WHERE TO BUY.

A FEW REMARKS ABOUT OUR LEADING MERCHANTS.

And What They Have to Offer to Our Readers.

The Greatest Variety-The Lowest Prices. The best satisfaction given at the Establishment mentioned below.

The holiday season has come once more and the good old custom of indicating our friendship and esteem by a present, is one of the greatest of enjoyments of the season. It is a custom that affords a great amount of pleasure to those who give as well as to those who receive; and as many of our country readers will have a limited amount of time while in the city, we propose giving them a few hints that may be a great help, and will assist them in getting to the right places to buy their Christmas goods. Starting at the upper or west end of the city we first drop into the large and well stocked grocery store of Mr. J. W. Taber, on the corner of King and Westminster streets.

Here you will find one of the finest lines of groceries in the city; a fact that is fully demonstrated by the large number of persons who deal here. In this establishment you can get everything required in the shape of Xmas groceries, at the lowest prices. Mr. Taber also carries a fine line of fruit including grapes, oranges, dates, currants and raisins. Also a large stock of Christmas confectionery at prices that will suit you. Don't fail to give him a call while in the city. Leaving Mr. Taber's we next call at

Mr. J. G. McNally's variety store. This is one of the largest establishments in the city, and just the place you can get what you want for Xmas. On the main floor of the store a grand display of fancy goods and glassware, delights the eye of the visitor. Here, also, a magnificent line of hanging lamps, table and study lamps, and lamps of every description is shown large show cases are filled with silver plated goods an elegant parlor suit shows in one of the large plate windows is admired by all passers. The price of this suit is only $35.00, which is wonderfully low. On the second floor a beautiful show of furniture of excellent design and finish is made, including sideboards, chiffoniers, lounges, easy chairs, bedroom sets, etc. On the upper flat is the upholstering department, and reserve stock room. Mr. McNally's stock this year is larger and better assorted than ever before. His goods are all marked in plain figures, and all who visit there will be treated handsomely.

We next call at

Mr. Blackmer's Jewelry Store. Where an elegant line of jewelry, silver ware, watches, clocks, etc. is shown. The stock is selected with great care and the goods are of the best quality. His stock of gold watches for ladies and gents is larger than

THE DIRTIEST CITY IN THE WORLD

Is in China, and its streets are from two to six feet wide.
Amoy, in China, bears the unenviable reputation of being the dirtiest and most unhealthy city on the globe. The reputation is thoroughly deserved. What is a more unpleasant fact is the promise of the present tendency of affairs to a lower and worse condition. The reasons are obvious to a new comer at a glance.

The city is built on the edge of a mountainous island and is exceedingly old. Inscriptions on ancient tombs run back as far as the beginning of the Christian era, and coins found in accidentally discovered graves date dynasties from 500 to 1,000 B. C. During all this period the hillsides of the city have been used as burying grounds. As the population increased the houses encroached upon the cemetery land, until finally the two became hopelessly intermixed. The United States Consulate is regarded as a very superior locality, but it is surrounded by over a hundred tombs. A score of the large blocks of granite used in and about it are old tombstones. On the hill, immediately behind the residence of F. Malampa, the graves touch one another at every point and form a solid white surface of rock, brick, porcelain and cement, covering more than 1,000,000 square feet. Near the Lampavolo-house 20,000 bodies are said to have been buried vertically to save space. They lie, or stand, on a plot of ground of as many square feet. Among proper and its suburbs have a living population of about 1,000,000 and a dead one of four and a half times as many. The wells are shallow and are sunk on the edges of the graveyards and even among the tombs themselves. I have not seen one whose water is not muddy and discolored by the perpetual turning up of the soil.

The city is a relic of the past. It is walled the same as it was in the time of Confucius. It has no sewers whatever. The streets vary from two to six feet in width; no wheeled vehicles can use them. An equestrian would experience great difficulty in turning a corner. Here and there is an open space or plaza, dug out so as to be a huge open cesspool; into it the streets discharge their filth.

For Sunday Reading:
STAR OF BETHLEHEM.
Oh star of wonder!
Star of night!
Oh star of wondrous beauty bright!
Onward leading,
Still proceeding,
Guide us to that perfect light.
The more others are untrue the more God needs loyalty in us.
Every kindness done to others is a step nearer to the life of Christ.
Thank God for sympathy; it has a wonderful power of turning keys in rusty locks.

A watchful soul is a soul upon the wing—a soul out of gunshot—a soul above the clouds.—Phillips Brooks.
Happiness is a sunbeam which may pass through a thousand bosoms without losing a particle of its original ray.—Sir Phillip Sidney.

From David, learn to give thanks in everything. Every furrow in the Book of Thorns is sown with seeds of thanksgiving.
A true faith can no more be separated from good works than the light of the candle can from the heat or the heat from its light.
Lost, yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with 60 diamond minutes. No reward is offered as they are gone forever.

A man who owes an honest debt ought to be willing to give his note for that amount. And on the same principle of honesty, one who owes to God a service ought to be willing to pledge himself to render that service.

If we wait until we have more than we want before beginning to give, we shall die without giving. But if we give out of our scanty portion to those whose need is greater than ours, we shall live as givers, and shall enjoy living. The man who gives from his surplus never knows the real joy of giving.—S. S. Times, A PARABLE.

"Who sang that strain that thrilled my soul last night?"
Queried the King, his courtiers bowing low.
Before the throne with gold and gems alight,
Answered him, moaning: "Sire we do not know."

"We heard the song. It echoes in our hearts."
The singer from our vision passed away.
We deemed him only of his song a part.
And then, it is so long since yesterday,
The singer heard, nor hearing felt regret;
What could it matter where their praise might fall?
The song, at least, they did not quite forget.
Nought is the singer, but the song is all.

What York County wants to know is that the best place in Fredericton to buy Holiday Goods is at Blackmer's.

A BANGORIAN QUOTATION.
Never Was a Newspaper Joke as Your Own.
Kitty Winslow had been struck by a joke she read in a newspaper. It read something like this:
She—Oh, my dear boy, I could hug you for that!
He (enthusiastically)—Come on, then!
She (backing off)—Oh, I said I could—but I won't.

Kitty thought this joke was just too cute for anything. It was such an audacious playing with fire and then retreating with unscorched fingers.
She determined to use it herself at the first opportunity. Her chance soon came.

One afternoon Tom De Witt called and informed her that he had succeeded in obtaining tickets for an opera which she would very much like to see.

"Oh, my dear boy," she exclaimed brightly, "I could hug you for that!"
Such a hint to a man like Tom was as good as a formal invitation.

In an instant she was in his arms, and a liberal number of ardent kisses were pressed upon her lips.
Kitty was the color of a Harvard student in a football game before she succeeded in freeing herself from his embrace.

Then she said indignantly: "How dare you! You had no right to take such an advantage of me! I was just getting off a joke I read in the paper the other day. I was going to say that I could hug you, but—I won't."

And was that the way the joke read? asked, with an amused smile.
Yes, answered Kitty as she caught her breath.
Well, inquired Tom reflectively, don't you think that fellow, who got the joke in the paper, you know must have been dead slow.

And the moral of this little story is never to use a newspaper joke as though it were your own.

An Attractive Store.
An attractive store is that of Helen Campbell, situated directly opposite the City Hall. Mr. Campbell commenced business at this stand in May, 1886, carrying at that time a line of gents' furnishings, along with his present line of boots, shoes and hats. Finding, however, as his business increased, that he was unable (even in the spacious store he occupied) to keep the variety he wished to have, he decided to do away with gents' furnishings and devote himself entirely to hats, caps and footgear. Studying carefully the wants and requirements of his patrons and customers he has made an enviable reputation for his store for honest goods and fair dealing.

Those who have never made purchases from him should do so, as they are sure to be satisfied with the result.

Well that enquiry is easily answered, for there seems to be but one general opinion on that point among shopping people who say that

EDGECOMBE

FREDERICTON, N. E., DEC. 17, 1892.

MR. JAY GOULD.

"They are telling a story in New York to illustrate the wide difference in the fees charged by New York lawyers and those in Massachusetts. An electrical expert legal opinion upon an important point, and laid the matter before Senator Hoar and William M. Everts. Each wrote an opinion, and each sent in a bill. Mr. Hoar's bill was $50; Mr. Everts' $10,000."

We take the above from an exchange, which will serve as a text for what we have to say. Probably the summary of no man for the last half century has run the gamut of public opinion in a scathing way than that of the unfortunate Jay Gould. But after all, is not the late millionaire only a single type of the world's cupidity? Look about in any and all directions and you cannot fail to discover in every walk of life a desire to accumulate without being over scrupulous as to the means. The above extract furnishes a single example of man's unscrupulousness in his dealings with his fellow man. What more right, on gospel principle had Mr. Everts (of true) to charge $10,000 for the mere expression of an opinion, than Mr. Gould in the use of his superior judgment, in taking advantage of a fall or rise in stocks to accumulate an equal $10,000? The one makes money by knowing how to turn sharp corners in railway speculation—the other by his sharp practice in law by means of his legal attainments, or good judgments, yet the one is derided for his sordidness, and business methods, while the other is overlooked by the public or pronounced to be a very able man. But how many lawyers there are of the same stripe who trade upon their reputations gained in the school of adversity, the poor and comparative poor in most cases being the pupils. The same may be said with regard to high cast doctors, of course in this country we have not many whom we consult are disposed to be exacting or over-reaching. But in the United States and in Europe there are hundreds if not thousands of Jay Gould's (M.D.'s) who take advantage of their reputation in the way of exacting inordinate fees. We know what the answer to these counter charges would be, viz. that great lawyers and great doctors have a legitimate right to turn their talents to the best possible account in their own interest, and charge just what they please for their services. No doubt this is true to a certain extent; but when we come to exercise our reason and christian charity, can anyone logically say that Mr. Everts honestly earned $10,000 for merely giving his advice, and that because Jay Gould made a similar amount in the pursuit of his business and because he also brought his talents and judgment to bear upon the operations of the Bulls and Bears his reputation is an exception and he should be condemned without mercy? But all professions and mercantile pursuits are actuated by the same spirit—to get, get, and in getting not always in accordance with the ethical standard set up by the upholders of Jay Gould. It's all a sham. Suppose a tremendous hall storm destroyed all the windows, or glass in the town and there was but a small amount in store to meet the demand, would not the price of glass run up a hundred per cent, and more, and householders would be compelled to buy, especially if the season were severe, and no glass could be had elsewhere for some time. This cannot be set aside it is all in the way of business. It was Jay Gould's way—it is the way of the world—"which nobody can deny."

But then Jay Gould out of his great abundance left nothing to public charities. We do not justify this, but how many rich men have died everywhere equally remiss. For example a few years ago a great ecclesiastical power in the church died (in this Dominion) worth it was said half a million of dollars; what did he leave in the way of charity—nothing; but more remarkable still, notwithstanding several of the important interests beneath his jurisdiction had been languishing, say suffering for many years for want of funds and yet even those were forgotten; and the case is still more palpable when we call to mind that the family of this great prelate were wealthy already. But so it is, you cannot measure money by any defined standard. Charity in this case truly began at home—the suffering poor were of secondary, or no consideration at all. On the whole the memory of Jay Gould (a type of human nature) stands out as well in our estimation as that of three-fourths of mankind: Unfortunately he left behind him one hundred millions of money—too much for any one man, and therefore became a target for the missiles of the jealous and sore-headed stock jobbers who may have lost because their judgement was weak and his strong.

Another principle of Jay Gouldism is contained in the operations of the landed gentry of England and Scotland, such as the Dukes of Argyll, Beaufort, Sutherland, who for their own individual gratification and sport, keep hundreds and thousands of acres of land locked up, productive only in the amount of game these preserves are intended for, while thousands of persons in the country are confined to the village of mere plots of land from which they gather a mere subsistence. Suppose Jay Gould owned and kept locked up in the heart of New York thousands of acres of land, would he, even including his other questionable acquisitions be a worse man than either of the noblemen above mentioned?

THE HOLIDAY TRADE.

The Christmas season is now upon us and scenes of activity may be noticed every day among merchants and buyers alike. A good December's business is the most important thing that concerns all merchants for no matter what the other eleven months of the year may have been, yet, upon the December sales depends the success of the other eleven months. From the appearance of the different stores we should think that our merchants had bought quite liberally, and at the same time, we trust, with caution, for the most serious drawback to a man's business is overstocking and carrying over a large remnant of unsold holiday goods. This proves a very great offset to one's sales, no matter how good they may be, for when a dealer buys too largely, even though he may greatly increase his sales, it is bad policy to buy more than he can reasonably expect to dispose of, for in carrying over a large stock of expensive goods for another 12 months, his profits are very greatly diminished. The Globe trusts however that all our merchants will do a large and profitable business during the next week, and that there will be no reason for complaints from the above or any other cause. We feel that the merchants of Fredericton have patronized this paper handsomely and we could ask for no better Christmas box than this—for we are gratified to know that they value this paper as an advertising medium and in return we can only wish them a trade this season larger than their most sanguine expectations looked for.

A SUICIDE CLUB.

A short time ago a rich and dissipated young man in New York killed himself leaving a letter to the coroner in which he said: "I have committed suicide as per club." Then there came on the scene a friend of the dead man, an actor, who declared that the deceased had been a member of a suicide club, and that he, the speaker, was also a member. The time of the death was up four days before his death, but the club offered him a ten years' reprieve on certain conditions, which he refused, and killed himself as per schedule, as well as per club.

We really do not see why there should be any more fuss made over a man who kills himself under such conditions than over a man—if he has no family ties, who drinks himself to death, or an opium fiend who destroys his bodily and mental vigor by the use of the seductive drug. The death of any of these men or classes of men in the manner indicated is proof presumptive that they ought to die; that the world has no use for them, and that the wisest act in their career is to step down and out and make room for men who have some reason and judgement, and who can benefit the community in one way or another.

There are cases in which a suicide is pitiable and lamentable to the last degree but they are not the cases of death in a suicide club. When a man broken and enfeebled by disease or some terrible calamity loses hope and courage, and finding the burden, as he thinks, too great and cruel to be borne, shuffles it off with this mortal coil, we must grieve over a wrecked and ruined life and the shipwreck of hope, love, friendship, ambition and lofty purposes; but when one deliberately enrolls himself as a member of a suicide club we may be sure that his vanity and his desire to create a sensation are his only incentives, and we may say, with reason and without harshness, the sooner the time comes to dispose of himself, the better.

Vainly and conceit make many people play strange pranks. It would hardly be supposed that they would lead the taking of one's own life, but the history of suicides shows that they are a moving cause in many instances. To make a melodramatic exit from the world would seem to be the bright some people's ambition, but at the same time actual suicide is in no wise different in principle from the neglect of all the laws and rules of health to which vanity impels so many people. The pistol or the vial of prussic acid is a little more swift, but no more sure, and the proximate cause is the same. Suicide clubs should be encouraged rather than frowned upon, for they distinctly decrease the survival of the unfittest. If a man with nothing to drive him distracted or nearly so can find nothing better to do with his life than to merge it in that infinite void called death we must yield to his superior wisdom and conclude that he has made the best possible use of himself. But perhaps this is a poor line of the year to be writing on suicidal subjects, and we would therefore request that any who have contemplated such a step will ponder over the matter seriously, and delay action at least, until after the Christmas festivities have long gone by.

The Dairy.
The fact is being generally noticed that the gold medal at the U. S. Food exhibition in New York, and all but one of the prizes for creamery butter were taken by butter made from cream raised by the gravity process, and also that the gold medal and half of the premiums for dairy butter were awarded to butter made by the same process. Vice-President Morton won a gold medal for his Guernsey butter made from gravity cream while, on his butter made from separated cream he got nothing.

A Missouri fruit grower says: "I have associated with fruit-growing the gentle Jersey cow, as fruit growing and the dairy have points of common interest. If I lived farther from a city or distant from a creamery, I might have decided differently; but living close to the city I find that fruit, milk, cream, butter, cottage cheese, etc., when being supplied to a retail trade, are all appreciated by the same people at the same time; that is, each family will order one or all these for the day's consumption, and they seem glad to have them at the same hour and from the same party."

In reply to the question, "What do you think of oats for a milk cow, and what would you mix with them?" Mr. Gilbert of New York replied: "Oats make almost a perfect ration for a cow in milk, but the trouble is, we cannot afford to feed them. They are too expensive. If you are going to feed them mix some peas with them; in winter add some corn meal, especially if a cow has milked down thin or if your stables are cold. The corn meal will furnish the heat which the stable will not, but it is an expensive way to warm up a cold stable; better hire a carpenter and buy lumber and nails."

Prof. Robertson of Canada wrote to the Listonal dairyman's board of trade, according to the Rural Canadian, that he had been successful in devising a new combination of forage crops for silage which he believes will prove of very great service to the dairyman. He has no doubt but that it will enable stock men to save many millions of dollars a year in the annual cost of feeding their cattle. He asks for a trial and gives the combination as follows: "Sixteen pounds of Indian corn and sixteen pounds of English horse beans, planted together, per acre, mixed with the heads from half an acre of the Mammoth Russian alfalfa." These, he assures the dairyman, "will give a most desirable nutritious and economical ration," in the form of silage. Will some of our readers try it next season?

A FITTABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

What Happened From Not Having a Carving Knife.

Dick and Maggie had been married only three months. As is often the case, some of their wedding presents were duplicates, while some other things, just as necessary, were forgotten altogether. The worst of it was, that, as they lived in a village, and the presents were all from dear friends or relatives, they could not exchange them, as we are told they sometimes do in the cities. However, Maggie being a sensible little woman, with a knack of making things do, they had got along very well.

It was the first of December, and Maggie, as she arranged the table, was reviewing, mentally, her list of presents for Christmas. It had been such a busy year—first, the endless preparations for the wedding, and since then, the settling to rights and making ready of her little home—that she had not found the time for such "fancy work," so she would have to buy the most of them.

She just just what mother and the girls would like—Father, too—in fact, her list was all complete and satisfactory, with the exception of something for Dick. "Last, but not least, oh, no!" she thought to herself with a happy smile. "If he only smokes! To be sure, she was glad he did not; she thought it an untidy, expensive habit, but there were always so many pretty things one could give a smoker."

Here the click of the gate latch interrupted her thoughts, and she flew to open the door.

During the progress of their evening meal, Maggie was so unusually quiet, that Dick finally noticed it, and asked:

"What's up, little woman? Anything gone wrong to-day?"

No. Why? You seem so quiet."

Oh, I've been thinking. That's nothing new. What about? About Christmas. I can't think of anything to give you; you have everything."

That so. Don't give me anything. You have given me yourself; that will do for one while."

"What rubbish!" she said, with a pleased blush. "Any way, I want to give you something; it would not seem like Christmas if I didn't!"

Well, get something, we will both enjoy something we need about the house. That will do first-rate."

The next day as soon as Maggie had finished washing the dinner dishes, and had dried the kitchen, she donned her stylish walking suit, and set out for one of the two hardware stores of the village. Not finding anything that suited her father's fastidious taste, she left an order with the proprietor, to be sent to the city and filled. Then, visiting some other stores to complete her list of presents, she turned her face homeward, with a feeling of satisfaction that the problem was solved.

The following week, Maggie invited her mother, Mrs. Ripple, and the girls, Annie and Katie, to spend a long day with her. Pa Ripple was to come home with Dick at noon. It was an occasion when Dick and Maggie felt very anxious that their little establishment should have its "best foot foremost"; although the family had dropped in singly, time and again, at meal-time, this was their first grand gathering.
