to state the figure in the most convenient form. The per capita production favoured the central provinces for a number of years. For example, it was $378 as against $261, and $473 as against $293. The first figures were for 1940 and the second for 1941. By 1942 they had come up more nearly equal to each other, $577 being the per capita wealth production figure in the central provinces and $523 being the figure for the prairie provinces. But on the whole, in normal years, in the production of wealth the two areas just about equal each other, on a per capita basis. Man for man the farmers on the prairies have produced as much wealth going into the national pool as have their brother Canadians in the central provinces. The same thing would be true, if the case were examined for British Columbia and the maritime provinces. But it is the nature of the prairie wealth production that makes such an examination, as a starting point, extremely important. It is of the kind that cannot be equitably taxed directly. It is chiefly agricultural and other primary production. This is not the case, of course, with the central provinces; there the production is largely manufacturing.

I do not mean to say that the manufacturing process as such makes it any easier to effect taxation on an article. It may or may not be the case; that is not the point I wish to make. But when you have an economy in which a large proportion of the wealth produced is by manufacturing, you get a concentration of capital, corporation life, and in general a situation in which the profits remain where the wealth production process has been effected. This is not the situation in other parts of Canada.

I do not suppose that it needs a great deal of argument to establish the fact that in the western provinces the wealth produced is chiefly in the nature of primary products; as a matter of fact, it is mainly agricultural. Any person who is interested can get from the dominion bureau of statistics figures that will make that quite clear. For instance, in 1940 the agricultural wealth per capita in the prairie provinces was 157. If you compare that with the situation in the central provinces, you will get the figure of 60; that is to say, in the central provinces there is not anything like the production of agricultural and other primary wealth that there is in those provinces on the prairies. Back in the 1920's, even, the figure was 104 in the central provinces as against 343 in the prairie provinces. Those figures are for 1928.

As to the fact that manufacturing is chiefly, in the central provinces, the great producer of wealth, perhaps no great argument is necessary either. As most people know, the central provinces produce more manufactured wealth per capita than do the prairie provinces or any other single section of Canada. In the central provinces the per capita figure is 158 as against 36; 204 as against 49; and 336 as against 72. These are figures for various years chosen at random. If you take all the years from 1925 up into the 1940's, you will get the same sort of picture. The larger figure I have mentioned in each case is for the central provinces, and the smaller one is for the prairie provinces.

I am not criticizing the fact that there is this concentration of manufacturing and this concentration of that kind of wealth production in the central provinces. Our national policies probably have had a good deal to do with creating that condition. Perhaps the concentration of good coal not far away has had a great deal to do with it, along with water transportation in between the coal and the place where it is to be used. Water transportation generally may have had something to do with it. There is no complaint about this sort of thing, because wherever work can be most efficiently done is where it ought to be done. But it is a fact that you have an entirely different kind of wealth production down here in the central part of Canada from what you have in other parts of Canada. We have a nearly equal per capita production in the various parts. But when we get to the completed process, or the final picture, the case is quite different. We have wealth centred in the hands of corporations. In this wealth are the final profits. After all expenses have been paid, whatever is left is profit. That is the place where taxation can be naturally and most easily applied, and no place else. It is in the central provinces that the opportunity to get taxes from profits exists. It does not exist in the other parts. Here we have vast sums that can be taxed, while in the prairie provinces the amounts are meagre.

In 1944, for example, the corporation income in the central provinces was $359,198,000 for Quebec and $569,567,000 for Ontario. This makes a total of $928,765,000 or close to a billion dollars. That is a vast pool of wealth. In it there are profits—sometimes larger, sometimes smaller—to be taxed. The comparable figure in the prairies is only $92,000,735, something less than one-tenth of the amount that is found in the central provinces. Out of that one-tenth, Saskatchewan had only about $8 million of that kind of wealth.

I spoke of the per capita wealth production. That was about equal year in and year out. But now when we come to this sort of taxation money—because that is what it might be called—we have the comparable figures as follows. In the central provinces, on a per capita basis, you have the figure of $129.24, but in the prairies the figure is only thirty-eight cents. There is no wealth there of this kind that can be taxed. To widen the base of taxation, or to give new rights of taxation, will avail nothing. There is just no way of changing the taxation laws in general in order to relieve those provinces from the difficulty in which they find themselves. This the Tories know quite well, and have always known it. Most of them have known it, although some may not; it is so patent that I think that all must have known it. I think those who were making the offer, when they proposed a widening of the taxation base, knew quite well they were not offering anything at all. It is a great deal like giving to a family a fine set of dishes or some sharper knives and forks or something like that, when they have no food nor any way of getting food to put on the dishes and cannot possibly get any steaks to cut with the sharp knives or to hold with the sharp forks. That is the kind of effort the Tories are making and have been making from time to time, although there is among them one Tory whose speeches might be read, in which he described the effect of such proposals. But at that time he was premier of Manitoba and of course he was seeing things quite differently. He and his ideas have been discarded for the present leader; for the ideas that he attacked at the time when he was presenting truth.

If we deal with a local bank, if we deal with an insurance company, if we deal with a mortgage company, or if we buy manufactured goods, we send our money down to the head offices of the large corporations. All of that money—coming from the maritimes, from the prairie provinces and from British Columbia—settles in the central provinces, until you get such large collections of money as I indicated a few minutes ago. These large corporation accumulations are the only big sources of wealth from the point of view of the maker of taxation law. These vast profits can be taxed in these two provinces. The outlying provinces desire to have some share of the wealth which they have created; and it is only as I have indicated, that the law could be changed in order that they might be able to get it. But it is well known that if the law were changed they could not get it. There is no way to redivide that wealth of Canada, created by all the people of Canada, except for some central body to effect certain taxation and make a redistribution of the wealth.

It might very well be said that this Conservative party proposition is just a smokescreen to hide a complete bankruptcy of policy. I myself think that is what it is; but from time to time it will be necessary to blow that smokescreen away. From time to time it will be necessary to make it clear that in spite of the veto policy which they have adopted, the veto policy under which any premier can prevent progress, can padlock progress, the smoke behind which they are hiding will have to be blown away from negligible and useless offers which they put forward.

From time to time there will be some other matters in relation to this on which I should like to speak—I can think of a couple now, but I fancy that my time is running out, and I would not be able to conclude them before my time was up. I do not want any favours; therefore I shall stop at this point.

Mr. Anthony Hlynka (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion I should like to discuss the present position of agriculture and its outlook for the future. At the outset I may say that in this country there are still some people who hold the view that Canada's agricultural industry has made a killing during the war period, and that on the average it has received fair treatment over the years. This group also holds the opinion that representatives of agricultural constituencies are unjust in their criticisms of past and present federal agricultural policies. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I consider it necessary to place authoritative figures on the record showing exactly how the agricultural industry has fared as compared with other industries.

In past years, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) and I placed figures on the record showing the inadequate share of the national income which the farmers receive. I now have almost up-to-date figures covering a period of twenty-two years, namely, from 1926 to the end of 1947 inclusive, showing the net income of agriculture in relation to the total national income. These figures were prepared by Dr. E. C. Hope, economist of the Canadian federation of agriculture. His source of information was the Bank of Canada statistical summary for October 1948.

I may point out that Dr. Hope's percentage table of the agricultural actual net income and the necessary percentage for parity appeared on page 6 of the Canadian federation of agriculture's brief presented in December, 1948, to the royal commission on prices. At this point I should also explain that Dr. Hope accepts the 1926-29 average farm income as parity. There are of course other economists who maintain that parity prices should be much higher. At any rate, Dr. Hope's figures give an interesting picture of Canada's agricultural position from 1926 to the end of 1947. I should explain also that the column giving the gradual decrease of farm population is based on the rate of the decrease of farm population given in the 1931 and 1941 census figures. I would appreciate it, Mr. Speaker, if the house would give its consent to have this table printed in the form in which it has been prepared.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hlynka: I am sure that hon. members will find these figures instructive. Mr. Speaker, have I permission to have these figures printed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hlynka: The figures are as follows:

Net income of agriculture in relation to total national income 1926-1947

Year	Farm population percentage of Canada's total population	Agriculture's share of national income percentage
		Actually received	Necessary for parity income
1926	32·9	16·9	14·1
1927	32·6	14·9	14·0
1928	32·2	14·6	13·8
1929	31·9	9·4	13·7
1930	31·5	8·6	13·5
1931	31·0	4·5	13·3
1932	30·5	4·2	13·1
1933	30·1	4·1	12·9
1934	29·6	6·7	12·7
1935	29·1	7·6	12·5
1936	28·9	7·9	12·4
1937	28·4	8·1	12·2
1938	28·0	9·3	12·0
1939	27·7	10·7	11·9
1940	27·3	9·7	11·7
1941	26·8	8·3	11·5
1942	26·6	13·0	11·4
1943	26·1	10·7	11·2
1944	25·6	12·5	11·0
1945	25·4	10·0	10·9
1946	24·9	11·6	10·7
1947	24·5	11·2	10·5
Average		9·7	12·3
1926-1929 average		13·9	13·9

On examination of these figures which I have just presented, it will be found that the Canadian farmers received parity prices only in seven out of twenty-two years, while in the other fifteen years the farmers operated at a loss. The only years in which the farmers received parity prices were 1926, 1927 and 1928; then 1942, 1944, 1946 and 1947. It will be noted that in every year over the stretch of fourteen years, that is from 1928 to 1942, the farmers operated at a loss.

In view of these figures I would suggest, to those who think that the farmers are complaining without reason, that they study this table carefully. Of course it may be said that we should forget the past. It may also be said perhaps that the farmers have done fairly well during the last few years. However, it should not be forgotten that during the war years it was the war conditions which were responsible for the rise in agricultural prices; and since the end of the war the economic boom was brought about by UNRRA, IRO and ERP funds. This boom was also brought about by Canada's own loans, gifts and credits to commonwealth and European nations during the years from 1940 to 1947. This information was disclosed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and it appeared in the Edmonton Journal of January 5, 1948. The Canadian Press report reads:

Canada gives $5,500,000,000 to aid Europe and Empire.

Ottawa (CP): In the last seven years, Canada has contributed more than $5,500,000,000 to European countries and members of the British commonwealth in outright gifts, various forms of relief and credits and loans.

And again:

This is the first time that these details have been officially released in such complete form and they come at a time when the United States congress is deciding on the European recovery program (Marshall plan) under which Canada may be asked to make further contributions.

The figures given to the Commons Wednesday showed the outright gifts were $1,000,000,000 to the United Kingdom, $19,332,078 in wheat to Greece and $2,211,070,000 to nine countries under the mutual aid section of the War Appropriations acts.

The break-down for the nine mutual aid countries was $91,119,000 to Australia; $5,518,000 to the British West Indies; $26,597,000 to China; $23,629,000 to France; $12,000 to Greece; $18,826,000 to India; $15,278,000 to New Zealand; $159,113,000 to Russia; and $1,870,978,000 to the United Kingdom.

It will be seen from the foregoing that it was Canada that financed or paid for much of our agricultural export. Incidentally the present government learned that it was possible to finance or pay for $5,500 million of export trade. The government should also have learned that it is possible to find ways and means by which Canada's home consumption can be assisted. In the 1930's Canada's governments did not know how Canada's own citizens could be provided with the barest necessities of life. What hypocrisy! I think at this point I should quote from an editorial which appeared in the January, 1949, issue of the Farm and Ranch Review, which deals with this problem as follows:

First and foremost is the question that must arise in the minds of our producers, can the Canadian government afford to allow a currency shortage to become an insurmountable obstacle to the flow of Canadian food to Britain? Have the best minds in the Canadian government and the British government learned nothing in the last eighteen years? Are we again heading into a period of starvation in a world of plenty?

And again:

Is this the direction in which we are heading today? During the war we devised methods of getting around currency shortages. If we had not we would not have won the war. Surely some method can be found in time of peace.

It is now apparent that ERP funds and the various loans and credits are about exhausted. This is how the U.S. News and World Report of January 7, 1949 describes the position in which Canada finds herself at the present time:

Canada is worried about cutbacks in food purchases by the British.

During the war and after, Canada pushed production of things Britain needed.

Then Britain cut down her buying of Canadian salmon, poultry, apples, beef, timber and newsprint. Now Britain is to take less bacon and eggs. Cheese purchases will be far below the wartime peak. Canadian wheat will be bought this coming season, but Britain apparently isn't willing to pay world prices.

Canadian producers are beginning to wonder where they can sell their big surpluses as Britain turns to Europe, Australia, New Zealand for these products.

Need for foods such as Canada produces still is great around the world. But most buyers shy away from Canada as a "hard" currency country.

As a result, Canada may have to invade the United States market in a big way. This will be hard to do, since the United States also is heading into food surpluses.

In view of the situation in which we find ourselves, Canadians want to know something of the government's intentions for the future. I think this house should have statements on this matter from the ministers concerned. We should have a statement from the right hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) telling the house what guidance and advice he is prepared to give the agricultural industry at this time. He should state whether the dominion government will guarantee parity prices to the farmer. Will he provide prices-support legislation for agricultural products? Will he advise the farmers to store agricultural products or will he advise them to cut down production? In brief: What is the policy of his department for the immediate future and for the next few years?

Then we should have a more complete statement from the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) than the one he gave the house on March 1. For instance, what will be the future policy of his department as far as agricultural trade is concerned? What effort is being made in the promotion of the marketing of agricultural products? What are the marketing possibilities of the future? Does the Department of Trade and Commerce contemplate introducing marketing quotas for agricultural products within the next few years? Briefly again: What is the government's future marketing policy so far as agricultural products are concerned?

Coming now to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), what is the attitude of his department with regard to these problems? What part is the Department of Finance prepared to play in the matter of assisting the Canadian agricultural industry, so far as long-term agricultural credits are concerned and also with respect to assisting our domestic consumption and export trade? Will financial considerations be allowed to impede Canadian domestic consumption and the exchange of goods with other countries?

These are questions on which the Canadian farmers should have full information. I may say that the time for action is now, not after the prices of farm products have fallen to rock-bottom. I believe that this whole matter is important enough to warrant statements from the three ministers concerned.

Before turning to another phase of the subject I should like to make one reference to the speech of March 1 of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his reference to the marketing of wheat the minister said, as recorded on page 1013 of Hansard:

> In this house we have heard a good deal about wheat but I think we are going to hear less about it in the future, because any mention of wheat is going to remind the farmer that his return for 1949 and for 1950 will be higher than the returns to any farmer in any other corner of the world.

Further down he goes on to say:

> It may be well to look at the final results before counting our losses.

Perhaps the minister may be right when he speaks of 280 million bushels of wheat which is to be marketed in 1949 and 1950, but I think that along with his statement the statement of Paul G. Hoffman, United States foreign aid chief, made on February 3, should also be placed on the record. It appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of February 3, 1949. The article is headed:

> United Kingdom "Wheat Buys" in Canada Saved $50,000,000—United States.

This is a British United Press dispatch from Washington.

> Foreign aid chief Paul G. Hoffman said today that United States financed British wheat purchases in Canada have saved United States taxpayers at least $50,000,000. He made the statement in a letter to Senator Milton R. Young, Republican, N.D. Young had protested to Hoffman over British purchase of $55,000,000 worth of Canadian wheat with United States foreign aid funds. Hoffman said a British-Canadian agreement enabled Britain to buy wheat in Canada at prices from 43 cents to $1.20 a bushel below prices in this country. Consequently, he said, British wheat purchases with United States funds cost at least $50,000,000 less than if they had been made here.

I do not believe I need to make any further comment on this matter except to say that personally I have no particular criticism of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreements. But, in fairness to all, any sacrifice which was made as a result of the agreements should have been borne by the entire nation and not by the wheat growers alone.

I wish to turn now to another subject for a few moments. I want to deal with the government's taxation policy as it is applied to farmers in western Canada. May I say at the outset that the government's handling of farm income taxation is the worst bungle imaginable. Not only does the taxation department lack any clear-cut, well defined income taxation policy, but the handling of assessments is so muddled and confused that something must be done about it without delay.

In the first place, in order not to lose votes in 1940, the government did not tell the farmers that they were expected to file income tax returns from 1941 on. Nor were the farmers told that they should have kept account books showing their expenses and their income. At that time the majority of farmers were in debt, and not even a thought entered their minds that the government might some day send out assessors and ask for a detailed accounting.

Five years passed, and yet the government did not say a word. The election of 1945 took place, and there was still not a word by the government about the filing of income tax returns. Immediately after the 1945 election, however, the government sent out a crew of assessors to check on the farmers. As if from the blue sky, farmers were told that they should have kept account books, and that they should have filed income tax returns. In view of the fact that the farmers did not keep any record of their incomes and their expenses, the government proceeded to assess the farmers on what is called the "net worth" system. Under this system the farmer is forced to accept the arbitrary assessment of the assessor. Further, the farmer is considered guilty of failing to file his returns, and he pays a penalty for each year plus interest up to the date on which the penalty is paid. In addition to that, if the assessor decides that the farmer should have paid, let us say, $100 as income tax for 1941, the farmer must also pay interest on that amount from 1941 until the date when the indebtedness is paid in full. The farmer pays similar penalties and interest for every year for which he is found to owe money.

The farmer can argue and protest, but the assessor's estimate of the cost of farm produce consumed by the farmer is also arbitrarily fixed. Then, too, if the farmer could not sell his 1942 wheat crop, let us say, because of quotas at that time, and he sold it in 1944, he is taxed on both crops in 1944 unless he can prove that he did not voluntarily carry over his 1942 crop, but sold it at the first opportunity. These are only a few of the injustices imposed upon the farmers of the prairie provinces. In northern Alberta the farmers are simply terrorized by the taxing authorities.

I should now like to put on the record a sample of what the taxing authorities of this government are doing in Alberta. Here it is:

Department of National Revenue
Taxation Division

Tower Building, Edmonton,
December 1, 1948.

Dear Sir:

Your letter dated November 27, 1948, is acknowledged. You will recall that on the 18th of March, 1948, you called in person at our office regarding your income tax returns which were filed at this office. At that time explanations were submitted by you to the effect that as the net income earned from your position as agent for the Imperial Oil Limited was not sufficient for your personal living expenses, it was necessary for you to supplement this income with income earned from card playing. As this form of income is considered taxable $1,500 was added to other income for the years 1945 and 1946. If there is any further information required please do not hesitate to get in touch with us and we shall endeavour to explain everything to your satisfaction.

Yours faithfully,
H. E. Boulay,
for Director of Income Tax.

May I point out that this young man—I did not put his name on the record for obvious reasons—served in the army during the recent war. What is more, he gave me his word that he never plays cards. The young man explained that the income tax official in this case got away from the serious subject and asked what the people did out in the country for pastime during evenings. The young man replied that there were many things they could do. The income tax official suggested cards. The young man agreed that some people did entertain themselves by playing cards. The conversation ended there, but in a few days the young man received the letter I just read. This sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, is scandalous and outrageous.

[Mr. Hlynka.]

To complete the case I want to say that, following receipt of the letter which I quoted, the young man called at the income tax office again and explained that a mistake must have been made in regard to his assessment, as he never played cards. He was told then that if he was not satisfied he could appeal to Ottawa. Two or three weeks later he received this short letter:

Department of National Revenue
Taxation Division

Tower Building,
Edmonton, February 18, 1949

Final Notice
Re: 1945-46 income tax arrears, $631.26

Dear Sir:

As payment has not been received on the above mentioned tax, it is the intention of the department to institute legal proceedings unless the amount is paid within ten days of receipt of this letter.

This may be through the exchequer court or by way of garnishee to your employer.

Yours faithfully,
H. A. MacDonald,
For Director of Income Tax.

And the letter was registered. I need only add, Mr. Speaker, that under the law the padding of accounts by any person is a criminal offence. I say, the same law should apply to the padding of assessment accounts by income tax officials.

Mr. J. O. Probe (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne has been going on now for a considerable time. In preparing my contribution to the debate I looked at the interval between the debate of a year ago and the present time. Hon. members will be aware that there have been ten by-elections since the time last year when the Liberal administration outlined to us its program for the coming year. In those ten by-elections the Liberal party has suffered a net loss of four seats, two going to the C.C.F. and two to the Conservatives. The Conservatives have made a net gain of one seat, made up of two gains from the Liberal party and one loss to the C.C.F. The C.C.F. party, to which I belong, has shown a net gain of three seats, composed of two gains from the Liberals and one from the Conservatives.

In reviewing the results of these appeals to the electorate I am sure any objective observer must come to the conclusion that there has been a definite indication on the part of the people of Canada that they are not in accord with the policies of the present administration; and the distribution of the by-election gains made by the opposition parties from the government in that period indicates, I would say, that in the selection of an alternative to the present administration the C.C.F. party stands as a three to one favourite over the party to my right, the Progressive Conservatives.

Of course there has been a great fanfare in the press and over the radio accompanying the initiation of the new leader of the Progressive Conservatives into this house. But I should like to tell him, as I want to tell the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), that I come from what may be called the grass roots of this country and that I take occasion to find out what the ordinary men and women are thinking about political matters. So I may tell these two distinguished gentlemen that the harping we have heard in this house on provincial rights and the bringing up of stories about the Hong Kong disaster and the responsibility in connection with it show that neither of them knows what is uppermost in the minds of the people of Canada. I can tell them that uppermost in the minds of the people are such simple matters as bread, butter, shelter and security. As they did when I came here in 1945, the people of my riding want me to repeat to the house and to the leaders of these noise-making parties that the government had better have another look both into the public conscience and into the public purse before they say no, for example, to low-rental housing subsidies for our low-income groups. In my city we still have approximately one thousand veterans and their families looking to the government for some form of decent shelter.

My riding depends for its well-being on a healthy agriculture; and our citizens are disturbed because our foreign trade, especially in agricultural products, seems to be slipping away. In that regard we resent the apparent domination of our foreign trade policy by big business from other countries. We find a glut in flax, where a year ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) recommended that our farmers grow more flax. Apparently there is a glut in apples and in lumber. We seem again to be overproducing.

Then in my riding we regret the niggardly appropriation for national health. We are worried about its unequal application up to this date, and we hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) will implement the promise he made to us last summer when the bill was under discussion, that because one province had gone ahead with an enlarged hospital construction and health program it would not be handicapped in obtaining its share of such funds as were to be distributed by the dominion treasury. I am just a little alarmed at the present figures of hospital construction authorized for the purpose of receiving federal grants. As of February 28 last those figures were as follows:

	Hospital Beds Authorized
Saskatchewan	15
Alberta	113
Manitoba	165
Nova Scotia	184
Prince Edward Island	249
British Columbia	532
Ontario	899
Quebec	4,250

I would be the first to admit that undoubtedly there is a backlog of authorizations still to come forward; but in my own city of Regina we have been attempting to construct additions to two hospitals, the Grey Nuns and the general hospital. Construction of the addition to the general hospital is held up at the present time because we have run out of funds; and unless the Minister of National Health and Welfare changes the basis on which grants are to be made we may find difficulty in completing that project.

Mr. Martin: Was your hospital built after April 1?

Mr. Probe: No, it was built before.

Mr. MacInnis: It was built on the basis of your proposal of 1945.

Mr. Martin: Oh, no; that had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Probe: At any rate, we have not the means to effect the completion of our program for the Regina hospital. I have discussed it with the minister. I hope there is some way in which we may be able to do so through the grants which are now being made available.

Regina has not been so adversely affected by the present unemployment that has been mentioned by many speakers in this debate. However, I should like to have a better assurance from the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) with respect to the size of the commitments for public works than he gave the leader of my party about a week ago. At that time the minister said that, after one year of the implementation of these public works, five thousand men might be taken off the unemployment relief rolls of the country. The trans-Canada highway alone should employ ten times that number of workers. Our prairie irrigation projects should require a larger number of workers than that.

According to the figures supplied me by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in answer to a question a few days ago, after all the years the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act has been in operation, there are less than two hundred square miles of agricultural land under irrigation in my province. In Saskatchewan there are large sections which have been subjected to drought for four consecutive years. During the Rosthern by-election of last year, the Minister of Agriculture promised us a general irrigation project; that was before the by-election. Owing to the shortage of water in my city, we are interested in the construction of irrigation reservoirs and would like to see the Minister of Agriculture proceed with the implementation of the projects promised during the Rosthern by-election.

Recently the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) announced there was an Atlantic seaway project which could be completed in five years and to which the government of Canada proposed to give assistance. We are in favour of that, but we feel that the other sections of the country should not be overlooked. The superannuated civil servants in my city have pleaded with me to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) for a modification of the rigid system of granting pensions, so that a cost of living bonus may be included. To those who are derisive of governments that are progressive with respect to social legislation, I should like to remind them that in two places superannuated civil servants have received a cost of living bonus, one being the province of Saskatchewan and the other Great Britain.

Whatever the government might be willing to do by way of solution of these problems, I think everyone in this house recognizes the grave national problems facing the country in the form of better housing, job security, a complete health program and adequate provision for years of retirement. There is one problem, however, about which I wish to speak, which grows more serious as time passes. Many Canadians have failed to note the existence of this problem, which is, how best to use our ever-increasing leisure.

Vague dissatisfaction was voiced last year when Canadians failed once again to place well up in the Olympic games. We grumbled when Canada's international hockey entry performed so poorly recently in the one team game, hockey, wherein we felt Canadians excelled. Our inherent leadership in this game was conceded for many years. The Edmonton Grads dominated women's basketball in world competition for years; but suddenly, with the retirement of coach Percy Page, Canada dropped out of the top ranks of basketball. For as long as I remember, Canadian tennis players have consistently lost to minor stars from other competing countries.

A woefully small number of individual Canadian stars, by their own courage and at their own expense or with the aid of a few friends, have twinkled briefly in the international sports firmament. Names such as Barbara Ann Scott, Ethel Catherwood, Jack Guest, Joe Wright and Percy Williams rise to view too seldom to be explained away by the excuse of a sparse population. Olympic successes by other small nations will bear out my thesis that Canada's small population is not the major reason for our sports entrants faring so badly in competition with those from other countries. I do not argue that a long string of firsts in international games is necessarily a desirable thing. I feel that the constant lack of these firsts indicates that we have a big problem which we should tackle on the national as well as on the local scale.

I am sure it was a shock to Canadians to find that there was so high a percentage of military rejections on medical grounds among our volunteers for the armed services during the war recently ended. Even among those who were accepted as fit, thousands of service personnel broke down physically or mentally early in the training grind, and long before they were exposed to the shock of actual battle. I clearly remember an exercise at Aldershot, England, in the spring of 1943, in which my regiment made a practice march in full kit over a distance slightly less than thirteen miles. Our colonel set a pace which gave us the divisional record for the distance, two hours and twenty minutes. More than seventy men, however, practically all youngsters, failed to finish the route and were picked up by regimental ambulances where they dropped. This happened after two years of military training.

In addition to the instances of physical softness which I have noted, I could refer to the increasing numbers of mental and emotional cases being treated by hospitals, psychiatrists and social workers in all parts of Canada. There seems to be a growing breakdown of the mental equipment of so many of our people. I do not wish to minimize the extent to which the physical or mental weaknesses of Canadians is attributable to poor housing conditions, to inadequate diet, to worry about jobs or debts, or to the periodic economic depressions of the past. It requires a new Canadian social order to remedy all these causes.

There are other causes as well which are common to all economic groups of Canadian society, the rich as well as the poor. We can build a proper antidote against these if we are willing to get on with the job. In the past four or five decades a great change in the living habits of most of our people has come about. We have all become part of an increasingly complex system. Our environment has changed from a simple, predominantly rural one, where the greatest initiative and self-reliance were necessary for survival, to a specialized and highly mechanized one. This perfected us in one small respect, perhaps, but it made us more dependent on other specialists in every other respect. Perfection of techniques, so far as bread and butter occupations are concerned, has changed us all from physical and mental individuals into varying forms of living robots.

Our highly organized society has shortened our working hours. It has increased our hours of leisure. But it has not made provision for us to retain or to acquire the skills needed for the proper use of that leisure which our ingenuity has provided. As a result, our native creative instincts are being permitted to shrivel and die.

Very early in life we cease active participation in recreational pursuits; we become passive spectators. It is simpler to pay admission to watch our favourite team or actor from the grandstand than it is to become one of the players. Sports writers comment on the increasing number of serious accidents to trained athletes, and old-timers deplore the lack of stamina and endurance of even professional performers. The inherent sturdy tone of mind and body, which was the normal adjunct of pioneer living habits, is disappearing, and we have failed to appraise the changed situation wisely enough to counteract its evil effects.

What should be done about it? Progress will not reverse its steps to make us pioneers again. If we have lost much of the hardiness of a less advanced social state, we must surely seek some substitute for the necessary qualities we have lost. Many individuals, some communities, and a few nations are working out their solutions. As for coming to grips with a serious problem which is having serious national consequences, Canada is still largely nibbling away at a solution, whereas I urge it to take a man-sized bite.

The government will likely say that parliament did in 1943 pass the National Physical Fitness Act, which set up a national council to promote the physical fitness of the people of Canada. By this act, this council might (a) assist in the extension of physical education in all educational and other establishments; (b) encourage, develop and correlate all activities relating to physical development of the people through sports, athletics and similar pursuits; (c) train teachers, lecturers and instructors in the principles of physical education and of physical fitness; (d) organize activities designed to promote physical fitness and to provide facilities therefor; and (e) co-operate with organizations engaged in the development of physical fitness in the amelioration of physical defects through physical exercise.

The actual carrying out of recreational projects was properly to be the responsibility of the provinces and communities, and all possible latitude to do this was permitted them by the act. To implement this laudable program which I have outlined, $255,000 maximum grant from federal funds was provided for, of which $225,000 was allocated to the provinces on a per capita basis, and the balance was to be for central administration. For all its idealism, this program works out to a per capita grant of two cents, and two of the provinces of Canada—Ontario and Quebec—have not seen fit to avail themselves of even this stingy entitlement. Small as the amount is that was appropriated for this great work, the public accounts show that never since the act was proclaimed has any full year's appropriation been spent.

Considering the financial resources at the command of the fitness council, it is doing a grand job. The administrative staff, under the direction of Dr. Doris Plewes, give a visitor to their office the view of a big task to do. They make one feel that they are prepared to do that job, and that there is no handicap that more ample funds could not overcome. But they will never do what they have the foresight to see as necessary until this parliament sees its job of providing the financial means.

Two cents per capita for physical fitness and over $40 per capita for liquor—according to a return made a few days ago to a question asked by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson)—is to me a discomforting contrast. We call ourselves Christians; we pay lip service to Him who "increased in wisdom and in stature and in favour with God and man." We read about youthful gangs terrorizing "Toronto the good"; we decry divorce in the provinces of Canada; we smugly denounce communism, even while we put up signs "keep off the grass"; we put a lock on playground gates on Sundays and holidays, and crowd our people into tenements in the richest country in the world.

There are many community-minded individuals and groups, with the soul and the vision of what a creative being man could be, who give their time to hobby-minded youth, to drama groups, to community sports, with no thought of material reward. But they need encouragement, training and technical direction the better to do their voluntary labour for their fellow man. The trend from farm to city is, so far as youth goes, only a response to a lonely and desolate social and recreational void.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) has, in the fitness act, the skeleton at hand on which he can build to reality a wholesome and healthy Canada. Treatment of the sick is necessary, and his $30 million a year for a national health program will never do the job.

Mr. Martin: It is a fairly good start.

Mr. Probe: But while he is making some provision for the salvage of those who have already broken down, even greater provision should be made to prevent others from requiring, unnecessarily, hospitalization and medical attention. Olympic honours and acclaim in hobbies and the arts are outward symbols only of health and vigour and will follow a creative program where each portion of the nation accepts its own role to secure them.

I suggest to the minister that he find money to provide, at national expense, free courses in a wide variety of hobbies, arts and skills of a recreational nature, to nominees selected by the provinces from such citizens as are willing to make recreation and health their profession. Make these courses available to all provinces that pledge themselves that the graduates of the federally sponsored courses will set up courses in turn in each of the participating provinces for volunteers at the community level, such volunteers to be either career people or local hobbyists who are willing to spend spare time helping to give creative pleasure to their fellows. Capital expenditures for community halls and playground facilities, made by the municipality, or interested groups within it, could be encouraged by token money grants from federal funds. We should encourage construction of community recreation centres in every village and lonely municipality in Canada. Grants for this purpose are certainly as justifiable as grants to flying clubs or exhibition boards—however desirable these may be.

At the federal level, provide instructor coaches of team games and training facilities for Canadian entrants to international field and track events. Then, too, let us use national parks and playgrounds for more than to sell postcards to gullible tourists. Let us make it possible for our poorest family to relax there. It is their playground. By arrangement of the national council on physical fitness the minister convened a meeting of leading sports groups of Canada in the railway committee room here last January 7 and 8. The purpose of the meeting was to provide an opportunity for the sports-governing bodies, among other things, to promote a greater participation in sports, thus increasing the fitness and pleasure of our people. One important outcome of that meeting was a resolution requesting the government of Canada, during the next three fiscal years, to appropriate and make available the sum of $10 million for the provision of sports facilities in Canada. The government of Canada has never been asked to make a more constructive investment in the well-being of its people, young and old.

A health program has both its curative and its preventive aspects. To a nation able to waste nearly a billion dollars yearly on liquor and tobacco, which expense is itself a symptom of misuse of leisure time, surely one per cent or two per cent of that sum, invested in a wise expansion of a physical fitness program for Canada, will pay to us all the most satisfying future dividends. If the minister has the courage and vision to recommend it to his colleagues and to see that a generous program is carried out, he will have justified his assumption of the most important portfolio in the Canadian cabinet; and he will have earned the gratitude of children and parents from one end of the country to the other.

If it is to be a choice between playgrounds and strait-jackets, let us vote for playgrounds.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

Mr. Douglas G. Ross (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I understand that in taking part in this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I am the 116th speaker. I do not apologize for taking part in the debate because I think I have something important to say. First of all, I should like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) upon the splendid way in which they did their jobs. They had difficult jobs to do because they had so little material to do them with.

May I congratulate also the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. St. Laurent) upon the high honour he has attained even though it may be for but a short time. I should like also to congratulate the newcomers to the house. May I congratulate our party upon selecting such a magnificent Canadian as leader of the party and now leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). I know he will prove a worthy successor to men like Sir John A. Macdonald, Cartier, Tupper, Sir Robert Borden, Viscount Bennett and many others.

It is quite natural that I could not debate all the things referred to in the speech from the throne, but before I turn to the matter about which I want to speak particularly

I should like to deal with one or two other matters. The question of pensions for the blind has been well taken care of. I should like to say a word to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) about having the tax removed from such things as hearing aids, spectacles and aids for the disabled. Expenditures made by individuals for these aids should be allowable as deductions for income tax purposes.

I would refer to the iniquitous tax on the pop that the children love to buy and also the extraordinary tax of 25 per cent on things such as this $2.50 watch I have here and on which I paid a tax of 70 cents. That is an absolutely absurd thing to have to do. I cannot condemn the government too strongly for having overtaxed the people of Canada by some $600 million, I suppose in order to be able to show a large surplus in an election year.

I should like to make mention of the health league of Canada, which I think has done a magnificent job. They should be given a grant in recognition of the national work they have done. There is no doubt about the good work they have done in the past in connection with the pasteurization of milk, and educational efforts in the field of toxoids for the immunization of children from the terrible ravages of diphtheria. They have some funds, but I think the success of a voluntary organization such as this has great effects upon governments, and I should like to see this organization recognized.

The matter about which I wish to speak is radio broadcasting. Radio broadcasting in Canada, or in fact in any country, is of greater importance to the people than they realize. The impact of radio influences our way of thinking, our way of living, our morals, the language we speak, what we eat and drink, what we wear and how we play. I suppose the average individual listens to radio broadcasts for four or five hours a day.

The control of radio broadcasting in Canada, therefore, is of paramount importance to the people. Under our system of monopolistic control the opportunity for arbitrary decisions is fraught with great danger if this control should ever be in the hands of an unscrupulous government. It points at the very heart of our way of life, at our freedom of speech and of thought, at our personal freedom. I could point out examples in the past and in the present known to everyone —nazi Germany and fascist Italy. Today we have the example before our eyes of the soviet union and its satellites behind the iron curtain. Hitler could never have attained to the absolute power he did, and neither could Stalin keep in subjugation the people of Russia, without complete control of the radio.

The C.B.C. have complete control of radio broadcasting. They have control over what shall be broadcast and how it shall be broadcast. To go one step farther, that control could be extended, as was done in nazi Germany, to the control over individual radio receivers. There would then be control over what the people could listen to. It may be said that it could not happen here, but it did happen in other countries.

Make no mistake about it, we have bureaucrats in Canada today and I do not suppose there is any greater example than the C.B.C. It is a perfect picture of centralized power. Of course this is right down the alley of my socialist friends to my left. They like it; they have been fighting to retain it. If they ever happen to get into power, which God forbid, aided and abetted by their communist friends, almost anything could happen.

Let us consider for a moment the use of radio in Canada. It is true that free time is allotted to the members of the various parties in the House of Commons, and when a minister of the crown requires to use the radio for some public announcement when parliament is not sitting he gets it. Most of these announcements in the past have been to the advantage of the government, but I do recall one that was not. The fact is that ministers have that right while ordinary members have not. Again, it is such a simple matter for news items to be coloured when broadcast over the radio.

The socialists talk glibly about the dangers of exploitation by capitalist monopolies. It is good propaganda, but it is just so much bunk. There is never a word about the existing radio broadcasting monopoly. Never a word has come from their lips about the loss of coverage, the loss of the usefulness of channels, suffered by the Canadian people through the arbitrary refusal of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to grant power output up to the limit of the maximum allowable on the channels allotted to Canada under the Havana agreement. Those of them who were on the committee, and who heard the evidence, know of this irreparable loss to the Canadian people. The Liberal members are just as much to blame. Of course, they were mostly liberals with a small "l", but no one who heard or who has read the evidence given by such a distinguished scientist as Professor Bayley could help but be alarmed at what he said. My only conclusion must be that the political aspect of the whole question of radio in Canada took priority in the minds of the majority of those who were on the committee. Professor Bayley had no axe to grind. He simply stated the facts as they were. I will say more about that a little later.

In the speech from the throne I find these words:

> It is the view of my ministers that there should be an examination of the activities of agencies of the federal government relating to radio, films, television, the encouragement of arts and sciences, research, the preservation of our national records, a national library, museums, exhibitions, relations in these fields with international organizations, and activities generally which are designed to enrich our national life and to increase our own consciousness of our national heritage and knowledge of Canada abroad. For this purpose, the government intends at an early date to establish a royal commission.

The gambit of subjects set out for review is so vast and all-embracing that to any thinking person it will have to be a permanent royal commission. The passage I have quoted reads like the curriculum of a university. It says that there should be an examination of the activities of the agencies of the federal government relating to all these matters, and for this purpose the government proposes to set up a royal commission. These objectives are greatly to be desired, and we all want them, but they are the job of the government. They all come under the jurisdiction of one minister or another, supposedly responsible to the House of Commons and to the people of Canada. What have these ministers been doing in the meantime about these matters during the fourteen years that the government have been in power? If a royal commission is necessary now, this proposal is a castigation of the ability and diligence of those who now hold office. If that is the case, and a royal commission is necessary, then it is about time that they get out of office and allow others to take their place who know how to do the job better.

To my mind this proposal is iniquitous. When one thinks of the army of employees in each minister's department, employed there for just such purposes, in the national research council, and many other departments, the proposal now of a royal commission, with the accompanying expenditure of money that will be required, shows a dereliction of duty which should not and will not be condoned by the people of Canada. I suggest that this proposal really means nothing. It is just so much window-dressing, eyewash and election bait to cover up the delinquencies of the government. It is also put in the speech from the throne to cover up the lack of intestinal fortitude, shall we say, that the government shows in its repeated refusal to tackle the question of radio broadcasting in its various branches. If ever any question needed prompt attention, that of the control of radio broadcasting in Canada does. It is necessary now; not a year from now, but as quickly as possible.

Year after year we have had a radio committee of the House of Commons. It has been composed of an overwhelming number of Liberals, with a small "l', aided and abetted by their socialist friends to the left, as so often happens. The reports of the committee have not been unanimous, and seldom if ever has concurrence in them been moved. The reports have not been in the best interests of Canada, and have not been founded on the best independent evidence and scientific advice. Evidence has been given by the Canadian association of broadcasters year after year. It is said that they had an axe to grind. Of course they had an axe to grind, but they also showed very plainly where the best interests of the Canadian public lay, and how the Canadian public could receive better coverage and programming if they were not stultified by the regulations and autocratic power of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Time will not permit me to read the evidence which was presented before the committee by the association, but for those who wish to inform themselves the evidence is there year after year. British justice has been mentioned before in this house. Is there any British justice or Canadian justice in the setting up of radio control in Canada? I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson). The C.B.C. is an operator; it is the controller. It is they who recommend licences and regulate power. They are the policemen. They prosecute, and they are the judge and jury. Their decisions are final; there is no appeal. Their decisions cannot but be biased, since they are influenced by what is in the best interests of the C.B.C. and its broadcasting activities. They are certainly not always in the best interests of the people of Canada. As a consequence, as I said before, many of these things are not in the best interests of Canadians.

There is the question of coverage. As I pointed out earlier, I can say without fear of contradiction that many radio channels or frequencies which were allotted to Canada, and of which the Canadian people should have had the advantage, have lost a great deal of their usefulness. Their coverage has been greatly reduced and limited, far more so than the Canadian people think at the present time. From time to time over the years applications for the installation of broadcasting stations, and for the use of wave lengths, have been made. To say the least, there has been no promptness in setting aside frequencies, with the consequence that, when finally some of these applications were granted, there was a very serious increased cost in the installation, and loss of coverage due to priority of occupation by United States stations.

Applications for increased power on the stations already existing, in order to more fully fulfil their obligations to the public, were refused. As a consequence, when the increased power was granted, the full use of the power could not be taken advantage of because of protection which had to be given to stations in the United States which had a priority of occupation, and which had increased their power and extended their coverage to such an extent that the protection which had to be given to these stations was such as to greatly limit the coverage which might have been given, besides increasing the cost of installation.

Though the C.B.C. was supposed to be an independent corporation, to a great extent it has been so in name only. In respect of power and the allocation of channels it has been compelled to function in accordance with government policy, keeping at ridiculously low levels the power permitted to stations in competition commercially with the C.B.C. Government policy originally was to allot 1,000 watts as a maximum to any private station, but the corporation got alarmed at the mounting evidence of loss of coverage, and decided to increase that power. So in many cases they increased the limit to 5,000 watts.

There is no question but that government policy in connection with broadcasting in Canada has been one of continuous muddle, and certainly not in the interests of the Canadian public. The officers of the C.B.C. have admitted some of these allegations. During the session of 1943 the radio committee was warned by Professor Bayley, professor of electrical engineering at the university of Toronto, who was one of the accepted experts on the technical side of radio. I want to quote just a few words from what he said:

> ....that because of present limitations of power, beyond those limitations contained in the Havana agreement, Canada has already lost permanently much possible radio coverage and that, unless all increases in power possible under the agreement are made as soon as conditions permit, Canada will lose a great deal more of her potential radio coverage. Now, I am not arguing who should have these increases in power or where; that is immaterial. The point is that if Canada does not occupy fully the channels assigned under the Havana agreement, the chances are very good that she will lose some of her rights to the air.

He repeated the same statement to the committee in 1946. Coming from a man of such standing in Canada, this is a pretty serious allegation. You will note that he says Canada has already lost permanently much possible radio coverage. It does seem to me this should have been sufficient warning to have had some action taken by the government. Again, he said that unless all possible increases in power were made as soon as conditions permitted, Canada would lose a great deal more of her potential radio coverage. What has been done? Very little.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the position with respect to television? There are applications pending, I do not know how many; but Dr. Frigon has stated that there will be no television in Canada until the kinks in technique are ironed out by somebody else. He proposes to wait for the situation in the United States to clear, and in the meantime the C.B.C. is giving the matter little or no thought. There may be a limited amount of research being done by the corporation, but no encouragement is being given private stations. There is no point in anyone applying for a licence, for the C.B.C. has not even established the conditions under which licences may be granted. Is this the fruit of public ownership? Is this country of scientific enterprise a scientific vacuum? Are we to stand idly by in this country waiting for others to perfect techniques that we are going to copy at some future date? It does not seem to me this is the spirit we should have as Canadians. Canada had a proud name in regard to research and accomplishment during the war, which is not in keeping with the little, narrow-minded paternalism of the C.B.C. And what a strange contradiction we see, when only last May the corporation declared that Canada should not lag behind in television. Now we are told nothing will be done.

I understand some twelve channels for television broadcasting have been allotted to Canada. Blair Fraser in a recent article stated that not long ago he had a conversation with Mr. Wayne Coy, chairman of the federal communications commission of the United States, who dropped a broad hint that the television channels in the United States were being overcrowded, and that unless Canada made use of its channels they might consider taking over some now allotted to us. I understand some conferences are going on between Canada and the United States at the present time in this connection. How are we doing? Are we going to lose coverage in Canada again, just as we lost coverage in days gone by, because of the policies of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the government, and the way they dilly-dally in these matters?

Television is expensive, and people who go into it are liable to lose their shirts. So far the C.B.C. seems to think that Canadians should be protected from this venture. Within a few years the United States will have one national network, if not more, for television. Where will we be? It is this excessive caution, Mr. Speaker, that smothers this imaginative project for Canadians. It is this type of thinking that makes our young men say, "Oh, what's the use", and emigrate to the United States. The little thinkers on the government benches are afraid they may lose control over broadcasting to those who can do better. There is some apprehension that private stations would have to rely almost wholly on United States programs, but whether we like it or not all those living along the border from Prescott right through to Sarnia will receive broadcasts from the United States. This could be offset by some of our own productions, since I understand that even now some recordings are being made in Canada and exported to the United States. We will never get anywhere in this country in regard to television or any of these other things unless someone tries.

Now, at long last, comes the announcement in the press that the government is considering giving assistance to the C.B.C. in connection with television. If the report is correct, it means spending millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, and in the end the results are uncertain. Why not let private enterprise do the job? Not for years will television be brought to all Canadians. Only the larger cities can hope to have it for a long time to come. Why should the taxpayers generally, other than those in the large centres, have their money used for the benefit of the people in the big cities? That is beyond my comprehension.

In the last two years it has cost the taxpayers of Canada a million dollars for the collection of radio licence fees. That is a million dollars gone down the spout. The truth is that the C.B.C. does not want private stations to get too far ahead. That is their dog-in-the-manger attitude. They feel that no matter what the consequences, or what amount of public money they spend, or how much by way of coverage we lose in this country, they are going to get in the field first.

Our socialist friends, for political purposes, talk a lot of nonsense about vested interests. It is pointed out that the air waves belong to the people, and so they do. The air, for transportation purposes, also belongs to the people, as do the mineral rights and the rights of newspaper publication. Do the newspapers not have just as many vested interests as any of the others that have been mentioned? The newspapers use the streets, the roads, and the air to deliver their product. I say there is no difference; they are all in the same boat. This country was built up by the pioneering spirit of private enterprise. Vested interests can be properly controlled.

I should like to say a word about radio licences. I have spoken on this subject so often in the past. First of all, a man pays a tax of ten per cent when he buys his radio. Then, he has to pay $2.50, but he pays no more whether he has one radio or twenty radios. Is there any fairness in that, Mr. Speaker? I do not think there is. There are approximately thirteen million people in Canada, but there were only 1,997,879 radio licences issued. It is difficult for me to think that everyone who should have bought a licence in Canada actually bought one. I venture to say there are thousands of citizens who did not pay the licence fee. There were 12,524 prosecutions for failure to obtain licences. What an indignity to put upon people!

The amount collected last year for the C.B.C. was $4,798,291. The amount paid for the collection of these licence fees was $325,000. This was paid in the form of commissions and so on. By whom was it paid, by the C.B.C? No, it was paid by the taxpayers of Canada. It cost $221,350 to issue the licences. Who paid that, the C.B.C.? No, the people of Canada paid that. This means that $546,000 was paid by the public to have nearly $5 million handed over to the C.B.C. In order to give pleasure to yourself and your friends through radio programs, you had to pay this fee. It should be cut out altogether. It is also one of the most disreputable ways of accounting.

No royal commission is needed to inquire into radio broadcasting, television or facsimile. What is needed is courage, which the government has not got, and decision, which it lacks. The C.B.C. should operate as a public service, Mr. Speaker, and do the job it was intended to do. It should not be allowed to compete with private enterprise. Let us get away from controls, and away from the idea of the government being in the radio business. The C.B.C. is operating in the commercial field as a business, but it pays no taxes to any provincial or municipal body. It is subsidized, yet it is operating in competition with private enterprise and the Canadian public pays $5,345,000 for that privilege.

The C.B.C. operates in competition with private stations who are not placed in the same position as that corporation. These private stations are prohibited from using lines or having hook-ups. Why should the C.B.C. have commitments which prevent it from broadcasting programs which are originated at no cost to the corporation? The Toronto symphony orchestra cannot get on the air from time to time because the C.B.C. has commercial commitments. The control of radio should be removed from the corporation entirely and private broadcasting stations should be permitted to have hook-ups and use wires. Private station chains should be encouraged so as to overcome the great danger about which I spoke in my opening remarks, that of monopolistic control in the hands of an unscrupulous government. This is necessary to preserve freedom of speech and personal liberty, Mr. Speaker.

It is necessary to have another voice in radio which is not controlled by government. If we can do this, Mr. Speaker, and have our private stations operate as they should, we will have a decentralization of propaganda. A board should be set up to control radio, including the C.B.C. There should be a board of radio commissioners with proper powers for the issuance of licences and the control of radio in conjunction with the transport department. It might be said that such a board would cost money. No doubt this is true, but it would be a small price to pay, thinking in terms of the future, for the preservation of freedom and the restoration of democracy in radio. This should have been done long ago but, in any event, it should be done at once before any more damage is done. There is no necessity for incurring the expense of a royal commission to investigate radio, but under this government one cannot envisage its happening. We cannot do anything about it.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to congratulate the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address on their splendid efforts. I will not stop there, however. I wish to congratulate each of my colleagues on the splendid speeches they have made during this debate. Some people complain about the length of the debate on the address, but to my way of thinking it is the finest debate of the session. Every member is given an opportunity of expressing his views and making suggestions concerning the needs of his constituency without being called to order unless he uses abusive language. This permits each member a wide range of subjects on which to speak in complete freedom. What each member has to say is most interesting and the session would not be the same if it did not commence with the debate on the address.

At times I have been accused of using strange language and of being quite alone in the promotion of certain ideas. If I am permitted, sir, I should like to quote some statements that were made in January by an important gentleman.

> In any event, we are at a stage of life which calls for a business technique quite different to that of the war period. Now, it is the part of prudence for business executives to mend their fences and get back to fundamentals—

Then he continued:

> The future of Canada's export trade which up to now has been supporting approximately thirty per cent of our people bristles with complex problems.
> Its impetus at the moment stems chiefly from our own gifts, credits and loans, and from the generosity of our good neighbour to the south—which condition cannot continue indefinitely. A change in the pattern of our trade appears to be imminent.

This was said a long time ago by the member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), and more recently by Mr. J. L. Carson, president of the Bank of Toronto.

May I also quote, Mr. Speaker, what was said by a prominent gentleman not long ago:

> There is nothing in our foreign trade picture today about which we can afford to be complacent. Our present peak of business is being maintained to a large extent by artificial respiration in the form of credits from Canada and the United States. To realize our position we need only imagine what would be the state of our commerce—and therefore of our standard of living—if the economic recovery program and our own loans to Europe were suddenly cut off.

This was said by the member for Temiscouata two or three years ago, and more recently by Mr. Sydney G. Dobson, president of the Royal Bank of Canada.

I should like to quote another statement:

> The danger arising from the excessive concentration of our markets is being very clearly stressed today. . . There is, it would appear, a very slight chance of rcovering, in the near future, the important place we occupied on the British market in pre-war days. . . . The Canadian Exporters Association recently emphasized the fact that our exports to all the commonwealth countries reveal a decline all the more alarming in that it is especially due to restrictive measures affecting our products.

This was said by the member for Temiscouata some years ago, and more recently by Mr. C. E. Gravel, president of the Banque Canadienne Nationale. I quote again, not with satisfaction but with sorrow:

> Unfortunately, however, the problems of payment remain and, even with the vital assistance of the European recovery program, most overseas countries continue to be extremely short of dollars and are restricting their dollar expenditures accordingly. This has already had a serious impact on Canada's trade. Britain, for example, has ceased to buy our apples and our canned salmon and has severely curtailed her purchases of our lumber. The British dominions and colonies have drastically restricted their purchases of Canadian manufactured goods and we have lost and are losing many traditional markets . . .
> In other words, the business outlook is a mixed one—in some directions one of growing shortages, and in others, one of marketing problems overseas and at home. Were it not for defence considerations, one might express the view, with some degree of confidence, that we were close to the peak of the post-war inflationary movement. As matters stand, I believe we shall be well advised to maintain a questioning attitude in regard to the economic outlook, remembering that our business structure is now more vulnerable to any reaction that might occur in the United States, and that we face difficult and perhaps increasing problems in overseas export markets.

I now come to the last quotation from the same gentleman:

It is well to remember that we have improved our position, in part, by almost ceasing to sell on credit to Britain and other overseas customers whose ability to pay us is, in turn, heavily dependent on ERP aid . . . In the interests of maintaining our exports as well as of contributing further toward European recovery, due consideration should be given to providing for some additional sales on credit when our exchange position has improved sufficiently to justify such a course. It would be unwise to rely too heavily on offshore expenditures of ERP funds, particularly as supply conditions in the United States improve. Already we are finding it difficult to sell grain to most European countries, apart from Britain, largely because the grain supplies of the United States—the country which is providing the funds for the European recovery program—are bountiful.

This was said some years ago by the member for Temiscouata, and more recently by Mr. H. D. Burns, the president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, at its annual meeting.

I have no more quotations, Mr. Speaker, although I could have obtained others from the annual reports of the other chartered banks. These should be enough to establish the point I have in mind. When I stopped speaking about the loans and gifts some years ago, I was discouraged. I had no success in the house. I said that the time would come when I would get some support, and I have obtained support from most unexpected quarters, namely, from the presidents of the chartered banks. One may say whatever he likes about the views expressed in the house; but the views of these gentlemen, even if they are not shared by all, are views that must be respected. I did not expect that they would mention my speeches as a reference for their own; it would have been extremely presumptuous on my part.

I said that I had no satisfaction in reading these excerpts from speeches made by prominent bankers because when I spoke as I did in the house I expected to be in error. I never expected that events would justify what I then said, because I was mostly alone in saying it. I was discouraged. I stopped speaking in the house for some time. I went outside of the house to meet some English-speaking audiences and to repeat before them exactly what I had said here in the house without any success; and I was well received. I respect the freedom of all my colleagues. They may say whatever they like; they may think whatever they like. We live in a free world; and if there is one place where we should be free, it is right here.

At this point I wish to congratulate the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), who has been most careful. He inherited a heavy legacy and he has been extremely careful not to embark on dangerous schemes. He deserves congratulations for that. I remember the time during the war when every unsound financial scheme was all right, including the financing of the sterling area. The Minister of Finance was ashamed to call it the financing of the British empire. He gave a currency name to the British empire, to my amazement; he called it the sterling area. I asked him: "Is this the British empire that you are financing?" He said: "No, it is the sterling area." I did not know exactly what it was. I asked him what it was and finally he gave me the complete list of all the British possessions throughout the world which we were financing, from the United Kingdom down. Did we have the backbone to do that? Did we have enough financial possibilities to do that? No, sir. When I said "no" it was not because I was anti-British but because I saw what was coming. It was no use speaking to the House of Commons at the time. Nobody would listen to me. Nobody would listen to the handful of hon. members who were saying that that policy was absurd. Afterwards the leaders of the various parties and groups came one after the other to complain of the taxes. I told one, two or three of them: "You have no right to complain about the burden of taxation because you were the very cause of it, the tremendous expenditures. You voted for it with closed eyes." That is what happened at the time, to my great surprise and amazement. Now those who are in charge of great financial responsibilities, who are the trustees of the wealth that the Canadian people have deposited in the banks, men from all political parties, men of all races, say how much concerned they are about the future of trade unless we have real trade.

I suggested barter. I did not mention my reference, but I have a good one. My reference is a suggestion made by the London chamber of commerce in 1930, at the time of the depression. They did not know what to do, and exchange was difficult—I mean currency exchange. Then they resorted to barter. I am told that recently some bartering of grain and coffee was done with South America without the exchange of United States dollars. That is a fine thing and it is a primitive way of trading; but it is not because a thing has been done from ancient times that it should be regarded as absurd and discarded as such.

In this country everybody is trading. When some people say that the prairie provinces are poor cousins, I do not believe it. The average person in the prairie provinces is just as well off as anyone in the eastern provinces or in British Columbia. With a few exceptions, which exist everywhere, the average way of living of the Canadian citizen is normal. As our Lord said, the poor shall always be with you. It applies to Toronto, Montreal and Quebec city as well as to Winnipeg, Vancouver or anywhere else. There are poor people everywhere who deserve special consideration. But that the average citizen of the prairie provinces is worse off than anyone in the east or anyone in British Columbia is something that I cannot believe.

I remember, sir, what happened ten years ago. It is not a new story; it happened ten years ago. We had laments from the prairie provinces. On the first lament the dominion government gave a guarantee to the provinces; on the second lament, the dominion government gave a loan; and on the third lament the dominion government transformed the loan into an outright gift. That is the story of the financing of the prairie provinces by the dominion government some years ago. Most extraordinary explanations were given by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Dunning. I hold in my hand Hansard of April 21, 1939, and at page 3049 the following appears:

Mr. Pouliot: But what I want to know is whether sufficient payments have been made until now by each province to repay the amounts lent for unemployment and agricultural purposes from 1930 to 1935.

Mr. Dunning: —

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether you know what Mr. Dunning was at the time. He was Minister of Finance, and at the present time he is a tycoon in Montreal.

I continue with the quotation:

Mr. Dunning: Doubtless the answer is no. I would have to verify it, but I am certain the answer would be in the negative.

Mr. Heaps: That is on a refunding basis only?

Mr. Dunning: No, repayment. I understood the hon. member for Temiscouata wished to know if there had been sufficient repayments to reimburse the dominion for the amount lent between 1930 and 1935. Without reference to the public accounts I cannot answer that with finality, but I am quite certain that there have not been.

There have not been any payments. I have all the data here, which I can pass over to my hon. friend. Then I went on:

On the other hand if that policy is sound for the west I do not see why there is not an understanding between the dominion government and the provincial government to provide the same assistance for the settlers of Temiscouata county.

I thought that if it was good for the prairie provinces it should have been good for my county; but Mr. Dunning explained to me the reason why the guarantees had been transformed into loans, and the loans into gifts. He said:

The test under this legislation as to the eligibility of a province for a loan is, first, its demonstrated inability to take care of its own share of the expenditure under consideration.

He went on:

In that case also, only if a province demonstrates that its own revenues prevent it from going into the scheme without the aid of a loan from the dominion is a loan made.

Therefore, in order to get the loan, the provinces had to come to Ottawa and say: "Will you lend the provinces some money? We are in very serious financial difficulties and we expect to have some help." If another province was too proud to do that—well, it got nothing. The aid was given only to the begging provinces, and that is the explanation we have from the report made by Mr. Dunning.

On February 1, 1937, the present leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) moved the setting up of a parliamentary committee to recommend amendments to the British North America Act for the improvement of social and economic conditions. That is almost twelve years ago—how time flies! The leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), by quoting himself, has set me a bad example which I have to follow, but my quotations are different from his because I have been consistent. I regret to have to do this, but this is what I said on the same date, as reported on page 455 of Hansard of that date:

I am in favour of a committee of the House of Commons to study the British North America Act, not with regard to social legislation but with regard to taxation, in order to see how taxation should be divided, in order that each province should be at home in its field of taxation, in its sphere of action, and that the dominion government should be equally at home in its field of taxation and its sphere of action. It is not in order to create any kind of trouble between the dominion and the provinces; it is so that we may have order as between the federal government and the provinces, and that order will come when taxation is adjusted, when the provinces spend only the money they get from their own taxation and when Ottawa will not have to distribute to the provinces or municipalities money obtained by federal taxation.

Two weeks later, on February 16, the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King), who was then Prime Minister, said, as reported on page 922 of Hansard:

In these circumstances, we propose to appoint a royal commission of inquiry to investigate the whole system of taxation in the dominion.

That is what had been suggested by the member for Temiscouata. He was no more given credit for that by the right hon. member for Glengarry than he was given credit by the orthodox or legitimate bankers for what he had said about another system. I shall go on making suggestions which may be approved or rejected. I do it sincerely for the good of my country. The right hon. member went on to say:

—to study the division of financial powers and financial responsibilities between the dominion and the provinces; and to make recommendations as to what should be done to secure a more equitable and practical division of the burden to enable all governments to function more effectively—and, I may add, more independently—within the spheres of their respective jurisdictions.

Mr. Williams: I am a new member here and I have not a plan of the house before me. I wonder if the hon. member could tell me who this member for Temiscouata is? He is such a wonderful person that I would like to know about him.

Mr. Pouliot: I think I can answer the hon. member's question by saying that the sitting member has been here nearly a quarter of a century. I refer to myself in that way because I do not like to use the word "I". I prefer to speak in the third person. The commission was established. When that suggestion was made by the then Prime Minister I thundered "Hear, hear"; it was quite loud but it does not appear in Hansard. I have here some other data about the royal commission. The fact is that that royal commission was established to put some order in dominion-provincial finance, but when the war broke out it was used for the financing of the sterling area or the British empire. The provinces had a certain modus vivendi, but now that the war is over the provinces, particularly the prairie provinces, have again started the same tactics that were successful before the war.

The fact that the Liberal party has been sitting so long to the right of the Speaker is due to the grace of the province of Quebec, with the exception of those few years during the war when the King government was supported by Mr. Hanson and the Conservatives. I wrote some other articles which appeared in La Presse during February and March, 1938. I did that to inform the public about some of the fundamentals of constitutional law, so that they would understand different speakers when they referred to some of our problems. But there was more to it.

At the time of the dominion-provincial conference of 1941 an eminent Liberal who was very close to the then premier of Quebec, Mr. Godbout, asked me to write three articles for the editorial page of L'Action Catholique to warn Mr. Godbout so that he would not make any blunders by coming to the conference and expressing views which were not in conformity with the feelings of the great majority of the people of Quebec. Those articles were published in January, 1941.

I shall not insist any longer on those articles being followed, but I want to tell my colleagues that the fundamentals of the relations between the dominion and the provinces are the exclusive jurisdictions of both sides. The premiers of the provinces are just as important under the constitution as is the Prime Minister of Canada, but they cannot deal with these same matters. Their field of jurisdiction is entirely different. According to the laws of precedence the Prime Minister of Canada ranks first. The premiers of the provinces follow, and according to a certain order that is established. But there should be no confusion between the jurisdictions. I cannot see how Ottawa can collect money and give it to the provinces to be spent by them. My contention now, and the contention that I have expressed in these articles which date back some years ago, is that here in Ottawa we should have all the power, all the jurisdiction within the bounds of the constitution, and the provinces should also have the same powers within the limits of the constitution. Therefore there can be no difficulty about it.

I only have five minutes more, and I will mention another item. This is the first time in my long career as a member of parliament that I have attended a new session with a new leader of the government and a new leader of the official opposition. I had something to do with it. Last year in June, when the then Prime Minister said that he would remain Prime Minister even after the choice of a new leader, I protested, and I was alone in my protest. I did not protest because I had any disregard or lack of loyalty for my old chief. It was because I felt that, if he himself had decided that there should be a new leader of the Liberal party and of the government, then the new leader should have full power. The new leader should be the Prime Minister and not be under the tutelage of anybody else. I wanted the leader of my party to be the boss. There can be only one leader of a party. We have one, and he is our leader. At times we may agree or disagree with him. We live in a free country, but the leader must have authority; the leader must have patronage; the leader must be the boss.

Because I said that, I aroused a storm in certain quarters. Somebody said, "This is the vilest thing I have ever heard in the house", that the man who had written a letter under his own name to select a successor to himself should remain in office after the choice of that successor. What I did was painful. It was hard for me to say that, but I thought it was my duty to do so because I want order in government. I want order in this country. I think that the present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) is of age, can behave himself properly, and does not need to be held by the hand by anybody else. I was abused, I was insulted, and I was called names; but finally the Financial Post, the Recorder and Times of Brockville, a very fine paper, and all the papers, said, "Now that a new leader has been selected to head the Liberal party it is time for the past leader to retire, as he called the convention himself." That was said by all of the papers. No credit was given to the member for Temiscouata. There was no reparation for the abuse and insults. I was the only one to say that in the house. It fell flat when I said it; it is true it fell flat. I said it because it was true; I said it because I believed it; and I said it because those who looked shocked believed it also.

My earnest wish is that my colleagues will say in a loud voice what they think, not what they say privately, because that is private conversation. I have cited these instances to illustrate the fact that the duty of a member of parliament is very hard to fulfil. At times it is unpleasant. It is very hard. But, whatever one may think about the soundness of various utterances that have been made in the house, my colleagues will at least give me credit for having been fair with them, and will at least admit that I have been sincere, and that what I have said I have said for the public good even when I was ahead of my time.

Mr. D. J. McCuaig (Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate to discuss wheat, markets, agreements and prices. Farmers have had various experiences over the years in marketing and selling wheat. In 1918 we had the wheat board, which did a very good job. We had the open market grain exchange. We have had the Bennett and the Liberal wheat board from 1935 together with the open market. Now we have our present wheat board. The uppermost thing in the minds of western farmers today is markets for wheat, and prices for wheat. They have not forgotten the 19 cents a bushel for No. 1 northern at country points in 1932. At that time wheat reached the lowest price level in 400 years. They have not forgotten the 600 million bushels of wheat stored in terminal elevators, country elevators, annexes, bins, barns, empty houses, and open bins. That was in 1942. They have not forgotten that they were paid $4 an acre for every acre of land that they took out of wheat production in 1941. In 1942 they were still paid not to grow wheat. They remember the five and six bushel delivery quotas, which were still in effect in 1944, four years after the commencement of the war. A continuation of those conditions, Mr. Speaker, would not only have bankrupted the whole agricultural industry of Canada; it would have bankrupted this country itself.

Back in the thirties we had the grain exchange in operation, with no restrictions, with the whole world to which it could sell wheat. But when it came to setting prices the grain exchange was powerless to set a price level that would meet the costs of production. They just were not in the wheat business to do that sort of thing. Mr. Bennett set out to help the grain exchange. He set up a wheat board, and they were both in operation at the same time. Mr. Bennett was going to do the blasting, to make it easier for the grain exchange to get more suckers. As a real grass-roots farmer, I have seen all I want to see of the grain exchange free enterprise system in connection with the marketing of wheat. The day of the gambler in foodstuffs is over. From 1929 to 1943 the marketing of Canada's wheat was the No. 1 national problem. Today it is an international problem.

The idea of a wheat board was not something new to the farmers. We had a wheat board in 1918, thirty-one years ago, which gave the farmers most satisfactory and efficient results in the marketing of their wheat in my memory. But in spite of the persistence and insistence of all farm bodies in their efforts to have that wheat board continue to market Canada's wheat, that just was not done. Twenty-five years later, on September 17, 1943, four years after the start of world war II, the world scarcity increased the demand for wheat and prices were on their way up to the highest levels in seventeen years. Then the government saw fit to set up a wheat board. In principle this was exactly what all farmers and farm bodies had been asking since 1918, so they went along with the government. They remembered the 1918 wheat board. They had faith in the government. They trusted the government to sell their wheat at the best price that could be obtained, as the 1918 wheat board did. But things turned out somewhat differently. I think a full explanation is due this house and the wheat growers of Canada by the responsible officials of this government as to why the government sold 600 million bushels of wheat on such terms. I have here a clipping from the Regina Leader-Post which reads:

> London, January 17. Well-informed circles here said Saturday that agreement has been reached on a $2 price for the fourth year of the wheat agreement . . .
> One official said he would be prepared to bet that the Canadian farmers would not receive any lump sum as compensation for the $300,000,000 lost by them on the agreement to date. Britain has not the money, he said.

Meanwhile, British government sources seem to be preparing the public for further reductions in the volume of purchases of Canadian foodstuffs.

Then in this morning's Ottawa Journal I saw this item:

London. The News-Chronicle says today that if the United States were to declare wheat a surplus commodity we might be compelled to ask for a release of our obligations under the Canadian wheat agreement.

Now that the United States has a surplus, and with no more money available, there may be difficulties in the way of Canada marketing her wheat. The idea is spreading among the growers of western Canada that the way the British wheat agreement was drawn up was a deliberate attempt on the part of the government to put forever out of the minds of the farmers the idea of a wheat board, that this is a subtle way of undermining that ideal. They are really working hand in hand with the Winnipeg grain exchange. Neither of them has any use for a wheat board. We found that out when, in spite of our persistent requests for a wheat board, they would not have it. They are both exploiters of common humanity, and apparently they are going to stick together.

I am not going to enter upon an argument as to whether Britain should or should not have cheap wheat. I do say, however, on behalf of the wheat growers of Canada, that they should not foot the bill. Farmers pay all the taxes other people pay, and then some. They are entitled to every cent the best markets will pay. If Canada wants to make a gift of wheat to other countries, let all Canada do it and let all Canada pay for it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with another agreement, the agreement the Liberal government made with the millers, the feeders and the distillers covering all domestically consumed wheat in Canada, at a price of $1.25 per bushel. This was in force from September 27, 1943, to February 17, 1947, when the price was increased to $1.55. During those four years approximately 350 million bushels of wheat were sold in Canada at a difference of approximately $1.50 per bushel as between the world class II price and the Canadian price of $1.25. Multiply that by $1.50, the difference between the two prices, and you find you have $525 million as the loss to the wheat growers of this country. The government had no power or authority, except by dictatorial methods to cause the farmers' wheat to be sold in Canada below the world market prices. It simply means that the wheat growers of Canada, by government order in council, were compelled to subsidize the national food supply in Canada to the tune of $525 million. I say this is an imposition, Mr. Speaker. If it were necessary for the government to subsidize wheat for home consumption, that should have been done by the government.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) have told this house the farmers are better off than they ever were. In doing this, they are simply making a comparison with the days of the hungry thirties and the low prices the farmers have received for seventeen years. They are simply making a noise and trying to bamboozle the people. I can tell this government that, if it wants to make 50,000 communists in western Canada, the way to do it is to put the wheat producers in an exploited class like the slaves of other colonial lands. If there is any agency or any action that is making communists in Canada today, it is the action of this government.

We must be very sure that this Atlantic pact, about which we have been hearing so much, contains provisions for a full and free exchange of goods and commodities so they can be directed to the places in which they are needed. If the world is going to be divided into two parts and we continue this austerity program, ERP, ECA, the dollar shortage and the high discount rate between nations, we are licked before we start. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the real war started when the shooting war stopped. The real battle is on now, and it is the battle of food. The victor will be the nation that can answer these questions: Did you feed him when he was hungry? Did you clothe him when he was naked? Did you give him shelter and care when he was sick? If a nation cannot answer these questions in the affirmative, without any ulterior motive, no amount of prayers, ritualistic ceremony or holy water is going to save us. God searches the hearts of men.

This currency exchange and discounts between nations is the world's greatest racket. It is the world's greatest sin to perpetuate a system that will starve humanity in a world of great abundance. If we persist in this sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, our doom is just as certain as that of Hitler, Mussolini and Tojo. We are fools.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron North): Mr. Speaker, the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne is a friend of mine. I am glad to say that I have a few friends on all sides of this house. Like many others who have spoken before me, I wish to congratulate him on a task well done. Had the address contained more subject matter, I believe the member for Essex West (Mr.

Brown) would have done an even better job. The seconder of the address (Mr. Demers) deserves the congratulations of this house, because that was his first speech in the house. I should like also to congratulate all those who have taken their seats in the house for the first time this year. If the calibre of the men who have entered parliament this year is any indication of the kind of men we may expect to be attracted to this house in the next parliament, I for one have not any doubt as to the destiny of Canada in the years that lie ahead.

I think most members will agree that, in the past nine years, I have taken very little of the time of this house unnecessarily. I should like to bring to the attention of the government, however, a few of the things that are worrying the people in my part of the country. The county of Huron does not have to take second place to any other part of Canada. It is a rural community. We have no cities and very few large towns. We have a good farming area with a number of small towns and villages. My reason for speaking at this time is that I believe the time has come when those of us who are farmers must have something to say about the government's policy. I did not have any intention of participating in this debate until I heard the filibuster, shall I call it, staged by the Minister of Agriculture the other night.

After hearing him use such strong language in his attempt to defend the government's policy, and especially Liberalism, you would have thought, to hear him speak, that unless you were a Liberal you did not amount to anything—that the Liberal government was the only government that had ever done anything for Canada, and that the Liberals comprised the only statesmen. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture has not been much more interested in Liberalism and Liberal morale than he was in doing the job we expected him to do, the protection of our agricultural markets. Our agricultural markets have been almost completely lost. After hearing the minister speak, I for one feel we have been sold down the river. As a matter of fact, as it stands now, we would have been much better off without a Minister of Agriculture at all during the last six years. At least, we would have received the world market price for what we did produce and sell. Today, we have not even that.

If the Minister of Agriculture thinks that kind of speech will win votes for the Liberal party, I should like to tell him that if he keeps delivering that type of speech, for every vote he wins for the Liberals he will drive two votes to the support of His Majesty's loyal opposition. I must agree with the Minister of Agriculture that the farmers are receiving more this year than they have heretofore, but I would remind him we are still getting less than our fair share of the national income. Agriculture has only enjoyed three short periods of prosperity during the last thirty-five years, part of which was between 1925 and 1929. Of course since 1944 we have been doing a little bit better, but it is still below what we should have. Over the years the urban people have had the advantage over the rural population. Of necessity we must receive more consideration.

A much different picture is facing us in 1949. Our markets have started going downhill and, while it is true that some made money in 1948 on beef cattle, I am not so sure but that these men will lose not only all they made in 1948 but much more besides, and I am one of them. I am sure the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. McCubbin) will agree with me. The same could be said about eggs, butter and cheese. Even hogs may show a loss before the end of 1949, owing to the high cost of feed. I am told that the hog population in the United States will be almost double before the end of 1949. I am one of those who told the minister a few years ago to give us the grain at a price at which we could feed at a profit, and we in Ontario would produce all the hogs he wanted. This has not been done; we find that feed has become so dear that we are not able to feed hogs, cattle and poultry at much of a profit. The result is that our hog population has gone down to such an extent that we may find it hard even to supply enough pork for our own people.

When farmers are receiving fair prices, everyone enjoys prosperity; but when farm prices begin to drop, jobs start to disappear and soon everyone else is feeling the pinch. There are many reasons why prices are starting to recede. Some wonder why prices ever got so high in the first place. I shall try to give a few of the reasons. In so doing I will lay the blame right where it belongs, and that is on this government the Minister of Agriculture was telling us so much about.

Most hon. members can remember back to 1941 or 1942, when we started building airports. I take airports as an example because I know more about them than about anything else. There were many other reasons. We had five airports in my riding when the government started building them. The contracts were let on a cost-plus basis; and the more they cost, the more the contractor made. There was no inducement to try to keep costs down. Men who, up to that time, had never made more than $2.50 or $3 per day were offered $1 per hour. So long as you were able to drive a nail and saw a board, you were classed as a carpenter and received $1 per hour. Some will say: What else could you do? We had to have airports. True, we did have to have airports; but just before this time, this government had taken a census and they knew where every man was. Some were drafted into the army, air force and navy and their rate of pay was set at a price, and it was not $10 a day. The men who were needed to build airports could have been drafted in the same manner at the same rate of pay plus living allowance, had the government been as efficient as the Minister of Agriculture led us to believe they were. The result of this action was that the cost of living started going up, and men everywhere started demanding higher rates of pay. We had strikes; farm help could not be secured. We could not pay the price asked by labour, with the result that farmers turned to machines to take the place of men. It has been proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that production increased with less manpower until now we find, as far as I can ascertain, that only about 25 per cent of our population are living on the farms.

I should just like to point out in passing that, so long as 75 per cent of our population are satisfied to let 25 per cent produce the food required to maintain life, then that 75 per cent will have to be content to pay at least the cost of production of the food they must have in order to sustain life. The cost of food will be higher than it otherwise would be if more people were on the land producing and helping with the work. That is only reasonable. Moreover, the very reason we are so short of housing is, in part, the fact that we have this Liberal government. The government lured the people off the land in 1941 and 1942, building airports, making munitions and so on, and they have not gone back to it. We have an abundance of housing accommodation in the country, but we will not have anyone in these houses until such time as people are forced by necessity to go back to the land. Many of these people would not have left the farms in the first place had conditions been such that there was any inducement to stay on the farm.

I shall now talk about something else that this government is doing to all the people in Canada; and I am just as sure as I am of the fact that I am standing in this house that it will be one of the things that will lose this government more votes than any other, including the speeches of the Minister of Agriculture. I refer to income tax. No group in our population have paid more into the dominion treasury, because of government policy, than have the farmers with the money they never received. The farmers do not object to paying income tax, but when they are busy they do object to keeping records when they know they are not in the income tax brackets. If this infantile government had taken time to study ways and means of collecting farmers' income tax, not only would they have obtained more money in the treasury, but the cost of collecting would have been cut in two. I have no intention of telling this government how they should go about collecting farmers' income tax—far be it from me to pull their chestnuts out of the fire—but I will go this far. After the next election, when the party with whom I have the honour to sit are the government, there will be the greatest change in our income tax that this country has ever known. Merchants, labourers, farmers, miners, men of all classes, will go about their work happy and contented, knowing full well that the money they pay into the treasury of Canada will not be spent by control boards and bureaucrats who have no responsibility to the electors of this country. They will know that their money will be taken care of by their elected representatives.

We are fed up with controls and control boards. We are fed up with orders in council. We who have sat in this house through the war years, and realized how important it was to do things quickly because of war and emergency, did not then mind the government legislating by order in council; but now, four years after the war is over, can any reasonable thinking person see any reason why the government should still be passing orders in council, with the house in session? It is in my opinion an easy way for the government to mislead the people without the country knowing what they are doing. I would say to the government: Throw off this mask; give us responsible government, government responsible to those who sent us here.

Just before leaving this income tax field, let me say to this house that the farmer is in a much different position from any other class. His whole income is a gamble. He never knows when he seeds a field how much the return will be or whether he will reap anything. As a matter of fact, he is so dependent on so many different things, his income is never assured. In other words, his income is the result of taking a chance. On the other hand, the labourer has no alternative but to pay income tax if his salary is large enough to demand it. Like many more the labourer feels that farmers have just as much right as any other class to pay income tax, and I agree with him. But the farmer's income cannot be reckoned on an eight-hour day, and the only reason why a farmer would ever get into the income brackets would be by working ten and fifteen hours per day. And many of them do. My opinion is that people who depend on the weatherman and who are forced by necessity to work long hours, with the uncertainty of markets—in other words, producers of food who are dependent on so many things over which they have no control before they are sure of anything—should not be charged tax on income. If it were not for faith, those who are engaged in the production of food would never have an income at all. At present 75 per cent of our people are dependent on the other 25 per cent to produce the food with which to sustain life. Unless everything is done to encourage those who are our producers, we may very soon have a race of people who cannot even feed themselves. To hold up income tax papers before this class of our people is like holding a red flag before an angry bull. They just see red. They do not object to paying income tax, but they do not want to keep records. At the moment, I have no idea of divulging to this house my plan for collecting income tax from farmers. It will be time enough for that next year when we are sitting in the driver's seat, but I can assure you of this. There is a way in which income tax can be collected from farmers which would not be objectionable and the net return to the treasury would be greater than the returns now received.

At the present time the Canadian dollar buys less than half of what it did before the war. The farmer finds himself in the position where the price of things he has to buy has climbed far beyond reach. Take shirts, for instance. You pay $7 now for a $2 shirt; $2 for a fifty-cent tie; $80 for a $30 suit; $2 for a pair of sixty cent socks. I could go on all down the list. You hear a great holler about seventy cent butter. As a matter of fact, the price of farm products has been kept below world prices since the beginning of the war, and agriculture has been left holding the bag because of government control and government policy.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is now asking us to pass a bill to give him more power. That is just ridiculous, because the minister has not made very good use of the power he did have. Do we dare trust him further?

It has taken many long years and long hours each day to place the dairy farmer in his present position in the dairy industry. If his modest standard of living is lowered by the policies of this government at this time, I would say "shame on them". The dairy industry deserves better treatment. The dairy industry takes years to develop and requires a great deal of financing before it can pay its way. I operated a dairy for years before coming into this house and know from experience how much money has been made and lost, very often lost.

I am now going to deal with something which has bothered the people of Huron and the town of Goderich for a long time. We have in Goderich a harbour that produces more revenue than any other of the lower lake harbours in western Ontario. We have huge storage space and we handle more western grain than any of the other lake port harbours. The reason for that is that the county of Huron has good farmers, and good farmers mean good feeders and good feeders mean you have to have something to feed. The result is that we buy more western grain perhaps than any other county in western Ontario.

Our harbour needs repairs. It is under repair right now, but we have a small island inside the harbour and this should be removed and could be removed very readily. The entrance to the harbour is very narrow and, if this island were removed, the entrance could be widened and deepened in order to allow ships to enter without fear of damage. Boats often lie at anchor, sometimes for days, depending on the wind, before they dare enter the harbour. The result is that large boats often by-pass Goderich rather than wait to unload when the wind is in certain directions. With a fair wind, the large boats can enter cautiously, but the entrance is very narrow and unless caution is used it is very dangerous.

For some years we have urged the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) to spend some money on Goderich harbour. Through the war years we were told all such work was suspended. We realized that, but now that we are in the fourth year of peace we feel that now is the time to make these expenditures. Every dollar that is spent in Goderich harbour will be returned to the treasury in revenue. We do not ask for something for nothing. We are only asking the government to do what we cannot do ourselves. I am going to make a request of the government. Spend a few thousands of dollars in Goderich harbour. It will be money well spent and will pay back to the treasury of Canada dollar for dollar.

Perhaps I could direct a request to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) or to his department. The town of Goderich would like, and have made a request for, permission to cross the Canadian National Railways track in order to build a new road down to the beach on the north side of the harbour. At present there is no road and it is impossible to get down to the beach. The beach on the south side of the harbour is short and much congested during the holiday season. A new road on the north side of the harbour would give an additional mile of perfect beach and would relieve the crowding. Goderich is a thriving, alert town and attracts many tourists in the summer months. I would ask the Minister of Transport to use his best influence to have this request granted.

There are a few other things that I should like to mention. I am sorry that the committee on veterans affairs has not been set up this year. From time to time hon. members in all sections of the house receive requests from men who feel that they are not getting a fair deal. This committee was set up for the purpose of considering these matters, and it did a good job. From time to time I get requests from men who cannot present their own cases. Some of them had little knowledge as to how to secure action, and now that they are out of the army they just put up with their condition unless somebody intercedes for them. The committee should have been set up this session, and I think it would have been an advantage to the minister, because a lot of things could be ironed out there instead of having to take them direct to the minister. Our veterans, who are our first citizens, should have had that much consideration from this government.

I should also like to say a word about our aged folk. In our community we have quite a few old people who deserve more attention than they are getting. Over the years, properties were given over to the sons and later the old folks became entitled to the old age pension. I know that no law was ever formulated which could apply across the board. In a great number of cases our old folks just have not got enough on which to live. Some of them are taken care of by their own immediate families, and others are taken care of by friends, but quite a number of them have to go to the county home. Because of the high cost of living, the amount of money that they get now is too low. Consideration should have been given to increasing the rate of pension.

There is another class of people to which I should like to refer. The other day I had a letter from a boy in my county whom I never saw. He is a cripple. He is now twenty years of age, and he is wondering what is going to happen to him when his father and mother are gone. At the moment he is being taken care of by his parents, but he wonders what hope there is for him when his father and mother are gone. I know that there are quite a few people in every riding in the same position. It is lamentable to think that people in that position, who through no fault of their own are unable to earn a living, are not given some allowance which they could call their own, without having to depend on charity.

I should like now to speak about the nuisance taxes on soft drinks and chocolate bars. If I were the government and were bragging about having a surplus of $1,300 million in the last two years, I think I would feel pretty small if I could not let the youngsters have a chocolate bar without taxing it.

Then there is the tax on jewelry. I think that is a ridiculous tax. I have had correspondence from most of the jewelers in my part of the country complaining about this tax. They did not complain about it during war years, but the war has been over for four years, and they think it is unjust for them to have to collect money for the government. After having read the news release of today, I would think that the government would feel rather embarrassed about this tax. I do not intend to deal with it at any length, but I would think that the government would not feel too happy about what occurred today. I often think it is a good thing that politicians and members of this house have hides that are just a little thicker than those of ordinary people. Otherwise there might be a lot of tragedies.

I should like to say a word about freight assistance on feed grains. When I mention this I believe I am speaking for my friends to my left as well as for everyone. This is a good thing for the westerner and for the easterner. If this is not left on, we in the east will not be able to buy grain to feed at a profit and the result will be that when the westerner cannot sell his grain he will not grow it. I hope that this subsidy is continued, because it is good for all concerned.

Before I close I should like to refer to the compensation paid for tubercular-test reactors. Before the war Huron county put in a request to have a T.B.-tested area in our county and were informed that we were in fourth place. The other night I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) about this and he told me that he thought they were working there. If they are, I have not heard a word about it. I hope that something will be done before long to increase the price paid for reactors. Considering the present price of cattle and the price that was set at the time these regulations were put into force, the allowance is unfairly low. A grade beef is set at $60 with a registered beef at $100, and that is nothing compared with what they would bring on the market right now. I hope something will be done by the Minister of Agriculture and his worthy deputy minister, because I believe they are both as interested as I am in having something done along these lines.

To sum up: What we need at once is a new government. This government has outlived its usefulness and it should be replaced. I shall never forget until the day I die the time when Winston Churchill spoke to this house, in 1942. He was the one man who saved democracy. What we need in Canada is a Churchill, and we have that in the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). As a matter of fact, I think they need Churchill again in England. If we had a Churchill in England and a Churchill in Canada our overseas markets would be assured and we would all be much better off.

(Translation):

Mr. Wilfrid Gariepy (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, like hon. members before me I extend the usual congratulations to the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), and the seconder, the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers). My congratulations are very sincere and they are well deserved. If ever public distinction was well deserved, it was in the case of the new leader which our party has chosen at a public convention. Since his appointment to office the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has set to work relentlessly with a very promising enthusiasm and with a patriotism which has already classed him among the best statesmen who ever led this country.

In this regard we only have to study the evolution of international problems. Canada must protect herself. Russian supremacy is much more dangerous than German supremacy. The way things stand each part of the world is faced with this danger but, in considering the Atlantic pact, to which we look for salvation, our wise leaders are considering its possibilities for peace rather than for war. In the same line of thought, the appointment of a Canadian representative at the Vatican would be welcome news to my constituents.

Three Rivers, whose spokesman I have the honour to be in this house, is a city of 50,000 people, with an unsurpassed harbour, and industries which make it the chief centre in the world as far as newsprint is concerned. It lies at the mouth of a river which constitutes the most abundant source of electric power in Canada. It is close to other important towns such as Cap de la Madeleine, Louiseville, Nicolet, Shawinigan Falls, Grand-Mère, and La Tuque. In the district which surrounds it agriculture, tourism and small industry are prominent.

However, present world conditions have caused the cost of living to reach a level which I consider almost excessive. I may add that in Three Rivers salaries have been maintained at average figures which compare favourably with those paid elsewhere and even place our workers among the most privileged. In spite of that, it is imperative that the next budget should bring necessary relief, by raising the exemption for people in the middle income bracket, for instance to $3,000 for married people and $1,500 for single persons, as well as by increasing the allowance for each child and granting more advantages to young people desirous of taking up studies.

The income tax was a product of the first world war and it was first levied by the Borden government. It was maintained by another Conservative government, headed by Mr. Bennett. In the way of social protection the people only obtained direct relief from Mr. Bennett.

The truth is that from 1921 to 1930 and from 1935 to date, the Liberal party has endeavoured, in view of the needs of an unprecedented period, to seek funds not so much from small wage earners as from taxpayers and corporations able to share their profits with the government, without serious inconvenience. In return, what a social program was provided by our party, in addition to its war financing. It included generous treatment for veterans, provisions for their training, their rehabilitation and unemployment insurance! Our party also gave old age pensions, pensions for the blind, family allowances, various forms of aid for public health.

There would be no end to the figures I could mention, to the amounts distributed by the Liberal government for these various purposes in my constituency alone or again in the province of Quebec alone where—thank God!—we respect the family institution, we love culture and practise charity. Thus the Minister of National Health and Welfare has contributed a cheque for $120,000 for a sanatorium at Three Rivers. Thus a considerable proportion of the costs of a technical school now under construction in Three Rivers is borne by the federal government. Thus thousands of veterans in Three Rivers have obtained, through the provincial administration, subsidies enabling them and their families to live and have received at the same time technical training under the form of courses lasting many years with, at graduation time, a position and an opportunity to rehabilitate themselves in normal life. And all this out of the federal treasury. I repeat that the government in Ottawa, the King-

St. Laurent government, with the assent and co-operation of the government of the province of Quebec, financed these services. I want it to be clearly understood that this humanitarian work was made possible only through the financial assistance of Ottawa. Taxes have not been levied in vain. There has been a compensation, fairly and capably distributed, to the point where it has been said and written that no other country was better able to solve the post-war problems as well as Canada. No more than anybody else did I wish for this war or did I want Canada to take part in the battles which have caused so much distress and sacrifices.

We must admit the facts, the evidence of truth. In 1914, the nationalist leader, Henri Bourassa, accepted the solution by plebiscite. Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself agreed to that solution, in 1917, but his amendment to that effect, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Oliver, was rejected in this house.

During the last war, a plebiscite revealed what Canadian democracy required.

Confederation was deemed timely and even necessary in 1867. Now, there is no alternative but to accept confederation with its advantages and disadvantages, its obligations and requirements.

The great expansion of the railroads, of banking, of industry and trade was immensely beneficial to the province of Quebec from the economic standpoint. Montreal, Canada's metropolis, could surely not favour secession as it would be against its mission, its importance and supremacy. Each year, western Canada produces hundreds of millions of dollars of new wealth in wheat alone. That prosperity reaches Toronto, Montreal and even Three Rivers, because we live on commercial exchanges, the east supplying the west, which in turn feeds eastern Canada. Our commercial relations are based on friendship; from the Atlantic to the Pacific boundaries have disappeared, just as in the time when the kings of France and Spain were great friends and to all practical purposes the Pyrenees had disappeared.

Air travel completes the picture. How can we explain the behaviour and statements of a certain group that wishes to divide in order to rule, that thrives on utopias, and would like to revert to the past and revive a bygone era.

The republic on the shores of the St. Lawrence, envisioned in J. P. Tardivel's book "Pour la Patrie," can no longer come true. However, the struggle in the open for recognition of all our rights can carry on. Appeals to prejudice will not help in the attainment of this objective; it is better to fight fanaticism rather than stir it up, to imitate our constructive forefathers rather than practise wholesale destruction. England gave us our constitutional system which is still the best in existence as far as public administration is concerned. I believe there is room within the framework of the two old parties to command respect for our cherished yearnings in a manner consistent with our tastes, our principles and our mentality. It should also be possible for us to press forward our claims, wield power and secure what is best in every field for those who have put their trust in us. Our English-speaking colleagues sometimes wonder at our vigorous and tireless representations, but we are a minority group, and a passive minority cannot long endure. However, we wish to live and survive; our survival is in Canada's interest since we are partners in this great national undertaking. We may have been mistaken in not making ourselves better known or more highly appreciated. The fundamental idea is that the strength of confederation rests, not upon assimilation, but upon unity and understanding. The greater the development of each contracting party—or rather each racial group—according to its ideals, the greater the collective wealth and strength. That is the reason why I appreciate the friendly gesture of certain members of Anglo-Saxon origin who sometimes, in this house and outside, express themselves in my native tongue. Similarly, I believe that every member of this house is pleased that a fairly rapid improvement is being effected in the civil service by the appointment to responsible positions of a greater number of bilingual persons. The fact that there was not a single French-Canadian deputy minister created what amounted to an intolerable anomaly and I pay tribute to the present administration for correcting this provoking and unjust discrimination which belied the oft repeated professions of unity and tolerance. I know several of my fellow-countrymen who, though well disposed towards their English-speaking compatriots, were losing their every faith and hope. Optimism cannot survive the inimical attitude of a Dr. Shields who unceasingly protests that the share given us is too large and who would have us relegated among the undesirable, the incompetent, the helots. It is not flattering, it is demoralizing, especially when it is recalled that since confederation, in spite of our qualities, in spite of our desire for co-operation, we have often had to suffer on account of our origin, our language and our faith. One needs only to think of the New Brunswick schools question, of the Manitoba schools, of the Keewatin schools, of the Ontario schools. I need only to recall the no doubt meritorious work of Sir Clifford Sifton and the Hon. Frank Oliver who were both, successively, Minister of the Interior and who both refused to give my own people an even chance in western immigration, giving preference instead to Central European immigrants. I need only to recall the Ku Klux Klan agitation in Saskatchewan and the school regulations enforced there by the Anderson administration, with which the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) is no doubt quite familiar. Whatever the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) may do, French Canadians will never forgive his statements or his policies. While he was prime minister of Ontario he used planes to bring British immigrants in order to compensate for the Quebec birth rate. That was a strange method indeed to counteract the "revenge of the cradles".

The hon. leader of the opposition has been rather hard on Quebec. He belittled our war effort, proclaimed that we belong to a vanquished race, and that our so-called rights were only those which the dominant race were pleased to grant us, that the family allowance,—the baby bonus as he called it—had to go and that it was an attempt to bribe Quebec.

Rev. Shields never said anything else; he is a second Dalton McCarthy. It is such contempt, such arrogance, that breeds disagreements, misunderstandings and quarrels. Yet Sir John A. Macdonald declared that there was neither a vanquished race nor a victorious race. But the Progressive Conservative party has repudiated its old leader; the great party of Macdonald and Cartier has decayed and fallen to pieces first under Meighen, then under Bennett and now under the member for Carleton. "L'œil était dans la tombe et regardait Cain." It is the twinges of conscience mentioned by the immortal poet. With us, it is the twinges of humiliation, of infamy. We have felt in our flesh, in our whole being, the enmity, the reprobation, and we remember. We shall always remember. Nothing can wash out the stain. As the poet said: "La mer y passerait sans laver la souillure."

I want to tell the opposition that the incident and accident of Nicolet-Yamaska settles nothing in their favour. If only Drew and Sabourin had shown up during that campaign! But they made sure they did not for the people would have realized then what it was all about, for the contest was fought not between parties but on the personal reputation of the candidates.

Why this enmity towards French Canadians? Why is our element feared? Our large families are a blessing from heaven and they are the best contribution to the welfare and greatness of our nation. Our language is the most beautiful in the world. It is pre-eminently the language of culture and an open door to the greatest productions of the human mind. We are loyal and proved it at the country's call for soldiers, workmen, money, goods and munitions.

Our religion! Would you want us to be communists? It is the city of Toronto, the Ontario legislature which has communist members. The courageous stand of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the proceedings he took against this infamous horde have deeply relieved us. We believe in God, we practise our religion, we are the most efficient barrier against communism, the greatest evil of our time. Communists themselves know that if they are held in check it is because of our religious feeling and our Christian conscience. This is proved by what has just happened in Hungary, to the shame of humanity, liberty and civilization.

One of the plagues of society is divorce. But who are the ones who refuse to recognize divorce? We of the mother province, descendants of Champlain, Frontenac, Laviolette and Maisonneuve. Thus, true to our principles, we find our use in recalling and revealing a timeless truth, that family, society and authority are a trinity which thrives under Christianity, and are as it were a corollary, an outcome of Christianity.

That is the education given in our midst, from the pulpit of our admirable gothic cathedral of Three Rivers, in our seminary, one of the most interesting in the province, in our academies run by brothers who are disciples of St. Jean Baptiste de la Salle, in our free schools, which Lacordaire and Montalembert would not have disavowed; it is an education which pervades us as much as the air we breathe, and the food we absorb. We receive that training everywhere, beginning in the homes and I would not think of a Scotsman as being a poor citizen because he is religious-minded. It was the member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) who taught me to say grace in the language of Robert Burns. I would not think of an Irishman as someone to be despised because he is deeply religious. In the lobbies of the British parliament Daniel O'Connell would recite his rosary while waiting for votes or the end of discussions.

We are religious unlike the Russians who are atheistic, unlike the French who are unbelievers, unlike the Americans, 60 per cent of whom are indifferent and in whose country one marriage out of four ends in divorce or annulment.

I therefore ask you to be friendly toward my province and my town and I urge the cabinet to give due consideration to the development of my district, and its increased prosperity, thereby placing Three Rivers on an equal footing with Montreal and Quebec, and giving the whole province more cohesion, better balance and fairer wealth distribution.

Thus my constituents have to forward their income tax report to Montreal, where they have to apply for all corrections, adjustments and complaints. Why not establish in Three Rivers a collection office for all the surrounding district? There is one at Quebec and another one in Sherbrooke with about a hundred employees. I find nothing wrong with that. It is good policy. Sherbrooke is a thriving city, with a progressive surrounding area. Sherbrooke is the queen of the eastern townships but Three Rivers is the queen of St. Maurice valley and this valley represents considerable income tax revenue, which entails many complexities and which compares favourably with that of other districts. To a lesser degree but with the same fairness and the same arguments, I must deplore that, the war being over, the government does not return to the old system which gave full and complete satisfaction. My city is made to depend on Montreal, where there is a district branch of the Department of Public Works. This subjection is contrary to efficiency and even to economy. Public services are established for the taxpayer and he must have easy access to officials, at the least possible cost. In this regard, we have the Three Rivers harbour falling under the absolute control, very absolute indeed, of the national harbours board, the organization of which was in line with the Bennett policy, embodied in the Gibbs report. This report recommends the establishment of a local board in every harbour to act in an advisory capacity. Nearly fifteen years have gone by and there is yet no local harbour board. Three Rivers, through its boards of trade, junior and senior, through its municipal council, considers that this situation is detrimental to its development, that it handicaps its progress. Three Rivers also feels that all harbours, or at least those of some importance, should come under the jurisdiction of the national harbours board. I admire the town of Sorel, I like to visit it and get inspiration. I admire the eloquence and the competence of its representative in the house. But the harbour of Sorel is competing with that of Three Rivers and my constituents vainly try to figure out why there should be discrimination between Three Rivers, which is subject to the rigid control of the national harbours board while Sorel is not, being thus autonomous and better able to reach the heart of the Minister of Public Works and enjoy his munificence. Everyone should be treated equally and without favour; I am confident that the principle will be applied now that the war is over and that we are again resuming normal operations. The new offices which I would like to have established could well be located in the addition to the post office at Three Rivers. Last year money was voted for that building which is urgently required and work will be proceeded with in the spring.

In conclusion, I have special thanks for the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. MacKinnon) regarding his project for a trans-Canada highway. Now that automobiles are in constant use, the highway will be the counterpart of the railway running from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as was promised at the time of confederation. Many sceptics laughed at Joseph Howe when he advocated in this house, in 1867, the tunnelling of the Rockies, in order to connect Vancouver and Winnipeg and expressed the satisfaction of the promoters. The train whistling through the pass in those famous peaks is surely a proof of their faith in modern progress.

A trans-Canada highway wholly on Canadian soil would benefit both the tourist industry and our independence. The cost is estimated at $266 million. The provinces would pay about half of that amount and would set the layout within their own boundaries. On the question of hospitals and health, the federal and provincial governments have agreed. There has also been perfect agreement on the matters concerning the Departments of Labour and Agriculture.

I hope the federal and provincial governments will again agree on this highway which will enable people to travel from Halifax to Vancouver, through Ottawa, Montreal and Three Rivers. Indeed I hope that the section of this highway situated in the province of Quebec will extend from Montreal to Three Rivers and from Ste. Angèle de Laval to Lévis, thus justifying the carrying out of the project of a highway bridge opposite Three Rivers on the St. Lawrence river.

It follows that this bridge will be of national usefulness. It will serve the population on both sides of the river. The city of Three Rivers, which operates the ferry at this point, recently acquired a third boat, at the cost of $400,000. Because of the narrow docks, it seems impossible to put there more than three boats, but this, barring exceptions, is not sufficient for regular traffic and hundreds of automobiles have to wait for hours before they can cross the river.

Both the north and the south shore are always overcrowded. A bridge is the only solution to this state of things which is inconsistent with the public interest. A glance at the map of the area which spreads from the United States boundary to the La Tuque and Lake St. John districts, passing through Three Rivers, will convince anyone that the bridge must be built.

It is at once obvious that in the intervening area, there is room for tremendous development in agriculture and colonization as well as in trade and industry if markets become more easily available and if communications are improved by faster and cheaper means of transportation. All that would complement the tourist trade, because a large number of people wish to travel in comfort for pleasure, for their health or on pilgrimages. Cap de la Madeleine, adjacent to Three Rivers, is a national sanctuary where a hundred thousand pilgrims flock each year to worship and pray under the guidance of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate.

In conclusion, I believe I am serving the best interests of my electors, in keeping with the spirit of the mandate entrusted to me, when I enthusiastically express my determination to support the policy of the St. Laurent government and to vote against the amendments and in favour of the motion for an address to His Excellency.

(Text):

Mr. Matthew MacLean (Cape Breton North-Victoria): Before I proceed with my remarks on the speech from the throne I, too, wish to congratulate the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address. I wish also to extend my congratulations to the Prime Minister on his attainment of his present high and honourable position of Prime Minister and leader of the Liberal party. I congratulate also the new cabinet ministers who have been taken into the government since the last session. I wish to congratulate the Progressive Conservative party on obtaining a new leader, after many trials, and I have no doubt, from what we have already experienced in the house this session, the valley of dry bones is coming to life again. They have won two by-elections and because a ray of light has shone through the dark cloud that has overshadowed them for many years—

Mr. Fleming: Shed a ray of light across Canada.

Mr. MacLean: —they have become very jubilant and see in any small gains the hope of once more obtaining the reins of government. The Tory party always seems to have had the idea of an inherent right to govern. They think that the right to rule was given them by divine authority.

Before I touch upon the matters in the speech from the throne, I wish to call to your attention an article which appeared in the Friday afternoon edition of the Ottawa Journal. It states: "Liberals blamed by Drew for scene interrupting Chevrier." I shall not read the whole article, but shall quote a part of it:

> He had been astonished by the disturbance in the government benches during the address of Transport Minister Chevrier. "Anybody who thinks the first interruptions came from the Progressive Conservative side of the house must not have been in the house at the time," said Mr. Drew.

Does the hon. leader of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, think that all the members in the house are blind and deaf, as they would have to be to give any credence to such a statement? There were over eighty interruptions during the minister's speech, started by the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), who, along with another member on the same side of the house, continually interrupted. Never have I observed more disgraceful behaviour by opposition members towards a minister who has always been most courteous.

An hon. Member: What about the interruptions of the Prime Minister?

Mr. MacLean: I will come to that. The minister did not speak more than thirty minutes and was not allowed the time taken up by the many interruptions.

Mr. Fleming: Order.

Mr. MacLean: If the hon. member wishes to interrupt, I will meet him out in the corridor afterwards. I wish to say here that there was a time when I entertained high hopes for a former house leader of the party opposite, but I am afraid that, by his many silly interruptions, he is becoming a political dwarf. There are a few members on this side of the house of whose actions I disapprove, as most of them are neither constructive nor becoming to a member of this house.

A few nights ago the member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) spoke for about an hour and was allowed that privilege by the members on this side, notwithstanding the fact that it was the same old swan song to which we have listened from that source for many years. If he continues this type of speech much longer, I am afraid he will wear out the alphabet.

In the speech from the throne we are told that the first concern of government in world affairs is to ensure the peace and security of the country. With this aim in view, Canada continues to support the principles of the United Nations charter. In the hope that we may be able to show this determination to those nations who have adopted the communistic form of government, we are to sign the north Atlantic pact. We must be strong so that those who would endeavour to compel us to accept their obnoxious system will awake to a realization that in our hearts the love of freedom is stronger than the enslavement that would necessarily follow the acceptance of their repugnant form of government. There are some in this country who do not believe in the signing of this pact. I cannot understand them, as they appear to me to have warped minds.

What are we doing in this country towards the maintenance of peace? It is true we are passing legislation to protect ourselves and to aid those who are in need. But do we measure up to the standards set by one who spoke with authority? Our country has the name of being a Christian country, but is it? We live day by day as though there were no God. We spend the one day set aside particularly for worship by carrying on our own pleasures. Many absent themselves entirely from divine worship, and I am afraid many members of this house are guilty of this sin. I could go on and preach a sermon to you, but I am not a theologian. In this house there are several members who formerly occupied pulpits, and who are now engaged in trying to solve life's problems by methods other than those they formerly proclaimed. If the views they now advance as a solution or a panacea for all our ills were placed second on the list of possible solutions, I could not quarrel with them. I am firmly convinced, however, that they have drifted very far from the truth. If we wish to prosper we must do as Joshua was advised to do long ago, to turn neither to the right nor to the left, but to observe all the law. If this were done, then he and those over whom he ruled would be prosperous.

Much has been said about farming, and particularly about wheat. I have often wondered whether the western wheat grower sows wheat year after year on the same land. I have been told that many do and that certain acreages have been planted year after year with the same crop. This results in crop failures and soil erosion. I am no authority on farming, but I lived in western Canada for a time and noted how farming operations were conducted. When there is a high world price for wheat, the western farmers wish to handle the sales themselves. When difficult times come, these farmers seek government assistance and lay the blame on the government if they do not receive a higher price than existing conditions make possible.

The western members are continually complaining about the high cost of living, and it is too high. I should like to ask them whether they think the prices of meat, flour, butter, oats, barley and the various vegetables that go to make up our daily diet are too high? I suppose that depends upon the particular products each one produces. I know that in Cape Breton the prices of beef and pork are very high. If one wishes to purchase a steak it costs about ninety cents a pound and I cannot see why the price is so high.

In common with many other members, I have received many letters protesting the tax on soft drinks and jewelry. The letters about soft drinks have been from people in all walks of life, but those concerning jewelry were from jewelers only. Since the member for Parkdale (Mr. Timmins) has spoken at some length on this matter, I shall not take further time in discussing it.

Another matter mentioned in the speech from the throne was the entry of Newfoundland into confederation. This subject brought forth a long and vigorous protest from the leader of the opposition, not about the entry of Newfoundland, but about the unconstitutional method adopted. His argument took up a very considerable amount of time, I think wasted time, as there was nothing to it but words. These words were well delivered, but they were only words, as there was really no constitutional question involved. There was a time when I was very fond of studying constitutional questions. I well remember reading the many cases from Ontario when the late Sir Oliver Mowat fought hard with Sir John A. Macdonald on questions concerning provincial rights. I may say that Sir Oliver was generally right; at least, such were the decisions.

The entry of Newfoundland into confederation will mean much to North Sydney in my constituency, owing to the fact that a great amount of passenger and freight traffic to and from Newfoundland passes through that town. At this point I must state there is a great need of modern docking facilities in that town. For years we have tried to have the Department of Public Works construct a modern wharf for the convenience of the large number of ships entering that port. The number of ships entering the port far exceeds the number of ships entering the port of Halifax, although the tonnage is not nearly so great, because the large liners entering Halifax are of much greater capacity than those entering North Sydney.

Some nights ago the senior hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) raised the question of the port of Halifax being discriminated against by reason of the fact that goods shipped by way of North Sydney to Port aux Basques were regarded as being shipped by an all-rail route. In view of the fact that goods going to Newfoundland via Halifax have a 200-mile advantage in rail haul over the North Sydney route and that goods going via Port aux Basques to St. John's have a further rail haul of several hundred miles, I think it can be easily proven that the Halifax route has nothing to fear, as the water shipment to St. John's from Halifax has the further advantage of cheaper water rates.

It is my hope that in the not too distant future either a bridge or a causeway will be constructed over the strait of Canso to facilitate the conveyance of freight and passengers to and from Cape Breton to the mainland, and I trust that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) will soon give us the report of the engineers on this project.

During the recess last year I had many visits from committees of old age pensioners and others who had not attained the pensionable age but were laid off work when they had reached the age of sixty-five years, with but a small pension from the coal company to maintain themselves and some members of their families. Many of these persons own their own homes and have to pay taxes and insurance; and in many cases they are likely to lose their homes unless something is done to remedy this unhappy situation.

If the pensionable age were reduced to sixty-five for men and to sixty years for women, and if the amount of the pension were raised and the means test were abolished, it would go a long way in bringing much-needed aid to these people. The means test works to the disadvantage of all those owning their own homes, as in such cases the amount of the pension is reduced. Apparently the fact that a pensioner owning his own home has to pay taxes, insurance and repairs, has not been taken into consideration.

The pensioners have for some time been discussing a three-way pension whereby men and women would pay a sum each month as soon as they started to work, and when they retired a much larger pension could be paid to them. Under this scheme the employers and the government would also contribute, but the government would be responsible for all those who did not have the opportunity of paying into such a fund.

One hon. member mentioned the referendum taken in the state of Oregon, where it was decided to give the pension to women at sixty years of age and to men at sixty-five, to pay a pension of $50 a month, and also to reduce the income tax. By the way, two or three years ago I read that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a statement at Fort William, I think it was, advocating this same thing. I do not know whether or not he was correctly reported, but he mentioned that soon there would be no taxes at all. I had intended to keep that clipping for further reference, but it became lost among some papers on my desk. However, I wish to compliment the hon. member for his advocacy for many years of the very things to which I am now referring.

As I was saying, it was decided in Oregon to give a pension on the terms I have mentioned. The next day they discovered that the revenue required to carry out this scheme would cost the state one hundred million dollars, whereas the revenue of the state was about thirty-nine million.

I understand the matter of a contributory pension has been brought to the attention of the local government in Nova Scotia. I trust that this government will take the matter under consideration so that such a scheme may be considered jointly by the various local governments and the federal government so as to devise ways and means to bring about this desirable plan. If our people were paying into a pension fund in this manner, the pension would not be looked upon as a matter of charity.

There is a great cry over all the country and in this house about heavy taxes; and it is true that taxes are a heavy burden on all of us. But, on the other hand, there is a demand for certain social legislation which, if granted, will mean a continuing heavy tax. Take the question of free medical care and hospitalization. This will call for a heavy additional expenditure, and I think there is a limit to which we can go. I believe there are many in this country who are unable to pay for proper treatment, and these should be looked after by the state; but the vast majority are well able to meet such obligations and should not be included in any such scheme.

The government is constantly reminded that it took from the Canadian people $600 million more than was required for the different services. This is not true, if we wish to pay our debts. Suppose I earn $3,000, that I owe $2,000, and am able to save $1,000 from my income. If I am an honest man, I shall pay that $1,000 to reduce my debt. If the government has a surplus above the requirements of meeting its many obligations, then it can reduce the debt by using the surplus; and this will save the Canadian people large sums annually spent in paying interest.

The matter of housing is continually before us. While we are under an obligation to do everything possible for our returned men, I cannot agree with those who state it is a matter for the government to provide houses for all our people. Our forefathers or, shall I say, our parents did not seek government aid when building their homes; and if we continue this paternalism we shall eventually kill all initiative on the part of the individual.

It is noted in the speech that never have so many been employed in this country as at present, and no doubt this is true of many places in this country and in the over-all picture. But in my constituency and in other parts of Nova Scotia there are thousands of unemployed. I shall refer particularly to my home town of Sydney Mines and the adjoining towns of North Sydney and Florence, with a total population of about 17,000. There are several hundred unemployed. Many of the young men in these towns have never had permanent employment, as no new mines are being opened, no new industries have been undertaken, and the only work these young men had was in the armed services. They enlisted after leaving school; and not having a position before enlisting, no company was obliged to hire them. Many had to leave their homes and seek employment in Quebec and Ontario; and after paying for their board and lodging where they are employed, there is little left to help those at home.

The question of opening more coal mines to absorb the unemployed is no solution to the problem, as many of the mines are idle now owing to lack of orders. I have brought this matter to the attention of the department directly concerned, and at the present time some of the coal operators are in the city seeking some solution to the problem. There would be a speedy solution to it if we had in our province a number of industries using coal, as we could produce electric power much cheaper by using our coal than we can in the more expensive way of building large dams at an enormous cost. It is, of course, impossible to build any dams in Nova Scotia.

I have written many letters to firms outside Canada in an endeavour to have some industrial works established, as we are nearer to the South African, South American and European markets than is any other part of Canada. Firms engaged in manufacturing for these foreign markets would have the advantage of all-water rates.

In the matter of shipbuilding, I think that such an industry should have been established on Sydney harbour, as we have the steel industry there, and the plates for ships would not have to be carried thousands of miles by rail. At this point I should like to ask the minister whether the Canadian ships now under Panamanian registry have been purchased outright by a foreign country, or whether it is merely a ruse to escape paying the Canadian rate of wages.

I wish now to refer to certain remarks made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) some days ago. In his reference to world government he stated, as reported at page 1022 of Hansard:

> It appears to me that some of us are a bit lax in our thinking . . . World government means . . . world enslavement.

And may I say that, in spite of what the hon. member states, there is to be a world government some day, when all the problems that today perplex and baffle the wisest among us will be solved; the time spoken of by Tennyson, in his "In Memoriam', when there will be:

> One God, one law, one element,
> And one far-off divine event,
> To which the whole creation moves.

But the solution will not come about by the introduction and adoption of the peculiar and illogical ideas expressed by the member for Macleod and those associated with him.

If money to carry on the government can be raised in any way besides taxing the people, then people need not work; and when we have reached that stage, all must starve. The social credit money will be of no use, as there will be no goods to purchase. You all, no doubt, have read the stories in the book of Daniel of the ancient kings of Babylon, when Daniel was called in to interpret the dream of Nebuchadnezzar and the handwriting on the wall at the feast given by his son Belshazzar, which Daniel interpreted correctly. I think that the fiscal policies enunciated by the Social Credit party would be even to Daniel an insoluble problem.

I might also mention that when Solomon was crowned king he was asked what he most desired and he asked for wisdom. His desire was granted and he was advised that no wiser man theretofore had been born, neither should there be hereafter any one to attain such wisdom. On hearing the hon. member and some of his associates, I wondered whether the writer was in error when he did not know that in the twentieth century there would appear on the world's stage such prophets as the hon. member for Macleod and his associates, whose wisdom apparently far surpasses the wisdom of Solomon and the judgment of Daniel.

In closing, I wish merely to mention the St. Lawrence waterways project, and I may say that in my humble opinion it may be a great thing for Ontario and Quebec but of little or no value to the maritime provinces. Yet if it is for the good of any of our people, I am willing to support it, if like support is given to the maritimes in providing suitable transportation facilities for us—and I particularly refer to the strait of Canso crossing.

Another matter that is causing great concern is the freight rates. Now in connection with this I am inclined to think that we are not fair to the railways. How do we expect them to carry on at present rates when the cost of everything they use has increased in many cases 100 per cent or more, since the rates were last revised?

On motion of Mr. Casselman the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move that the house do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 8, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROVISION FOR EVENING SITTINGS 7.30 TO 10.30 UNTIL LAST SITTING DAY IN APRIL

On the order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. St. Laurent that, except on Wednesdays, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair at six o'clock p.m. until seven-thirty, and shall adjourn the house at ten-thirty p.m. without question put, unless the closure rule (standing order No. 39) be then in operation, this order to be in effect until and upon the last sitting day of the month of April.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I understand that a large number of members of the house wish to give further consideration to the matter involved in the motion, debate on which was adjourned yesterday. I therefore ask that the motion stand.

Motion stands.

EXTRADITION

QUESTION AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES FOR NEW TREATY—PRINCIPLE OF DUAL CRIMINALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rodney Adamson (York West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Unfortunately I have not sent him a copy of it, but he will probably be able to answer it. Is the government negotiating with the government of the United States for a new treaty of extradition? Can the government say whether the principle of dual criminality will remain a part of the treaty?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am unable to answer that question without notice. I shall look into the matter and give the hon. gentleman an answer tomorrow or the next day.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): My question would ordinarily be addressed to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence will the Prime Minister indicate whether it is the intention of the government to introduce a bill during the present session, similar to that introduced in the 1948 session, to revise or amend the Government Annuities Act?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The matter is still under consideration, and no decision has yet been reached.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

IMMIGRATION—REPLACEMENT OF TRADESMEN AND OTHER WORKERS BY DISPLACED PERSONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ronald Moore (Churchill): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, or to his parliamentary assistant. Notice was sent to the minister, but I do not know whether the parliamentary assistant has received it. What action does the Department of Labour intend to take to protect tradesmen and other workers from being put out of work by the use of large numbers of displaced persons? This question is raised on behalf of trades and labour councils at the following points: Windsor, Fort William, and Flin Flon.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that if he wishes to put a question before the orders of the day are called, it should be brief.

Mr. Paul E. Cote (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given notice of his question. In answer I wish to state that the Department of Labour, and the immigration branch of the Department of Mines and Resources, have already taken every precaution to protect Canadian tradesmen and other workers from being displaced by immigrants. In the case of workers who are related to people already in Canada, the Canadian relative is required to sponsor the immigrant, to provide housing, and to undertake that he or she will not become a public charge and, if he or she is a worker, that employment is available.

In the case of persons brought in under the group labour plan, it is first of all ascertained that there are no local people available to fill the vacancies, and the employer who applies is required to guarantee at least twelve months' continuous employment.

All applications are reviewed by an interdepartmental committee on which there is a representative of the national employment service, and if there are people in Canada already available the application is not approved. No workers have been brought to Canada since November 1, 1948, other than those sponsored by persons already in Canada, and who have a relationship with them; and a number of girls for domestic service. Of course, workers' dependents have been coming forward.

The Department of Labour is watching the situation closely, and reports from the national employment offices have in no way indicated that new arrivals are displacing persons already in Canada.

POTATOES

CONSTRUCTION OF WAREHOUSES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, of which I have given him due notice, together with some information which may help him answer the question. Have any new agreements been entered into with the province of Prince Edward Island for the construction of potato warehouses, other than those provided for in the regulations approved by P.C. 4638 under date of December 3, 1947?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The short answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is that there have been no changes in the regulations. As the hon. member has stated, he sent me his file along with notice of the question. To answer his question in full I would say that the telegram he sent on March 1 is in accordance with the facts. With respect to what has been stated by the premier of Prince Edward Island, I would say that he has been to Ottawa and has discussed the possibility of making changes; and I take it from the newspaper reports that he intends to suggest that some changes be made. Up to the present time, however, we have not received the suggestions.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Monday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. Harry R. Jackman (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne there are very few matters that can still usefully be brought up, or in respect of which one may submit a humble contribution, but I should like to say a few words about three matters in particular. The first is the very singular omission from the speech from the throne of any reference to old age pensions or a national retirement plan; the second is the matter of housing, which was touched upon very sketchily, and finally, I should like, before the budget is prepared, to make a few remarks on the subject of taxation.

The most striking omission from the speech from the throne was the complete absence of any reference to old age pensions or a national retirement plan. Last season we saw the present government reduce the rate on government annuities from four per cent to three per cent, making it that much more difficult for our people to provide a little self-help and thus in part at least look after themselves in their old age. Surely this was a backward step; for I do not suppose there is a single member of any party in this house who does not believe in contributory old age pensions. And what a little contribution it was, under the old dominion government annuities scheme, for the government to allow four per cent; it was not a high average rate, having in mind the average rate paid on government bonds over a long period. But the government saw fit to reduce it to three per cent.

I should like to bring before the house a suggestion I offered last year, the acceptance of which would enable the ordinary citizen to make some provision, before taxation, for his old age. Many industrial companies, as well as the government, have old age pension plans or superannuation benefits, and to these plans the employer, the employee and the state make contributions. The contribution made by the employee, usually about four or five per cent of his weekly wage, is tax free; in other words the employee does not pay any tax on the amount he puts into this superannuation or old age pension plan. According to an estimate made the other day by one of our fellow members there are 800,000 people in Canada today who are able to take advantage of government-approved plans under which one may save before taxation. If this government were genuinely and sincerely interested in the problems of old age and in making some kind of provision therefor, long ago they would have put on the statute books a plan under which any individual, whether a government employee, an employee of some large company with an approved plan, or anyone else, would be able to make a weekly contribution to a national retirement plan—which is the name I shall give it. These contributions would all be deductible from earnings before tax is collected, and they would come off the top bracket. Thus it is possible for some fortunate individuals to save before taxation. The majority of our people, however, are not favoured by being permitted to come under such a plan.

Just to bring the idea home to hon. gentlemen may I suggest what it would do for members of this house. Our indemnities are $4,000. If we were allowed to put something by before taxation, as do 800,000 of our people, five per cent on $4,000 would be $200 that we might put into a retirement plan; and that $200 would not be subject to taxation at whatever our top bracket might be. A cabinet minister would be able to put by five per cent of his salary, or $800. These plans also contain provisions under which one may make contributions in respect of previous years of service, up to a maximum amount of $900 per year. Therefore a cabinet minister would be allowed to deduct $800 from his current earnings and to put by $900 per year until he had made up for his past services; he would have a total of $1,700 off his top bracket, and thus would be able to make some provision for his old age.

In the same way, Mr. Speaker, this plan can be adapted to all our people, and the savings are proportionate in all brackets. When the contributor under the plan receives his annuity he is taxed in respect of the whole amount; therefore the revenue department would not lose out entirely by allowing this saving before taxation. However, as will be readily seen, when a man retires he is no longer in receipt of his weekly pay envelope; he has only his small annuity, and if he is in any tax bracket it is a very low bracket.

What I complain about, sir, is that the government has accepted this principle of saving before taxation for a large proportion of our people, but it refuses to set up any plan under which the majority of our wage earners and others who want to make some provision for their old age may receive the same consideration. No one will deny the great social advantage of helping a man to help himself to provide for his old age. Why, then, should the government not make it possible for all our people to save up to five per cent of their earnings before taxation?

If the employer does not contribute because the majority of people work for small companies or are self-employed and there is no plan available, why should these people not be allowed to save up to ten per cent, if possible, of their yearly earnings, this amount to be put into a government-sponsored plan such as dominion government annuities? I throw out a challenge to the great life insurance companies of this country to design a plan which will receive government approval to the end that the individual who does not come under a superannuation plan may pay up to five per cent, or, as I have just suggested, up to ten per cent of his earnings where no employer is contributing on his behalf. By this method a very substantial sum would be accumulated which would permit a man a decent retiring allowance at a reasonable age.

If that were done in the case with the members of this house—so that the point will be readily understood—ten per cent of the $4,000 indemnity would be put aside. This amount would be deducted from the gross income and put into this government-supervised or government-approved plan. The deduction would be $400 per year, and the regular tax rates would apply on the balance of his income. I cannot advocate too strongly, Mr. Speaker, the plan I have been suggesting, because it does seem most unfair that some of us are enabled to take advantage of such a plan—and I may say I am one of these—while others cannot. As I have pointed out, there are some 800,000 people who do take advantage of such a plan, but there are probably several times that number who are unable to do so because of the laxity of the government in the matter of passing reasonable legislation based on principles which the government has already approved.

The second point to which I wish to address a few remarks, Mr. Speaker, has to do with housing. It is of particular importance in my riding, because the Regent Park housing development, which is attracting attention not only throughout Canada but perhaps throughout the whole of North America, is located there. It is the first experiment in co-operation between the city, the province and the federal government in sharing the cost. In the city of Toronto the housing situation is probably more acute than it is in most other centres in Canada. I am informed that Toronto and its suburbs are today the fastest growing areas in Canada. This is partly due to a natural growth and partly due to a large influx of immigrants in that vicinity. At the same time we find that the amount of construction of housing units in Toronto proper in 1947 was less than seven per cent of the total construction. The remaining ninety-three per cent went into commercial enterprises, such as moving picture theatres, warehouses, stores, churches, hotels, etc. In 1947 almost as much construction was for the housing of automobiles as for the housing of people. A substantial amount of house construction was undertaken in the adjoining municipalities.

In Toronto there is a shortage of land on which to construct any large-scale housing development. Nevertheless there is plenty of room for apartment house sites and multiple dwelling units. This is borne out by the construction figures for the city of Toronto proper in 1948. Instead of $2,156,000 being spent on housing, as in 1947, including apartments, we find that $3,563,000 was spent in 1948. In other words, whereas in 1947 only seven per cent of the total construction undertaken in Toronto was for housing units, in 1948 eleven per cent was for this purpose. Business and commercial enterprises undoubtedly had a priority over veterans' housing, but by 1948 the demands of industry and commerce were beginning to fall off. The failure of the government to adopt a system of permits from Ottawa until the post-war housing shortage was eliminated has resulted in a great diversion of labour and building materials from housing to commercial structures.

I make no apology, Mr. Speaker, for bringing up the subject of controls after the war period when so many hundreds of thousands of our young men were overseas. When these men returned they were getting married and beginning to raise families. During their long years of absence they were unable to provide themselves with a house. Undoubtedly, therefore, we were faced with an emergency at that time for which the government did nothing to find a satisfactory solution. The result was that the municipalities were left to control housing permits. One municipality could not say: No; you must not build this factory or this moving picture palace here, because the company or the moving picture exhibitor would simply go to the adjoining municipality. There would be no net gain for the country as a whole so far as housing units were concerned. The cost of building a moving picture theatre is not nearly as important to the exhibitor as the cost of building a house is to the returned man or any other young man who is endeavouring to set up his own home.

The result has been the outbidding of the prospective home owner for labour and materials, and his consequent inability to afford a house. Some control should have been exercised from Ottawa over the type of building which has been allowed during the last five years. Had such controls been put into operation, today we would have solved the real difficulty of a housing shortage. We might not have had quite so many motion picture houses as we have in some areas, and even now some people are alarmed over the possibility that all these theatres are not going to be required. There is a possibility that the motion picture industry has overbuilt.

The minister of reconstruction is quoted as saying that even if the government and industry are successful in constructing 100,000 additional housing units in 1949, that could not come close to solving the housing shortage. He said the over-all housing situation was not good, Mr. Speaker—and this is after five years. A main factor in the demand for houses is the formation of new families. The minister said that last year there were 83,000 units completed, and new familiy formations were estimated at 80,000; so you can see that we gained only 3,000 units from that point of view alone.

The government has no adequate housing policy for our people. In fact the government, through one department and another, has done more to discourage housing than to assist it. While rent controls were necessary, the handling of them and the maladministration by the government has done much to discourage investment in rental housing. In my riding there are many people who, once they have acquired their own little home, put their savings into a neighbouring house as their nest egg. The administration of rental controls has been a definite discouragement to the construction of rental housing which the government would like to see brought about.

It might also be pointed out that just as our wheat farmers feel that they have been made to bear the whole burden of selling cheap wheat to the United Kingdom, so many landlords feel that they have been made to bear the full burden of rent controls based on pre-war rentals and vacancies. In both cases justice might well have dictated that the burden be borne by all our people rather than by the few.

One of the most serious handicaps to building in our suburban areas is municipal taxation. Small suburban municipalities had a difficult time in the thirties, and they do not want again to get themselves into a similar position. These communities are mostly residential, and the men work in the adjoining cities. If times become difficult, local taxation is hard to collect, and there are no large companies with reserves out of which taxes can be paid. Therefore one can understand the position of some of these small municipalities which do not want to increase their population too rapidly, and which therefore insist on fewer but costlier houses being built in a given land area.

It should be realized that when so many services, together with the cost of education, are taxed against a small municipality, its tax burden may become great—indeed, in difficult times, impossible. It is for this reason that the province of Ontario is now bearing more than fifty per cent of the cost of education. At the same time the unfair distribution of the cost of education and other services clearly shows why there should be a resumption of the dominion-provincial conference, to the end that the taxing power of our political authorities may be adjusted according to their needs and responsibilities. The leader of the official opposition (Mr. Drew) has long been aware of this situation, and it is for that reason that he has at all times desired the resumption of the sittings of the dominion-provincial conferences.

The government has done nothing to stimulate the chief bottleneck in the building industry. That bottleneck is not so much a scarcity of labour as it is a scarcity of building materials, such as electrical and plumbing fixtures, bricks, hardware items, and so on. For years I have recommended that the government stimulate the production of building materials to meet the acute housing shortage resulting from the lack of any building during the war years. In particular, in March, 1946, in a speech on housing, I recommended that the government allow manufacturers of building supplies to create additions to their factories in order to meet the emergency which at that time I said might last for five years, even though there might not be use for that additional capacity in the distant future. As I said then, it may last longer than that, but I do not see how it can last for less. I said that the government should allow the owners of these industries to write off the cost of the excess building material capacity during the period of the crisis. Nothing has been done in this regard, and we are still short of building materials.

The last suggestion for solving the housing difficulty, with which the government is admittedly making no headway, again brings me into the field of taxation. If building tradesmen and contractors were given some reward for additional production rather than a penalty by way of a higher tax rate, one might expect a material improvement in the number of housing units constructed. If it is made worth while, there is no doubt that many tradesmen would like to work on Saturday mornings in order to help to relieve the housing shortage, particularly where veterans are concerned, but not when the workmen are obliged to work for considerably less per hour than they do during the rest of the week because of the effect of getting into a higher income tax bracket.

I should now like to make a few remarks about the bare statement in the speech from the throne with regard to taxation. It reads as follows:

> Prosperous conditions now prevailing are being reflected in the buoyant level of national revenues; a condition to which due consideration is being given by my ministers in the preparation of forthcoming budgetary proposals.

Some members of the press and others have taken this to mean the foreshadowing of some reduction from the present discouraging rates of taxation. This is by no means a necessary inference. Last year, because of the "buoyancy"—a word which the officials of the Department of Finance seem to be fond of using—of our national income and of our national economy, no relief could be given to the taxpayer. Indeed, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in his budget address of May 18, 1948, said, by way of apology and justification for not reducing the discouraging rate of taxation, that there was never a better time to continue high taxation and to reduce the burden of our national debt. On page 4057 of Hansard of that date the Minister of Finance is reported to have said:

> We can do it now—

That is, debt reduction.

> —without hardship and thereby get ourselves in better position to bear the extra burdens we may have to assume when our national income becomes less buoyant or other untoward developments occur.

We have seen nothing to indicate that we are not to have a prosperous 1949. Indeed the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) only a few weeks ago said that the volume of business and the total of our national income would be most satisfactory and would compare most favourably with 1948. If therefore we are to take the reasoning of the Minister of Finance last year, we cannot expect any reduction in taxation.

An hon. Member: We can expect higher taxation.

Mr. Jackman: Yes. As one of my colleagues remarked, if the national income is higher, as I think the minister said it might be, we may expect higher taxation.

In the speech from the throne the government declares that:

> Prosperous conditions now prevailing are being reflected in the buoyant level of national revenues—

—and that this is to be given due consideration in the forthcoming budget. What does the government mean? Is it ambiguity and double talk? If we are to give them credit for honesty of intention and language last year, it can only mean that no relief from discouraging taxation is promised to our people at the present time, despite their insistent clamour. However, 1949 is likely to be an election year; and although the government has declared its belief in the principle that taxation should not be reduced when our economy is prosperous, they will no doubt give "due consideration" to abandoning their declared principles and to descending to what in their eyes must be the low level of political expediency.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the bureaucrats in the Department of Finance will say to the ministers when apparently the ministers now refuse to follow the dictates of these men who have for so long been controlling the destinies not only of our country but of our individual lives.

The Progressive Conservatives, on the other hand, have always believed in fairness and a rate of taxation which would not discourage production; for without production there can be no increase in the standard of living of our people, which is our chief desire and aim. It is not unreasonable to expect that, with a growing and expanding volume of national business, under reasonable rates of taxation the total of national revenues would be greater rather than less, and that any necessary debt reduction could be better achieved in this manner. Particularly do we believe that relief from discouraging rates of taxation should be given when our surplus of revenues over expenditures amounts to no less than $600 million for the present fiscal year, or an amount equal to $50 per head for every man, woman and child.

I wonder what the great majority of the people in Rosedale riding would say if you were to call on them and say: Not only have you paid your federal bills, but here is a rebate of $50 per head. They could do so many things with that. It would be very much like four or five Christmases rolled into one. First of all, they could pay their bills. Second, they could acquire a few more necessities which they badly need. I have already mentioned the Regent Park development and the improvements which are planned for that large area. Third, many of my people would be able to send their boys and girls to high school instead of letting them go to work when they are fifteen or sixteen years of age, if they could only get this $50 per head which the government has wrongly taken from them this year, as it did last year. Fourth, many of my people have never had a decent holiday in their lives. If it were not for the fresh air camps in some of the areas in Rosedale riding, many of the children would never have had a summer camp holiday. If you could give them back $50 of their own money—not the government's money—these children would be able to build up their little bodies for the school season and the rigours of the winter. There would be much greater satisfaction all round if the government would not seek to overtax the people as it does at the present time.

If debt reduction, sir, were the sole by-product of high taxation and surplus revenue, the government might have some measure of justification; but everyone knows what one does when one's pocket is full—he spends. Last year the budget surplus was $670 million. This year it promises to be well over $600 million, an amount greater than the total of all the taxes on personal incomes. It is almost incomprehensible to many of us that the surplus which the government hardly expected to get is greater than the total of all the taxes on personal incomes—and I am not now speaking of corporation incomes. In other words, if we did not believe that personal income tax was a substantial and worth-while part of our tax structure, because of the revenues which we have taken this year and in 1947, we could abolish the whole thing. But the added by-product of this surplus and excessive taxation is not only that the people are deprived of what is justly theirs, but that the government, with an overflowing treasury, spends with a free hand. Free spending is the inevitable result of a full pocketbook—easy come, easy go.

If we are to have taxation reduced to a reasonable level, then not only must the government budget more closely, but it must reduce its expenditures. The estimates now take up over 300 pages of closely-printed material; but in many cases there is no fault to find with the purposes for which the money is asked. The same thing would apply to every individual in Canada if he or she were to budget his or her expenditures for a ten per cent or a twenty-five per cent increase. In practically every instance a very good case could be made out, not only for the desirability but for the necessity of these increased expenditures. But the reason that we ordinary people live within our incomes is that we have to. We cannot levy taxes on someone else as does the Liberal government. We have to earn by the sweat of our brows the money which we spend, and we adjust our expenditures accordingly. Unfortunately the government can itself earn nothing, because it can create nothing. But by the same token the government should say that it will spend of the national income so much and no more. Only by this means can taxation be held within reasonable levels and the people be left with some share to meet their own increasing costs, to provide a down payment on the house that they wish to buy, or to put something by for their old age.

The present rates of taxation are simply an aftermath of wartime taxation. The government has grown accustomed to these extraordinary rates of taxation, and the people, while complaining, have not yet put up that resistance which will be more manifest when this government shortly goes to the polls. The government is reluctant to give up these high taxing powers, and the people are becoming insistent on getting some reasonable share of their own income to spend in the way in which they see fit.

What is the effect of the present discouraging rate of taxation? In 1939 the total personal income tax collected from our people amounted to $57 million. Can hon. members believe that? In 1948 it amounted to $659 million, an increase of over 1,100 per cent. In 1939 the personal income tax exemptions were $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for married persons. Now these exemptions are $750 and $1,500. During the same period the cost of living index has risen from 100 to 160, or sixty per cent. Relating this increase to the cost of living in terms of ability to buy things or to maintain a standard of living, the exemptions allowed in 1939—that is, $1,000 and $2,000—would in 1949 be worth $1,600 for a single person and $3,200 for a married couple. Thus we find that not only have income tax rates gone up excessively, but present day exemptions of $750 and $1,500 are less than half, so far as ability to live is concerned, what they were in 1939. The present low exemptions reduce the standard of living of our people below the level which the resources of our country and a reasonable standard of living demand.

If some of our cabinet ministers would become better acquainted with the life of our people they would find what deprivations have to be made in order that people may meet their bills and at the same time pay their taxes. Any restaurant proprietor in Ottawa will tell you that the customary lunch of many government employees in the lower salary brackets consists of a sandwich and a cup of coffee, a diet which is inadequate for health and efficiency. Yet the same employees have pay-roll deductions from their small income.

How it is possible for any single person to live, particularly in the larger cities and away from home, on $750 per annum is something that the government should take some pains to demonstrate. Or how a married couple can live on $1,500 a year, with the present high cost of nearly everything they require, is a problem which hundreds of thousands of our citizens are finding great difficulty in solving. Yet once anything over these small exemptions is earned, the income tax applies, starting at 10 per cent on the first $100 of income over the minimum exemptions and 20 per cent on anything over $500. Then the tax proceeds up to 80 per cent with an additional four per cent on investment income. Are these not discouraging rates?

Not only have government expenditures been excessive, but the overtaxation which is now being carried on has resulted in a surplus of over $600 million. There are many points which I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, in regard to matters which I hope might be given some consideration when the budget comes down. The reason I have taken this opportunity to put forward a few of them is that the budget is a hard and fast document, and a debate on the budget affords very little hope of having constructive suggestions adopted. Yet we find that over half the income tax is paid by people whose incomes are $5,000 or less; we find these taxes going down to the lower brackets, with the result that production is discouraged. We cannot expect to have a better standard of living if we do not do something to encourage production.

Here may I draw attention to the platform of the Progressive Conservative party as laid down at its convention last October. The suggestion was that exemptions for children should be increased by $200 per child. That is to say, it would be $300 per child where the mother of such child is in receipt of family allowances, and $500 per child where family allowances are not received. At the same time personal exemptions should be increased to at least $2,500 for married persons and $1,250 for single persons.

Some hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Cruickshank: Too bad you couldn't read the last page.

Mr. L. D. Tremblay (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I wish in the first place to join wholeheartedly in the well-deserved compliments which have been paid to the mover and seconder by hon. members who have preceded me. The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), who was elected to the house in 1945, was not long in winning the friendship of his fellow members. No sooner had he arrived here than he was noticed for his industry and his regular attendance in the house as well as in committees of which he was a member. He was noticed for his courtesy and his ever-present cheerfulness, and for his understanding of the various problems constantly brought to the attention of hon. members. Those qualities were strikingly exemplified by the splendid speech he delivered in moving the address. I am glad indeed to congratulate him.

(Translation):

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers), who seconded the motion on the address in reply, had just crossed the threshold of this house for the first time, when, in his maiden speech, he displayed the great qualities of heart and mind that immediately earned him the esteem and regard of all his colleagues, after the splendid tribute of confidence he had received from the constituents of the county he represents here with such distinction. We congratulate him most heartily.

(Text):

No one needs to have a gift of prophecy to predict for both these hon. members a long and fruitful political career.

I do not claim that these few words of mine will add much to the thousand and one testimonials of affection and appreciation which flowed from all parts of the country after the rise to the position of Prime Minister of the man whom we are now so proud to have as our leader. Ever since the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King) decided to relinquish the office he had held for so long because of the high confidence placed in him by the Canadian people, Canada and all democratic countries have found cause to rejoice in the fact that our country has been able to find among its most distinguished sons a worthy successor to that great man, the right hon. member for Glengarry, and his predecessors. Since he has been at the helm of state, each day we find cause to thank Providence for the wisdom, common sense, efficiency and enlightened patriotism which the new Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has constantly shown in the directing and managing of our national affairs.

The speech from the throne, which I intend to discuss in a moment, truly indicates his never-failing concern for all matters in the field of our political, social, economic and family life. On January 31 last in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix Bruce Hutchison, referring to our Prime Minister's "curious instinctive shyness" said, among other things:

> At first meeting with a stranger this shyness is maintained as a kind of protective armour, but not for long.

As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) experienced at the very outset. Mr. Hutchison goes on to say:

> Within five minutes it drops off suddenly to reveal the composite thing we call the Canadian, the authentic article by birth, instinct and environment.

And in conclusion he says:

> Such a man is now to undergo the test of parliament. But parliament itself will be tested in the process. We shall now see St. Laurent: the qualities of simplicity, frankness and homeliness, are the qualities which parliament wants in a national leader. We shall now see the trial of the most typical Canadian of his time.

Well, the test has taken place. Hon. members who witnessed it, or those who merely read Hansard of January 28 and 31, know that the so-called superman who now leads the official opposition—and whom I wish to congratulate upon his appointment to his post, where no doubt the justified mistrust of the Canadian nation will keep him permanently—must not depend too much upon that curious shyness of the Prime Minister. As a matter of fact, in the very first encounter the Prime Minister had not yet exhausted the five-minute period referred to by Mr. Hutchison when the house realized that the proud, magnificent, ostentatious new leader of the opposition was but a clay-footed colossus, after all.

With all my colleagues of the Liberal party, and all my constituents, I wish to pay tribute to the new ministers in the cabinet. The new Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) is still a young man, one who had reached the top rank in the administration of his great and progressive province of Manitoba. His competence, his boundless activity, his untiring devotion to duty, his truly Canadian patriotism, marked him for the services of the whole country and the great responsibility he has now assumed, to the satisfaction of all Canadians.

Considering the present state of confusion among the democratic nations, the Department of External Affairs needed an experienced statesman, a poised as well as a determined Canadian to represent this country adequately among the united nations. The Prime Minister was well advised when he called to that position the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson), a great diplomat who so creditably discharged the duties of under-secretary of state for external affairs.

As to the brilliant, popular and genial Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters), whose rapid promotion is a well-deserved tribute to his industry and competence, we can apply to him the words of the Cid:

(Translation):

> In truth, I am still young, but those who are well-born do not wait for the lapse of many years before proving their worth.

(Text):

Let him not be shocked if his warm sincerity stirs some politicians who are dazzled by truth as though by light. The people will judge. The minister deserves our congratulations and has our best wishes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss every aspect of the speech from the throne. The Prime Minister, with his customary clarity, analysed it brilliantly, and several ministers and members have discussed it from all angles.

It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the first concern of the government is the maintenance of peace and security throughout the world. At the very outset of the speech from the throne His Excellency stated —and I quote from page 2 of Hansard of January 26:

> The first concern of government in world affairs is to ensure peace and security. To this end, Canada continues to support the principles of the United Nations charter. Our foreign policy is based on the realities and dangers of the existing situation. One of these is the communist menace. Until the United Nations are able to provide an adequate guarantee of peace and security, peace-loving nations will also be obliged to seek security by combining their strength.

Indeed, sir, our foreign policy is based on realities. After the last war, the second world conflict which has loosed its terrors and its miseries upon our generation, the whole world implored Divine Providence to give the leaders of nations guidance in order to enable them to build an organization capable of ensuring peace and security consistent with justice, and respect for the dignity of man.

Notwithstanding its shortcomings, the United Nations organization gave rise to a great deal of hope at the outset but, when his new league of nations proceeded to carry out what peace-loving nations expected of it, disappointment was heaped upon disappointment because, owing to the right of veto which the great powers had seen fit to reserve for themselves, any one of them could paralyse utterly any effective plan to prevent future wars. It soon became obvious that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics would do everything in her power to prevent a powerful organization from checkmating her avowed ambition of expansion and world domination, and that she would consistently veto the creation of any body which could thwart her plan in this respect, and prevent her from realizing what she undoubtedly considers as the most essential part of her program, world revolution.

The democratic world was gripped with fear, and the greatest apprehensions seemed justified in face of the increasingly obvious inability of the United Nations organization to find a proper solution. The outlook was dark; the atmosphere was ominous. Were we bound for another unavoidable disaster? Could we really be slipping towards an abyss? Such were the questions which the anxious peoples of the world were asking themselves in the face of a desperate situation to which there was apparently no solution. What could we do before the implacable hatred of Moscow's atheists and their enslaved satellites? What could we do? Such was the question which all leaders and statesmen who were truly and sincerely striving to restore peace and happiness in the world anxiously asked themselves.

We were in 1947. The United Nations organization was meeting in London under the spectre of another war which haunted all minds. Could any headway be made at the London conference? Russia and her flunkeys proved more obstinate than ever. It fell to a Canadian to reawaken hope. He made a suggestion to the delegates of all the United Nations, and he presented it simply, unostentatiously, plainly and fearlessly. This is what he said:

> Nations, in their search for peace and co-operation, will not and cannot accept indefinitely an unaltered council which was set up to ensure their security, and which so many feel has become frozen in futility and divided by dissension. If forced they may seek greater safety in an association of democratic and peace-loving states willing to accept more specific international obligations in return for a greater measure of national security.

His warning that, if the security council were not made more effective, the states of the western hemisphere might be forced to form an alliance, was described in the New York Herald Tribune as one of the most significant pronouncements made before the general assembly. The idea gained ground. Last summer the western European states signed a mutual guarantee treaty, and now the speech from the throne states, at page 2 of Hansard:

> The north Atlantic nations, including Canada, are negotiating a security pact. The treaty when concluded will be laid before you for approval.

This idea of the peace-loving nations getting together in order to ensure world peace was first suggested, as I have said—and this will be to Canada's everlasting credit—by a Canadian, none other than the former Secretary of State for External Affairs who is now Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. St. Laurent). The speech from the throne states that the north Atlantic treaty will supplement the treaty of mutual guarantee, signed by the western European nations at Brussels last year. These treaties, bringing fresh hope to millions of human beings who want to live in peace, form a tremendous barrier against the unavowable manoeuvres of international communism. And to think there are in this country, in our good old province of Quebec, in this very house, shameless politicians who would endanger such defensive alliances between peace-loving nations in the hope of reaping some political benefit.

Those in the province of Quebec to whom I refer are well known to us. In 1911 they joined hands with the Tory imperialists in order to fight their great compatriot Laurier, under the hypocritical cover of a narrow-minded and stunted nationalism. And now, masquerading under the name of independents and autonomists, they are about to lend their puny help to the Tories of 1949. And so, today, we witness a deplorable scene, a burlesque comedy in which a party leader goes on record as favouring a permanent union of the western nations, while Ivan Sabourin, his Montreal Cerberus, denounces such a union and advocates isolationism and neutrality.

For the enlightenment of that fierce isolationist in whom the leader of the opposition has full confidence I shall recall that His Holiness said recently—and I quote from a British United Press report published in the issue of L'Action Catholique of January 11, 1949:

His Holiness, Pope Pius the XII, declared to eighteen members of the British parliament that time was past when individuals, associations and nations could isolate themselves. You realize, said His Holiness, "that time is past when individuals, associations and nations could live in complete isolation."

Mr. Sabourin would do well also to ponder the following words taken from His Holiness Pope Pius XII's Christmas message to the world:

An earnest Christian cannot shut himself into an easy and selfish isolation when he comes across needy and destitute brothers, when he learns of the aberrations of a die-hard nationalism which denies or holds in contempt the common bonds which unite nations and place upon each other a great diversity of duties to the great family of nations.

I want to tell the leader of the opposition that these uncouth methods of his cast much discredit upon my province, and that my compatriots will never be fooled by his duplicity nor, may I add, by his Duplessis. Since the opening of the debate several of my colleagues from the province of Quebec have reminded the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) of our motto, "Je me souviens." The Tory leader, as was stated the other day by my colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Picard), doubtless would give a great deal to have this noble and proud province of Quebec forget the aspersions he has heaped upon it. He is wasting his time, however, because when the oldest Canadian province gives its verdict at the next general election this modern hero, wrapped in Byronic gloom, no doubt will follow other worthy predecessors into the haven of Roche-Pauvre where, in days of old, Amadis sought to bury his despair when he had offended the lady of his dreams.

Those who dream of a great, strong, happy and prosperous Canada hail with legitimate pride the entry of Newfoundland into the Canadian confederation. Like the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), I believe that the great majority of Canadians, and all members of this house with a single exception, sincerely rejoice that the people of Newfoundland will now contribute to the greatness of our country. To our new fellow countrymen we extend our heartiest and most fraternal welcome.

I wish to point to certain other matters mentioned in the speech from the throne, such as the economic recovery of European countries in spite of the social and economic agitation systematically planned by the communists; the industrial development of Canada; the unprecedented level of employment; the freedom of trade in our country capable of ensuring to all a high standard of living, of social justice and of individual liberty; the St. Lawrence deep waterway project; the abrogation of appeals to the privy council; Canada's part in drafting the United Nations' trade charter and the general agreement on customs tariffs and trade to be submitted for parliament's approval during the present session. This brief and incomplete list is sufficient to show the variety and far-reaching effects of the problems our government must consider and solve, and to which I am sure it brings all the attention, patriotism and high degree of efficiency required.

There is one field of government policy to which I would like to draw particular attention; that is the health and welfare program. In this connection the speech from the throne states:

The national health program inaugurated by the government last year, is receiving co-operation from all the provinces. In supplementing provincial health measures, the program has already made a contribution to the health facilities of Canada and will thereby bring increasing benefit to our people.

In the masterful summary which he gave this house on February 23 last, the untiring Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) made known the strong impetus given to national health throughout Canada by the federal government's policy of helping the province. Recalling to us the outline of the national health program announced on May 14 last by the former Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare declared, as reported at page 833 of Hansard for February 23, 1949:

(1) Federal grants totaling $620,000 have been provided to enable the provinces to make comprehensive surveys of the Canadian health scene.

(2) To strengthen and extend provincial health services, initial grants of $16,495,000 will be available each year for public health research and public health projects; to train professional health workers, to help crippled children, to fight venereal disease, to control tuberculosis, to strengthen cancer control campaigns, and to promote mental health.

(3) Great increases in hospital accommodation are being encouraged by annual grants to the provinces, totalling $13 million a year.

These grants make possible an additional expenditure of $30 million or more each year on Canada's hospitals and health services. This is almost as much money as was spent on public health by all governments in Canada—federal, provincial and municipal—as recently as 1933. This program of federal health grants is twice as much on a per capita basis as the federal health grants program in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this is how the Liberal government of Canada co-operates with the provincial governments towards the health and welfare of Canadians. I take this opportunity to thank the government and more particularly my good friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare for having allowed my constituency, under the order concerning grants for building hospitals, a grant of $200,557.50. My constituents and all the citizens of Canada will not fail to note, I am sure, the spirit of justice, the broadmindedness, the generosity and impartiality of the Liberal government at Ottawa in the distribution of its bounty to the provinces of the Canadian confederation. Whether in the field of public health, family welfare or any other sphere, the Liberal government does not ask the provinces if they have a Liberal, a Conservative or other kind of government; it does not try to find out whether or not the mother who has just given a son to the nation supports the government; its beneficial legislation comes to the help of all the provinces and all the citizens of the country, and its solicitude extends to every Canadian, regardless of race, religion, language or political creed.

Among the most beneficial measures mentioned in the speech from the throne there is one, Mr. Speaker, which perhaps more than any other will warm the heart of every Canadian mother and father and which proves conclusively the concern of the government and its leader for the constant improvement of the living conditions of our large families. I refer to the one mentioned in paragraph 10, page 3 of Hansard of January 26, which reads as follows:

A bill will be introduced to broaden the scope of the Family Allowances Act, as a further instalment of the policy of the government to provide a national standard of social security and human welfare designed to assure the greatest possible measure of social justice for all Canadians.

We will always be happy and proud, Mr. Speaker, to be able to state that the Liberal party was the originator, the father of social legislation in Canada. I pay tribute to the leader of the government for his courageous and patriotic stand on the matter. It will remain to his credit and glory that at the very first session of his administration he made the welfare of our fine large Canadian families his first concern. Is it not strange, Mr. Speaker, that the elimination of the decreasing rate under the Family Allowances Act by the new Prime Minister, at his first session, should coincide with the entry into parliament of the new leader of the opposition, the most bitter opponent of family allowances who, when this act was introduced, stated on August 3, 1944, as reported in the Globe and Mail:

This bill is an outrageous bribe offered to the people of Quebec immediately before an election on which Mr. King's last chance of political survival depends.

And who, again on August 9, 1944, said over the radio:

But I assure you that the government of Ontario—

—of which he was then prime minister—

—intends to do everything within its power to make sure that this iniquitous bill does not go into effect.

After that Mr. Sabourin, the juggler, will rummage through his master's past in order to prove to the people of Quebec that "Drew is the father of family allowances." How ironical fate can be, Mr. Speaker, when it deals with political opportunists!

Knowing as I do the good disposition of the leader of the Canadian nation, who is also a good father, I shall conclude by calling his attention and that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to a feature of our taxation system which constitutes a heavy, if not unjust, burden upon the shoulders of the heads of households. It is the paltry $100 exemption granted for each child in receipt of family allowances and the inadequate $300 exemption in the case of each dependent child over sixteen years of age and under twenty-one still attending school.

A memorandum recently forwarded to the proper authorities by the chamber of commerce of Montreal contained the following recommendations:

That the $750 exemption granted taxpayers having no dependents be increased to at least $1,000.

That the $1,500 exemption granted taxpayers having married status be increased to at least $2,000.

That all exemptions granted in favour of children and other dependents be increased to at least $400 per dependent instead of $100 and $300, family allowances being excluded from consideration and being entirely separated from the system of taxation applicable to taxpayers with dependents.

Not only do I fully agree with the above suggestions, but I would go even farther. I believe that the legal exemptions from income tax should be increased to $3,000 for the heads of families and $1,500 for a single person. I am asking the government to enact this. Those who have gone through the hardship which the raising of a large family entails, and who have sacrificed themselves to give their children the benefit of a university education, know quite well that it is not when the children are fifteen, eighteen or even twenty years old that the cost of their education is the highest. It is highest when the children are between twenty and twenty-five. The burden upon the father of a family with two, three or four children attending university is a frightening and crushing one. The government should extend the exemption granted for children until the children graduate from the university. Furthermore, this exemption should be increased to at least $400 for each child.

These suggestions are being offered to the government on behalf of thousands of Canadian fathers. I am confident that the budget will show how far the government is prepared to go in helping them.

Mr. E. L. Bowerman (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, there is a matter with which I should like to deal before this debate is concluded. It has to do with the treatment of Indians in northern Saskatchewan, of which my constituency is a part. The throne speech fails to refer to this matter and some of us are wondering why. For the basis of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, on the educational requirements of treaty Indians, I intend to use a brief submitted by Mr. M. F. Norris, Saskatchewan government field agent for northern Saskatchewan, and a survey made by C. H. Piercy, the northern education administrator for the same government.

While treaty Indians are constitutionally the responsibility of the federal government and the department of Indian Affairs, they are also citizens domiciled within the provinces. I should like to call to the attention of this house that the government of the province of Saskatchewan has fulfilled its obligation towards providing educational facilities in the northern settlements of Saskatchewan for Metis and other franchised citizens. This is in keeping with the mandate given that government which maintains that, so long as any person or group of people in this province is under-privileged, the social and economic democracy to which the government is pledged cannot be realized. In the case of the Indian settlements the responsibility is primarily upon this government and the department of Indian Affairs.

In a report of a survey made by C. H. Piercy, northern education administrator, he submits the need for schools in settlements in northern Saskatchewan where the population is predominantly treaty Indians. Twelve such settlements in northern Saskatchewan are mentioned in which schools are required. In addition, he recommended the replacement of three schools. He further recommended that construction of these schools and grants for them be shared by the dominion and provincial governments on a proportional basis according to enrolment. In the case of Stanley and other such similar settlements where treaty Indians predominate, the responsibility is primarily that of the department of Indian affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the crown promised to provide schools for Indians. In the book "The Treaties of Canada", Lieutenant Governor Alexander Morris stated:

> The treaties provide for the establishment of schools, for the instruction of Indian children. This is a very important feature, and is deserving of being pressed with utmost energy. The new generation can be trained in the habits and ways of civilized life—prepared to encounter the difficulties with which they will be surrounded by the influx of settlers, and fitted for maintaining themselves as tillers of the soil.

While such an eminent person as the former lieutenant governor advocated that education should be pressed with utmost energy, it is unfortunate that subsequent agents of the crown have not fulfilled their obligations to treaty Indians in this regard.

The union of Saskatchewan Indians, representing treaty Indians in every part of the province, have long realized the urgent need for a progressive program of education. They have made repeated requests for this through the proper constitutional channels. In a brief submitted by that organization in May of 1947, there is a detailed outline of their educational requirements. Again at their annual convention, held in the city of Saskatoon in January of 1948, they reaffirmed their request for educational facilities in the following resolutions:

> (a) Whereas the treaty Indians, members of the John Ballantyne, Amos Charles and John Roberts bands, resident at Deschambault lake, Pelican Narrows, Lac La Ronge and Stanley settlements, represent bona fide locals of the union of Saskatchewan Indians and,
> Whereas we reaffirm the representations made by the union in May, 1947, with regard to education and schools, and
> Whereas we have forty-six children, twenty-nine of whom are of school age at Deschambault lake and greater numbers at Pelican Narrows, Lac La Ronge and Stanley, all of whom reside with their parents at their respective settlements.
> Be it resolved that we petition the Indian Affairs branch, requesting that day schools with teacher's residence be established at the places hereinbefore mentioned at the earliest possible time.
> (b) Whereas the union of Saskatchewan Indians have made representations to the Indian Affairs branch with regard to education, and
> Whereas the need for education is such that early and immediate implementation of education facilities is of paramount importance, and
> Whereas in the third report of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, to both houses of parliament at the conclusion of the 1947 sittings, it is recommended among other things, "That the whole matter of the education of Indians be left over for further consideration,"
> Be it resolved, that we urge in the strongest terms possible that immediate implementation be effected to our representations for educational facilities in northern Saskatchewan.

With respect, sir, to the above resolutions, attention is directed to a subsequent report made by the special joint committee hereinbefore mentioned, at the conclusion of the 1948 sittings wherein it is mentioned that since May 13, 1946, the said committee had held one hundred and twenty-eight meetings with one hundred and twenty-two witnesses heard. In addition, 411 written briefs from Indian bands and organizations have been received. In the report submitted the committee recommends, among other things, the following:

Your committee recommends the revision of those sections of the act which pertain to education, in order to prepare Indian children to take their place as citizens.

Your committee, therefore, recommends that wherever and whenever possible Indian children should be educated in association with other children.

Further, sir, the union of Saskatchewan Indians assert that there are in the province of Saskatchewan at least one thousand treaty Indian children who are without school facilities. Of this number it is estimated that approximately sixty per cent or six hundred are residing in northern Saskatchewan.

The following figures, covering four settlements only in northern Saskatchewan, were recently supplied to me by the person I have already named:

Settlement	No. of treaty Indian children of school age	No. attending residential school at Prince Albert	Balance not attending school
Stanley	67	12	55
Pelican Narrows..	45	9	36
Deschambault ...	25	3	22
Lac La Ronge....	60	33	27
Total	197	57	140

These figures are representative for treaty Indians in northern Saskatchewan. It will be observed that only approximately thirty per cent of the children of school age are attending school. It may be argued by those who are unsympathetic to the establishment of day schools for treaty Indians that there is at Prince Albert a residential school which they may attend. I should like, however, to call to the attention of the house a statement made by one of the chiefs of one of the Indian groups. I shall quote his letter in full. It reads as follows:

My belief and my earnest desires are these. I believe that our government should abide by their treaties with us Indians in the way of education; to establish day schools on our reserves they will be contributing the greatest single factor for our advancement. Education is something that should be continually improving. The children of today will be the men and women of tomorrow. It is therefore very important that our children are equipped with facilities for earning a living in a modern world.

The children should learn to be able to think for themselves, and be prepared for living with others. Does the present system give us the highest standard of education? No. We have come to the stage where we are more particularly interested in education as a way of life. We want it to teach our children how to live among their fellow men, how to adapt themselves to others and how to meet life's situations in the school room, from which they will derive lessons which will govern their conduct in later years. Working for the common good of all is the basic principle. It is up to all of us to work for better educational facilities, as we want our boys and girls to be able to accept the responsibilities of tomorrow. We are now living in a time of great opportunity.

We Indians feel that we have not been treated in the past as if we were members of the human family, or like citizens of Canada. Nor do we feel that we are at present considered worthy to participate in the benefits arising from the modern way of thinking. We resent this as an insult to the dignity of man in us—that feeling which we have inherited from our worthy fathers, the Indian chiefs, whose advance towards a brighter life has been so cruelly interrupted by the unscrupulous usurpers of our rights. We demand that the government of Canada accept our petition of rights in the same spirit that other rights of mankind throughout the world are accepted.

When our country suffered a depression and the governments found it necessary to relieve the situation by various relief measures, we Indians were not considered for the same benefits, and we starved when our neighbours, some of whom were not even required to be Canadian citizens, were given help by the government. That was not right, was it?

When all the people of the provinces are having schools in their communities, our children are taken from us and we don't see them for a year at a time. Don't we love our children? Don't our hearts break with longing for the only thing we have in life? Does not blood run through our veins? Are we made of different material to the white man? Do our children need the loving companionship of their mothers and fathers less than the white children?

Are we made of stone that has no feeling? Don't we feel the pain of a hungry heart as does every human being? Why are we deprived of the simple rights that God has conceded to every one of his children? We want the white man—our white brothers—to practise his Christianity the same which he has preached to us Indians. We want him to demonstrate that God's love covers all people. Indians are unable to exercise the cruelty of depriving children of their parents as the present system of education facilities provided the Indians entails. We should have our schools right at home, where parents, teachers and the children will be in constant living contact with each other. This would relieve the present heartache suffered by Indians in their separation from their children.

And, Mr. Speaker, he continues in this manner:

Why do our sons fight for the principle of democracy when at home we Indians are not accorded these simple fundamentals of decent living? Give us back our freedom and our privileges which we enjoyed before we were dispossessed. We Indians are sometimes subjected to the kind of indignities that our fascist enemies have inflicted on freedom-loving peoples. This situation makes it difficult for us to distinguish between the evils we hear about in fascism and the democracy that we are fighting for. Is there a special justice for Indians? We do not believe it! We'll fight for our rights! We would rather be dead heroes, worthy of our forefathers, than to be like rats, a shame to our ancestors, a disgrace to our children. When the four freedoms finally come to this world, may we have our share?

I should like to give a little bit of additional information concerning these educational matters as they affect the residents of northern Saskatchewan. I wish to refer to certain settlements in particular, in order to give a brief picture of the situation in those settlements.

At Stony lake and Black lake there are 255 treaty Indians and sixty-five Metis people. There are no educational facilities for the treaty Indians. At this place there is an Indian agency. A residence was built for the agent and completed last fall. The estimated cost, fully furnished, is $17,000, but in that settlement there are no school privileges for some 255 children. Of medical services there are none.

At Fond du Lac there are 258 treaty Indians. There are no educational services for the treaty Indians in that settlement. There are no medical services for these Indians. There are no statistics as to the numbers at Garson lake, but there are no educational and medical facilities there. While at this settlement money has been provided by the Saskatchewan provincial government, through the department of education, for the erection of a school, this has not been built owing to a suggestion emanating from J. P. B. Ostrander, superintendent of Indian agencies, Saskatchewan, that the treaty Indians residing there at the present time would be moved to the north end of Peter Pond lake. That was two years ago. These two years have gone by and nothing has been done.

At Dillon the Indian population is 221. There are no educational facilities for the treaty Indians. At the Clear lake settlement situated on the west bank of Churchill lake, approximately twenty-five miles from Buffalo Narrows, there are 309 children. There are no educational facilities for these treaty Indian children. I could go over the whole list of these Indian settlements in the upper part of Saskatchewan.

I have gone to some length to place on the record the immediate need of our northern Saskatchewan treaty Indians for schools and educational facilities, which we promised long ago. I have done so because it seems to me that the government's refusal up to now to reconstitute the committee on Indian affairs, or to mention it in the speech from the throne, is evidence that they have decided to drop the whole matter, or have failed to arrive at any definite decision on policy. Meanwhile, as in the past, in many instances the government is permitting this disgraceful neglect to continue. So far the work of the committee has been that of investigating the deplorable conditions existing among the vast majority of our Indians. It was the unanimous opinion of this committee that the Indian Act needs to be revised in order to implement the necessary changes required to complete the work assigned to the committee. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that without delay the government implement the recommendations of the committee with regard to setting up immediately a claims commission and the redrafting of the Indian Act.

The manner in which we have fulfilled our treaties and obligations to the original citizens of this land is a disgrace to us. Canadians everywhere are incensed at the indifference of this and past governments in regard to this matter.

Mr. R. J. Henderson (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a small contribution, humble though it may be, to this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Without going any further may I say that I have noticed that nearly all hon. members have had a bundle of papers in their hands when they rose to speak. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that you will overlook the fact if I adhere very closely to my notes.

By now we realize that many worthy contributions have been made by the previous speakers, and we would almost think that nothing more could be said; but ideas are inexhaustible. Some of the speakers that I have heard have been very critical of the government and its policies. Others have come to the rescue of the several government activities, and still others, like myself, have been neutral and have suggested ways and means to make this Canada of ours greater and better. In many instances these ideas have been worthy of consideration. In many other instances, because of our financial structure, they were well nigh impossible of implementation.

Before proceeding further I shall pay my respectful tribute to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. To the mover, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), I wish to pay a special tribute and extend to him sincere congratulations on a job well done. The hon. member is from my home town of Petrolia, having been born and having received his elementary education there. He was initiated into the language, the ways and the smell of our product, hard rock oil, in infancy and even yet he pays tribute to that town, and divides his allegiance between his present city of Windsor and his boyhood home of Petrolia. I do feel that his first love is for Petrolia. It is more abiding, and no prouder tribute can be paid to him, nor one that gives him a greater thrill, than to be called, as we all proudly are, a hard oiler.

I wish also to pay a tribute to the seconder, and extend to him my congratulations on his excellent reply. I had to read the speech of the hon. member for Essex West in Hansard the next day. He stood so far away from where I sat that I could not hear it all and get the exact connections. The same is true of the seconder. Although he spoke loudly, he spoke in his native tongue; and, like many others, I had to wait for the translation before enjoying its contents. It was an experience that will live long in the memory of these two young men, and it is an honour which is extended to the very few.

As is customary on occasions of this kind, I wish to extol the many virtues of my home constituency of Lambton-Kent. I think it is fitting and proper that I do so now, since in this year, 1949, we are celebrating our one hundredth anniversary. Committees have been set up by the Lambton-Kent council to prepare plans and make arrangements for this gala event. I do not know what the final arrangements are, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, hon. members and the members of the press gallery also, that everything worth while will be done to make this an historic occasion.

Incidentally, in mentioning this centennial in Lambton county I should like to take this opportunity to mention another one hundredth birthday. It is that of the London Free Press, which has rendered one hundred years of service to its home city and to all western Ontario. The Free Press this year rounds out a full century of service. I should like to voice on behalf of all members of parliament who represent constituencies in western Ontario—and there are more than twenty of them in the two larger parties—the congratulations expressed respecting this public service newspaper. I hope it will continue to serve and continue to share in the advancement and further development of western Ontario for another full century at least.

Originally my county of Lambton actually formed part of the counties of Kent and Essex. But when our population reached the 7,000 mark we were able, by provincial legislation, to become a separate unit. We were given legislative representation and local municipal government by both local township councils and county council authority.

We have a fine municipality of an area of some 1,000 square miles, comprising ten townships, three towns and eight villages, and also the large and thriving city of Sarnia. Originally Lambton county was a very heavily timbered area with hardwood forests in the north and on the higher gravelly soils, and the soft woods, elm and ash, on the lower and swampy areas. I have mentioned that these forests were a great source of revenue to the hardy pioneers. But eventually the land was cleared and agriculture and mixed farming on our many well-tilled farms was developed, and is now carried on successfully. To assist our farmers we have an excellent department of agriculture. This department is headed by a graduate of the agricultural college at Guelph, with junior assistants helping him. The department has done much to put our several farming activities on a higher plane; and we now have as our slogan: If a farmer cannot succeed in Lambton he cannot succeed elsewhere.

It is true we have a fine type of agricultural soil, varying from the lighter gravelly loams to the heavier clay types. We have no natural drainage, and ditches must be dug and maintained to drain off the top water and provide outlets for our underdrainage.

This adds materially to the heavy burden of municipal taxation. But we have learned that drainage, and even more drainage, is not only essential but compulsory. This, and the maintenance of our soil fertility, comprise two of the problems which we have learned to master. This leads to a diversity of farm projects, varying from our fine fruit land of the north, our celery beds and onion surpluses, to the growing of wheat and the coarser grains, our large acreage of husking hybrid corn and beans, and last but not least our canning products and large acreage of sugar beets. All these, with our rich and succulent pasturage areas with their cows and fine herds of beef cattle or, as the case may be, dairy herds, have given our farmers an era and degree of prosperity that is not surpassed elsewhere.

But like all other areas across Canada we have our social problems with which to contend. One of these, which has been stressed and illuminated by many other hon. members in this debate, is that of old age social security for the rising generation, and particularly for those who have already reached the age of seventy and, one might say, the stage of insecurity.

It is true that we have what might be called an old age pension plan, making provision for $30 a month, with a means test. The federal government contributes 75 per cent or $22.50 and the several provincial governments 25 per cent or $7.50 a month. The provinces are to administer the act and, because of this administration cost, their payment is about the same as that from the federal treasury.

In addition to this $30 a month the provincial treasury could augment this by any sum it saw fit and practical. We in Ontario can get from the provincial treasury an extra $10 a month in cases of extreme need or where circumstances warrant it.

Practically every pensioner felt he or she was eligible and applied for this extra, which meant an immense amount of reviewing and detailed examination of applications and living requirements. Little by little pensions are being increased, but even yet with the increase due to the high cost of living, particularly of food and fuel, many of these senior citizens find they must skimp and sacrifice to eke out a bare existence.

Some will argue that our financial circumstances will allow us to raise the pension to $50 a month at the age of sixty-five for males and at the age of sixty for females, with the abolition of the means test; and others who are in responsible positions will argue that this would impose a greatly increased financial burden which our young and growing country could not undertake.

Much has been said about the means test; and as I had much to do with filling out many applications, while serving as a municipal clerk, I shall try to place on Hansard just what this means. I note the new and modern applications vary but little from the older ones. In many instances they are most embarrassing for the applicant to answer.

However, as long as the means test is in vogue, I cannot find much out of place with the line of questioning followed. I do believe, of course, that this iniquitous test should be abolished entirely.

I wrote to the Department of National Health and Welfare here in Ottawa, and they were good enough to forward to me an application form which a person applying for old age pension would have to fill out in the presence of a municipal clerk. We hear a good deal about the means test. I imagine a good many people have never seen this application form, and I trust they will never reach the stage where they may have to ask that same be filled out in their names.

The first requirements on the form are for age and name. Then we come to the request for the date of birth. As one who has occupied the position of a municipal clerk, I know it is most difficult in many instances to find out and to trace the date of birth of an applicant. This is a most necessary requirement, however, and the filling out of the application must be deferred until that information is secured.

Before 1869, I believe it was, there were no registrations of births. The municipal clerk who preceded me in office was, at the date of his retirement, well advanced in years. He had reached the age of eighty-five, having held office at the time of the Fenian raids. When the registration of births was made compulsory many people were averse to having the births of their sons registered because they felt such registration would make those sons eligible for military service. The result is that there are many now reaching the age of seventy who find, when they search for their birth certificates, that they are not registered anywhere. Yet on many occasions I have conducted searches in family bibles. The old age pensions commission accepts the bible as a registration to prove age. All of us will recall that in the pioneer homes the family bible was an essential part of the furniture, and held the place of honour in the centre of the table in the parlour.

The difficulty with respect to getting the date of birth is now overcome through the clerk filling out a form and sending it to the vital statistics branch at Ottawa, which branch in turn goes through old census records to get the required information. Now that matter is expedited, and applications are not so long in being granted. There is in this form the means test about which we hear so much. Question No. 20 has to do with the income of the applicant and spouse, and involves a description of what their income is, and from what source it comes. Then the income of the applicant has to be shown as so much and in the next column the income of the spouse is shown as so much. Question 21 deals with the means of subsistence of the applicant and spouse. I find that, when these old people reach the age of seventy, they have not very much on which to exist. Question 22 is about real property owned by the applicant and spouse at the dates of the application. If the applicant owns a small house he has to give a description of the property and must show the assessed value. If it is owned by the spouse the assessed value also has to be shown. In 1948, I believe, all property up to a value of $2,000 was exempted under the Old Age Pensions Act.

A good many old people have become very hesitant about applying for the pension because they are afraid they will have to assign their small properties or small holdings to the government, and that on their death the government will be able to step in and take them away from them. For that reason they were very hesitant about applying, but in the year 1948 property up to a value of $2,000 was exempted.

Question 23 concerns personal property owned by the applicant and spouse at the date of the application including cash on hand owned by the applicant and owned by the spouse, which is sometimes very small, money in post office, savings bank, chartered bank or other institution.

Mr. Martin: Is that a dominion government form or a provincial form?

Mr. Henderson: It is a form of the department of welfare.

Mr. Martin: But what government?

Mr. Henderson: It is the Old Age Pensions Act, 1948.

Mr. Martin: That is a form of the provincial government of Ontario, is it?

Mr. Henderson: I think so; they are the only ones who issue the forms in administering the act.

Mr. Martin: I want to get that on the record.

Mr. Henderson: I think the form covers several parts of the Old Age Pensions Act. Then under question 23 there is a question about money loaned or held in trust for the applicant or spouse, and the name and address must be stated. Then they have to give the value of any livestock. They have to declare any securities owned by the applicant or by the spouse, and interest in business or venture of any kind owned by the applicant or by the spouse. Particulars have to be stated as to other properties owned by the applicant or owned by the spouse. In answer to question 24 the applicant and the spouse have to state whether they transferred any personal property exceeding a total value of $500, or any real property, to any person or persons within the five years preceding the date of the application. Then particulars of real property transferred must be shown, including the name and address of the person to whom the transfer was made, and the relationship, if any, the date of the transfer, and the amount still due. Then they have to show the names of all living sons and daughters and the amount contributed by each for the maintenance of the applicant or spouse during the past year. Here you have to give the names of the sons and daughters, their age and occupation, whether the son or daughter is married or single, the number of children the son or daughter has, the income of the son or daughter during the past year, the amount contributed by the son or daughter, and whether the son or daughter is living with the applicant. Then the applicant signs the form. These are the questions asked by the department of public welfare.

Under form 4, the Old Age Pensions Act, 1948, the applicant must consent to inspection of assets. The form reads:

> I, ... an applicant for a pension under the Old Age Pensions Act, 1948, consent that the investigator under the act inspect and have access to any account held by me alone or jointly, in any bank, trust company or other financial institution or to any assets held in trust for me by any person or any records relating to any of them.

I am sure we are all pleased with the new set-up, announced last week by the provincial treasurer, whereby a long-required need has at last been budgeted for. That need is for homes for the aged and the maintenance of them. It is a new step, and it is going to fulfil a long-felt need. It is a step in the right direction, if ever one was taken, whereby the province will pay fifty per cent of the cost of building such homes, and fifty per cent of the cost of maintaining them. They are not to be established indiscriminately here and there, but in every municipality in the province of Ontario. At the present time we have such homes in my town of Petrolia. I can recall four homes which private persons have established in my county for taking in old age pensioners. They have what they call mass feeding and mass production. I know that in one home in my town the charge is $38 a month. Some of them charge $30 and others $40 and $45 a month. The pension of $30 a month is augmented by a grant from the local township council or from the county council.

Ontario has ever been in the lead in social legislation. Just as our workmen's compensation act has been a model for others to follow, so also will this newer and modernistic social service of providing homes in every municipality head the list; and it will no doubt be taken up and followed by our sister provinces to the betterment of the welfare of our older citizens who are so deserving of this grateful treatment we have in store for them. I hope when these homes are established we shall give them a name befitting the purpose for which they are intended, and not call them by some name that is derogatory to our good intentions. We have spoiled the purpose of some of our good institutions by an ill-fitting name. For instance, our first social need was in the form of an institution called the poor house. I can recall the revulsion of people to going to that place because for too long it was considered a disgrace to have to go to the poor house. We softened up a bit, and now we make it more acceptable by calling it the house of refuge.

Even with this name it is still associated with the poor-house idea, and creates an atmosphere of horror. First names create an idea that seem to stick down through the ages. As we are now launching on a new idea of social reform, let us give these newer institutions names befitting the purposes for which they are being created. I suggest that the Department of National Health and Welfare offer a suitable prize to the person suggesting the most applicable name, one that will never carry the stigma of public beneficence.

I believe these homes will fulfil a long-felt need; but I still have faith in the youth of our land, who soon will be our senior citizens, and believe that as time goes on they will provide their own social security by well-devised plans of their own, apart from government paternalism. The sooner this becomes an actuality, the stronger, the better and more virile our nation will become.

I find no fault with those who are up in years now, with their earning capacity gone, and who find themselves in want. They had no guidance given them in any of the ways the young and growing in our land have today. I refer to the many insurance plans, government annuities and other fields of investment that are both appealing and consistent. I do know that in the field of insurance a great majority of our youth are making plans for their future. Study the annual reports of our many insurance companies and a beautiful story will unfold, that of continued growth through over-all annual increases in insurance taken out.

My plan of thinking was changed considerably by an editorial which appeared in the London Free Press, which no doubt many hon. members have seen, dealing with this particular phase of social security. I should like to read just a paragraph or two:

> In Canada where vast sums are to be spent by federal and provincial governments on various aspects of national health, state medicine is under brisk discussion by both doctors and laymen. The tremendous growth of the various voluntary insurance health schemes reflects the tendency of the times, also the frightening cost of hospitalization and adequate treatment . . .
> The Canadian medical association has a continuing study under way. There has been a movement toward more or less local plans in each province and a tendency to deal with different aspects separately—hospitals, treatments, home services and so on. The energizing force behind all this "new look" in medicine is the universal demand by laymen for extended services at reduced costs, a necessity they intended to see met in one way or another.

At the present time we are all more or less insurance conscious. There is no trouble selling insurance now; as a matter of fact we actually go out and buy it. Our pioneer forefathers built up an estate by themselves in the only way they could; that was by building a home of their own. Many of our youth are doing the same thing today, and they are also augmenting their future security by some form of life insurance. There is no difference in the targets if you decide to build, pay for and own a $10,000 home or business or if you decide to pay for and carry out the requirements of a $10,000 life insurance policy or government annuity. The end is social security, attained by a different route.

The tremendous growth of our many voluntary health schemes reflects the tendency of the times. Practically every earner has voluntarily come under some hospitalization plan at a low group insurance rate. In my locality the Blue Cross is very popular as a group plan, and as it is operating for service more than for profit, it is offering more and more by way of health benefits as time goes on. We also have some medical plans of insurance, such as the Windsor medical plan, where on payment of a small annual fee, free medical services can be secured. This is far removed from state medicine, and is voluntary on the part of our medical practitioners and those seeking the benefits such a plan can give.

On the whole, and being very optimistic as to the future, I can see a decrease in the social services required. It is true that they are very great at present, and probably will remain so for at least twenty years to come, during which time those reaching sixty-five or seventy years of age may have to be looked after. But I am very optimistic as to the future, because I believe that as time goes on these various forms of health insurance, social security and so on will enable our people to take better care of themselves. Given a chance, I am sure our future citizens will be able to take complete care of themselves in their advancing years, and that all they will ask of the government is good social guidance. Then we will have a Canada of which we can say we have pride in our past, belief in our present and faith in our future.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is coming near the time when we must fill in these income tax forms. We have all been anxious to see the simplified forms promised us by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann). Not long ago I secured mine, as many hon. members did, after that little trip we all make to the nice sunny room in the southwest corner of the basement floor. There we get two things, one very popular and the other not so welcome. Being a part-time farmer, I chose the form suitable for my situation. I have the agricultural application form in my hand, and must offer some plain, constructive criticism concerning it. This is the new form, which we were promised would be much shorter than that of last year. I find that this year it is down to four pages for the farmer, and that it is quite a lot like a love story, only when all is said and done income tax is no love story. If you are in a hurry when reading a love story you generally look at the first chapter to find out all the particulars, who is in love with whom and what the particular hook-up may be. Then you turn to the last chapter, where you find that they have got married and are living happily.

So it is with this income tax form. There is nothing wrong with the first page; you list your name, occupation, and so on. Then pages 2 and 3 are full of things the farmer does not understand or know anything about. "Do not include the following exemptions," it says. "Your family allowance." That is all right; you do not include that. "Unemployment insurance benefits." Here the farmer begins to scratch his head. "Sickness and accident insurance benefits; workmen's compensation benefits; war disability pensions; non-taxable portion of pension or annuity income; war service gratuities; re-establishment credits; educational, vocational and technical training benefits received by discharged members of the forces or their dependents." I do not find fault with any of these items, but I do find fault with the way the whole thing is set up. You have to turn away over to the back page, where in a small, cramped space you see the heading, "Income from farming or fishing." The only information the farmer needs for the calculation of his taxable return is found in a small, cramped position in the finest print on the very last page of the form. Of course, there is a little book sent out with these forms which the farmer reads. I know the attitude of the farmers towards this matter because when they get stuck they come to me for help. I give them a start on it and then they can go through the remainder of it. Here, we see a heading, "Crops and seeds." The farmer has to put a value on that. If he sells any of it, we know he has to put a value on it. At the very last we find the part of the form the farmer should make out first. When he starts to read the form and sees all this unnecessary stuff in between, he sees red, tears the form in two and throws it away.

I would recommend to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) that the income statement on the farmer's income tax form be put on the first page. The income received from the farm could be shown on one side and the expenditures on the other side. If the remainder shows the farmer is in the red, he will not have to pay any income tax. I notice all these headings on the tax form are in red, so I presume the farmer is supposed to be in the red. I believe if the minister took my advice the farmer would be happier about filling out these forms. I know that is a fact. In this regard I am like the apostle Paul; I can testify whereof I have seen. The farmers have told me about it. I hate to go home because the farmers come to my door with their income tax forms in their hands requesting my help.

Do not think the farmer is averse to making out his income tax form. The information requested of the farmer is beyond his capabilities. I do not mean to imply the farmer is not intelligent, but these forms are beyond his comprehension. We want the farmers to co-operate in this matter. The farmers are honest and honourable. They wish to pay their share, but these income tax forms are not helping the situation. I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, but I want to thank you for listening to me so patiently.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to join those who have already spoken in congratulating warmly the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), and the seconder, the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers), on the excellence of their speeches.

I do not intend to make a long speech. I thought I might deal with a few subjects which are of special interest to those I represent in this house, the electors of the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet.

My constituents form two main groups; on the one hand, the farmers and on the other the workers employed in industry, large or small. The industrial workers of my constituency are more prosperous than they have ever been up to now. The prosperity brought about by the last war has continued and they still benefit largely from it, although there are certain indications of a slight decrease in employment. I sincerely believe that this trend is only seasonal and the workers of my constituency may rest assured that the government of their country will do all in its power to ensure proper and stable employment, that they and their families may keep on enjoying the comforts to which they are entitled.

The case so ably stated the other day by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was most gratifying to us for, if we can rely on the figures he quoted, as we have every reason to, industrial production and trade will no doubt be as great in 1949 as in 1948.

For a few days farmers had been a bit concerned at the news, especially press reports of falling prices for second grade butter, which brought on some uneasiness.

In Quebec, and Ontario too for that matter, but especially in Quebec, and in my constituency, the dairy industry is the basis of agriculture.

The dairy industry accounts for 36 per cent of the farming income in the province of Quebec, and the proportion is undoubtedly the same, if not higher, in my constituency. If anything is done involving serious harm for the dairy industry, agriculture will surely be ruined in the province of Quebec.

Let us bear in mind that farm prices are guaranteed by the dominion government. Let farmers remember that it was the dominion government which set floor prices on first grade butter and guarantees that butter prices will be held at levels permitting farmers to operate at a profit, considering their production costs.

Of course what worries the farmers of Montmagny-L'Islet is the margarine issue. I wish to discuss it, because I have had many representations on that matter from farmers in my constituency. They feared that the placing of margarine on the market might cause considerable harm to the dairy industry in particular, and to agriculture generally.

Representations made to me are perhaps due to the fact that certain political opponents, more concerned with fancied political success than respect for the truth, spread the rumour and even said openly that the sale of margarine in Canada was due to some action by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, anyone conversant with the facts knows that it was the Senate which proposed, at the last session, that the question of the validity of the ban imposed on margarine be referred to the supreme court. This ban on margarine was imposed by section 5 (a) of the Dairy Industry Act, R.S.C., 1927, c. 45. The supreme court was being called upon to decide whether the manufacture and sale of margarine or oleomargarine was actually within the jurisdiction of the central government which in 1886 enacted legislation prohibiting the manufacture and sale of certain butter substitutes. Subsequently, this law was incorporated into others and finally became a part of the Dairy Industry Act, as I was saying a moment ago.

[Mr. Lesage.]

Various public groups were represented at the supreme court, including the federal government. The deputy minister of justice, Mr. Varcoe, representing the latter, held that the act was intra vires of the federal government's jurisdiction, and was valid; whereas other public bodies, such as the Quebec provincial government, represented by L. E. Beaulieu, K.C., held that the matter was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces and that, therefore, the federal statute was unconstitutional. As a matter of fact, Mr. Beaulieu, in his brief, presented in the name of the attorney general of Quebec, dated September 21, 1948, concluded his argument thus:

> For the above reasons, the Attorney General for Quebec respectfully submits that section 5, subsection (a) of the Dairy Industry Act, R.S.C. c. 45, is invalid, ultra vires and unconstitutional.

The supreme court passed a judgment on December 14, 1948, and decided by a majority of five against two that the section in question of the federal statute prohibiting the manufacturing and sale of margarine was unconstitutional. Mr. Justice Taschereau passed the judgment in French as follows:

> On this point, in my estimation, jurisprudence entertains no doubt. It must therefore be concluded that the control of the sale of margarine and oleomargarine in a province, considering its local and private nature, is outside federal government jurisdiction.
> Section 5 (a) of the Dairy Industry Act, to the extent where it prohibits the manufacture, offer for sale, sale or holding for sale, is ultra vires of the powers of the Canadian parliament.

The case is definitely settled. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other associations have requested the federal government to appeal against this decision to the privy council. Obviously it would be difficult for me, Mr. Speaker, to recommend or ask the federal government to appeal against this decision as even before I was a member of this house I have always claimed that the right of appeal to London was a colonial humiliation. That is the exact term which I used to say that we should rid ourselves of these appeals to the privy council as soon as possible. Under the circumstances, it would not be proper for me to recommend to the government or ask them to appeal from that decision. Besides, the matter has now been settled and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has quite well understood the position in which the dominion government was placed, since it has decided itself to lodge an appeal from that decision with the privy council.

The federation and other agricultural associations have also requested that parliament should enact rules with regard to the colouring of margarine.

I can tell you quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that on reading again the judgment of Mr. Justice Taschereau, I wonder how the dominion parliament could enact a regulation of that character that would be consistent with the constitution.

Let us ponder the words of Mr. Justice Taschereau which I quoted a few moments ago. We can only infer from them that the control of the sale of margarine or oleomargarine is not within the jurisdiction of the dominion government. Could not the supreme court decision be construed as meaning that the federal government can no longer deal with the matter, that federal legislation in this regard is unconstitutional, does not concern the federal government and that the matter is now up to the provinces?

Mr. Speaker, the legislature of the province of Quebec has subscribed to that decision by passing a law—the merits of which I do not have to discuss—a law which does not control the sale and manufacture of margarine but allows the Quebec provincial government to control by means of orders in council or prohibit in the same way the sale, manufacture, or possession of margarine or oleomargarine.

Obviously, the dairy industry in my constituency and throughout the province of Quebec will benefit from that law. I am sure the federal government could assist in the application of such provincial laws. I am pleased to quote in this connection the report, dated Wednesday, February 23, 1949, of Mr. Lorenzo Pare, parliamentary reporter for L'Action Catholique, about an interview he had had with the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent):

> Prime Minister St. Laurent indicated last night that the provinces are entitled to greater powers than are generally recognized in the commercial field. He even gave to understand that the dominion government would co-operate with a province in enforcing a measure that would prevent certain products of other provinces from crossing the boundaries of the other province.
> Mr. St. Laurent had already expressed those opinions in the house, but yesterday they assumed special importance. There was concern in parliamentary circles when it was announced that Premier Duplessis intended to introduce a bill prohibiting "the importation, manufacture, sale and possession of margarine" in the province of Quebec.

And further:

> Last night, Mr. St. Laurent clearly indicated that his government would not contest the legality of the bill that Mr. Duplessis is supposed to introduce regarding margarine. On the contrary, the present leader of the government intends to co-operate in its enforcement.

And again further, I quote:

> It is clear that regulations pertaining to the importation of margarine come under the jurisdiction of the dominion government and, in that regard, the bill on margarine which will be introduced in the Quebec legislature within a few days could well be challenged as ultra vires.
> With respect to importation, Mr. St. Laurent is so willing to support provincial autonomy that he is even ready to confirm a precedent of great significance from the constitutional standpoint. The Prime Minister does not think that the provincial legislatures could prohibit the importation of margarine without the co-operation of the dominion government. If a province takes any steps in this respect, the federal authorities, having jurisdiction over imports, would most probably co-operate with the provincial authorities so that the wishes of the people in any particular province, as expressed by their legislature, might be carried out. Mr. St. Laurent has already indicated that this practice is followed with respect to interprovincial trade in intoxicating beverages.

This interview not only shows the very high respect which the Prime Minister of Canada has for provincial autonomy but also the extent to which he is ready to co-operate with each provincial government in order to bring about what they believe is in the best public interest.

Mr. Speaker, no matter how much we may be called centralists, it is impossible to quote a single instance where invasion of provincial fields occurred since the war. On the contrary, the dominion government—and the present parliament—have co-operated very closely at all times with the provinces while remaining respectful of their autonomy and while giving them the means to exercise their prerogatives within the limits of their jurisdiction. That is what we have sought to do and that is what we shall keep on doing, in spite of the absolutely unjustified attacks leveled against us.

In conclusion, with respect to this matter of margarine, let us remember that it comes within the exclusive purview of the provinces, that it is out of bounds to the federal parliament. However, the farmers of my constituency and of every constituency in Canada may rest assured that the dominion government will take the necessary steps to ensure that they are protected in this regard. In so far as dairy industries located within the boundaries of the various provinces are concerned, the federal government is prepared to co-operate in every way with all provinces, as was so ably expressed by the right hon. the Prime Minister during the interview he granted to Mr. Paré.

Mr. Speaker, the other question in which my constituents—and all of them this time—are greatly interested, is that of income tax. It is true that nearly every member has referred to it but I should like to hark back to a subject I discussed during former sessions.

At each session, on the budget debate, I felt it a duty to make certain representations and to offer certain considerations on that subject. This time, I believe it is more advisable to make my representations at this stage, before the budget speech is delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). My representations originate with my electors and I want to state them objectively.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the time has come for the government of Canada to grant the Canadian taxpayers a considerable income tax reduction. Some people would like to propose total or near total suppression of income tax so that it could be replaced by another taxation system, for instance a direct retail tax similar to the sales tax which is levied in the province of Quebec. Frankly, with all due respect to the promoters of that idea, I cannot admit that such a system is fair according to the principles of social philosophy. Let us take, for example, the case of two taxpayers. On one hand we have the man of means and on the other the labourer or farmer with an average income and a family to support. The man of wealth who has no dependents, or very few, now pays a goodly share of the income tax, although he would pay much less if a sales tax were to replace the income tax. Now, the labourer earning $2,000 per annum, for example, who has five or six dependents, does not pay any income tax at all but he would have to pay the sales tax on everything he buys, especially on children's clothing. It could, of course, be argued that children's clothing would not be taxed. We all know however that a boy of fourteen dresses like a man and in this respect there is no difference. I know quite a few family men in the house who would know all about it.

Such a sales tax would necessarily be levied on all kinds of articles required to raise a family. The worker I mentioned a moment ago, who does not pay any income tax at present, would have to pay in sales taxes the amount that would no longer be collected in income tax from rich people.

I do not think I am going too far in saying that such a system would be the opposite of social justice.

I have often expressed my attitude regarding taxation. In 1946, I stated in this house that according to principles of social justice taxes should be proportionate to the means and obligations of the citizens.

That is why I contend that under certain conditions income tax is the fairest way of collecting funds for the state. In 1947 I said, as reported at page 3000 of Hansard:

> You will often hear people say—and at times they are well informed people—that the personal income tax involves inequality of charges because too many citizens escape its provisions. One has to admit that that is true to a certain extent, but theoretically and even in fact, because the cases of evasion are the exception, it is still based on the fairest principles of taxation as long as it does not take away from the citizen what is necessary for him and his family to live according to the general standard of living in the country.

The reasons which justify me, and my constituents as well, in asking that the tax levy be appreciably reduced during this session bring me to request that this reduction be effected by increased exemptions rather than by lowered rates.

There is no doubt that, in view of the present day cost of living, the $750 and $1,500 exemptions granted single taxpayers on the one hand and married people on the other, and the $100 and $300 deductions regarding, in the first case, the children who benefit from family allowances and, in the second, those who do not, are far from sufficient.

Exemption levels must be considerably increased. I take the liberty of quoting, in this connection, part of an editorial appearing in L'Action Catholique of Friday, February 21, 1949, under the signature of Andre Roy, as follows:

> On the other hand, while it is hoped that the cost-of-living index has reached its peak and that the consumer may expect some relief in this direction,—although, because of several factors of a varied nature, such as the operation of the Marshall plan, and the growing tendency towards collective labour agreements, the drop will fortunately be quite small,—it is important that the small and average earning groups be granted the necessary respite in order that they may be able to meet those obligations which, from a social standpoint, are obviously becoming more urgent than ever, while from an economic viewpoint, the collapse of purchasing power amongst these earning classes might bring about a rather serious depression, even though our foreign trade remained prosperous.

The high cost of living is obviously the argument that impresses most the greater portion of the people, but there are others and I discovered one while listening to the member who spoke before me. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Henderson) referred to the intricacies of farmers' income tax forms. There is no point in trying to do away with the intricacies of income tax forms. It is a hopeless undertaking. It will never be possible for a farmer to make out an income tax form, an annual report on his earnings, without submitting a financial statement, a detailed account of earnings and expenses.

All this is, of course, highly complicated work for a farmer. In order to do that he would have to keep books, not only on a daily, but on an hourly basis.

Does he have time enough for that? Has he the inclination for that? Working as he does, from dawn till dusk, and often from before dawn to after dark, he has no time left to look after all these things. If he cannot fill out his form himself, he will have to seek the help of an accountant or of a notary who will charge him a fee.

Then, by raising to a proper level the basic exemptions for single as well as for married people, and by increasing the exemptions granted in the case of children, most of the farmers will be taken off the income tax roll and the government will avoid spending a fairly large amount of money to collect only a few dollars.

In this same connection, the low-income workers lot is not to be envied either. Is there anything more aggravating for the worker than to see his weekly salary cheque, which is hardly sufficient for the needs of his family, cut down, even if only a little, through income tax deductions?

By raising the exemption levels the government would take off the income tax roll the workers who earn but little, those who have a family to look after, those who need to be helped.

I fully understand that government requirements may have justified this condition in the past because on the one hand the needs of taxpayers and their dependents are one of the main bases for any taxation system, and on the other hand government requirements are a second and fundamental basis.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess at six o'clock, I was stating the reasons why I believe that a general rise in the level of income tax exemptions is imperative this year and I was about to quote an excerpt from the budget speech which the Minister of Finance delivered last year. Here are his words as recorded on page 4063 of Hansard:

I believe that all parties in this parliament and most Canadians share the view that the national budget is no longer merely a matter of the government accounts that should be balanced every twelve months on some financial rule of thumb. We view the national budget now as an integral part of the nation's business, influenced by and having an influence upon the state of employment, income and prices. I think we would all agree that in times of widespread unemployment and insufficient demand for goods and services our expenditures should be increased in order to support employment and incomes, and that they could and should exceed our revenues under such conditions. Now we are at the opposite extreme and we should follow the opposite course. We should deliberately budget, as a matter of policy, for substantial surpluses in times like these. Only that way can we hold inflationary forces in check.

It is evident that by these words the Minister of Finance was expounding the theory or system of cyclical budgeting. I submit that the very application of this system justifies a reduction of income tax this year. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is certain that inflationary forces are much less active than last year. The cost of living tends to become stabilized and in fact at this time it seems that the trend is towards a decline. There are certain districts in Canada where industrial and economic activities have slowed down in the past few months. I realize that to a great extent this slackening may be due to many factors, such as weather which has afflicted certain districts in Canada but we must admit that, in spite of all, there is a slight decline generally in industrial and economic activities. Savings also are decreasing and for all these reasons, although I do not wish to raise a scare, because I consider this recession only seasonal and temporary, I feel the income tax should be reduced in order to give a break to those in the lower income brackets and afford them the means to improve, if possible, their standard of living.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Sure.

Mr. Lesage: It is quite certain that, by giving a chance to those who have only low or fair incomes, inflationary forces are not so stimulated because, with the money that they save from the income tax, these people will be able to procure not luxury articles but the necessities of life.

The Montreal board of trade has suggested that the exemption for single persons be brought up to at least $1,000 and that for married people to at least $2,000. Note that in both cases it is a minimum. The Canadian federation of agriculture suggested that the exemption be increased for single persons and married people to $1,200 and $2,400, respectively. I feel the government, in accordance with the financial position of the country, should allow the greatest margin of exemption possible. Information from reliable sources indicates that the increase of the exemption to $1,000 for single persons and to $2,000 for married people would alone cause a loss of revenue of about $275 million. It is easy to say that a surplus of several hundred million dollars is anticipated; but the anticipated surplus will not be as high as expected, because part of it will serve to increase our reserves of foreign exchange and for other capital investments. The actual surplus for the fiscal year will be far less than has been mentioned in some circles.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the increase in the rate of exemptions will bring about a decrease in the surplus because it would be only fair that all increases in exemptions be made retroactive to January 1, 1949. Thus the surplus for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949, will be reduced in proportion to the increases in exemptions for the three-month period from January 1 to March 31, 1949.

As far as exemptions for single persons are concerned, I do not think that they should necessarily be exactly half those granted married persons. Everyone will agree that a married couple can enjoy the same standard of living as a bachelor but that it does not cost them twice as much. In view of the fact that young people should save for the future and plan for marriage, I feel that the government would be justified in granting single taxpayers an exemption of a little more than half that allowed married people.

I believe that an exemption of at least $200 regarding children under sixteen and of $400 regarding children over that age is fully warranted. While I am on the subject, may I support what the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Tremblay) said this afternoon in his splendid speech when he requested that exemptions be granted with respect to college and university students, even though they were over twenty-one years old. I can do no better than repeat what I said when discussing this matter during the 1946 session, as reported in Hansard of July 23:

> Before I go on, I should like to say a few words about the exemptions for children going to college or university. I submit that there should be no age limit of twenty-one and, in addition, that the cost of sending a son or daughter to university is so much more than $300 a year that a man should be allowed to deduct the actual expenses incurred in the education of his son or daughter falling within that category. Let him produce receipts, if necessary, but give him a chance. Taxpayers of average means cannot afford such advanced education for their children. However, I submit that those children have the same right of education that the children of rich men have. The interest of the state itself is to have the greatest possible number of advanced and educated men, and its corollary duty is to encourage young people and their parents to do so, in giving all classes of society equality of opportunity in that field.

(Text):

Mr. J. W. Burton (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, many people living in the constituency I have the honour to represent would consider me remiss in my duty if I did not take advantage of the opportunity afforded by this debate to place before the government some of the many problems confronting the people not only of my own constituency but of all parts of Canada.

During these past days and weeks many of my colleagues who have preceded me have advanced ample argument in support of the amendment to the amendment moved by my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell); but before proceeding to deal with the speech from the throne I should like to say a few words in appreciation of the services rendered to this country in general and to agriculture in particular by the retiring deputy minister of agriculture, Dr. Barton. I am sure we all wish him success in his new undertaking, which I understand to be in the nature of a roving representative of the Minister of Agriculture; and I hope he will now have more time to place the viewpoint of the Canadian farmer before international gatherings.

In this connection I should like to refer to the book "Canada and the United Nations, 1948" released by the Department of External Affairs on February 28 of this year. There reference is made to the food and agricultural organization; and in order to refresh the memory of hon. members as to the aims and objects of the FAO I am going to quote the first paragraph on page 121:

The food and agricultural organization, which came into existence in 1945 as a result of the United Nations conference on food and agriculture held in May, 1943, at Hot Springs, Virginia, was founded for the purpose of raising levels of nutrition and standards of living, securing improvements in the efficiency of the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products, and bettering the condition of rural populations and thus contributing towards an expanding world economy.

Then further, on page 122:

At its fourth session, held in Washington, November 15-29, 1948, the conference of FAO adopted a report on the state of food and agriculture which urged that, in spite of the generally good crops of 1948, there should be no over-optimism regarding future levels of nutrition and living standards.

Then further on down the same page:

The question of the world food supply was placed on the agenda of the third session of the general assembly by the delegation of Poland which requested that the assembly consider the problem of food wastage in certain countries, and by the delegation of Cuba which recommended the reduction of taxes on foodstuffs. These two resolutions initiated a long general discussion in the course of which many resolutions and amendments were submitted to the second committee which considered the question. Finally by a vote of 22 in favour, 7 against with 11 abstentions (including Canada) a lengthy resolution was recommended to the general assembly for adoption.

When this resolution was considered in the plenary session of the general assembly, amendments jointly sponsored by the Canadian, the United Kingdom, the New Zealand and the United States delegations, which deleted specific references to high profits of middlemen and speculators, and which put into general terms a recommendation to the economic and social council concerning its continuing study of the problem, were adopted.

I should like to know why our representatives to these gatherings should be so considerate of the feelings of those who extort high profits, be they middlemen or speculators. In my opinion our representatives should voice the demands of our farmers, who want prices that are fair to both consumers and producers.

At this time may I also express my personal pleasure over the appointment to the important post of deputy minister of agriculture of a former minister of agriculture of my province of Saskatchewan. I sat in the same legislature with Mr. Taggart; and while I did not always agree with his policies I did admire his ability, and I appreciate his fairness in debate. I wish him success in his new duties. Both he and the minister are going to have a battle on their hands to keep the other departments of this government from putting agriculture in this country in an impossible position. Let me warn the government that our farmers are not in the mood to let themselves be pushed around.

During this debate many of my colleagues in this party have placed on record the fears and anxieties that today are uppermost in the minds of our farmers. Now let us look at the speech from the throne, which is supposed to forecast the legislation the government intends to place before us during the course of this session. There is not one single sentence having reference to agriculture; and in only two places could a person, by any stretch of the imagination, find anything that might even indirectly affect this basic industry. When a person looks at that speech and bears in mind the indifference of some of the ministers of this government to the vital problems affecting so many sections of our country, one feels like really making a job of taking them apart to see what makes them tick. On the other hand there are times when I cannot help feeling sorry for the government. They remind me so much of an old work horse that has served you well for years but has come to the end of its usefulness. I never could bring myself to the point of lashing an old plug like that.

This brings to mind a conversation I had last fall with a friend of mine. He was complaining about the difficulty he found in keeping up with his work, keeping his weeds under control and so on. He said to me, "Look at that old plug there," pointing to a horse which he called Lib. "Why, Lib used to be a pretty good horse in his day, but I simply can't get anything out of him any more." I said, "When I saw him galloping around in the Rosthern pasture he seemed to be kicking up his heels quite a bit." He said, "Yes, he did fool a great many people at that time. He even had some people thinking there was water in places where there will not be any for a long time to come." I said, "What are you going to do with old Lib? Are you going to pack him off to the horse-meat packing plant?" He said, "No, I do not think I will do that." "Well, I have had some offers from Barney Google, from down Melville way, who came along with a bunch of city slickers from Winnipeg. They wanted me to trade him for what they called the western bloc, but I am not going to fool with that." I said to him, "There is neighbour Conn up on mortgage hill and he has an old grey plug he would like to trade off." "Oh, no," he said, "that fellow has had different riders for that old plug almost every year. You know what happened to that college professor who had a lot of experience gentling creatures like that; he even threw him. Now, they have another fellow up on top decked out in fine clothes and they are rearing to go for the stampede. They are asking me to put my money on him, but not me. I have been fooled too often; that fellow has been thrown by lesser horses than the old grey one. I am not going to take a chance." He said, "You know, Joe, I think it is time I became modern. I am going to follow your example and have modern equipment on my farm so I can get rid of these horses of mine. I am going to vote modern by voting C.C.F. and see if we cannot get rid of some of these combines and cartels."

Our farmers are not very exacting in their requests, Mr. Speaker. Our farmers do not want anything that is not theirs. Friends, we should stop to think of the farmer who rises in the early dawn along with the birds. He and they offer a song of praise to God at the opening of the day. The farmer then carries on through the heat and the burden of the day. In the twilight hours of his life of usefulness, all he asks for is a measure of security for himself and his family. The farmer is the instrument through which God produces the foodstuff by which the human race is fed. It is through the farmer that it is possible for the human race to continue. All that he asks is a fair deal.

I should like to remind you that at this time our soil, after being locked in winter's sleep, is even now beginning to stir. It is bursting those shackles of ice and snow and will soon be ready to receive the seed planted by the farmers. I say to this government that when the farmer continues to do that year after year he is doing his share, and the least the government can do is to see that he has the security that he requires. What have we? Even at the present time the government is dilly-dallying and we still do not know whether we are going to have the coarse grains handled by the speculators or whether they will be handled in a decent and orderly manner.

When we talk about security, I should like to say there is another section or group of people who are very much in need of security. I have no intention of becoming involved in the controversy between the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Reid) and my colleague the member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue). Let me just say this: In spite of the arguments which may flow back and forth, the people in the province of Saskatchewan, as well as the people in a number of other provinces, are resentful of the fact that this government has failed to bring into effect the health program proposed at the dominion-provincial conference, at least for those provinces that were willing to co-operate and have shown that willingness by signing taxation agreements with the dominion government.

Turning to what the member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) said the other day, I wish to express my appreciation of the acknowledgment he made at that time. On page 1144 of Hansard of March 4, he said:

> Everyone who knows anything about what is happening in Saskatchewan must give the authorities and the people of Saskatchewan a great deal of credit for what has been accomplished in the matter of hospitalization and social services. I say that in all fairness. The province from which I come is endeavouring to emulate what has been done in Saskatchewan, because we believe a fair standard has been set by that province. It is true that according to the table appearing at page 1087 of Hansard, Saskatchewan has only received 1·1 per cent of the hospital construction grant. This is simply due to the difficulties experienced by that province, as well as other provinces, in sending in accounts for projects.

That answer, Mr. Speaker, might be correct for the time being, but it overlooks the fact that, before the province of Saskatchewan could inaugurate this scheme of hospitalization to which the member for New Westminster was referring, additional bed space was needed. The province proceeded to make those additional hospital facilities available, and in the past few years it has doubled the hospital bed capacity. A good deal of the construction for that purpose had already taken place before the minister's scheme came into effect. In many cases the cut-off date in the scheme debarred these projects from sharing in it.

We are now in this position: We have hospital space and we have our hospitalization plan in effect, but we cannot share in the construction grants that are available. This places us in the position of not being able to properly care for the people for whom we should really be caring under a national health program. I refer to the incurables. It is all right for the minister or his officials to refer these people to the provinces and say, "There is where you should get your assistance."

The minister's speech, which I enjoyed, contained a wealth of information. He referred to the number of rheumatic and arthritic cases with which his department has to contend, but I would say, Mr. Speaker, there is a considerable number of people in addition to those. I have only time to list a few examples. I know a girl who is only thirty years of age. In her childhood she either suffered an accident or had infantile paralysis—I have not been able to ascertain which—and she has been crippled ever since. She has to be carried from one room to another. She cannot take a single step. This girl is helpless physically, yet her mind is as bright as a new dollar. There is no help for that girl, and she is only one of hundreds—yes, thousands—like her throughout the country.

I want to draw your attention to another case. Here is a woman who wrote to me as follows:

It will be four years August 6 since Mr. Blank—

She gives his name.

—had a stroke which left his right side paralysed. He has not gotten any better. Our doctor tells us he will never walk again. I cannot go out to earn even my own living as I cannot leave him alone. I have no income. He has no pension of any kind. He will be 67 years old on the 26th of this month. There are pensions for old age, for blind people, and many other kinds. We would be so grateful if this bill would go through very soon.

I have one more case to which I should like to refer; and again I would point out that these are only examples of thousands like them.

Mr. Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): No names, no dates; nothing at all.

Mr. Burton: This is the case of a girl nearly thirty years of age. She writes as follows:

I have been a cripple since birth. I walk with aid of crutches all the time and wear braces to the hip.

Further on she says:

So, on behalf of all incurables in Canada and myself I am sincerely asking our government at Ottawa to help us unfortunate people for a fair pension . . .

I am placing that matter before the minister and the government. As time is passing rapidly, I wish to deal with a number of other matters. Reference has been made to income tax. I do not intend to go into all the details. We all have heard them time and again. Only yesterday the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka) placed on the record vividly a description of some of the abuses that are taking place in our income tax department. In my opinion it is high time that the minister or someone got busy and had things cleaned up in that department. I wish to remind the minister of the question I asked in the house some time ago. In fact, this question stood on the order paper for quite a long time. It is a reasonable question. It should not require much digging to find the necessary information. The question was:

1. Do rural telephone companies organized on a non-profit basis have to complete income tax returns?

2. If so, for what reason?

When I finally got the answers, I found they were as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Sections 33 (1) and 35 (2) of the Income War Tax Act and section 40 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act require all corporations to file returns. It should be noted that in order to qualify for the exemption, a company must not only be organized, but must be operated, on a non-profit basis.

The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is that the department officials just simply do not concern themselves enough to inform themselves properly as to what is going on. We have a good example right in Saskatchewan where we have 1,039 rural telephone companies organized. Of that number, 237 were incorporated quite a few years ago and could be classified as share companies that could pay dividends if their returns warranted their doing so. But none of these 237 companies have paid dividends on their shares for the past ten years. Nevertheless, from some of those companies the income tax department is extracting income tax, in spite of the fact that some of these companies' lines are nearly forty years of age. They have a little money that they have been putting in reserve in order to be able to reconstruct those lines. Then the department steps in and attaches their reserves. That is bad enough. But when we get to the other class of telephone companies that later on were organized under a new act, what is the situation? This act made it possible for people in the rural areas of the province to provide themselves with telephone services. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) himself was a member of the government during the time that a considerable amount of construction work of that kind was going on. We have 802 companies that are operating on a service-at-cost basis and not for profit. They are incorporated under the provincial act, and they operate those systems only to give service to the people.

I have not the time in which to give a full outline, but I shall endeavour to do it as briefly as possible. Back in 1919 I helped to organize a company which constructed a rural telephone line serving about 150 or more farmers. We borrowed on debenture in the neighbourhood of $40,000. We then proceeded to pay back that money, plus the interest, by having our municipality levy a tax on the land alongside the telephone lines. Each subscriber of necessity—under the bylaws under which we operated and under which we were incorporated—had to be a shareholder. But these shares bore no dividends. All that we did was to have those shares issued, so that the subscribers were shareholders before we provided them with service. Then we just charged them for the maintenance costs of those lines. Every one of those 1,039 companies will be obliged to clutter up the offices of the income tax department at Saskatoon. The hon. member for Vegreville was telling us what happened in Alberta with regard to the man to whom he made reference. Similarly, I am prepared to tell you, Mr. Speaker,—and through you, the house—that the income tax department will endeavour to extract from these companies money that in the first place was raised by taxation of the land alongside these telephone lines.

There is another matter to which I would like to refer, namely, the small flour mills. I also inquired of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) what provision his department was making for these small flour mills to have an opportunity to share in the flour export business. His answer was far from satisfactory. Later on the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Viau) made reference to the question I had asked. In spite of the fact that the minister said it would be something in the nature of a private enterprise that would solicit this business for export. The hon. member for St. Boniface pointed out that the big flour milling concerns that have their headquarters in the eastern part of Canada are sitting on the lines of traffic and can grab off that business.

I have here a letter from the operator of a flour mill in my constituency, which reads in part as follows:

> Just received House of Commons debates official report, February 25, for which I thank you.
> Mr. Howe's reply is partly correct. Each flour mill sells its product in the domestic market, but I do not agree with him when he says "or the foreign market as it sees fit."
> The matter of individual enterprise is a joke.

I should like to make reference to the big corporations that are making it impossible for the small enterprises to operate. In that connection I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Prairie Messenger, which is printed in Muenster, Saskatchewan. It is dated February 24, 1949, and reads in part as follows:

> "Better men for better times," a report of the commission on American citizenship appointed by the Catholic University of America and published in 1943. Speaking of "untrammeled competition" in business, the report said:
> "It exalts ruthlessness, sharp practice, indifference to human values, and selfishness of every description . . . It is the negation of all that is implied in the sermon on the mount. No man and no combination of men have the right to seek prosperity at the expense of the common welfare. . . The blithe assumption that, as long as we hew to the line of personal success, the chips will fall in the nature of a benediction on our fellow man has proven empty. In the midst of contemporary world turmoil and domestic confusion, we are learning in the hard way that society must put brakes on competition and that, if it is to survive, capitalism must be shorn of its individualism and made to submit to social controls.

I offer that to the government for its consideration.

There is another matter to which I should like to call the attention of hon. members. I hold in my hand a copy of what is called the Canadian Mail, which contains the following headline: "Socialists dissemble—but they cannot deny these frightening truths." The paper contains thirteen questions with which I had intended to deal, but time does permit me to do so. The whole front page and the first inside page is full of their extracts from speeches of members of the C.C.F. taken from here and there to try to bolster up their arguments. My reply is that not only do we deny the accusations made in this paper, but they have been branded for what they are, and yet they keep on publishing this stuff. We of the C.C.F. believe in liberty, but we also adhere to the truth that liberty does not mean licence. We believe in freedom of the press but we deny that that freedom carries with it the right to prostitute truth by taking sentences here and there from their context to convey a meaning different from what was meant by the speaker.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Who is to judge that?

Mr. Burton: If time permitted I could bring ample proof of that. Much of what I had intended to say this evening will be left over for some other time. I do not wish to tax your patience, Mr. Speaker, or the patience of hon. members; but I want to say that we of the C.C.F. have been accused quite a number of times of being mixed up with the communists. I believe that very often those who have made that accusation have made it for the purpose of distracting attention from themselves. Let me repeat that we are opposed to communism. We reject its atheistic and materialistic philosophy. We disagree with many of its policies. We abhor the methods by which it endeavours to gain and retain power. We are opposed to any form of dictatorship, be it either of the right or of the left. We have many examples, Mr. Speaker, of people who did not acknowledge these truths becoming enmeshed. Very often those who were the loudest in disclaiming communists were accessories in helping to bring communism into effect.

Mr. Probe: Just look across the way.

Mr. Hartt: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Burton: When we stop to consider the deplorable conditions that we find in many parts of the world our hearts cannot help but grieve that in our time we have to contend with matters of that kind.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members, through you, the immortal and memorable remarks contained in Lincoln's Gettysburg address. To me it has always seemed that Lincoln, whose heart was filled with anguish and his shoulders stooped with the responsibility of leading his country through the greatest of all national catastrophes that can befall a nation, the tragedy of civil war, standing that day with his feet on the soil saturated with the blood of his fellow countrymen, prayed:

> That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

May I appeal to hon. members in our time that we also turn our hearts to God and pray for the rebirth of our democratic institutions, and that through them we may be able to bring about the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God.

Mr. Lewis Menary (Wellington North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne as to the needs of my riding. We are largely an agricultural riding, and it contains some of the best dairy herds in Canada. Owing to the demand for dairy cattle in the United States during the past few years, thousands have gone from our riding to build up the herds of our neighbour to the south. This has been beneficial to both countries. We get the United States dollars badly needed in this country and they get cows so urgently required to provide milk and butter for their people.

This has been a great era of prosperity on the North American continent, and we hope that this trend of trade will continue, as it is a great help to the economy of our country. We not only sent many of our dairy cattle, but very many of our beef cattle have gone to the United States since the embargo was lifted. Farmers in my riding are not in a very happy mood at the present time. They are all willing to do their share in our national economy, which they did in wartime and have done since. I know many farmers who during the war period carried on with no help. The result was that the wife, husband and children were working on the average twelve hours a day. Since the average farmer has ten cows, forty hogs and perhaps 1,000 chicks, as well as laying hens, a great deal of work has to be accomplished to keep the farm operating. The hour of six or earlier in the morning saw the farmer out milking the cows and feeding the hogs. The mother or wife often had the task of looking after the fowl.

The exemptions for income taxes are too low, $750 for single persons and $1,500 for married persons. By the time the house is kept, the children clothed, the coal and food purchased, there is not much left over for a rainy day. The same thing applies to the married couples living in towns. I would like to tell the government it cannot be done. Would one of our ministers like to trade his job and salary with these people, even for a short time?

Since last summer they have been hounded by income tax inspectors for taxes on the great contribution they made to supply food in this period of our history. It might well be said that either we supply food or we lose the battle for freedom. If our farmers only knew how this government has spent their money, they might feel even worse.

A question was asked on the order paper as to why this government paid W. C. Thomson, a Toronto lawyer, a large sum of money. It is true Mr. Thomson contested the provincial leadership with Mr. Farquhar Oliver, and lost; but inside of two months after Mr. Thomson's defeat the dominion government paid him $173,300. True, it would look like a good deal for Mr. Thomson; but the people want to know what he did to get such a generous sum.

I have received letters from my riding protesting the various taxes. The sales tax especially has been the target of much criticism. The federal tax takes a big slice of many day-to-day commodities. This is a so-called luxury tax. These taxes—imposed as a purely wartime measure—run from 10 to 35 per cent, and are of course additional to the 8 per cent federal sales tax. Here are some of the goods on which the luxury tax is paid: toothpaste, shaving soap, antiseptics, perfumes and cosmetics, 25 per cent; chocolates, candy, chewing gum and all candy-like confectionery, 30 per cent; soft drinks, 40 per cent—almost half; trunks, suit cases, handbags, wallets, purses and all luggage, 35 per cent; fur coats, dressed furs, dyed furs, 10 per cent; automobiles, 10 per cent.

Under modern living standards in Canada most, if not all, of these items are not luxuries to be enjoyed by the wealthy, but necessities for the mass of the people. Who would call toothpaste, shaving soap, clocks, trucks or pens luxuries? Even such items as soft drinks, chocolate bars and candies are not necessarily luxuries. If these items are not luxuries, why should they continue to bear this heavy burden of taxes?

I would like to say a few words in this debate about the plight of our aged people. It is a tragic situation when they have to keep up a home, and especially when one is living alone. They must find it extremely hard to buy fuel, food and clothing on $30 a month. If the government has any idea of increasing this pension, why not do it now? In view of the large surplus, the government should be able to increase this pension.

These elder citizens should not want, as they have helped to make Canada what it is today. I have always contended that the old age pension should be on a contributory basis and I was the first one to bring this forward in the House of Commons. There is no one who cannot pay, let us say, one or two dollars per month, and get more when he or she reaches the age of sixty or sixty-five. By making these small payments these people will feel that it is an insurance, and that they are part of the plan.

Mr. R. M. Warren (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Question.

An hon. Member: Louder.

An hon. Member: He has not started yet.

Mr. Warren: I have not been having as much practice as some hon. members at this session. However, I shall not occupy much of the time of the house this evening. There are a number of matters I am going to discuss at a later time, but not tonight.

Mr. Wylie: Tell us about that $400 house.

Mr. Warren: I will have a word to say some time later about that, and also a word about the old dairy cow.

However, my main purpose in rising this evening is to discuss an old subject, one which I have brought before the government, and particularly the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier), on many occasions since coming here in 1937. We have not got action yet; but I propose to continue to pester him until he gets around to the point where, for the sake of getting rid of me, he will build a bridge across the Ottawa river by way of Morrison's island. I hope the minister heard me.

There can be no argument whatever as to the value of such a bridge, because it would connect Quebec highway No. 8 with Ontario highways 17, 41 and 62. All of these are important roads. This would offer one of the finest trips not only for United States tourists but for Canadians who like to take a pleasant drive once in a while. However, that is only a small part of the urgency. The island has an area of about a thousand square miles of fertile land, and on it are many farms and homes. They have their own schools and churches; and their chief place of business is Pembroke.

A recent survey has shown that thousands of pounds of honey, butter, fruit, pork, beef, lamb, horses, wool, hides, potatoes, grain, pulpwood and fuel hardwood are transported from the island to Pembroke. Those products bring the islanders approximately a million dollars each year. They take home with them supplies and groceries of an equal value, making a fair exchange.

It is true that we have a ferry service. But there is one thing wrong with it, namely, the fact that there are two breaks in that service during the year. When the ice begins to form in the early winter the ferry cannot operate. Then there is a period of time when it is safe after the ice has formed. This is always an indefinite length of time; it might be a month or it might be longer than that when it is not safe to cross the ice. One can well imagine, however, that during the break-up in the spring of the year the people are practically isolated. If people want to get to the mainland two or three miles away they have to drive ninety miles to the nearest bridge, which is pretty nearly isolation. In the wintertime the roads fill up with snow. Their roads are not very good for plowing. They are narrow, and, if you cannot drive a car over them, ninety miles with a team of horses is a very long distance. The same thing happens again in the spring. Once the ice begins to rot and is not safe to cross there is another period of perhaps a month without any connection between the island and the mainland.

That might not appear to be so serious if you think only of the inconvenience of not being able to get to market. However, it is necessary to keep in mind the fact that the people of Allumette island sometimes need a doctor. If he is afraid to cross the rotting ice he has to go all the way around for a distance of ninety miles whereas if there were a bridge it would only be a distance of two or three miles. For patients who have to go to hospital the nearest hospital is in Pembroke. I have known some very fine persons who narrowly escaped death because they were almost too late in getting to hospital because they had to be taken there by this roundabout way.

Considering the need and the urgency, I do not think the cost would prove at all excessive. I should like the minister to come back over here and listen to my suggestion, because if I misquote him I should like him to correct me. After all, this is a very short speech, and I should like him to listen for a part of the time. I want him to hear my suggestion.

Mr. Knowles: It is far better for him to stay over here.

Mr. Warren: As I recall the minister's statements last year, and in previous years, he suggested that if either of the provinces would approach him as Minister of Public Works with a suggestion that they would be willing to contribute one-third of the cost, and ask him to take some action, he would then be in a position to go to the cabinet and talk to them about the possibility of a bridge across the Ottawa river by way of Morrison's island. If my memory serves me correctly, that was the attitude of the minister.

Two or three things have happened since then. I am not sure if any person approached the minister directly, but I have been informed on good authority that the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), who was then premier of the province of Ontario, made a speech in Pembroke and, as premier of that province, definitely committed himself to contributing Ontario's share of the cost of building a bridge across the Ottawa river. Recently I have noticed that the present member of the Ontario legislature for Renfrew North made a speech in the legislature in which he definitely advocated a bridge across the Ottawa river. We have those two gentlemen in favour of it. A short time ago I read in one of the local papers an article about the member for Pontiac in the Quebec legislature. As I recall his statement, he was organizing a five-year plan, and among the propositions that he was putting forward was a bridge across the Ottawa river by way of Morrison's island. To me that seems a pretty fair approach by the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. In view of that, I am going to make a suggestion to the minister, and I hope he will pay particular attention to what I have to say in this regard. I suggest to him that he place in the estimates a specific sum, let us say $400,000, and add a proviso "or one-third of the cost." I think that is a reasonable request, and it would be a start. I hope the minister will consider that and give these people a break. While technically it may be the proper thing to wait for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to come to the minister, considering the urgency of the situation and the need for the bridge I do not think that we should bother about technicalities at all. Let us have the bridge. Give these good people a bridge, for they have had an undeserved delay of at least fifty years.

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, during the remarks that I am about to make I hope to pass out a few bouquets, and I hope I will not throw any bricks even if I do feel like pitching a few at the government. The people whom I represent are people who do not throw bricks very readily, so I shall try to represent them in such a manner as would be pleasing to them. I may say that we had our centennial last year, and the members of the House of Commons received an invitation to be there. Many were able to attend and many sent their regrets. I am sure the ones who attended were made welcome, and had a very good time.

As to the bouquets I should like to pass out, the first will go to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). I think he deserves great credit for having attained the position that he occupies today. The second bouquet will go to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), a man whom we are proud to have lead us. I should also like to extend my congratulations to all new members of the house, not forgetting the new member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, and the new member for Nicolet-Yamaska, who have made history, and will help to make history in the coming election. I should also like to extend my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. They did a very good job considering what they had to work with.

Getting back to Bruce, which is dear to my heart, as you know, Mr. Speaker, it is a rural community and we love it as such. I must say, though, that it is not holding its own in population, in common with many rural communities. The population is going down, which is not a good thing for the country at large. I might quote a few words by the city solicitor of Windsor—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): There is a Windsor man in the house, I believe. This was in connection with the housing situation in urban municipalities.

> There is an apparent lack of effective regulation and control of mushroom growth around urban centres, and a "clear inability to enforce elementary building standards." "Far too many of our suburban areas are rapidly becoming congested suburban slums," Mr. Cummings' report said.

When that situation prevails in our urban areas we ask ourselves why this should happen. I believe a great deal of the blame must go to this government because of the way it has been legislating over the years it has been in power.

Both the last speaker and the speaker before him were farmers; I have spent most of my life on a farm. Therefore I have a word or two to say on conditions in agriculture today. I would say the farmer receives less for all the work he and his family do than is received by workers in industry. The wholesale prices of food have never been as high as they should, in relation to the cost of the things the farmer must buy. Owing to government controls the farmers are facing a very uncertain future. This government, which has controlled the farmers out of producing enough butter to supply the people of Canada, deserves the censure not only of the producers of that butter but also of the consumers. During the last five months the price of cattle has dropped by twenty per cent, yet in the same space of time the cost of living has gone up. So the cost of living cannot be blamed upon the prices the farmers are getting.

Right here I should like to say that I believe it is time the farmers were given a chance to have something to say about the marketing of their own products. I would be in favour of legislation that would give the farmers a chance to have producer marketing boards and a say on how those boards should be run. It is quite apparent, in Bruce county in any case, that veterans of the last war are not settling on the farms. That is not a good condition, because those boys deserve the best that life can give them, and I am sure they are not getting it in many of the cities where they are located today. I would make a plea that we all keep in mind how important are our rural people and those who live in small towns, and I believe something should be done for those places far distant from the large centres. We should remember those immortal lines of Kipling:

> From little towns in a far land they came
> To guard their honour in a world aflame.
> By little towns in a far land they sleep,
> And leave to you to guard those things they died to keep.

We in Bruce county are progressive and, thanks to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), that is now a restricted area and T.B. testing is being carried on, which is a wonderful thing. It is not so good, though, to have such a small staff doing the work, which is proceeding very slowly. About a year and a half ago I made the suggestion that they permit local veterinarians to take part in the program, but apparently there was some reason why that could not be done and it is not being done now to any extent. I should like to read a resolution which was passed by the electors of Saugeen township at their annual meeting:

> We the ratepayers of Saugeen township in Bruce county T.B. testing area find compensation on reactor cattle too low to allow for replacement, and ask the dominion Department of Agriculture to make adjustments in line with present prices.

I am quite in agreement with that resolution; and I hope that it, together with the many other resolutions that have been forwarded on the same subject, will bring about some results. I have in my hand an itemized account of one man who had his herd tested, and these figures show that he is the loser by approximately $1,000. That is not an isolated case, either. I suggest to the minister that in considering the compensation for cattle they should try to arrive at something that will help the man who has a great many of his reactors go to the tank. I am not advocating that there should be higher prices for those who are able to sell their beef cattle on the market after they are turned down in this test, but I do believe something should be done for those who are so unfortunate as to have a large number of animals not fit for beef purposes. A couple of days ago I had a question on the order paper in this connection, and the minister was a bit evasive in answering it. I asked whether, when this compensation was raised he would consider making it retroactive, to cover the heavy losses sustained by some of these people during the last couple of years, but the minister did not answer my question.

Up in Bruce county we have two Indian reserves, and during the period the Indian committee was carrying on its work I had the pleasure of meeting some Indian representatives who were visiting here. They felt quite happy because something was going to be done in connection with a revision of the Indian Act, but right now I am wondering what is the hold-up. They are very disappointed because nothing has been done. The hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case) is more familiar with this matter than I am because he served on that committee and traveled extensively. He made recommendations here in the house the other evening which I believe should be accepted by the government. Those Indians on our reserves in Bruce are very good citizens; and in his remarks the other evening the hon. member for Grey North said something well worth repeating, at page 970 of Hansard for February 28:

> In the second great war, not only did their male members offer their services, the Indian girls came forward and offered themselves. One Indian reserve, Cape Croker, adjacent to my riding, showed an enlistment in relation to population larger than any other community in Canada.

I would be very much in favour of having that revised act brought into operation just as soon as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on the vital question of social security. We of the Progressive Conservative party have a platform on social security which, when we get into power and put it into effect, will solve many of the difficulties being experienced throughout Canada today.

First, I should like to say that, in my opinion, any social security scheme should be contributory. When I reach the age of sixty-five and I put my hand out to get a cheque, I should like to feel that I had contributed something towards keeping me in my old age. It is unnecessary for me to enumerate the different items in the social security program advocated by the Progressive Conservative party. You will hear enough about it at a later time, so there is no need for me to put it on the record. If anyone wants to look at it, I have a copy of it here.

The blind are also very deserving of some consideration, probably more consideration than they are receiving today. I understand they are included in the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act, and I do not think that is proper. I believe the blind people would be happier if they had a special department to administer their aid. I know there are many blind people who are quite capable of administering such a scheme.

I come now to what is known as the health news service, from which I should like to quote one or two extracts. The heading on this pamphlet is, "Alcoholic illness developed by one in twenty drinkers." The first excerpt I wish to quote is as follows—I might say this is given by Dr. Bell, the medical director of the Shadow Brook Health Foundation.

> There are few physical or mental ailments causing greater pain or torture than that associated with alcoholism.

At another point, he says:

> In spite of this, while most communities accept the causative agent, intoxicating beverages, the majority still fail to provide the means of helping a victim.

Such being the case, I am surprised at the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Gingues), who stated in Hansard on March 2, page 1080:

> We could, for example, levy a higher tax on alcoholic beverages—

For the benefit of those within hearing of my voice, I might say that my views on liquor taxes were given on May 24, 1948, at page 4438 of Hansard. I have had no cause since then to change my opinion.

I am very glad to see the smiling face of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) tonight, as I have a few remarks to direct to him from which I hope he will benefit. In Bruce we have many small industries which are giving employment to many people. These employees enjoy living in the county of Bruce. I would ask the Minister of Finance to try to treat these industries gently. This double taxation which the present government maintains in effect weighs heavily on the small industries such as we have in Bruce and the other rural communities. More should be done towards helping these industries than is being done at present. There is no doubt about it, the double taxation makes it difficult for the employer and is, therefore, not very good for the employee. It also contributes to the high cost of the product, which in turn contributes to the high cost of living.

I should like to mention, Mr. Speaker, the vicious sales tax about which we hear so much today. In my speech in 1948 I stated that such taxes helped to raise the cost of living. I still think that is true. It is not a fair tax. I shall read an excerpt I have which I think will explain it better than I can. Speaking of the eight per cent sales tax, it says:

> Because it bears more heavily in proportion on the poor man than on the rich, the sales tax is, in effect, a graduated income tax reversed, for under it the smaller a man's income the larger the percentage of it goes to pay the tax.
> A worker or a farmer spends something like half of his total income for consumer goods on which sales tax is levied. A rich man may and often does pay as little for these same goods as five per cent. There is no justice in such an arrangement.

The income tax on farmers has been threshed out in this house, but I should like to add my voice to what has been said. The farmers are worried, but the sad part of the situation is that many of these hard-working farmers mentioned by the member for Wellington North (Mr. Menary) are not eligible to pay income taxes. When I was at home one week end I met a man on the street and congratulated him on his eighty-fifth birthday. I asked him how he was. "Well," he said, "I am not enjoying it very well." I asked him what the trouble was and he said, "I received a registered letter to file my income tax return. I do not know where I am. I reared my son and he lived with us after he got married. He has two grown-up boys and the property is split up in such a way that we do not know whether we are breaking the law in making up our income tax return." I said, "Do not worry over that. You have come through life up to now with a pleasant face, so do the best you can and carry on." That was the only advice I could give, and it is the only advice I can give to the farmers of Canada until we get a new government in office.

The member for Wellington North (Mr. Menary) mentioned the soft-drink tax, and that is another vicious tax which is a nuisance to the youngsters and others who have to pay these two pennies. It is a nuisance to the soft-drink distributors who have to keep the necessary forms in connection with the tax. Finally, may I say that our present tax structure in Canada is driving many of our educated young people over to the United States where they believe they can do better —and possibly they can.

I should like to say a few words about the tourist trade. I want to compliment the member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) on the speech he made in connection with tourists and the recommendation he made to the government. He suggested that a standing committee be set up on the tourist industry because that trade is going to grow. Just recently at Niagara Falls Leo Dolan, the director of the Canadian Travel Bureau at Ottawa, said:

Competition is now so keen that it passes all indications of recent years. Bermuda, the British Isles, Europe, Mexico, Latin America and the West Indies are putting on a tremendous drive for tourists. We must meet that competition.

When I read that article I thought there really should be an inducement to bring United States tourists to Canada. We read about the millions of dollars the United States tourists bring to Canada, but we must not overlook the fact that a great many Canadian dollars are spent in the United States and Mexico. I would offer the suggestion that if ever a tourist bureau is set up in Ottawa it would do well to adopt the slogan, "See Canada First". Many of the people in Canada have not been outside their own province. We visit a good many places close at hand, but we do not do much interprovincial visiting. I would suggest that such a bureau examine the possibility of having special rates on tours from one province to another so that the people would become better acquainted with Canada. This would make for a better understanding between the people of the different provinces.

I have, Mr. Speaker, a copy of a speech made by a school girl in a competition in Bruce county. This is the first-prize speech, and was made in Tobermory, that great fishing and pleasure district, in 1945. As it is a rather lengthy piece I would ask if the house would give me permission to have it included in Hansard in the report of my remarks.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Hartt: Let us hear it.

Mr. Howe: Read it to us.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): That is what I was hoping to be asked to do. The title of it is "Bruce county, the Tourists' Playground". This is the trophy-winning address as delivered by Lois Edmonstone of Tobermory, at the Bruce county public speaking competition in Paisley, on November 1. It reads as follows:

Mr. chairman, judges, ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls: The subject I have chosen to speak on is "Bruce county, the tourists' playground."

Have you ever wondered why thousands of people come from all over the United States and Canada to spend a vacation in Bruce county? It is because Bruce county has so many attractions and such wonderful scenery that it draws people from miles around.

If you prefer plenty of rugged coast line, the sound of waves pounding on rocks, thousands of beautiful flowers, and trees not tampered with by axe or saw, miles of sandy beaches which you can enjoy, nature as nature was meant to be, then Bruce county is the place for you.

[Mr. Robinson (Bruce).]

Let me tell you of some of these beauty spots. Wiarton is the "gateway to the Bruce peninsula," and is the largest town in the northern half of the county. With its modern hotels, tourist accommodations and its proximity to inland lakes, Wiarton attracts a great number of tourists. Nearby is Colpoy's Bay, a lovely spot to camp and fish. Then, there are Cape Croker, Lion's Head and Dyer's Bay, which are small communities which attract their full quota of summer visitors. At the very tip of the peninsula is Tobermory, a small and picturesque fishing village. Here there are good hotels, cabins and cottages. There are guide boats to take you trolling for fish, which are plentiful. Near Tobermory, or "The Tub," as they call it up there, is Flower Pot Island. This island is named after the two large rock formations which have the shape of huge flower pots. Persons the world over have come to marvel upon these unique formations. Then there is Cove Island lighthouse. Only recently there was a write-up in the Toronto Daily Star regarding the first marriage on Cove Island, and there were pictures of the bride and groom, and of the stone lighthouse, which is 100 feet high.

I may say that I am about halfway through, and I should like to table this material.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Howe: It is most interesting.

Mr. Hartt: Go ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): Order. Has the hon. member permission to table the document?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): The prize-winning address continues as follows:

The lighthouse was built in 1859, and ever since, through the intervening period of 89 years, this great light has shone to aid sailors and fishermen on Georgian Bay and Lake Huron. This light can be seen by sailors aboard vessels fifty-four miles distant. The beam emanates from a lamp of but 300 candlepower, which is raised to 300,000 candlepower by putting it through six large prisms which revolve about the lamp, and making the light appear as though it were flashing. The lighthouse also has a radio beam, which can be heard as far as Toronto, and a fog horn which is heard for twenty miles. Cove Island marks the boundary between Lake Huron and Georgian Bay.

The Lake Huron shore of the peninsula is indented by many little bays and inlets. One of these is Pike Bay, a very pretty place where many people go to camp and fish. There is a general store in the community, where you may buy your supplies. Nearby is Red Bay, which is very similar to Pike Bay. Oliphant is a most attractive resort, with many summer cottages and an extensive and pleasant beach. It, too, is served with a general store. The Sauble Beach is one of our best-known tourist attractions, and its exceptionally fine, broad beach draws great multitudes of summer visitors to enjoy the bathing, boating and fishing. With its modern accommodations, Sauble Beach has become very popular among summer visitors to Bruce. Nearby are the Sauble Falls, where additional numbers of tourists gather to enjoy a quiet vacation.

Further south along Bruce county's long coast line lie Port Elgin, Southampton, and Kincardine, Inverhuron, Bruce Beach and Point Clark, all of them most attractive resorts with fine sand beaches, and excellent accommodations. The first three named are all thriving manufacturing centres, but cater to a tremendously vast tourist trade. Bruce county is unsurpassed for the number and the beauty of its inland lakes. These can be found all the way from one end of the county to the other, and who hasn't heard of their scenic beauty and the excellent angling which they provide for resident and tourist alike.

In conclusion, it is my sincere hope that I have been able to impress upon you the fact that Bruce county is, indeed, a veritable "playground for tourists."

I implore the government to seek means of improving farming conditions, and thus help to decentralize industry and population. I concur in the following views on decentralization:

. . . one comes to the same conclusion as Mr. Lattimer, i.e., that decentralization would be a great help.

On this subject, he makes the following comment: "Analysis of conditions and the cause of the conditions should suggest the remedy. It does. Where yearly earnings are lower it should be easier to carry on business. That is the reason why so many industrialists urge decentralization as a remedy. This should come about naturally and probably would were there no hindrances to overcome. Some of these hurdles to take in securing decentralization may be custom, vested interests and monopoly practices.

"Certainly decentralization of industry would simplify this problem. To the extent that such decentralization may be brought about, this problem may be changed. In this connection it may be pointed out that perhaps some of the centralization has developed as a result of public policy. If this be correct then the way to decentralize may be to reverse some policies that have contributed to centralization."

I think that is sound advice for the future governments to look into.

Mr. A. J. Bradshaw (Perth): In taking part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I first must join in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I extend congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) on his election as leader of the Liberal party and head of the government. To the new members who have taken their seats for the first time in this parliament I bid a warm welcome. I sincerely congratulate the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Drew), who has accepted the leadership of this party. Because of what he has done in the province of Ontario I know that his assumption of that position augurs well for the future of this dominion. I feel that I would be negligent if I did not express to this house, and through you, Mr. Speaker, to the country, some of the ideas that the people of my constituency of Perth have, not only as to government policies but as to those things that we feel would be conducive to a better economic condition in Canada.

I represent a riding which is partly rural and partly urban. The urban districts of our riding are prosperous, industrious centres. One thing which pleases me is that so many of these industries have been born in the county, and by careful management have grown to dominion-wide status. Stratford, a city with a population of some 19,000 people, is situated in the centre of the county of Perth on the banks of the Avon river. It inherits its name from that famous English city, Stratford-on-Avon. It is a business centre of many industries. I can name many of these. There are six furniture factories, three textile factories, one packing plant, besides numerous other plants manufacturing leather goods, articles of brass and many other articles.

We also have the Canadian National railway shops, which in themselves employ some 1,500 employees. Then there are within the county three smaller towns which also have numerous industries. Probably the principal among these is the town of St. Mary's, which has one of the largest cement plants in the Dominion of Canada. Most of the factories are examples of industry, ingenuity and careful planning by many of the older citizens of the city and county. Many of those have passed on. These are things which have made Ontario prosperous. Our people have built up local industries which provide the farmer with a local market, and there is no farmer who will not admit that the local market is the most profitable one for disposing of his products.

In Canada today we are faced with many great and serious problems. I would not be so unkind as to say that all of these problems are of government making, but I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that many of the major problems with which we are faced today are a direct result of the policies of the present government.

The farmers of my constituency, like those of other parts of Canada, are deeply concerned about the markets to be available to them in the future. They viewed with considerable alarm the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), at the last dominion agricultural conference held here in Ottawa, that the government could no longer assure the farmers markets in Britain for what hogs they could produce. Their memory goes back also to the statement of the same Minister of Agriculture when he told this house, as recorded at page 409 of Hansard of September 24, 1943:

If we in Canada can produce 450 million pounds of bacon a year, over and above what we require in this country, for the years that are ahead of us, we shall just about be able to supply that part of the British market which we hope to retain after the war is over.

In that year we shipped to the United Kingdom a little over 675 million pounds of bacon. Our current contract for bacon to the United Kingdom has been reduced to less than 25 per cent of that year, and is down by approximately 950 million pounds from the peak year of our shipments to that market for the past ten years.

This is of vital concern to the farmers of the county of Perth who contributed materially to Canada's bacon production in the years when they were urgently requested to do so. Let me give you some statistics of our own county. According to the hog marketing at inspected slaughter plants, in Perth county we marketed in 1942 127,340 hogs with a percentage of grade A's of 38·3. I shall give these figures down to 1946. In 1943 we marketed 138,360 hogs with grade A's of 40·4 per cent. In 1944 we produced 138,355 hogs. We fell down in the percentage of grade A's to 40·1. In 1945 we produced 135,000, and rose in percentage of grade A's to 41. In 1946 we produced 138,000, and our grade A's were up to 42 per cent. I took these figures for the five years. You will notice that our percentage of grade A's rose from 38·3 to 42. Perth was the highest county in the province of Ontario in each of the above years in bacon production, and also the highest in grade.

During the ten years, 1939 to 1949, Canada negotiated 142 contracts for foodstuffs with the United Kingdom, and had as many as twenty-two in effect in 1946. In 1947 this was reduced to fourteen; then to five in 1948. For 1949 we have three, excluding the wheat contract. We have not lost these markets because of the inability of our farmers to compete with prices of imports to the United Kingdom from other countries. On November 22, 1940, the Minister of Agriculture said, as reported at page 346 of Hansard of that date:

> We accepted with no bargaining the prices that Great Britain offered us.

A review of United Kingdom food imports for the past two years indicates clearly that we have carried out that policy. United Kingdom statistics, giving the average value declared for customs purposes, show that in 1947 our wheat was sold to that country for $3.96 a hundredweight, as against an average price of $6.33 a hundredweight for wheat from other sources. In 1948 our wheat was sold for $4.09 a hundredweight as against an average price of $6.25 a hundredweight for wheat from elsewhere. In 1948 we sold our bacon for $40.52 a hundredweight as compared with $45.83 a hundredweight that the United Kingdom paid as the average price for bacon imports from other countries. The same holds true for other exports of foodstuffs with the exception of condensed milk for those years.

Prior to 1944, agreements for the shipment of foodstuffs were for one-year periods. In 1944 agreements for bacon, cheese, eggs and beef covered a two-year period, while other contracts then in force remained on the one-year basis. Today our contracts in this market have been reduced to four from a high of twenty-two in 1946. It is worthy of note that, on January 20 last, food minister Strachey informed the British House of Commons that on that date Britain held forty long-term contracts for the purchase of foodstuffs, ranging in duration from one to ten years. Mr. Strachey further said that he could have shown that long-term contracts had prevented the United Kingdom from having to pay prices for essential food over the past three years which it would have been quite ruinous to have paid. The Canadian producers can confirm this statement, Mr. Speaker, because no one has sacrificed more to make this possible. A review of the present situation indicates clearly that, when foodstuffs were difficult to secure, Canada had a considerable number of contracts, but as supplies elsewhere became available the demand for Canada's foodstuffs was reduced.

We are told by the Minister of Agriculture that this arises from a shortage of dollars which leaves the United Kingdom unable to purchase from us. To a degree this is true; but our farmers should be told what this government is doing to encourage the United Kingdom to export goods in short supply here to this country, which the British trade figures for 1948 indicate are being sent to Poland, Hungary, Ukraine, Yugoslavia and elsewhere for foodstuffs, at a price in almost every case in excess of the price paid to Canada for similar produce.

Some explanation is due to the farmers of Canada as to why contracts for foodstuffs are now being made by the United Kingdom for periods of from one to ten years, whereas the contracts negotiated by our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) were largely for one year and at best two years.

The United Kingdom has always been a stable market for our farmers. Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) give our farmers an assurance now that representation will be made to the United Kingdom government on their behalf, to the effect that these long-term bilateral contracts, which the British Minister of Food advises run for a period of one to ten years, and which protract this principle of barter far into the period when we all hope trade will return to a normal basis, will not serve to exclude our farmers from the United Kingdom markets which they have supplied so well in the past.

The farmers in my constituency are waiting for some pronouncement from this government as to what they may expect in the way of United Kingdom markets in the future. They are wondering also what will happen to prevent purchases for that market which are today paid for out of ERP funds, should these products be declared surplus in the United States, as presently indicated, and what the government proposes to do if this should happen.

These are problems of vital concern to our farmers, who feel that, if nineteen foreign nations can get together and work out a formula such as the Marshall plan has done, Canada and the United Kingdom and other parts of the commonwealth can surely sit down and work out a solution to our present difficult trade problems before those markets are lost to us, possibly for years to come.

One other matter I would like to refer to at this time is the present taxation on farmers mutual fire insurance companies. Effective January 1, 1947, there was placed on these mutual companies a tax of 30 per cent of the yearly earned surplus. At that time, I brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) the adverse effect such a tax would have, and pointed out that the McDougall commission, which had gone into this matter, reported as follows, under section 5:

> We consider that mutuals in certain specialized fields are rendering a service which is not provided by other organizations, notably in insuring farm and other unprotected rural risks. These mutuals tend to keep their rates as low as is consistent with the risk involved. We consider that it would not be in the public interest to impose income tax upon these insurers whose activities are primarily in these fields.

For the past two years, the government has been taking from the Canadian people in taxation $600 million to $700 million a year more than was required to cover the costs of government, that tax has been applicable on mutual fire insurance companies, and I submit the time has come for the minister to reconsider his position on this matter.

There are in Ontario alone sixty-six of these companies with about 225,000 policyholders, who are unfairly affected by this tax. I say unfairly affected, because these companies, and their members which compose the companies, are not in the insurance business because they want to be, but because they have banded together to provide the service that stock and other companies do not wish to undertake, namely, to provide insurance coverage to isolated farmhouses, farm buildings, and public buildings such as schools, churches, and community halls, where little or no fire protection or facilities exist.

These companies operate in comparatively small areas, and because of this are always subject to the danger of some major calamity which, although from a national or provincial point of view it would be considered a localized problem, in their case might involve 50 or even 100 per cent of the limited area in which they operate. These companies are able to protect themselves only by reinsurance and accordingly must build up reserves.

When the provisions of the Income War Tax Act were passed in 1946 the minister stated, as reported in Hansard of August 13, 1946 at page 4737:

> I think the mutuals will find in practice that there is very little, if any, tax involved to them in this provision.

That statement would be quite factual in cases where reserves are already adequately built up. The tax would not be applicable because the earned surplus not being required would be paid back to members as premium refunds. But that is not the case for many of the smaller mutual fire insurance companies who are rendering service in a specialized field, and one that otherwise might go unserviced by the stock companies.

Under provincial legislation these companies are required by law to retain liquid reserves amounting to 80 cents for every $100 of insurance coverage. Today, with property values increased as they are, these companies find it necessary to increase their reserves, and in doing so they are taxed by the government to the extent of 30 per cent of earned surplus retained as necessary reserves.

I would ask the Minister of Finance, now that he is in the process of preparing his budget for this year, to reconsider this tax.

There is mutual agreement on the principle that no organization in our economy should be exempted from taxation merely for the purpose of building up unwarranted reserves. Nor is any special consideration asked for farmers mutual fire insurance companies for this purpose. But I think in all fairness some amendment to the present act should be provided that would allow these smaller companies to bring their reserves up to an amount considered adequate and necessary under present conditions before they should be subjected to this present tax of 30 per cent.

Last year I presented to the house an amendment which, if I am not out of order, I should like to place on Hansard. It was:

> That section 57, subsection H be amended by adding to the present clause (ii) "a mutual insurance corporation in which the excess of assets over liabilities at the end of the taxation year in dollars per thousand dollars of net insurance in force at the same date is less than the amount set out in the following table:
> When total net amount at risk exceeds $25,000,000 —$6.00.
> When total net amount at risk exceeds $10,000,000 —$7.00.
> When total net amount at risk exceeds $5,000,000— $8.00.

When total net amount at risk exceeds $2,000,000—$10.00.

When total net amount at risk exceeds $1,000,000—$20.00.

When total net amount at risk is less than $1,000,000—$30.00.

For example, a company in excess of $25 million risk can have assets of $6 per thousand dollars of net insurance without being subject to tax. Over that they would be subject to the extent of 30 per cent. That would allow the small companies to live, and to carry on at their usual rate. Of course, that amendment was ruled out of order.

After all, these companies are not in the same position as where you pay a premium to an ordinary commercial company, and that is the end of the obligation.

The circumstances of their business which made them necessary in the first place leaves them in a position whereby, should abnormal losses be incurred the members insured may have to put up some part or all of the premium note to which they are a part. Under such circumstance, and in view of the fact this is a specialized field into which commercial companies are not anxious to venture, it seems hardly fair in the essence of democratic taxation that small companies such as these should be subject to a 30 per cent tax when they endeavour to build up an adequate surplus against the risk involved.

In view of the fine record of these small companies in the past, and the very necessary and efficient service they are performing in our economy, I would suggest to the government that in all fairness here is one place where taxation is in effect doing what was never the intention of the act, which is contrary to the recommendation of the McDougall commission report, and accordingly warrants reconsideration at this time.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate I wish to extend the usual congratulations to the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I also wish to congratulate the new members who have entered the house for the first time at this session, and I want to congratulate them on their maiden speeches in the house. There have been one or two members, however, who have made speeches over the week end at home and at other places other than the House of Commons, on which I cannot offer them the same congratulations. The member for Ontario (Mr. Williams), as reported in the Globe and Mail of February 28, said in effect to a group of his own home town people that if labour was as delinquent as the members of the House of Commons the factories and plants would have to shut down. I do not think it behooves any member of the House of Commons to speak of his colleagues in that manner. To me that represents typical socialist or communistic utterances and tactics. I suggest that probably some of the group to whom he was speaking swallowed it holus-bolus, hook, line and sinker, but all I should like to say to him is that those who live in glass houses should undress in the dark.

Since I read the article on Monday morning, February 28, I have taken the opportunity to watch that member. I can assure you that I have checked and double-checked, and he has put in as few hours in the house as any other member of parliament. I do not want to be giving advice to anybody, because I have only been here since 1945 myself. I am sorry that he is not here now.

I should like to ramble a little and refer to a few remarks that have been made by some other members who have not been too long in the house. I should like to refer first to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey). Speaking in the house he had this to say, as recorded at page 747 of Hansard:

—and it was the action of this government which made it possible to put the member for Cartier in the penitentiary.

He meant the former member; he acknowledged that afterwards. Then again on page 750 he said:

—that the government had taken action that made possible the sending to the penitentiary of the former member for Cartier, and received little support from the opposite side of the house in doing so.

The members on this side of the house do not happen to be the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hodgson: Do not applaud or laugh too loudly because those who laugh last laugh best.

Mr. Knowles: You mean they are slow in seeing the joke.

Mr. Hodgson: I would say that the member for Halifax was born about eighty-two years too late, because it was not this government that made it possible to arrest a spy in this country. It was the government of Sir John A. Macdonald shortly after confederation.

Mr. Hartt: What would you have done without Sir John A. Macdonald?

Mr. Hodgson: I guess I would have got along as you have.

Mr. Graydon: How are you getting along without the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King)? That is the thing.

Mr. Hodgson: The member for Halifax never gave any credit to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or to the courts of the land. In his mind the government seemed to do the whole job. I hope he did not leave the inference that the government has a stop-and-go sign on the administration of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The only one I have heard say anything about communism in Canada is the present leader of the official opposition (Mr. Drew), and the leader of the Progressive Conservative party at that time, John Bracken. I never heard anything from any of the members on that side of the house.

Mr. Knowles: It was a coalition government he led in Manitoba.

Mr. Graydon: You fellows were in it at one time, too.

An hon. Member: Don't take Ontario's name in vain.

Mr. Hodgson: If you remember, it was the leader of this party, the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Bracken)—

Some hon. Members: Which one?

Mr. Hodgson: —at that time. You know quite well.

Mr. Knowles: Time flies.

Mr. Pinard: What leader?

Mr. Hodgson: He was the only leader in the house who moved the adjournment of the house to discuss that important issue. That brings me to the point where I wish to refer to the speech made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). He arrived at the point where there was about to be a marriage between the socialist party and the Liberal party. If you do not believe me, look it up in Hansard; you will see it there. I should like to say to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe that I believe the wedding has been consummated, because just a few weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was speaking in a town in my riding, the town of Lindsay. He said there that the C.C.F. party is the party which talks socialism but the Liberal party is the party that puts it into action.

Mr. Gardiner: That is a new version of his speech.

Mr. Hodgson: As reported by the press, the hon. member went on to say what the government had done in the past and he spoke about great things that the government was going to do in the future.

Mr. Gardiner: You cannot quote that from Hansard.

Mr. Hodgson: I can quote this one. He did not tell them about all the applesauce he had to eat in England, nor did he tell them that he brought more applesauce back to Canada than he did trade agreements. It is the same old political applesauce that makes the grass grow green in Ireland.

That brings me back to my own riding. I should like to say that five or six really good industries have come in there in the last three years.

An hon. Member: A good government.

Mr. Graydon: The provincial government.

Mr. Hodgson: I expected you to say that it was not the federal government. This government did not have anything to do with bringing them in. They were brought in by the industrial commissioner and the town council of Lindsay, with some help from the provincial government under the leadership of the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew). Three of them are very large companies. Two in Lindsay and one in Haliburton are United States companies, which are bringing in American capital, and I believe they are going to be real assets to our country.

I also represent a great farming district, and by the redistribution bill they have added four townships of northern Ontario which are really good farm land and tourist area. We have in Haliburton county the best stand of mixed timber left in Canada, and I believe this constituency is the best tourist district in this country. In Haliburton county alone, the most sparsely settled of all, according to statistics taken last year, we had over forty thousand tourists in two months, a great many of whom were from the United States. And I can tell you something else we have that is even more valuable; that is, the greatest people in Canada. They are of English, Irish and Scottish descent, and I can tell you that they are all sane people. You know, during the last election campaign the genial Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) spoke in my riding, as well as the Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley. I invited them back, but I asked them not to wait until the next election campaign rolled around. I see they are getting the cabinet ministers out a little earlier this time. I want to say to the government, however, that this riding is not for sale to the Liberal party. The people are too wise to be sold or bought with their own money.

Mr. Cruickshank: We don't need to buy any ridings.

Mr. Hodgson: I am glad to hear from the hon. member from Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank). His biggest contributions to the proceedings in this house have been his heckling and his interrupting. Perhaps the heaviest work he did was when he brought apples here and put one on the desk of each Liberal member. I believe he even made them think they were Fraser Valley apples.

That brings me to the speech delivered recently by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters). I want to congratulate the minister on his elevation to the cabinet. He spoke about the great package of public works he had on the shelf. Speaking at page 1177 of Hansard for March 4, he said:

> You will be interested, Mr. Speaker, in learning some of the details of the federal government's shelf of public works.

If you turn over a couple of pages you will see that I asked the minister if he would just tell us what was in one of those packages. He did not answer my question, nor did he give any details on what the public works packages contained. He must have built the shelf awfully high, and by not telling us any of the details he has surrounded it with a veil of secrecy. As far as the people of Canada are concerned, it might as well be behind the iron curtain.

I suggest one of those packages may be the trans-Canada highway. I heard very little in a concrete way about the trans-Canada highway until last fall when the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), speaking in Ottawa, said that if the time came when he was called upon to form a government the first consideration of that government would be the construction of a trans-Canada highway. So, whoever framed up the speech for the governor general thought it was a good time to get on the bandwagon.

Mr. Cruickshank: Which leader was that? You change so often.

Mr. Hodgson: You had better go back for some more apples; you seem very fond of applesauce.

Now I should like to say a few words on the lumbering industry and timber control, and I hope the former minister of reconstruction will listen; I do not think we will have any argument about it this time.

Mr. Cruickshank: What about gold mining? Tell us something about that.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Your needle is still good, but get a new record.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to put a few remarks on the record here.

Mr. Cruickshank: Go ahead.

Mr. Hodgson: Are you making this speech, Fraser Valley, or am I?

Mr. Cruickshank: It is hard to say.

Mr. Hodgson: If your people like you as little as I do, you will not come back again.

[Mr. Hodgson.]

The statistics I want to put on record have to do with the exports of lumber as of December, 1948, compared with those as of December, 1947. If I could get permission to put this table on Hansard I would be glad to do so without reading it.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Some hon. Members: Read it.

Mr. Hodgson: Very well. It is a long table; I need not read all the figures, but I want to give a few of them. This is from the external trade section, dominion bureau of statistics, and the first items have to do with planks and boards. Our exports of birch flooring for 1948 were 4,609,000 feet, while those for 1947 were 9,510,000 feet. Now I come to the item hardwood, n.o.p. Our exports under this item in 1948 were 3,437,000 feet as compared with 9,357,000 feet in 1947, or only about one-third as much. Then we come to spruce. Our exports in 1948 were 41,426,000 feet; in 1947 they were 117,102,000 feet.

Mr. Grant: Any yellow birch there?

Mr. Hodgson: Oh, you are over there now? I took a little trip down to the island the hon. member comes from. You know, he makes speeches in the house, too, but if you read his speeches you find that about sixty per cent of what he says is taken up in referring to the Tory member for Queens (Mr. McLure). When I was down there I found that a great many people like him. They have a nickname for him; I think it is mumbo-jumbo, or something like that. Anyway, he is a very affable fellow; his greatest fault is that he keeps butting in on people and interrupting, without saying a great deal himself. After all, he is a doctor and I suppose that should help him a little. I have heard that he is a horse doctor; I have heard that he is a medical doctor; I have heard that he is a psychiatrist, and I do not know what he is, except an interrupter.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member who is speaking has the floor, and it is nonsense to permit interruptions during his speech. I have great respect for my colleagues, but I believe that when an hon. gentleman has the floor and is going on with his speech he should be undisturbed unless he permits an interruption.

Mr. Hodgson: In any event, it adds up to this, that there has been a decrease in the export of timber and lumber from Canada in the month of December, 1948, over December, 1947, which amounted to fifty per cent in hardwoods, fifty per cent in spruce and twenty-five per cent in western woods. I should like to give a little advice to the government, if I can. I prepared a little memorandum touching upon matters of concern to the lumber industry. I believe these matters should be brought to the attention of the House of Commons. The first part of it deals with income taxes, and reads as follows:

> Income tax regulations with respect to timber depletion allowance on timber limits and farmers' woodlots amount to virtually a capital levy and are highly prejudicial to good forestry practice, and to the best interests of agriculture. The Canadian Lumbermen's Association and the different lumber and logging associations have separately and jointly petitioned the government for relief without avail. Agricultural associations in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario have done likewise also without result.

Then, we have the export restrictions:

> Certain wartime export restrictions on lumber continue although the war has been over for several years. In the main they are more of a nuisance value than otherwise. They add to costs of production and distribution, involve a great deal of clerical work and are an unnecessary expense. They have outserved their usefulness in the matter of reserving lumber for Canadian consumption as such is no longer necessary.
> The hardwood flooring trade has been particularly hard hit in the matter of export restrictions. It has been completely shut out of its export markets. About two weeks ago it was allowed a token export quota of five per cent only. Since hardwood flooring manufacture is the principal outlet for No. 2 and No. 3 common hardwood, it is to Canada's interest to allow the hardwood flooring trade to develop and export to the fullest extent.

I might tell the minister that practically every flooring plant warehouse in Ontario is full of hardwood flooring ready for shipment, but there is no market available. Behind that again, there is a backlog of No. 2 and No. 3 common hardwood in all the producers' yards. The firm I happen to represent has nearly 200,000 feet of flooring stock on hand which is usually shipped out early in the fall. This year we have not been able to sell it. I offer the suggestion to the minister that he make available a twenty-five per cent export quota.

Priced invoices are demanded by the timber control on all Canadian shipments qualifying for export quotas of softwood. This is a gratuitous interference with private business and can serve no useful purpose so far as government is concerned. If it did, why did they need to have the royal commission on prices investigate the lumber industry?

There is another thing which I think the government ought to consider, and that is that the forest products industry is the foundation of the Canadian economy. If these industries do not continue, our whole industrial life is in danger—railways, mines, agricultural implement and furniture trade, housing construction, and so on. The dominion government obtains great revenue from forest industries and spends extremely little on such industries.

The dominion government ought to be contributing to the expense of forest fire fighting, to extension of research against insect and tree disease attack, and to intensive research on forest regeneration. White pine is not naturally regenerating satisfactorily. Some time ago we lost our tamarack and our beech through disease. In very recent years the whole birch forest of the maritimes has been destroyed by the so-called "birch dieback", and yellow birch in Ontario and Quebec is now threatened. In fact, some of these grubs were found in my own county last summer.

Generally speaking, the forests of Canada have traditionally been milked for revenue by the dominion government and comparatively little money has been provided them from the public purse.

I have quite a few more statistics, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to quote, but I think my time is getting short. I have some figures in connection with United Kingdom imports of timber. I do not think anyone in this house can doubt my integrity when it comes to dealing with matters concerning Great Britain. I do think, however, that when we are trading with a nation we ought to deal with it as business people. If we are going to give gifts, we ought to give gifts to Great Britain and not make it a barter arrangement in order to make the people believe they are getting something for their money when they are not.

In scanning the United Kingdom imports, I see that the soviet union shipped to Great Britain timber to the value of $677,550 in 1947, and in 1948 the soviet union sold Great Britain timber to the value of $1,473,601. Then we come to Poland. In 1947 Poland did not sell Great Britain any timber, but in 1948 she sold Great Britain timber to the value of $1,613,792. I could give you the figures for Yugoslavia, French West Africa and many other countries, but I do not think I will do so. At this same time, however, when Great Britain is buying timber and forest products, I think Canada should receive a fair share of the trade. I think we should deal with Great Britain the same as we would deal with any other country. As I said before, if we want to make presents to the British, then let us make presents.

There are a few statistics here which I should like to deal with in detail and in which the Minister of Finance might be interested, but I do not think I will read them in detail. I have a copy of sessional paper No. 144, tabled in the house. The question was:

> What lawyers practising in (a) city of Montreal; (b) city of Toronto, have performed legal services or have been retained as solicitors or counsel by any department of government since the 1st of January, 1947?

This return shows that these lawyers were paid amounts ranging from one dollar to very large sums. I believe there is only one who received the one dollar, and most of them run up into the thousands of dollars. There is one lawyer in particular I should like to mention, since in my estimation he received an extraordinary amount. This man is W. C. Thomson of the city of Toronto, who received $172,252.16. The return goes on to say that of this amount $64,000 is for fees, costs and so on. This still leaves him $108,000 for his work which seems to me an extraordinary price to pay.

Someone has said that this government does not think enough of provincial rights, but in this case they have done pretty well because you all know that W. C. Thomson was the man who lost the nomination to Farquhar Oliver in the last Liberal convention. I think he was paid fairly well. Perhaps as the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) says, that is the pay-off. I have come to the end of my time, Mr. Speaker. I still have some things I wanted to say, but I have not the time to put them on the record.

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I think I heard a groan or two from the government benches as I rose. I want them to distinctly understand that I am not killing time for anybody. I have an address of a few minutes' duration to make during the course of this debate, and it is my privilege to make it. It is just my hard luck that I happen to be called upon to speak near the end of this debate, but I do not want anyone to think that I am just killing time. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I do not take up too much of the time of this house, and when I do have something to say it is my privilege to say it.

I wish to pay my respects to the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I think they did an excellent job with a very dull document.

I congratulate the Prime Minister on his appointment to that high office. I also compliment and welcome the new members introduced this session, especially my leader, who is certainly doing an excellent job. To the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) I would say that he would be a better politician if he attended strictly to the business of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I also wish to add my congratulations to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) and to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Chapdelaine) on great personal victories.

Referring for a moment to the realm of sport, I wish to reiterate what was said a few days ago by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), namely, that the trip east last fall of the Calgary Stampeders did more to create good feeling between the east and west than anything that has happened in many years. Being a past president of the Canadian rugby union I feel that I have some knowledge of the game. I wish to say further that I saw the east-west final last fall and, regardless of any opinion that may be held by the hon. member for Algoma East, in my opinion the best team won.

I represent what in my opinion is one of the best ridings in Canada, the riding of Wentworth. I regret however that, in the redistribution act which was passed last year, the powers that be saw fit to remove from that riding four of the best townships in the county. In my opinion this should never have been done. I do not believe in breaking county boundaries. When the next redistribution takes place, if I have any hand in it, those townships will be returned to Wentworth riding. I feel that the next riding of Wentworth should be more of a truly rural riding; and if I have anything to do with the matter it will be. I think it is only fair to the farmers in that riding that it should be so. Any change that was made this time should have been in that direction.

I wish for a few moments to refer to the serious erosion that has taken place along the shores of the great lakes, and particularly that portion of lake Ontario stretching from Hamilton to Niagara-on-the-Lake; that is along a great deal of the riding which I represent.

At a meeting held in Toronto in March of last year at the lake shore erosion conference the following resolution was passed:

Resolved that this organization ask the provincial and federal governments to instruct their engineers to make a survey of the erosion on the great lakes and report with a recommendation for a remedy; and in this report be included a report on the effects of the Ogoki and Albany river diversions on the level of the great lakes.

While this resolution went forward at that time, I doubt very much if the federal government has done anything about it, but I intend to find out.

A few years ago a former premier of Ontario approached the federal government and persuaded it to legalize diversion of the Ogoki and Albany rivers into the great lakes system, which means that while the present diversion at Chicago of the great lakes system is 3,500 cubic feet per second, there is now pouring in from northern Ontario water to the extent of 5,200 cubic feet per second from the Albany river watershed. This means that we are getting an additional 1,700 cubic feet per second that should be flowing towards James bay and the Arctic circle.

It is argued by many engineers that this large additional volume which does not belong to the St. Lawrence watershed is one of the causes for the cycle of high levels that we have been experiencing on lakes Huron, Erie and Ontario; and it is easy to see that these lake levels, which are abnormally high when lashed by winds and storms, do most certainly erode the shore line of the lower lakes.

As I have said before, if the federal government does not do something soon, it will not be many years before that great Niagara fruit belt—possibly the greatest stone-fruit belt in Canada—will be wiped out altogether.

Taxes must be reduced. I feel that two of the first to go should be the sales tax and the 25 per cent luxury tax. They are both hampering trade; they are an aggravation; and the sales tax especially is one that is borne by those who are least able to afford it. It does not concern me one bit when this tax was imposed or who imposed it. I consider it is wrong. We should never have had it except, perhaps, as a war measure, and it should be removed. In some cases, of course, the tax has been removed. But one matter that I feel is misleading is this. While the 8 per cent sales tax has been removed from certain foodstuffs, the ingredients of packaged foods are still subject to it; so that while the 8 per cent tax has been removed from the finished product, as a result of the retention of sales tax on spices, pectins and other commodities that go into the processing of soups, jams, et cetera, there will be no noticeable reduction in the price of these foods.

One tax that I feel should most certainly be removed is that on soft drinks. While I realize that practically 90 per cent of the soft-drink bottling plants in Canada are privately-owned, that by far the greater proportion of them are small plants with small distribution, and that many of these plants which employ a great many people are finding it hard to make ends meet, it is certainly a situation which should be altered immediately. Far more important to my mind, however, is the consideration that the kiddies should get back their five-cent drinks and chocolate bars.

One matter with which I most certainly am not satisfied is the attitude of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) and of the government with respect to a house committee being set up to deal with veterans affairs. The minister was questioned some days ago in the house and he said quite definitely that, in the opinion of the government, it was not necessary to have a committee on veterans affairs this session. This, in my opinion, is most certainly neglect on the part of the government and a let-down to the veterans of this country. The Red Cross girls, the St. John's ambulance brigade and several other groups who served in the second great war most certainly did not get what was due them. The British Canadians who have lived for twenty continuous years in Canada and are veterans of the first great war are, in my opinion, most certainly entitled to war veterans allowance. I might say that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, during the discussion on the estimates towards the end of last session, said that he was still studying that problem, and was still considering the matter of making some allowance to the British Canadian veterans. But as yet we have heard nothing in that respect. I think the war veterans allowance should be granted to them. I do not know why it was not done years ago.

This war veterans committee of the House of Commons should be a permanent committee. It should be a standing committee which should meet every session and not just every two years when it coincides with the annual meeting of the Canadian Legion and whenever possible manages to wind up its deliberations shortly before the annual meeting when there is generally a great round of back-slapping. The veterans affairs committee of the House of Commons should meet every session if only to consider in detail the estimates of the department. Since I have mentioned that, I think there should be a standing committee for every department of government. These standing committees should consider the estimates in committee. The work would be done more thoroughly, and it would save a great deal of time which is now wasted in the House of Commons.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I would speak for about fifteen minutes. I think it was Mark Twain who once said that if a man could not say all he knew about any one subject in twenty minutes he should not have the privilege of saying anything; but I have covered a lot of ground and I am still staying within the limit. As a matter of fact, I am just about as much fed up with these long-winded speeches in the House of Commons as anyone else.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I thoroughly agree with thoughts expressed at the recent national Liberal convention which was held in Ottawa on August 5, 6 and 7, 1948, to the effect that it was about time that this country got back to responsible government. It is about time, and it is long overdue, that this country returned to parliamentary government, with the people's elected representatives having a say as to what should be done. It is about time the bureaucrats were put in their places. There is a great deal wrong with the present system that cannot be blamed upon any government in particular, but the last two governments have gone a very long way to bring about the present situation.

Mr. Frank T. Stanfield (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I hardly know just why I am on my feet. I am not much of a talker anyway, and I am never exactly sure what I should or should not do since I came to this place; therefore my position tonight is nothing very new.

I should like to congratulate the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown). I have a great deal of admiration for that hon. member and I certainly wish him every success in his political career. I do not know the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Demers); I have not had the pleasure of meeting him, but he made a fine speech and I wish him every success in his political life.

The first matter on which I should like to speak for a few minutes is pensions for blind people, cripples and people who are permanently invalided. I know that today we have pensions for the blind, but these pensions should be a great deal higher than they are. Blindness is a terrible affliction. I believe that a blind person should get a pension even though he has the means of making a living and perhaps owns a little property. Just because he has a little bit of this world's goods in the form of property, and possibly a small income, that does not mean that he should be deprived of a pension. I believe that the pension should be twice as large as it is today.

As for our cripples and invalids, I could never understand why some consideration was not given to these poor unfortunate people. There are hundreds of them in every province of this dominion. Some of them have not a cent that they can call their own. They are dependent on their relatives or on some person who will keep them. These unfortunate people should be given some kind of a pension so that they can have a ltitle money which they can at least call their own. I believe that the only reason why these people have never received any great consideration is that they have no great political influence. Today, regardless of party, anybody who has not much political influence never receives a great deal of attention.

The next matter to which I should like to refer is the conservation of our forests. The forests are by far the greatest form of wealth that this country has. We can all agree that our forests have been depleted far too rapidly. Only the other day I read in the paper that one of the ministers in British Columbia said that the forests of that province were being depleted at a very rapid rate. I know that our forests in Nova Scotia, and in the maritime provinces generally, are going at a rapid rate and not much is being done about it. I do not see why the dominion government should not assume a great deal of responsibility for reforestation, or at least supplement the provinces by giving them grants to help reforestation and to guard against fires and insects. Fires and insects are just as heavy a drain on our forests as cutting operations. I know that in our province the birch is all gone. Many people thought that birch was good only for making furniture or for cutting up into firewood, or something of that kind; but in New Hampshire and Vermont I believe they are using birch and the other hardwood trees for making pulp.

It is pretty hard to place the value on our forests for future generations. The future wealth of this country will greatly depend on the conservation of our forests, and I do believe that the dominion government would be wise to do everything they can to give grants to the provinces, or set up areas themselves for reforestation, and do everything they can to protect our forests.

It may be said that this all takes money, and it might be asked where we are to get it. I have a little suggestion to make. It may not meet with very much favour, but hon. members have read in the papers that the President of the United States formed a commission or a committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Hoover. That commission was to look into the consolidating of government departments in the United States with a view to bringing about greater efficiency in government and lessening the cost of administration. Mr. Hoover and his committee brought in a recommendation that would cut the cost of government in that country by about $2 billion. I know politics well enough to know that that whole $2 billion could never be saved. I think perhaps we should set up a committee to inquire into the cost of government with a view to cutting down the cost of doing the business of the country, at the same time doing it more efficiently and making it much easier for the ministers. It could run into a very large figure. It would also be a great help toward getting a cut in income tax.

May I say a word about income tax? Take a married man with two children, and calculate what income tax he has to pay this year and what he has paid back to 1940. It is pretty hard to see how he has been able to get along as well as he has. Take the great middle-class people of this country. Take the people who have incomes of from $5,000 to $25,000. The chap above that can get along all right. If he cannot, it is his own hard luck. The people on incomes of $5,000 to $25,000 are the great middle class who are the very backbone of our country. I can well understand that our socialist friends to the left would very much like to get rid of the middle-class people; it is to their interests not to have too strong a middle class in this country. Our friends on the government benches across the way are doing the best they can to help the socialists along in that, so far as I can see.

I would ask that in his coming budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) give every possible relief to these people in the form of a substantial reduction in their income taxes, because, as I said before, they are the very backbone of any democratic country, no matter where it may be. If one does not find in a country a large and influential middle class, then that country does not amount to much.

I shall not spend much time discussing the tax on soft drinks. I would say however that any government, with a surplus of three-quarters of a billion dollars, which cannot afford to take off that two-cent tax on bottled soft drinks, and soda fountain drinks, has something wrong with it. This is a nuisance tax of the worst possible variety; certainly in my view we would be well rid of it.

The same observations could be applied to the tax on leather goods. First of all let me say that I have no connection whatever with the manufacture and sale of leather goods; but I do know that when a manufacturer has to add 35 per cent to his sale price of luggage and other leather goods he is faced with an unpleasant procedure. No one wishes to stock up at this time with merchandise bearing these heavy taxes. The result is that, with the tax applied, the manufacturer proceeds to cut down volume because he does not know just what is going to happen. In my view this is a most unfair tax applied only to leather goods. One such type of manufactured goods should not be singled out for such heavy tax action.

Much the same could be said with respect to jewelry. Of course the jeweler collects the tax of 25 per cent from the consumer. I believe even our socialist friends to the left would agree that today costume jewelry is more or less a necessity. The same would apply to many other articles sold by the jeweler. I should say that as we are getting back to a permanent peacetime basis many of these heavy taxes against certain types of businessmen, such as those engaged in the manufacture and sale of leather goods and in the production and sale of jewelry, might well be reduced or completely eliminated.

Perhaps in passing I might say something which I am sure will receive the support of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank). I believe margarine should be given a distinctive colour, and that such colour should not be the same as that of butter. I believe further that margarine should carry a distinctive wrapping so that the product could not be associated with or sold to the public as butter. As the butter manufacturers and dairymen are not protected by any patents or trade-marks, I say the margarine manufacturer should not be permitted to have the advantage of packaging his product to resemble butter. In this I believe we would all agree.

When I resume my remarks, I should like to speak about conditions in the maritime provinces.

On motion of Mr. Stanfield the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Cruickshank: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when an hon. member is speaking other hon. members ought not to wander around, interfering and interrupting. I would ask to have them named.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Drew: Before the adjournment would the Prime Minister indicate the next order of business after the vote has been taken on the debate on the speech from the throne?

Mr. St. Laurent: There are several items which are quite urgent. I should expect that the first of these to be dealt with would be the resumption of the debate on the motion of the Minister of Justice that Mr. Speaker do leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into a committee of the whole on a resolution providing for the introduction of a bill to continue certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war.

Mr. Drew: Well then, without pressing the point too vigorously, may I take it that, unless there is some special reason, we may assume this will be debated following the completion of the vote on the motion to adopt the speech from the throne?

Mr. St. Laurent: Unless some further announcement is made, that is the present plan—to take up this one immediately after the conclusion of the debate on the speech from the throne.

At 10.30 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on February 22, 1949.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 9, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN TORONTO "STAR" OF MARCH 8

Mr. John R. MacNicol (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, though I am happy to say I seldom have to do so. In last evening's Toronto Star I read an article headed, "Say M.P. in hospital but don't tell him". It refers to a rumour that apparently was circulated both here and in Toronto to the effect that I was ill. I have not been ill in forty to fifty years, though I did have a cold about ten days ago. I am not criticizing the Star for referring to a rumour, but the last part of this article reads:

Today there was a new report: Mr. MacNicol had been rushed to the hospital.

If the House of Commons is looked upon as a hospital—for I rush here daily—that statement is true; but I am happy to say I have never felt better.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

RETURNS TABLED—PROCEDURE FOLLOWED IN TABLING AND GAZETTING

On the order for motions:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table returns to orders passed on February 24 and March 7 on questions asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) in respect to orders in council. The question of February 24 was:

How many orders in council passed since July 1, 1948, as at the 18th of February, 1949, were not (a) tabled; (b) published in the Canada Gazette?

The answer is: There were 7,005 orders in council passed between July 1, 1948, and February 18, 1949—including 4,215 minutes of treasury board—of which 6,777 were not tabled and 6,728 were not published in the Canada Gazette.

The second order passed on March 7 read:

1. How many orders in council were passed between (a) September 1, 1939, and September 1, 1945; (b) September 1, 1945, and date hereof?

2. Of these orders in council, how many were passed under the provisions of the (a) War Measures Act; (b) the several emergency powers acts?

The answer is:

1. Between September 1, 1939, and September 1, 1945, there were 55,559 orders in council; treasury boards (464) containing minutes totaling 34,988, making a grand total of 90,547.

Between September 1, 1945, and March 4, 1949, there were 19,098 orders in council; treasury boards (245) containing minutes totaling 35,737, or a grand total of 54,835.

2. Orders in council referred to in 1 (a) and (b) passed under (a) the War Measures Act, 3,332; (b) (i) the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, 397; (ii) the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947, 21.

As promised in the house I am also tabling a descriptive list of the first hundred orders in council and minutes of treasury board passed since the beginning of the period mentioned in the hon. member's question. This list will indicate whether or not these orders in council and treasury board minutes have been tabled or gazetted or both. I am also tabling a summary of the first hundred orders in council and treasury board minutes passed since January 1, 1949. Taken together I think those two lists constitute a good cross-section of the various questions dealt with by order in council and treasury board minutes during the course of a year.

I think perhaps for the better information of hon. members it might be convenient to have these lists published as an appendix to Hansard of today, and if I have the consent of the house I would ask that this be done.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Laurent: In order, however, that the answers given in the past, and particularly the returns I have just tabled, may not prove to be misleading, I should like to avail myself of this opportunity to review briefly the procedure followed in the tabling and gazetting of orders in council, so that if this procedure is not satisfactory to the house it may be criticized and that criticism taken into consideration. In this matter, as in many others related to the business of government, the practice followed in Canada has been patterned very largely on United Kingdom constitutional procedures.

Orders in Council

Orders in council are tabled in this house when (a) there is a statutory requirement for such tabling; or (b) an order in council is deemed to be of particular interest to hon. members; or (c) tabling is requested by an hon. member and agreed to by the house. Furthermore, orders in council under the War Measures Act were tabled regularly in parliament, and this has been the government's practice with respect to orders under remaining emergency powers.

I might add that in the matter of tabling of orders in council our practice goes a step further than the course normally followed in the United Kingdom. An order in council is tabled in the British Commons only if the statute on which the particular order is based requires the order to be tabled.

In so far as publication in the Canada Gazette is concerned, a distinction should be made between statutory orders and prerogative orders. The former are all those orders passed by the governor in council under the provisions of an act of parliament. The second category comprises all orders passed by the governor in council in the exercise of his general executive authority. All statutory orders are published in the Canada Gazette as a matter of course, but publication of prerogative orders, which relate to routine administrative matters, is infrequent. The gazetting of this second group is largely dependent on whether or not the orders are of general interest.

Prior to the 1st of January, 1947, orders in council were published in the Canada Gazette when statutory provisions required that they be so published or when it was felt that they were of general interest to the public. In addition, during the war years, as hon. members will recall, orders in council passed under the War Measures Act appeared in an official publication entitled Canadian War Orders and Regulations.

Since January 1, 1947, the governor in council, under the provisions of section 30 of the Public Printing and Stationery Act, has authorized the publication of the Canada Gazette in two parts. Part I remains much the same as the Canada Gazette existed prior to January 1, 1947. Part II of the Gazette was established for the express purpose of making available to the public all orders in council and other instruments of a statutory or regulatory nature, whether or not there existed a statutory requirement for their publication. This step was taken in order that all subsidiary legislation passed under powers delegated by parliament might be brought constantly, fully and in a uniform manner to the public's attention. The conditions governing the publication of part II of the Gazette are set out in the statutory orders and regulations order, 1947 (P.C. 5355 of December 30, 1946) as published in Statutory Orders and Regulations of January 8, 1947.

Perhaps the practical results arising out of the passing of the statutory orders and regulations order, 1947, have not been made sufficiently clear to parliament and to the public. In effect, this order provides for the compulsory publication in part II of the Gazette of all semi-legislative or regulatory measures taken by the governor in council, ministers of the crown, boards and other government agencies under powers delegated by act of parliament. The statutes of Canada comprise all federal legislation. Statutory Orders and Regulations contain all the so-called subsidiary legislation authorized by the statutes.

It should be noted that our practice in the matter of publication of orders is very similar to that followed in the United Kingdom, where a limited number of orders are published in the London Gazette and orders of a statutory character are included in the Statutory Instruments series under the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act, 1946.

To summarize, I might say that treasury board minutes dealing with personnel recommendations of the civil service commission under the Civil Service Act, orders approving contracts and authorizing expenditures from funds appropriated by parliament, and other acts of an administrative character, comprise the great bulk of all orders of the governor in council. Such instruments are not normally published, nor are they tabled in parliament unless specially requested. On the other hand, as a matter of normal practice, all orders in council of general interest or of a regulatory nature are either tabled or gazetted, or both tabled and gazetted.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): In view of the lengthy and complete statement by the Prime Minister, may I, sir, with your leave and the leave of the house, direct his attention to one thing. As I understand it, in Great Britain a committee of the House of Commons has been given the responsibility of reviewing all orders in council as they are passed, for the purpose of bringing before the house any cases of invasion of rights or suspension of statutes by order in council. I was wondering whether the Prime Minister would consider the tabling of orders in council that are passed while parliament is in session. The members are in a very difficult position because legislative acts are performed under certain orders in council the tabling of which is not considered necessary. In view of the attitude the Prime Minister has shown, and his desire to be of assistance to the house, would he agree to have these orders in council laid on the table of the house, having regard to the fact there is such a large number of them? It would be neither expensive nor difficult to do it. Hon. members would then know, as they advised their constituents, what the law or the practice is in respect to the various matters dealt with by order in council.

Mr. St. Laurent: If the hon. member will look at the two lists I have produced, he will perhaps come to the conclusion that it would be quite as convenient to have tabled monthly a full list of the orders in council of the preceding month, with the same kind of indications as are given in these lists. Then if in that list there was anything in which any hon. member was interested, he could ask to have the order in council tabled. But as about ninety per cent of the orders in council or minutes of the treasury board are merely administrative acts, I think it would be useless to table all of them and thus increase the store of parliamentary documents that the clerks of the house are obliged to take care of and keep for a long time after they have been tabled. Perhaps the matter could be referred to again. We want to make as full disclosure as will be of any use to anybody; but perhaps the hon. member will find that if he gets that kind of a list monthly he will have in it sufficient information to ask for any orders that were not already tabled and that might be of interest.

FISHERIES

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—PURCHASE BY PRICES SUPPORT BOARD OF FISH IN DANGER OF SPOILAGE

Hon. Robert W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): I wish to make an announcement to the house about a serious situation which has developed in the inland fisheries of the prairie provinces, particularly Manitoba, and the action the government has authorized the fisheries prices support board to take to alleviate the problem.

Members will be aware that winter fishing operations in these northern lakes are carried on by fishermen taking the fish through the ice. The fish is frozen and stored at the lake under natural conditions until it is moved to market. Normally this movement to market takes care of all the fish before the spring breakup. This winter, largely because of the abnormal weather conditions and some softening of the export market, the Winnipeg trade has not been prepared to handle all the fish, and substantial quantities remain on the fishing grounds and at the railheads. This fish must be moved immediately into refrigerated storage in Winnipeg to avoid spoilage.

Of the 2,800 fishermen in Manitoba, many have suffered a serious decline in their incomes from this operation. This potential loss of food and the plight of the fishermen was brought to the attention of the government through the fisheries prices support board by representatives of the fishermen and the fishing industry in Manitoba and the government of Manitoba which administers the fisheries of that province. The government has investigated and considered the problem and has authorized the board to stand ready to purchase such quantities of fish as remain in fishermen's hands or which are held on consignment by the fish trade on behalf of the fishermen.

The board has been authorized to offer to purchase the following species of fish at specified prices, these being the species reported in fishermen's hands and in danger of spoilage. The prices are on Winnipeg basis including freight and other handling charges, and are approximately eighty per cent of those which have been paid to date this year: whitefish, round, 13 cents per pound; saugers, round, 10 cents per pound; pike, (jacks), round, 6½ cents per pound; pike (jacks), headless, 8½ cents per pound; pickerel (yellows), round, 14 cents per pound; trout, round, 14 cents per pound; tullibee, round, 4½ cents per pound. The prices which the fishermen may expect under this arrangement will be these prices less appropriate deductions for freight.

The board is immediately taking steps to set up the necessary machinery for handling this fish, and will be making further announcements in this regard within the next day or two.

Mr. Coldwell: If the conditions are the same, will the same policy apply to Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Mayhew: We know that some Saskatchewan fish are in long supply, and they are included in this measure.

[Later:]

Mr. Cruickshank: The hon. member for Lake Centre having made an excellent political speech, may I now ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Graydon: The hon. member did not hear the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cruickshank: Those remarks from the opposite side will never bother me. I wish to direct a question to my own minister from British Columbia. Will the same consideration be given to the berry growers as has been given to the Manitoba fishermen? I should like an answer to the question.

Mr. Mayhew: I suggest that the hon. member for Fraser Valley direct his question to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Cruickshank: I have done that every day, Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS

WAR ASSETS—GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Mr. McKay:

1. How much money has been realized by the sale of government property by the War Assets Corporation since its inception?
2. What did these properties cost the Canadian government either by construction or purchase?
3. Having no regard for depreciation, what loss was suffered by the government on these sales?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Gross sales of Canadian government property by War Assets Corporation since its inception to February 28, 1949, amount to $454,894,247.65.

2. The cost to the Canadian government of assets declared to War Assets Corporation is not recorded by the corporation.

3. See answer to No. 2.

NATIONAL HEALTH—HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANT

Mr. Coldwell:

1. What is the total cost per additional bed for each hospital listed on page 836 of Hansard of February 23, 1949?
2. How much per additional bed will be paid by the dominion towards the construction of each of the hospitals listed on page 836 of Hansard of February 23, 1949?

Mr. Martin:

1. See table below. The wide variation in estimated costs is due to the fact that they cover many different types of construction, ranging from simple conversion of existing buildings to construction from the ground up of the latest type of hospital complete with facilities for the treatment of all diseases.

2. See table below. In no case will the federal grant exceed $1,000 per active treatment bed project, or $1,500 per chronic or convalescent bed. The wide variation in the estimated federal grants shown in the attached table is explained as follows:

(a) Amounts less than $1,000 represent federal assistance toward active treatment bed projects which were under construction on April 1, 1948.

(b) Amounts of $1,000 represent federal assistance toward active treatment bed projects which were not under construction on April 1, 1948.

(c) Amounts over $1,000 represent federal assistance toward chronic or convalescent bed projects which were under construction on April 1, 1948.

Average total cost, per additional bed and average federal grant per additional bed for hospitals listed in Hansard of February 23, 1949, page 836

Questions

RADAR EQUIPMENT

Mr. Pearkes:

1. How many radar sets 268 have been built by Canadian arsenals?
2. How many of these have been supplied to the different departments of the Canadian government?
3. How many have been installed, or are being installed in Canada for harbour protection?
4. In what Canadian harbours, if any, are they being placed?
5. How many of these radar sets have been sold to Canadian shipping firms?
6. To what foreign countries, if any, have these sets been sold?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. None. The basic sets were built during the war and, to date, 317 have been extensively modified and completely modernized by Canadian Arsenals Limited.

2. Department of Fisheries, 1; Department of Mines and Resources, 3; Department of Transport, 5; National Research Council, 7; R.C.M.P., 4; Department of National Defence —Navy, 5; Army, 1; R.C.A.F., 8; Defence Research Board, 2; Canadian National Railways Company, 3; Canadian National Steamships, 3.

3 and 4. The Department of Transport and the national research council have co-operated in the experimental installation of two modified Type 26H sets for harbour protection; one at Camperdown, Nova Scotia, overlooking the outer Halifax harbour, and the other on the Lions Gate bridge in Vancouver, B.C. The performance of both installations is being studied carefully to determine their value to marine shipping and what modifications, if any, are desirable.

5. Five have been sold and 215 supplied on a rental basis.

6. Denmark, 3; Sweden, 46 (of which 16 have been delivered); Netherlands, 1; Norway, 1; United States, 1.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—DOCUMENTARY FILMS TAKEN IN FOREIGN LANDS

Mr. Fraser:

1. What documentary motion pictures of foreign lands have been produced by or for the national film board during the last eight years?
2. What are the names of each of these pictures; in what country was each taken and in what year?

Mr. McIlraith: Stand.

Mr. Fraser: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply or his parliamentary assistant. This question which has been called "stand" has been on the order paper since the middle of last month, and I should like an answer as soon as possible. Am I not getting an answer because of the poor management of the national film board?

Questions

Mr. McIlraith: The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply has no parliamentary assistant. On his return I shall direct his attention to the remarks of the hon. member.

FRUIT—EXPERIMENTAL SUBSTATION IN SALMON ARM-SORRENTO, B.C., AREA

Mr. Fulton:

1. Has the Minister or the Department of Agriculture received any representation from the B.C. Fruit Growers' Association for the establishment of an experimental substation in the Salmon Arm-Sorrento area for fruit?
2. If so, is any action being taken to meet the request?
3. If none is being taken, why not?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. The matter is under consideration.

WHEAT PRICES

Mr. Fair:

What was the average price of No. 1 northern class II wheat in each of the crop years, 1946-47, 1947-48, and the first six months of the 1948-49 crop year?

Mr. McIlraith:

1946-47: $2.43 per bushel basis No. 1 northern wheat in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver.

1947-48: $2.88 per bushel basis No. 1 northern wheat in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver.

1948-49: The monthly simple daily average of quoted class II prices is:—

August—$2.42
September—$2.37
October—$2.35
November—$2.42
December—$2.41
January—$2.33
February—$2.25

These prices are not related to sales.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX—AMOUNTS COLLECTED

Mr. Williams:

What sum of money did the government collect in excess profits tax during the years it was in effect, year by year and the aggregate?

Mr. McCann:

By fiscal years	Individuals	Corporations	Total
1940-41	$ 147,989	$ 23,847,280	$ 23,995,269
1941-42	3,483,384	131,684,961	135,168,345
1942-43	11,380,178	443,200,499	454,580,677
1943-44	21,417,744	447,300,096	468,717,840
1944-45	24,186,853	441,618,504	465,805,357
1945-46	28,637,751	465,558,732	494,196,483

1947-48	13,144,480	213,886,014	227,030,494
1948 (to Feb. 28/49)	5,859,009	37,161,653	43,020,662
	$ 135,909,836	$ 2,625,302,734	$ 2,761,212,570

POSTAL SERVICE—LOSS IN HANDLING NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS

Mr. Fraser:

Of the estimated loss of $7,460,689 sustained by the Post Office Department during the year 1948 in handling newspapers and periodicals mailed by publishers, what amount of this loss was caused by the handling of (a) daily newspapers; (b) weekly newspapers; (c) magazines and periodicals?

Mr. Bertrand (Laurier): No information available as to the proportion attributable to (a) daily newspapers; (b) weekly newspapers; (c) magazines and periodicals.

To obtain accurate breakdown of costs into three categories of publications as requested would have added considerably to cost of obtaining information and, moreover, might have delayed mails; accordingly, loss for all publications was determined.

[Mr. Fraser.]

SYSTEM OF MONETARY EXCHANGE—SUGGESTION THAT STERLING AREAS CHANGE TO DOLLARS AND CENTS

Mr. Isnor:

Has Canada during the past three years suggested to Great Britain that that country consider changing from the sterling form of exchange to that of dollars and cents?

Mr. Belzile: No.

Mr. Isnor:

1. Has Canada, during the past five years, requested the united nations monetary and financial conference to consider the advisability of having Great Britain and other sterling areas change to the dollar and cent system of monetary exchange?
2. If so (a) when; (b) what was the result?

Mr. Belzile:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

IMMIGRATION—ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many orders in council relative to the provisions of the Immigration Act have been passed since the first day of July, 1947?

2. Of said orders in council, how many have not been (a) published in the Canada Gazette; (b) tabled in parliament?

Mr. MacKinnon: This question was answered in the return tabled today.

Mr. Speaker: Answered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have examined the return to which the minister refers and I think he must be mistaken because that question was not answered. I would ask that the question be allowed to stand.

Mr. MacKinnon: The hon. member spoke to me about this, and I am quite agreeable to having the question stand.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—RESPONSIBILITY FOR MAINTENANCE

Mr. Isnor:

When the trans-Canada highway is completed, whose responsibility will it be to keep the highway open for traffic—dominion or provincial?

Mr. MacKinnon: This question has not yet been considered. In the past when the federal government has shared in cost of constructing highways in the provinces it has never contributed to the cost of maintenance. The sections of the trans-Canada highway in national parks will be kept open by the federal government.

BUILDINGS DECLARED SURPLUS AT PAULSON, MAN.

Mr. Zaplitny:

1. What buildings have been declared surplus at No. 7 B. and G. at Paulson, Manitoba, since January 1, 1948?

2. Which of such buildings have been sold; to whom, and at what price?

3. What was the original cost of each building referred to above?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. None.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

EXPORTS OF CERTAIN PRODUCTS—MARKETS FOR 1949-50

Mr. Stephenson:

1. What amount of apples, tobacco, honey, potatoes, was exported from Canada during 1948, and to what countries?

2. What markets, if any, have been found for these products during the years 1949-1950?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. See statement below.

2. Exports of these products are handled by commercial concerns and the government has no information concerning the years 1949-50. It is doubtful that, under present conditions, the firms concerned have been able to obtain export commitments this far in advance.

1. Canadian exports by countries, of specified commodities, during the year 1948:

PUBLIC WORKS—OTTAWA—MALE EMPLOYEES RESIDENT IN QUEBEC PROVINCE

Mr. Lennard:

1. How many male employees are employed by the Department of Public Works in Ottawa through the George street office?

2. Of this number how many reside in Quebec?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. 892.

2. 171.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

*OLD AGE PENSIONS—RESOLUTION PASSED BY TIMMINS, ONT., MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Low:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare receive a copy of a resolution passed by several municipalities at Timmins, Ontario, calling for an increase in old age pensions?

2. If so, on what day was the said resolution received?

3. What action is being taken?

Mr. Martin: Perhaps I might answer this question orally. The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is; on February 21, 1949. As to the third part of the question, I cannot say what action will be taken by the provincial governments. So far as this government is concerned, the policy will be announced in due course.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY—SHARE OF COST TO BE BORNE BY ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Isnor:

1. If the proposed St. Lawrence waterway and power project is proceeded with, will the provinces of Ontario and Quebec be asked to jointly share the Canadian cost of same?

2. If not, what proportion will these two provinces share?

Mr. Lapointe:

1. No.

2. Under the terms of the agreement signed by representatives of Canada and the United States in 1941, Canada would undertake to complete the all-Canadian portions of the project and a part of the international portion. It would be the intention of the Canadian government, however, to endeavour to conclude arrangements with Ontario and Quebec for turning over to them the power facilities constructed in connection with the combined project, on mutually acceptable terms.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

POLYMER CORPORATION—WAGES, WORKING CONDITIONS AND SECURITY BENEFITS

Mr. Murphy:

For a copy of all current agreements between Polymer Corporation of Canada Limited and any unions representing the workers in said corporation, in respect to (a) wages and conditions of work; (b) hospitalization, superannuation, pension and other security benefits.

Mr. Howe: This motion presents some difficulty. The Polymer Corporation is a crown company with its own board of directors, and in that way is on all fours with the Canadian National Railways. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it has been the practice not to answer, from the floor of the house, questions having to do with the internal operation of the Canadian National Railways. The situation in this regard is aggravated by the fact that the management of the corporation and its directors have been having labour discussions with the employees; and I feel that any publicity from here might be harmful to the successful conclusion of those talks if they have not already been concluded. I think my hon. friend will see the difficulty, and I hope he will agree to drop the motion.

Mr. Murphy: Very well.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

POLYMER CORPORATION—ARRANGEMENTS WITH MUNICIPALITIES FOR SALE OF HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER, ETC.

Mr. Murphy:

For a copy of all existing agreements made by Polymer Corporation of Canada Limited with any municipality or other companies or corporations respecting the sale of hydro electric power, water, steam or other energy products.

Mr. Howe: The same situation applies here as in the case of the previous motion. Polymer Corporation is engaged in a highly competitive business. It has a turnover of some $20 million a year. About one-third of its product is sold in Canada, one-third in the United States, and one-third in several European countries. These agreements represent contracts with various Canadian companies. Perhaps there is no great difficulty about these particular contracts, but I should not like to establish the practice of laying on the table of the house contracts between Polymer Corporation and its customers in all parts of the world. I shall be glad if my hon. friend will consent to drop this motion. If he insists on it, perhaps we will do it with the reservation I have indicated.

Mr. Murphy: I prefer not to drop it.

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question, based on what he has said with respect to this motion? I do not want to deal with the second reason for not desiring to give the information, because it is a matter of which I have no knowledge. But the first premise upon which he based his argument places hon. members in a most invidious position. How are we to get information unless questions are asked and answered on the floor of the house? On a matter of this kind there is no committee comparable with the railways and shipping committee, which of course sits from time to time. Information is readily available in the sittings of that committee. My question is, where do we get the information?

Mr. Howe: The committee on railways and shipping, or some other appropriate committee, is entitled to inquire into the affairs of any crown company. The annual report of the Polymer Corporation will be tabled in due course. If an hon. member wishes it referred to a committee, all he needs to do is to so move, and I can assure my hon. friend that I would not object. I think my hon. friend will see that it is practically impossible to carry on a business with the turnover of the Polymer Corporation, the diversity of products which it manufactures, and the multiplicity of markets in which the product is sold, if its day to day business transactions are to be subject to discussion in parliament.

If a committee wishes to look into the Polymer Corporation I shall be only too glad to facilitate that action.

Mr. Graydon: What committee is appropriate to that purpose? It does not come under any of the standing committees.

Mr. Howe: One can be set up, if necessary.

Mr. Graydon: One has not been set up, though.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member agree to the motion being dropped?

Mr. Murphy: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have only one alternative, namely, to put the question to the house. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

(And some members having risen):

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Murphy) which was negatived on the following division:

WAR ASSETS—BUILDINGS AT PAULSON, MAN.

Mr. Zaplitny:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents exchanged between War Assets Corporation and any person, persons or corporations since January 1, 1948, in connection with buildings at No. 7 B. and G. at Paulson, Manitoba.

IMMIGRATION—REGULATIONS AND ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. Ross (St. Paul's):

For a copy of all immigration regulations and orders in council issued from October 1, 1947, to date regarding the entry into Canada of individuals or groups of people.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SOCIAL SECURITY

CONTRIBUTORY OVER-ALL INSURANCE—AMENDMENT OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Has the federal government inquired of the provinces as to their attitude with regard to amending the British North America Act if such is necessary in order to make possible the enactment of contributory over-all social insurance? If not, is consideration being given to the making of such inquiries at an early date?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The proposal for contributory over-all social insurance was one of those put forward by the federal government at the last dominion-provincial conference and about which it was not possible to reach an agreement. There has been no indication of any change since that time in the attitude of the representatives of the provinces who were opposed to the proposal put forward by the federal government. Consideration is not being given to the reconvening of the conference at this time.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? I was asking in particular whether any inquiries had been made of the provinces with respect to amending the British North America Act. Was that under discussion at the dominion-provincial conference?

Mr. St. Laurent: That was involved in the proposal put forward at the dominion-provincial conference, and the spokesman for the delegation from one of the provinces said that he would not consider any amendment to the British North America Act, not even one that would be permissive in the sense that it would allow the dominion or the provinces to delegate to each other some of their powers, either permanently or for a period. He would not have even agreed to that, and there has been no indication of any change in his attitude.

Mr. Knowles: Is the government permitting one of the provinces to veto the best interests of the people of Canada?

Mr. Drew: May I ask the Prime Minister what province that was?

Mr. St. Laurent: That was the premier of the province of Quebec.

[Mr. Ross (St. Paul's).]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

UNIVERSITY TRAINING GRANTS—QUESTION OF SETTING UP COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. McKay (Weyburn): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, a copy of which I have sent him. In view of the representations being made to members of the house by student veterans across Canada requesting consideration for an increase in university training grants, would the minister reconsider his decision not to set up a parliamentary committee on veterans affairs?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I did not receive a copy of the question, and I was not able to hear the hon. member very clearly. I shall take note of his remarks in Hansard and deal with the matter later.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

PUBLIC SERVICE—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES, SALARIES, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas G. Ross (St. Paul's): On February 9 a question of mine was passed as an order for return. I wonder when I may expect to get it. Will the Secretary of State look into the matter?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—FACSIMILE AND TELEVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas G. Ross (St. Paul's): On February 23 two questions of mine were passed as orders for returns. I should like the minister to look into these also.

Hon. Colin Gibson (Secretary of State): I shall be glad to look into the matter and ascertain if these returns can be brought down.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—OFFICE SPACE AT SIOUX LOOKOUT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Minister of Labour look up a motion for the production of papers standing in my name, passed on February 16 of this year and recorded at page 595 of Hansard, and see if the return may be brought down soon?

Hon. Humphrey Mitchell (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to try to comply with the wishes of my hon. friend.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

INCOME TAX—REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO QUESTION ON MARCH 2

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): On March 3, on a question of privilege, I drew attention to the fact that a question of mine on the order paper, which had been said by the minister to be answered, had not been answered. Nothing has been done since; six days now have passed, and I ask your direction, Mr. Speaker, that the question be restored to the order paper. It reads:

On January 1, 1949, on how many income tax returns, by years and by district offices, had assessments not been made?

ESTIMATED LOSS BY POST OFFICE IN HANDLING NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General in reference to an answer to a question standing in my name on today's order paper. The question has been answered by the statement that a proper breakdown cannot be given. I am going to ask now if the minister cannot give an approximate figure of what it costs his department to carry daily newspapers, weekly newspapers and periodicals.

Hon. Ernest Bertrand (Postmaster General): It would be difficult to give even an approximate figure, because these periodicals, daily and weekly newspapers, and so on, are not counted. It would probably cost a good deal of money to keep track of them for a year in order to give the approximate loss on each class.

Mr. Fraser: In regard to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As the hon. member knows, when a question is put to the minister before the orders of the day are called it is supposed to relate to an urgent matter. I do not see any urgency in the question asked by the hon. gentleman, and I suggest that he put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Fraser: I have already had it on the order paper, and have not been given a proper answer. I should like to know if it is not possible to give even an estimated amount.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Bertrand (Laurier): No, it would not be possible unless we were prepared to spend a considerable amount of money, and I do not think it would be worth it.

Mr. Fraser: But, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cruickshank: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there should be a little more decorum and not so many interruptions in the house.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. Frank T. Stanfield (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few observations to add to what I said last evening before the house adjourned. I was referring then to the proposed St. Lawrence ship canal. I know this is a very important question, not only to the people of Canada but to the people of the United States as well. Being a good maritimer, however, I cannot do anything but take the position, which I think is very fair, that this canal will cost a great deal of money, of which the people of the maritimes will have to pay their share, and I think I am safe in saying they will not get any economic value whatever from the expenditure of that money on the construction of the proposed St. Lawrence canal. I for one could not vote for that project if we in the maritime provinces did not get something in return to offset that expenditure of money; and in that connection I suggest the bridge across the strait of Canso. I am not putting that forward as a threat at all, but being a good maritimer I figure it is nothing more than good business.

Now that Newfoundland has been brought into confederation the question of a bridge across the strait of Canso has become a matter of great importance. The people of Newfoundland have to get to and from that island, and that is going to be our responsibility; which makes the bridging of the strait of Canso very necessary indeed. The population of Nova Scotia and the maritimes as a whole has increased considerably, together with the rest of Canada; and if the people down there are to make a good living for themselves they must have fast, good transportation, which will enable them to compete on an equal basis with the rest of Canada. I do not intend to get into any argument on freight rates at this moment, but I must say that if we are to have the St. Lawrence canal deepened I do believe we in the maritimes should have the bridge across the strait of Canso.

There is only one other matter on which I want to speak; that is the reclaiming of our marshlands.

It is my understanding that something was to be done this session by the government by bringing down a bill for the reclaiming of the marshlands. We are very anxious to get the work started as early as possible this spring. As you know, a great many of the farms in Nova Scotia were abandoned during the war because of the high pay offered for other forms of work. We are very anxious to get these people back on the farms, but on good farms, not poor farms. Nothing would strengthen the economy of Nova Scotia more than getting twice as many people on the farms as we have now. The reclaiming of our marshlands would play a big part in any such program because they are rich lands and, worked in conjunction with the uplands, make good farms.

I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. McCubbin) whether or not the government contemplates bringing down a bill of that nature this session. It appears no one wishes to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. I see British Columbia is going ahead with some work of this nature—that is, the rediking of the Fraser river—and I realize that is very necessary; but so is the reclamation of our marshland in Nova Scotia. During the past four or five years many promises of help have been received in connection with reclaiming our marsh area; but so far nothing more has been done than merely helping, on a contributory basis, in repairing some breaks that come in the dikes. We should like to have some action started on the actual reclaiming of these rich marshlands this spring. With that, I shall conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. E. Drope (Northumberland, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. First, I should like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I suppose this is the first time in the history of parliament that there has been a change of leaders of the two major parties at the same session. I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister on attaining his high office and also the leader of the opposition, who has demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt that he is a good leader and will be the next Prime Minister of Canada.

In the Globe and Mail, under date of March 5, I noticed an article the heading of which is "Unseemly Row." Some remarks are made in this article about the backbenchers of the Conservative party. I should like to say to this house that the backbenchers of the Conservative party are a fine body of men who observe the rules as well as any other group in the house. Just on this point, I should like to say that it makes little difference whether one is a backbencher or in the front benches. All the members of this house are on an equal footing, and all do their best to represent their constituencies. So far as I am concerned, I do not intend to take a back seat to anybody when it comes to talking about Northumberland county.

In this article to which I have referred, mention is made of the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) should have had more time allotted to him. The ministers of the crown are covered by the same rules as the other members of the house. The minister had already spoken for forty minutes—

An hon. Member: Oh no.

Mr. Drope: Well, that is what the clock said, and there are three or four of them in this chamber. After having spoken for forty minutes, the last person to whom more time should be given is a minister. The ministers make statements every day and take up so much time that some of the ordinary members have few opportunities of saying anything. I am one of those who believe that not many people are converted in the last twenty minutes of a fifty minute sermon.

The tourist industry is something in which a great many citizens of Northumberland county are interested. I wish to congratulate the member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy) on his approach to this problem. United States visitors to Canada should be encouraged. There is no better place in which to spend a holiday than in Canada, and no better place in Ontario than the county of Northumberland.

Much has been heard about the trans-Canada highway. No one need be in any doubt about where this party stands with regard to it, because our leader made our position quite clear. One of the first things we should have is a trans-Canada highway. I would say to the people of Canada that the sooner the leader of this party is Prime Minister, the sooner the construction of a trans-Canada highway will be undertaken.

The mail service is something that is of concern to all people. I should like to go on record as saying that we are certainly living in the horse-and-buggy days so far as the postal services are concerned. The rural mail routes were laid out about thirty years ago. Everything in the country has changed during the last thirty years, and there have been shifts in the population. Very few changes have been made in the layout of the rural mail routes. The contracts for these routes still call for traveling at least four miles an hour, and that is about as fast as the mail seems to travel.

In my county there is one township in particular for which the mail has to be routed via Peterborough to reach the main line. Some of the boxholders tell me they could walk to Peterborough and back before a letter reaches that point. I brought this to the attention of the Post Office Department, but they are still fumbling around trying to ascertain whether anything can be done about it.

We are becoming so used to taxes on many things that nothing has been done about the tax on soft drinks and chocolate bars. I presume the government believes we are going to accept it as a permanent thing. It was put on during the war but, as most of us know, the war has been over for three or four years. The tax remains in effect, however.

I received a letter in my mail box just before coming into the chamber. It contains an offer from the film board to sell to members of the House of Commons and Senate, at the reduced rate of ten dollars, a film of the opening of parliament. It is said this is far below cost. Considering the amount of money the film board spends, I do not see any reason for offering this film to members of parliament at a reduced rate. Throughout the country the film board shows pictures, quite a number of which are enjoyable. It seems to me, however, that the people in charge of the making of some of these films are not too familiar with the agricultural scenes they are depicting.

Last week a picture was shown in the county of Northumberland depicting life on a modern dairy farm. The farmer put on his white overalls in the morning and went out to the barn. The stables had been all cleaned when he arrived, but I do not know who did that. Then the farmer proceeds to milk his fine herd of Holstein cows. After the milking he takes his herd of cows down to the pasture. The film continues by showing the work the farmer has to do during the day. Milking time comes around again and the farmer goes down to the pasture, but this time he returns with a herd of Ayrshire cows. It is wonderful how quickly the national film board can change the scene.

When we get talking about dairy cows, that brings us to a subject I think I know something about. I was interested in the return that was asked for by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) under date of February 23. I understand by this return that we imported into this country 15,680,000 pounds of butter. While some people have the idea that butter is too high in this country, I find when we get it over in Australia, New Zealand and Denmark a great deal more is paid for it than the farmers in Canada get. This butter is brought in, and in order to keep it at or below the ceiling it costs the taxpayers of Canada some $866,000. The actions of this government have certainly hit the farmers of this country. If reports are true that one out of six of our population is in some way interested in dairying, a good section of the population is certainly in for a bad time in the months ahead as a result of the action of the present government.

We make some cheese in this country and we seem to be exporting less of it each year. I would suggest that, instead of putting the cheese up in the usual ninety-pound packages, we should put it up in smaller ones. A factory in my county is putting it up in smaller packages. The cheese could be put up in square packages so that it could be cut into pounds and half pounds, and wrapped in waxed paper. That is something that the average housewife will buy when she goes into the store, if it is wrapped up in a neat package. I believe we could sell more on the home market, which we all realize is the best market of all.

Income tax is the No. 1 problem of practically everybody you speak to. We are taxed to death. Nearly everyone is talking about the way the government is taking millions of dollars more than it needs. We heard that we had a surplus of $675 million. I wonder if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) credited all that against the debt of this country? If we have had all these surpluses that have been talked about, one would think that our debt would be reduced more than it is. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Henderson) the other day said something about these income tax forms. I do not want to repeat too much of what was said in that regard. I obtained a copy of that form, and I notice that it has been cut down from six pages to four. As to farmers, I think one page with about seven or eight questions would cover the whole thing, and that it would be something the average farmer would understand. If I were doing this, that is the way it would be. There is no need of all these questions. They are merely confusing. I often wonder if it does not cost about $10 to collect $5.

Food is a big problem in the world today. We in Canada probably have not so much to worry about; our biggest problem is finding satisfactory markets. But food is something that is of great concern to the world, and probably the peace of the world may depend upon it. Looking at the matter from the point of view of the world picture, at the present time we are up against a crisis. There is a world shortage of food amounting to famine in some lands, while in others there is a ration scale more skimpy than during the war. We in Canada are likely to think of hunger as a gnawing sensation that sends us with all speed to the nearest restaurant or to the kitchen; and we are surprised when we hear from a displaced person that chronic hunger does not make itself felt in the stomach but rather in the head. After a few months of inadequate diet your mind is robbed of all thought except that of finding something to eat. With that as your main desire, you cannot concentrate on producing goods for export, or on the moral issues in life.

Just last week I heard an appalling story of conditions in China. I heard it from a Canadian who had just returned after visiting that country. This person actually witnessed 89 children being picked up off the streets, they having died the night before from starvation. Twenty-six trucks were working in other parts of Shanghai at the same time and at the end of the trip dumped the dead bodies into an incinerator. That is only one illustration of the terrible misery in the world today. Can there be no solution to the problem of the distribution of food?

Solution of the problem emphasizes not only Ruskin's memorable dictum, "if you want food you must toil for it," but also the need for understanding, education and co-operation. This means that we must realize how utterly dependent we are upon the earth and its fruits. Canadians have a country which, by virtue of the gifts of Providence, is one of the largest suppliers of food to the world market. While many other countries have skidded far down the road toward national suicide by destroying the soil which alone makes possible their survival, we in Canada must constantly be on guard to protect our soil and expand its usefulness. Only a few inches of top soil stand between the human race and oblivion. It is the one natural resource, besides air and water, without which human life cannot exist. The land is not only the source of life-sustaining food; it is the base of our economy. It stores up energy and releases it when we need it. Knowing its capabilities, treating it according to its needs, using the proper methods of cultivating it, conserving its goodness—these form the base of the farmer's responsibility to the land.

But the man in the town or city is equally concerned, because no matter what his business may be he depends absolutely on the soil for what he eats. We need to co-operate to see that no productive land anywhere is being wasted. Every acre which goes out of production means that the pressure is increased on the remaining good acres. Unless we understand this, and do something effective about it, the people in barren countries will be driven to poverty, hunger and discord; and this is the condition of which strife is born. Canada is vitally interested in the world's food problem because she is one of the world's main surplus food producers. With a few others like the United States, Australia, New Zealand, Argentina and Brazil, her people have nothing to worry about so far as they themselves are concerned. But in the "want" countries it appears from statistics that about three-quarters of the people went to bed hungry last night, and for years of nights before that. The situation has its effect on the prospects of world peace. A hungry man does not look at life in the same way as he would if he were well fed. There is apathy in his outlook. Interest in public, political, social and cultural matters dies within him. He becomes centred on thoughts of self-preservation and preservation of his family at all costs.

The key to maintaining supplies of food and extending them is a program of soil conservation. Every grain of wheat, every egg, every pound of butter and every piece of beef depends upon an irreducible minimum of earth to produce it. The next few years will be critical in world history. It is mankind's biggest job to ward off world hunger. How to do this is a good subject for discussion in community meetings and forums, not only in country districts but in towns and cities. We are all in the same world boat, with limited supplies of food. Businessmen, housewives, farmers, transportation workers and others are all on one level when it comes to need of food and the preservation of world order.

The most critical danger is that we may forget how short we are of time. Today's crisis calls for an immediate uprising of the idea of conservation and development. Productivity of individuals needs to be increased by provision of modern scientific knowledge and modern tools, and by inspiring them so to work as to become a new source of wealth. There is a stirring need for laymen and women to work with the ABC's of the problem: advance education and industry; balance deficiencies with surpluses; conserve soil and resources.

The food which is produced from our farms, and any form of distribution, should be contributed by the nation as a whole and not by agriculture alone. In order to do this we should encourage our farmers in the great work that they are doing.

Mr. K. R. Daniel (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in order to make it unanimous, and to keep continuity in this debate, I should like to join with the other hon. members who have spoken and congratulate the mover (Mr. Brown) and seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should like also to join in the courtesies which have been extended to the new members, and to welcome them to their new seats in this house. At the same time may I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Drew) upon their elevation to positions not only of great honour but also of great responsibility in connection with the affairs of this country.

In the course of my remarks I intend to refer to several items which are of great concern to the people of my constituency. I shall first say a word on behalf of the old age pensioners. Almost every hon. member who rises in his place in this house says something about old age pensions, and I would not feel that I had done my duty in this respect, even at the danger of repeating what other hon. members have already said, if I did not make a plea on behalf of the old age pensioners in my constituency.

It is common knowledge to all members of the government, as well as to all other hon. members, that these old age pensioners are in destitute circumstances since the cost of living has increased to its present high level. This is a situation which has developed more through government policies than anything else. The pensioners are caught between the anvil of fixed income and the hammer of increasing food, rent and clothing costs; in short, the increasing cost of living. The same thing might be said of all Canadians in the lower-income brackets. They are virtually in the same position. Their incomes have not increased at the same pace that the cost of all the things they have to buy has increased.

The government has permitted this situation to continue and snowball down through the years despite the fact that it has had record surpluses, and despite the fact that it could have made other adjustments in income-tax levels, which would have brought some measure of relief to Canadian workers. It would appear that now some consideration is forthcoming, but the tragedy of it is that it is coming in an election year. No matter how the government may seek to interpret it, any gesture towards income-tax concessions now can be considered as nothing short of political bribery.

The government has seen fit to give some indication that tax reductions definitely are forthcoming in the next budget. The hint was given in the throne speech itself in one paragraph, which referred to the high level of national prosperity, and the fact that the government would recognize this in its budgetary proposals. This reference in the throne speech constituted an amazing budget leak, but there appear to have been other leaks from the budget. I quote from a news item in the London Free Press of January 19 of this year:

> Petrolia, January 19. A "sunshine" budget for Canadians in 1949, and in particular for the rural communities was forecast here today by Robert McCubbin, M.P. for Middlesex West and parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture.

Further on in the report in the Free Press of January 19 Mr. McCubbin said:

> I realize there have been some hard feelings about income tax, but there is no need to fear.

I am sure that that is reassuring news. The report continues:

> There is going to be some redress given to those in the lower income brackets. I am bothered by the high rate of taxation and the high cost of living and feel these are matters the government must take in hand. Officials at Ottawa admitted in 1945 that a $2,000 exemption was not too much.

Coming from a parliamentary assistant, a man whose position must be considered an official one, this statement of the hon. member for Middlesex West is almost as amazing as the paragraph in the throne speech. If this is not a budget leak, how else can it be interpreted? At least it is a major concession to have the member for Middlesex West confess that he is bothered by the high rate of taxation and the high cost of living. But for him to say that these are matters which the government must take in hand must strike the people of western Ontario as a belated recognition of "twin" responsibilties of the government, of which the government should have been aware, and with which the government should have dealt in years gone by. It is a little too late now for this government to make any pretence at seeking to come to grips with the problem of the high cost of living.

The fact that the high cost of living was causing all the people of Canada concern was recognized by the government itself a year ago when it set up a committee of this house to investigate what was then described as the recent increase in the cost of living. This committee sat all through the last session of parliament, and this work was furthered by a royal commission on prices. Now in March of 1949 the government still has not received its report on what caused the recent high rise in the cost of living—"recent" in terms of 1947 and 1948.

As far as the government was concerned, I do believe this prices inquiry achieved its purpose. It removed from the floor of the house discussion of the high cost of living. It permitted the government to sidestep the greatest issue of the day. It is a little too late now for the hon. member for Middlesex West, or any other member of the government, to rise in the commons chamber, or to appear on the hustings, and say that the government now is aware that there is such a thing as a high cost of living, and that it intends to do something about it. The budget of 1949 is a little too late to attempt to salve the wounds inflicted on Canadian taxpayers during the past three or four years. Too little and too late. That summarizes the record of this government.

Incidentally, while I am discussing the subject of income tax concessions generally, I would like to make reference in particular to the latest income tax form. In looking over this form I see the same old questions as were on the form of years gone by, but the printing has become much smaller. They have finally come up with what they call a simplified form. There would appear to be some confusion however in the income tax branch as to what is meant by simplification. After looking over the latest form it would appear to me that simplification, in the hands of the income tax branch, means condensation. The form is condensed and contains tiny type which a chartered accountant friend of mine told me the other day he defied any man over thirty years of age to read. He does a great deal of work on these forms, and it is his prediction that by next year he will probably be next thing to blind. Would I be too inquisitive if I were to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) if he intends to supply Canadian taxpayers with bifocals, or glasses of some kind, so that they might at least be able to read what is on these forms?

While the radio tax is not a heavy one in itself, I believe it is the one which more than any other causes concern to the people of Canada. They are not so much interested in the amount of the tax as in the way it is collected. I know that around Christmas time some radio inspectors came to my home town. They did not even play fair with the people because, first of all, when they came to town they called upon radio salesmen and at the post office to find out whether John Jones or Dick Smith had bought his licence, or whether he had bought one last year. Then all they had to do was to go around and knock on doors, scaring the poor housewife half out of her wits. She would think she was going to be arrested, because probably she had told her husband to get one, and he had told her to get one, with the result that neither of them got one. They find themselves in trouble, and a few days later it all comes out in the local paper, stating that John Smith has been charged with a breach of the law.

These people are no respecters of persons, because the millionaires are treated the same as other people, including widows and old people. I know that in about two days in Ingersoll about 120 were picked up. They had to pay fines, and then had to go out and buy a new radio licence.

Another tax to which I should like to refer briefly is the luxury tax on jewelry, one which has been brought forcibly to our attention within the last few days. Many jewelers have complained to me about the hardship it worked on them. They have pointed out how it has reduced sales in their particular line of business. For instance, a jeweler may have an article classed as a luxury by the department. However, one may walk up the street to a dealer who handles a cheaper range of goods, but one which is perhaps along the same line, generally. This man would handle cutlery, dishes, and all kinds of jewelry. At the second store one could purchase almost the facsimile of the article but at a ridiculously low price. But there is no tax on the article in the second store. Therefore I say the luxury tax on jewelry should be abolished immediately.

I should like to come back to the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. McCubbin). I hope he does not think I am picking on him particularly. However, he seems to have been doing a good deal of talking around western Ontario in the last few weeks, so I cannot help quoting him.

Again I might cite the words of the hon. member for Middlesex West by way of proof that what this government has done to alleviate the situation for the Canadian taxpayers has been too little and too late. In an article which appeared in the London Free Press, he is quoted as telling the western Ontario agricultural institute that some families in Canada may be just as badly in need of clothes as those families in Britain receiving clothing parcels from this country. If families in Canada are in as sorry a plight as all that, then the member's own words constitute an indictment of this government's policies. It is true the hon. member was attempting to paint a glowing picture of the economic conditions in Britain, conditions which he saw at first hand on a recent visit to that country. What the hon. member for Middlesex West had to say on the subject has caused a great deal of consternation and controversy in this country and in Britain. The member's observations, as given to the western Ontario Jersey cattle club, were to the effect that Britain was well along the road to economic recovery, that everybody in Britain was working, was happy and was prosperous, that everybody had money and lots of it.

In another part of his speech the parliamentary assistant said that while in London he was unchaperoned. After reading what he has said, as reported in the Free Press, I am inclined to the belief that not only was he unchaperoned but that he was traveling incognito, and probably wearing rose-coloured glasses as well. Perhaps, after all, what he saw through those rose-coloured glasses was not really caviar, frogs' legs, quail on toast and all that kind of rich food he has spoken about, but rather just some more of the minister's applesauce. It will be recalled that the minister told us he was served applesauce during the two weeks he visited in Great Britain.

I know of no statement which has caused a greater injury to the harmony of Canadian-British relations than that of the hon. member for Middlesex West. It might be well to remind the hon. member that Britain today is getting major Marshall-plan assistance. Without this ERP, and other credits, Britain would be in a more difficult position than she is today. We all hope that she will be able to pull through in her battle of the dollar, as grim a fight as she staged during the war; but her battle has not yet been won. As far as we in this country are concerned, we cannot help wondering what will happen to Britain if and when ERP ceases; and, incidentally, we cannot help wondering what will happen to the level of our export trade to the United Kingdom if these funds suddenly should dry up.

Letters coming to private Canadians would indicate that the British people, rigidly rationed in the purchase of clothes and food, are having anything but a happy time. The rosy picture painted by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture left, I believe, an entirely false impression in the minds of many people. It was a disturbing impression, one which cannot but cause misunderstanding.

Another matter I should like to discuss is that of bovine tuberculosis. In 1939 a petition was circulated among the farmers of Oxford county asking the federal government to make the county an accredited area for the purpose of having our dairy herds declared free of bovine tuberculosis. This petition evidently had the required number of signatures, but before a start was made on the test the war intervened and naturally the project was dropped for the time being.

At that time the amount paid to the owners of these T.B. reactors was set at $60 for a grade animal and $150 for a purebred, but for some unknown reason the government paid only two-thirds of this valuation, or $40 maximum for a grade animal and $100 for a purebred.

I believe that in the house this week the Minister of Agriculture, answering a question of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Robinson), stated that the price of a purebred reactor was $100. I believe there must have been some mistake in that, because I am informed it is $150.

Mr. McCubbin: I do not wish to interrupt, but I believe what the minister meant was that it was two-thirds of $150—the same as it would be two-thirds of $60. I believe there was some misunderstanding there.

Mr. Rowe: He still gets only $100.

Mr. McCubbin: Yes, and only $40.

Mr. Daniel: The price of a good grade cow was then about $100, so that if the animal reacted to the test and was condemned to slaughter, although the price of beef was very cheap the $40, or perhaps I should say $38, paid by the government was the maximum; and from there it grades down to as low as $10, $12 or $15. I have never heard of a farmer receiving the full $40. Although the price of beef was very cheap, the $40, or perhaps I should say the $38 paid by the government, plus the beef price of $50 average if the animal was passed by the veterinarian as fit for human consumption, made a total of $88. Of course, if the beast was declared useless the only receipt to the farmer for his $100 cow was the $38 government grant.

During the years of the war and since the prices of top grade dairy cattle have advanced to a high of $250 to $300 per head, but the compensation has remained at the old level of $38 per head. The majority of these cattle in Oxford being of the dairy type, Holstein-Friesian, Jersey or Ayrshire, they never were classed as being particularly suitable for beef. The filet mignons that we sometimes get in Ottawa, and the other juicy steaks, do not as a rule come from beasts of the dairy type. Owing to the fact that they are tested at various stages of their lactation period they are usually rather on the thin side and in most cases are graded by the packing houses as canners or cutters or low-priced beef.

In spite of the comparatively high prices of all beef products the farmer receives only an average of $100 to $150 provided the animal passes inspection. Suppose he gets $125 from the packer plus the government's $38, that makes a total of $163. Granted that the animal as a milk producer in her own stable is worth $250, that would leave a loss on the transaction of $87.

I realize that there are not many hon. members of this house who are acquainted with this situation. To the best of my knowledge there are only three in western Ontario who realize this situation. I spent the greater part of this morning trying to convince some of my colleagues on this side of the house that the farmer did not receive the full $60 or the full $150 mentioned the other day by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). The counties of Perth, Oxford and Middlesex East are the only counties in western Ontario where the test is presently going on.

Mr. McCubbin: Middlesex West.

Mr. Daniel: The counties of Bruce, Huron, Brant and Lambton are applying for the test. I am sure that when those counties are being tested the minister will have many more resolutions coming in to him than he has had from the three counties I have mentioned, and I can assure you that to my knowledge he has had a great many from those three counties.

Many farmers have lost entire herds of from twenty or even eighty cattle or more. When that happens their whole economy is temporarily thrown off balance since they not only lose so much per head but in many cases find themselves unable to replace their herds, with the resulting loss of their monthly milk cheques. This is particularly a hardship on the young man who has just started up when he not only has to lose part of his capital investment but has no income with which to meet current expenses.

The Minister of Agriculture has received many resolutions during the past year from township councils, county councils and the federation of agriculture, but as yet he has made no change in the $38 compensation rate of many years' standing. The minister may remember the statement he made last February at Woodstock when he was the guest speaker at a meeting of the Oxford county federation of agriculture. On that occasion one of the persons who was attending the meeting stood up at the back of the hall and asked the minister a pertinent question in connection with an item we read a great deal about in the papers, something that is sometimes spread on bread. The minister answered that question in what I thought was a very good way.

To the best of my recollection he said that while he did not consider the question was exactly fair, while he did not intend to commit himself, as a matter of fact he wanted to hear the debate on the matter on the floor of the house and after hearing that debate he would make up his mind as to any decision he might make. Therefore I am taking this opportunity to present to the Minister of Agriculture the position of the farmers of western Ontario and also the position of the farmers of eastern Ontario because I believe the testing will be started there very soon.

He suggested the other day that the government was considering making a change and I submit that either that change should go all across the board or the farmers should be paid for those reactors that become total losses. As it is now, for a $250 cow a farmer may receive only $38 plus $10 salvage for the hide, a total of $48. It is that fact that is causing a great deal of concern to the farmer.

I know of one herd of twenty-eight head in which fourteen were found to be reactors. Those cattle went into the fertilizer tank and the farmer received only $48 per head. If the government should come to a decision to pay more for these reactors I hope that it will be made retroactive so that the farmers of Oxford, Perth and Middlesex East may receive due consideration as well as the farmers in the new counties in which the test will be going on very soon.

In closing I should like to bring another matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). The other day the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Webb) asked the minister to look into a condition that existed in Brockville where Canadian National trains cross the main street and hold up traffic for considerable periods of time. No. 2 highway passes through the town of Ingersoll, and the railroad also passes through that town and cuts it in half practically in the middle. On the north side of the river is located one of the largest factories in the town, employing possibly a thousand men. There are also two schools located there.

Three or four miles to the east of the town are located three limestone quarries. When the railroad is bringing in empty cars for the carriage of limestone products, crushed stone and so on, they are brought to Ingersoll and then put over what might be termed as the hump. Those who come from Winnipeg or Fort William will know how the wheat cars there are put over the hump for distribution. The result of this is that highway traffic is held up, perhaps not beyond the five-minute period, but sometimes it is nearly every other five minutes. I have seen the traffic held up as far back as two or three miles during the busy summer season.

The municipal council have taken up this matter at various times with the superintendent of the London division who has always been most courteous. He comes down to pay us a visit but the day he does come down the railway traffic seems to be very quiet. I presume he goes back to London and reports that the condition does not seem to be too bad, but the next day the traffic is twice as heavy. This is a situation which I wish the Minister of Transport would look into at his earliest opportunity.

Mr. T. A. Kidd (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising to take part in this debate at the present time is to refer to two or three problems which affect my constituency. The first has to do with the foreign exchange control board, and I am glad the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) is in his seat. The second concerns a widow and her child, whose husband and father was killed in action in world war II. The third is the problem of the student veterans attending Queen's and other Canadian universities.

My first reference is to a seizure of $30 in United States funds, and my plea is on behalf of a young lady, Miss Renaud, who is employed at the aluminum company at Kingston. This lady was proceeding to Watertown, in company with two other ladies, on Sunday, July 27, 1947, to visit relatives. The other two ladies had gone to the bank on Saturday to obtain the necessary funds, and there they were supplied with the money and the forms. Miss Renaud had, over a period of time, accumulated an amount of $40 in United States funds, and therefore knew of no reason to go to the bank. When they arrived at the customs at Lansdowne, at the Ivy Lea bridge, the officials on duty asked what amount of currency these ladies were carrying. The other two had the form H, which they produced, while Miss Renaud voluntarily declared that she had $40 in United States money and $5 in Canadian funds.

What happened? She was astonished to learn that she could take with her only $10 in United States currency and $5 in Canadian money, since she did not possess a form H. This was something she had not known at all, and $30 in American money was taken from her. In passing I may say that she is only one of the many who, through lack of knowledge of the foreign exchange control regulations, have suffered monetary losses. She proceeded on her way with her friends, with a total of only $15 in money. On her return a couple of days later she asked for the $30 in American funds which had been left at the customs, and to her surprise was told that it had been confiscated and sent to Ottawa.

As one who has lived along the border and who has been dealing with customs officials for over twenty-five years, I cannot speak too highly of the older officials, who are courteous and gentlemanly in meeting the public. Many are veterans of the first world war who entered the revenue department with the intention of making it their lifework. These officials now are asked to do a rather distasteful job for the foreign exchange control board, and are given no option in the matter. In order to keep up with the extra work caused by these erratic controls the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) has been obliged to increase the staff by many hundreds. These orders were put through so fast that there was no time to train the new staff, and as a result the public were confronted with personnel untrained and unfitted to perform duties which require great tact and courtesy. Many of these new officials considered that they had to be a little overzealous and superior in order to have their services recognized and retain their positions.

This loss of $30 by Miss Renaud meant a great deal to her. Friends acting on her behalf came to interview me, and since it comes under his department I wrote to the Minister of National Revenue under date of December 10, 1947. He replied on December 12, stating:

> This is a matter over which I have no jurisdiction whatsoever. Our customs officers at border points in enforcing the foreign exchange regulations do so on behalf of the foreign exchange control board and report to them direct. The best I can do under the circumstances is to see that your representations are brought to the attention of the board. I am, therefore, passing your communication to the secretary, Mr. R. H. Tarr.

I then wrote a letter to the Minister of Finance, who confirmed the stand taken by the foreign exchange control board, stating that a great deal of publicity had been given to the requirements at the time. The foreign exchange control board also advised that the Minister of Finance made a statement on May 26, 1947, which was given wide publicity in the daily press and over the radio.

What are the facts? In the first place, order in council P.C. 2045 was passed on May 23, 1947. That was a Friday, and at that time the house was in session. No announcement was made in the house on either Thursday, Friday or Monday by the minister. Instead, he went on the air and made a statement. On Tuesday, May 27, four days later, as the result of a question asked by a member of this house at page 3465 of Hansard for that year, it leaked out that the regulations had been changed. At this point I want to take issue with the minister on his method of procedure. Once more we find that a confidential order in council was passed and acted upon unknown to the members of this house, when the house was in session. Instead of being given to the public by means of radio, this statement should have been made by the minister on the floor of this house.

The question of the necessity for these sudden and rigid restrictions must have arisen in the minds of many people. I suggest that the reason is quite simple and clear. During the preceding ten months the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce had sat by idly while our American funds were depleted to the extent of $750 million. That is at the rate of about $7,500,000 per month or $2 million per week. During that time all sorts of unnecessary articles were permitted to enter Canada. The difficulty was the wrong timing of the Marshall plan, which did not become effective when the government expected it would. So I would say this gambling by the government brought about a major disaster as far as Canada was concerned.

Who has been responsible for the iron curtain that exists not only in the east block, where these secret orders in council were framed, but also at the foreign exchange control board? In the first place it was necessary to find out the names of the members of that board, and I doubt if fifty members of this house could name them. In order to obtain the information it was necessary for me to put a question on the order paper, as follows:

1. Who are the members of the foreign exchange control board?
2. When were they appointed?
3. What salary does each receive?

The answer was:

Governor of the Bank of Canada, G. F. Towers
Deputy Minister of Finance, W. C. Clark
Director of operations, Post Office Department, L. Germain
Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, M. W. Mackenzie
Under-Secretary of state for external affairs, L. B. Pearson
Deputy Minister of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, D. Sim
Executive assistant to the governors of the Bank of Canada, Chairman (alternate), L. Rasminsky Solicitor, Post Office Department, alternate to L. Germain, A Lalonde.

My correspondence included letters from Mr. Robert H. Tarr and Mr. C. A. Rowe, enforcement officers. In answer to another question tabled on February 12, 1948, I was advised that these two gentlemen were employees of the Bank of Canada; yet we find them sitting at their desks behind an iron curtain here in Ottawa, trying to administer justice. Then what do we find? The Minister of Finance failed to inform the public at the time, by way of advertisements in the daily press. That was only done about eight months later. That happened on or about January 26, 1948; but he did not do it in May, 1947, at the time the order in council was passed. Owing to public resentment and criticism of the mistakes he made in May, 1947, he tried to rectify the matter later. Unfortunately, a great deal of embarrassment was suffered by the public through a lack of knowledge of the border-crossing rules and regulations. Following the tabling of Bill No. 3, an act respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources, he placed an advertisement in the Canadian press in January, 1948. This was just eight months too late.

Under the circumstances, I do not see how the Minister of Finance could have permitted the confiscation of small sums of money, such as Miss Renaud's $30, from persons who, through lack of publicity caused by the indifference and mistakes of the minister's officials, were unaware of the change in policy. I unhesitatingly recommend that all like sums of money confiscated from innocent victims during this eight-month period be returned. It is also recommended that there should not be any division in the administration of this act. The Minister of Finance should have his own officials at border-crossing points just as the Minister of Immigration has his immigration officers.

The case to which I have just referred is not an isolated one by any means. Similar incidents have occurred at nearly every customs point across Canada. A check of sessional paper No. 29H makes it evident there was a variation in the enforcement at the different crossing points. It would be interesting to learn, for instance, why so much money has been refunded at the port of Windsor. I am not going into that matter in detail, but here is the sessional paper. It comprised one hundred and eight pages, showing cases of hardship similar to that inflicted on this young lady who had the $30 confiscated. The fault is not on her side, Mr. Speaker; it rests with the Minister of Finance and his officials for not doing what they should have done at the time.

I should like to cite another case, that of Mr. Peter Brunet, 188 William St., Kingston, Ontario. This man left Kingston and proceeded to Cornwall to get to Ormstown in the province of Quebec. He was offered a free ride with a friend who was going to the same locality to visit friends. Ormstown is just about ten miles from Huntingdon. Naturally, these people took the shortest possible route by crossing at the Cornwall bridge, thus saving about seventy-five miles. Mr. Brunet had no intention of spending any money in the United States. Inquiries were made at the border as to the amount of money carried and he voluntarily declared what money he had on his person, which amounted to $43 in Canadian funds. This money was immediately confiscated. The incident occurred on May 8, 1948, as is shown by receipt form C-764296. The treatment received was a great surprise to this man, since he carried only sufficient money for a trip of this nature.

These controls are being so rigidly enforced that it has become ridiculous. Why this money could not have been held by the authorities and remitted to Mr. Brunet on his return to Kingston is beyond ordinary understanding. The time has arrived when there should be a complete overhaul of the administration of the foreign exchange control order. I say to the Minister of Finance that there is overlapping between his department, the Department of National Revenue and the foreign exchange control board. It seems unfortunate that this house is not entitled to know the salaries paid to Mr. Tarr and Mr. Rowe, who are the employees of the Bank of Canada administering justice in the two cases I have mentioned.

I should like to refer to the case of the widow of Herbert Leach. On April 9, 1948, I referred to this case, as is shown at page 2815 of Hansard. At that time I stated:

> I should like to cite a case of a veteran of world war II and I do this because I feel that many similar cases should receive further attention. This man's name is Herbert J. Leach. His number is C-1072 and he enlisted in the R.C.H.A. at Kingston. On January 3, 1942, he was killed in action, leaving a widow and two children, a boy and a girl. This man enlisted in 1939 and those who are familiar with the circumstances will realize that his number of C-1072 is not a boxcar number.
> The daughter has since married. When this soldier proceeded overseas his boy was just ten years of age. Upon the soldier's death his widow received $60 a month, plus $15 a month for the boy until he was sixteen years of age. Unfortunately the boy happens to be below normal and his mother is left with the responsibility of caring for him. She has been refused any further veterans allowance by the pension board. This particular case was brought to my attention and I in turn brought it to the attention of the minister and the department. The application was substantiated by a certificate from the family doctor which stated: "This is to certify that Victor Leach, aged nineteen, of 51 Raglan road, Kingston, Ontario, is totally and completely incapacitated on account of meningitis at two years and is an epileptic and mentally defective. R. R. MacGregor, M.D."
> In order to support her child, the mother was forced to take a position as laundress for which she receives $18 a week. Her own allowance as a widow was $60, which has recently been increased to $70. The pension board decided that no pension should be paid to the child, stating that no pension shall be paid to a child who, if a boy, is over the age of sixteen years, except when such child and those responsible for his maintenance are without adequate resources.
> I think the house will agree that it is a shame and disgrace when the widow of a man who has given his life for his country, a man who paid the supreme sacrifice and left a child unable to care for himself, is turned down by the department. I might add also that the mother of this boy is faced with an extra expense. The boy recently had scarlet fever which necessitated his being in hospital for twenty-one days, the bill incurred for this illness amounting to $111. I want to emphasize what I mentioned a moment ago, that we do not want the veterans of world war II to be treated as the veterans of world war I have been. I am not blaming the minister because these cases came up before he took over the portfolio. I submit that in every case the benefit of the doubt should go to the dependent of the returned soldier rather than to the department or the government.

What happened? Six weeks later, I received a letter from the Canadian pension commission. It stated:

> The application for reconsideration of the widow's application for extension of pension on behalf of her son, Victor W. Leach, under section 22(1) (a) of the Pension Act has been considered, and the commission rules the application for extension of pension on behalf of Victor W. Leach is not granted.
> The applicant is not considered to be without adequate resources within the meaning of the Pension Act, section 22(1) (a). Should the applicant's circumstances alter in the future, the commission will gladly reconsider the application.

The action taken by the Canadian pension commission is a shame and a disgrace. Here is a boy whose father went overseas in 1939, and was killed in action on January 3, 1942. He is totally and completely incapacitated on account of meningitis at two years. He is an epileptic and is mentally defective. This boy will never be able to support himself and should be maintained by the state. When the state fails to do this, the mother is forced to take a position in order to feed and clothe the son and pay his doctor's bills. When the mother is at work it is necessary for her to make arrangements for someone else to look after the boy. I see the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) is in the chamber. Cases like this supply the reason why the Minister of National Defence has failed in his recruiting campaign. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) spends $250 million to $300 million a year on family allowances. Why should the cabinet ministers and members of the House of Commons be forced, through the ruling of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), to accept family allowances for their children under sixteen years of age, when the widowed mother of a veteran killed overseas is refused assistance to help support her invalid son?

Mr. Martin: Is the hon. member against family allowances?

Mr. Kidd: No. This is a boy over sixteen. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is spending his time with a commission to deal with the high cost of living, when his time would be better spent in forming a commission to see that the taxpayers' money is equitably distributed to those who are deserving and are justly entitled to it. I mean every word of that. I think the time has come for a check-up on the Canadian pension board. Some of the older members mean well, but they are in a rut and it is time they got out of it. When dealing with the veteran cases, the benefit of the doubt should go to the dependent or to the returned soldier.

If the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) were in his seat, I would say this to him. But as he is not, I would say to the acting leader of the house that I think the time has come when the Prime Minister should get the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) together and deal with cases like this. There is no co-ordination. Everyone seems to be running his own department. The result is that the widow in this case suffers.

Mr. Martin: What about the government in the province?

Mr. Kidd: I will tell the minister this. If anything happened to that mother today, the public trustee would take this child and look after it. That is their responsibility. This is really the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence. He was the O.C. of this man when he went overseas. The man was killed in action. It should not be for me, as a member of parliament, to fight this case. It is the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence under whom this man served. It is up to him to see that the men who served under him, and their dependents, are properly cared for.

Mr. Claxton: That is a matter for the pension commission, not for the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Kidd: I would point out to the minister that appeals for men are being made. The department is going on the air, over the radio, and advertising. When a dependent of a boy who was killed overseas is refused assistance by a responsible minister of the crown, and when his dependents are not cared for, it is easily seen how this report spreads. It is doing the minister an injustice. This boy should be cared for.

Mr. Claxton: It is doing me an injustice to say that I am responsible.

Mr. Kidd: I should like to make reference to the problem of the student veterans who are at present attending Queen's university and other universities in Canada.

The fourth annual national conference of student veterans was held on December 28, 29 and 30 last at Queen's university. Some 50 or 60 student veterans representing various universities across Canada attended. I had the honour to be present at their meetings.

A student veteran who fails to get a B average in the final examination of the year is cut off from the D.V.A. allowances of approximately $60, $90, $108 and so on a month, and therefore is automatically ineligible for assistance from the veterans university loan fund. This loan fund is one allowing every student on D. V. A. to borrow a maximum of $500 per annum or a total of $2,000 during his course. The loan is interest-free up to the January following graduation, and bears interest of five per cent per annum thereafter. The conditions for borrowing are as follows:

(a) That need be proven.
(b) That the student shall have completed successfully one year of university.
(c) That the student in the opinion of the university loan board be of a responsible financial character.
(d) That the student be still on the D.V.A. allowance.

A student veteran who fails to gain a B average, and who rewrites his examinations, is able to go back to the university and continue his studies, but he is not eligible for the D.V.A. allowance or the loan fund. At the present time there are 102 student veterans, out of a total student veteran population of 1,189, or roughly ten per cent, at Queen's university who have been cut off from both their allowance and the loan fund.

In some cases where the Department of Veterans Affairs has cut off the allowance of the student veteran, the university has come to his rescue by giving him a small loan from the university fund. The investment of the government in the education of veterans and the achievement of a higher standard of education in Canada will be jeopardized if student veterans are forced to discontinue their studies because of inadequate grants. A student veteran who is taking the course in medicine needs further assistance by the D.V.A. This is a six-year course, and the D.V.A. allowance does not cover this period of time.

These claims have already been brought to the attention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs by the national council of student veterans, and it was also their intention to bring them before the committee on veterans affairs; but the minister stated that he was doubtful whether a parliamentary committee on veterans affairs would be appointed by parliament this year. To the minister I recommend that this committee be set up. This matter has already been brought to his attention by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green).

The case to which I have already made reference is not an isolated one. I wish to refer to another. We as members of parliament get the borderline cases. Here is another borderline case. I think these things should not happen at all. I should like to bring to your attention the case of a veteran of world war I, that of Private R. A. Baines, regimental number 814552, who enlisted with the 87th battalion on December 10, 1915, and was discharged in 1918 with a five per cent pension.

Mr. Baines was employed by the corporation of the city of Kingston. In July, 1947, Mr. Baines had a medical check-up by his family doctor; and he and his family were shocked to learn that he was in the advanced stage of T.B. His many friends naturally thought he would be taken into the D.V.A. hospital in Kingston. The D.V.A. hospital at that time had over one hundred T.B. cases and thirty-five to forty empty beds. When application was made for admission to this hospital, he was immediately refused on the ground that his discharge documents did not show T.B.

The medical health officer of Kingston found out that it might be possible to provide accommodation for Mr. Baines at the Kingston General hospital. This hospital is one of the finest 500-bed hospitals in Canada. At this time they had a section for some twenty-five or thirty T.B. patients, but it was filled and had a waiting list. Nevertheless the staff at the Kingston General hospital were prepared to provide accommodation for this man. The medical health officer thought it best for Mr. Baines to be placed in a T.B. hospital and endeavoured to have him sent to the Ontario T.B. hospital at Hamilton, but they were filled to overflowing and had quite a long waiting list. Finally, accommodation was provided for him at the Ontario T.B. hospital at Windsor, on July 19, 1947.

On July 21, 1947, the vice-president and secretary of the Canadian legion No. 9, Kingston, of which Mr. Baines was president, wrote to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, requesting permission be granted Mr. Baines for accommodation in the D.V.A. hospital at Kingston. I followed their letter up on July 23, 1947, with a letter to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

In order for Mr. Baines to be near his family he was moved from the Windsor T.B. hospital and to the Kingston General hospital in January 1948. He was only there a few days when he died. The treatment received by this veteran of world war I was not good enough. This man was gassed in world war I, and there is no mistake his condition was due to war service. His widow, who is not receiving a pension, should be receiving one. I respectfully request the Minister of Veterans Affairs to have this case looked into.

Here is the point I wish to make. We have a government hospital administered by the D.V.A., which has twenty or thirty empty beds. Here is a D.V.A. patient of world war I, but they will not let him enter that hospital because when they looked up his records they found no record of tuberculosis in his file. Who is responsible for it? Who is willing to take charge? The civil hospitals —the provincial hospitals at Hamilton and Windsor—were willing to take charge, which shows the weakness of the present set-up. These are borderline cases. I know that every hon. member gets these borderline cases, and they should be looked into.

The case of a nurse was brought to my attention. Again, the benefit of the doubt clause goes to the department or the government instead of the veteran. This nurse was taken on as A category in world war II and had two years' service. She was discharged as C category, with a 60 per cent pension. She was actually discharged with a 100 per cent disability due to a coronary heart condition, and is no longer able to carry on her duties in her profession. The pension board decided that her condition was a pre-enlistment one, and was aggravated by service.

The point I would like to bring out is this: Why was this nurse taken on as A category and continued to be in this category for one month, six months, twelve months, and even two years, but on her discharge was classed as a C category?

I am afraid that some of the junior medical officers who desire to remain in the service cater to the whims of the department and are not giving the breaks or the benefit of the doubt clause to the veterans.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Coldwell), which was negatived on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 10, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

GRANT TO CITY OF OTTAWA—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "JOURNAL"

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday's edition of the Ottawa Journal contains an article the headline of which reads as follows: M.P.'s' figure of $600,000 not enough". The article, which is rather lengthy, concerns the grant from the dominion government to the city of Ottawa, and contains this sentence:

> Some time ago both George McIlraith and Jean Richard, Liberal members for Ottawa, endorsed a grant of $600,000 yearly.

In so far as that statement refers to me, it is incorrect and without any foundation whatever in fact. At no time have I ever suggested or endorsed a figure of $600,000.

Mr. Graydon: What figure did you endorse?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OMISSION OF NAME FROM DIVISION LIST

Mr. H. G. Archibald (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon, on the first vote, I voted against the motion of the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy), but my name was not recorded on the division list. Would it be possible to have my name recorded on that list?

Mr. Speaker: The omission will be corrected. May I take this opportunity of saying that during the course of divisions there is often a great deal of noise in the chamber, which makes it difficult for the officers at the table properly to complete their records. I should like to take advantage of this occasion to ask hon. members to keep quiet while divisions are in progress, as an aid to the responsible officers in the carrying out of their duties.

RESTORATION OF QUESTION TO ORDER PAPER

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the fact that question No. 37 on the order paper yesterday, standing in the name of the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), was first mentioned as answered; that was found to be erroneous and it was ordered to stand. Through some misunderstanding it has been dropped from the order paper today, and I would ask that it be reinstated.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON MINES AND RESOURCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Matthews (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources, a copy of which I sent to his office this morning. In view of the fact that the standing committee on mines and resources has not been called to meet for the last five years will the minister arrange for the calling together of this committee this year so that matters pertaining to this department may be discussed?

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): I shall give the matter consideration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION WITH RESPECT TO HOURS OF EVENING SITTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister when he intends to deal with the motion which he presented, having to do with the hours of sittings of the house.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I hope that it will be proper to deal with it tomorrow. I had hoped that it might be of consequence even before that. I still hope that it may become of consequence tomorrow.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN MINISTERIAL JURISDICTION

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I should like to inform the house that at the request of the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. MacKinnon) arrangements have been made to transfer the ministerial responsibility with respect to the trans-Canada highway project from his department to the department of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. This does not involve legislation, nor does it involve any formal action by the governor in council. The action has been approved, however, by a minute of council. I am making the announcement to explain why any future matters or questions connected with that project will be dealt with by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—DOCUMENTARY FILMS TAKEN IN FOREIGN LANDS

Mr. Fraser:

1. What documentary motion pictures of foreign lands have been produced by or for the national film board during the last eight years?

2. What are the names of each of these pictures; in what country was each taken and in what year?

Mr. Winters:

1. "Out of the Ruins"—Greece—1945. This film on the work of reconstruction in Greece was produced by the national film board in co-operation with UNRRA. A cameraman was lent to UNRRA and the film was supplied by that organization to the national film board for the production of a documentary film which was released in 1946.

"The People Between"—China—1946. This was an information film about the Chinese people and the contribution made by UNRRA in the work of reconstruction.

"Mexico Today"—Mexico—1947. This film was produced by the national film board with the assistance of the Mexican government who made film available to us without charge. The film was released in the "Canada Carries On" series in June, 1947.

"Suffer Little Children"—Greece—1945. This film was made in co-operation with UNRRA out of material filmed by a cameraman lent to that organization. The film showed the plight of children in Greece and the work of UNRRA in caring for them.

2. See answer to No. 1.

SHIPS OPERATING FROM PACIFIC COAST PORTS—RADIO EQUIPMENT

Mr. MacInnis:

1. Did the Department of Transport since January 1, 1946, receive complaints of the failure of ship owners and operators to keep radio equipment on ships operating from ports on the Pacific coast in proper working condition?

2. Did the Department of Transport since January 1, 1946, receive complaints of the failure of ship owners and operators to maintain radio watch-keeping on ships operating from Pacific coast ports?

3. If so, were such complaints investigated and by whom?

4. Was a report made to the Minister of Transport?

5. If so, when?

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. (a) Yes. (b) By the district superintendent of radio, who found that the charges were not substantiated and that the equipment in the respective vessels was in good working order and the proper watches being maintained. The other representations would involve amendments to the Canada Shipping Act and these are under consideration.

4. Yes, verbally from time to time.

5. Answered by No. 4.

IMMIGRATION—DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. Knight:

1. Are displaced persons given any practical tests in Europe to establish their ability in skills they profess, before being cleared for entry to Canada?

2. When a D.P. immigrant admitted to Canada upon his claim to the possession of certain skills, becomes unemployed within the first year through inability to perform those skills, and is ineligible for unemployment insurance, has such immigrant any claim for support upon the dominion government?

3. If not, does the responsibility for his support rest solely upon the local municipality?

4. Is any definite instruction in the English language given to displaced persons in Europe who have been screened for and are awaiting entry to Canada?

Mr. Cote (Verdun):

1. Displaced persons brought to Canada as workers under the "group movement plan" are selected by employment officers of the Department of Labour who examine them to determine their suitability for the occupation in accordance with requirements of the employer in Canada. Where special skills are called for trade tests are conducted.

2. Displaced persons brought to Canada as workers under the "group movement plan" come forward on the definite understanding that if it is found after their arrival that they cannot perform the work for which they were selected that they will accept such work as may be selected for them by the Department of Labour. If a displaced person is unable to perform the work for which he was selected the Department of Labour locates alternative employment.

3. See answer to No. 2.

4. Yes, by the international refugee organization when practical to do so.

CANADA HIGHWAYS ACT, 1919

Mr. Merritt:

What was the total expenditure, by years and by provinces, under the Canada Highways Act, 1919, and its amending acts?

Mr. Maybank: (Table on p. 1325.)

Questions

NATIONAL HEALTH—PROFESSIONAL TRAINING AND MENTAL HEALTH GRANTS

Mr. Coldwell:

1. What is the estimated shortage of mental health personnel in each province?

2. How many mental health personnel are now being trained under the professional training grant and the mental health grant in each province?

Mr. Reid:

1. The funds provided under the health survey grant will enable the provinces to make an estimate of the shortage of mental health personnel in Canada. As the surveys have not been completed such an estimate is not yet available.

2. Hundreds of nurses and attendants are being trained in the mental hospitals across the country with the aid of additional instructional staff and equipment provided out of the mental health grant. Also, grants to training institutions such as the university of Toronto, Dalhousie university, the Maritime School of Social Work, university of Western Ontario and university of British Columbia, have permitted great expansion of training facilities which will be reflected next academic year in the large number of post-graduate students being trained for mental health work. In addition, the following mental health personnel are receiving training bursaries under the professional training and mental health grants:

Prince Edward Island, none; Nova Scotia, 1; New Brunswick, 1; Quebec, 13; Ontario, 10; Manitoba, 1; Saskatchewan, 3; Alberta, 5; British Columbia, 5; Canada—39.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—ANIMATED FILMS "LET'S ALL SING TOGETHER"

Mr. Fraser:

1. Has the national film board sold the animated films called "Let's All Sing Together", series 1944-45, for reproduction purposes, or made arrangements with any individual, or company, for reproduction and sale of these films?

2. If so, what arrangements and financial considerations have been made?

3. With whom were these arrangements made, and when?

Mr. Winters:

1. Yes.

2. In February, 1945, an agreement was made whereby Walter O. Gutlohn Inc., New York, U.S.A., undertook to distribute the series for a period of one year. This firm contracted to pay the national film board a royalty fee of $2.50 for each print sold or leased. An extension of the agreement was granted on October 10, 1946, to expire December 20, 1947. This extension was signed with Film Tel Inc. (formerly Walter O. Gutlohn Inc.) a division of International Theatrical and Television Corporation. In September, 1947, Library Films Inc., the successor to Film Tel Inc., took over the distribution of these subjects. In March, 1948, a new agreement was drawn up with Library Films Inc., for a five year period. As is customary after sales have reached 500 prints, the royalty payment was reduced on this agreement to $1 per print sold.

3. See answer to No. 2.

*IRRIGATION—SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia):

1. How many pre-development irrigation farms are proposed under P.F.R.A. plans in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. What will be the location of these developments, and the number of acres utilized in each case?

Mr. Gardiner: This is a matter of government policy which has not yet been determined.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION —EMPLOYEES, ETC.

Mr. Lockhart:

1. How many persons are employed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

2. Are any persons employed outside of the city of Ottawa by this corporation?

3. If so, at what points?

4. What was the total amount paid out in salaries and traveling expenses to employees of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation during the year 1948?

5. What are the names of the principal officials of the corporation?

6. What salary does each receive?

7. What were the traveling expenses of each such official during the year 1948?

8. Have any increases in salary been granted to employees of the corporation since it was set up?

9. If so, to whom and what increase to each of them?

Mr. Winters:

1. On February 28 the total number of persons employed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was 1,883. Of these 533 were part-time employees on a fee basis or labourers engaged on a day to day basis for maintenance work.

2. Yes.

3. Persons employed outside the city of Ottawa by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are attached to offices located at the following places:

British Columbia: Kelowna, Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Vernon, Victoria, Trail.

Manitoba: Winnipeg.

Ontario: Fort William, Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, Preston, Kitchener, London, Sarnia, Stratford, North Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Kirkland Lake, Parry Sound, Peterborough, Kingston, Smiths Falls, Renfrew, St. Catharines, Trenton, Fort Erie, Niagara Falls, Welland, Collingwood, Long Branch, Orillia, Ajax, Windsor, Leamington, Cornwall, Port Hope, Owen Sound.

Quebec: Chicoutimi, Cartierville, Montreal, Nitro, Beauharnois, Quebec City, Sherbrooke, Sorel, Hull, Cap de la Madeleine, Lauzon.

Alberta: Calgary, Edmonton.

Saskatchewan: Regina, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon.

New Brunswick: Saint John, Moncton, Fredericton, Campbellton.

Nova Scotia: Halifax, Amherst, Pictou, New Glasgow, Dartmouth.

In addition the corporation has part-time representatives on a fee basis at the following locations:

British Columbia: Penticton, Prince George, Cumberland, Port Alberni, Nelson, Rossland, Kimberley, Nanaimo.

Alberta: Lethbridge, Medicine Hat.

Saskatchewan: Weyburn, Yorkton, North Battleford, Lloydminster, Melville, Prince Albert.

Ontario: Kenora, Fort Frances, Geraldton, Sioux Lookout.

Manitoba: Portage la Prairie, Brandon, Dryden.

Nova Scotia: Liverpool.

Prince Edward Island: Charlottetown.

4. Total amount paid out in salaries, $3,698,218.49. Total traveling expenses during the year 1948, $247,460.32.

5. David B. Mansur, Esq., President; Major General Hugh A. Young, Vice-President.

6. D. B. Mansur, $18,000 per annum; Major General Hugh A. Young, $12,000 per annum.

7. This information is not available from government records.

8. Yes.

9. This information is not available from government records.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. McCuaig:

What was the total amount of unemployment insurance paid out in Canada in the years 1946, 1947 and 1948?

Mr. Cote (Verdun): Total amount of unemployment insurance paid out in Canada during:

1946	$51,085,261.75
1947	32,039,339.36
1948	40,268,110.44

*HOSPITAL GRANTS—NURSES' HOMES

Mr. Knight:

1. Has the government received any requests for a broadening of the terms of the federal hospital grants to include the building of living accommodation for nurses (nurses' homes)?

2. From whom have such requests been received?

3. Have any of these requests been granted, in whole or in part?

Questions

4. Whether or not such requests have been received, has the government had this matter under consideration?

5. Has a decision in regard to it been reached? If so, what is such decision?

Mr. Martin: It will be more convenient, Mr. Speaker, to deal with this question orally. As the hon. gentleman knows, the present basis of the federal grant with regard to hospital construction is much broader than that originally envisaged in the proposals made by the federal government to the provinces in 1945 and 1946. It is true that there have been discussions with various bodies, governmental and otherwise, in this country as to broadening the base to include matters referred to in the question. There is nothing, however, that I can say at the moment beyond this. The government is giving consideration to this matter and its policy will be announced, in the light of experience, in due course.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—BRITISH COLUMBIA —RADIO INSPECTORS

Mr. Jones:

1. What is the total number of employees in the British Columbia branch of the Department of Transport (radio division)?

2. How many radio inspectors are employed by the Department of Transport in British Columbia?

3. What steps have been taken by the department to appoint an inspector, or inspectors, for the interior of British Columbia?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. 290.

2. Six.

3. Action has been taken towards the appointment of a radio inspector for the interior of British Columbia during the fiscal year 1949-50.

RADIO RECEIVING LICENCES—ALBERTA— INSPECTORS

Mr. Shaw:

1. What was the total number of radio licence inspectors employed in the province of Alberta during each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

2. What was the total amount paid in wages, salaries, commissions, traveling allowances, living and other allowances to each such inspector during each of the above years?

3. What was the total amount collected by each inspector from radio receiving set owners during each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Two (one at Calgary and one at Edmonton).

2. Salaries:

	1945-46	1946-47	1947-48

Edmonton	2,580	2,880	3,000

No traveling, living and other allowances paid.

Questions

3. Radio inspectors do not issue radio receiving licences except on demand at their offices. The following are the amounts collected by the Calgary and Edmonton inspectors in respect thereof:

1945-46
Calgary	$ 976.00
Edmonton	579.50
1946-47
Calgary	$1,040.50
Edmonton	1,685.00
1947-48
Calgary	$ 832.50
Edmonton	3,357.00

RURAL MAIL SERVICE—BRITISH COLUMBIA POST OFFICES

Mr. Pearkes:

1. To what company or companies have contracts been let for the carrying of mails to the following post offices in British Columbia: Galiano, Mayne, North Galiano, Pender Island, Port Washington, Saturna, South Pender?

2. What are the amounts of the contracts?

3. How frequently is mail delivered to these offices?

4. When do the various contracts expire?

Mr. Bertrand (Laurier):

1. The post offices at Galiano, Mayne, North Galiano, Pender Island, Port Washington, Saturna and South Pender are served by a water service known as Victoria-Vancouver (Gulf islands route).

*The service is performed by the Canadian Pacific Railway under an agreement covered by order in council P.C. 1543 of 22nd April, 1947.

2. The rate of payment is $12,000 per annum.

3. Mail is delivered to: Galiano, Mayne, Pender Island, Port Washington—Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; North Galiano—Mondays; Saturna, South Pender—Mondays, Thursdays; each week.

4. The order in council expires March 31, 1951.

*The Canadian Pacific Railway steamers deliver mails to the wharf and the following contracts for the conveyance of mail between wharves and post offices are in effect:

Galiano and wharf, D. A. New, $327.60 per annum; contract expires 30-6-49.

Mayne and wharf, A. K. Steel, $126 per annum; contract expires 30-9-50.

Port Washington and wharf (Hope Bay), J. S. Stigings, $150 per annum; contract expires 30-9-50.

Saturna and wharf, F. J. Jackson, $63.50 per annum; contract expires 31-3-49; renewal to 31-3-53.

INCOME TAX—BRITISH COLUMBIA—BRANCH OFFICES

Mr. Jones:

What steps have been taken by the Department of National Revenue (income tax division) to open any branch office or offices in the interior of British Columbia?

Mr. McCann: Since the report made in 1945 by an independent committee, the taxation division, Department of National Revenue, regularly reviewed the possibility of expansion in the number of district income tax offices. At the moment it is not considered advisable or practical to expand the number of income tax offices in British Columbia.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—INSPECTION

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many complaints regarding 1948 awards under P.F.A.A. have been received?

2. Is re-inspection of certain areas contemplated? If so, when will re-inspection take place?

3. Is there any set procedure to be followed by farmers who are dissatisfied and desire re-inspection?

HOUSING—HASTINGS COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough):

How many houses or housing units were erected and completed in the county of Hastings in the years 1947, 1948, in co-ordination with the following agencies: (a) Veterans Land Act; (b) Wartime Housing Limited; (c) Integrated Housing; (d) special plans under National Housing Act; (e) private builders or any other means?

LEGAL SERVICES—HASTINGS COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough):

1. What are the names of the legal firms and solicitors in the county of Hastings (a) receiving fees from the dominion government or any of its commissions from 1st January, 1946 to date; (b) to whom any fees are still due and payable?

2. What amounts have been paid to each of them, in what year, and for what services?

3. What amounts are still due to each, and for what services?

4. What are the names of the legal firms and solicitors in the county of Hastings, at present employed by the dominion government or any of its commissions?

HOUSING—VETERANS LAND ACT—HASTINGS COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough):

1. How many homes were built under the V.L.A. in the county of Hastings?

2. What is the total cost of each home constructed under the V.L.A. in this area?

3. Who was the contractor or contractors for this area?

6. How many homes have been sold to date and what is the price in each case?

7. What was the cost per unit of project overhead and how was the same made up?

8. Have any veterans made deposits on proposed purchases and later declined to proceed with the purchase of such holdings?

9. If so, by whom and why were said deals not completed?

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT AND VETERANS LAND ACT, HASTINGS COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough):

1. How many applications have been made to purchase farms in the county of Hastings, under Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act?

2. How many applications have been accepted?

3. How many applications have been refused?

4. How many applications are still pending?

PRICES AND TRADE BOARD—PROSECUTIONS, LEGAL SERVICES, ETC.—HASTINGS COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough):

1. How many prosecutions by the wartime prices and trade board were instituted in the county of Hastings in each of the years 1947 and 1948?

2. What is the total amount of fines levied in such prosecutions?

3. What is the total amount paid to legal firms and solicitors in connection with such prosecutions (a) in legal fees; (b) in traveling and other expenses?

4. What is the total amount paid to investigators in connection with such cases; (a) in salaries; (b) traveling and other expenses?

CONTRACTS FOR CONTRUCTION OF VESSELS

Mr. Hazen:

2. What companies submitted tenders for each type of vessel and for what amounts?

3. What companies were awarded contracts for each type of vessel and at what prices?

DEPORTATIONS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many deportations for illegal entry into Canada have been made by the Department of Immigration in each of the years 1947, 1948 and 1949 to date, and to what countries?

IMMIGRATION—PERMITS FOR ENTRY OTHER THAN UNDER PROVISIONS OF IMMIGRATION ACT

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many written permits provided for by section four of the Immigration Act were issued by the minister during each of the years 1947 and 1948 (a) authorizing any person to enter Canada; (b) authorizing any person to remain in Canada; and in either case without being subject to the provisions of the said act?

2. How many of these permits have been included in a return laid before parliament within thirty days after the commencement of the next ensuing session of parliament in each of the said years?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask why this question should be made an order for return.

Mr. St. Laurent: This question and the preceding one deal with the same subject matter, and the same subject matter is involved in the question which was erroneously left off the order paper today. It concerns the Prime Minister's office, the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the office of the Minister of Mines and Resources. The officials of all three departments have to confer on the form of answer to be made.

TAXATION

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "CHATELAINE" MAGAZINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Park Manross (London): I should like to make a correction in an article which appears in this month's issue of Chatelaine, a copy of which is now lying on the desk of the Minister of Finance. The article is entitled, "Look here, Mr. Abbott." There is an error in the article.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that the rules require that questions asked on the orders of the day should be brief, and I would ask him to govern himself accordingly.

Mr. Manross: Does the Minister of Finance know that there is an error with regard to the tax on soft drinks? The article says that they are taxed twice. The fact is that they are taxed three times—8 per cent, 25 per cent and one cent per bottle.

Some hon. Members: Order.

CHILD WELFARE

ALLEGED TRAFFIC IN BABIES FOR ADOPTION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Gladys Strum (Qu'Appelle): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What steps has he taken to comply with the request of Premier McNair of New Brunswick for assistance in investigating the baby black market operating out of Saint John, New Brunswick? Can the minister give any assurance that the government has taken action to stop the traffic in babies as revealed by the Alberta royal commission investigation of 1947?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I did not realize that the traffic in babies was a matter for the Department of External Affairs, but I will try to secure the information and give it to the hon. member. No information on the subject is at my disposal at the moment.

Mrs. Strum: Is not the citizenship of Canadian babies involved, and does that not come under the minister's department?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ADMISSION OF STUDENTS TO ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE AND ROYAL ROADS IN 1949

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. A. Kidd (Kingston City): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. How many students will be admitted to the Royal Military College at Kingston in 1949, and how many will be admitted to Royal Roads, B.C., in 1949?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Kidd: I have asked my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I call the attention of hon. members to the fact that when they wish to put a question before the orders of the day are called, the question should be urgent and brief. I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Kidd: My question, Mr. Speaker, is prompted—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kidd: Never mind; I have the floor. My question is urgent. I am addressing my remarks to you, Mr. Speaker. My question is prompted by an article which appears in this morning's press.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows perfectly well what the rules are; in asking a question he is not allowed to make a statement.

Mr. Kidd: Let the minister answer my question.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): The minister will comply with the rules of the house and with the directions of the Speaker. If the Speaker says that the question is in order, I will answer it. If it is not in order, it ought to go on the order paper, in which case I will answer it in due course.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

JOHN GRIERSON—PRODUCTION OF ANGLO-CANADIAN MOTION PICTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Has Grierson, who said he had a temporary comfortable job with the national film board, made approaches to the board about the production of an Anglo-Canadian motion picture?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The answer is no.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): He did not say that.

Mr. Fraser: He did say he had a comfortable job.

Mr. Claxton: Not with the film board.

Mr. Coldwell: With UNESCO.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

TRANSMISSION THROUGH MAILS OF SCHEMES DEVISED TO DEFRAUD THE PUBLIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that under section 209 (c) of the Criminal Code it is an indictable offence for anyone to post for transmission or delivery by or through the post any letter or circular concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public, will the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to forget the rules of the house. As I have already reminded hon. members, when a question is put before the orders of the day are called, the rules require that it should be urgent and brief.

Mr. Shaw: I have come to my question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a legal opinion. I do not think that is the kind of question that should be asked at this time. I suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

VISIT OF SIR NORMAN BROOK—QUESTION AS TO MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that newspaper dispatches indicate that Sir Norman Brook, secretary of the United Kingdom cabinet, is to arrive in Ottawa either today or tomorrow, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate what the government's attitude will be with respect to the early calling of the commonwealth conference of foreign ministers?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not think the latter question arises out of the first part of the question addressed to me by the hon. member for Peel. With respect to the latter part of his question, no doubt the Prime Minister will deal with this matter when the occasion demands.

COMMUNISM

USE OF MAILS IN DISTRIBUTION OF LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will he at his earliest possible convenience—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask the hon. member if this is the same question that he asked previously?

Mr. Shaw: No, Mr. Speaker. It is another question entirely. Will the Minister of Justice tomorrow, or at his earliest possible convenience, indicate what action the Department of Justice contemplates with respect to the circulation through the mails of certain communist literature, a sample of which I am sending to him at this moment?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): The answer is yes.

EDUCATION

BRIEF OF CANADIAN TEACHERS' FEDERATION—FEDERAL AID FOR UNESCO, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon City): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received the brief presented by the Canadian Teachers' Federation in February last, and can he say whether any action is being considered with respect to federal aid for education, UNESCO, and the other matters referred to therein?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part of the question is that the brief is still under consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

UNIVERSITY TRAINING GRANTS—QUESTION OF SETTING UP COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. McKay (Weyburn): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he is prepared to answer the question which I asked yesterday.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Since the increase made last spring to dependents of student veterans, the matter mentioned has been kept under consideration. It is not intended to recommend a parliamentary committee this session for the purposes stated by my hon. friend.

EXTRADITION

QUESTION AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES FOR NEW TREATY—PRINCIPLE OF DUAL CRIMINALITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On Tuesday, March 8, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson) asked whether the government is negotiating with the government of the United States for a new treaty of extradition, and whether the principle of dual criminality will remain a part of the treaty.

The answer to the hon. member's question is that no such treaty is now being negotiated with the United States.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I am prompted to take up a few minutes of the time of the house at this stage, for two main reasons. The first of these is to be found in the last sentence of the third paragraph of the speech from the throne, which sentence reads as follows:

> It is the view of my ministers that a steady advance toward the goal of social justice for all is an effective safeguard against the influence of subversive doctrines.

It would be most heartening, sir, to all of the people of this country if they could feel that these words in the speech from the throne were not only a dead statement of fact, but gave promise of substantial fulfilment. My second reason is related to the first one. It is to be found in the fact that over the last four years since I came into this House of Commons the government has been either bankrupt of sound ideas as to how to make that steady advance toward social justice for all, or, in the alternative, unwilling to take the time to consider and to discuss in this house the fundamental changes in the financial and economic approach which will surely be required before any substantial advances can be made toward social justice for all.

These, sir, are very serious times in which we live, times that require the most earnest and sincere inquiry after truth. But as I have sat in this house and listened to the debates over the period of four years during which I have been a member, I have often thought what a wonderful opportunity the Liberal party has really had. When one considers the number of years that they have held office, and the numerous opportunities they have had given to them to learn and to apply sound financial and economic policies, and when one also considers the number of thinking men that they have had in this house, to name only a few—the Slaghts, the McGeers, the Tuckers, and I was going to say the Sinnotts—

Mr. Irvine: The Dunnings.

Mr. Low: —with their outstanding knowledge of the absurdities in our present financial system and the solutions to these absurdities; when one considers these things he is led to exclaim in utter amazement at the failure of the Liberal party to rise to the challenge of present-day problems, and to meet them with courageous and effective action within the financial and economic fields.

[Mr. Pearson.]

For a good many years my family supported the Liberal party. It was because—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but I should like to call the attention of hon. members to the fact that there is so much noise in the house it must be disconcerting to the hon. member who has the floor, and it must also be disconcerting to other hon. members who are trying to listen to him.

Mr. Low: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I deeply appreciate your efforts to keep order in the house. I am sure hon. members will be good enough to try to be quiet while the speeches are being made.

I was saying, sir, that for a good many years my family supported the Liberal party; but it was precisely because the Liberal party turned to the superficial treatment of symptoms instead of showing a disposition to get right down to and treat causes; and also because they turned to ridiculing anyone with courage enough to bring forward a new idea, that I departed from the traditional practice of those who went before me in our family. Since then, and since I came to this house in 1945, I have felt that my action was vindicated.

Year after year I have heard members of the Liberal party ridicule the social credit proposals in this house; but to this date, sir, not a single one of them has attempted to show in what respect the social credit proposals are fallacious, and why. To use one example, and of course it is only one of many —I use this one only because it just happens to be the last one—on Monday night the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. MacLean) spoke in this debate, and in referring to certain remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), he used these words, as reported at page 1242 of Hansard:

> But the solution will not come about by the introduction and adoption of the peculiar and illogical ideas expressed by the member for Macleod and those associated with him.

He then proceeded to make some inane remarks in a most general and sweeping way, which indicated clearly to me, at any rate, that he did not know the first thing about social credit. To take just one example, sir, the hon. member said:

> If money to carry on the government can be raised in any way besides taxing the people, then people need not work; and when we have reached that stage, all must starve. The social credit money will be of no use, as there will be no goods to purchase.

It is quite apparent, sir, that the hon. member did not get his ideas about social credit from a study of anything which anybody has said in this house, or out of it, as far as this party is concerned. I want to tell him that social credit is a scientific way of making it possible for men to work and to continue working so that they can live.

Mr. Johnston: Can he understand that?

Mr. Low: I wonder if he can understand it? I would just remind him that, periodically, under his financial system men do not have a chance to work. They are thrown on breadlines, and they continue on breadlines because a stubborn government refuses to do anything about it.

Mr. Wylie: He does not understand his own system.

Mr. Low: Just as the hon. member for Medicine Hat says, it is perfectly clear that the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria does not know anything about the financial system under which he lives and tries to carry on. All he needs to do is to ask the Minister of Finance right here in the house a simple question like this: Is it possible for the government to obtain money in any way besides taxing the people? I will guarantee he will get a far different answer from what he indicated would be the case. The hon. member could not have read what was said by Mr. Graham Towers before the committee on banking and commerce in 1939, or he would have seen Mr. Towers admits that the government can obtain all the money it desires for the distribution of the production of this country, without either borrowing or taking it from the people.

Mr. Johnston: Tell him who Graham Towers is; probably he does not know.

Mr. Low: Perhaps I should. Mr. Graham Towers is the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Johnston: Did you get that over there?

Mr. Low: As Mr. Graham Towers has admitted, it is simply a question of policy, not of economic necessity.

In addition, when the hon. member says that social credit money would be of no use because there would be no goods to purchase, let me simply say to him that if the time ever comes in Canada when there are no goods to purchase, it will not be under a social credit economy. It would very likely be under the very policy that he and his colleagues attempt to support in this House of Commons. Under a social credit economy there always would be exactly enough purchasing power in the pockets of all the people to purchase the goods available—no more and no less. The result would be that every single dollar of purchasing power in circulation would command a dollar's worth of goods.

I should dearly love to see a man like the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria, or anyone else who would like to try it, rise in the house and show us wherein our policies are fallacious, illogical or impossible. He will find our official proposals recorded in Hansard down through the years. I do not ask him to go back too far; he does not have to. On January 31, speaking in this very debate, I put on record what the social credit financial proposals actually were. In the budget debate of last session I submitted to the house an alternative to the ball-and-chain budget of the Minister of Finance, and my proposals at that time contained the basic social credit financial proposals. There is no excuse whatsoever for the hon. member, or for any other member for that matter, not knowing what they are. Furthermore, if the hon. member would like to indulge in a little mental exercise he might turn to the questions in the speech made by my colleague the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) in the house on February 28; then let him stand up in this house in some future debate and answer those questions.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, or any of them.

Mr. Low: When he does he will show that he knows something about social credit—maybe.

I started to say that the Liberal party had had great opportunities—and they have. But they have not risen to those opportunities. I mentioned the Slaghts, the McGeers and the Tuckers. But the Slaghts, the McGeers and the Tuckers are gone from the house now. I am sure the first two were embittered because their profound arguments and warnings were not heeded by their colleagues. And Walter Tucker—what about him?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, what about him?

Mr. Low: Well, Mr. Speaker, he used to be a great advocate of monetary reform within the Liberal party, in the days when he was in the house. As I recall it, he used to be a fair-minded man who was considered quite reliable. But it seems that when he became leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan he dropped any convictions he ever did have with regard to reform.

Mr. Blackmore: They have silenced him.

Mr. Low: It now appears that the hon. member has been completely tuckered out, so far as advocating financial reform is concerned.

But enough of that. Just let me say right now that until the government changes its ways and adopts a new and scientific approach to financing the affairs of the country, it will never make sufficient advance toward the goal of social justice for all to which reference is made in the speech from the throne. And if hon. members continue to spend their time ridiculing social credit proposals instead of getting down to a study of them, they will never provide a safeguard against the influence of subversive doctrines so long as they live.

Let us for a moment take a look at the financial and money system of these fellows who run the government. It might be a good idea to remind them of the things they preach. They believe that before we can add to the national wealth we must go out to the money brokers, who have not anything, and borrow enough of our national currency or credit to complete or develop any one of our national resources and then pay interest to the money brokers for the use of our money. That is exactly what it means when the government authorizes an issue of bonds to raise new money.

We Canadians, therefore, are compelled to add to the national debt every time we wish to add to the national wealth. They call that sensible—the very people who ignorantly refer to social credit as funny money! I am reminded of a young fellow who really wanted to be tops in his class. So he would hang his shirt out on the clothesline at night, and, under cover of darkness, steal it for practice. That sounds foolish, I know; but it is not nearly as stupid and foolish as what the government of this country does when it raises capital by printing a bond which represents all the wealth of the country, taking that bond to an institution which has nothing, trading the bond for some credit created out of nothing by the outfit that has nothing, and then agreeing to pay interest in perpetuity to that institution for its beneficence in allowing us to use what is already ours. With this in mind when these Liberal wise men refer to Social Crediters as crazy money reformers, I am reminded of an incident which occurred at a mental institution. Two inmates stood watching a teamster unload a load of fertilizer. One inmate asked the teamster what he was doing, and the teamster replied, "I'm putting this manure on the strawberries." One inmate said to the other, "We put sugar on ours, and they call us crazy."

Here is another illustration. The wise men of our government believe it is sound practice to permit the chartered banks to create four billion dollars' worth of new money out of nothing and lend it to the government at $75 million in interest each year. But they will argue that if the Bank of Canada were ordered by parliament through the Department of Finance or through a finance commission to make the bookkeeping entries creating the same four billions out of the same kind of nothing, and by doing it save the taxpayers $75 million annually, it would be wild inflation. I wonder who is crazy?

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Low: Certainly it is nonsense. And that is just the kind of nonsense the hon. member believes in and advocates.

Mr. Sinclair: No; he is for it.

Mr. Low: If the interruption was an expression of agreement, then I beg the hon. member's pardon and say that he is right and is deserving of being placed with the Slaghts and the McGeers.

Let me ask this: Is it craziness, or is it downright betrayal of a sacred trust, when the wise men in high positions in this country yield to the arguments of the chartered banks and their corporation bureaucrats that they are entitled to receive from the government $75 million every year until the end of time for having created four billions of dollars out of nothing?

By the end of world war II, chiefly as a result of that war and the way in which it was financed, Canada found herself with a national debt of over $16,000 million, on which the Canadian taxpayers are obliged to dig up in interest each year over $450 million. Evidently the bondholders have convinced our high financial advisers that it is reasonable for them to think that they have a moral right to a profit out of the war to an extent of more than $450 million a year. Let us remember that much of that $450 million is gathered in taxes from the boys who lent their lives without interest for the winning of the war.

Of course lives and limbs and eyes and blood of our heroes are not as important as dollars made out of nothing, at least to the people who run this country. What makes it more tragic is the fact that the posterity of those heroes will have to go on paying $450 million a year as tribute in perpetuity unless we get busy and do something about it, and that soon.

I wonder if in this debate some members of the government will get up and defend their sensible money system and show that the Social Credit one is crazy and unsound? There is nothing I would like better than that. I have often been amazed at the naïveté of some of the defenders of our present oxcart, Babylonian financial practices in this country. For many years some of us have advocated the inserting of a call clause in the bonds issued by the government so that in peacetime the national debt could be called in and converted into bank deposits and the new money needed to distribute our production internally. I made such a suggestion during the budget debate last year. Three years ago the Social Credit government of the province of Alberta refunded their debt and inserted a call clause in every bond so that they could be called in and so that in due time the government could get out of debt. The $35,000 a year head of the Bank of Canada cried out in alarm with these words:

—but an optional redemption feature like that would enable the government to get rid of an interest-bearing debt when a suitable occasion arises after the war.

Would that not be just too bad if the people of Canada should succeed in unloading the old man of the sea from their backs, the old man of the sea in the form of an interest burden of nearly half a billion dollars? Many of the government's supporters have been so naive as to argue that it is not in the interests of Canada to get rid of the national interest-bearing debt that has pyramided now to more than $16,000 million, mainly because the government has borrowed every cent of money the Canadian people use instead of ordering the Bank of Canada to create it for them free of interest. They say that it is not in the interests of Canada to get rid of it because the banks, insurance companies, trust companies and wealthy individuals need steady income. But when poor people, who are forced into breadlines by a government too stupid and stubborn to make what is physically possible financially possible, come to the government for help, the government bureaucrats say to them: "Only when you have used up all your savings and are desperately in need can we give you any help". In the light of that situation, let some of the government wise men get up and defend their subsidy of over $450 million a year out of taxpayers' money to banks, insurance companies, trust companies and wealthy individuals who have in their possession more than $16,000 million of unspent savings.

Social Crediters say that banks, like other business concerns, should be self-supporting. Let them charge for their services instead of expecting the government to subsidize them in the form of huge interest payments. Is that a crazy idea? If hon. members think so, let them get up in this debate and show that it is.

The financial policy persisted in by the Liberal government forces some of the ministers to do some funny things—at least they would be funny if they were not so tragic. Here is one of them. Under thick delusion—that is about what it is—they send out armies of tax snoopers to exact the uttermost farthing they can from every person in the land from whom they think they can get it. The farmers of this country are driven to utter distraction by these armies of tax snoopers. For instance, they assess the poor waitress in the restaurant income tax on her wages, less her exemption, and then in addition they assess that poor waitress a straight ten per cent more on her wages for the tips she is supposed to get, whether she gets them or not.

Along with this so-called sound money system of the Liberals, and of course any others who support it, the government seems to be under the delusion that the only way they can get money is to tax it out of the people. As the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Ashby) so well put it the other day, that is just like saying to the Imperial Oil Limited when they want to get gasoline that the only way they can get it is to drain it out of the gas tanks of the cars belonging to the people around this country. Imperial Oil Limited know better than that, and any schoolboy would know better than that.

Mr. Young: Get it from the Alberta government.

Mr. Low: You can bet your life they have got it. They have something better than they have in Saskatchewan or British Columbia—they have got it. Any schoolboy would know that if Imperial Oil Limited want to get oil they will have to dig down to the source of oil. Social Crediters claim that it is only reasonable that when the government need money when it is not wise to tax it out of the people, and there are times when that is so, they should go to the source of money, to where money is created, to the banks of this country. Only when they do go after it they should have gumption enough to have the Bank of Canada create what they need for the distribution of all our production and for the development of our resources and make it available to the people without exacting tribute by way of heavy annual interest charges that continue to grow decade after decade.

Then on the lighter side. Now I am thinking of two of the ministers over there, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann). I am afraid they have been guilty of playing fast and loose with other people's wives.

An hon. Member: Wives?

Mr. Low: Wives, w-i-v-e-s. There are half a million other fellows in this country who think as I do. Let me tell them why. I am urged to take these two ministers to court for alienating my wife's affections. Why? They have come into my home and they have taken out of my pocket so much each month and have handed it over to my wife as if I did not give her a sufficient monthly allowance.

An hon. Member: Do you?

Mr. Low: Yes, I do. They call it family allowances, but in my case at any rate I would have to call it an alienation of affection fund. But seriously, these Liberals who go around the country belittling and ridiculing Social Credit, and who have not yet dared to get up in this house and debate our proposals when we can be present to defend them, advocate and stick to what they call a sound money system. Just how sound is their money? Under it the banks of this country can expand, which means stretch—

Mr. Blackmore: Like rubber.

Mr. Low: Yes, like rubber. —one dollar of primary deposit of gold into $84 of purchasing power by lending figures in a book to borrowers at interest. Some people will not believe that, because they will not take the trouble to study what is right in front of them.

Mr. Blackmore: In the bank acts.

Mr. Low: At that point, I wonder if you have ever heard of rubber money. I have heard of it so often from these people on the other side of the house. I wonder where you would go to find a better example than what I have just cited of rubber money that will stretch a long way.

There is in the library of parliament a book called the Canadian Banking System. Its author is James Holladay, professor of economics at the university of Alabama. The book was published by the Bankers Publishing Company of Boston and New York in 1938. Note that, by the Bankers Publishing Company. It contains a foreword by Mr. C. M. Short, economist and assistant secretary of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. At the end of the foreword Mr. Short says:

> I am happy therefore, to have the opportunity of commending Doctor Holladay's book to all those who wish to acquire a knowledge of the development of the Canadian banking system and of the way in which it operates.

This, you see, is an unqualified endorsement of the work by a prominent Canadian banker. On pages 140 and 141 of that book you can find verification of what I have just said, namely, that the banks of this country can expand a primary deposit of one dollar of gold into $84 of currency and cheque-book money. This power, which the banks have under the sound money system advocated by my friends opposite, makes it possible for the banks of Canada to bring on periods of boom and inflation. Then, when deflationary forces set in, such as shrinking of foreign markets, cessation of Canadians traveling abroad, and a number of such things, fear may strike into the hearts of bank managers across the country, and they may begin to call in loans that they have made. By this method they can cancel out of existence and destroy a very large part of the purchasing power of the people and bring on a depression. They did it in the period from 1929 to 1933, and they have done it as a prelude to every period of hard times that we have known since the present banking system was devised. Through their power to expand and contract credits almost at will, the banks of this country hold in their hands the power to not only control all the wealth of our country, but to destroy the people and their efforts completely. Yet the Liberals call that sound money.

Mr. Blackmore: And the government does not know what to do about it.

Mr. Low: Under Social Credit financial proposals this sort of boom and bust would be impossible. The amount of purchasing power under such a system would constantly be adjusted to exactly equal the production of the country, no more and no less. There could be no inflation or deflation of any serious magnitude under a Social Credit financial policy. This we can show to be a fact, and we are perfectly ready to do so whenever it suits the Liberals to get out and have us do so. In the light of that, I ask who has all this funny money? It appears that many people in high positions of trust and responsibility never learn anything from history. Many years ago Benjamin Franklin, that great old American, visited his friends in England, and Franklin had this to say to his friends:

> Abundance reigned in the colonies and there was peace in all their borders. A more happy and prosperous population could not perhaps be found on the globe. In every home there was comfort. The people generally were highly moral and knowledge was extensively diffused.

His friends then asked Franklin how the colonies managed to collect enough taxes to build poorhouses, and how they handled the terrible burden and curse of taking care of the poor. In those days the streets of England were covered with vagabonds. Franklin answered:

> We have no poorhouses in the colonies, and if we had we would have no one to put in them, as in the colonies there is not a single unemployed man, no poor and no vagabonds.

His English friends found it hard to understand this very unusual condition, because when their poorhouses and prisons became too crowded England loaded these poor people on ships like cattle and sent them out of England. Those who survived the terrible trip in poverty and filth were dumped in the colonies. In those days England put her poor people in prison if they could not pay their debts.

Mr. Blackmore: Sound money ideas.

Mr. Low: When the people of England asked Benjamin Franklin how he accounted for the prosperity in the colonies this is what he replied:

> It is because in the colonies we issue our own paper money. We call it colonial scrip, and we issue just enough to move all goods freely from the producers to the consumers and, as we create our own money, we control the purchasing power of money and have no interest to pay.

That is essentially the Social Credit idea. This information was brought to the attention of the English bankers who at once caused a bill to be passed in the English parliament forbidding the colonies to use their scrip and compelling them to use bankers' debt money for the first time in America. Franklin states that, within a year afterward, the towns of the colonies were crowded with unemployed because half the money of the colonies had been taken away from them under the bankers' sound money system. He declared that—

> The colonies would gladly have borne the little insignificant tax on tea and other articles had it not been for the poverty among the colonies caused by the English bankers' influence in the parliament that had created the hatred for England and caused the war of the revolution.

Not long after John Twells, a noted English historian, wrote thus in reference to the colonial scrip used by the colonies:

> This was the monetary system under which the American colonies prospered to such an extent that Burke said of them: "Nothing in the history of the world is like their progress."

It was a wise and beneficial system and its effects were most conducive to the happiness of the people. At the time Alexander Hamilton, in 1791, prevailed on congress to pass a bill granting a charter to a group of bankers in America for what they called the first bank of the United States, wise old Thomas Jefferson pleaded with President Washington to veto the bill. He spoke these words, which it appears many so-called wise men of this day have forgotten:

> If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of the currency, first by inflation and then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will grow up around them will deprive the people of all property until their children will wake up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered.

Mr. Blackmore: Just what has happened in Canada.

Mr. Low: That prophecy has been fulfilled a good many times since Jefferson's day. And still there are many people who ought to be doing something about the situation, but who spend their time ridiculing those of us who are trying to think of the people and their welfare instead of power and position.

Right now this country is facing a very serious threat. There are $7 billion of purchasing power in the form of bank deposits, all of which represent loans to borrowers from the banks. Unsaleable surpluses of our production are beginning to appear. Some of our foreign markets are showing a disposition to slacken off. One of these days the banks will begin to call in their loans, and by their actions will destroy many hundreds of millions of dollars of our purchasing power just as they did in the years 1929 to 1933. They could bring on a depression that would make the hungry thirties look like a very pale and washed-out copy. That power is still in their hands. What is the government doing about it? What measures is it bringing forward as a cushion against depression? It is only government that can provide the protection the people need against another bust. It is because the Liberal government has done nothing but ridicule those of us who see the danger and advocate specific measures to meet the situation that I wish to move an amendment to the amendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), that the amendment be amended by inserting between the word "address" and the word "we" the following:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have shown such studied indifference to the Social Credit financial proposals put before this house from time to time for bringing social security and freedom to every Canadian, and economic stability and prosperity to the country as a whole;
> We also regret that Your Excellency's advisers have demonstrated such timorous diffidence in their failure to take up Social Crediters' oft-repeated challenge to debate in this house and show honest cause why the social credit proposals would not bring widespread security, happiness and contentment to the Canadian people;
> We regret, further, that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to bring forward legislative and administrative provision for maintaining purchasing power at a level which would make possible the equitable distribution of our total production and thus cushion the Canadian economy against the onset of depression, therefore . . .

Mr. J. L. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that any financial proposals I might make to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) today would sound very dull and orthodox after hearing the very able speech delivered by the member for Peace River (Mr. Low). I must assure him that what he said certainly gives one food for thought.

I should like to congratulate the mover (Mr. Brown) and the seconder (Mr. Demers) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, not only to preserve the amenities in this debate but because I sincerely believe they made excellent speeches. I wish, too, to welcome to this house the new members. I think I speak for all the members of the house when I say to them that I believe they have made and will continue to make a worth-while contribution to the deliberations of this house.

I have been interested in this debate on the speech from the throne. All the speeches have consistently followed a pattern. All members have suggested to the Minister of Finance and the government that we should spend more but we should tax less. This pattern has been consistently followed on the government side of the house as well. It must be very difficult to be a minister of the crown. He has certain policies to advocate and, like the rest of us, he has constituents to whom those policies might not appeal. It must be difficult to be in a position of responsibility and make the decision as to where this money is going to be found.

I am going to follow the example of the other members. If we are going to have this gravy train arriving in April, I certainly want the people of Comox-Alberni to have a parlour car seat on it. It was interesting to hear a member suggest a day or two ago that a floor should be put under the price of silver foxes. If we are going to get into this skin game, as it were, I have a measure which I should like to suggest. I am sure the government would agree to the suggestion that we put a floor under political scalps, and that we put a floor under the majorities the members obtained in the 1945 general election. If it were possible to do that, I am sure the government would accept that suggestion.

Many protests have been received about this surplus. Speaking for myself, I cannot get very wrathy about it because it seems to me that, in times such as we have just come through, when the minister tells us he has approximately a twenty-five per cent surplus on his gross business, that is good business. I do not think there is a businessman in the house who has gone through this period of prosperity in Canada who would not feel that was a fairly satisfactory year's operation, and that there was nothing wrong with providing a surplus against the vicissitudes of the years ahead. It must be remembered that during this past year we have depleted Canada's natural resources to a great extent. It seems to me that $600 million is not too much for us to have in reserve for the future.

[Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni).]

There is another feature of this surplus which I like. When I discuss with the ministry provisions for certain necessary public works in Comox-Alberni, the government cannot plead poverty. Everyone knows that when you go to borrow money from a friend, he usually says he has not got it. In this case, I know the government is fairly wealthy. In the past, I might have been a little harsh with the Minister of Finance, but now I really feel I should congratulate him on the courage and wisdom of the plan he adopted last year for maintaining our tax rate. He was extremely unpopular. I never heard a man so abused without being killed. I must congratulate him on the way he has led Canada through our United States exchange difficulties. A great deal of credit should go to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) as well in this regard. Despite the screams we heard last year that there were no tomatoes and no lettuce, and how someone was short of French artichoke hearts, I have not seen many people suffering under the present policy.

Everyone has made suggestions as to how this budget should be arranged. I shall give the Minister of Finance a little help with the construction of it. I believe he should cut income taxes on low and medium incomes as much as he deems advisable. I am quite prepared to have the minister and his financial advisers ascertain what that shoulld be. If I do not think they have acted wisely, then I shall be in a position to criticize them when the budget is brought down.

Mr. Wylie: Criticize him now.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): I do not know what is in the budget.

Mr. Wylie: That does not matter; criticize him now.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Shakespeare had a phrase for that. He said zipper up thy lip, or something.

I believe the lowering of the income tax would make the government many friends. It would make us all very happy if the minister removed the tax on jewelry and soft drinks. These are discriminatory taxes. If he needs the revenue, let him get it from some other source which would distribute the burden on every business in Canada rather than on these two businesses.

There is another suggestion I should like to make to the Minister of Finance. It concerns small businesses. The particular provision I have in mind would not materially aid large businesses. I would suggest that any business in Canada be allowed the first thousand dollars tax free if that money were actually reinvested in the business. We are all well aware of the constant demands on new or small businesses for capital. While such a provision would not materially aid large businesses, it would be of great benefit to small business concerns.

Mr. Thatcher: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): I was not referring to the hon. member for Moose Jaw. It seems to me that the larger business concerns in Canada are doing very well. As a matter of fact, I have been amazed that there have not been more protests from them, considering the very heavy burden of taxation they have been carrying. During this period of prosperity I believe they feel that they can carry the heavy tax burden. If they are to have this large volume of business, I think this is the time to get the money from them. If at a later date there is a business recession of any kind, perhaps they will have a much better argument to put before the Minister of Finance in asking for a cut in taxes.

I have heard it said, of course, that the high tax on large incomes was taking money away from necessary capital development and speculative risk in our country. My own opinion is that our present tax system actually encourages people to invest in enterprises of this type, such as mines, oil wells and that kind of thing, where they can make a capital gain. I feel that big business itself is not suffering unduly under the present tax situation.

I like the remark made by the new hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) when he referred to the grave problem which faces Canada in the form of an iron curtain, on one side of which there was the dollar sign and on the other side the pound sterling sign. I am quite certain that if this barrier were removed our people —and I certainly refer to my own people in Comox-Alberni—could be happy and prosperous. As hon. members may well know, we depend to a great degree on our export trade in fish and lumber. In examining the solution to this problem, I think it might be wise for us to think in reverse. When I think of the early development of this country in the construction of our railroads, the development of our mines and our steel plants, it seems to me that in those days we asked English capital to come here in the form of either goods or gold and gave share equities in our various enterprises. Now that the socialist government in Great Britain, in their wisdom, have seen fit to take over the coal mines, the railroads, housing in a great way and also the steel plants, if they are actually as anxious to do business with us in Canada as they say they are, and if they have no dollars, I would think they would be glad to offer their shares which they now own in their treasury and which I think would be quite acceptable to us.

Mr. Sinclair: No profits, though.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): There might not be any profits. But I would be hopeful that we would be careful not to get mixed up in any boot factories.

Mr. Sinclair: Or tanneries.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Or tanneries or woollen mills and that sort of thing.

Mr. Thatcher: Let us stick to sawdust.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): I think probably we could be careful about what shares we took. I think that Britain would be glad to take lumber, wheat, canned salmon and some of our minerals.

Mr. Sinclair: And canned horse.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): That is an extra delicacy for them. There is another thing that I should like to mention that we might accept from the British people, namely modern, fast, cargo vessels. I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), as head of the Canadian maritime commission, would be the first to say that Canada has a great need of this type of equipment. In passing I must say that I should like to congratulate the Minister of Transport—not particularly on what the maritime commission has done, because I am not sure that they have done anything at all; but they have certainly been successful in resisting the blandishments of quite a number of pressure groups.

Mr. Thatcher: Senator Farris.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): And they do not all come from the vested interests, as probably my friend would expect.

Mr. Young: The unemployed merchant marine.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): During my career I have had about thirty jobs and I hope that I have reached the point where, if I happen to be a merchant sailor, I do not feel that I just must be a merchant sailor all the rest of my life. Like my hon. friend, I might get to be a member of parliament or something.

Mr. Young: Unfortunately, yes.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): I agree with my hon. friend most heartily.

Mr. Archibald: They are not all side-hill gougers.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): We got off the side hill.

Mr. Wylie: They are not all gougers on the side hill either.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): The shipbuilding interests in Canada would probably be greatly concerned if our government instituted such a policy. But it would seem to me that there are many skills around shipyards—such as electricians, carpenters, plumbers and all the various trades that are incorporated in a shipyard crew—that could be used. I am quite sure that our new minister of reconstruction (Mr. Winters) could divert these skills to his own particular problem now, the construction of housing.

As to this big peanut farm that the British government is developing in South Africa, I think probably we ought to look into that proposal. Canada is a great importer of vegetable oils, and if this particular scheme is a good one—and since it is sponsored by the socialist government, I am sure it must be on extremely sound lines—I think it should be looked into. I do not like to suggest it, but probably the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and myself might go down and look this over.

Mr. Thatcher: The hon. member has no socialist with him.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): I should be glad to have the company of the hon. member for Moose Jaw. While his knowledge might not be of any value, certainly his charming presence would be.

Mr. Low: That was nicely put.

Mr. Wylie: Peanuts for sale.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Actually I do not think there is any reason why we should confine our investments to Great Britain, necessarily. Great Britain has a large empire which certainly is capable of further development. Since Britain says she has no money to do this, I feel that Canada should step in and give them assistance in this regard. I quite realize that we cannot invest Canadian money in stocks and bonds and still use the same money with which to purchase from the United States all the luxuries that we may think we need. But at the same time I feel that we could probably float here a domestic prosperity loan which would make up the difference between the present net surplus we have on our international trade and the amount of money which we would wish to invest in these industries abroad. I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that as far as Canada is concerned, if our basic industries are prosperous and if the British government is actually seriously desirous of maintaining the present trade we have with them, I am sure that some means can be found or can be worked out which will make such a thing possible.

Mr. Thatcher: It can, if the government will do something.

Mr. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): If this is done, our people can maintain a reasonable standard of living, something which is not possible if we ever again are forced to depend upon unemployment insurance or direct relief.

Mr. G. H. Stokes (Hastings South): I enter this debate, Mr. Speaker, for one purpose only, and I do not propose to occupy the time of the house for more than five minutes. One particular phase of administration to which I should like to refer for a moment is the administration of the health and hospital assistance program by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

When the estimates providing for this program were before this house on June 30 last year, the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated, as recorded on page 6175 of Hansard:

> Let no one minimize the importance of this program; for whatever one may say, it is a program of the greatest significance. My remarks now are made in the knowledge that hon. members are prepared to deal with the steps to be taken by parliament to ease the burden of human suffering caused by disease, and all in this house act in this matter of national health in a spirit of nonpolitical interest. Of that I have no doubt.

This statement from the minister of the department, that the approach to this problem was nonpolitical, was most gratifying, I am sure, to all members of this house and as well to the people of this country, who after all are paying the costs of the program and rightfully expect it to be administered independently of politics.

The minister, during his speech at that time, made clear the basis upon which the health assistance program was to be administered, when he stated, as recorded at page 6177 of Hansard:

> The program we are launching today is one of great importance to the people of Canada. We are approaching our role in a spirit of collaboration with those jurisdictions in our country that have direct legal responsibility in the field of health.

Later on in the same debate the minister was asked the following question, as reported at page 6179 of Hansard:

> Mr. Green: May I ask a question? Who is to make the decision about where the help is to be given? Is the dominion taking that responsibility?
>
> Mr. Martin: Oh, no.
> Mr. Stephenson: As I understand it, the grants will be made by the dominion to the provinces as a lump sum. A municipality desiring assistance will have to make application to the provincial government. The federal government does not intend to allocate any moneys to any particular hospitals.

That will be decided by the province. Is that right? In other words, where a particular municipality is asking for some assistance for a particular hospital—

Mr. Martin: They should write to the provincial government.

Mr. Stephenson: —the minister's position is that they should write to the provincial government?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

A review of the discussion clearly indicated that it was never the intention of this parliament, and I am sure was never the wish of the people of this country, that funds voted by this parliament to ease the burden of human suffering should be administered with an eye to the political future.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that has not been the case. I was amazed the other day to read this news report in the Trenton Daily Press under date of February 19 last:

The dominion government has granted the sum of $58,000 to the unfinished Trenton memorial hospital.

This was announced to the mayor and revealed to the public by Mr. William A. Fraser (a former Liberal M.P.) at the meeting of the Trenton Liberal association in the Orange hall last night.

The grant comes under the dominion hospitalization scheme recently inaugurated. Intelligence of the grant was conveyed to Mr. Fraser by telephone from Ottawa prior to the Liberal meeting.

The Hon. Paul Martin, Minister of National Health and Welfare, telephoned Mr. Fraser to inform him that the grant had been passed by the government.

Mayor Couch of Trenton was also in attendance at the Liberal association meeting, and addressing the gathering he stated, as reported in the press of the same date:

In all my many years in Trenton there has been no party that has contributed as much to the welfare of this community as the Liberal party.

"When the time comes," he said, referring to the coming federal election, "we will show our tangible appreciation."

Now I bring this matter to the attention of this house, Mr. Speaker, because I honestly believe that the majority of hon. members disapprove of such tactics as have been resorted to in this particular instance. The minister himself assured this house that the whole approach to this serious problem was on a nonpolitical basis, and that the dominion government, of which he is a responsible minister, would not make decisions as to where help would be given but that this matter would be administered by the respective provinces concerned.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, here is a case where the minister himself telephones a man, not on the hospital board, not a member of the municipal council, but a member of a Liberal party association and Liberal organizer for eastern central Ontario, holding a meeting that night in Trenton, and advises him a grant of $58,000 is to be made to the local hospital.

No one, I am sure, has any objections to this grant to the Trenton memorial hospital to assist in providing much needed hospital accommodation in that area. But I do protest about the injection of politics into the administration of this act, as has been the case in this instance.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that Liberalism in this country is marching towards its long appointed destination of oblivion, when a responsible minister of the crown, in this matter of national health, acts in a spirit of the rankest politics and uses his responsibility of office for political purposes?

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister, as the first citizen of this country, and as leader of this government, will at the earliest opportunity assure this house and the Canadian people that these tactics to which I have referred will be discontinued and discontinued at once.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): First of all, I want to say a word about the subamendment which has just been moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). In the course of his speech the hon. member made many statements with which I think we in this group agree. The criticism he made of the financial system is in many respects the criticism which we ourselves have made for a number of years, but the remedy he suggests is one which we cannot accept.

I might say to him that the theory of social credit is not a theory with which I am unfamiliar. As a matter of fact I began to read the proposals of Major Douglas as soon as they were first issued in 1919 in a little periodical called "The New Age," which friends of mine used to send me from England. I think that for a number of years I read everything that was written by Major Douglas, such as his plan for the coal industry, his plan for Scotland, and his various other writings. The more I read the more I came to the conclusion that while financial reform was necessary, he was going about it at the wrong end; that it is not money that counts, but physical assets and goods. The physical assets and goods must precede the distribution of money; otherwise you have merely an inflationary process.

Mr. Low: We believe that.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say to them also that I have never been able to understand this: If they wish to end the control of the "big shots", as they call them, about which the hon. gentleman spoke this afternoon; if they wish to relieve this country of the tremendous burden of indebtedness—and we must be relieved of it—to the great banking and financial institutions, then the only way to do that is to own those financial institutions. Any issue of loans we then make through those publicly-owned institutions will be issues that we make to ourselves for ourselves, and for which eventually we pay ourselves. Hence we then benefit fully from all that we have.

It is not my intention to deal with the social credit amendment, more than to say a brief word about it. May I add that in getting these various theories before the house a useful purpose is served; from time to time we should engage in discussions of these matters, whether we agree or disagree with the theories propounded. We always try to get our own views before the house in order that they may be discussed and our proposals understood.

I did not rise this afternoon to discuss social credit, or even the proposals of my own party in regard to the economic situation. I have always hesitated to inject into the discussions in the house anything which might be of a personal nature. I do, however, wish to deal with a matter which affects me, and, through me, the party I happen to lead in the house.

On February 22 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) referred to some remarks which I had made in my speech on the address in reply—and which, incidentally, had no reference to the minister himself, but were a criticism of what I considered to be a change of attitude on the part of some of our Progressive Conservative friends. The minister said, as reported at page 785 of Hansard:

> I think I know as well as anyone in the country who put the Anderson government in power. When the election was all over we had twenty-eight members; the Conservative party had twenty-four members; the Progressives had six members, and the independents had five members. At that time there was not any C.C.F. party.
> There was a Progressive party, in which the present leader of the C.C.F. party took a very prominent part. He was the leader of the labour group in that party, and there was a farm leader as well. It is true that he did not contest the constituency in that election, but I know better than anyone else that the morning after the election was over the leaders of the Progressive party came to my office and asked me if I would accept their support in order to keep us in office, and we only needed their support. I said to them on that occasion: "We have been in power for twenty-four years. It might do us good to be out a little while. I have got tired of traveling up and down the province telling people who never have had any other kind of government"—because we have always been in power in Saskatchewan—"how good we are without anybody to compare us with." They said: "We think it would be a good thing for Saskatchewan anyway to keep the Liberal government in power rather than have a Conservative government. Have you any objection to our talking to the present leader of the C.C.F. party"? He was then the leader of the other group. I said: "No, not as far as I am concerned, but do not speak on my behalf; speak on your own." They came back inside of half an hour and they said: "There is no use talking to him because he is supporting Anderson."

Then the minister went on to say:

> I do not think a gentleman who has gone through that experience should get up in this house and point to the Conservatives and say that they put in the party which conducted the Ku Klux Klan campaign. I am not so sure he did not put them in, but in any case I know who went out as the result of the understanding.

The same evening my attention was called to these remarks. I rose on a question of privilege and quoted from a letter I had received recently from Dr. Hugh MacLean, formerly of Regina. I should like to put on record what I said in part that night. I quote from Hansard of February 22:

> A statement admitting the facts was given to the press by the minister in the form of a letter. Somewhere I have an original of that letter. The minister's statement this afternoon is absolutely incorrect for I was bitterly opposed to the Ku Klux Klan and its activities, as were many of my friends. As a matter of fact and record, my advice to the Progressive members was to remain independent and support all good legislation. They did not heed my advice.

Two days later the Minister of Agriculture rose on a question of privilege and requested an alteration in Hansard of his speech of February 22. At that time he said:

> At page 785, line 18 of Hansard, second column, the words "the leaders" should read "one of the leaders," and in line 38 the word "they" should read "he."

When I saw this I realized that the minister was trying to reconcile his statement on Hansard with what I had read into the record from the letter of Dr. MacLean.

It so happens that Dr. MacLean receives Hansard, and five days later I received a letter from him in which he expressed amazement at the minister's statement. He goes on in his letter to outline what actually happened.

An hon. Member: Who is Dr. MacLean?

Mr. Coldwell: He was a Regina physician, highly respected in the province. He was a Progressive candidate in that city in 1921. At the time of which I speak he was not a member of the Progressive executive but he was a well-known supporter of the Progressive party.

After this exchange in the house, one of the Liberal newspapers of western Canada, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix accused me of raising this issue, and the minister for taking part in the discussion, and expressed the hope that this would not be a matter for discussion in the next election. I too hope it will not. The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix says this:

> But if Mr. Coldwell was unwise in calling up this reeking ghost, Mr. Gardiner, a minister of the crown, was equally ill-advised when he attempted to breathe life into it, for the Liberal administration of those days was a rather tarnished jewel in the party crown.

It certainly was. That is the opinion of a good Liberal paper in Saskatchewan.

What actually happened? While I am not going to read all of this letter, if either the minister or the house would like me to table it I shall be only too glad to do so. Dr. MacLean's letter states in part:

The day following the election, about two o'clock in the afternoon, I received a telephone call from Mr. Gardiner in which he asked if I could call on him at his office in the legislative building, as he had something of importance to talk over with me. I consented to go to see him.

Then he proceeds to outline what occurred. My name was mentioned as one who might be persuaded to persuade the Progressive and independent group in the house to support the present Minister of Agriculture and might possibly arrange that I join in a union government.

Mr. Gardiner: Does it say who raised the question?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes—the minister.

Mr. Gardiner: Then he is wrong, as I shall demonstrate when you get through.

Mr. Coldwell: That you called Dr. MacLean—that is raising the question.

Mr. Gardiner: No; who raised it?

Mr. Coldwell: I am going to read—

Mr. Gardiner: Who raised the question as to your being seen?

Mr. Coldwell: I will read from the letter that you wrote to the press.

Mr. Gardiner: I have it here in front of me.

Mr. Coldwell: I am glad, because I shall put it on the record. This is what he says:

I went immediately to Mr. Coldwell—

Mr. Gardiner: There is another letter which did not go into the press.

Mr. Coldwell:

—arriving at the school at recess time, and told him of the foregoing conversation with Premier Gardiner. Mr. Coldwell replied: "During the campaign I disagreed entirely with the Conservative leadership aligning itself with the Ku Klux Klan and all its activities, and so now I definitely feel that the elected Progressives should stand alone to support any and all good legislation brought forth before the house no matter under whose leadership the government should be. As for myself I wish to be entirely eliminated, whatever happens, from accepting any cabinet position from either Mr. Gardiner or Mr. Anderson, leader of the Conservative party.

May I just add I happen to know that Dr. MacLean kept a complete diary, and I have no doubt he wrote down his recollection of what happened. I am not going to read the rest of the letter, but it goes on to outline what subsequently occurred. For some time questions were asked at a number of meetings, some at this particular time, both of myself and of the minister, and the minister continually denied that I had been approached with regard to this matter. On February 22, 1933, after four of us had met, the minister, Dr. MacLean, and the gentleman who is now Senator Wood and myself—

Mr. Gardiner: Dr. MacLean was not at that meeting.

Mr. Coldwell: That is my recollection of it.

Mr. Gardiner: He was not at the meeting. I can give my hon. friend the record.

Mr. Coldwell: In any event that is my recollection. I should like to read this letter dated Regina, February 22, 1933, addressed to the editor of the Regina Leader-Post.

Mr. MacNicol: Written by whom?

Mr. Coldwell: Written by the Minister of Agriculture. It reads:

To the Editor,

Dear Sir:

The impression has gone abroad, through statements appearing in the press, and is being emphasized through questions asked and answers given in public meetings, that there is some misunderstanding regarding certain negotiations between Mr. Coldwell and myself in 1929 and again in 1932.

Mr. Coldwell and I met in Regina, Thursday, January 19, in company with two mutual friends. We agreed that we at no time discussed with one another—

Perfectly true.

—the possibility of his entering a Liberal government, but that the possibility of his being the representative of the Progressive groups in a government had been referred to on two occasions, once by me and once by a third party with my knowledge, although it would appear that this invitation when conveyed by the third party may have been ambiguous regarding the name and composition of the proposed government. We agreed that the facts regarding these two incidents should be given the public.

It was stated by Mr. Coldwell in an address in Regina that a certain professional gentleman had come to him direct from my office following the election of 1929 and made certain proposals. He named the gentleman to me, and I stated to Mr. Coldwell that I could not recall this gentleman being authorized by me to see him upon this particular mission, but if the gentleman stated it to be so, there could be no doubt about it. I saw the gentleman in question and after talking to him could remember the incident and shall now set down the particulars.

When the results of the election of 1929 were made known, it was evident that no party in the house had a majority, although the Liberals had the largest group. I therefore called in a number of men of Liberal and independent views to consult as to what should be done. Among them was the gentleman in question. After some discussion he was of the opinion that we should meet the legislature and let them decide how the government was to be formed.

When this conclusion was reached, we thought that some one who would have influence with the men in the house as well as outside who held Progressive or independent views should be seen and acquainted with our intentions. The gentleman in question suggested Mr. Coldwell, a member of the Progressive executive. I agreed, and he undertook to see him on the way down town.

This gentleman saw Mr. Coldwell for a few moments. He told Mr. Coldwell that he had met Mr. Gardiner that afternoon. They discussed the possibility of the Liberals and Progressives coming together to form a government before the house met in special session.

The gentleman in question is clear on two things, namely: First, the government if formed would have been a coalition and not a Liberal government, although he referred to such a coalition when speaking to Mr. Coldwell as a "re-organized government with Mr. Gardiner as leader"; second, the negotiations between Mr. Coldwell and myself, suggested by him were to have been between me, as leader of the Liberal party and Mr. Coldwell as an outstanding and representative Progressive.

The second incident when a similar thing was discussed was on or about February 18, 1932. A mutual friend had been discussing with both of us what would happen in case the present government were defeated on the floor of the house on a want of confidence motion. He was anxious that I should see Mr. Coldwell and state to him my point of view. Mr. Coldwell was confined to his home and I called upon him there by appointment.

I pointed out that if there were a sufficient number of government supporters who voted want of confidence to warrant the governor in concluding that a new government could carry on, an election would not be a necessity. Mr. Coldwell raised the question as to how such a government could be formed. I stated, that would depend upon who voted want of confidence. I suggested to Mr. Coldwell that if those outside the Liberal party desired representation of some one not in the house, it would be necessary for them to arrange for it. In the event of such a government being formed, I would have raised no objection to Mr. Coldwell being the representative of such group in the coalition government, although Mr. Coldwell does not think I said so at the time. In any event no understanding of this nature was arrived at between us, nor did Mr. Coldwell indicate his willingness to accept any proposals made.

It would be very easy for me to continue to state and prove that I at no time invited Mr. Coldwell into a Liberal government either directly or indirectly, and for Mr. Coldwell to continue to state that very definite representations had been made to him by leading Liberals. Both statements might be perfectly true, but their repetition gives them an importance which is altogether out of proportion with the issues for which we each stand, and inject feelings which we both desire to leave outside our discussions in the future. I trust that our supporters will accept this as the final word upon the matter.

Yours truly,

James G. Gardiner.

That letter was accompanied by a short note from myself reading:

I have read the above statement of Mr. Gardiner and agree that it is a fair and correct recital of what took place. I join with him in suggesting that the matter be dropped from future discussions.

May I say that I did not raise this the other evening. But what happened after that? I have the complete record of what happened after that. Failing to get any assurance from me, the minister approached the secretary of the Progressive association, Mr. George Thorn. I have a very complete story of what happened on that occasion. The minister went to 202 Darke block, to Mr. Thorn's office, and asked for co-operation, which Mr. Thorn said he could not give. I am not going to give a recital of all that occurred, although I have it here. I just want to mention the fact that before the coalition government was formed I, together with the president of the Progressive association—

Mr. Gardiner: That was formed by Mr. Anderson.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes. At that time the president of the Progressive association was Mr. Charles Little. Mr. Thorn and I met the newly-elected Progressive and independent members to try to persuade them to retain their independence in the house. The only part of Mr. Thorn's letter that I shall read is that which affects me and which reads:

We proceeded to congratulate them, and when we had completed doing that, Carl Stewart—

He was subsequently minister of highways and I think he was wholly responsible for the wreck, if I may put it that way, of the Conservative party in that province. In the last election in 1945 he was the Liberal candidate in the Yorkton constituency.

Mr. Gardiner: Independent Liberal.

Mr. Coldwell: I shall not read the description of Mr. Stewart which follows. Mr. Thorn's letter continues:

Mr. Stewart said, "now boys that you have congratulated us, we would appreciate you leaving, as when all is said and done, we are elected members and we wish to discuss our plans, and while we appreciate your assistance during the election, that is all behind now, and we don't need your assistance here."

The three of us immediately began to splutter, and the other members present at once began to assure us that they didn't want us to leave, the two exceptions being Taylor and Stewart.

By this time you had become quite annoyed, and you proceeded to give Carl Stewart one of the best dressings-down he ever had, and Carl sat and took it. He never said one word back and he never got any encouragement from any of the members to say one word.

I put that on the record together with one more quotation which deals again with the inference the minister gave that I had some association with the Ku Klux Klan. I quote from this letter as follows:

Mr. MacNicol: Who is that from?

Mr. Coldwell: From Mr. Thorn, former secretary of the Progressive association. The letter reads:

There was one thing I missed telling you when I wrote you the other day. In Gardiner's attack upon you, he claimed that you and the rest of the Progressives and independents supported the K.K.K.'s and the attack upon the Roman Catholic church.

This I can vouch for is absolutely untrue.

As a matter of fact, that was one of the matters that Gardiner brought up in his discussions with Little and myself.

That was a discussion at which I was not present.

He paid tribute to the straightforward and clean-cut campaigns of the Progressives and Independents. He assured me that he quite realized that we did not get behind the Conservatives in their campaign to vilify the Roman Catholics and to pep up the K.K.K. organization.

Mr. Gardiner: The leader of the C.C.F. party is not suggesting that in my speech the other day I said that he supported the Ku Klux Klan?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: What I said was that they had assisted most successfully to put in a government that was supported by the Ku Klux Klan, and that I had my own idea of who put the government in.

Mr. Coldwell: The clear inference was that I was somewhat responsible.

Mr. Gardiner: I did not say that.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say to the minister that I like to be generous, shall I say, with those whom I oppose. Speaking in this house two years ago, when something of this nature came up, I went out of my way to say that I appreciated what the minister's stand was at that time. He probably remembers my saying it.

Mr. Gardiner: After I asked you to.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not remember your having asked me.

Mr. Gardiner: Then we had better look up Hansard.

Mr. Coldwell: In any event, if you did ask me the question, I need not have replied in the manner in which I did reply. The inference in your remarks the other evening was that I was responsible. The letter continues:

He assured me that he quite realized that we did not get behind the Conservatives in their campaign to vilify the Roman Catholics and to pep up the K.K.K. organization. He said, "if you will follow my personal campaign through this last election, you will find that nowhere have I ever condemned a single plank in your platform, and nowhere have I ever attacked the Progressive movement as an organization, or its leaders." Later I checked on that and as nearly as I could ascertain it was the truth. His attitude at that time is,—

It should be "was".

—of course, completely the reverse of his attitude now.

I have gone to some trouble to put the record right because, now or in the future, I do not want to have the minister's remarks interpreted as they can be interpreted, and I do not want my activities in regard to some of these things placed in a light that is altogether wrong. As I say, I owe it not only to myself but to the people with whom I am associated. I have never sought public preferment by devious means. I have never tried to advance myself in that way.

I had forgotten one thing which came back to me when I was looking through the press and getting information on these matters. We were approached in 1929. I was approached in 1932, and I ran across this article in the Regina Leader-Post of January 6, 1933. I will read the record as it appears in the newspaper:

J. G. Gardiner, leader of the Liberal party, advised the Leader-Post Thursday morning that he was awaiting a letter from Premier Anderson setting forth the position of the government in respect to the coalition proposals as decided at the recent government caucus. Following press dispatches concerning Premier Anderson's statements on the coalition question the premier wrote a letter to Mr. Gardiner advising him that the government's position would be decided at the caucus. To this letter Mr. Gardiner replied asking that if the government had any definite coalition offer to make, he would be pleased to receive it before January 12, the date for which the Liberal caucus was originally called.

My interpretation of that is, if I may use a phrase from Dickens, "Barkis is willing." There is the story. It may be threshing old straw, but when someone in the house endeavours to put on something that occurred in the past an interpretation which reflects some discredit, or makes a considerable difference in one's record in public life, I think it has to be cleared up. That was my purpose this afternoon. I regret having had to do it but I felt, no matter what the minister may say, that the plain inference from his words was an inference that no one could mistake. Then the change in Hansard the next day on a point of privilege, to make the statement that he had made previously conform to the paragraph from the letter that I read, indicated that he was probably going to have his speech printed and distributed. I was not going to allow him to place me under the kind of cloud that I think people reading only the speech of the minister would have considered I was under, without my bringing some of these matters to the attention of the public through the official record of the house.

I have one last word. I hope that the minister and I, who no doubt will be engaged on opposite sides in the forthcoming federal campaign, will endeavour to stick to facts in regard to such things as we have been discussing this afternoon, and that we can meet the public of our province on a high level instead of descending to the kind of inference that was made the other evening. That, Mr. Speaker, was my purpose in rising this afternoon.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the leader of the C.C.F. group has just suggested, this is threshing old straw. I do not know that I would have been in a position to get up and say what I am going to say had it not been for the fact that someone behind me—I do not know who it was, because I did not notice at the time—whispered that this statement was going to be made this afternoon by the leader of the C.C.F. As a matter of fact, I was asked whether the member had made his speech, and I said that the leader of the C.C.F. had not spoken. Therefore I sent out and got the record as to this matter, and I have it on my desk.

The record is an old one which dates back, as the hon. member has suggested, to 1932, when he and I were leading opposing parties in the province of Saskatchewan, he leading the new C.C.F. party and I leading the Liberal party.

Mr. Coldwell: A little ahead of that.

Mr. Gardiner: That is where I am starting the record, and my friend will understand in a moment why I am starting it there. I may say before proceeding to do that, however, that those who edit some of the papers in western Canada, and who have a reputation of being Liberal do not always see fit to support either the Liberal party or some of those who are in the Liberal party, for reasons which are best known to themselves. I am not going to discuss that this afternoon. The question whether the Liberal party of Saskatchewan of that day was a bright star in the jewels of the crown, or whether it was otherwise, was pretty well settled in 1934. The Liberal party, which was attacked at the time of this record, was satisfied to remain in opposition for five years. When the five years were up there was not a single supporter of the government elected, not only not a member of the government but not even a single supporter of it. They were all defeated. Every one who supported them in the province was defeated in addition to those who had been in the house. None of them were elected.

Mr. Coldwell: That does not deal with this issue.

Mr. Gardiner: That was the answer which was given by the people of Saskatchewan to the kind of attack that was made in 1929.

Mr. Coldwell: In which I did not join.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Gardiner: We will come to that. That was not the question under discussion at all in 1932. The question under discussion in 1932 is pretty well stated in the first two paragraphs of a statement that was put out by the president of the Conservative party in the province of Saskatchewan on November 8, 1932. It is headed:

> Challenge to Coldwell made.
>
> Asked to name any Conservative trying to buy him; reply issued.
>
> A challenge to Alderman M. J. Coldwell, leader of the Farmer-Labour party, "To name any official of the Conservative party", who has at any time attempted to "buy" his support, was issued Monday by Dr. D. S. Johnstone, former provincial president of the Liberal-Conservative party.
> This challenge came as a result of the report of a public meeting addressed by Mr. Coldwell, in which he is reported to have said that he could have sold himself to a political career with either Liberals or Conservatives.

If anyone is interested in reading the remainder of this interesting document, it is here. I have read it for the purpose of bringing out what caused all this controversy to which my friend has referred. The extract from which I have read is dated November 8, and on December 31, 1932, I was reported as follows:

> J. G. Gardiner, leader of the Liberal opposition in the Saskatchewan legislature, in addressing a large audience at Soudum school, south of Wilcox, Thursday night, said that at no time either as leader of the government or leader of the party in opposition, had he invited Mr. Coldwell to take a cabinet position in a government. He stated that such a suggestion might have been made to Mr. Coldwell by some Liberal on the street or about the dinner table, but that Mr. Coldwell was flattering himself when he took such suggestions seriously.

Mr. Coldwell: Your letter indicates that the suggestion was made.

Mr. Gardiner: That is what we were talking about at the time. Mr. Coldwell repeated the statement that he had been invited into the government by myself. I challenged him to meet me and discuss the matter with me. When he came to meet me he had with him, not Dr. MacLean but Mr. Menzies. Now that is correct. He had Mr. Menzies with him and I was in my own office—

Mr. Coldwell: When this letter was written to the press it was shown to Dr. MacLean; that is the point.

Mr. Gardiner: We will come to that. When they came to meet me in my office in the Northern Crown bank building, Mr. Wood who is now, as has been suggested, a senator, was with me. It was not by appointment. He just happened to be there when they came. In view of the fact Mr. Coldwell had a witness, I suggested that Mr. Wood remain. The four of us went into the inner office. The first thing I said to Mr. Coldwell when we got into the office—I am calling him Mr.

Coldwell because I am speaking of 1932 rather than of the moment—the first thing I said to him was, "I do not remember ever having discussed with you the question of your coming into a government." My memory of the statement made by Mr. Coldwell was to the effect that he did not think he ever had discussed the question, that it was done through a third party. The statement made on the platform was that it had been discussed with me.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not think so.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, yes. I can read that from the record, but I am not going through it now. The statement was made that the discussion was with me, and then the second night that was corrected and it was said that it was through a third party coming from me. I said I did not remember ever having discussed the question with him, and Mr. Coldwell agreed that we did not. I said, "Why did you say so the other night?" He said, "Well, I was mistaken; it was a third party who came and discussed it".

Mr. Coldwell: I wonder if I said that?

Mr. Gardiner: I asked who the third party was, and the present leader of the C.C.F. group said it was Dr. MacLean. I said I would sign anything that Dr. MacLean would put in writing and we would publish it in the press if he would sign it. Mr. Coldwell looked at Mr. Menzies and then said, "I think that is fair enough." I said, "All right, who will go and get the statement?" Mr. Coldwell said, "I think you had better go and get it." I said, "All right". I put on my hat and coat, walked out of the office and went right over to Dr. MacLean's office, which was about two blocks away. I told him what had happened and he said, "Well, that is not correct; I did not go from you to Mr. Coldwell to ask him to come into a government."

Mr. MacNicol: That he did not what?

Mr. Gardiner: "I did not go from you to Mr. Coldwell to ask him to come into a government; what I went for was to discuss with him the possibility of the Progressive party keeping the present Liberal government in power."

Mr. Coldwell: You have read what Dr. MacLean writes now?

Mr. Gardiner: I will tell you what Dr. MacLean did write, too. I said to Dr. MacLean, "Do you mind sitting down at your desk and writing out just what did happen?" He sat down and wrote it out. He signed it and I signed it. I took it back to the office where the other three gentlemen were still waiting. I handed it to Mr. Coldwell and I said, "There it is, you sign it and we will put it in the paper tomorrow morning." Mr. Coldwell read it. In that letter there was the suggestion which I made the other day. After reading it, he said he wanted to think about it. I said, "All right, I am going out to my farm and I will be out there for some time. I will leave the letter here and any time you are prepared to sign it, you can sign it."

The fact is that that letter never was signed. In order to settle the whole controversy and stop further discussion of it, I was asked to put in writing what was read to the house. It had very little to do with most of the things about which we were talking at the start, but it did settle the matter in the minds of a few people, more particularly Mr. Coldwell himself, and the matter was left there.

I have never brought the matter up since, except on occasions when my hon. friend has said he has again been invited into a political party as one of its leaders. On two or three occasions recently it has been stated that the leader of the C.C.F. party has been invited by prominent Liberals to come into the Liberal party.

Mr. Coldwell: You would not know.

Mr. Gardiner: In reply to that I have said that both the president of the Conservative party and the leader of the Liberal party in the province knew that there had never been any discussion with him—

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, no.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh, yes. There is nothing in the letter which indicates that. The letter was written for the purpose of indicating there had never been any discussion about my hon. friend going into a Liberal government; the letter says something about a coalition government.

Mr. Coldwell: Which Mr. Gardiner would lead.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, but I am quite prepared to leave with the people of Saskatchewan, or any other group, the question whether or not Mr. Gardiner would ever have gone into a coalition government anyone formed. That question has been very thoroughly threshed out in Saskatchewan. There were two or three long letters in between the letters to which reference has been made, and those were published. Those were letters written by Dr. Anderson to me and my replies to him. The outcome of the writing of those letters was that under no circumstances would we, the Liberals, enter into a coalition arrangement with the Anderson government in order to prevent the election of the C.C.F. party. In those letters I stated to Dr. Anderson, as I stated to the present leader of the C.C.F. party and to everyone else, that the Liberal party would not only defeat the Anderson government but would defeat the C.C.F. at the same time. We not only wiped out every supporter of the Anderson government but we saw to it that not more than five members of the C.C.F. party were elected. That was our reason for not supporting a coalition. That was the nature of the discussions. Everybody in Saskatchewan knows all about that. I am not at all concerned about anything that the leader of the C.C.F. party may put onto the record in order to try to prove to anybody that at any time I was ever in favour of a coalition government.

The story, as it has been told, is one which will bear repeating. The two men who were present on the occasion when we had the discussion and who saw the letter, which never was published, are both still alive and in prominent positions. Knowing them as I do, I am quite satisfied that they will agree with the story that I have told as to what did happen and I am sure that now even my friend agrees that Dr. MacLean was not present at that meeting.

Mr. Coldwell: He was present when the letter was finally drafted.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not know whether he was present then.

Mr. Coldwell: I have a fairly good memory, and I do not recollect the minister walking out and bringing back a letter.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member will have it put in his memory again by seeing both Dr. MacLean and Mr. Menzies, because I met Dr. MacLean in his office all alone—

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, but the point is—

Mr. Gardiner: —and it will be put in his mind by Senator Wood in a few minutes, if he wishes me to get in touch with him.

Mr. Coldwell: But the letter the minister signed was agreed to be an accurate account of what happened. I will let that stand.

Mr. Gardiner: An accurate account of some other things apart from what was in the first letter, I still repeat; and since my hon. friend wants the whole record, I might add that he was one of the first men given an important appointment by that government.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say that I was the chairman of the royal commission which inquired into the civil service of Saskatchewan. I was nominated by the independents and the man who approached me was Jacob Benson who remained independent. I was acceptable both to the ministerial representative and to the civil service. I acted as neutral chairman. If a chairman of a royal commission is a partisan appointment, then I can understand some of the reports that royal commissions sometimes make.

Mr. Gardiner: But the matter is not as simple as that.

Mr. Fleming: A plague on both your houses.

Mr. Gardiner: As I said, my hon. friend was given one of the first important appointments, if not the first, that was made by the government formed by Dr. Anderson.

Mr. Coldwell: Chairman of a royal commission.

Mr. Gardiner: Chairman of a royal commission to investigate the civil service and make a report as to what kind of civil service act we might have. He made that report. As a result of that report having been made, and the legislation which was drafted, a long list of government employees were removed from their employment before the act came into force; and many of those employees were within a few months of receiving their superannuation.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes. But I stopped it before the report was presented.

Mr. Gardiner: I am giving the whole story, and my hon. friend will agree with it when I have finished.

Mr. Coldwell: I stopped that.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend was chairman of the commission that brought in the report.

Mr. Coldwell: Afterwards I had no responsibility.

Mr. Gardiner: On the floor of the house I moved that the legislation based on the report be brought into effect that day, and I was voted down in the house.

An hon. Member: It must have been a good report.

Mr. Gardiner: And the bringing down of it was delayed for some weeks.

Mr. Coldwell: That was not my fault.

Mr. Gardiner: I am not saying that it was the hon. member's fault.

An hon. Member: Why put it on the record?

Mr. Gardiner: In order to indicate the whole story.

Mr. Knowles: The minister is trying to get away from the subject.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend was chairman of the commission that brought down the report?

Mr. Coldwell: That is right.

Mr. Gardiner: When I moved the motion to which I have just referred, and did not receive the support of the co-operative government side, my hon. friend announced—if not publicly, then to some people privately—that he was not in agreement with what the government were doing.

Mr. Coldwell: As to firing civil servants, I was not.

Mr. Gardiner: Not about firing. They set the date at which the act was to come into effect far enough ahead so that the civil servants could be moved out in the meantime, and then the act could come into effect.

Mr. Coldwell: I agree with the minister.

Mr. Gardiner: That was the point at which my hon. friend decided against the Anderson government.

Mr. Coldwell: No.

Mr. Gardiner: And it was after that that he and I had our discussions on other matters.

Mr. Coldwell: Just once.

Mr. Gardiner: Just once?

Mr. Coldwell: At the minister's request.

Mr. Gardiner: We met seven times.

Mr. Coldwell: No.

Mr. Gardiner: Once in my house and once in your house.

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, yes.

Mr. Gardiner: My memory is still fairly good.

Mr. Coldwell: That was the time that I called for the little book the hon. member was going to lend me, the Soviet Primer by a man called Ilin.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes. And when my hon. friend came to get that little book he brought along a publication of Norman Thomas, socialist candidate for president of the United States.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Gardiner: And he told me that in that publication I would find the theories which he himself was coming to believe in—state socialism, which he now supports.

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, no.

Mr. Gardiner: If we want to get down to conversations, I can give my hon. friend some more with regard to that. I read all the books as my hon. friend brought them to me, but they did not convince me that state socialism was right.

An hon. Member: Read them again.

Mr. Gardiner: I want to repeat that we had seven meetings; and when we had the seventh one I came to the conclusion that I have held ever since, namely, that my hon. friend had made up his mind that for certain reasons he was going to be a socialist.

Mr. Coldwell: Oh, no, not going to be.

Mr. Gardiner: I also came to the conclusion that as far as I was concerned I was not going to waste any more time trying to convince him to be a Liberal. Since that time I have been expending my energies in trying to convince other people who are more likely to be converted than is my hon. friend. I want to repeat what I said in reply to a question asked me in a meeting during the last provincial campaign. I was asked whether it was not true that two communists supported me in the last election. I replied that I did not know. I said that I have served a great many years trying to convince people that they ought to vote for me as a Liberal but that I had never spent any time trying to convince people that they should not vote for me. I said that, as a matter of fact, I would even accept a vote from the leader of the C.C.F. party or from the premier of Saskatchewan, if they saw fit to vote for me. I said that I would not object to that. But that would not mean that I agreed with either of them in anything that they happened to think. I said that I do not agree with many of the things that the communists think, but that some of them may have voted for me.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister did not say he did not want their support.

Mr. Gardiner: Having said that and having put on the record what I think is a full report of the little incident, I hope that my hon. friend and I can forget the matter and go on about our business.

Mr. Coldwell: All right.

Mr. Patrick H. Ashby (Edmonton East): At this time, Mr. Speaker, I should like to introduce a matter of far greater importance to the people of Canada than party politics. I refer to ham sandwiches. Since my rather rambling speech on Thursday, February 24, I have watched in cafes and restaurants individuals who have purchased ham sandwiches. If hon. members will do as I did, and just watch these individuals, they will notice that they all do the same thing.

Mr. MacInnis: Eat.

Mr. Ashby: The first thing they will do is carefully lift up the bread to see if there is any such thing as ham in it. They lift it up carefully because the morsel of ham substitute is so small that they may drop it and lose it entirely. They open up the ham sandwich because they possess only one sense which can indicate whether there is any such thing as ham in it. Their sense of taste does not register; there is not enough ham in it to enable them to taste it. There is not enough in it to enable them even to smell it. The only way they can determine what they have received is to look at it very carefully.

Hon. members will notice that the next thing they do is to look around for a bottle of ketchup, chile sauce or something of that sort. Then they smear the bread with this concoction, close it up and consume it. When I see people doing that in this country of abundance I say to myself, if we start them young enough we can actually get people to eat dry bread, because there is no butter on the sandwiches today. We can get people even to shout for any substitute we like, as we have witnessed in the case of margarine. When people will shout for an artificial substitute rather than the genuine article it is time that we did something about it.

I might point out that I have been asked by many hon. members, and by many others throughout the city, when I was going to get those hogs of mine butchered and the bristles scraped off. Therefore I shall attend to that urgent matter immediately. It will be recalled that I had reached to within a few moments of my allotted time when the house adjourned; therefore it will be necessary for me briefly to review the circumstances which caused this delay.

I had called at a store in the good city of Edmonton for the purpose of purchasing a hogscraper, which is a small tool the price of which is but a few cents. Hon. members will recall that the proprietor of the store, when he heard me mention the word "hogscraper", nearly had an apoplectic fit, because he made only a few cents profit on a dozen of them, and kept these cheap tools only as a convenience to his customers. He had ordered these early in July in preparation for the fall of the year when the odd customer would drop in for one of these small implements. But he did not get his hogscrapers. Instead he received a form from an official of the department here in Ottawa to fill out.

An hon. Member: Hurry up and get that old sow in the hot water.

Mr. Ashby: You must get the tools ready first. I do not want to get into hot water myself. He received this form, filled it out and mailed it. But he did not get his hogscrapers. Instead he received the letter which I hold in my hand, and from which I was quoting at the time the house adjourned. I shall quote from it again:

> It is noted that the end users are stated to be butchers . . . No letter of essentiality from the end users has been furnished, as required as per instructions on the reverse side of the application under paragraph three.

That letter was from a bureaucrat. They insisted, and continued to insist, that this letter of essentiality from those who scrape the bristles off deceased hogs be sent. You can imagine this storekeeper driving through the country, calling at farmhouses and asking the farmer if he intended to butcher a hog or two in the fall; and if so, would he mind hunting up the equipment to see if all was there, and if perhaps his children, playing with the hogscraper during the past year, had lost it, and if he would require one; and, if he did, to please write out a letter of essentiality stating that it was essential that the bristles of hogs be scraped off their hides before those hogs were fit for human consumption. Yet, that is what they insisted upon. Let me continue with the letter:

> If this equipment is required for sale to your customers over a period of time . . .

That is, if people came to a store to purchase something from time to time. Mind you, this is from a bureaucrat asking the storekeeper a question whether people came to his store to buy something from time to time. That is perfectly true.

> If this equipment is required for sale to your customers over a period of time it would be necessary to establish an allotment. Therefore, we would require further information from you and for this purpose I am enclosing the following.

He lists a whole stack of forms which have to be filled out. I did not bring these forms down with me, Mr. Speaker, because I did not want to have to pay for excess baggage. They are listed as follows:

> 1. Letter of instructions.

As soon as I saw that, the thought came to me, who are these individuals to instruct the people who are the only authority in a democratic country? Yet, this is what the letter says:

> 1. Letter of instructions.
> 2. One set C.G. 111 forms.
> 3. One set C.G. 109 forms.
> When the information that is required is furnished, your application will be dealt with further.

Heil the bureaucrat! Let me read the remarks that the storekeeper entered on this letter. They are as follows:

> Ridiculous! These things sell but for a few cents. Nine sheets of forms to fill out. What an idiotic waste of paper. My time is surely of some value other than writing this damn rot.

However, he filled them out to the best of his ability. He had to study these rules and regulations very carefully. At this point I should give an example of some of these bureaucratic babblings. Tomorrow, after this is printed in Hansard, in order to fully appreciate it, before having any food, that is, on an empty stomach, the reader should take a good drink of vodka and then read it, and he will find himself in a padded cell within a few hours. I quote:

> The maximum price which a manufacturer may charge to any class of purchaser for any packaged cosmetic priced under the general maximum price regulation shall be the maximum price established under the general price regulation for sales of such packaged cosmetics by him to a purchaser of the same class.

If that is not a bureaucratic regulation extraordinary, just read it tomorrow in Hansard and see. I have been giving a sample of these bureaucratic babblings. Let us remember that it was in July that this man tried to accommodate his customers and sent for a few dozen of these hogscrapers.

On September 8, however, he finally wrote them a polite letter in which he said:

> Dear Sirs:
>
> Re hogscrapers
> We have read your letter of August 25, and also forms C-G 109 and 111, but regret we see little to help us.
>
> You ask for a letter of essentiality, when each customer spends only a few cents for a hogscraper. Surely it is an absurdity.
> We can simply assert that we have no hogscrapers on hand, we have them on order for several months, . . and we sell about six dozen per annum. They will come in one delivery, and possibly by express.
> Yours truly,

He sent the letter on, but he did not get his hogscrapers. He waited until September 25, when he again wrote.

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Ashby: That was 1948. He calls attention to the various officials and says:

> On August 17 last we applied for six dozen hogscrapers on the various forms—

Which he mentions. Then he continues:

> But you still insist on letters of essentiality. On September 8 we applied for an allotment on C.G. 111 . . . We sell these at a few cents each . . . prompt action requested, please.

But he did not get his hogscrapers. The last I saw of the poor fellow was when he handed me this blue form I now hold in my hand, and said, "Look at this; this is what they want to know now." I read it to you:

> Could this equipment be imported for temporary use and then returned?

Foiled by officialdom, blocked by bureaucracy, I have not been able to get these hogs slaughtered nor the bristles scraped off their hides—because I did not get my hogscrapers, either. But I can assure the hon. members of this house and the anxiously awaiting public that, when the agricultural estimates are brought down, I will ring the curtain up and bring the hindquarters of these hogs to the forefront as never before in parliamentary history.

I am not attacking the civil service.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Ashby: I am not attacking civil and obedient servants of the people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ashby: Keep quiet, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ashby: I am not attacking any civil and obedient servant. Perhaps I might illustrate what I mean in this way. My ancestors never kept any record of where they came from originally, nor of where they originally landed on the British isles. So far as I can gather it was before Magna Carta. It may have been, however, that my ancestors were from Norway. It is assumed they came from Scandinavian countries. It may be that one of my ancestors was driven from Norway by an irate fisherwoman who probably heaved a garbage can lid at him as a parting gesture; for my family crest appears to bear on it something which resembles the lid of a garbage can, on which is emblazoned the open-mouthed skull of a dead codfish, and crossed ham-bones—which would seem to indicate that the family was very fond of seafood and juicy sugar-cured ham.

There is this fact, however, which I should bring out, one which is of the utmost importance today. Ever since that time the Ashby family has handed down this thought from generation to generation—one which too many of us have forgotten. It is the thought that under no circumstances should we ever destroy an institution established by our forefathers. Remove the abuses—yes; attack all these abuses which will inevitably be introduced by those of evil intent; but never under any circumstances whatever must we allow these institutions to be destroyed.

When I refer to a civil servant I am reminded of our royal family. And when I think of our royal family, the greatest servants any people on this earth ever had, I wonder how many of us could recite the identical words uttered either by His Gracious Majesty the King or by Her Royal Highness Princess Elizabeth. Is there any member in the house who could stand here, or could stand anywhere else, and state definitely the words either of them has uttered? I doubt if any of us could. Yet many of us could recite the words uttered over the radio about soap, or some other product. I remember Her Royal Highness Princess Elizabeth speaking over the radio, saying something like this, "I pledge my life to the service of our people."

We hear people condemning our institutions. We hear people saying, "What is the good of this old Senate? Look at the old crocks who are in there." Yet, the Senate and the House of Lords are institutions established for a purpose. That purpose may have been forgotten by this time. But they were set up for us by our forefathers. We note that they are under attack today; they are being undermined by abuses introduced into these institutions by political parties.

It is the abuse of the civil service I am attacking today.

Mr. Blackmore: The uncivil part.

Mr. Ashby: Those who are civil and obedient servants of the people are the most valuable persons in the country. They are the individuals who have made a special study of methods, and who know how to bring about any result desired by the people, if given a free hand.

I might add that all through history, whenever these institutions established by our forefathers have been undermined and have begun to decay, the countries of which they have formed a part have also decayed. And so would Canada and this great British commonwealth of nations decay.

It is our duty as individuals to attack all the abuses in these institutions we can recognize, no matter where they may be. If we can do that we will save this Christian civilization which we and our ancestors have endeavoured to establish. And so, it is all this abuse, and all this interference with genuine business by incompetent and artificial government employees, and all this abuse of institutions and of power—because these bureaucrats do not know how to use power; they know only how to abuse it—about which I am speaking. All of these abuses as well as this false, this perfidious, this inhuman, this despicable method of obtaining revenue which we call taxation; this unnatural and artificial diet of spam and spork instead of the genuine meats we can produce in great abundance; all this cheap and flashy jewelry you see for sale in stores, made of glittering glass, bright tin and so on; all this shoddy cloth that is sold for clothing—I am told that there is anywhere from ten to ninety per cent of old worn-out underwear shredded and woven into the clothing we buy today—the poorest type of cloth that has ever been turned out in the past hundred years and that is being sold at three or four times its value; all this hypocritical, and I do not think I am wrong in so calling it, lying political oratory; all these beer parlours and government black market liquor stores; all these sensational magazines and movies depicting unnatural family life and living; all these things have been sown by the political parties in power and under the care of the political party cabinet, all these artificial, counterfeit and contemptuous things have grown up, and developed, have branched out, have blossomed forth and gone to seed like sow-thistles and stinkweed in a field of what would otherwise be the finest wheat, crowding out the good, distorting and polluting the natural God-given thoughts of our young people with false ideas and unnatural beliefs, confusing the people generally, and resulting in all the misery we see about us, in the wholesale arguments we hear, in the shoutings of men and screamings of abused women, in raucous laughter, in drunkenness, in divorces, in murder and suicides, in thievings and robbery, in violence and filthy slums, in human garbage and ending up, periodically, in wars and wholesale slaughterings of our finest youths and the destruction of what we call our Christian civilization we and our ancestors have endeavoured to build up in past centuries. All this, I say, is the result of maladministration, of evil administration; and the political party which has held the reins of government each time, until it has brought about a depression, was the Liberal party. What a record of crime that is to be placed upon our Canadian records for ever. I should like to have the job of erecting a statue to commemorate the prime ministers who have held office during the past 25 or 30 years, for that is when most of the damage was done. I would employ the greatest sculptor living in the world today and I would have the image carved in the finest clay. I would place it out here on the lawn in the most prominent place so that the first shower that would come along would make of it the true image it really was. Have hon. members ever seen mud that has been rained upon?

I said that I would give hon. members of this house a few details of the methods by which we can abolish taxation, and I shall do that now if I have the time. The method which I am sure would bring about the desired result and of which perhaps I am more in favour than any other; the method which would revive an old custom of the British people and one which I am sure would be approved of by millions of people throughout the country, particularly in Ontario, which province would benefit most of all from an influx of tourists; the method which would immediately solve our problem of a shortage of United States dollars would be to place the Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet in stocks out here on the lawn between the hours of ten-thirty a.m. and two-thirty p.m. until some method other than taxation was discovered by them or their deputies.

I will guarantee that within thirty days all taxation would be abolished.

Taxation is simply one of many methods of obtaining revenue as there are many methods of transportation. The taxing of money from the people is not the only method, any more than driving in a horse-drawn buggy is the only method of transportation. It would not matter what method I or anyone else might suggest, there would be those who would object. If I said that the automobile provided the best means of transportation today I suppose a dozen men would jump up and produce statistics showing the numbers that had been killed or the accidents that had taken place in an effort to refute this method.

Taxation is not the only method and before I am through I shall give some alternate methods. Another method we could use to abolish taxation would be for all religious leaders who believe in the sanctity of the family and the home to denounce all those engaged in taxing the people. Taxing is not a native British method nor is it a Christian method; it is an alien method, a communist method. According to the communist manifesto it is an essential method used to force people to become absolutely dependent upon those who through trickery and deceit have gained control over them.

Taxation is a false and erroneous belief among many people. Another false and erroneous belief is that held by those who collect the taxes, by those who are employed directly or indirectly by the department of taxation, that if people are paid by the officials of the Department of National Revenue to commit an offence or injustice against their fellow Christians, the responsibility for the crime rests upon the institution, upon the department, upon the government or upon the bureau and not upon the individual who commits the offence. This is false for each individual is responsible. I do not blame the hired criminal. I do not blame those who break bad laws so much as I blame those who make bad laws.

There are other methods. I have had people tell me that you cannot get away from taxation, that you must pay taxes, but my reply is: "If you believe that taxation is necessary, you pay taxes, but do not impose your will upon me and force me to pay them". In my speech on February 24 I said that the key to the whole situation was personal responsibility. Another method to abolish taxation would be to have recorded on every ballot paper on which people vote the name of the individual with his or her address on the ballot paper, and explain that those who vote for the political party which imposes taxes shall pay the taxes, and those who did not vote for that political party shall be exempt from paying taxes.

An hon. Member: That is the only chance you have to get into power.

Mr. Ashby: There is, of course, an excuse for taxation. Should there be too much money in circulation, then it would be necessary to remove some of it. This money need not and should never be removed from those engaged in productive work, but it can be taken from where money accumulates in the greatest quantity. That is simple enough.

Here is a substitute for taxation. Three kinds of money are used to finance any large undertaking such as war. The first is what we call bank credit money. This is money created by the banking institutions which create all true dollars. A dollar is a unit of account as a mile is a unit of distance, as a bushel is a unit of measure, and as a quart is more than you can get out of a beer bottle. By law no one else is allowed to create these true dollars, which is as it should be, for no one knows more about the grocery business than the grocer, or more about farming than the farmer, or more about banking than the banker himself. Few institutions that we have can show such an outstanding record of honesty and trustworthiness as those employed in the institutions known as banks. Most of the national debt accumulated during the past two wars consists of bank credit money only. This money or bank credit is bought by the government from the banking institutions in return for interest-bearing government securities. The people are taxed to pay the interest on those securities held by the banking institutions. That is one form of money which is used to finance war.

Secondly there are the people's savings. The second kind of money used is the savings of the people which the government also buys in return for interest-bearing savings bonds. Only a fraction of this kind of money is used to finance wars; I think about one-fifth. Most of this money is bank credit money which has come into the possession of the people, and on which the people are paying interest by taxation. When the government buys this money from the people's savings the people are paying double interest on it, first to the banking institutions which created it, and secondly to the people who have saved it.

The third kind of money is what I call confiscated money. It is that kind of money known as taxes. This is money, most of which is confiscated from the hard-earned wages of those who do productive work, and who are least able to afford the loss. No interest-bearing government bonds are given in return for this kind of money. It is simply and purely legalized robbery. What is the solution? It is simple enough. No other kind of money is used, or ever has been used, to finance any such undertakings as war. What is the solution? It is for all members of all governments, municipal, provincial and federal, who are loyal to the people, who place their faith and trust in us, to insist on the people being given an interest-bearing government bond for every dollar taxed from them, whether directly or indirectly; for all three kinds of money buy identically the same kind and quantity of goods or services.

The striking thing about it is that, like so many of our democratic institutions, all of which were originally established to serve the people, the functions of the banking institutions have been abused and reversed, and instead of bank credit money being used to pay interest to the people on money confiscated from them by a ruthless and despotic bureaucracy the people are forced to pay interest in money they cannot create, to the very institutions that can and do create it.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

Mr. T. L. Church (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, for three or four minutes tonight, I wish to refer to one proposal, and that is the Bretton Woods-Dumbarton Oaks principle. I shall not take up very much time, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to remind the house that I was the only member on these benches who was opposed to the Bretton Woods-Dumbarton Oaks-Lord Keynes principles because I believed they abandoned the traditional policy of the party. Ever since the days of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding, this party had a tradition for dealing with our best customer, the motherland. I believe the abandonment of it was a fatal mistake by those on our side of the house, as it was a traditional policy of the Conservative party.

At that time we had before us the prime ministers of New Zealand and Australia, Mr. Curtin and Mr. Fraser, both of whom addressed this house from the seat now occupied by the Clerk. These men made a proposition which was to be studied in London at a meeting with Mr. Attlee before Geneva or Havana. This was back in December of 1946. Canada opposed it. I was opposed to the policy of the Liberal government of the day and opposed Bretton Woods strongly. I said it would lead us into disaster if we abandoned our best customer, the motherland. For that reason, I supported our friends on the extreme left in their proposal, and I believe I was right. I still think I am right. I might say that it was very difficult for me to be present on that particular day, owing to certain conditions. I supported the traditional policy of preferential trade of our party from time immemorial. It was founded by the two Liberal statesmen I named. I believe the abandonment of it got us into this dollar emergency which led almost to the destruction of the British empire. As you know, the policy of Mr. Attlee, and Canada made no objection to it, was to scuttle and quit and haul down the flag on the seven seas, when I raised here these matters of defence, trade and migration within the empire.

I regret very much that this dollar policy has been forced on this country by the present government. One of the gravest mistakes we ever made as a House of Commons was made in January, 1947. I remember Mr. Curtin and Mr. Fraser were in London at the time and wanted a meeting with Canada before the Geneva and Havana meetings in February, 1947. I asked in the house here about it, from February to July, but we were told not a word about it until late in November 1947, when this austerity policy was announced. Our party threw over its tradition and supported the dollar austerity program, abandoned preferential trade, which leaves us dependent upon Washington not only for trade and migration, but for defence. I believe a fatal mistake was made by those who were in the house on our side at that time.

Mr. Benoit Michaud (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it appears presumptuous to speak at this stage of the debate on the address in reply. However, most members know the reason which made it impossible for me to make my remarks earlier.

About the speech from the throne, I have only a brief comment to make. I was pleased to note the government's intention to amend the Family Allowances Act so as to eliminate the decreasing rate after the fifth child. The house will no doubt recall that on June 19, 1947, I brought up the matter in this house and discussed it at length.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) was then in his seat. He listened to me sympathetically and promised that my remarks would be earnestly considered. I learned later that the officials of his department actually did consider the matter.

Other members have since made similar representations and I am happy to find today that the government have seen fit to amend the law in accordance with the remarks I then made.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot emulate the humorous vein of the member for Edmonton East (Mr. Ashby). I listened to him with a great deal of interest and, although I do not agree with most of the things he said, I enjoyed his speech. The possible exception to this was the derogatory remarks he made, obviously with reference to the member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King). I feel that I must take strong objection to those remarks. I have not his exact words before me, but I recall he mentioned he would like to hire the services of a great sculptor and have a statue of the hon. gentleman carved in clay. Then he would have it exposed on the lawn where the rain might do its work on it. I am sure that most of the members resented those remarks as much as I did. Even the political opponents of the hon. member for Glengarry have always recognized him as an outstanding Canadian who served his country under exceptionally difficult and trying circumstances. I am confident that his name will be written in history for centuries after his demise. His name will be remembered a great many years after the names of most of us, including the member for Edmonton East, have passed into oblivion. I feel confident that when the hon. member reads in Hansard the remarks he has made he will be sorry for what he has said and will regret having said it.

My main reason for speaking today, after being confined to the hospital for a period of four months, is the fact that a serious problem has arisen affecting a large number of farmers in my native province of New Brunswick, as well as the province of Prince Edward Island. It is the old problem of the marketing of our large crop of potatoes. During the course of the session of 1947 I did, on two occasions, deal with that particular problem.

Every once in a while our large potato growers are faced with a very serious situation. Unlike the grain growers of the west, it is not a drought which threatens them. It is not a rainstorm, a windstorm, a hailstorm, locusts or any such ordinary calamity. Paradoxically as it may sound, the threat which menaces our farmers is none other than what we are accustomed to call a bumper crop. When kind Providence gratifies our farmers with a bounteous crop, it turns out to be a curse rather than a blessing. If the crop is average or below average, there is no problem. Marketing takes place in an ordinary and satisfactory manner. If the crop happens to be good, let us say ten per cent or even five per cent above average, then we face serious difficulties.

At this point, may I emphasize the fact that the trouble does not arise because we plant too many acres. Our acreage does not vary much from year to year. As a matter of fact, in 1948 our acreage was smaller than in the years 1943 to 1946 inclusive, and it was only slightly larger than in the year 1947. The whole trouble comes because in certain years, on account of climatic conditions, the yield is particularly good.

Mr. MacInnis: The Lord has been favourable.

Mr. Michaud: That is right. I need not stress the point that potatoes do not keep from year to year. We all know that. They require frost-proof storage facilities, and whenever there is a surplus crop, the storage problem becomes particularly acute in the fall, with the result that prices slump below the cost of production. Even if there were sufficient storage facilities, the surplus in itself would constitute a problem which would inevitably force prices down. Under such conditions our farmers are obliged to sell somewhat as people do in a bankruptcy sale or a fire sale. In such cases, of course, consumers generally get their potatoes at a price below the cost of production. I know for a fact that this has been the case, to a great extent, as far as the 1946 and the 1948 crops are concerned.

I think it is only fair that I should at this moment point out the fact that the potato growers of the maritime provinces are rendering a great service to the consumers of Ontario and Quebec, two provinces which do not produce enough for themselves and which depend to a considerable extent on purchases from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. If these two provinces were to stop selling on the upper Canadian market, I dare say that the price of potatoes in central Canada would just about double. Because of favourable soil and climatic conditions we can produce more economically—and the figures are there to prove it—than Ontario and Quebec. Thus we are in a position to force the price of potatoes down to what we consider a reasonable level. I presume the grain growers of the west also feel that they perform a similar service to the rest of Canada with regard to the production of grain. In consideration of this service which they are rendering, the western farmers have secured advantages in the form of marketing and other legislation. With these policies I am in full agreement. But I take the view that our potato growers, who are doing such a great service to Ontario and Quebec, should be given more protection in the form of adequate marketing legislation.

In all fairness I must point out that, as to the crops of 1946 and 1948, our farmers have received some sort of protection under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. Although the support given has not been quite sufficient, in my opinion, it has helped considerably in both years, as otherwise prices would have fallen considerably lower and our farmers would have lost a good deal more than they actually did. As I commented at the time in a statement to the press—that was about three months ago, I believe—the guarantee of $1.15 per hundred pounds on April 1 is too small and too late. But perhaps it was difficult to do better under present circumstances.

I attended a meeting here in the month of September, when representatives of the producers from the various provinces made representations to the agricultural prices support board. The New Brunswick farmers claimed that it cost them seventy-two cents per bushel at harvest time, and that they should be getting that much for their product. The Prince Edward Island farmers and the Quebec farmers claimed that they could not get along with that amount, but that they needed at least ninety cents per bushel. The guaranteed price which has been set, considering the shrinkage and the storage, is quite a bit lower than even the moderate price of seventy-two cents per bushel submitted by the New Brunswick farmers.

As I said before, although I have not been able to keep in close touch with the big producers along the St. John river, I have been informed right along that the price received by farmers most of the time has been in the vicinity of one cent a pound or sixty cents per bushel, which is a good deal less than the cost of production. Judging from the quotations on the Montreal market at the present time, I am inclined to think that our farmers along the St. John river are not getting much more than they were two or three months ago.

I understand that this support act expires this year. The assistance we have received for the two years referred to was under that act. I do not believe there is any other legislation besides that to justify any support price. What is the government planning to do, if anything, when this legislation expires? I can only judge from statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). The latest that has come to my attention on this point is one which appeared in the Canadian press on December 8. The dispatch reads in part as follows:

> Addressing the final session of the dominion-provincial agricultural conference, he—> —told the delegates, representing provincial departments of agriculture, he was not prepared to say whether the dominion would enact marketing legislation at the forthcoming session of parliament.

That is, the Minister of Agriculture.

I should like to know, as early as possible, what the Minister of Agriculture and the government have in mind as to this marketing legislation. The farmers in my constituency are of course greatly interested in any decision of the government along that line.

At the Liberal convention that was held in the first week of August, in outlining what he considered a national program for Canada the Minister of Agriculture advocated the setting up of a potato board for the benefit of the maritime farmers. Unfortunately I have not the text of his statement to the press at the time, but I distinctly remember reading about it. Naturally I was greatly pleased with the statement. I should be greatly obliged to him if he would inform the house, and through the house the farmers interested, just what are the government's plans on this matter.

Some hon. members of this house are likely aware of the potato price support policy in some of the states of our neighbours to the south. This price support policy has proved to be exceedingly expensive for the crop years 1946 and 1948, and I would suggest nothing of the kind for this country. We just cannot afford it. As a matter of fact, the United States are contemplating reducing by one-third their present support prices. I feel however that this government can bring about orderly and satisfactory marketing without cost to the taxpayers of this country, except the cost of administration. Such a policy could be made possible, provided, one, that consumers be made to pay a fair price, and, two, that acreage be confined to proper proportions. I suggest that all of this could be achieved through federal legislation alone.

There is no question that the federal government has full jurisdiction as regards foreign trade. The federal government could set a minimum price for all potatoes exported out of the country, whether seed or table stock. This would eliminate the often-heard complaint that dealers are cutting one another's throats in quoting prices to foreign purchasers, thus causing considerable losses to the farmer. It would also appear that this parliament has jurisdiction over interprovincial trade. All the provincial marketing acts which I have come across specify definitely that they apply only to trade within the provinces. On this constitutional question there are not many authorities as to whether this parliament has jurisdiction to regulate interprovincial trade, trade flowing from one province to another. I have looked up the "Canadian Abridgment," a digest of cases, on this point. I hold in my hand volume XI, constitutional law being dealt with at page 432. In the well-known case of Citizens Insurance Company against Parson I find this significant quotation:

Construing therefore the words "regulation of trade and commerce" (which come within federal jurisdiction) by the various aids to their interpretation above suggested, they would include political arrangements in regard to trade requiring the sanction of parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and it may be that they would include general regulation of trade affecting the whole dominion.

In another case at page 437 of the same volume, the Grain Marketing Act, 1931, this significant passage in the judgment of the privy council appears:

Held, the Saskatchewan Grain Marketing Act, 1931, was ultra vires, since in its true nature and character it was legislation enacted with the object of controlling the export of grain from Saskatchewan to other provinces and foreign countries, and it was, therefore, an interference with the dominion parliament's exclusive powers over the "regulation of trade and commerce."

It would appear from these two decisions that the federal government has jurisdiction in the matter of interprovincial trade. I have not had time to look into the wheat board act, but what I am advocating resembles the wheat board act, which has not yet been declared to be ultra vires of this parliament. In any event, if there should be any question about the jurisdiction of this parliament, the opinion of the Department of Justice could be sought, or the matter could be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada; and if it should be deemed necessary to have provincial concurrent legislation I am sure that the province of New Brunswick at least would agree to the passing of any such concurrent legislation.

In view of the fact that Quebec and Ontario are not self-sufficient in this particular commodity, potatoes, and that they must get a considerable portion of their supplies from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, if proper restrictions were imposed on the movement of potatoes from one province into another an effective floor price could be maintained in the same manner as, at the present time, an effective floor price is maintained on eggs, bacon and beef, because of our sales to Great Britain. If, for example, this parliament should pass legislation setting a minimum price for potatoes grown in one province and sold in another, then the price of all potatoes grown in Quebec and Ontario would immediately rise to that minimum floor level. The main problem in this whole scheme, which I now suggest to the government, would be to regulate properly the movement of potatoes from the maritimes into upper Canada. I think it could be done quite easily, however.

Statistics are available to show how many carlots of maritime potatoes are exported out of the country, and into the other provinces. Incidentally, the marketing scheme which I am advocating need not be concerned with anything less than carlots moved by rail. Any small quantities moved otherwise between the boundary of Quebec and New Brunswick would not amount to much and could not possibly disturb the scheme as a whole.

With statistics available, it is easy to determine what the maritime provinces should grow for export, and here I mean export into the other provinces as well as outside of Canada. I have those statistics in front of me but I do not feel like placing them on Hansard because they would not add anything further to the debate.

Farmers would be invited to join the marketing plan proposed by the government under this potato board, or whatever marketing agency may be set up. On the basis of their past performances, the growers would be asked to apply for a quota, so many bushels for export purposes. Since those who did not choose to come under the marketing scheme would not be allowed to market outside their province, until those coming under the scheme had marketed the whole of their quota, practically all potato growers would apply to market through the government agency. If the farmers applied for a quota corresponding to their past performances, it would just about correspond to our over-all requirements. Those who applied for too large a quota could be held to their average year, if they wanted to market through the government agency. In any event, a fair and equitable formula could be worked out in order to bring the sum total of all individual quotas to the over-all quota requirements for the maritime provinces.

All this marketing would be on a voluntary basis, and every farmer at seeding time would be given a quota for which he would be assured of a minimum price. If he chose to grow more, it would be at his own peril, and he could only market the surplus, if and when the national quota determined by the board had been completely disposed of. I do not feel like going into details as to how this marketing could be carried out. I discussed it with the farmers of my constituency on many occasions, and the suggestions which I am now offering have come mostly from them.

The government marketing agency could very advantageously replace wholesale dealers in potatoes, with the result that farmers would get a slightly higher return for their potatoes. Coupons would be issued to farmers for the amount of their quota. These coupons would have to be surrendered to the potato inspectors at the time of shipment, and then forwarded by the inspectors to the government marketing agency. In this manner every one would be held to his quota. The floor price should advance throughout the season to compensate for storage and shrinkage. Marketing could also be arranged so as to give every farmer an opportunity to sell gradually throughout the marketing period. In my opinion there should be no great difficulty in connection with the setting up of a marketing scheme of this nature.

Practically every other farm product has some sort of minimum price guaranty. The potato grower is just about the only one who has not had adequate protection for his product. From the standpoint of importance, the potato crop comes fourth after wheat, barley and oats. The large potato growers, who are responsible for the very reasonable price at which this vegetable sells, are highly specialized farmers. They derive at least 90 per cent of their income from the growing of potatoes. When the market goes bad, it means a disastrous disturbance in their economy. The fact that they may recoup some of their losses in a good year is not satisfactory. It is very seldom that the benefits of a good year will balance the losses of a poor year. Potato growers, like other farmers, and the majority of wage-earners, want stability. Not very long ago the Canadian federation of agriculture made representations to the government with a view to assuring stability of prices for farm products. I do not know that any special representations were made as regards potatoes, but I do know that those farmers want stability in the worst way; and I do hope that before this session is over the government will do something to protect that particular group of farmers.

In conclusion, I wish to inform the minister and his officials that I am at their disposal to discuss with them all the different phases of this particular problem. I realize that this subject does not interest a great many members of the house, but I would feel remiss in my duty if I had not brought it to the attention of the house and the minister at the first opportunity offered to me in the course of this session.

[Mr. Michaud.]

(Translation):

Mr. Real Caouette (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, those who have followed with attention the masterly speech delivered this afternoon by the leader of this group (Mr. Low) are unanimous in recognizing the high standard of his address, in addition to the logic and the great value of social credit. We should avail ourselves of the unique opportunity we have of implementing that doctrine in Canada without any delay, during the present session.

I should like to deal briefly tonight with certain attacks directed against social credit supporters in Canada, especially those of the province of Quebec. Violent attacks have been directed in the past and are directed today by some people against social credit and its leaders in the province of Quebec; it is claimed that social credit might be communistic, socialistic or that it might represent a certain "philosophy of the stomach", or in other words that it is quite a materialistic movement.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the house tonight about a study that was made ten years ago not by myself or by any member of this group, but, at the request of their excellencies the bishops of Canada, by a commission of nine theologians, called upon to study the social credit doctrine in comparison with the church's social doctrine. It was not required to consider whether a social credit political party or a political movement of the Union of Electors could be recommended to the Canadian people, but merely to study the monetary theory of social credit.

The commission was composed of the following eminent religious personalities: Chairman: Rev. Father Joseph P. Archambault, S.J.; Mgr. Wilfred LeBon, D.P.; Rev. Canons Cyrille Gagnon and J. Alfred Chamberland, Reverends Philippe Perrier, Arthur Deschênes, Jean-Baptiste Desrosiers, P.S.S., and Charles-Omer Garant, and Rev. Father Louis Chagnon, S.J. It is to be noted that, in the meantime, Rev. Charles-Omer Garant has become Mgr. Garant, Auxiliary Bishop of Quebec. The commission itself decides upon its field of study:

(A) The question is not at all the economic or political aspect, that is the theory's merits from the economical point of view and the practical application to a country of the social credit system. The commission's members do not claim any competency in these matters and, besides, the church is not called upon to express an opinion on questions concerning which, as Pope Pius XI said, "it lacks appropriate means and competency".

(Quadr. anno.)

It is not the member for Pontiac who said or wrote that. Here then is a commission of nine theologians which determines for itself its field of study.

(B) Nor is it a matter of approving that doctrine on behalf of the church because in the social and political spheres, the church never submitted a definite technical system which, incidentally, is not part of its functions.

(C) The sole question under consideration is this: Is the social credit doctrine, in its basic principles, tainted with socialism or communism, which doctrines are condemned by the church; must it therefore be considered by Catholics as a doctrine they cannot accept, and still less propagate?

(D) The state referred to in the present report is considered, in abstracto, independently of any contingencies involved.

The commission then gives a definition of socialism.

2. The commission defines socialism and points out the characteristic features of this doctrine, in the light of Quadragesimo anno:

(a) materialism;

(b) class struggles;

(c) elimination of private property;

(d) control of economic life by the state without regard for personal freedom and initiative.

Such is the definition of socialism given by the church.

3. The commission then expressed in the form of propositions the essential principles of social credit.

The purpose of the monetary doctrine of social credit is to give each and every member of society the economic freedom and security which they have a right to expect from the economic and social body. To this end instead of bringing down production to the level of purchasing power by the destruction of useful goods or the restriction of labour, social credit wishes to raise purchasing power up to the capacity of production of useful goods.

To this end, social credit suggests—these are the commission's words, Mr. Speaker:

1. The state must recover control of the volume and issue of money and credit and exercise this control through an independent commission entrusted with all necessary authority.

2. The material resources of the nation, expressed in terms of production, represent the basis of money and credit.

3. At all times the issue of money and credit must correspond to the level of production so that a sound balance may be maintained between production and consumption. This balance is ensured, at least in part, through a discount rate which would vary of course with the fluctuations of production.

4. The present economic system, thanks to the many discoveries and inventions that favour it, produces an undreamed-of amount of goods. At the same time it reduces employment level and causes permanent unemployment. A considerable part of the population is therefore deprived of all purchasing power with which to provide for itself goods created for it and not for any individuals or groups of individuals.

In order that all might share the cultural heritage bequeathed by their predecessors, Social Credit suggests a dividend the amount of which is to be determined by the mass of goods to be consumed. This dividend shall be given to each citizen, as such, whether he has other sources of income or not.

Let us consider whether there are traces of socialism in such proposals.

Ad Iam: This proposal does not appear to contain any socialist basic idea and is not therefore contrary to the social doctrine of the church. The allegation is based on the following quotations from the encyclical letter Quadragesimo anno.

The Pope said: "There are certain kinds of wealth about which it may rightly be held that they should be reserved to the community when they may confer such economic power that they cannot be left in the hands of private persons without danger for the common good."

Further on we may read: "The most striking thing today is not only the concentration of wealth but also the accumulation or enormous power, of a discretionary economic power in the hands of a small number of men who ordinarily are not the proprietors but only the trustees and guarantors of the capital which they administer as they deem fit.

"This power is especially considerable among those who being the holders and absolute masters of money manage credit and grant it as they see fit. Thus, they distribute the blood to the economic body whose life they hold in their hands to such an extent that without their consent no one can breathe."

Mr. Speaker, when we hear the flamboyant speeches of certain French-Canadian members from Quebec sitting in this house or in the Quebec legislature attacking social credit, suggesting that social credit could be tainted with communism or socialism, I believe, that those politicians or other people who deliver such attacks against social credit are simply being dishonest with society, with the members of the social credit party and with themselves when they talk against social credit as they are doing.

Mr. Speaker, on a recent visit to the Quebec district I heard speeches by some provincial representatives, members of the clique of Mr. Duplessis, the premier of Quebec. At that time, Mr. Maurice Bellemare, of Champlain, attacked Social Crediters, social credit and the leader of the Union of Electors, claiming Social Crediters to be apostates. He mentioned, as an instance, the case of a certain group in Three Rivers who abjured the catholic faith to join a new Christian faith around Cap de la Madeleine. And so, because four or five people decide to take this attitude, certain provincial members of Quebec consider it appropriate or intelligent to connect them with the social credit doctrine, in spite of the fact that the majority of Social Crediters in Quebec are true catholics. Well, Mr. Speaker, some members have made this very unfair statement to help the Union Nationale win an election in the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, what I have just mentioned happened recently in the constituency of Lévis.

Mr. Speaker, Social Credit members cannot be insulted forever and criticized for their theory as at present, because their philosophy is consistent with the social doctrine of the church. Either social credit is good or it is not; if it is not, it should be condemned, but if it is not condemned therefore it is good. People should cease calling us communists and socialists in the province of Quebec or elsewhere in Canada. I do not contend that social credit as a political movement or party is perfect. I am not speaking of the political movement, but of the social credit doctrine.

This is the kind of propaganda that is being directed against the social credit theory. During provincial elections, for instance, provincial politicians said: "The Social Credit party may be good, but in the federal and not in the provincial sphere; in the provincial field, only the Union Nationale is worthwhile, all other parties are no good. It might be a good idea to enter candidates in a federal campaign, since Social Credit advocates monetary reform, which is within the jurisdiction of the dominion government. In Alberta the Social Credit party has not been able so far to put its theory into effect, so it will not be any better in the province of Quebec. Therefore, you are wasting your time in the provincial field. Why not try the federal sphere? You might do better there. Others claim that social credit may be commendable in theory but that the movement does not have good leaders. The leaders of the Social Credit party are hypocrites, they are dangerous, they are demagogues with revolutionary tendencies; they stir up class hatred, the newspaper Vers Demain spreads the seeds of revolution, etc".

Mr. Speaker, the best way to kill a movement is to destroy those who are at its head. Deprive the Canadian government of its leaders, and straightway the country will be without government; do away with those who are in command, and any movement will cease to exist; without its captain, any ship will surely go off its course. Therefore, the leaders of the social credit movement are assailed on all sides. Its opponents claim that although the social credit philosophy may be good in itself, its leaders are rather questionable.

Mr. Speaker, we certainly have no intention of asking our Liberal friends in the province of Quebec to begin spreading the doctrine of social credit among our people. We shall certainly not ask our antagonists to propagate the social credit theory because if we did so, they would, judging from the tactics they have used up to the present, soon label us communists. We have our own way of spreading social credit and we shall keep to our own methods; we shall use them for wide-scale propaganda in the provinces and in the country at large.

Since the social credit philosophy has not been censured and, in fact, stands above reproof, and since it is tainted neither by communism nor socialism, we are in a very good position and shall carry on as we have done so far. However, I would ask our opponents, if they have any conscience whatever, to end their treacherous attacks and to stop calling us socialists and communists when they know very well that Social Crediters are as good if not better Christians than they are themselves.

A little further on, the board of nine theologians takes the trouble to answer various objections that might be raised by my hon. friends. If they want to obtain those tracts, I would advise them to write to l'Ecole sociale populaire, Montreal. That tract sells for 3 cents a unit, 20 cents a dozen, $1.50 a hundred and $12 a thousand. Therefore, it might be purchased by the thousand and distributed among the Liberals in this country; after reading it they would possibly have a better notion of what Social Credit is. Now, let us look over the objections. Here is the first one—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): The pamphlets should also be distributed to the supporters of the Union Nationale.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, my hon. friend is right; they should be distributed to the supporters of the Union Nationale.

Here is the first objection:

> The control of currency and credit necessarily implies the control of production to the extent of the socialization of the latter.

I shall quote the commission's answer. The following statement is not from me but from the commission of nine theologians.

> The control of currency and credit does not take away from individuals and private institutions the property of the implements of work and of production even though it might imply a certain degree of indirect control of that production. Such indirect control which, normally at least, must be exercised for the public weal, does not involve any socialistic character, no more than the reasonable control of production by the banks could necessarily be said to imply liberal individualism.

Second objection:

The dividend is an incentive to laziness.

I doubt if a single one of my friends opposite has ever considered that the national dividend would inevitably lead to laziness. That is the thought and explanation of the commission, which, incidentally, are the same as ours.

Answer:

The state does not manufacture money and credit at will but according to the requirements indicated in the statistics of production which is intimately related to the labour of men. Some may attempt yet to remain idle. But the dividend will not always be sufficient to provide a living. Even if at the outset, the dividend proves sufficient to fill the gap between production and consumption, its stability will require a continuous increase in production due to an equivalent increase in labour.

And, incidentally, whether it be labour provided by man or machinery and progress, it is labour just the same.

Third objection:

The dividend, and even the discount, it is said, deprives the labourer of his salary and the producer of his profit.

Answer:

That could be true more or less, and always indirectly, if in fact there were no gap between production and consumption. But Social Credit is based precisely on this gap which is a purely economical and technical consideration. Thus, the system cannot be condemned on behalf of the social doctrine of the church. Besides, a gap seems to exist in fact between the production cost in certain fields, fisheries, hunting, natural resources of the soil, etc., and the consumption price.

Mr. Speaker, it is rightly claimed that there is a difference between production and purchasing power because dominion statistics show that production now amounts to $15,350 million against a purchasing power of about $9 billion. That is what we ask, that the difference between production and the purchasing power be distributed equally in the shape of dividends, among every Canadian, from the cradle to the grave.

Let that difference be represented by purchasing power in the hands of the people, and that production would be within their reach.

One does not need to have an unusually brilliant mind to understand that it is but logical and quite in order to issue money in proportion to production.

We hear about money being based on nothing but gold. Representatives of mining companies asked me last year what I thought of gold. I do not suggest, as some do, that the price of gold should be raised by $3 or $4 an ounce, but I should like the government to allow the free marketing of gold; mining companies could then sell their gold for $60 or $70 an ounce instead of having to operate at a loss as do some mining companies in my district. That would create more work and enable the owners of small mines to develop their properties faster and come into production as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to do all he can in order to keep the gold market absolutely free, so that mines may sell their gold at a better price. When they can operate at a profit, they can pay better wages.

And now, Mr. Speaker, there is another point to which I wish to call the government's attention. Following a request by mining companies, we have in our district an intensive immigration movement. These immigrants, to date, take the place of our Canadians, of our family heads and I happen to have here the particulars concerning the case of Mr. Michel Lacasse, of Duparquet. A few months ago, Mr. Lacasse sent me a letter telling me that there was no work at the Duparquet mine, operated by Consolidated Beattie Mines Ltd. It was said, he explained, that about fifteen men were fired. Mr. Lacasse, who has two children, then claimed unemployment insurance benefits. After he had waited for a month, he was told to go to Rouyn, 35 miles away, to work at the Senator Rouyn Ltd. mine.

Of course Mr. Lacasse did not wish to leave his family under the circumstances. He informed the unemployment insurance commission that he was willing to accept any job in his home town but a Hull civil servant, Mr. Auger, told him that, since he was turning down a job 35 miles away, the commission could no longer allow him any benefits. Mr. Lacasse writes:

Herewith all the documents I have received in this matter. You will thus have all the particulars. Included is their last letter advising me that I had lost all rights to unemployment insurance.

I was laid off by the Duparquet Mines. We were about fifteen men and immigrants took our place.

I have here a list of the mines in my constituency that have brought in immigrants, or D.P.'s as we call them. I find that the Consolidated Beattie Mines Ltd. accepted and gave work to 40 D.P.'s from Europe. Moreover, I see that there are still 25 immigrants to come to Duparquet. Since June, 1948, this same company has submitted another request for 40 more labourers from Europe, who have not yet arrived.

Mr. Speaker, I am not against D.P.'s nor against immigrants. They probably are perfect gentlemen, good catholics and I have met many of them. I must protest energetically and vehemently against the government allowing mining companies in Abitibi and the northwestern part of the province to instigate such irrational immigration which only serves to cause anxiety to our Canadian families in the district. We have unemployed men in Val d'Or, Malartic, Rouyn, Noranda and Duparquet. We have unemployed men in all cities of the district.

We have in the province a government that for the past two or three years has been clamouring for provincial autonomy. I inquired if provincial authorities had ever protested against this immigration to the province of Quebec, especially in the northern districts. The federal government informed me that the provincial government offered no objection. The latter never said a word against this immigration. And yet the matter of labour does not come within the purview of the federal government only. It is the duty of the province of Quebec to protest energetically to those mining companies in order to prevent them from hiring foreign labour when so many men are available here for this work.

Mr. P. E. Coté (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): On a question of privilege, I challenge the hon. member to mention a single case where foreign labour brought to this country under the authority of the Department of Labour has prevented Canadians speaking French or any other language from keeping their positions in any locality whatever.

The day before yesterday, I made a statement in the house and I abide by what I said at that time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour, I may say that he should have a strict inquiry held not only at the Consolidated Beattie Mines Ltd., but also at the Noranda Mines Ltd., which has to date given employment to 303 immigrants. Seventy-two more are to come, and the Noranda mining company has put in an application for an additional number of one hundred.

Besides that, we have the East Sullivan Mines Ltd. owned by Mr. Pierre Beauchemin. The president, Mr. Beauchemin, recently admitted to me, during a conversation we had on the train, that French Canadians were not suited for mining work, and that it was necessary to bring displaced persons from Europe for underground work in the mines.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour that the displaced persons from Europe are depriving our Canadian workers of employment. The mining companies that have applied for D.P. labour are letting our own people go without work.

The European displaced persons are protected by a labour contract, which provides that the mining companies will employ them for one year. They are thus assured of keeping their jobs for a year. At the end of that period they can be dismissed and replaced by Canadians, but until then nothing can be done. The people I represent in this house have protested and still make representations to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) and to his parliamentary assistant.

Mr. P. E. Coté (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): Will the hon. member allow a further interruption? Whenever a company applies to the Department of Labour for manpower, our officials immediately inquire from the national employment service whether its offices located in the province where the industry is operating are able to supply the labour required. Only after the employment offices in and out of the province concerned have stated they cannot fill the order does the department apply for manpower from the European reservoir.

If my hon. friend knows workers who claim they are ready to replace these immigrants, he should tell them to apply to the employment service. That is the best suggestion I can make.

Mr. Caouette: I understand the explanations of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Coté, Verdun), but that is not the point. I am not blaming the Minister of Labour or his parliamentary assistant, or the provincial ministers of labour, but the mining companies that hire the workers. If the hon. member will take the trouble of inquiring from the employment offices in Val d'Or as elsewhere, he will see that they receive applications all day long. Workers come in every day requesting jobs in mines, but there is no place for them. Men from the East Sullivan mine have recently been fired. The hon. member asked me to mention names. I will take note of his request and give him a list early next week, together with supporting evidence. However, the Minister of Labour cannot compel a mining company employing a European displaced person to fire that man because, under the contract, it has to keep him on for a year. I understand that at the end of the year he can be replaced, but during the contract year neither the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour nor the minister himself can remove a displaced person. Under the contract, it is impossible to do so. Therefore, the D.P. cannot be replaced by a Canadian.

Still, I bring this matter to the attention of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Labour and I hope that the activities of the mining concerns operating in the northern part of my constituency of Pontiac will be fully investigated; I refer to Canadian Malartic Gold Mines, Consolidated Beattie Mines Limited, Consolidated Central Cadillac Mines Limited, East Malartic Mine Limited, East Sullivan Mines Limited, Golden Manitou Mines Limited, Lamaque Gold Mine Limited, Malartic Gold Fields Limited, O'Brien Gold Mines Limited, Perron Gold Mines Limited, Sullivan Consolidated Mines Limited, Noranda Mines Limited, etc. All these mining concerns already have D.P.'s on their staff and will employ more of this labour; since June 1948, they have even asked the Canadian government to supply them with more such manpower.

I shall now discuss another matter. A while ago, I mentioned production and purchasing power. I pointed out that our annual production is now valued at $15 billion but that the yearly national revenue amounts to barely $9 billion. It may be noted that $11 billion include salaries paid employees of various departments, civil servants, etc., as well as taxes. However, for every $100 earned, $20 must go towards income tax, which reduces our purchasing power to $80 out of $100. Thus, these things being considered, the national income amounts to approximately $9 billion. There is therefore a difference of $6 billion between this country's total production and its purchasing power. And yet there are still people who inveigh against communism, who declare that communism is a dangerous thing. Even the leader of the Quebec provincial government, Mr. Duplessis, has been heard to cry out that communism "is a hideous face that appears in this very country and which must be chased out at all cost." Well, Mr. Speaker, when the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) was at the head of the Ontario government, he was unable to stem the rising tide in Toronto. Toronto is the haunt of Canada's leading communists and certain districts have given as many as 40,000 communist votes during elections. And what about the prime minister of the province of Quebec, Mr. Duplessis, who has never been able to stem the rising tide of communism in the province of Quebec. Well, I maintain that better means will have to be taken than those presently employed by the government. Since the present leader of the government feels unable to halt the forward march of communism in Canada, I say to them that as long as the difference between total production and total purchasing power is not distributed among the people of Canada, communism will go on rising and making progress in this country. I insist upon the fact that the only way to prevent it from doing so is to provide for a fairer and more equitable distribution of the country's wealth. To this end, it is absolutely necessary to establish a system whereby the difference between total production and total purchasing power can be distributed among all the citizens of Canada. Therefore I say that if this is not done, communism will certainly take root in Canada and the only ones responsible for this situation will be the ministers of the present government, the Liberal members of parliament and others on this side of the house who accept the government's policies. There is no other alternative but to help our fellow-countrymen and to make the country's wealth serve the people so that every individual will have the self-respect to which a human being is entitled. There is only one way of achieving this end and that is to make money once again serve human beings and to provide them with the social and economic security to which each and every one of our citizens is entitled and to prevent cartels and those who control the nation's economy from controlling our lives as they have done so far.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that when the budget is brought down, the special luxury tax will be abolished by the government.

A strange suicide has lately taken place in Pembroke. The hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) says: "That is no fault of ours". It may be no fault of ours, but it is certainly the fault of taxation, let there be no mistake about that. A tax is not an incentive, but the contrary. Anybody who has taxes to pay is always looking about for a means of escape. That was what Mr. Simpson was telling Mr. R. Roger Smith, who lives on Dorchester street in Montreal, in a letter he wrote to him on 21st January last:

(Text):

So far I haven't questioned the right of a government to levy a tax but, as you evidently understand, I do question their method of doing their collection by forced labour.

All I can do, therefore, is to press for a decision on the constitutionality of the law under which I am charged. This is too big a decision for a police magistrate to deal with, so all he can do is convict me for violating the law, which he has done. Sentence will be passed next Thursday.

I do not know how long it will be before the next step is taken. I have some time yet before I must decide on the exact move. But I intend to push it to the limit.

And Mr. George J. Simpson went to the limit with regard to that tax. He died fighting it.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I suggest that a national flag be adopted during this session so that Canada may have a distinctive flag which would be the fulfilment of one of our ambitions and which would allow us to be recognized as a nation throughout the world.

(Text):

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): Having waited for some time to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I might say that, if I could start off in the high gear achieved by the speaker who has just taken his seat, it would not take me long to get through with my remarks. But having waited to say a few words in this debate, it being one of the most important ones of the session, I am glad to have this opportunity now. This debate gives to all hon. members on either side of the house the opportunity to speak for the district which they represent in this parliament of Canada. For that reason it is one of the most important debates of the House of Commons, if not the most important one.

I was rather surprised when the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), who himself spoke in this debate for half of a labourer's day, was anxious at the opening of the debate to give it what we might term "the back door run" or to get rid of it in a couple of days. We have, however, listened to the great number of speeches which have been made. Many of the ministers have spoken, and some of them for the second time. It must, therefore, be an interesting debate to them. I can fully realize why the Prime Minister is anxious to have this debate shortened. An election is in the offing, and it would be well if the government could avoid criticism from the floor of the house with regard to their maladministration for the past four years.

When beginning his remarks, it is customary for a member to pay compliments and offer congratulations to those who have taken part in this debate. But as they have all received numerous congratulations, any adjectives that I might have to offer would be only a matter of repetition of what has been said by those who have spoken before me. I will, however, say "amen" to all the congratulations that have been heaped on the mover and seconder, and on the other speakers.

There are, however, two or three congratulations I should like to add. I am sorry that the Speaker himself has left the chamber. I intended to congratulate him on being able to hold his honourable position in view of reports circulating after the close of the house on June 30 to the effect that he was slated for some cabinet position, and in view of the shuffle that took place while we were at home. I might say that the cabinet was nearly all gone over. We now find ourselves wondering, when we come in here, just who is who, and what cabinet minister administers which portfolio.

At this time I should also like to congratulate the Prime Minister even though he is not here in the house just at the moment. I wish to congratulate him on attaining the highest position in the House of Commons although he has been a member of parliament for only a short time. He deserves those congratulations and I am glad to extend them. At the same time I sympathize with him, as do many others, in having bequeathed to him the leadership of an extremely sick party at the present time.

I might also congratulate my hon. leader, but he has been congratulated by everybody, even the Prime Minister; he was congratulated by all the speakers on our side of the house and by many on the other side. I will say this to him by way of congratulation. To this house "He came a hero strong his race to run." He has also received the hearty congratulations conveyed in the winning by his party of three by-elections since he became leader.

The speech from the throne is a governmental document prepared by the cabinet ministers and then placed in the hands of His Excellency by his constitutional advisers. Hence any remarks by way of criticism made by any member of parliament in this debate are not in any way directed toward His Excellency, either in person or in private or public life. One can therefore speak at almost any length and on any subject, as long as one uses the common parliamentary language.

As one views the speech from the throne one finds that it is similar to others which have come before this parliament from time to time. I might say it is, more than anything else, a detour from the real issues confronting the people, and which the people of Canada thought that we should have at this session of parliament. No doubt it was designed to lure my leader away from the course that he might take. However, he was not to be lured away. He took his own course, followed it, and won his spurs in his first speech in this House of Commons.

If time permits I shall say something on freights and freight rates; but something has arisen in the legislature in Prince Edward Island, which is in session at the present time, which almost bars me from doing that. When speaking on the address in the legislature of Prince Edward Island on February 23 last, the premier of Prince Edward Island said this:

> The dissenting seven provinces of Canada are making a strong impression. I think we are beating them right now.

He was referring to the powers that be who had increased the freight rates. He continued:

> We have held up increases already granted and I do not think the railroads will be allowed to charge the exorbitant rates that they have been asking for.

Therefore the premier of Prince Edward Island, when speaking for the seven provinces, said more than I would have said if I were speaking on the freight rates. However, there is one thing on which I should like to say a few words, namely, transportation. Transportation and freight rates, ferry auto charges and the Maritime Freight Rates Act of 1927 seem to be so interwoven that when one speaks on any of these subjects they all lead into that of transportation. Some newspapers, also many members of parliament and others, continue to make reference to the Maritime Freight Rates Act of 1927 as a subsidy or a charity handout to the maritime provinces. It is unfortunate that such misinformation extends even into the sittings of the railway committee of the House of Commons, and it is very harmful indeed.

The maritime provinces have suffered from the ever-increasing unconstitutional injustices in connection with the operation of the Intercolonial railway, which is perhaps the most important part of Canada's constitution. The report of the Duncan commission in 1926 discloses this injustice. The Maritime Freight Rates Act of 1927 is an admission of it, and the action of the federal government, partially to offset the unconstitutional injustice by paying both railways an amount which reduced their charges in accordance with the act, is also an admission of the injustice. The amount that has been paid is only a fraction of the amount of the unconstitutional overcharge to the maritime provinces. Here let me mention this fact in connection with the freight rates act. When the railways were amalgamated freight rates were greatly increased across Canada. Taking 100 as the basis on which freight rates were established, the average increase in the maritime provinces was 92 per cent, while 55 per cent was the average increase across the rest of Canada. When the Duncan commission studied this matter they found that this was an unconstitutional injustice to the maritime provinces. On that basis they made a recommendation that brought into effect the Maritime Freight Rates Act of 1927, and our rate of 92 per cent was reduced to equal the average rate of the rest of Canada. Consequently almost 20 per cent was paid to the two railways for the freight that they had carried.

I bring this to the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, in order that it may not be referred to as a subsidy or a handout. It is an effort to alleviate the injustice which had been imposed on the maritime provinces by reason of the overcharge of freight rates from the time of the amalgamation of the roads up to 1927. There is still a large amount owing to the maritime provinces for the years that they suffered these high rates as compared with the rest of Canada. That amount should be paid either in dollars and cents or in extra public works, which are long overdue in the maritime provinces. The way that they could start to pay it at this time would be by giving us some public works such as the bridge at Canso, the building of the Chignecto canal and, last but not least, giving Prince Edward Island a railway connection and living up to the terms of our going into confederation by treating the water which separates Prince Edward Island from the mainland as a bridge and not as part of the railway on which we are charged, which is against the terms of 1873, when we entered into confederation.

Time will not permit me to go into all the details of the maritime rates, but I wish to say that there is a better feeling in the maritime provinces now that we are to have a tenth province, another maritime province, which will help us, and make four provinces to fight for their maritime rights. For years we have been endeavouring to push our claims with the federal authorities, but we have been more or less discouraged. Some of the cabinet ministers have called us yappers because we were always talking about our freight claims and so forth. However, it does not matter what they term us; we are out for our rights and we are going to get them. If we do not get them from a Liberal government, we are sure that we shall get them from the Progressive Conservative government.

I want to deal with transportation in my own province, because this is the great problem faced by our farmers, fishermen, importers and exporters. This is the problem with which they have to deal, because we are not a manufacturing community. Our endeavours are more or less those of agriculture.

Sixty-five per cent of our people earn their livelihood from the land.

Fishing is our next largest industry. Freight rates offered our farmers, and means of transportation, are the all-important question with us. In the wintertime, from November until May, we have only one means of transportation, that of the Borden-Tormentine ferry. In the summertime we have the Wood Island-Cariboo route. Both of these, taken together, handle the service fairly well. However, we still want more service by way of transportation.

For instance, we are discriminated against because trucks are not allowed to travel free on the new ferry, using the Borden-Tormentine route. They are still being charged a rate, contrary to the terms under which we entered confederation. The heavy charges for the freight carried, as well as for the trucks, is by no means a satisfactory condition, so far as truck traffic by way of the ferry is concerned. Some slight reduction was made by the board of transport commissioners after their sitting at Charlottetown. While they had no jurisdiction over water rates, they did go down there and make some slight adjustment. When they got there they learned that they had no jurisdiction over water rates. I was glad to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) state in the house the other day that he knew that the board of transport commissioners had no right whatsoever to set freight rates for water carriage between any provinces, or between any province and any other British territory. This matter has been under discussion for some time, and I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister endorse my views in that connection—views which were in accordance with the terms of confederation.

The unfair part of the situation in connection with trucks is that while the ferry had no right to make a charge, according to our contract, they are nevertheless making a certain charge. They should carry the load free. I notice that some of the motor trucks are enclosed. The freight does not require handling, and in most instances those who are in charge never see it; nevertheless the weight is recorded, along with the weight of the truck, following which a rate somewhat lower than that of 1945 is charged.

That rate is charged for a certain class of goods including potatoes, turnips, hay and farmers' livestock. But supposing a farmer kills his hogs or his beef cattle, and wishes to take them across, he must pay the highest l.c.l. rate. However, if they are shipped as livestock they go at the lower rate. This is not the fault of the operators of the boat; they are just living up to the regulations.

[Mr. McLure.]

Truck operators find the men on the boat most courteous; but they must live up to the orders sent to them by the Canadian National Railways or by the Department of Transport—or both of them. These charges are made on dressed beef or pork because they are not considered products of the farm. How they come to that conclusion, I do not know.

Farmers should have a preferred rate on all those things. Then, if a farmer is bringing back a load, according to the regulations freight traveling from Tormentine to Borden is charged at the highest rate. I have reference to coal, Nova Scotia apples, lumber and many things the people of Prince Edward Island must buy from the other provinces. A change in these rates would benefit our farmers and our people generally in the maritimes.

As hon. members know, the car ferry Abegweit is the boat on that run, and she has been giving excellent service. However, that boat is not able to handle all the traffic. Consequently we are hoping to have a new boat on the Wood Island-Cariboo route when it opens in the spring.

I understand a delegation was here in Ottawa interviewing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) and placing before him the suggestion that we should have a new ferry within the next year. I do not know how successful they were. They could not have been very successful. One suggestion they made was that they themselves would build the new boat if their subsidy was increased by $50,000 and guaranteed for a period of ten years. I do not believe either proposition was successful, because when the delegation returned to Charlottetown the news items did not contain any glamorous report as to the way they had been received.

I understand the Abegweit was built to carry out the terms of confederation. For that purpose the ferry system was inaugurated by the Borden government. While the car ferry is handed over to the Canadian National Railways, and while the railways are the greatest users of the boat, at the same time they use it as a connecting link between the Prince Edward Island railway and the railways in the other provinces.

What we should have is a free rate across the water for all our products, both outgoing and incoming. Why should the Canadian National Railways, who at the present time are the subcontractors of this boat, exclude any other method of shipping goods, such as the use of trucks? They could dispense with the truck opposition by placing a high rate on the transportation of the truck and on the freight it carries. Both these procedures are unconstitutional and, according to the terms of 1873, an injustice to Prince Edward Island.

I am not going to say much more about transportation, but I should like to pay attention to another detour in the speech from the throne. The Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand), as the lord of Canada's post office business—and I wish he were in the house tonight to hear this—announced a net balance of profits of some $10 million. The figure given is $9,827,491. Like many others I am proud to see the Post Office Department piling up profits over the years. It is really a grand thing. However, the 33⅓ per cent wartime emergency tax on letter postage must have played a considerable part in piling up these surpluses, yet the Postmaster General has said that there will be no reduction in this tax. I am not arguing that it should be reduced, as I would rather see the Postmaster General use the money to give his rural mail couriers a chance to live by being paid sufficient for rendering the best service of any civil servants in Canada.

The mail couriers in my province, and I imagine the same remarks will apply to all provinces, are doing a wonderful work. They are wonderful men. They have to work almost every day in the year and are on the job through rain or shine. It has been brought to my attention that the department is rather niggardly with these mail couriers, and I should like to cite one case.

A few days ago the mail courier on a good route was offered the magnificent sum of six and a half cents per day to operate an extension of the route to the university near Charlottetown. This extension was to serve some 300 students and the staff and help at the university. The mail courier was quite ready to do the work for thirty or thirty-five cents per day, but all they would offer was six and a half cents per day and therefore the extension was not put into effect and the people at the university must continue to go after their own mail.

We have been promised from time to time that the problems of the mail couriers in Canada would be gone into thoroughly by this House of Commons and that adjustments would be made whereby these men would have some hope that after securing the necessary equipment their contract would be permitted to run for more than four years. At the present time the contract can be abolished if someone bids $1.50 or $2 lower. That is very discouraging. These men have no safeguard. All they have to do is their work, and they are doing it.

At the present time the department is offering mail contracts to veterans, and I am glad to see that being done. However, these contracts are being offered to veterans in receipt of small pensions and the suggestion is being made that perhaps they can bid a little lower than others and apply their pensions to what they receive. That is what I take objection to. Why should a veteran be asked to apply his small pension in order that a contract may be let below the regular contract price?

A short time ago a mail route in Queens county was advertised and tenders were asked for. It was stipulated that the tenderer must have a half-ton truck for mail delivery during the spring, summer and autumn and a snowmobile for the wintertime. They might just as well have added that he should have a small Moth plane equipped with special parachutes. A man could not tender for that contract unless he had a half-ton truck and could assure the department that he would have a snowmobile for the winter. The total equipment there would cost from $4,000 to $5,000, and yet the contract would be for only four years with no assurance beyond that. I do not know how many tenders were received but when the estimates of the department come down we will surely find out how many tenders have been put in for contracts on this basis. There are other matters in connection with mail service that I should like to deal with but we will have an opportunity to do this when the estimates are brought down.

In the few minutes I have left I should like to say a few words about a topic that has been discussed fairly well—taxation. In my province the burden, the annoyance and the perfect nonsense of taxation in connection with collecting and making out the forms falls most heavily upon the farmers. The farmers are quite willing to pay a legitimate tax but they are rebellious over being hounded by these inspectors or snoopers or whatever they are called. This whole thing is causing great concern to the farmers and labouring people.

Toward the close of the last session we made the great mistake of voting $19 million for the Department of National Revenue to cover temporary employees. I understand that that was largely to cover the employment of an army of tax collectors, many of whom were hired to spy on the farmers, labourers and small businessmen. They were armed with authority to go to the different dealers in the constituency to ask for information about their neighbours. The farmers in our province held a series of meetings to protest against the income tax form and the manner in which they are being hounded by the officials of this department.

A few days ago the income tax branch at Ottawa sued the president of the farmers' federation of Prince Edward Island. The courthouse was crowded when the trial started and when the prosecuting lawyer started to question the witness he used a form of question which it was impossible for the witness to answer. For instance, he was asking him what he had to eat for his Christmas dinner six years ago. He also asked such foolish questions as whether they had extra turkey for Thanksgiving. He refused to answer because he could not answer such questions, and then the prosecuting lawyer said: "If you do not confess to this charge that is laid against you I will withdraw it and bring in four charges more serious against you." I should like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) whether he considers that is justice in law.

There is another matter on which I am compelled to say something, although it has been mentioned so often now that I understand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) is going to abolish some of the taxes in his next budget. We have a tax on soft drinks and chocolate bars. I believe every member of parliament has received thousands of requests for the abolition of these taxes. It is a heavy tax; 40 per cent is very high indeed. I have a letter on my desk from one man complaining about it. He says that it caused him so much worry that he did less business and had to lay off a staff of some twenty men. It is cutting down on employment. On the one hand we have the generosity of the government, of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), who goes around and hands out the family allowances to the children. On the other hand we have the Minister of Finance coming around the corner and snatching it all from the little ones.

There is one form of taxation that has caused us a great deal of worry in my section of the country, the taxation on furs and conservation fur farming. Under the former Minister of Finance the Liberal party seemed determined to put fur farming off the map, and the former Minister of Finance almost did so. Now that he has left, however, we hope that the new minister will look into the matter and study it from a sane and honest point of view. For example, the government imposed a tax of 25 per cent, called a processing tax, on the raw skins. There was not very much objection to that although it made an ordinary garment, even though the tax was imposed in process, cost all the way from $10 to $150 more than it should have. After that tax had been in force for a year the fur merchants and fur farmers of Canada got after the Minister of Finance, and he stated that he would reduce the tax. He reduced the tax from 25 per cent to 15 per cent on the processing, but what did he do then? He had a real bludgeon behind him and he went to work. He reduced the tax to 10 per cent on the processing, and then on the finished article he imposed a tax of 8 per cent, which meant that the 25 per cent tax was increased from 2 per cent on the lowest grade of furs to 45 per cent on the best grade of furs. This heavy tax has put hundreds of concerns out of business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): I must remind the hon. gentleman that his time has expired.

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon my leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), moved that the Progressive Conservative amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne be amended by adding certain words. There are three very pertinent sections to that amendment. I propose to refer to them briefly this time. The first of the three important sections is:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have shown such studied indifference to the Social Credit financial proposals put before this house from time to time for bringing social security and freedom to every Canadian, and economic stability and prosperity to the country as a whole.

The second section reads:

> We also regret that Your Excellency's advisers have demonstrated such timorous diffidence in their failure to take up Social Crediters' oft-repeated challenge to debate in this house and show honest cause why the Social Credit proposals would not bring widespread security, happiness and contentment to the Canadian people.

The third section of the Social Credit amendment reads:

> We regret further that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to bring forward legislative and administrative provision for maintaining purchasing power at a level which would make possible the equitable distribution of our total production and thus cushion the Canadian economy against the onset of depression.

We proposed that amendment because of the fact that we are vitally concerned that the government should take the necessary action in order to guarantee stability of the Canadian economy, and to prevent a recurrence of a depression such as that which occurred between the two wars, and which was so devastating in character. We are fearful that, unless concrete action is taken to stabilize the Canadian economy, it will give rise to further encouragement to certain elements within our nation so that they—and I have no hesitation in naming them, the communists—may further their attempt, as I stated the other day, to undermine the very foundation upon which democracy rests.

Already the Canadian communists are becoming more vociferous in their advocacy of outright treason. It is becoming more obvious day by day that they are anticipating certain conditions, conditions in which they know the maggots of communism flourish. I am greatly agitated about this matter; I am greatly agitated about the extent to which subversive elements within the nation are being permitted to use the mails of the country by which to disseminate the treasonable propaganda which they are now disseminating throughout the nation. I have already had occasion to inquire from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) as to just what course of action the government contemplate taking in order to stop this. I tried to state this afternoon that, in my opinion, they were using the mails to defraud. Some may say that is an exaggeration, but I say their purpose is to defraud us of our freedom, to defraud us of our nation. Moreover, that section of the Criminal Code states that it is a criminal offence to use the mails to deceive. If deception were ever practised within this country it is now being practised on a widespread scale by the communist forces who are pleased to call themselves Labour-Progressives.

Mr. Speaker, within my constituency a communist hive has recently come to light. I have received two copies of a circular from two very indignant residents of the town of Sylvan Lake. They came in this form, unwrapped, through the mail. The contents of it are largely devoted to the north Atlantic security pact, which I do not propose discussing at this moment. For those who are gullible enough to believe it, it states that the signing of the pact will change the cold war into a shooting war. That is what they are telling the people of my constituency. Then it is said we are doing all that we are doing in connection with defence measures within this country behind a smoke screen, as they are pleased to call it, against Russian aggression. They come right out and use this expression:

> This is the modern hitlerite big lie.

Mr. Speaker, that reminds me of the type of propaganda these people put out in 1940 in their manifesto and which led directly to the action which the government took in outlawing the party. One may ask me, are you in favour of outlawing them? At the moment my attitude is this: If a skunk is raiding my chicken coop, I do not want to chase him down a hole and then have to dig him out. I would rather leave him on the surface where I can shoot him.

This circular proceeds to point out that the oil development in my own province, the building of the Alaska highway and the building of air bases in the city of Edmonton, are all part of this scheme of Canadian aggression. As I say, it is almost pitiful when you stop to realize that this is being put in the hands of the people throughout that district. The pamphlet then refers to a number of things to which I shall not refer, with the exception of this remark. It says:

> It is a lie that Canada's independence is threatened by the soviet union. The soviet union in its thirty-one years of existence has not destroyed the independence of any nation.

I remind them of Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and so on.

The people who receive the pamphlet are urged to write to me requesting that I vote against the signing of the north Atlantic security pact. I think I can probably save them the time of writing by putting the matter on record as I have, uttering words of outright condemnation of the policies they are advocating and the methods they are employing in an effort to disseminate this propaganda.

An editorial appeared in the Edmonton Bulletin on March 4, entitled "The Age of Tolerance." I think it is very significant and so important that I should put it on the record. It is a brief one, and reads as follows:

> The communist leaders of the United States, following the example of communist leaders in France, Italy and England have announced with defiant clarity that if Russia attacks their respective countries they will side with Russia. It seems to be an amazing thing that people can say such things and stay out of jail.

Incidentally, I would say that Tim Buck said as much in that questionnaire in Liberty magazine, I think it was, last November. If his statement is analysed, I think it will be found he said the same thing, but in a cunning, sly, communist way.

Continuing to quote from the editorial, I read:

> These vicious statements indicate, of course, what communism in the democratic countries really means. It means plain and unadulterated subservience to Russia. It means that communists, quite definitely and frankly, put Russia first.
>
> Once upon a time, in a rougher and more manly age, statements of this kind were designated as treason. But this, of course, is the age of tolerance. We have graduated beyond the point of letting people say and think what they like. Today, they can do as they like, including cutting the throats of their own country with impunity.
>
> The amazing thing is that, with all this namby-pamby deference to that kind of freedom, which is only unbridled licence, the communists and their leftist friends still howl to high heaven about the "intolerance" of the democracies.
> If anyone ventures to resent the blatant propaganda of leftists and suggests that traitors be muzzled, there is at once a scream about the narrow bigotry of anti-reds and a wild protest about the stifling of freedom. It seems to many that our smug complacency in the face of such repeated threats indicates nothing so much as the urgent need for a psychiatric examination.

In leaving that, Mr. Speaker, I think two things are extremely important: First, as I said earlier, we should endeavour to seek out every means of applying whatever measures we can to remove the conditions in which communism is bred and in which it develops. Secondly, I have come to the conclusion that some action should be taken to prevent the dissemination throughout the length and breadth of this country of the type of propaganda to which I have referred.

Mr. Low: A treasonable type.

Mr. Shaw: A very treasonable type of propaganda.

Coming back to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to me to observe that, since it was moved very few of the speakers who have participated in this debate have chosen to deal with the amendment as such. I am not going to suggest for one moment that hon. members opposite refrained from dealing with the contents of that amendment because they did not know anything about social credit. Deep down in their souls they know they cannot refute the principles which we have advanced over a period of fourteen years in this house. They are not prepared to stand up during this debate and refute them if they can. When they are traipsing about the country I think it would be the better part of wisdom for them not to tell the people they do not understand social credit, because I am satisfied the people will immediately conclude they are not telling the truth.

During the course of the debate this afternoon, the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) made a short reference to social credit. I refer to it only for the purpose of making a correction. He observed that he had read Major Douglas' books; and, if I understood him correctly, he stated he did not agree with his principles as a solution of our economic problems because it is not money that counts but goods. I believe that is what he said. I want to emphasize, for the benefit of this house, that we have never at any time argued that money counts and not goods. In his book "Warning Democracy" Major Douglas stated this:

Looked at from this point of view, money is simply a ticket. A railway ticket is, in the truest sense, a limited form of money and differs only from any other sort of money in that the owner of it only believes, and is only justified in believing, that he will receive in return for it a particular form of service, i.e., transportation.

I want to read one other paragraph from another book of his, "Credit Power and Democracy", in which he states, as we have always stated—

An hon. Member: What page?

Mr. Shaw: These quotations are from the "Douglas Manual", and they are taken from his various publications. Major Douglas states:

Money is only a mechanism by means of which we deal with things—it has no properties except those we choose to give to it. A phrase such as "There is no money in the country with which to do such and so" means simply nothing, unless we are also saying "The goods and services required to do this thing do not exist and cannot be produced, therefore it is useless to create the money equivalent of them."

Further on he says:

For instance, it is simply childish to say that a country has no money for social betterment, or for any other purpose, when it has the skill, the men and the material and plant to create that betterment. The banks or the treasury can create the money in five minutes, and are doing it every day, and have been doing it for centuries.

Mr. Blackmore: One would think that an intelligent man could understand that.

Mr. Shaw: I quote that excerpt just in answer to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and to stress the point, as I said a moment ago, that we have not emphasized that it is money that counts but rather goods.

In the next few moments I should like to go back a few years, and it is not for the purpose that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) found it necessary to go back sixteen years today. I think he went back sixteen years, if I heard him correctly—

Mr. Gardiner: Twenty years.

Mr. Shaw: —to try to cover up some of the tracks he left in the sandhills of Saskatchewan when he was premier of that province. I am going back for quite another purpose. I might also say in passing that I think it is rather unfortunate that one should still have to cover up his tracks sixteen years after he made them.

We go back to 1930, Mr. Speaker, and I am doing it for this reason. When it comes to assessing political parties and what they stand for, it is often necessary to go back and examine some of the records. In 1930 the Conservative party was unfortunate enough to have taken over the reins of government in this Dominion of Canada. I say "unfortunate enough" because of the policies which the Liberals had pursued for some nine years prior to that time, and because of the conditions which had developed in the country by 1930 because of the pursuance of those policies. I remember our Conservative friends coming in in 1930 and if I remember it correctly their battlecry was: We will blast our way into the markets of the world. They did some blasting all right; but if history indicates anything at all, to me it indicates that they practically blasted us off the face of the earth as a consequence of their policies.

An hon. Member: And themselves also.

Mr. Shaw: Yes. Somebody interjects, and themselves also.

By 1930, in spite of the fact that a depression was anticipated—in fact, that we were moving headlong into that depression—there was absolutely no breakdown whatsoever in Canadian production. The Canada Year Book for 1937 indicates that for those years 1931, 1932, and 1933 Canada's productive capacity was greater than it ever had been before. In fact, we had more houses and more goods of all kinds than we had had prior to that time. Yet the Conservatives were pleased to tell us that we were headed into a depression. Almost overnight 50 per cent of the purchasing power of this nation disappeared. Almost overnight the wheels of industry started to slow down and men were dumped out on their heads. Because of the fact that their right to eat seemed to be contingent upon their ability to procure remunerative employment, they experienced great difficulty in providing for themselves and for their dependents. Obviously, for the conditions which existed, the Conservatives of that day laid the entire blame upon overproduction within our nation. They no doubt saw the piling up of huge surpluses. But they seemed to fail to see at the same time three-quarters of a million unemployed and almost another million living on a substandard level. Their battlecry was: We are going to blast our way into the markets of the world. What actually happened, Mr. Speaker, between 1930 and 1935?

The Conservative party kept in operation all of the trade agreements which had been in effect up to that time. They also entered into a comprehensive preferential agreement with the United Kingdom. They also for the first time entered into a formal agreement with New Zealand, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and the Irish Free State. Moreover, they entered into a trade treaty of broad scope with France. They entered into a commercial arrangement securing most-favoured-nation treatment from Germany. They also engineered an arrangement in order to secure most-favoured-nation treatment from Austria and Brazil. They also drew up a comprehensive agreement with Poland. In spite of those agreements, and in spite of the fact that they utilized a good deal of energy in an effort to blast their way into the markets of the world, a condition of tragedy continued to prevail within our own nation.

In the first place, they seemed to forget that many of these surpluses were not real surpluses in any sense of the word. We had a great demand in Canada for surpluses, but unfortunately there was not an effective demand. By 1935 we find that we had 259,918 families on relief within this nation; the number of individuals totalled 1,229,935. That was by the spring of 1935—February, to be exact. After all, that was supposed to be two years beyond the depth of the depression. In spite of the fact that certain definite refunding operations took place during that time, we find that the debt jumped from $2,544 million approximately to over $3,205 million; and the interest paid during that same period of time amounted to approximately $673 million. So not only did we have a vast army of unemployed within the country and a vast number of people living on a substandard level, but hand in hand with that condition debts were piled up.

What was our export picture during that time? The Conservative party from 1930 until 1935, after entering into these export agreements, did export during the eleven months prior to the end of February, 1934, $527,391,000 worth of goods. At the same time they imported $386,279,000 worth. In other words, they managed to get rid of $141,112,000 worth of our production for which no goods were brought back to the country in return. In fact, the records indicate that they even exported some of their imports in order to try to solve the problem. I believe that $5,585,000 worth of goods that had been imported were exported during the same period of time.

For the eleven months just preceding the budget of 1935, exports exceeded imports by $133,867,000. Their policy of exporting was working, but the weakness in the whole thing was that they were absolutely refusing to bring back into the country or import goods in return for those which they exported. They knew that if Canadians could not purchase our entire Canadian production, there was no conceivable chance for the Canadian people to buy goods which were brought into Canada in exchange for goods which were exported.

I have already emphasized that we had no effective market within our country. When I try to assess the Conservative picture at the present time these are questions which come to my mind and which I hope the members of the Progressive Conservative party will endeavour to answer at least before an election. We are interested in the condemnation of the vast number of 142,000 orders in council. I am very much opposed to government by order in council, but at the same time if anyone thinks that reducing the number of orders in council that a government passes will in itself solve the economic disabilities which inflict the country, then definitely he has another think coming. I should like to hear from the Progressive Conservatives whether or not they consider recessions and depressions inevitable. I should like to know whether they consider that poverty in the midst of plenty is an unavoidable consequence of recessions or depressions. I should like to know whether they agree that it is a sound policy to export from a country more than that country imports. I might interject at this point that when you do that you simply reduce the standard of living of the Canadian people.

I should like to know from them whether they consider that man's right to live is dependent entirely upon remunerative employment. Incidentally, I might also direct these questions to those across the way on the Liberal benches. I should like to know whether or not both Liberals and Conservatives consider that debt and interest are legacies which are bound to accrue as a consequence of the development of any nation. This is a most deplorable thing. As one goes back over the years since confederation, one wonders at the great development that has taken place in this country, but one also considers the absurdity that during that development a debt of approximately $16 billion has been piled on the shoulders of the Canadian people, a debt load carrying interest charges somewhere in the neighbourhood of $450 million a year. If a businessman were to pursue the same policies that the government pursues in connection with financing, that businessman would not last very long.

I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, why it should be any different so far as the government is concerned. I said a moment ago that I am not satisfied, and the Canadian people are not satisfied, merely to have the Liberals and Conservatives fighting over this question whether there shall or shall not be orders in council. I am not satisfied to hear them merely arguing whether there should be this many civil servants or that many. I am inclined to believe that we must go considerably deeper than that. I would emphasize the fact that if we are assured by both Liberals and Conservatives that depressions are not inevitable; that poverty in the midst of plenty is not inevitable; that man's right to live is not dependent entirely upon his right to find remunerative employment; if they can assure us that debt and interest must not be inevitable legacies accruing to us as a result of developing this great nation of ours: then we and the Canadian people will commence to understand at least just what hope does lie in either of these parties.

We have already put ourselves on record as being in the main opposed to the policies advocated by the C.C.F. I am speaking for myself when I say that I am always very fearful that—and I am not going to say that all socialists are communists, although I will say I can never forget that all communists are socialists—into any organization, political or otherwise, men of evil purposes are bound to worm their way. I do not think there is any organization which can claim to be free from that. When I find advocated policies which I, at least, feel take you on the road toward communism, then I am just a bit afraid that, if we are carried so far, the wrong man will take the reins and we shall be plunged into the morass from which we shall not be able to extricate ourselves.

I am not going to occupy very much more of the time of the house, Mr. Speaker. We feel that this amendment of ours, very clearly explained by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) this afternoon, taken in conjunction with his budget speech of last year, offers to hon. members sound and concrete proposals for the stabilizing of our economy, the establishment of prosperity within our nation, and the bringing of security, happiness and contentment to our Canadian people. We urge all hon. members to give it their consideration.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): The amendment which has been moved by the leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Drew) and the subamendment which is now being considered as moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) indicate that there is some lack of confidence in the present administration. A good deal of evidence has been produced in the one hundred or more speeches which have been made during this debate, which would give abundant proof of that suggestion. Tonight I wish to indicate one other small and particular point in which I feel that there is justification for questioning the wisdom of the present government in that particular.

I am going to deal with one point which concerns a great many men in a very personal way. In the speech from the throne reference is made to the fact that some legislation will be introduced regarding the administration of the armed forces of the crown. On February 4, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) indicated that there was to be a change in the old traditional policy of paying prize money to the men of the Royal Canadian Navy, and he elaborated on that point in a statement which he made on February 18, when he explained the policy which the present government proposes to follow, a policy which breaks with all naval tradition, a policy which I suggest breaks faith with many a gallant lad who joined the Royal Canadian Navy at the commencement of the war.

I wish to take a few moments just to trace the history of this prize money, how it became part of naval tradition, how it is a century-old custom under which sailors have received a certain bounty, a certain grant of money to augment the pay which they received.

It was first introduced in the reign of Henry VIII. At that time the various ports of the United Kingdom were expected to produce a quota of warships and their crews. When the war was over His Majesty divided up among these ports the money which had accrued from the sale of the prizes which had been captured during the naval engagements. Certain changes and modifications were brought in during the reign of Charles II, when it was decided that there were different conditions under which captures were made. There were certain ships taken when they were in port; others were captured on the high seas. A distinction was made there. Certain rights, or droits, as they were called then, of the admiralty, or droits of the crown, were made under that decision. Those rights going to the lord high admiral were used for the purpose of developing the fleet.

The rights which became the prerogative of the crown were divided up after the campaign was over among the seamen who had fought at sea. It was an act of grace; but it was an act which was followed down through the centuries, starting at the time of King Charles II.

Then, during the reign of William IV, the lord high admiral surrendered his rights to the exchequer—that is, moneys which arose from the capture of ships actually in port. But the rights to the crown from ships captured at sea still remained the prerogative of the crown; and the crown in those days still divided up that money among the sailors who were sailing in the fleet during the campaign.

So it went on, right down to Nelson's day. In Nelson's time one might say an evil practice crept in, because most of the prizes captured were captured by the light ships of the navy—the frigates and cruisers. Anyone who will read any of the "lives" of Lord Nelson will see how he complained against certain of his captains who spent most of their time chasing merchantmen of the enemy rather than perhaps engaging in battle. There was a tendency to do that. And as a counterbalance to that, the prize bounty, known as blood money, was introduced. This was paid to the ships of the line. When they sank an enemy ship the crew of the ship engaged in that battle received a certain amount of money, according to the size of the ship sunk and according to the number of the crew on the vessel. This was frequently referred to as blood money.

However, changes have taken place and, as the years have gone by, blood money has been discontinued. But prize money was paid after the first world war. Large sums of prize money were paid then, because the Germans had their merchantmen on the seven seas, and our ships were able to capture a large number of them. At the conclusion of the second world war the amount of money available for prize moneys was not nearly as large as that at the conclusion of the first world war, simply because the Germans had brought their ships into their own ports, and the majority of those still on the high seas were scuttled.

However, last November in the British House of Commons a prize bill was introduced. An estimate had been made by the lords of the admiralty as to the amount of money which would be available from the prizes which had been captured. That money was divided among the nations of the commonwealth which had fleets on the seas; and because the air force had taken part and assisted in many of those captures, a certain proportion was allocated to the Royal Air Force—the exchequer still keeping its one-third. And when I say that it kept its one-third, it was decided as a rather arbitrary arrangement that the exchequer, according to the tradition of the old droits of the admiralty, should keep one-third of the moneys to go into the consolidated revenue fund.

There was considerable debate in the British House of Commons as to the method in which the prize moneys would be divided among the air force and the various ratings of the navy. A decision was reached, in so far as the amount of money available for the United Kingdom services was concerned. This decision appeared in British Hansard of November 12, at page 863, in a speech made by Mr. John Dugdale upon moving second reading of the prize bill. Mr. Dugdale, parliamentary and financial secretary to the admiralty, said on that occasion:

> It is the intention of the government that all naval officers and ratings, marine officers and other ranks and also merchant seamen who served in the navy under T-124—

T-124, I might explain, was a special type of enlistment of men serving in the armed merchantmen who came under certain special regulations of discipline. Some Canadians served under T-124. I believe some of them were serving on the armed merchant cruiser Rawalpindi which, if I recall correctly, was sunk off the coast of Iceland early in the war. He continues:

—and similar agreements, by which they became subject to naval discipline,—

Mind you, they were merchant seamen.

—shall be regarded as entitled to prize money if they have rendered six months service at sea and if they have not, for any reason, such as misconduct, forfeited their entitlement. Service at sea exceeding six months will not, however, attract any greater sum by way of prize, nor, in view of the small amount to be distributed, will it allow proportionate shares for those who have not served for that full qualifying period.

That is, every sailor of the Royal Navy, every sailor who served under a special agreement such as T-124, would be entitled to his share of prize money. There was a graduated scale, so far as the British navy is concerned, in respect of that prize money.

Then, later in his speech, the financial secretary said:

It looks as though an ordinary seaman will get between £5 and £6.

That would be his share of the prize money. And, in closing his address, he used these words:

Many men throughout the country have been expecting to get this money. They have been expecting it for some years. They have been rightly expecting to get it and, small though these payments are, they will, I hope, give just a little pleasure to many men who have given a lot of service to their country.

That was the closing sentence of the address made by the financial secretary to the admiralty. In further discussions on the bill it was indicated that, in future, prize money would not be paid if there should be any occasion on which it was necessary for the Royal Navy to capture a prize. One can see the reason for that argument; one can see the logic of it. The pay of sailors has gone up since Nelson's day and there are pension schemes which provide for these men serving in the fleet which they never had in bygone days. I suggest that the financial secretary to the admiralty has adopted the honourable course. He has recognized the fact that British sailors joined the navy at the commencement of this war knowing the old traditions, realizing that if they served through the war and were fortunate enough to go to sea when prizes were captured they would be entitled, by the ancient law and tradition of the navy, to a grant from the crown as a proportion of that prize money. I say that that was an honourable course that was taken by the financial secretary to the admiralty. He went on to announce that in future prize money would not be paid because of changed conditions.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

But what has this government done? Has this government adopted the same course? No, sir; it has given a high-handed arbitrary ruling that Canadian sailors who served in the Canadian fleet will not receive any grant or prize money, will not receive the money to which they are entitled. There may be Canadian men who left the shores of Canada to serve in the Royal Navy or on armed merchantmen who will receive the prize money grant given by the admiralty, but the men who served in the Canadian navy are not to receive any prize money. Without asking their consent, this government has decided that that money will be placed in some benevolent fund.

I suggest that in 1939 and 1940 many a gallant Canadian lad who joined the Royal Canadian Navy was motivated, shall we say, by the romance that lies behind the history of the sea. Perhaps, as it were, he heard the bosun piping "Boarders Away" and perhaps he thought of himself with a cutlass between his teeth swinging onto a captured prize. He believed that when the war was over he would get a share of the rewards that were being handed out for his gallant action according to the traditions of the sea and according to the traditions of the navy down through the centuries.

However, now we are told that that is not to be done. I should like to quote from page 670 of our Hansard where is reported an announcement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) on February 18. In making his announcement the minister intimated that the amount would be only $10 each. I quoted previously how the financial secretary to the admiralty estimated the amount as being from £5 to £6. For some reason or other the Minister of National Defence estimates that it will be only about $10 each. But I am not talking about the amount of the money, it does not matter whether it will be only sufficient to buy a bottle of rum; it is the principle that is important. The minister goes on to say:

A distribution on this basis would, it was considered after careful examination, be very much less desired by naval personnel themselves than to have the money used by their own representatives to meet needy cases.

I do not know how that careful examination was made, but I do know that I have received a large number of letters from sailors and from sailors' organizations on the Pacific coast indicating in no uncertain terms that that is not their wish, that they regard the money as being their money, and that nobody has the right to take it away from them. I should like to place on the record a letter I have received from the naval officers association of Victoria. The secretary of that association states:

> This meeting instructs the executive committee to write an extremely strong letter to the Minister of National Defence protesting against the high-handed proposal of the naval board to allocate the prize money of the Royal Canadian Navy without any reference to the wishes of those who by every tradition and precedent are entitled to share in its distribution.

He goes on to state that Canada has received this money from the United Kingdom as prize money, and as nothing else, and that therefore it is held in trust as such by this government for the men who are entitled to it. These men feel that the government has no right to implement such a proposal as placing this money in another fund instead of giving it to the men who earned it. He concludes by saying that the government of Canada is merely putting forward a pathetic excuse for furthering the unjust proposal of the naval board when it suggests that the administrative arrangements would be too difficult if they were to attempt to distribute the money.

In a minute I will explain how the admiralty is distributing the money, and hon. members will see that there are no administrative difficulties. I have a telegram here from a group of officers who form part of the naval section of the Canadian legion in Victoria. They condemn the action of the department of naval service in recommending that the naval prize money be allocated to the naval benevolent trust fund without obtaining the consent of the Royal Canadian Navy and reserve personnel to whom it legally belongs.

I admit that the legality may be questioned because it has always been an act of grace on the part of the crown, but sometimes long usage and ancient traditions establish a form of legality. It is dangerous to tamper with naval tradition. I have another resolution passed by the Esquimalt branch of the Canadian legion which is composed largely of naval men. They unanimously endorsed the resolution I just read. I have various letters from individual ex-naval personnel. Here is one which reads as follows:

> Why should this large sum of money be turned over to a fund, the existence of which I'll warrant is practically unknown to many ex-navy men and/or their dependents; and if it is known or suspected, the method of making an appeal to it in case of need is practically a mystery?

I could go on and give many more examples. I have a file composed entirely of letters that I have received on this subject. I have introduced the matter merely to say that I question the minister's authority when he makes the statement that he believes it is the wish of the majority of the naval personnel that this money should be placed in the naval benevolent fund instead of being distributed among them. Why should it be put in the naval benevolent fund? Have not the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg), and the one who gave up his post to go to the other place not very long ago, openly stated in the house that we have the finest veterans legislation anywhere in the world? Has the Minister of Veterans Affairs not got certain trust funds which can be used for exceptional cases? Why is there a need to put additional moneys in this benevolent fund if our naval personnel, our veterans, are, as they should be, well looked after by the present government?

I said I would refer to how the admiralty is carrying out this terrific administrative task. In the discussion on the bill in the House of Commons in London it is stated that notices will be sent to every post office, that application forms will be available there, and any ex-sailor who feels that he is entitled to this prize money may, within the next twelve months, send in his application form and it will be considered. His record will be turned up and the money will be sent to him. There is no great administrative difficulty about that. We have post offices from one end of the country to the other. Notices can be posted. Ex-sailors will hear very quickly if there is a chance for them to get the money. I can see them going to the post offices, filling in their application forms and sending them in. There will be no particular difficulty about it. We are creating a situation here in which certain Canadian sailors who were fortunate enough to serve with the Royal Navy, or on some special assignment with the Royal Navy, will be receiving the prize money. On the other hand, our own Canadian sailors who were proud to serve at one time in the Royal Canadian Navy—and I hope they will always be proud to serve—are not going to receive the prize money which each and every one of them thinks he is fully entitled to receive. Therefore I ask the government, and the Minister of National Defence, to revise their decision; I ask them to follow the practice which has been followed by the admiralty in the British House of Commons and divide the prize money, as has been the ancient custom of the service, to which these Canadian sailors believe that they are entitled. Should there be wars in the future, and should the government decide that it is not desirable to continue any longer the practice of paying out prize money, let the government announce it now. Then men who join the navy in the future will realize that perhaps it is an outgrown custom. But why break faith with Canadian sailors who joined the navy in the belief that they would be entitled to such moneys? I do not care how small the amount is; it is the principle behind the question. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) is trying, and rightly so, to build up the services of the country. Active recruiting campaigns have been carried on for the last twelve months. I venture to say that many members on all sides of the house—I know I have—have taken part in these campaigns. I have urged the young men of the country to get into the armed forces. But such action as has been taken in this case is not encouragement. It is a petty, cheap, despicable business of taking a few dollars from men who gave so much during the war and putting them into certain funds when we believe that these funds are well endowed, when we know that there are large balances in them. Surely the government can rise above such petty cheese-paring practices and give these sailors the money which is their due, and to which they are entitled.

On motion of Mr. Blackmore the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. St. Laurent: In spite of indications today, I hope that the debate on the address will be concluded tomorrow. If it is, we shall then proceed with the resolution for the introduction of a bill to extend certain emergency powers. I should like to remind hon. members that there are certain measures which, if not renewed, will expire on the 27th of March. I think it should be regarded as the responsibility of the house to express itself as to whether or not they should be renewed, and not allow them to lapse by default. There is not very much time left. There is sufficient time to deal with them in an orderly manner if it is the desire of hon. members that they be dealt with in that fashion, but I think we shall have to move tomorrow, even if this debate is not concluded by the end of the sitting then, to proceed with the emergency legislation from and after Monday the 14th.

At 10.30 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on February 22, 1949.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 11, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

MANITOBA

ACHIEVEMENTS OF CITIZENS IN CURLING AND BALLET

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to call the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the rink led by Mr. Ken Watson of Winnipeg emerged for the third time as the best curling rink in Canada, thus bringing much credit to himself, his colleagues and his province.

Manitoba's obvious superiority does not end there, however, for last week in Toronto the Winnipeg ballet club, under the skilled direction of Miss Gweneth Lloyd, also brought honour to Manitoba by asserting its supremacy over all comers by taking extra honours in the Toronto festival.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he realizes that in his home city last night one of the finest curling teams in the world won the Canadian championship for the third time.

Some hon. Members: Too late!

Mr. Ross (Souris): They should be congratulated, I believe, on their fine victory.

Hon. Colin Gibson (Secretary of State): I had the pleasure of seeing the Manitoba rink curl in Hamilton, and I do want to congratulate them on their victory.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROVISION FOR EVENING SITTINGS 7.30 TO 10.30 UNTIL LAST SITTING DAY IN APRIL

On the order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. St. Laurent that, except on Wednesdays, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair at six o'clock p.m. until seven-thirty, and shall adjourn the house at ten-thirty p.m. without question put, unless the closure rule (standing order No. 39) be then in operation, this order to be in effect until and upon the last sitting day of the month of April.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): May I suggest that this order be allowed to stand? It is not immediately practicable to proceed with it, because we have not reached the end of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. If by good fortune we do reach the end of the debate today, I shall ask the house to come back to this motion and deal with it then.

IMMIGRATION

ORDERS IN COUNCIL GAZETTED AND TABLED—EXCEPTIONS UNDER REGULATIONS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): At the risk of making some of our newspaper friends believe that I am providing the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) with another easy victory, I should like to deal with a couple of questions that he has placed on the order paper, one of which was passed as an order for return.

The first question was as follows:

1. How many orders in council relative to the provisions of the Immigration Act have been passed since the first day of July, 1947?

2. Of said orders in council, how many have not been (a) published in the Canada Gazette; (b) tabled in parliament?

Answer: 121, of which ten were published in the Canada Gazette and none tabled in parliament.

The other question, passed as an order for return, read as follows:

1. How many written permits provided for by section four of the Immigration Act were issued by the minister during each of the years 1947 and 1948 (a) authorizing any person to enter Canada; (b) authorizing any person to remain in Canada; and in either case without being subject to the provisions of the said act?

2. How many of these permits have been included in a return laid before parliament within thirty days after the commencement of the next ensuing session of parliament in each of the said years?

Answer: 1. 1947—twenty-four authorizing persons to enter Canada and three authorizing persons already here to remain in Canada; 1948—twenty-five authorizing persons to enter Canada and twenty-six authorizing persons already here to remain in Canada.

2. All the above permits were included in the following returns: For 1947—January 28, 1948, Votes and Proceedings, page 94; for 1948—January 27, 1949, Votes and Proceedings, page 16.

The answers to two other questions, which have also been passed as orders for return, will be tabled as soon as the necessary information has been collected.

I have had a careful check made of all the orders in council relative to the provisions of the Immigration Act, including those orders regarding the entry into Canada of individuals or groups of individuals during the period from July 1, 1947, to March 4, 1949.

As will be noted from one of the answers just given, there were 121 orders in council in all. Included in this total were eleven orders of general application amending the regulations. Of these, ten were published in the Canada Gazette; the eleventh—P.C. 4852 of November 26, 1947—merely repealed certain obsolete orders in council and its publication was therefore not considered necessary. Next there were sixteen orders in council dealing with unnamed groups of persons, such as the displaced persons, the Maltese, the Estonians, the movement of orphan children, and the like. Then there were nineteen orders in council of an administrative or executive character. Lastly there were seventy-five orders in council which waived the provisions of the general immigration regulations in regard to the persons named therein.

I now wish to table copies of all the orders in council included in the four groups to which I have referred. This in fact includes all orders in council relating to the Immigration Act that have been passed during the period July 1, 1947 to March 4, 1949. The tabling of these orders in council will also serve as a return to the motion on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Ross).

I think I should take advantage of this occasion to say a word about the manner in which the government—not only this government but all preceding governments—have administered the question of exceptions under the regulations for the admission of immigrants.

Immigration into Canada is controlled by the terms of the Immigration Act and by the regulations made in accordance with those terms. The act does not define the classes or categories of persons who are admissible to Canada as immigrants. On the other hand it does define certain prohibited classes, including persons suffering from some forms of mental or physical ailment, criminals, advocates of the use of force or violence against organized governments, spies and certain others enumerated in the terms of the statute. Persons within these prohibited classes cannot be admitted to Canada as immigrants unless and until the Immigration Act is amended by parliament. On the other hand it is in the general orders in council that one finds in the definition of persons who are from time to time admissible.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

The reason for such an arrangement is to provide a certain flexibility which would not be possible if every changing circumstance had to be met by an amendment to the act. Because the regulations made under the act can be altered by order in council, this provides the flexibility without which the whole administration of the Immigration Act would be so rigid as to be practically unworkable.

It is of course inevitable that in dealing with human beings, as is the case in the administration of the Immigration Act, special circumstances will arise in which it is proper to make exceptions to the general rules. This happens most frequently as a result of humanitarian considerations. For example, a person is found to be living in Canada who entered several years ago contrary to the regulations. In the meantime he has become well established, is married to a Canadian citizen, and has a family. In such circumstances, if the regulations had been embodied in the act, it would have been necessary to pass a special act of parliament to provide for the admission of that one person. Under the procedure establishing the regulations by order in council, however, it is possible for the governor in council to provide for his admission, and that is quite frequently done.

Another example of the kind of thing that is handled in this way would be found in the passage of an order in council to permit the admission to Canada of a Swiss manufacturer who desires to come to this country with certain capital and technical knowledge to establish himself in business here. Under the existing regulations he is inadmissible, but by the passage of an order in council his admission can be authorized.

The whole movement of displaced persons to Canada has been provided for by order in council.

The members of the house will recall that at the beginning of the depression, the government of the day, under the authority of section 38 of the act, passed order in council P.C. 695 of March 21, 1931, which practically prohibited the landing in Canada of immigrants of all classes and occupations except those coming from the British isles and the United States. This order in council was amended from time to time as it became desirable to widen the field of immigration. Therefore, when for the reasons I have mentioned it is desirable to admit persons who are not classed as admissible under this order in council, new orders are passed waiving the prohibition.

As I have said before, there is nothing new about this procedure. It has always been followed.

It might be of interest to hon. members to know—and I am not citing this in any critical mood—that during the period from November 1, 1930, to October 23, 1935, two hundred and seventy-five such orders in council were passed in regard to 4,173 persons, waiving the provisions of the restrictive regulations. May I point out that this was during a time when there was great unemployment and there were felt to be very good reasons for restricting immigration. None of these orders was published. But it shows that even in those times there were considered to be that number of cases which were worthy of special treatment.

I should also say a word about the alleged "secrecy" of these orders in council. In fact, of course, there is nothing at all secret about them. When an order in council is of a general character, changing the regulations or affecting categories of persons, that order is published in the Canada Gazette. On the other hand, when the order in council deals with groups of individuals or specific individuals, it is normally considered to be of interest only to the persons immediately concerned and it is not published. Information about it, however, can be obtained by application to the immigration branch.

Perhaps I can summarize what I have said in this way.

There is nothing secret about the immigration orders in council.

There is nothing new about this method of administering the act. It is the procedure that was envisaged when the act was passed and it has been followed by all governments. These orders from 1930 to 1935 were not published or tabled. They were passed in the usual course, as have been those made since.

I think this would be an appropriate time to refer to statements attributed by the press to the hon. member for Lake Centre.

According to the Montreal Gazette of March 9, the hon. member is reported to have taken steps to determine why the federal government has not tabled all special immigration permits, covering cases not covered by the Immigration Act. This statement appears to be confusing two different things. Section 4 of the Immigration Act provides that the minister may issue a written permit authorizing any person to enter Canada, or having entered or landed in Canada, to remain therein without being subject to the provisions of the act. These permits are limited in time; they do not grant and cannot be used to allow permanent entry. The statute requires that they must be reported to the house within thirty days of the opening of the session, and that is always done. The return for the calendar year 1948, as I have already said, was tabled at the beginning of this session, and showed that fifty-six persons, and fifty-six persons only, were granted such permits. Of these twenty were Polish veterans.

With regard to the other category of persons, that is, those who have been admitted by order in council, I have fully explained the situation in the course of the statement I have just made.

But I want to make it absolutely clear that the department has invariably reported all cases of persons admitted by minister's permit as is required by the act, and this year the report, which was required to be made within thirty days, was made within three days, of the opening of the session.

I should like to refer to another statement attributed to the same hon. member. The Ottawa Journal last Tuesday quoted him as saying that by the use of "secret" orders in council, the government may provide an "underground railway by which thousands of aliens are entering the country, completely by-passing the Immigration Act . . . " May I say emphatically that it is a complete distortion of the facts to suggest that there are orders in council providing "an underground railway" or "by-passing the Immigration Act". These orders in council have been passed in accordance with the provisions of the act and in accordance with long established practice.

Because of the controversies which have arisen over this, I felt it my duty towards the Canadian people and their representatives in this house to establish the facts in their true light, so that whatever differences there may be as to the wisdom of particular decisions, there may be no further doubt as to the legality of the procedure, and no excuse for allegations that there has been any concealment or secrecy.

I now table the return I have just mentioned.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say a word in reply to the statement made by the Prime Minister? First he suggested casually that his answers to the questions could not be interpreted as an easy victory for any hon. member, and with that I agree. The tabling of these orders by the Prime Minister and the attitude he has shown in the last two or three days is a victory for the cause of the restoration to parliament of its right to know what is being done.

The Prime Minister on March 9 tabled a list of the first one hundred orders in council, beginning on July 1, 1948, and a further one hundred beginning on January 1, 1949. He suggested the other day when he brought this matter to the attention of the house that, if there was a request, a like summary would be made for the period not covered, from August 1. I suggest, so that the record be complete, that that list be provided.

One word with regard to secret orders in council. It is all very well—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would remind the hon. member for Lake Centre that there is no motion before the house. As the hon. member knows, it is not the practice to permit a debate upon a statement made by a member of the government. The hon. member, if he wishes, may ask for information from the Prime Minister, but I cannot permit debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a point of order, sir, the Prime Minister went out of his way to make a reference to myself which was not necessary and which was totally irrelevant to the matter being discussed. All I wish to do is to answer the point made by the Prime Minister with regard to secret orders in council.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Abbott: Go ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: An order in council is secret when members of parliament have no knowledge of it unless they get in touch with the proper office, give the number of the order and ask for its production. In other words, before a member of parliament can inform himself about an order in council he first must know of the order; then he must get in touch with the office; then the office asks for the number before it produces the order.

I conclude my remarks by referring to page 17 of the auditor general's report, in which reference is made to an order in council which was passed amending section 17 of the Civil Service Act; that order in council was not tabled, and hon. members had no knowledge of it until the auditor general's report was brought down.

QUESTION AS TO MEDICAL EXAMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): Do all the people who are allowed to remain in Canada permanently by special permission, and not subject to the Immigration Act, have to undergo medical examination and X-ray?

Mr. St. Laurent: In my declaration a short time ago I stated that no permits to remain permanently in Canada could be granted under section 4 of the Immigration Act.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

TABLING OF DIPLOMATIC INSTRUMENTS

Mr. Hugues Lapointe (Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a series of diplomatic instruments, being part of treaty series 1947, as follows:

Exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America providing for the renewal of the arrangement of 1942 for the exchange of agricultural labour and machinery, together wtih the text of the 1942 arrangement. Effective May 19, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/42).

Supplementary protocol to the protocol signed in London on 26th November, 1945, amending the international agreement for the regulation of whaling, signed in London on the 8th of June, 1947, as amended by the protocols of 24th June, 1938, and 7th February, 1944. Signed at London, March 3, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/39).

Exchange of letters between Canada and the United Kingdom constituting an agreement concerning the grant to airlines of traffic rights in Fiji and Canton island. Effective February 1, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/37).

Exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America amending the provisional fur seal agreement effected by exchange of notes signed at Washington, December 8 and 19, 1942. Effective, December 26, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/36).

Exchange of notes between Canada and France constituting an agreement concerning the application of the French national solidarity tax to Canadian nationals and corporations. Signed at Paris, May 15 and September 5, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/28).

Exchange of notes between Canada and Switzerland extending to the principality of Liechtenstein the treaty of friendship of September 6, 1855, and the additional convention of March 30, 1914. Signed at Ottawa, May 19 and July 14, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/26).

Supplementary financial agreement between Canada and Czechoslovakia. Signed at Ottawa, November 26, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/32).

Supplementary financial agreement between Canada and France. Signed at Ottawa, August 20, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/23).

Supplementary financial agreement between Canada and Norway. Signed at Ottawa, November 10, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/31).

Universal postal convention and related documents. Signed at Paris, July 5, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/40).

Convention of the postal union of the Americas and Spain and related documents. Signed at Rio de Janeiro, September 25, 1946. (Treaty series 1947/41).

Protocol amending the international accord on German-owned patents of July 27, 1946. Signed at London, July 17, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/38).

Agreement relating to the resolution of conflicting claims to German enemy assets. Signed at Brussels, December 5, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/35).

Exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America constituting an agreement on the allocation of channels for radio broadcasting. Effective October 15, 1947. (Treaty series 1947/30).

POSTAL SERVICE

REDUCTION OF RATES ON CERTAIN GIFT PARCELS TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. Ernest Bertrand (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce a reduction in postage rates for gift parcels. Arrangements have been made with the British Post Office Department and the steamship companies whereby they have agreed to accept lower handling charges for gift parcels to the United Kingdom containing non-perishable foodstuffs, discarded wearing apparel, and soap. Therefore, effective April 1, 1949 any such gift parcels so marked by the sender will be accepted for onward transmission by the postal service at the rates indicated below:

Weight						Postage Rates
Up to and including			5	pounds	.....	$0.50

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DEBATES ON THE ADDRESS—PRECEDENCE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT ORDERS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That, from and after completion of the debate on the address in reply to the speech of His Excellency at the opening of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except routine proceedings, introduction of bills, questions and notices of motions for the production of papers until the following resolutions and the legislation based thereon shall have been disposed of by this house, viz. (a) the resolution for a measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war; (b) the resolution for a measure to amend the Agricultural Products Act to extend the operation of the act for a period of one year; (c) the resolution to amend the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act to provide authority for advances to the corporation by way of loan out of the consolidated revenue fund and to extend the time of operation of the act; (d) the resolution for a measure to provide for the continuance in force of the Foreign Exchange Control Act until sixty days after the commencement of the first session of parliament commencing in the year 1951.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when this notice of motion was drafted I had hoped that by the time it was presented the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne would have been concluded. But the debate has provided opportunity to so many members to bring to the attention of the house matters which they have considered to be of interest that we have not yet concluded the debate, and it may not be concluded today. I shall, therefore, ask one of my colleagues to move, as an amendment to the motion, that if the debate on the address be not concluded at or before the ending of today's sittings, the order of business set out in this motion apply as from Monday until the business referred to thereunder is completed, and that the order of the house of February 21, 1949, continue to apply after it is thus completed.

The reason for making this motion is as follows: As hon. members will have noted, the motion makes reference to four measures. Three of these are referred to in paragraphs (a), (c), and (d), having reference (a) to a continuation for a limited time of certain orders and regulations; (c) a resolution to amend the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act, and (d) a measure to provide for the continuation in force of the Foreign Exchange Control Act. These measures are due to expire sixty days after the opening of parliament, or on March 31, 1949, whichever is the earlier. The sixty days expire on March 27. In order to give the house an opportunity to express itself as to whether or not these measures should continue in force after March 27, it is necessary that they be dealt with before that date. Then, by the terms of the statute, the one dealing with agricultural products will expire on March 31, 1949, unless it is extended. There will be only eight or ten sitting days after Monday in which to deal with these matters, and even during those days hon. members may wish to take some little time to express their views about the text of the north Atlantic security pact, which I hope will be tabled early next week, possibly on Tuesday. We have to deal with these matters, and unfortunately it is necessary that we ask that the debate on the address be interrupted again if it is not completed today.

I think the Canadian public are entitled to expect that parliament will deal with these measures and in express terms say whether or not they are to be continued beyond March 27 and March 31 respectively. I think it is in the public interest that there be an opportunity for parliament to make its views in that regard expressly known, and that matters of this kind should not be allowed to be disposed of by the lapse of time It is for that reason that I put this motion before the house and ask my colleague to add to it an amendment which will make it applicable if the debate on the address is not completed today.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That there be added to the motion the following words:

"Provided that notwithstanding the order of the house of the 21st of February last if the debate on the said address is not completed at or before the end of this day's sitting the order of business set out in this motion shall be followed on and after the 14th of March instant until the above mentioned resolutions and the legislation based thereon shall have been disposed of by the house, and thereafter the said order of the 21st of February last shall continue to operate according to its terms."

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I rise simply to ask the Prime Minister one question. As I understand this motion, it applies only to the four matters mentioned. I understood the Prime Minister to say that there would be an opportunity to debate the proposed north Atlantic security pact soon after it is tabled. I think that that should be done before the house adopts the pact or approves it. But I understand that nothing else in the way of government orders will be introduced, other than perhaps what the Prime Minister has mentioned already. I think we should be clear on that point, because last year we passed a motion in somewhat similar terms and then found that we had more or less agreed to something that many of us did not understand.

Mr. St. Laurent: First of all, with respect to the north Atlantic security pact, of course there will be a full debate in which every hon. member will have the opportunity of expressing his views. This debate will take place at the time the pact is presented to the house for ratification. However, I think it would probably be the desire of the house that there be a short debate, possibly some time next week upon the proposal that is to serve as the basis for discussion. I would hope that I could arrange with the leaders of the groups to provide, say, a day for that preliminary debate, reserving to all hon. members their full rights to go into the matter at much greater length when the pact comes back for ratification.

There is one other bill which deals with legislation that would expire on March 31; I refer to item No. 14 on the order paper, a bill to amend the Mail Contracts Supplemental Payments Act, which provides for supplemental payments to mail carriers. This was done by legislation last year, and it is felt desirable that it be dealt with again before it expires; otherwise there will be a hiatus in the payments to these mail carriers.

Before the end of March some supplementary estimates for the current year may have to be dealt with. Furthermore, it might be of interest to the public to have the Minister of Finance bring down his budget, if it is ready—and there is a possibility that it will be ready. I think the public would be glad to know the contents of the minister's proposals as soon as they can be made available. I should like to make the reservation that something unforeseen may arise, but at the moment this is all that appears to be of the kind that would justify taking time away from the consideration of the emergency measures.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that there are considerations other than merely emergency measures. So far the private members of this house have had no opportunity to assert their positions. What is now proposed is to continue a procedure which will prevent the discussion of a number of matters that have been put forward by private members of this house.

The amendment which has been moved deals with the possibility of the debate on the speech from the throne not terminating tonight. I for one am not able to say when the debate may end, but there is certainly every reason to believe that we are within a short distance of taking the vote. It seems to be an extraordinary procedure to come forward now with the statement that this motion must be dealt with today and the debate postponed thereafter when in fact only an hour or two of discussion may remain on Monday.

The debate on the address has covered an extended period. The discussions, in many but not in all cases, have dealt with matters of particular interest to the communities of hon. members. The general debate has taken place and an amendment to the amendment has been presented in substitution for an earlier amendment to the amendment which was voted down. It seems to me that it would be consistent with what has been suggested already that the motion now before the house should stand over until later today, when it can be discussed with some knowledge as to whether the debate is likely to continue. It might well terminate today. Even if it should not, there is no reason why the debate should not continue until Monday, with the expectation in the minds of all members, I am sure, that it will be concluded then.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I hope you can hear me, because I am addressing my remarks to you, and I realize that you are listening to them. Hon. members who are not interested will be able to check in Hansard and see what was said. The debate on the address has obviously come to the point where a vote is about to be taken. I do not think hon. members should vote on the motion before the house with the idea of postponing indefinitely the debate on the address, when a vote may conceivably be taken today, or, under any circumstances that can now be foreseen, will be taken on Monday. If there has been any delay, it has been the result of the considerable lack of direction—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Drew: If there has been any delay, it has been the result of a lack of direction of the affairs of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: I would point out that a considerable measure of businesslike procedure can be followed if it is possible for the whips of the parties to know in advance exactly what is to take place, as is the case in other legislative bodies, and make their plans accordingly. Of course I need not point out it also helps businesslike procedure if those who have some particular noises to make will make them outside the house.

Mr. Abbott: I can think of some other noises.

Mr. Drew: I admit that some of these noises are doubtless the only utterances of which these particular members are capable. I urge very strongly, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Drew: —that this motion be not put at the present time. I urge that it stand until we consider the other motion which is before the house, and which the house agreed should be considered later in the day when it will be known what is to be done. We have not yet reached the orders of the day, and if this motion is not to stand, then the other motion should be dealt with at this stage.

Mr. Abbott: Who is directing the business of the house?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Drew: I ask that the Prime Minister indicate which course he is prepared to follow. If this motion is to be proceeded with, then the other motion also should be proceeded with before the orders of the day are called.

Mr. St. Laurent: The matter connected with the other motion has been dealt with, and I am sorry that I cannot acquiesce in the suggestion that consideration of this motion be postponed.

Amendment (Mr. Gardiner) agreed to on division.

Main motion (Mr. St. Laurent) as amended agreed to on division.

NOTICE OF MOTION WITH RESPECT TO MARKETING OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): According to Votes and Proceedings of today the Minister of Agriculture intends to ask for leave to introduce a bill on Monday next to provide for the marketing of agricultural products in interprovincial and export trade. Obviously the bill is not to be preceded by a resolution. Does this mean there will be no government expenditure in connection with that legislation?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The bill will be presented in due course, and at that time all the necessary information will be available.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO SUBMARINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. Church (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. The minister stated this week in a return requested by me, and in answer to questions I asked, that the Canadian navy has no submarines. Does the minister's answer mean that so far as modern submarine protection is concerned we are dependent on the United States? Has the minister a copy of a report made by Hon. J. L. Sullivan, United States Secretary of the Navy, to President Truman last December, in which he says that the United States navy is spending a very large sum of money on submarine navy defence, a sum of money which in time will be well on to $1 billion? I should like to ask the minister what further action he will take in the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Church: I am not asking for an answer today; I am merely giving notice of the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS UNDER ACT AND AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that Manitoba has announced a small old age pensions supplement, which means that the federal government will soon be paying less than seventy-five per cent of the old age pension being paid in six out of the nine provinces, will the minister not agree that it is time to amend the Old Age Pensions Act so as to bring the payment up to $50 across the country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question. I am bound to tell him that his calculations are incorrect. The federal government is reimbursing the provinces for seventy-five per cent of all payments made by the provinces under the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. Knowles: Only up to $30.

Mr. Martin: This applies, without exception, to all nine provinces of Canada. It is true, of course, that in six out of the nine provinces the provincial governments are paying additional allowances of varying amounts—$10 in British Columbia, $7 in Alberta—

Some hon. Members: Ten dollars in Alberta.

Mr. Martin: Seven dollars. In the province of Ontario it is $10 in certain cases, and lesser amounts in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Nova Scotia. These payments are supplementary payments, and are not made under the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act or the agreements made by the provinces and the federal government under the authority of the Old Age Pensions Act. For this reason it is not correct to include them in the calculation, because under the Old Age Pensions Act the federal government clearly pays seventy-five per cent of the basic amount of the pension provided under that act. May I tell my hon. friend that, pursuant to the amendments to the act introduced by this government a year ago, there is nothing now to prevent the province of Saskatchewan or any other province from paying $50 a month.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Coldwell: Except their inability to pay.

Mr. Knowles: What is there to prevent the federal government from amending the act?

FRUIT

ASSISTANCE TO BERRY GROWERS IN FRASER VALLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. When may we expect consideration of the problem of the Fraser Valley berry growers similar to that announced for the Manitoba fisheries?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the difference between the British Columbia berry growers and the Manitoba fishermen is that we started to consider the difficulties of the British Columbia berry growers almost a year ago. We gave them consideration last spring to the extent of guaranteeing the price of their picking baskets or boxes, and the barrels of SO_2 for the preservation of the commodity. At present we are arranging to sell all the SO_2 we possibly can. Negotiations are proceeding with the government of Ireland for the purchase of certain parts of it, and we are obligated to pay the amounts for which we gave guarantees last spring. We are also considering the disposal of that part of the commodity which may not be sold to Ireland or to some other government. For that reason I would say we are considering the matter all the time, and have been considering it, and are dealing with it in the most satisfactory manner possible.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising to some extent out of his statement that there are no secret orders in council. On Monday, March 7, three motions standing in my name were passed for the production of orders in council, of which at least two had not been gazetted or tabled in the house. I should have thought a week would be sufficient time in which to produce those orders in council, and I would ask the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he should not make a statement but should ask his question.

Mr. Fulton: Will the Prime Minister take the necessary steps to see that the orders in council are produced without further delay?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The hon. member may be assured that this will be done.

COARSE GRAINS

OATS AND BARLEY—FLOOR PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of which I have sent notice. Is the order in council which sets the present floor prices on oats and barley based upon the emergency legislation at present on the order paper? The second question is, when can we expect some statement on floor prices for the 1949 coarse grain and oilseed crops?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to the first question is no, because the floor price legislation enacted by this House of Commons, I think in 1945, governs the matter. As to the second question, I hope to be able to make a statement on the position of the coarse grain and oilseed crops on Monday or Tuesday of next week.

ENABLING PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "FINANCIAL TIMES"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. Bentley (Swift Current): Has the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce been drawn to an article in today's Financial Times which states that the Alberta and Manitoba governments have decided to pass enabling legislation with respect to this government's Bill No. 135 of 1948; and will the minister inform the house whether this news report is correct?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As to the first question, I have not seen the article referred to.

Mr. Bentley: I have it here if you would like to see it.

Mr. Howe: And as to the second question, I have no knowledge of any decisions along the lines mentioned by the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I should like to ask whether either the Minister of Fisheries or the Minister of Labour is in a position to make a statement on the position of the unemployed in Vancouver.

Hon. Humphrey Mitchell (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to do that on Monday.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES

BAKERY FIRMS IN WESTERN PROVINCES—QUESTION AS TO PROSECUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John O. Probe (Regina City): With respect to the Goldenberg report alleging that a breadmakers' combine exists in Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia, will the Minister of Justice indicate to the house what advice with respect to prosecution has been given him by his legal adviser, Mr. C. S. Blanchard, and what follow-up steps the minister has taken on this advice?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Instructions have already been given to counsel to proceed with the prosecution in the case referred to by the hon. member.

INQUIRY AS TO APPEAL IN DENTAL PROSECUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Having regard to the outcome of the appeal in the dental case, arising under the Combines Investigation Act, and the decision of the court of appeal, which would appear to emasculate that act, is it the intention to carry the appeal further or to bring in amendments to cover the matters referred to by the court, which render a conviction very difficult to obtain?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): My hon. friend did not give me notice of this question, but the answer is that the matter to which he refers has been under consideration by the officials of the department and our counsel who appeared in that case. We are now awaiting their report, which we expect shortly.

NORTH ATLANTIC SECURITY PACT

OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCUSSION—INQUIRY AS TO ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. Church (Broadview): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether before the Easter recess we will have an opportunity of discussing the proposed north Atlantic pact. I ask that question because of the motion presented today by the right hon. gentleman, as amended by the motion of the Minister of Agriculture, which it seems to me gives the government power to call an election at any time. I should like to know from the Prime Minister also whether or not there is going to be an election.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): With respect to the north Atlantic pact, I do not think I can add anything to what I said a few moments ago. I hope it will be possible to arrange for a short preliminary debate during the course of next week. And I would hope that the north Atlantic pact may give us sufficient security so we can look forward to an election.

BUTTER

CEILING AND FLOOR PRICES FOR CURRENT YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. Drope (Northumberland, Ont.): Is it the policy of the government to continue the present ceiling and floor prices on butter for the remainder of 1949?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member was kind enough to send me a copy of his question. In reply I would say that the dairy year, as acknowledged by both the department and the farmers, begins on May 1 and ends on April 30 following. It has been our custom to announce the policy for the coming dairy year prior to May 1 of each year. The announcement made last year with regard to floor prices had to do with the dairy year we are now in. The announcement with respect to ceilings had to do with a period beginning with the date of the announcement, and that matter is subject to reconsideration. The policy for the remainder of 1949 will be discussed and announced some time before May 1.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NON-PENSIONED WIDOWS—QUESTION OF SETTING UP COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): In view of the recent application of the non-pensioned war veterans' widows for further consideration of their case, will the Minister of Veterans Affairs reconsider the matter of setting up a veterans affairs committee of the house this session so that this matter and others related to it may be given due consideration?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker; but I may add that last year the parliamentary committee considered this question and did not bring in any recommendation with regard to it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Thursday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. D. F. Brown for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Low.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): After years of careful study, Mr. Speaker, of certain individuals among the veterans, I have come to be filled with a deep anxiety concerning Canada's treatment of her veterans. I refer to the case of veteran Thomas Harvey of world war II. According to evidence I placed before this house in June, 1948—evidence that, so far as I know, has never been denied or questioned—the following are facts concerning that unfortunate soldier.

Veteran Thomas Harvey, regimental No. D76502 and pension No. 550593, I find was punished without trial by his equals. He was railroaded forcibly into an insane asylum. He was held in that asylum under duress. He was for years cheated out of his well-earned pension. He was denied medical treatment to which he was fairly entitled, thereby risking and seriously impairing his health. He was given no chance to contest his case in the courts of the land. He was provided no recourse for redress to any impartial agency. He was intimidated against having recourse to his member of parliament or to parliament.

This is not the only case of that kind which has come to my attention, Mr. Speaker. Careful consideration of this case of veteran Thomas Harvey forces upon one the conclusion that the time has come for the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) to discover for himself, the government and the Canadian people—by a royal commission if need be—the grim, unsightly fact that, in accordance with actual present-day practice in Canada, any Canadian who signs into any of the services of Canada thereby signs a document by which in effect he surrenders, forgoes and forfeits for all the remaining days of his life every one of his fundamental rights and freedoms. In other words, a free Canadian man or woman enlisting in the Canadian forces to defend freedom virtually forgoes for life all possible effective legal claim to those precious inherent freedoms won for him by his fathers through Magna Carta, the petition of right, the bill of rights and every other guarantee reclaimed for Anglo-Saxons through their strenuous thousand years of struggle for liberty.

To anyone who has not studied these cases with some care I know those words sound extreme. But I am afraid that when the facts are all known concerning the way in which scores and scores of veterans of world war I and world war II in Canada have been and are being treated those words will be found to be moderate, and to be a bare, simple expression of the facts as they now exist in Canada.

May I read from Magna Carta:

No freeman shall be seized or imprisoned or dispossessed, or outlawed, or in any way brought to ruin: we will not go against any man nor send against him, save by legal judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

Again:

To no man will we sell, or deny, or delay right or justice.

A careful consideration of the facts pertaining to Thomas Harvey will, I think, make it abundantly clear to every hon. member that we have fallen far short of Magna Carta, even, in respect of our treatment of certain classes of veterans. I am not saying that a great many of our veterans do not obtain treatment which is quite satisfactory but there is a "no man's land" of veterans. The luckless individuals who happen to find themselves in "no man's land" are in a bad way.

We have permitted to grow up in peacetime in Canada a military dictatorship over our veterans, under the name of the Department of Veterans Affairs, including the Canadian pension commission, and the war veterans allowance board. This dictatorship is absolute as far as many people are concerned. In fact, I have evidence to show that employees working under the war veterans allowance board and the Canadian pension commission have rather arrogantly told people that they would not modify their way of treating any given case no matter who asked them to do so, whether it was a member of parliament or anyone else. In due time I will bring evidence to show that that has actually happened in Canada, and within the last year; and I think the evidence I have is dependable.

Let us take a glance at the present-day organizations to which I have referred, namely the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian pension commission and the war veterans allowance board. I asked a question which was answered recently in this house. The question was:

1. How many former commissioned officers are now employed by D.V.A.?
2. Of these, how many were (a) brigadiers; (b) colonels or lieutenant-colonels; (c) majors, or officers of equivalent rank in other services?

In a return dated March 7, 1949, for the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian pension commission and the war veterans allowance board, the answer given was as follows:

1. 1,386 former commissioned officers.
2. (a) 8 brigadiers; (b) 122 colonels, lieutenant-colonels, officers of equivalent rank; (c) 269 majors, officers of equivalent rank.

We might as well face the facts. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) both know,—as do a majority of the members of this house, I believe—through having been in the army, that during military activities, training and fighting, great bitterness often develops between the men and their officers. Sometimes it is the fault of the officers; sometimes it is the fault of the men; and sometimes it is merely the fault of the situation in which they find themselves. Nevertheless, the bitterness is there.

Mr. Gregg: Will the hon. member allow me to make a comment at this particular time? In the first place, I deny that statement regarding great bitterness. In the second place, as the house knows, all the medical officers, all the nursing sisters, and all the pension doctors in my department are as far as possible men and women who had service. All such medical personnel—both men and women—when serving in the forces were automatically of commissioned rank.

Mr. Blackmore: That has no bearing on what I was saying, although I am glad to have the minister tell us that. But what we are concerned about is this fact. The men who occupy key positions in the Department of Veterans Affairs are men who could have had grudges against certain men in the services or who could be influenced by men who have had grudges against those men, and who could be influenced in their judgment on a given case by such considerations as that. I am not saying they are.

Mr. Mutch: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Blackmore: I am quite ready to permit all the questions that hon. members wish to ask, but I do not want to have "forty minutes" called on me when the time has been taken up by members asking questions.

Mr. Mutch: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Blackmore: I would ask the hon. member to speak a little bit louder so I can hear what he is saying.

Mr. Mutch: I am asking whether the hon. member is suggesting that the position between the commissioned and noncommissioned members of the Canadian forces was one of hostility.

Mr. Blackmore: I think that the hon. member who asked that question reflected on his own sincerity by so doing.

Mr. Mutch: I have been on both sides. I think I know, but I do not think you do.

Mr. Blackmore: The hon. member would be surprised at how much I know, and we shall just leave it at that. When the time comes that we can get at each other across the floor I shall give the hon. member all the evidence that he wants, and perhaps a little more.

The difficulty lies in the fact that there is too much of a stacking of the cards against certain veterans, and I believe that the case of Thomas Harvey well illustrates that point. I wish to make this comment. There must be provided in Canada a set of nonmilitary, nonbiased tribunals, before whom the humblest and weakest veteran can present his case and call in every bit of pertinent evidence, with implicit assurance that every particle of applicable evidence shall be sympathetically weighed on his behalf. That certainly does not exist today. These tribunals must have power to compel the making of appropriate adjustments in favour of the veteran where these are justified.

On June 30, 1948, I put on record a statement prepared by veteran Thomas Harvey. I refer hon. members to Hansard of 1948 at pages 6228 and 6229. The salient facts concerning veteran Harvey's case, as outlined in his statement, will be elicited by answering the twenty-five questions which I asked on June 30, as recorded on pages 6227 and 6228 of Hansard. These questions have never yet been answered. It may be the intention of the department to answer them in this house, but thus far they have not been answered. If the evidence at hand concerning veteran Harvey's experiences is reliable, and it would appear to be so, then it is important that this house and the country should know who are the persons responsible for the wrongs committed against veteran Harvey in the name of Canada.

In order to help the minister to discover these persons, and the nature of their responsibility to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I propose to put the following series of questions. These questions are slightly different from the ones which I asked on June 30, but I believe that they go after information which is vital to all Canadians at the present time. Let us bear this in mind. Probably half the members of this house are going to have sons enrolled within the armed forces of Canada within the next two or three years, and there will be tens of thousands of people across Canada who will have sons enrolled in these forces. In the past we have had to worry about having our boys injured in service, or taken sick in service, or killed in service or lost. Now we have the haunting fear that something will happen to them and that they will fall into the clutches of some inner circle in the war veterans allowances department or Canadian pensions commission, and suffer as horrible outrages as those which were endured by Thomas Harvey. I say that it is absolutely unjust, inequitable and injurious that Canadian people should have to worry, as men would worry, after hearing about Thomas Harvey.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

The following are the questions:

1. Where is the Captain Haljerston, president of the mess, whom veteran Thomas Harvey had paraded before Major General Price and charged with refusing to obtain medical aid for veteran Harvey sometime between September 8, 1939 and June 10, 1940?

2. Upon whose recommendation was veteran Harvey sent back to Canada in May or June, 1940?

3. Upon what grounds was the recommendation made?

4. Who asked veteran Harvey to sign his discharge?

5. Who told veteran Harvey that the veteran would receive no treatment for his pains?

6. Who threatened to keep veteran Harvey in detention until veteran Harvey did sign his discharge without guarantee of suitable treatment for his illness?

7. To what extent was Captain Haljerston at the bottom of the two outrages against Harvey referred to in questions 5 and 6?

8. Was veteran Harvey classified as A-1 upon enlistment?

He says he was.

9. Was veteran Harvey classified as category E upon discharge?

He says he was.

10. Was veteran Harvey X-rayed upon discharge?

He says he was not.

11. Was veteran Harvey, notwithstanding the facts indicated in questions 8, 9 and 10, told that he did not need treatment?

12. Who was responsible for this miscarriage of justice?

13. To what extent was Captain Haljerston at the bottom of this piece of skulduggery?

14. Who in the D.V.A. refused veteran Harvey treatment for his pains on the grounds that there was nothing wrong with him? Why?

15. After veteran Harvey had gone to a civilian hospital and been diagnosed as afflicted with T.B., who refused to grant him treatment in D.V.A. on the grounds that he had been out of the service for more than a year?

16. What facilities are provided by D.V.A. for rectifying for a veteran such crass injustices as are indicated in questions 14 and 15?

17. Why did not these facilities intervene on behalf of veteran Harvey?

18. By what course of procedure can a veteran now suffering from such a grievance gain redress?

19. Why was pension granted veteran Harvey in May, 1946?

20. Why had he not received pension in May, 1944, in May, 1942, in May, 1941?

He had already been discharged as category E after enlisting as category A.

20. (a) Who refused veteran Harvey pension?

21. To what extent was Captain Haljerston responsible for this wrong against veteran Harvey and Canada?

22. Why was veteran Harvey taken under escort from the veterans pavilion to Ste. Anne's when it was known that he was afflicted with T.B.?

22. (a) Upon whose orders was this done?

23. Did veteran Harvey get out of Ste. Anne's on condition that he would not fight for his pension or write to parliament about his treatment?

He says he did.

24. Does this signify that the D.V.A. systematically intimidates veterans of certain classes to discourage them from writing to members of parliament, to discourage them from fighting for their pension rights?

25. After veteran Harvey left Ste. Anne's was he still denied treatment by D.V.A., although he was haemorrhaging and growing worse?

He says he was.

26. Was veteran Harvey on May 7, 1948, forcibly taken from St. Hyacinthe, where he was recovering steadily, to Ste. Anne's?

He says he was.

27. What was the reason?

28. Who gave the orders?

29. At Ste. Anne's was veteran Harvey locked up for six weeks and held incommunicado?

He says he was.

30. Upon whose orders?

31. For what reason?

I do not know how anything more important to the fathers and mothers can possibly be found than these questions and the answers to these questions. The country will expect the minister to answer the twenty-five questions on pages 6227 and 6228 of Hansard of 1948, and the thirty-one questions I have asked today. I suggest that the minister answer these questions early.

I have several other flagrant cases—Stuart Brown is among them. Stuart Brown has written an extended article, very carefully prepared, very thoroughly documented, given in great detail under the title, "They put me in Essondale". This article appeared in the Vancouver Sunday Sun on January 8, January 15, and January 22, 1949. Before this session is over I am going to call for an accounting for the treatment of veteran Brown. Why are there these outrages against veterans? What is the fundamental cause? Is it a fact the government fears Canada is unable to produce enough food for those boys to eat, enough clothes for them to wear, enough shelter to protect them? Is that what is the matter? Or is it a fact they are afraid they cannot raise the money to provide the needs of these veterans?

That is a vital question. That is the point at which that which I am discussing enters into this debate, on the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). That is why I say a change in the method of financing should be found.

May I stop here to assure the minister who sits in the house that I do not wish to complain against him at all. In my judgment he is the victim of circumstances, and he faces a task of such colossal magnitude, in endeavouring to clean up the situation over which he is now called upon to preside, that I doubt if any man alive could do it. It will require a great deal more assistance than the efforts of one man. The object of my efforts today is partially that of giving the minister some assistance.

The solution to the problem facing us in connection with veterans is the solution to the problem in connection with old age pensions and a hundred and one other things troubling us in Canada. It is a money question. The whole trouble is one of money. I am going to suggest the solution lies in social credit, and it is implied in the amendment offered by the hon. member for Peace River.

Before I commence to discuss social credit I should like to pay some attention to certain remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). With this in mind I shall read some of his words as they were reported at page 1341 of Hansard. The hon. member rose and, in a rather assured way—perhaps that word is sufficient—proceeded to tell the house or to imply to the house that he knew all about social credit, that probably he knew quite a lot more about it than hon. members who are fighting for social credit, and that long ago he had discovered that it was fallacious. I hope I am fair to him in this remark, and I shall proceed to read what he said:

> The more I read the more I came to the conclusion that while financial reform was necessary, he was going about it at the wrong end—

Referring to Major Douglas—

> —that it is not money that counts, but physical assets and goods. The physical assets and goods must precede the distribution of money; otherwise you have merely an inflationary process.

With the second part of his remarks of course we all agree; and the hon. member for Peace River said we believe that. The surprising thing is that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar would take the trouble to make a remark which, in the light of the knowledge he must have, if he knows anything about social credit, must be considered to be completely inane.

What manner of man is this member for Rosetown-Biggar? He poses as a rather intelligent fellow, rather an able chap. He would like to have people consider him something of a student, and he would hate to be called dishonest.

Having said that, let me point out some of the things the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has done or has neglected to do since he came to this house in 1935, the same year in which I came.

He has been in the house long enough to know better than to make a remark like the one he made yesterday. The first speech I made in March of 1936 made clear that social credit proposes to create money to represent surplus goods and services already on the market. That fact completely stultifies the remark of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. It indicates that either he is not intelligent, or he is not diligent, or he is not honest—one of the three. He may choose whichever of the three undesirable alternatives he wishes. In the first speech I delivered in 1936 I cited the fact that in 1918 the United States produced $60 billion worth of goods—and I wish the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar's friends would call him in. I wish he were here—I was hoping he would be. I want to talk with him face to face. I said that in 1918 the United States produced $60 billion worth of goods, but distributed among the people only $45 billion worth of purchasing power.

How in the world could a bit of evidence be found which would more clearly illustrate the fact that social credit stands for the monetization of surplus goods? And the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar must have sat right here in the house and heard my speech —although he probably utterly disregarded it, as coming from one of those poor Social Crediters who did not know anything. I believe that probably this year we shall have to have a real collision with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, to find out who does know more—he, or the Social Crediters. I must say he has not shown up very promisingly thus far. He does not show in a very favourable light, considering what he said yesterday.

The figures I have given will be found in the report of the bureau of economic research, No. 2, for 1922. This is a United States document, and is obtainable in the House of Commons library. I wonder if, when the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was studying social credit, he read the Douglas books. I wonder if he read Maurice Colbourne's two remarkable books, the first of which is "Unemployment or war" and the second "Economic Nationalism"? I wonder if he ever read Charles Marshall Hattersley's "This Age of Plenty"? If he had read any of these he would have had it impressed upon him, and it would have been made painfully clear to him —so clear that even he could have seen, or could not have failed to see—that what was in mind was the creation of money to enable people to buy surplus goods; he would have seen that the difficulty arises out of the shortage of purchasing power which develops naturally in our modern economy, in which we have an abundance.

Time and again since 1936 I have repeated the truth which I have indicated, and I have done so in the presence of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. He has had Hansard; he could have read it. If he did not have the time, probably he could have had his secretary read it.

Now let me illustrate further. I have pointed out, too, that the reason the depression hurt the United States so painfully was that between 1929 and 1934 eight billions of dollars in purchasing power, of a total of $23 billion, had been withdrawn in the United States. Naturally it was the shortage of purchasing power which caused the falling of prices and which caused the depression in the United States, so far as its technical and physical aspects were concerned. In the Dominion of Canada in that same period over $930 million was withdrawn. This indicated quite clearly that while we were in the depths of the depression, one for which my Liberal friends love to blame the Conservative party, we were suffering from a shortage of purchasing power, and surplus of goods. Will some of the intimate friends of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar take that copy of Hansard, read it to him, and point out the words I have just mentioned?

As I have declared three or four times in the house, the fundamental cause of the depression in the United States was the fact that within her own economy the United States had a shortage of purchasing power, as was indicated by the figures of production and purchasing power in 1918.

Between the years 1920 and 1929 the United States lent abroad vast quantities of money to enable people abroad to buy her goods. Thus she maintained a level of prosperity, or apparent prosperity, in her own economy. The trouble was she had a shortage of purchasing power and too many goods. Let the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar take note of that—too many goods. Once more I do hope he is able to read what I say this time. The United States lent money abroad so that people could buy her goods which her own people could not buy, goods for which they did not have the money to pay.

In 1928 it began to dawn on United States authorities that perhaps it was not safe to lend money abroad to enable people to buy their goods. So they discontinued lending abroad; and that fact caused the depression. I am sure the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and his colleagues need to read deeply of these matters before they can attempt to be the wise men they claim to be. I am sure the Liberals have not read deeply enough of these matters because they do not know anything about what it is all about. I am sure the Conservatives do not know. They do not know as much as the Liberals, judging from the way they have been talking in the house.

The simple matter is that if we are going to begin to deal with the causes of our trouble instead of just the symptoms, if we are going to begin to discuss a policy that will solve our problems instead of just throwing smoke screens around and scattering red herrings on the trail, we have to get down to the fundamental causes of the phenomena which afflict our generation.

The fundamental cause of the phenomena which afflicted us in 1929 was the shortage of purchasing power in the United States economy which the United States endeavoured to rectify by lending abroad, just as she is doing today through the Marshall plan. When she ceased to lend abroad she was in for the depression into which she descended with such fearful rapidity. She will do the same thing again unless a remedy is applied to the fundamental cause of all these troubles.

If the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar or any one else desires to read up on this matter rather than just take what the Social Crediters say, I would suggest to him that he read "The United States in the World Economy", to be found in the parliamentary library. If the hon. member cannot find a copy down there I will lend him mine if he comes to me. I can show him where he will find the facts. He will discover that what I have said about the causes of the depression in the United States is true. "The United States in the World Economy" is a United States public document which was prepared by a committee which was especially appointed to examine into the causes of the trouble which came on to the United States in the depression.

The United States and Canada are now approaching a surplus position. That is the reason why I asked the questions I did the other day of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). If we are approaching a surplus position in Canada in connection with a considerable number of commodities, then we are on the verge of a depression. We shall have to make fundamental adjustments in our national economy in order to enable us to distribute the purchasing power necessary to absorb those surpluses or they will become vexatious in several different ways. We must have a distribution of purchasing power if a depression is to be avoided.

I am going to refer once more to "The United States in the World Economy" a carefully prepared document. Is the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar prepared to face the facts, now that I have brought them out? Are the members of the C.C.F. prepared to face the facts? Does the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar dare to face the facts? I suggest that several of his most trusted members take him aside and suggest to him that he read what I have said in this speech this afternoon and then explain himself to them. Let me tell him that if he does face the facts he and his party will have to stop talking their nonsense about private enterprise failing, because it is the success of private enterprise in producing goods that brings about surpluses.

Let me point out another fundamental principle which I am afraid has eluded the intelligence of a number of them. No industry is designed to distribute purchasing power, be that industry a coal mine or a farm or any other kind of industry. Industry is designed to produce goods. When an industry produces ample goods, it succeeds rather than fails. The fact that we have produced surpluses so many times is the best evidence that private enterprise has succeeded superbly in producing goods. But private enterprise cannot distribute purchasing power enough to enable people to buy the goods it produces. Private enterprise, and even a government-owned industry, could not afford to spend as much money in producing its goods as it receives for the goods.

Mr. Low: For instance, the wool mill in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Blackmore: Or any other mill. Let hon. members of the C.C.F. tell the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that if he does face the facts he and his party will have to go back to their constituents, if they are going to be honest, and say to them, "We have been all wrong in our diagnosis of the problem up to the present time; we find that the only people who seem to have any real knowledge about this whole economic situation which is confronting us are the Social Crediters; they have been right all the time."

An hon. Member: They must be wonderful.

Mr. Blackmore: They are wonderful; that is right, I should say they are! The hon. member has not been here as long as I have but I can tell him that in every major decision since the C.C.F. became an important party it has voted wrong. It has been wrong every single time and the Social Crediters have been right every time.

Mr. MacInnis: There have been times when the Social Crediters voted with us.

Mr. Blackmore: We have voted with the C.C.F. at times to keep the C.C.F. from going out into the country and lying about us or misrepresenting us. The people out in the country are not in a position to know what we in parliament know, and the result is that they can be deceived. The C.C.F. are the people who are trying to deceive and the Social Crediters are the people who are trying to keep them from deceiving. You can debate that fact right here on the floor of the house as much as you like. We will take you on from now to the end of the session. It is time that you C.C.F. people were asked to put up or shut up. I know, and the hon. member does not know; he only thinks he knows.

An hon. Member: A Daniel.

Mr. Blackmore: We need a Daniel today and, lo, he has come. The C.C.F. do not recognize the Daniel because he is right.

Mr. Matthews (Kootenay East): Do they recognize the hon. member?

Mr. Blackmore: You will recognize him when you get to know him better. We are having real fun now, but I mean every word of what I am saying.

Mr. Matthews (Kootenay East): That is the trouble.

Mr. MacInnis: If the hon. member did not mean it, it would not be so bad.

Mr. Blackmore: Let the hon. member take advantage of this debate and get up and say what he has to say and I will answer him point for point. That is the thing to do, rather than to make silly remarks. If the C.C.F. were honest with the people whom they represent they would go back to them and say: "The only solution that you can possibly find for the problems which confront us today, for the ills from which we are suffering in Canada today and throughout the world, is to be found in the social credit proposals, and the only accurate analysis of the situation is the social credit analysis."

Just before I close I want to read into the record, as evidence of the truth of what I have been saying with regard to the need for adjustment in the United States, a passage from "The United States in the World Economy." This is to be found on page vi, and it reads:

> A world economic structure organized on the basis of equal treatment and with large scope for free enterprise cannot be maintained in the face of such reductions in the supply of dollars as have occurred in our international transactions in the past. Unless the supply of dollars is more adequate—

I direct the attention of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to these words:

> —to meet foreign requirements, other countries will assuredly insist on their rights to exercise a close selective control over the use of the amounts available and to promote more intensive relations with third countries under preferential trading arrangements. Unless dollars are made available with greater regularity than in the past, it would be both unjust and unwise to demand the removal of restraints and controls largely designed to protect the internal economies of other countries against external shock and pressure.

That is dealing with the international situation, but here is what is said about the internal situation, the problem of distributing purchasing power:

> On the solution of these problems, through maintenance of a high and reasonably stable level of economic activity in the United States, the interests of this country, and of other countries, are most clearly and indisputably united.

There is only one way in the world in which the United States or Canada can keep her economy stable, and that is by continually introducing into the hands of consumers sufficient purchasing power to enable them to buy the goods they can produce. The only possible solution to the world's difficulties is to be able to put into the hands of the have-not people the money which is necessary to enable them to buy those goods which the more happy countries can produce.

Because of the evidence and of the facts which I have brought forward, I intend to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low).

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I propose to say a few words about the question of freight rates, and I do so for two reasons. First of all I believe that there is great urgency about the matter. It is now admitted in most parts of Canada that there are great inequalities in our Canadian freight rate structure. Unfortunately each delay in dealing with these inequalities makes the position just that much worse. Therefore the time element is of great importance. My second reason for dealing with the subject today is that I fear there will be no other opportunity before the Easter adjournment, and possibly for the remainder of the session. I say that for this reason. Not only is there nothing coming up on the order paper which would open up a debate on the subject, but a royal commission on transportation has been set up, and I expect that once that commission commences its hearings anyone who rises in the house and tries to debate the question of freight rates will be met with the objection that the matter is under the consideration of the courts. In effect, an iron curtain will then be drawn over the question, and it will be impossible to have effective debate.

In approaching the subject at this time I believe it is necessary to bring up to date the record of what has been happening, and to see that the record is kept straight. It is also necessary to make clear to the house, and to the country, that the removal of the inequities, of the discrimination, is still a long way off; also that it is necessary to ask that the functions of the two bodies which are supposed to be dealing with the question of freight rates, the royal commission on transportation and the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, be much more clearly defined; at the present time there is great uncertainty across the country as to the respective functions of the two bodies. I think it is also necessary to demand that the government face its responsibilities on the freight rate question.

There is a reference to the matter in the speech from the throne, reading as follows:

> A royal commission has been appointed to inquire into and report upon all questions of economic policy within the jurisdiction of parliament arising out of the operation and maintenance of national transportation.

That, of course, refers to the royal commission. Then the paragraph goes on:

> Together with the findings of the investigation by the board of transport commissioners, the report of the royal commission should furnish parliament and the government with the basis for a sound transportation policy.

Here we have the government handing on the obligation to determine policy on railroad transportation not to one commission or board, which is the usual practice, but actually to two boards. We have two bodies being asked to do the job which the government should do for itself.

What is the record on the question? On October 11, 1946, the railways applied for a flat increase in freight rates of thirty per cent. I suppose there were very few people in the country who did not believe that the railways were entitled to a reasonable increase because of the rising costs in all the activities of the country. The application for an increase was opposed by seven of the provinces, the three maritime provinces on the east coast, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and the four western provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Those seven provinces were the ones primarily concerned with any increase in freight rates.

The other two provinces, Quebec and Ontario, are not so much concerned about rail charges. The distances that freight has to be hauled in those two provinces are much shorter. Then, too, there is very efficient road and water transportation which is in direct competition with the railroads, and which has served throughout the years to keep rail rates down; and has resulted in fact in the full rates permitted in Ontario and Quebec not being charged in many cases. As I have said, these two provinces were not directly concerned with the increase in the freight rates.

British Columbia was in the unfortunate position of being more concerned than any other province because the people of that province pay the highest rate of all by reason of what is known as the mountain differential, which takes the prairie rate and adds to that another quarter. It costs as much to haul freight a mile in British Columbia as it does to haul it a mile and a quarter in the prairie provinces, and the prairie rates are higher, of course, than the rates in Ontario and Quebec, or in the maritime provinces.

The board of transport commissioners held many sittings across Canada, and finally on March 30, 1948, handed down a judgment which allowed a flat increase of twenty-one per cent as against the increase of thirty per cent which had been requested by the railways. In their judgment they held that the freight rates must pay not only for the costs of operating the railways but also such charges as income taxes, dividends, fixed charges, depreciation and surplus, although a portion of those charges came from other earnings such as hotel earnings, shipping earnings, and various other services supplied by the railways. The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company is another example, it being a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The judgment could be put into effect upon three days' notice, which meant that the increase of twenty-one per cent could be made by the railways after that time had passed.

Great dissatisfaction was expressed immediately by the seven provinces which had been involved in the hearings. I have here the different wires that were sent to the cabinet requesting mainly that the increase of twenty-one per cent be suspended for a period of thirty days in order that the different premiers might get together and decide what they would do about appealing the judgment. For example, I shall read from the wire sent by the premier of Manitoba, who is now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) in the government. In his wire we find these words:

> The provinces which oppose the application desire the opportunity to meet and consider the judgment and to formulate their grounds of appeal, and it would be manifestly unjust to allow the higher rates to go into effect before they have had this opportunity.

Those seven provinces were in this position, that the only appeal they had from the judgment of the board of transport commissioners was to the cabinet. There is no other appeal from a decision of the transport board. On April 7 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), speaking in this house, announced that the government refused to suspend the operation of the judgment, and went on to say that the government had decided to order the board of transport commissioners to conduct a general rate inquiry. That was the answer given by the government to the seven provinces. I have here the order in council passed on that date, P.C. 1487, which contains the instructions to the board of transport commissioners concerning this general rate inquiry, and I read the material part of it, as follows:

. . . it is therefore advisable that the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rates structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rates structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities so as to permit the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of Canada and the extension of Canadian trade both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of agriculture nd the other basic industries.

It goes on to exempt from that inquiry the statutory provisions, which I believe are the maritime freight rates and the Crowsnest rates, both of which are in existence by reason of statute. In effect the government on April 7 last admitted that there were inequalities in the freight rate structure. Hon. members were very much concerned. The minister was asked how long it would take to complete this general inquiry and this was his answer, to be found at page 2718 of Hansard for April 7:

It may take a year, or it may take two years. That will depend upon the dispatch with which the board can get across the country.

Because the minister's statement was not considered satisfactory, that same day an amendment was moved to a motion to go into supply, by means of which the whole freight rate question was brought before the house. It was also a matter of the greatest interest across the country. For example, I have the leading editorial from the Vancouver Sun of April 9, 1948; and as the minister knows that newspaper is a consistent supporter of this government. In the editorial I find this paragraph:

This government has given the victims of regional rate discrimination not the slightest grounds to believe that it is interested in inequalities as such. It is interested, however, in shutting up the roars of protest evoked by a twenty-one per cent magnification of the injustices.

That was a very good word, I think, to apply to these increases, considering the discrimination which existed before. The debate was adjourned on April 7 and resumed on April 13, when the minister took part. At page 2904 of Hansard for that date he dealt with the question of the length of time it would take the board of transport commissioners to complete this general inquiry. He said:

In order that there will be no further misunderstanding on this question may I say that I conferred with the chief commissioner of the board and asked him how long in his opinion it would take to complete this investigation. He said that because of the circumstances which had changed in the economy of this country from the time that the judgment was handed down in 1927—

There the chairman was referring to a previous general inquiry.

—it would require an absolute minimum of six months in which to complete the investigation, and that it would probably be completed within a year.

Then on April 15 the board of transport commissioners issued a directive, which stressed the need for speedy action. For example, it says:

The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, in order to carry out as expeditiously as possible the direction of the above recited order in council—

That is the one from which I read a few moments ago.

—hereby invites provincial governments and other authorities, boards of trade, chambers of commerce and other interested parties to submit to the board any statement of facts under which it is claimed that unjust discrimination, or undue or unreasonable preference or advantage, or prejudice or disadvantage, or unfair treatment exists against or in favour of any locality, province or region by reason of the present rate structure.

The directive goes on to say that submissions should be filed not later than May 25, 1948, and that the railways would be given until June 30, 1948, to file answers. Then it goes on further:

The purpose of this notice is to put the board, as early as possible—

I point out that throughout this directive the board is stressing speed.

—in possession of any and all complaints against the existing rate structure, and to specifically direct attention to the subject matter of such complaints, with a view of considering what changes, adjustments and redistribution in rate incidence may be necessary to correct the defects complained of.

The board desires to proceed with the investigation and to hold such public hearings as may be deemed necessary with the least possible delay, and to conduct the same in a manner most calculated to secure a complete and systematic development of all material facts.

That directive was issued just about eleven months ago. Eleven months have gone by, and I believe as yet not one brief has been filed by a provincial government. There have been no hearings. It looks as though this general rate inquiry has just been pigeonholed in the meantime.

Mr. Chevrier: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman? The application for the removal of the mountain differential, which came from British Columbia, has been heard since that time, following that directive.

Mr. Green: I am going to deal with that in a moment.

Mr. Chevrier: Is that not so? The hon. gentleman has made the statement that nothing has been done under that directive, and I am saying now that the application of British Columbia has been heard. Is that not right?

Mr. Green: The minister is not right, because the directive to which I referred has to do with the general rate inquiry. It quotes the order in council issued on April 7, and deals only with the general rate inquiry. The application of British Columbia for the removal of the mountain differential was an entirely separate application.

Mr. Chevrier: No, it was not. I do not want to be interjecting, as my hon. friend interjected during my speech, and if he thinks I should not I will sit down. But I believe he should be fair. The mountain differential is a part of the whole rate-base structure.

Mr. Green: The minister will understand as I go along. I will deal with that point.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman unduly.

Mr. Green: This general rate inquiry has not been held, and unfortunately the discrimination continues. Of course that discrimination was accentuated by the 21 per cent increase, because it meant that where an unfair rate was being charged that rate went up 21 per cent, which was more than the 21 per cent on a lower rate.

Then in spite of the formula therein to which I referred a few moments ago, which said that the freight rates had to bear all these various charges, the minister in his speech in this house also vigorously defended the judgment of the board of transport commissioners. I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 2900 of last year's Hansard; it was on April 13. As reported at page 2900 of Hansard of 1948 the minister said:

> The board gave careful consideration to all the arguments that were put before it. They sat for almost fourteen months.

He went on to say how careful they had been in holding hearings in all parts of Canada. Then he said:

> There are six commissioners on the board at the present time.

Then he uses these words, which are the key words supporting the point I am now making:

> The board through the chief commissioner has delivered a clear and outstanding judgment in this case.

He went on to refer to the various commissioners, and to point out how much each of these commissioners knew about the railway question, arguing that, because they knew so much about it, therefore their judgment was right. But he was not content with that.

Mr. Chevrier: The words speak for themselves.

Mr. Green: Yes, they certainly do. The words shout for themselves. The minister went on to explain about the board's experts. He said they were fine experts and therefore the judgment must be right. The tragedy of the minister's action was this. In this country we have, or are supposed to have, cabinet solidarity. The minister spoke for the cabinet, and the cabinet was the only body to which persons could appeal against this judgment of the board of transport commissioners. In effect the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), for the cabinet, prejudged any appeal that the seven provinces might take.

He went further. The other day he was praising this royal commission. I would refer hon. members to page 2906 of Hansard of 1948, the same day, where we find what he thought about a royal commission then. He said:

> I say to the house that if we were to appoint a royal commission or other body to investigate the inequalities of the freight rates structure in Canada this is what would happen. The royal commission or other body would come to the government and say, "We are ready to proceed with the case. Give us the technical assistance; give us the experts." We would have to reply, "We know of only two groups of people in this country who are able to give you the technical evidence and assistance you require, and those two groups are to be found in the board of transport commissioners." Those groups are, first, the bureau of economics of the board of transport commissioners, and second, the traffic experts of that board, the one composed of a personnel of forty and the other of a personnel of twenty. That being the case what would be the use of asking four, five or six men, not nearly as conversant with this question as are the members of the board of transport commissioners, and who to my mind would not have the same knowledge of the circumstances as the board, to carry out such an investigation? I say to the house therefore that the members of the board, four of whom are from provinces other than Ontario and Quebec, are better qualified and equipped to deal with this question than would be the members of a specialized board or commission of some kind or other.

That is the minister less than a year ago. On the same day, by the way, the leader of the opposition moved an amendment—which will be found at page 2915, and which expressed the position of the Progressive Conservative party—in these words:

. . . regrets the government's failure to secure the removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rates structure before the imposition of a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent—an increase which is bound to intensify the aforesaid inequalities and discriminations . . .

Then it went on to regret the refusal of the government to give the provinces thirty days in which to consider an appeal.

That carries the picture up to April 13, 1948. An interesting series of events followed in that year. On April 26 the seven provincial premiers again protested to the cabinet. They were in the position of having had their appeal prejudged by the Minister of Transport on the floor of this house. Obviously, in the nature of things, they would not expect much help from the cabinet. They asked then that a royal commission be set up; and they did not ask for a royal commission just to investigate the transportation question. They actually asked to have set up a royal commission which would act as an appeal body from the judgment of the board of transport commissioners. They also asked for the suspension of the twenty-one per cent increase in the meantime, and went so far as to say that, if the railways were hard-pressed financially during the time that this matter was being considered, the government should subsidize the railways. On April 29, British Columbia filed a claim for the removal of the mountain differential. That was a new case which they filed on that date. This claim has been heard, but the decision has not yet been handed down.

Then on July 1, some two months later, the Prime Minister (Mr. King) advised the seven provinces that he was refusing a royal commission and that there could be no suspension of the twenty-one per cent increase. On July 14 there was a wage increase of seventeen cents an hour across the board. On July 20 the provinces again appeared before the cabinet. At this time they filed their appeal from the decision of the board, and again asked for a royal commission. Four days later, on July 24, the royal commission was refused. Four days after that again, on July 28, the railways applied for a further increase—that is, on top of the increase of twenty-one per cent. I believe their second application was for a fifteen per cent interim increase and a twenty per cent permanent increase. But I am told that now the argument is for a twenty per cent flat increase over and above the twenty-one per cent increase granted previously.

Early in August the government party held a convention here in Ottawa. Among the resolutions passed by that convention—we were told it was against the wishes of the cabinet, and it certainly must have been against the wishes of the Minister of Transport—was one advocating the setting up of a royal commission on transportation. On September 17 the announcement was made that there was to be a royal commission. In other words, the Minister of Transport was then overruled for the first time.

On September 27 and 28 the provinces argued before the cabinet their appeal from the decision of the board. The Minister of Transport was not present at that time. He was representing Canada at a conference in Europe. It was a good thing that he was away, in view of the speech he had made on April 13. In any event, eleven other ministers heard the appeal by those seven provinces. On October 14 the eleven members of the cabinet handed down a judgment which will be found in "Canadian Railway and Transport Cases," volume 62, at page 273. That judgment upset the formula which had been laid down by the board. I will quote to the house the material paragraph, which reads as follows:

The committee are favourably impressed with the view—

That is, the cabinet.

—that income derived by the railways from sources other than their railway transportation operations should not be entirely excluded by the board in determining the corporate needs of the railways. The payment of fixed charges and income taxes are corporate obligations of corporations as such, and the incomes of corporations, whatsoever their source, are liable therefor; provisions to be made for dividends and a surplus are likewise corporate needs and should be so considered. For these reasons, the committee are of the opinion that some portion of the corporate needs should be borne by the income derived from nonrailway operations.

The cabinet referred the judgment back to the board of transport commissioners. The headnote reads that it is to be referred back for consideration by the board of the claims set forth in the petition by the provinces, and that consideration "should take place concurrently with and in relation to the pending application by the railways for a further increase in freight rates." Then the following footnote appears:

The result of this order in council is that the increase of 21 per cent in freight rates authorized by the board in the general increase case 1946-48 will remain in effect unless and until altered by the board by means of an adjustment which may be made in the course of its disposition of a pending application for a further increase of 20 per cent in freight rates.

The Minister of Transport was clearly wrong in April, 1948. He was proved wrong by the fact that in October, 1948, his colleagues found the judgment of the board of transport commissioners in error. Since October, 1948, the board has been hearing these two applications; reconsidering the application for a 21 per cent increase on the basis suggested by the cabinet, and also hearing for the first time the application for an additional 20 per cent increase. All the time, Mr. Speaker, the discrimination continues and it will be made worse, as I pointed out, by any flat increase. There is no sign of a general rates inquiry by the board of transport commissioners.

In the meantime, on December 29, a royal commission on transportation was appointed. Its powers, obviously, conflict with the powers given to the board of transport commissioners to hold a general rates inquiry. In addition to a repetition of the powers given to the board for such inquiry, power is given to this royal commission to review the Railway Act, and to review the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways. Various other powers are given to them, with the one proviso contained in the last paragraph of the order in council setting up the commission, which reads as follows:

> That the scope of this commission shall not extend to the performance of functions which, under the Railway Act, are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners.

There is no proviso there concerning the statutory freight rates, namely, the maritime freight rates and the Crowsnest rates. They are not excepted from the powers of the royal commission. It may well be that these statutory rates will be lost as a result of the hearings of the royal commission. Furthermore there is no sign of the commencement of the hearings of this royal commission. There has already been a delay of six months. In September of last year it was announced that a commission would be appointed, and when the commission was set up on December 29 press dispatches stated that the job of the commission would take the better part of a year, with public hearings across the country starting perhaps in two months from the announcement of the appointment of the commission. That would mean in March. The press dispatch goes on to say:

> It is not expected a report will be received from the commissioners before 1950.

The other day I asked the minister when the hearings were to commence and he said the intention had been that they would commence in May—

Mr. Chevrier: No, by the end of April.

Mr. Green: Surely the end of April would be the beginning of May, or pretty close to it. He said that it had been thought the commission would be ready to proceed by the end of April. He went on to say, as reported at page 1062 of Hansard:

> Since then I have been informed that provinces have sought some delay in order to prepare their cases.

I point out that there has already been a delay of six months.

It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that the royal commission must first sit and report, because they are instructed to review the Railway Act. The royal commission having reported, if any changes are to be made in the Railway Act, these will have to be put through parliament. After that has been done the board of transport commissioners will have to decide on rates. They would obviously be foolish to try now to set up a new basis of rates, because that job has been handed on to the royal commission. This double set-up, this business of two boards, means more delay; it means more expense; and of course it means that the discriminations continue, unless the railways themselves get soft-hearted and remove them.

Mr. Knowles: There is not much chance of that.

Mr. Green: After all, the actual equalizing of rates can only be done by the rate experts. It cannot be done by the royal commission; it cannot be done by the members of the board of transport commissioners. It has to be done by rate experts. I suggest that parliament could have been used. Instead of setting up a royal commission we could have had a committee of this house deal with this question and then parliament could have advised the experts what was to be done, and they could have drawn up the rates. Certainly nothing miraculous will come from this commission any more than has come from other commissions.

In any event, the government can now clarify the function of these two boards. There is confusion from coast to coast.

Mr. Chevrier: There is no confusion at all.

Mr. Green: Boards of trade do not know—

Mr. Chevrier: Let me tell my hon. friend that there is no confusion at all.

Mr. Graydon: Except in the cabinet.

Mr. Chevrier: If my hon. friend reads the order in council setting up the investigation, and setting up the royal commission, he will find that there is no confusion. It is quite clear. The duties are set out. Of course my hon. friend can make the statement that there is confusion, and he is entitled to his opinion.

Mr. Green: The minister tells me that, but I tell him that there is confusion across the country.

Mr. Chevrier: I am saying that there is not.

Mr. Green: Boards of trade and other public bodies interested do not know to whom they should make recommendations. Furthermore, the government should insist upon the speeding up of these hearings. If there are to be two sets of hearings, then the hearings should be speeded up. And most important of all, the government should make up its mind as to its freight rate policy. The question involved is, are these discriminations to be removed or are they not? That is a matter of government policy. The present government is dodging that responsibility, but in the end some government will have to adopt a policy on freight rates.

I repeat what I have said several times, because I want to emphasize the point; in the meanwhile, discrimination continues and it will be made worse with each flat increase across the board.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I wish to deal with two points for a few minutes. First, I shall say a few words in regard to the subamendment moved yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). In doing so, I should like to assure my Social Credit friends that my comments will be as bereft of chiding criticism, if one can call it that, as I can possibly make them. I have a certain affinity, if I may use the word, with my Social Credit friends. I shall be careful of my words and say that we are both descended from the same social stratum of society, and that consequently we see the same kind of people and to a large extent meet the same conditions. For that reason, if for no other, I have no wish to be either unfair or acrimonious in any remarks I make.

The subamendment, however, is one which this party, I regret, cannot support. It contains three sections, the first of which is an expression of regret that the government has shown studied indifference to social credit financial proposals. The second is a regret that the government has failed to take up the social credit challenge to debate in the house certain aspects of social credit. Surely no such proposals were ever made a part of a want of confidence resolution. What does it matter if the government has not done those things.

Then, the last section is a regret that the government has not made legislative provision for the maintenance of purchasing power for the distribution of goods and services. All of us would agree with that. But if the assumption is that that could only be done, or must be done, by the application of social credit principles, then we cannot agree with it.

Yesterday my leader said the trouble today was not one of a scarcity of money, but a maldistribution of money. As a matter of fact up to a very few months ago it was not a scarcity of money, but too much money.

An hon. Member: We agree with that.

Mr. MacInnis: If you agree with it, and if that was the condition two months or six months ago, the question is not that there is less money today than there are goods. As a matter of fact the processes of production distribute always in wages, salaries, rent and profits enough money to consume the goods produced.

Mr. Blackmore: Never in your life.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, that is the Social Credit argument. They assert one thing and I assert the opposite. And while I am not a Daniel, or any of the major or even the minor prophets, I am prepared to put my opinion against theirs any time. As I shall develop my argument I shall have something to say along that line.

I maintain, and I think every economist of any note anywhere maintains, that the trouble with the capitalist system, with so-called free enterprise, is that it does not distribute equitably enough the fruits of industry so that the people can be provided with the clothing, food and shelter they need through our productive processes. That is the fact. But the reason it does not do that is because it is not its purpose to do that. The purpose of industry is to produce profits for the owners of industry. The more that is put into wages or into any other costs, the less goes into profits. If we do not understand that, I do not believe we can understand anything about our economic system. And until we understand that we will not understand how to apply remedies.

The hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) complained yesterday, as he has on several other occasions—if "complained" is the right word—about his inability to make the members in the house understand the principles of social credit. I have listened to the hon. member since 1935, and the more I listen to him the more confused I am. I am free to say that perhaps that is not his fault; it may be mine. I find however that I can understand other people when they are talking; I can understand what they mean. But I cannot understand the hon. member for Lethbridge or the others in the Social Credit party who deal with the theory of social credit; they are not understandable to me.

Mr. Blackmore: Give us an example.

Mr. MacInnis: I shall do that.

Mr. Shaw: Give us your amendment of 1935.

Mr. MacInnis: Speaking in the house on March 12, 1947, the hon. member for Lethbridge said, as reported at page 1309 of Hansard:

> Up to the present time there has been the danger, when banks have lent money, that they could not get their money back. It is obvious that with debt-free money going into circulation among the people the banks would have a far better chance of having their loans repaid. In many cases the loans would be partly if not wholly repaid with debt-free money. That is one way in which the debt-free money would be cancelled out of circulation. So there would not be the danger of too much of it being in circulation.

If that means anything at all, it means that bank loans—in other words, debt money—are to be paid with debt-free money which, when the bankers receive it, they are going to cancel out so that there will not be too much money in circulation. If that makes sense to anyone I should like him to hold up his hand and then to explain it to the house. It does not make sense to me. Then we have this paragraph:

> The banks lend money for production purposes but not to pay interest. But interest is necessary to encourage the banks to lend money.

In other words, debt money is necessary to encourage the banks to lend debt money. Then it continues:

> The banks also never lend money to pay a profit. If we are to continue under our system of interest and profits the finest way to enable us to carry it on is to have debt-free money which can supply means for the payment of interest and profits. That is another way to cancel debt-free money out of circulation.

There again, when you pay debt-free money to pay interest and to pay profit, then the person receiving it cancels it. If he cancels it out, what has he got?

An hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, that is social credit. I have been trying to understand that sort of thing for the last fourteen years.

An hon. Member: Page the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine).

Mr. MacInnis: If the hon. member for Cariboo understands it, he was never able to make me understand it.

Then, again, my hon. friends charge the socialists and the C.C.F. with favouring controls and regulations. They are fearful if that sort of thing is allowed to creep in we will not be able to control it. As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) said last night, bad men will get into almost any organization, and may take over control.

At the last session of parliament I asked the hon. member for Lethbridge a question, which is found at page 5605 of Hansard for 1948. I quote:

> Mr. MacInnis: I have been trying to grasp the principles of social credit. My understanding is that it is controlled free enterprise. Is that correct?
> Mr. Blackmore: I think you could say "controlled" or "regulated." It is difficult to get a word which will carry the exact truth without an unfortunate connotation.

I might say that I am still trying to grasp those principles. Even after listening to my Social Credit friends I think it must be admitted that any controls that we would likely have under a C.C.F. or any other government would be the utmost freedom in comparison to the controls that would be necessary under social credit. The high priest of social credit was brought out last night to bear witness. I refer to Major C. H. Douglas. I have in my hand a copy of "Social Credit" by C. H. Douglas. This is a revised edition, but I do not know the year of publication. At the back of the book is an appendix headed, "Draft Social Credit scheme for Scotland."

It is rather interesting to note that Major Douglas should make Scotland a testing ground for social credit. I imagine he felt that, if social credit would not work with the intelligence of the Scottish people, it would not work at all. For that he is to be commended. What is this plan? Section 1 reads:

> Obtain from existing sources, such as company balance sheets, land registration offices, and insurance companies, such information necessary to place a money valuation upon the whole of the capital assets of Scotland, such as land, roads, bridges, railways, canals, buildings, drainage and water schemes, minerals, semi-manufactured materials... Add to this the sum representing the present commercial capitalized value of the population.

There was to be a census made and a value put on sewers, roads, cattle, hogs—

An hon. Member: And porridge.

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, on oatmeal as well.

An hon. Member: And haggis.

Mr. MacInnis: And a value was also to be put on human beings. The men, women and children of the country were to be given a value. I quote again:

> Such a figure exists and varies with the actuarial expectation of life and the plant capacity of the country, and is something like £10,000 for a citizen of the United States at the age of twenty-five.

This is the only social credit plan I have ever seen and apparently it would apply to other countries besides Scotland. They are going to place a commercial value on human beings. But they go further, and I quote from page 206:

> No transfer of real estate directly between either persons or business undertakings will be recognized. Persons or business undertakings desiring to relinquish the control of real immovable estate will do so to the government, which will take any necessary steps to re-allot it to suitable applicants.

This from the people who shout about the socialization of land, but such things as this were never in any C.C.F. program at any time. Yet we find them here in the only social credit plan that has ever been drawn up. Yet social credit members talk about freedom. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) quoted Major Douglas last night. Does the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) repudiate Major Douglas?

Mr. Low: No.

Mr. MacInnis: These are Major Douglas' words. These are the words in the bible of the Social Credit party.

Mr. Low: That is not what he said.

Mr. MacInnis: Those are the words of the high priest of the Social Credit party.

Mr. Blackmore: It is the hon. member's interpretation.

Mr. MacInnis: I think I can understand English. I have not time to read much more, but the following is found on page 210:

Wage rates in all organized industries will be reduced by 25 per cent where such reduction does not involve a loss to the wage-earner exceeding 20 per cent of the sums received in the form of national dividend. The wage rates ruling in 1928 to be taken as the basis against which the reduction would be made.

Any trade union violating a wage agreement to render its membership liable to suspension of national dividend, and any employers' organization committing a similar offence, to be liable to suspension of price assistance or wage reductions.

If you put a program like that into effect, and I submit that that is the only extant program of the social credit movement, without an iron-clad dictatorship you will be doing something that has never been done before.

Mr. Low: That is just the plan for Scotland.

Mr. MacInnis: If it is good enough for Scotland it ought to be good enough for any place else. My hon. friends remind me of the minister who had been brought into a new parish. He had been there for six months or so and had never heard any comment on his sermons. One day he asked one of the elders how he thought he was getting along, whether they were satisfied with his sermons, and the elder replied, "Don't worry, the members of this congregation did not know what sin was until you came here." Let me say again that despite what the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) said this afternoon the industries of Canada do distribute purchasing power.

Mr. Low: Incidentally.

Mr. MacInnis: As a matter of fact any useful work that they do is incidental. It is not their purpose to do useful work for the community; their purpose is to produce profits for the shareholders. If you are selling shares or stock in a company no one will ask you what useful service the company is doing for the community; but they will want to see the balance sheet for last year. If the balance sheet shows a loss, no matter what useful purpose the company is performing they will not buy. That is proof positive of what I say is the purpose of private industry. I regret that we cannot vote for the subamendment.

I should like to say a few words in regard to the amendment moved by the official opposition. This amendment expresses want of confidence in the government and I think it has been referred to as a straight want of confidence motion. It is customary when a member of the house moves a motion of want of confidence for him to give his reasons for moving the motion. The leader of the opposition did that before moving his amendment. When the leader of the C.C.F. party moved the amendment to the amendment, which has been disposed of, he accused the government of failure to deal effectively with two matters; natural products marketing, and national health insurance. We could have included half a dozen other items of government policy, but we have been in the house long enough to know that, if you put a thing in an amendment once you are not allowed to refer to it in an amendment again. We want to move several votes of want of confidence in the government before this session is over, and we are leaving ourselves as free as we can.

The point is that the official opposition voted against the amendment to the amendment although our amendment left the want of confidence part intact. It did not interfere with it at all. Having voted against it, we can only assume that the official opposition are satisfied with the government's marketing policy, and that they are satisfied with the government's policy on national health insurance.

Mr. Casselman: That is your argument only.

Mr. MacInnis: It is not only an argument; it is a logical assumption and I think I am a very logical person. I have mentioned the reasons behind the amendment to the amendment moved by the leader of the C.C.F. party. Let us look at the reasons for the amendment moved by the leader of the official opposition. The amendment was preceded by a speech by him lasting more than two hours justifying his own position with regard to the dominion-provincial conference.

Mr. Knowles: We will probably get another one today.

Mr. MacInnis: And it ended up with this paragraph to be found on page 59 of Hansard.

Mr. Hartt: Which side did he try to justify?

Mr. MacInnis: I stated quite clearly what, in my opinion, he tried to do. The paragraph reads:

> By its refusal to reconvene this conference to which I have referred, the dominion government is not only threatening national unity, but making impossible any solution of our constitutional problems. For that reason this government should not receive the support of hon. members of this House of Commons in the course it is following.

Then there were a few further words, and he moved the amendment. I think I am justified in saying that his amendment was an amendment of want of confidence because of the policy of the government in the dominion-provincial conference. Later on I think he must have felt that was a rather thin reason because he referred to the matter again in his second speech on February 21, and he indicated that really the amendment was based on more than the results of the dominion-provincial conference. I shall read from page 738 of Hansard, where he said:

> In this debate this house has an opportunity to say by its vote that the time for arbitrary powers has gone; that the right of parliament to enact laws on behalf of the people should be restored; that any legislation which should be continued should be continued only in the form of proper statutory terms and that those things which we are asked to deal with should be dealt with only in the form of statutes.

But that was only an afterthought. He did not mention any of these things when he proposed his amendment of want of confidence. On the same page of Hansard he refers to the amendment to the amendment in these words:

> The amendment to the amendment presents limited objections to the conduct of the government,—

They were not nearly as limited, in my opinion, as the amendment itself.

> —and what is stated in the speech from the throne. That in itself might be interpreted as a general want of confidence motion, but it also might be interpreted as simply limiting criticism of the government to those points that are set forth in the amendment to the amendment. I for one do not feel that it touches upon some of the most vital points that are before us, and particularly the right of parliament to assert its authority as against the right to govern by order in council. For that reason I think that the amendment to the amendment is inadequate.

If the amendment to the amendment was inadequate, then surely the amendment itself was inadequate because it did not deal with any of these matters. As I said, we could have dealt with a dozen things, housing, the high cost of living, social security, and a whole host of things for which this government can be condemned for not doing anything about them, and for which they will be condemned. To take that position three weeks after the amendment had been moved is just not good enough. When a person takes more than two hours to justify his own position on any question it seems to me that he must be doubtful of his position himself.

I am told that criminologists—I believe that is what you call the people who study crime —say that criminals have a propensity for coming back to the scene of their crimes. The preoccupation of the leader of the opposition with the dominion-provincial conference can only be explained by some such hypothesis as that. He is continually drawn back to the scene of the crime, to where the conference was strangled. I often wonder as I listen to him if his partner has as tender a conscience or as morbid a curiosity. I have already said in the house that I was not placing the blame for the scuttling of the conference. I am not absolving the government from having a share in it. As a matter of fact, I am fairly well convinced that they were more or less pleased when the premier of Ontario and the premier of Quebec made the carrying on of the conference impossible. During periods of war people see what can be done when they co-operate for certain ends. They see that in wartime, despite all the expenditure on goods and services for war purposes, the standard of living of the people can be raised, and there is a realization of the necessity for better living and more security when peace comes. The feeling was there in 1945 when the proposals in the green book were drafted, but by 1946 it was wearing off. Other pastures looked more luscious, and social security less pressing than it did in 1944 and 1945. Therefore when the conference broke down I am convinced that the government was pretty well satisfied. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) shaking his head.

Mr. Martin: That certainly was not the case.

Mr. MacInnis: If they were not satisfied there was no reason under heaven why they could not embody the proposals in the green book in an agreement with the provinces that were willing to sign. What I am working up to is that as far as this party is concerned the want of confidence amendment moved by the official opposition is phony and we are not going to vote for it. We will vote against it. We have given the official opposition one chance, but we will give them another; we will call a vote on the main motion itself.

Mr. Sinnott: Would you call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall make my remarks short, concise, brief and to the point. Having been named as one of the reformers of the Liberal party along with the McGeers, the Slaghts and the Tuckers, I thought this might be an opportune time to say a few words. We hear much criticism from the other side about the surplus the government has had this year. We heard a great deal of criticism from the opposite side about the taxation of the people, and I think this is a good time to let the government know that they have someone who can help them out a little. I have every reason to believe that when the next election is over and we come back here to the house I shall be asked to become Minister of Finance. If I should accept, my first step will be to tell the private banks that we intend to discontinue their charters and to assign all their branches and subsidiaries to the Bank of Canada. Then we would be in a position to look after our own finances.

I shall never forget the statement of our former Prime Minister, now the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King), in 1935, that once a nation lost control of its currency and credit all else would be idle and futile. Nor shall I forget the words of one of the old financiers, who said, "Give me control of the currency and credit and I care not who makes the nation's laws." We live in an age in which science and invention have improved the old methods of production, but we are still following the orthodox methods of finance. We have seen Canada's debt built up during wartime to the astronomical figure of sixteen billion dollars, on most of which we are paying interest, and we are told we will continue to pay interest on this money until we go to join our ancestors. So I think it is about time the government really took a hand in seeing what makes the clock go round as far as finance is concerned. We can make all the speeches we like in this house; words will not mean anything. It is action we need, and action now. If the Minister of Finance makes up his mind that he is going to get down to business and tell these bureaucrats who are advising him that he is going to run the business, we will be better off. I remember when I took over a municipality which was being run by some of these bureaucrats, with the money of the people being squandered here and there. When I took over the reins I said, "I am running the show," and as a result the people of that municipality were better off by some $226,000 in eight years. I believe that if the Minister of Finance would take the reins in his own hands and follow the same procedure the people of Canada would be very grateful, and I wish he would do it now.

I should like to call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Drew: Before we rise, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I would move that we sit through the dinner hour, in view of the fact that the debate is to terminate this evening by reason of the motion of the government. That will make it possible for the debate definitely to conclude this evening.

Mr. Howe: I would second the motion.

Mr. Quelch: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is moved by Mr. Drew, seconded by Mr. Howe, that notwithstanding standing order No. 6, Mr. Speaker do not leave the chair at six o'clock, but that the debate be continued.

Mr. Knowles: Does it not require unanimous consent for a motion of this kind to be made without notice?

Mr. Casselman: He got consent.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no.

Mr. Speaker: According to standing order 45 notice is not necessary for this motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to understand what you said.

And some hon. members having risen.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of the house to have a division?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Before I go on with what I really want to say tonight, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make brief reference to a number of statements that were made by the hon. member for Vancouver East

(Mr. MacInnis). I want to congratulate him upon the orderly way in which he made a criticism of certain proposals that we have put forward from time to time. But I was surprised at his attitude to the principles of social credit when he said he could not understand them even after studying them for some fourteen years. He even went so far as to say that the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) had not been able to convert him. I am satisfied that the hon. member for Vancouver East must be suffering from a serious relapse. I do not think he is getting old; it certainly cannot be his age; but I cannot understand how he can say that he does not understand these principles when apparently he understood them quite clearly in 1935. I should like to quote, in order to refresh his memory, an amendment that he seconded on March 26, 1935. The motion was moved by Mr. Coote and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Let me read the amendment, as reported at page 2138 of Hansard of 1935:

That the amendment be amended by striking out all the words after the word "Canada" and adding thereto the following:

"and would appear to be based upon the assumption that poverty and debt are inevitable conditions within the country; and whereas the real and potential wealth of the nation, based upon our natural resources and our capacity to produce, is such as to make possible an abundant provision for all the requirements of our people;

Therefore, this house is of the opinion that the government should take immediate action to insure the fullest and most equitable distribution possible of our socially-created wealth and that, as a first step in this direction, the measures which may be necessary to meet the pressing needs of the farmers and the unemployed should be financed—

And mark this well.

—by the social credit of Canada, thus avoiding a further increase in the debt burden of the country.

The hon. member for Vancouver East took exception to the statement by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) advocating that debt-free money could be used to reduce the debt. He thought that was a weird suggestion. Yet in 1935 he advocated that social credit should be used for the purpose of expanding certain services without any expansion of debt.

Mr. Johnston: He has a convenient memory.

Mr. Quelch: As I say, the hon. gentleman seems to be suffering a relapse. The hon. member also implied that we in this group were opposed to all controls. Yet on every occasion when a motion has been made in this house to grant the government continuation of emergency power to exercise certain controls, we have always voted for that motion in order that any absolutely necessary controls could be continued. The stand that we have always taken is that we are opposed to controls for control's sake. We are opposed to the idea of continually controlling, unnecessarily, the lives of the people.

I will give one or two examples of the type of controls that I dislike. During the war we had the wartime prices and trade board. I am of the opinion that some frustrated fashion expert got into that board. All his life, apparently he had wanted to have the power to make men change their methods of dress. The fashion experts have always been able to get the women to change their methods of dress, to make them pull up their skirts one day and let them down the next. But they have never been able to get men to change their method of wearing pants. So a measure was put into force which said that men would have to take the cuffs off the bottom of their pants. It might be argued that by so doing there would be a saving of a little bit of cloth. One day I went into a store on Sparks street in order to get a pair of semi-finished flannels. They were not hemmed on the bottom. There was enough material on the bottom with which to make cuffs. So I asked the manager, or the man who was serving in the store, to finish them with cuffs. Oh no, he said, that is against the regulations of the wartime prices and trade board. I said, what are you going to do with the cloth? He said, cut it off. I said, what for? He said, to throw it away. I said, surely that would be a waste of cloth; surely they could turn it up into cuffs. He said, no, we will have to cut it off and turn it up underneath. But, he said, if you like, you can take the pants away as they are and turn them up yourself. What kind of silly control was that?

Then again control was exercised over the kind of lapels you wore, and the kind of pockets you wanted. For years I had been in the habit of getting inside pockets in my vest. No, I could not have them; it took extra work. I said, all right, put only two pockets on the outside and put one on the inside. No, they could not do that. It was against the controls. It is that kind of silly control that makes people angry. If any decided benefit accrues from the controls, or if the controls are necessary to the welfare of the country, the people will not object. But just the minute a bunch of bureaucrats start interfering unnecessarily with the peoples' way of life, the people will object.

For some strange reason the hon. member for Vancouver East objected to Major Douglas' plan of assessing the value of human beings. Surely the hon. member would not suggest that human lives are not valuable. We assess them at a high rate, because the more manpower you have, the greater potential productive power there is in the country. Therefore we should look upon every human being as a great asset. Our main complaint has been that in the past we have regarded the people of a country as a liability, and have deplored the fact that we have unemployment instead of rejoicing in the fact that we have surplus productive capacity to make it possible to increase the production of the country, improve the standard of living of the people and at the same time reduce the hours of labour. Certainly we would be the last ones to look upon the people as a liability rather than an asset.

There is just one other point I want to deal with at this stage. The hon. member referred to profits and insinuated that it was wrong to produce for profit. I think that people will be obliged to agree, whether they believe in profits or not, that they are a great incentive to production. I claim that everybody who works, either with his brain or with his hands, works for a profit, whether it be a labourer or whether it be what some like to call a capitalist. It is true that when the labourer works he should take an interest in the type of work he does, but he hopes to profit by his work and therefore he will always try to get the highest wage possible in order to profit more. On the other hand, that does not mean for one minute that we condone exorbitant profits or excess profits. But those are things that can well be taken care of by taxation.

Mr. Blackmore: By the just price.

Mr. Quelch: When the hon. member for Vancouver East was speaking, he disagreed with us in our argument that in normal times there is invariably a deficiency of purchasing power with which to buy the produced consumer goods of a country. Instead of dealing with that matter at this moment, I will deal with it later on when I shall be dealing with a situation which developed in this country during certain years.

After being in this house for the past fourteen years, I want to say that I am more convinced than ever that the people of this country will never reach the objective towards which they are striving until the principles of social credit are adopted in some form or other either by this government or by some other government.

Mr. Blackmore: Both nationally and internationally.

Mr. Quelch: Furthermore, I would say that either the principles of social credit will be adopted or private enterprise will go, and in its place will come some form of "ism" which we may not like but which, once we have had it, we may have a great deal of difficulty in getting rid of. It is only necessary to refer to what has happened in the past fifteen years in certain parts of Europe to appreciate what I am referring to. We maintain that by the adoption of social credit principles it will be possible at all times to maintain the optimum development of the resources of the country in order to give the people of Canada the highest standard of living that the country is capable of producing, at the same time giving them the greatest degree of personal freedom possible. In order that a high standard of living may be maintained, we have always advocated that it would be necessary to use a certain amount of national money for the purpose of maintaining the purchasing power of the people at a level sufficiently high to maintain an effective demand against the production of the country. We have never advocated that more money should be issued than was necessary to maintain an effective demand. In other words, we are advocating that national money shall be issued to equate demand with supply.

Mr. Blackmore: We have always said that.

Mr. Quelch: It must be quite obvious that this is essential if we are to maintain the full development of our resources, because just the minute that demand lags behind supply, industry will reduce production, since no industry can continue to produce unless it can sell.

It is true that most political parties would say that they believe in maintaining the full development of our resources; but the other three parties, the Liberals, the Conservatives and the C.C.F., advocate that it be done out of taxation or by borrowing. When you borrow money you increase debt. When you increase debt, you increase debt charges. When you increase debt charges, you have to increase taxation in order to pay them, and when you increase taxation you reduce the purchasing power of the people and thereby make it impossible to maintain an effective demand, resulting in unemployment, and then you are on your way into the spiral of a depression.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) introduced the budget last year, he told us that we had a new high in production, in employment and in prosperity. Already this session we have heard words to that effect. But the Minister of Finance went on to warn us that we could not expect that situation to continue indefinitely into the future. As a matter of fact, he warned us that there might be a recession in the not distant future. Therefore, in view of the fact that we have a large national debt, the government considered it a wise policy to tax the people heavily while they had the money because, the minister said, if a recession comes they will not have so much money. Therefore the only thing to do was for the government to tax the money while they had it. It will be recalled that during the past two years the government have taxed from the people $1,200 million more than was required to meet government expenditures, and the national debt was reduced to quite an extent. But here is the point. The minister emphasized the fact that we had a high level of income, production and employment. Then he warned us that a recession might come, but instead of trying to safeguard the country against a depression developing he instituted a policy which hastened the day of the depression, because he maintained taxation at a high level, thereby withdrawing from circulation $1,200 million, and thereby of course reducing the purchasing power of the people to that extent.

When the minister told us that we had a new high in production, in employment and prosperity, I think he might also have reminded the house that we had, and still have, a new high in discontent; discontent among the workers, discontent among the farmers. You can find it wherever you go. Not only is there discontent among the workers but there is a high degree of fear in the minds of all people, fear as to what is going to happen in the future, fear as to whether or not there will be a depression. Why does that situation exist at a time when we are supposed to have such a high degree of prosperity? I think it is easy to understand why that situation exists. It exists because the people can remember only too clearly what happened in this country during the past nineteen or twenty years. They remember the nine years of the depression when many people lost their life savings, and in some cases their health and in other cases even their lives. They remember the five years of war and the various restrictions that were placed upon their movement. I suppose there is hardly a family in Canada that did not suffer the loss of a relative or a friend. They remember only too well the last four years of high prices and the inflationary period. There is no doubt that many people have prospered during that period, but on the other hand there are many people who have suffered, and suffered severely. I have in mind the people in the low-income brackets, and especially those on low fixed incomes, such as old age pensions, and those on the war veterans allowances. At last they are hoping that we may be approaching an era where there might be a fairly high degree of prosperity on a somewhat permanent basis. But instead of being able to look forward to an era of prosperity, they are now being warned on every side that the danger is that we are going into another depression. Therefore, is it any wonder that fear is expressed on all sides today and that there is widespread discontent? I believe all hon. members will agree that it is a somewhat dreary outlook. People are asking the question whether or not depressions are inevitable. Just because people in other parts of the world suffer depressions, is it any reason why we in this country have to have one? Surely in a country such as Canada, where we have great resources, it should be possible at all times to maintain the development of these resources at a sufficiently high level so as to give the people a fairly decent standard of living, whether or not there is a depression in Europe or in some other part of the world.

I am not suggesting for one minute, Mr. Speaker, that the problem is an easy one to solve; but I do suggest that the situation has been greatly aggravated by various blunders on the part of the government, blunders which will always occur so long as the government ties itself to an orthodox financial system. We believe that these difficulties could have been avoided under a system of social credit. Let me give an example of what I mean when I say that. Let me deal briefly with the three periods that I have mentioned, namely, the depression years, in the thirties, the war years and the postwar years.

Yesterday the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) referred to the depression years from 1930 to 1935. Let me go on from there and deal with the years from 1935 to 1939. What was the situation in Canada at that time? During that period we had around a million people on relief, half a million people unemployed, and industry operating at less than 50 per cent of its capacity. In addition, strangely enough, during those five years we had, on an average, a favourable balance of payments of over $219 million. In other words, we had exported $219 million worth of goods more than we brought back in imports. During those years it was a very common thing for people to blame industry for the situation. They asked, why does not industry have more confidence? Why does not industry employ more of the unemployed, expand its production and produce the things that the people require? I think the answer to that question is quite obvious. Industrial production at that time was less than 50 per cent of its capacity. Even with that low production, industry was having a great deal of difficulty in selling that limited production. Industry knew only too well that if they expanded their production they would just have that much more goods left unsold and they would go bankrupt that much quicker. It was in those years that the social credit movement originated in Alberta. It is interesting to note that after fourteen years the Social Credit government of Alberta was returned stronger than ever.

What was the analysis we made at that time, an analysis which is just as sound today as it was then? Fortunately more and more people are coming to realize the soundness of that analysis. At that time we said that owing to certain practices inherent in the capitalistic system industry was not able to distribute sufficient purchasing power in the form of wages, salaries and dividends to maintain an effective demand against its own production except—and here is the point that most people ignore—in times of abnormal capital goods construction, such as you have in wartime, or in the early development years of a country. And the reason of course that purchasing power at that time can increase to the point necessary to maintain effective demand against the production of the country is that the money paid out in the construction of roads, bridges and the like is not required to buy those roads and bridges. Therefore that money becomes available to buy the consumer goods upon the market. Therefore, the higher the degree of capital construction in relation to production of consumer goods, the more purchasing power will there be in circulation for the purpose of maintaining an effective demand against the production of consumer goods in the country.

It was that point to which the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) took exception. He said that in his opinion industry always distributed sufficient moneys in salaries, wages and dividends to buy back this production. I pointed out that owing to certain practices inherent within the system, that was not so.

Let me give an example. In the first place, banks create money and lend it, but they do not create the money to pay the interest on the loan. They charge interest on the money they lend. But they do not provide the money for which the interest is paid. A deficiency is created, therefore, to the extent that total interest paid exceeds wages and dividends paid out by banks. Then take, for example, an industry which produces $10,000 worth of goods. We will say that in the production of those goods the industry pays out $10,000. Therefore you have $10,000 available to buy back $10,000 worth of goods. But if $1,000 of that $10,000 is saved, then only $9,000 is available to buy the $10,000 worth of goods, and you have a deficiency of $1,000. As we know, people are being continuously urged and advised to save more money. The more you save, the greater that deficiency will become, unless other steps are taken to make up the deficiency in purchasing power existing as a result of the saving.

Then again, the industry will have certain profits. If the people benefiting from those profits proceed to spend them, there is no deficiency in purchasing power. But we all know that many industries make a practice of not distributing all their profits. They plough them back. To the extent the profits are not distributed, you will have a deficiency.

Those are three simple examples of how a deficiency of purchasing power occurs. I do not wish to go into it in greater detail now. Rather than argue the point further I believe it would be better to give one or two concrete examples to prove that in the past the purchasing power of the people has not been sufficient to buy the total production of the country. Let us see what happened in England for two hundred years prior to 1914. Let me quote what was said by Reginald McKenna to the American Bankers Association on October 5, 1922. These are his words:

> For over two centuries British capital, that is, credit, has been lent to other countries; year by year England produced more than she either consumed herself or could exchange for the products of other nations, and she could not obtain a market for the surplus unless she gave the purchaser a long credit. Foreign loans and foreign issues were taken up in England and the proceeds were spent in paying for the surplus production. British factories and workshops were kept in good employment,—

And this is the important point—

> —but it was a condition of their prosperity that a part of their output should be disposed of in this way.

In other words, during those years of production industry found it impossible to sell its total output within England, or the imports brought back in return. In order to maintain production it was necessary to ship surplus goods out of the country, and to refuse to accept imports in return. So that the money paid out in the production which was exported, and for which no goods were brought back in return, helped to maintain an effective demand against the goods left within the country.

That is why one will find all great industrial nations have insisted in the past—as they still do—upon trying to maintain a favourable balance of trade in order to prevent unemployment. That is one of the main reasons we took such strong exception to the Bretton Woods agreement; because under the Bretton Woods agreement we find the great industrial nations endeavouring to maintain a favourable balance of trade merely for the purpose of dumping their own unemployment problem upon the doorstep of another nation.

Let me quote from a survey made in the United States under the direction of the government of that country. In 1934 the Hoover administration set up a committee of technicians to make a national survey of the potential productive capacity of the United States. Let me quote from the foreword to that book:

> After almost a year of research by sixty technicians, financed by the federal government, the national survey of potential product capacity has released its findings. Official publication will follow in due course. Preliminary thereto, Mr. Loeb, the director of the survey, here describes the results.

Let me quote two short paragraphs from this survey, one which is well worth reading because it illustrates much better than I can do the manner in which a deficiency of purchasing power has curtailed production. At page 71 I find this:

> The total national monetary income in 1929 did not equal the total price asked for the goods which could have been produced by the plant then existing. But instead of dropping prices until monetary income was able to command full production (which is the classical answer to this situation), prices were maintained and production was restricted. Consequently, national monetary income did not in 1929, nor does it today, command the full production of our industrial plant.

Then, later in the book, they make certain suggestions. Perhaps I did not mention the name of this book; it is "The Chart of Plenty". One of the conclusions at page 161 states:

> It would seem that the simple and obvious way out, that of giving a buying power adequate to procure desired goods and services to the limit of our ability to produce them, might well be tried. It is simple in principle but has not been attempted.

Mr. Blackmore: That is social credit.

Mr. Quelch: And that is what we maintain. There you have sixty technicians appointed by the government of the United States to make a survey of the potential capacity of that country; and they bring in a report which states that the logical way to deal with the situation is to issue money to maintain the purchasing power of the people to a point where the people will be able to buy the total production of the country.

Let me return to the point I was making earlier. I was stating that during the year of depression we had a situation wherein our production was less than 50 per cent of its capacity. We were not able to expand our production, because the people did not have money to buy even the reduced supply of goods then being produced. Industry knew only too well that if they expanded their production they would have that much more goods left unsold. So in those years we advocated that a certain amount of national money should be issued in order to raise the purchasing power of the people, thereby expanding the demand for goods. Consequently as soon as industry found there was an expanding demand for their goods they would have employed more people and would have begun to expand their production.

Someone may suggest that if that had been done in the early stages of such a program there would have been inflation until there was an expansion of production. But that is not so. It would have been possible for the government to have issued $200 million because, as I have already mentioned, throughout the whole five-year period we had an average favourable balance of payments of over $219 million a year. In other words we had paid for more than $200 million of imports which we never brought back to this country. Is anyone going to say the reason we did not bring $200 million worth of imports back into Canada was that the people did not need them, when at that time we had a million people on relief? The reason those $200 million worth of imports were not brought into the country was that the importers knew that if they brought them in the people would not be able to buy them owing to the fact that they lacked the money with which to pay for them. Therefore we advocated that $200 million be issued as a start toward increasing social services and to provide for national projects that were so urgently required at that time, such as the elimination of railroad crossings, irrigation and many other things. Hon. members who were in the house at that time will remember the pitiful reply we got from the government on every occasion that we made that suggestion. We were told that it could not be done because the government lacked the money with which to finance it. We were told then, as we are being told by some people today, that the only money available to the government was the money that could be obtained from the people's pockets. I remember the late Norman Rogers stating that they could not obtain that money by taxation because it would mean increased taxation of the people in the lower-income brackets who were already suffering from a deficiency of purchasing power. That was the situation up to September, 1930.

Then, strangely enough, a change took place in the situation. Shortly after war was declared the government instructed the chartered banks to create for their use $200 million. It is interesting to note that when the Minister of Finance spoke on the budget he stated that the government were indulging in monetary expansion for the purpose of putting some of the unemployed to work in order to produce the goods they would need for war and, of course, provide the government with the money to pay for those goods. I think it is a great condemnation of any nation to say that it is willing to adopt a certain financial system in order to go to war and yet is not prepared to adopt the same financial system in order to maintain the welfare of its people.

There is no question that the war did more to retard the growth of social credit than any other one thing. As I pointed out, in normal times there is bound to be a deficiency of purchasing power; but that is not the case in times of abnormal capital goods production as in wartime. The vast sums that are paid out for capital goods production help to make up the deficiency. In wartime over 50 per cent of the production of the country was being taken away from the people and being used for war purposes. Then the government maintained heavy taxation in order to withdraw the purchasing power that had been created by the production of goods used for war. Then in addition a large number of people who would have been able to produce goods were taken away for war purposes.

In spite of everything our production went ahead by leaps and bounds. Why? Was it because we had socialized the industries of this country? No. It was due to the fact that during the war the banking system created for the use of the government over $4,000 million. I admit that they carried on the fictitious rumours that the war was being financed through the sale of bonds and by taxation. But if we had depended on the sale of bonds and taxation to finance the war we would have had a very different type of war effort from what we did have. It was due to the fact that $4,000 million was created that it was possible to finance the great production of this country and at the same time finance the government as the great purchaser of all kinds of goods that were being produced. An insatiable market was established.

I see my time is running out and I should like to close by saying that the situation that existed during the war has changed considerably today. There was an inflationary period after the war, due to reconversion and the spending of war savings as well as on account of the large loans made to foreign nations; but today reconversion has been completed and industry is now in the process of turning out the greatest volume of consumer goods this country has ever seen.

In addition, the people in the lower-income brackets have largely spent their savings, and loans to foreign nations have been spent. In the very near future we will be approaching that period of time about which the governor of the Bank of Canada warned us in 1946 when he said that after these three things I have mentioned had taken place we might run into difficulty in maintaining the purchasing power of the people at a level sufficiently high to buy the production of the country. That day is rapidly approaching.

Unemployment is increasing and apparently we have lost some of our markets. Surpluses are beginning to appear. If the government waits until that situation develops it will allow such a lack of confidence to be created in this country that we may have great difficulty in restoring it. Therefore, we urge that the government bring down at this session legislation that will guarantee in the future that the purchasing power of the people will be maintained at a level sufficiently high to buy the production of the country and the imports brought in on a permanent basis. If that is done, and if industry is assured that no matter how high their production goes they will be able to sell it, I believe we could enjoy in this country the greatest degree of prosperity we have ever had.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon City): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate for only a few moments. On March 10, on the orders of the day I asked the following question of the Prime Minister, to be found on page 1331 of Hansard:

> I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received the brief presented by the Canadian Teachers' Federation in February last, and can he say whether any action is being considered with respect to federal aid for education, UNESCO, and the other matters referred to therein?

The Prime Minister's answer was as follows:

> The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part of the question is that the brief is still under consideration.

That last line sounds rather familiar. If that answer had been given by one of the Prime Minister's lesser colleagues I might have termed it as being glib, but having an appreciation of the sincerity of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) I shall merely say that the answer was brief. But in any case it was not satisfactory.

My purpose in rising is to place on the record the details of this brief so that members of the house and people outside the house may be informed. I sometimes think that it takes a brave man to bring up the subject of education on the floor of this house. When one does venture upon that particular subject he is told immediately that it has to do solely with the provinces. As we have reason to know, this session there are those who are very zealous of provincial rights.

I offer no excuse for bringing up the matter of education on the floor of this or any other house. To me education is fundamental. I shall be very brief with the philosophical part of my discourse, if I may call it that. Education is our hope for democracy. I would say that it is our only hope for unity, both national and international. It is our hope for physical survival itself. If enlightenment does not secure national and international unity, then I do not think there is any other agency that will secure it.

During times of crisis, and particularly during times of war, there are those who say that education can wait. Education is the first casualty of war. The thing to do in a case of that kind as a substitute for education is to accumulate gadgets. The accumulation of gadgets, by the way, seems to be one of the main hobbies of the people of the North American continent. In times of war we substitute for real education large doses of scientific knowledge which enable us to perform certain functions which have to do with the process of war but which, after the war is over, leave the mind perfectly barren as far as general education is concerned. And scientific knowledge of itself is not enough.

I know it has been scientifically proven that acquired characteristics cannot be handed down to another generation by means of heredity. That is why education must be a continuing process, because we can get no knowledge from our parents through the processes of heredity. What I mean to say is that a generation or two generations cannot neglect education and then expect to resume where they left off. Similarly, in the case of democracy it has to be worked at to be retained, and it has to be passed on not by heredity but rather by precept and example. In that sense education to me is like freedom of speech. Irrespective of the conditions under which I live, as long as I can retain it I can use it to obtain ultimate justice; but, if I lose it, it is in a measure like losing my own soul.

Culture can be lost. A generation can be left in darkness. Remember, that generation which is left in darkness does not come back of its own volition and demand the light. It does not know enough to do that. That is the reason why certain conditions in some European countries today are a cause for real alarm because, given a generation or two of darkness, these people will have to start the long slow process of education again. As I said before, it can only be done by a continuing process.

So much for my interest in this particular matter. I shall now deal with the brief which I mentioned in the first place. This is a brief which was presented to the federal government by the Canadian Teachers' Federation in February last. It drew to the attention of the government some of their desires and requirements, and contains some of the matters which they presented to the government on that particular occasion. There were three main points. The first one was that this organization was convinced that some form of federal aid would be a good thing for the people of the country. We hear a great deal about floor prices. We have floor prices now, or had during the war, for almost everything, and I would suggest that one of the things we want is a floor price on education.

Mr. Sinclair: What about lower taxes?

Mr. Knight: That is to say, a certain minimum shall be available to every child in every province of Canada. The federation thinks that the best solution for the problem would be a federal grant to education given—note this—to the provinces to be used as the provinces might see fit. I should like to quote from page 8 of the brief as follows:

> After studying for a number of years various plans that have been commended to us, we believe that a straight per pupil capita grant would bring the greatest benefits compatible with the safeguards which certain provinces would require to guarantee that the federal government would not infringe upon their jurisdiction in the field of education. We believe that any system of federal aid should be contingent upon the provinces maintaining or bettering their present level of payments toward education.

That, Mr. Speaker, would do away with the objection of any interference with provincial rights. May I say to those gentlemen, who are so zealous about provincial rights in this particular matter, that they were apparently not so squeamish about accepting family allowances. The mere acceptance of family allowances has not taken away any of that individual liberty of which they are so proud.

Let me say that the federal government is presently immersed in the matter of education. We have federal grants to education now. We have technical aid grants. I need not go into the details as to the particular grants, and the years in which they were passed, but there are youth training grants and vocational training grants. These things have not in any sense taken away from the prerogative of the provinces to handle their educational problems in their own particular way. Under this particular scheme each province, irrespective of whether it be rich or poor, would have a certain minimum amount of money per capita for each child, and in that way each child would be assured of equality of educational opportunity.

In closing I should like to quote another paragraph from page 4 of the same brief. It reads:

In any plan of federal assistance it would be understood and agreed that the expenditure of funds by the government of Canada would in no way be deemed to confer upon any minister or official of the government of Canada any right of supervision or control over any school or educational institution with respect to which any federal government funds are expended.

The second matter that I dealt with in my question to the Prime Minister was the matter of UNESCO, the United Nations educational, scientific and cultural organization. For some reason, which I have never been able to understand, the present administration has always been suspicious of UNESCO. The organized teachers have often asked the government to put into effect the original plan which was that, along with international UNESCO, to which this government sends a delegation, there would also be a Canadian national commission of UNESCO. The teachers have also asked that they should be consulted as to some of the appointments to the international body. I myself have always pleaded for a national commission of UNESCO. I have spoken in favour of it in the house and out of it. Personally I think that the usefulness of the international organization is very much limited by the non-existence of a national commission. May I say that I think the latter, had it been created, would have been of great assistance to the government at this very time in its proposed cultural program about which we were told in the speech from the throne.

I should like to read a short quotation from page 12 of the same brief, as follows:

We have persisted in our efforts to get the government of Canada to establish a national commission for UNESCO affairs because we agree that UNESCO without national commissions is like a tree without roots.

There is one other, and perhaps lesser, matter which I shall mention, and then I shall have finished. It is the last matter dealt with in the brief of the federation, and it has to do with income tax exemptions. This organization feels that there are certain people who have to take summer school courses, not to improve their positions, but so that they may hold the educational status to which they are already entitled in order that they may practise their profession. They think the fees for courses of that kind should be deductible for purposes of income tax. I wish to read from page 14 the relevant paragraph, which is very short.

We urge the government to give consideration to amending legislation if necessary to permit the expense of summer school courses taken by teachers as a condition of employment to be a deductible item from their fixed income.

That, I think, is a legitimate expense in the case of teachers. There is one other small item, to which I personally have given no particular thought, but the brief asks:

That travelling and extraordinary expenses attendant upon teacher exchange should be deductible for income tax purposes.

Now, I feel I have only done my duty to the organized teachers of this country and, which I believe is much more important, to the cause of education generally, in bringing before this house and this country this very short synopsis of the brief presented to the government by the Canadian Teachers' Federation.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): What I have to say will take only about two minutes, Mr. Speaker. It concerns a matter which it would be difficult to discuss on a question of privilege; therefore I am taking this opportunity of bringing it to the attention of the house and the country.

On March 1 the broadcasting station at Moose Jaw, CHAB, carried a news report in which Mr. Sam Carr was referred to as a "Ukrainian-born former organizer of the Canadian communist party." In view of the serious charges that have been made against Mr. Carr, which call in question his loyalty to this country, it is important that no wrong impressions should be created by inaccurate news items such as the one to which I have referred.

When this newscast was brought to my attention by a resident of the province of Saskatchewan I immediately went to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) who, after checking with the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, confirmed my belief that Mr. Carr was neither of Ukrainian nationality nor of Ukrainian racial descent. I want to make it clear that I am not interested in what Mr. Carr's nationality or racial origin may be, but I am interested in clearing up any misunderstanding or wrong impression that may have been created by this erroneous newscast.

Canadians of Ukrainian origin wish to completely dissociate themselves from any such activities as those with which Mr. Carr has been charged. Their loyalty to Canada is beyond question, and they wish to keep it so. More than forty thousand Ukrainians, that is Canadians of Ukrainian origin, served in the armed forces of Canada in world war II. Many of them made the supreme sacrifice. Those who remained at home sought to promote Canada's war effort in every way possible, and have a fine record of voluntary service in such organizations as the Canadian Red Cross, Canadian victory clubs and various other organizations which in time of need serve the nation on a voluntary basis. It is therefore understandable that such an erroneous news report as the one to which I have referred would create resentment and bring forth protests from our peace-loving and law-abiding citizens. I am informed by the manager of the radio station at Moose Jaw that the news item in question came from the British United Press. Accordingly I have communicated with the manager of that news service, asking him to have an appropriate correction made.

I am making this statement in the house today in order to clear up any misunderstanding or wrong impression which may have been created by the news report broadcast by the Moose Jaw radio station on March 1, by placing formally on the record the correct position with regard to this matter.

Mr. John O. Probe (Regina City): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Probe: I am as anxious as any hon. member of this house to proceed with the vote, but if I have a grievance to air or a matter that affects any citizen of this country I will not listen to the oh's and ah's of impatient individuals in any part of the house.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising this evening is to suggest to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg), in a way that is not possible by means of a question preceding the orders of the day, that it is high time he decided to reconstitute the committee on veterans affairs for this year. Very shortly I am going to give one glaring example to indicate why such a committee should function again. It will be recalled that a year and a half ago, in July of 1947, the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) raised certain questions affecting the administration of Shaughnessy hospital, and that to deal with these charges or suspicions what was known as the McCann commission was appointed by the then Minister of Veterans Affairs, Mr. Mackenzie. That commission was composed of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann), the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. McGarry), the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair), the present Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) and myself. The terms of reference governing our work were exceedingly narrow; and while we did what I think was a thorough job in regard to the particular work assigned to us, though I was powerless to say anything at the time, I did feel that our authority was not broad enough to enable us to do the things that really should have been done. I believe that only a committee of this house can deal with the difficulties individuals are having with the pensions board or other branches of the Department of Veterans Affairs in a way that can solve those problems.

To indicate the sort of thing I have in mind I want to refer briefly to what I think is a serious charge against the pension officials. I have before me the case of a young man of this province who served in His Majesty's forces from June of 1942 to October of 1945. He was in the naval service and was on some particularly dangerous missions in the course of which, from the evidence as I gather it, he suffered a form of battle fatigue. The young man came back to this country, married and now has two children, a fairly good position, and is buying his own home. Because of his mental state he went to the authorities in Hamilton in January of 1946, within three months of his discharge from the service. At that time the examining doctor was of the opinion, as I have it here in a letter from the director general of treatment services, that no treatment was required. After being told by the officials in Hamilton and those at Christie Street hospital, to which he went later, that treatment was not necessary in his case, being concerned about his mental state he went to a private doctor in Hamilton and, according to the evidence furnished the pension board, started treatment at his own expense within the year of his free entitlement, that is in July of 1946.

I have in my hand receipts covering medical treatment by the psychiatrist, Dr. Finlayson, and other Hamilton doctors, which this young man received as a result of trying to look after his own case because the Department of Veterans Affairs did not consider his case sufficiently serious to recommend D.V.A. treatment.

The medical bills that I have here, running throughout the last year and a half or two years, in the aggregate amount to well over $500. This man was advised to apply for a pension. In a letter to me he said he did not want a pension. All he wanted was his hospital bills paid and the opportunity to return for free treatment for his mental condition. His bills have been turned down. He has been refused the right of treatment.

This man may not have a case, but I feel that he has. I have talked to him. I find him to be a fine young man. The pension board speaks of his straightforward and frank manner in giving evidence before the board. He may be frank, he may be straightforward, he may be everything; but the fact is that he was still turned down, and he is paying from $25 to $50 a month for his own medical treatment. That is not good enough from a country which he served as he did. Every member of this house has similar cases.

Before I take my seat I want to plead with other hon. members and with the cabinet to make certain that the so-called bureaucrats —I do not like to speak in disparaging terms of the officers in charge of any government department; I know they have a job to do—carry out government policies. It is time that the ministers of the government made certain that the policies they talk about on the hustings are enforced by the employees of the government itself.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Low) which was negatived on the following division:

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is nothing before the house.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): As I said, Mr. Speaker, on February 9 last a motion was passed for the production of certain papers. This is now March 11, and those papers have not been produced.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I am informed that the hon. member has spoken on the main motion.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I could not have spoken on the main motion. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) was the first opposition speaker, and he moved an amendment. I want to say that these papers have not been produced, and I should like very much to see what is in them. I have sufficient evidence of my own to make very interesting reading, but I am not going to produce it just now. Rather I am going to wait until, in the fulness of time, the government does produce these papers.

That this house will, on Monday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That this house will, on Monday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider of supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. St. Laurent: I move that the house do now adjourn. On Monday the striking committee will present its report, and the standing committees can then be set up. The estimates for the year 1949-50 will be tabled, with a message from His Excellency that they be referred to the committee of supply. We shall then proceed first of all with resolution No. 6 on the order paper, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Justice that the Speaker leave the chair to consider a resolution for the introduction of a bill to extend rent control and certain other controls.

Afterwards order No. 4 on today's order paper, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Agriculture on a resolution to present a bill to amend the Agricultural Products Act. If that is disposed of, then resolution No. 7 on the order paper for the introduction of a bill to amend the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act. If there is time we shall deal with No. 3 on today's order paper, a resolution for the introduction of a bill to continue the Foreign Exchange Control Act. These are only resolutions and they may be disposed of quite rapidly. If so we shall deal with order No. 14 on the order paper for the introduction of a bill to continue supplemental payments to the mail carriers.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

29087—90

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 14, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1949-50

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1950, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN WINNIPEG "CITIZEN"

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises out of a report carried in the Winnipeg Citizen newspaper, and which is headed, "Sinnott renegade." I wish to inform the writer of the article that, if I read the dictionary correctly, "renegade" means traitor. If he will look at the vote on the main motion taken on Friday last he will see that I was not a traitor to my party.

Mr. Fournier (Hull) moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Green: May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce when the special committee on atomic energy will be set up?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): That is a matter which has not yet been given consideration.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Coldwell: I wish to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a supplementary question. I was disappointed in the reply he gave the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) in reference to the possibility of setting up a committee on atomic energy. My understanding was that the minister said that would likely be done this year.

Mr. Howe: Now that the standing committees of the house have been set up, immediate attention will be given the question of setting up this committee.

Mr. Low: I wonder if the minister will take note of the fact that I had intended to ask a question similar to this, in reference to the atomic energy committee.

Mr. Howe: Yes.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house will unite with them in the formation of a joint committee of both houses on the subject of the printing of parliament, and that the following members, namely: Messrs. Adamson, Arsenault, Aylesworth, Baker, Beaudry, Bentley, Bertrand (Prescott), Bertrand (Terrebonne), Boivin, Bonnier, Bradette, Bradshaw, Brunelle, Campbell, Casselman, Church, Clark, Coté (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville), Emmerson, Fontaine, Gauthier (Nipissing), Gibson (Hamilton West), Golding, Hallé, Hansell, Healy, Henderson, Hlynka, Kidd, Kirk, Kuhl, Lalonde, Lapalme, Lapointe, Lennard, MacLean, MacNaught, Maloney, McCuaig, McCullough (Assiniboia), McDonald (Parry Sound), McGregor, McLure, McMaster, Nicholson, Robinson (Simcoe East), Ross (St. Paul's), Sinclair (Vancouver North), Sinnott, Tustin, Viau, White (Hastings-Peterborough), Williams, Wright, will act as members on the part of this house on the said joint committee on the printing of parliament.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if that committee will sit oftener than it did last year. It sat for only about ten minutes; really it was a farce.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am sure the committee will take notice of the remarks of the hon. member.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this house has appointed Mr. Speaker and Messrs: Adamson, Aylesworth, Black (Chateauguay-Huntingdon), Bowerman, Cardiff, Casselman, Castleden, Cloutier, Dion, Eudes, Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont), Gauthier (Nipissing), Gingues, Gladstone, Gourd (Chapleau), Grant, Henderson, Howe, Hlynka, Kidd, Knight, Lapalme, Leger, MacLean, Marier, Marshall, Matthews (Brandon), McGarry, McIlraith, McKay, Menary, Mullins, Nixon, Pearkes, Probe, Reid, Richard (Ottawa East), Ross (St. Paul's), Skey, Smith (York North), Stephenson, White (Middlesex East), Winkler, Zaplitny, a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the library of parliament so far as the interests of the House of Commons are concerned and to act on behalf of the House of Commons as members of a joint committee of both houses on the library.

Motion agreed to.

POWERS OF COMMITTEES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That the standing committees of this house shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Prime Minister if arrangements can be made to refer to the committee on public accounts the public accounts and Auditor General's report of last year?

Mr. St. Laurent: The matter will receive consideration, and an announcement will be made by the Minister of Finance.

Motion agreed to.

COARSE GRAINS

STATEMENT AS TO MARKETING IN COMING CROP YEAR

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the marketing of coarse grains.

Because of recent representations that have been made to the government, and in order to clarify the position for our farmers, I should like to make a brief statement in connection with the marketing of coarse grains for the coming crop year.

Hon. members will remember that this subject was fully discussed in this house last spring in connection with the passage of Bill 135. In introducing that bill I said in part:

The fourth amendment proposes to empower the governor in council by regulation to extend to oats and barley the regulations now applicable to wheat. Strong representations favouring the marketing of oats and barley through the wheat board have been received from farm organizations in both western and eastern Canada, among them the Canadian Council of Agriculture.

At present this is called the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

The government desires to meet the wishes of farm organizations in this regard, provided that a workable plan can be agreed upon. However, the government is well aware that the compulsory marketing of oats and barley through the board represents serious difficulties. The success of such an enterprise must be dependent on a large measure of agreement on policy matters as between organized farmers of both the producer and the consumer class, as well as on the co-operation of provincial governments. Therefore this government will wish to have concrete evidence of such agreement and such co-operation before it can assume the responsibility for putting this amendment into effect.

Again quoting from my same statement, I gave assurance that—

The government is prepared to take whatever steps lie within its power to assist in establishing marketing arrangements that will help to maintain economic and stable prices for Canadian agricultural products. The government must, however, be satisfied that any given scheme for this purpose is a practical one, a constitutional one, a workable one and one that will command the support of the interested groups concerned. Until it is satisfied that these conditions have been met, the government will not be prepared to undertake the marketing of oats and barley through the wheat board. It will be noted in the resolution that marketing arrangements shall come into force only at the beginning of a crop year. I believe the attitude of the government in this regard will be understood by all hon. members who are familiar with grain marketing and related agricultural problems.

The position now is that one of the prairie provinces has introduced complementary legislation but the other two have not. However at a meeting of the western agricultural conference—namely, the provincial units of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in the four western provinces—in Saskatoon on January 20 to 22 inclusive, the following resolution was passed:

Be it resolved that a joint effort be made to enable the Canadian wheat board to be the sole marketing agency of coarse grains, and that any legislation giving the Canadian wheat board the same exclusive powers over the marketing of other grains as it now exercises over wheat, shall be based on the principle that the Canadian wheat board shall be an agency operating for the benefit and in the interest of grain producers, with a duty to sell grain for the best available price whether in export or domestic markets, and shall not be used as an instrument of government to control domestic policy; but full recognition of the importance of the livestock industry shall be given by the government of Canada, and that the government shall take adequate measures to establish necessary reserves of feed grains whenever such action is deemed necessary.

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in the same city on January 24 to 28, the same resolution was presented and carried.

On February 21 of this year I met with a committee representing the western farm organizations and the Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba governments, who asked, first, for assurances that the implementation of Bill 135, when proclaimed, would meet the letter and the spirit of the resolution quoted above, and second, whether the federal government still considers it necessary that the three provincial legislatures must pass complementary legislation.

The resolution forwarded by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which has been carefully reviewed, is not acceptable to the government. In the first place, if this resolution is intended to suggest that the Canadian wheat board as now constituted does not function in the best interests of the Canadian producers, this is a suggestion which I strenuously deny. Further, this resolution by its terms is contradictory, in that it would, on the one hand, require the board to sell "for the best available price whether in export or domestic markets" and at the same time to give "full recognition of the importance of the livestock industry."

In discussing the marketing of crops that are largely consumed within Canada, it is obvious that the government of Canada cannot give any undertaking that it will become responsible for marketing coarse grains solely in the interests of the producer, and without regard to the interests of the consumer of those products. If the coarse grain producers of western Canada are not satisfied that the wheat board, as now constituted, is a satisfactory marketing agency for their coarse grains, then an obvious alternative is for the producers of coarse grains in western Canada to establish their own marketing agency. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, has on the order paper legislation designed to complement the marketing legislation of the provincial governments. Under such legislation, the producers can themselves establish a board to sell "for the best available price, whether in export or domestic markets." This assumes that to obtain "the best available price, whether in export or domestic markets," is in fact always in the best interest of the producers, which in my opinion is questionable, to say the least.

If, on the other hand, the western producers wish to market their oats and barley through the Canadian wheat board, and provided that their provincial governments will enact the necessary legislation, this government's position has not changed since I introduced Bill 135 in response to specific requests then made by the farm organizations.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the minister if it is not a fact that the judgment given by the appeal court of Manitoba on Thursday finds that it is not competent for the government to pass an order dealing with coarse grains.

Mr. Howe: No. The litigation in question refers to an entirely separate transaction under the wartime prices and trade board. It has no reference to the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Drew: The transaction I am referring to had to do with an order under the transitional powers act which had the effect of bringing the marketing of coarse grains for a particular purpose under the wheat board. I thought that probably the explanation that was being given was in relation to that judgment.

Mr. Howe: No. The Canadian Wheat Board Act is an act of this parliament which is not contingent upon emergency powers. I think that that is the point my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. Drew: I am not suggesting that the wheat board act deals with this matter. As the minister will recall, an order was passed under the transitional powers act dealing with barley and passing the administration of that transaction to the wheat board. I merely repeat that I thought this announcement might be related to that judgment.

Mr. Howe: This parliament at the last session amended the wheat board act to make the board the marketing agency for oats and barley. The judgment referred to by my hon. friend referred to a transaction in which the board was merely acting as agent for the wartime prices and trade board.

[Later]:

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. C. Miller (Portage la Prairie): Does the government intend to compensate any of those who delivered barley at a loss pursuant to the order in council which has been found to be ineffectual in the Nolan case, recently decided by the Manitoba court of appeal?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is my understanding that the Minister of Justice intends to appeal the decision of the Manitoba courts; therefore no answer can be given.

STRAIT OF CANSO

REPORT OF BOARD OF ENGINEERS—RECOMMENDED CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make which I hope will meet with the approval of the house. The board of engineers appointed jointly by the dominion government and the province of Nova Scotia last year to investigate the transportation facilities and their betterment at the strait of Canso have now submitted their report. The board, having given consideration to several methods of transportation across the strait, have reported in favour of the construction of a low-level bridge capable of handling both railway and vehicular traffic. The cost of constructing such a bridge is estimated at $13,500,000.

The board of engineers, consisting of D. S. Ellis, dean of the faculty of applied science of Queen's university, chairman, Arthur Surveyer, consulting engineer, of Montreal, and P. L. Pratley, consulting engineer, of Montreal, reported unfavourably on proposals for constructing a causeway, a tunnel or a high-level bridge. The board further reported that the present ferry system was operating at a loss and its discontinuance would result in a substantial saving which would more than pay for the probable cost of maintaining and operating the proposed bridge.

It is evident that purchasing new ferry boats and rebuilding the ferry terminals would not materially improve the efficiency of the ferry services and would not give the uninterrupted passage which the public desires. The low-level bridge will, at all times, save fifty minutes in freight and passenger train schedule to the Sydneys.

The board of engineers had been called upon to review and report on the proposals to (a) construct a bridge capable of accommodating a single track railway and highway traffic, and which will permit the passage of vessels through the strait; (b) construct a causeway for railway and highway traffic which will permit the passage of vessels; (c) construct a tunnel for railway and highway traffic; or (d) provide improved railway ferry service across the strait. Of these projects, the board of engineers reported that the low-level short-span bridge was the only one which shows a saving on present operating costs and consequently was the only one which in their opinion was economically sound.

The board of engineers recommends that the bridge should be located between Cape Porcupine, on the mainland, and Balache Point, on Cape Breton island, where the strait is at its narrowest. The width at this point is slightly more than 3,000 feet. The proposal would require a bridge with a clearance of fourteen feet above water at high tide and a vertical lift span close to the Cape Breton shore to provide clearance of 156 feet for the passage of ships.

The government has decided to accept the recommendation of the board of engineers—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I repeat: The government has decided to accept the recommendation of the board of engineers—

An hon. Member: Say it again.

Mr. Chevrier: —in favour of the construction of a low-level bridge, and I am happy to announce that it will proceed to implement this recommendation with the least possible delay.

I am also pleased to announce that the premier of Nova Scotia, after consultation with his colleagues, has agreed to contribute a portion of the cost of this project, details of which will be worked out later.

I believe the decision of the government to implement the recommendations of the board of engineers will not only provide an entirely satisfactory crossing of the strait, with consequent improvement in transportation generally in that part of Nova Scotia, but with the entry of Newfoundland into confederation will also be of great importance in assisting the flow of traffic to and from the new province.

The board of engineers recommends that test borings, extending at least ten feet into the rock, should be made at the site of each of the proposed piers. The board further recommends that this boring program should be undertaken as early as possible—

Mr. Jackman: How were the political borings?

Mr. Chevrier: —after the ice is gone from the strait so that construction plans can be started without delay. I am glad to notice that my hon. friend is not interrupting me today.

It is estimated that the construction of the proposed low-level bridge would take about three years to complete, which is about the limit of the useful life of one of the railway car ferries now in operation between Mulgrave and Point Tupper.

The government will establish an authority or agency to carry out the recommendation of the board of engineers.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Will the full report be made available to hon. members?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, a full report will be available just as quickly as I can get sufficient copies to give to hon. members who are desirous of having it. This voluminous report was submitted to me on Thursday of last week; to give the house an example of the action taken by the government, may I point out that today, Monday, the government is recommending the adoption of the board of engineers' report which was received on Thursday.

Mr. Graydon: Nothing like an election to move a balky horse.

Mr. Casselman: Is this the same bridge that the Minister of Public Works promised over the week end?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I wish to tell the hon. gentleman that I made no promise about any bridge over the week end. I did tell a meeting that we had an understanding with the province of Ontario to build a dam on the French river to help relieve conditions on lake Nipissing.

Mr. Gillis: May I compliment the Minister of Transport upon the statement he has just made? It took us ten years to get it; but regardless of the motive, regardless of whether or not there is to be an election, I want to thank the minister for the statement he has just made.

House of Commons

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROVISION FOR EVENING SITTINGS 7.30 TO 10.30 UNTIL LAST SITTING DAY IN APRIL

The house resumed, from Monday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. St. Laurent:

That, except on Wednesdays, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair at six o'clock p.m. until seven-thirty, and shall adjourn the house at ten-thirty p.m. without question put, unless the closure rule (standing order No. 39) be then in operation, this order to be in effect until and upon the last sitting day of the month of April.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I ask that consideration be resumed of the motion that was made on March 7 as to the hours of sitting of the house. Hon. members will recall that there was a motion in effect which provided that until the completion of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne the house should resume its evening sitting at seven-thirty and adjourn at ten-thirty. The debate on the address has now been completed, and, unless consideration is given to this motion, the house will automatically go back to the standing order under which the house shall sit in the evening from eight o'clock until eleven o'clock.

As I stated when I put the motion before the house, I did so in order to give the house an opportunity to express its views upon the question, and not because I was recommending that the order then in effect should be continued. Since that time my attention has been called to the fact that, when the days are longer and finer, many hon. members like to take a stroll after dinner before coming back into the house. This motion, however, would merely extend to the end of April the changed evening hours of sitting. Perhaps it is optimistic to feel that prior to the end of April there will be very much opportunity for those agreeable strolls before coming into the house for the evening session. In any event, without asking the house to make one decision or the other, I submit this proposal so that the views of hon. members may be expressed and the desires of the greatest number followed.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I said when the motion was previously before the house that I felt this was not an effective way to deal with the problem, which many members have been considering for some time. I indicated that it was my intention to move an amendment which would result in the hours being from two to six and from eight to ten. In making such a motion now by way of amendment, I should like to point out that, as the Prime Minister has said about the main motion, it is simply a suggestion put forward for consideration.

While I am a comparative newcomer in the house, one does not need to be here very long to recognize that the effectiveness of debate is related to a certain extent to the way in which the hours of the house accommodate themselves not only to the personal convenience of the members but also to the necessity for their doing a great deal of work outside the chamber. I think it is also to be considered that it must be a matter of great disadvantage to the press that the evening hour of adjournment is so late, because when the house sits until eleven o'clock it is some time after that before the press can deal with matters that have been discussed in the house.

My own feeling is that the members will do better work in the evening if the hours are from eight to ten, and afterwards they will be able to complete any necessary outside work without undue encroachment upon other arrangements they may make, and particularly upon their domestic arrangements where that may be a consideration. Moreover, by having a recess from six to eight an opportunity will be provided to meet people who wish to discuss various matters with the members, and members will be able to have their dinner and be back in the chamber at the time the house resumes.

The amendment I propose to move calls for the meeting of the house at two o'clock. The Prime Minister has indicated that in his opinion this presents some inconvenience to the cabinet. But I suggest that there is ample opportunity to adjust the hours of meeting of cabinet council, and that the business of government can be conducted more satisfactorily if the sitting hours that are arranged accommodate the members as well as the government itself—recognizing, of course, the importance of the task of the members of the cabinet and the responsibility that they assume. It seems to me that the government can well adjust the time of the regular meetings of cabinet council to meet this requirement, because, and properly so, the ministers during the course of certain debates find it convenient to carry on some of their other work in their own offices.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), that the resolution be amended as follows:

1. That the following words be inserted after the word "that" in the first line of the resolution: "notwithstanding standing order No. 2, on and after Tuesday, March 15, 1949, the house shall meet at two o'clock in the afternoon of each sitting day, and that on and after this day" . . .

2. That the words "eight o'clock" be substituted for the words "seven-thirty" in the third line of the resolution; and that the words "ten o'clock p.m." be substituted for the words "ten-thirty p.m." in the fourth line of the resolution.

The effect would be that the resolution would read as follows:

That notwithstanding standing order No. 2, on and after Tuesday, March 15, 1949, the house shall meet at two o'clock in the afternoon of each sitting day, and that on and after this day, except on Wednesdays, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair at six o'clock until eight o'clock p.m. and shall adjourn the house at ten p.m. without question put, unless the closure rule (standing order No. 39) be then in operation, this order to be in effect until and upon the last sitting day of the month of April.

Mr. Cruickshank: If I may ask the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) a question—I do not want to infringe upon provincial rights at all in this—do I understand that his amendment includes Wednesday nights?

Mr. Drew: That would include Wednesday, and would mean an added hour each week in which to complete the business, as my hon. friend so earnestly desires.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Drew: I was thinking so much of the insistence of the hon. member that we sit Wednesday night that I made a mistake. The resolution would have the effect of adding one hour a week through the longer sitting on Wednesday afternoon, but we would not sit Wednesday evening.

Mr. Cruickshank: Then I am sorry; I cannot support you.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have been here long enough to appreciate the fact that it is extremely difficult to find sitting hours that will accommodate all hon. members and enable them, as well as the members of the cabinet, to do the work that must be done. I would be quite willing to go along with the old hours of three to six and eight to eleven, though I do appreciate getting home half an hour earlier. The point I want to make is that there is a definite objection to the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition. Today we have set up the standing committees, which usually sit in the morning from eleven to one. By the time you get to your office and put away your papers it is at least 1.15, and that leaves only three-quarters of an hour in which to get lunch and be back in the house. That would be an impossible situation; and while I am not particularly in favour of the original motion, I am definitely against the amendment for the reason I have stated.

Mr. J. A. Bradette (Cochrane): I want to say a few words about starting an hour earlier. I believe the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. MacInnis) pointed to a serious situation which would develop. It is true that the committees generally start work at eleven o'clock; and it may surprise the leader of the opposition to learn that many times, because there is a large number of permanent and special committees of this house, it is difficult to secure a quorum in order to get the work of a committee started. Sometimes we have to close our eyes and ignore the fact that we lack a quorum.

In spite of what hon. members opposite may say, I think it would be impossible to have the committees begin work at ten o'clock, no matter how hard we might try to do it. The question of changing the hours of sitting should be studied thoroughly; but we should be careful to see that the work of the permanent and special committees of the house is not interfered with, because that would defeat the very end we are trying to achieve—that of accelerating at least to some extent the work of this house.

In all sincerity I say it is impossible to have the committees start before eleven o'clock in the morning, and I have had a good deal of experience in that regard. It is also impossible to adjourn much before one o'clock. If the amendment were adopted, only one hour would be left before the opening of the house, and I submit that under such conditions we could not do our work properly. I am sure the leader of the opposition agrees that committees must function freely in this or any other legislature, and if we curtail their work to any extent, instead of expediting the work of this house we shall be retarding it. So far as I am concerned, after many years of experience with the committees of this house, I must vote against the amendment.

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): The hon. member who has just spoken has had a great deal of experience in committee work, but I find myself in disagreement with the view he has put forward. It seems to me it would meet the convenience of hon. members if our committees were called at an earlier hour, and perhaps the result would be better all round if we closed at ten o'clock and took the extra hour off at night. I think that would overcome the objection of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette).

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): In some respects I agree with the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank); one of our points of agreement is that neither of us is a tête-à-tête man. I agree wholeheartedly that the work of our committees is an important phase of the work of this house, but for the life of me I cannot see why the hours of meeting of the committees cannot be adjusted. A great many of us are here at eight-thirty in the morning, have our breakfast and are looking after our correspondence by nine o'clock. On the average that work is cleared up by ten o'clock, when we could attend committee meetings, and those committees could rise at noon.

There is another thought I should like to put forward. As part of our democratic parliamentary set-up we depend a great deal upon the press, and I know that many members of the press do not leave this house until after midnight, sometimes not until one or two o'clock in the morning. Surely we could give a little consideration to the gentlemen of the press without interfering at all with the splendid work done by the committees of the house. I have not been here as long as some hon. members, but this is my tenth session, and at times I have belonged to three or four standing committees, some of which have been meeting simultaneously. I believe that with a little thought and adjustment we could arrange to have those committees sit from ten to twelve, in order that the house might meet at more convenient hours, thus benefiting all hon. members.

I would hope that we might seriously consider, on a non-party basis, the possibility of changing to the hours proposed, two to six and eight to ten, which I am sure would prove to be in the interests of the committees as well as of this house itself.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the question be put? I for one would like to enter into the argument, but surely this is largely a matter of personal desire and opinion. We can neither dissuade nor persuade each other; therefore I suggest that we take the vote.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Before the vote is taken I would like to hear the views of hon. members on the possibility of sitting through from two o'clock until eight o'clock, without any dinner adjournment, or from three to nine, whichever may meet with their approval. In discussing this matter I have heard hon. members say you could not get a sufficient number in the house at that time to carry on. Come in here any night at eight o'clock, half an hour after the house opens, and you will not find more than forty or fifty members in their seats; the other two hundred could be having their dinner at that time. I believe many hon. members feel as I do and would like to get out in the evening for a swim or to play golf or to do various things, and I am sure this change would suit many who do not wish to sit here night after night. For my part, I would just as soon sit in the House of Commons from ten to eleven, as I would sit down at the Lord Elgin hotel.

Mr. A. L. Smith (Calgary West): Speaking personally, and perhaps from a selfish point of view, I think the silliest thing this House of Commons ever did was to attempt to save this half hour and ruin everybody's dinner. I live about a mile and a half from the parliament buildings. I like to walk home once a day, and I like to be able to say hello to my wife without doing it on the run. I intend to walk home before dinner, and I intend to do what I usually do before dinner, irrespective of what rules are made. I am going to take the two hours, and I think that is what all members should do.

Mr. W. Garfield Case (Grey North): The member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette) has laid great stress on the work of the committees. My experience has been that the committees usually meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays. I think we should adjust the hours of sittings of the house, which meets daily, and adjust the committee hours later —even ten-thirty to twelve-thirty; we could get our two hours in just the same. I make this observation, sir, in the hope that members will keep it in mind when making their decision.

Mr. St. Laurent: I think we have had an effective demonstration of the difficulty of fixing hours that will suit the convenience of everyone. I should be reluctant to have the convenience of the members of the government, or even of the members of the house, put into competition with the convenience of the members of the press gallery. Nevertheless, it is evident no solution can be found that will suit everyone. As the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said, this is not a matter of government policy. If the house sits from two until six, it involves inconvenience for the members of the government. If the house sits at other hours, it involves inconvenience for other members of the house and, as we have been told, for the gentlemen of the press. I think the only possible remedy is for each of us to record his vote on the amendment and on the motion in accordance with what most closely approximates his own convenience.

Amendment (Mr. Drew) negatived.

The house divided on the main motion (Mr. St. Laurent) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Harris (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Breithaupt), who is paired with me, I refrained from voting. Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I hope the 7.30 boys will be here when the house resumes after dinner.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

PROVISION FOR MARKETING IN INTERPROVINCIAL AND EXPORT TRADE

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 82, to provide for the marketing of agricultural products in interprovincial and export trade.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Gardiner: This bill, for which many hon. members have been asking, is complementary to the provincial legislation.

Mr. Knowles: We still want an explanation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILL

SENATE BILL—FIRST READING

Bill No. 80, (from the Senate) respecting the Dominion Altantic Railway Company—Mr. Dickey.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BANFF—EXCLUSION OF AREA REQUIRED FOR SPRAY LAKES POWER AND STORAGE PROJECT

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the first reading of Bill No. 81 (from the Senate) to amend the National Parks Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION

Mr. N. J. M. Lockhart (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last week the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) replied to a question I had asked. Part 5 of that question was as follows:

What are the names of the principal officials of the corporation?

I was referring to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In part 6 I asked what salary each received. Part 7 was as follows:

What were the traveling expenses of each such official during the year 1948?

In question 8 I asked:

Have any increases in salary been granted to employees of the corporation since it was set up?

In the last question I asked to whom such increases had been given, and the amounts of them.

In the answer to part 5 the officers of the company are set out. In the answer to No. 6 the salaries are given. However when in No.. 7 I asked for the traveling expenses of each of the officials, the answer given was that "this information is not available from government records." I feel that that is information I should have.

In part 8 I asked if any increases in salary had been granted to employees of the corporation, and this is answered yes. The answer to part 9, which asks "To whom, and what increase to each of them", is, "this information is not available from government records." I would ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to look over the question again and to give me the information.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONTRACTS FOR DELIVERY OF GOODS TO GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Fulton:

1. What deliveries have been made to the Department of National Defence or any other department of government of goods under the contracts referred to in the following orders in council respectively: P.C. 859 of March 2, 1948; P.C. 938 of March 6, 1948; P.C. 1051 of March 16, 1948; P.C. 1101 of March 16, 1948; P.C. 1186 of March 23, 1948?
2. What is the value of the goods delivered under each of these respective contracts?
3. What balance, if any, remains to be delivered?
4. If there is any balance remaining to be delivered, what time is set for the final delivery?

Mr. Baker:

1. Deliveries have been completed and/or services rendered in accordance with contracts in all cases except P.C. 938 which covers modification of 50 snowmobiles, the property of the Department of National Defence, 28 of which have been completed and accepted.

2. (a) Delivered to Department of National Defence:

P.C.	859	$226,597 00
	1051	34,326 54
	1101	226,269 11

Questions

NATIONAL HEALTH—HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANT

Mr. Henderson:

1. How much of the moneys in the supplementary estimates 1948-49, relating to the hospital construction grant to the provinces, has been spent?
2. What commitments are already made for further expenditures to be undertaken before the end of the present fiscal year?
3. What is the distribution by provinces of (a) money spent; (b) commitments made?

Mr. Reid:

1 and 2. Projects covering new construction of hospital accommodation amounting to an estimated 13,000 beds will be received this fiscal year. Projects for hospital construction grants amounting to $6,087,501 had been approved to March 10, 1949.

Under the terms of orders in council P.C. 3403 and P.C. 5504 instalment payments of $1,300,289.77 have been made to March 10, 1949. It is not possible at this time to indicate what commitments under the grant will be for the present fiscal year since commitments depend upon:

(a) the rate of completion of the numerous hospitals for which construction grants have been approved since payments are made on an instalment basis, depending on degree of construction;

(b) the accounts submitted for payment by the provinces by the end of the fiscal year.

3. (a) As at March 10, 1949, the following instalment payments have been made:

Prince Edward Island	$ 21,416 66
Nova Scotia	57,853 66
New Brunswick	....
Quebec	1,006,355 46
Ontario	32,563 50
Manitoba	49,952 00
Saskatchewan	2,498 90
Alberta	5,661 00
British Columbia	123,988 59
	$1,300,289 77

(b) See answer to Nos. 1 and 2.

DRAINAGE AND RECLAMATION—BRITISH COLUMBIA —PEMBERTON MEADOWS

Mr. Fulton:

1. What has been the total expenditure to date in connection with drainage and reclamation at Pemberton meadows, British Columbia?
2. What has been the expenditure by years?
3. What has been the expenditure by areas, as defined in the McGugan report on this project?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. $306,817.32.

2. Pemberton expenditures by years: April 1, 1944-March 31, 1945, $9,421.47; April 1, 1946-March 31, 1947, $48,876.57; April 1, 1947-March 31, 1948, $138,803.17; April 1, 1948-February 28, 1949, $109,716.11.

3. Expenditures by areas: area 1, $81,583.24; area 2, $3,343.11; area 3, $220,806.66; area 4, $1,084.31.

1949 forecast.....	509

Note: The cost of living index was used to convert the actual dollar values of consumer expenditure on goods and services to constant dollars since it was the best available single index for this purpose.

RED CROSS—EXCISE AND SALES TAXES

Mr. Shaw:

Does the Department of National Revenue collect the full rate of excise and sales taxes on taxable articles which are purchased by the Red Cross and other organizations out of money secured through voluntary contributions and given without charge to the needy?

Questions

Mr. McCann: The statutes provide no exemption for the Red Cross or other organizations and the Department of National Revenue collects taxes legally due.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—PAYMENT UNDER "SERVICE PERFORMED"

Mr. Isnor:

1. What payment or payments, if any, were made in respect to "service performed" and referred to in the auditor general's report of 1947-48 as set out in paragraph 9?

2. What was the total amount?

3. To what do these amounts relate?

BOARD OF TRANSPORT COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Fair:

1. Who are the members of the board of railway commissioners of Canada?

2. What are their specific duties in detail?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Mr. Justice M. B. Archibald, K.C., chief commissioner, Hugh Wardrope, assistant chief commissioner, A. Sylvestre, K.C., deputy chief commissioner, J. A. Stoneman, commissioner, F. M. MacPherson, commissioner, H. B. Chase, C.B.E., commissioner.

2. The principal duties of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada (formerly the board of railway commissioners for Canada) are to deal with complaints that any provision of the Railway Act or the Transport Act, 1938, has been violated and to hear applications requesting the board to make any order which it is authorized by these acts to make. The board has jurisdiction in regard to (a) the construction, maintenance and operation (including rates) of dominion railways; (b) the rates of dominion telephone, telegraph and express companies; (c) the tolls on international bridges and tunnels; (d) the licensing and rates of ships on the great lakes, the Mackenzie river and the Yukon river.

ELECTRIC POWER SHORTAGE—DAYLIGHT SAVING

Mr. Church:

2. Will any action be taken in the matter?

Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West):

1. No. The shortage of power in Canada is not national in scope, but local, and it is a matter for the municipalities and provincial governments affected to decide any plan for daylight saving in order to conserve power.

2. Answered by No. 1.

WINDOW GLASS

Mr. Caouette:

1. Is window glass manufactured in Canada?
2. If so, in what locality?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Yes.

2. Montreal, Quebec.

NEEPAWA, MAN., AIRPORT

Mr. Bracken:

Have any specific plans been formulated by the Department of National Defence for utilizing the Neepawa airport, and if so, will the minister state what they are?

Mr. Baker: No. Neepawa airport is under Department of Transport control.

10. What is the estimated cost of producing this film, including rightful portion of national film board; overhead and estimated cost of all services supplied them by public works department, such as building, telephones and other charges, and treasury branch of the Department of Finance?

Mr. Winters:

1. No employees were sent by the national film board to China for taking and producing the film in question. A cameraman was lent to UNRRA to make a film record for that international organization of its work in China.

2. The cameraman loaned to UNRRA was Grant McLean. His yearly salary was $3,600 per year. All salary, traveling and living expenses were paid by UNRRA over a period of approximately fourteen months. $879.15 traveling expenses was paid by N.F.B. to save time by returning the cameraman by air via London.

3. None.

4. No arrangement has been completed for the distribution of the film in Canada.

5. The film will probably be released by a commercial distributor, but owing to its length—two reels—it will not be one of the films in the N.F.B. regular theatrical series which are one-reel in length.

6. Normal arrangements will be made for commercial theatrical distribution and for non-theatrical distribution.

7. See answer to 6.

8. See answer to 6.

9. The film is 1,980 feet in length. This is the finally edited length from approximately 24,000 feet of film. In addition some of the footage was used by UNRRA for release to newsreels and other agencies. The remainder of the footage has been turned over to N.F.B. by UNRRA and will be used as library material, as is customary, for stock shot purposes, sale to other film producers and, if necessary, for further film reference to China.

10. Estimated cost of film, $16,185.06, includes all overhead and services, telephone charges, etc. It is not possible to apportion to this film rental of buildings assigned by Department of Public Works for the use of the national film board.

WORLD WAR II—REQUEST FOR FREE TRANSPORTATION TO VISIT GRAVES OVERSEAS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT SHOE FACTORY

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Are any of the employees of the Saskatchewan government tannery or shoe factory who were laid off in December in receipt of unemployment insurance?

2. If so, of this date how many of said employees in each of said businesses are receiving benefits?

Mr. Mitchell:

1. Yes.

2. As of March 12, 1949, three employees of the Saskatchewan tannery and eight employees of the Saskatchewan shoe factory were receiving benefits.

INCOME TAX

ASSESSMENTS NOT YET MADE—REFERENCE TO ANSWER TO QUESTION ON MARCH 2

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, before we leave the order for questions, there is a matter I should like to bring to the attention of the house—though I am sorry to have to do so again; it has already been mentioned twice in the house. On March 3 I drew the attention of the house to the fact that a most important part of a question I had put on the order paper had not been answered. I pointed out, as reported at page 1085 of Hansard, that nothing was forthcoming. Further reference was made to the matter on March 9. Referring to it on that occasion I asked if Your Honour would be kind enough to give a direction that the question be restored to the order paper. Your Honour bowed most graciously, and I thought that intimated that you were going to give the necessary direction. But the question has not been restored to the order paper, and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) has not answered it. I would ask that the question be put back on the order paper, because it was not answered.

Mr. McCann: The hon. member's speech has saved me a lot of explaining. Here is the answer to his question.

Mr. Casselman: Why is it so late?

[Mr. Mutch.]

Mr. McCann: The answer is as follows:

The reply to this question as previously given on page 1059 of Hansard, dated March 2, 1949, was in the form in which the statistics are maintained by the taxation division. A similar question asked last year by the hon. member when answered in this form was accepted.

It has been the policy of the taxation division to maintain monthly records of the number of returns remaining unassessed in reasonable detail. For this purpose, returns which are more than three years old are grouped under one caption in order to avoid the necessity of keeping scattered records under five or six detailed yearly headings. In view of this, I regret to advise the hon. member that it is not possible to submit figures from the taxation division's records in any greater detail than that already given.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

1. Have the services of M. E. Powers, consultant engineer, been used by the dominion government?

2. If so, for what purpose were his services required?

3. What amounts as salary, fee, or other remuneration has Mr. Powers received from the dominion government and for what period?

4. Did Mr. Powers receive additional sums for traveling expenses and/or other charges?

5. If so, what amount did he receive for (a) traveling expenses; (b) other charges?

6. What are the qualifications and experience of Mr. Powers for the services which he has performed?

7. Is Mr. Powers a Canadian citizen?

8. Where are his business headquarters situated?

9. Are the services of Mr. Powers still being retained by the dominion government? If so, for how long are such services to be retained?

CANADIAN PACIFIC SECURITIES

Mr. Knowles:

1. As at September 1, 1939, what was the total value of Canadian Pacific securities of all kinds held in the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada and other countries?

2. What is the total value of Canadian Pacific securities of all kinds held in the above noted countries as at the present time?

3. Have any Canadian Pacific securities held in the United Kingdom been acquired by the government of the United Kingdom? If so, what is the value of such securities so acquired?

4. What is the total value of Canadian Pacific securities returned to Canada from the United Kingdom since September 1, 1939, and what disposition has been made of any such securities returned to Canada?

5. Did the Canadian government acquire any Canadian Pacific securities following world war I? If so, to what extent were such securities acquired, and to what extent are such securities still in the possession of the Canadian government?

6. Does the Canadian government hold any Canadian Pacific securities other than those acquired following world war I?

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—EXPENDITURES, 1938-48

Mr. Probe:

What amount of money was spent by the national defence department and/or any other government department on account of each of the following (a) reserve army; (b) reserve navy; (c) reserve air force, in each of the years 1938 to 1948 inclusive?

CHURCHILL, MAN., POST OFFICE

Mr. Knight:

1. What is the over-all floor space of the post office at Churchill, Manitoba?

2. How much of that space is used as a waiting room?

3. What is the approximate number of population which uses the post office facilities?

4. Is mail stored at this post office over periods of time awaiting navigation?

5. Are postal boxes available for rental?

6. By what percentage has the receipt of mail increased at this point in the last three years?

7. For how many outposts is mail stored for periods of time at this post office?

8. Has the Postmaster General received resolutions from Churchill asking for increased facilities? If so, what action has been taken upon such requests?

NATIONAL CAPITAL PLAN—SALARIES AND OTHER EXPENSES

Mr. Hodgson:

1. What salary, honorarium and expenses have been paid to Mr. Jacques Greber in connection with the national capital plan?

2. Have any bills been rendered by Mr. Greber that are yet unpaid? If so, in what amounts?

3. How many persons are employed or working in connection with the said plan and what salary and expenses have been paid to all such persons?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—NEW GLASGOW, N.S., OFFICE

Mr. Black (Cumberland):

1. Is the building occupied by the unemployment insurance commission in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, owned by the government? If so, what was the total price paid, and to whom was it paid?

2. If not (a) from whom is it rented; (b) for what period; (c) at what rental?

3. How many employees are there in this office?

4. Who is in charge, and what salary is paid?

5. What are the total monthly salaries paid?

6. How many war veterans are employed in this office?

7. How many of these employees are under the civil service?

COMBINES—DENTAL COMPANIES

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total cost incurred by the combines investigation department in the investigation that led to the prosecutions in 1948, of the 18 dental companies for conspiracy?

2. What was the total cost of the trial?

3. What was the total cost of the appeal to the Court of Appeal of Ontario?

4. Who were the counsel on (a) the trial; (b) the appeal, and how much did each receive for fees and expenses?

5. Are there any outstanding accounts submitted by counsel or solicitors? If so, by whom and what are the several amounts?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MICHEL LUCIEN SEIGNEUR

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North):

For a copy of all orders in council, correspondence, reports or other documents in the possession of the government concerning Michel Lucien Seigneur.

CHESTER, N.S., WHARF

Mr. Nowlan:

For a copy of all payrolls, covering repairs to the wharf at Chester, Nova Scotia, for the months of August, September, October, November and December, 1948, together with a statement showing all material purchased for the said work; the names of the parties supplying the same and the amounts of money paid therefor, as well as the name or names of the party or parties who purchased salvage or surplus material derived from or purchased for the said work, the quantity or kind of material so purchased by each such individual and the prices paid therefor.

Orders for Returns

CHILD WELFARE ADMINISTRATION, ALBERTA

Mrs. Strum:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, agreements, and other documents, exchanged between officials of the government of Alberta, and/ or other persons and the various departments of the federal government, with respect to child welfare administration in Alberta, during the period covered by the ten-month investigation into this question conducted by the royal commission appointed in 1947.

YUKON TERRITORY—FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Black (Yukon):

For a statement of the names of all persons employed in Yukon Territory by the federal government (with the exception of those names in return tabled March 10, 1947), showing where they are serving; in what capacity; their remuneration, and when each was first so employed.

HEALTH GRANTS—NURSES' HOMES

Mr. Knight:

For a copy of all correspondence since January 1, 1948, exchanged between the government and individuals or organizations regarding the possibility of obtaining federal grants towards the building of new nurses' homes or additions to those in existence; together with any documents or memoranda indicating decisions made by the government in connection with such inquiries.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—BLOOD INDIAN RESERVE—ST. MARY IRRIGATION DAM

Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of all records, letters, telegrams or correspondence since the 1st of July, 1947 to date in the possession of the Department of Mines and Resources, connected with the Blood Indian reserve, number 148, relative to the purported lease of land on the reserve for the St. Mary irrigation dam and all documents connected with the vote on the 9th and 10th of December, 1948, of the Blood band of Indians and in particular any complaints regarding irregularities in the vote made by members of the band that have been transmitted by the superintendent of the Blood agency and the Indian Agent.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

EXTENSION TO CERTAIN MINES NOT NOW INCLUDED

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act by extending the assistance to certain mines not presently included under the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO SUBMARINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. Church (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence in connection with a reported statement by Vice-Admiral Grant at a meeting in Toronto of the Toronto branch of the Naval Officers' Association last Friday evening when he stated that Russia had four times the number of U-boats that Hitler had. I asked a similar question last week in the form of a notice of question. The minister said that Canada's navy had no submarines. Perhaps the minister does not know, but I should like to find out.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): The hon. member asked on Friday about the policy of the government with regard to submarines. I take it from what I could hear of what he has just said that his question today relates to the same subject. The submarine is still generally regarded not as a defensive weapon but as an offensive weapon, used to destroy naval vessels and shipping of an enemy. Canada has no aggressive intentions. The only possible aggressor at the present time has not a large surface fleet.

It is the view of the government and its advisers that it would be a waste of Canada's resources to go in for the very expensive business of having submarines. When we need a submarine for anti-submarine training we have been able to make arrangements with the Royal Navy or the United States navy or to engage in joint exercises such as those now going on in the Caribbean. We believe that this represents the sensible approach to the problem of co-operation in defence. Co-operation is the only way in which Canada or any other country can defend itself today, and is also the only way in which peace can be secured. Obviously Canada could not and should not duplicate the defensive activities of every great power. Our object is to do what we should for our own immediate defence against direct attack and to work with other friendly nations in joint defence so as to preserve the peace.

Mr. Church: Was the air marshal right? He said the same thing as I said a week ago.

Mr. Claxton: No air marshal spoke on Friday or Saturday.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Humphrey Mitchell (Minister of Labour): I should like to reply to a question in connection with unemployment in Vancouver which was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) as reported on page 536 of Hansard of February 15, 1949. At that time the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said that an investigation would be made of the situation, and the following is the report of this investigation.

At the beginning of March, 1949, the number of unplaced applicants registered with the national employment service in the city of Vancouver totaled approximately 25,000 persons—20,000 males and 5,000 females.

These current figures may be compared with those of the same dates in each of the preceding three years as follows:

Year	Males	Females	Total
1946	15,800	3,800	19,600
1947	11,700	3,200	14,900
1948	12,200	4,200	16,400

Many of these unplaced applicants are covered by unemployment insurance. At the beginning of this month there were about 22,000 active claimants for benefits in the city of Vancouver. Of these, 17,600 were men and 4,300 were women. These current figures may be compared with those at the same date in earlier years as follows:

Year	Males	Females	Total
1946	9,000	2,400	11,400
1947	5,600	1,800	7,400
1948	8,900	2,700	11,600

It will be seen from a comparison of these two sets of figures, namely, the number of persons registered as unplaced by the national employment service in Vancouver and the number of active claimants for benefits, that a larger proportion of the unemployment is now covered by unemployment insurance assistance than in former years. At present, eighty-eight per cent of the unplaced male applicants in Vancouver are active benefit claimants. This figure is much higher than those at the same date in former years, as is shown in the following table:

Active claimants for benefits as percentage of unplaced applicants

Year	Males	Females	Total
	per cent	per cent	per cent
1946	57	63	58
1947	48	56	50
1948	73	64	71

The main reason for the higher percentage in 1949 is the extension of the coverage of unemployment insurance over the past year and a half to include workers in the logging industry in British Columbia and persons on weekly or monthly salaries whose earnings are between $2,400 and $3,120 annually. My hon. friend will remember the amendments that were made last year to include the logging industry in the unemployment insurance scheme. The latter figure of $3,120 is now the maximum amount which salaried workers can earn and still be covered by unemployment insurance. In addition to a higher percentage of unplaced applicants being covered by unemployment insurance, there are actually fewer persons out of work today who are not covered by this form of assistance than at the same date in any earlier post-war year. At the beginning of March, 1948, for example, there were close to 5,000 persons registered for work in Vancouver who were not active claimants for unemployment insurance, whereas today there are only 3,000. The comparative figures for 1947 and 1946 were 7,500 and 8,200 respectively.

The largest weekly increase in the number of unplaced applicants occurred this year during January when they averaged around 1,400 a week. Since then the increases have fallen off steadily, and for the past two weeks substantial decreases in unplaced applicants have occurred. These weekly changes are as follows:

Weekly period	Weekly Changes in Unplaced Applicants
January 28 to February 3	plus 1,200
February 4 to February 10	plus 630
February 11 to February 18	plus 340
February 19 to February 24	plus 30
February 25 to March 3	minus 620
March 3 to March 10	minus 1,400

This is an indication that the situation is righting itself. The total amount paid out during February in the form of unemployment insurance benefits in Vancouver was $830,000. One-fifth of this amount was paid by the federal government. In addition to this assistance a number of agencies have formed a local community council in Vancouver which is providing aid to persons temporarily unemployed. During the month of January, some 8,000 meals and 2,000 beds were provided by these local groups. A number of borderline cases also received assistance from the city and province during January. This assistance from these various local sources totaled about $7,000.

Of the 25,000 unplaced applicants registered with the national employment service in Vancouver at the beginning of March about 3,000 were veterans. This number is 2,000 less than at the same date last year. It might be added that, based on interviews made recently with nearly 500 unemployed veterans over forty-five years of age in Vancouver, it was found that one-third had a fairly adequate income for current purposes from pensions, from superannuation, or from other sources.

There are a number of special factors which might be mentioned bearing on the present situation in Vancouver. It is estimated that some 80,000 workers have been added to the labour force in British Columbia since 1946, bringing it up to a total of 425,000 at present. This represents an increase of 23 per cent, whereas in Canada as a whole the corresponding growth in the labour force has been only 10 per cent. The expansion of the labour force in Vancouver has been at least as great as that for the whole province.

The labour force in British Columbia and in Vancouver has a relatively high proportion of workers over forty-five years of age. Thirty-five per cent of all workers in British Columbia are in this category. In Canada as a whole the corresponding percentage is 31. In British Columbia, where much of the work is of a strenuous character, older workers ordinarily constitute a more difficult placement problem.

Each winter there is a considerable influx of workers into Vancouver, not only from sections of British Columbia, but also from outside the province. A large part of this movement is of a temporary nature. Most of these workers are regularly employed in other occupations for most of the year. They come to Vancouver only during the period when employment is slack, as is the case, for instance, with many farm workers from the prairie provinces and from the interior of British Columbia. Of the 25,000 unplaced applicants at the beginning of March, it is estimated that close to 6,000 moved to Vancouver within the past six months. About one-third of these persons are from other parts of British Columbia while the remaining two-thirds are from outside the province.

A large number of the logging camps in British Columbia close down temporarily at the end of December each year. Many of the released woods workers move into Vancouver at this time. This year these camps were not able to reopen as quickly as they ordinarily do because of heavy snow and unusually cold weather. Most of the mills are now open and a steady stream of men is going back to work.

The cold weather in January reduced building operations to a minimum. A large building program is again getting under way in Vancouver, and with the milder weather employment is opening up rapidly. Already during 1949 construction contracts awarded total more in value than during the same period last year. This follows the same upward trend in construction that was in evidence throughout 1948, as the following figures for Vancouver indicate:

Construction Contracts Awarded

Year	December	Whole year
1947	$1,564,075	$33,823,614
1948	2,318,434	53,650,299

The lack of rain, and the cold weather throughout the coastal area during January, resulted in hydroelectric power shortages which caused a 30 per cent cut in industrial power. As a result of rains during February the power situation is now back to normal, and those workers temporarily laid off have returned to their jobs.

It would appear from this report that the unemployment situation in Vancouver was a temporary one. The peak of unemployment was reached in February in Vancouver as it was throughout the country as a whole. Since then the number of workers applying at the national employment service in Vancouver who remain unplaced has been falling off with increasing rapidity. Local officers report that more jobs are opening up every day as construction, logging and other seasonal industries get into full swing.

With incomes and investment expected to remain at high levels during 1949, the employment outlook during the coming months is quite favourable in British Columbia, as it is in other parts of Canada.

No one in this House of Commons, I feel sure, needs to be told that the variations in employment each year in Canada are greatly dependent on the seasons. This is no new thing. It has been a condition which has always existed and, in my opinion, will always prevail. The situation in British Columbia has been, to a very large extent, a seasonal one and the shock of the effect on the individual lives of our workers has been, in very large measure, cushioned by unemployment insurance. The parliament of Canada has reason to congratulate itself upon this very fine legislation. As I indicated a moment ago, in February alone in Vancouver $830,000 was paid in unemployment insurance benefits.

In conclusion I should like to say that there has been some criticism of the delay in the payment of some of the claims. I do not wish to go into details, as most hon. members know the mechanics of the act, but I am assured by the commission that the situation is practically cleared up, and we hope to have things moving expeditiously from now on.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Now that the situation has been remedied by an act of God in bringing about the fine weather, does the minister have anything in mind for the similar situation which is certain to develop next winter?

Mr. Mitchell: If I may say this to my hon. friend, without being accused of treating the matter in—

Mr. MacInnis: It just depends how you say it.

Mr. Mitchell: That is all right, but I know of no legislative body in the world that can pass legislation against the elements. That is a risk we have to take.

Mr. MacInnis: Cabinet ministers are protected against it.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. friend says that cabinet ministers are protected against it, but so are the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. MacInnis: Quite.

Mr. Mitchell: And so are people in many other vocations. But living in a country where freedom exists—

Mr. MacInnis: Freedom to be unemployed.

Mr. Mitchell: —it is difficult to stop the movement of people from one province to another. As I pointed out the last time I answered the question, if my hon. friend, or any other member of the House of Commons, has any suggestions, I shall be glad to receive them and look into them.

Mr. MacInnis: Look up the green book of 1945. There are suggestions there.

Mr. Green: Are we to take it from the statement of the minister that the government accepts no responsibility for helping to relieve the situation in Vancouver?

Mr. Mitchell: If my hon. friend does not think that $830,000 is accepting some responsibility I should like him to say what he thinks it is.

Mr. Green: The minister has admitted—

Mr. MacInnis: The men and the employers are providing most of that.

Mr. Green: —that two-thirds of the number come from outside British Columbia. Does the minister say that under those conditions there is no obligation on the dominion government to help?

Mr. Mitchell: I did not say any such thing. I have said before that if I want to go to British Columbia or Nova Scotia, particularly at this difficult period of the year, I must accept some responsibility. I came to Canada from Great Britain. I took some responsibility when I came here, and, if I may say this to my hon. friend, I have never taken a cent from anyone since I have been in this country. It may be, of course, that I have been fortunate.

Mr. Green: Of course that is not the point. The point is that these people have to be maintained by the city.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members must understand that at this stage I cannot permit debates on these questions.

RECONSTRUCTION AND SUPPLY

STATEMENT AS TO TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): On March 3, as reported at page 1093 of Hansard, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) referred to a provision in section 9 of the act setting up the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, which provision he asserted would require the tabling of an annual report of the department.

Section 7, to which the hon. member referred, is in the Department of Reconstruction Act, 1944, not in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act, 1945. The Department of Reconstruction and Supply was formed by the merger of two departments, munitions and supply and reconstruction, and the former department was not required by statute to table a report. Therefore I state again that the tabling of an annual report on the general departmental activities of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply is not mandatory, since a report, if any, would be required only in respect of those functions originally within the purview of the Department of Reconstruction. Consequently no consolidated report for the department was prepared in the past, and the branches or agencies constituting the department either placed reports before parliament or were reported upon orally by the minister.

These branches and agencies, which I believe numbered ten in 1945, subsequently have been either abolished or transferred to other departments. There now remain only three branches or agencies identified with the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. They are Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, whose annual report will be tabled shortly; the Canadian travel bureau, whose report also will be tabled shortly; and finally the public projects branch, for which a report could be prepared and submitted to parliament if it is felt that the oral reports already given by my predecessor concerning the public projects branch, and the relevant questions which have been answered in this house during this session of parliament, need to be supplemented by such a document. Personally I do not believe it would add anything to what is already on record.

Mr. Green: If I may ask a question arising out of this statement, has the minister given consideration to section 6 of chapter 16 of the statutes of 1945, which set up the Department of Reconstruction and Supply? That section provides that all the duties given to the Minister of Reconstruction under the act of 1944 must be carried on by him as Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Clearly one of the duties given him in 1944 was the tabling of an annual report. Therefore it would seem that as Minister of Reconstruction and Supply he should likewise table an annual report for that department.

Mr. Winters: That section was given full consideration. As I said before, if the hon. member desires any specific information we shall be pleased to supply it.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Garfield Case (Grey North): In view of the fact that the house committees have been set up, will the Minister of Mines and Resources say whether the committee on Indian affairs will be reconstituted in order to complete its work on the Indian Act?

Hon. J. A. MacKinnon (Minister of Mines and Resources): As recommended by the committee on Indian affairs which sat last year, a bill is now before the Department of Justice. When that bill is returned it is my intention to discuss with my colleagues the matter of reconstituting the committee and referring the bill to it.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

PARK STEAMSHIP COMPANY—SALE OF SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. King Hazen (Saint John-Albert): Is the Minister of Transport in a position to inform me when I may expect the answers to certain questions about the Park Steamship Company, which were passed as an order for return on February 9 last?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I am familiar with the subject matter of the hon. gentleman's questions, which have to do partly with the maritime commission and partly with war assets, for which I am not responsible. As soon as I get back to the office I shall ascertain the position in reference to the two parts, and endeavour to assist my hon. friend in getting an answer as quickly as possible.

[Mr. Winters.]

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask, through you, Mr. Speaker, when the orders in council referred to in the address passed by the house on Monday, March 7, will be produced? Two of them have now been tabled. May I ask that the others be produced as soon as possible? I should like to have them for use in the debate to take place today and tomorrow.

EDUCATION—ESKIMOS—CHURCHILL, MAN.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon City): For some time I have been awaiting a return to a question which I asked and which appeared for the first time on page 114 of Votes and Proceedings. May I ask that the question be answered within a reasonable time? I do not know to whom to address a request of this kind.

Hon. Colin Gibson (Secretary of State): I shall be glad to have an inquiry made to see what return can be brought down.

FLAX

INQUIRY AS TO FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): In view of the statements by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, appearing in Hansard for January 31 and February 24, will the minister now say whether there will be a floor price for the 1949 flax crop? If so, at what price will the floor be established?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I hope to make a statement tomorrow on the subject of floor prices generally.

DOMINION COAL BOARD

REQUEST FOR SITTINGS IN NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce been informed that the dominion coal board has been requested to hold sittings in the coal areas of Nova Scotia? If so can he inform the house whether it is the intention of the board to comply with this request?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have been advised that the board has been requested to sit in Nova Scotia this coming summer. I understand that the board expects to be able to do so, but as yet no definite arrangement has been made. The members of the board will be meeting during April, at which time the proposed visit will be discussed.

INCOME TAX

REFUSAL OF OFFICIALS TO DISCLOSE INFORMATION —JUDGMENT IN MONTREAL BANKRUPTCY CASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question either to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of National Revenue? Has the attention of the government been drawn to a recent judgment in a bankruptcy court in Montreal citing certain officials of the income tax division for contempt of court, because of their refusal to disclose certain information requested? Is any action contemplated by the government? Is an amendment to the Income Tax Act to alter the secrecy provision in prospect?

Hon J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): We are aware of the position as outlined by the gentleman who asked the question. As yet no action has been taken.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

QUESTION AS TO GRANTING OF CLEAR TITLES TO VETERANS OF WORLD WAR I

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): May I ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs? Is it the intention of the government to implement a recommendation of the committee on veterans affairs last session with respect to the granting of clear titles to veterans of world war I?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Veterans Affairs): That question cannot be answered by a yes or no. I shall be glad to discuss what has been done in that direction, either when my estimates are before the house or at some other suitable time.

PRICES

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Prime Minister when the government expects to table the report of the royal commission on prices?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Last week I received a letter from the chairman of the commission informing me that there was a greater delay than he had expected in the printing of the report. Members will recall that on the information I had received I had hoped the report would be tabled by the end of February. Upon inquiry I learned there had been some unavoidable delay in the printing, but the report will be produced as soon as possible.

Mr. Fleming: I understand the government has not yet received the report from the commission.

Mr. St. Laurent: No; we have not received the report, and the chairman of the commission explains he has met with delay in the printing bureau. He is doing his best to get it out, and will have the report before us as soon as it can be completed.

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

The house resumed from Friday, February 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Garson that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): The last time this measure was before the house, on February 18, the member for Peace River (Mr. Low) put on the record our attitude towards this motion. In view of the fact many days have passed since that time, I should like to refresh the memory of the members of the House of Commons by quoting very briefly some of the things he said. I refer to page 675 of Hansard.

I sincerely hope that the contents of this resolution for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council does not constitute the whole of the program the government intends to bring in at this session in connection with the very serious matter of prices and distribution facing the country today.

Further on, he said:

The rank and file of the Canadian people are not asking for more control; but they are asking for relief from the burden of high living costs. People generally are waking up to the fact that the government itself is perhaps the chief culprit in this whole matter of extremely high prices.

The member for Peace River then went on to show how high taxation has raised the price of goods to the people.

In concluding, he had this to say:

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that the people of this country are going to be bitterly disappointed if the government fails to supplement these orders, which are now in the form of resolutions, by positive action aimed at reducing the cost of living. I declare there is no better place to start than in their own taxation structure, especially the iniquitous sales tax.

At a later stage, he said:

—and using the modest subsidies which we have proposed from time to time on selected items used from day to day by families, which subsidies could be paid for not out of taxation but with interest-free money—

I intend to expand upon some of these points, but before doing so I want to refer briefly to some of the criticisms, made by members of the C.C.F. party, of the statement made by the member for Peace River concerning his trip to England. The member for Peace River referred to the fact that, while he was over in Great Britain, he found a great deal of discontent in regard to some of the controls. He referred to those controls, showing the results that they had had upon the economy of that country. Frankly, I must admit I was amazed at some of the extreme language used by members of the C.C.F. in criticizing that statement. One member even went so far as to describe it is a despicable attack upon Great Britain.

I should like to point out that at no time did the member for Peace River attack either the people of Britain or Great Britain herself. His criticism was leveled against certain controls and the results those controls had had upon the British economy. It seems to me that the main trouble with the C.C.F. is that they regard their type of government as the embodiment of the aims and objects of the people. Hence, they insist that an attack upon that government is an attack upon the people, which of course is another matter entirely. I would say that it is a very dangerous attitude of mind. It is the type of psychology found in men like Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin, and it breeds intolerance.

Let me ask the C.C.F. this question. When they attack the policies of the Liberal government, as I have heard them do time and again, sometimes viciously, would they agree that when they are attacking the policies of the Liberal party they are attacking the Canadian people or Canada? I am satisfied they would say, nonsense. Then, I would say that in accusing the leader of this group, when he spoke about certain controls in England, of having made an attack against the British people, that was also nonsense.

I should like to refer specifically to some of the statements made by the member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Knight) which are found on page 692 of Hansard. The member for Saskatoon City suggested that, perhaps, the member for Peace River was not familiar with conditions overseas because he had only made one trip to Great Britain. I hope he will appreciate the fact that I have known England fairly well in the past. I believe I was born in the same year as the member for Saskatoon City and I also happened to come to Canada in the same year as he did. I have been back on many occasions. I spent four years overseas in the first war. I have many relatives over there, and I carry on correspondence with them fairly frequently. I say that, judging by the correspondence I have had from my relatives over there, I find that their criticism of many of the policies carried on in Britain today is just as severe as the criticism which was made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). May I say that my relatives cannot be considered to be wealthy people; they are just the ordinary middle class, and probably the controls which are exercised in Britain today fall more heavily upon the middle class than upon any other class.

But let me call another witness on this question. I should like to refer to the fact that one of the senior members of the Labour party in Britain has been most critical of some of the control policies carried out by that party. I should like to quote from a speech made by the hon. member for Nottingham South, H. Norman Smith, on Wednesday, December 12, 1945. I shall quote from the official record. He had this to say:

I have been in this Labour party nearly thirty-nine years.

Evidently he was one of the senior members of the party in so far as length of membership is concerned. He continued:

There are very few hon. or right hon. gentlemen on this side of the house who have the length of membership of this party that I have.

Therefore he was speaking with some authority. He continued:

I want, in my turn, to use arguments calculated to bring my hon. friends on this side of the house into the division lobby against these proposals—

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Smith: —because I am absolutely certain that, as the hon. member for East Aberdeen has already stated, these proposals open the way to the influences which broke the second Labour government in 1931. If the house gives effect to these proposals, only a miracle will save the third Labour government from the fate that overtook the second.

By the way, the title of this speech is "Parliament abdicates financial control". Then he went on to mention the fact that in many instances the policies of the Labour government are very similar to the policies of the Liberal party. I noticed that when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) spoke he pointed out to members of the C.C.F. that many of the measures in operation today were measures which were first of all started by the Liberal party. Then Mr. Smith had this to say:

It is a matter no doubt for congratulation to the tiny remnant of Liberals, most of whose party have been swept out of this house, that, though their party is now shattered and almost nonexistent, their ideals are triumphing on the front bench of the Labour party.

Mr. Archibald: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he say that the barter agreements which Great Britain is entering into are economic Liberalism?

Mr. Quelch: I would say that the international financial policies of Britain since the war have been, to a very large extent, dominated by the Bretton Woods agreement, under which she agreed to make the pound convertible into dollars, and as a consequence she lost, or had to reduce, her exports by about $800 million. So far as the barter agreements are concerned, she is being forced into them by economic necessity, but she may not be able to carry them on unless changes are made in the Bretton Woods agreement.

I should like to quote another statement from Mr. Smith. He said:

> Never, in the whole of history, was it proposed to give such tremendous power to an authority as is contemplated in the Bretton Woods scheme. Neither Hitler nor Mussolini, at their respective zeniths, not even the Roman emperors in Rome's palmiest days, had such tremendous power as it is proposed to confer upon this fund.

And in order to emphasize the need for maintaining financial controls in the hands of the government of Britain, instead of the hands of international financiers, he had this to say:

> The Labour and socialist movement in this country completely failed then to understand that, if there is a class war, it is not between employers on one side and workers on the other, because neither employers nor workers have the real power when it comes to an economic showdown. The real class war is between, on the one hand, the few people who control finance and, on the other hand, the rest of the community, in which category I would include anybody who works for a living.

I quoted this statement to show that fortunately there are members in the Labour party who appreciate the dangers of the control policies of the Labour party today, or at least the extent to which they have relinquished certain financial controls and turned them over to the hands of an international authority.

Apparently the hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Knight) did not like the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River. He suggested that the hon. member for Peace River might have got his information from the wrong sources. He implied that it might possibly have been from Oswald Mosley. I will read what he said, as reported at page 692 of Hansard:

> I am not going to suggest that one of the people he saw was Oswald Mosley—but from the opinions he expressed, I should think such opinions might easily have been garnered from that source.

I do not know whether that statement was supposed to be witty or whether it was supposed to have anything behind it; but let me point out—and before I make this statement let me say quite clearly that I am not suggesting for one minute that the C.C.F. as the national socialist party of Canada is the counterpart of the national socialist party of Germany; but in view of the fact that the hon. member thought it worth while to try to link us up with Oswald Mosley, I should like to say that there is a far greater affinity between the ideas of the C.C.F. as the national socialist party of Canada and the national socialist party of Germany than there is with the Social Credit party. I say that for this reason. Both of these parties believe in centralization. We believe in the greatest possible degree of decentralization. Both of these parties believe in the multiplicity of controls, and we believe that controls should be used only to the extent absolutely necessary to maintain the efficient operation of the economy. Both of these parties believe in a very large degree of public investment. We believe that public investment should be the residual action necessary to maintain the optimum development of the resources of the country. Therefore I say that the hon. member for Saskatoon City would have been far more logical if he had addressed his remarks relating to Oswald Mosley to members of his own party instead of to members of this party.

Then the hon. member wondered whether the hon. member for Peace River had seen the results of public investment in England. Mind you, the hon. member for Peace River had not criticized any of the public investments which had been made in that country; but the hon. member for Saskatoon City suggests that he might have seen the fine houses which have been built, the power development schemes and other investments. The point I want to make is this: just because fine public projects have been carried out in England under public investment, it does not mean that you have to agree with certain control policies that have been instituted in that country.

I was in England in 1938 at the time of Munich, and I spoke to a number of school teachers who had just come back from Germany. They recounted to me in glowing terms some of the public projects they had seen in Germany. They referred to the wonderful roads which had been built; they referred to the public buildings and the development of power. They referred to the reforms which had been carried out in agriculture; but on the other hand they were most bitter in their denunciations of the controls and the degree of regimentation which were being carried out in that country.

I am satisfied that if the hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Knight) were permitted to go behind the iron curtain today he would see great development projects on the way, projects developed by public investment—power developments, road-building programs, great cities being built in Siberia and across the Urals. But does that mean to say for one moment that, because he appreciates what is being done under public investment, he must also at the same time agree with the type of controls and regimentation carried out under the soviet regime today?

Then the hon. member proceeds to state that he deplores this attack upon Great Britain. I have already pointed out that at no time did the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) attack Great Britain. He attacked merely a certain control policy; and I resent bitterly the implication that members of this group are anti-British. Indeed, I think members of the C.C.F. could earn that description to a far greater degree than we could.

The hon. member goes on to say:

> The state in which she found herself was that of bankruptcy—a bankruptcy which was caused by her war effort.

Unfortunately that is only half the story, because even if there had been no war she would have found herself in a difficult position today. As proof of that I would quote from the interim report of the European recovery program, sections 26, 27 and 28 of which state:

> The long-term problem of western Europe is thus one of maintaining a high standard of living for a dense population, in a world where it is no longer the predominant source of manufactured supplies. Even in 1938, nearly one-half of the world's output of manufactures was produced outside western Europe; now the proportion is much higher. For many years, the problem of paying for these supplies had been growing. Between 1913 and 1939 imports from overseas were increasing but exports were declining; exports of manufactures of the main industrial nations fell by over one-quarter. The market for some of Europe's manufactures was becoming more and more restricted.
> Even if there had been no world wars, this course of world economic development would sooner or later have forced a change in western Europe's economic structure. The loss of her predominance in manufacturing would have compelled an adaption in the nature of her exports, and specialization in those types of products where her competitive advantage was greatest. The gradual reduction, in more recently developed continents, of advantages of inexpensive land and labour would have forced Europe to reduce her dependence upon imports of primary products.

Then, referring to the years between the wars, it goes on to state:

> But although the position of western Europe in the world economy has been progressively weakened during this century and particularly after 1913, there have been props and stays which concealed the weakness of the structure. Until 1913 western Europe was a large exporter of capital; its exports and invisible earnings far exceeded its imports. When after 1918 exports failed to recover to the 1913 level, the margin available for investment abroad was reduced. Gradually during the inter-war years, the annual rate of foreign investment decreased further, until by 1938 there was no net investment at all. These trends could not have persisted indefinitely. Western Europe could only have continued to import more and export less by living on capital.

I say that demonstrates clearly that Great Britain's position today is not merely the result of either the second great war or the first one, but is the result of the expansion in industrialization in different parts of the world outside of Europe.

Then the hon. member saw fit to go on as follows:

> Everyone knows that. And, if I may say so, that war effort was not exerted wholly on her own behalf. Let us not forget that for many days and months she stood alone.

I would suggest members of the C.C.F. party should be the very last to refer to that matter; because they, and they alone, were the party who in 1939 took the stand that Britain should continue to stand alone, that the C.C.F. were opposed to any military participation overseas. Also they took the stand that assistance overseas should be limited to economic aid, and must not include the sending of any expeditionary force overseas.

Mr. Blackmore: From Canada.

Mr. Quelch: Yes, from Canada. So that we may well say, "Thank God the C.C.F. were not in power in 1939"—or the failure to send the small force we did send might have been sufficient to tip the scales in the battle of Britain, in which event we might very well have a national socialist government in Britain at the present time.

Farther down in his speech, the hon. member apparently thought he should try to become humorous. After referring to the difficulties in which Great Britain had found herself, he said:

> And let me say that she did not try to meet her debts with funny money, either.

I always regret to hear members of the C.C.F. echoing the speeches made by reactionaries in this country—because there are many reactionaries in Canada who are trying to make the people believe that the use of national money would be a resort to funny money. The C.C.F. are playing into their hands every time they use that expression either in or out of the house. I am not saying all members of the C.C.F. do that; there are some who understand the need for national money, as much as we do.

Mr. Blackmore: Do they know what funny money is?

Mr. Quelch: Let me say the statement of the hon. member for Saskatoon City is absolutely incorrect. Much of the trouble in Great Britain today is due to the fact that she did try to meet her obligations with funny money. Had she insisted upon being allowed to pay her debts in goods and services she would not have run into the trouble she did.

What did she do? Under the Bretton Woods agreement she agreed to make sterling convertible into dollars, that is to meet her obligations in the currency of another country. That, for a nation that was suffering from serious unfavourable balance of trade, was a funny way to try to meet her debts—not "funny, ha! ha!" but "funny—peculiar".

Under the terms of the Bretton Woods agreement Great Britain agreed to meet her commitments in dollars. I believe it was in July of 1947 the agreement was made, and was carried out for a short time, following which she had to default on her commitments. Today she is restricting the convertibility of sterling to dollars.

Once again I would call as witness Mr. Norman Smith, in a speech he made on Monday, August 20, 1945. His speech is entitled The Appalling International Thraldom which is Bretton Woods, and referring to this particular question of debt he says:

> We are now a debtor country. If we ratify Bretton Woods our external war debt of about £3,500 million will no longer exist in blocked sterling, to be repaid in goods as and when that can be done; it will exist in the form of dollars or gold, which we shall never be able to get hold of except we pay the price of reducing catastrophically the standard of life of our own people.
> An international financial set-up like that of Bretton Woods is bad if it can exist only at the cost of rendering inevitable default on international indebtedness. The house will remember the unfortunate controversy about the American debt in the last war. Great Britain never did default on the American debt in the last war. What we borrowed from the American was neither gold nor dollars; it was goods. If we had had an intelligent international financial set-up, and had been permitted to repay in kind, that debt would have been on the way to liquidation long ago.

He said Britain did not default. Most people say however that she did, at least technically, because she was not able to meet her commitments in dollars. As a matter of fact at that time every country, with the exception of Finland, defaulted on its debt to the United States of America. There is no question that if England is committed to meet her obligations in this funny money the hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Knight) is talking about, that is, in terms of dollars or gold, she will be bound to default again. There is no way, with an adverse balance of trade, such as Britain has, that she can possibly meet her obligations in the currency of another country.

I said some time ago that in agreeing to make sterling convertible into dollars England had lost several hundred million dollars' worth of exports, or had reduced her exports by several hundred million dollars. I should like to quote from the Financial Post of May 24, 1947, which refers to sterling convertibility and the difficulty that Britain had in meeting that convertibility. I quote:

> Thus it is now clear that the government permitted heavy drawings on coal reserves rather than face the unknown fact that output was declining. In part, this led up to the coal crisis of last February—a crisis estimated officially to have already cost the country $800 million in export trade in 1947.

Commenting on that matter, Viscount Hinchingbrooke, speaking on April 15, 1947, had this to say:

> We dispatch overseas agricultural machinery and wreck our farming programs. We send overseas machine tools and interfere with industrial recovery. We send overseas locomotives and delay the traveling public. We send overseas cars and vans, and harass the professional man and distributive trades.

Britain knew very well at that time that if she were going to make sterling convertible into dollars she would have to do everything possible in her power to expand exports, and in order to do that she drew on certain reserves of fuel that should have been left within the country, with the result that when the severe winter of 1946 came she had cut her reserves of coal to such a low figure that she had to close down her industries from one end of the country to the other, and as a consequence lost in export something in the neighbourhood of $800 million. I think that is all I will say on that subject.

Coming back to our stand as put on the record by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), we do not believe that the type of controls embodied in these emergency regulations can be deemed to deal with the situation that is now developing. Therefore, we urge that legislation should be brought down at this session, either to supplement or to replace the controls referred to in this measure. We are very definitely approaching the situation about which the governor of the Bank of Canada warned us in 1946 and to which we have referred on several occasions in this house.

In the past, control measures were necessary to prevent a run-away boom and inflation and, in the future, control measures will be needed in order to prevent a depression and a catastrophic fall in prices. I think it is quite evident that the peak has been passed and that we are starting to slide down the other side. The thing that concerns most people is—just how far are we going down on the other side? Is there any danger of our sinking down into the same type of depression that we had in the thirties?

We have been told by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) that a shelf of public projects has been built up, but I think it is quite evident that the amount of money that will be paid out in connection with those projects will be totally inadequate to maintain the purchasing power of the people at a level sufficiently high for them to purchase the production of the country. Already there are signs of surpluses accumulating. If they are disregarded, our production will slow down, unemployment will increase, purchasing power will be further reduced and we shall once more be in the spiral of a depression.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) have expressed concern over the fact that the value of the dollar has shrunk. That is the same attitude that has been expressed during the past two years by the financial critic of the Conservative party. Of course he advocates that the logical way to deal with the situation is through a deflationary policy. Invariably when people start to criticize the purchasing power of the dollar as being too low they are in reality advocating a deflationary policy. What does it mean when the purchasing power of the dollar is low? It simply means that prices are high, and so when they advocate that the purchasing power of the dollar be increased they simply want prices reduced. I would say that a deflationary policy has no place in Canada today.

It seems to me that the important point is not the purchasing power of our dollar, but the purchasing power of the people. These two things are not the same and invariably you will find that they work conversely to each other. It is true that a reduced purchasing power of the dollar does penalize people in the low-income groups. We have urged in the past and we urge today that legislation be brought down immediately—as a matter of fact it should have been brought down long ago—to increase the purchasing power of the people in the lower-income groups. I have in mind especially those with fixed incomes, such as people in receipt of old age pensions, war veterans allowances and other people in similar classes.

When you advocate the expansion of the purchasing power of the dollar you advocate reducing prices. The first to suffer under a policy of that kind would be the primary producers of this country. Then as prices fell wages would fall and labour would soon be penalized as a result of a policy of that kind. Let me give an example of the expansion of the purchasing power of the dollar.

All we have to do is to go back to the years after 1929 when the purchasing power of the dollar hit a new high in this country. In the nineteen-thirties the purchasing power of the dollar was so high that you could buy five bushels of wheat for a dollar, you could buy six pounds of butter for a dollar; twenty pounds of pork and twenty pounds of dressed turkey. I know whereof I speak because those are the prices I got in 1932 for those products. I am satisfied that farmers are not looking forward to the day when the purchasing power of the dollar is increased so that anything like that can happen again. I suppose the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would say that it is not necessary to put the value of the dollar that high; but how high are you going to put it?

Mr. Low: If you ever get started you will not be able to stop it.

Mr. Quelch: As the hon. member for Peace River says, it is not an easy thing to stop once you have started. Once you start forcing prices down it is hard to put the brakes on. I know that in the past the C.C.F. have advocated rolling back prices to January 1, 1946, but that would mean lower prices for our primary producers. Would the government have been justified in keeping the prices of agricultural products down to the January 1, 1946, level? I say most definitely no, and for this reason. For many years the farmers of Canada had to produce at world market prices which were far below the cost of production, and as a result of that they were driven heavily into debt. The only way any concern that is driven into debt can get out of debt is to receive prices considerably above the cost of production. During the 1930's the farmers took world market prices far below the cost of production, and since 1942 they have been compelled to take prices less than world market prices. In all fairness to agriculture, owing to the fact that we compelled them to carry on under conditions that forced them into debt, they have a right now to expect us to allow conditions to exist that will make it possible to pay for that debt. When you say that the farmers should not be allowed an increase in prices above the 1945 level I say you are not being fair to agriculture.

Mr. Wright: Would the hon. member not say that the farmers were better off in 1945 than they are at the present time?

Mr. Quelch: I would say that they are better off now, unquestionably, and I will tell you why. It is true that in 1945 the farmers could buy for less than they pay today, but do not forget this important point —it should not be necessary for me to remind the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) about this because he is a farmer. Farmers only spend a percentage of their income on goods but they get the increased prices on their total production. If they spend 50 per cent of their income on goods, then they are penalized to the extent that the prices of those goods have risen but they receive the increased prices on their total production. For instance, let us take the man who rents a farm. He has to pay one-third for rent and he only has two-thirds left. If you put prices down it is going to make it that much harder for him to pay his rent if he is paying it on a cash basis.

Mr. Wright: The trouble was, they took the ceilings off the things the farmer had to buy but kept them on what he had to sell.

Mr. Quelch: That is only partly true, but I think the hon. member for Melfort will agree that on the whole agriculture has not done too badly since 1945. The concern of agriculture today is not about the prices they are getting at the present time. The fear is as to what they are going to get in the future.

Mr. Wright: I agree with you there.

Mr. Quelch: The farmers of this country would not demand for one minute that they be allowed the increased prices represented by world market prices today if in return they were guaranteed stabilized prices in the future, but up to date they have not received that guarantee. I notice that the hon. member for Melfort opposed the depreciation of the dollar. I presume the reason he did so was that the Conservative party happened to be advocating the depreciation of the dollar. I was the only member of the house who spoke against appreciating the dollar to parity with the United States dollar. After it had happened, some of the Conservatives objected, but I pointed out that as far as agriculture was concerned it was always opposed to having an appreciated dollar. The hon. member for Melfort criticized the idea of depreciating the dollar, and then went on to say, "look how the farmers suffered during the 1930's when we had a depreciated dollar." We did not have a depreciated dollar in the 1930's. He is so badly mixed up that he is criticizing the very thing he should not criticize. In the 1930's we had an appreciated dollar, and the reason that agriculture ran into the difficulties that it did was the fact that we had an appreciated dollar instead of a depreciated one. The hon. member for Melfort said that the pound would only fetch $3.86. What he should have said was that in those years you could buy a pound for only $3.86 instead of having to pay $4.85 for it. In other words, it had appreciated approximately 18 to 20 per cent with the result that, when we were paid in sterling in England for our wheat and the pound sterling was converted back to dollars, instead of the farmer receiving $4.85 he only got $3.86 for it. That is an appreciated dollar, which is the very thing that the hon. member was advocating.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. Quelch: May I conclude with one statement?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): I must remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Quelch: May I conclude with one paragraph? One of the great difficulties that we ran into in the 1930's was the fact that our competitors, Australia, New Zealand and the Argentine, had their currencies depreciated below the pound sterling. We had our currency appreciated approximately 20 per cent above. Therefore those countries had an advantage of about 45 per cent in competing with us for the European market.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising—

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, is it not pretty well known that the leader of the opposition has already spoken in this debate? Since there seems to be some objection to that statement, may I say that I have no desire to prevent the leader of the opposition from exercising his legitimate rights.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Who else raised the objection?

Mr. Graydon: That is exactly what you are trying to do.

Mr. MacInnis: He is not.

Mr. Knowles: No.

Mr. Graydon: He is afraid of him; that is all.

Mr. MacInnis: So much afraid of him that we object to his speaking twice.

Mr. Knowles: Just a minute. The leader of the opposition has referred before to the rules of this house, and also of another place from whence he came. I suggest that we should abide by those rules. One of them is that a member cannot speak twice in the same debate. While I admit it was a very short speech, the leader of the opposition did speak in this house in this debate on Monday, February 7, and his short speech of about two paragraphs is reported at page 313 of Hansard.

Mr. Graydon: You are just the echo of the government.

Mr. Drew: I wish to make a submission, Mr. Speaker, in order that you may have it before you in giving consideration to the point that has been raised. At page 313 of Hansard I rose to point out that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) had not given an explanation of the reason why this resolution was being brought forward. I suggested that was desirable. I think it is perfectly clear that I rose on a point of order as to the procedure to be followed. You do not need to tag "point of order" onto your remarks to make it a point of order. I think the wording of my remarks makes it perfectly clear that it was a point of order. I said in part:

> I believe the house should have a full explanation from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) as to what emergency regulations it is intended to continue and what the effect will be, before the house is called upon to vote on this resolution.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I really believe that technically the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) has spoken in this debate. Anybody who stands up on a resolution which has been moved—I do not care how long his remarks are—has spoken on that resolution. The only thing that the leader of the opposition said was that he wanted an explanation, that he did not know the principle involved, and that we could not take a vote until he received the explanation. I want to be fair. If we allow the leader of the opposition to speak twice in this debate any other member can ask for the same privilege. I happen to be quite broad-minded in these matters. In the last two sessions I have had to lead the house when the Prime Minister has not been here. Since this matter is only at the resolution stage, I would suggest that on second reading of the bill, which will follow immediately afterwards, the leader of the opposition will have an opportunity to speak on the real principle. He will then have the bill before him and he will know exactly about what he is talking. In any speech he may make today he has no more information now than he had when he rose on this matter on February 7. He has the same resolution. Nothing has been added to it or taken away from it. I suggest that the rule should be applied unless the leader of the opposition is given permission with the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Drew: For a reason which will become apparent I do not propose to press my suggestion.

Mr. Casselman: I beg leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin), that this question be now put.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Knowles: We knew that was coming.

Mr. Drew: Well, it was fairly obvious. Now I am speaking without any question about the rules, and I will refer to the very few words I said previously. I indicated I believed it was a point of order to which I had spoken, though that does not need to be debated. I can now deal with what I said at that time. I pointed out that this resolution calls for consideration of the continuance of certain emergency measures, and that before we proceed to consider those emergency measures and the wisdom of dealing with them, this house is entitled to an explanation of what the emergency is and what the reasons are that in 1949 we should be called upon to regard as still continuing an emergency which related to the war that ended in 1945.

On Friday last, when the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) pointed out what would be dealt with today, he stated that we would be dealing with a measure which would determine whether there would be a continuance of the controls over housing, and certain other matters. That is not what we are considering on this motion. What we are considering, and the only thing we are considering on this motion, is whether or not there is an emergency which justifies the continuance of wartime emergency powers or whether, if that emergency has passed, other procedures should be followed to deal with those things which the government or any hon. member wishes to bring before this house.

As I have stated already in this chamber, there can be no question but that the government must deal in some way with the housing situation, and must deal with it in a more effective way than in the past. But there is absolutely no necessity to carry forward wartime emergency powers in order that this house may deal effectively with any measure relating to the subject of housing which this house, under any circumstances, can have power to deal with. The time has come for the government to place before parliament a statute dealing with the housing problem, and to provide in that statute clear and unmistakable terms which can be understood by both landlords and tenants so the confusion which exists today may be brought to an end. Moreover the government itself has clearly demonstrated that it no longer believes there is an emergency in relation to this matter which would justify a continuance of the war emergency powers. It seems to me that in putting forward this resolution the government has overlooked the effect of the proposal it made to the provincial governments. This government said to the provincial governments that if they were prepared to request the federal authority to vacate the field of housing the dominion was prepared to abandon its emergency powers in respect of housing in such areas. If that is so, by that very act the government has said emphatically that it no longer regards this as the type of emergency which calls for action of necessity by the dominion government; and unless there is such an emergency which compels the dominion government to act, and in which it has no choice but to act, then there is no emergency which entitles it to circumvent the constitution.

Oh, I can almost hear the suggestion being made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) that I am back on the subject of the constitution and dominion-provincial rights. Well, I hope that by now the minister has read a very important judgment delivered in Manitoba last Thursday, because that judgment will have considerable bearing on this whole question since it demonstrates very clearly the kind of emergency that justifies the continuance of these powers and the relation of parliament itself to the extension of this arbitrary centralization of what otherwise would be provincial affairs.

By this motion parliament is asked to declare that the emergency arising out of the war still continues. Every hon. member who votes in support of this resolution declares by his vote that in his opinion the emergency arising out of the war still continues. That is a very important question of fact, which calls for the careful consideration and judgment of every hon. member. There is often a tendency to speak of lawyers in rather contemptuous terms; sometimes it is done jokingly, sometimes otherwise. But it must be remembered that there are occasions when lawyers in parliament are very useful and helpful to those who are called upon to be lawmakers, who are called upon to accept the responsibility of passing laws which will affect the lives and daily activities of our people across the whole of this country. A declaration by parliament that an emergency of this kind still exists is a declaration of fact which affects a very wide field of laws which in turn at some time must be interpreted by the courts. In voting on this resolution I submit that it is of the utmost importance for every member to consider carefully what will be the effect of his vote. The law is important. The making of laws within the jurisdiction of this parliament is the responsibility of the members of this parliament. Therefore it is important that each of us ask what the issue is on this resolution now before us.

As I suggested a few moments ago, the issue has been clearly decided by a unanimous judgment of the appeal court of Manitoba, delivered last Thursday. The style of cause is Nolan vs Hallet and Carey Limited. The five judges of that court were unanimous in their decision, and they have greatly assisted anyone who wishes to consider the law involved in this case. The judgment will merit consideration. Let us see what the issue is as defined by these jurists.

I quote now from the judgment rendered in this case by Mr. Justice Adamson.

> It is going a long way to say or suggest that the federal parliament can invade the provincial field without any onus on it to justify such action. The justification must be some matter which has assumed paramount national importance, such as a national emergency of such proportions as to imperil the nation. To say that those who impugn such legislation must bring "clear evidence" of such emergency is to put a great national constitutional matter on the level of private dispute over a contract. A "national emergency," or a matter which has become of paramount importance to the dominion as a whole, which requires "clear evidence" of its existence, is inconceivable. An emergency of the kind required for the dominion to invade the provincial field must of its nature be self-evident, generally known and accepted, and be something of which the courts must take judicial notice. Anything less than this would be a mere pretext.

A little later the same judge said this:

> Both the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, and order in council 1292 recite and rely for their justification and legality upon the "continued existence" of the national emergency arising out of the war against Germany and Japan. Order in council 1292 is directed to a supposed economic emergency. The first question, therefore, is to inquire whether there was or was not an economic emergency—

The judgment then proceeds to discuss the type of emergency that should be looked for in this case.

> Granting, for the sake of argument, that an economic emergency—except during an actual war—can ever justify an invasion of the provincial legislative field by the dominion: What are the facts and what is the evidence in this case?
> In the record there is no evidence whatever of an economic emergency. What the emergency was, was not suggested.

This House of Commons is in precisely that position. What the emergency is upon which we are asked to say that we should proceed with this National Emergency Transitional Powers Act is not even suggested. I submit that the course followed by the government in this respect is an affront to parliament. We are simply told: Here is a resolution this all-wise government has presented; it is your job to vote for that resolution without a word being said in support of it.

Just let me read further from this judgment. There is mention of whether or not there is an emergency such as to justify these powers, and I quote:

> In 1947 (1) the national income was at or near an all-time high; (2) trade was at or near an all-time high; (3) employment was at or near an all-time high; (4) Canadian industry was at its peak; (5) agricultural production was very great and the income of agriculturists was at or near an all-time high; (6) Canadians per capita consumed more meat, milk, butter, sugar, beer, liquor and tobacco than ever before; (7) there were more new motor cars sold and more motor cars operated in Canada, and more was spent on gasoline, than in any previous year; (8) there was no distress, want or privation among any class or in any section of the country.

Never in our history had we been as prosperous as we were in 1947. Indeed, it is doubtful if any people at any time were as well off and enjoyed as high a standard of living as did Canadians in 1947. Moreover, we were less likely in Canada to be subject to economic distress than any country in the world.

Of course, there were anxieties about the future; but to say that there was an emergency at the date of the order in council such as that described by Lord Haldane, and such as to justify an invasion of the provincial legislative field, seems to me to be without foundation and entirely unjustified.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at seven-thirty o'clock.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, when we rose at six o'clock I had been quoting from the words of a judgment dealing with the emergency transitional powers act and an order in council under that act which have a bearing on the resolution which we are now considering. I propose again to quote from that judgment, and to seek to impress upon hon. members of the house the fact that the words that I now quote do indicate the measure of responsibility which must be assumed by those hon. members who are prepared by their vote to declare that there is an emergency of the kind that would continue these very broad and indefinite powers. I quote from the judgment:

> Parliament cannot make an emergency in one sphere an excuse or pretext to invade the provincial legislative field in another sphere. To hold otherwise would be to hold that all parliament required to legally trench upon the provincial field was a colourable excuse; and of course that is contrary not only to common sense, but to the principle underlying the "pith and substance" cases.

What I have read from this judgment indicates the extent to which the emergency which would justify the continuance of emergency powers must, in fact, be a real emergency. When hon. members of the House of Commons vote on a resolution which will have the effect of carrying a stage forward the consideration of a broad omnibus bill of this kind, their vote is not only a vote to deal with the particular subjects contained in the various orders that would be continued under this bill; it is an expression of opinion by hon. members of the House of Commons that this is in fact an emergency that justifies the abandonment for the time being of the division of authority between the dominion and provincial governments, which was laid down in our constitution.

The judgment which I have quoted does not go so far as to declare that the emergency transitional powers act is ultra vires. The fact that it did not so declare in no way alters the effect of each of the quotations which I have placed before hon. members. They were dealing with an order in council which had been passed under this act. That order in council had the effect of taking over the ownership of large quantities of barley in a limited part of Canada, and of providing the procedure by which that barley could be resold. The appeal court of the province of Manitoba held that the order in council was ultra vires of the government of Canada. They did so on the ground that there was no emergency of the kind that would make necessary steps of that kind. The judges of the appeal court made it clear that they were not dealing with the question whether the emergency transitional powers act is intra vires or ultra vires of the parliament of Canada. They did indicate that there is a very clearly established legal proposition that the courts will not decide against a decision of parliament except on very strong grounds; but in this case the judges made it clear that they were dealing only with the order in council, and they expressed no opinion about the question whether or not the act itself was intra vires.

I mention that now because I would hope that no hon. member would suggest that the fact that this judgment did not deal with the emergency transitional powers act itself, and the question whether or not it was intra vires of the powers of the Canadian parliament, have nothing to do with the responsibilities of all hon. members to assure themselves that there is in fact an emergency before they continue these wide and dictatorial powers.

The fact is that the judgment went so far as to point out that there was no crisis of the kind that would be required to declare an economic or other emergency of the kind; and since this bill is an omnibus bill dealing with many emergency powers, it would only be in the case of a general economic emergency, or a general emergency of some kind, that hon. members would have the right now to declare as a fact that there is a general emergency which would support the many provisions of these emergency powers.

I hope that no one will suggest that any hon. member who opposes the continuance of these wartime powers is opposing rent control or any other provision to meet the situation which has arisen very largely as a result of the activities of the government itself.

I have said before, and I repeat, that if this parliament has the power to deal with any of these measures under this omnibus bill, it has equal powers to deal with them by separate statutes, which would properly define the rights of the individuals affected, and in each one of these cases would give to the people of Canada an opportunity to go before the courts of this country and have their rights tested in the proper and traditional way.

I would recall again that when the government of Canada asks us to give these loose powers to deal with rent control, with steel control, with timber control, with priorities, and with all these other controls, it has already said to the provincial governments, in effect: We do not believe that there is any emergency of the kind which necessitates our general authority; you go ahead and deal with these orders and we shall be very happy to leave the matter with you. Of course, the provinces will be called upon to deal with these by statute, and if they could deal with a rent control act, defining the rights of the tenants and landlords, then this house could have an act by which they could deal with other matters in the same way. And we should have them. There is no difficulty whatever in having proper acts of parliament to deal with each one of these subjects, which will restore to parliament its own authority, and which will restore to the members elected by the people of Canada their opportunity to say what the rights of the people will really be.

Now, the government has placed this before us with the suggestion that there is no need to discuss any of the details until we get into committee. The fact of the matter is, the dominion government has made it more necessary than ever that we do consider it, because they have said on one occasion at least that they do not regard the emergency as being such that they must deal with it. They certainly cannot say on the one hand that there is no national emergency which requires us to continue these powers, and then on the other hand say to the House of Commons and to the people of Canada that there is a national emergency which requires us to continue these powers. It must be one or the other.

And from the course they have followed, indicating that they are now asserting the latter proposition, it seems to me that all hon. members here should understand one feature of this quite clearly. If the Canadian parliament has any right to continue these powers, then it has the right and the authority to deal in the proper way with every one of the subjects covered in this omnibus bill; and that is the proper way to deal with it. But do not ask this House of Commons, do not ask parliament, to pass this omnibus bill which puts in one package all these loose and arbitrary powers in the way this one does.

The continuance of these powers involves an extremely wide and arbitrary measure which permits ministers of the crown, and appointed officials who delegate their authority to others, powers which are not defined and which are expressly made free from the ordinary restraints of the courts; and they become in effect a sort of arbitrary power which we have come to associate with dictatorships in other countries.

A week ago the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) put on quite a performance of indignation about a speech I had made in Montreal in which I had referred to the bureaucracy here and to certain tendencies which they possess. I cannot help feeling some measure of interest in the sensitive attitude of the government in regard to the suggestion that there is a bureaucracy here which has inclinations toward a belief in the complete omniscience of officials, and of the right of those in the government to exercise control over production, and the economic and financial affairs of the country. For these powers the House of Commons is now asked to perpetuate are powers which do place the control of the production of many industries under the control of the government; and to a very great extent it places control of our economy under the control of the government, without effective restraint.

I was asked to name some of these bureaucrats.

An hon. Member: You did not do it.

Mr. Drew: And some have referred to the fact that I had not done it. Hon. members will recall that this discussion arose at the opening of the sitting in the afternoon; and it was pointed out—and I am not questioning the correctness of the observation, or the statement made—that I was not in order in proceeding at that time. Now I have been asked to name the bureaucrats I will name the No. 1 bureaucrat, and that is the Prime Minister himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: And I will name the No. 2 bureaucrat; he is sitting right beside the Prime Minister.

Mr. Howe: We can name the No. 1 comedian.

Mr. Drew: And just in case anyone does not know who the No. 2 bureaucrat is, it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe).

Mr. Abbott: Is he the well-known Marxist?

Mr. Drew: I will deal with that at the proper time in my remarks.

I wish to point this out, that before hon. members become so disturbed about the use of the word "bureaucracy", they should look up the dictionary. There they will find, if they look in the Oxford dictionary, that one of the two main definitions given to the word "bureaucracy" is centralization. And if ever there were a group of centralists in this country, it is the present government of Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: What about the followers of Marx?

Mr. Drew: I am glad the hon. member has referred to the doctrines of Marx; because I referred to the basic principles of Karl Marx. And a basic principle of Marx was the assertion of the belief that the best interests of a country were served by the control of the production and of the economy of that country by the government—by the state. That is a basic principle of Karl Marx, adhered to by the socialists, the communists, and those who sit in the government ranks at the present time.

Mr. Howe: Heaven protects the Tories!

Mr. Drew: And I will go a little further in regard to that.

Mr. Abbott: You have been reading Groucho Marx, not Karl Marx.

Mr. Drew: And I will go further than that. The indignation of the Prime Minister in regard to what I said in Montreal was really very touching, particularly in view of the speech he made on the following Saturday in that same city.

An hon. Member: It hurt, did it?

Mr. Drew: It did not hurt anyone but him. The Prime Minister on that occasion made a political speech, after he had been duly received as Prime Minister of Canada, stating that the Progressive Conservative party was under the control of the financial interests.

Mr. Knowles: He has to be right once in a while.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe I should call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that—

Mr. St. Laurent: Let him go on.

Mr. Abbott: Too good to miss.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion before the house is one by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman) seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin) that the question be now put. It is an amendment to the main motion before the house, which reads:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

[Mr. Drew.]

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war.

So I would ask hon. members taking part in the debate on the motion to make some remarks which are relevant to the motion.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to Beauchesne, at page 771, where there is a very comprehensive discussion of this type of motion and where reference is made to a discussion which took place in which the main arguments were put forward by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on March 4, 1907. On that occasion it was made quite clear that the motion of the previous question is a motion to stop the introduction of amendments, but that it permits a general discussion of the whole subject. That argument was also put forward quite competently by the right hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Mackenzie King) as reported on page 4347 of Hansard of 1943. At that time the right hon. member indicated that he clearly accepted the principle that the motion of the previous question is a motion that calls for a general discussion of the main motion but prevents the introduction of amendments. I would ask Your Honour to accept that proposition.

Mr. Speaker: I agree with the leader of the opposition that it is possible for him to discuss, not only the motion that the question be now put, but the other motion as well, but his remarks should be relevant to the motions now before the house.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should have indicated more clearly the reasons for the remarks I was making. Assume for the sake of argument that this might be a borderline case as to whether or not there is an emergency. There are reasons why this house should be particularly cautious, in the case of this government, in extending powers to them. After all, there must be some borderline cases where there might be difficulty in determining whether there was an emergency that would justify the continuance of the powers, but I submit that there is no such difficulty here. Even if hon. members felt that there was an emergency, I still think it is essential that they should consider what government will be exercising these powers, at least for a short time. That being so, I was addressing my remarks to the conduct of this government in the exercise of powers of this kind and I was indicating the belief in bureaucracy and in centralized control which I think every hon. member should be aware of when he casts his vote on this motion.

It was in that respect that I was indicating the attitude of the Prime Minister in regard to matters of this kind and his concept of bureaucracy and his concept of his own responsibilities and of the general situation in regard to matters of this nature. When he made the statement to which I have referred, suggesting that if there was any danger of communism in this country it would come because under the Conservative party there would be subservience to the financial interests, I do think that it is important that the members of this house be fully aware of the background of the man who made such a statement and that they should not be in any doubt as to who that man is.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not like interrupting the leader of the opposition, but I would remind him that there will be other opportunities to discuss the question which he wants to discuss. I do not believe that what he is saying has anything to do with the two motions before the house. I hope that with his experience he will act accordingly. I would ask him to discuss the particular motions which are before the house, first, that the question be now put and, second, that the Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee to consider a certain resolution. It is the privilege of the leader of the opposition to discuss the motions now before the chair, but his remarks should be relevant.

Mr. Drew: I am not going to debate this, but I am going to submit this to Your Honour. I am seeking to demonstrate that the Prime Minister and this government have no right to a continuance of the powers contained in this motion. I have sought to proceed with the discussion in order to show how unfit the present Prime Minister is to exercise powers of this kind. I ask for your ruling as to whether I have the right to continue along that line.

Mr. Speaker: I am totally in accord with the hon. gentleman as to his right to discuss whether or not the government should be given the powers included in the motion before the house, but I am not in accord with him in the line of discussion he has followed. His remarks should be relevant to the motions before the house. It is my duty to call his attention to that rule, as it would be my duty to call the attention of any member of this House of Commons.

Mr. Drew: I am dealing with the question of the exercise of arbitrary powers, which I submit is the very essence of the discussion now before the house. When an hon. member seeks to convey the impression which the Prime Minister has conveyed he is using the tools of the communist, he is using the very weapons the communists use. I think it is very relevant to know that the man who is using the weapons of the communists is the man who was largely acclaimed when he came into the house in 1941 as a great corporation lawyer who had been serving the big interests very efficiently.

An hon. Member: Cheap politics.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend is envious.

Mr. Drew: After all, those were the things that were supposed to be to his credit. He was a director of a bank; he was a director of a trust company; he was a director of a packing company.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the leader of the opposition will realize that what he is saying now has nothing whatever to do with the motions before the house. I ask him to abide by the rules.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to press the point because I have indicated already exactly what I was trying to convey. But I submit that it is a matter of the utmost importance to this house to know the way these powers have been exercised by the No. 1 bureaucrat in this house and in this country who today seeks this authority. I submit that what I now propose to put forward is very definitely related to the exercise of arbitrary powers of this kind. I raised these matters only briefly a few days ago, but I raise them in more detail now.

When the Prime Minister put on such a stage play of indignation at the suggestion made about bureaucrats in Ottawa, when he sought to leave the impression that I referred to civil servants, who after all are called upon to do what this government tells them to do, he placed himself in a position where it was natural to test what his use of powers had been.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): That is not in this motion.

Mr. Drew: It certainly is in this motion. The hon. member obviously does not know what motion is under consideration.

An hon. Member: We wonder whether you do.

Mr. Drew: The motion that is before the house has to do with the exercise of arbitrary powers by order in council. In the very brief exchange that day I pointed out that there was no man in Canada who had abused his arbitrary powers as the present Prime Minister did when he was Minister of Justice of this country. I pointed out then, and I repeat now, that when he was using arbitrary powers as Minister of Justice he used those powers to lay charges for political purposes, which charges he did not have the courage to proceed with or the decency to apologize for afterwards.

Mr. Baker: I rise on a point of order. I am a young member who is trying to follow the debate. I cannot understand the leader of the opposition talking as he is. He is uttering a lot of political nonsense which is quite irrelevant to the matter before the house. I plead that we go on and debate the resolution which is before us.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, today, throughout a considerable part of Europe, countries are under dictatorship because men and women were prepared to believe that the assertion of the right to freedom against arbitrary powers was a silly and unimportant thing. I am now discussing the very meat and substance of the use of arbitrary powers which this house is being asked to continue. It is the present Prime Minister—and after all as Prime Minister he must assume the major responsibility for the arbitrary powers which would be conferred by the continuance of these measures—who, when a particular communication to the then Prime Minister proved to be embarrassing to the government, used the power of censorship to restrain publication. That again is the kind of thing that this country wants to avoid, and avoid in every way it can. Those who believe in methods of that kind are not men who should be entrusted with loose and arbitrary powers.

When this matter came up again—earlier I said a week ago Monday, but I should have said two weeks ago today—and I referred to that abuse of arbitrary powers, the present Prime Minister gave an explanation as to why he was not prepared to agree to the tabling of a letter which I referred to in regard to the Hong Kong episode of some years ago. I am not concerned with whether or not that letter is tabled in this house because every word of it has been published in full. What is important is the fact that on that occasion once more—

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): I rise on a point of order. I draw the attention of the house to article 479 of Beauchesne—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat. I ask the leader of the opposition again to confine his remarks to that which is relevant to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Drew: What I am pointing out at the moment is that the Prime Minister gave an explanation on that occasion—

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): I wish to draw to the attention of the house article 479 of Beauchesne, which reads:

> The debate on the previous question is subject to closure.

[Mr. Drew.]

I point out to the leader of the opposition that two other debates have been finished already. I submit that those debates have been closed and should not be brought into this debate.

Mr. Drew: I can assure the hon. member that this debate has not been closed. I was pointing out the explanation which was given for not permitting the tabling of the document, which again indicates the way that authority is used. The explanation was given that the letter could not be tabled because there would be a breach of confidence. I hope that certain members have read that communication, because if they have they will know there was not an atom of support for the statement then made by the Prime Minister of Canada. I can assure hon. members that, while now departing from that point in this debate, there will be occasions when I will have a good deal to say about the treatment by the government of the Hong Kong veterans after their return.

From the very day the house opened the Prime Minister has seen fit to deal with issues in this house on a political basis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: Use your dictionary.

Mr. Baker: According to the dictionary, politics is the science of government.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Little boys should not go on men's errands.

Mr. Drew: The Prime Minister and others express great concern about the use of the terms "bureaucrat" and "bureaucracy". I should like to read a couple of statements on that subject. The first one is:

> Without the existence of an almost all-powerful bureaucracy, it is unlikely that we would have had budget by radio, restraint of trade by embargoes and prohibitions, bungling of freight rates, and a snarling of interprovincial relations.

If some hon. members had thought those were my words I doubtless would have had some suggestion that they were improper, but the fact is those words were uttered at the Liberal convention in Ottawa in a speech immediately before that of the present Prime Minister. Those were the words of the present member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). Let me read some more of his words which have a direct bearing on the fitness of this government to ask for a continuance of these arbitrary powers. I read:

> From the ideology of the C.C.F. we have lifted the worship of bureaucratic controls, leaving parliament—and the reference is to the present, not to wartime—little more than the role of a debating society, controlled from outside, not by the people who elect its members but by minor czars and petty dictators.

Those are also the words of the hon. member for Quebec South, uttered just before the speech of the present Prime Minister when he did not feel anything like the same indignation in regard to the subject of bureaucrats that he has since that time, or if he felt it he did not indicate it at that moment. Those are the words of a man who still believes in Liberal principles. This government has abandoned Liberal principles. The only thing liberal about this government is the liberal dose of socialism that it is trying to give the people of Canada, and that is exactly what the continuation of these wartime powers now constitutes. If dictatorship comes to Canada it will not be through those who describe themselves as socialists; it will be through those who describe themselves as Liberals, and in spite of that name defy every principle for which the word "liberal" stands.

If this motion is carried, the orders covered by this bill will be presented to the house. But I wish some of the hon. members on the other side would vote on this motion in accordance with statements they have made of the kind I have just read, because there are others who have said what the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) said. There are other members on the opposite side of this house who have indicated their concern about bureaucracy, and the centralization of power, and the abandonment of the ordinary principles of our parliamentary system. If they vote on this resolution in accordance with what they have said outside, this resolution will be defeated; and I should hope that then the government would follow the proper course and introduce statutes in the proper way, giving parliament an opportunity to discuss the rights of the people whom we have been elected to serve.

There is another reason why the members of this house should examine what happens when arbitrary powers of this kind are given. Remember, some of these arbitrary powers permit this government to exercise extraordinary authority over many fields of production. Under these powers they have the right to say whether certain businesses can or cannot do certain things, whether certain methods of production can or cannot be carried out. Then you have to consider the mentality of the government upon which we are asked to confer this very wide continuing power at a time when they themselves have announced that we are approaching an election. We have the statement of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Winters) about the beneficences they conferred upon a certain riding.

Mr. Winters: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is a good demonstration of opposition by misrepresentation and distortion.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, this is a good indication of the way they dodge the truth. The fact is that the minister of reconstruction handed to the press a typewritten statement which said they had conferred more beneficences upon the riding of Digby-Annapolis-Kings than any other riding in Canada; and you know what happened there.

Mr. Winters: A complete distortion.

Mr. Drew: The minister himself handed that statement to the press. Then you had the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in a letter to the apple growers of the Annapolis valley, expressing regret that his generosity to the apple growers, from the funds of the Canadian people, had not been duly appreciated at the election which had just taken place. Then we had another interesting example just a few days ago, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin)—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the leader of the opposition that the remarks he is making now have nothing whatever to do with the subject under discussion.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking to indicate what the government itself has shown it will do with arbitrary powers, and I ask your permission to proceed to demonstrate how this was indicated in the case of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize that it is not for the Speaker to give special permission to anyone. The only thing the Speaker has to do is see that every hon. member abides by the rules, so I would ask the hon. gentleman to keep his remarks relevant to the motion now before the house.

Mr. Drew: I submit that what I have said was relevant, and I was about to say that when announcing a grant in Trenton the Minister of National Health and Welfare made the very significant suggestion that "we will show our tangible appreciation of this grant." It is in this atmosphere of "tangible appreciation", "beneficences" and "recognition of things done by the Minister of Finance" that we are asked to give these wide and arbitrary powers to this government to go further with their beneficence, their generosity and their tangible indications of support. I repeat that if hon. members here will vote as they have indicated they believe, in statements they have made, this motion will not carry. I hope it does not, because then we will return to the parliamentary system and will deal with the separate acts of parliament related to each of these particular subjects. If that were done of course we would not be called upon to discuss these orders in detail. If we do have to discuss them there will be a great deal to discuss in detail, as to the contents of these arbitrary orders.

I come back to the question before the house, as indicated by the judgment from which I read earlier in my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: This is something, of course, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) would not understand; but I hope he will listen just the same.

Mr. Howe: I wouldn't miss a word of it. It is the funniest thing I have heard for a long time.

Mr. Drew: You know, when you hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce you just remember how much his word is worth when you look up here and see the lights on in this building. He knows just as much about this subject as he does about hydro electricity. I was referring to that aspect of the discussion which was so clearly underlined by the quotations from the judgment of the appeal court of Manitoba last Thursday night. I repeat one sentence only:

> It should be remembered that what is involved is an invasion of provincial rights.

What is involved here is whether or not we still have a constitution; whether by simply putting a resolution before us the government is going to get rubber-stamp approval from this House of Commons and the parliament of Canada to carry forward its arbitrary war-time controls. Remember, the government did not put forward a single reason why this house should vote for this resolution. Remember, it has indicated no real reason why we should say there is an emergency of this kind. The fact is that it is not an emergency arising out of the war, if emergency there is. The emergency in regard to rental housing is entirely an emergency created by this government. If they want to deal with that, let them do so by a proper bill that will recognize the rights of those who occupy homes and of those who own them, and will permit proper housing plans under the various controls they already have and are seeking to perpetuate.

Mr. Speaker, if one were to go back and see the explanations that were given in 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948 by this government, it becomes clear there was the thought that we were approaching the end of these arbitrary powers. I urge hon. members on both sides of the house, particularly those members on the other side of the house who have themselves criticized bureaucracy and the petty czars and dictators, that they vote against this resolution. By doing so they will insist upon proper acts being brought forward and they will also insist upon the return of true democratic parliamentary procedure in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Garson: If I speak, I close the debate.

An hon. Member: No, the motion before the house is the previous question.

Mr. Garson: During the last exchange in connection with this same device used by the members of the Conservative party, it was established that the moving of the previous question—

Mr. Ross (Souris): Is the minister closing the debate?

Mr. Garson: No, I am speaking to this point of order. It was established on that occasion that the motion that the previous question be put still entitled the member who moved the original motion to close the debate. Inasmuch as he can do that only by speaking before the end of the debate on the motion that the question be now put, he reserves that right. The matter was so disposed of by the Speaker during this session.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the house that on the motion for the previous question there is no opportunity of speaking twice, as it is not a substantive motion. There is no reply. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a few remarks on this measure. In discussing the measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the government by order in council for a limited period during a national emergency arising out of the war—I presume that is what this measure is—I should like to remind the members of this house that on September 28, 1943, by P.C. 7942 this government provided that the Canadian wheat board was to become a compulsory agency for monopoly where it had formerly been a voluntary agency. It was to become an agent of the crown instead of the voluntary agent of the producers that it had been in past years.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, that was not done under the emergency legislation; it was done by an act of parliament.

Mr. Ross (Souris): In 1943?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Well, that is not the version of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) when he was premier of Manitoba. I still think I am right and the Minister of Trade and Commerce is wrong. I have quoted the number of the order in council, and if the minister wishes to dispute that, I stand corrected. In the meantime, he must make a different statement. I maintain my statement is correct and it was supported by the Minister of Justice when he was the premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is quite wrong in saying he was supported by anything I have ever said.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I can refer to the copy of the speech made by the present Minister of Justice in which he pointed out exactly the same thing I have said, quoting the same order in council number. At that time, he was the premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, speaking to this point of order, my hon. friend is aware, from his experience as a member of this house, that orders in council are passed pursuant to the authority given in certain statutes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have not been here very long or you would not make that statement.

Mr. Garson: The statement I was making had reference to orders of the type that are under discussion now. As the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) knows, prerogative orders in council can be passed without supporting statutes, but others must have a statute for a foundation. I think my hon. friend will discover, if he refers to the matter, that the statute under which the order in council in question was passed, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated, is one which was passed apart from this Transitional Measures Act.

Mr. Ross (Souris): This is what the Minister of Justice said on that occasion:

> The Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1935 set up the wheat board as the voluntary agency of the wheat producers, charged wtih the fiduciary responsibility to secure for farmers who shipped wheat to it the best price available consistent with the promotion of the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets; and until the change made by order in council in 1943 all the business of the board was conducted on this basis.

I am quoting the words of the present Minister of Justice.

> During the war, on September 28, 1943, by order in council P.C. 7942 your government provided that the wheat board was to become a compulsory agency or monopoly where it had formerly been a voluntary agency; and that it was to become the agent of the crown, instead of continuing as it had been the agent of the wheat producers.

Mr. Garson: Would the hon. member permit a question? From what is he reading?

Mr. Ross (Souris): I am reading from a quotation—

Mr. Garson: Is this a speech of mine?

Mr. Ross (Souris): Yes.

Mr. Garson: In Hansard?

Mr. Ross (Souris): It is one I put on Hansard from your letter of March, 1948.

Mr. Garson: I suggest that, if my hon. friend wishes to establish something against me, he do so by some other means than reading from one of his own speeches.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I am reading from a pamphlet, published by the present Minister of Justice, of a broadcast he made when premier of Manitoba, which contains certain letters he had written to the present Minister of Trade and Commerce. The quotation is from that letter used in that broadcast speech which he had printed, and a copy of which he was good enough to mail to me as a member from Manitoba. At that time the present Minister of Justice was in disagreement with the Minister of Trade and Commerce—apparently they are still in disagreement when the occasion suits them. Copies of this speech were well distributed over Manitoba at that time, and the quotation is taken from that speech. The minister continued by chastising the government, and made a speech similar to those I have been making for many years on behalf of the farmers of this country. A year ago he took issue with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it is strange there should be a complete reversal of his position; for we now find him in the role of Minister of Justice, piloting a measure such as this.

Mr. Fulton: He has changed both his mind and his job.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Yes. In 1946, under the War Measures Act, one year after the termination of the actual fighting, the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement was negotiated and signed, without consultation with parliament and during the time parliament was actually in session. After the agreement was signed it was announced in this house on the 25th July by the then Minister of Trade and Commerce. Parliament was never consulted about saddling the entire cost of that contribution on the wheat producers of this country rather than on all the taxpayers of Canada.

I want to mention this because on February 24, 1949, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) announced a further payment of twenty cents per bushel on wheat delivered between August 1, 1945, and July 1, 1950. He said that that would bring the price of wheat to $1.75 a bushel for those western farmers, and that probably nothing more would be heard of it in this House of Commons because it would remind the farmers that they were going to be receiving more for their wheat; at least in 1949 and 1950, than any other farmers in the world. I want to say that I do not know what insight the Minister of Trade and Commerce has into the future, but I do not think that he knows any more about it than I do, and that is very little. I should not say I hope that there is more truth in that statement than in some of his past statements, because some of them have not materialized.

In speaking on March 1, as reported at page 1013 of Hansard, the minister said that he thought we were going to hear less about wheat in the future. Well, on March 9 his parliamentary assistant put a set of figures on Hansard in reply to a question and said that the average price of No. 1 northern class II wheat for 1946-47 was $2.43.

Mr. Howe: On a point of order, my hon. friend is not speaking on any emergency legislation; he is speaking about the amendment to the wheat board act which he himself voted for in 1945, and he is attempting to discuss that under the guise of discussing emergency legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I again call the attention of hon. members to the fact that the motion which is before the house is:

> Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war.

May I suggest to hon. members that if they want to discuss details of the different controls they should wait until they know exactly what is in the bills. They should wait, for instance, until the bill is introduced. Actually it is the duty of the Speaker to insist upon the fact that the debate should be relevant to the motion which is before the house. The motion before the house does not mention wheat; it does not mention any cereal; it does not mention which orders or regulations will be continued. The house will know what is in the bill when it is introduced.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, let me take you back to a few moments before recess when we were subjected to the very absurd tactics of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I raised a point of order which was perfectly valid, so valid that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) in due course agreed with it, and I refuse to have that referred to as absurd tactics.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the official opposition asked for certain information. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) rose in his place and said he would answer for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson). He told us what would come under this measure. Among other things he mentioned flour and bread. What do you get flour from and what do you get bread from, if not from wheat?

Mr. Speaker: I hope that the Speaker will not be obliged to intervene too often, as I have been obliged to do since seven-thirty. Hon. members know very well that a debate should be relevant to the motion which is before the house. If the hon. member looks at the motion, I do not think that he will say that it is relevant to speak about wheat. When the house knows exactly what is in the bill it may be relevant to speak about it then, but I do not think the question should be discussed just now. I believe it will expedite the business of the house if all hon. members keep their discussion relevant to the motion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a point of order. What you have just said, Mr. Speaker, exactly supports what the leader of the opposition said a while ago. Without a preliminary statement from the minister, hon. members do not know what the resolution purports to cover.

An hon. Member: Including yourself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should have placed the matter before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may discuss a point of order, but I do not think it is in order to use a point of order to make a statement against anybody. Hon. members know perfectly well that this is the way a resolution is introduced in the house. I will ask them to keep the debate relevant to the motion which is before the house.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the word "absurd" was not parliamentary, I say now that most of the things I have ever heard him say are absurd. If I have to be disciplined for that, I shall be glad to see that action taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I was saying that in answer to the question of the leader of the official opposition the Minister of Finance said, as appears in Hansard of February 7 at page 316, that these extensions will be for rent control; apart from that flour, bread, butter, citrus fruits, fruit juices, certain vegetables—

Mr. Abbott: Not wheat.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I did not understand that we did not get most of our bread and flour from wheat products. Is that not true now in Canada?

Mr. Fraser: That is where the dough comes from.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That may not be the case now. All my life I have understood that we got most of our flour in Canada from wheat produced on the western plains.

Mr. Abbott: And barley.

Mr. Ross (Souris): So I believe. You are sure about that over there, but we on this side of the house may not have the same knowledge.

Mr. Abbott: I am not so sure about that.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I should like to know whether the wheat agreement was passed by order in council or by this parliament, because that is what we were discussing. Am I not in order to discuss it?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wants to get some information from a minister the right place to get it is in committee.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I am discussing a resolution on the basis of the information given to us by the Minister of Finance at that time and later by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on that same day. The question to which I was referring was the average price of No. 1 northern class II wheat for the 1946-47 crop, which averaged $2.43 per bushel; for the 1947-48 crop it averaged $2.88 a bushel; and for the first seven months of the 1948-49 crop year it averaged $2.36½ a bushel. These are the government figures. I am using them because hon. members over on that side have disputed other figures which I have used in the conclusion I have come to on this matter in the past year.

I want to say that the loss on the United Kingdom-Canada contract to date is $392 million, based on these figures. I had predicted back in 1946 that if we received the prevailing prices for wheat we would be able to give these 140 million bushels of wheat, about which the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke the other day, to Britain for nothing in the fourth year of the contract, and be money in hand. As the situation stands today, we could do that and be $112 million better off in the fourth year of the contract. Added to all this, you have the contribution made by these wheat producers of $70 million for the 1946 crop, $100 million for the 1947 crop, and $20 million to date for this year for domestic consumption in Canada, making a total of $190 million.

Mr. Knowles: Again I rise to a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Wheat is not in this resolution.

Mr. Knowles: That is exactly the point I wish to make.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Tell me how the contract is made.

Mr. Knowles: Reference has been made to the statement of the Minister of Finance that the price of flour, coming as it does under the wartime prices and trade board is covered in this resolution; but that does not mean that everything respecting wheat and the wheat agreement with the United Kingdom is included as well.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Where is the point of order?

Mr. Knowles: The point of order is that the hon. member for Souris is discussing the wheat agreement which does not come under this legislation at all, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. Ross (Souris): How do you know it?

Mr. Knowles: I submit that the hon. member should keep to the subject before the house.

Mr. Howe: Speaking to the point of order, I would refer you, sir, to Bill No. 23 passed by this parliament, the preamble of which reads as follows:

Whereas the government of Canada has entered into an arrangement with the government of the United Kingdom for the sale and delivery of substantial quantities of wheat to the government of the United Kingdom annually for a period of four years commencing on the first day of August one thousand nine hundred and forty-six and it is necessary to make provision for the carrying out of the arrangement;

And whereas it is expedient to amend The Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, for such purpose and to make provision for other matters affecting the operations of the Canadian wheat board thereunder; and whereas to ensure an orderly transition it is expedient to continue in force until the end of the present crop year, regulations made under The National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, providing for the foregoing: Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Mr. Ross (Souris): What date was that?

Mr. Howe: That was 1947.

Mr. Ross (Souris): 1947? That is some time after the date I have been referring to. I admit all that.

Mr. Garson: I think we should clear this up.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Garson: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members will admit that the Minister of Justice has the right to speak to a point of order, just like anyone else.

Mr. Chevrier: Howl him down, boys!

Mr. Garson: A short time ago the hon. member for Souris, during the course of his remarks, undertook to say what I had said. To prove this he read from a speech of his own in which he purported to quote from a pamphlet issued by me. I have now this pamphlet in my hand.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Is that a point of order?

Mr. Garson: And I—

Mr. Ross (Souris): Let us have the point of order. I am making the speech.

Mr. Garson: He will not find it pleasant reading; but if he will contain himself for a moment, I shall read it.

Mr. Howe: Can't take it, eh?

Mr. Garson: I wish to read from—

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is being said is not relevant to the motion before the house.

An hon. Member: The minister is making a speech.

Mr. Garson: This is the pamphlet which the hon. member purported to quote, and a portion of which he judiciously skipped. It reads:

During the war, on September 28, 1943, by order in council P.C. 7942—

Mr. Ross (Souris): Is this a point of order, or what is it? The minister is making a speech, but I have the floor.

Mr. Howe: Just showing you up, that is all.

Mr. Garson: I am rising to a point of order, and also on a question of privilege, to correct a statement which was improperly attributed to me by the hon. member for Souris. Now, this is the statement which the hon. member purported to quote in his speech.

Mr. Ross (Souris): He can make his own speech.

Mr. Garson: It states:

During the war, on September 28, 1943, by order in council P.C. 7942 your government provided that the wheat board was to become a compulsory agency or monopoly where it had formerly been a voluntary agency; and that it was to become the agent of the crown, instead of continuing as it had been the agent of the wheat producers.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

Now, that is the part my hon. friend quoted. The next is the part that he judiciously skipped:

Later in 1947, the provisions of this order in council were incorporated into the provisions of the Wheat Board Act where they now appear as section 4 subsection (2) reading as follows:

"4. (2) The board is for all purposes an agent of His Majesty in the right of Canada and its powers under this act may be exercised by it only as an agency of His Majesty in the said right."

This provision is now part of the wheat board act, and is not relevant to this present discussion at all.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with orders in council; and may I add further that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) said the subsidy is being paid for flour that is being used for domestic purposes in this country. That is in the same debate.

Mr. Howe: He has only one subject he can speak on; go ahead.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I have another one. But the point I wish to make is this, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe)—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ross (Souris): —was pointing out to the farmers in Canada where they lost, in marketing, in 1943, 1944 and 1945 an additional $409 million, making $991 million altogether.

Mr. Speaker: I must call the attention of the hon. member—

Mr. Reid: Putting it over very nicely.

Mr. Speaker: I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that they do not seem to be very interested in observing the authority of Mr. Speaker in the house. I could not fail to see that the hon. member who has just resumed his seat was anxious to say more, even after I had risen to keep order—and the good laugh he had with some of his friends.

I would call the attention of the hon. member to the following standing order. Standing order 40(2) states:

Mr. Speaker, or the chairman, after having called the attention of the house or of the committee to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, may direct him to discontinue his speech.

So I would insist that, if the hon. member does not wish to co-operate with the chair, the Speaker will have to apply the rule and ask him to resume his seat. The Speaker can stand much; but, after all, he is human, and he cannot stand everything. And if I cannot have order in this house I will apply the rule. If I have to be severe, I will be severe; but I will try to keep order and decorum in the house.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling. I pointedly asked you whether I was in order or not in connection with the wheat contract with Great Britain.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You were out of order all the time, and are still out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have repeated about two thousand times tonight that hon. members were not in order. Apparently I was too generous. I do not wish to be harsh, but if I am obliged to be I shall be harsh. I would ask hon. members who wish to take part in the discussion of the motion before the house to speak to that motion. If they do not wish to speak relevantly I shall have to ask them to resume their seats.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), and his citation, have reminded me of young Lochinvar, and the lines I learned in school:

> Oh, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
> Through all the wide border his steed was the best;
> And save his good broadsword he weapons had none . . . .
> He stayed not for brake, and he stopped not for stone,
> He swam the Esk river where ford there was none—

Perhaps I will be in order if I refer to another matter which the Minister of Agriculture discussed in this same debate last February 18. I was surprised that, with respect to the handling of rye in this country—and I am referring to the cereal—he admitted rather boastfully the fact that he was the culprit, for the manner in which rye was handled. I believe it was in the fall of 1947 that we had what was termed a legal racket in this country for some months during the autumn. I remember being taken to task at that time because I referred to the fact that funds were being issued for people to go to the United States to buy rye and bring it into Canada, then reship it to foreign countries, where we had made loans with the taxpayers' money. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) himself said in front of the Minister of Finance, right in the house, that when they made those loans they knew they would not be repaid. Those people were making a profit of about a dollar a bushel on that rye which they brought in from the United States, thereby aggravating our dollar shortage. That was a legalized racket.

I put a question on the order paper in December of 1947, and I have all the answers here. One of the largest shipments was to Poland—about 700,000 bushels. The next was 440,000 bushels to Germany. There were fourteen countries to which rye was shipped; and the funds of the foreign exchange control board were used—the taxpayers' money. The taxpayers of this country will be assessed for that racket of this government by order in council legislation. Reference was made this afternoon to the decision of the appellate court of Manitoba delivered by Mr. Justice J. E. Adamson. I am sure that that case had to do with orders in council, and he points out how illegal these matters are in this country.

Mr. Watson Sellar, the auditor general, who is above this government, who reports only to parliament, has drawn attention to certain irregularities by order in council in connection with the expenditure of public money.

I do not think I should take further time, as Your Honour has not been very clear in telling me whether I am in order in discussing the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. I certainly shall be able to do that on the estimates and prove to the Minister of Trade and Commerce how much that is going to cost the wheat producers of this country. In those three years of 1946, 1947 and 1948 crops it will cost them $721 million, the difference between the figures his parliamentary assistant put on the record and the price of $1.75 per bushel, basis Fort William.

Mr. John R. MacNicol (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to know whether I am in order in saying something about the housing situation in Davenport riding. I do not want to go on if I am not, because there is no use being interrupted as the previous speaker has been.

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the hon. member what I have said to other hon. members. I believe it would be much better for him and for everyone if he would wait until the bill is before us so that he will know exactly what controls or orders in council the government wants to continue.

Mr. MacNicol: What I have to say has to do with housing controls. I am one of those hon. members who make exhaustive inquiry into matters I am going to speak about.

I want to digress for a moment and refer to what was said this afternoon by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) about the proposed bridge across the strait of Canso. For fifteen years I fought against the proposal to construct either a causeway or a tunnel and I was pleased to hear the minister announce that the bridge for which I have been fighting for that length of time is now going to be built.

I followed the same plan in connection with housing in Davenport riding. I visited many people and found them up against an appalling housing situation. I am glad the minister of reconstruction is in his seat, although at the same time I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) is not in his seat at the moment. I expected a great deal of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with housing when he was Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. The Minister of Trade and Commerce should have been able to solve the housing problem if any one could. He was a builder and contractor and as far as I can understand he knew all about building. However, he did not do it. I am not going to say whether the present minister of reconstruction can do the job or not. In any event the problem is not being solved.

First, I want to say a word or two as to what the job is. I fear the minister is not conversant with the vast difference between the housing problem faced by a great city like Toronto and the housing problem faced by any one of a thousand smaller places. The problem is different and different methods are required to obtain relief. He may be able to do it. I hope he is.

I called upon one home where a father, mother and seven of a family, a total of nine people, were living in one room, near where I live. Language cannot describe the conditions that exist in a household like that. Language cannot describe what a father and mother are up against under such conditions. I am not going to blame the minister, I am not going to say who is responsible, but that is the situation. That is only one case in many that I know of and perhaps there are thousands throughout Canada.

I called on another family and found eleven living in three small rooms of a humble workingman's home. The first room was entered off the verandah; the second room immediately behind was a living room, dining room and kitchen, and then there was one bedroom. Ordinary language cannot describe just what parents go through under those conditions. Nine boys and girls had to sleep on the floor or wherever they could find room. I am not going to blame anybody for that, but that is the situation. There are hundreds of cases just like that.

I went to visit many families, and I found one home in which there were nine people in two rooms. These are not spectacular cases; they are quite common. The city has become overwhelmingly congested with people coming in from everywhere and trying to get shelter of any kind. That is the problem. What is the minister going to do about it? I shall make a suggestion in a few minutes as to what might be done. These are just some cases in the multitude of those that exist.

Here is an example not far from where I live. A man and wife had lived in a house for 27 years. They have a crippled son who is not able to walk or stand up, and a daughter. There were four rooms in the house. The house was sold over their heads and they could not begin to make a down payment on another house because he was a humble moulder in a company with which I am well acquainted. He never made salary enough to permit him to save money to make a down payment.

The purchaser having purchased the house quite legally waited the legal length of time, which I have just forgotten, and then went before a judge who ordered this family, who had lived in the house all those years, to share the space with the buyer. What does that mean? I saw this myself and I know. It would break anyone's heart to see what those people have to go through. The father and mother, the daughter and the son now live in two rooms on the ground floor while the buyer lives upstairs in the two rooms there. The bathroom is upstairs and is used by both families but in order to go upstairs you must pass through the living-dining room of the family downstairs.

The lady of the house has been to see me many times. She is a humble little woman and her heart is broken because they cannot get accommodation anywhere. They simply cannot afford to pay $1,000 down on a house. These are just examples of the multitude of cases that exist. Many men have worked in plants for most of their lives but have never made enough money in order to save sufficient to pay $1,000 or $1,500 down on a house. That case is a sample of many more.

I know of another case of a young soldier who came back with a good record. He brought a bride back with him from the old country. When he came home his people were glad to see him. He brought a bride with him, however, and the bride had to sleep somewhere. When they arrived home the father and mother took in the bride and the son. There were four rooms in the house. There were the father and mother and four children besides the young soldier and his bride, making eight in all. Things went along for a short time, but human flesh and blood cannot endure those conditions and still have peace and happiness, and it was not long until a family row started with the result that the young man and his bride had to get out. They could not get in anywhere. With not less than 15,000 people in the city wanting to move into other places, there was no place for them. The result was that in the end the young woman, and likely a very fine young woman, became heartbroken, and she left Canada and went back to England. That has an effect on family life.

The Rev. Dr. Mutchmor, who I believe is head of the public relations division of the United church, has stated that such cases as that are multitudinous, and that in not less than twenty-five per cent of such homes family life is being broken down.

Mr. Church: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? The 180,000 orders in council under the resolution concerning national emergency will have to be interpreted, as I see it, by a court of law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. Church: Only four of them have been before the supreme court, and only one of them has been declared partially legal. Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Golding): The hon. member for Davenport.

Mr. MacNicol: I would think that whatever the hon. member for Broadview says is correct. I have a very high opinion of what he says, and if he says it is correct then it is correct. Coming back to where I left off, may I say that I would rather help the minister than say anything to hurt his feelings. It does not get us anywhere to do that; it does not help to solve a difficult situation. The examples I have given are illustrations of the situation in a multitude of other cases. What can we do? The hon. member for Broadview interrupted me. Let me refer to what he did when he was mayor of Toronto, and may I say that Toronto never had a better mayor. He was seven times mayor of Toronto, and he was successful because of what he did for the people. He was mayor from 1915 to 1921, and he had all these conditions to contend with. In Toronto they took over land in the city and around the city and installed water, light and gas facilities. They overcame a lot of trouble in that way. There are no more lots, however, in Toronto. I do not know of a lot you can buy at a reasonable price in Toronto today. In the days of Mayor T. L. Church you could buy a fine lot for from $6 to $8 a foot in the part of the city where I live now. That section was opened up by the putting in of sewers, water mains, gas mains, electric light wires and transportation. To a very large extent because of the cheap lots and the services that were provided, the housing problem then was not one-two-three with what it is today.

How can the minister overcome the difficulty? You cannot buy any lots in Toronto. The city bought a block of lots last year and put up a building where the rents are so high that no workingman could rent a place. A workingman should never be asked to pay over $30 or $35, and at the maximum $40 a month for rent. He cannot make enough to do so. What can the minister do? He could follow the plan that was followed in the days of Mayor T. L. Church. The land around the city of Toronto is built up, but I believe you could go out still further. I understand from the department that last year, through their boards and other assistance, and through the builders, 80,000 homes were built in Canada.

Mr. Winters: Eighty-one thousand.

Mr. MacNicol: The minimum required today is not less than 250,000, and nearer 500,000 homes. I made a survey in my own riding, which is a workingman's riding. They are wonderful people, carpenters, painters, machinists, moulders, artisans of every description, well-read people. Maybe that is why they always give me such a large majority, and I expect they will do so again. I made a survey of many homes, and what I found—and the minister will find the same thing—is that at the present time the number of people occupying a polling subdivision is approximately 25 per cent more than occupied the same polling subdivision before this crisis arose. That means that, if a subdivision had 500 people living in it, another 125 are crowded in there, or 25 per cent more. That is a staggering difficulty to overcome. These people will all want homes; they will all want to move out and have a home by themselves. All these people living three, four, five and six to a room will want to move out. They should have homes, because the home is the basis of the nation.

I want to suggest to the minister that in the vicinity of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton —not so much Hamilton—Windsor, where they are fairly congested, Winnipeg and Vancouver, a survey be made to ascertain if it is possible for the department to secure control over large blocks of land in various areas outside the cities. What I have in mind are 200 and 300 acre lots not too far out from the city, but even if they are some distance away that probably can be overcome. I think the minister should then ascertain what it will cost to run water out to those areas, and put in sewers, electricity, gas, schools and so on. I am satisfied that, if that can be done, the average workingman would probably be able to buy a lot for $10 per foot. At the time when the member for Broadview (Mr. Church) was mayor of Toronto the workingman was able to buy a lot for $6 a foot in the vicinity of St. Clair avenue in Toronto. Then these people would have the same opportunity that the people living in my section of the city had when I first went up there. Land was cheap then, and it was the time when many immigrants were coming from the old country. Thousands and thousands of them were brought in by the former Laurier administration, and they did great things for this country. They bought the lands cheaply and were able to get materials such as lumber, and so on. I have seen them times without number carrying scantling and other pieces of lumber and building material on their shoulders up Dufferin street hill near where I live. I have seen them with parts of plumbing fixtures and other things, and in due course they built homes to live in. It was called shack town, but it was a great credit to the men who came from the old country. They bought the land and built their homes, and today they are all living in nice homes and surroundings. Perhaps we can do the same thing. In any event the situation is nothing short of appalling, and from his close contact with it I am sure the minister must agree with me.

Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario): If the hon. member would permit a question, I should like to ask whether he has given any consideration to the possibility of anything useful being done in the way of prefabricated houses.

Mr. MacNicol: I have. Perhaps I had better continue with what I was saying and come back to that, because prefabrication has been a great study of mine. I would ask the minister to discuss with his officials the possibility of doing something along the line I have suggested. Then I am sure he is aware of what has been done at Three Rivers. I have forgotten the name of the parish priest or the reverend gentleman who organized the opening up of a large area near that city, with homes for workingmen. If they can do it near Three Rivers we should be able to do it near Toronto.

I would particularly suggest that the minister inquire into the matter of services. In Toronto we have no suburban railways. Montreal has, I am glad to say. I am happy that the people of Montreal have insisted on having suburban railways. We have none, so we have no way of running trains out a mile or two or three or four or five. There could be; the northern track would do very well for a suburban railway into York county, where various areas could be built up, each with thousands of houses. I suggest that to the minister in all earnestness. The problem must be solved. It is nothing short of murderous as it is today. My constituency has seventy thousand people in an area four and a half miles long and less than three-quarters of a mile wide, so hon. members will realize how congested it must be. I am thoroughly conversant with conditions there, and I repeat that too frequently they are nothing short of shocking.

My hon. friend asked about prefabricated houses. I do not know why the former Minister of Reconstruction and Supply did not do something in regard to prefabrication, because he was well posted on that subject; he has heard me talking on it before. I saw prefabricated houses on the docks at Quebec, and they were fine little houses too; but we shipped them to France. The minister will correct me if I am wrong, but I believe the price was about $1,500 per house.

Mr. Howe: Yes, about that.

Mr. MacNicol: Well, why can we not have them in Canada? The timber is all here, the stone is all here, the cement is all here. If we can supply houses for France at $1,500 each, why can we not supply prefabricated houses for the working people of Toronto at $1,500 each? I know all about workingmen. I have been with them all my lifetime, served with them all the way from the bottom to the top. I do not have to take off my hat to anyone when talking about labour, I care not where they come from or where they have been, because with hands and head I have worked with labour. They cannot pay the prices they are being asked today. I do not believe any workingman living can pay seven, eight or nine thousand dollars for a home. So why cannot the government, realizing the situation, come forward with some solution? I do not know how they would go about it, but perhaps it would be by means of a big bonus. I would go for that, or for anything to save the health and lives of our people. I know that for want of homes people of my community are breaking down into old men and women long before their time.

Coming back to the question of prefabrication, I have referred to one type of prefabricated house. The former minister will also remember the big plant just east of Montreal, the name of which I have forgotten.

Mr. Howe: Fairchild.

Mr. MacNicol: Yes. I went there and discussed the matter with the manager, who showed me several prefabricated aluminum houses, which I think were being sold for around $2,000 to $2,500.

Mr. Howe: No; about $3,300.

Mr. MacNicol: Even that is far short of seven, eight or nine thousand dollars. We have a young minister now, and I would like to see him make a success of it. He has a very good record, and I would rather help him than do anything else. I suggest that he inquire into the matter of prefabricated houses. You may be able to interest some builder of prefabricated houses. I believe a very good prefabricated house is made in London; but I would not go for the fancy prices they are asking today. Offer an order for five thousand prefabricated houses; perhaps you will get them at the right price. You have to plan not for five thousand but for five hundred thousand homes. The problem is here. It is not going to run away; it is going to get worse every day. Does that answer my hon. friend's question?

Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes, thank you.

Mr. MacNicol: Now I want to say a word about our own mayor of Toronto, who has done a very good job and wants to help all he can. I am sure if the minister made contact with him he would find that Mayor Hiram McCallum would be happy to help in any way possible. He is in despair today because he is right up against it. I used to go home every week end, but now I can only stand to go home every three weeks. When I get home there is too much pressure of all sorts, especially in connection with housing. I am too soft-hearted; I cannot stand the tears of the women when they ask me to help them out. What does Mayor McCallum say? I quote from the Toronto Telegram?

> Unless the federal government primarily, and the provincial government secondarily, provide special and specific co-operation for the Toronto area, Mayor Hiram McCallum despairs of solving the housing problem.

He despairs because he does not know what to do about it. Then again:

> The fundamental weakness of the government's program, the mayor told the Telegram today, lies in their attempt to apply the same formula to huge urban areas such as Toronto, as in smaller communities.

Why could not the minister come out boldly with some great plan? The public would support him. That is what they want; someone with vision who will come out and say "This is what I am going to do." There would be no trouble getting the money. It might cost $100,000,000, but that much spent in saving the health and lives of the people of Canada would be well spent. I for one would do all I could to help the minister. All around Toronto they are clamouring for houses. We read the other day that the Lake Shore road is clamouring for 2,000 houses. East Toronto is clamouring for 1,500 houses. York township is clamouring for 2,000 houses.

A short time ago I attended a meeting of the Earlscourt legion, one of the largest in Toronto. About five hundred people were there on two floors, both packed. They had been called to discuss the question of housing, and they had invited Major Harvey Lynes, Colonel Finney and Frank Dearlove. Every now and then this government grants decorations. If I were in the minister's position I would give decorations to all these men. They deserve them for what they have done to alleviate the appalling suffering of many people in that city. I do not know where any government could get a man with the same sympathy and courtesy and who would make such a genuine effort to try to solve problems as Frank Dearlove has displayed during the last few years. How he lives I do not know, because what he goes through is appalling.

A short time ago there came to my notice the case of a young Scotsman who had been in Canada two years with his wife and two children. There were six people in the house and this young man occupied the upstairs. Some person bought the house. I do not know what the regulations are in this connection, and I am not going to find fault with controls, the lack of controls, or advocate more or less controls. The problem is too gigantic to be handled in that manner. Every case has to be considered on its own merits. We may have too much control, but I would fear what might happen if we wiped out all control on housing.

As I said, the house was sold over this young man's head. The tenant downstairs was put out. I used my best judgment and kept the man upstairs from being thrown out. I will say that Mr. Dearlove was able to hold off the sheriff until he could place the man at Long Branch, his wife in a room a few blocks from where she had been living, and the two children with some friends. Consider what that meant to that family. Think of the heartburning pain of the mother and father grieving for the children. The problem is big and it can only be solved by big and fearless methods. Let the minister come forward with something big and fearless and I am sure he will receive the support of the house.

When I commenced my speech I said that I depended on my right hon. friend solving that problem, but he did not do it. He could have done it and I wish he had done it. If he had, it would be a lot easier for the present minister. I have stated the situation and there is no necessity for repeating it. I have mentioned the breaking up of homes and the breaking down of health and family life. I have mentioned the heartburnings of the parents all over the city, not only in Davenport riding. I believe 15,000 people have to find homes in the city of Toronto by May first.

Coming back to what I said a few moments ago, I suggest to the minister that he face up to the problem in a big way, much the same as was done years ago. It has been done at Three Rivers and elsewhere. In connection with housing projects, the government should try to obtain large blocks of land near a big city. Land is unobtainable in the city and no one could pay the price asked for land in Toronto today. A working man can pay $6, $8 or $10 per foot and he can pay up to $2,500 for a home. He might even be able to go as high as $3,000. If you wanted to make it a prefabricated scheme, prefabrication ought to be considered and the plan of the government should be not to build 80,000 homes in 1949, but to build at least 150,000, because we are going to need up to 500,000 before long. I think I have done the best I can, in a pleasant way and in a helpful manner, to present the problem and suggest a remedy.

Mr. John T. Hackett (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short contribution to this debate, possibly more out of habit than for any other reason. I have spoken on this subject since the beginning of this parliament. I have rebelled against the attitude of the government, without much success, and have sought, by such slender means as are within my power, to bring it to a better sentiment.

I was mildly interested a short time ago in turning to the debates of the early autumn of 1945 when this parliament was newly elected and when these post-war emergencies were first thought of as a counter-agent to political crises. I found that I had expressed myself with what seems to have been considered as undue vigour because the right hon. Minister of Agriculture said in reply that he thought a good deal of heat had been generated in considering a measure that was to last but a few months. He made some casual and passing remarks about the spirit of Liberalism which animated his party and which precluded it from pursuing at any length a course of action which would impose controls upon the country.

The right hon. minister said: This bill definitely says what we are doing. It is just what the preamble outlines, namely, asking the house to permit the government to continue in existence the orders in council which were passed during the war and which it is necessary to have continued for a few months after the war. The phrase "a few months" was reiterated a number of times during the minister's remarks, as he went on to recount the achievements of the government. It was pointed out how much more successful the war which had recently come to an end had been waged than the first war and how much more complete had been the discipline in national affairs as a result of the imposition of controls. Some figures were mentioned as to prices. Since then, of course, prices have soared to such heights that the prices which followed the first war seem almost valleys in the presence of the mountains of the second war.

Be that as it may, here we are four years after the war and we are asked once more to bow our necks to the yoke of controls. I for one cannot do it gladly. I think a reading of history shows us that the general record of mankind has been one of great poverty and that by far the most fruitful method ever developed to make the world richer has been that of leaving men free, within the limits of the civil and criminal law, to engage their energies on their own account and for their own reward. This discovery was made against the instinct of kings and other rulers who, like the rulers of today, found it very difficult, found it very much against the grain, to leave any part of trade or manufacturing free from their interference.

Something was said earlier in the day about the case which was recently decided by the appeal court in Manitoba. I think it should be of some interest to the house, and I think it may serve as a warning to future generations, if we examine briefly this great record, because it shows the development of a state of mind which throws into relief how contagious and how inflammatory is the inclination to dominate and control once it has become the practice of a government or of a party.

Your Honour will recall that legislation was passed which made it incumbent upon the growers of certain grains to sell them to the government. There was a man by the name of Nolan, a rather good name—who unfortunately lived in Chicago—I say unfortunately because I wish that he who had the spirit and the courage to stand up against the government for the first time, and hale it before the courts of the land, had been a Canadian. This is rather a sad sidelight. It shows how soon people become accustomed to this kind of thing, how soon their fibre, if not broken, is weakened, and how independent people soon become accustomed to being jerked around on a cord. In any event, this gentleman by the name of Nolan was a grain merchant; he held some 40,000 bushels of barley at Fort William, which he wished eventually to ship to the United States. On March 17, 1947—and that is another good day—the wheat board demanded that all commercial holders of barley should sell their coarse grains to it, at a fixed price, and barley at sixty-four and three-quarter cents a bushel, and at the same time established prices for the sale of that same commodity anywhere from ninety cents to ninety-three cents per bushel, the spread going into the coffers of this government agency.

Mr. Gardiner: No, it did not.

Mr. Hackett: Of all the holders of barley Nolan was the only one who refused to comply.

Mr. Gardiner: The spread went back to the farmers.

Mr. Hackett: The spread went back to the farmers after the government, and the agency which represented it, had chipped off its share of expenses and the incidentals which go with it, and at a time when the government determined it was good to send it back, and it generally is not good to send it back until the eve of an election.

Mr. Gardiner: And the barley went down to feed the livestock in your district.

Mr. Hackett: The livestock in my district has been so scantily fed that that portion of it which was not starved to death, because the farmers could not buy feed for the price the government allowed them for their butter, had to be sold across the international border. This has left the farmers of my district in a very sad plight, which I think they will remember for some time.

Mr. Gardiner: Nevertheless that is what fed them.

Mr. Hackett: But to continue with Mr. Nolan and what happened on March 17; to make it brief, he contended that there was no emergency and that in consequence the legislation which had been enacted was without binding effect, and that therefore his barley was his to deal with, to trade in and to deliver to whom he saw fit, as up until a few years ago every Canadian thought was his inherent right. He went before the courts; and after making the investigation which was placed on the record this afternoon, the courts came to the conclusion that Nolan was right, that there was not any emergency, that Nolan owned his barley to do with it as he pleased.

At the moment I am not speaking of the finding of the court. The point that I wish to bring before the house is the argument which was advanced by the government; it shows a frame of mind, it shows a domineering attitude that is, in my submission, totally unbecoming to the administrators of a free country.

To defend the Nolan case the government retained the counsel for the wheat board. He represented the federal government, in the case and, as the record shows, he put forward this argument. At the outset he said that the court, in considering the validity of the transitional act, might hear evidence on the question whether there was or was not a national emergency which would justify the passing of the act; and second, that the court might also hear evidence on the question whether, if there had been such an emergency, it had ceased to exist, or whether it was still in existence; and thirdly, he agreed also that the court, notwithstanding the declaration in the preamble to the act, might hold that there was an emergency, or decide that there was no emergency, or that it had ceased to exist if the evidence warranted such a finding. This seemed fair enough, but it was what followed that was most astounding. When he came to the order in council, 1292, he advanced this startling argument. He said:

> If the act is within the powers of parliament because there is a national emergency, no matter what that emergency may be, the court might not inquire if the order in council were valid.

That, if one really seizes the significance of it, is, it seems to me, the acme of arrogance. The argument, if valid, would deny the courts the exercise of that judicial power and discretion which are the very point and purpose of the existence of the courts. It would mean that once there was an emergency, for any reason whatever—an epidemic of measles, a flood or a fire—the government would be entirely free to pass orders in council, no matter what their bearing upon or relation to the particular emergency. He urged that it is "not pertinent to the judiciary to consider the wisdom or the propriety of the particular policy which is embodied in the emergency legislation."

I cite this because it appears in the brief; and it seemed to me to set forth so perfectly the frame of mind which the government has developed. It is impossible for anyone longer to reason with it or to deal with it on a man-to-man basis.

We are confronted again with the fundamental question of freedom. Again we are asked to yield up that freedom which has been ours for an indeterminate period. We are asked to permit others to manage our affairs for us, without any opportunity of restraint or control from us—the people of Canada, and their elected representatives. What we need today in Canada is not more controls, but a government with nerve enough to banish and to abolish controls. We have staggered along for several years under controls; but I for one do not yet know where those controls have succeeded anywhere.

They have broken down in foreign trade. My delightful friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has to make speeches in the house several times a week to pacify the people whom he thought he was benefiting by his controls and who are now out of money and highly disgruntled and dissatisfied with him. We have rental controls; we have building controls; and there is a shortage of housing. There is a dearth of building. We have financial controls and we are short of dollars. I would be most interested to know wherein this whole practice of controls has yielded that meed of relief and good government which I am willing to think those who indulged in these expedients hoped would be derived from them.

The malady is contagious and self-propagating. Having been put into a supreme position the government have taxed and taxed, and found some reason for seeking to manage other people's affairs, on an assumption, which seems to me an illusion, that they have qualities which enable them more successfully to administer other people's affairs than the people whose affairs they are administering.

I am going to suggest that the government reverse its policy. It has tried about everything so far—everything but letting the people manage their own affairs. I suggest that we go back for a short time to those good days when honest and competent people were permitted to look after their own business, and that this paternal government seek other pastimes, and other fields of amusement than attempting to manage the private affairs of the discontented people of Canada.

Mr. W. Garfield Case (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) upon the masterful way he presented to the house views which I am sure will claim the attention and be the concern of every hon. member.

Emergency control measures in themselves lend a sense of anxiety to those who are delegating to the administration this overall authority to control the welfare of the nation.

I believe most hon. members would agree that some measure of control may be necessary as a result of the present administration's policies, inasmuch as they have sought to control the economic life of the nation, which procedure has resulted in placing Canada in an economic strait-jacket today. As a matter of fact because of the nature of the controls, and the over-all authority delegated to the administration, it is practically impossible for business to plan, with any degree of confidence, for a long period of time. Yet those who have been responsible for the development and progress of this nation have been men who had vision and who were able to plan with some sense of confidence that their plans would not arbitrarily be interfered with.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Yet we find in this measure—the daddy of them all—which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) now seeks to introduce by way of resolution, machinery whereby the government can do almost anything a dictatorial government could do. I suggest the nature of the control measures, which have played such a dominant part in the life of this nation has affected the over-all picture, has been responsible for the labour unrest, for the high cost of living and for all the other ills which are properly charged to the present administration.

This type of control robs people of their incentive, their ambition, and their desire to do those things which would make Canada robust and strong. I can think back to those tragic days of the war when measures of control for national security and safety were necessary. At that time we were concerned with one common objective, and we were able to obtain the help and the advice of the most outstanding men in Canada. It was that measure of co-operation and that desire to make a full-out contribution to a common cause which first placed us in the position in which we find ourselves today.

We have moved a considerable distance from those days, and yet we can picture the psychological effect, not only upon the people whose lives are restricted by these controls but upon the administration itself. They have arrived at the place where they are fearful of entrusting to the citizens of Canada the right to plan and think for themselves with some degree of certainty, the right to govern themselves within the law.

These control measures have added to the cost of government and they have contributed in no way to its efficiency. They have caused the machinery of government to become cluttered up with bureaucrats, and as someone has said, I think quite properly, with those people who go around snooping into other people's business. The time has arrived when an honest man feels that he must adopt some method to avoid being called to task by these government bureaucrats.

As I have already intimated, the effect of taxation has been to increase the cost of living because it has restricted production. It has created a degree of scarcity in a land of plenty. How imbued the government have become with their present authority and their indispensability is evidenced by the statements which have been made by ministers of the crown, particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), who has intimated on more than one occasion that they felt it necessary to drain off, from the individual, purchasing power which was rightly his in order that they might seek to legislate still further and increase the cost of living, which incidentally has had its effect on the volume of production.

We find that one control leads to another. Until this government finds some means of restoring to the people of Canada that sense of freedom which in days gone by we have admired as being one of the great features of democracy, until this government finds some means of restoring the sense of justice which the people expect under a democracy, there will simply be a nullification of their ambitions and desires.

Our concern is to legislate for the people of Canada so that they may not be unnecessarily restricted but rather encouraged to go forward. Foreign capital should be encouraged to invest in Canada, risk capital as it were, so that we may develop our great natural resources. It has been proved conclusively that while capital is willing to risk itself in ventures that may not bear rich fruits, no capital is prepared to risk itself with a government that interferes with individual rights and personal freedom.

Having regard to the statement made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), and recognizing as I do that there may be necessity to continue some controls, I submit that it is unfair to members of this House of Commons to bring in a blanket bill. Each control should be presented separately so that it could be debated on its merits and dealt with individually. I sometimes wonder if we are fully conscious of the measure of authority we are placing in the hands of the government of Canada.

I would recall to hon. members that in England today bills are before the House of Commons to nationalize certain industries. It would seem that the government of Canada was seeking to circumvent parliament and delegate to itself authority so broad that, once possessed, they would enjoy the right to nationalize any industry which might suit their purpose. We have plenty of evidence that in the past these powers have been used too arbitrarily, and I fear that they might again be used in that way.

It places in the hands of the administration the type of monopolistic control which I noticed, in reviewing the contribution made by the leader of the C.C.F. socialist party, he hopes will be continued and extended. I say that if there is any one monopoly we have reason to fear, it is government monopoly. Where this type of nationalization has taken place, those who were loud in support are beginning to fear its lack of efficiency and bureaucratic control.

Workers in the old country who clamoured for the nationalization of the coal mines now realize that they are unable to find fault with the owners because the government owns the coal mines. They are unable to approach anyone nearby to seek better working conditions, because any member of the union who has accepted an official position is no longer a member. The only way they can get satisfaction is to carry their complaint to London, which means sending a deputation under considerable difficulty.

I realize that there are some types of public ownership, especially those having to do with water power and other items of what might be considered a public utility character, which might recommend themselves to hon. members, but even in that regard I think we should go slow and give the matter careful consideration. I submit that the resolution which contemplates the introduction of a bill should be viewed in the light of the representations made by hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party, particularly the leader of the opposition. I would urge the government to accept his advice and break down the resolution into a number of bills so that each matter may be dealt with on its merits. That in turn will provide citizens by law with the right of appeal so that they may enjoy the protection and consideration of the courts of the land. It seems to me that we have arrived at a point where the government is still suffering from a war complex. Controls of a nature acceptable during the war are being continued. Yet we can understand the part controls have played in the very difficult situation we find ourselves in at the present time. Therefore we find the government reluctant to release, from their over-all authority, the measure of control they have been able to exercise over the economic life of the nation, and indeed over the very lives of individual citizens.

Measures of this character, while considered to be for the common good in the first instance, establish a precedent and place the affairs of the nation in grave jeopardy. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, while we may have a great deal of confidence in one another as private citizens, delegated authority of the character which is sought through this resolution, to be followed by a bill, simply makes the administration more conscious of that exercise of authority and restraint which they have practised with abandon, and without regard to the best interests of the nation. It has in the main served selfish interests to a greater extent than it has served the great masses of the Canadian people.

I agree with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) that sooner or later the administration will have to demonstrate a degree of courage, and will have to be prepared to relieve the country of all restrictions and give competitive enterprise an opportunity to work on its own behalf, so that it may be capable of competing in highly competitive markets, not only in Canada but in other parts of the world. One of the things we have suffered from most, in my opinion, and in the opinion of many substantial economists in Canada, is the fact that, through authority of this character, the government is able to interfere with the normal level of our currency and exchange. That has indeed robbed our producers, industrialists and businessmen of the opportunity to seek new markets in distant parts of the world, inasmuch as, while the United States dollar was accepted as the standard of value, we had enjoyed a distinct advantage on a competitive basis in all markets of the world, and the productive capacity of the nation had become very great indeed.

We are rich in natural resources, so much so that it is a challenge to the young men and women of this great nation, and a challenge to those who are now seeking to make their homes and earn their livelihood in Canada. This great country offers them an opportunity, but if we rob them of their incentive, if we rob them of their vision, if we rob them of their ambition to toil, in other words, if through centralized authority we encourage them to become leaners rather than leaders, the nation will suffer and we will be the losers in the long run. In the main, man is prepared to accept the challenge of existence as he seeks to improve his own position in the ordinary course of his everyday activities. But if you set up laws delegating to some central authority the right to control your very existence, then it is difficult to plan or to provide the funds and capital that it costs to establish yourself in any particular line of business.

I do not intend to detain the house longer than to urge again that the government break these bills down instead of bringing in what has been referred to as an omnibus bill, a broad over-all authority, all-inclusive of certain control measures which in our own good judgment may have some merit, but also including others which have little or no appeal, and others which should not be there at all. It is unfair to the members of the House of Commons to suggest that, because we are opposed to this bill, we are opposed to rent control. I think we all realize that a very chaotic condition would result if rent control were removed immediately. Yet it is the control of rents and the over-all authority over dwellings generally which has played a great part in creating the absolute confusion which exists in housing today. I think a survey would reveal that there are probably more people living as single occupants of dwellings today than for many long years, if not in the history of Canada. The reason for that is that, while a person may have a flat or room and be willing to share accommodation and take people in, such people may prove to be unsuitable, and under the type of controls which we have now it is impossible to get them out. Therefore people are fearful of offering to share their dwellings with others.

I mention that merely to try to indicate that controls in themselves are bad. A regulated control by means of a statute which sets in motion a process of law to deal with these various measures would probably have some appeal. At any rate, if these bills were separated, we would not have to deal with them collectively, but would have an opportunity to deal with each individual item on its own merits. Through this measure our socialist friends feel that we have to a large extent eliminated competition. Competition after all is a regulative force. It fixes the value of things, and without that regulative force you have no standard by which to fix the value of anything. From my own experience I have learned that the more you interfere with natural laws the more difficult it becomes to govern. There is a knack in doing things, the knack of knowing how; but the present administration, with the experience born of years of regulation and control, are reluctant to restore to the Canadian people that measure of freedom our gallant sons and daughters fought to preserve in this country.

Surely the time has come when we must trust our fellow Canadians. Surely we should be able to say that business can be entrusted with the management of its own affairs. The sooner that measure of responsibility is restored to business the sooner we will break what I consider to be the deadlock we are in at the present time, with a regulating state, socialistic in its outlook and indeed restrictive in its results. I simply ask that this House of Commons have restored to it that measure of responsibility which every member came here prepared to assume, and for which he is prepared to answer to his constituents.

How can the government present a measure in omnibus form when, as I have intimated already, it may contain some measures which should be continued and at the same time other objectionable measures which we feel are bad for the general welfare of the nation? It is impossible for us to separate them. We must deal with them collectively and accept them all. It is a take it or leave it proposition which does not appeal to me nor, I am sure, to any other responsible member who wishes to have some knowledge of the extent to which the government proposes to proceed. If they would deal with these matters in statutory form, presenting each measure separately so it may be dealt with on its merits, I feel we could make greater progress. The government would feel more secure because they had restored to Canada some semblance of responsible government, and to the members of this house the opportunity to share in that responsibility.

Mr. C. C. I. Merritt (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, upon this resolution the government hopes to found a bill which will give it authority to continue, during the fifth year of peace, a residuum of five unnatural wartime controls. As the house knows from the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) the other day, these are controls over steel, over the prices of certain commodities, over timber, over priorities and over residential rents.

I think it is obvious to all hon. members now, though until this year it was only obvious to those in this party, that the Canadian people do not want controls. Rather they want ample supplies of those things now apparently in short supply, so that in the opinion of the government there is a necessity for a continuation of these unnatural controls. Therefore there are two sides to this control measure. The first is: Are the conditions such that a continuation of controls is necessary, and arising out of that, what conditions cause these shortages and create this necessity? Secondly, and to my mind of much more importance, is the question: What is this government doing to stimulate the production of those commodities apparently in short supply so we may be certain of getting rid of the controls the Canadian people do not want? It is to that side of the medal, namely the production side, that I want to address my remarks this evening.

I was surprised that in introducing this measure the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) failed to give any indication of what they were going to do in order to be able to abandon these unnatural controls. They simply came into the house, made short statements indicating what controls they wanted to continue, suggested that they wanted to continue them for one year, and then sat down. In my view it would be very wrong for hon. members to be satisfied with statements like those. You see, Mr. Speaker, if we give this government the powers they are asking for; if we simply pass these control measures on the basis that they are apparently necessary; if we do not demand from the ministers at this time an explanation as to what they are going to do to get rid of their control measures; then we will not have another chance to get at them for another year. At this moment the government is in the hands of parliament. The government is coming into this house asking parliament for a favour. When a government needs authority from the house it is much more likely to listen sympathetically to the views of the members of parliament. When they have the power and can exercise it independently of parliament they can remain in their seats smiling and pay no attention to what members of this house bring to their attention.

Therefore if we as private members of this house—and of course I am referring to private members on the government side as well as on this side—neglect this opportunity of impressing upon the government the views of the people, if we let them get away too easily with their continuation of control measures, we will not have the opportunity again for a very long time. We will not be able to force the government to take a positive view of this control problem. We will not be able to force them to adopt the necessary productive policies so that the dead hand of control may be removed from our free economy.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, through you to the members of the house that, before the vote is taken on this resolution, we should hear from the ministers of the government, who are responsible for the production of these articles in respect of which controls are to be continued, how they are going to bring about adequate supplies of these articles so that these unnatural controls can be dropped during the present year. If they do not satisfy us we should not give them the power to continue the control measures, but we should take this opportunity of defeating the government and placing in office a government which will have a positive approach to such problems as steel production and housing. Such a government would see to it that before the year is out there would be no need for controls in Canada.

You see, Mr. Speaker, although this measure is only to be continued for one year, we have been given no indication by the government that it intends to make sure it does not have to come back next year for another helping. As the member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) has pointed out, ever since 1945 we have been told these controls were only necessary for a few months. These measures have been renewed from year to year and we were told that at the end of each year these things which all of us except the socialists dislike would be banished from our economy.

Mr. MacInnis: You are voting for them. There is no reply to that.

Mr. Merritt: If the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) wishes to ask me a question, he can rise and ask it.

Mr. MacInnis: If you want to refer to this group, speak the truth.

Mr. Merritt: What is your question?

Mr. MacInnis: I say you voted for them.

Mr. Merritt: Perfectly true, Mr. Speaker, and what of it? What I am pointing out is that every year—

Mr. Claxton: Don't your votes count?

Mr. Merritt: Every year the government comes before us and asks for this power for one more year. On this side of the house we have voted for the control measures in certain years, relying upon that promise that they were only required for a period of a year. Each time we do that, the government finds it too easy to sit down and do nothing about production. Each time we give the government the authority it must seek from us, we lose our power over it. This year, for my part at least, I will not be satisfied to give them the authority unless they show me that they propose to do something to make sure there will be no necessity for requesting this authority next year.

Mr. Sinclair: I take it the hon. member is conceding that this government will be the government next year.

Mr. Fleming: Not if there is an election.

Mr. Merritt: I should like to say to the member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) that I am conceding nothing of the sort. I am asking him, as a private member of parliament and not as a member of the government, and as one who I feel sure does not believe in controls any more than I do, to defeat the government on this resolution so we will be sure they do not come back next year, or even after Easter.

Mr. Sinclair: Pardon the interruption, but will the member permit a question? As a Vancouver member, I know that any member who opposes rental controls during this session will not be here at the next session.

Mr. Merritt: I can assure the member for Vancouver North that I am not against the rent control measure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Merritt: No responsible person in this country, in view of the chaotic state of housing in the country, could oppose rent control at this moment. It is for that reason I am taking part in this debate on the resolution. I do not believe in perpetual rent control. I want to see rent control discontinued at the proper moment. I want to see an adequate supply of housing for the Canadian people so there will be no need for rent control. From what I have seen during the last four years there is no realization on the part of the government that they have a responsibility for the production of houses.

Mr. Sinclair: Eighty thousand a year.

Mr. Claxton: Higher than any country in the world.

Mr. Sinclair: What country has done more?

Mr. Claxton: What country in the world has done more about housing?

Mr. Merritt: I hear the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) say that no country has done more in the way of housing. I will say to the minister that, as usual, he is giving credit to the government for the things done by the Canadian people.

Mr. Claxton: Do you object to those things being done by the Canadian people?

Mr. Merritt: All the housing produced by this government in the past four years amounts to but a small proportion of the total number of houses that were built.

Mr. Claxton: I am sure the hon. member would admit that is the highest number of houses in proportion to total population of any country in the world.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the intention of the hon. member to adjourn the debate?

Mr. Merritt: Yes.

On motion of Mr. Merritt the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will continue the debate on this resolution which has been under discussion today; then, No. 5 on the order paper of today, the Agricultural Products Act; then the resolution in the name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, No. 8 on the order paper; then, No. 4, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance; and No. 15, the resolution in the name of the Postmaster General.

At ten-thirty the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed this day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 15, 1949

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—RETURN AS TO OFFICE SPACE AT SIOUX LOOKOUT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I hold in my hand sessional paper No. 55D, tabled in the house on Friday, March 11. This was brought down in response to an order of the house passed on February 16 of this year pursuant to a motion of mine asking for the tabling of certain documents. I shall try to state my question of privilege as briefly as possible, but there are one or two facts of importance which I must indicate.

Following the passing of the motion I was invited by an officer of the department concerned to go into the office of the minister to examine the file. This was not on a confidential basis. I was told that the reason I was asked to look over the file was that I might indicate any papers which were inconsequential and need not be produced. I did so. I initialed, in accordance with the suggestion made to me, all the papers which were important and which I felt should be produced; and I was assured they would be brought down.

Now that the sessional paper has come down, to my amazement some of the very important documents which I initialed are not included. I could cite a number of them; but to be specific I shall refer to one group, namely, the communications from the regional superintendent of unemployment insurance at Winnipeg to the unemployment insurance commission here at Ottawa—and I may say that there are letters in this sessional paper between officers of various departments and their superiors at corresponding levels. The only difference between the documents produced and those withheld is that most of the documents produced approve the action taken, while those withheld disapprove.

I am sure Your Honour will agree with me, as will the Prime Minister and leader of the house, that an order of the house should be complied with, and that this sessional paper should be supplemented to such an extent as to give the full information required by the order of the house.

Mr. Mitchell: I think the hon. member said that he had come to my office.

Mr. Knowles: I said an officer of the department concerned took me into the minister's office to see the file.

Mr. Mitchell: In my office?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Mitchell: I do not recall my hon. friend's getting anything in my office in my presence.

Mr. Knowles: I thought I made it clear that it was in the minister's office, but that he was not there. It was an official of the department who let me look at the file.

Mr. Mitchell: That is important to me—that I was not there. I have no objection to my hon. friend's holding an inquest on me if I am there. The impression I got from his remarks was that I was there.

Mr. Knowles: The point at issue is that important documents have been withheld.

COARSE GRAINS

OATS, BARLEY AND OILSEEDS—SUPPORT PRICES FOR 1949-50 CROP YEAR

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house of certain decisions which the government has reached in regard to floor prices for oats, barley and oilseeds. Before dealing with the policies which the government will implement for the crop year 1949-50, I would like to make some general observations.

There has been a general easing of the world grain and oilseed position as production of grains in Europe returned close to pre-war levels, and as substantial increases were made in the production of oils and fats in that area and elsewhere. Supplies of wheat and feed grains in exporting countries during the present crop year are sufficient to meet demand, and, in spite of the prevailing financial position, most importing countries are going to secure supplies of grain which they require. As I shall indicate later, supplies of vegetable oils generally are more than adequate to meet existing demand, and in the case of certain vegetable oils, international surpluses exist today due largely to wartime expansion in production. These are basic factors which the government has had to consider in connection with the crops under review.

I would now like to refer specifically to oats and barley. It is important that producers in the prairie provinces should continue to maintain a sound diversity in the crops which they produce, in order that there should be a corresponding diversity in the grain which this country will have for export during this period of adjustment in the world demand for, and in the world supply of, grains.

As members of the house know, western wheat producers are assured of a minimum price of $1.75 per bushel basis No. 1 northern in store Fort William-Port Arthur or Vancouver until July 31, 1950. In view of this established level of wheat prices, the government feels that producers should have reasonable assurance in respect to support prices for oats and barley during 1949-50.

The government has decided to support the price of western oats and western barley during the crop year 1949-50 at the same support prices that are in effect for the present crop. These prices are 61½ cents per bushel basis No. 1 feed oats in store Fort William-Port Arthur and 90 cents per bushel basis No. 1 feed barley in store Fort William-Port Arthur. As in previous years, the Canadian wheat board will administer the support prices for these two grains. I want to emphasize that these are support prices only, and producers will have the advantage of whatever higher prices prevail during 1949-50.
