Below is an extract from The Kansas City Post commenting on the apnearance of John McCormack, the Irish tenor, before a huge audience in Convention Hall on January 23:

"Down from the crowded galleries of shouting, laughing, clapping Mc-Cormack enthusiasts to the arena floor of the great hall, 30,000 persons in Convention Hall last night sent one "Tipperary.

Some knew McCormack had sung it for a graphophone record, and a few remembered that on the program in large type the fact was advertised.

And then everybody tried to think of vague rumors he had heard; that an archbishop had condemned the song as not true to the real Irishman; that Leicester square in London was said to be not quite reputable; that somehow or other one shouldn't allow himself to like the swing and surface galety of the little song. It must be wrong somehow, because the great Irish enor hated it.

Canadian Press Despatch.

WINNIPEG, Man., Feb. 6.-The dis covery of a large assortment of valuable furs in Minneapolis, valued at about $10,000, stolen at various times and in unexplained ways from Winnipeg fur dealers, is expected to lead to important developments. It is believed here the furs were stolen and smuggled across the border as part of a scheme of operations of a gang of international crooks, who have been working at various points on the boundary line. Thru the work of a private detective agency the furs were tased to pawn shops in New York. Chicago, St. Paul. what is chicopractic. I will try to tell you as briefly as possible.

If some person has told you that a chiropractor rubs your spine, forget it; they-don't. Chiropractic is a scientific system of treating disease by means of physiological adjustment of the spinal column. No medication of any kind, either internal or external, is employed. Whenever there is a diseased condition of the body it will when you stop to consider the comthe spinal column—the vertebrae—are more or less displaced, subluxated, or out of alignment. Chiropractic treatment consists of a certain process of spinal manipulation whereby these subluxated vertebrae are placed in re-alignment, thereby permitting normal function of the parts and organs supplied by the nerves involved and compressed by the displaced vertebrae.

Ill Methods of Practice Towns and Will be perfectly clear to you when you stop to consider the comparison. If, trouble existed in machinery, run by electricity, you would immediately look to the electric ourgent the machinery ran slowly, you would consider that the voltage was low, and would at once take steps to correct it; and likewise, if the machinery were working too fast, you would lessen the ourgent.

Now, why not desired.

All Methods of Practice Recognize the Importance of the Nervous System. The control of the human machine lies in the nerves. The brain and the spine are the seat of all human power the storage battery from which emanates the energy that moves the

The principle of Chiropractic treatment is by no means new, for a simi-lar method of spinal adjustment has been known and successfully practiced in certain sections of Europe for Bohemia a century or so ago. It was introduced in this country about twelve years ago, and its wonderful value as a curative agent, even in its then crude form, was at once recognized by many careful observers. Since then it has been vastly improved upon and developed until today it is thoroughly systematized, and is on a solid basis of an exact, scientific system of

This nerve force, innervation, or impulse, we shall compare with the electricity which sets in motion, and keeps octuring plant. In order thoroughly to grasp the idea contained in this comparison it should be borne in mind that in the great human estabnt, everything is complete within the one building, and that the en-tire works are controlled from the one central station, the brain, and one cable of distribution, the spinal cord, with its sixty-two branches, the spinal nerves.

The branches referred to, passing trom the main cable to their terminal points, pass between movable bones-vertebrae. This is the point of greatest apprehension for the Chiropractor—the master mechanic—as a branch nerve, leaving the vertebral column at this point, is often pinched between the vetebrae, thus interfering with the normal nerve impulse being transmitted from the central station (the brain) to the nerve terminus, producing discord at that end. If the

OTTAWA, Feb. 6.—The opening of were handshakings and greetings not the jolly opening of school riment of former years. Comir parliament is always marked by old world pemp and pageantry. When the session opened in November, their royal highnesses drove in state to Parliament Hill where great crowls viewed the guard of honor and listened to the martial music of the great guns on Nepean Point. But a "coonskin opening" in February, as an irreverent newspaper man once termed it, does not lend itself to outdoor ceremonial. But in spite of the obvious effort to make the opening a brilliant spectacle, it was evident that the members of parliament were men over whom a praise which, the even not entirely deserved, will uplift the hearts of men. Our politicians may have been a little surprised to find how they were estimated and valued at the capital of the empire but they were not displeased. You may be sure the man who receives a hero medal, even the by mistake, would try from that time on to be heroic, and for that matter, it must be admitted that party the by mistake, would try from that time on to be heroic, and for that matter. It must be admitted that party politics have been largely laid aside. If it were not for the haunting fear of a sudden election this would be purely a war session. Many members on both sides would be glad if they could be assured of a permanent truce until the government had successfully dealt with the enemy abroad. Mr. Asquith's recent speech in the British House quite correctly voices the sentiment which runs thru all the informal discussion now going on in Ottawa among members of parliament.

There are of course, some big questions to be dealt with. The tariff changes may not commend themselves to the opposition; the export of nickel may result in a somewhat acrimonious discussion not bounded by party lines; complaints will be heard respecting the administration of several departments, and the minister of millitia will find hostile critics on both sides of the chamber. Few men can argue long without losing their tempers, and party lines may be tightly drawn before the session is over.

To the bystander it looks as the General Hughes had a good many friends on the Liberal side, and that at present his most outspoken critics were to be found to the right of the speaker. Be Without a Talking Machine Now Think of It

One of the largest many facturers of Talking Machines Discontinues a model from his catalogue. Adams buys entire stock on hand at unprecedented low price.

No Home "Be It Ever So Humble" Need

The makers realizing that there is no money in it for them in producing low priced machines, because practically the same effort is required in making as in the high priced types, decided to take this instrument off their list-that was our opportunity.

By making them an offer to take all they had in stock—about 100—we bought them at a figure that enables us to sell them away under any former price for a good talking machine—this is your opportunity.

THE "MARVEL"—which is the name of this talking machine—is a wonderfully efficient sound-reproducing instrument and will give you the means for unending pleasure and entertainment during the long winter evenings at home. It has a large size cabinet, 111/2 inches square, plays any record and in every way meets the desire for a good talking machine.

You Can Buy One for $1 Down Monday Afterwards

As there is no doubt that this announcement will bring a good size rush for these talking machines and while the quantity is large, there will be no future chance to buy one at such an insignificant price, and on such easy terms, we advise those interested to place their order early. Motor-control: Speed regulator operated on graduated dial combined with start and stop device.

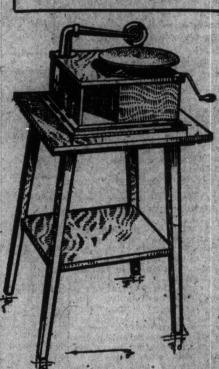

Needle Equipment: 100 medium tone needles.

HERE ARE ITS PRINCIPAL POINTS: Cabinet: Best quality grained oak. Cabinet Measurements: 11½ inches wide, 11½ inches deep and 5 inches high. Metal Finish: All exposed metal parts heavily nickel plated with exception of tone-arm and tone-arm bracket, which are Japan finished. Motor: One spring drive, durable, even running and silent. Plays any 12-inch record, and can be wound while running.

Never Again Will You Buy a Talking Machine for so Little Money.

The Jackson "44" embodies all of the distinctive Jackson features—durability, economy of operation and comfort. It has a full stream-line body, with curved back, flush doors, concealed hinges and crowned fenders. The motor is the standard Jackson unit power plant, 40 h.p.—with cylinders cast in pairs and divided aluminum crank case. It is quiet—and will stay quiet in service. The rear axle is the floating type with two universal joints. Both drive and torque are taken by the rear springs, which are underslung on the axle. The reduction of weight gained by the absence of radius rods and tore sion rod is a large factor in tire economy.

Established Clientele Endorse Jackson Cars

The Jackson is usually spoken of among experienced motorists as a well-made car, which stands hard and continued driving wi thout trouble. It is this characteristic which we have always built into each model that we have made. Silence is a distinctive feature of the Jackson motor. Heavy shafts—big bearings—and accurately-balanced working parts all combine to make the motor free from noise and vibration.

Guard and other rifle associations organized in the county. Messrs. G. Irondées, G. Little and C. L. Wallace were appointed a committee to inspect the different associations.

The question of a new bridge being built over the Minnico Creek at Islington was again introduced by Reeve Silverthorne of Etobicoke.

Barlier in the session the matter had been referred to the warden and the county commissioner, but Mr. Silverthorne wanted some definite decision arrived at by the council. A phrited discussion ensued during which the Reeve of Etobicoke and J. M. Gardhouse of Weston pointed out had a new bridge was an absolute necessity. Several of the members wanted the matter to be left in the hands of the commissioners, who had power to build the bridge if Lecessary. This course was eventually decided on.

RAILWAY EXTENSIONS

Car Line May Be Built on Bloor Street, West of Lansdowne

Just what the city council will do with the board of control's recommendation that Deputy Chief Noble be made head of the fire department, when it meets Monday, is not known. There is certain to be a long debate, and there will be strong opposition to the appointment as recommended. The concensus of opinion seems to be that the only way to get a thore reorganization of the department was turning gray and was slightly bald. He is slightly demented. When he left home he was wearing a black suit. Chairly had a dark moustache that the clause adopted by last year's council that a fire commissioner be appointed be rescined.

GAELIC SOCIETY WANTS LAND FOR HIGHLANDERS

Will Ask Imperial Government to Provide for Survivors of Soldiers

At a largely attended meeting of the Gaelic Society of Canada, held on Sat-urday evening, it was decided to memorialize the imperial government in favor of granting homesteads of sinali extent on good land in the Scottish highlands to survivors of Highland soldiers who left their homes for service at the front.

Initial successes were gained by the Russians in the first stages of the Russians the Council of the Samsoon. battle of the Carpathians. Two sharp attacks defeated Austrian forces southwest of Dukla and southwest of the Jasliska, Baligroad and Ludoviski line. The Austrians lost three lines of renches at one point and many prisoners and machine guns.

Russian Prestige Grows. The recent fights in the Carpathians and successes against the Turks have gained Russia tremendous prestige in the Balkans and in the near east generally, and this has stimulated the Germans to renew the offensive near Warsaw. Von Hindenburg's flerce attacks were repulsed in general by the Russians except at one place, where some trenches were lost, to be afterwards regained in a bayonet

The French progress in the Vosges and Alsace is becoming alarming to the Germans. The headquarters of the German commander, south of Altkirk, were destroyed by French aviators, and attacks on the French leading column were defeated with considerable loss. This has induced the German staff to remove their documents and other belongings from Muhlhausen across the Rhine to Freiberg. Evidently it is feared by the Germans that they will be unable to keep their hold upon Alsace, and they will probably, if hard pressed, a little longer, retreat across the Rhine and resist the passage of that river.

War in Eastern Theatrs.

The Russian offensive in the Carpathians on Wednesday assumed such menacing proportions that Von Hindentung, commanding the German armies before Warsaw, actively resumed the offensive against the Russian delivered some formidable attacks. On Thursday he mustered fifty thousand infantry and made an immense drive, which resulted in the slaughter of four thousand Germans by the Russian artillery, rifles and bayonets. With the average proportion of casualties to the number actually slain as hitherto recorded in this war, the total German losses in this attempt alone must have been close to twenty thousand, or half the effectives engaged.

FIGHTING IN EGYPT. The Turks made their first attempt and cross the Suez Canal Tuesday and invade Egypt proper on Monday, and were disastrously defeated, for they were attacked by the British troops just as they attempted to set up their briding material in position. Under the fire of the British troops the enemy fled in disorder, leaving all the material behind. This fight took place at Toussoum, 36 miles from Suez. Forty miles south of Port Said on the El-Kantara front the Turks also attacked the British forces at daylight Thursday, and were easily repulsed, with a loss of 16 killed or wounded and 40 prisoners. The British loss was three men wounded.

The British force near Ismailia, on Lake Timsah, on the Suez Canal, also had a skirmish with the Turks on Wednesday, and the Turks fled. The fighting took place in a sandstorm and the shooting of the Turks was bad, both ridles and artillery being poorly handled. The British had six men wounded.

Von Hindenburg before Cracow is unable to shift his armies round so as to help them, for the Russians command the Carpathians.

Tarnow Evacuated.

The Austrian army defending Cracow, ancient capital of Poland, has admitted that the Russians have forced them to evacuate Tarnow, a city forty miles from Cracow, on important railway lines leading to German officers and wounded.

Over Hundred Thousand Turks.

The main body of the Turkish army raised for the invasion of Egypt is at a point within 22 miles of the Suez Canal and consists of 90,000 Turkish solders and 20,000 Bedouins. Many German officers and engineers accompany this force. The invaders are weak in artillery. Their largest gun is the Krup five-inch rifle.

The Turkish losses in Egypt so far are estimated at 2400, the British at afout 0 killed and wounded.

Britain is said to have 100,000 troops along the Suez Canal and within call vounded.

The owner of a large plantation in Mississippi, where the fine figs grow. is giving away a few five-acre fruit tracts. The only condition is that figs be planted. The owner wants enough figs raised to supply a co-operative canning factory. You can secure five acres and an interest in the canning factory by writing the Eubank Farms Company, 864 Keystone, Pittsburg, Pa., U.S.A. They will plant and care for your trees for $6 per month. Your profit should be $1000 per year. Some think this man is crazy for giving away such valuable land, but there may be method in his madness. Advt.

the war, and the government sent the flour to England, Russia, France and Belgium to feed the soldiers. The trades and labor council are seriously considering the question of making a protest against the government shipping out any more flour from Canada, or having it pass an act whereby the flour dealers in Canada cannot raise the price because of the shortage. The trades and labor council officials point out that those having retained their flour for the past six or eight months are now reaping a grand benefit and increasing their bank accounts at the expense of the reople who are forced to pay the increased price for their bread. While this action on the part of the trades and labor council is being contemplated, such a move may not be made for some time, as it is thought they will wait and see if there is to be any further advance in the price of flour and bread.

and see if there is to be any further advance in the price of flour and bread.

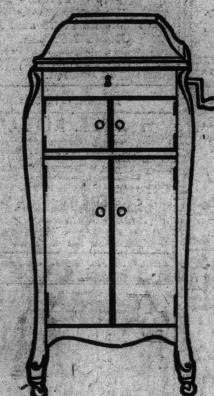

The trades and labor council officials also place the blame for the advance in the price of sugar on the government for levying the extra importation tax at the outbreak of the war. When this extra tax was levied the manufacturers added more to it, with the result that the wholesale and retail dealers have also added a little to the price of sugar and finally the people have to pay from 2 to 3 cents a pound more for sugar than at the outbreak of the war.

The trades and labor council will dealers have also added a little to the price of sugar and finally the people have to pay from 2 to 3 cents a pound more for sugar than at the outbreak of the war.

The trades and labor council will also make an effort to ascertain, if possible, why it is that the price of bread has not advanced in Winniper, and other large western cities, while in every Ontario city and town the price has been boosted two cents per loaf.

One More Case of the Innocent Bystander in Imminent Peril.

If You Want to Avoid the Panhandler's Touch Never Be a Hustling Young Man With a Smile or a Kindly Old Man--- and Never, Never Give Up Your Money When He Says It's the Price of a Drink He Wants, You Are Most Likely Being Fooled --- the Science and Psychology of the Trade.

By JAMES P. HAVERSON

HIS is the story of a bum—told in the language of a bum, and expressing the philosophy of his trade or calling. In it is set out the psychology by which he sorts, from the mass of humanity in the street, those who are probable prospects for the price of a bed, a meal or a drink. It is an exposition of the brains behind begging.

Being the story of a bum, it begins as the beggar begins, with, 'Say, Mister, can I speak to you for a minute?" Then follows the plea for the price of a bed, a meal or a drink, garnished by various urgencies of need.

This particular beggar was frowsy, out-atelbows, unshaven. He was a typical bum, and

T've Had a Bit of Hard Luck.'

"Can I Speak to You a Minute?"

This Smile Was Not for Charity, But for the Glad Rags of the Bum.

I asked him how he begged, when he begged and where and from whom he begged. learned that there is a distinct philosophy and psychology of begging.

"There's lots of times," said he, "when ye'li do better to ask for a drink, even when it's a meal you want. There is a kind of man, an' you can tell him at sight, who thinks that every beggar wants a drink. It's no use askin' him for the price of a meal. He'd only think you was foolin' him. Tell him you want a drink, and he thinks you see he's too wise to be fooled.

Nine times out of ten he'll give up that way. "Take a young fellow with a smile; he's good, if you can get him stopped. Chances are he'll brush right by and never hear you; but if you get him stopped, he's good for a quarter, maybe a half. A smiling old man is pretty near always good for something, usually not as much as the young one, but he's a surer pros-

"Some places is better than others. Only a mut'd beg near the Armories just now. You'd think outside a church would be good, but it ain't. When a man's given up to the collection plate, he's dry for the day. There ain't no use beggins from women, anywhere, unless at their doors, and then it's only good for grub or clothes, with likely as not a job of work to do before you get that. A woman even hates to stop to drop a penny in a blind man's tin cup. She thinks it makes her noticed and there ain't no show to stop her in the street. Residential districts is good at night, but you always want to ask for the price of a bod. If a sort of haes to think of a guy with no bed to go to."

This is the story as it was meant to have been written. This is the way the editor mapped it out. It looked easy. All there was to do was to go out, find a bum, or let a bum find me. I have always been good bait for bums. Then I would ask the bum about bumming and print the story as he told it. But there was one thing we had overlooked, one calculation we had not made; we had not reckoned with the pride of the bum. . .

I suppose that in the week I was stopped by a dozen different bums, frowsy, down-at-heels and out-at-elbows, but, when I asked them of their business, they became taciturn and uneasy. Some of them took me, I think, for a plainclothes policemen, others plainwhen it was suggested that pictures should be made charging black clouds of reproach and abuse.

A bum, the dictionary has it, is "an idle, dissolute fellow-a loafer." "To bum," says the same authority, "is to live by sponging on others." but this is by no means the whole matter. This takes no account of the pride of bums, of their infinite reluctance to talk of their profession and of the well-nigh impossible task it is to entice them before a camera, nor of their vanity when persuaded to do so. A bum is of no necessary age-there are old bums and young ones. Loafers may be fat or lean, but they are all alike, dyed-in-the-divers and contradictory colors of pride and timidity.

There is, I am now prepared to declare, no trade or calling, the secrets of which are so jealously guarded, as are those of the professional bum. man may beg at any time, in any place, but talk of his begging, he will not. One beggar I approached, or rather he approached me, declared that it would never do for him to have Lis picture taken. He had washed dishes, he vowed, in every restaurant kitchen in down-town Toronto; and should his picture appear as a bum, he would be done for. In vain I pointed out that what was wanted of him was merely a deodorized form of panhandling, a sort of moving-picture begging. "Twas no use. Of all wild animals of street or forest, bums are the willest and most wary. So that this, which was to have been the story of a bum, was in a fair way to turn out merely a bum story. Then I secured the services of the bum whose pictures ap-

HEY won't come tonight—sure. The girl looked again towards the west, where, here and there, bare poles, or branches of trees, or slips of underbrush marked a road made across the plains thru the snow. The sun was going down golden red, folding up the sky a wide soft curtain of pink and mauve and deep purple merging into the fathom-less blue, where already the stars were beginning to quiver. The house stood on the edge of a little forest, which had boldiy asserted itself in the wide flat-ness. At this point in the west the prairie merged into an undulating territory, where hill and wood rolled away from the banks of the Saskatchewan, making another England in beauty. The forest was a sort of advance-post of that land of beauty.

Yet there was beauty, too, on this prairie, the there was nothing to the east but snow and the forest so far as eye could see. Nobility and peace and power prooded over the white world. As the girl looked, it seemed as the the bosom of the land rose and fell. She had felt this vibrating life beat beneath the frozen surface. Now, as she cased, she smiled sadly to herself, with drooping eyellds looking out from beneath strong brows.

"I know you—I know you," she said aloud.
"You've got to take your toll. And when you're lying asleep like that, or pretending to, you reach up—and kill. And yet you can be kind—ah, but you can be kind and beautiful! But you must have your tell one way or t'other." She sighed and paused; then, after a moment, looking along the trail — "I den't expect they'll come tonight, and mebbe not to-merrow, if—if they stay for that."

Her eyes closed, she shivered a little. Her lips rew tight, and her face seemed suddenly to get thinner. "But dad wouldn't—no, he couldn't, not considerin'—" Again she shut her eyes in pain.

Her face was now turned from the western road. by which she had expected her travelers, and towards the east, where already the snow was taking on a faint bluish tint, a reflection of the sky deepening towards night in that half-circle of the horizon. Distant and a little bleak and cheerless the half-circle was looking now. 'No one-not for two weeks," she said, in comment on the eastern trail, which was so little frequented in winter, and this year had been less traveled than ever. "It would be nice to have a neighbor," she added, as she faced the west and the sinking sun again, "I get so lonely—just minutes I get lonely. But it's them minutes that seem to count more than all the rest when they come. I expect that's it—we den't live in months and years, but just in minutes. It doesn't take long for an earthquake to do its work t's seconds then. . . . Pr'aps dad won't even come tomorrow," she added, as she laid her hand on "It never seemed so long before, not even when he's been away a week." She laughed "Even bad company's better than no always when dad's been away past times. was a fool, but he was company; and mebbe he'd have been better company if he'd been more of a scamp and less a fool. I dunno, but I really think he would. Bad company doesn't put you off so." There was a scratching at the inside of the door.

"My, if I didn't forget Shako," she said, and he dying

She opened the door quickly, and out jumped a Russian dog of almost full breed, with big, soft eyes like those of his mistress, and with the air of the north in every motion-like his mistress also.

"Come, Shako, a run—a run!"
An instant after she was flying off on a path towards the woods, her short skirts flying and showing limbs as graceful and shapely as those of any woman of that world of social grace which she had never seen; for she was a prairie girl thru and thru, born on the plains and fed on its scanty fare-scanty as to variety, at least. Backwards and forwards they ran the girl shouting like a child of ten-she was twentythree her eyes flashing, her fine white teeth showing, her hands thrown up in sheer excess of animal life, her hair blowing about her face-brown, strong hair, wavy and plentiful.

Fine creature as she was, her finest features wers her eyes and her hands. The eyes might have been found in the most savage places; the hands, however, only could have come thru breeding. She had got them honestly; for her mother was descended from an old family of the French province. That was why she had the name of Loisette—and had a touch of distinction. It was the strain of the patrician in the full blood of the peasant; but it gave her something which made her what she was—what she had been since a child, noticeable and besought, sometimes It was too strong a nature to compel love often, but it never failed to compel admiration. Not greatly a creature of words, she had become moody of late; and even now, alive with light and feeling and animal life, she suddenly stopped her romp and run, and called the dog to her.

"Heel, Shako!" she said, and made for the door of the little house, which looked so snug and home-like. She paused before she came to the door, to watch the smoke curling up from the chimney straight as a column, for there was not a breath of sir stirring. The sun was almost gene and the strong bluish light was settling on everything, giving even the gren pruce trees a curious burnished tone.

Swish! Thud! She faced the woods quickly. It was only a sound that she had heard how many bundreds of times! It was the snow slipping from some broad branch of the fir trees to the ground.

Yet she started now. Something was on her mind, agitating her senses, affecting her self-control. "I'll be jumping out of my boots when the fire snaps, or the frost cracks the ice, next," she said aloud contemptuously.

aptuously. "I dunno what's the matter with I feel as if someone was hiding somewhere ready to pop out on me. I haven't never felt like that before." She had formed the habit of talking to herself, for it had seemed at first, as she was left alone when her father went trapping or upon journeys for the government, that by and by she would start at the sound of her own voice, if she didn't think aloud. So she was given to soliloquy, defying the old belief that people who talked to themselves were going mad. She laughed at that. She said that birds sang to themselves and didn't go mad, and crickets chirruped, and frogs croaked, and owls hooted, and she would talk and not go crazy either. So she talked to herself and to Shako when she was alone.

and to Shako when she was alone.

'Ilow quiet it was inside when her light supper was caten, bread and beans and pea soup—she had got this from her French mother. Now she sat, her elbows on her knees, her chin on her hands, looking into the fire. Shako was at her feet upon the great into the fire. Stake was at her feet upon the great inusk-ox rug, which her father had got on one of his hunting trips in the Athabasea country years ago. It belonged as she belonged. It breathed of the life of the north-land, for the timbers of the hut were hewn cedar: the rough chimney, the seats, and the shelves on which a few books made a fair show beside the bright tins and the scanty crockery, were of pine; and the horned heads of deer and wapiti pegs for coats and caps, and rests for guns and rifles. was a place of comfort; it had an air of well-to-do thrift, even as the girl's dress, the plain, was made of good sound stuff, grey, with a touch of dark red match the auburn of her hair. A book lay open in her lap, but she had scarcely tried to read it. She had put it down after a few moments fixed upon it. It had sent her thoughts off into a world where her life had played a part too ble for books, too deep for the plummet of any save who had lived thru the storm of life's trials: and life when it is bitter to the young is bitter with an agony the old never know, At last she spoke to

She knows now! Now she knows what it is, how it feels-your heart like red-hot coals, and something in your head that's like a turnscrew, and you want to die and can't, for you've got to live and suffer!"

Again she was quiet, and only the deg's heavy breathing, the snap of the fire, or the crack of a timber in the deadly frost broke the silence. Inside it was warm and bright and home-like; outside it was twenty degrees below zero, and like some vast tomb where life itself was congealed, and only the white stars, low, twinkling, and quizzical, lived-a life of sharp corrosion, not of fire.

Suddenly she raised her head and listened. dog did the same. None but those whose lives are lived in lonely places can be so acute, so sensitive to sound. It was a feeling delicate and intense, the whole nature getting the vibration. You could have heard nothing, had you been there; none but one who was of the wide spaces could have done so. But the dog and the woman felt, and both strained towards the window. Again they heard, and started to their feet. It was far, far away, and still you could not have heard; but now they heard clearly—a cry in the night, a cry of pain and despair. The girl ran to the window and pulled aside the bearsking the country that the light. curtain which had completely shut out the light. Then she stirred the fire, threw a log upon it, shuffed the candles, hastily put on her moccasins, fur coat, wool cap, and gloves, and went to the door quickly, the dog at her heels. Opening it, she stepped out into the night.
"Qui va la? Who is it? Where?" she called, and Now they came to the hut where the firelight flickered on the window-pane; the door was flung open, and, as he stumbled on the threshold, she helped him into the warm room. She almost pushed bim over to Divested of his outer coat, muffler, cap and leggins, he sat on a bench before the fire, his eyes wan-dering from the girl to the flames, and his hands clasping and unclasping between his knees. His eyes dilating with hunger, he watched her preparations for his supper; and when at last—and she had been but a moment—it was placed before him, his head swam, and he turned faint with the stress of his longing. He would have swallowed a basin of pea-soup at a draught, but she stopped him, holding the basin till she thought he might venture again. Then came cold beans, and some meat, which she ioasted at the fire and laid upon his plate. They had not spoken since first entering the house, when tears had shone in his eyes, and he had said—

"You have safe—ah, you have safe me, and so I will do it yet by help bon Dieu-yes."

The meat was done at last, and he sat with a great dish of tea beside him, and his pipe alight.
"What time, if please?" he asked. "I t'ink nine hour, but no sure." "It is near nine," she said. She hastily tidied up the table after his meal, and then came and sat in her chair over against the wall of the rude fireplace. "Nine—dat is good. The moon rise at 'leven; den I go. I go on," he said, "if you show me de queeck way."

"You go on—how can you go on?" she asked, al-

"Will you not to show me?" he asked. "Show you what?" she asked abruptly. She thought of the sister, younger than herself, whom Rube Haman had married and driven to her grave within a year—the sweet Lucy, with the name of her father's mother. Lucy had been all English in face and tongue, a flower of the west, driven to darkness by this horse-dealing brute, who. before he was arrested and tried for murder, was about to marry Kate Wimper. Kate Wimper had stolen him from Lucy before Lucy's first and only child was born, the child that could not survive the warm mother-life withdrawn, and so had gone down the valley whither the broken-hearted mother had field. It was Kate Wimper, who, before that, had waylaid the one man for whom she herself had ever cared, and drawn him from her side by such attractions as she herself would keep for an honest wife, if such she ever chanced to be. An honest wife she would have been had Kate Wimper not crossed the straight path of her life. The man she had loved was gone to his end also, reckless and hopeless, after he had thrown away his chance of a lifetime with Loisette Alroyd. There had been left behind this girl, to whom tragedy had come too young, who drank humiliation with a heart as proud as ever straightly set its course thru a fountain of bitterness to her soul, which welled up and flooded her life sometimes. It had given her face no sourness, but it put a shadow into her eyes. She had been glad when Haman was condemned for murder, for she believed he had committed it, and ten times hanging could not compensate for that dear life gone from their sight—Lucy, the pride of her She was glad when Haman was condemned, because of the woman who had stolen him from Lucy, because of that other man, her lover gone out of her own life. The deliberate look on his face deepened to stubbornness "It is my vow to my brudder—he is in purgatore. An' I mus' do it," he rejoined, with an emphasis there was no mistaking. "You can show me dat way?"

She went to a drawer and took out a piece of paper. Then, with a point of blackened stick, as he watched her and listened, she swiftly drew his route "Yes, I get it in my head," he said. "I go dat way. but I wish—I wish it was dat queeck way. I have no fear, noting. I go w'en dat moon rise—I go, bien

"You must sleep, then, while I get some food for you." She pointed to a couch in a corner. "I will wake you when the moon rises."

In a moment his deep breathing filled the room, the only sound save for the fire within and the freet rejoiced that now the woman, if she had any heart at all, must have it bowed down by this supreme outside.

You can't last it out," she said calmiv

Time went on. The night deepened.

OISETTE sat beside the fire, but her body was half-turned from it towards the man on the sofa. She was not agitated outwardly, but within there was that fire which burns up life and hope and all things that come between its and great issues. It had burned up everything in her except one thought, one powerful motive. She had been deadly the state of the s deeply wronged, and justice had been about to give "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." But the man lying there had come to sweep away the scar-folding of justice—he had come for that.

Perhaps he might arrive at Askatoon before the stroke of the hour, but still he would be too late, for in her pocket now was the governor's reprieve. The man had slept soundly. His wallet was still in his breast; but the reprieve was with her.

If he left without discovering his loss, and got well on his way, and discovered it then, it would be too late. If he returned—she only saw one step before her, she would wait for that, and deal with it when it her, she would wait for that, and deal with it when it came. She was thinking of Lucy, of her own lover ruined and gone. She was calm in her madness.

At the first light of the moon she roused him. She had put food into his fur pocket, and after he had drunk a bowl of hot pea-soup, while she told him his course again, she opened the door, and he passed out into the night. He started forward without a word but came back again and caught her hand.

"Pardon" he said: "I so forget everything event

"Pardon," he said; "I go forget everyting except dat. But I tink what you do for me, it is better than all my life. Bien sur, I will come again, when I get my mind to myself. Ah, but you are beauti-bul," he said, "an' you not happy. Well I come again—yes, a Dieu."

He was gone into the night, with the moon silvering the sky, and the steely frost eating into the sentient life of this northern world. Inside the house, with the bearskin blind dropped at the window again, and the fire blazing high, Loisette sat with the governor's reprieve in her hand. Looking at it, she wondered why it had been given to Ba'tiste Caron, and not to a police-officer. Ah yes, it was plain — Ba'tiste was a woodsman and plainsman, and could go far more safely than a constable, and faster, Ba'tis had reason for going fast, and he would travel night and day—he was traveling night and day indeed. And new Ba'tiste might get there, but the reprieve would not. He would not be able to stop the hanging of Haman-the hanging of Rube Hamon,

A change came over her. Her eyes blazed, her breast heaved now. She had been so quiet, so cold and still. But life seemed moving in her once again, The woman, Kate Wimper, who had helped to send two people to their graves, would now drink the dregs of shame, if she was capable of shame—would be robbed of her happiness, if so be she loved Rube

She stood up, as the to put the paper in the fire, but paused suddenly at one thought—Rube Haman was inocent of murder.

Even so, he was not innocent of Lucy's misery and death, of the death of the little one who only opened its eyes to the light for an instant, and then went into the dark again. But truly she was justified! Haman was gone things would go on just the sameand she had been so bitter, her heart had been pierced as with a knife these past three years. Again she held out her hand to the fire, but suddenly she gave a little cry and put her hand to her head. There

What was Ba'tiste to her? Nothing-nothing at She had saved his life—even if she wronged Ba'tiste, her debt would be paid. No, she would not think of Ba'tiste. Yet she did not put the paper in the fire, but in the pocket of her dress. Then she went to her room, leaving the door open. The bed was opposite the fire, and, as she lay there—she did not take off her clothes, she knew not way—she could not take off her clothes, she knew not way—she could not take former. She closed her eyes but could not see the flames. She closed her eyes, but could not sleep, and more than once when she opened them she thought she saw Ba'tiste sitting there as he had sat Why did Ba'tiste haunt her so? What was it he had said in his broken English as he went away?-that he would come back; that she was "beautibul." All at once as she lay still, her head throbbing, her feet and hands icy cold, she sat up listening.

"Ah—again!" she cried. She sprang from her bed, rushed to the door, and strained her eyes into the silver night. She called into the icy void, "Qui va la? Who goes?"

She leaned forward, her hand at her ear, but no sound came in reply. Once more she called, but nothing answered. The night was all light and frost

She had only heard, in her own brain, the iteration of Ba'tiste's calling. Would he reach Askatoon in time, she wondered, as she shut the door? Why had she not gone with him and attempted the shorter way—the quick way, he had called it? All at ones the truth came back upon her, stirring her now. It would do no good for Ba'tiste to arrive in time. He might plead to them all and tell the truth about the reprieve, but it would not avail-Rube Haman would hang. With a cry she suddenly clothed herself for travel. She put some food and drink in a leather-bag and slung them over her shoulder. Then she dropped on a knee and wrote a note to her father, tears falling from her eyes. She heaped wood on the fire and moved towards the door. All at once she turned to moved towards the door. All at once she turned to the crucifix on the wall which had belonged to her mother, and, tho she had followed her father's religion, she kissed the feet of the sacred figure.

all the time, it was doubtful if she could get there before the fatal hour. On the trail Ba'tiste had taken there were but two huts where he could rest, and he had carried his blanket slung on his shoulder. The way she went gave no shelter save the trees and caves which had been used to cache buffalo meat and hides in old days. But beyond this there was danger traveling by night, for the springs beneath the of the three lakes she must cross made it weak and rotten even in the flercest weather, and what would no doubt have been death to Ba'tiste, would be peri Why had she not gone with him? at least to her. "He had in his face what was in Lucy's," she said to herself, as she sped on. "She was fine like him,

The answer came from the east, out of the homeless, neighborless, empty east—a cry, louder now. There were only stars, and the night was dark, tho not deep dark. She sped along the prairie road as fast as she could, once or twice stopping to call aloud. She sped along the prairie road as In answer to her calls the voice sounded nearer and Now suddenly she left the trail and bore away northward. At last the voice was very near. Presently a figure appeared ahead, staggering towards

"Qui va la? Who is it?" she asked.
"Ba'tiste Caron," was the reply in English, in a faint voice. She was beside him in an instant. 'What has happened? Why are you off the trail?" she said, and supported him.

"My Injun stoled my dogs and run off," he replied. "I run after. Then, when I am to come to the trail"—he paused to find the English word, and could not—"encore to this trail I no can. So. Ah, bon Dieu, it has so awful!" He swayed and would have fallen, but she caught him, bore him up, was so strong, and he was as slight as a girl,

"When was that?" she asked. "Two nights ago," he answered, and swayed.
"Wait," she said, and pulled a flask from her poc-

"To save him before dat!" he answered, as the she knew of what he was speaking and thinking. "What is that?" she asked. She new now, surely, but she must ask it nevertheless.

"Dat hanging-of Haman," he answered. He noded to himself. Then he took to gazing into the fire. His lips moved as tho talking to himself, and the hand that held the pipe lay forgotten on his knee. "What have you to do with Haman?" she asked slowly, her eyes burning.

War's desolation cannot equal that of Nature in upheaval. This photo shows some of the inhabitants of Avezzano who escaped death in the great Italian earthquake disaster passing thru one of the main thorofares under protection of Italian soldiers to search in the ruins for bodies of loved ones.

This is the world's largest typewriter. Naturally this machine was not built for the ordinary office in a lofty sky-scraper; nor was it built for the large concern which occupies acres and acres of space. In the first place, its size would be somewhat against it, likewise its cost, which is approximately $100,000. The machine requires a horizontal clearance of space of twenty-one feet and an overhead clearance of eighteen feet, the latter required to expose the typewritten matter above the carriage. The rubber cylinder is of such size that there was not a factory in the world equipped to build it. A large man could crawl thru the cylinder. The segment alone, in which the type bars are supported, cost $2.100. The machine is electrically operated through the medium of an ordinary Underwood Typewriter, of which this used machine is an excellent duplication in metal and construction. It prints letters seven inches in height, and writes on paper nine feet wide. It is an assembled accurate model and possesses every character of type and every individual feature of the machine of which it is a mammoth reproduction. At the San Francisco Exposition it is proposed to use this giant typewriter for bulletins of events the world over. These will be recorded every minute on the great roll of paper fixed above the carriage of the machine.

S—click—BANG!"
The monster pile sank perceptibly as the monkey descended with a thud, and the coze at its foot quivered in ripples of which expanded into circles of silver where they caught the electric light. A gout of oil shooting out on to the mud formed a blot of nacreous color, slowly fading as it spread, and became lost in the film of scum. The steam pile-driver rained victous blows with almost the precision of a yth hammer, its armored-hose steampipe kicking rulsively in the air in a grotesque dance to the

A young man sat in his shirt-sleeves smoking, ch in hand. He was a pleasant-looking young the engineer officer on duty. The pile-driver regulated the progress.

The honest fellow who was apathetically jerking at the string of the steam regulator did not seem to be moved by any such thoughts. A sleek man, he uffed contentedly at his pipe, quite oblivious to the eautiful iridescence of the condensed steam and lubricating oil which showered over him from the whaust at each stroke. His companion in this hower-bath sat on the edge of the coal-bunker, fum-Ming, after the fashion of his kind, with a piece of dirty waste. His gaze wandered from the wobbling dle of the pressure-dial to the water dancing up and down in the gauge-glass in the dim light of the oll-lamp. Occasionally he rose and opened the furnace door to threw in a shovelful of coal, thus casting a warm red glow over the glistening objects at railead. For this spot was "Railhead," which was to be hastily pushed across the river on this temporary pile-bridge at low level, pending the slower repair of he high-level girder-bridge.

The pile-driving machine was carried on a caterpillar-like truck of many wheels, some of which were samped to the rails of the bridge. At its rear end was the boiler; in front, supported by long arms, which overhung the end of the bridge by some distance, was the gaunt framework and guide, almost hugging the pile which the monkey above was mai-treating. The end of the bridge had reached a point about the centre of the river, where the water shoaled on to a sandy mud-flat; but from below the many-wheeled truck, back to the near bank of the river, the dark stream was swirling against the piles, a man's height underneath. So swift was the current that it was not good to gaze for long down between the sleepers at the oily water streaking past with a chuckle, from the moonlight into the shadow of the bridge and out into the light again.

Behind the pile-driver, by the loaded trucks, waited a group of men. They were for the time all quite idle, pending the arrival of their turn with its allotted task. Some were lying asleep, some were leaning against trucks, smoking, or sitting/on the rails, head in hand, elbows on knees; others were squatting on the timbers playing a mysterious game of cards by the light of a naked candle, which burned steadily without a shade in the still air. In their dirty suits of dungaree, it was not possible to say exactly what these men were. To a soldier, however, the fact that these were soldiers was hinted at by the action of some. One was drumming with two bolts on a fish-plate, keeping time to the lilt of a rollicking rag-time air which a second was softly playing on a mouth-organ. Whatever their race—for music-halls have made rag-time music international—it was more like a soldier than an ordinary workman to produce a mouth-organ to keep things going in the small hours of the morning. Their talk settled the point: they were soldiers—sappers, to be exact. Behind the pile-driver, by the loaded trucks, waited

Their task would soon come, when at the last stroke of the monkey a new pile would have to be hauled into position, or, if a pile-pier were completed, the heavy baulks be placed, and the sleepers and rails spiked down. Then the cumbrous caterpillar truck would be slowly pushed forward over the creeking timbers of the newly finished span to a fresh position, where its paean of brute force would start again. Behind these men, along the pile-bridge, stretched a line of trucks loaded with baulks, rails and eleepers; and alongside, downstream, floated fresh piles, swaying to and fro in the stream as they waited to be towed out in their turn. In the half gloom they looked like captive saurians, as the flood foamed against the blunt snouts and their wet edges

Daily.

There was bustle, there was haste, but there was dso method on this low-level bridge. For long periods comparative calm reigned, with no other sound than the hiss of steam, the rush of the water, the four of the high-pressure flare-lights, the distant clang of the riveters' hammers on high, and the of as the tom-tom obligate of a Persian nautch-song. But when the whistles shrilled, this peace, such as it was, changed to turmoil. Sheaves squealed in the blocks, men grunted as they have on the falls of tackles, and bolts and spikes were hammered home. The insistent keynote of the scene was work—strenu-

The insistent keynote of the scene was work—strenucus, unresting work.

The river was wide. Even allowing for the deceptive moonlight, it seemed a quarter of a mile from bank to bank. A burnished strip in the bright light of a full moon, it was dotted here and there with ever and the root out dark. It flowed between steep banks at the bottom of an amphitheatre—a complete drele of hills, save for the gaps thru which ran the river and the raliway which had crossed it.

Away on the far side, starting from a point on the dry sand, in prolongation of the pile-bridge, and winging in a double curve up the steep bank, were a number of smoking naphtha-lamps. Below, in the bed of the river, groups of men were digging out boulders, the metallic click of their crowbers sounding faintly across the water. Ant-like strings of workers were carrying the loosened stones to a causeway which was growing up in alignment with the bridge. Higher up, following the curve of lights, and silhouetted against clouds of illumined dust, a swarm of tollers were excavating the cutting which was to take the steep deviation loop from the level of the bile-bridge up to the main line.

the the steep deviation loop from the level of the ple-bridge up to the main line.

But, after all, neither this bridge nor its approaches the at present the centre of pressure and activity were the feature of the scene; for right up, sixty that above, loomed the broken high level bridge. With its huge girders and titanic piers it dwarfed its lowly neighbor and dominated everything, its grandeur accentuated by the chasm of the break in its centre. In this can steed three unharmed piers like the. In this gap stood three unharmed piers like the in this gap stood three unharmed piers like the gaunt, black and shining. A fourth — the maged pier—was surrounded by a cluster of stag- and tall derrick-masts, dripping ropes and tackle, a was completed on top by a funnel mouth, the resides of which stood out darkly against the archit above. some in slings, but all hammering, boring, or sawing like demons. Between the piers lay the broken girders, moved to one side, half in, half out of the water—a network of iron thru which the muddy river foamed. Above the derricks and the tangle of cordage—carried on timber frames placed at intervals along the girders—two steel cables gleamed in the moonlight. Every few minutes, with the bleat of a motor-horn, a dark body, upon which glowed a red lamp, silently gilded out upon them from one end of the bridge to a point above the broken pier. It stopped, a trap opened, and a glistening cascade of concrete poured with a rattle into the maw of the funnel and so down into the hollow iron pier. Then the dark body slid back to its lair at the bridge end as sliently as it had come out. Beyond, under the big girders, could be seen a floating bridge which stretched from bank to bank.

The spectacle of the colossal bridge reaching out ajestically from each dim bank, with this gaping bund in its centre, was pathetic. The blank ends bod up opposite each other, dumb but reproachful tnesses of the havoc below.

stood up opposite each other, dumb but reproachful witnesses of the havoc below.

From a little distance it was quite a fairy scene. Over all shone the great moon. Above the high-level bridge the blinking arc-lamps shed their violet rays, thrown downward by the shades, so that they formed shimmering cones with edges clear defined against the night beyond. In contrast, the under side of the girders seemed cut of black velvet, and the shadows danced darkly on the water. The riveters fires along the girders glowed red, the flare-lights on the low-level bridge shone yellow, and golden was the glare on the dust-clouds on the far bank. The crudity of the colors was in places softened by the spirals of escaping steam, winding aloft in the calm night air, and the whole gamut of illumination was reproduced in the drawn-out reflections which quivered across the glistening waters to the sluggish pools near the shore.

quivered across the glistening waters to the sluggish pools near the shore.

The low-level bridge was not a safe place to walk about, for there were loose planks, greasy spots, bights of ropes, and other traps for the unwary, and things were continually falling. Sometimes a red hot rivet would drop from above with a flop and a hiss into the river. Occasionally a warning shout of "stand clear!" would ring out, followed by a crish, and perhaps a couple of men would slowly bear away something on a stretcher to the shore. But no one else stopped; there was no sympathetic gathering; the work continued without a pause.

Now and again from a hilltop to the north the darkness was pierced by a succession of flashes. Flash, flash, came the reply from somewhere to the south, and then—a long medley of dots and dashes between the two points. No use to try and read the messages, even for one knowing the code, for these were in cipher. If there were still any doubt as to the nature of the toilers this would settle the matter, for no civil works could require signalling-posts on the hills around.

The moon grew more mellow as she sank. A mist rose from the waters, creeping up till it lay a solid white mass over the river, halfway up the giant piers a damp mist suggestive of malaria not con--a damp mist suggestive of mal spend a night in: but no workers left the bridge.

The moon faded blood-red into the haze. The air turned colder as the night wore on. Another day dawned, at first gray and sad, then rosy and golden But, heedless of the glory of the changing heavens the workers tolled on, and, the muffled, there could be heard rising from the moist white blanket the

The mist curled off the water in thin wisps in the warmth of the rising sun; the lights went out and the seene of the night's toll stood revealed. The day exposed all the squalor, grime, and discomfortthe muddy swirling water, the wet and weary men the burnt-out lamps, dripping timbers, and ironwork. Even those iridescent blots which seemed so beautiful in the light of the moon or the glare of electricity showed up for what they were ols of viscid oil or tar.

The glamor of the night had indeed gone, but no the need for work, and the toilers still strove, for they were working for their comrades of the army ahead—perishing for want of food, and in danger owing to the lack of munitions of war.

T was again night.

Thruout the livelong day the work had proceeded as shift relieved shift.

It was not till some time after the mist had risen

It was not till some time after the mist had risen that the same young engineer, once again on night duty, left the work. Closing his note-book, he picked his way, stepping carefully from sleeper to sleeper, lantern in hand, along the low-level bridge, which had grown in length and by now passed the little mud flat. He buttoned his jacket as he went, for, no longer at work, he felt the damp chill of the mist, which was dripping from his hair and moustache. A thick-set man, his squatness was exaggerated by his bulging pockets filled with note-books; from one protruded a foot-rule. As he passed under the glare at the end of the bridge he smiled. Of a sanguine temperament, he was cheered by the progress of his work at a time when others were depressed. Stumbling on abstractedly over the lighted area into the comparative gloom over the dry mud beyond, he had just climbed above fog-level and proceeded scarcely a hundred yards when a hoarse voice addressed him from the shadow of a bush, where a man was sitting smoking. It was that of the Rallway Traffic Officer—otherwise known as the "Shunter."

"Shunter."

"Well, my Captain of Plumbers, how goes it?

Aren't you across yet?"

"Hullo, is that you? I'm just off up to see my Chief. What are you doing down here, away from your beloved yard? What is your grunble now? Come, talk with me a while, and learn something." "Oh, I'm taking half-an-hour off, watching the illuminations and looking for you in this deadly mist. Things above are quite hopeless. Sit down and "Not I: I'm too cold. You come and stroll, or "Not I: I'm too cold. You come and stroll, or dance with me all in the moonlight, you old truck-fancier." With that he executed a pas seul, scuffling about in what he called a "cellar flap."

The other got up and joined him, but not in the dance. A taller and older man, he was thin and hollow-chested. There was light enough to see that he wore uniform, and had a serious expression. He appealed violetty coughed violently.

"I say, it's just as well you don't have to work in that mist; you would soon cease to trouble us. With that cough, I can forgive you for hogging it in the lap of luxury up above, so saug among your trucks.

Walk as far as the pontoons?"

With that the "Plumber" took a frayed cigar out of his pocket and examined it ruefully, and the two strolled off toward the invisible pontoon-bridge.

"You seem very cheerful, young man, and not as if you had just spent half a shift in that fog. Have you struck a spouting-well of liquid gold with that beastly noise machine of yours, or have you discovered a ford fit for railway traffic? What is it? I don't see much to dance about."

I don't see much to dance about."

I don't see much to dance about."

The "Shunter" was not of a sanguine temperament, and was a much-worried man. Moreover, as time went on he had not the satisfaction of seeing wisible progress made. On the contrary, every hour made his position more hopeless and more complicated.

"That's just it; we should make the most of all our little gifts, and smille at anything we can, just now. Old man, she's a beauty. That little steam pile-driver is going to save the situation—to save the Third Army. Just listen to her now, snorting and butting so prettily down there. It's music."

He continued: "Twe now timed another four spans—sixteen more beastly pilds—being put in, and it will take us, at the present rate, barring cataclysms, just fifty-one hours from midnight, say forty-eight from now, till the rails are fished up and the first train sums across. Let's see: time is Menday morning. That is, by three o'clock the morning after next-Wednesday. I told my Chief six o'clock, yesterday, and as the Commandant has wired that all over the Theatre—"

What the deuce are you talking about?" snarled "I thought you'd say that; why, the Theatre of Operations, of course. All the papers call it that. Over the whole blooming country, if you like it

There was only a grunt for reply.

"I shall let it stay at that, which will give me a margin of three hours for 'unforeseen contingencies'; not that it is necessary, 'cos there ain't going to be any. I've foreseen all. The men want no driving; they are still working like devils. I tell you, 'Mit Hast ohne Rast,' is our motto; but I wonder how long they can stand the strain. Some are already used up. Eight hours on and eight hours off is pretty stiff, you know, and the mist knocks out all the chesty ones. But it's the—"

"Yes, yes, what's the use of giving me all this fip-

"Yes, yes, what's the use of giving me all this flip-flap? I'm not a correspondent. Come to the point."
"Well, I think the Third Army should see the first train reach them, say, at noon on Wednesday; followed, I suppose, by a solid stream of 'em. How-ever, my job's done when the first train gets across."
"Oh, I'll shows trains anough across when the "Oh, I'll shove trains enough across when the time comes, but they won't be the ones they want first. Before I prepare for this great event, tell me, are you sure? Have you taken every factor into your calculations—made allowance for everything?" "Yes, old croaker, everything. I've forseen every single thing within the wildest dream of probability. The deviation approach on this side is already done, and is working. The earthwork on the other side'll be done in twelve hours and the ralls laid in twelve more, so all that will be done before my show. If only we could have put in trestles insteat of plies we should have been across this cursed river by now," He paused a moment in thought and the two naced on in silence. paced on in silence. "I am sorry for the never-to-be-sufficiently ecrated fool who reported that this river could be trestled. He will be the cause, if the army gets scuppered; but he'll probably arrange to be killed, I should think. Anyway, taking the pile-bridging as the slowest part, it is the ruling factor, and fixes the time, and I tell you it is moving — 'Mit Hast, ohne Rast,' is our—" "Oh, damn your motto; if you say it again, or talk of Sturm and Drang, I'll hit you. How about accidents—floods?"

idents—floods?"
"All right, all right; slowly, softly, catchee monkey."

"All right, all right; slowly, softly, catchee monkey. There's not the remotest chance of any accident. I have crowds of timber, piles and stuff all ready. The driver ain't a sensitive plant exactly. Boiler's new and working at low pressure. As to floods, the glass is high; they can give us forty-eight hours warning of any storm away up in the hills, and anyway it's got to be a biggish flood to rise over my bridge—and that will be finished in fifty-one—I mean, forty-eight hours. Besides, even if we do have a flood, so long as we are able to rush across all the trucks you have in your yard—and some engines trucks you have in your yard—and some engines—before it arrives, it won't much matter. That little lot will be enough to keep the army shooting and eating for some days, by which time the high-level bridge will be repaired enough to run over—then so much for the enemy's great demolition!"

"How about their interfering?"

"This place simply stinks of men now since wegot the extra infantry and guns—you know that perfectly well. They would need a much larger force than they can spare to attack us. The footling breaks they make in the line ahead don't count; they breaks they make in the line ahead don't count; they are made good as soon as done. They can't touch us here, and this is the spot. He sighed, as he continued: "What a time these poor devils at the front must have had! We've not been sitting on plush settees eating oysters exactly—but we've always got our 'vittles reg'lar.' Now, you tell. I am so busy down below, I hear nothing of what's going on."

"I only know that they have further reduced rations, how much reduced I can't say, as the Chief naturally keeps a good deal of the worst news to himself. They've fired almost their last round of gun ammunition, they have had a lot more sickness in the last two days, and they are now dying like flies. It's touch and go whether they can last. It's awful."

"I suppose you're working your head off."

awful."

"I suppose you're working your head off."

"Pretty well. I do nothing but send and answerwires, receive traffic, and see stray idiots who want to go to the 'Front.' The yard's so crowded with trucks we can't move. I have now 453, including 45 of ammunition; we have already added ten extra sidings, and shall have many more down by the time you're thru with the bridge. And what annoys element. After a few minutes he ploked his way over to the office of the Commandant, to report to his own Chief, who was there. The Commandant was busy, even at this hour, for he had just got a chance of a talk on the wire to his distressed senior, the Commander-in-Chief of the Third Army. As the "Plumber" entered, he heard:

"Yes, sir, we shall be thru without fail at six on Wednesday mornin, and you will have your first train in the afternoon.—What?—Yes,—What?—No, that's the very best we can do.—Afternoon of Wednesday.—Yes, sir—yes,—Till then.—Of course—I know.—Yes.—We are—hustling all we know—" The speaker looked up as the "Plumber" entered.

"Hullo! You've hot come to tell me that you're going to put off the time of getting thru again?" he snarled in his anxiety. "You've heard what I told the Chief? Is that still right?"

"Quite right, sir; same time—six on Wednesday morning," was the reply.

"Till tell him again—'Hullo—hullo—' Nonsense—eh, what?—line cut again? Damn them, they cut the line every two minutes. This is the first talk I've had with the Chief for thirty-six hours. However, I told him the main thing, lucklly. I wish they had their wireless!"

For five minutes the "Plumber" conferred with his own Chief, who was in charge of all the bridging operations, and was then dismissed. "I'm glad ali is going so well—you'd better be getting back—good night."

"Poor old Commandant," he thought, as he strode away in the gloom, for the moon was just setting, operations, and was then dismissed. In glad an is going so well—you'd better be gettling back—good night."

"Poor old Commandant," he thought, as he strode away in the gloom, for the moon was just setting, "no wonder he is a bit ratty, with this responsibility and strain." Just then he almost ran into the "Shunter," who was gazing up into the still luminous sky toward the west.

"Did you see that?" the latter shouted.

"No—what?"

"Something passed overhead; sort of blur in the sky; heard something, too—soft noise like a motor."

They both looked up. There was nothing in the serene sky but the afterglow of the moon.

"Bird?" suggested the "Plumber."

"Much too big for a bird."

"Vulture—bat—goose—mongoose?" he went on, evidently sceptical, then quickly added:

"Look here, my man, get to bed and rest; you're jumpy from worry and want of sleep. Go to bed—your trucks can't fly off."

"Perhaps you're right; I am chock-full of quinine."

Fil turn in. Good night."

The "Shunter" did turn in; but he did not sleep, for the Banshee-like screeches of a circular saw some distance away seemed to him an omen of evil.

The "Plumber" went on his way whistling — he was of a sunny nature, and at last the end seemed in sight. As he neared the low-level bridge, the sound of the pile-driver in her song of progress greeted his ears. Little did he guess that it was her swan-song she was so cheerfully singing down there in the mist.

THE bridge, slowly creeping forward behind its noisy head, was not the only spot where progress had been made that day. The same sun that dissipated the clinging mist from the river and revealed the bridgers at work lit up another scene of toil in a village some thirty-five miles away—of toil less imposing, but no less important in its results. This little deserted village was the "Hornet's nest" or lair of one section of the raiders. Nestling on one side of a lew hill, and hidden by others slightly higher all round, the spot was well chosen for its purpose. On each side of the principal street straggled houses, once white but now roofless and blackened. From a cow-shed at one end there issued the sound of hammering, and now and then the hum of a motor engine, driven for short bursts at high speed, rose to a whine. Tarpaulins clumsily stretched on charred rafters and weighted with stones formed the roof of the shed. Never a savory spot, an odor as of a motor garage now hung about the place, its pungency rafters and weighted with stones formed the roof of the shed. Never a savory spot, an odor as of a motor garage now hung about the place, its pungency unprensantly intensified by the smell of some extinguished acetylene lanterns, for here also they had been working thru the night. Men kept passing in and out of the shed—they were erecting machinery out in the yard.

In a room of the village inn, still the best house in the place, four officers had just finished a hasty meal and were pushing back their ammunition-box seats from the packing-case table. One of this group was noticeable: very pale, he carried his arm in a sling and had been eating clumsily with his left hand. Another was almost as conspicuous. He was a wiry man with a freckled face and red hair, and he wore a hybrid naval uniform. Upon his yachting cap shone a metal badge representing some insect. The third, the Commandant of the section of raiders, was big and bull necked, with a sly expression in his protuberant eyes not usually associated with men of his build. All these men were under middle age, but the fourth was the youngest. He had nothing to distinguish him but pink cheeks and a bread-and-butter face; he was attached to the nautical man only and did not wear the same uniform.

"We can't spread this man in hara', said the not shoving on as they should. That's one reason why I was looking out for you. I'm expecting two more trains before morning. The main line will be solid with trains and cold engines soon — a lot are cold already—the brutes have emptied the boilers to make their coffee."

"Right-o. Cheer up. I'll come up on my way, tho it's against 'professional etiquette.' It's not my job."

"We can't spread this map in here," said the senior in a guttural voice, lighting his pipe; "let's go into the next room, or, better, into the taproom, where there's a bar."

Following him, the party filed in on each side of the long counter, the pewter top of which was thick with dust, pieces of plaster and broken glass. It was a moment's work to sweep this off to add to the wreckage on the floor. The little run, where some buxom "patronne" or "Miss" had formerly reigned, was more than ankle-deep in broken glass and crockery; the shelves behind were bare of their former array of bottles. Behind the shelves, the sharp edges of the slivers of a dusty mirror, radiating outward from one or two points, caught the light in a prismatic sparkle, the brightness of which accentuated the brutal squalor of the room. Even the smell of dust and plaster had not altogether exorcised the established reek of stale tobacco-smoke and split liquor which still hung about.

"Anyway, I am glad to find you here," said the last speaker. "I heard you were on the way, but many expected things do not arrive these days, and I was not too hopeful. And the I must confess that I am even now a bit sceptical about your box of tricks, I am only too keen to try. Have you unpacked your—what do you call them—squadron, fleet, covey, swarm?" The speaker had only just returned from an expedition.

"Yes, sir," somewhat stiffly answered the man in the nautical suit. "They've been all unpacked, and my men are rigging them up in a shad we found. I have twelve—the Gadfly, Wasp, Bee, Mosquito, Tsetse, Ichneum—"

"Steady, steady—I heven't time to listen to the whole entomological dictionary. How many will be "Just imagine, if the forage had been set on fire! How are you against that sort of thing down here?"

"Outpost system excellent—"

"I know, but I mean single spies. One man with a stick of dynamite or gelatine would upset all your precious sanguine estimate. Have you allowed for that possibility?"

"That's all right," chuckled the other, "The place is so well guarded that not a man could get to the bridge, dynamo or engines, without being seen. It's all lit up near the shore end, and where required, like a billiard-table. They can't get near it, unless they have trained birds or rats to carry dynamite on their tails—eh. what?"

The idea tickled them, and both laughed as they arrived at the deserted pontoon-bridge—all strained into a curve by the current. A guard at the end, and sundry cable-watchers seated on the decks of the pontoons, cross-legged like images of Buddha,

"No transport. We've sent up all we have and can get. That big capture took a lot; crowds, of animals have died and motors broken down. Anyway, road transport is no good to deal with the bulk. we have to handle. No one expected such delay here, thanks to that infernal fool. The railway is the only thing possible—railway and truck." "Trucks were his obsession.

Turning back toward the pile-bridge, they went down into the mist, where an engine was standing on the low level; and, with much panting from the little locomotive and shricking of wheels against guard-rails, they were soon speeding out of the mist up the steep grade and sharp curves of the newly laid deviction approach pits, up to that of tarpaulins and forage, as they got in the station yard. From the top of the bank the white tents of the sleeping troops in the different camps could be seen, for by this time many men as well as trucks had collected at this congested spot, and there was quite a small army composed of "details," detachments, and individuals seeking their regiments—the flotsam and jetsam of the communications.

my men are rigging them up in a shed we found. I have twelve—the Gadfly, Wasp, Bee, Mosquito, Tsetse, Ichneum——"

"Steady, steady—I haven't time to listen to the whole entomological dictionary. How many will be ready for this evening—for business, I mean?"

"All—I hope."

"Are your anarchists, engineers, chauffeurs, or skippers prepared to proceed on individual forform hopes? Mind you, those who do not blow themselves up or get smashed by a fall, but taken prisoner, will almost certainly be shot as spies, and it's odds that good-bye' at starting will be good-bye forever."

"We quite realize that, sir and we'll take anchance. "Tis a forlorn hope in a way; but the prizes are large. Why, just think, given a chance—"

"Yes, yes, I know. I see you are a cran—I mean an enthusiast, and quit rightly. Well, I'm going to give you a bellyful of chances!" The other amiled.

"Now, listen. As you are a newcomer, I'll put you in touch with the position in a few words. Never mind if I tell you something you know already, don't interrupt—listen. See square D 14? That's where their Third Army is, some sevenity thousand strong. They're heen there five days. Our western force, which is not strong enough to attack, has been hanging on to and harassing them; we cannot make a grand attack, yet, we hope to scatter their army and bag much of it. It has marched a long way, fought a lot, and lost nearly all its transport, and it must be starving, quite played out, and very short of ammunition, and—this is the point—it has only sot one, line of rail communication, which is cut! The railway's back along here—see?"

The other nodded.

"Of course we cut this line when we retired. In fact, I believe, tho I'm not entirely in the confidence of headquarters, that it was arranged for the enemy to advance here. Naturally they have been doing their best to reopen communication. Being splendid engineers, they've done a lot; but so far they have not succeeded, for no trains have gone up, and only a small wayon convoy or two—we mere trifle, The countr regiments—the flotsam and jetsam of the communications.

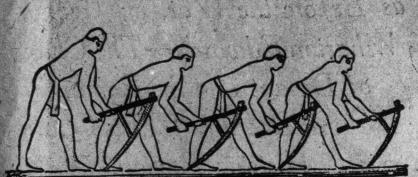

The yard, that seemed to weigh so much on the "Shunter's" mind, was a maze of loaded trucks — nothing but rolling stock. He must indeed have been a fancier, this railway traffic officer, for his collection was large and varied. Here were covered trucks, open trucks, box trucks, short trucks, begin trucks, black trucks, brown trucks, grey trucks—all full of supplies for the army ahead. This mass had overflowed the original fan of sidings, and fresh ones had been laid everywhere, inside the yard, ourside the yard, even down the streets of the little village — everyhere where the ground was fairly level. At one corner stood huge mountains of forage, some not even covered. At frequent intervals in the lanes between the lines of rail strode sentrics. Above spluttered electric lights, whose beams were reflected from the shining tarpaulins, and in places there were lamps under the wagons to illumine the dark corners where a man might lurk. On high the lights on the signal-posts twinkled deristively as they waited for the traffic which did not come. The station itself was a roofless ruin.

The engineer proceeded toward a cloud of dust lit up by flare-lights which showed the position of the work on the new sidings, leaving the "Shunter" in his

as a genuine surprise to most of us who consider ourselves reasonably well informed. Indeed, if it were not for the great conflict which has made Liege, Namur, Dinant and other places names that take colossal stature in history the real loca-tion of the adventures of Rosalind—happily not a moving picture heroine-might have taken years and years for its general acceptance by the reading world.

The real Forest of Arden is not in England. It is in Belgium. It is-or was before iron-shod war devastated it—one of the most beautifully picturesque and charming spots in the world. You have repeatedly read of it in the news-Ardennes is the name—as the bloody fight has ebbed and flowed throughout its green and autumnal stretches, once the realm of enchantment, legend

"Reaching from Liege southward to the frontier of France," says George Wharton Edwards in his delightful "The Forest of Arden," "stretches this great forest dotted with cities and villages, and cut by deep, wooded valleys, through which charming rivers wind. There is still a stretch berween Marche and La Roche which is unbroken wildwood, and herein lies the veritable forest (so it is said) of Shakespeare's 'As You Like It.' It is still something of a terra incognita, and is thus most attractive"

And yet a man who had the time and the noney to be a sentimental pilgrim has found that there are at least 50 places in England where one may linger "from noon to dewy eve and say:

as they hold, between the rivers Meuse and Mo selle. They maintain that its geographical position ought to have been known to Shakespeare, and that he is most vehemently to be reprehended for imagining that a palm tree could flourish or a lioness be straying in French Flanders."

What though England may claim that Shakespeare's Arden is her Arden, and that "Under the Greenwood Tree" could be sung only as it should be sung in Merrie England? Surely no bitterness will result between the allies, for in the mutual claim there may be the elements of closer friend-

The Garden of Romance.

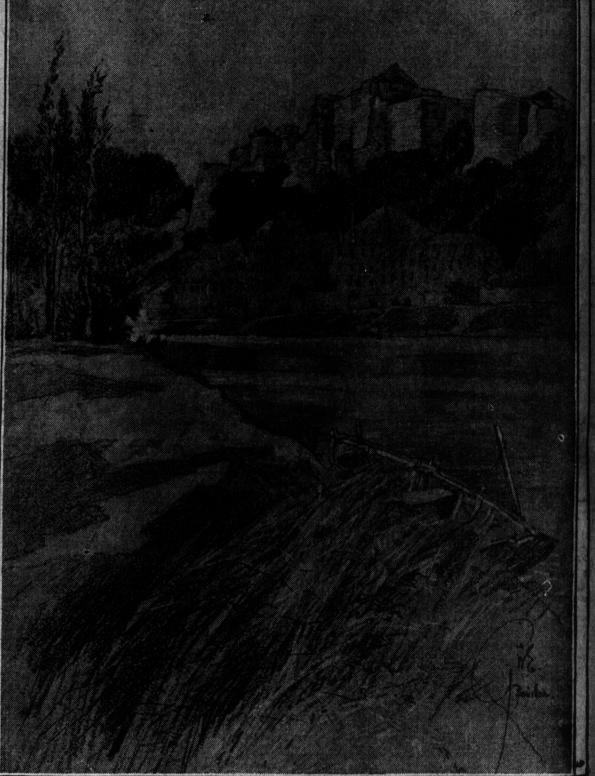

There may be other gardens of romance in various parts of the world-Persia and other lands of the east are embroidered with them-but none will take the place in our literature for sheer pictorial idyllism of the Forest of Arden, which, though war may scar and rend, will ever be in our mental acceptance a love-lit wildwood.

Dinant, with a dreaming river running through its heart, is called the gateway of this real Arden -Dinant with its high, watchful citadel and its busy bridge, both of which went to wreck before

Edwards wrote of it, and Dinant after the we had smitten it to ruin. Tragedy was there. But one realizes acutely in sentiment what the blow meant when he catches the sympathetic spirit of the writer, who here gives his impressions upon his entry of this gate to Arden and what he seit in leaving it:

Gateway of the Enchanted Forest.

"At first a world of dark, undulating, recky land, masked in verdure of shining green he and heather, high bordered with lines of darker fir. the frowning fortress castle." Every lover of Shakespeare—and is not this audience, as wide as the world?—will associate with these scenes not merely the written word romance, but stage vistas of an impelling charm in which moved fair figures famous in the art of the drama. He will recall many actresses of an older time (either from sight or fame), and more modern exponents of stately comedy like Julia Marlowe, Henrietta Crosman and Margaret

You aren't busy: but buzzy. You confuse activity with productivity. A squirrel in a cage is industrious, but he accomplishes nothing. He expends a tremendous amount of energy without result. You're always on the go. From day-start to desk-down, mouth and hands ply incessantly, but you don't apply hours or powers economically. You are most expensive man on your pay roll and your duties should be correspondingly regulated.

You have never calculated minute costs and so you squander yourself in the execution of details which can only be profitably handled by subordinates.
You read mail which does not demand; your attention and thereby rob yourself of the time which should be devoted to the analysis of letters which produce problems and betray inefficiencies of management.

You persist in personally answering correspondence that can as ably be handled by the clerks who are directly concerned in the communications. You receive and entertain countless individuals whose needs can better be served by others, and in your mistaken notion that you are familiar with the ramifications of your business frequently complicate matters for the man to whom you are finally forced to turn over the caller for satisfaction. You tell stories and listen to the yarns which they evoke, "butt in" en assistants at all sorts of odd and inconvenient moments and flatter yourself that

Your job demands thought and thought requires ease. The vital issues which arise each twenty-four hours are few and you'd always have the letsure to deal with them properly if you'd learn to conserve your forces and quit in terfering with little things.

One of the essential principles of sucess is this rule:
"NEVER DO ANYTHING WHICH YOU CAN HIRE SOMEBODY EXAMPLE." As it is, important decisions are constantly being delayed, or, thru your lack of a sense of proportion, are incapably made by underlings without the capacity to pass upon issues.

No firm can long survive in these days without scientific control. New ideas must be continually adopted, competition is scouting for them and while you are investing yourself in trivialities your rivals are inaugurating methods and installing devices which meanwhile elude your knowledge. Battles of all sorts are won by planning. No general can lead his men to victory unless he stays in his place.

Discipline and order cannot be maintained without a directing influence. When you don't remain where you belong, there's disorder everywhere. When you go downtown tomorrow, tell your stenographer to keep track of you for the coming week and render a report in detail on Saturday. One hour spent in studying the document will demonstrate that half of your time was frittered away on nonessentials.

night
I saw the spindrift rise,
And I saw by the thin moon's waning tight
The shine of dead men's eyes.

The men who never knew fear:
They rose with their swords to their hips strapped tight,
And stripped to their fighting gear.

I hauled below, but to and fro
I saw the dead men glide;
With never a plank their bones to tow,
As the slippery seas they ride.
While the bale-star burned where the mists swayed low

They clasped each hand to hand,
And swore an oath by the winds that They swore by the sea and land. They swore to fight till the Judgment Day, Each night ere the cock should crow

Where the thunders boom and the Mghtnings play
In the wrack of the battle-glow.

America-Watching

We look out across the sea wastes Thru which our fathers steered Their fragile bark With Freedom's Ark, Whose temple here they reared.

Without stint their blood and treasure.
To guard that shrine they gave.
Think you we'll quall,
Like cravens fail
That heritage to save? We see you thru the far sea mists
Beat back man's savage foe.

We know full well
That, if you fell,
Our bugle call would blow.

We doubt not of your prowess, yet, if your fight went wrong— We are watching, England, watching One hundred million strong.— Kent Perkins.

The Harvest Moon

With swords agicam and guns aflame In troop and squadron and platoon. At harvest-home the Reapers came, Under the waning harvest moon.

Their sickle neither paused at Dark Nor idled in the fervent noon: Their sheaves ley livid, cold, and stark, Under the dwindling harvest moon.

Benighly, without stint or dearth, Nature had given her annual boon, And crowned with gold the feastfu Earth, Under the golden harvest moon.

Man only—learning, all too well,
Her deadlier secrets bared too soon—

The features of the Young Fellow, who was really about 30, tho undistinguished individually, combined to form a arrivedive countenance, clean shaven, and blessed with a frank and ready smile. Something about himpossibly the white cloth knotted about his necke suggested the engine room. As a matter of fact, he had been a stoker, was now owner of a second engineer's ticket, and was looking forward to obtaining a first—when the war came. His ship being laid up, he found work on a mine-sweeper as an ordinary seaman. "My fingers didn't like the deck work at first." was apparently his only serious objection to the change.

He accepted one of Lucky Jack's cigarets, spat neatly into the sawdust, modded, took a mouthful of port, and said:

You are not called upon to do so by any law, either human or divine, Make your husband behave himself, or go away somewhere and live quietly with your own family. I don't see how you can care anything for such a brute as your describe. ANNIE LAURIE.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

We are two girls, 17 years of age, and acquainted with two very nice boys. We would like you to advise us whether it would be right for us to tell our parents of our friendliness toward them? We are not allowed to be too friendly with boys. I hope you will advise us in some good way.

ANXIOUS.

WHY. OF course, little girls, of course it is right for you to tell your parents. It is wrong for you not to tell them.

Who do you suppose cares most for you, some boy you've just happened to meet somewhere, or the mother who would cut her right arm off at the shoulder to save you from one serious pans of mortal agony?

If the boys don't want you to tell your mother about them get rid of the boys; they'll never do you anything

LOVE LAUGHS AT MASKS

By Michelson

In the flutter of many silken and sibilant sounds, in the glow of resy lights, and the flashings of grotesque colors that are pierced by eyes shining thru slits in black masks, she thinks her identity is concealed—or hopes it isn't QUITE, as the case may be. But no such scene can hide any really GREAT essential fact from Sharlock Caria. fact from Sherlock Cupid.

No detective ever could hope to have eyes capable of sleuthing like Love's: Love laughs at the notion of a mask—as a concealment. As an ornament, as a teasing bit of coquetry, as a strip of cloud across the sunlight of HER, it is all right. So let it come and go until that delicious moment when signal or chance reveals the clear sky of her face.

Secrets of Health and Happiness

A Way to Rid Yourself of the Tobacco Habit

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A.B., M.A., M.D. (Johns Hopkins).

BACCO has no medical virtues—that I'll avow. The unchallenged "solace" accredited by hervous smokers to this lavish, heart-expanding weed is a vicory for their cause. It is such a victory, however, as the tory for their cause. It is such a victory, however, as the armies in Europe frequently report, something like this: "Our left flank gave way slightly, our right flank also gave way somewhat, and so did our centre. We even retrented a little for strategic reasons, despite the overwhelming superiority of the enemy's numbers, but our victory in thus repulsing them is all the more complete."

Thus it is with the alleged "solace" that smoothes the brow of the otherwise harassed adherent of Lady Nicotine. Actually what has taken place is the hypersusceptible and irritable development of the smoker's temperament brought about by the indulgence—that is an appetite and a craving for the drug. When this is satisfied by pipe, cigar, cigaret er a piece in the mouth, lo! calm and quiet hover over the face of the previously ribhled waters. Instead of blame, credit and honor are given the plant.

Opinions Vary Widely

Nicotine is but one of the many fervid, soul-stirring, tissue-boiling constituents of burning tobacco. As fifthy and unsocial as the tobacco chewing habit is, it lacks some of these dangers, the smoke, heated vapors and other poisonous fumes of the burning refuse.

The tobacco habit cannot be considered either a religious or a moral question irrespective of its physiological and economic waste. Indeed, because it is an extravagance for many men and the origin of throat, tongue, stomach, auditory and various other serious distempers in some persons, does not prove it to be a menace economically and physiologically for everybody.

Experimental results are always divided and at variance as to the effects of the tobacco habit upon muscular and intellectual efficiency. Whether a man is slim or fat because he smokes is also still a moot point. There is neither vice nor virtue in the matter. Nor does the cigaret habit ever lead to the alcohol habit or even to any immoval habit.

Yet, when all is said and done, no sane or physically perfect man should smoke. Tobacco it is unanimously admitted, can do no one any good. If, then, it cannot aid even those it by chance does not harm physically, why carry a lighted match into the powder magazine of health?

Method of Cure

worthless to everybody, except those who deal in it, plant it or manufacture its finished products.

"But," you ask, "how am I to break the life-long habit?" The answer rests partly in your own will to throw off the shackles and in part with your determination always to do something else than smoke when you crave the weed.

"The much vaunted silver nitrate cure is not be trifled with. Poisoning with nitrate of silver is always worse even than the poisoning by flery embers of paper and tobacco smoke. Nitrate of silver is a caustic which may liferally eat away the tongue and nearby tissues.

Almost any simple astringent such as a teaspoonful of alum or of chlorate of potash to a quart of water will answer the same purpose as the most dangerous caustics. Used frequently as a gargle and as a mouth wash whenever the ravening desire is upon your tongue, it will be one of the helpful means by which repugnance for the niootine can be established.

Nevertheless, much remains to be done. It may even be necssary to touch the palate, the gums and the "tichy" parts with glycerite of tannin or quince jelly. Meanwhile there is a parched, almost quenchless craving and gnawing in the aesophagus and stomach which must needs be met. To assuage these demands a glass of milk and a few crackers; a cup of hot chocolate or a dozen or so candies, all to be taken as often as you please, will, if carried out with pergistency, end the hunger for tobacco within a few months—never to return.

THAT THE VEIL THAT HIDES THE FUTURE IS GOD'S KINDEST GIFT.

THINK most of us will confess to a sort a half-laughing desire to peep into the future, to question the stars. By palmistry, crystal-gasing, dream interpretation, clairyoyance, cards, tea-leaves, melted lead, we seek to drag aside the veil, impalpable as woven mist, we more when the stars. By palmistry, crystal-gasing, dream, interpretation, clairyoyance, cards, tea-leaves, melted lead, we seek to drag aside the veil, impalpable as woven mist, we may be to the future, but heaven spared her that!

It was two days before the marriage, at St. James Palace, January, 1858, of Victoria, Princess royal of dreat, Britain, and Brederick, Crown Prince of Prussie.

The restless, imperious 18-year-old bride-elect, with nerves worn to shreds by an endless day of rigid formners allties, had begged just a moment in the air before dressing for dinner. So with dress skirt-looped high over gay Balmoral, tasselled boots, netted hair and turban hat, whe no sooner reached the quiet terrace than thru the foggy twilight two figures sprang to meet her. The tall, soldierly one was "Graer Fritz," her diannee. The slighter, shorter, fair-haired one, was "Bertis"—Prince of Wales—her best loved brother and ser chum.

Brother and sister caught hands and whirled around and about, like a pair of joy-mad motes, in the sunlight. Suddenly, a cat—not royal tabby, june an ordinary cat—raced across the terrace and into the fog-blurred shruber," View Halloo—gone away!" shouted "Bertie"—And joining in the fun "Fritz" became "the pack" and gave tongue gloriously, at which the scapegraces selzed him by either hand; and etiquette forgotten, the future German Emperor and Empress, and the King of Great Britain and Emperor of India, etc., went-romping "across country" following the cat-fox. Something loomed dimity before them and—bangl—head-on—the whole treverent pack dashed full into—Guilty heads hung low, while that good man, so straightlaced he bent backward, segained his breath. And then those riotous young royalities got a lecture on deportment. "Vick

EDITOR IS A DRAW.

The advent of an editor upon the Empire stage has proved a big draw for the London house.

The editor is Horatio Bottomly of John Bull. He is seeking recruits, and is delivering a strong patriotic address at the Empire, as his "turn."

When oil leaks along a shaft, it is common practice to remove the shaft and cut in it a helical groove in such a direction that the groove picks up the oil leaking along the bearings and, as it were, screws it back into the gear box or crank chamber. This is an almost infallible remedy, but of course it may be used only with a plain bearing; with a ball bearing gear box one must attend to the arrangement made to prevent leakage, i.e., the stuffing to prevent leakage, i.e., the stuffing nox, felt washer, or whatever may be provided. It is often equally effective to provide an air release. On some well-designed modern cars there is in the top of the gear box quite a large anothers, which is covered with gauge Winter Garden production, barely missed Mary Garden as its star feature. The Shuberts and Miss Garden had the latter's figure for the show and serves to allow air to escape as had the latter's ngure for the show and serves to allow all the parts heat up. Otherwise pressure happened that caused all negotiations is generated in the gear box and the oil to be declared off.

English Automobile Insurance

Some Comment and Good Advice

The following interesting comment on English automobile insurance is taken from The Motor, published in England:

We have just had submitted to us for consideration a policy covering a motorcar against the usual risks for the forthcoming year, and this policy, we understand is the standard policy.

a motorcar against the usual risks for the forthcoming year, and this policy, we understand is the standard policy of all the offices which are working under what is known as the tariff scheme. There are two new points about this policy which call for consideration on the part of insurers. The irst deals with third-party claims, and we observe that in the new policy the persons who are held covered against claims by third parties for damage, accidental injury or so forth, are: The owner of the car, any relative or any friend driving with the consent of the owner. Neardy all earlier policies have held covered the paid driver, and it is absolutely essential that any person insuring a car should see that his paid driver is covered against third-party claims. The law holds the person actually driving the car at the moment of accident personally and individually responsible for the damage if it can be proved that he was the person at fault, and it might easily arise that the paid driver was a man with certain possessions, such as a house, furniture, etc., and the insurance company could, if it chose, leave the paid driver to settle the claim up to the extent of fits capabilities, contending that, as they were only covering the owner of the car against any claims that could be made against him, they

"The Pioneer Boys of the Missouri." by Harrison Adams, is a bright and instructive adventure story for boys. It continues the author's series of pioneer stories, and deals with the sons of the Bob and Sandy Armstrong who were the "pioneer boys" of the Mississippl, having come from Virginia to the Ohio, and later to the Mississippl. The date at which this story opens is 1804, and it tells of travels across the prairie, buffalohunting, meeting with the Sioux Indians, the explorers Lewis and Clark. Besides being a story of lively action and interest, it imparts information and interest in the wounded after a heavy engagement, there was found a half sheet of notepaper, on which we was a true picture of pionee

GRAND CONCERT FOR HOME CHARITY

Hope Morgan Arranges Artistic Program by Local-Talent.

The grand concert in aid of the diverdale Settlement, which is to take place at Columbus Hall on February 13, is now commanding the attention of all those interested in local charities. The affair is under the immediate patronage of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Hendrie and the program is being arranged by Hope Morgan, the well-known soprano. Among these whose names appear as participants are: Grace Smith, the distinguished planist; Marguerite Fleury, who has just returned from Paris; Mrs. Freyseng, d. Mrs. W. G. A. Lambe, Betty Caldwell, Ruchven McDonald, George Chadwick and Paul Hahn, the 'cellist. Glees will be sung by several of Miss Morgan's pupils and Mrs. H. M. Blight will assist at the plano. With such an array of talent the artistic success of the occasion is assured and well known charity workers are putting forth every effort to swell the funds of the Riverdale Settlement to the very largest amount possible. Everyone should patronize this concert.

Many musicians and others who have heard Mr. Singer since his return from Europe are urging him to give a recital in Massey Hall, and it is quite probable that he will do so before the season ends. Mr. Singer, Luigi von Kunits, violinist, and, Paul Morenzo tenor, gave a concert in Hamilton last Tuesday evening.

Laura Newmann, the brilliant Can adian planist, was heard in recital last week at the Canadian Acdemy of Music, when she was welcomed by a large audience. Miss Newmann secured her greatest success in Schuman's Papilions and Chopin's Bercuse and Scherzo. Three dainty little sketches by Cyril Scott were given with delightful spontaneity, but the Appassionata Sonata was not quite convincing enough. Kathleen Hungerford, a vocalist of decided promise, ably assisted. She has a good voice with plenty of power and a temperament which with added training should produce excellent results.

And How to Select Them

Buying a piano is either easy or difficult, according to the way you set about it. Don't court disappointment by selecting an instrument in a haphazard way. Remember: "there is a stan-dard VALUE in planos, as in everything else."

Here, at the Mason & Risch Building, you have the opportunity of learning definitely just how good any piano should be for its price.

Perfectly logical! For here is a great building with all but one floor devoted exclusively to keyboard instruments—in a range of prices that fits

Thomas H. George, who booked Marcella Craft for the Eigar Choir concert at Hamilton last week, was net by a serious proposition when at the last moment it became known that the celebrated soprano was suffering from a temporary loss of voice due to a sudden climatic change. It just happened, however, that Elizabeth Campbell, contraite, of the Aborn Opera Company, was visiting in Teronto, and Mr. George at once telegraphed her to come to Hamilton and fill the vacancy. This Mrs. Campbell did to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. She was a splendid voice, and was most cordilly welcomed.

New Plays and People On New York Stage

"Madame Sans-Gene" Eagerly Greeted and Proclaimed a Success Francess Starr in Play Built on Reverence, Purity, and Innocence - Broadway Happenings.

EW YORK, Feb. 6.-It is no new thing for grand opera to have all the world is there a people who we good music and pay more for the that looks forward to seeing a new with more vivid expectations or pered while they waited for Toscanini to appear, take up his famous baton and give the opening signal for the first of Umberto Giordano's "Madame Sans-Gene," it was not strange that a certain expectant tenseness thrilled certain expectant tenseness thrilled the air.

Everyone wishes to believe that he was "assisting"—as the French say—at a first night that would go down in musical history as one long to be remembered. There was something of personal jealousy in everyone's desire that "Madame Sans-Gene" should be the operatic hit of the decade. You knew it by the wild applause, the nervous eagerness to acclaim everything. When I tell you that the applause was nervously profuse during the first act, rose to wild enthusiasm in the second act, and from then until the final curtain, steadily became less and less marked, I have recorded New York's popular and critical opinion.

Do you remember Sardou's play.
"Madame Sans-Gene?" The opera is the play with the washerwomanduchess speaking with less patois, and duchess speaking with less patois, and Napoleon even more a jealous husband and less a wargod. Geraldine Farrar's impersonation of Madame Sans-Gene won great favor, as did Signor Amato's Napoleon. You felt less of the loss that opera always imposes upon drama. In themselves they were pleasing historical personages—as were Martinelli, as Lefebre, and Segulora, as Fouche, But Farrar's ages as were matthem, as Fouche, But Farrar's washerwoman-duchess is not equal to her Madame Butterfly, nor even her opera. There is the ever dramatic background of the French Revolution with its mad crowds and unbelievable excesses with all the riotous color of one could wish. There was a demonstration toward the end of the first act when the revolutionary crowds massed across the stage waving the tri-color and sing-ing the 'Marseillaise.' The war could ot be kept entirely out of even the Metropolitan—but the demonstration was accorded with true Metropolitan Frances Starr's New Play.

With the masterly staging of David Belasco, and his no less wonderful work in guiding Frances Starr in the miracles of simplicity, Edward Knob-lauch's "Marie-Odelle" achieves the in possible. The play is a dramatic shadow—halo is perhaps the better word. War comes to a hidden convent and wakes a woman who has never seen a man. The nuns leave but Marie-Odelle remains. War rolls on but a corporal—played with consummate art by Henry Vogel—remains and him Marie-Odeile loves, thinking him St. Michael, and by him she has a child. All that she understands is a child. All that she understands is that heaven has come to earth. A miracle has been wrought for her—sin she does not know. Even the Mother Surerior, when she comes back, feels the ice in her heart melt as Marie-Odelle points to her child with a heavenly smile. She must turn Marie-Odeile adrift and take her veil away from her, but as she does and Marie-Odelle goes, she, herself, sees the strange light about her head and blesses the child.

If there had been the slightest shade of insincerity in Miss Starr's acting, the play would have gone down to faiure. "Marie-Odeile" is Frances Starr plus David Belasco. It is impossible to conceive of another manager seeing even the tiniest possi-bilities in this latest Knoblauch play. It is as unlike "My Lady's Dress," or "Milestones" as they are unlike "Kismet." Lacking in dramatic force, "Marie-Odeile" wins by dramatic simplicity. It s a dramatization—with war as an excuse—of the odor of sanc-tity and the belief in saints. Reverence, purity and innocence are its unitles. "The Clever Ones."

The Punch and Judy Theatre has opened its doors after several weeks of darkness, with Alfred Sutro's "The Clever Ones." It was a first night, too, but Mr. Sutro will not remember this first night as pleasantly as he does that of his "Walls of Jericho." does that of his "Walls of Jericho."
Lest you have forgotten, let me remind you that the Punch and Judy Theatre is a private venture of Mr.
Charles Hopkins, who is his own owner, manager and producer. He is very successful, is Mr. Hopkins, but comedy cannot be counted among his abilities.

Mr. Sutro's comedy release its functions.

Mr. Sutro's comedy pokes its fun at the advanced ones. There is a wife and her sister and her daughter, Dorand her sister and her daughter, Doris—they are the clever ones. Oh, yes, there is a husband and father too but he isn't clever at all. He only supports them all and complains that they would rather be "in the movement," whatever the most advanced movement may chance to be—than in the kitchen." There is a lover, too, Mr. Hookins, himself; who poses too, Mr. Hopkins, himself, who poses as an anarchist because he knows that Doris will "just love" him then. How the lover wins Doris and loses her to gain a truer love is the story of the play. It sounds rather thin, doesn't it? That is precisely how it plays.

When Money Counts

a sudden shock to everyone. Ever since he Shuberts and Anderson have had the Hippodrome, these three master workers have been considered engaged forever to write, compose and produce the Hippodrome shows. stage in New York. Nowhere in the world is there a people who could not conceive of the Hippodrome without them—they were the Hippodrome. B. Iden Payne—another English producer—is presenting a ripping production of Sheridan's "The Critic" at the Princess Theatre. You have undoubtedly read the play and thought it very amusing—but played as it is at doubtedly read the play and thought it very amusing—but played as it is at the Princess, it is amazing. The theatrical comments and the digs at the critics are amazingly fresh and pertinent, today. Mr. Payne, who plays the original press agent, has saved us from the costumed, historical swash-buckle by speeding the whole play up, and insisting that it be played with a sincerity and verve that carries it off nicely.

"WAY DOWN EAST" WAS BASED ON ENGLISH NOVEL

William A. Brady said last week while watching the crowds flock into the New York Playhouse to see "Sinners" that its success was due, in part, to its resemblance to "'Way

"BIRD OF PARADISE" HAS GREAT FORCE

Story of Play Which Is Returning to City Intensely Dramatic.

THAT love is love the it comes in any rectal guise, and that human hearts are pretty much the same, the they beat under skins of varying shade, and in bodies of unaccustomed surrounding, is the striking primary lesson of Richard Walton Tully's celebrated Hawaiian drama, "The Bird of Paradise," which Oliver Morosco will present here for a return engagement of one week at the Alexandra Theatre soon.

Indeed, the tragedy of this powerfu ment of his devotion to this lovely but sadly primitive little creature Wilson not only loses caste, but he loses that essence of ferce and distinction which is his by right of birth and race. It is only when he eventually realizes his rapid descent, and realizes it enough to turn avagely shourt ferce that his rapid descent, and realizes it en-ogh to turn savagely about face, that he restores even a modicum of his seif-respect—and brings about the great tragedy of his sweetheart. In contradistinction Mr. Tully has drawn the gayly self-abandoned beachcomber, "Ten-thousand-dollar" Dean, one of the most critical debreaters to all south sea literature, and the equal of any of Stevenson's celebrated types. Dean is saved by a wide-awake, thorogoing American girl, even as Wilson is almost destroyed by a charming savage.

The lengthy cast, which includes the original company of Hawaiian ukalele players and Hula dancers, the only one of its kind in existence, since the almost complete invasion of even Hawaii's immost strongholds by the Japanese, is headed by Miss Lenore Ulrich and Mr. William Desmond, two players who are not only well known and thoroly experienced, but very entremental playing reg, and the form of the form.

THEATREGOERS who have seen only one actress in 'Peg o' My Heart" would be a bit surprised if they could see some of the other Pegs who have been presenting this entertaining comedy on tour. The surprise would lie in the fact, convincingly brought home, that while have succeeded, no matter who created the title-role. If there was ever an actress proof part, it is Peg. I have seen four Pegs on tour In the one-night stands, some-

Strand Theatre. "Cameo Kirby" is a photo-play version, in five acts, of Booth Tarkington's well-known story. And Dustin Farnum, the embodiment of chivalrous grace, will be seen in the fittle role. There is something indescribably charming about the atmosphere of the play. It is the atmosphere of the golden days of Southern prosperity. On the broad back of the Mississippi River innumerable watercraft are seen plying. Chief among such craft is the Mississippi steamboat, with its picturesque captain and crew, its gamblers, and the rest. Part of the story takes place on board one of these steamboats.

"Cameo" Kirby, the hero, is socalled because he is a great connoiseur of cameos. He is the son of a New Orleans planter who dies broken in spirit and broken in fortune. Law.

Last Sunday afternoon in the Occident Hail, Queen street, the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Canada was formed. Over 45 exhibitors were present and decided to unite to oppose what they consider unjust regulations aimed at theatres and theatre managers. F. Leon Brick was unanimously elected president of the new association. The other members of the executive were: Thomas Graseman, secretary, and W. D. Appleton, treasurer, with Messrs. Gerbertig, Westcott, Thaler, Liscombe, Jones and Redmond.

Jones and Redmond.

It was decided to place the case of the theatre managers before city architect rearse, in an effort to obtain theatro licenses for 1915. It was suggested that the managers be given a certain time to get their houses into shape, as some of them admittedly do not conform to the city bylaws. It was also decided to appoint a committee to look after the exhibitors' interests when the matter of moderating the child law comes up before the Ontario Legislature next session.

In making his remarks to the meeting the chairman emphasized the necessity of giving the public a fair deal.

"You know as well as I do that a good deal of this so-called persecution on the part of authorities has been well earned by the unscrupulous exhibitor." said Mr. Brick. "There are many exhibitors that knew their theatre was ill-ventilated that took no steps other tham a little perfume to right the wrong. There have been many cases where theatre managers, in an effort to make a few dollars when they saw people flocking to the theatre, have turned their admission sign from 'five cents' to 'ten cents,' and

"The exhibitors must show their willingness to do the right thing by the public, and then if they are not rightly done by they will have righteous cause to b'ck—and k'ck strenuously."

The result of the first week's crganization was that after retaining ganization was that after retaining Heyd and Heyd as attorneys, the city

Heyd and Heyd as attorneys, the city architect consented to several moderations in the requirements, and will grant the licenses for 1915.

It is quite probable that the scope of the new association will be increased and that all exhibitors in Ontario will be asked to become members; if this is the case, not only will the association be used to protect against laws but also against film companies and landlords. FOR KING AND COUNTRY"

In one portion of the dark room are tanks filled with colored liquids, groblue, amber, sepia, etc. Into these tanks, according to the locale of the scetche various parts of the positive are put. Those portions of the positive what are supposed to have been taken at night, are immersed in a blue mixture, that a shade approximating moonlight is shown when the positive is shown the screen. If a scene is taken in a room supposed to be lighted by electricit that scene is bathed in an amber solution. If it is an exterior, in a count where strong sunlight prevails, the warmness of that atmosphere can best reproduced by sepia tint, and the film is accordingly put into a sepia bathere are obtained all the beautiful color effects to be noticed in the products the most artistic and thoro-going of the producing companies.

The tinted film is rinsed, dried and cleaned, and the various portions a now sent to the assembling-room, at which place I will take up the subject the next issue.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

Mr. Barry.—See Mr. Conness at the firm now making Canadian principal characters in the scene being briefly outlined. (2) The synopsis should be separate from the scenario itself. The scenario reader considers this first, and if he finds it absolutely unsuited to the purposes of the company should be separate from the scenario itself. The scenario reader considers this first, and if he finds it absolutely unsuited to the purposes of the company, rejects the manuscript then and there. If the synopsis contains something, of interest to him, he will read the scenario itself and pass upon its merits. (3) Do not separate interior and exterior scenes in number, but follow them chronologically. (4) Each scene as it takes place, even tho the action has taken place in the same location previously, receives a separate number. It is, however, well to write a scene synopsis, something like this: In park, 3, 9, 22 and 35. Dining-room, 14, 18, 21. Steps of house, 1, 11, etc. (5) If the actress plays a part of any importance at all, and thus requires a person of experience to play it, you should include her in your cast. If, however, it is a part that occurs in, say a single scene, without any bearing on the plot, and with very little action, the role will be played by a supernumary and it would not be necessary to include the part in the cost.

-- ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS AND GOOD, KIND, DEAR DOG MUTT -IOHN GOES COASTING AFTER THE STORM, AND WHAT HAPPENS.

It snowed and snowed the other night;
Such banks around next day,
If they would have them cleared this year Was very hard to say.

Well! Johny went to coast that day,
Pa said, "Be careful, do!
Those snow banks high are dangerous things And one might land on you."

Well, Johnny went to coast I said,
The hill was long and STEEP,
And 'round the slide and everywhere
The snow lay white and deep.

Well Johnny started—one! two! three!
Ha! Ha! Ho! Ho! what fun!
But—Oh! my dears, that isn't all
THE STORY'S JUST BEGUN.

Yes! Johnny started—Oh! dear me!
And my! what happens now?
The sled—GOES AIMING FOR THE SIDE, He really can't tell how.

And dearie! me! what happens next?

He hits the snow, Oh! my!

The SLED stops short, but JOHN keeps on

No time to even cry.

But wait! my dears, THAT isn't all; He hit the snow I say,

And there he stuck with feet in air,
Just like a Y some way.

Right THRU the bank and UNDER John As nice as nice could be.
And there he stuck WITH FEET IN AIR Just like a Y some way.

Poor Pa stands at the top, Oh! Oh! He twists his ears and cries: "Uproot my son! Uproot him quick!!!

He's there before your eyes,"

Well! Mutt, good dog, was there, of course, And great was his distress; He showed more brains than Pa or all I really must confess.

For when he saw John's tree-like plight He grabbed a sled you see,
Then steered right off to where John was
As quickly as could be.

Then at that snow bank biff! bang! crash!
Mutt's sed went—SAY! dear me!
Right THRU that bank and UNDER John, As nice as nice could be.

THIS did the very thing you see Mutt wanted, for you know Young John went flying up in air; 'Twas odd but it was so.

And down that slide—Ho! Ho! They went, while all the people cheered; Twas GRAND but it was so.

Now, instead of facing each other, when we sat down in the circle I don't began to ducking, but little Old Loon called She is bad enough, but her dog Toodles is worse. Of all the horrible dogs I ever saw, it is the most horrible—a wretched poodle, so fat it can hardly waddle about. However, I could have stood even Toodles it only Jock had been Ieft alone. Unfortunately Jock had a hitred to Toodles, and the way he pinched her and prodiced her with his beak was simply heautiful to behold, but Aunt Elizabeth caught him one day in the very act, and "Positively my dear Helen (Helen is mother), with one of my darling innocent Toddles' pretty white locks in his savage beak."

The World Window

More Light German Ways

Britons the world over are naturally convinced that this war was deliberately planned and prepared for by the Prussian militarist party, and they know now that behind the Junkers were the deceived and deluded German people. The official papers issued by the various governments have fixed responsibility for this hideous crime against the foundations of Christian civilization, and the French Yellow Book particularly has made it clear that the time was of German choosing, and that the Serajevo assassinations only afforded a plausible excuse for throwing Europe into the melting pot. But in the months that have passed other facts have come to light clinching the charge that in German eyes the favorable moment had arrived to secure world dominion and impose German ideas of "Kultur" on Europe. Not the least interesting of these revelations are given in a book just written by an English lady, American on her mother's side, who was for five years engaged as governess in the household of a German prince and had frequent opportunities to meet many of the prominent Germans whose names are now familiar in the records of the war.

It speaks volumes for this lady's acumen that early in 1914 she became satisfied that trouble was in the air. She accidentally learned of a secret visit to Berlin maie by Enver Pasha and the Egyptian

Early Signs

Prince Mahoumed Ali, and that frequent consultations of general officers were held in her prince's house. In May even the peasants in the Black Forest on the Rhine, were talking of the coming war, which, however, they imagined would be with Russia only, and not with France and England. She heard so much and imagined so much more that at last moved by patriotic feelings, she wrote a long letter to Sir Edward Goschen, the British ambassador at Berlin. It was intercepted—she was accused of betraying her trust and placed under arrest in the castle which had been her first German home. Escaping with surprising ease she reached London early in October last. Much occurred during her five years' residence to instil suspicion regarding German designs on Great Britain, and these indications began on her first arrival at the castle on the Rhine. There she found her pupils, two small boys and their girl cousin, playing a war game invented by Count Zeppelin, and taught them by their military governor. Their toy dirigibles dropped bombs on a model of London !

What Germans Thought of Britain

This lady found princes, diplomats and soldiers interested in little else but the coming war with Great Britain. She quotes some remarks made by the doctor attached to the household, and suggests that they expressed the general mind of the people. "He thought," she writes, "that Germany being superior to the rest of mother earth was bound, for the good of the world's population, gradually to spread over more and more territory. I asked if Germany looked forward to conquering the United States as well as Europe. The herr doctor answered earnestly that something of the sort must happen in time, tho, of course, only after many years, several generations probably. We are born to be a conquering people, he said. It is our fate whether we wish it or not. The world's spirit must carry us on and on from one triumph to another as it has been in the past, ever since Frederick the Great gave us our first impetus." The now famous Bernhardi was particularly scornful in his reference to Britain, which was "going down exactly as Rome had gone down, and the knell of her greatness was sounding already. Not one of her colonies," Bernhardi prophesied, "would stand by her when the day of trouble should come and most of them would go against her." What is this wiseacre thinking today?

Bernhardi, from his description, appears to be a supreme type of the super-German. We are told he possesses a "short, thick neck and beetling eyebrows." Frankly rude when told that the governess was

of a Kind

English, his manners improved when he received the further information that her grandfather was an American. Later she was told by a countess, one of the princess' ladies, that to Bernhardi women were not much higher than the "four-footed animal kingdom." that he loudly contradicted his wife even at hotel tables when they traveled together; that he always walked ahead of her in the streets and pushed past her or even other ladies, if strangers to him, in order to go first thru the doorway. Bernhardi indeed is just the kind of savage that a believer in force should be. Bernhard Dernburg, the German propagandist in the United States, did not at all impress our governess, who thought him unpleasant and wondered how the ultra-aristocratic court could grant him entrance. "With his high shoulders, his Jewish face and untily looking beard, which could not hide the unscrupulous cruelty of his jaw, from a woman's point of view, he was more like a Hebrew wholesale merchant of lower New York than a persona grata of a European court,"

An Old Scotchwoman on the Kaiser The kaiser comes in for some not altogether complimentary criticism. Our governess quotes the same countess as exclaiming of him, "Strange that a great man can be so little. He enjoys putting people out of countenance." An old Scotch nurse who had been for years in the prince's family had no illusions about the kaiser's love of England, and thus delivered herself: "He may like some of his high-up English friends as well as he likes anybody besides himself, but he despises the nation and thinks it has gone to sleep. All the same he's afraid of it, I believe. That sounds like a contradiction. But the kaiser is a contradiction. So is the crown prince. So is our prince. They would all three like nothing better than a war with England. * * You mark my words, all that the German kaiser and his sons, and their set which our prince is in, like about the British nation is what it has got." This old Scotch nurse, with her native shrewdness, was evidently better able to size up the kalser than were the British statesmen and diplomats who believed him to be a sincere friend of their country. She, at least, has not

Two Needed Reforms

In a recent editorial The Montreal Journal of Commerce, referring to the announcement appearing from time to time in the war news that the army has advanced or retreated so many "kilometers," remarked that this proved somewhat confusing to the English speaking world, which is accustomed to another system of measurement. It showed the innate conservatism of the Anglo-Saxon peoples, that even when the United States adopted a metric currency it did not extend the decimal system to all weights and measures. Canada is in the same position, while Britain and the other dominions still preserve the old coinage along with the numerous other tables that are so puzzling to the juvenile mind. Almost every other civilized state in the world has adopted the metric system in its en-

The result of the refusal on the part of English speaking nations to fall into line places a quite unnecessary burden on their manufacturers engaged in foreign trade. They are compelled, as The Journal of Commerce says, to carry two series of sizes thruout their factories, and their workmen learn for themselves the ease with which they can handle the metric system as compared with the needless difficulties caused by the odd divisions in the English tables. Canada, it is urged, should lead the way in adopting the decimal form, just as The Sunday World would like to see Canada leading the way in the reform of English spelling. The considerations of ease in learning and saving of time are just as strong in the one case as in the other.

Our Serbian Allies

In a little pamphlet printed for the Victoria League in London, England, Mr. G. M. Trevelyan, who traveled last year in Serbia, gives a very appreciative account of the country and its people. Looking to the current notion of the Serbians it is somewhat surprising to be told that they are extremely democratic people, more so than the English, Americans or any other people among whom there are great distinctions of rank or of wealth. They are a nation of peasantproprietors, each man with his own piece of land; no less than 86 per cent. of the population belong to this class.

The typical Serbian peasant or soldier, who are one and the same, Mr. Trevelyan writes, is a fine, upstanding type of humanity, who looks you in the face like an equal. They are also a very pleasant and kindly people, as indeed are most of the inhabitants of the Balkans when they are not engaged in racial war. But if they have the virtues of the peasant they also have his limitation of outlook. In the almost complete absence of an upper or even middle class they lack leadership, and the mercantile element is as yet very slightly developed. Like all the states of eastern Europe they have little generosity or liberty in dealing with alien subjects.

It is satisfactory to find that Mr. Trevelyan considers the Austrian assertion that the archduke's murder was prepared or instigated in egree unlikely. Austria has advanced no proofs, altho it was evidently to her advantage to provide these if she had them. Without proof and against likelihood Austria made her charge and delivered an ultimatum in terms demanding the surrender of Serbia's sovereign rights. Almost everything was conceded, yet Austria, under the compulsion of Germany, forced on the European war. Britain has been drawn into the quarrel on the side of justice and liberty, and in the hope that, now Europe is in the melting pot, out of the convulsion will come a readjustment of the nations on racial lines.

Federal Enforcement of Federal Law

For many years the mother country has provided freely the money needed to develop the natural resources of the imperial dominions. They have always enjoyed the full confidence of the British investor, who believed them to possess the same qualities and characteristics that had given the United Kingdom so distinguished a place among the trading nations of the world. Taken altogether that confidence has been justified, but the fact has unfortunately led the unscrupulous individuals who are found in every community to misuse it for their own advantage. That the attempt has been successful in not a few cases with resultant loss to the British investor cannot but weaken his trust in the good faith of Canadian borrowers and promoters.

The reckless speculation in real estate that marked the recent history of the western provinces would have done enough damage locally and nationally had it been confined to the Dominion. But various companies and individuals took their propositions to Britain and obtained considerable sums by methods that cannot be too severely condemned. Only the other day two officials of the Union Life Company were convicted of selling shares in the United Kingdom, knowing them to be practically worthless. Acts of this kind do not end with the loss to the investor and the punishment of the offence. They lower the standing of the Dominion in the investment market, and make it all the harder to secure money required for legitimate enter-

British Columbia has had an unpleasant experience in connection with the Trust Company, which is alleged to have obtained deposits without legal warrants, and to have committed other infringements of the federal law. Under our present practice offences against Dominion Statutes are left to the provincial law officers and courts to prosecute and punish. Systems which leave it to one authority to legislate and to another to enforce rarely, if ever, work satisfactorily, and Canada's is no exception. Remedy can only come from the establishment of federal courts and prosecution by federal officers. The Dominion Government and Parliament have the requisite powers to enforce conformity to federal law and should act upon them.

I was not present at evening address, but the newsure of a man sinking in the darkwould Confucius have said to such rould have held out the most he Christianity, and the other great re-"And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice: Lord, one Ohrist, speaking thousands of years before to the Hindus (as the vad Gits records) said: "Manby whatever road a man approaches me, by that road I receive him; for all roads are Mine." Christ has nowhere said, "Take my hand," and if the spirit of what He did say as recorled by the three synoptical gos-pels. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up me, let him deny himsen, his own cross daily, and follow me."
The fellowship of the cross is as old as the world, and Christianity is almost the last of religions to hear of it. But many, like Mr. Mott, do not appear to be aware of the fact.

MR. MOTT evidently does approve of the law which the failures and lings, the immature and careles "offered another chance in some incarnation." But when we look ing such nearow views about the great religions of the world. But an American evangelist is capable of anything. We have had D. L. Moody in Toronto deny that Christianity taught the brotherhood of man. We have had Dr. Torrey boast in Massey Hall of his fine equipages and comfortable home. We have had Dr. Chapman in the same piace administer a formula of conversion much as the a formula of conversion much as the clerk administers the eath in the police court. And why should not Mr. Mott slander the beary religions of the British Empire? Does Mr. Mott wish us to believe that Jesus Christ would have objected to the admoni-tion, "Profit by experience?" Or does he wish us to think that Con-"The Windom." Byen the Mossems and the wish us to think that Confucius had nothing to offer the world but the action suggrestion to profit by experience? Mr. Mott sutely knows that Confucius taught a philosophy, not as a religion, but in conjunction with a religion, and it is frequently made a taunt by certain gainsayers that of Confucius, that of Buddha, or Tacoism, and that known as Shinto. The first is, of course, a philosophy, the second is a faith, and the third is a cult. In describing an Englishman as an evolutionist, a Christian and an Anglican, one does not say that he practises three religions. No more do the Chinese And the day will come when enlightened mankind, as seven now enlightened mankind, as seven now enlightened mankind, as seven now enlightened mankind; as over all, and thru all, and in all." Those who make the mistake of regarding outward and visible signs as of more importance than inward and spiritual graces have still many births before them, and they are scarcely less backward to think that any special formula or special set of terms or technical language is more efficacious than another. As the Master said in the sit of the Master said in the stream of the Mean," By the ceremonies of the Mean," By the ceremonies of the sacrifices to Heaven and Earth, and face the Heaven and Earth they served God, and by the ceremonies of the sacrifices to Heaven and Earth, and the heaven and Earth they served God, and by the ceremonies of the sacrifices to Heaven and Earth, and the heaven and Earth they served God, and by the ceremonies of the sacrifices to Heaven and Earth, and

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Announcements were made here today that the West Side Tennis Club, which the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association last night awarded the national championship tournament for 1915, had already made plans to make the meeting the greatest in the history of tennis in this country. To carry out building plans, which include new stands, dressing rooms and other buildings for players and officials, a member of the club announced that it had been offered a loan of $100,000. By the first week in Sep. ember, the time set for the tournament, President Myrick of the West Side Club assured the association last night that everything would be in readiness to accommodate even larger crowds than attended the Davis Cup matches on the club's course at Forest Hill, Long Island, last August.

To take the place of the national championship, which it has staged for thirty-four years, officials of the Newport Casino announced that a special invitation tournament for kings of the courts would be arranged.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—Roscoe Barnes, major league baseball star of forty years ago, died at his home here last night after a brief illness. He was 65 years of age. "Ross" Barnes, as he was known to the baseball world, played with the Bos-ton and Chicago Clubs. He was with Boston from 1872 until 1875, during which time Boston won four pennants. Barnes played second base.

French Boxer Earns

Jean Peosey, the Man Who Gave Jim Driscoll the Hardest Fight of His Career, Led His Regiment in Heroic Fashion and Receives Highest Military Decoration.

(BY HENRI FERRER). (BY HENRI FERRER).

PARIS, Feb. 6.—It may interest the weepers and Little Navy Folks to know that Jean Peoscy, a French boxer, who gave Jim Driscoll, former featherweight champion of Great Britain, a terrine battle and won encomiums for his courage, has made good in a more serious line. The same courage and determination that marked his scrap with Driscoll was on tap in front of the German guns. He led a company of his regiment against the enemy in the proverbial "rain of shot and shell," with such effect that he received the highest military decoration France has to offer, to wit, the Military Gold Medal.

Adrien Hogan, the former French middleweight champion, is at the front and was creased in the arm.

Lurie, the French heavyweight, who was knocked out in the seventh round in London by Bombardier Wells on April 2, is himself a bombardier, sand has been at the front since the beginning of the war.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6 .- Written spe ally for The Sunday World.)—Mike ons is to tackle the heavyweights son Equare Garden Club, that Mike as agreed to box Gunboat Smith has created quite a stir in boxing circles. And there is very good reason for " cCoy and Joe Wolcott has a middle tackled the job successfully McCoy, while hardly more than a middleweight, fought heavies, and Wolcott the "Barbadoes Demon" also took on some of the big fellows. The latter's most noted victory was over Joe Choynski at the Broadway Athletic Club of this city in 1899, if memory serves me right.

Fitzsimmons has also been given credit for going out of his class, but I doubt if Fitz ever fought at the middleweight limit, or near it, after beating Jack Dempsey for the title in 1891.

times by men of his own avordupois, and probably the worst licking he ever took in his career was given him by George "Kid" Lavigne, the lightweight champion. Of course, Wolcott had an alibi for that—that he weakened himself by reducing to meet the weight conditions. No doubt that did not help him any, alitho there are a great many who are of the opinion that the Saginaw Kid's gameness under fire was really what defeated the negro.

Another thing not evidently known by those who prate about Wolcott, and especially of his defeat of Choynski, is that the latter was a sick man when he entered the ring with the coon. Joe should never have been permitted to box that night at all, as it was only a question of how long local experts that Williams' muscular he conuld stand on his feet. His pride, development—he is a miniature Hertho, was too much for him—he didn't cules in appearance—has cost him want it said he was afraid of a man much of his hitting power. For tea 25 or 80 pounds lighter. I was one of rounds he knocked the veteran Johnny the few who advised him to call the Daly about the ring, but at no time bout off, but other pressure brought to bear in addition to the confidence he had that no small man could beat him overruled me, and Choynski went force. Terry McGovern did not have down to a quick defeat.

with Johnson next month, that the big boy is very confident he can defeat the champion. Of course, much of the stuff sent out from that quarter of the weakest sort of imitation of the wallop that made McGovern from now on will be of the unreliable sort, largely edited by the boosters for sort, largely edited by the boosters for the big mill, and those who contemplate wagering on the result should not permit the training camp news to influence them one way or the other. However, I hope the big fellow really does feel that way about the job he has undertaken. Confidence is a wonderful asset in a fight and if Jess, way down deep, thinks he can defeat Johnson, that confidence is not going to hurt his chances any.

Kilbane ought to win on points at six rounds. He is too skilful for the Baltimorean, and while the latter may be every bit as fast he will find Johnny's defense the greatest he ever bumped into. Unless Williams makes a good showing in this short, affair there will be small chance of promoters bidding for a long bout between the two chompions. However, Kilbans, if he is as foxy as his critics make him out, might draw a close

There is also the chance that Willard's great size will help him in the match with Johnson. Jack has never shown much against a big opponent, barring the Jeffries flight and Jeff was a shadow of himself then. Johnson's best work in the past has been done at close range. He is flatbeen done at close range. He is flat-footed and never chases his opponent about the ring in an attempt to do with Willie Beecher at Madison Square damage. But in clinches his great Garden he looked anything but a strength has enabled him to pinion an champion. In fact, had Beecher been opponent's arms until he manoeuvred in condition at all he might have in condition at all he might have reversed the verdict. For two or three celebrated uppercut as they were rounds Weish fought as amateurish a battle as I have ever seen and Beecher, who by the way, is far from being a world-beater, was doing nearly all the work the may discover that Willard's world-beater, was doing nearly all the work up to the time that his lack of strangill is quite as afternable of the second beautiful to slow up to second beautiful strength is quite as great as his own and, not only that, upper-cutting an opponent who stands three or four inches higher than himself will not be so easy a matter. It may develop that Willard's immense bulk, which many consider his greatest handicap, may, in this fight with Johnson, prove his greatest asset.

However, this is a flight one could

Stallings Put Pitcher to Sleep

The question of how to make his men sleep the night before the first game of the world's series was a problem which worried George Stallings, but he solved it in so far as his pitcher was concerned by a neat subterfuge.

"The night before the first game I called Rudolph aside," he writes, "and said to him: Dick, I don't expect to work you tomorrow, because I think we can get away with the game without starting you. But you had better get your regular rest now, because it might be necessary for you to step into the box there, and pitch a little if things break that way and we have to take some one out. I just want you to be ready."

"The result was that Rudolph went to bed that night with no anxiety on his mind. He did not think he would pitch the next day, and he had nothing to worry over, so he slept and came to the job fresh and clear eyed."

The Kid's last appearance in New York as a bantam was on Christmas Day, and it was then annoounced that he weighed 116 pounds. But to everyone at the ringside he looked more like a feather than a ban-

R.C.B.C. NOTES

Lawn bowlers, tenpin, billiard and dancing enthusiasts all dropped their avorite amusements and joined the throng of four hundred merry euchre players who filled the club rooms Monday evening, bent on making this effort of the club to help the needy of Riverdale an unqualified success.

To say they accomplished their purpose is to mildly express it. Everyone enjoyed the evening hugely, and the committee are entitled to no small credit for the large part they played in furnishing such an entertaining eyening.

We thank the talent who kindly helped the good work and are indeed pleased that so may friends turned out to assist this worthy cause.

Tuesday evening the tenpin and lawn bowlers were hard at it. A. R. Clarkes grabbed the odd game from the Infants at tenpins, which gives them a half-Nelson on the second series, but the Trolleyites may turn the juice on another notch and break away, as six wins on their postponed games will place them neck and neck with the leaders.

Thursday Broadviews, who had a splendid chance, fell down and dropped two to the J. E. Russells, altho they put up a score that would have copped three games had their opponents not been knocking the wood at an unusual clip.

At the Central Y M.C.A. Friday, in one of the fastest handball games ever seen in this city, Harry Phelan defeated Harry Downing by the score of 21 to 13, thereby winning the championship of Canada. The score, however, does not indicate the play by any means, as Downing had all the better of the play in the early stages of the game, but seemed to weaken a little under the pressure, while Phelan made à whirlwind finish, running out the last eight points without losing the serve, Phelan will be obliged to defend his title once every two weeks against all-comers, and, as he already has several challenges, it certainly looks as if he will have a busy time if he wishes to hold the title.

"For the life of me I can't see why faro is more immoral than poker, but the police court judges decided that way. When a poker game was raided it was $25 and costs for the keeper of the game and $1 and costs for the players; on the other hand it was a case of $200 and costs and $10 and costs. I mean that the heavy fine was plastered if the police brought in as evidence the box, the card spread, the case keeping machine, and chips.

"At that, we used to gamble a bit at illicit faro, and by way of laughing at the law still more, we had a plain clothes copper sitting in once in a while as case keeper. When he did this we slipped him $5 a night. We protected ourselves principally by chalking a layout on the top of a table. Cases were also kept in chalk and the dealer handled the deck from his hand, instead of from a box. Money, from a 50-cent piece up, supplicated the chips.

"At the dealer's elbow were a bowl of water, a sponge, and a towel, so if the bulls broke in we could wipe out the layout, dry the table top, and be engaged in a pitch game in no time at all.

"I'm's game was manned by volunteers. If one fellow wanted to deal he would put up a bank roll and be ready to stand a tap. If he went broke we would give him the chance to sit in for pay as case keeper the next night—that is, if the copper wasn't on the job.

"Now, I want to tell you how a piker tried to beat this bank, but before I start maybe it is necessary for some of your readers to know the main technicality of fare. The first card exposed loses and the second wins. If a pair comes out together the dealer takes half of the bet. Thus, if the six is he first card out and you have planted a bet on it you lose, unless you have played it to lose by placing a copper on the chips.

"With the games not in danger of raids the cards came out of a box face up. In dealing out of the hand the cards were face down. Now, we will get around to the piker.

"The game had progressed for a couple of hours and he had never bet nore than half a dollar in that time, when suddenly he asked of the dealer:
"How much can I bet on this turn?"
"After searching himself thoroly he dug up $18.50, which he put on the lane. The jealer looked at the pack a minute and turned. The card came nine-jack.

What a Period Means.

The reader interpreting this message and supplying a period would probably assume the intelligence to be:

Broke Even. Lost on Delly.

That was the intent of the sender, but his wife got the notion that the situation was this:

Broke. Even Lost on Dolly. Taking the message as a hurry up call, she pawned all of her valuable jewelry and wired as much money as possible to her husband. When she learned that he was not in distress she was irritated and decided to sue the telegraph company for her worry and her humiliation, and also for its stinginess with periods.

Jimmy Bardell's Story. A FARTY was outfitted in Chicago to invarie the south and pick up some money. The party consisted of a fighter (Lem McGregor, the St. Joe Kid), a wrestler, and a weight-lifter. The managerial end was Jimmy Bardell, once a wrestler and also well known in Chicago as a trainer for the White Sox.

The program was to go from town to town and offer a prize for any one who could stand off the boxer or the town and offer a prize for any one who could stand off the boxer or the wrestler. With the weight lifter the procedure was to get around a sporting goods store and crack about his ability to dislodge anything short of a ton. If anybody wanted to make a side het, naming an object to be lifted, the proposition was always considered and sometimes snapped up. The lifter had demon strength, and there was no trick in his work.

Standing in Each League is Shaken Up When Big Scores Are Turned In

Records were hung up in all leagues at the Toronto Bowling Club during the past week, with the standing being much affected in each, and with the closing in of the second division holders on the front runners the ideal stage of the race in the respective leagues is now forthcoming, and with all teams about rounded to form the season from now on should be the most exciting in years. In the Business Men's League, The World, in their Saturday night clash of last week, won the odd game from Wm. Davies Co. and showed some of their old-time form when they clouted out an 883 count in the middle game. Harry Williams, English billiard impressario on the World team, was easily high for the night with 572. In their worst performance of the season Boyd Storage were defeated by Bigley Mfg. Co. in two out of three games, rolling only to form in the second game, which they won with 882, the biggest count of the night, while the two outside engagements were easy wins for Bigleys with the smallest counts of the Season Boyd Storage were defeated by Bigley Mfg. Co. in two out of three games, rolling only to form in the second game, which they won with $82, the biggest count of the night, while the two outside engagements were easy wins for Bigleys with the smallest counts of the cason. Doc. Reeve's funeral hall figured in the tragedy. The Doc working in Gordon's place also worked on the nerves of some of the other rollers, who now insist on giving Doc's mineralite a massage before the next encounter. Walter Armstrong, for Storage, was high with 572. City Hall, tied with Boyd Storage for the lead, were also given a surprise when they lost two out of three games to G. A. Stitt & Co., with the latter rolling high game and high total for the season, with marks of 1035 and 2763 respectively. In the big game Tommy Ryan counted 234, while Charlie Boyd of fivepin fame was close behind with 223, and the pair with the unusual experience of finishing with totals of 616 divided the honors for the night. Manager Stitt was next in line with 552, while Finchamp was the last over with 525. Ed. Tolley, for City Hall, was high with 558. In the last game of the week in this league Laggett's Drugs won all three games from Acton Publishing Co. In the Fivepin League Capalites won all three games from Sewer Pipes in their match last Saturday, with Andrew's collection only coming close in the middle game, which was dropped by nine pins. Ping Strong, for Canalites, was high 504, while Colonel and J. T. White were the next big counters with 466 and 441 respectively for Sewer Pipes. Joe Chamberlain and Manager Dods were high with 445 and 417. Senators won two out of three games from Millionaires, also last Saturday, with the latter annexing the last game with 774, the biggest count of the aright. Johnny Howden, for the old boys, was high with 472, Jack McKinlay a close second with 455, while Gunboat Simpkins got his usual good average for a 437 collection. For Millionaires, Fred Pyne cashed with a 204 count for good measure in the middle game, wh

Good Scores Are Again the Order in All Leagues-The Standings and Averages.

Once more good rolling was th order at the Athenaeum Bowling Club last wek, starting off Monday n in the A League, where Eaton's to the Ontario Press into camp for odd game in three. Jimmy Nelson. the "Big Firm." was high man the "Big Firm." was high man for the night with 623, every game being over the 200 mark. Since the New Year opened the "Admiral" has been four times to the plate and rolled over 600 on each occasion. Gregory followed his team-mate with 568, while George Toiley of the losers was their high man with 560. Tuesday night Beverleys took two out of three from Switt Canadian, the winners best being Wells, 590, Hendricks, 560, and Frank Sherwood, the losers best, with 552 Wednesday night the crack Athenaeums got a bump from the much improved Brokers, thanks to the 50 pin handicap per game. Sam Schilimproved Brokers, thanks to the 50 pin handicap per game Sam Schil man once more demonstrated his and the to reach the 600 mark by rollin 607, reaturing his middle game with 224 count. McMillan was next be with 560, while "Shamrock" Murphy who would rather bowl than eat we the winners' best man with 567. Thurday evening Brokers rolled off the postponed game with the Widmen and resulted in them winning all three games. The scoring was small Dog postponed game with the Widner and resulted in them winning all three games. The scoring was small, Dowler being high man with 528. Friday night "Vodden's" Cleaners took the odd game from the Toronto Motorcyce Boys, Gallow of the winners being high for 560 count while Griffiths of the losers was next best with 588. In the B Lengue Swiff Canadian, Wantus and Diamonds each won from Admacs, T. M. C. C., and Canadian Oli respectively. Jolly, 550, Murphy, 524. Houston, 519, and Douglas, 515, were the best scores turned in during the week in their class. In the Five-Pin League only two games were played Dukes taking the odd game from Waldingtons while Burroughs won aff three from Photo Arts. No doubt this next week will see many good results and surprises in all leagues. The following is the standing of all leagues and the ten high average men in A and B Leagues with handleages:

In the Mercantile League the past week's rolling resulted in a general shake-up, Book Room managed to annex the odd game from O'Keefe Brewery and United Typewriter copping all three games from J. J. Mc-Laughlin, taking the first game by three pins, and winning the aext two by good margins. Goodyear Tire came along on Tuesday night and by good margins. Goodyear Ticame along on Tuesday night armanaged to take the middle game to a good margin from Drug Tradin pulling off a surprise. Good years a good pluggers and may upset the dor this last series. On Friday night for this last series. On Frida W. J. Gage made sure of three from Hunter, Rose. Next we book Room of Monday hight, and hot game is looked for. Friday night Drug Trading take a crack at W. J. Gage. Both these teams are rolling good games and both teams are out to win, so good scores are looked for: The standing:
