the war raged more fiercely than before, the Indlans burnlag nad destroylng la every direc. tlon, whlle trade wns hroken up and the crews of the vessels slaughtered." Kieft's life was now la dasger from the rage of hls owa people, and elght men, appointed hy puhllc mecting, took coatrol of puhlle affalrs, as far as lt was possihle to do so. Under the command of John Underhill, the Connectleut Indlan fighter, who had lately milgrated to Manhattan, the war was prosecuted with great vigor and success on Loug Island and agalnst the Connecticnt Indiaas who had jolned ia it; but little headway was marle agalnst the tribes on the Indson, who linrassed and rined the colony. Thus matters weat badly for $n$ long period, until, in 1647, the Company in Holland sent out Pcter Stuyvessant to take the place of Kleft. "Ia the lnterval, the Iadlan tribes, weary at lnst of wnr, came ia and made peace. Kleft contlnued his quarrels; hnt his power was gone, and he was hated as the princlpal cause of all the misfortunes of the colony. The results of his miserahle adminlstratloa were certalaly disastrous enough. Slxteea hundred Indlans had perished in the war; hut all the outlying Dntch settlements and fnrms had been destroycd, and the prosperity of the colony had rceelved a check from whlch it rccovered very slowly. In Conncctlcut, the Engllsh had left the Dutch merely a nominal hold, nad had renlly destroyed their power la the Enst. On the South river [the Delaware] the Sweles had settlel, nad, disregardlng Kleft's blustering proclamatlons, hnd fonaded strong and growing colonles. ... The lnterests of Holland were at a low chb."-II. C. Lodge, Short Hist. of the Eng. Cotonies, ch. 16.- A more fnvorable vlew of Kleft ant his administration is taken by Mr. Gerarl, who siys: "Few proconsnls had a more nriluous task in the ndmlnistration of the goverament of a provinee than had Director Kieft. The Roman oftielnl had leglons at command to sus. taln his power nod to repel attack; and in casc of disaster the wholc empire was at hand for his support. Kieft, ln a far distant provinec, with a hamdfnl of solllers crowded in a dilnpidated fort and a few citizens turhnlent and unreliahle, surronnded on nll sides hy sarages ever on the alert for rapine nnd murder, receiving little support from the home governmeat, and having a large territory to defend nud two civilized races to tontead wlth, passed the elght years of his adminlstration nmid turmoil nud dissension withla, and such hostile attuek from without ns to keey the province In continuous peril. The New England colonies were always la a stnte of an. tagoaism and thrcatealng wnr. . . The Swedes and independent settlers on the South und Sehnylkill rivers were constantly maklng encroachmeats and threateaing the Company's oceupnncy there, while pretenders under pateats and independent settlers, knowing the weakness of the goverament, kept lt disturhed and agltated. What wonder that mistakes were made, that policy failed, thint misfortnnes came, and that Kieft's rule bronght no prosperity to the land? The radicnl trouble whth his admialstration was that he was nnder a divided rnle-a pelitleal governor with allegiance so the StatesGeaeral, and a commercial Director, as the representative of a great company of traders. The Btates-General was too buslly oceupled ln cstablishing fts indcpendence and watching the bal. ance of European power to give supervislon to the affalrs of a province of small politlcal lmportance - whlle the Company, looklng upon lts colony merely as a medlum of commerclal galn, drew all the profit it could gather from lt, dlare. garded lts true interests, and gave it only occa. lonul and grudglag support. .. . Towards the Indinas Kleft's denlings were characterized by a rigld regard for thelr possessory rights; no title was dcemed vested and no right was absolutely clalmed nntll satlsfactlon wns made to the natlve owner. Historians of the period have been almost unlversal in their condemnatlon of hlm for the various contests nnd wars eagaged ln with the Indinas, nnd have put on him nll responsibil. lty for the revolts. But thls is an ex post facto critlelsm, which, with a false judgmeat, condemns a man for the results of hls actlons rather than for the aetlons themselves. Indeed, wlthout the energy displayed by the Dlrector towards the aboriglnes, the colony wonld probably have been aaaihilated. $\qquad$ Imprudcnce, rashness, arbitrary actlon, want of polltleal sagaclty may he imputed to Dlrector Kieft, but not excesslve luhumaslty, nor want of effort, nor unfalthfulness to hls employers or to hls provlnce. He has beea gencrally condemned, but without sufficlent consideratlon of the trinls which he experienced, the anxlety to which he was subject, nnd the perplexitles lncident to a government over dis. coatented, ignorant and muthous snbjects, aad to the continned apprehension of outslde attack. Left mostly to hls owa rcsources, and recelvlag no sympathy and little aid, his motlves the suhjeet of nttuck from both tavern and pulpit, aad twice the ohjut of attempted assassination, hls rnle as a whole, thongh disastrous, was not dis-honorable."-J. On his arrival he was grected whth a learty and cordinl receptlon by the citizens, to whieh he responded by reciprocal professions of lnterest and regard. 5.-"The powers of government - executive, legislative, nad judicinl - which he [Stuyvesant] assumed, were quite extensive, and often nrbitrary. Directly or Indirectiy, he appointed nad commissioned ail public officers, framed ail laws, and decided all important controversies.

He directed ehurches to be buit, instailed ministers, and even ordered them when and where to preach. Assuming the sole control of the publie landis, he extinguished the Indian titie thereto, and nliowed no purehase to be made from the natives without his sanction; nnd granted at pleas. ure, to individuals and companies, parcels of lani, subject to such conditions as he saw fit to impose. In the management of these compli cuted affairs the Director developed a certain imperiorisncss of manner and impatience of restraint, due, perhaps, as much to his prevlous miiitsry life as to his personal character. During the whole of his predecessor's unquiet rule a constsnt struggle had been going on between the personal prerogative of the Exccutive and the inherent sentiment of popilar frecdom wbich prevalied nmong the commonalty, leading the iatter constantiy to seek for themselves the franchises and freedoms of the Fatheriand, to which. as ioyal subjects, they deemed themseives entitled in New Netberiand. The contest was reopened soon after Stuyvesant's Installntion, and tbe firmncss of both Director and people, in the maintenance of what each jealously considered their rights, gave indication of serious disturbance to tite public weal." The governor, at leugth, in 1647, conceded "a popular representation in the affairs of government. An election was therefore held, at wbich the inhabitants of Amsterdam, Breuckeien, Amersfoort and Pavonia chose eighteen of 'the most notable, reasonable, bonest, and respectable' among them, from whom, accorling to the custom of the Fatherinni, the Dircetor and Council selected 'Nine Men' as an advisory Council; and although their powers nnd duties were joalously limited and guarded by the Director's Prociamation. Yet the appointment of the Nine Men wns a considerable gain to the cnuse of popular rights. . . . The subsequent history of Stuyvesant's government is a record of quarreis with colonial patroons, with tie English in New Eng. land, the Swedes on the South River, and last not least - with his own people. In fact, the government was by no means weli adapted to the peopie or adequate to protect them. The laws were very impcrfect, and the Director and Comnell either incompetent or indisposed to remedy tbe serious defects which existed in the ndininistration of civil and criminal justice."II. R. Stiles, Hist, of the City of Brooklyn, r. 1, ch. 3. - "Director stuyvesatut was recalled to Europe soon after the surrenticr [to the English - sue below], to vindicate his conduct . . . nnd found himself the object of serious chnrges and most virulent attacks. Ile returned to this country in 1688, and died on his bonwerie in 1672. ... Throughout his chequered life he exhibited a cbaracter of high morality, and in his dealings with the Indians an energetie and dignified deportment, which contrihuted, no douht, considerably to the success of his arms and policy. Alike creditable to his talents are his negotiations with the neighboring English colonics. His vindications of the rights of his country, on these occasions, betoken a firmness of manner, a sharpness of perception, a clearness of argument and a soundness of judgment, combined with an extent of reading, which fow of his contemporaries could cquai, and none surpass. . . . It would afford pleasure were we justified in promouncing a like panegyric on other parts of his administration; but none can review [his arbitrary resistance to just popular demands ] . . and his persecution of the Lutherans and other Nonconformists, withont reprobating his tyranny, and regretting that a character, so faulticss in otber respects, should he stsined by traits so repulsivc as these, and that the powers of a mind so strong should be exerted in opposing rather than promoting civil nnd reilgious freedom. Tine hostility this part of his public conduct evoked redounds most creditably to the character of the settiers, whose struggles for freer institutions cnnnot fali to win for them our sympathy and reganl."-E. A. D. $\mathbf{x 5 0}$.-The adjustment of boundaries with Connecticut.-To settie the long pending controversy between Dutcia and Engiish respecting the territory claimed by ench on Long Isiand and at the mouth of the Connecticut IRiver, Governor Stayvesant went in person to Ilartforl, September, 1650, and opened negotiations. Ifis hands were tied from the beginning by instructions from his company to press no claim to the extremity of a quarrel, because the English were too strong in America to be fought with. He assented, therefore, to the appointment of two arbitrators on ench side, and he named Englishmen as his arbitrators. "The four ngreed upon a settiement of the boundary matter, ignoring all other points in dispute as having occurred under the administration of Kieft. It was ngreed that the Dutch were to retain their lands, in Hartford [the post of 'Good Hope, estnblished in 1633, and which ther had continued to hold, in the midst of the spre:uling English settlement]; that tbe boundary line between the two peopics on the mainland was not to come within ten miles of the IIudson River, but was to be left undecided for the present, except the tirst 20 miles from the Sound, whileh was to begin on the west side of Greenwich Bay, betreen Stamford and Manhattan, running thence 20 milles north; and that Long Island siould be divided by a correspouding line neross it, 'from the westernmost part of Oyster Bay,' to the sea. The English thus got the greater part of Long Island, a recognition of the rightfuiness of their presence in the Connceticut territory, and at least the initial 20 miles of a boundary line which must, in the nature of things, be prolonged in much the same direction. and which in fact has pretty closely governeal subsequent bonndary tines on tbat side of Connccticut. If these seem hard terms for the Dutch, nad indicative of treachery on the part of their two English agents, it must be borne in mind that, by the terms of his instrictions from his principals, Stuyvesant inad to take the best terms he could get. The treaty of Harttord was dated September 10, 1650."-A. Juhnston, Connecticut (Am. Commonireulth*), ch. 10.

A. D. 1653 . - The grant of municlpal government to New Amsterdam.-"Au Interesting noment arrived. A new chty nppenred $\ln$ the nnnals of the world. Its hirth wns nnnounced on the evening of Fehriary 2,1853 , at the fenst of Candlemas. A proclamation of the governor defined lts exceedingly limited powers and named its tirst officers. It was called New Amsterdnm. There was nothing $\ln$ the significant scene which lnspired cuthuslasm. It came like a favor grudgingly granted. Its privileges were few, and even those were subsequently hampered hy the most llliberal laterpretations whirh could be devisel. Stuyvesant made a speech on the occaslon, $\ln$ which he took cure to revenl hisintention of making all future municlpal nppointments. instead of submitting the matter to the votes of the citizens, as was the custom In the Fatberland; nud he gave the offieers dlstlnetly to understand, from the first, that thelr cxistence did not in any way dlmulush his nuthority, hut that he should often preside at their meetings, and at nll times counsel them in matters of importance. . . A pew was set apart in the church for the City Fnthers; and on Sunday mornings these worthles left their homes anil famlies enrly to meet in the City llall, from which, preceded by the hell-ringer, carrylng thelr cushions of state, they marehed in solemn procession to the sanctuary ln the fort. On all occaslous of ceremony, secular or religlous, thry were treated with distlnguished attention. Their position was eminently respectable, hut it hnil is yet no emoluments. $\qquad$ There were two hurgomasters, Arent van Hattam aud Martin Cregier. . . . A. D. 1664.-The English conquest.-New Amsterdam becomes New York.-The Navigation Act of Cromwell, malntalned hy the English after the Stuart Restoration, was continually evaded, almost openly, in the British Americin colonles; and lt wns with the Ilutch nt New Amsteriam that the illicit trade of the New Englanders, the Virgininns and the Marylanders was principnlly carried on. " In 1663 the losses to the revenue were so extenslve that the furmers of the customs. . . complalned of the great ahuses which, they clamed, defrauded the revenue of $£ 10,000$ a year. The interest of the kingdom was at, stake, and the conquest of the New Netherland wns resolved upon. . . . The next concern of the Chancellor [Clnrendon] was to spente to the Crown the full benetit of the proposed conquest. He was ns little satistied with the self-rule of the New England colonles as with the presence of Dutch soverelgnty on American soll; and in the coaquest of the forelgner he found the means to hring the Eng. Ilsh subject lnto closer dependence on the Klng. James Duke of York, Grand Admiral, was the helr to the Crown A patent to James as presumptive helr to the crown, fro. 1 the Klr: his hrother, would merge $\ln$ the crown; and o central authority strongly established over the territory covered hy it might well, under favorahle clrcumstances, be extended over the colonles on either slde which were governed under limltatlons and with privlleges directly secured by cbarter from the Klng. . . The first step taken hy Clarendon was the purchase of the tltle conveyed to the Earl of Stlrilng ln 1635 by the grantees of the New England patent. This covered the territory of Pemaquld, between the Salnt Crolx and the Kennebec. In Malne, nnd the Island of Matowack, or Long Island.

A tltle belng thus acquired by the adroltness of Clarendea, $n$ patent was, on the 12 th of Mareh, 1664, lssued by Charles 11. to the Duke of York, grantlng him the Malne territory of Pemaquid, nll the lslands between Cape Cod and the Narrows, the Hudson River, and all the lands from the west side of the Connectlcut to the enst side of Delaware Bay, together with the Islands of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. The lnland boundary was 'a line from the head of Connectlcut River to the source of Hudson Rlver, thence to the hend of the Molnwk hranch of 1ludson Rlver, nud thence to the east slde of Delaware Bay.' The patent gave to the Duke of York, his heirs, deputies, and nsslgns, 'ahsolute power to govern withla this domaln accordIng to his own rules nad dlscretions consistent with the statutes of England.' In this pntent the charter granted by the King to the younger John Winthrop in $166^{2}$ for Connecticut, in which it whs stipulnted that commissioners should be sent to New Euglind to settle the boundaries of each colony, was entirely disregarled. The Idea of commissloners for boundaries now developed with larger scope, nud the Klug established a royal commissiou, consisting of four persons recommended hy the Duke of York, whose privnte lnstructlons were to reduce the Dutch to submisslon nud to Increase the prerogatives of the Crown in the New Englind colonies, which Clarendon considered to be 'already well-nigh ripened to a commonwealth.' Three of these commlssioners were otficers in the roval army, - Colonel Richard Nicolls, Slr Robert Carr, Colonel George Cartwright. The fourth was Snmuel Maverick.

To Colonel Neolls the Duke of York entrusted the charge of taking possession of and governing the vast territory covered by the King's patent. To one more capable and worthy the delicate trust could to thave been confided. .. . Ilis tltle under the : is commission was that of Deputy Governor; the tenure of his oftice, the Duke's pleasure.
. When the news of the gnthering of the fleet reached the Hague, and explanation whs demanded of Downing [the Engllsh amhassador] asto the truth of the reports that it wns intended for the reductlon of the Now Netherland, he boldly inslsted on the English right to the territory by first possesslon. To a claim so filmsy and Impudent only one response was possihle, n declaration of war. But the Butch peoplc at large had little interest in the remote settlement. which was held to be a trading-post rather than a colony, and not a proftable post at best. The Weat India Company asw the danger of the sltuatlon, but lis appeals for assistance were disregarded. Its own resources and credit were unequal to the task of defence. Meanwhile the English fleet, composed of one ship of 36 , one of 30 , a third of 16 , and a transport of 10 guns, with three full companles of the King's veterans, - In all 450 men, commanded by Colonels Nicolls, Carr, and Cartwright, - salled from Portsmouth for Gardlner's Bay on the 15th of May. On the 23d of July Nicolls and Cartwright reached Boston, where they demanded military ald from the Governor and Councll of the Colony. Calling upon Winthrop for the assistance of Connectieut, and appointing a rendezvous at the west end of Long Island, Nicolls set all with hls shlps and anchored ln New Utrecht Bay, just outside of Coney Island, a spot slnce historical as the landlng-place of Lord Howe's troops ln 17\%6. Here Nicolls was jolned by milltia from New Haven and Long lsland. The clty of New Amsterilam $\qquad$ was defenccless. The Director, Stuyvesant, heard of the approach of the Engllsh at Fort Orange (Albany). whither he had gone to quell dlaturbances wlth the Indlans. Returnlng in haste, he summoned his councll together. The folly of resistance was apparent to all, and after delays, hy whlch the Director-General sought to savesometing of his dignity, a commisslon for a surrender was agreed upon between the Dutch authoritles and Coionel Nicolls. The capitulation confirmed tie lnhahitants in the possession of thelr property, the excrclse of their religion, and their freedom as citizens. The municipal officers were continued In thelr rulc. On tite 29 th of August, 1664, the articles were ratitled . . . and the clty passed under English rule. The first act of Nicolls on taking possession of the fort, In which he was welcomed by the civic authorities, was to order tiat the city of New Amsterdam be thereafter known as New York, nnd the fort as Fort James, in honor of the title and name of his lord aud patron. At the tlme of the surrender the city gave smail promise of lts magnificent future. Its entlre popuiation, which did not exceed 1,500 souls, was housed withln the triangle at the point of the island. . . . Nicolls now established a new government for the province. A force was sent up the Iluison under Captain Cartwright, which took possession of Fort Orange, the name of whlch was changed to Albany, ln honor of a title of the Duke of York."-J. A. A. D. 1664-1674.-The province as the Eng lish received it,-Dutch institutions, sheir inAnence and survival. - "In the year 1604 , when the government passed to the English, New Netherland is said by the Chevaller Lambrechtsen to have coasisted of three cities and thirty viliages. Its population was then about ten thousand souls, excluslve of the Indlans, who were important auxiliaries for trade and peitries.

The inhabltants enjoyed a fair meagure of ireedom and protectlon. High roads already existed, and there were numerous owners of flour lshing farms, or bouweries, and other real property, while urban life was well policed hy proper laws. The treatment by the Dutch of the many English and other allens who already dwelt within the Dutch territory was rather In alvance of the age, while the jurisprudence estabilshed here hy the Dutch, being largely borrowed from the high civllization of Rome, was certalnly superior in refinement to the contemporary feudal and folk law lntroluced by the Engilsh ln 1604. Theorctlcaliy, the admla istratlon of justice conformed to a high standard, and both Dutch and aliens were protected hy adequate constltutional guarantics. We cannot for an instant presume that the institutlons which half a contury had reared were swept Into ohlivion hy a single stroke of the English conquerors in 1064. It vould be more rational to suppose that the subsidence of the Dutch lastitutions was as gradual as the facts demonstrate it to have been. Negro siavery was Introduced by tine Dutch, hut It existed here only under lts least ohjectlonable conditions. A large measure of religious llberty was tolcrated, although the Dutch Reformed Church wis the only one puhliely sanctioned. On scveral occasions delegates of the commonalty were brougit into consulta. tion with the Director-Gencral and Council, and thus, to some extent, a prinelpie of representa tive government was at least recognized, al though it was somewiat at variance with the company's sandard of colouial government, and savored too muci of the English idea und encroachment to be palatable. It must not le for gotten that at home the Dutch were a self-governing people and accustomed to that most important principle of free government - self assessment in taxation. In common with all commercial peoples, they possessed a sturdy indcpendence of mind and demeanor. There is no proof that these cxcellent quallities were diminished by transplantation to the stlll freer alr of the new country. New Netherland was not altogether fortunate in its type of government, experience demonstrating tint the seltish spirit of a mercantile monopoly is not the fit repository of governmental powers. let, on the whole, It must be conceded that the company's governnent introduced here much that was good and accomplishcd little that was perniclous. Iu 1604 lt certainly surrendered to the English one of the finest and inost flourisining coionics of Ancrica, possessing a hardy, vigorous, aud tirrifty people, weli adapted to all tie priueiples of civll and rellgious freelom. Llistory shows that this peopie speedily coalesced witi all that was good in the system lntroduced hy the Eng lish, and sturdily opposed ail that was undeslra. ble. . . . It ls certain . . . that after the overtirrow of the Dutch political authority the Euglish proceeded gradually to introduce into New York, by express command, their own laws and custons. let it requires a very much more extended examination of original sources thau has ever been made to determine absolutely just how nuch of the English laws aud instltutious was in force at a particular epoch of colonial history. The prosperity of New York, growing steadlly with the progress of trade and the exportation of gralns, attracted emigrants from Holland notwithstanding the change of flag. Many famllies now living on Manhattan Island are descendeci from Dutchmen who came out after the Eagilsh occupation. The oid names with whlch we have beeome famillar in the eariy annais of New Amsterdam continue in positlons of honour and promilnence through the Engiish coloniai records. In 16i3, we find among the city magistrates Johannes van Bruggh, Johannes de Peyster, Egidlus Luyek, Jacob Kip, Laurans van der Splegei, Wilhelm Beeckman, Guleyn Verplanck, Stephen van Courtlandt. In 1677, Stephanus van Courtlandt is mayor, and Johannes de Peyster deputy mayor. In 1682, Corneiis Steenwyck is mayor; in 168., the offlee is filled by Nicholas Bayarif: in 1686, by Van Courtiandt again. Abralam de Peyster was mayor from 1691 to 1695; and in hls tlme the foilowing Dutchmen were aldermen: W. Beeckman, Johannes Kip, Brandt Schuyler, Garrett Doisw, Arent van Scoyck, Gerard Douw, Rip van Dam, Jacobus van Ccurtlandt, Samuei Bayard, Jacobus van Nostrandt, Jan Hendricks Brevoort, Jan van Horne, Petrus Bayard, Abraham Wendeil, John Brevoort. These names recur down to 1717. In 1718, John Roosevelt, Philip van Courtlandt, and Cornellus die Perster are aidermen. In 1719, Jacohus van Courlandt is mayor, and among the nlifermen are Philip van Courtlandt, Ilarmamus van Giiter, Jacnbus Kip. Frederic Phillpse, John IRonsevelt. Philip Schuyif. In 1745. Stephen Mayard is mayor. During the last half of the eighteenth century the Dutch names are more and more crowdel out hy the Engiish.

By the beginning of the nineteenth centurr. the Duch numes nceur only occasionally. These Inutchmen not only preserved their lendership in pullte affalrs, but carried on a large proportion of the city's trade. New York was an English colony, but lts greatness was largely built on Dutch foundations. It is often sald that the city becume fiourishing only after the English occupation. This is true, whe the qualitication that the Duteh truder and the Dutch farmer after that event had greater opportunitles for sucressfni activity. . Dutch enntinued to be the language of New York nntii the end of the seventeenth century, after which time Engish contended for the mastery with stealy success. In the ontlying towns of Long Isiand and New Jersey and along the liudson Miver, Dutch was generaily used for a eentury later. . .. In New York city the large English Imnitgration, the requirements of connueree. and the frequent intermarriages of Duteh und Engllsh famities had given to English the predomlnance by the year 1750. . . In New lork elty the high-stoop house, and the pecullar observance of New Year's Day which contlnued untli 1870. are two familiar relles of Holland. Two days later the Committee of Vigllance wrote to the Boaton Commlttee recommendligg vigorous measures as the most eflect. ual, and anouring them that thelr conrue would be heartlly supported by thelr bretbren in New York. So rapld had been the march of events that not tlll now did the merchants and rexponslule eltizens of New Tork take aiarm. Without thelr concurrence or cven knowledge they were belng rapldly compromised by the unauthorized actlon of en Irraspouslble commlttee, composed of men who for the most part were noted more for enthuslasm than for judgment. and many of whom had been not unconcerned in petty riots and demonstratlons condemned by the lettel part of the communlty. . ., 'The men who at that tlme called themselves the Committee,' wrote Lleutenant Governor Colden the mext month, 'who dictated and acted $\ln$ t'je name of the people, were many of them of the lower ranks, and all the warmest zealots of those called the sons of Llberty. The more conslderahle merehants and cltizens ecldom or never appeared among them. . The princlpal lnhabltants, be. lag now afrald that these hot-beaded men might run the clty into dangerous measures, appeared In a conalderablo body at the tirst meeting of tho people after the Boston Port Act was !nibllished here.' Thls meetlng, convoked by adve.tlse. ment, was beld May 16th, at the hovise of Samuel Francls, to consult on the measures proper to be pursued.' $\qquad$ A committee of fifty, Jay ainong them, Instcad of one of twenty-ive, as at dirst suggested, was nominated 'for the npproba. thon of the publle,' 'to correspond wlth our slister colonles on all matters of moment.' Three days later these nomlnatlons were confirmed by a publle meetling held at the Coffce Ibouse, but not untll a fifty. brst' member was addeel, Francls Lewls, as a represeututlve of the radleal party Which bad been as mueh as posslale lgnored.

At the Coffe Hlouse agaln, on May 23d, the Commlttee of Fifty one zaet and organized; they repudlated the letter to Boston from the Committee of Vigliance as unoffelal," and prepared a response to another communicatlon just recelved from Boston, by the famous messenger, Paul Revere. In thls reply lt was "urged that 'a Congress of Dcputles from the Colonles In Geaeral ls of the utinost moment,' to form 'some unanlmous resolutlons. . not only respecting your [Boston's] deplorable clrcumstances, but for the securlty of our commun rights;' and that the advisabitty of a non-lmporiatlon agreement should be left to the Congress. . . . Tbe ImporLase of this letter can hardly be exaggerated. for lt was the first serious authoritative suggestion of a General Congress to consider 'the common rights' of the colonies lu general. . . The alvice of New York was followed gradually by the other colonles, but even before a Contlnental Congress was a certalnty, the Committee of Fifty-one, wlith slngular confidence, resolved that delegates to lt should be chosen, and called a meeting for that purpose for July 10th.
Phillp Llvingston, John Alsop, James Duane. and John Jay were nomlnated as delegates to be submiltted to the publle meetligg, July 10th. The people met accordingly at the Coffee House, and after a stormy debate elected the committee's candldates in splte of a strong effort to suhstltute for Jay, McDougall, the bero of tho Llberty Boys."' This electlon, however, was not thought to be an adequate expremion of the popular wlll, und polis were sulsiequently opened In caeh wari, on the 2sth of July. The result was a unammous vote for Jay and his colleagues. "Thus, fortunately, at tho very Ineeptlon of the Revoluthon, bufore the falntest clatter of arms, the popmar movement was placed $\ln$ charge of the 'Patrlelans' as they were callen, ruther than of tho 'Tribunes,' as respeetlvely represented by Jay anil Mclourgall."- (3. A. D. 1775 (Aprii-September).-The Sons nf Liberty take contrni nt the city.- The end nf royai government. - Fiight of Governnr Trynn. - "Uu Sunday, the 24th of Aprii, 175, the news of the hattic of Lexington reached tite city. Tinis was the signal for open hostilities. Business was at once suspended; the Sons of Liberty assembied in iarge numbers, and, taking possession of the City Hali, distributed the arms that were stored in it, together with a quantity which had been deposited in the arsenal for safe keeping, among the citizens, a party of wisom formed themselves intio a voluntary corps under the command of Samue. Broome, and assumed the temporary goverament of the city. This donn, they demanded and nbtainel the keys nf the custom houwe, ciosed thn bullding and lad an embargo upon the vesseis in port dentined for thn eastern colonles. . . . It now became necensary to organize mome provisional government for thn eity, and for this purpoae, on the 5 th of May, a meeting of the citizens was calied at thn Coflee. Ilouse, at which a Committee of One Ilandred wan choeen and invested with thn chargn of municipal affuirs, thn peopie piediging themaeives to olvey it orders until dideront arrangements shonid be made by thn Continental Congrems. Tils committee was componed in part of men incined to the royalist eanse, yet, snch was the joinuinr excitement at tin time, that they were carried awny hy tite current und forced to acgulesce in thin measares of their more zealons coilengues. . . . The committee at once ansumed tite command of the eity, and, retaining tire corps of Broome as their executive power, prohithited the saic of weapons to any persons suspected of being hostin to the patriotic party. . . The inolerate men of the committee suceecded in prevailing on tielr colieagues to prement a piacahie aridress to Lientenant-Governor Coiden, expianatory of their appointment, and assuring him that they should use every effort to preserve tife public jeace: yet ominous precautions were taken to put thearms of the city fuaserviceahie condition, and to survey the neighboring grounds with a view to crecting fortitications. $\qquad$ On the 25th of June, Wasilington enterel New York on his way from Mount Vernon to Cumhridige to take command of the army assembled there. Tite I'rovincial Congress receivel him with a calious aidress. Despite their patriotism, they stili clung to the shadow of loyaity fearing to go too far, they acted constantly unier protest that tirey desired nothing more than to secure to themsoives the rights of true.born British puhjects. The next moraing Washington quitted the elity, escorted on his way hy the provincial militia. Tryon [Governor Tryon, wito hai been absent in Engiand since the spring of 1774, leaving thn government in tie hands of Lieutenant-Governor Coiden, and who now returned to resinme it ] inad entered it the night before, and thus had been hrought almost face to face with the releli who was destined to work such a transformation in his majesty's colonies of America. The mayor and corporation received the returning governor with expressions of joy, nud even the patriot party were giai of the change winch relieved them from the gevernment of Cohlen. Meanwhile, tie colony of New York had been ordered hy the Continentai Congless to contrinute her quota of 3.000 men to the general defence, and four regiments were necordingl raised.
. The city now presented a curiou spectacic, as the seat of two governments, each lssuing its own edicts, and denouncing those of the other as iliegal authority. It was not long before the two powers came intocoilision." This was brought about by an order from the Provinciai Cungress, directing the removal of guns from the Battery. Shots were exchanged hetween the party executing this order and a boat from the ship of war "Asia" ; whereupon the "Asia" cannonaded the town, riddiling houses axt wounding three cltizens. "Hitherto, the governor had remained firm at his posi; but finding lis position daliy growing more perilous, desplte the plelpes of the corporation for his pertonat afety, he determinell to ebandon the ctity, and took refur on boarl the "Asia." "Mary La Booth, Jian fthe City of Now York. ch. 16.

In that business New York moved early. On the 1st of August, 1776, a committee of the "Convention of the Itepreacntatives of New York, as the provisional governinent was called, sitting at White Piains, in Westchester County, were appointed to draw up and report a constitution. The cummittee consisted of the foliowing named gentiemen: John Jay. Jolin Stoss Hobart, William Snith, Wililam Dier. Gonverneur Norris, Hobert K. Livingston, John isroome, John Morin Scott, Abrahan Yates, Ir., Henry Wisner. Sen., Sumuei Townsend, Clurles Le Witt and Robert lates. Jhhu Jay was the chairman. and to him was assigued the duty of drafting the Constitution. The Conven. tion was made migratory by the stirring events of the war during the ensuing autumn and winter. First they held their sessions at Ilariem Ileights; then at White Piains; afterward at Fislikill, in Dutchess County, and tinaliy at Kingston, in Uister County, where they continuel from February tili May. 1777. There nudisturbed the committee on the Constitution pursued their fabors, and on the 12th of Slarch. i 1 i\%, reported a draft of that instrument. It was under consideration in the Convention for more than a month after that, and was finaliy adopted on the 20th of Aprii. Eniler it a State government was established by an ordinamce of the Convention, passed In May, and the first session of the Legisiature was appointed to meet at Kingston in July." The election of State officers was heid in June. Jay and others lissued a elrcular recommending General schuyler for Governor and Geaerai George Clinton for Lieutenant Governor. But Schuyler "decined the honor, because he considered the situation of effairs in his Department too critical to be neg. lected by dividing his duties. The elections were held in ali the Counties excepting New York, Kings, Queens, and Suffolk, then occupied by the British, zad Brigadier General George Cilnton was eiected Governor, which office he Colden, a comtemporary historian, inimself one of the carliest and ablest adrocates of the canals, awrards to Thomas Eldy the merit of having suggested this motion to Mr. Platt, and to both these gentlemen that of eugaging De Witt Clinton's support, he being at that time a memher of the senate.

The commissioners lu Mareh, 1811, suhmitted their report written hy Gouverncur Morris, in whel they slowed the practleability and advantages of a continuous canal from Lake Erie to the Ilulson, and stated thislr estimate of the cost at $\mathrm{Fi}, 0 \mathrm{OH}) .0(0)$.

On the presentatlon of tbis report, De Witt Clinton introluecd a blll, which became a law on the eth of April, 1811, under the title of 'An act to provide for the improveluent of the lutermal navigation of this state.'.

The act added Robert 1R. Livingston and rubert Fulton to the hoard of commissioners, and anthorizel them to consider all matters relating to such luland mavication, with powers to make application in leleliff of the state to Congress, or toany state or territory, to cooperate and aid in the undertaking. . . . Two of the commisslon rs. Mr. Morris and Mr. Clinton. repaired to thr federal eapital, und submitted the subject to the consideration of the Presldent (Mr. Madisont) mul of Congress. In [812, the commalssioners reportel that, although it was nncertain whether the national government would do anything, it certaluly would do nothing which would afford immediate aid to the enterprise.

The cominissioners then subnitted that, having offered the eanal to the national government, and that offer having vertually beeld decllued, the state was now at liberty to consult and pursue the turasius of poliey, and these seemerl to demand lmperatively that the canal should tre made by hermelf, and for her own account, as soon as the clrcumstances would permit.
On the 19th of June, 1812, a law was enacted. reappointing the commlsoloners and authorizing them to borrow money and deposite it in the trensury, and to take cesslons of land, but prohiblting any measures to construct the canale.

From I812 to I8I5, the country suffered the calamitles of war, and projects of Internal im. provement necessarily gave place to the patriotic efforts required to malntaln the natlonal security and honor." But after peace had returned, the -ivocates of the enterprise prevalled with conslderable difficulty over lts opponents, and "ground was broken for the construction of the Erie canal on the th lay of July, 1817, at Rome, with ceremonles marking the publlc estimatlon of that great eveut. This auspielous consuinmatlon was eclebrated by a telcgraphle discharge of cannon, commenclng at Lake Erie [at Buffalo], and contimned aloug the banks of the caual and of the Hudson, announcing to the elty of New York the entrance on the bosom of the canal of the first barge [bearing Governor Cliuton and his coadjutors] that was to arrive at the commercial emporlum from the Ameriean Mediterraneans." -W. A. D. 1821.-Revision of the Constitution. -" The Constitution did not meet the expectathous of its framers. The cumbrous machinery by which lt was sought to insure the control of the People, through the supremacy of the Assembly, had only resultal in fortifying power pructically levond thelr reach. The Council of Revision wasobjected to beenuse th had exprelsed the veto power contrary to the splrit of the Constitution, which was ln larmony with the tradltions of the Colony from the earliest confllet with the excentive power; and because the offlecrs who thus interposed their objections to the will of the Legishture, holding ottice for gexal helavior (execpt the Governor), were beyond the reach of the Pcople. It was seen that this power was a dangerous one, In a Council so eoustitutel; but it was thonght that lt could be safely Intrusted to the Governor alone, as he whs directly responsible to the People. The Couneil of Appointmeut, although not vested with any judicial authority, and ln fact disclalming it, nevertheless at an carly day summoned lis apppointees before it, for the purpose of hearing accusations against them, and proving their truth or falsity. At a later duy, more summary proccellings were resorted to. The ofllee thus became very unpopular. Nearly every civil, military, and judicial offeer of the commonwealth was appolated by thals Council. In 18:I.

8,287 military and 6,668 eivil officera beid their commisslons from it, and this vast syatem of centrallzed power was naturally very obnoxious. The Leglslature, in 1820, passed in act recommendlng a Convention of the Peopie of thls State.' Which came up for action in the Councll of Revision, on November 20th of the same year; present, Governor Cllnton, Chancellor Kent, Chlef Justice Spencer, and Justlees Yates and Woodworth, on whieh day the Councll, hy the casting vote of the Governor, adopted two ohjectlons to lt; first, because lt did not provide for taking the sense of the People on the questhn; and second, becaise it submitted the new Constitution to the People in toto, Instead of hy sectlons. These ohjections were referred to a select committee, Hichat Ulshoffer, ehalrman, who suhmitted their report January 9, 1821, In opposition to the oplnion of the Couneil, wbleh was adopted by the Assemhly. The hill, however, falled to pass, not recelving a two-thlrd vote. Immedlately thereupon a committee was appolnted to draft a new hill. The commlttee subsequently introduced a hill for suhmittling the questlon to the people, whleb passed both Houses; recelved the sanction of the Couucl' of hevislou on the 13th of Hareh, and was suhsequently amended, the amendments recelving the sanetlon of the Council on the third of April. Tbe popu. lar vote ou holding the Conventlon was had in April, and resulted as follows: 'For Conventhon' 109,346. 'For No Conventlon' 34,901 . The Convention assembled ln Albany, August 29, aud adjourned November 10, 1821. Tbe Council of Revislon was abolished, and Its powers transferred to the Governor. The Council of Appointment was abollsheel without a dissenting volee. The princlpal department officers were dirceted to be appouted on an open separate nomination by the twic Houses, and subsequent jolnt bullot. Of the remaining officers not made elective, the power of appolntment was conferred upon the Governor, hy and wlth the advice aud consent of the senate. In 1846, $t$ wo hundred and eigbty-nine oflices were thus filled. The electlve frauchlse was extended. The Constitution was alopted at an electiou held In Febriury, 1822, by the following vote: Constitutlon-For, 74,732 : Agalnst, $41,+02$.
The l'eople took to themselves a harge portion of the power they had felt it necessary, iu the ex. ercise of a uatural conserratism, to latrust to the Assembly. They had learned that an eleetive Goveruor and an eleetlve senate are equally thelr afents, and lnterests wbleh they thought ought to he conservel, they lutrusted to them, sub. ject to their responsibillty to the People. Tbe entire Senate were substituted in the place of the members who chanced to be the favorites with a majority In the Assembly, as a Counell to the Governor, and tbus the People of all the Stute were glven a roice ln appointments. The Supreme Judlctal Tribunal remalned the same. The direct soverelgnty of the People was thus renderetl far more effective, and popular governmeut took the place of parllamentary administra. tion."-E. A. Werner, Ciril List and Const. Hist. uf .V. The commonwealth grew uot only in populatlon, but in all the elements of progress and prosperity nad power, and by the census of 1845 was shown to coutnla $2,604,495$ inhabltants. Legislation had tended to the substltution of right for privileges granted as favors. The tenure of land, especially under the clalms of the patroons, hud cnused ditticultles for which remelies were sought; and the largo expendltures for Internal hmprovements, luvolving henvy Indehtedness, prompted demands for snfe-gunrds for the credltor and the taxpayer. A. D. 1863.-The Draft Riots in New York City.-"A new levy of 300,040 men was called for in April, 1863, with the alternative of a draft, if the quotas were not tillel by volunteering. The quota of the clty of New York was not filled, and a draft was begun there on Saturday, he 11th of July. There had been premonitions of trouble when It was attempted to take the names and addresses of those subject to call, and in the tenement-house distrlcts some of the marshals had narrowly escaped with their llves. On the morning when the draft was to begin, several of the most wldely read Len:ocratic jour. nals contained edltorials that appeared to be written for the very purpose of lncitiug a riot. They asserted that any draft at all was unconstlitutional and despotle, and that In this case the quota demanded from the clty was excessive, and denounced the war as a mere abolltion crusade.; It is doubtful lf there was any well-formed conspiracy, lncluding any large number of persons, to get upa riot; but the exelted state of the publle mind, especially among the laboring populatlon, inflammatory handbills displayed In the grog-shops, the presence of the dangerous classes, whose best opportunlty for plunder waa In time of riot, and the abscnce of the millitia that had heen called away to meet the invasion of Pennsylvanla, all favored an outbreak. It was unfortunate that the draft waa begun on Saturday, and the Sunday papers puhllshed long iists of the names that were drawn-an instance oi the occasional mischlevous results of journal. istic enterprise. . . When the draft was resumed on Hlonday, the serious work began. One provost-marshal's offlice was at the corner of Third Avenue and Forty.Sixth street. It was guarded by sixty policemen, and the wheel was set in motlon at ten oclock. The bullding was surrounded by a dense, angry crowd, who were freely cursing the draft, the police, the National Government, and 'the nigger.' The drawing had heen in progress but a few minutes when there was a shout of 'stop the cars!' and at once the ears were stopped, the horses released, the conductors and passengers driven out, and a tumult created. Then a great human wave was set in motion, whlch bore down everything before it and rolled Into the marshal's ottice, drirlng out at the back windors the ofthciala and the pelicemen, whose clubs, though plied rapidly and knocking down a rioter at every blow, could not dispose of them as fast as they came on. The mob destroyed everythlng in the office, and then set the bullding on fire. The firemen came promptly, but were not permitted to throw any water upon the fames. At this moment SuperIntenilent John A. Kennedy, of the pollce, approsehlng lncautiously and unarmed, was recog. nized and set upon by the crowd, who gave hlm half a hundred blows wlth clubs and stones, and finally threw hlm face downward into a mudpuddle, wheth the intention of drowning hlm. When rescued, he was bruised beyond recognitlon, and was lifted into a wagon and carried to the pollce headquarters. The command of the force now devolved upon Commissloner Thomas C. Acton and Inspector Danlel Carpenter, whose management during three fearful days was Worthy of the highest pralse. Another marshal's office, where the draft was in prugress, was at Broadway and Twenty. Ninth street, and here the moh burned the whole block of stores on Broadway between Twenty-Elghth and Twenty-Ninth streets. . . . In the afternoon a small pollce foree held possesslon of a gun factory $\ln$ Second Avenue for four hours, and was then eompelled to retire before the persistent attacks of the rioters, who hurled stones through the windows and beat in the doors. Toward evening a riotous procession passed down Broadway, wlth drums, banners, muskets, pistols, pltchforks, cluhs, and boards inscribed ' No braft!' Inspector Carpenter, at the head of two hundred pollcemen, marched up to meet it. His orders were, 'Take no prisoners, but strike qulek and hard.' The mob was met at the corner of Amity (or West Thlrd) street. The pollce charged at once in a compaet body, Car. penter knocklng down the foremost rioter with a blow that cracked his skull, and $\ln$ a few moments the mob scattered and ded, leaving Broadway strewn with their wounded and dylng. From thls time, the pollce were victorlous in every encounter. During the next two days there was almost constant rioting, mobs appearing at rarious points, both up-town and downtown. The rioters set upon every negro that appeared - whether man, woman, or child - and succeeded in murdering eleven of them. Thls phase of the outbreak found lits worst expression in the sacking and burning of the Colored Orphan Asylum, at Fifth Arenue and Forty-Fourth street. The two hundred helpless chlldren were with great diffculty taken away by the rear doors while the mob were battering at the front. One of the saddest Incldents of the riot was the murder of Colonel Henry J. O'Brien of the 11th N. Y. Volunteers, whose - en had dispersed one mob Flth a deadly volley. an hour or two later the Colonel returned to the spot alone, when he was set upon and beaten and mangled and tortured horrlhly for several hours, belng at last killed by some frenzled women.

Three days of this vigorous work by the police and the soldiers brouglit the disturbance to an end. bout fifty pollcemen had been injured, three of whom died; and the whole number of llves destroyed by the rioters was elghteen. The exact number of rioters killed is unknown, but it was more than 1,200 . The mohs burned about 50 buildings, destroying altogether between $\$ 2,000,000$ and $\$ 3,000,000$ worth of property. Governor Scymour incurred odlum by a speech to the rioters, la which he addressed them as his friends, and promised to have the draft stopped; and by his communications to the President, in whlch he complalned of the draft, and asked to have it suspended till the questlon of lts constltutionality could be tested in the courts."-R. A. D. 1863-1871.-The Tweed Ring.-Be. tween 1803 and 1871 the clty of New York, nad. to a considerable extent, the state at large, fell under the eontrol nad luto the power of a comblnation of corrupt pollticlans conimouly known as the Tweed Ring. Its chlef was one Willinn Marey Tweed, of Scoteh purentage, who tirst appeared in puhlle life as un alikerman of the city, ln 1850 . Working himself upward, in the Democratle party, to which he milhered, he attained iu 1883 the powerfnl dignity of Grand Saeliem of the Tanmany Noclety and chairman or "Boss" of the general eommitite of Tamuany Hnll. "At thls the, however, the Tnmmany - Rling, $a^{\circ}$ It afterwards was called, wns not completely formed, and Tannmany Ilall, thougla by fur the most important polltleal organization In the eity, was not nbsolnte even in the Demo. cratle party. It had n litter enemy ln Mozart Hall, n polltenl orgauization led by Fermado Wook, a former mayor of the clty. The elalins of Mozart IIall were satisfied ln thls same year, 1863, by granting to lis leader the Iemocratie nomination to Congress. . . . Soon nfterwnrds Tweed wns nppointed deputy eommissloner of streets. The 'lilng' 'was now fast consolldatlng. The enormous patrouage possessed ly its ment. bers enabled them to control almost nll the nominatlons of the Democratie party to pusitlous in the city. They provided their adherents with places lu the elty government, and wher the supply of places became inadepunte, they enlarged the clty pay-roll to ereate new plaees. By means of the political Infuence they exerted over the Democratie party In the State, they pseked the State legislature with their followers, and pherl apon the heach judges on whom they conld rely. . . . In 1865 the Ring obtnlned control of the nayoralty. Its candidate, John T. Iloftman, was a minn of maeh higher charae. ter than hils supporters und associates. He was personally lonest, but his amhitlon blinaled him to the acts of his politied friends.

Iloffnnn was nominated for governor nod was elected. His eleetiou was seeured hy the grossest and most exteusive fisuds ever perpetrated in t: eity, c. g. illegal mituralization of foreigners, false reglstration, rep inting of votes. and unfair counting. The maroralty, left vneant by the pronotion of Hofman, was filled hy the clection of IIall [A. Unkey Ilall], wbo took his seat on the 1st day of Jannary 1669. As Snnuel J. Tillen said, by this elcetion 'the Ring became eompletely orgnnized and maturenl. It con. olled the common conneil of the city nnd the legislature of the State, nul Its uomiuee sat in the gubernatorial chair. Hall wns msyor; Sweeny [feter B. Sweeny, 'the great sehemer of thr ling'] wss elty chamberlaln or treasurer of both eity and connty; Tweed was practically supreme In the street department: Connolly [Hiehard B.] wns eity comptroller, aud thns had charge of the elty inances; the clty judielary was in sympnthy with these men." But grent as were the power and the opportunities of the IRing, It obtalned still more af hoth thmugh lts well-paid creatures in the State leglslature, by amendments of the city ehnrter and hy aets which gave Tweed and his partners free awing

In deht-making for the city. In 1871, the lat year of the existence of the Ring, it had more than $$ 48,000,000$ of money at lts disposal. It methods of iraud were varied and numerous. "But all the other enterprisen of the Ring dwlndle into insignifennce when compared with the colossal frauds that were committed in the building of the new court.house for the county. When thls undertaking was begun, it was stipuInted that its total cost should not cxeeed $$ 250,000$; hut before the Ring was broken up. upwards of $$ 8,000,000$ had been expended, and the work was not completed.

Whencver a blll was brought In by one of the eontractors, he was direeted to lnerease Inrgcly the total of his charge. . . A warrant was then drawn for the nmount of the blll as ralsed; the contraetor wna pall, perhaps the amonnt of his original bill, perhaps a little $\mathrm{ml}{ }^{-\pi}$; and the difference bet ween the orlylunl and the rabed bills was divlded between the nembers of the Kling. It is sald that nbout 6.5 per eent. of the hills netunliy pald by the connty represented fraudulent naddition of thls sort." The beginning of the end of the relgn of the Ring eame in July, 1871, when coples of some of the fraudulent aecounts, made by a clerk in the auditor's offlee, eame Into the possession of the New York Times and were publlshed. "The result of these expostires was a meetling of eltlzens early in September.
It was followed by the formation of a sort of peaceable vlgllance committee, unler the 1mposfing tltle of the 'Committ. of Seventy.' Thls commlttee, together with as.atiel J. Tiliten (long n leading Democratic politicinn, and nfterwards candliate for the presidfacy of the Cnlted States), went to wark at once, and whth great energy, to obtain netual proof of the frauds described by the 'Tlmes.' It was owing mainly to the tireless endenvours of Mr. Tilien that tils work was sueeessful, and that prosecutions were brought agnlnst several inemhers of the Rlug." The Tammauy leaders nttempted to make a scapegoat of Connolly; but the latter eume to terms with Mr. Tliden, and virtunlly turned over $1:$ s offlee to Mr. Andrew H. Green, of the Ce umittere of Seventy, appointing him deputy comptroller, with full powers. "Thls move was a tremendous step forward for the prosceution. The possesslon of the a "uptroller's ottiee gave neeess to papers whleh furnished almost all the evidenee afterwards used in the erusulte agninst the Ring." At the autumn elec. tion of 18:1 there was a splendil rally of the letter eltlzens, in the city and throughont the state, nnd the political power of the Ring was bruken. "None of the leading netors In the disgraceful drama falled to pay in some mensure the pennty of his decds. Tweed, after a ebequered experienee $\ln$ elnding the grasp of justice, dled lin fall. Connolly passed the reinninder of his Ilfe in exile. Sweeny left the eountry aud long remalned ahroad. . . Hall was tried and obtained a farourahle verdlet, but he has choseu to llve out of Anicriea. Of the judges whose corrupt deelsions 80 greatly aldel the ling, Barnard and M'Cunn were lmpeached and removed from the hench, whlle Cardozo reslgned hls position in time to nvold impeach. ment. The following figures will give an approximnte idea of the amount the Ring cost the city of New York. In 1860, before Tweed came into power, the debt of the city was reported as

A. D. 1867-1882.-Amendments of the Constitution. -The constitution of 1840 having proded for lts own revision at the eud of twenty years, if so wliled by the peopie, the calling of a constitutlonal conventlon was upproved hy popuiar vote in 1806, and the conveution of elected deiegates assemhled June 4, In the foilowing year. Its tinai adjournment was not reached untii February 28, 1808. The constitution profosed hy the conrentlon was sumuitted to the jropie in 1869, and rejected, wlth tine exception of the judiclary article, which reorganlzed the Court of Appeals, and provlded for a temporary Commissiou of Appeais, to determine the case's peuding in the Court, where buslness In arrears iad accumulated to a derious extent. The rejection of the constitutlon franed in 1867 ied, lu 18:2, the creation hy the governor and legls. iature of a Commisslon for the revision of the coustitution, which met at Aibany, December 4 , $18 \% \mathbf{2}$, and adjourued March 15, 18 i 3. Severai ausulments proposed hy the Commission were submitted to popular vote in 1874 and $18: 6$, and were adopted. By the more important of these amendmeuts, colored citizens were adultted to the franchise wlthout property qualiticatlons; a strong, specific enactment for the ireveutlon and punishment of hribery and corruption at elec. tions was embodied lu the coustitution itseif; some changes were made in the provisions for listricting the state, after each ceusus, and the pay of members of the legislature was lucreased to $\$ 1,500$ per annuin; the power of the legisia. ture to pass private blls was iimitod; the term of the goveruor was exteuded fror. iwo years to three: the governor was earpis 1 to veto Mpecitic items in hills whileh ap :pproving the remaiuder; th allowed thirty days for tie cons. money, nor was in of bills loft in lis hands at the adjournun ithe legis. lature, which hills hecome law only upon his aip. provai within that ti:nc, s. superiutendent of public works was created to take the place of the Canal Commissoners previously exlstlng, and a superintendent of state prisuns to take the place of the three inspectors of state prisons; a selectlon of judges from the bench of the Supreme Court of the state to act ns Assoclate Judges of the Court of Appeuls wns authorized; the loaning or granting of the credit or money of the stale, or that of auy county, city, town, or vlllage to ary association, corporation, or private undertaking was forhidden; corrupt conduct in offere was declared to be felony. By an amendment of the constitution submitted hy the leglaiature to the people in 1882, the canals of the state were made entirely free of toils.
A. D. 1869.-Biack Friday,-"During the war goid had swolien in value to 285, when the promise of the natlon to pay a dollar on demand was only worth thirty-five cents. Thence it had graduaily sunk. All our nurchases from forelgn natlons, aii dutles on those purchases, and aii sales of domestic prod'ase wother nations are ijayublo In goid. Thetre is therefore a large and legitlmate busiuess $1 r$. the purchise and sale of gold, especinlly ln Sew Ycrk, the financial centre of the nation But a much larger huslness of a gamhling naiure had graduaily grown up around that whlch was legitlmate.
These gamhllug operations were hased on the rise and fall of gold, and these In turn depended on successful or unsuccessfui hattles, or on erents ln forelgn nationa that could he nelther foreseen nor guarded against. The transactlons weri therefore essentially gamhling. large was the a mount of this specuiatlve husiness, gatheriug up ail the gold-betting of the natlon in a slngle room, that it more than equailed the legitimate purchnse and sale of gold. There were large and wealthy firms who made this their chlef huslness; and prominent among them was the firm of Smlth, Govid, Martin © Co., four gentlemen under one partnerslip namc, ali wealthy and ali accustomed to this husiness for years. Thelr joint wealth and husiness skili made thent a power $\ln$ Wali strest. The ieading nind of the irni, though not the first named, was Mr. Jay Gould. President of the Erie Itailway, joint owuer with Colonel James Fisk Jr., of twe lines of steminboats, nui ! argely interested iu a number of railroads aud other vuluable properties. Mr. Gouid looked upon gold, railroads, and steamboat: as the gllied dice where. with to gambie. . . During the spring of $1 \$ 69$ he was a huyer of goid. There was periaps fif. teen millions of that rare curreacy in Jew York outslde the Sub-Treasus ; ; and he had bought half that amount, paying therefor a bonus of a iftle more than two millions of doliars. As fast as he had purchused the precious netal he had loaned it out to tiose who ueeded it for the paymeut of luties, and who hoped to repurchase it ${ }^{-} t$ a lower rate. And so, though the owner of scren uillious, ie had none of lt in hand; he merely possessed the written acknowledgment of certain leading merclants and brokers that they owed him that amount of specie, whlel they wouid repay with interest ou demand. Hasing this amonnt ohtainuble nt nny momeut. Mr. Gould had the mercantile community at his nercy. But there was some hundred millions of gold in the Treas ary, nore or less, and the President on the Elited States or the Secretary of the Treasury $\mathrm{m}^{\text {g ght at any time throw it on }}$ the nıarket. On chis point it was very desirahie to ascertaln th. ninion of Presllent Grant; more desirahle to have constant access to his private ear." In varluas ways, argumentative intluences were brought to bear ou Presideut Grant ani the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, to persuade chem that it was desirable for the country. while the emps were belng moved, to hold up the price of goid. One important channeif for such infiuences was suppiled hy the Presldent's brother-lo-law, a retired New York merchant, named Corbln, who was drawn lnto the apeculation and given a share In Gould'e gold purchases. ذy trenuous excrtions, Gonld and hls associates pushed up the price tlli "In May it stood at 144 ; ; hut as soon as they ceased to buy, the priee began to reeede until in the iatter part of June it agaln stood at 180. The others were then frlghtened and soid out. Ail these other fellows deserted me llke rats from a shlp,' suld Gould. But for inim to seli out then would Involve a incavy lose, nod he preferred a galn. ITe therefore ealled upon inls friend sad partner Fisk to cnter the financial arena. It Is but justlce to Mr. Flak to sny that for some time he decllned; he eleariy saw that the whoie ten. dency of goid was downwari. But when (bould made the propositlon nore paiatable liy suggestIng corruptlou, Flsk linmedintely swallowed the bait. . . IIe... entered the market nad purchased twelve miliilons. Ticre ls an oid adage that titere ls inonornmong thleves. This appenis not to be true on the Gold Exchange. Aii Mr. Gouid's statements to bis own partner were false, exeept those relating to Corhin and Butterficid. And Mr. Corbln difi his best. Ife not only tniked and wrote to the Presldent inimself; not ouly Wrote for the New lork 'Times,' but when Gencral Grant vislted hlm in New lork, he sent Gouid to see inlm so often that the President, unaware of the tinanclai trap set for inm, rebnked the cioor servant for giving Mr. Gouid such ready aceess. But it is worthy of note that nelther Corbin, Gouid, no- Flsk ever spoke to the I'resldent of their personal interest In the matter. They werc oniy patriots urging n certain course of conduct for the good of the country. These speculatious as to the advantage to the country of $n$ higher price of goid seem to bave bad some effect o- tive Presidentiai mind; for eariy in September he wrote to Mr. Boutweil, theu at inls Massachusetts home, giving hls opinion of the financlai condltion of the eountry, and suggesting that it would not be wise to iower the price of goid by snles from the Treasury Whlte the crups were moving to the seabonrd. Mr. Boutwell therefore tclegraphed to the Assls. tant Seerctary nt Winshington only to seil goid sufticlent to buy honds for the sinking fund. Through Mr. Corbln or in some other way this letter came to the knowievige of the conspirators; for they at once hegan to purchase and the price began to rise. On the 13 tin of September, gold, swelling and faiiing like the tide, stoond at $135 \frac{1}{2}$. The clique then eommenced their largest purchases, and within nine days had bought cnough to hold slxty $\cdot$ six millions - nearly crery cent of it fictitious, and oniy lncluded in promises to pay. On the cvening of Welnestit:, September 2.2 , the price was $140 \frac{1}{3}$; but it ind taken the purchase of thiriy or fortr millions to put it up that tive cents. Couli it be forced five cents higher, and ali sold, the protits would be over ten minilions of dollars! It was a stake worth playing for. But the whole mercautile community was opposed to them; bountifui harrests were strong arguments agalest them; and more than all cise, there stood the Sub.Trcasury of the Unlted States, with its hundred miinlons of dioilars in i,s vauits, ready at any time to cast its plethora of wealth on their unfortunate heads.

Corbin, while assuring Gould that there Was no danger of any Gorernment saie, and yet blmself greatly In trcpldation, addressed a letter to Cenerai Grant urging hlm not to interfere wlth the warfare then ragligg between the bulis and tine br, nor to allow the Becretary of the Treasury dom. .... The ietter would probabiy have aul some effeet, but unfortunately the ring overdld thelr buslness in the way in whleh they sent It." The letter was conveyed by a prlvnte messenger. The messenger, "Mr. Chapln, deilvered hls letter, asked General Grant if there was any reply, and being told there was none, started for hls hotne, first telcgrapining to his employer, 'Letter iclivered ail right.' It wus a most unfortunate telegraphlc message he sent baek. He swears that his meanling was that tbe l"tter was deilvereiI all right; and so the despatch sals. But the goid gamhlers, blladed by the yreatness of the stake at risk, Interpreted the 'all rlght ' of the message as nn answer to the eontents of Mr. Corhin's letter - thut the Preal. dent thought the icter ail rlgit; aud on the strength of that reding Fisk rushed luto the market and made numerous purchnses of goid. But that very letter, which was Intended to be thiclr governmental safcgunrl, led to their ruit. Carricd by special messenger for a day and a half. its urgency that the Adminlstration should sell no goid, coupled with frequent assertions In the newspapers that Mr. Corbin was a great bull In grild, exclted General Grunt's susplcions. He feared that Corbin was not aetuated by patriotle motlves aione In tinis secret correspondence. At the Presldent's suggestlon, tincrefore, Mrs. Grant wrote to her slster, Mrs. Corhln teiilng her that rumors had reached them that Mr. Corbin was conneeted whth speeuintors ln New York, and that she hoped if thls was so ine would at onee dlsengage bimseif frm them; that the I'resldent was much distressed nt such rumors. On the receipt of this ictier, Mr. Corhln was greatly exclted." Corlin showed the ietter to Gould, and got himself let out of the game, so that he might be abie to say to Presldent Grant that ine had no interest in goid; but Flsk wes not toid of the Presidient's suspicions. "On the evenlag of Wednesday, September 2I, It was determined to eiose the corner within two days." A desperate attack on the market began next morning. Gold opened that day at $39 \frac{1}{4}$; it closed at 44 . The next diay was "Friday, September 24, commoniy culled istack Friday, elther from the black mark It caused on the eharaeters of dealers in gold, or, as is more probabic, from the ruin it brought to both sldes. The Goid IRoom was crowded for two inours before the tlme of buslness.
Fisk was there, glontling over the prospcet of great galns from others' ruin. His brokers were there, nolsy and betting on the rapid rise of goid and the suceess of the corner. Ali nlike were greatiy excited, pnipitating between bope and fcar, and not knowing what an hour might bring forth. Gold elosed on Thursilay at 144: Speyers [prineipal broker of the conspirators] comincnced inls work on Friday by offering 145, one per ecnt. higher than the iast purchase. Heceiving no response, ine offered to huy at 146,147 , 148 , nnd 149 respectlveiy, but whthout takers. Then 150 was offered, and half a million was soid him hy Mr. James Brown, who had quictiy organized a band of prominent merchants who were determined to mect the gold gamhlers on thelr own ground. $\qquad$ Amid the most tremendous eonfusion the volces of the exeited brokers could be heard slowly biddlng up the vaiue of their artiacial metal. Higher and higher rose the tide of apeeuiation; from 158 to 159 there was nn offer whatever; amild deep sileice Speyers called out. 'A ny part of five miliions for 180 ,' 'One miliinn taken at 160, , was the quiet response of James Brown. Further offers were made by the brokers of the eilique ali the way from 160 to $163 \%$. But Mr. Brown preferred to grapple the enemy by the throat, and he sold Speyers five millions more, making seven millions of gold soid that hour for which Speyers agreed to pay eleven miliions in currency. Such figures almost stagger one to read of theml But spegcrs continucd to buy tlli before noon he had purchased neariy sisty mllilions. $\qquad$ As the price rose cent by cent, mer's hearts were moved within them as the trees arc shaken by the swelllng of the wind. But when the first milllon was taken at 160 a great load was removed, and when the second million was sold there was such a burst of gladness, such a roar of multitudlnous voices as that room. turnuituous as it had always been, never hearl before. Everybody instantly began to sell, desiring to get rid of all thelr golid before it Ludi tumbied too dcep. And just as the preclous metai was beginning to flow over the preciplce, the news was flashed into the room that Government had telegraphed to sell four milions. Instantly the end was reached; gold fell to 140, and then down, down, down, to 133. There were no purchasers at any price. The gold ring had that day bought sixty mililons of goli, paying or rather agreeing to pay therefor nincty six milllons of dollars in curreney!" But Gould, Flsk \& Co., who owned several venal New lork judges, placed injunctions and other legel obstacles in the way of a settlement of claims against themseives. "Of course these judicious and judicial orders put au end to all business except that which was favorabie to Fisk and Gouid. They continued to settie with all parties who ored them money; they were judleially enjoined from settllng with those to whom, if thelr own brokers may be believed, they were indebted, and they have not yet settled with them. .., As the settlements between the brokers employed by the ring and their vletlms werc all made in private, there is n n means of knowing the total result. But it is the opinion of Mr. James B. IIodskin, Chairman of the Arhitratiou Committee of the Exelange, and therefore better acquainted with its husiness than any one eise, that the two days' profits of the elique from the operations they acknowledged and settled for were not less than trelve millions of dollars; and that the losses on those trausactions which they refused to acknowledge were not less than trenty millions. The New York 'Tribune' a day or two afterward put the gains of the elique at eleven million duliars. Some months after ' Black Friday' had parsed away, Cougress ordcred an investigation iuto its causes.

For two or three days the whole husiness of New York stood stili awaiting the result of the corner. . . In good-will with all the worid, with grand harvests, with fuil markets on both sides the Atiantic, came a panic that affected all business. Foreign trade came to a stand-still. The East would not send to Europe ; the West could not ship to New Tork. Young men saw millions of dollars made in a few days by dis. honesty; they beheid larger profts result from fraud than from long lives of honesty. Old men anw their beat-laid plans frustrated by the operations of ga:chiers. Our national credit was affeeted by it. Europe was told that our priucipai places of business ware nests of gamblers, and that it was possihle for a small cifque, aided by our banking inst!tutions, to get possession of ali the goid there was in the iand; and that when one firm had gone through husiness transactions to the amount of over onc hundred millions of doliars, the courts of the United States wouid compel the eompietion of those bargains which resulted in a proft, while those that ended in a ions were forbidden. Fnr two or three monthe the sale of bonds in Europe was affected by the transactlons of that day; and not until the present gencration of business men has passed away wili the evil influence of Biack Friday be entirely lost. A. D. 1892.- Restored Tammany governmeat in the City.-The Tammany organization was greatly discredited and crippled for a time "ry the exposure and overthrow of Tweed and his chieftainship of Joln Kcliy aed İlchard Croker, successlve " grand sachems," it recovered its control of tile city government so completely that, in 1892, Dr. Albert Shaw was justitied in deseribing the latter as foilows: "There is in New York no oftcial boly that corresponds with the London Conncil. The New Lork Board of Aidermen, plus the Mayor, plus the Commissioners who are the appointive heads of a number of the worklug departments such as the Excisc. Park, Health and Police departments, plus the Dlstrict Attorucy, the Sherifr, the Coroners, and other officials pertaining to the county of New Fork as dlstinct from the city of New York, plus a few of the head Tammany bosses and the local Tummany bosses of the iwenty four Assembly Districts - all these men and a few other oflicials and bosses, taken together, would make up a boly of men of about the same numerical strength as the London Council; and these are the men who now dominate the officiai iffe of the great community of nearly eighteen hundired thousand souls. In London the 137 councillors fight out every municipai question in perfectly open session upon its actual merits before the eyes of all London, and of the wholc British empirc. In New York, the governing group discusses nothing openly. The Board of Aldermen is an obscure body of twenty-Hive members, with iimited power except for mischief, its members being almost to a uan high Tammany politicians who are either eugaged directly in the liquor busincss or are in one way or another connected with that interest. So far as there is any meeting in which the rulers of New lork discuss the pubiic affairs of the commuuity, such meetings are held in the Tammany wlgwim in Fourtcenth Street. But Tammany is not an organization which really eonceras itself wlth any aspects of puhlic questions, either local or general. exceptlng the 'spolls' aspect. It is organized upon what is a military rather than a poilitical basis, and its machinery extends through aid the assemhiy distrits and voting precinct of New York, controiling enough votes to hold and wiell the balance of power, and thus to keep Tammany in the ponsenslon of the offices. Its local hold is mairiained hy the dlspensing of a rast amount of patronage. The iatorers on puhtic works, the members of the police force aud the fire hrigades, the empioyees of the Sunitary Department, of the Excise Department, of the Street Cleaning and Ilepair Department and of the Water and Dock and Park Departments, the teachers in the publle schools and the nurses in the puintic hospluals, ali are inmle to fecl that their livelihood depends on the favor of the Tummany bosses; and they must not only be faithful io Tanamny themeeires, but all their frlends and reiatives to the remotest collaterai degree must aiso be kept subservlent to the Tummany lomminatlon. The following characterizatlon of Tannmngy ieadershlpand inetholl is from the New York Evening Post.

None of the inembers ocenpy themselves with any legisla. thon, except such as creates salaried offices and contracts in this clty, to be got hold of elther by capture at the poils or "deals" with the Repub. lican politiclans here or in Athany. When such legisiation has been successful, the only thing in connectlon with it which Tuminany leaders con. sider is how the snlaries shall ine divlded and what "assessments" the places or contracts can stand. If miny decent outsider could make hils way Into the inner conferences at which these questions are settled, fie woull hear not the grave dlscussion of the juhlic interests, how to keep streets clear, or how to repare them, or how to ilght them or pollee them, or how to sulp. piy the eity with water, but storics of drunken or amorous adventure, iarded freely with curioum and original oaths, ridicule of reformers and "silk.stockinged" people generally, ahuse of "klekers," and examination of the clalme of gamhiers, Iiquor-dealers, and puglilsts to more money out of the puhfic treasury. In fact, as we have had of late frequent occasion to observe, the mociety is slmply an organizntion of clever adventurern, mont of them in some degree criminal, for the coutrol of the ignorant and vicion: vote of the city in an attack on the property of the tax payers. There is not a particle of poll. thes In the concern any more than in any comblnation of Western brlgnnis to "hoid up" a rullroad traln nuld get at the express packages. NEW 2EALAND: The ahorigines. "The traditlons of these people [the Muoris] lead to the conclusion that they first came to New Zealand about 600 years ago, from some of the islinuls between Samoa and Tahiti; but some cthoulogists put the milgration as far back ns 3.000 years. Their language is a dialect of the Polynesian, most resembling that of larotonga, hut their physlenl characters vary greatly. Sone are falr, with straight hair, und with the best type of Polynesian features; others nre dusky brown, with curly or almost frizzly hair, anil with the fong and broad arched nose of the Papuan; while others have the conrse thick featares of the lower Jlelnnesian races. Now these varintions of typecannot be explained nuless we suppose the Maoris to have found in the islands an indigenous Melaneslan people, of whon they exterminatell the raen, but took the better-lookIng of the women for wives; aud as their tradltions decidedly state that they did find such a race when they first arrivel nt New Zealand, there seems no reason whatever for rejecting these traditions, which accord with actual physical facts, just as the traditlon of a migiation from 'Ilawaikl,' a Polynesian isiand, accords with linguistic fncts."- Hellwald-Wallace, Aus. ${ }^{\text {trakinias (Stanford's Compendium, new issue, 1893), }}$ ch. 14, sect. 9 (e. 1).

A. D. 1642-1856.-Discovery.-Colonization. - Eariy dealings with Natives, - Constitutional organization.-"The hononr of the ac. tnal dlscovery of New Zealand must be accomled to the Dntel Navigutor, Tasman, who rislted It in 1042, diseovering Van Diemau's Land during the same voynge. As, however, he does not ap. pear to have landed, the knowledge of the conntry derived by Europeans from his account of it ninst have been of very llmited extent. It was our own countryman, Captaln Cook, to whom we are so largely indebted for what we now know of the geography of the Pacitle, who made us acqualnted with the nature of the coun. try and the character of its inhabitants. Tue aborigines were evidently of a mach higher type than those of the Australian continent. They are $n$ brunch of the Polynesian race, and uccording to their own traditions cane about 600 years ago from 'Hawalki.' which ethnologists iuterpret to mean either Ilawaii (the Saudwich Islands), or Savaii in the Sanma group. They are divided into some twenty clans, analogous to those of the Scottlsh Highlands. Cook's first visit was paid $\ln 1769$, but he tonched at the is. lands on severai occasions during his subsequent voyages, and succecded in makligg, before his final departure, a more or less compllete explora. tion of its cousts. Captaln Cook's lant vialt to New Zeaiand, a few representatives of the Engitah Church Miasionary Society landed in the North Isiand, leme with the latention of colonising than with the hope of converting the natives to Christianity. The firat practical stepm in the direction of rettlement were taken by the New Zealand Land Company, composed of a very strong and Influentlai body of gentlemen headed by Lord Durham, and having much the asme ideas as those which actuated the Bouth Austrailan Coionisation Soclety. The proposal to found anew Colony was at first bitteriy opposed hy the Government of the day, but In consequence of the energetic action of the Company, who sent ont agents with iarge funds to purchase land of the natives, the Governmeut uitimateiy gave way, and despatched as Consui Captain Hohson, who arrived in January 1840. One of his first stepa on assuming office was to cail a meeting of the natives and explain to them the object of his misslon, with the view of enterlng into a treaty for placiag the sovereignty of their isiand in Her Majesty the Queen. Ife wan not at Arst successfin, the natives fearing that if they acceded to the propossi, their iand wouid be taken from them; but being reassured on tbis point, the majority of the chiefs uitimately signed the treaty in February of the same year. By the terms of this treaty, calied the Treaty of Waitangi, the chiefs, in return for their acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Queen of Eng. land, were guarantued for themseives and their peopie the excinsive possession of their lands so long as they wished to retain them, and they, on their side, accorded to the Crown the exclusive right of preemption over sucb lands as might, from time to time, come into the market. It wili thus be seen that the acquisitiou of land oin New Zealand by European settlers was effected in a manuer cutirciy dilfereat from that which obtained in other coionies; for, altbough the right of pre-emption by the Crowa was suhsequentiy walved, no land could be ohtnined from natives unless they were perfectiy willing to part with it. It is true tbat iands have in some instances leen confiscated as a punishment for native insurrections, but, with this exception, ail iands have passed from natives to Europeans hy the ordinary processes of bargain and saie. Captain IIobson's next action was to piace himself in communicntion with the New Zeaiand Company's agents, and ascertain what they were doing in the way of colonisation. Ile found that besides acquiring various blocks of tand in the North and south Isiands, they had formed a permanent settlement at Weilington, at which they were orgnisiag a system of government incompatible with the Queen's authority, which be therefore promptly suppressed.

In June of 1840 the settlement was made a colony hy Charter under tite Great Seai, Captain Hi bson naturaliy beconing the first Governor. This cminent public servant died at his post in September 1842, being succeeded hy Captain R. Fitzroy, who, however, did not reach the Colony tiil a year afterwards. Iu the interval occurred that lamentahle incident, the massacre of white settiers hy the natives at Wairu, In the South Isiand. Shortly after this the Company made strenuous efforts to ohtain a share In the Executive Goverament, hut this was twice dissilowed hy the Home authori. ties. Captain Fitzroy's term of office was ln all reapects a atormy one, the native chiefs rising in rebeliion, open and covert, agalnat the terma of the Waitangi treaty. With onit 150 coldiers, and deatitute of any military facilities, this governor deemed it prudent to come to a compromise with the rebels, fearing the cffect upor the minds of the natives generaliy of the certe $n$ defeat which he must sustain In active warfare. Receiving however, reinforcements from Sliney, Captain Fitzroy tuok the fleid, sustaining in his first expedition a decileal defant. Two other expeditions fuilowad tins, aniint iength the success of the British arms was assured, Captain Fitzroy suffering from the irony of fate, since, having been neglected in his perii, he was recalied in the moment of vietory. Captain (afterwaris Sir George) Grey succeeded to the Governursbip in November 1845; itaving the giod fortune tul he surroundel by ministers of exceptional abllity. and arriving in the Colony at a fortuate turn lo Its affairs, he takes his place nmong the successtui Governors of Sew Zenlaul. Colonel Gore Browne -after an interregnum of nearly two years-succected to power, and during bis viceroyaity in $15 \% 3$, responsibie governinent. Whitch, however, did not provide for mluisterial responsibility, was inaugaratei. . . . The llome Government shortiy afterwnrds (May 18:5) established responsibic government in its fuifest form, but unfortunately without auy speciai provisions for the represeutatlon of the native races.

Up to 1847 New Zeuiand remained a Crown Coiony, the Government leling administered by a Governor appointed hy the Crown, an Execintive Council, and a Legisiative Couneli. Under this system, the Governo had very large powers, shace the oniy coutrol over him was that exercised hy the Ilome Government. The Exccutive Connell conslsted of the Goveruor aud three officiai members, whille the Lepislative Councii was made up of the Executive Councii and three non-othcial members nominated by the Governor. At that time Auckland was the seat of Government, which has since been moved to Welliug. ton. In 1852, before the expiration of the period orer which the provisiunal charter granted in 1847 was to extend, the Imperiai Parliament granted a new constitution to New Zealani (15 $\mathcal{S} 16$ Vic. cap. T2), and in the following year it came into fores aul is still [1386] operative The Legislature, under this, Constitution, conslsts of a Guvernor, a Legislative Council, composed of iife members numinated by the Crown, and a Housc of Represemtatives clected by the peopie, under a franchise whicb practicaliy amounts to housebodd sulfruge." - Mer Mujeaty's Columies (Colonial and Ind. NIAGARA: The name and its original applications. - "Collen wrote it [the nnme] 'O-ni-ng-a-ra,' In 1741, nnd he must have re. ceived lt from the Mohawks or Uneldas. It was the name of a Seueca village at the mouth of the Niagarn river; located as early as 1650 , nenr the site of Joungstown. It was also the place where the Dlarquis de Nonville constructed a fort in $169 \%$, the building of which brought thls locality umer the particular notlce of the Eng. lish. The name of this indian vlllage lu the dialect of the Scnecas was 'Ne-ahe-ga,' in Tus. carora ' 0 -ne- ${ }^{\text {he-kirs, }}$ ' in Onondaga 'O-ne-ahe.ga,' in Oueida 'O-ne-uhr-gile, nnd in Mohawk 'O-ne. d. gatra. ' These names are but the same word under dialectical changes. It ls clevr that Niag. ara was derived from some one of them, and thus came direct from the Iroquols language. The signification of the worl is lost, unless it ls derived, as some of the present lroquois suppose, from the word which signlties 'ncek,' in Senera 'O- ue-alhe I, In Onondaga '0-ne-ytr-a,' and In Oneida 'O-ne-arle.' The name of thls Inlian village was bestowed by the Iroquois upon Youngstown; upon the river Niagarn, from the falls to the Lake; and upon Lake Ontario." -1. 11. Morgan, Letgue of the Iroguois. bk: 3, ch. 3.-"It [the name Niacarit] Is the oldest of all the local geographical terms which have come down to us from the nborigines. It was not at tirst thus written hy the Engllsh, for whit them it passed through almost every posslble alphabetlcal varlation before its preseut orthog. raphy was established. We find lts germ in the 'On-gul-aal.ra' of the Neutral Nation, as glven by Father L'Allemant in a letter dated In 1641, at the mlsslon statlou of Sainte Marie, on Lake Hurou.

The name of the river next occurs on Sanson's map of Cumalia, publlshed in Paris in 1050, where lt is spelleal 'Onglars.' Its tirst appearance as Niagara Is on Coronelli's map, published In Paris in 1688 . From that tlme to the present, the French liave been conslstent In their orthography, the numerous variations al. lided to occurring only among Engllah writers. The word was probalily derived from the Mohawks, through whom the Erench had their arst Intercourse with the Iroquois. The Mohawks pronounced It Nyal..ga.rah', wlth the primary accent on the first syllable, and the secondary on the last. The correspondlng Scneca name, Nyahe.gaah, was always confined hy the Iropuols to the sectlon of the river below the Falls, and to Lake Outario. That portlon of the river whove the Falls belng sontetlmes called Galgwalh gexh, -one of thelr names for lake Erie." -0. 11. Marshnll, The Niagaru frontier (Uistorionl Writings, 1,283 ).

NIBELUNGEN LIED, The.-"Of the bequests made to us of the [German] Popular Poetry of the time of the IIohenstauffen, hy far the inost important, in fact the most important ilterary neemorial of any kind, is the cpic of hetween aluc and ten thousand iines known as the Nlbelungen Lied. The manuscripts which have preserved for us the poem cone from about the year 1200 . For fuil a thousand years before that, however, many of the lays from which it was composed had been in existeuce; some indeed proceed from a still remoter antiquity, sung by primitlve minstreis when the Germans were at thetr wlidest. untonched by Christianlty or eivilization. These lay:s had been handed down orally, untli at leugth a poet of genius elaborated then and iutrusted them to parehment."-J. K. Hosmer, Short Ilistory of German Literature, pt. 1, ch. 1, -"In the year 1757, the Swlss Professor Bod. mer printed an ancient poetleal manuscript. under the title of Chriemhilden Rache und dle Klage (Chriemhilde's Revenge, and the Lament): which may be considered as the tirst of a series. or streain of publlcations and specuiations stili miling on, with increased current, to the present day: Some tifteen years after Bodner's publication, which, for the rest, is not celebrated as au editorial feat, one C. H. Malier undertook a Collection of German Poems from the Tweifth, Tinirteenth and Fourteenth Ccnturies; wherelu, among other articies, he reprinted Bodmer's Chriemhilde and Klage, with a highly remarkahie addtlon pretixed to the former, essentiai indeed to the right undcrstandlag of it; and the whoie now stood before the worid as one Poem, under the name of tise Nibeiungen Lied, or Lay of the Nibelungen. It has since been ascertalned that the Kiage is a foreign inferior appendage; at best related oniy ns epilogue to the nain work: meanwhile out of this Nibeiungen, such as it was, there soon proceeded new inquiries and kindred caterprises. For much as the Poem, in the shape it here bore, was defaced and marred, It failed not to attract observation: to ail openminded iovers of poetry, especiaily where a strong patriotic feeiing existed, the singular antique Nibeiungen was an interesting appearance. Johannes Muller, in hls famous Swiss IIistory, spoke of it in warm terms: subsequently, Au: gust Wilheim Schlegel, through the nedium of the Deutsche Museum, succeeded in awakening sonething iike a universal popular fceling on the suliject; and, as a natural cousequence, a Whoie host of Editors and Critics, of deep and of shailow endeavour, whose iahours we yet see in progress. The Nibeiungen has now been investigated, trunslated, collated, commented upon, with more or less result, to almost troundless iengths. . . Apart from its antiquarian value, and not only as hy far the finest monument of old German art ; hut intrinsleally, aud as a niere detached compositlou, this Nibeluugen ias an excellence that cannot but surprise us. With little preparation, auy reader of poetry. even in these days, might thid it interesting. It is uot wlthout a certain Cnlty of interest and purport, an internal coherence and completeness; it is a Whole, and some sphrit of Musie informs it: these are the highest characteristles of a true Poem. Consideriug farther what intellectual environment we now tind it in, it is doubiy to be prized and wondered at ; for it differa from those Hero books, as molten or carved metai does from rude aggiomerated ore; almost as some Shakspeare from his fellow Dramatlst, whose Tamburlalace and Island Princesses, themselves uot destitute of merit, first show us clearly in what pure loftluess and loncliness the Hamlets and Tempests reign. The unkuown Singer of the Nibelungen, though no Shakspeare, must have had a deep poetic soui; wherein things diseontlnuous and lnanimate shaped thenisolves together into iife, and the Ciniverse with its wondrous purport stood slgalfeautly imaged; overarchlag, as with heavenly tirmaments and cteruai liarmoules, the little sceue where ineu strut and fret their hour. His Poem, unlike so many oid and new pretenders to that nsme, has a hasis and organlc siructure, a beginning. middle and end; there is one great priuciple andi lelea set forth in in round which all its multifarious parts connhlne in living nuion.

Withan instinetive art, far different from aequired artitice, thls I'oet of the Nitelungen, workiug in the same prowiace whith ills contemporaries of the iichle nutueh [Hero. hook] on the same material of tralitlon, has, in a wonderful degree, possessed hinseif of what

We recoguise In most of these songs such differences lu conception, treatment, and style, as point to separate authorshly. The whole may have been finished in about twenty years, from 1100-1210. Lachmann's theory lias lnileed been contested. Many students still believe that the poem, as we have it, was the work of one hand; but on thls hypothesis no one has succeeded in explainlng the strange contradictions whleh pervade the work, parts of which show the highest art, whlle the rest is valueless."-W. A. D. 1855-1860. - The invasion of Waiker and his Filibusters.- "Its geographical situation gave importanee to Nicaragun. It contains a great iake, which is approacied from the Atiantic by the river San Juan ; and from the west end of the lake there are only 20 miles to the coast of the Pacific. Ever since the time of Cortes there have been projects for conuecting the two oceans through the lake of Nicaragua.
llence Niearagua has aiways been thoright of gleat importance to the United States. The puifitieni struggles of the state, ever since the failure of the eonfederation, had sunk iuto a petty rivalry between the two towns of Leon and Granada. Leon enjoys the distinetion of being the tirst mportunt town in Ceutral America to $r$.ise the ery of independence in 1815. and it had diwars maintained the iiberni ehargeter whieh this disclosed. Casteilon, the leader of the Radicnl party, of which Leon was the seat, calied in to help him au American named Wiidiam Waiker. Waiker, who was born in 2824 , was a young roring American who nad gone during the goid rush of 1850 to California, and become editor of a newspaper in Sau Franeisco. In those days it was supposed in the lnited States that the time for enguiling the whole of Spanish Ameriea had come. Lopez had already made his descent on Cuha; and Waiker, in Juif, 1853, had organized a band of filibusters for the conquest of Sonora, and the peninsuia of Caiiforvia, which had been left to Mexieo hy the treaty of Guadalupe Ilidnigo. This wiid expedition. . was a total faiiure; hut when Waiker came hack to his newspapers after an absenee of seven months, he found himsrif a hero. Hlis fame, as we see, had reacheif Centrai Ameriea; and he at once accepted Casteilon's ofrer. In 1855, having collected a band of 70 adventurers in California, he landed in the country, captured the town of Granada, and, aided hy the Intrigue: of the American consul, procured his own sppointment as General. in-Chief of the Nicarag wiu army. Walker was now master of the place: and his own provisional President, Rivas, having turned against him, he displaced him, and in 1856 became President himseif. He remained master of Nicaragua for neariy two years, levying arhitrary customs on thr traffic of the lake, and forming pians for a great military state to he crected on the ruins of Spanish America. One of Walker's first ohjects was to seize the famous goid-minea of Chontales, and the sudden discovery that the entire slerra of America is a gold-bearing region had a good deal to do with his extraordinary cnterprise. Having assured himself of the wealth of the country, he now resolved to keep it for himseif, and this proved in the end to be his ruin. The statesmen of the United Stntes, who had first supposed that he would celle them the tory, now withdrew their support from him: the peopie of the neighbouring states rose in arms against him, and Waiker was chiliged to capitulate, with the remains of his fllhustering party, at Rivas in 1857. Waiker, stiil ciaiming to be President of Nicaragua, wellt to New Orleans, where he coliected a second hand of filihusters, at the head of whom he again ianded near the San Juan river towards the end of iue year: this time lie was arrested and sent back home by the American commodore. His third and last expedition, in 1860 , was directed against Ilonduras, where he hoped to meet with a good reception at the hands of the Liberal party. Instead of this he fell into the hands of the soldiers of Guardioia, by whom he was tried as a pirate and shot, September 1 E , 1860."-E. J. Payne, Hist. of European Colonic*, ch. 21, sect. 8. - "Though he never evinced mueh military or other enpacity, Walker, so long as he acted under color of authority from the chiefs of the faction he patronized, was generally successfui against the pitiful rahble styled soidiers by whom his progress was resistel. . . But his very successes proved the ruin of the faction to which he had attached hilmself, by exciting the natural jealousy and alarm of the natives who mainiy composed it; and his assumption . . . of the title of President of Nicaragua, speediiv foltowed by a decree resstabishing Slavery in that eountry, exposed his purpose and iusured his downfill. As if a mady beut on ruiu, he proceeded to confiscate the steamboats and other property of the Niearagua rausit Company, therehy. . cutting himseif off from ail hope of further recruiting his forers from the throngs of s:1uguine or of hattled godd-seekers. . . . It was Ivan Turguenlef, who by the mouth of one of the characters in hls cclehrated novel, ' Fathers and Sons,' gave the young generation the name r. nibllists. But lt was not of his coinge; Royer-Collard first stamped lt; Victor Hingo had already said that the negatlon of the lntinito led directly to nihilism, and Joseph Lemaistre had spoken of the ninillsm, more or less sincerc, of the contemporary generations; but lt was rcserved for the author of 'Virgin Soil' to bring to light and make fimous thls word, whlch after nukirg a great stir ln his cwn country attracted the atention of the whole world. The reign of Niraolns I. was an epoch of hard oppression. Then lie ascended the throne, the consplracy of the Dccembrists hroke out, and this sudden revelation of the revolutionary spirit stecled the already untexihle soul of the Czar. Nieholas, although fond of letters and an assiduous reader of Homer, was disposed to throttle his encmies, nnd would not have hesitated to pluck ont the brains of Ilussia; he wns very nenr suppressing all the unlversities and schools, and inaugnrating II voluutary retrocession to Asiatic birharism. Ile did nutilate and reduce the instrnetion, he suppressed the chair of European politieal laws, and after the cvents of 1848 in France he seriously considered the idea of closing his fronticrs with a cordon of troops to heat hack foreign liberalism like the chniers or the plague.
However, it was under his sceptre, under his systematlc oppresslon, that, by confession of the great revolutionary statesman Herzen, Hussian though: developed as never beforc: thint the eraancipation of the litelligence, which this very statcsman calls a tragic cvent, was aceomplishci, and a national literature was hrought to light and begau to tlourish. NOBLES, Roman: Origin of the term."When Livy in his tirat six booka writes of the dlsputes between the Patres or Patricians and the Plels about the I'uhtic Land, he sometimes designates the Patricians by the name Noblies, which we have in the form Nobles. A Nobills is a man who is known. A man who la not known is Ignoblifs, a noboiy. In the later Ilepublic a Plebelan who attained to a curule office eievated his famlly to a rank of honour, to a nobility, not acknowledged by any law, but by usage.

The Patriclans were a nobility of antlent date. . . . The Patrician nobillty was therefore independent of all offlice, but the new Nobillty and thelt Jus Imaginum originated in some Plebelan who tirst of his family attalded a curuie office. . . . The true concluaion is that Livy in hls tirst slx books uses the word Nobiles improperly, for there is no evidence that thls name was given to the Patres before the consulship of L. Sextius."-G. NOETIANS AND SABELLIANS.-"At the head of those in thls century [the 31] who exphained the scriptural doctrine of the Father. son, and holy Spirit, by the precepts of reason, stands Noetus of Smyrna; a man little known but who is reported by the anclents to have been cast out of the church by presbyters (of whom no accouut is given), to have opened a school, and to have formerl a sect. It is stated that, being wholly unable to comprehend how that Gul, who is so often in Scripture declared to be one and undivided, can, at the same time, be manifoll, Nostus concluded that the undlvided Father of all things unlted himself whth the man Christ, was born la him, and in him suffered and died. On account of thls doctrine hls followers were called lutripasslans. . . . After the middle of this century, Sabellius. an African hlshop, or presbyter, of Ptolemals, the capltal of the Penta. politan province of Lilisa Cyrenalca, attempted to reconcile, in a maniner somewhat ifferent from that of Noetus, the seriptural doctrine of Father, sion, and holy Spirit, whe the deretrine of the unlyy of the dlvine nature." A. D. 985-8000.-The solidifylag of Rollo's duchy. - The Normans becoms Freach. - The Arst century which passed after the settlement of the Northmen along the selne anw "the atealy growth of the duchy in extent and power. Much of thls was due to the abllity of lis rulers, to the slgour and wistom with which IIrolf forced order aad justlee on the new communlty, as well as to the polltical tact wilh whleh both Hrolf and Willian Lnngsword [son and successor of Duke Rollo or Irolf, A. D. 927-943] clung to the Karollugs In their strife with the dukes of Parls. Hut still more was owing to the steadlness with which hoth these rulers remalned falthiful to the Christlanlts which had been Imposed on t1. . northuen as a condlthon of thelr settlement, and to the firm resolve with which they trampled down the temperand traditlous whlch thelr people had hrought from thelr Scandlasalan homeland, and welcomed the language and clvilization which came In the wake of thelr nelglabours' re11 -lou. Tle difficultes that met the dukes were lalepd enormous. . .. They were girt ln ly hostle gtates, they wcre threatened at sua by Engiand, under Ethelstan a network of allances menaced them with ruln. Once a French army occupled Roucn, ant a French king beld the pirates land at his will; once the Germun lances were seen from the walls of thelr capital. Nor were their ditticultles withln less than those without. The subject population whitch had ween trolden under foot by the northern settlers were seething with dlscontent. The policy of Chirlstlanlzation and civillzatlon broke the Normans themselves into two partles. $\qquad$ The very conquests of Hrolf and his successor, the Bessin, the Cotentlo, hat to be settled and held by the now comers, who made them strougholds of heathen. don. . . . But amidst diffculte's from withln and from whout the dukes held firm to their course, and their stuhborn will had lts reward. $\qquad$ the end of Wlllam Longsword's days all formaudy, save the newly settled districts of the west. was Christian, and spoke French.
The work of the statesman at last completed the work of the sword. As the connexlon of the duhes whlth the Karoling klogs had glven thein the hanl, and helpell them for fifty years to hold It against the House of Paris, so in the downfall of the Karollngs the sudden and adroit change of froat which hound the Norman rulers to the House of Parls in its successful struggle for the Crown secured the land for ever to the north. meu. The -lose connexlon which France was forced to maniain with the state whose support held the new royal line on its throne toll both on kinglom and duchy. The French dreal of the 'plrates' died gralually away, while French Influence spreal yet more rapidly over a people which clung so closely to the French crown."J. 1R. Green, The Conquest of England, ch. 8 .
A. D. 1035-1003.- Duke William establishes his authority.-Duke Robert, of Normandy, who lied in 1035, was gucceeded by hls young gon Williau, who bore In youth the opprohrious name of "the lastard," but who extingulshed It in later life under the proud appellatlon of "the Conquerur." By reason of his bastardy he was not an acceptahle successor, and, beling yet a bny, It seemed little likely that he would malntaln himself on the ducal throne. Normandy. for a dozen years, was given up to low. less strife among its nobles. In 1047 a large part of the duchy rose In revole, againat lis objectlonahle young lord. "It will be remembered that the western part of Normandy, the lands of Bayeux and Coutances, wero won by the Norman dukes after the eastern part, the lands of Roucn and Evreux. And It will be remembered that these wcstern land, won more lately, ani fell by new colciies from the North, were st . 1 heathen ane' Danlsh some whlle after eastern Normandy liad become Christlan and French. speaklng. Now we may be sure that, long trefore Wlllam's day, all Normandy was Claristlan, but it is quite possilhle that the old tongue may have llagered on $\ln$ the western lands. At any rate there was a wide difference $\ln$ spirit anil feellng between the more Freurh and the nore Danlsh districts, to say nothing of Bayeux. where, befure the Normans cance, there had been a Saxon mettlement. One part of the duchy In short was altogether Kunance In speech and manners, while more or less of Teutonle character sthl clare to the other. So now Teutonle Normandy rose agalnst Duke Wullam, and Konance Normandy was fathful to lim. The nobles of the Bessin and C'ôtentin made league with Wlllam's cousin Guy of Burgundy, mean. lug, as far as one cun see, to make Guy Duke of Ruucn aud Evrcux, and to have no lord at all for thernselves. . . . When the relelllon broke out, Willlam was among them at Valognes, abal they trled to stize him. But his fool warued him In the alght; he rode for hils life, and got sufe to his own Falialse. All eastern Normanily was logal: but Whllan doubted whether he could hy himself overcoine so strong an array of rehels. So he went to Polssy, between Rouen und Paris, and asked his lord King Ilenry fof France] to help him. So King Ilenre came with a French arny; and the French and those whom we may call the French Normans met the Tcutonle Normans in battle at Vial-es-dunes, not far from Caen. It was Willlam's first pitchell hattle, " and he won a declsive victory. "He was now fully master of hls own ducliy; and the battle of Val-ès-lunes tiually fixed that Nor. mandy should take lts character from Romance louen and not from Teutonlc Bayeux. Wlllam had lu short overcome Saxuns and Danes $\ln$ Gail leforc he came to overcome them In Britain. He land to conquer hls own Nornandy before he could conquer England.

But before long King Ilenry got jealous of Wilham's power, asd he was now always ready to give help to nuy Norman rebels. $\qquad$ And the other neighboaring priuces werc jealous of him as well as the Kiug. Ilis nelghbours in Britanny, Anjou, Chartres, and Ponthicu, were all against him. But the great Duke was able to hold his own agalnst them all, and before long to make a great alldition to his dominlons."

Between 1053 and 10.js the French King Invaded Nornundy three times and suffered defeat on every occaslon. In 1063 Dukc Willam Invaded the county of Daine, and relucell it to entire submission. "From this thme he ruled over Malne as well as orer Nor"mauly, "although Its people were often in revolt. Thas It is said that Gunnhjorn, Lif Krage's son, saw land lying in the ocean at the west of Iceland, wheu, in the year 876 , lee was driven out to the sea by a storm. Similar reports were ineard, from time to time, hy other marincrs. Abont a cen. tury later a certain man, by name Erik the lied,
. . . resolved to go in search of the land in the west that Gunnhjorn and others had seen, Ho set sail in the year 984, and found the land as he had expected, and remained there exploring the country for two years. At the end of this period he returned to Iceland, giving the newiy-discorered country the name of Greenland, in order, as he sald, to attract settiers, who would be favorabiy impressed with so pleasing a name. The result was that many Icelanders and Norsemen cmlgrated to Greeniand, and a flourishing coiony was estahlished, with Gardar for its capftal city, whici, In the year 1261, became subject to the crown of Norway. But after conquering Anglesea, whence be drove out the Normans [from England] who had Jnst made a settlement there. he erossed to Ireland to meet his death in battle. The soverelgnty of the Isles was then restored to its original owners, but sonn after split into two parts - the Suderles and Norierics (whenee the term Sodor and Man), north and south of Arlmamurchan Point. The next glimpse we have of these dominlons is at the close of the 12 th century, when we find them uniler a ehlef mamed somarled, who exercised authority in the islanils and Argyleshire, and from him the elans of the lighlands and the Western Isies love to trace their amestry. After his death, aceording to the Ilighland traditions, the inlamis and Argyleshire were divided amongst his three sons. With this objeet, they made grants to a trading company, which led, however, only to exploration and traffic. Other grants of a similar nature followed for the next ten years, at the expiration of which a eompany of Virginians made their way from Nansemond to Albemarle, and establlshed a settlement there. The Virgin. inn Burgesses granted them lands, and promised further grants to all who would extend these settlements to the southward. Emigration from Virginia began. Settlers, singly and in companies, crossed the horder, and made scattered and solitary elcarings within the wilds of North Carolina. Many of these people were mere adventurers; but some of them were of more substantlal stuff, and founded permanent settlements on the Chowan and elsewhere. Other eyes, however, as watchful as those of the Virginimas, were also turned to the rich regions of the South. NeW England enterprise explored the American const from one end to the other, In search of lucrative trade and ncw resting;places. After a long ac. qualntance with the Forth Carolina coast, they bought iand of the Indlans, near the mouth of Cape Fear River, and settled there. For some unexplalned cause - posslbly on aceount of the wild and dangerous character of the scattered lahabitants, who had already drifted thither from Virginia, possilhy from the reason whleh they themselves gave-the Ncw England colonists nhandioned thelr settlement and departed, leaving n written opinion of the poor charater of the country expressed In very plaln language and pinned to a post. Ilere it was found hy some wanderers from Barhadoes, who were of a dlfferent oplnlon from the New Englanders as to the appearance of things; and they accordingly repurchased the land from the Indlans and began a settlement. At thls date [1663], therefore, there wns ln North Carolina thls infant settlement of the Barbadoes men, on the cxtreme southcastern polnt of the present State, and ln the north-eastern corner the Virginla settlers scattered about, with here a solltary piantation and there a little group of farms, and aiways a restless van of adventurers working their Way down the coast and lnto the Interior. . .. Whatever rights the North Carolina settlers may have had in the eyes of the Vlrginians, who had granted them iand, or in those of the Indlans who had sold lt, they had none recognized hy the Engllsh King, who claimed to own all that vast region. It may be doulited whether anything was known of these early colonists In England; and their existenec was certainly not regarded ln the least when Charles II. lavished their territory, and nuch besides, upon a band of hils courtiers and luinisters."- H. "On tne 24th Mareh, 1683, King Charles II. granted to Edward, Earl of Clarendon; George [Monk], Duke of Albemarle; William, Earl of Cravin; John, Lord Berkeley; Anthouy, Lord Ashley [Enrl of Shafteshury]; Sir George Carterct. Sir John Colleton, and Sir William Berkeley, all the country between the Pacitic and Atlantic Oceans, betwcen $31^{\circ}$ nnd $36^{3}$ parallels of latitule, called Carollaa, In honor of Charles. [The grant embraced the present States of Georgia, Alabuma and Mississippl, ns well as the two Carolinas.] In 1063, Sir William Berkeiey, Governor of the Colony of Virginia, visited the provinee, and appolnted William Drummond Governor of the Colony of Carollna. . . . atl Sketches of North Carolina, ch. 4-" The earliest grant made to the iords proprictors did not include the whole of the present State of North Carolins Its northern ilne fell short of the southern boundary of Virginia by haif a degree of latitude. Notwlthstandling this, an unwarranted exhlhition of authority estahlished virtually the proprietary dominion over thle unappropriated territory. . . Coionei Byrd of Vlrginla, who was born not long after the charter of 1665 was made, and who lived during the admlnlstration of Berkeley, states, and no douht truly, tiat 'Slr William Berkeley, who was one of the grantees, and at that time governor of Vlrginlu, tindlng a territory of 81 mlles in hreadth between the inhahlted part of Virginla and the above-mentioned boundary of Carollna [36 ${ }^{\circ}$, advised the Lord Ciarendon of lt. And his lordship had interest enough wlth the klng to olitnla a second patent to include it, dated June 30th, 1665.' By this patent very iarge powers were granted; so iarge that, as Chalmers has remarked, ' no one prerogatlve of the crown was preserved, except only the soverelgn dominlon. . . .

NORTH CAROLINA, 1699-1663. Royal Grant. NORTH CAROLINA, 1668-1670.

The existence of the colony from Barbadoes, under Sir John Ycamans, that settled in the old country of Clarendon, from its inception in 1685 to lis ahandonment in 1690 , forms hut an episole in the proprietary hlstory of North Carolina. The colony, like ali others slmliarly sltuated, sought at first to make provision for the supply of bodily wants, ln securingfood and shelter only; lut haviug done this it next proceeded to makc profitable the gifts of Heaven that were around it. Yeamans had brought with him negro slaves from Barbadoes, and so inviting was the new settlement deemed, that in the second year of lts exlstence lt contalned 800 inhahitants. . . . But wlth all thls prosperity, the colony on the Cape Fear was not destined to be permanent. The actlon of the lords proprietors theniselves caused lts ahandon. ment. . . in 1670 , the iords proprietors, who seen to have been anxious to proceed more and more to the southward, sent out a conslderable number of emigrants to form a colony at Port Roynl, now Beaufort, In the present State of Sonth Carollna. The indivlduai who led the ex. pedition was Wllliam Sayle, 'a man of experience,' says Chalmers. 'who had been appolnted governor of that part of the const lylng southFest ward of Cape Carteret.'

Scarceiy how. ever, had Sayle carried out hls lnstructlons and mude his colonlsts somewhat comfortable, before his constltutlon ylelded to a new and insaluhrious ellmate, and he dled. . . . It was not easy for the proprietors imnediately to fiud a fit successor; and, even had such been at hand, some time must hecessarily have elapsed before he could safely reach the scene of lils labors. But Sir John Yeamans was near the spot: his iong residence had accllmated him, and, as the hlstorian states, he 'had hitherto ruled the plantation around Cape Fear with a prudence whleh preeluded complalnt.' He therefore was directed to extend hls commani from old Clarendon, ou the Cape Fear, to the territory whlch was southwest of Cape Carteret. This was in August, 10ii. The shores with the adjacent land, and the streams making into the sea, were by this time very well known to all the dwellers ln Carollua, for the proprictors had caused them to be surveyed with accuracy. On thy Lanks of Ashley River there was good pasturage, and land fit for tillage. The planters of Clarendon, there fore, turned their faces southward, whlle those from Port Royal travelled north ward; and so the colonlsts from both settlements met on the banks of the Ashley, as on a middle ground, and here in the same year (1671) they laid, 'on the first high land,' the foundatlons of 'old Charlestown.' In $167^{\circ} 9$, It was found that 'Oyster Point,' formed br the coathence of Ashley and Cooper rivers, was more convenient for a town than the spot previously selected, and the pcople, wlth the encouragement of the lords proprictors, began to remove thlther. In the next year (1680) were lah the foundations of the present city of Churleston ; thirty houses were bullt, and it was declared to be the capital of the southern part of the prorlnce, and also the port for all commer. elal traftie. Thls gradunlly depopulated old Clarendon. .. We now return to trace the fortumes of the settlement ou Albemarle, under Stephens. As before stated he entered upon hls duties as governor in October, 1667. . . His instructlons were very full and explieit. 'The Assembly was to be composed of the governor, a council of twelve, nad twelve delegates chosen by the freeholders. Of the twelve councillors, whose advlee, hy the way, the governor was required nlways to take and follow, one half was to be appointed by the Assemhly, the other half hy himself. To this Assemhly belonged not only the power to make laws, hut a large share of the executlre authority also. $\qquad$ In 1689, the first legislature under this constitution assemhled. And it is wortisy of remark, that at thls perionl, when the provlnce may be said to have hat, for the first time, a system of reguiar government, there was in it a reeogaltion of two great prinelples which are now part of the political ereed of our whole eountry, without distinetion of party. These are. irat, that the people are entitled to a rolce lu the selection of their law-makers; and seconilly, that they cannot rightfully be taxed but by their own representatives. $\qquad$ The people, we have ruason to belleve, were contented and happy during the early part of Stephens' adminlstration. ... But thils quet condition of affairs was not to last. We have now reached a period in our history whieh lilustrates the faet, that whatever whisiom may be apparent in the constitution glven to the Albemarle colony hy the proprictors, on the accesslon of Stephens, was less the result of deliberation than of a happy accldent. $\qquad$ But the time had now eome for the proprietors to carry out thelr mag. nificent project of founding an emplre; and disregardlng nlike the nature of man, the lessons of experience, and the physlcal obstaeles of an unsubdued wilderness (even not yet entirely re. elalmed), they resolved that all should rleld to their theories of government, and invoked the aid of philosophy to accompllsh an imposslhllity. Locke was employed to prepare 'the fundamental constitutions. "-F. L. Hawks, Hiot. of N: C'urvina, e. 2, pp. 441-462.

A. D. 1600-1093. - The Fundumental Constltutions of John Locke, and their failure.The royal grant of the Carollnas to Monk. Shaftesbury, Clarendon, and their associates $\ln$ vested them with "all the rights, jurisdiction, royalties, privileges, and liberties within the bounds of their province, to hold, use, and enjoy the same, in as ample a manner as the hlshop of I) urham did in that county-palatine in England.

Agreeahly to these powers, the proprictors proceeded to irame a system of laws for the colony which they projected. Locke, the wellknown philosopher, was summoned to this work, and the largest expectations were entertained in consequence of hls eo-operation. Locke, though suhsequently one of the proprit!ors, was, at the beginning, simply the seeretary of the earl of Shaftesbury. Thi prohablllty is that, in preparing the constltutlon for the Carolinas, he rather earried out the notlons of that versatlie nohleman than his own. ... The code of laws calied the 'Funilamental Constltutious,' Which was devlsed, and which subsequently beeane unpopular in the colony, is not certainly the work of his hands. It is nscribed by Oldmixon, a contemporary, to the earl of Shafteslury, one of the proprictors. The most striking feature in thls code provlled for the creation of a nobllity, consistling of lnndgraves, eassiques, aul barons. These were tobe graduated by the lauderl estates whieh were grauted whth the dignity; the ellest of the proprictary lords was to be the superior, wlth the title of Palntine, and the people were to be berfs." The tenants, and the lissue of the tenants, " were to be transferred with the soll, and uot at liberty to leave lt, hut with the lord's permisslou, umler hand and seal. The whole system was rejected after a few rears' experiment. It has been harshly judged as . . . the erude conception of a mind conversant rather with books than inen - with the abstract rather an the practical ln government and soclety. And this judgment is eertalnly true of the eou. stltutlons in the case in whieh they were employed. They dld not sult the absolute conditions of the country, or the class of people which subsequently made their way to it. But contemplating the institution of domestie slavery, as the proprietors had done from the begin. ning -a large villunnge and a we lthy aristocraey, domlnatlng almost wlthout restralnt or responsihllity over the whole - the scheme was not without its plausihllitles. But the feudal tenures were everywhere dying out. The time had passed, even in Europe, for such a system.

The great destltution of the tirst settlers left them generally without the means of proeuring slares; and the equal necesslties, to Which all are subjeet who peril life and fortune in a savage forest and on a forelgn shore, soon made the tltelar distlnetions of the few a miser. ahle mockery, or something worse."-W. G. Simms, Hiat. of S. Carolina, bk. 2, ch. 1.-"The constitutlons were signed on the 2ist of July, 1600 ; " hut subsequently revised hy the Interpo. la. Ion of a clause, agalnst the wishes of Locke, estahlishlng the Church of Eng!and. "Thls reFised copy of 'the model' was not signed tlll March, 16\%0. To a colony of which the major. Ity were likely to be dlssenters, the change was vitnl; it was scarcely noticed in England, where the model became the theme of extravagant ap. plause. $\qquad$ As far as depended upon the pro. prietarifs, the government was immedlately organlzed "ith Monk, duke of Albemarle, as palatine." But, meantlme. the colonists In the northern part of the Carolina proviuce had instituted a slmple form of government for themselves, with a council of twelve, and an assembly componed of the governor, the councll, and twelve delegates from the freeholders of the $\ln$. clplent settlements. The assembly had already met and had framed come important laws, whlch remained "valld in North Carollna for more than half a century. Hardly had these laws been established when the new constltution was forwarded to Albemarle. Its promulgatlon did but favor anarchy by lnvalliating the existing system, which it could not replace. The proprietaries, contrary to stipulations with the eolonists, superseded the existlig government, and the colonists resolutely rejected the substltute." Much the same state of thlngs appeared in the South Carollna settlements (not yet separately named), and successlve disonders and revolutlonary changes made up the hlstory of the pseudo palatlnate for many years. - G. Bancroft, IIist. of the U. S. (Author's lust rer.), pt. 2, ch. 7 (c. 1). -In 1693; "to eoncillate the colonlsts, and to get rid of the dispute whlch had arisen as to the blnding force of the 'Grand Model,' the proprletors voted tinat, 'as the people have declared they would rather be governed by the powers granted lis the charter, wlthout regard to the fundamental constitutions, it will be for thelr quiet, and the protection of the well-disposed, to grant their request.' Tils abrogatlon of the labors of Locke removed one bone of contention; but as the 'Grand Model' had never leen actually carried intoeffect, the governament went on mueh as before. Each of the proprictaries contlnued to have hls special delegate In the colony, or rather two delegates, one for South Carolina, tbe other for Albemarle, the elght together coastltutlig the councli In eitber provlnce, over which the governor presided as delegate of the palatine, to whom his appointment belonged. "- $R$. IIlilreth, Mint. of the U. A. D. 1688-1729.-Slow progress and unprosperous state of the colony, End of the Proprietary Government.-In 1688, Carolinn (the northern provlice) being afllicted with $\Omega$ goveraor, one Seth Sotbel, who ls accuscal of every variety of extortion and rapacity, the colonists rose up anginst hing, tried him before their assennthy, deposed lim from his ofllee and drove him into cxile. " The l'roprictors demurred to the form of this nrocedure, but aeghiased in the substinnec of it, and thereby diel something to confirm that conteapt for government w bicla was one of the leadiag e'laracteristics of the colony. During the years which followel, the etforts of the Proprietors to maiatain any authority over their Nortbern province, or to conncet It in aay way with their southern territory, were little more than nominal. For the most, the two settlements were distiaguished ly the Proprieters as 'our colony north-enst of Cape Fear, and our colony souti-west of Cape Fear.' As early as 1031 we find the expression North Carolina once used. After that we do not inect with it till 1096. From tbat tine onward both expressions are used with no marked distlaction, sometimes even ia the same docuracat. At times the Proprictors seem to have alneel at estahllshing a closer connexlon between the two coionles by placing them under a siagle Goveruor. But iu nearly all these cases provision was made for the appointuient of separate Deputy-Governors, nor doen there seem to have been any project for unlting the two legislative bodles. . . . In 1720 the frst event occurred which throws any clear light from without on the Internal llfe of the colony. In that year boundary dlaputes arose between Virginla and her eouthern neighbour and It was found necesuary to appolnt representatlives on each slde to setile the boundary llne. The chlef interest of the matter lies $\ln$ the note left to us by one of the Vlrginia Commissloners [Colonel Willam Byrd]. After making all deductlons and ehecking Byrd's report by that of graver writers, there remsins a pleture of poverty, indolence, and thriftlessness whlch finds no counterpart ln any of the other southern colonles. That the chief town contalned only some fifty poor cottages ls little or nothlng nore than what we find ln Maryland or Vlrginla. But there the Import trade with England made up for the deficiencles of colonlal llfe. North Carolina, laeklng the two essentials of trade, harbours and a surplus populatlon, had no commerclal dealings wlth the mother country. . . . The only possessions whlch abounded were horses and swluc, both of which could be rearel in droves without any care or attentlon. . . . The colls of slavery exlsted without lis counterbalancing advantages. There was notblng to teach those inablts of administration whlch the rich planters of Vlrglala and South Caroilna learnt as purt of thelr dally life. At the same tlme the colony suffered from one of the worst effects of slavery, a want of manual skill. . . . In 1729 the faint and meaningless sliadow of proprictary goverameat came to an end. The Crown bonght up first the shares of seven Proprletors, then after an lnterval that of the elghth. In the case of other colonles the process of transfer had been effected by a conflict and by something approaching to revolution. In North Carolina alone lt seems to have come about with the peaceful asseat of all parties.

A. D. 7775 (May).-The Meckienburg Dec-laration.-'It has been strenuously claimed nud denied that, int a meetlng of the people of Meeklenburg County, in North Carolina, on SIay 20 , 175.5 , resolutlons were passed declaring thelr $\ln$. dependence of Great Britaln. The facts In the rase uppear to be these:- On the 31st of May, 17:5, the people of thls county did pass resolu: tions quite ahreast of the puhlle sentlment of that time, hut not penturing on the field of independency further than to say that these resolutions were to remaln In force till Great Britain resigned its pretensions. These resolutions were well written, attracted notlce, and were copled Into the leading newspapers of the colonies, North and South, and can be found In various later works (Lonsing's 'Field-Book,' II, 619, etc.). A copy of the 'S. Carolina Gazette' 'contalning tbem was sent by Governor Wright, of Georgha, to Lord Dartmoutb, and was found by Bancroft In the State Paper Office, while In the Sparks MSS. (no. IvI) is the record of a copy sent to the home government by Governor Martin of North Carollna, with a Ietter dnted June 30, 1775. Of these rewoiutions there is no douht (Frothling. ham's 'Rise of the Repuhlic,' 422). In 1793, or earlier, some of the actors in the proceeding, apparentiy ignorant that the record of these resolutlons had been preserved in the newspapers, endeavored to suppiy them from memory, unconsciousiy intermingling some of the pliraseoiogy of the Deciaration of Juiy 4th, in Congress, which gave them the tone of a pronounced independency. Prohnbly througb another dlmness of memory they affised the date of May 20, 1775, to them. These were first printed lu the 'Ilaielgh Register,' April 30, 1810. They are found to resemhie in some respects the now known resolves of May 81st, as weil as the natlonai Deciaration In n few plirases. In 1829 Vartin printed them, much altered, $\ln$ his 'North Carolinn' (li, 272) but lt is not known where this copy came from. In 1831 the State printed the text of the 1818 copy, and fortified lt with recoilectlons and certiticates of persons nffirming that they were present when the resolutions were passed on the 20th."-J. Winsor, Wote in Narrutire and Criticel Ilist. of Am., c. 6, p. 256."We are lucined to conjecture that there was a popular meeting at Charlottetown on the 10th and 20th of May, where discussion was had on the subject of ladependence, and probably some more or less explicit understanding arrived it, which becnme the hasis of the conmmittee's aetion on the 31st. If so, we make no doubt that J . McN. Aiexander was secretary of that metelug. A. D. 1861 (Junuary-May).-The dificult dragging of the atate lnto Secesslon. - A large majorlty of the people of North Cnrolina were opposed to secession. They dld not regard It as a constlituthonal right. They were equally opposed to a sepuration from the Unlon in resentnient of the electlon of Mr. Lncolu. But the Goveruor, John W. Eliis, was ln full sympathy with the secesslonists. The legislature met on the 20 th of November. The governor, in hls message, recommended that the leglslature should lnvite $n$ conference whth the Southern States, or send delegates to them for the purpose of securing thelr co-operation. Ile aiso recommended the reorgaulzation of the mil:.la, nad the call of a state convention. Biiis were introduced for the purpose of carrylng these measures luto effect. ... On the 30 th of January, a bill for calllag a state convention was passed. It provided that no secesslon ordinance, nor one connecting the state whith tie Southern Confederacy, would be ralld untll It should be ratlied hy a majority of the quallaed voters of the state. The vote of the people was appointed to take place on the 28th of February. The delegates were elected on the day uamedi. A large majority of them were linonists. But, at the same tlme, the convention liself was voterl down. The vote for a conventlon was $46.6 i 1$; against a conventlon, 47,333 . The majority against lt was 682. This majorlty agalust a convention, however, was no eriterion of popular sentiment ln regard to secession. The true test was the votes recelved, respectively, hy the Enlon and secesslon delegates. The former riceived a majority of nearly 30,000 . But the indefutiguble goveruor was not to he halked by the popular dislike for secession. The legislature was ealied together ln extra session on May 1. On the same day tiey voted to have nnotherifice thon for delegates to a state convention on the 13 th of the month. A. D. 1763.-The ling's proclamation excluding settlers, and reserving the whole interinr nf the cnntinent far the Indians.-"On the Tih of Artoher. 1798, George III. issucd a proclamation, providing for four new governments or colonies, namely: Quebec, East Florida, West Florida, and Grenada the latter embraeing 'the island of that name, together with the

Grenadines, and the isianda of Dominico, St. Vincent and Tobago'], and defining their boundarles. The limits of Quebec did not vary ma. terialiy from those of the present province of that name, and those of East and Went Fiorida comprised the present State of Fiorlda and the country north of the Guif of Mexieo to the par ailei of $81^{\circ}$ latitude. It will be seen that no provislon was made for the government of nine tenths of the new territory acquired by the Treaty of Paris, and the omission was not au oversight, hut was intentional. The purpose was to reserve as erown iunds the Northwest territory, the regiou north of the great lakes, and the eonntry between the Alieghanies and the Mississl phi, and to exelude them from settlement by the American colonies. They were left, for the time being, to the uudisputed possession of the savage tribes. The $k \operatorname{lng}$ 's 'ioring suhjeets' were forhidden making purehases of land from the indlans, or forming any settlements 'westward of the sources of the rivers which fall into the sea from the West and Northwest,' 'and ali persons who have wilfuily or inadvertently seated themseives upon any lands 'west of this limit were - arned 'forthwith to remove themselves from sueh settlements.' Certain reasons for thls policy were assigned in the proclamation, such as, ' preventing lrreg!uarities in the future, and that the Indians may be convinced of our justice,' etc.; but the reai explanatlon appears In the Report of the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plastations, $\ln 1772$, on the petitlon of Thomas Walpole and others for a grant of land on the Ohlo. The report was drawn by Lord 1illshorough, the president of the board. The report states: ' We take leave to remind your iordshlps of that princlpie whieh was adopted by thls Board, and approved and confirmed by his Majesty, lmmediately after the Treaty of Paris, viz. : the eonfining the western catent of settlements to sueh a distance from the sen-coasts as that those settlements should iie within reach of the trade and commeree of this kingilom, aud also of the exerc: of that autherity and jurishlietion which was to be necessary for the preservation of the culunles in a due subordination to, and dependence upon, the mother country. And these we apprehend to have been the two caplal ohjeets of his Majesty's proclamation of the ith of Oetober, 1763.
. The great objeet of colonizing upon the continent of North Ameriea has been to lmprove nnd extend the commerce, navlgation, aud manufactures of this kingdom. . It does ap. pear to us that the extension of the fur trade depends entirely upon the Indlans being undisturbed in the possession of their huutinggrounds, and that ali colonizing does in lis nature, and must in its eousequences, operate to the prejudice of that branch of commerce. Let the Savages enjoy their deserts in qulet. Were they driven from thelr forests the peltrytrade would decrease.' . . Such in clear and specitie terms was the cold and selfish policy which the British erown and its ministers hahitu aily pursued towards the Ameriean eolonles; aud in a few jears it changed loyalty into hate, and brought on the American Mrvolutisn. "-W. F. Poole, The West, from 1763 to 1783 (Narrative and Critical Hist. of Anc, v, 6, ch. 9). -"The king's proclamation [of 1763] shows that, in the construetion put upon the treaty by the erown

A. D. 1784 .-Jefferson's pian for new Statea. -."The condition of the nortiwestern territory had long been under the conslderation of the Ilouse [the Congress of the Confederation]. Sereral committects had been appointed, uud several schemes ilstened to, for hayling out new States, hut It was not tlil the middle of Aprii [1784], that a resolution was thaliy reached. Oue pian was to dlride the ceded and purchaseei Iands into seventeen States. Elght of these were to lie between the banks of the Mississlppi and a north and south ilne through the falls of the Ohio. Eight nore were to be marked out between thls line and in second one parallei to it, and passing througit the western bank of the mouth of the Great Kanawha. What remalned was to form the seveuteenth State. But few supporters were found for the measure, and a committe, over whleh Jefferson presided, was ordered to place before Congress a new schene of divislon. Chase and Howe assisted him, and the three devised a plan whereby the pralricfands were to be parted out among tell new states. The divisions then marked down have utterly disappeared, nod the names given to the $m$ become so forgotten that nine tenths of the population which has, In our thme, eovered the whole reglon with wailhy citles and prosperous viliages, and turued it froun a waste to a garden, have never in their llves heard the words pronounced. Some were horrowed from the Latin and some from the Greek; whlle others wrre Latinized forms of the names the Iudians hatl given to the rivers. The States were to be. at far ns posslhie, two degrees of latitude in wilth and arrangel in three tiers. The Mississippl nnd a meridlan through the falis of the Ohio ineluded the western tier. The meridian througli the falls of the Ohlo and a second through the mouth of the Great Kanawha were the boundaries of the middle tler. Between this and the Pennsylvanla West Line lay the third tier. That vast tract atretching from the 45 th parallei of latitude to the Lake of the Woods, and dense with foresta of pine, of hickory, and of oak, ther called Syl. vands. It was the northern gtate of the weatern tier. To the long tongue of land separatlig the water of Mlchlgan from the waters of Erle and Huron they gave the name Cherroneaus A narrow strip, not more than two degrees of latitude in wldth, and atretching from Lake Mlchi. gan to the Misaisilppl, was called Michiganis. As marked down on thelr rude mape, Michiganda lay under Sylvania, In the very heart of what is now Wisconsln. Bouth of this th the 41st parailel of latitude was Assenlsipla, a name derfved from Assenlsipl, the Indian title of the river now cailed tic Flock. Eastward, along the shore of Lake Erie, the country wp zamed Metropotamia. It took the name Mother of IRIvers from the belief that witiln Its boundary were the fountains of many rivers, the Muskingum, the two Mamis of Ohio, the Wabash, tho Iilinols, the Sandusky, and the Mlaml of the Lake. That part of Illinois between the 89th and 4lst paruileis was cailed, from the river which waters it. Illinola. On to the east was Saratoga, and beyond this lay Washington, a broad and ievel tract ahut in hy the Ohio river, the waters of the lake, and the boundaries of Pennsylvania. Under IIllnola and Baratoga, and stretching aiong the Ohlo, was the ninth State. Withln its contines tho waters of the Wabush, the Sawane, the Tunissee, the IIIInois, and tire Uhlo were mingled with the waters of the Mississippl and Mlssouri. The cornmittee therefore judged that attlog pame wouid be Poiypotania. Pelisipia was \$'. tenth State. It lay to the east of Polypotamia, and wus named from l'eisipi, a term the Cherokees ofteu appifed to tive river Ohio. At the same time that the boundiarles of the new States were detined, a conle of laws was drawn up witlch should serve us a constitution for each state, till 20,000 free Inhahitants acquired the right of seif-government. The eorle was In no wise a remarkahio performante, yet there were anoug lis articies two whlch cannut he passed hy ln silence. Une provided for the abolition of slavery after the year 1800. The other annouucei that no one holding an inereitary titie shonid ever become a cltizeu of the new States. Each was struck out hy the Honse. Yet cach is deserving of notice. The one because it was the first attempt at a uationai condeminution of siavery, the other because lt was a pubiic expression of the dread with whicil our ancestors beheid tite growth of the Soclety of the Cincinnatt, "-J. B. DeMaster, Mist. of the Ireople of the U. S., ch. $\mathcal{E}(r .1)$. -The report of Jeflerson's committee "was recommitted to the same committee on the 17th of March, and a new one was suhmitted on tite $2 \boldsymbol{j}$ d of the same month. The secoud report agreed in suhstunce with the first. The principal differeuce was the omission of the paragraph giving names to the States to be formed out of the Weatern Territory." After striking out the clausea prohihitiug siavery after the year 1800 and denying citizenship to all persons hoiling hercditary titkes, the Congress adopted the report. April 28. 1754. "Thus the substance of the report of Mr. Jetferson of a plan for the government of the Western Territory (without reatrictlons as to siavery) became a lsw, and remained so during 1784 to 1787, when these resolutlons were repealed in terms by the paange of the ordinance lot the government of the "Territory of the Uni. ted Btate northweet of the river Ohlo.'"-T.

"The Revolutlonary War had hardiy closed before thoumands of the disbandel oflicers and soidlers were looklng anxlously to the Western lands for new homes, or for means of repalring their shat tered fortunes. In June, 1783, a strong memorial was ment to Congress asklng a grant of the iands between the Ohlo and Lake Erie. Those who llved in the south were fortunate In having Immedlate access to the iunds of Kentucky. Tennesser, and the back parts of Georgia. The atrife In Congress over the lands of the North. weat delayed the surveys ani the bounties so long that the soldiers of the North almost lost hope." Flnally, there "was a meeting of ollt cers and scidlers, chlefly of the Massachusetts, Kirole Isiand and Conuecticut lines, ar Boston, March 1, 1786, when they formed a new Ohio Company for the purchase and settlement of Western iands, In sinares of $\$ 1,000$. General Putnam [Rufus], Gencral Samuel II. Parsons, and the Rev. Manasseh Cutier, were made the directors, and selected for tirelr purchase the lands ou the Ohio ikiver situated on both sides of the Muskingum, and inmediately west of tho Seven Kanges. Sothing defnite was done tlll a committeeJohnson of Connertleut, Pinckney of Mouth Carollna, Smith of New York, Dane of Massa. chumetts, and leary of Maryfaud - reported on April 26, 1787, 'An ordinance for the goverament of the Western territory, and after varfous ameniment it was falrly transeribed for a third reading. May 10 th. Further conslderation was now delayed untll July. It was at this polnt that Manasech Cutler appeared in New Iork, commiseloned to buy fand lor the Ohlo Company In the reglon whowe future was to le determined hy this ordinance, and It was very ilkely, in part, hy his intluence that those features of the perfected onlinance as passed five days fater, and whieh has given it lts general fame, wero introdueed. On July 0th the hill was referred to a new committee, of which a majority were Southern men, C'urtington of Virginla taking the chairmanship from Johnson; Dane and Smith were retalnet, but Rleharil Ifonry Lee and Kran of Soutis Carolina supplanted Pinckney and Henry. This ehange was male to seeure the Southern support; on the other hand, aequiescence in the wishes of Northern purehasers of lands was essential in any husiness outcome of the movement. ' '"p to this tlme,' says Poole, 'there Were no artleles of compaet in the bill, no nntl. slavery elause, nothlng about llberty of conscience or of the press, the right of habens corpus, or of trinl by jury, or the equal dlstrihutlon of estates. The ciause that. "religion, morallty, anil kuowledge being necessary to goonl government aud the happiness of mankind, schoois and the means of educatlon siall be forever cncouraged," was not there.' These omissions were the New England ldeas, which had iong lefore this been engrafted on the Constitution of Jinssachu. setts. Thls new committee reported the blli, emboolying all these provislons except the anti-sinvery chuse, on the 11 th, and the nuex day this and other amendments were made. On the 13 th, hut one volee was ralsed against the bili on its final passage, and that came from lates of New lork. Poole intimates that it was the jromisw of the governorship of the territory under the ordinance which Induced St. Clalr, then President of Congress, to fend it his countennnee. smount of reasoning could uniink his name from the tragely of the dark November morning. Every effort was made to win over tife Indians before making another use of force. The Government sent peace messengers into the Northwest. In one manner or another neariy every one of the messengers was murlered. The Indinns who instered at ail would hear of no terms of peace that did not promise the removal of the whltes from the northern side of the Ohio. The British urged the tribes to make this extreme demanil. Sipaiu aiso sent miscilef.makers into the camps of the extitant rel men. . Warne led his army from Clnclnnati in Uctober of 1793. He alvanced care. fully in the path takeu by St. Ciair, found and hurienl the bones of st. Cluir's 600 iost, wintered at Greenville, and in the summer of 1704 moved against the foe with strong reinforcements from Kentucky. After a preliminary skirmish between the Indians and the troops, Wayne, in accordance with his instructions, made a last offer of peace. The offer was evasiveiy met, and Wayne pusherl on. On the morning of Weednes. day the twentleth of August, 1794, the 'legion' came upon the united tribes of Indians encamped on the north bank of the Manmec and there, near the rapids of the Slaumee, the Indians were forced to face the most alert and vigorous enensy they had get encountered. The same diaring tactics that had carried Stony Point and made An. thony Whyne blstoric were here dlrected against the Indian's timin'r coverts. . . . Encouraging and marphaling the Indlans were painted Canadian whic men beuring British arms. Many of these feli in the heaps of dead and some were captured. When Warne announced his victory he declared that the Indian ioss was greater than that Incurred by tife entlre Federai army in the war with Great Britain. Thus ended the Indian relgu of terror. After destrowing the Indian crops aui possessions, in slght of the British fort, Wayne fell back to Greenvilie and there made the celehntedi treaty by which on August 3, 1795, the redi nien came to a permanent peace with the Thirteen Fires. From Cinclnnati to Campus Martlus Wayne's victory sent a thrili of refief. NORUMBEGA.- "Norembega, or Norumbega, more properly cailed Arambec (IIakluyt, III. 16\%). Was, in Ramuslo's map, the country cmbraced withln Nova Scotia, cuthern New Brunswick, and a part of Maine. De Laet confines it to a dlstrict about the mouth of the Pcnobscit. Wytfleit and other early writers say that it hal a capital city of the same name: and in severai oid maps this fabuious metropolis is faid down, with towers and churches, on the siver Penobscot. The word is of Indian origin." - F. Parkman. Pioneers of France in the New Worle: Champlain, ch. 1, foot.note. - On Gat. tuidi's map, of New France, male In 1550, "the nane 'La Nuova Francia' is written in very large letters, indicating probuhly that this name is meant for the entire country. The name 'Terra de Nurumbega' is written in smailer letters, and appears to be attached only to the peninsuia of Nova Scotia. Crignon, however, the author of the discourse which this map is intended to illua. trate, gires to this name a far greater extent. Ile says: 'Going berond the cape of the Bretons, there is a country contiguous to this cape, the coast of which trents to the west a quarter south. west to the country of Florida, and runs aiong for a good 500 leagues; which coast was diacovered fifteen yeara ago by Master Giovanni da Verrazano, in the name of the king of France and of Madame la Regente; and this country is calied bs many 'La Francese, and even by the Portuguese themselves; and its end is toward Florida under $78^{\circ}$ W., and $88^{\circ}$ N. . . . The country is named hy the inhabitants 'Nurumbega': and between It and Brazll is a great guif. in which are the isiands of the West Indies, discovered hy the Spaniarls. From this it would appear that, at the time of the discourse, the entire east coast of the United States, as far as Fiorida, was deaignated by the name of Nurumbega. Afterwards, this name was restricted to New Engiand; and, at a iater date, it was appiled uniy to Maine, and stili later to the region of the Penobecot.

Tie name 'Norumbega.' or 'Arambec.' in Hakluyt's time, was appiled to Maine, and sometimes to the whole of New Eng. innd." - J. G. Kohl, Hiat. of the Diecovery of Mitine (Mitin I/ist. Soc. Coll., aeries 2, e. 1), pp. 231 and 283 . - "The story of Norumbega is investel with th charms of fabie and romance. The uame is found in tise map of Ilieronimus da Verrazano of 1529, as 'Aranbega,' being restricted to a definite and apparently unlmportant iocality. Suddenly, in 1539 , Norumbega appears in the narrative of the Dieppe Captain as a vast and opuient region, extending from Cape Breton to the Cape ef Floridia. About three years iater Allefonsce described the 'River of Norumbega,' now identified with the I'enobscot, and treatel the enpital of the country as an important mar. ket for the trade in fur. Various maps of the perior of Ailefonsce confine the name of Norumteiga to a distinct spot; but Gastaidi's map, pul). ilshed by lRamusio in 1556,-though modellen after Verrazano's, of which indeed it is substan. tiaily an extract, - appiles the name to the region iying between Cape Breton and the Jersey coast. Front this time until the seventeenth century Norumbega was generally regarded as embrachin ali Xrw England, and zometimes partions a! Canada, though occasionally the country was known hy other names. Stili, In 1582, Lok seems to have thought that the Penobecot formed the southern boundary of Norumbega, which he shows on his map as an lsland; whlle John smith, in 1620, speaks of Norumbega as including New England and the reglon as far south as Virginia. On the other hand Champlain, In 160.5, trested Norumbega as lylng wlthln tho present territory of Maine. He searched for lts capital on the banks of the Penohscot, and as late as 1669 Heyiln was dreaming of the fair city of Norumbega. Grotlus, for a tlmo at least, re$p:$ arded the name as of Old Northern origin and cominected whth 'Norbergia.' It was also fancied that a people resemhling the Mexicans once IIved Hipon the banks of the Penobicot. Those who have labored to find an Indlan derivatlon for the name say that lt means 'the place of a tine city.' At one time the houses of the clty were supposed tu le very spiend!d, and to be supported upon plllars of crystal and silver."-13. F. La Tour attacked and drove away a smail party of Plymonth men who hadi w.t up a trading-post at Machlas; and ln 1033 D'Aulnay treated another party of the Plymouth colonists in a similar way. In retaliatlon for thls attack, Plymouth hired and despatched a vessel commanded by onc Glrling, In company with their own barque, with 20 men under Slies Standlsh, to dispossess the French; but the expeditlon faifed to accomplish anythlng. La Tour was reduced to the last extremities; hut he anaily made good his losees, and in 1659 he married the willow of his rival, who had died two or three years before. In 16:4. In accordance with secret instruetions from Cromweil, the whole of Acadia was subjugnted by an English force from Boston under the conmand of Major Rolert Sedgwiek. of Chariestown, and Captain John Leverett, of Boton. To the latter the temporary government of the country was intrusted. Ineffectual complaints of this aggression were made to the British governnent; but by the treaty of Westmi"ster, in the following year, Eng!and was left in possession, and the question of titie was referred to commissloners. In 1656 it was madie a province by Cromwell, who appolnted Sir Thomas Temple governor, and granted the whole territory to Templeand to one Wiliam Crown and Stephen dela Tour, son of the !.te governur. The rights of the fatter were purchnsed by the other ino proprietcrs, and Acadia remuined in possession of the Engilsh until the treaty of Breda, in 1688, when it was ceded to France with undetinct limits. A. D. 1713-1730.-Tronbles with the Freach inhabitants-the Acadians.-Their refusal to swear allegiance.-Hostilities with the In-dians.- "It was evident from the tirst that the French inteuded to interpret the eession of Aendia in as restrieted a sense as possible, nomi that it was their aim to neutralize the power of Enghand lu the colons, ly eontining it within the narrowest fituits. The inhabitumts numbered anne 2.310 at the time of the traty of I irecht, dilvilemi into three principal settimuents it Port lRoyal, Mines, and chignecto. The prichts at these mettlements during the whol, ikerion from the trenty of L'trecht to the exi 'on of the Acadians were. with searcely an exception, agents of the Freneh Government, in their mar, and resolute opponents of English rule. The prisenere of a puwerful Freneh establishment at Lovisburg, anti thrir constant communications with C'maila, gave to the political teachings of thuse priests a morai intuenee, whieh went far cowarls making the Acadlans continue falthfui to France. They were taught to believe that they might remain in Acndla, in an attituile of scarcely conceated hostility to the English Gor. ernment, and hold their limids nnd posesessions as peutrais, on the condithon thit they shouid not take up arme elther for the Freach or Englich.
By the 14th articie of the tresty of Utrecht, it was atlpulated that the subjectis of the King of France may have liberty to remove themseivea within a year to any othor place, with all thoir movable effecta. But those who are wlling to remain, and to be subject to the King of Great Britain, are to enjoy the free exercise of their religion according to the usages of the church of Home, as far as the laws of Great Britain do allow the sane."

It was never contempiated that the dcudians should establish themselves in the country a colony of enemies of British power, ready at ali times to obstruet the authority of the government, and to make the poesession of Acadia by Enplaait merely nominal. . . Queen Anne died in Angust, if14, andí in January. 1:15, Messrs. Caultield then summoned the inhuhitunts of Annapolis, and tendered them the unth of allegiance, but with no better success than his deputies had met at Bines and Chigneeto. of解 scotia in 1717, and who arrived in the Province eariy in 1720, had no more success thm his predecessors in persuailing the Acadians to take the oaths. Every refusal on their part only served to mahe them noore boid in defying the ibritsh anthorities.

They heid themselves In reailiness to take up arms against the English the moment wur was deelared lotween the two Crowns, and to restore Acadla to France. But, an there was a pence of thirty yeara duration heiwern France and England after the treaty of Virecht, there was no opportunity of carrying this phan loto effect. Vaudreuil, Gorernor of Camuia, however, eontinued to keep the Acallans on the niert by means of his agenis, and the indiams were indted to aets of hentility against the Einglish. Ioth In dradia and Maine. The first dillicuity oceurred at Canso In 1720 , by a party of Iudinus aswoiling the English tishermen there:

The Indians were Inefted to this attack by the French of Capre Breton, who were annosed at one of their vessels being seized at Canso by a Ifritish war vessei for llfogal tishing. . . . The Indinus had inderd some reason to he disquicteri. for the progress of the Eingilsh sctlenemise e:ant of the kennelee filied theon with npprehensions, Cnfortunntely the English had not keen always so just in thelr dealings with them that they coulhi rely entirely on their forkearance. This Indians einimed their territorina rights in the hands over whicl the Finglish settleneents were spremding; the Frunell encoursget them in this claim, nileging that they had never surrencered this turritory to the Engllsh. While these questions were in controversy the Massachusctis nuthorithes were guilty of an act which did not temi to aliay the distrust of the Indians. This was nothing lea than an attempt to selze the perton of Father Ralle, the Jeault misionary at Forridgewock. He, whether justly or not, wat hlamed for lnciting the Indiant to acte of hoatlilty, and was therefore peculiarly ohnoxlous to the English." The attempt to capture Father Ralle, it Norridgewock, whlch was made In December, 1721, and which fulled, exasperated the Indlans, and "ln the summer of 1723 a war commenced, In whlch all the Indian tribes from Cape Canso to the Kennebec were Involved. The French could not openly take part in the war, hut such encouragement and asslstance as they conld glve the Indians secretly they freely sup. plicyl." This war contlnued untll 1735 , and cost the Hives of many of the colonists of New Eng. land and Novn Scotia. Its most serious event was the destruction of Norridgewock and the barbarous murder of Finther Ralle, hy no expedltlon from Massachusetts in the summer of 1724. In November, 1725 , a treaty of peace was conchudel, the Indlans acknowledging the soterelgnty of King George. After the conclusion of the Indian war, the lahahitants of Annapolls River took a qualified oath of allegiance, with a clause exempting them from bearing nrms. It Mlnes and Chignecto they still persisten In thelr refusal; and when, on the denth of George I. and the accession of George II., the inhabltants of Annapolls were called upon to rcuew thelr oath, they also refused again. In 1729 Governor Phillips returned to the province and hal great success daring the next year in persuading the Acuilans, with a few exceptlons only through. out the French settlements. to tak: in outh of allegiance without any condition as to the beuring or not bearing of arms. "The Aeadians afterwarts maintalned that when they took thls bath of nlleghnce, it was with the understauding that a clanse was to be Inserted, relieving then from bearing arms. The staternent was probatily accurate, for that was the position they always assamerl, bat the natter secms to have breen lost slght of, and so for the time the question of onths, which hat been such a fertlle cause of discord in the I'rovince, appeared to be set at rest. The treaty of 1748 , therefore, not only left abundant cause for future war, hut left occatlon for the coctlnuance of petty border hostilties in time of nominal peace. Commisatoner were appointed, French and Engllah, to settle the question of the disputed territory, but the difierences were too wide to be adjusted hy any. thing hut conquest. Whlle the mont important question was that of the great extent of territory at the west, and . . both natlons were devlsing means for estahllablng thelr clnims to lt. Acailia, or Nova Scotia, was the scene of a conatant petty warfare. The French were determined to restrict the Engllsh province to the penlnsula now known hy that hame. The Gorernor of Canaln sent a few men under Bolshebert to the month of the St. John's to hold that part of the territory. A little old fort hullt by the Indinas had stome for fify years on the St. John's at the mouth of the Nerepis, and there the men establisher themselves. A larger number was sent under La Corne to keep possession of Chlgnecto, on the lathmus whlch, accorting to French claims, formed the northern boundary of Eng. Ilsh territory. In 1750, Major Lawrence was sent to Chlgnecto, with 400 men, to bulld a block-house on the little river Messagouche, which the French elalmed as their southern boundary. "On the southern hank was a prosperous rillage called Beaubas. aln, and La Corne [the French commander] had compelled lts inlinhitants to take the onth of alleglance to the Klng of France. When Lawrence arrived, all the Inhahtiants of Beaubassin, alvut 1,000 , having been persuaded hy Ia Ionutre, set tire to thelr houses, and, leaylng bellad the fruits of rears of industry, turned their backs on their ferile fieldas, and erossel the river, to put themselves uniler the protection of La Cornén tronps. The melancholy and total defcat of the arny under General Braddock, while on his murch against Fort du Quesne, threw a gloom over the British Irovinces. Nlagars and Crown-pwint were not only unsubdued, hut it was evilent that Governor Shlrley would have to abandom. for thls year at least, the attempt; whille Louis. burg was relnforced, the sarages let lonse upou the defenceless settlements of the Engiish, and the the of war seemed realy to roll bark upon the invaders. Amldst thls general panle, Governor Lawrence and hls Councll, alded hy Almirals Phasawen and Hoyatyn, assembled to consider the necessary measures that were to be adopted towards the Acadlans, whose character and sltustion were so peculiar as to distlnguish them from every other people who had suffered nader the scourge of war.

It was finally determlued, at this consultation, to remove and lisperse this whole people among the British Colonles; where they could not unlte in any olvensive measures, and where they migltt be naturallzed to the Government and Country. The execution of thls unisual and geueral sentence was allotted clilety to the New Englaud Forces, the Commander of whll [Colonel Win. slow ], from the humulty aud firmnens of hits character, was well qualifeel to carry it luto effert. OGHAM INSCRIPTIONS. - ' In the eouth nnd south-western countles of Ireland are to be found, in conslderahie numbers, a clase of lnscribed monuments, to which the attentlon of Irish archaologists has been from time to time directed, but with comparatively little reauit.

They [the inscriptions] nre found engraved on piliar stones in that archalc character known to Iriah phliologists ns the Ogham, properiy prononnced Oum, and in nn ancient dinket of the (iaedhelic (Gaelic). These monumenta are nimont exclusively found in the counties of Kerry, Cork, aud Waterfurd, numbering, an fur an I have been nbie to uscertain, 14i; the rest of Ireiand suppiles 13.

Again it !n worthy of remark, that witilie 20 Irish counties cannot thoast of an Oghnm monument, they inve leen found in England, Waies, anci scotinnd. In Levonshire, nt Fardel, a stone las Been discovered bearing not only a the and weil-preserved Ogham Insertiption, but niso one in Ilommno- Britishl letters. It is now dejosited in the British Museum.

The Ogham ictters, as found on Megnithic monuments, nre formed by certain combinations of a simple short ime, phiceri in refirence to one continuens fine, calimd the theasg, or stem line; these comilnations range from one to five, and their vaiues depend upon their keing piaced above. neross, or befow the stem line: there are five consonnats above, five eonsmants below, anci five consonants across the line, two of which. YiG und sT are doubie, ani scarcely ever used. The vowels are represented by ovai dots, or very shurt lines across the stein line.

The efiarncters in generai use on the monumetuts are 18 in number. . . It may be expretent from me that I shouid offer some conjecture ns to the prolnabie age of this moxic of writing. This, I honestiy neknowiedge, I an unahite to do, even approxlmateiy. . I am however decided in one view, and it is ihis, that the Ogham was introfuced' into Irviand fong unterior to Christianty, by a powerfui colony who iandini on the soutit. West coast, who spreat themsefives afong the munthern and mund the custern shores, who uttimateiy conquered or setthed the whime isiand, impersing their languye upmo the ulvorigites, if such precentent them. Another evilence of the growing interent in the Weat in the fact that the colonlal authorities, in every direetion. were weeking to obtain Indian tities to the Wiestern lanim, and to biad the Indians to the Engilsh ly treaties. The Iroquois had long eisimed, by right $n f$ conquest, the country from the Cumberiand Mountains to the Lower Lakes and the Misgissippi, nad for many reara the aithoritien of New fork had been atendily seeking to gain a orm treaty hoid of that country. ## ON.

It in probahie that the northern Greeks were not at inat elther consulted or expected to take any ohare in the fentiral; and that, though never expremily contined to curtaln trilies, In the manner of an Amphletyonic congreas, It gradually enlarged the sphere of its fame and stractlon till it came to emhrace the whole nation. The ancred truce was proclalmed hy ofticers sent round by the Eleans: It put a stop to warfare, from the tlme of the proclamation, for a period sufficient to enahle atrangera to retura home in asfety. Duriag this perion the territory of Ells itself was of course regarded as Inviolable, and no armed force could traverne it without Incur. ring the penalty of acrilege. . . . It [the fest]. val] was very early frequented by spectators, $110 t$ only from all parts of Greece Itself, hut from the Greek colonles in Europe, Africa, and Asla; and this amemhlage was not brought together loy the mere fortititous Impulse of private interist or curioelty, hut was in part composed of deputatloas which were sent hy most cltles as to a religious solemnity, and were conshlered as guests of the Olympiaa god. Th Immeliate objeet of the meetling was the exhibitlon of various trials of strength and skill, which, from the to tine, were multiplled so as to Include almost every moxle of displaying bodily actlvity. They Included races on foot and with horses and chariuts: coatests in leaping, thmolng. Wisstling, anid broxiag; and some in which meveral of the exercises were comblnel; hut no combats with any kiad of weapon. The equestrian contents, parilcularly that of the four-horsed chariots, were, by thefr nature, confmed to the wealtiv; and princtes and nobles vied with each other in auch ilemoustrations of thelr opulence. Bhit the greater part were open to the powrest Greek, and were not on that accomut the lower in pultic estimatlon.

In the games deacribed by Ilomer valuable prizes were propmed. and this practlce was once unlversal: but, after the meventh ol ympiad, a simple garland, of levere of the willd olive, was substituted at Olympia, as the only meed of victory. The main spriug of emulstion was undoubtedly the celebrfyy of the festival aad the presence of so rast a mults. tuile of spectators, who were som to spread the fame of the snccessful uthletes to the extremity of the Grecian work.

The Altis, as the grouad consecrated to the games was called at olympia, was adorned with numberiens statues of the victors, erected, wilth the permile $a$ of the Eleans, by themselven or their families, or at the expense of thelr fellow citizens. It why also usual to celehrate the joyful event, both at oiympin anal at the rictor's loome, by a trimuphal pricession, in which hits praisen were suug. naif were commonly nasociated with the glory of his ancestors and hil conntry. The most emi nent poets williagly lent their ald on such orca. siuns, eapecially w the rich and great. OLYMPIUM AT ATHENS, The.-The building of a great temple to Juplter Olymplus was begun at Xthens hy Pelolstratus as early as 530 B . C. Repuhlican Athens refused to carry on a work which would be astoclated with the hateful memory of the tyrant, and it atool uncouched until IB. C. 174, when Antlochus Eplplis. nes employed a leman architect to proceed with It. He, In turn, left it stlli unfinished, to be afterwarls reaumed by Augustus, and completed at hast hy ILairiun. 650 yean after the foundatioas were laid. - W. I. Leake, Topography of Athens, r. 1. app. 10.

OLYMPUS.-Tlie name Olympus was given by the Greeks to a number of mountalos and mountain ranges; but the one Olympus which Impressed ltself most upon thelr imuginations, and which seemed to be the home of thelr gods, was the lofty helght that terminates the Cambu: ainn range of mountains at the east and forma part of the bouallary between Theasaly and Ma. cetlonia. Its clevatlon is nearly 10,000 feet abovo the level of the sea and all travelera have seemed to be affected by the pecullar grandeur of Its as. pect. Other monutalins called Olympus were in Elis, near Olympia, where the great games were celehrated, and in Laconia, near Sellasha. There wns also an Olympns la the islaad of Cypris, and two ia Asia Minor, one in L.ycla, and a range In Mysia, separatlog Bithyuia from Gulatia and Phrygli. See Thesealy, mad Dobians and Ionians.

painting in Greece must be dated from the arrivai of Poiygnotus of Thasos, who accompanied Cimon to Athens, probably after bis conquest of Thasos, 403 B. C. [see Atalens: B. C. 466-454].

Poiygnotus first raised painting to the dig. nity of an independent art, and he brought it to that degree that it became the admiration and the wonder of ail Greece. . . . About a generation or more suhsequent to the arrival of lolygnotus nt Athens, and shortly after the death [ 430 B . C ] of Phidias [the scuiptor], dramntle effect was addied to the cssentiai styic of Polygnotus and his contemporarles. This epoch was brought about chiefly by the efforts of Apolloloras of Athens and Zeuxis of Heraciea. . . . Athens and Nicyon were the great seats of the arts at this time. Apoliodorus, who, according to Piutarch, was the inventor of tone, or the first great master of light and shade, was horn nt Athens, prohabiy a hout 480 .

The time of Aiexander, or the Aiexandrian period, has been termed the period of retinement in painting. The characterlstics of tiue palnters of thls time were more varieties of effect nud exccution than any of the essentiai quailities of art.... I'amphilus and Yelanthlus were distlaguished for their effective compositlon; Apeiles for grace or beauty; Protogenes for elaborate execution; Pauslas and Nlcias ex celled in iight and shade of various kinds; Euphranor was distinguished for his unlversai excellence, or whit, perhaps, may he termed academic precislon. . . . Apelles, the Corsplasus of painters whose career appears to have been from about 350 to 310 B. C., was, according to Pliny, a native of Cos, or, according to Suidas, of Colophon. . . Apeiles is completeiy Pliny's hero: yet his great superiority over other painters is asserted, not shown. . . . Painting was said among the Romans to have flourished chietiy during the period of Aiexander and his successors; yet during the period of the Immediate successors of Aiexauder a very sensible decay ais) had taken place in the art. $\qquad$ The faiiing off was not so much in mere teclmicalities ns in the spirit of art ; the artist of thils day doubtiess drew as well and colou'ed as weli as those of the eariler times."

Roman.-" Rome was more distinguished for Its collections than for its artists : there was not n single painter of great mame. though many Greek urtists were assembied at Rome. The de stractlon of Corinth by Mummins, 146 13. C. [sec Greece: 13. C. 2s0-146], was in the first respect a great event for Rome, for from that time .erth for two or three ceuturies, Rome almost drained the ancient world of its works of art. . . . The paintings of Pompeil and Ilerculaneum have incontestably tended rather to lower the reputation of the nncient painters than otherwise, in the estimation of the world generaily, though the competent judge wlil flad, upon a judiclous ex amination, the contirmation of anclent criticism ln these remains: for they contaln many great besutles, especially in conipostion, thougin they are evidently the works of the inferior artists of un inferior age. To jadige, howevcr, of the ancient masterpieces of art from such specimens. is tantamount to estimating the great works of modern ages hy the ordinary patterns on com"on crockery and Frenci paper-hangings." after Rome, "in consequence of the foundation of Constantinopic, and the changes it invoived, suffered similar spoilatlons to those it had pre viously inflicted upon Greece," there came "the period of the totai decay of the imitative arts among the anclents."

Medisevai.-"Anclent art, as distinguished by lts characteristlcs, may perhaps be said to have ceased at ahout the ciose of the third century of the Christian era. The establisiment of Christianity, the divislon of the empire, and the incurslons of barbarians, were the first great causes of the fu-portant revoiutions experienced by the imitative arts, and the serious checks they received. It seems, however, to have heen reserved for the fanatie fury of the earlier Iconoclasts most effectualiy to destroy ail traces of their former excelience. . . . The eariy Christians had a decided averslon to ail works of imitative art, as essentiaily conducive to idolatry.

It was not for severai centurles after the piacing of images was toicrated and encouraged by the limman church that thls aversion can have been overcome; and douhtiess the very unnaturai and purcly representative strie of deslgn of the eariy ages of Christlan art is due to it.
Though painters were douhticss in considerable numbers throughout the whoie of the middle ages, the illuminatlons in MSS. constitute the principai or almost entire remains of actuai palating of the perind. ... The great period for mannscript iliuminations in the West was apparently the age of Chariemagne, wbo, as weil as his grandsou, Charies the Baid, was a great patron of such works of taste. . . The Angiosaxons were iong nmong the best ifiluminators and the Irish also were distinguished for thelr excelience in this department of art."
Renaissance: Italy.-"Whatever were the causes, nnd they are not ohvious, the formative arts made a surprising and comparativeiy sudden progress in the lith century. Various promoting causes have been suggested as the source of this improvement; but lt was douhticss owing to the eonbination of many influcnees. The Latin conquest of Constantinopie In 1204, and the greater litereourse generaily which then arose between the Itaians and the Greeks or Byzantines, appears to have been oue of the princlpai sources of the pulvancement $\qquad$ The great fnet of the reviral of art is that it lecame imitatire as well as representative, thongh in the first two centuries, or lefore Massictio. the imitation was as much imaginary as real : the art of looking at Nature had to be iearut before the Imitatiug leer couldi be açuired

Among the moxiern schoois of Itaiy, the Florentine or Tusean rather takes the precedence lu polint of time ; not that there were not painters in Venice and Pisa and Siena, as eariy as at Florence, hut it was the eariest school which distinguished itseif. Another reason of the jrominence of the Florentime schooi In history is that Vasari, being himself a FlorentIne, has made his uative piace conspicuous alove ali others in his lives of the painters.
The first pninter of great fane, fowever, among the molerns, was Giovamil Guaitieri or Cimat bue, who was horn at Florence in tbe year 1246. Great prominence is given to the name of Cimabue, through Vasari commencing with him his 'Lives of the most eminent Artigts from the re. vival of Art in Itaiy ;' a distinction which is not justified by any remarkable superiority of his paintings over those of his immediate predecessors, though great improvement is evident in his works. . . gaaao in 1276 , ., is the first modern painter who can be deciared free from the superstitious reverenee of ancient forms, the trammels of Byzantine or middie-age art, and he surpassed his master Cimahue, as much as Cimabue surpassed those who preceded him. Ife enriched many of the cities of Italy with his worlis. , But the greater part of his paintings have perished.

During the progress of painting in Tu!: cany, it was making neariy equal advance. ment in Umhria, in Romr and Venice, and in other parts of Itaiy. I'alntlug was tirst deveioped $\ln$ the Roman state in the cities of Umhria, Gubbio, Fahriano, Mateiica, Borgo Sian Sepoicro, Urbino, Assisi, and other piaces. The influence, however, of the Umhrian schooi, as the cariy painting of these districts is termed, was ex tended not only over Romagna, hut iikewise orer Tuscany. $\qquad$ It was not untii after the time of Giotto, who executed some works in Padua aml Verona, thit there were any distinguished painters in the Venetian state."-R. N. Wornum, The Ejpochs of Painting, ch. 1-12.-"What. Giotto gave to art was, hefore ali things else, vitaiity. His Madonnas are no longer symbols of a certain phase of pious awe, hut pictures of muternai iove. The Bride of God suckies her divine infaat with a smiie, watcines him piaying with a hird, or stretehes out ber arins to take him when he turns crying from the hands of the cireumeising priest. 13 choosing incidents like these from real honc-ilfe, Giotto, through his painting, humanised the mysteries of faith, and hrought them elose to common feeiing. Nur was the change iess in his method thun his motives. Before his day painting had been witiout comiositioa, without eharm of eolour, without saggrstion of morement or the play of iiving encrirs. Iie flrst knew how to distrihute flgures in the given space with perfeet hulance, und how to lliass them together in animnted groups agreeabie (1) tite eye.

He never failed to make it manifest that what he meant to represent was iving. . . . The hirth of Italian painting is elosely connected with the religions life of the Itaians The hullding of the church of $\mathbf{S}$. Francis at Assisi gnve it the first great impnise: and to the piets aroused by S. Francis tironirhout Italy, but mostly in the vaiieys of the Aprennines, it oweti its arimating spirit iu the 14th century. The church of Assisi is douhie. One structure of nuve. and choir, and transept, is imposed npon another: and the walis of both, from floor to ropingestone, are covered with fresco. . . Many of these frescoes date from Fears before the hirti of these frescoes date from years before the hirth of Giotto. Giunta the Pisan, Gaidio Gaddi. and Cimabuc, are supposed to have worked there, pinfuliy continuing or feehiy struggiing to throw of the decadent traditions of a dying art. in their schooi Giotto lahoured, aud modern pintiag arose with the movement of new iffe britrath his hrush. ... Those were nohle days, When the painter had literaliy aeres of wails riven inm to cover; when the whole bclief of 'hristendom, grasped hy his own faith, and tirmiy rooted in tine faith of the peopie round him, as yet unimpaired hy alien emanations from the world of ciassic enlture, had to be set forth or the first time in art. His work was then a ibible, a compendium of grave divinity and hunanl history, a hook embracing ali things needfui for the spiritual and the civil life of man. He spoke to men who could not read, for whom there were no printed pages, but whose hear received his teaching through the eye. Thus painting was not then what it is now, a decoration of existence, but a potent and efficient agent in the education of the race. Sueh opportunities cio not occur twiee in the same nge. Once in Greece for the pagan worid: onre in Itaiy for the modern worid: - that must aftice for the edueation of the himan race. Like Niccola I'i. sano, Giotto not oniy founded a schooi in his native city, hut spremi his munner far nad withe over Itaiy, so that the tirst jecriod of the history of painting is the Giottespue. . After the splendid outburst of puinting in the first hnlf of the fourteenti century, there came a iuii. The thoughts and sentiments of mediesnl Itaiy hind been now set fortio in art. The siacere und slmpie styie of Giotto was worked out. But the new eniture of the Revival had not us yet suff. ciently penetrated the Ituilans for the painters to express it ; nor had they mastered tine technical. ities of their craft iu such a manner as to render the delineation of more compiex forms of benuty possihie. The years hetween 1400 and 1470 may he ronghly marked out us the second period of great aetivity in painting. . . . The IRemaissauee, so far as pminting is concerned, may le suid to have cuiminated bet ween the rears 1470 and 15ion. These dates, it mast he frankiy admitted, ure arbi:rary ; nor is there anything more umprofitabie than the uttempt to define hy strlet chronology the uoments of un inteliectuai growth so complex, so unequaiiy progressive, uuti so varied as that of Italian art. Aii that the historian ean hope to do is to strike $n$ menn hetween his reckoning of years and is: more subtic caleuiations basedi on the eunergence of deeisive genius in speeial men. .. Benring this in mini, it is stiil possible to regnri the 80 yenrs nbove nof tioned us a period no ionger of promise and prepnratlon hut of fulfilment and aceomprishment. Furthermore, the 30 yeurs ut tike ciose of the lith century may be tnken as one epoch in this climax of the art, while the first haif of the thtin forms a second. Witinin the former fulls the best work of Mantegna, Perugino, Francia, the Beilini, Signoreili, Fra Bartolommeo. To the latter we may reckon Miciasei Angelo, Japlacl, Giorgione, Correggio. Titian, uni Andrea dei Snrto. Lionardioda Vinei, thongh belonging ehronologicaliy to the former epoch, runks first nnong the masters of the iatter; and to this also may he given Tintoret to, though inis life extended far bevond it to the last years of the century. We this ohtain, within the periox of 80 years from $14 \% 0$ to 1500 two suboriinate divisions of time, the one inciuding the lust part of tine listh ceutury, the other extending over tine best yeurs of the tith.

To Tuscany, to L'mbria, and to Venice, rongity speaking, are due the renliy crentive forces of Itainn painting: nnd these three districts werc marked by strong peeniiarities In art, as in polities. Fioreuce and Veniee exinibit distinct types of charaeter. The Fioreutines developed fresco, and devoted their greuius to the expression of thought by scientific design. The Venetians perfected oil-paisting. uni set forth the giory of the worid as it sppeals to the imagination and the senses. . . More aliied to tite Tuscan than to the Venetian spirit, the Cnibrian masters produced a styie of gennine originnlity. German, Flemlsh and Dutch.-"The consecratlon of the new cathedral of Cologne in 13\%2 seems to have given a great lmpetus to the arts of that place $\ln$ the 14th century; and no Inde. pendent school of painters can have been estabflshed there before that time. . . . Meister WilItei:! von Coeln, or Willinm of Cologne, is the oldest painter of repute of this school, and the oldest Germmn pninter to whoin existlig pietures of worth are nttrlhuted. He lived iu the middle and iatter part of the 14 th eentury

Another celelirated painter of this school is Meister Stephan, supposed to be the scholar of Meister WIIhelm. Stephan was the palater of the famous Don-hid, In the Cathedral of Cologne, as Albert Durer luforms us $\ln$ his 'Dlary.' Ile seems to have heen Steplan Lochner, or Loetisener, as soune rend the uame, a native of Constauz, but settled in Cologne. A inueh more eelebrated school than that of Cologne, and little subse. quent to it in point of time, wns established by the Van Eycks at Bruges in Flaulers, a eity which through lts conncetion with the Introdue. tlon of the new method of oil painting holds a very prominent positlon in the history of nrt. Bruges may lie considered the nursery of Fleinlsh art, and lt was its geographieal capltal for n long ierlod, though it was nfterwards superseled hy Antwerp.

Tradition has preserved the names of four members of the Van Eyek famlly, whieh however does not appear to hive teen originally of Flanders, hat from the eonvent to which John's daughter eventually retlred, Manseyek or lts neighbourhood, in Llmbourg. The nam s are IIubert, John, Lambert, and Margaret:-we know that three of them were pninters, hut there is no renl evldence that Lambert was of the same profession. John was most probably the youngeat of the fnmily. The new methol of jainting. or rather the new colourlng medium liscovered by the Vinn Eyeks, has been frequently mentloned. What the metbol was is not known; hit to distinguish it from the com:non methot previously in use, it is suffieiently described by the general tbongh vague term of oil-painting; it was, however. literally varnish painting. Oil painting, in the strict scuse of the term. was neither a mestery nor a uovelty in the time of IInbert Van Eyek.

Vasarl, who is the prineipal authority for this plece of history, speaks only generully ; but yet he is suthelently partieular to explain that the Vau Fyck medinm was a eompound of resins or resin with oils. . . . From this periol he livad and worked uuintermptedly In his nutive clty intil hls death in 1528 . Hlle died. like Raphacl, on a Good Friduy.) In these latter years, hesides his artistic works, he produced many scientifie works - instructlons on gconetry, the art of forthtication, and the promotions of the human body, thus evidenclig his exteasive and thorongh information. All this astonishing fertility of mind unfolded in hlm wholly from personal inclinatioa withont out. ward stimulus, and ludecil under the pressure of and domestic circumstances nud unfavonrable rilations of life. Germany had no Julius II. or Len X., no Medici or Gonzaga, no art-loving aristocracy, no noble minden governments. Many pupils and imitators followed Direr. More important than ull these lanitators is one mister, who carried the inflnence of the Fran conian shool to Saxony, and during a long and active life stond at the heral of an extremely skiliul whonl there. We allude to Iucas Crinuch, richtly lulas Sunder, who was born iu a sanil place in Franconia, and lived from 1472 to linis.

After Crnnach, the Aaxon wehool soon relunges iato obscurity, und oniy his son, of the same name. inherits somewhat of his finther's fame and art."-W. The fonnder of this schond was Quinten Jassijs (1466-1.531), usuaily cuibed Datsys, aad sometimes Metsys: he is populariy known as the Blacksmitil of Ant. Werl.' Born at Louvain, the son of a locksmith, Quinten Intsys probally worked at first at his father's trale.

From the death of Quinten Matsys we may trace the pradnal de. cline of art in the Netherlands. The manly, robust, and reabistic style of the Ficmish painters... was now to be nbatndoad for the dreams and idealisa of Itioly. Flemish art ceasel to be national, and its paiaters forsook the deliaeation of their own liomely people, thelr quaint old-world cities, and their flat landscapes, to strusgle after the nzure skies and inveciled beatues of the Florentine and Vionctian Schools.

The coanmencement of the 1 Thi century Witaessed the return of art in the Netherlands to the lonest realism of the North, after its long baishmeat amidithe idenhism of the South. It required, however, a potent magician to recali the Art of the Netherlands to life, and that marician apicared in the person of peter l'nul Rubens. Few men have led nore stirring and encecssfill lives. No painter except Titian and ever so conited by the great and wealthy. Poynter, Grmiln, FTemish, Bux Dutch Painting, bh. 2, ch. 2-3. -The 17th cen tury fouad Holland fully entered on a new ame fresh poiitical life. "As ecclesiastical tradition had heen repressed by the strong Protestantism of the land, art saw itself thrown at flrst upon the faithful portraral of reality, which it brought to grent perfection, especiaily In portrait palnthig. It is not the poctle breath of arlstocratic delicacy, as in Van Drck, nor the agitated life aad power of lubens, but a sober spirit of order and distinctmess, a feeling of civil opulcace and self-conscionsness, which is cxpressed in the excelleat portrnits of these Inteh masturs. Among the most excelient of them are Frinz. IIaln (15i f-1066), and, above all, the justly faumed Bartholomaus vau der Helst (1013-16\%), whose princlpal works are, the Banquet of the Austerdrm Citizens on the Celebration of the Ireace of Westphalia, In the Misemin at Anisterdam, and the Judres of the Prizis of the Ritle laan! of the Judges of the Irizies of the Ritle lanan! of Amsterdam, in the Louvre. The same starting. point was taken by the principal master of the Ditch school, Rembrundt van İyn (1606-1684). There are maay portraits helongling to his earller life, in which, with superior talent, he devoted himself to the simple representation of ature.

Subsequently, he was no longer sutistled with thls calm, ohjective moxle of representa. tion; a deep, inwardly suppressed, passionate thame urged him to a new style of conceptloa, in which the figuris themselves only tended to sulve prohlems of the holdest character; a wonderful perfectlon of chharo oscurs, a dariug play with fintastic and evea glurlng effects of light, distlngulsh his later works. This tendency is, as it were, the expression of a violent protesta. tion agniast all uoble form and elecerfill life ia tite light of dry.

But, in spite of this want of nobler form and higher expression, hi palatiugs entrance the spectator hy the e singular charm. by the construlning torce of a mind stirred up in its very depths, aad by a myste. rious poetic power. Spanish.-"The Spanish Srhool of palnting appears to have been oue of the more recently estublished of the modern schools of Europe. The churacteristle Spanish school has a elose connection with the schools of Italy, especlally tbose of Venice and Nuples, in style, though lts earlicr developmeat seems to have beea due to the limmigratior of Flemish artists luto Spain.

The prine al works undertaken in Spala date from the thme of Phllp 11:: they were chietig executexl hy 1 ' lians, and the prinelpal Spanish painters stivlied in ltaly. . . . The paint. ers of Spain have been classified in three principal schons: . . they are tbose of Vatcucia, Maslrid, and Seville.
. . The followlng are the most important : - Aintonio del Rineon, Luis de Vargas, Dorales. Joínes, Cespedes, Ruélas, Ribnlta, Pacheco. Aionso Cano, Velazquez, Zurbaran, and Murillo: the uthers are little known out of Spain. . . . Diego Velazquez de Silva, the heal of the school of Malriul, und the prince of Spanlsh painters, was born at seville in the spring of 1.599 . .. Ile vislted Madrid first ia 16202, and was invlted back the year afterwarils by the Count Duke of Olivares, who procured him then the appoiutment of painter to Philip IV.; from this time Velanquez was establisheri as a royal favourite. Velazquez ineing hetter known than any of the preceding painters, 1 unt of Spain, is accordingly hetter appreciated out of Spaiu. IIe visited Italy $\ln 1629$, but had formed bis style hefore he weat there. IIe belongs strlctly to the naturnlist school. . . Velaz. qué ranks as a portrait-painter with Titlan and Fandyck; and he had besides the great power of objective lmitation characteristic of the naturalist school. There is, however, no laboured Imltation in the works of Velazquez. . . . Velaz. quez was a gool landscape-painter, but seldom attempterl church subjects.

Bartolomé Esté. ban Murillo, born at Neville, aad baptized Janu. ary $1 \mathrm{st}, 1618$, is the best known of all the Spanish masters out of spain, ant bolongs to the same naturallet scheol, . . . thougb he frequently represente 1 the most exalted subjects. He is sometimes called the Spanlsh Vandyck; he, however, belonged to a very different school of art from thut of Vandyck. He ls the great Caposciohn of the school of Sevllie, and ls generally constdered the prince of Spanish painters, though he had not the force or readiness of Velazquez: le wants the manly vigour of that great painter. Murilio, havlag acqulred a gool knowledge of art from bls relntlve an del Castillo at Sevllte, hecame la 1642 the pupil of Velazquez at Ma. drhl. $\qquad$ . His greatest works were executed after he was tifty years of age, being nearly all producerl betweren 1670 and 1680 . Ills earlicr works were of the low natiralist type, and commonly of humhle subjects : thower girls, beggar-boys. and the like; his later, much more refinc I aud not less irue, were chietly of a religious character his farourite subject heing Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception, wbleb he ofteu puinted, and sometines with a beauty of consposition and sentiment, and a richness and trans parency of colouring far excecting any other Spmish paiuter."-R. The sanu intinences that drove painting from the walls of clurches turned the attention of artists ouring the 13th aul 14 th centhries to sueh sulbeets as retablos and aitur-pleress But these so-milhed artists do not presuppose an improved schowi of painting. In fact. lefore the 14 th century, palnting hud no stunding as a separate art, but was strictly suborlinated to sculptire or archltecture. The palnter was still merely a decorator. . . While frescoes and decorativi puinting suppleal only a temporary waut, miniaiure was from the first the reai medinm for the eatercise of whatever artistic zeal existed. . . . It was the Italian wars, begun in 1494 by Charles Vlll. that tirst brought the artiatic treasures of laty prominently before the eres of the French mosarchs, and the real history of French painting begins with those Itulian artists who, In the reiga of Erancis I. In thls department also it seemed for a time as if the luthuence of the oid Italian manters would gain the upper hand. But the influmee of Musseldorf, added hy that of England, althougit not through its hest representatives, surio as ('onstable, gave a different turn to the course of affairs, and in a measure fred the artists from the tirruldom of an antlquatedi school. . . . The greitest name . . . In the curly instory of landscape art In the Conited States is that of Thomins Coic (18)1-1848), who came over from Englam with his parents in 1810, hut recelved his tirat trainlng, such as it was, in America. . . . The Ameriean students who went to England up to the inddle of the present century were not $\ln$ fleenced by those palnters who, like Coustable, are credilted with having given the first impuise rowards the derefopment of modern art. This ls true also of tiose who went to France. PANAMA CANAL. - PANAMA SCAN-DAL.-‘The commencement of an undertaklag [projected hy Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, the bullder of the Suez Canal] for connectling the Atlantic and Pacife oceans, through the Isthmus of Panama, was a natural result of the success achleved hy the Suez Cunal. Various sites have been proposed from time to time for the construction of a canal across the Istlimus, the most northern lielng the Temuantepec route, at a companatively broad part of the Isthmus, and the most soluthern the Atrato route, following for some distance the course of the Atrato RIVer. The site eventually selected, in 1899, for the constructlon of a canal was at the narrowest part of the Isthmus, and where the central ridge is the lowest, known as the Panama route, nearly following the conse of the Panama lanilway, It was the only scheme that dhd not necrssirily involve a tunnel or locks. The length of the ronte between Colou en the Atlantlc, and Panamia on the Pacitic, is 46 miles, not cquite half the length of the sucz Canal; but atide-level canalinvolved a cutting across the Cordilleras, at the Culebra Pass, nearly 300 feet decp, nainly through rock. The section of the canal was deslgned on the llnes of the Suez Canal, with a hottom width of 72 feet, and a depth of water of 27 feet, except In the central rock cutting, where the width was to be increased to 784 fect on account of the nearly verticnl sides, nad the depth to $29 \frac{1}{2}$ feet.

The work whs commenced in 1882.
The dibliculties and expenses, however, of the undertaking had been greatly under-estimated. The climate proved exceptionally unhentthy, especlatly when the soil began to he turned up by the exeavations. The actual cost of the excaration was much greater than originally estimated; and the total amount of excavatiou regulred to form a level camal. which had originally beeu estimatel at 100 millon cubic yards, was subsequently computed, on more exact datin, at 1704 inition cublc gnrds. The preliminary works were also very extensive nod costly; and dithculties were experienced, niter a time, in raising the funds for carrying on the works, even when shares were offered at a very great disconnt. Eventnally. in 1887, the capital at the disposal of the company had nearly come to an end; whilst oulr it little more than one-bith of the excavation had leea completed.

At that perion it was determined to expedite the work, and reduee the cost of completling the caanl, by Introducing lows, and thus diminish the remaining amount of excavation by 85 million cubic yards: though the estimated cost, even with this imonlification, had lacreased from $53 \sharp, 500,000$ to E65, 5NO. $10 \%$.

The tinancinl embarrassmeuts, however, of the company lave prevented the carrying out of this scheme for completing the canal: and the works are at present [1891] at a staadstill, In a very unfinlshed state."-L. F. Vernou-Ilarcourt, Arhierements in Engineering, ch. 14.-' It was on Ikecember 14, 1888, that the Panama Canal Company stopped payments. Under the ausplees of the Freach Goverameat, a parliamentary inquiry was started In the hope of tinding some means of saving the enterprise. Facts soon cnme to light, wheh, in the oplaion of many, justitied a prosecution. The Indignation of the sharehoklers agalngt the Count de Leseps, hif sou, and the other Directors, waxed loud. In addition to ruinous miscalculations, these men were charged with corrupt expendlture wha a vew to influence puhlic opinion. The gathering storm finally burst on November 21 [1892], when the Interpellation in regned to the Canal questlon was hrought forward in the Chamber. M. Delahaye threw out suggestions of corruption agalnst a large number of persoas, alleging that $3,000,000$ francs had been used ly the company to bribe 150 Senators and Deputtes. Challenged to give their names, he persisted in merely replying that if the Chamber wanted detalls, they must vote an Inquirs. It wis ultimately agreed, hy 311 to 243 , to appoint a special Committee of 33 Members to conduct aa Investigatlon. The judlelal summonses against the accused Directors were lssued the same day. charging them with ' the use of frundulent devices for creating bellef la the exlstence of a chimerical event, the spending of sums accruing from lssnes handed to them for a fixed purposes, and the swindling of all or part of the fortane of others.' The case being called in the Conirt of Appeals, November 25, when all of the defendants - M. Ferdinand de Lesseps; Charles, his son; M. Marius Fontanes, Barou Cottu, and 11. EIfel - were ahseut, it was adjourned to Jaauary 10, 1893. $\qquad$ On November 28, the llaryuis de la Ferronaye, followed by M. Brisson, the Chalrman of the Committee of Inquiry, called the nttention of the Government to the rumors regardiug the death of Baron Relnach. and pressed the demand of the Committee that the body be exbumed, and the theory of sulcile be tested. But for his sudden death, the Baron woull have been included in the prosecutlon. He was said to have recelved linmense suas for purposes of corruption; and his mysterions and sudden death on the eve of the prosecution startel the wildest ruanors of sulche and even murder. Publle opinion demanded that full light be thrown on the "pisole; but the Miaister of Justlce said, that, as no formal charges of crime had been lald, the Government had no power to exhume the body. M. Loulet wonld make no concession in the matter; and, when $M$. Brisson moved a resolution of regret that the Baron's papers had not been sealed at his death, petulantly lnsisted that the order of the day 'pure and simple' be passed. This the Chamber refused to do by a votc of 304 to 210 . The resib. nation of the Cabinct immedlately followed.

A few days' Interregnum followed daring which M. Brisson and 11. Casimir-Pèrier sur"esslvely tried in vain to form a Cablnet. M. Ribot, the Forelgu Mlinister, finally consented to try the task, and, on December 5 , the ne:v Ministry was annonnced. . . . The policy of the Goveriment regarding the scandal now changed.

In the course of the lavestlgation by the Comaittec, the most startling evidence of corruptlou was revealed. It was discovered that the prinelpal Paris papers had recelved large amounts fir puffing the Canal scheme. M. Thicrée, a buiker, asserted that Baron Reinach had paid lnto his bank 3,390,000 franes in Panama funds, and liad drawn it out $\ln 26$ checks to bearcr. On Decemher 13, M. Rouvler, the Finance Minis. ter, resigned, because his name had been connected with the scaadal.

In the meantlue. sufficient evidence had been gathered to tause the Government, on December 16, to arrest 11 Charles do leesseps, M. Foatane, and M. siansLeroy, Directors of the Canal Compagy, on the St. Peter and the Church at Rome.-"The generally recelved account among Roman Cath. olles, aut one which can claim a long tradtlonal aeceptance, is that Peter came to Rome ln the second year of Clandlus (that ls, A. D. 42), and that he held the see twenty-five rears, a length of eplscopate never reached again until hy fio Nono, who exceeded lt. . . . Now if it is pos. slble to prove a negatlve at all, we may conclule, with at least high probabllity, that Peter was not at llone during uny of the tlme on $w^{11}$ ijeh the writings of the canonleal Scriptures throw much light, and almost certaluly that during that the he was not lis blshop. We have an Eplstle of laul to the Romans full of saluations to his friemis there, but no mentlon of their bishop. Nor ls auything said of work done ly Peter in founding that Chureh. On the contrary, it is lmplled that no A postle had ns yet visited it; for such is the inference from the passage already cited. lu which paul expresses hils wish to see the Roman Christlans lu order that he mlght lunpart some spirituall gift to the end that they might be established. We have letters of Paul from lome $\ln$ which no message is sent from Peter: and in the very last of these letters l'aul comphians of being left alone, aut that only lake was whth him. Was Peter one of the deserters? The Seripture aceouuts of Peter place him in Julita, in Autioch, possibly in Coriath, but thally in Babylon. . . Plainly, if Pleter was ever at lume, it was after the date of laul's second Epistle to Tinnthy, Some Protestant controversinlists have assmed that Peter was never at limie; but though the proofs that he was there are not so strong as 1 should like them to be if 1 hal nuy destrine tependiug ou it, 1 thluk the listorie problabitity is that he was; though, as 1 sily, at a late periox of the history, and uot long before his thath. . . . For myscif, 1 am willing, in the absence of any opposing tradition, to aecept the curreat aceount that Peter suffered martyrdom at llone We know with certainty froni Johu xxi. Thit Peter suffered mar. tyrdom somewhere. If home, which early laid claim to have withessed that martyrdom, were not the seene of it, where then did it take place? Any city would be ghat to chaim such a counexion with the name of the Apostle, and none but Rome made the claim. . . From the question, whether Peter ever visited lome, we pass now to a very different question. Whether he was its bistop. .. We thiuk it scandalors when we read of bishops a huudred years ago who never went near their sees. . . . But if we are to believe loman theory, the bad example hal been set by St. Peter, who was the tirst ahseutee blshop. If he became blshop of Rome in the second year of Clamilus he appears never after. wards to have gone near his see untll close upon hls death. Nay, he never even wrote a letter to hls Church whlle he was away; or lf he did, they dld not thlnk it worth preserving. Baronlus (in Anu. Wlil. 81 ) owns the foree of the Seripture reasons for bellevlng that Peter was not ln Rome during any time on whleh the New Testament throws light. His theory ls that, when Claudins commauded all Jews to leave liome, Peter was forced to go away. A nd as for hls subsequent nhsences, they were forced on him by his dutr as the chief of the Apostles, laving care of all the Churches. These, no douht, are excellent reasoms for Peter's not remainlng at Rome: but why, then, did lo uudertake dutles whith he must have known he could not fultli" - (i. Samon, The Infallibility of the Church, pp. 3 hi350. -The Roman Catholic bellef as to St. Peter's episcopacy, aud the primacy conferred hy It on the Roman See, is stated by Dr. Dollinger as follows: "The time of . . . [St. Peter's]arrival in Rome, and the consequent duratiou of hls episcopary In that eity, have been the subjects of many various oplinions amongst the learnel of anclent und moklern times; nor is it possible to reconcile the apparently contlleting statements of anclent writers, unless we suppose that the prinee of the apostles resided at two distinct periods $\ln$ the imperial capital. Accordlng to $x$.t. lerome, Enseblus, und Orosius, his tirst arrival in lome was ln the second year of the reigu of Clathius (A. D. 42); but he was obllged, by the deeree of the emperor, banishling all Jews from the city, to return to Jerusalem. From Jerusslem he hudertook a journey through Asia Minor, aud fonnded, or at least, visited, the Churehes of Pontus, Gallacla, Cuppadocia, and Bythinia. To these Churches he afterwards addressed his epistle from Rome. llis second journey to Rome "ws In the relgn of Nero; and It is of thls journe? that Dionysius, of Corinth, and Lactantius, write. There, with the hlessed Paul, he suffered, in the year 67, the death of a martyr. We miy now aseertain that the period of twenty. tive yeurs assigned by Euseblus and St. Jerome, to the eple eopacy of St. Peter In Rome, is not a fiction of their imagiuations; for from the second year of Clandius, in which the apostle founded the Church of Rome, to the year of his death. there intervene exactly twenty five years. That he remalued duriug the whole of thls period in lume, no one has pretended. . . . Uur Lord conferred upon his apostle, Peter, the supreme authorlty in the Chureh. After he had requiret aul obtai ed from him a public profession of his fuith, he co clared him to be the rock, the fonsdation upon wheh he would bulld hls Church. nnd, at the same time, promlsed that he would give to him the keys of the klngdom of heaven.

In the enumeration of the apostles, frequently repeated by the Evangellsts, we fid that l'eter is always the first named:- ine is sometimes named alone, when the others sre mentloned in general. After the ascention of our Lord, it is he who directs and governs: he leads the assemhly in whlch succeasor to the spostle who had prevaricated, Is chosen: after the descent of the Holy Ghost, he speaks first to the people, and announces to them Jesus Christ: he performs the first mlracle, and, In the name of hls brethren, addresses the synedrium: he punlshes the crime of Ananias: he opens the gsies of the Church to the Gentlles, and presides at the first councll at Jerusalem.

The more the Church was extended, and the more lts con. stitution was formed, the more necessary did the power whth whlch Peter had been invested become, - the more evident was the need of a head Whlch unlted the members ln onc body, of a point and centre of unlty.

Successlon by ordination was the means, by which from the beginnlng the power left by Christ in hls Church was continued: thus the power of the apostles descended to the bishops, thelr successors, and thus as Peter dled hishop of the Church of Rome, bere he sealed hls doctrinc with his hlood, the primacy which lic had recelved would be continued in him by whom he was there succeeded. It was not without a particular lnterposition of Provilence that this pre-emlnence was granted to the city of Rome, and that lt became the depository of ecclesiastical supremacy. Thls clty, which rose In the midway between the eust and the west, by lis positlon, by lts proximlty to the sea, by lis dlgnity, as capital of the Roman empire, being open on all sides to communicatlon $e \mathrm{r} \in \mathrm{n}$ With the nost distant natlons, was evldently more than any other adapted to become the centre of the universal Church.

There are not wanting, in the first three centuries, testimonics and facts, some of which directly attest, nad wthers presuppose, the supremacy of the Roman Church and of its bishops."-J.J. I. Dollinger, ilintury of the Church, period 1, ch. 1. sect. 4, and ch. 3. xare. 4 (e. 1)

Supremacy of the Roman See: Grounds of the Claim.-The historical ground of the claim to supremacy over the Christian Church asserted on Trhalf of the Roman see is stated by Cardl. ual Gibbons as follows: "I shall endeavor to how. from incontestable historical evidence, thit the Popes have always, from the days of ther Apustles, continued to cxercise supreme juriwliction, out only in the Western church, till the Reformation, hat also throughout the East cra church, till the great schism of the ninth cutury. 1. Take the questiou of appeals. In appeal is never made from a superior to an in ferfors conrt, nor cren from one court to another of enorrlinate jurlstletion. We do not appeal from Wu-hington to Richnond, but fromlitich. momel to Washington. Sow if we find the See of Itome: from the fomblation of Christlanity. ontertaining and deciding cases of appeal from the Oriental elurches; if we tind that her decis. in was fual and irrevocable, we must conclude that the supremacy of Inome over nll the charelies is an undeninble fact. Let me give soun few llustrations: To begin with Pope St. Chenent, who was the third successur of St l'ter, and who is laudably mentioued liy Nt l'and in one of his Epistles. Sume dissenston athl scandal haring occurred in the church of Corinth, the matter ls bronght to the notice of Pupe Ciement. Hc at once exercises his supreme authority by writing letters of remonstrance and admonitlon to the Corinthlans And so great was the reverence entertained for these Eplotles, hy the fathful of Corinth, that for a century later it was customsry to have them puhllcly read In thelr churches. Why did the Corinth lans appeal to Rome far away in the West, and not to Ephesus 50 near home in the East, where the Apostle St. John still lived? Evidently be cause the jurisdlction of Ephesus was local, whlle that of Rome was universal. About the year 100, the quest lon regardling the proper day for celebrating Easter was agitated In the East, and referred to Pope St. Victor I. The Eastern church generally celehrated Easter on the day on which the Jews kept the Passover; whlle in the West It was observed then, ss It is now, on the first Sunday after the full moon of the vernal equlnox. St. Vlctor dlrects the Eastern churches, fur the sake of uniformity, to conform to the practlce of the West, and his lastructlons are universally followed. Dionysius, Bishop of Rome, about the middle of the third century, having heard that the Patriarch of Alexandria erred on some points of falth, demands an explanation of the suspected Prelati, who, In obedience to his superior, promptly vindlcates hls own orthodoxy. St. Athanaslus, the great Patriarch of Alexandria, appeals ln the fourth century, to Pope Jullus I., from an unjust decislon rendered against hlm hy the Uriental bishops; and the Pope reverses the sentence of the Eastern councll. St. Basil, Archbishop of Casarea, In the same century, has recourse, In hls afflictions, to the protectlon of Pope Danasus. St. John Chrysostom, Patriarch of Constanti. nople, appeals in the beginning of the tifth century, to Pope Innocent I., for a redress of eritvances inficted on him by several Eastern Prelates, and by the Empress Eudoxia of Constantinople. St. Cyril appeals to Pope Celestine against Nestorius; Nestorius also appeals to the same Pontiff, who takes the side of Cyril. Theod oret, the illustrious historian and Bishop of Cyrrhus, is condemned by the pseudo-council of Ephesus in 449 , aud appeals to Pope Leo. Jolin, Abbot of Constantiuople, appeals from the decision of the Patriarch of that city to Pope St. Gregory I., who reverses the sentence of the Patriarch. In 8.59, Photius addressed a letter to Pope Nicholns I., asking the Pontill to contirm his election to the Patriarchate of Constantinople. In consequence of the Pope's conscieutious re fusal, Photius broke off from the comimunion of the Catholic Church, and became the uuthor of the Grcek schlsin. Hereare a few examples taken at random from Church Ilistory. We sec I'relates most eminent for their sinctity and leurnlug, occupying the highest position in the Eastern church, and consequently far removed from the local intluences of lanic, appealing in every period of the enrly cluurch, from the decisions of their own Bishops nud their Conucils to the supreuse arbitration of the IIoly sec. If this does not constitute superior jurisdiction, I have ret to leara what superior anthority metans. 2. Chrlstlatus of every denomination adnit the ortholoxy of the Fathers of the tirst tive centuries of the Chureh. No one has ever callenl in question the falth of such men as IBasil. Chrys. ostou, C'yprian, Iugustine. Jerome. Amhrise. and ben . . Num the Fathers of the charab. with one voive, pay homige to the Bishops of Rome as thelr superiors. . . . 3. Ecumeuiend

PAPACY.

Counclls afford another eloquent vindleation of Papal supremacy. An Eeumenleal or General Councll is an sssemulage of Prelates representing the whole Catholie Churei.

U'p to the pres. ent time, nlneteen Ecumenicai Counells have been convened, ineludlng the Counell of the Vatican.

The first General Conncll was heid in Niciea, in 325; the seeond, In Constantlnople, In 381; the third, In Ephesus, in 431 ; the fourth, In Clinieedon. In 451; the fiftl, in Constantinopie, In 553; the sixth, In the same elty, in 680; the seventh, in Nleæa, in 787; and the eighth. In Constantinople, In 869 . The Bisiops of liome convoked these assemblages, or at ieast eonseuted to their convocation; they presiled by thelr legates over ail of them, exeept the first and secoud couneiis of Constantinopie, and they eontirmed uil these eigit by their mithority. Before beconilng a law, the nets of the Couneils required the Pope's slgmature. 4. I shail refer to one more inistorical point $\ln$ support of the Pope's jurisdiction orer the whoie Church. It is a most remarkable fact that every nation hiltherto converted from Paganism to Christiaulty, since the days of the Apostles, has receivel the Iight of faitli from massionaries who were either especiaily commissioned hy the See of Rome, or sent by Bishops In open conmmuion with that Sec. This historical faet adinits of no exeeption. Let me particularize: Ireland's Apostie is St. Patriek. Who commissioned him? Pope St. Celestine, in the tifth century. St. Pailadius is the A postle of Seotiand. Who sent himy The same Pontiff, Celestine. The Angio-Saxons reeeived the faith frum St. Augustine, a Benedictine monk, as ail historians Catholie and nonCatholie testify. Who empowered Augustine to preach? Pope Gregory I., at the end of the sixth eentury. st. IRemigins estahishedi the fu: t ! In Franee, at the elose of the fifth century. He was In active communlon with the see of Peter. Flanders received the Gospel in the seventh eentury from St. Eiigius, who acknowiediged the supremacy of the reiguing Pope. Germany and lBararia venerate as their Apostle St. Boniface, who is popuiarly known ln his na. tive England by his baptismal name of Winfrid. He was commissioned by Pope Gregory 11, In the begiming of the eighth eentury, and was eonsecrated Bishop by the same Poutif. In the ninthecutury, two saintiy brothers, Cyril and M... thoilins, evangelized hussia, Selavonin, and Moravia, and other parts of Norticru Europe. They recognized the supreme authority of Pope Nichoias I., a:ad of his suceessors, Alrian 11. and Johu VII. In the eleventh eentury, Norway was converted by missionaries introiluced from Englitud by the Norwegian King St. Olave. The couversion of Sweden was consummated in the same century by the British Apostles Saints C'lfriland Es. kili. Both of these nations Iminediately after their conversion commeueed to pay Rome-scot, or a small annuai tribute to the Moly See, - a elear evidence that they were in communion with the Chair of Peter. All the other nations of Europe, having been eonverted before the Reformation, reecived likewise the light of falth from loman Catholic missionaries, because Europe tilen reeog. nizel oniy one Christlan Chief."-James, Cardi. nal Gibbons, The Faith of our Futhers, ch. 10.

Supremacy of the Roman See: Grounds of the Denial.- "The tirst document by whleh the inirtisans of the Papal soverelgnty justify themgeires, Is the ietter written by st. Clement in the name of the Chureh at Rome to the Chureh at Corinth. They ussert, that it was written ly virtue of a superior authority attiehed to his title of Bislopp of Rome. Now, It is unquestion. able, 1 st . That St. Clement was not Blishop of Rome when he wrote to the Corinthlans. In That ln this matter he did not act of his own authority, but lu tho name of the Chureh ar lonnc, and from motives of eharity. The intter signed by St. Clement was written A. D. 69, itamediately after the persecution by Nero, which took piace hetween the rears of nud 69 , as all learnedi men agrve.

It may he seren from the letter itself that it was written after a persectition; if it be pretended that this persecution was that of Domitian, theu the letter must be dated Iu the last years of the first ceutury, since it was ehiefly In the years 95 nud 96 that the persecutlon of Donittian tiok place. Now, it ls easy to see from the letter itseff, that it was written be. fore that time, for it speaks of the Jewish sacrithees as still existing i. . the temple of Jerusalem. The tempie was destroyed with the elty of Jerusalem, by Titus A. D. \%0. Ilenee, the letter must have leen written before that year. Besides, the ietter was written after some persecution, In whici lad suffered, at Rome, some very illustrions martyrs. There was nothing of the kind iu the perserution of Domitlan. The perse. eution of Nero lasted from the year 64 to the year 68. Hence it follows, that the letter to the Corinthlans conid only inave been writteu in the year 69, that is to say, twenty-four years lefore Clement was Bishop of Rome. In presenve of this simpie calcuiation what beeomes of the stress faid by the partisans of Papal soverciguty, upon the importance of this doeument as emanating from Pope st. Clement? Even If it coulld be shown that the letter of St. Clement was written during his episcopate, this wouid prove nothing. beenuse this letter was not written hy him by virtue of a supmerior and personai anthority possessed hy him, but from mere elarity, ami in the name of tile Church at Rome. Let us hesr Eusebius upon this subjert: - Of this t'lement there is one epistic extau., aeknowlediged ss Eenulne, . . . which he wrote In the name of the Church at Rome to that of Corinth, at the time when there was a dissension in the fatter.
He could not say more explieitly, that clement did not in this matter act of his own authority. by virtue of any power he iudiviluaily posesed Nothing In the letter itself gires a suspicinn if such autiority. It thus eommeuces: The Church of Gorl which is at Rome, to the Churcu of God which ls at Corinth.'

There is every reason to ielleve that St. Clement druaplated this letter to the Corinthians. From the fir: eunturies it has been eonsidered as his work. It was not as Bishop of izome, lunt as a disciple of the Apostles, that he wrote it.

In the sicond eentury the questlon eoncerning Easter was agy. tated with mueh warmth Many Uriental Churches wished to follow the Judaical traditions, preserved by severai Aposties In the celebration of that feast. and to hold It upon the fourterath day of the March moon: other Eastern Churrhes in agreement with the Western Cburches sc. cording to an equally Apostollc tradition, celebrated the festival of Easter the Sunday follow. lng the fourteenth day of the March mon. The question In itself consldered was of no grent importance; and yet it was generaliy thought that uli the Churches should ceiehrate at one and the same tlme the grest Christlan festlval, and that mome should not be rejolelng over the resurreetion of the Saviour, whlle others were contem. plating the mysteries of hls death. How whs the question settied ? Dld the Bishop of lrome Interpose his authority nad overrule the discussion, as would have leen the case had he enjoyed a supreme authority? Let us tnke the evldence of llistory. The question having been agltated, - there were synods nnd convorntions of the Blishejes on this question,' says Frsebius, and all unanimously drew up an eccie :astical decree, which they commuulcated to ali the Churches ln all places.

There is an epistle extunt even nuw of those who were assembled at the time; among whom presided Theophilus Bishop of the ('lurreh in Cesarea nnd Narcissus, Bi.shop of Jrousalem. There is another eplstie' (of the Ruman Synorl) 'extant on the same question. beariug the name of Vletor. An epistle also of the Bishops in Pontus, anong whom Pulmas, as the most ancient, presided; also of the Churches of Gaul over whom I :næus presided. Moreover, one from those ln Jsrhoene, nnd the cities there. Ant a partlcular epistle from Bacchyllus. Bislop of the Corinthians, and eplstles of man others who, alvancing one and the same doctrin, als, pisset the same vote.' It is evident that Eusthius spraks of the letter of he Iroman synul in the same terms ins of i. others; he dines not attrihute it to Bishop Victor, but to the assemully of the lroman Clergy, and lastly, he only mentions it in the second place after that of the Bishops of Palestine. Llere is a polnt irrefragably established ; it is that in the matter of Filstr. the Cinarch of Rome discussed and judged the yucstion in the same capacity as the other clurehes, mul that the Bishop of IRome only sigued the ietter in the name of the sunoi which ripresentett that Church."-Abhe Ginettere, The Pipniry, $p$ " 53-58.-"At the time of the Councll of Nierea it was clear that the metropolitans of lionte, Alexandria, and Antioch, hell a superior rimk among their hrethren, and had a kime of ill-uldituel juristiction over the provinces of seneral tuetropolitans. Tho fathers of Nlcaa recognizel the fact that the privileges of these sims were reguluted by customs already regarded to frimitive, and these customs they contirmed.

The cmpire was afterwurds divided for the ; rpuses of civil goverument luto four Prefee. tures. : . The organization of the Church follored in its ..iain lines that of the empire. It alus hat its dioceses and provinces, coinciding for the most part with the similarly inmed polit. dal divisions. Not only did the same circum. slitures whloh marked out $n$ city for politleal proiminence also Indlcate It as a fit centre of ecelesiastical ruie, hut it was a reer, nized principle with the Chureh that th: eccleslastical sluuld follow the civil divlsic.s. At the hend of a diocese was a patriareh, at the head of a prurince was a metropolitan; the territory of is siuple hlshop was n parish.

The see of ('onstantinople. became the oriental connterpurt of that of Rome. . . But the natri. arcinal system of government, like every other, sulfered from the shocks of tlme. The patriarch of Antloch had, in the Irst Instance, the most extensive tcrritory, for he clalmed authority not only over the civil dlocese of the East, but over the Churelies In Persin, Media, Parthla, and In. dia, whlelt lay heyond the limlts of the empire. But thls large organization was hut loosely knlt, and constantly tended to dissolution. . . . After the conquests of Caliph Omar the great see of Antloch sank lnto Insignitcance. The reglon subject to the Alexandria. patriarch was much smaller than that of ADtloch, hut it was better compacted. Ilere too h swever the Jlonophyslte tumult so shook lts orginalzation that it was no longer ahie to reslst the ciaims of the pat riareh of Constantlnople. It aiso fell under the domin. lon of thes Saracens - a fate which had niready befallet. Jerusalen. In the whole East there re. mained oniy the patriarelı of Constuntlnople ln a condi ion to exercise act ual authority. $\qquad$ corling to Rufinus's version of the sixth canon of the Councll of Niciea, the Blshop of IRome had cutrusied to him the care of the suhurhlearian churches [prohalsly lncluding Lower Italy nid miost of Central Italy, with Sicily, Sardlnia and Corsica]. . But many cnuses tendec to extend the nuthority of the Roman patriarch beyond these modest limits. The patriarch of Constantlnople depended largely for hils authority on the will of the emperur, and his spiritual realm was agltated hy the constant intrigues of opposing partles. Hís lurother of IRome enjoyed generally more frecdom in matters spiritual, nad the diocese over which he presidetl, keeping aloof for the most part from cou*roversies on points of dogm, was therefore canparitively cnlm and united. Even tic Orientuls were $1 m$ pressed by the mnjesty of ohd IRome, and gave great honour to lis hisliop. In the West, the highest respect wns paid to the se sees which claimed an Apostle as founder, and among these the Church of St. Peter und St. Paul uaturally took the highest place. It was, in fuct, the one apostolic see of Western Europe, and as such recelvedi a unitjue regard. . . . Doubtinl questions nhout upostolic doptrine ninl custom were $1 d$ dressed certainly to other distingulshed hlsnops, as Athaussins and basil, hut they came more readily aud umre constantly to Rome, as already the last uppeal in mauy civil mutters. We must not suppose however that the Churches of the Enst were ready to necept the swny of Rome, however they might respect the grat city of the West.

The authority of the lRoman see incrensed from causcs whichare sutheient! obvious to historicat enquirers. But the greatest of the IRoman hishops were far 100 wlse to tolerate the supposition that their power depen' ${ }^{\text {del }}$ on earthly sinuctions. They conteuded stendfastly that they were the heais of the Church on e:stli, because they " ere the successors of him to whont the Loud had given the key of the kingiom of licaven, St. Peter. And they also contended that lome wu., la ting most cmphatie sense, the mother-chirch of the whole fiest. Ir ceent I. clalms tha, no Chureh had ever veen i I ln Italy, Gaul. At the sume time, sey admitted that the privlleges of the see were not wholly derlved lmmedlately tmm its founter, but were conferred by past generations out of respect for St. Peter's see. But the bishop who most clearly and emphatl-cally amerted the cla'ms of the Roman see to preeminence over the wh. vle Church on earth was no douit Leo I., a great man who dilied a mot critlcal position with extraordinary frmnese and sblilty. Almost every argument by which In Iater tlmen the autsority of the see of St. Peter was supported in to he fonnd in the letters of Leo.

The Empire of the West never serlousiy lnterfered with the procecdings of the fioman bishop; and when it fell, the Church became the heir of the empire. In the general crash, the Latin Curistians found themseives compelied tn drop their rmalier differences, and rally rouml the strongest representative of tho oid order. The Teutons, who shook to pleces the imperial system, hrought into greater prominence the essential unity of ail tilat was Cathoilc and Latin in the empirc, and so strengthened the position of the see of isome.

It must not however be supposed that the views of the lioman hirhops as to the autiority of Rome wire universaily accepted even in the West. Ninny Churchtihad grown up independentiy of Norne and were abundantly consclous $u_{0}^{\text {e tho groatness of thelr }}$ own past. . . . And in the African Church the reluctance to snhmit to Roman dictation whileh had showed itseif in Cyprian's time was malntained for many generations. . . . general alnrm and misery; Gregory hluself, in one of his letters, compares Rome at this time to an old and shattered shlp, letting ln the waves on all shles, tossed by a dilly storm, Its pianks motten and sounding of wreck. In thls state of things nll men's thouglits at once turned to Gregory. The pope was at thla period the virtual ruler of Rome, and the greateat power in liniy; and they must have Gregory as thelr pope; for, if any one conld save them, lt tras he. Ilis ahilities in public affalrs had beed proved: all Itome knew his character and attainments; he had now the forther reputation of eminent saintliness. Ite was evilentiy the one man for the post ; and accorilingly he was unanimousiy elected by clergy, sunute, nud people. But hr shrank from the proffered dignity. There was oue way by which he unigit possibly escape it. No clection of $n$ pope conld at this time take effect withont the emperor's confirmation, and an emhussy liad to be sent to Constantinople to ohtaiu it. Grugory therefore sent at the amme tlme a letter to the emperor (Mlauricius, who itmi succemied Tiberius In 584), Inploring hin to withhohi his confirmathon; but it was inturevinted by the prefect of the city, and nnother from the clergy, senate, and people sent in lts place, entreathy approvin of their choice. . . . At length the inperial contirmation of his election arrived. Ile still refused; fled from the clty lo disgulse, eluding the guards set to watch the gates, and hid himself lin forest cave. Pirsued and discovered by means, it is said, of a supernatural light, he was lrougit back in triumph, conducted to the cluureh of St. Peter, and nt once ordained on the Brd ol Sep. tember, 500.

IIaving been once piaced in the high position lie so little coveted. he rose to It at ouce, and filfilled lts mnitifarious dinties with remarkable zeal and ability. Ilis comprehensive policy, and his grasp of great lasues, are not more remarkable than the minnteness of the detalls, in secular as weil ns religions matters, to which he was able to give his personal care. And this is the more striking ln combinathon with the fact that, as many parts of his writhgs show, he remained all the time $n$ monk at heart, thor. oughly lmbued with both the ascetic princlples and the narrow credulity of coutemporary nonasticism. Ilis private life, too, was stlif in a measure monastle: the monastic simplicity of his episcophl attire is noticed by his blographer: he llved with his clergy mmer striet rule, and in 595 Issned a synotill decrec substluting clergy for the boys and sccular persons who had formerly wated on the pope in hls chamber."-J. The struggle which the papacy aad the church carricd on in the last half of the 11th and on into the lith centiry for the purpose of doing a way with thls same right of the priuces to confer such oftices ls called in consequence the war of the investitures. That the aomiaation of the bishops was a right pertalning to the sovereign was a view of the matter which had gained gronnd aiready la the time of the Frankish monarchy. The German klngs up to the eleveuth ecutury Insisted all the nore on this right from the fact that the bishoprics and imperial abbacies hal in course of time lost their original character of church organizations. They had been uppunged with linperial and other lands, with politienl aud publie rights, with immunlties, rishts of colnage, etc. . . . The death of a bishop would be aanounced to the king by cuvoys from the episcopal resldeace Who at the same time, hading over the episcopal (rosier and ring, would beg that the klag would soc to the retilling of the vacant oftiee. It ueed harill be soid that ony new caalilate who might in the meantime harc been elected prescuted himself likewise at conrt. The king discussed the matter of the bestowal of the vacant bishopric or ubbacy with his seculur and ecclesiastica] nobles and couucillors. besides passing general laws against simony, came forward at first cautlously enough with the regulation that the clergy should accept no churches from the hands of a laynian. The direct clash with the German court came later, in 1088, where the king had coaferred the bishopric of Dlilan as usual through investiture, whlle the people, under the influence of the papal reform-party, demanderl a hishop elected canonically and with Rone's conseat. The king did nnt give way and Gregory VII., in the IRoman aynod of $10 \% 4$, increased the severity of the earlicr laws against simony, openlag the strugcle In a synod of the following year by ordaining that the people should not be present at eccleslastical functioas performed by those elergy who had galned offre through simony, Who lad galned office through simony, the reference being to those bishops who adhered to the klng. Furthermore the royal right of conferring bishoprlcs by investiture was now directly denled. Wlth this nttack on an old and customary prerogative of the German king, one too whlch in earlier times had even been expressly ackaowledyed br the pope, an attempt was made to thoronghly undermlne the foundatlons of the German empire and to rob the royal power of one of its chief supports. The bishops and abbots were princes of the renlm, possessing. besldes a number of privileges, the large feudai and allodlal holdings which went wheth thelr churches. They had, on belialf of thelr hishoprics, to sustain the largest slunre of the cmplre's burdens. The crown found in them the chief props and supports of Its power, for the ecclesiastical principalities could he freely granted to devoted adherents without regard to the heredl. tery dyuastic claims of fnmilies. The onty legad bond by which these princes were honnd to the crown was the investiture with its oath of fenlty ant homnge. The prohibition of this, then, denotisl the cessatlon of the relationship which assired the dependence of the ecclesiastical printes on the king and on the cmpire and the perforannce of their daties to that empire. It delivered over the considerable material wealth and powir of the imperial bisloprics and abbacles to a clergy that was loosed from all connection with the crown. With regard to the manner in which in futhre, nccording to the opinion of Gregory Vil. or the elnurch-reform party, the bishoprics were to be filled, the above-mentioned synol does not cxpress itself. The decrees of the Roman synol of 1080, as well as Gregory's own further attitude, however, make it appear unljuestionnhle thint, with the formal restoration of the old so-callen] canouical clection by elergy and wople in common with the metropolitan and his suffragans, he purposet] the actunl subjertion to the pope of the episcopsey and of the resources which In consequence of its political position stoxl at its command. drop and turned against Henry IV. The latter had so nlicnateyl Maxnny aud Thuringia hy harsh proceedinga, that they desired to accuse him to the Pope of oppression and simony. Gregory immediately demanded the dismissal of the counclliors who bad been excommunicated by his predecessor. Ilis mother, who was devoted to the Pope, souglit to medlate, and the Suxon revolt whith now broke out (still in 1073) stili further induced him to give way. But Ilenry, after overthrowiag lils eneniles, soon returned to his ofd nranner, and the Germinn clergy resisted the interference of the Pope. At the Ionan Synol (Februnrs, 1075) Gregory then decreed numerous ceclesinsticai penalties ngainst resistant German und Lombard bishops, and tive councillors of the King were onee more hidmader the ban on accoint of slmong. But in addition. at a Ronam sy nol of the same year, he carried through the lold law of vesilture, which prohibited bishops and ablots from receiving a bishoprie or nblacy from the limnds of a hayman, und prohibited the rulers frons conferring in vestiture on pehalty of exeommuniention. Before the pulitieatlon of the hiw Gregory caused confidential overtures to be made to the Kligg, in order, as it scems, to give the king an opportu. nity of taking measures to obviate the threatening daugers which were Involved lin thls extreme step. At the same time he hiniself was threatened and entangled on all hands; Rohert Guls. eard, whom he bad prevously excommunleated, he onee more laid under the ban. $\qquad$ Ilenry: Who in the summer of 10.5 still negotiated di. reetly with the l'ope throurh anmassadors, after completely overthrowing the sinuons now eeased to ply shiy nttention.

At Worms (2ttir January 10:6) he eansed a great portion of the German bishops to declare the deposition of the Pope who, as wis said, wis shattering the Empire and degrading the bishops. The Lombard bishops subseribed the decere of deposition at Piacenza and lavia. Its bearers aroused a fearful storm arainst themectres at the ieden Sernot of Rome (10:6), and Gergory now derlireid the exeommanleation mad depowition of llenry, and released his subjects from their oath. Serious voices did indeed ileny the Pope's right to the litter course; but a portion of the German bishops at once huublef themselves before the lope, others le. gan to waver, and the German princes, anecred over Henry's goverument, denamied at Trimur in Oetoler, 10 on, that the fing shonh give satis. factiou to the Pope, and the P'ope hohl juignuent on flenry tu Gernany itself; if by his own fante Henry should remain under the bian for a year's time, another Kiug was to be elected. Henry then resolveri to make his putce with the Poper in order to take their weapan out of the hamds of the German priaces. Before the I'ope eame to Germany, he hastened in the winter with his wife and child from Ibesaacon, over Mont Cenis, and found a friendly reception in Lombirely, so that the Pope, already on the way to Germines, britrask himself tio the chathe of (ationsit to the Margraviue Matilda of Tuscany, fearing an evii turn of affairs from IIenry and the Lombards who were hostile to the Pope. But Henry was driven by his threatened positlon In Germany to seek release from the ban above every thing. This brought him as a penitent lnto the court. yard of Canossa (January 1077), where Gregory snw him stand from morning till evenling during tliree days before he released him from the baa at the intercession of Matida. "W. Moeller, Mist. of the Christian Chures in the Middle Agen, p $)^{2} 256-258$. -" It was on the 25 th of January, 1077, that the scene took place, which, as is naturai, has seized so strongly upon the popular imaglnution, and has so often supplied a theme for the brush of the painter, the periods of the historian, the verse of the poet.

The king was bent upon escaping at any sacrifice from the bond of excommunication and from hls eagagement to appear before the Pontifif, at the Diet simmoned at Augsburg for the Feast of the Purification. The character in which he presentef himself before Gregory was that of a penitent, throwing bimseif in cleep eontrition upoa the Apostolic clemeney, and desirous of recoaciliation with the Church. The Pope, after so fong experience of his duplielty, disbelieved ia his sincerity, while, as a niere matter of policy, It wus in the highest degree expedient to kerp him to his pact with the German princes and pred. ates. . . On three successive days did he appenr barefooted in the snowy court-yarid of the castle, clad in the white garb of a penitent, suing for reltef from eceleslastical censure. It was ditflicult for Gregory to resist the appeal thus nude to his faticrly cumpassion, the more espectally as IIngh, Ablot of Clung, and the Countess Matilda besought him 'not to break the brnised reed.' Against his better judigment, atal in despite of the warnlings of secular prudenee, the Pope consented on the fourth day to acimit to his preseuce the royai suppiliunt. . . . The conditions of absolution imposed upon the kiug were malnly four: that he should present himself upon a day and at a piace, to be named by the Pontiff, to receive the judgment of the Apostolie see, upon the churges preferred by the prinees and prelates of Germany, and that he should ubide the I'ontifieul sentence - liis subjeets memwhile remaining released from their Gaitl of feally; that lie sbouid respect the rights of the Church and earry out the papal decreas: and that brach of this engagemeut should cirtitle the Teutonic magnates to proeeced to the election of another king. Such were the ternis to which Henry solemaly phedged hintsilf, and on the faith of that pledge the Pontiff, ansmung; the vestments of religion, proceeded to ubsulve him with the appointed rites. . . . So cuts the tirst net in this great tragedy. Gregorys misgivings as ta the king's sincerity soon receive ino ample justification. 'Fear not.' the Poutif is reportell to have said, with half contemptunus sudurss to the sixom envors who complatacel o. hals lanity to the monareh: 'Fear not, I selmu bim bark to gen more guilty than he came.' At iast, la Lent, 1080, Gregory, no ionger abie to toierate the continnai vioiation by Henry of the piedges glven at Canossa, and greatly moved by tidings of his new and manifold sacrileges and crueltles, pronounces agaln the sentence of excommunica: their obedlence, and recogalzing Kuiolph as kluy. Jlenry thereupon calls together some thirty simoulacal and Incontinent prelates at Brixen, and causes them to go through the form of electing an anti-pope in the person of Guibert, Archbishop of Ravenna, an ecelesiastlc some time previously excommnnicated by Gregory for grive offences. Then the tlde turns in If-nry's favomr. At the battle of the Elster (15th October, l(180), Rudolph is defeated andi mortally wounderl, and on the same day the army of the Gre:t! Countess is overthrown and dispersed at La Volta in the Mantuan territory. Nixt ycar, ia the early spring, Henry crosses the Alps nnd adraneres towards Rone.

A iittle before Pronterost Ilenry appears under the walls of the Papial city, expecting that his party within it wiii throw open the gates to him; but his expectation is disuppointed.

A. D. 1059.-Institution of the procedure of Papal Election.-"According to the primitive custom of the church, an episcopai vacancy was flled up by clection of the clergy and people belonging to the city or dlocese.

It is proba. ble that, in almost every case, the clergy took a leading part in the selection of thelr bishops; but the consent of the luity was absolutely neces. sary to render it valid. They were, however, hy degrecs exchided from any rcai participation, first In the Greek, nnd finally in the western cliurch.

It does not appear that the carly Christian emperors interfered with the frcedom of cholce any further than to make their own confirmation necessary in the great pntriarchal sces, such as Ilome and Constantinople, whleh were frequently the ohjects of vlolent compretition, and to declife in eontroverted clections.
The blshops of IRome, like those of inferior sien, were regularly elected by the citizens, layman as weil as eceleslasties. But their consecration was deferred until the popular choice had received the soverelgu's sanction. The Romans regulariy despatched ietters to Constantinople or to the exarchs of Juvenna, praying that their election of a pope nipht be confirmed. Exceptlons, if any, are infrequent while Rolue was suhject to the eastern empire. This, among other imperial prerogatlves. Charlemagne might consider us his own.

Otho the Great, in re. ceiving the imperlal crown, took apon him the prerogntives of charlemagne. There is even exta: : " decree of Leo VIII., which grants to him,:izs is suctessors the right of naming future popes. But the authenticity of this instrument is denicd by the Itallans. It does not appear that the Saxou emperors went to such a length as nominution, except in oue instnnce (that of Gregory V. in 996); Lut they sometimes, not uniformiy, confirmed the ciection of a pope, uecoriing to anclent custom, An expheit right of nombation was, however, conceded to tine emperor Ilenry III, in 1047, as the only means of rescuing the Iroman church from the disgrace and depravlty into which it hal fallen. Iftury appointel two or three very goori popes.
This hlgh prerogative was perhaps not designevi to extend beyond Ilenry himself. But even if It had been transmlssihle to his successors, the: Infancy of his son Henry IV., and the fuetions of that minority, precluded the possibillty of its exercise Nicolas 11 ., in 10,5 , published a do. cree which restored the right of election to the

The cardinal hishops (seven In number, holding sees in the neighbourlood of Rome, and consequently suffragans of the pope as patriarch or metropolitan) were th cloose the supreme pontif, with the concurrence first of the carilnal prlests and deacons (or milulsters of the parish churehes of Rome), and afterwards of the falty. Thus elected, the new pope was to he presented for contirmation to Il eury, ' now king, and hereafter to become emperor, 'and to such of hils successors as shnuld persoually ohtain that privilege. Then "the people . . . broke lato stlll fle erer crles, ruslied to arins, and gathering round the conclave, thryitened them with death unless a Romin was elected. But the conclave was strong in its positlon, and finally the people were pacifled, and afeptel Urban VI. Such, however, was the fear of the Cardlaals, that they were with dilficalty persuaded to proceed to the Vatican and perfirm the ceremonles necessary for the instal. lation of the new Pope. Thls, however, fually was done, antl the Castle was placed la the charge of Pietro Guntellino, a Frenchman, and garriwned by a Gallle guard, the French Cardlnals remulning also within lts walls for safety. On the 20th of September they withdrew to Fondi, and In conjunction with other seldismates they afterwaris [september 20, 13i8] elected an anti Pope [lobert of Geneva] under the thle of Clement VII. The Lateran couacil was induced, lmmediately before lis dissolution (15th of March, 151\%), to grant the pope a twuth of all church property throughout C'irisfondom. Three difereut commlssions for the sule of Induigences traversed Germany and the northern states at the same moment. These expellients were, it is true, resorted to under various pretexts. The tenths were, it was sald, to be expended In a Turkish war, which was sooa to be declared; the produce of lndulgences was for the building of St. Peter's Church, where the bones of the martyrs lay exposed to the laclemency of the elements. But people had ceased to believe ln these pretences.... For there was no doubt on the mind of any reason. able man, that all these demands were niere fianncial specuiatlons. There is no positive proof that the assertion then so generally made - that the proceeds of the sale of lndulgences ia Germany was desthned ln part for the pope's sister Marddelena - was true. But the main fact is indisputable, that the eceleslastlcal alds were applied to the uses of the pope's family."-L. luake, Hist. of the Reformation in Germany, bk. 2 ech. 1 (c. 1).-" indulgences, In the earlier ages of the chureh, had been a relaxation of pennnce, or of the discipline imposed by the Church on penitents who had been guilty of mortai sin. The ductrine of penance required that for such sin stitisfaction should be superadded to contrition and coufession. Then caine the custom of cummoing these appointed temporal penalties. When (bristianity spread among the northern nations, the cunonical penances were frequently fomm to be inanplicable to their condition. The fratice of arecpting offerings of money in the rom of the ordinary forms of penance, harmonized with the peual codes in vogrie amoag the harbarian peoples. At tirst the priest hall only exereived the oftice of au intereessor. Gradually the simnse function of declaring the divine forgiv The penitent transformed itself iuto $\because$ By Aquinas, the priest is made of conveying the divine pardon, the rough which the grace of Gud filsrimates to Rome, ordained by the popes, come the plenary indulgences, or the complete riminuiun of all temporal penalties - that is, the pemalties still ohligatory on the pernitent - on the fultillmeut of prescribed conditlons. These praltics might extend Into purgatory, but the indulsence obliterated them ail. In the 13th cutury, Alexander of Hales and Thomas Aquiais set forth the theory of supererogatory nurits, or the treasure of merit bestowed upon the Chureh through Christ aud the saints, on which the rulers of the Church might draw for the herntit of the less worthy and unore needy. This was sonsething distinet from the power of the kiss, the power to grant absolution, which inhered in the priesthood alone. The cternal punishment of mortai sla being remitted or comrusted by the absolutlon of the priest, It was opea to the Pope or his agents, by the grant of in:?! ingrees, to remit the tempural or terminahle peaalties that still rested on the head of the transgressor. Thus souls might be delivered forthwlth from purgatorial fire. Pope Sixtus iV., in 1477, had officlally declared that coula already ln purgatory are emanclpated iper modum sufragil'; that is, the work done in behaif of them operates to effect their release ln a way analogous to the efficacy of prayer. Neverthelcss, the power that was ciaimed over the dead, was not practicaily diminlshed by this restrlction. The business of selling indulgences had grown hy the profitableness of It. 'Everywhere,' says Erasnius, 'the remisslon of purgatorial torment is sold; aor is it sold only, but forced upon those who refuse lt.' As manal ".d hy Tetzel and the other cmissarics sent out to collect money for the building of St. Peter's Church, the Indulgence was a simple bargain, according to which, on the payment of a stipulated sum, the individual received a fuli dls. charge from the penalties of sin or procured the release of a soul from the tlames of purgatory. The forgiveness of slns was offered in the market for money."-G. P. Fisher, The Reformation, eh, 4.- The doctrine concerning indulgences which the Roman Catholic Church maintains at the present day ls stated by one of its most eminent prelates as follows: " What then is an Indul. gence? It is no more than a remission by the Church, In virtue of the keys, or the judicial authority committed to her, of a portion, or the entire, of the temporal punishment due to sin. The lnfinite merits of Christ form the fund whence thls remission is derived: but besides the Church hoids that, by the communion of Saints, penitential works performed by the just beyond what their own sins might exaet, are arailable to other meinbers of Christ's mystical body: that, for instauce, the sufferiugs of the spotless Mother of God, aftlictions such as prob. ably no other human ieing ever felt In the soul, - the austerities and persecutions of the Baptist, the friend of the Bridegroom. who was sanctitied in his motler's womb, and choseu to be an angel before the face of the Christ, - the tortures endured by numberless martyrs, whose iives had leeu pure from viee aud sin, - the prolonged rigours of holy anchorites. who, Hying from the temptations aul dangers of the world, passed many years in penance and contenpla, tion, ail these made consecrated and raitil through their union with the merits of Christ's passion, - were not thrown away, but formed a store of meritorions blessings, njpllable to the satisfaction of other sincers. It ls evident that, If the temporal puuishment reserved to sin was anciently belleved to be remitted throngh the peniteutial aets, which the sinner assumed, any other substitute for them, that the authority ins. posiug or recommending them received is an equivaleut, must have been considered by it truly of equal value, and as acceptable before God. And so it must be now. If the duty of exacting such satisfaction devolves upon the Chureh, -and it must be the same now as it formerly was,-she necessarily possesses at present the same power of substitution, with the same cflicacy, and, consequentiy, whith the same effects. And such a substitution is what constltuces ali that Catholics understand by the name of an Indulgence. . Do l then mean to say, that during the middle ayes, and later, no abuse took place in the pructise of ludulgences? Most certainly not. Flagrant and too frequent

'they couid not have received (dol Hinseif lugreater state.' The salutations ended, the whoie cortége moved towards the church, the Pope's buil of grace ing earried in adivance on a velvet cushion, or on a cinth of gohi. The chief induigence-mer. chant foilowed next, hoiding in his hand a red wionlen cross. In this order the whole procession moved along, with singing, prayers, and incense. Theorgan peaied, and loud music greeted the hnveker monk and those who accompanied him, an they entered the temple. Tbe cross he bore was place:l in front of the aitnr; the Pope's arms wire suspernied from it.

One jerson especiaily attracted attention at these saies. It was be w o carried the great red cross and plycif the principal part. He wore the garb of ine Dombicans. Ile had an arrogant bearing and a tbundering voice, and be was in fuli vigour, though the had reached his sixtr-third year. This mnn, the son of a goldismith of Leipsie, named Bietz, was caifed Joha Dirtzel, or Tetzei. He had received numerous ecclesiasticai honours. Ite was Bnchelor in Theology, prior of tbe Domlnicans, apostolic commissioner and inquisitor, and since the yenr 1502 he badi filked the ottice of vendor of induigences. The skill he had acquired soon caused him to be named conmissioner in-chief.

The cross having been elevated and the Pope's arms hung upon it, Tetzel ascended tbe puipit, and with a conf. dent air begr - to extol the worth of induigences, In prespre of the crowd whom the cerenony had attracted to the sacred spot. The peopie listened witit open mouths liere is a specimen of one of his harangues:- 'Induigences,' he ald, 'are the most preclous and suhlime glfts of

D. $1517 .-$ The Ninety-five Theses of Luther. -The following is a trunslation of the ninety flive theses: "In the desire and with the purpose of elucldating the truth, a disputation Will be hr ld on the uuderwritten propositions nt Wittem'serg, under the presidency of the lievercad c'ather Martin Luther, Monk of the Order ni St. Augustlne, Master of Arts nod of Suered Theology, and ordinary Reader of the same in that place. IIe thercfore asks those who cammot he present nad disenss the suhject with ns or:lly, to do so hy letter in thelr ahsence, Iu the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Anem. I. CurIari and Inster Jesus Christ in snylug: 'l lepent ye,' etc., inteuded that the whole life of believeras shonld be penitence. 2. Thls word canuot lee understood of sacramental penance, that is, of the confesslon and satisfaction which are performed under the ministry of priests. 3. It does not, however, refer solely to laward penitence; nay such inward penitunce ls nanght, unless it outwardly produces various mortitications of the flesh. 4. The penaliy thus continues as long as the hatred of self - that 1 s , true inward penitenee-continues; numely, thll our entrance into the klngdom of heaven. 5. The Pope has ncither the whli nor the power to remit any penaltles, except those whlch he has iniposed by his own anthority, or by that of the canons. 6 . The Pope has no power to remit any gullt, except by declaring and warrantling It to have heen remittel by Godl; or at most hy remltting case's reserved for himself; In which csses, If his power Wiere desplsed, gullt would certuinly remaju. 7. God never remits any man's guilt, whlthout at the same time sulijecting hlm, humhled ln all things, to the authority of hils repre antatl ve the priest. 8. The penitential canons are lmposed ouly on the living, and no hurden ought to be imposed on the dylng. according to them. 9. Hence the Iloly Splrit actlng In the Pope does well for us, In that, In his decrees, he always makes excepthon of the article of death nad of necesslty. 10. Those priests act wrongly and unlearnedly, who, In the ease of the dylng, reserve the canonical penances for purgatory, 11 . Those tares alout changing of the canonical penalty into the penalty of purgatory eeem surely to have been sown While the bishops were asleep. 12. Formerly the canonlcal penaltles were lmposed not after, but before ahsolution, as teste of true contrition.

Luther's Ninety-Ave Theses.
13. The dyinf pay all penalties by death, and are airealy deal to the canon iaws, and are by right relleved from them. 14. The Imperfect mounducss or clarity of a dylng person necesarify brings witb lt great fcar, and the less it is, the greater the fear lt brings. 15. Thls fear and horror is sufficlent by ltaelf, to say nothing of other thlngs, to constitute the pains of purgatory, slnce it in very near to the horror of despalr. 16. Heil, purgatory, and heaven appear to differ as despair, almost despair, and pence of mind differ. 27. With souls in purpatory it seems that it must needs be that, as horror iiminlshes, so charity lncreases. 18. Nor does it seem to be proved by any rcasoning or ally seriptures, that they arc sutslde of the state of merit or of the increase of ciarity. 19. Nor does this appear to be proved, that they are sure and confident of thelr own blessedness, at least all of them, thongh we may le very sure of $1 t$. 20. Thercfore the Pope, when he speaks of the plenury reinlssion of all penaltics, does not menn slmply of all, but only of those lmposed by blmself. 21. Thus tiose preachers of indulgences are ln crror who say that, by the luduigences of the Pope, a man is loosed and saved from ali punishment. 22. For in fact he remits to souls in purgatory no penalty which they would have bad to pay in this life aecording to the canons. 23. If any eutlre remission of all penaltles can be granted to any one, it is certaln that it is granted to none but the nost perfect, that Is, to very few. 24. Hence the greater part of the people must needs le diecelved by thls indiscriminute and highsomullug promise of release from penalties. 25. Such prower as the Pope has over puigatory in general, sueh has cuery bishop in hls own dineese, nud every curate in his own parish, in particuliar. 26. The Pope acts nost rightiy in ranting remission to sonls, not by the power of the beys (wbich is of uo avall in this case) but by the way of suffrage. 27. They preach nan, who say that the sonl flies out of purgatory us soou as the money thrown into the chest ratiles. 28. It is certain that, when the money rattles in the ehest, avarice aul gaia may be inereascol, but the suffruge of the Chureh tepends on the wifl of God aione. 29. Who knows whether all the souis in purgatory desire to le redeemed from it, aceording to the story told of sinints Severinus and I'asillui. 30. To man is sare of the reaity of hifs own eoatritiou, much less of the attalnment of plenary remission. 31. Rare as ls a true penitent, so rare is oue who truly buys infuigenees - that is to say, nost rure. 32. Those who telieve that, through letters of pardon, they are male sure of their own salvathon, wili be eternaily damned along with their teachers. 33. We must espechaliy beware of thuse who say that these parious from the l'ope are tbat inestinabie gift of Goul by which man ls reconciled to Goil. 34. For the grace eonveyed by these purdons has respect only to the penal. ties of sacramental satisfactlon, which are of human appointment. 35. Tbey preach no Chriation doctrine, who teach that contrition is not necessary for tbose who buy souis out of purgatory or buy confessional licences. 36 . Every Christlan who feels true compunction has of right plenary remlssion of pain and guilt, even without lellers of pardon. 37. Exery true Christlan, whether ilving or dead, has a share in all the benefits of Christ and of the Church, given him by Gorl, even without letters of par don. $3^{\text {a }}$. The remlsslon, however, imparted liy the Pope is by no means to be desplsed, slnce it is, as I have said, a declaration of the Divine re misolon. 39. It is a most difficult thlog, cvea for the most iearned theoinglitit, to exalt at the sume tlme in tite eyes of the people the ample effect of pardons and the necesslty of true con trition. 40. True contritlon seeks and loves punishment; whlle the ampleneas of parions refaxes lt, und causes men to hate lt, or at benst gires oecaslon for them tidosn. 42. A postolle pardons ongbt to be pi clained witit cauthon, lest the propie should fascly suppose that they are placed before other good works of charity. 42. Christlans shouid be taugbt that it is not the mind of the Pope that the buying of parions ls to be ln any way compared to works of merey. 43. Christlans should be taught that he who gives to a poor man, or icnds to a ncedy man, does better than if he bought pardons. 44. isecause, by a work of charity, charity increases, and the man hecomes better; while, by means of parions, be does not lecome better, but oniy fieer from punisbunent. 45. Christians should be tanght that lie who sees any onc ln need, and. passing hlm by, glves mouey for pardons, is not purehasing for himself the Induisences of the Pope, but the anger of Gol. 46. Chriatians should be taugit that, unless they have superfluous wealtb, they are bound to keep what is necessary for tic lise of their own houscholis, and ly no means to iavlsh it on pardons. 47. Christinns should be taught that, while they are free to buy pardons, they are not commanded io dio so. 48. Christians shonld be taugit that the Pope, in granting pardons, has botio more necd aud more dealre that devout prayer should be made for bim, than that money sifouli be readily paid. 49. Christlans should be taught that the i'ope's parions are usefui, If they do not put their trist ln them, but most hurtful, if through them they lose the fear of Goul. 50. Christians sloouid be taught that. If the Pope were acquainted with the cxactions of the preachers of parions, he would prefer that the Basiliea of St. Peter should be burnt to ashes than that it should be bullt up with the skin. flesh, and bones of his sheep. 51. Christians shoulid be taught that, as it would be the duty, so it would be the wish of the $1^{3}$ ope, even to well. if necegsary, the Basilica of St. Peter, and to give of his owu mouey to very many of those from whom the preachers of pardons extract money. 52. Vain ls the hope of salration through triters of pardon, even if a commisary - hay the l'ope hlmself - were to plodiee bis own soul for them. 53. They are enemies of Christ and of the i'ope, who, in order that pardons may be preached, condemn the word of God to utter silence in other ehmrches. 54. Wroug is done to the word of God whem. in the same sermon, an equal or longer time is spent on pardons that on 1 lt . 55. The mind of the l'ope necessarily is that, if pardons, which are a vert suall matter, are celehrated with siagle lells. single processions, and singie ceremonies the Gospel, wbleh is a very great marter, shoulib b preached witb a hindred bells, a huadrai proecsslons, and a hundred ceremonles. 56. The treasures of the Church, whenee the Pope grants induigences, are nelther sufticlently uamet nor known among the peopie of Christ. 37 . It is clear that they are at least not temporal treas. urve, for thesc are not so readlly lavlahed, but only aecumulated, by many of th. preachers. 58. Nor sre they the merits of Christ and of the saints, for these, independently of the Pope, are always working grace to the Inner man, and the cross, desth, and hell to the outer man. 59. St. Lawrence sald that the treasures of the Church are the poor of the Church, but he spoke arcorring to the use of the word ln histime. 60. We are not speaking rashly when we say that the keys of the Clureh. bestowed through tha nurits of Christ, are that treasure. 6I. For il Is clear that the power of the Pope is alone sutticient for the remisalon of penalties and of rescrved cases. 62. The true treasure of the Clurrh is the lloly Gospel of the glory and grace of Gionl. 63. This treasure, however, is dearrvelly most hateful, 'ecause it nake's the first to be last. 64. Whi - the treasure of lutlulginc is theservedly mo $t$ aceeptable, because it makes the last to be first. 65. Hence the treasures of the Goapel ure nets, wherewlth of old they fished for the men of riehes. 66. The trousures of hathigciuces are nets, wherewlth they now fish for the riches of min. 67. Those Indulsences, which the preachers loudly procialni to be the grantest graecs. are seen to be truly surch as regards the pronnotion of gain. 68. let they are in reality la no degree to be eom. parid to the gruce of God and the plety of the cruas. 69. Bishops and eurntes are bound to rewive the commisarias of apostolle partons with all reveronee. 70. But they are still more lomm to see to it with all their eyes, and take bevel with all thelr ears, that these men do not prouch their own dreams in place of the Pope's commission. 7I. He who spenks against the truth of apostolie parions, let him be anathema and aceursed. 72. But he, on the other hand. whoexerts limself agalnst the wantonness and licrnere of speech of the preachers of pardons, let him be blessed. 73. As the Pope Justly thunders afainst those who use any klad of eontri. vance to the injury of the traffic in pardons. 74. Much more is it his intention to thunder agalnst those who, unter the pretext of pardons, use contrivances to the injury of holy charity and of truth. 75. To think that Papal pardons have such power that they eould abonve a man even if - ly an lmpossibility - he had vlolated the Mother of Goal. is madness. 76. We aftirm on the conirary that lapal pardons cannot take away even the least of renial sins, us regards its gulit. 77. The suying that, even if St. Peter were now lope, he could grant no greater graces, Is hasphemy against St. Peter and the Pope. 78. We aftirn on the contrary that both lie and any other l'ope has greater graees to grant, uamely; the Cispel, powers, gifis of hesling, ete. (1 Cor. xii. 81. 79. To say that the cross set up anmong the insignia of the Papal arms ls of cqual power With the eross of Clirist, Is blasphemy. 80. Thase bishops, curates, and theologlans who alluw such discourses to have eurreney among the people, will have to render an account. 81. This bicunee in the preaching of pardous makes it no easy thing, even for learned men, to protect the reverence due to the Pope against the calumnles, or, at all events, the keen questionings of the lalty. 82. As for lastance:- Why does nut the Pope empty purgatory for the sake of most holy charity and of the supreme necesalty of souls-thls leling the most just of all reasonsIf he rexleems an Infinlte number of souls for the sake of that most fital thing money, to be spent on huilding a baslleta - this belng a very slight reason ? 83. Aguin; why do funeral masses and annlversary masses for the decessed contnue, and why does not the Pope return, or permit the wlthdrawal of the funds begueathed for thls purpose, slnce It is a wrong to pray for those who are siready redeemed ${ }^{\circ}$ 84, Apaln: what is this new kindness of Gorl and the Pope, In thant for money's sake, they permit an implous man and an enemy of God to redeem a plous soul which loves God, and yet do not redecm that same plous and beloved soul, out of free charlty, on secount of lis own need? 85. A galn; why ls it that the penltential canons, Jong since abroguted and dead in themselves in very fuet and not only by usage, are yet still redermed with money, through the granting of ludulgences, as if they were full of life? 86. Agaln; why dors not the Pope, whose riehes nre at thls day more ample than those of the wealthiest of the Wealthy, bulkl the one basillea of St. Peter with hls own money, rather than with that of poor belivers ? 87. Again; what does the lope remit or impart to those who, through perfect contrition, have a right to plenary remasion and partieipatlon ? 88. Again; what greater good would the Church recelve If the Pope, Instead of onec, as he does now, were to bestow these remissions nad participatlons a hundred times a day on any one of the falthful? 89. Sinec it is the salvation of souls, rather than moner, that the pope secks hy his pardons, why does lie suspend the letters and pardous granted leng ago. since they are equally ethicaeious. 90 . To repress these seruples and arguments of the laity by foree slone, and not to solve them hy giving reasons, is to expose the Chureh and the pope to the riclleule of their entmies, and to make Christian men unhappy. 91. If then pardons were preached aecording to the splrit and nimd of the Pope, all these questlons would be re. solved whth ease; nay, would not exist. 92. Away then with all those prophets who say to the people of Christ: 'I'eaec, peace,' und there is no peace. 93. Blessed be all those prophets, who say to the people of Christ: "The eross, the cross, , and there is no eross. 94. Christians, should be exhortel to strive to follow Christ thelr head through pains, deaths, and hells. 95. And thus trust to ehter heaven through many tribulations, rather than in the security of pence."-11. Wace and C: A. Buchheim, First Principles of the Ie formation, np. 6-13.

D. 1517-1521.-Favoring circumstances under which the Reformation in Germany gained ground.-The Bull "Exurge Domine." -Excommunication of Luther. - The imperial summons from Worms.-" lt was fortunite for Luther's eanse that be lived under a prinee like the Elector of Snxony. Frederiek, indeed, was a devout eatholie; he had made a pilgrinnge to Palestine, and had flled AH Saints' Chureh at Wittenberg with relies for whieh he had given large sums of money. His attention, however, was now cntirely engrossed hy his new uuirersity, and le was unwilling to offer up to nees like Tetzel so great an ornament of it as Dr. Martin Luther, sluce whose appointmedt at Wittenberg the number of students had so wonder. fully Increased as to throw the unlverslties of Erfurt and Lelpsle quite Into the shale. one of the priaclpal Electors he was completely master In his own dominions, and lndeed throughout Germany he was ns much respected as the EIIIperor: aud SIuxlmillian, bealdes his liniteel power, was deterred by his political vlews from taking any nutlee of the quarrel. Luther had thins full llikerty to prepare the great movement that wat to consue.

The contempt entertalned by Pope Lut) $\mathbf{X}$ for the whole n(air was almo favourahle to Lailier; for Frederiek might not at first have beru lnclinetl to defend hlm agalnst the Court of Lomue. . . . The Court of Rome at length beenme more menslhle of the Importance of Luther's lnnovatlons mul lu August 1518, he was commamilel elther to recant, or to appenr and answer for hils oplnlons at leone, where silvester Prlerias and the blshop Ghenued ill Arcoli had been ap. pointed his jualges. Luther had not as yet drenmt of throwing of hla alleglanee to the Ko. man siee. In the precedling Hay he had addressed a letter to the Pope himself, stathg his vlews in utim but moxlest and respeetful tone. and declaring that be could not retruct them. The Elcetur Freteriek, it the lustance of the unlversty of Wittenherg, whleh trembled fur the life of lts bold nat dlatlugulshed professor. prohifilted Luther's journey to Rome, and expressed his opinion that the question should be decided in Germany by Impartinl judges. Leo consented to send a legate to Augshurg to determine the cause, and selected for that purpose Cardinal Thomas di Vlo, better known hy the name of Cajetanus, derived from his native city of Gueta.

Luther set out for Alugshurg on finot provided with several letters of recommendiathon from the Elector, and a safe conduct from the Emperor Naximillan.

Luther appeared before the carlimal for the first tlme, Octeber 13 th, at whose feet he fell; but it was som apparcut that no ugreement could be expeeted. Cajetunus, who had at first beluved with great mole ration and politeness, grew warm, demanded an uncomblitional retraction. forbale Luther aguin to appuar hefore him thl he was prepared to make it. and threatened him with the econsures of the 'llareh. The fute of Iluss stared Luther In the fice, and he determined to fly. Nis patron staupitz procured him a horse, and on the 20th of October, Langemantel, a maglstrate of Anrsburg, caused a postern in the walls to be operted for him before day had well dawned. (iajetanus now wrote to the Elcetor Frelleriek complaining of Luther's refractory leparture from Angshurg, nad requiring eitl .f that he should tre sent to IRome or at least le banisheet from suxony.

So uncertain were inther's prospects that he made preparations for his tlepartire.

At length, just ou the eve of his departure, he received an intimation from Freelcrick that he might remaiu nt Wittenberg. Before the elose of the year he gained a fresh aceession of strength hy the artival of Melanchthon, "pupll of Reuchlin, who had obtained the ap. pilntment of I'rofessor of Greck in the unlversity. Frederick offered a fresh disputation at Wittenberg; but Leo X. adopted n course more consonant with the pretenslons of an lnfallible Church by issulng a Bull dated November 9th 1518, which, without adverting to Luther or his opintons, explained and euforeed the recelped doctrine of indulgences. It falled, however, to produce the deslred effect. . . . Leo now tried

On lils wny through Germany, Dlltitz son percelved that thrie fourths of the people were $\ln$ Luther's favour; nor was lils reception at the Saxon Court of a uature to aford nuch encouragement.

Mil. thtz saw the necesslty for conclliatho. Haviug ohtained an laterview with Luther at Alteularg. Alititz persuadel him to pror ise that he would be silent, proviled a llke res alnt were phaterl upon lifs udversurles. . . . Lu cher was even induced to address n letter to the Pope, dated from Altenlurg, Warcla 3ril 1519, lu which, in humble terms, he expressed his regret that hils motives should have been misinterprecet and solemaly deelared that he dlld not neas, :o dlapinte the power and anthority of the P'ope and the Clinech of Rome, which he considered superlor to evi. thlug except Jesus Christ alone. . . . The truce effecterl by Miltitz hasted only a few months. It was broken by a dlsputntion to whileh Dr. Erk challenged Bumlensteln, a Lelpsle professor, lentter known ly the name of Caristadt.

The Leipsle dlsputation was preceled and followed by a hest of entroversles. The whole mind of Germany was In motlon, anil it was no lohget with Luther alone that Rome has to conterid. All the celcbrated names in art and litemure sided with the Reformation; Erasmus, C'trich von Intten, Melanelithon, Larus Cranacho albert Durer, und others. Bilvester von Schaumburg and Frime voa slckIngen Invited Luther to their castles, In ease he were driven from Saxony: und Sclamanhag declared that 100 more Franeonlan knghts were realy to protert him.

The Eleetor F'rul. eriek became lally more convineed that his dow trlnes were founled in scripture. . . . Mean whille, Luther had made great striles in his oplaions since the publication of his Theses.
Ile had begun to lmpugn many of the primiples of the Romish church; and so far from ans longer recognising the paramount authority of the Pope, or eveu of a geueral council. he" was now disposed to submit to no rule but the lible. The more timhl spirits were alt rmed at his bold. ness, and even Frederick hamself exhortel bim to moderation. It must be acknowlet bed, in teel, that Luther sometimes danaged his cause by the intemperance of hils language; an instance of which is atfordet by the remarkahle letter be adiressed to Leo X. A pril Gth 1520, as a dedica tlon to lids treatlse ' De Libertate Christiana.
The letter just alluded to was, perhaps, the in mediate eause of the famous Bull, ' Exnrge lhanine,' which Leo fulminnted agalnst lutber. June 15th 1500 . The Bull, wheh is coneeived In mill terms, condemned forty one propositions extracted from luther's works, wllowed him sixty days to recaut, Invited hlun to lione if he plensed to come, under a sufe conduct, and re qulred hlm to cease from preachlng and writing and to burn hls publlshed treatises. The recess of the dlet. puilisheel In March, 1523 was framed wheth the same splitit; Instead of threais of persecutlon, It oniy enjolned all persons to walt with patlence tise determluatlon of a free councll, forbade the difusion of doctrinen likely to create disturhsifers, and subjected all pullications to the ap. probation of men of learolng and problty appointed by the magistrate. But now "Lutber wan permunderl, at the Inatances of the Suxon clergy, to forman regular syateme of filth and lleclpllive; lie tranalated the mervice lito the German tomgre, moillied the form of the nawa, ami omitted many superatlllous ceremonlex; lout he mide as few lnoovathons as possillh, comendentily with lils own principles. To prevert niwo the total allenation of misuse of the eccleslinstical revenues, he d1gested a project for their adnilnistration, by theaas of an annual conmititee, and ly lifa writ. luga and Intluence eifected its Introlucthon. ['nde: 'bla judicloun kystem the revenuter of the churcth, interp a prowinlon for the clergy, were approprintel for the support of sehools: for the rellef of the jwar, sich, and aged, of orplians and wilon.: for the reparaton of charebes and sacred huildiugs: and fur the erection of nagnoinea and the purcluse of corn agalnst pertuly of surclty. These regulations and ordinances, though not estalilished with the pullic approlatthon of the elector, were yet maile with his tacit acqulescruce, and may be considered as the tirst lusitution of a refirmed system of worship and eccleslastical pulity; and in this Institution tho exanple of the churches of saxony was followed by all the Lutheran conmminites in Germany. The effects of these changes were woon visible. and particularly at the meetlag of the second diet of Nuremilerg, on the 10th of January, 1524. Fulner. canon of Strasburgh, who liad been enjolned to nuke a progress through Germauy for the purpose of preachlng against tho Lutheran dixtilues, durst not execute his commission, although under the sanctlon of a safe conduct from the councll of regency. Even the legate Campeglo could not venture to make bis puhlic entry Into Nuremberg with the Insignla of bls digntly. $\qquad$ for fear of belng Insulted by the populace. . . . Instead, therefore, of annulling the acts of the precedlag dlet, the new assemhly pursued the same line of conduct.
The recess wras, if posslble, stlll more galiling to the court of Jome, and more hoatlle to lts prerogatives than that of the former diet. . . . The Cntholics, thus falling in their efforts io obtath the support of the dlet, on the Bth of July, $1.5 \%$, entered Into an arsociation at Ratlibon, under twe auspices of Campegio, In whilch the archduke Ferdlaand. the duke of Bavarla, and moat of the German bishops concurred, for enforelag the edlct of Worms. At the same tlme, to concillate the Germans, the legate puhlished 29 articlem for the amendment of some shuses; hut these being contined to points of minor importance, and regarding only the inferior clergy, produced no satisfaction, and were attended with no effect. Notwithstanding this formidahie union of the Catholic princes, the proceeding of the diet of Nusemberg were but the prelude to more decisive innovations, which foliowed each other with wonderfui rapldity. Frederic the Wise, eiector of Saxony, dying in 1525, was succeeded by his brother, John the Constant, who puhilicy esponsed and professed the Lutheran doctrines. The system recently digested by Luther, with many aiditional aiterations, was introduced hy his authority, and deciared the catabilshed religion; and by his oricr the ceiehrated Meianchthon drew isp an spoiogy in defence of the reformed tenets for the princes who adopted them. Luther himself, who had in the preceding year thrown off tho monastic habit, soon after the accession of the new sovereign ventured to give the iast proof of his emancipation from the fetters of the chureh of Rome, by espousing, on the 13 th of Juiy, 1525, Catherine Bora, a moble: Iady, who had escaped from the nunnery nt Nimptschen, and taken up her residence at Wit. temberg. Tho example of the eiector of Saxony was followed by Philip, iandgrave of llesse Cassei, a prince of great influence and distinguished civil and military talents; by the dukes of Meckienburgh, Ponerania, and Zeil; and by the imperial eities of Nuremberg, Strashurgin, Frankfort, Norihausen, Magdeburgh, Brunswick. Bremen, and others of less importance.

Albert, margrave of Brandenburgh, granimaster of the Teutonic order, $\qquad$ in 1525, renounced his vow of ceilbacy, made a puhic profession of the Lutheran tenets, and, with the consent of Sigismond, king of Poiand, secularised Enstern Prussia, "-W. The princers were to procure beforehand from their councillors and scholars a statement of the points in dispute. The grievances of tho nation were to be set forth, and remedies were to le sought for them. Tho pation was to deliberate and act on tho great matter of religious reform. The prospect was that the evangelicai party would be in the ma. jority. The papai court saw the danger that was involved in an assembiy gathered for such a purpose, and determined to prevent the meeting. At this moment war was breaking out between Charies aud Francis. Charies had no inciination to offend the Pope. He forbade the asemhly st Spires, and, by letters addreased to the princes Individuaily, endeavored to drive them into the execution of the edict of Worms. In conse. quence of these threatening movements, the Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Hesse entered into the defensive league of Torgau, in which they were joined by geveral Protestant communities. The battle of Pavia and the cap. ture of Francis I. [see Fuance: A. D. 1523-152:1] were events that appeared to be fraught with peril to the Protestant cause. In the Pcace of Madrid (January 14, 1526) both sovereigns avowed the determination to suppress heresy. But the dangerous preponderance obtained by the Emperor created an aiarm throughout Finrope; and the release of Francis was foliowed by the orga:ization of a confederacy against Charles, of which Clement whs the leuilng promoter [se ITAIf: A. D. 1593-152\%]. This changei the imperini policy in reference to the Lutherans. The Diet of Spires in 1526 unnnimousiy resoived tint, untlii the meeting of a generai couucii, every state shouid act in regarl to the edict of Worms as it might answer to Gul and his imperial majestr. Once more Germany refused to stifle the IRefornintion, and aiopted the principle that each of the component parts of the Empire should he left free to act according to its own wili. It was a measure of the higinest importance to the canse of I'rotestantism. It is a great landmark in the history of the German IReformation. The war of the Emperor nnd the Pope invoived the uecessity of toicrating the Lutherans. In 1527, an in. perial army, somposed largely of Lutheran infantry, captured and sacked the city of liome. For several months the Pope was heid a prisoner. For a number of years the position of Charles with respect to France and the Pope, and the fear of Turkish invasion, had operated to emboiden and greatly strengthen the cuuse of Luther. But now that the Emperor had gnind a complete vietory in Italy, the Catholic party revived its policy of repression."-G. P. Fisher, The Keformation, ch. 4.- "While Charies and Clement were arranging matters in 1029, a new Diet was heid at Spires, and the reactionists exerted themseives to obtain a reversai of that ordinnnce of the Diet of 1526 which had given to the reformed doctrines a legni position in Germany, Ifad it been possihle, the Papist icaders would lave forced back the Diet on the ohi Eiliet of Worms, but in this they were baftled. Then they took up another line of defence and nggression. Where the Worms Edict had beell enforced, it was, they urged, to be maintaineif; but ali further propagation of the reformed dortrines, ail rcigious innovation whatever, was to be forbidden, pending tho assembiage of a Genersi Council.

This doom of arrest and paralysis - this imperious mandate, "Ilitherto shall ye come, but no further,' - could not be brookel by the followers of Luther. They possessed the adrantage of being almirabiy led. Philip of liense supplied some ciements of sound counsel that were wanting in Luther himself. . . . luther regarded with favour ... the doctrine of passive obedience. It was too much his notion that devout Germans, if their Emperor commanded them to renounce the truth, should simply die at the stake without a murmur.

To deny freewili,' he went on to say, 'and to affirm that faith without works avails for man's salvatlon, is to assert what is absurdly erroneous; for, as we very well know from past experience, were such doctrines to prevail, all trie moraility would perish from the earth. But that the Protestants may have sufficient time to consider their future course of action, we grant them from tilia to the 15th of Aprii of next year for consideration.' On the foliowing day, Joachim, Elector of Brandenhurg, speaking in the emperor'a name, addressed the evangelic princes and deputies of the Protestant citiea as follows: 'Iis majesty la extremely amazed at your persiating in the assertion that your doctrines are based on Holy Scripture. Were your assertion true, then would It follow that his Majesty's ancestors, including so many kings and emperors, as well as the ancestors of the Eiector of Saxony, were heretics $1^{\circ}$

The Protestant princes forthwith took their leave of the emperor. On the 13th of October, the 'Recers,' or decree of the Diet, was read to the Cathonc States, which on the same day entered into a Catholic League. On the 17 th of the same month, sixteen of the more important German cities refused to aid the emperor in repelling the Turks, on the ground that peace had not get been ai-sred to Germany. The Zwing. lian nnd I theran cities were daliy becoming more sympathetic and cordial in their relations to each otiter. Charies V. informed the Holy See, October 23 , of hia intention of drawing the sword in defence of the faith. The 'Recess 'was read to the Protectant princes November 11, and rejected by them on the day following, and the depnties of Ilesse and Saxony took their departure immediately after. . . . The decree was rather more severe than the Protestants had anticipated, inasmuch as the emperor declared that he felt it to be his couscientous duty to defend the ancient faith, and that 'the Catholic princes had promised to alid him to the full extent of their power.' . . . Thic appointment of tse emperor's hrother, Ferdinand, as King of the Romans (1531), gave deep offence to the Protestant princes, who now expressed their determination of withholding all assistance from the emperor until the 'ilecess' of Augshurg shouidi have been revoked. they entered into un ailiance offensive and defensive, known as the League of Smalkaid, on March 29,1531 , to which they severaily bound themselves to remain faithfui for a period of six years."-J. Alzog, Manual of Univeral Church Hiat., sect. 812 (0. 8).

A. D. I534-3540.-Beginnings of the Coun-ter-Reformation.-"A well-known sentence in Macaulay's Esasy on Ranke's 'History of the Popes 'asserts, correctly enough. that in a particular epoch of history 'the Church of Rome, having lost a large part of Europe, not only ceased to lose, but actually regained nearly half of what she had iost.' Any falrly correct use of the familiar phrase 'the Counter-Reformation' must imply that this remarkahle resuit was due to a movement pursuing two ohjects, originaily distinct, though afterwsrds largely hlenied, vlz., the regeneration of the Church of Rome, and the recovery of the iosscs inflicted upon lier hy the early successes of Protestantism.
The earliest continuous endeavour to regenerate the Church of Rome without impairing her coheslon dates from the Papacy of Paul III. [153t 1549], whithin which also falls the outhreak of the first religious war of the century [see CskMaNT: A. D. 1F40-1552]. Thus the two impulses which it was the special task of the Counter. Reformation to fuse were hrougit into Immediate contact. The onset of the combat is marked hy the formal estahlishment of the Jesuit Order [1540] as a militant agency devoter) alike to both the purposes of the Counter-lkefor mation, and hy the meeting of the Council of Trent [1545] under conditions exciuding from its programme the task of conciliation." A. W. Ward, The Counter Reformation, pp. vii-riii."I Intend to use this term Counter.Reformation to denote the reform of the Catholic Cturch. which was stimulated by the German Reformstion, and which, when the Council of Trent had fixed the dogmas and disclpiline of Latin Christianity, enahied the Papacy to assume a militant policy in Europe, whereby it regalned a large portion of the provinces that had prevlously lupsed to Lutheran and Calvinistic dissent.
The centre of the world-wide movement which is termed the Counter-Reformatlon was naturally IRome. Events had hrought the Holy sec once more into a position of prominence. it was more powerful as an Italian State now, through the sup;ort of Epain and the extinction of nationai independence, than at any previnus period of history. In Catholic Christendom its prestige was immensely augmented hy the Council of Trent. At the same epoch, the forelgners who dominated Italy, threw themselves with the enthusiasm of fanaticism into this Revivai. Spain furnished lome with tie militia of the Jesuits and with the engines of the Inquisiton. The Papacy was thus able to secure successes in Italy which were eisewhere only partially achleved. $\qquad$ In order to understand the tran sition of Itaiy from the Renaiseance to the (tans-ter-Reformation manner, it will be well to concentrate sttention on the history of the Papacy

A. D. 1537-1563.-Popular wealzness of the Reformation movement In Itaiy,-Momentary inclination towards the Reform at Rome.Beginning of the Catholic Reaction. - The Conncil of Trent and its consolidsting Fork. -"The conflict with the hierarchy did not take the ame form in Itaiy as elsewhere.

There is no douht that the masses mav no cause for aliscontent under it. We have proof that the hierarchy was popular - that among the peopie, down to the lowest grades, the undiminished spiendour of the Papacy was looked upon ss a pledge of the power of Italy. But this did not prevent reform movement from taking piace. The Humanistic school had its home here; its opposition tendencies had not spared the Church any more than Schoiastletem; it had everywhere been the precursor and aily of the intellectuai revoit, and not the least in Italy. There were from the first eminent Individuais at Venice, Modena, Ferrara, Fiorence, even in the States of the Churrh themseives, who were more or less followers of Luther. The cardinals Contarini and Morone, Bembo and Sadolet, distiuguished preachers itke Peter Martyr, Johann Fahlez, and Bernurdino Occhino, and from smong the princeiy tamilies an inteliectual lady, Rensta of Ferrara, were inclined to the new doctrines. But they were leaders without foliowers; the number of their adherents among the masses wis surprisingiy amali. The Roman Curia, unter the Pontifcate of Paul III.,1534-49, vacillated in its policy for a time; between $1537-41$, the prevaliing ar iments were friendiy and concillatory towar a Reform.

They were, in fact, gravely enue taining the question at Rome, whether it would not be better to come to terms with ileform, to adopt the practicahie part of its programme, and so put an end to the schism Which was spreading to fast In the Church. An honest desire then stili prevailed to effect a reconciliation. Contarini was in favour of it Fith his whoie soul. But it proceeded no further than the attempt; for once the differences scemed likeiy to be adjusted, so far ac this was possible; hut in 1542 , the revuision took place, Which was ncver ngain reversed. Oniy one result remained. The Pope couid no ionger refuse to summon a council. The Emperor had been urging it ycar nfter year; the Pope had sceded to it further than any of his predecessors had done; and, considering the retreat which now took piace, this conceation was tise least that couli be demanded. At length, therefore, three years after it was convened, in Mny, 1542, the council assemhled at Trent In December, 1.45. It was the Emperor's great desire that a council shnuld be heid in Germany, that thus the confidence onf the Germans in th, supreme tribunai in the great controversy might be gained; but the seiection of Trent, which nominaliy belonged to Germsny, was the utmost conceetion tiast could be ohtained. The intentions of the Emperor and the Pope with regard to the council were entirely opposed to each other. The Pope was determined to stife all oppodition in the hud, while the Emperor was very desirou of having a counterpolse to the Pope's supremacy In council, provided always that it concurred in the impertal programme.

The asemhly conslated of Spanish and Italian monks in over. Fhelming majority, and this was decislve as to It character. When consulted as to the course of husiness, the Emperor had expressed o wish that those questions on which agreement between the parties was pousihie should first be discussed. There were a number of questons on which they were agreed, as, for example, Greek Christianity. Even now there are a number of pointe on which Protestants and Cathoilics are agreed, and differ from the Eastern Church. If these questions were considered firat, the attendance of the Prot. entants would be rendered very much easier; It would open the door as widely as poselhie, they would probahiy come in considermbie numbers, and might ln time take a part which at least might not be distasteful to the Emperor, and might influence his Ideas on Church reform. The thought that they were heretica was half conceajed. But Rome was determined to pursue the opposite course, and at once to agitate those questions on which there was the most essential disagreement, and to deciare ali who would not suhmit to be incorrigibie heretics. . . . The firt suhjects of discussion were, the suthority of the Scriptures in the text of the Vuigate, ecciesias. ticai tradition, the right of Interpretation, the doctrine of justiflcation. These were the questions on which the oid and new doctrines were irreconcliahiy at variance; nil other differences were insignificant in comparison. And these queations were decided in the old Roman Cath. olic sense; not precisciy as they had been offlially treated in 1517 - for the stremm of time had produced some iittie effect - hut in the main the old statutes were adihered to, and everything rejected which departed from them. This conduct was decisive.

Ncvertheleas some reforms were carried out. Betwecn the time of meeting and adjournment, December, 1545 , to the spring of $154 \%$, the foliowing were the minin points decided on:-1. The hishops were to provide better teachers and better schools. 2. The hishops shouid themseives expound the word of God. 8. Pennities were to be enforced for the neglect of their duties, and various ruies were laid down as to the necessary quailications for the office of a hishop. Dispensations, ilcenses, and privileges were abolished. The Church was therefore to be suhjected to a reform which abolished sundry ahuscs, without conceding any change in her teaching. The rourse the council was taking excited the Emperor's extreme dispieasure. He organized a sort of opposition to Home; ila commissaries kept up a good understanding with the Protestants, and it was evident that he meant to make use of them for an attack on the Pope. This made Rome eager to withdraw the assembly from the influence of German hishops and imperini agents as soon as possible. A fever which had hroken out at Trent, but had soon disappeared, was made a prctext for transferring the councii to Boiogna, in the spring of $154 \%$. The Imperial comminioners protested that the decrees of such a hole.zen-comer council would be nuil and void. The contest remained undecided for years. Paui III. dled in the midst of it, In November, 1549, and was succeeded hy Curdinal del

Monte, one of the papal legates at the councll, as Pope Julius III. The Emperor at Jength came to an understanding with him, and in May, 155i, the council was agaln opened at Trent. The assemhly remained Catholic; the Protestant elements, which were represented at ifrst, all disappeared after the turn of affairs in 1552 [sce Gervant: A. D. 1546-1552; anil 1559-1501]. After that there was no further thought of an understaniing with the heretics. The reauits for reform were very smali indeed. The pro. ceedinga were dragging wearily on when a fresh aljumment was amnunced in 1552. Pope Jillius III. died in March, 1355 . His successor, the nohle Cardinai Cervin, elected as Marcellus 11., died after oniy twenty two days, and was succeeded hy CardinaI Carafta as Paul IV., 1555-9. $\qquad$ He was the Pope of the restoration. The warm Neapolitan hoxd flowed in his veins, and he was a tiery, energetic character. Ile was not in favour of any cuncessions or abatement, hut for a complete breach with the new ductrines, and a thorongh exclusiveness for the ancient Church. Ile was one of the ablest men of the time. As early as in 1542 , he had advised tiat no further concessions shouid be made, but that the inquisition, of which Indeed he was the creator, siol 1 be restored. It was he who decinediy Initlated the great Catholic reaction. He estahlished the Spanish Inquisition in Italy, inatituted the frat Index, and gave the Jesults his powerful support in the interests of the restora. tion. This tirn of affairs was the answer to the German reiigions Peace. Since the Protentants no longer concerned themselves about Rome, Rome was about to set her house in order witiout them, and as a matter of course the council stood stili." But in answer to demands from several Catiolic princes, "the council was conrened afresin by the next Pope, Pius IV. (155065), in Novemlier, 1500 , and so the Councii of Trent was opened for the third time in Jamary, 1382. Then began the important period of the council, during which the legislation to which it has given a name was cnacted. . . . The Curia reigned supreme, and, in spite of the remonstrances of the Emperor and of Franc:
. 1 ad
that the conncli should be corsidered a cuatio tion of the previous ones, winch meant-'Ali the decrees ained against the Protestants are in fuil force: we have uo further idea of coming to terms with them.' The next proceeding was to interdict looks and arrange an Index [see heiow: A. D. 1559-1505]. . . . The restoration of the Indisputable authority of the Pope was the ruling principie of ali the decrees. The great achlevement of the councll for the unlty of the Catholic Church was this: it formed into a conde of lawis, on one consistent priaciple, that witich In ancient times had been variahle and uncertain, and which had been ainost lost sigit of in the last great revoiution. Controverted questions were replaced by dogmas, doubtfui trailtions by definite duetrines; a unlformity was estahiisheni in matters of faith and discipine whith had never existed before, and an impregnabie huiwark was thus erected against the sectarian spirit and the tendency to innovation. Still when this unity was established upon a solid basis, the universal Church of former times was torn asunder." The Cuuncli of Trent was closed December $4,1560,18$ years after its opening. -1 . ## PAPACY, 1700-1700.

Deoline.
PAPACY, 1800-1814
vent the execution of the partition treaty conciuded between France, England, and Hoiland, sccording to which the Archduke Charles Wan to have Spain, the Indles, and the Netherlands, while France took the Milanese, or the Province of Lorraine. The Archbishop of ToIedo seconded the exhortation of the Pope, and so worked on the superstitious terrors of the dying monarch that he signed a will is favour of the Duke of Anjou, which was the cause of lamentation, and mourning, and woe, for twelve years, throughout Europe, from the Vistula to the Atlantle Ocean [see Spais: A. D. 1701-1702; and Enoliant: A. D. 1701-1702]. . . . The Duke of Marlborough's plendld vietories of Blenheim and Ramillies .. . placed the Emperor Joseph ( $1 \% 05-11$ ), the brother of the Archduke Charles, in possesaion of Germany and the Spanish Netherlands [see Germany: A. D. 1704 ; and NetirERLANDS: A. D. 1706-170t]; and the victory of Prince Eugene before Turin made him supreme In the north of Italy and the kingdom of Naples [see Italy: A. D. 1701-I713]. The Pope, Clement XI., was now reduced to a most humillating position. Political events had occurred whieh served to show very plainly that the Pope, without a protector, could not, as in former days, hid detiance to the monarchs of Europe. IIis undutiful son, the Emperor, compelled hin to resign part of his territories as a security for his peaceful demeanour, and to acknowledge the Archduke Charles, the Austrian chaimant to the Spanish throne. The peace of U'trecht, concluded in 1713 [see Utuecut: A. D. 1\%12-1714], which produced the dismemberment of the monarchy, but left Philip iu the peaceful occupation of the throne of Spain, did indeed release him from that obligation; hut it did not restore him to the 'high anl piny state which he occupied before be was obliged to suhmit to the Imperial arms. It inticied a legradation upon him, for it transferrel to other sovereigns, without his consent, his ficfs of Siclly and Sarillnia. Now, also, it became manifest that the Poje could uo longer assert an indirect soverviguty over the Italian States; for, uot withstanding his opposltion, it conferred a large extent of teritory on the Duke of tavay, which has, in our day, been expanded Intu a kingrion under the sceptre of Vietor Emmunuel und his succeesor. We have a further evifeute of the deccliue of the Paprey in the change iu the relative position of the States of Europe as I'apal and auti-I'apal during the elghteenth ceutury, after the death of Lonis XIV. The I'apal powers of Spaiu in the six. teenth century, and of Fance, Spain, and Austria, in the lititer half of the seventeenth eentury, determinerl the poliey of Europe. $\qquad$ On the other hani, England, Prussia, and Russia became, in the eighteenth century, the gruat lomiIng pow crs in the world.

The Hope, then, no louger stood at the head of thuse powers which swayed the destinies of Europe.
The Papacy, from the death of Louls XIV. tiil the time of the French levolution, led a very quiet and ubscure llfe. It had no part in any if the great eventa which during the elghteenth century were sgitatlog Europe, and gained no spirituai or political victories."- A. R. A. D. 1808-18i4. - Connict of Pius Vli. with Napoleon,-French seizure of Rome and the Papal States.-Captivity of the Pope at Savona and Fontainebleau.-The Concordst of 1813 anc its retraction. - Napolemu "had long bern quarrelling with Pius VII., to make a tuol of whom be hai imposed the eoncordat on France. The l'ope resisted, as the Enlurer might have expected, and, not obtaining the price of his compliance, hindered the latteri: pluns in every way that he could. ile resisted us heal of the Church and as temporal suvereign of lame, refusing to close his dominions cither to the English or to Neapolitan refugeres of the Bourbon party. Napoleon would not ailow the Poje to act as a monarch independelit of the Empire, but insisted that he was amenabie to the Emperor, as temporal prince, just as his predecemoors were amenable to Charlemagne. They eorld not egree, and Nispoleon, losing patience. took military possesslon of llome and the lomen State."- II. Martin, Popular Miot. of Prand. since 1789, c. 2, eh. I8. - In February, 1808, " the French troops, who had already taken possesaion of the whole of Tusesny, in Firtur of the magig. mation forced upon the Gueen of Etruria, luvaded the Roman territones, and made themselven maters of the nncient capital of the world. They immediately occupled the castle of St. Angelo, and the gates of the clty, and entlreiy disposesensed the papal troops. Two mouths afterwarde, an Imperial decree of Napoleon aev. ered the provinces of Ancona, L'rhlno, Macerata, and Camerino, which had formed part of the ecclealastical entates, under the gift of Charlemagne, for nearly a thousand yearm, and annexed them to the LIngdom of Italy. The reason asslgned for thls spoliation was, That the sctual soverelgn of Rome has constantly declined to declare war agalnat the English, and to coalesce with the Kings of Italy and Napies for the defence of the Italian penlnsula. The Interests of these two kIngdoms, as well as of the armies of Naples and Italy, require that their comnualcations shnuld not be finterrupted hy a hostlle power.' "-BIr A. Anil to comnfhele the spolisthon of the pope, Napoleon issued on the lith of Fehruary, 1810, a sumatus-cousultum which bestowed upon the eldeat son of the ruperor the title of Klng of llome, and even ordained that the emperor should be consermical a aecond time at llome, in the firat ten years of his rulgn. It was while oppressed, captive and deprivid of ail councli, that the pope refusel the bells to all the bishops named by the emperor, and then It was that all the discussions relative to the proper measures to put an end to the vidilty of the churches were commenced The year 1810, far from bringing any allevlation to the situation of the pope and giving him, eccording to the wishes and prayers of the ecclealastle commisslon, a little more liberty, ag. gravated, on the co 'trary, this situatlon, and rendered bls captlvit. ...der. In effect, on Feb. ruary 1\%, 1810, nppeiured the senatus-consultum pronouncing the unlon of the Roman States with the French Empire; the Independence of the linperial throne of all authority on earth, and annulling the temporal exlstence of the popes. This senatits-consultum assured a penslon to the pope, hnt lt ordalned also that the pope shonld take rath to elo nothing in opposition to the four artlcles of 1682.

The pope must have consolet himself, . . . even to rejoicing, that they made the insulting penslon they otfered him depend upon the taking of such on oath, and it Is that which furnlsheal him with a reply an nobly apustulic: that lie had no need of thls pension, and that he would live on the charity of the falthful. $\qquad$ The rlgurnus treatment to whleh the Holy Father was subjected at Savona was continued during the winter of 1811-1812, and In the following spring. At this tine, it seems there was sonse fear, on the appenrance of an Engllsh squadron, that it might carry off the prope; and the emperor gave the orler to transfer linn to Fontalnehlean. This unhappy old man left Savona, June 10, and was forced to travel day and nlght. He fell quite lll at the hospice of Mont C'enls; but they forced hin none the less to continue bla journey. They had connpelled hlm to wear such ciothes. . ss "ot to betray who he was on the way they hal to foslow. They took great care sixo to conceal his journey from the publle, and the secret was su profountly kept, that om arriving nt Fontainebiena, June 19, the comelorge, who hime not leen advisul of his arrival, and who liat marle no preparntlon, was obllged to rureive him ln his own lolghigs. The Holy Father was $n$ louts thme lefore recovering from the fatigue of this painful jourmey, and from the needlessly rigorous treatment to whlela they lad subjected lim. The rarlinals not dlsgracid hy Napoleon, who were in I'aris, as well as the Arribulshop of Tours, the Bishop of Nantes, the Blshop of Evreux, and the lBishop of Treves, were ondered to go and se the pope.

He had beforehand, however, taken measures whleh were to faclitate his personal negotlaton. The Holy Father liul ireen surrounded for several months by cardlnals and prelates, who, clther from convletion or from submlssion to the emperor, depleted the Clurch as having arrived at a state of anarchy which put its existence In peril. They repeated luces anntly to the pope, that if ine lif not get reconclled with the emperor and secure the aid of his power to arrest the evil, schism would be lnevit able. Finally, the Soverelgu pontlff overwhelmet by age, by infirmities, by the muxiety and carcs with which his mind wus worried, found himself well prepsred for the scene Napoleon had pianned to play, and whleb was to casure h/m what lie belleved to be a sueepss. On Janinary 10, 1813, the cmperor, accompanled by the Empress Maric Lonlse, entered the apnrtmeut of the IIoly Fatiter unexpectetily, ruslied to blm and enubraced hlm witl effuslon. And certainly our predecemsors, in aftirning and in vindienting the august Catholic faith, iruth, and justice, Fefe never anlmated in their care for the alvation of souls hy a more earnest desire than that of ex. tinguishing and condenniug by their letters sad their constitutons all the ieresies and erron which, as eacmies of our divine faith, of th doctrines of the Catholic Chureh, of the purity of norals, and of the eternal saivation of man, lave frequently excited serious storms, and pre clpitatel civil and Christian mociety into the mont deplorable misfortunes. For this rensin our prialecessors have opposel themselves with vig. orous energy to the criminal enterprise of thase wickerl men, who, spreading thelr disturling opinions like the waves of a raging sen, and promising llierty when they are slaves tu curruption, endeavor by their pernicions writinge to overturn the foundations of the Christian ("atholle religion and of elvil surlety; to diostruy all virtuc and justice; to depmese ali minuls and hobrts; to thrn nway simple minds, und expeciully those of inexperienced youth, from the Healthy discipiine of morala; to corrupt it miser. ahiy, to draw it into the meshes of vrror, and fanaly to draw it from the bosom of the c'atholic Church. But as you are aware, venemble breth. ren, we had scarcely been raised to the chair of St, Peter alowe our morits, by the mysterious degigns of Divine I'rovidence, than meing with the most profound grief of our soul the horrible storm exeited by evil doctriaps, and the very grove aml deplorible injurg caused spocinlly by so nangy errors to Christian perople, in acroniance with the duty of our apostolic ministry, anifol. lowing in the glorions footsteps of our predecessurs, we raimed arar volere, and by the pullicetion of several encyclicals, consistorial leien, allocutions, and other npostolic letters, we have condemand the priucipal errors of onr sad sge, re-animated your utnost episcopal visilance. warmed and exhorted ujon various ercasions a" our dear chilitren In the Catholic Churili to sepel and absolutely avohi the contagion of en lowrilike a plagite. Diore experially for our tint enerelinal of the Gil Novemiter, $1 \times 48$, allereseri tis you, aud in our two allocutions of the 9 th Itoromber, 1N54, and the 9til June, 186?, to the consioturies. we conctemined the monstroos opinions which particularly predominated In the jriselat diay, to the great prejudice of souls and to the' detriment of civil eoclety - doctrines which not only attack the Catholic Church, her salutary instraction. and her vencrable rights, but also the natural. unalterable law inscribed by $G(m)$ upon thr heart of man - that of muud reason. But although wo have not hltherto omittevl to prowerilnt and repror the princlpal erfors of this kinal, y+t the cause of the Catholic Cliurch, the safety of the gouls which have ixen contided to us, and the well-being of iuman socicty ltself, absolutels demand that we should again exprcise our pastaral solicitude to destroy new opinlous which spring out of these same errofy as from sa many sources. These false and perverne opinions ate the more detestable as they eapectally tead to ahsckle and turn astde the esiutary force that the Catholic Church, by the examiple of her IVvine author and bis order, ought reely to exerclue untli the end of time, not only with regard to each individual man, but with regarl to nations, jroples, and their rulers, and to deatroy that agreement and concond between the priesthood and the government wbleb have al ways exlated for the happlaess and security of rellglous and civil soclety. For as you are well aware, veuer. able brethren, there are a great number of men in the present day who, applylig to civil suclety the implois aud nbeurd pribelple of asturallam, as it is called, dare to teach tbat the perfect right of public soclety and civil progr absolutely require a condition of human soch y constituted anil governed without regari to all conslderatious of rellgion, as If it had no existence, or, at least, without making any distinction betweren true rellgion and heresy. And, contrary the the teaching of the IIoly Neriptures, of the churelh, and of the fathers, they do not hesitnte to ntilim that the best condition of soclety is tbat in whleh the power of the lalty is not compelled to intlict the penalties of law upon vlolators of the Cutholic rellglon unless required by consideratlons of public safety. Actuated by nn lilea of soclal government so nbwolutely fulse, they do not hesitate furtber to propagate tbe erroneons opluion, very hurtful to the safety of the Cnthohic Clurch unif of souls, and termed "delirium" by our predecressor, Gregory XVI. of excell-nt momory. mamely: "Llberty of consclence and of worslijp is the right of every man - a right which ouglit to be proxlalmer amd established hy lave in every Well-constituterl State, and that citizens are en. titkerl to make known and deelnre, with a ilberty which nelther the ecclesiantical nor the elvil anthrrity can lluit, their convletions of whateser hiuh, either by word of mouth, or through the press, or by other means." But in making these rasio ussertious tbey do not retlect, they do mot conshler, that they preach the liberty of perili. tind (Nt. Angustine, Epistle 105, Al. 106), and that "If It is always free to buman convietion to discuss, men will never be wanting who dare to struggle agaluat the trutb and to rely upou the lopumaty of human wistoin, when we kluw hy the example of our Lord Jesus Clirist bow fath and Christian sagacity ought to avolil tbla culpa. Hik sunity." (St. Leon, Eplatie 16t, A1. 133, see. ?. Ihul. Eil.) since also rellglon has been bunialien] from civil government, since the dixtrine and authority of divine revelation have been repudiatimi, the lilea intimately connected therewith of justice and human right is ohscured by darkness and lost sight of, and in place of true justice and lestitimate right brute force is suhstitute ${ }^{2}$, which lias, permitted some, entirely oblivions of the plainest princlples of sound reason, to dase io jructain "that the will of the people, mand. fisted by what is called public opinion or hy other neans, constitutes a supreme law superior tu all divine and buman riglit, and tbat accomplished fects in politieal nftairs, by the mere fact of thelr having been accomplishisl, have the force of inw." But who doca not perfectly see and understand tbat human soclety. relemsed from the ties of rellgion nad true justice, can have no further object than to amasa riches, and can follow no other Isw in lita actions than the indumitable wickedneen ci h heart given up to pleasure and interest f For this reason, also, theae same men persecute with 80 relentleas a hatred the rellgious orders, who have deserved so well of religion, civil moclety, and letters. They loudly deelare that the orders have no right to exist, and in so uolag make common cause with the falselinods of the lieretics. For, as *aught by our prevlecessor of lilnstrious neemory, lius VI., " the abolltion of rellglous houses lujures the atate of publle professlon, and is contrary to the counsels of the Gospel, Injures a mode of llfe recomnended by the eburch and In conformity with the Apostolic doctrine, does wrong to the celebrated foumiens whom we vencrate upon the altor, and who eonstluted tbese sucletles under the inspiration of God." (Epistle to Cardinal de la Iluchefoucandd, Marcb 10, 1791.) In tbelr implety these saure jermuls pre: tend that cltizens and the church shomid be deprived of the opportunlty of openly "e recelving nims from (Christian clatity." ond that the law forblditng "servile labor on account of divine worshlp" upon certaln tixed days should be abrogated, upon the falluclous pretext that this opportunity and this law are eoutrary to the princlples of pollilial econnuly. Jut content With eradleating relighon from puhlie socicty. they desire further to hanlah it from fanuilies and private life. Teacbing and professing these nust fatal errors of soxinilism aud Communisiu, they declare that "donnestle soclety; or the cutire fanily, derives Its riglit of existence solely from civll law. whence it ls to be eancluled thint from civil law desuead uit the rights of paraits wior thelr elililrea, aul, almese all, the right of lustrueting aud crlucathig them." J3y such inuplous opinlons and machlantions dor these false spirits endeavor to ellminate the silntary tachs. Ing ond Intliences of the Cintheile Clurelı from the lastruction andl eduention of yinith, ininl to Infect and miserably deprave by their jeruicious errors and their vices the pliant mimis of youth. All those who endeavor to tronlle sur rivl and pinbilic things, to deatroy the gond ordir of suritety, and to anuililiate all divine and bumun righta, lave niwnys concentratell their criminul mheanes, attentlon, and efforts upon the manuer in which they might alouve all drprave and delude unthiuking youth, as we have already slown. It is upon the corruption of youth that they place alt their hopes. Thus they uever cease to nttack the clergy, from whom laive desceuded to us in so autheitle minnner the most ecriain ricoris of history, and by whom sueh desirahle Inoterit has beed bestowed in almndance ujwu (liristiatu mad elvil saclety und unon hetters. They uswall them Iu every alape, going so far ns to sily of the clergy in gencrai - "that being the , hemies of the useful scleluces, of progress, and? arillas. tlon, they ouglit to be deprived of $t$ harge of lustructing and educatiug youth." (o aers, tak ing up wicked errors mauy times coulemmed, presunte with notorious Inspudence to subnit the authority of the chureh and of this A postolic siee, couferred upon It by Goil himself, to the fudgntent of elvil authority, and to deuy all the rights of this sance cliurch nind this see with regard to exterior order. They do not blush to ntirm that the laws of the chureh do not bind the consclence if they are not promulgated by the civil fiwer; that the acts nod decrecs of the Joman Pontifis concerning religlon and tbe cburch require the sanctlon and approbation, or, at leant, the assent, of the civil power; amil that the Apm. tolic constitutions condenning secret sockities, whether these exact, or do not exact, an oath of secrecy, and branding with anathema their secretaries ani promoters, have no force in those regions of the vorid where these asenciations are tolerated hy the civil government. It is likewis, uflimari that the excomminications fannched by the Costucll of Trent and the lloman $\mathrm{P}^{\prime}$ entiff: ngninst those who invale the powsensinns of the churih and usurp tis righta, seek, in confoundIng the spiritual and temporal powers, to attaln solely a terrestrial oljjeet; that the church can deevide nothlan which may binil the consleners of the faithful lun tempuraf onier of things: that the law of the chareh iloss not demand that violations of sacred hws shonki be puushed hy temparal pediahtis: and thent it is in accordane with sacreel theollugy nud the principles of pulitic law to chaim for the eivil gowernment the property possessed ly the churches, the relighons orilers. and other phoms establlshments. Aud they have no shame in avowing openly nod publicly the thesis, the principle of brictics from whom emannte sal many errors and perverse mpinhous. Tincy suy: "That the reclesiasileal powir is nut of right divior, distinct and indepembent from the divil power; and that no distlnction, no in. dependerne of this kine can be onnintained withont the church havaling and usirping the easential rights of the elvh jower." Selther can we pass over in slifnce the audactry of those who, insulting coumil hoetrines, assert that "the juigments and decrees of the Holy See, whose nbject Is dechareil to eoncern the general welfare of the churehi, its rights, and its diselpline, do not elaim the acpuaintance und obedience under puin of sin and loss of the Cinthotie profession, if they in not treat of the dogmals of foith aud mauners." Hlow contrury is this doctrine to the Catholle dogma of the fuli power thinely given to the sovercign lontiff hy our Lard Jesus Christ, to guide, to supervise, and govern the unlversal church. no one cun fail to ste and umberstand ctearly and evidentiy. Amid an creat a diversity of dejern ved opintons, we, remenilerring our apmes. toilic duty, und sulititous before all thinge for our most holy reilgion, for sound dixetrine. for the salvation of the sualis conthicd tons, mad for the welfare of human sociey liself, have sonsiderent the momeut opportune to mise anew our apostolie volce. And therefore do we comidmu and proscribe generally and particulariy uli the evii opinions and dixetrines specinly mentioned in this leftrr, nad we wish that they may le held as rebuky, proscribul, and condemneil by wil the rhiliten iof the Catholic Chured. Hut you know further, venerable brothers, that in our thene insulters of every truth ant of whif juster. and vhotent enemies of our religion, have apreai abroad wher impious shetrines by mums in? nestileut hooks, patmphets, and jouroals which, distributet inver the surface of the earth, decilve the people and wickedly lie. You are not lgnorant that In our day men are found who, animated and pxeited by the spirit of Satan, have arrived at that excess of impiety as mit to fear to deny our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, and to attack his divinity with scandalous pernistence. We cannot nbetain from awarding you wellmerited eulogles, venerable brotherg, for ali the care and zeal with which yon lave raisel your episcopal volue against so great an inplety.

representadion of the lasue, calcuiated to imprest peopie without judgment of their own, when it Is characterized as aiming at the oppresion of the church. Its ohject is the delense of the state, to determine the limits of prlestly rulie, of royal power, and this limit must mecure the exintence of the state. For in the klagdom of this worid the ruke and tive precedence is the state's.

In the paragraphes of the conatitution we have under constderation we formal a molus Firendi,' an armistice, conciuded at a time when the state was in need of heip and thought to ohtain thin help or at lenst some support in the Cathofic Church. This hope was based upon the fuct that at the election for the national amsembly of infs the districts in wheh the Catholic popit fation preponderated electel, If not myalists, yet fricula of order, - Whirh was not the enme In erangelical districts. Under titis impression the compromise between the eccleniantical and wecular arms was conclinied, thongh, as sutwequent events pmord, in miscalculation as to its practical effects. For it was not the support of the electors who had thus voted hut the Bramien. hurg ministry and the myal army that reatored onier. In the end the state was ohliged to help Itecif: the ald that might luare been given by the different churcher did not puil it through. But at that time originated the "mondus vivendi' under which we lived in peace for a number of vears. To be sure, this peace was bought ouly by an uninterrupted yielding of the state.
When we were get in Veralilien I was wome what surprised to learn, that Cathoilc members of par. PARLIAMENT, The English: Early stages of its evolution.-"There is no doubt that in the carliest Teutonle assemblies everr freeman had hls place. But how as to the great assembly of all, the Assembly of the Wise, the U'itenagemót of the whole realm [of early England]? No ancient record gives us any clear or formal account of the constitution of that body. It is commonly spoken of $\ln$ a vague way as a gatheriag of the wise, the noblc, the great men. But aloagside of passages like these, we find other passages which speak of it in a way which implies a far more popular constitutlon.

It was in fact a body, democratic in ancient theory, aristocratic in ordinary praetice, but to which any strong popular lmpulse could at any time restore its anclent demoeritic character. Out of this body, whose constltutlon, by the time of the Forman Conquest, had become not a little anomalous, and not a little fluctuating, our Par. limment directly grew. Of one House of that Parliament we may say more; we may say, not that it grew out of the anclent Assembly, but that it is absolutely the same by persoanl identity. The lhonse of Lords not only springs out of, it netually is, the aneient Witenagemot. I can see no break between the two. assembly in which at tirst every freeman hat a right to appear has, by the fore of circum. stances. step by step, without any one moment of suddeu change, shrunk up iato au Assembly wholly hereditary and official, an Assembly to Which the Crowu may summon any man, but to Whlch, it is uow strangely held, the Crowu cinnnot refuse to summon the representatlves of any man whom it has ouce summoned. As in most other things, the tealeaey to shrink up Into a body of this kind began to show ltself hefore the Norman Conquest, aull was flaally contirmed and established through the results of the Norman Conquest. But the special fucction of the body into which the old mational Assembly lias changed, the function of 'another House,' an ['pur IIonse, a Itouse of Lords as opposed tr a Il onsere of Commons, could not show itself t: a a serond House of a more popular constitutlon had ariseu by its slde. Like everything clse lu our Engllsh polity, both Ilouses in some sort came of themselves. Wiither of them was the cria. tion of any lngeulous theorist. . . . Our Consti. tution has no fouader: but there is one man to whom we may glve all but honours of a foumler. one man to whose wlsdom aml self-devotion we owe that Eaglish hlstory has takeu the course Which it has taken for the last 600 years.

That man, the man who finally gave to English freedom its second and more lasting shape, the hero and inartyr of England in the greatest of her constltutioual struggles, was Simon of Montfort, Earl of Leicester. If we may aot call hla the founder of the Eagllsh Constitution, we mav at least call hini the founder of the IIouse of Comunons.

When we reach the 13th eea. tury, we may look on the old Teutonic constitu. tion as haring utterly passed away. Some faint traces of It lnleed we may find here and there in the course of the 12 th century; but the regular Great Councll, the lineal representatives of the unclent Mycel Gemót or Witenagemít, was shriaking up lnto a body not very unlike our IIouse of Lords.

The Great Charter se. cures the rights of the natlon anif of the national Assembly as against arbitrary leglslation and arbitrary tasation on the part of the Crown. But it makes no chaage in the constitutlon of the Assembly itself. $\qquad$ The Great Charter in short is a Bill of lights; it is not what, ln movera phrise, we uaderstand by a Reform Bill. But, during the reigns of John anil Henry In1, a popular eleucnt was fast making lts war iato the uational Councils in a more practieal form. The right of the ordinary freman to attend in person had long been a shadow; that of the ordinary tenant-in-chlef was becomlng hardly more practical; it now begias to be exchanged for What had by this time become the more practical right of choosing represeutatives to net in his name. Like all other things in England, this right has grown up by degrees aud as the result of what we might almost call a series of happy aecilents. Both ln the reign of Joha and in the former part of the reign of Heary, we tind several instunces of inlghts from each connty being summoned. Here we have the beginning of our county members anil of the title which they still bear, of knlghts of the Shire. 1here ls the beginniag of popular represeutation, as distiuct from the gathering of the people in their own persons; but we need not think that those who tirst snmmoned them had any conscinus theories of popular representation. a ne earliest objeet for which they were called together was pribably a tiscal one; it was a safe and comenient way of getting money. The notion of summouing a small number bf men to act on behall of the whole was doubtess borrowed from the practice in judicial proceedings aud in in ${ }^{\text {anests }}$ nad commissions of various kinuls, iu which it was usual for certain select men to strear on behalf of the whole shire or hundred. We mast not forget that our judicial and our parliamentary iastitutions are closely conneeted.
But now we come to that great chauge, that great measure of Parlinuentary Reform, which has left to all later reformers nothing to (d) but to improve ln detail. We come to that great act of the patriot Earl whleh made our popalar Chamber really a popular Chamber, . . . When, after the ight of Lewes, Earl Simon, then master of the kingdom with the King $\ln$ his safe keep-

PARLIAMENT OF PARIS.-"When the Cariovingina Monarchy had given piace, first to Anarehy and then to Feudialism, tie mnilinms, aud the Ciamps de Mai, and (except in some southern cities) the municipai curise aiso disappeared. lhat in their stead there came into existence the feudiai conrts. Each tenant in capite of tice crown heid within his fief a Pariinment of his own free vassals. . . . There was adiministered the seignenr's 'justice,' wirether hante, moyenne, or basse. There were discnsseci ali questions immediately affecting tile scignenrie or the tenants of it. Tiere especiaily were adopted ail generai reguiations whieh the exlgencics of the iordship were supposed to dietate. and especintiy aii such as related to the risining tailies or other imposts. What was thas done on a small scale in a minor tief, was also dome, thongh on a larger scale, in each of the femdiai provinces, and on a scaie yet mure extensive in the court or Parliament inolien by the king as a seigneur of the royai domain. . . This royai court or Parliament was, however, not a Legis. lature in our modern sense of that word. It was rather a convention, in wiich. by a volmitiry compnet between the king as supreme suzerain and the greater seigneurs ns his feudatories. an ordonnance or an Inpost was estabiished, either throughout the entire kingdom, or in some seigneuries apart from the reat. From any such compact any seigneur migitt dissent on hehaif of bimseif and his immediate vassais or, hy simply: ahsenting himself, migit render the extension if It to his own fief impossihie. . . Subject to tilc many corrections which would be requisite to reduce to perfect accuracy this slight sketch of the origin of the great council or Parilament nf the kings of France, such was, in subatance, the constitition of lt at the time of the accession of Lavis 1 X . [A. D. 1226]. Before the ciose of inls eventfui relgn, that monareh had acquired the character and was in fuil exereise of the powers of $n$ iaw.giver, and was hahitualiy making iaws, not with the advice and consent of his councii or Pariiament, hut in the excreise of the initerent prerogative which even now they begau to aseriive to the French crown. With our Engish prepossessions, it is impossihie to repress the wonder, and even the increduilts, with whicin we at frst iisten to tile statement that the supreme judiciai trihunai of the kingdom eonid be ctherwise than the zeaious and effectuni antagonist of so momentous an encroachment." The expianntion is found in a chnnge which had taken piace in the eharacter of the Puriiament, through which its function and authority beeame distinctiy judicini and quite apart from those of a council or a legisiature. When Phiiip Augustus went to tic lloly Land, he provided for the decision of compiaints against offleers of the cruwa by directing the queen-mother and the aichhishop of Khcims, wio aeted as regents, to hold an annuai assembiy of the greater harons. ." This practiee had become habituai by the tir: of Lonis 1X. For the confrmation and ins, rorement of it, that monarch ordered that, hef, wre :he dny of any such assemhinge, citations shonid be issued, commnoding the attendance, not, as before, of the greater harons exciusiveiy, but of twenty-four members of the royai couneil or Pariament. Of those twenty-four, three only were to be great harons, three were to be bisiops, and the $r$ maining eighteen were to be knights. But as these members of the royai council did not appear to St. Louis to possess ail the qualif. cations requisite for tio right discharge of the jullicial oftice. he directed that thirty-seven other persons shouli he associated to them. Uf luse ussociates, seventeen werc to be cierks in haly oriers, and twenty legistes, thnt is, nien bred io the study of the iate. The function assignel to the legistes was tint of drawing up in jruper form the decrees and other written ncts of the colieetive body. To this body, when thus constituted, was given the distinctive title of the Pariiament of Paris." Br virtue of their sllpe. rior edication nd training, the iegistes mon gathered tine business of the Parilament into their own inanis; the knights and barmis fumad atteniance a bore nnd an nhsurdity. "Fanui and ridicule . . . proved in the Pariament of Piris a purge quite as effectuni as that which ('blonci Pride administered to the English ilomse of Commons. The conseiticr cieres were son ieft to themseives, in due time to fouml. and to enjoy, what hegan to be calied 'La Noblewe de ia Robe.' [See Frasce: A. counselors, as they were now cnlled, had ac quirel llfe appointments, and in the relgn of Charies VI. (1880-1422) the sents in the Parliament of Paris became hereditary. "At the periol when the Parliament of Paris was acquiring its pecuiar character as a court of justice, the meetlngs of the great vassals of the crown, to co-operate with the king in legislation, were falling into disuse. The king had begin to originate laws without their sanction; and the Parilament, not without some show of reason, assumed that the right of remonstrance, formerly enjojed by the great vassals, had now passed to themselves.

If their remonstrance was dlsregarded, their next step was to request that the projected law might be withdrawn. If that request was unheedell, they at iength for. mally declined to reglster it among their records. Such refusals were sometimes but werc not usnally successful. In most instances they proroked from the klng a peremptory order for the immetilate reglstration of his ordinance. To such orilers the lariiument generaily submitted." Sir J. A. D. 1545-1592.-Alienation from the Holy See and erection, with Placentia, into a duchy, for the House of Farnese.-"Paul III, wns the last of those ambltous popes who ren. dered the interessu of the holy see sibbordinate to the nggrandlzement of their familles. The designs of Paul, himseif the representntive of the noblo Romnn house of Firnése, were ultimntely successful; since, although partially defeated during his life, they led to tho estahlishment of his descendnnts on the throne of Parma and Placentla for nearly 200 years. IIe gained the consent of the sacred college to alienate those states from the holy see in 1545 , that he might erect them into a duchy for his natural son Pietro Luigi Farnése; and the Emperor Charles V. had already, some years before, to secure the suppurt of the papacy agalnst France, hestowed the hand of his natural daughter, Margaret, whiow of Alessandro de' Medici, upon Ottavio, son of Pietro Lnlgi, and grandson of Pauii III. Notwithstandlng this measure, Charles V. was not subsequently, however, the more disposed to contirm to the house of Faruese the investlture of their new possessions, which he claimed as part of the Jilanese duchy; and he soon evinced no frlendly disposition towards his own son-ln-law, Ottavio. Pietro Luigi, the first luke of Parma, proved himself, by his extortions, hls crueltles, and his debauelieries, scarcely less detestable than any of the ancient tyrants of Lombardy. He thus provoked a conspiracy and insurreetion of the nohles of Placentia, where he resided; and he was assassinated by chem at that place in 1547 , after a reign of only two fenrs. The city was immediately selzed in the imperiai name by Gonzaga, governor of Milan.

To deter the emperor from nppropriatling Parma also to himself, [Paul III.] could devise no other expeciient than altogether to retract his grant from his family, and to reoccupy that clty for the holy see, whose rights he conceived that the emperor would not venture to invade." But after the death of Paul III., the Farnése party, coinmanding a majority in the conclave, "by raising Julius III. to the tlara [1550], obtnined the restitution of Parma to Ottavio from the gratitude of the new pope. The prosperity of the ducal house of Farnese was not yet securely established. The emperor still retained Placentla, and Jullus III. soon forgot the services of that family. In 1551, the pope leagued with Charles V. to deprive the duke Ottavio of the fief whieh he hnd restored to him. Farnése was thus re. duced. . . to place himself under the protection of the $F$-snch; and this measure, and the lnde. cisive war which foliowed, became hls salvatlon. He stiil preserved his throne when Charles $F$. terminated his reign; and one of the first aets of Philip II., when Italy was menaced by the invasion of the dinke do fuise [1505], was to win hin

The firtile territory in this quarter is further in. cremedi by the extension of cultivation to a censhernble distance from the hase of the noost southern of the ranges, in the direction of tite Grat Iranic desert. .... It was undoubtedily in the region wialch has been thus briefly described that the anciert home of the Partilians lay. Parthia Proper, howerer, was nt no time coex. tensive with the region described. A portion of that rerion formed the district called IIyreania: and it ls not altogether easy to determine what were the limits between tise two. The evidence gres, on the whole to show that while Hyrcania lay twards the west and north, the Parthian country was that towards the sonth and east, the Falley of the Ettrek nad Gurghan constituting the misin portious of the former, winie the tracts east ind south of those valieys, ns far as the sixtr-rinst duree of $E$. longitude, constituted the iuticr. If the limits of Partinia Proper be thas lefinci, it will have nearly corresponded to the momiern Persian province of Khorasan. The Tuminian character of the Parthians, though ant absoiutely proved, appears to be in the high. est legree probahie. Every day the nstonished senate received the inteiligence of new nnmes and new untions that acknowiedged his sway.

But the death of Trajan soon ciondial tise splendid prospect. . . . The resignation of all the eastern conquests of Trajan was the first mensure of his [successor Hadirian's] reign. He [Ifadrian] restored to the Parthians the ciecticat of an independeut sovereign, witidrew the Roman garrisons from the provinces of Armenia Mesopotamia and Assyria; nad, in conplinnee With the precept of Augustus, on 'e more established the Euphrates as the frontier of the em pire."-E Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 1.-In the reign of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus at Rome, the Partiian king Vologe-

A. D. 1681 , - The Proprietary grant to William Penn. -" Wiilians Penn wastiescended from a long line of sallor ancestors. His father, an adniral in the British navy, lad lefd various im. portant navai commands, aud in recognition of inis services had been honored by knighthood. A member of Parliament, and possessed of a consilerible fortune, the path of worlily ad. vancement seemed open and eass for the feet of his son, who hal received a liberai education at Oxford, conthned In the schools of the Continent. Beantiful in person, engaging in manner. accomplished In manly exercises and the use of the sword, fortune and preferment scemed to wait the acceptance of Willimm Penn. But at the very outset of his career the Divine voice feli upon his ears as upon those of St. Paut." He lecame a follower of George Fox, and one of the prople known as Quakers or Friends. "Many irials awaited the youthful convert. Ifis futher cast him off. He underwent a consideruble ln. prisonment in the Tower for 'urging the cause of freed malth laportunitr. ${ }^{\circ}$. . . In sime these afflictions abated. The intlucnec of his famliy saved inm from the heaver penaltles which fell upon mauy of hils co-reilglonists. His father on his death-bed reinstated him as his helr. 'Son Wib. ilum,' salid the dying man, 'If you and your frendis kecp to your plain way of preaching and ilving, you will make an end of the priests.' Some ycars later we find him exerting au intluence at Court which almost amounted to popuiarity. It is evident that, with ail his bohluess of opinion and speech, Penn possessed a tict and address which gave hlm the advautage over nost of his sect in denilngs with woridly people.

In 1880 his Influence at Court and with moneyed men enabled him to purchase a large tract of land in east New Jersey, on which to settle a coiony of Quakers, a prevlons colony having been scint out three years before to west New Jersey, Meanwhlle a larger project tilled hls inind. Hls father hud bequeathed to hima clalm on the Crown for $£ 16,000$. Colonial juroperty was then held in Hght esteem, und, with the help of some powerful friends, l'enn wis enibled so to press his clalm as to secure the charter for that valaable grant which afterward bectame the State of Pennsyivania, and which Included three degrees of lititude by five of iongitule, wet froni the Delaware. 'This day,' writes Penn, Jan. 5 1681, ' my country was contirmed to me by the name of Pennsylvanla, a name the king [Charles 11.] wouid give it $\ln$ honour of my father. I close New Wales, belng as this a pretty hilir country. I proposed (when the secretary, a Welshman, refused to have it called New Wales) Sylvanla, and they added P'on to it, and though I much opposed it, and went to the King to have it struck out und altered, he said 'twas past, and he would take it upon him. . . I feared lest it slouhl be inoked upon ins a vanity in me, and not as a rospect of the King, as lt truly was, to my father, whill he often mentlons with praise.' 'In return fur this grant of $\mathbf{2 6 , 0 0 0 . 0 0 0}$ of acres of the best land $\ln$ the universe, Wllliam Penn, it was agreed, was to dellver nunually nt Windsor Castle two beaverskins, pay lnto the Klng's treasury one fifth of the gold and sllver which the province might yledd, and govern the provluce in conformity wlth the laws of England no as became a llege of Englnad's King. He wns to nppoint juilges aud minglstrates, conld pardon all erimes except inurder nud treason, and whatsoever things he could lawfilly do himself, he could nppoint a deputy to do, he and his heirs forever.' The origlaal grant was fantastleally limlted by a clrele drawn twelve mlles dlatant from Newcastle, northward and westwnrd, to the beginnlug of the 40 th degrec of lntitnde. This was done to aceommodate the Duke of York, who wished to retaln the three lower counties as an appannge to the State of New York. A few months later he was persuaded to renounce thls clalm, and the charter of Penn was extended to include the western and southern shores of the Delawne Bay and River from the 434 degree of latitude to the Atlantic. The charter confirmed, a brief acconnt of the country was published, nad lands offered for sale on the easy terms of 40 shillings a hundred acres, and one shllllng's rent a year $\ln$ perpctulty. Numerous adventurens, miny of them men of wenlth and respectabllity, offered. The artleles of agreement lncluded in provislon as to 'just and friendly conduct toward the uatlves.'

In April, 1681, he sent forwarl 'young Mir. Markliam,' hls rclative, with a small purty of colonlsts to take possession of the grant, and prepare for his own coming during the following year. . . . In Aurnst, lis: Penn himself embarked. "-Susan Coolidge (S. ('. Wowlsey), Short Hist. of Philadelphia, ch. ## A. D. 1681-1682.-Penn's Frame of Government.- Before the departure from England of the first company of colonists, Penn drew up a Frame of Government which he submitted to them, and to which they gave thelr assent and npproval by thelr signatures, he slgnlng the lnstrument likewisc. The next gear this Frame of Governmeut was published by Penn, with a preface, "containlng hls own thoughts upon the origln, nature, object, and moles of Government. . . The Frame, which followed this preface, conslsted of twenty-four artlcles; and the Laws, whlch were annexed to the latter, were forty. By the Frame the government was placed in the Governor nad Freemen of the provnice, out of whom were to be formed two bolles;namely, $n$ Provinclal Counell namely, n Provlnclal Counell nad n General Assembly. These were to be chosen by the Freenen; and though the Governor or hils Depnty was to be perpetual President was to be perpetual President, he was to have but a treble vote. The Provinclal Conncll was to consist of seventy two members. One third part, that ls, twenty-four of them, werc to serve for three sears, one thlrd for two, nud the other third for onc: so that there thild for onc; so that there inght be an nunual snccession of twenty four new members, each thirl part thus contimuing for three yenrs and no longer. It was the offiee of thls Council to prepure and propose bllls, to see that the laws were executed, to takc carc of the pence and safety of the province, to settle the situation of ports, citics, market towns, roads, nal other public places, to inspect the publle treasury, to ereet eqnirts of justice, institute schools, and reward the anthors of usefnl discovery. Not less than two thirds of these were necessary to muke a quorum, nod the consent of not less than two thirds of sueh quormm lu nll matters of nomeut. The Geueml Assembly was to consist the flrst year of all the freemen, nad the next of two hundred. Tliese were to be laereased afterwards neeording to the inerease of the populatlon of the province. They were to have no deliberative power; but, wheu blls were bronght to them from the Governor and Provlncial Connell, to pass or reject thein by a plain l'es or No. They were to preseut sheriffs and justlces of the puace to the Governor, $n$ donble number for his cholec of half. They were to be elccted annunlly. All electlons of members, whetlier to the Provinclal Conucil or Genernl Assembly, were to be by ballot. And thls Charter or Frame were to be by ballot. And thls Charter or Frame of Goverument was not to be altered, elanged, or diminlshed iu any part or elausc of it, without the cousent of the Goveruor, or his heirs or nssigns, and six parts ont of seven of the Freemen both in the Provincial Conueil and General Assembly. With respect to the Laws, whilch I sold before were forty $\ln$ number, I shall only at present observe of them that they related to Whatever may be iuelnded under the term 'Good Government of the Pruvince'; some of them to Ilberty of eonscleuce; others to clvil officers and thelr quallticatlons; others to offences; others to legal proeredings, such as pleadings, processes, fines, imprisonments, and arrests; others to the nntural servants nud poor of the province. With respect to all of them lt may be observed, that, like the Frante itself, they conld not be altered but by the consent of the Governor. or his helrs, ant thre enneft of six parts ont of seven of the two bolles before mentioned. A. D. 1683.-Acquisition by Pean of the claims of the Duke of York to Delaware."During the negotiatlons between New NetherIand and Marylsnd in 1850, the Dutch Insisted that, as Lord Baitimore's patent covered only savage or uninhabited teriftory, it couid not affect their own possession of the Deiaware region. Accordingly, they heid it against Mary. iand until it was iaken from them by the Dure of Yorks in 1664. But James's title by conquest hsid never been contirmed to him by a graut from the king; and Cecilius Calvert, the second Lord Baltimore, Insisted that Delaware beionged to Maryland. To quiet controversy, the duke had offered to buy off Baitimore's claim, to whicin he wouid not agrec. Penn afterward refused a large offer hy Fenwiek 'to get of the duke his interest in Newcastle and those parts' for West Jersey. Thins stoxi the matter when the Pennsylvania eilarter was scaied. Its proprietor soon folnnd tibat his province, wholiy indand, wnted a front on the sen. As Dolaware was necessary' to Pennsrlvania. Penn 'endeavored to get it' from the duke by maintaining that Balti. more's pretension 'was against law, civii and common.' Charles Caivert, the third Lord Balti. more, was 'very free' in taiking against the Duke of York's rights; but he conld not circumvent Penn. P'rnn's great powers being iegaliy estabishice, ite ad. dressed the peopie in profoundest sileuee. Ile spoke of the reasons for his coming - the great idea which he had nursell from his ronth npwaris - inis diesire to found a free and virtuons state, in which the peopie shonid rule thenselves. . . . Hie spoke of the constitution he had published for Pennsyivania as containing his theory of government; and promised the settlers on tile fower reacies of the Delaware, tiat the same principics siould he sdiopted in their terri. tory. Every man in his provinces, he sulid, should enjoy liberty of conselence and his siare of poitical power. $\qquad$ The people isteneri to this speech with wonder and delight. . . . They had but one request to make in answer; that he would stay amongst them and reign over then in person. They besought him to annex their territory to Penneylvania, in order that the white settiers might have one country, one psrliament, and one rי'er. He promised, at thelr desire, to take the quention of a union of the two provinces into consideration, and submit it to nn ansembly then about to meet at Upland. So he took his leave. Ascending the Delaware the adventurers soon arrived at the Swedish town of Upiand, then the place of chlef Impror. tance in the province.

Pena changed the name from Upiand to Chester, and as Chester it is known. Markham and the threo commissioners had done their work so weil that in a short time after Penn's arrival, the first General As. sembly, eiected by universai suffrage, was ready to meet. . . As soon as Penn had given them assurances similar to those which he had maio in Newcastic, they proceeded to discuss, amend, and accept the Frame of Government and the Provisional Laws. The settiers on the Delaware sent representatives to this Assembly, and one of their first acts was to declare the t wo prov. inces united. The constitution was miopted without important alteration; and in the forty laws were added twenty one others, and the infant corie was passed in form.

Penn paid some visits to the neighbouring seats of government in New York, Maryland, and the Jerseys. At West River, Lord Baltimore came forth to meet him with a retinue of the chief persons in the province. . . . It was impossible to adjust the boundary, and the two proprictors separated with the resolution to maintain their several rights. . . The iands alrendy bought from the ledmen were now put up for sale at four-pence an acre, with a reserve of one shil. ling for every hundred acres as quit-rent; the latter sum intended to form a state revenue for the Governor's support. Amidst these sales and scttiements he recollected George Fox, for whose use and profit he set aside a thousand ncres of the best iandiln the province, . . Pemn was hio less careful for the Redskins. Laying on one side all ceremoninl manners, he won their iearts by his casy confdence and famiiiar speech. Ile walked with them alone into the forests. He sat with them on the ground to watch the young men dance. He joined in their feasts, sud ste their rousted hominy and acorns. . . . Haring now become intimate with Taminent and other of the native kings, who had approved these treaties, seeing great advantages in them for tiveir peopie, ine proposed to hold a conference witit the chiefs and warriors, to contirm the former treaties and form a iasting league of peace. On the banks of the Iela wnre, in the suburbs of the rising eity of Piiliadeiphia, lay a naturai amphitheatre, used from time immemorial as a piace of meeting for the native tribes. The name of Sakimaxing - now corrupted hy the white men into Shackamaxon-ineans the piace of kings. At this spot stoond nn aged eimtree, one of those giorious eims which mark the forests of the New Worid. It was a hundired und fifty-five years oid; under its sprending branches friendly nations had been wont to meet; and here the Redskins smoked the cailumet of peace long before the paie-fnces ianded on those shores. Markham had appointed this iocality for his first conference, and the isnd commissioners wiseiy foilowed his exsmpie. Old traditions had made the place sacred to one of the contracting parties,-and when Penn proposed his solemn conference, he namcd Saki mising [or Shackamaxion] as a place of meetlig with the Indlan klags. Artista have palnted, poets sung, phllosophers pralsed this meeting of the whlte men and the red [October 14, 1682]

All belng seated, the old kling announced to the Governor that the natlves were prepared to hear and conslder hia words. Penn then rose to address them. . . . ITe and hito chlldren, he went on to any, never fired the riffe, never trastell to the sword; they met the red men on the broul path of goorl faith and gool whil. Ther meant no harm, and had no fear. He read the treaty of frlendshlp, and cxplalned lis clauses. It reched that from that duy the eliildrea of Onas and the natlons of the Lennl Len. apie shnuld be brothers to eaeh other,- that all paths should be free and open - that the doors of the white men sloonld be open to the red nien, anil the liniges of the red men should be open to the white men, -that the ehilliren of Onas should not betieve any false reports of the Lrinl Lenapé, nor the Lemil L.euapé of the chlldre. of Onas, but should come and see for themselves, that if any son of Onas were to do any harm to any Redskln, or any Redskin were to do harm to a son of Onas, the sufferer should not offer to right himself, hut sloulld complain to the ellefs and to Onas, that justlee might be declared by twelve honest men, nnd the wrong baried ia a pit with no bottom, - that the Lennl Lenapé should usslst the white men, and the white mea slould assist the Lenni Lenapé, ngalnst all such as would disturb them or do them hurt ; snd. lastly, that both Christians and Indhans shonht tell their children of this league and ehala of friendship, that it might grow stronger and stronger, aad he kept bright and clean, without rust or spot, while the waters ran down the ereeks and rivirs, and while the sun and noon and stars eluhiren. Ne lald the scroll on the ground. The sachems reeelved his proposal for themselves and for their children. No oaths, no seals, no mummeries, were used; the treaty was ratificul on both sides with yer,-and, unlike traties whieh are sworn and sealed, was kept. Whan l'run had snlled, he held a note lu his mind of six thiags to be done on landing: (1) to organize hls government ; (2) to risit Friends in Delaware. P'enus.lvania nnd New Jerser; (3) to conriliate the ladians; (4) to see the Governor of New York. who had prevlously governed hls provinc: ( (.) to fix the site for his capital eity ; (6) to armage hls differences with Loral Baltizuon: The sulpject of his chief eity occupled his anxious thought, and Mark ham hall collected infornumion for his use. Some people wished to see Chester male his capital; but the surveyor, Thomas 11 olme, agreed with Penn that the best locality ia almost every respeet was the neck of lanul lying at the junction of the Delaware and the shuylkill rivers. . . The polnt was known as Wiencoul. . . . The land was owned by thre. Swedes, from whom Pena purchased it on their "wn terms; and then, with the assistance of Holme, he drew his plan. . . . Not content to hegin humbly, and allow house to be added to honse, and strect to street, aa people wantell them, he formed the whole scheme of his city-its name. its form, its strcets, its dacks, and opea spices - fair and perfeet ln hls inind, brfare a single stone was late. Accordlog to his original deslgn, Pluladelphia was to

A. D. 1685. - The Maryland Boundary question. - Points In dlspute with Lord Baltimore. -"The grant to Penn confused the old controversy between Vlrglals and Lorl Baltlmore as to thelr boundary, and led to fresh controversles. The questlon soon arose: What do the descriptlons, 'the beglunlng of the fortleth,' and 'the beglnning of the three and fortleth degree of northern latitude, mean ? If they mennt the 40 th and 43d parallels of north latltude, as most hls. torlans have held, Penn's provlnce was the zone, three degrees of latitude in w.ldth, that leaves Philadelphla a llttle to the south and Syracuse a little to the north; hut if those deseriptions meant the belts $\operatorname{ly} \operatorname{lng}$ between $39^{\circ}$ and $40^{\circ}$, and $42^{\circ}$ and $43^{\circ}$ as some authors have held, then I'enn's southern and northern boundaries were $3^{3}$ and $42^{\circ}$ nortll. A glance at the mnp of Pennsylvanla will show the reader how different the territorial dispositlons would have been if either one of these construetions hat been carried out. The first construetion wonld avoid disputes on the south, unless wilth Virginia west of the monntalns; on the north it would not ennflict with Yew York, but would most seriously conflet with Conneetlicut and Massachusetts west of the Delaware. The second construetion involved disputes with the two sonthern colonies eoneerning the degree 39-40 to the farthest limit of Pennsylvania, and It also overlupped Connectient's claim to the degree 41-42. Perlaps we cannot certainly say what was the intention of the king, or Penn's Arst understanding; hut the Quaker proprietary and his sueeessors adopted substantially the second constructiou, and thus lnvolved thelr provinee $\ln$ the most hitter disputes. The first quarrel was with Lord Balthmore. It has been well suid that this notahle quarred ' continued more than eightr years; was the cause of endless trouhle bet ween individuals; occupied the attentlon not only of the proprietors of the respectlve provinces, hut of the Lords of Trade and Plantations, of the lligh Court of Chancers, and of the Privy Councils of at least three monarehs; it greatly retarded the settlement and development of a beautiful and fertile conntry, and hrought about numerous tumults, Whlch sometimes caded in hloolshined.' ${ }^{\prime \prime}-\mathrm{B}$. These troubhes origimed with George Keith, a scotch Quaker, furnerly sur. vevor generai of East Jersey, and nt this time mister of the Quaker school at Philadelphia, and ehampion of the Quabers against Cotton Jather aud the Bostou mininters. Pressing the doctriues of non-resistnuee to their logical conelusion, Keith uivancel the opinion that Quaker principles wrere not consistent with the exereise of politlcal authority. Il' aiso attaekell uegro sinwery as inconsistent with those principles. There is no surer way of glving mortal offense to a sect or party than to eall upon it to be eonsistent with its own professed doctrines. Keith was disowned by the yearly meeting, but he forth. with instituted a meeting of his own, to which le gave the name of Ciristian Quakers. In repiy to a 'Testimony of Deniai' put forth against him, le published an 'Actiress.' in which he handiled his adversaries with very ittle ceremony. Ite was thed by the Quaker magistrutes for insolence, aud Bradford, the ouiy printer in the coluny, was ealled to aceount for having mab. lished Keith's address. Thougit le obenined a discharge, Bradford, however, judged it expedient to remove with his types to New lork, which now [1692] first obtained a printing prose, The Episcopalians and other non-Quakers professed great sympathy for Keith. and raised a Ic id outery against Quaker intolerance. Keith hlmself presently embraced Episcopacy, went to England, and took orders there. The Quaket magistrates were accused of hostllity to the Church of Enyland, and in the aileged malad. mlnistration of hls agents, jolned with his own suspected loyaity, n pretense was found forde. privlng Penn of the government - a ste $i$ taken by the Privy Council whthout any of the forma, or, indeed, any nuthority of law, thongh justified by the oplnlons of some of the leuding 1 ing lawyers of that day." Governor Fletcher of New lork was now authorized for a time to ad. minister the govermment of Pennsyivunla and Delaware. "Me accordingly visited Philadeiphia, and called an Assembiy in whlel, dicputies from both provlnces were present. Penn's frame of government was disregarded, tic Aswmbly being modeled after that of New York. Fhether hoped to obtaln a salary for hlniself nud mome contributlons toward the defense of the northem frontier. The Quakers, very reluetnnt to rote money nt ail, had special scruples about the iam. fuiness of war. They were nlso very suypicious of designs agalnst their libertles, and rufused to enter on any business until the existing laws and liberties of the provlnce had been tirst expressly confirmed. This concession reluctantiy made. Fletcher obtained the grant of a smail sum of mouey, not, however, whinout stlpulating that it 'should wot be dipped In bionl.' . . . slog both piracy and llllelt trade. With mucl diffiealty, moreover, he settled with his suhjects the terms of a new constlution of government, or Charter of Privileges, as it was called. The oll Frame of Government was formally ahandosed and the government of Pennsylvania was now organized upon an entirely new footing.

"The new charter for the province and terr. tories, slgned hy Penn, October 25, 1701, was more republican lo character than those of the nelghboring colonles. It not only provided for sa assembiy of the people witic great powers, laciadiag those of creatlig courts, hut to a certaln extent it suhmitted to the choice of the people the nominatlon of some of the county ofticers. The section concerning liberty of consclence did not dlscriminate against the members of the Charch of Rome. The closing section fultilled the promise already made hy Penn, that In case the representatlves of the two territoriai districts [Pennsylvania proper, held under Penn's original grant, ad the Lower Counties, afterwaris constitatlag Delaware, whleh he acquired from the Duke of York] could not agree withln three yeam to joln In legislative busloess, the Lower Couaties should be separated from I'enosylvania. On the same day Penn established by letters. patent a councll of state for the province, 'to consult and asslst the proprietary himself or hls deputy with the hest of thelr advice and counell In pulille affairs and matters relating to the govcrnment and the peace and well-beling of the people; und In the absence of the proprictary, or upon the deputy's absence out of the province, his death, or other lncaparity, to cxerclse all uad singnlar the powers of government.' The original town and borongh of Philadelphin, having by this time become near equal to the city of Sew lork in trade and riches, was riimel, by patent of the 25th of Octoher, 1701 in the raak of a city, and, llke the province, cyuld boast of having a more liberal churier than lwe nelghbors; for the mnnlelpal ofllecers were to lne clected by the representatives of the people of the city, and not appointed by the governor, as in Suw York. The governmeut of the province had becn entrusted by Pcon to Anlrew limilta, also governo: for the propirictors in dew Jem. v. wlih James Logan as provin id ercetary, to whom was likewise ontided the managennent of the proprietary estates, thas naking him in reality the representatlve of Penn anil the leader of hls party. Ilamilton died ln becomber, 1702; hut before his death he ladendeavored in valn to bring the representatives $0^{*}$ the two sections of his government together ugain. The Delaware menbers remalned obstl. mate, and tiaaliy, whlle Edvirod Shlppen, a melniter of the councll and first mayor of Phila. delphia, was acting as president, It was settled that they shonid have separate assemblies, cntircly iadependent of each other. The first separate ussembly for Penosylvanin proner met at lhiliallelphia, lo October, 1703, and by lts first reschution showed that the Quakers, wo dominant in the province, were begiuning to acqulre a tiste for anthority, and meant to coior thelr re. ligion with the hue of polltlcal power." In De. cunter, 1703, John Evans, a young Welshman, appuinted depnty governor hy Peon, arrived at with the ueve, and was sooa Involved ln quarrels with the ussmbilies. "At one tlme they had for ground the refusal of the Quakers to support the war which was waging agniust the French and Indlans on the frontlers. At another they disagreed upon the estahilishment o: a judiciary These disturhances produced financial dlarup. tlons, and Penn himself suffered therefrom to such an extent that he was thrown lnto a Loodon prison, and had tinaily to mortgage hls provloce for 88,600 . The recall of Erans $\ln 1 \% 09$, and the appointment of Charles Gookin ln his stead, dld not mend natters. Logan, Penn's intlmate frend and representatlve, was finally compeiled to leave the country; and, goling to England (1710), lie induced Penn to write a letter to the Pennsylvanla assembly, in which he threatened to sell the province to the: $-\mathbf{W n}$, a surrencler by which he was to recelve $\pm 14,000$. The trunsfer was in fact prevented by an attack of apopiexy from which l'ean suffered ln 1712 . The eplstle, however, hrought the refractory assembly to terms." In 1717 Gookin lavoived hlmself in fresh troubles and was recalled. bounded southerly on the presert map hy a stralght line entering Penn:, Ivania about Stroudsburg, just north of the Inelaware Water Gap, and running west through al zeiton, Catawissa, Cleartlell, and N( $\%$ Castle, taking in all the northern coai, iron, and oil fields. It was a royal heritage, but the Penns made no attempt to settle It, and Conncetleut until the middie of the 18th century had no energy to spare from the task of winning her home territory 'out of the fire, as it were, by hard hlows and for smail recomnense.' Thls task had been fairly welid done Fy $170^{2}$ and in 1733 a movement to onlonize in the Wyoming country was set on foot in Windham county. It sprenil ly degrees untll the Susquehanna Company was formed the next year, wlth neariy 700 members, of whom 638 were of Connectleut. Thelr agents mule a treaty with the Five Natlons July 11, 1754, hy whith they bought for $£ 2,000$ a tract of land heglnning at the 41st degree of latitude, the southeriy boundary of Connectlcut; thence runnhing north, following the llne of the Susquehanna at a distance of ten miles from $1 t$, to the present northern boundary of Pennsyivanin; thence 120 miles west; thence south to the 41 st degree and bnek to the point of beglaning. In May, 1i55, the Connectlcut general assembly expressed lis acquiescence $\ln$ the scheme, if the king should ap. prove it; and it approved also a plan of Sumuel Hazard, of Phlladelphla, for another eolony, to be placed west of Pennsylvanla, and within the chartered llmits of Connectlcut. The court might have taken stronger ground than thls; for, at the meeting of comnilssioners from the various colonles at Albany, in 1754, the representatives of Pennsyivania being present, no oppositlon was made to a resolution that Connecticut and Massachusetts, by charter right, extended west to the South sea. The formatior of the Susquehanna Company brought out objections from Penasylvania, but the company scat out surveyors anil plutted its tract. Settlement was begun on the Delnware River $\ln$ 1757, and in the Susquehamais purchase $\ln 1762$. This was a temporary settlement, the settlers golng home for the winter. A permanent venture wis made the next year on the flats below Wilkes Barre, hut it was diestroyed by the Indians the same year. In 1768 the compuny marked out tive townshlps, and sent out forty settlers for the first, Kingston. Most of them, including the famous Captaln Zebulon Butler, had served lu the French and Indlan War; and thelr first step was to build the 'Forty Fort.' The Penns, after thelr usual policy, had refused to sell lands, but had leased plots to a number of men on condltion of their defending the lands from the Connecticut elaimants.' The forty Connecticut men found these in possession wher they arrived in February, 1;69, and a war of writa and arrests followed for the remainder of the year. The Penusylvanla men had one too powerful argument, in the shape of a four. pounder gun, and they retained possession at the end of the year. Eirly $\ln 1730$ the forty reappeared, captured the four-pounder, and sccured possession. For a time ln 1771 the Pennsylvania men returned, put up a fort of their own, and engaged $\ln$ a partisan warfare; hut the numbers of the Connectleut men were rapidly lnereasing. and they remained masters until the opening of the Revolution, when they numbered some 3,000.

Connectleut asked for in. y , in order to get papers from Engiand; ha $t$ congress overruled the motlon, and ordered the court to meet at Trenton in November, 1782. After forty-one days of argument, the court came to the unanl. mous conclusion that Wyoming, or the Susquehanna district, belonged to I ennsylvanha atul not to Connecticut." Connectleut yielded to the deelslon at once; h.tt, in 1786, when, followling New York and Vir binia, she was cailed upon to make a ressiun of h ir western territorial claims to congress (sce United States or Am. A. I. 1781-1786) she compensated herself for the loss of the Susquehanna distriet hy reserving from the cesslon "a tract of about the same lengih and width as the Wyoming grant, west of Pinn. syIvania, in northeastern Ohio . . . ; and this was the tract known as the Westr- n Reserve of Connecticut. It contalned about $\%: 00,000$ aceres.

The unfortunate Wyoming settlers, deserted hy their own State, and left to the merey of rival clalmants, had a hani time of it for years. The millitia of the neighhoring counties of I'rnnsyl. rania was mustered to enforee the writs of Pennsylvanla courts; the property of the Connectleut men was destroyed, thelr fencers were cast down, anI thelr rights lgnored; and the ' Pennamite and Yankee War 'began. old Susquehanna Company was reorganized in 1785-86, and made ready to support its setlens hy force. A. D. $1 ; 57-1762$. - The question of taxation in dispute with the proprietaries.-Franklin's misalon to England.-'For a long while past the relationship between the Penns, unworthy sons of the great William, and now the proprie-taries, on the one slde, nnd their quasi subjects, the propie of the Irovince, upon the other, had hera stesdily becoming more and more strained. until something very ilte a erisis had [ln 178i] been rrached. As usmi in English and Angio. American communitles, it was a quarrel over dollars, or ruther over poundis sterling, a question of tuxation, which was produeing the allena. ihn. At bottom, there was the trouble which nlwars pertains to absenteelsm; the proprietaries lived in Ergiand, and regarded their vast Amerleancestate, vidh about 200,000 white inlabitants, sly as a source of revenue.

The chluf point in dispute was, whether or not the waste lands, stili dircetly owned by the proprietaries, and other Inads let by them wi quitrents, sbould be taxcil in the sume munner as like property of other owners. They refused to submit to such tixation; the Assembly of Buexesses Inslsted. in ordinary times the proprietaries prevailed; for the governor was their nominee and remova. ble at their plensure; they gave bim generai instructhons to sasent to no haw taxhig tbehr holdings, and he naturaily obeyed his masters. But slace governors got thelr saiuries only by virtue of a vote of the Assembly, it seems that they simetinues disregnrded lastruetions, in the saered callse of their own interests. After a while, therefore, the proprietaries, made shrewd by ex: perience, devised the scheme of plaeing thelr unfortunate suli-rulers under bouds. This went far towsids setthing the matter. Yet in such a crisls and stress as were now present in the coluny

It certaialy scemed that the rleh and idle proprictarics migbt stad on the same footlag whth thelr poor and laboring subjects. Tbey livel comfortnhiy in England upon reveunes estimated to amount to the then enormous sum of $\sum_{2} \geqslant 0,000$ sterling; while the eolonists were struggling under unusual losses, so well as enormons expenses, growlug out of the war and indan ravages. At such a time thelr pursimuny, their 'lucredlbie meanness,' as Frankila culted ft , was cruel as well as stupid. At.iast the Assembly flutly refused to raise any money ualess the proprietaries shouid be burdened llke the rest. Ali should pay together, or all sbould go to destruction together. Tbe Penns too stood obstinate, fucing the not less resolute Assembly. It was indeed a deadiockl Iret tbe times were such that neither party eouid afford to maintaln its ground indefintcely. So a temporary arraage ment was made, whereby of $£ 60,000$ sterifing to be raised the proprictaries agreed to coatribute $£ 5,000$, and the Assemhiy agreed to aecept the same in lieu or commutation for their tax. But neither side ahandoaed lts principle. Before loay more monuy wns nceded, and the dispute Was as fierce as ever. The burgesses now thought that lt would be weli to carry a statemeat of their case before the king In council and the lorts of trade. In February, 1757, they named their speaker, Isaac Norris, and Fraaklln to be their cmissaries 'to represent in Enginnd the nahappy situation of the Province, and to seek reilress hy an aet of Pariament. Norris, aa aged man, begged to be exeused; Frankiln accepted. .. A portion of his business also Was to endenvor to induce the king to resume the Proviace of Pennsylvanta as his own. A ciause ia the charter had reserved this right, whicb could be exerelsed on payment of a certain sum of money. The colonists now preferred to be sa sppanage of the crown rather than a fef of the Yenns." In this iutter oblert of his mlasion Frankifin did not succeed; iut se ac. compilsbed lts mnin purpose, procuring, after iong deiays, from the board of trade, a dechsion whieh subjected the proprietary estate to its fair slinte of taxation. the returned home after an ahsence of five years.-J. A diversity of opinion existed in the Province upon this resoiution.

The Assembly referred the resoive of Congress to a commitite, but took no further action, nor did the committee ever make a report. 'The old Assembly,' snys Wrstcott, 'wlisch had adjourned on the 14 th of June, to meet on the 14 til of August, couid not obtain a quormm, and adjourned again to the elid of September. It theu interposed a feehie remonstrance agalnst the invasion of its prerogatives by the Convention, hut it was a dying protest. Tiue Deciaration of Independence had given the old State Goverument a mortai biow, and it soon expired without a sigh - thus ending forever the Proprietary and royai authority in I'ennsyivanin.' In the meantime, the Committce of Correspondeuce for Phiiadelphia issued a circuinr to nll the county committees for n conference in that eity ou Thestiay, the 18th day of June. . . . The Conference at once uuaniminsly resolved, 'That the present government of this Proviuce is not competent to the exigencies of our affairs, and that it is necessary that a Provincial Couvention be called by this Conference for the express purpose of forming a new government in this Province on the authority of the peopic oniy." Acting upon these resolves, preparations were imnediately taken to secure n proper represeutation in the Conveutiou.

Every voter was obliged to take nn oath of renunciation of the anthority of George III, and one of alleginace to the state of Pennsylvanla, and a religions test was prescribed for ali members of the Convention.
The delegates to the Convention to frame a constitution for the new governmeut consisted of the representative men of the State - men selected for their abiiity, patriotism, and personal populnrity. They met at Pisilndeiphia, on the 15th of Juiy. . . . nad orgnnized by the selection of Benjamin Frankiin, president, George Russ, vicepresident, and John Sorris and Jacoh Garrigues, secretaries. . . . Both the Inspector and Marshal were required to resign; hut they refused, and sought anfety in tight. A meeting was hold a few daye later, at 3ingo Creek meeting house, whlch recommended to all the towashipu in the four western countle: of Pennaylvania, and the aelghboriag countlea of Virginla, to meet, by their delegaten, at Park. lamon's ferry, on the Monongahela, on the 14th of Augunt, ' to take into conslderation the situa. toa of the weatern country.' Three days after this meeting, a party of the malcontents selzed the mill, carried it to Canonsburg. eeven miles distant, and there opened the lettern from Pitts. burs to Philadelphia, to discover who were hos. tile to them. They then addresmed a clrcular lifter to the ofucers of the militis in the dis. afferted countlen, lnforming them of the inter. ceptell letters, and calling on them to rendez Fous st Braddock's Field on the 1st of Auguit, with arms $\ln$ good order, and four days' provision.

This circular was signed by seven persons, hut the prime mover was Dayld Bradford, a lawyer, who was the prosceuting attorney of Washington County. In consequence of thls aummons, a large body of men, which has been entimated nt from five to eeven thousand, assembied st Bruddock's Fich on the day appolnted.
lruiford took upon himself the military commsnd, which was readly ylelded to him.
Bralford proposed the expilision from Pittaburg of seveml persons winose hostillty hud been discoverel hy the letters they had intercepted; but his notion was cnrried only as to two persons, Gibsom and Neville, son of the Inspector. They then decided to procced to Pittshurg. Some nssented to this, to prevent the mischice which oul. ra meditated. Sut for thls, and the liberil refreshments furnished by the people of Pittshurg, it was thought that the town would have bees bumt. The Presldent issued $n$ proclamation recting the acts of treason, commandlig the fasurgents to dlsperse, and warning others agninst abetting them. He, at the same time, wishing to try lenient mensures, appolnted threc Commissioners to repair to the scene of the insurrection, to confer with the Insurgents, and to offer them juardon on condition of a satisfactory assurance of their future obellence to the has.

Goveruor Miftin followed the cxample of the President In appointing Commissioner, to confer with the insurgents, with power to grant purdons, and he issued an admonitory prowiantion, after which he convened the Leglsfature to meet on the 31 of Norember. The Federal und the State Commissioners reached the insurgent district while the convention at Parkinson's ferry was in sesslon. It assembled on the 1 th of Alugust, and ennsisted of 226 delegatres, all from the western countles of Pennsyivinia, except six from Ohlo County in Virginia. They appointed Cook their Chairman and . ithert (iallatin. Necretary, though he at tirst declined the nppointment. . . The Commissioners reguired . . an explicit assuranec of submission to the iaws; a recommendation to their asorlates of a like submission; and nueetings of the citizens to be held to confirm these assuramces. All puhlic prosecutions were to be suspruded until the following July, when, if there liad been no rlolation of the law in the intersal, there should be a general amnesty. Thre trmas were deemed reasonsble by the subcommittee; but before the meeting of sixty took piace, a buity of armed men entered Brownsvlile.
the place appolated for the meeting, and so alarmed the friende of accommorlatlon, that they seemed to be driven from their purpose. Gallath, however, was an exception; and the next day, he addreased the committee of sixty in faror of acceding to the pmponals of the Com. misaloners; but nothligg more could be effecterl than to pase a resolution that it would be to the interest of the people to accept those terms, without any promise or pledge of mhminglon.

On the whole, It was the opinion of the well.disponed part of the population, that the Inspection laws conld not be executed in thit part of the State; and that the interpusition of the militia was indispensable. The Comulssloners returned to Philadelphia, and on their report the Presklent lssued a second proclamation, on the 25th of September, In which he announced the march of the militila, and agaln commanded obedlence to the laws. The onder requiring the mlitia to march was promptly obeyed in all the States except Peansylvania, in which some pleaded defects ln the milltin law ; but even ln that State, after the Leglalatite met, the Governor was authorised to accept the services of volunteers. . . The news that the militin werc on the march increased the numbers of the mol. erate party. . . Bradford, who was foremost in urging resistince to the law, was the first to scck safety In tight. ILe sougnt reiuge In New Orleans. A second convention wis called to meet at Parkinson's ferry on the second of ()etober. A resolution of submission was passed. and a commitree of two wus appolnted to convey It to the Presldent st Carlisle.

On the return of the committee, the Purkirsin ferry convention met for the third time, and resolutions were passed, deelaring the suffichney of the civil authoritles to execute the laws; affrming that the excise dutles would be paid, nind recommend. ing all delinquents to surrender themselves.
Lee, then, as Commander. In.chief, issucd a proclimation granting ar amnesty to all who had sulmitted to the laws; and culling upon the inhabitants to take the oath of allegiance to the United States. Orilers were issued and exceuted to selze those offenders who had not signed the declaration of sulmission, and send them to Philadelphia; nnd thus was this purpose of resisting the cxecution of the excise luw completely defeated, and entire order restored in less than four months from the time of the burning of Neville's liouse. which was the first overt net of resistance. It Waa, however, deemed prudent to ret in a iorce of 2.500 militia during the win. ter, under General Norghin, to prevent a return of that spirit of disaffection which lad so long prevailed in Pennsylvania. Among these natlons were the Jews, who had perhaps assisted the king of Elam in his attack upon Nabonidos. Experience had taught Cyrus the danger of allowling a disaffected people to ilve in the country of thelr conquerors. Ile therefore reversed the old pollcy of the Assyrian and Bahyionian kings, which conslsted in transportlng the larger portlon of a conquered popufation to another country, and saught lnstead to win thelr gratltude and affection by allowing them to return to their native lands. He saw, moreover, that the Jews, if restored from exlle, would not only protect the southwestern corner of his empire from the Egyptlans, hut would form a base for his Intended Invasion of Egypt itseif.

Tie number of exlles who took ad. vantage of the edict of Cyrus, and accompanied Zeruhbubel to Jerusilem, amounted to $\{2,360$. It is probahle, however, that this means only the heads of famllies; If so, the whole brody of those who left Babylon, including women and ehildren, would have been about 200,000 .

The conlquest of Buhyionia by Cyrus took place in the Year 539 B . C. IIe was already master of I'ersia, Media, and Lydia; aud the overtirow of the empire of Nebnchadnezzar extended his domiulons from the monntains of tive ilindin Kush on the east to the shores of the Merlitermucan on tie west. Egypt alone of the older empires of tite Oriental worid remalned Independent, but its doom could not be long delayed. Tie eareer of Cyrus hatd indeed been miarvelious. Ife had begun as tie king only of Anzan or Elam, whose power seeated hut 'smali' and contemptible to his neigibour the graat Bubylonlan mounrein. But his victory over the Median kling Astyages and the destruction of tio Median Emplre maie him at once one of the most formidable princes in Western Asla. lienceforth the seat of his power was moved from Susa or Shashan to Ekbatana, called Achmetian in Scripture, Hag. matan in Persian, the capital of Media. . . . The conquest of Media was quickly followed by that of Persia, which appears to have been under the goverumeat $f$ a coilaterul branch of tie family of Cyrus. Ilenceforward the king of Eiam becomes aiso the king of Persia. Tie empire of Lydia, which extended over the greater part of Asia Minor, fell before the army of Cyrus about B. C. 540 . . . . The latter years of the life of Curas were spent in extending and coasolitating 's power amoag thu wild tribes and unknown regions of the Fiar East. Whea he died, uli was realy for the threatcaed invasion of Egypt. This was carried ont by his son and successor Kambyses, who had been made king of labyfon'thrce years lefore lisis father's death, Cyrns reserving to himself the imperial title of 'King of the woild.

As soon as Kambyses becane sole sovereign, Babylon necessurity twok rank with Shushan and Eibbatana. It was tie third centre of the great empire, ata in iater days the Perslan monarchs were accustomed to make it their offliai residence during the winter season.

Kambyses was so fascinated by his new province that he refusel to leave li. Tie greater part of his reign was spent in Egypt, where he so thoroughly established inls power and Influence that it was the only part of the empire whichdid not rise in revolt at his denth.

Soon after his father's death he strined his hands with the blixul of his brother Bardes, ealled Smerdis by Herodotus, to whom Cyrus had assigned the eastern part of his empire. Bardes was put to death secretly at Susa, it is said. A Mayina, Gaumata or Gomates hy name, who resenibled Bardes In appearance, came forward to personate the murdered prince, and I'ersia, Media, und other provinces at once broke into rebellion agalnst their long-ahsent king. When the news of this revolt reached Kambyses be appointed Aryandes satrap of Egypt, and, If we may believe the Greek accounts, set out to oppose the usurper. Ile had not proceeded far, hovever, before he feli by his own hand. The false Bardes was now master of the empire. Darius, in his lnscription on the rock of Benistun, teils us that $\cdot!\cdot 3$ put to death many peopie who had known bariks, to prevent its being known that he was not Banies, son of Cyrus.' At the same thme he remitted the taxes paid hy the provinces, and prochamed freedon for three years from mllitary service. But ine had not reigned more than seven months before $n$ conspiracy was formed against hinn. Darius, son of Ilystaspes, attacked him nt the head of the conspirators, In the Innd of Nisea in Media, and there sicw him, on the 10th day of Aprll, B. C. 521. Tiroughout the Behistart ln scription Darius represents hlmself as the hereditary champion of the Achaemenids, aguinst Gomates and all other rebeis. . . . It is a by the grace of Ormazd ' that he does everything. This restoration of the Zoronst rian worship, and the patting down of severai retuellions, are the matters reconded in the great trilingual luscription at Behistun, which Sir Ihenry ikawlinson dates, from iuterual evldence, In the sixth your of Darlus (B. C. 516),

The cnipire of which Darius became king cmbraced, as he says, the foilowing provinces: 'Persia, Sasian:s, Baby. lonia, Assyria, Arabia, Egypt; those which are of the sea (the Islauds), Saparda, fonia, Deelia, Armenia, Cappadocia, Parthia, Zariaria, Aria, Chorasinia, Bactria, Sogdlana, Gamiaria, the Sacac, Sattagydia, Arachotia, andi Diecia: in all twenty-three provinces. . . . All the centrai provinces constitating the original cmpire, from the monntains of Armenia to the he:di of the I'risian Ginif, as well as several of those of the Ir uian table-land, had to be reconquered. Having thus restored the empire, Darius pursued new military expelitions and conquests in the true spirit of lis founder. To the cuergy of youth was added the fear that quiet might breed new revoits; and by such motives, if we may believe Iferodotus, he was urged by Queen Alossa -at the Instigation of the Greek physictan, Democedes - to the conquest of Greece; while the hinself was minded to construct a bridge whlch should joln Asia to Europe, and so to carry war into Scythis. It seems whave beed according to an Oricntal idea of right, and not as a mere pretert, that he claimed to punlsh the Scythlans for their invasion of Media in the tlme of Cyaxares. So he contented himself, for the present, wlth sending sples to Greece under the guilance of Democedes, and with the rednction of Samos. The Scythian expeditlon, however, appears to have been preceded by the extenslon of the empire eastward from the mountalns of Afghaaistan - tine limit reached by Cyrus over the vailey of the Indus. The part of India thas added to the emplre, inciuding the I'uajab and apparentiy Scinde, ylelded a tribute evceeling that of any other provlnce. . . . The Scythian Expedltlon of Darius occupies the greater part of the Fourth Book of Merodotus.

The great result of tbe expedition, in whlch the king and his army narrowiy escaped destruc* tion, was the galning of a permanent footing $\ln$ Earope by the conquest of Thrace and the submission of Maredonla. . . It was probably in 13. C. 508 that Darius, having coliected a flcet of 600 silips from the Greeks of Asia, and an army of 700,000 or $800,000 \mathrm{mcn}$ from sil the nations of his emplre, crossed the Ilcllespont by a bricige of hoats, and narched to the Danube, coayuering on his way the Thracians within, and the Getie beyond, the Great Buikan. The Daabe was crossed by a brldge formed of the vesseis of the Ionlans, just above the apex of its Delta. The confusion in the geograpby of II redotas makes it as difficult as it is unprofitable to trace the direction and extent of the march, which IIerolotus carries beyond the Tanals (Dua), and prolably as fir north as $50^{\circ}$ iat. The Scythians retreated before Darius, avoiding a pitched battle, and using every stratagem to dethia the Perslans in the country till they should perish from famine." Dirius retrented in time to sive his army. "Leaving lis slck behlnd, with the camplires lighted and the asses tetbered, to make the enemy leelieve that he was stili in their froat, he retreated in the night. The pursuing Sey thians missed lis line of march, and canme first to the place where the Ionlan ships brilged the Daaube. Failing to persuade the Greck generais to break by the same act both the bridge and the yoke of Darius, they marched back to evcounter the Persian army. But their own previous lestruction of the wells ied them into a difrrent route; nud Darias got safe, but with Wiliculty, to the Danubc. + . The IIellespont was cronseri by means of the flect with wbich the strait ladi been guarded by Megabazus, or, mnre probabiy, Megaloyzus; and the second opbrituaity was barred against a rising of the Greck coloaies. . Ife left Mcgabazus In Europe with 80,000 troops to complete the reduction of all Thrace." Megabuzus not oniy executed this commission, but reduced the king. dom of Dlacedonia to vassalage before returning to his master, in B. C. 506.-P. Snith, Ancient Mist. of the Entst, bk. 3, ch. 27.-' 'Darius returned to Susa, leaving the western provinces in profound peace under the governnient of his brother Artupbernes. A trifling incident liglited thic flame of rebelilon. One of those political conlicts, which we have seen occurring throughout Greece, broke out in Naxos, an island of the Cydaies (B. C. 502). The exiles of the oligarchicai party applied for aid to Aristagoras, the if rat of Jilletus, vho persuaded Artaphernes to mon an expedition against Naxos. The Persian commander, lncensed by the interference of Aristagoras on a point of disclpiline, warned the Naxians, and so caused the failure of the expeditlon and ruined the credlt of Arlstagoras, who saw no course open to him hut revoit.
Whth the consent of the Mileslan citizens, Aristagoras seized the tyrants who were on board tagoras seized the tyrants who were on board of the tleet that had returned from Naxos; he laid down hls own power; popular governments were prociaimed in all the cities und lslands; and lonia revoited from Darius (B. C. 501). Aristagoras went to Sparta . . . and tried to tempt the king, Cleomenes, hy displaying the greatness of the Perslan empirc; but his admlaslon that Susa Was three months' journey from the sea ruined his cause. He had better success at Atlens; for the Athenians kuew that Artaphernes had been made their enemy by IIfppias. They voted twenty shlps in aid of the Ionians, and the squadron was lncreasel by five ships of the Eretrias. Huving united with the Ionlan fleet, they disembarked at Ephesus, narcbed up the country, and surprised Sardia, whielı was accidentally burnt during the piilage. Their forces were utterly inalequate to hold the city; and their return was not cffected without a severe defeat by the pursulng arny. The Athenlans reembarked and sailed home, while the Ionians dispersed to thelr clities to make those preparations which should have preceded the attack. Their powerful fleet gained for them the adlesion of the IIcllespontine cities as far as IByzautium, of Carin, Caunus, and Cyprus; bat this island was recovered by the Persians within n year. The Ionlans protracted the insurrcction for six years. Their cause was early abandoued by Aristagorns, who fled to the coast of Tlirace and there perislied. . . The fate of the revolt turned at last on the siege of Miletus. The city was protected by the Ionim fleet, for which the Plocnician navy of Artaphernes was no match. But there was fatal disunion and want of discipline on board, and the defection of tbe Samians gave tiee I'ersians an easy victory of Ladé (B. C. 49i). Miletus suffered the worst lorrors of a storm, and the other cities and islands were treated with scarcely less severity. This third subjugation of Ionin inflicted the most iasting blow on the prosperity of the colonies (B. C. 493). Throughout his uarrative of tbese events, Iferodotus deciares lils opiaion of the impolicy of the interference of the Athenlans. The ships they voted, he says, were the beginning of evils both to the Grecks and the barbarians. When the news of the burning of Sardis was brought to Darius, he called for his bow, and shot an arrow towards the sky, with a prayer to Auramazda for leelp to revenge himself on the Athenians. Then le bude one of his servarts repeat to him thrice, as he sat down to dinner the words, "Master, remember the Athenims." Upon the suppression of the Iouian revolt, be appointed his sou-in-law Mardonius to succeed Artaphernes, enjoining him to briag these insolent Athenians and Eretrians to Susa."-P. It was now the turn of the Greeks to retallate on their prostrate foe. First under the lead of Sparta and then under that of Athens they freed the islands of the Egean from the Persian yoke, expeiled the Persian garrisons from Europe, and cren raraged the Asiatic coast and made descents on it at thelr pieasure. For twelve years no Persian flcet ventured to dlapute with them the soverelgnty of the seas; and when at last, in B. About the same time tike crimes of Artabanus were discovered, and ine was put to dicath. Artaxcrses then reigned quictiy for aearly forty ycars. During his father's life lie was sppointed satrap of Lydia, Phrygia and Coppadiocia, with supreme nilitary commandi in all Asla Minor. On the death of Darius. B. C. 404, Cyrus found himseif thwarted in his hopes of the succession, and iaid plans at onee for overthrowing the cider brother, Artaxerxes, who ladi been placed on the throne. The had aequired an exteusive acquaintanee with the Greeks and had had mueh to do with them, in his admiuis. tration of Asla Minor, during the Peloponnesinn War. That aequaintance had proriuced in his raind a great opinion of their invincible qualities in war, aud had shown him the praetienhility of forming, with the means whiel lie eomananded, a compset army of Greek merceuaries which no Persiun force could withstand. He executed his phan of gathering sueli a ef amn of Greck sol. diers, without awakeniug isis brother's suspicions, and set out upon his expedition from ardes to Snan, in March B. C. 401 . As he adranced. tindiug himself mopposed, the troops of Artaxerxes retreating hefore him, he nad his Asiatic followers grew rash in their contidence, and careless of diseipline and order. Hence it happuned that when the threatened Persian monarch did confront them, with a great army, at Cunaxa, on the Enphrates, in Babylonia, they were taken by surprise and routed, und the preteader, Cyrns, was slain on the ticht. The Grev's - who numbered about 13,000 , but whose ranks were soon thinned and who are famons iu history as the Ten Thousand, - stood unshakeu, and felt still equal to the conquest of the Persian capital, if any objeet in advaneing upon it had remaiued to them. But the death of Cyrns left them in a strange situation, - deserted by every Asiatie ally, without suppiles, without hnowledge of the eountry, in the midst of a hostile population. Their own commander, moreorr. had been siain, and no one held amthority ober them. But they possessed what wo otlier people of thelr time eonld claim - the capacity for self control. They chose from their rauks a generai. the Athenian denophom, and endowed set with all neeessary powers. Then they set their faces homewards, in a long retreat from the lower Euphrates to the Euxine, from the Euxine to the Bosporns, and so into Frece. "Althongh this eightnons, and so into erpedition possesse's no lmmedlate signiticauce for political history, yet it is of high importance, not only for our knowledge of the East, hut aiso for thatof the Greek character: and the accurate description which we owe to Xenophon is therefore one of the most valuable documeuts of antiguity.

This army is a typicai ehart, in may colours, of the Greek popilation - a pie. tiall its a smali scale, of the whole people, with all its virtues and faults, its quaities of strength and its qualities of weakness, a wandering politicai community which, according to home usage, loids its assemblies and passes its resolutions, and at the same time a wild and not easily managcahie band of free-ianees. And how very reinarkabie it is, that in this mixed muititude of Grecks it is an Atheulan wio by his quaifties towers above ail the rest, and becomes the real preserver of the entire armyl The Athenian Xenophon lind only aceompauied the expedition as a volunteer, having been introduced hy Proxenus to Cyrus, and thereupon noved by his sense of honour to ahide with the man whose great taients he admired. . The Athenian ulone possessed that superiority of culture which was neeessary for giving orier and self-controi to the band of warriors, harharized by their seltish life, and for enabling him to serve them in the greatest variety of situations as spokesman, as generai, and as negotiator; and to him it was essentially dne thnt, in spite of their unspeaknble triais, through hostile tribes and desolate snow. ranges, 8,000 Greeks ufter ali, hy wanderings many and devious, in the end reaeheci the coast. They funcied themselves safe when, at the beginning of March, they had reaeled the sea at Trupezus. But their greatest difficulties were oniy to begin liere, where they first again canc into contact with Greeks." Sparta, then su preme in Greece, feared to offend the Great King by slowing any friendliness to this fugitive reminant of the unfortunate expedition of Cyrus. The gates of her cities were coldly shut against them, and they were driven to enter the scrviee of a Thracina jrince, iu orler to ohtain suhsistenee. But another year found Sparta involved in war with Persia, and the surviviug Cyrenns, as they cane to be called, were then summoned to Asia Minor for a new cmmpaign agninst the enemy they hated most. -

This was the beglnning of $n$ series of wars, extending through four centuries anti ending only with the Mahometan eonquests whieli swept IKman acd Persian power, alike, ont of the contested field. The first eampaigns of the Romans against Arta. xerxes were of doultfiti result. In the relgn of Sapor, son of Artaxerxes, the war was renc'ved, with unprecedented hunailation and dlsaster to the Roman arms. Valerian, the emperor, was surrounded and taken prisoner, after a bioxiy hattle fought near Edessa (A. D. 260), - remaining untii his death a captive in the hands of his insoient conqueror und suhjeeted to every indig. nity (see Rome: A. D. 192-284). Syria was overrun ly the Persian armics, and its splendid capital, Antioch, surprised, pilinged, and sav. agely wrecked, whlie the inhahltants were mostly slain or reduced to slavery. Cilicia and Cappadocla were next devastated ln iike manner.

Cosarea, the Cappadoclan capital, being taken after an obstinate siege, sumered piliage and unmereifui massacre. The vletorious carecer of Supor, which Rome failed to arreat, was checked hy the rising power of Paimgra (eee Palmyma). Fifteen years later, Aureilan, who had deatrnyed Paimyra, was marehing to attack Peraia when he feil hy the hands of domestic enemies and trsitors. It was not until A. D. 283, in the reign of Carus, that Rome and Persla cinssed swords agsla. Carus ravaged Mesopotamia, captured Seleucla and Ctesiplion and passed heyond the Tlgris, when he met with a mysterious death and his victorious army retreated. A dozen years passed before the guarrel was taken up again, iv inioeletian (see Rome: A. D. 284-305). That vigor. ons monarch sent one of his Cresars - Guicrius into the fieki, Wille he stationed iimailf at Antioch to direct the war. In hls first campnign (A. D. 207). Gnierius was defeated, on the oid fatai fieid of Carrhe. In his seeond campaign (A. D. 297-298) he won a decisive vletory and forced on the i'crsian king, Narses, a bumbliatling treaty, whlch renounced Mesopotamla, celiel fire provinces beyond the Tigris, made the Araxes, or Aboras, the bonndiary between the two emplres, and gave other aivantages to the Romans. There was peace, then, for forty yenrs, until another Sapor, grandson of Narses, had mounted the Perslan throne. Constantlne the Great was ciend and his divided empire seemed iess formldialle to the nelghboring power. "During the long periox of the relgn of Constantins [. 1. D. $337-361]$ the provinces of the East were afilicted by the calamitles of the Persian war. . . . The armies of Rome and Persia encountereal cach other in nine bloody flelis, in $t$ wo of whleh Constantius hlmseif commanded in person. The event of the day was most commoniy aiverse to the Romans." In the great hattle of Ningura. fought A. D. 348, the IRomans were victors at first, hat ailowed themseives to be surprised at night, while piundering the enemy's cimp, sni were routed with great slaughter. Three sieges of Nisibis, in Nesopotamla - the bulwark of Roman power in the East - were amone the nemorable incidents of these wars, iu 3:39, in 346, and again in 350, it repulsed the Persian king with shame and ioss. Less fortunate was the city of Amida [modern Diarbeklr], in Ar. menia, besieged hy Sapor, in 359 . It wis taken, at the iast, hy storm, and tile inliabitants put to the sword. On the iccession of Juliam, the f'erslan wsr was weleonied by the ambitious young emperor as an orportunity for emulating the glory of Alexander, after rivailing that of Ciesar in Gaui. In the esriy spring of 363, he fed forth a great army from Antioch, and triversed the sandy pialns of Mesopotamia to the Persimn capital of Cteslphon, reducing and destroying the strong cities of Perisabor and Maogamaleha on his mareh. Finding Ctesiphon too strong in its fortifications to encours ge a siege, he crussed the Tlgris, burned his fleet and advanced loldly into the hostile country beyond. It was a fatil expedition. Led astray by perfidious guides, harassed hy a swarm of enemies, and santily supplied with provisions, the Romans were soon foreed to an aimost desperate retreat. If iulian had lived, he might possilily have sustatned the courage of his men and rescued them from their sltuation; but he feli, mortaily wounded. in ri peiling one of the incessant attacks of the i'ersian caralry. An officer named Jovian was then bastlly proclaimed emperor, and hy his agency an Ignomlnlous treaty was arranged with the Persinn king. It gave up all the conquests of Galerius, together with Nisihis, Singara and other Roman strongholds in Sicsopotamia; on which hord terms the Roman army was permitted to recrose the Tigris nnd find a refuce in regions of its own. The peace thins shamefully purchased cndured for more than half-a century. Rellglous fanatlelsm klodled war afresh, A. D. 422, between Persia and the eastern empire; hut the events are little known. It seems to have resulted, prietically, in the divislon of Armenin which gave Lesser A rmenla to the Romans as a province and made the Grenter Armenla, soon afterwards, a Perslan satrapy, calied Persarmenla. The truee whlch ensued was respected for elghty years. In the year 502 , whlle Anastasius reigned st Constantlnople and Kohad was klag of Persla, ther" was a recurrenee of whr, which ended, bowever, in 505 , without any territorial changes. The unhappy elty of Amlela was agnin captureri In this war, nfter a slege of three months, and 80,000 of its inhablants perished under the Per. sian swords. Preparitory to future conflicts, Anastasias now founded and Justlnian afterwards atrengthened the powerfully fortified city of Dara, near Nislbis. The valuc of the new outpost was put to the proof $\ln 526$, when hostllitles again broke out. The list great Romonn general, Belisarius, was in command at Dara during the first years of this witr, and finally held the generai eommand. In ${ }^{5,3}$ he fought a great buttle in fr. of Dara and won a leeisive vletory. The ar at ear he suffered a defeat at Surs and in 532 the two powers arranged a treatr of peace whiels th 0 vanutingly called "The Endless Peace"; bit Justinian (who was now emperor) pald 11,000 pounds of golid for it. "Thic Eindless Peace" was so quickly coded that the year 540 found the Persian klag Chosroes, or Nushirvan, nt the head of an arny $\ln$ Syria ravaging the country and desporiling the cities. Antioeh, just restored by Justinian, after an earthquake whleh, in 526, had nearly levelled It with the ground, was stormedi. pillaged, half burned, and its streets drenehed Wlth bloud. The seat of war was soon transferred to the Caucasinn region of Colehis, or Iazica (modern Mingrella), and became what is known In histore ns the Lazic War [see Lazica], which was pro acted untll 561, when Justinian consuted to a reaty which pledged the cmpire to pay 30,000 pleces of gold annually to the Perian king, while the latter surreadered his claim to Colehls. But war hroke out afresh In $5 \% 2$ and continued tili 501, when the armles of the lhomans restored to the Persian throne snother Chosroes, grandson of the first, who had fied to them from a rebellion which deposed and destroved his unworthy father. Twelve years later this Chosroes became the most forml. dable enemy to the empire that it had encountered in the East. In successlve eampnigns be stripped from It Syria and Palestine, Egypt, Cyrcuica, and the greater part of Asla Minor, even to the shores of the Bosphorus. Taking the city of Chaicedon in 616, after a lengthy slege, he established a camp and army at that post, within sight of Constantlnople, and held it for ten years, insulting and threatening the imperist capital. But he found a worthy antagonist in lleraclius, who became emperor of the Roman East in 610, and who proved himself to be one of the greatest of soldiers. It was twelve years after the beglnuing of hli reiga before Heraclius could gather in haud, from the shrunken and exhausted empire, such resources as would enahle hlm to turn aggresaively upon the Persian cnemy. Then, In ihree campaigns, between 624 and 62\%, he completely reversed the sltuntion. After a decisive battle, fought Dccember 1, A. D. 62\%, on the very slte of ancient Nineveh, the royai city of Dastageri was taken and spolled, and the king, stripped of all hls conqucsts and hls glory, was a fugitlve (see Rome: A. D. 505-028). A conspiracy and an assassina. tlon soon ended hls career and his son made peacc. It was a lastling peace, as between $R_{2}$ mans and Persians; for elght years afterwards the Persians were in their death struggle with the warriors of Mahomet.-G. Rawlinson, The Seventh Great Oriental Monarehy.

Subjugation by the Afghans.-Deliverance by Nadir Shah. - The Khajar dynasty.-"At an early period in the rige of Islanilsm, the foliowers of Mohammed became divided on the ques. tlon of the succession to the callphate, or leadershlp, vacated by the death of Molammed. Some, who were in majority, bu-lieved that It lay with the descendants of the caliph, Moawlyeh, while others as firmly clung to the oplalon that the suecesslon hay with the sons of Alee and Futimeh, the danglter of the prophet, Ilassian and llousseln, and their descendants. In a des. perate conflet on the hanks of the Euphrates, nearly all the male descendants of the proplet were slaln [see Manometan Conquest de. : A. D. R80], and almost the entire Mohammelan peoples, from Indla to Spaln, thenceforward became Sunnees - that is, they embraced bellef in the surcession of the line of the bouse of Moa. wlyeh, called the Ommlades. But there was an exception tu this aniformity of belief. The Per. sians, as has been seen, were a people deeply given to rellgtons heltefs and myetlenl specatations to the polnt of ímatcelsun. Without any spparent reason many of them became Sheahs for Sbiahst. or believers In the chalms of the linuse of Alee and Fatimeh [sec Istam]. Suturally for centaries the Sheahs suffered ninch persecution from the sunnees, as the rulers of P.ersin, nutll the 15 th century, were generally sunuces. But this only stimblated the burnhig zeal of the sheths, anil in the end resulted in bringing about the Independence of Persia under a dynasty of her owa race. In the lath cenoury there resided at Ardebil a priest named the sheikh silifns, who was held in the highest re. pute for his boly life. Ihe was a lineal descenthant of Mush, the seventh Holy Imam. His suceess bronght recrnits to his stanchard, and at the head of 10.000 men he defeated the cbieftalu of Namnt, the general sent agnlast lim, and, marching on Tallecez, seized it without a blow. In 1499 Ismail, the founder of the Sefavean dynasty, was proclalmed Shali of Persla. Since that period, with the exception of the brief invislon of Mahmood the Afghan, Persia has wein an independent and at times a very powerfal nation. The estahishment of the

This monarch was one of the grat. est soverelgns who ever sat on the threuc of Persla. . . . It was the misfortune of Persia that the Sefavean line rapldyy degenerated after the death of Shah Ablyass.

Taking allventage of the low state of the Sefavean dynasty, Mah. moud, an Afghan chleftaln, Invaded Persia to 1 12:2 wlth an army of 50,000 men. PERU: Origin of the name. - "There was a chief in the uerrltory to the south of the Gulf of San Mlguel, on the Pacltic coust, named Biru, und this country was vlsited by Gaspar de Jorales and Franclsco Pizarro ln 1515 . For the next ten years Blru was the most southeru land known to the Spanlards; and the consetnence was that the unknown regions farther south, lncluding the rumored empire aboundling in goh, caue to the deslgnated as Blru, or Peru. It was thus that the land of the Incas got the name of Peru from the Spanlards, some years before it was actually discovered." - C. K. The aboriginal inhabitanta and their civil-ization.-The extraordinary paternal despotism of the Incas.-"The bulk of the population [of l'eru] is composed of the aboriginal Indiaus, the natives who had been there from tlme imne. morial when Anerica was dlscovered. The central tribe of these Indlans was that of the lincas, lnitibiting the reglon In the Sierra which has already been described as the Cuzco section. Such a conntry was well adapted for the cradle of aa imperlal tribe. . . The Inca race was origiaally divided lato slx tribes, whose lands are indicated by the rivers whlch formed thelr limits. Of these tribes the Yncas themselves had thelr original seat between the rivers Apurimac and Paucartampu, with the lovely valley of the Vllcamayu blsecting lt. The Canas dwelt in the upper part of that valley up to the Vilcafota Pase, and on the mountalng on elther alde. The Qulchuas were in the valleys rcund the head waters of the Apurimac and Ahancay. The Chancas extended from the nelghbourhood of Ayacucho (Guantanga) to the Apurimac. The Iluancas occupled the valley of the Kauxn up to the saddle of the Cerro lasco, and the Rucanas were in the mountalnous rgion between the central and weatern cordilleras. These slx tribes eventually formed the conquering linca race. Thelr language waa introduced lnto every conqucred province, and was carefully taught to the people, so that the Spanlards correctly called it the 'Lcngua General of Peru. Thls language was called Qulchua, after the tribe lnhabltligg the upper part of the vallers of the Pachachaca and Apurimac. Tiele territory conslstal chlefy of uplands covered with long grass, and the name has been derived from the nbundance of straw ln thls reglon. 'Quehuanl' is to twlst; 'quehuasca' is the particlple; nnd, ychu' is straw. Together, 'Quehuasca-Ychu, or twlsted straw, abbreviated into Qulchua. The name Was given to the language by Friar San Tomas In hls srammar published $\ln 1560$, who perhaps first collected rords nmong the Qulchuas and so gave it thelr namc, which was adopted by all subsequent grammarians. But the proper name would have been the Inca language. The aborighal people in the basln of Lake Titlcaca were called Collas, and they spoke a language $\begin{array}{r}\text { hich }\end{array}$ Is closely allled to the Quichus. ... The Collas were conquered by the Incas in very remote these, and their language, now iucorrectly called Aymara, recelved many Qulehna adilloons; for It orlglnally contalned few words to express abstruct hlens, and none for many thiags which are Indlspensable ln the first beglinnlngs of civllized lifc. One branch of the Collas (now called Ayinaras) was a savage tribe lnhablting the shores and lslands of Lake Tlicaca, called Lrus.

The linca aud Colla (Aymara) tribes eventually comblned to form the great armles whlch spread the rulc of liuca soverclgns over a much larger extent of country.
. In the huppy days of the lincas they cultivated inany of the arts, and had some practical kuowlelge of astronomy. They had domestlcated all the animals in their conntry capable of domestica. tion, understood minlng and the working of mctals, excelled as masons, weavers, dyers, and potters, and were gond furmers. They brought the sclence of admiaistration to a hlgh pltch of perfection, and composed lnaglnatlve sougs and dramas of conslderable merit. . . . The coast of Peru was lnhablted by a people entirely different from the Indlans of the Sierra. Therc are some sllght lndicatlons of the aborigines havlng been a dimlnutive race of tishermin who were driven out by the more civllized peoplc, called Iuncas. . The Incas couquered the coast valleys about a century before the discorery of America, and the Spanlards completed the de. struction of the lunca people."-C. R. Mark. ham, Peru, ch. 3.- "In the mlnuter mechanlcal arts, both [the Aztecs of IIcsico and the Incas of Peru] stiowed conslderable skill; but ln the construction of Important public works. of roads, aqueducts, canals, and in agricultury in all lts detalls, the Peruvians were much superior.

We shali took in vala in the bistory of the East for a paraliel to the ahooiute control exereined hy the Incas over their suhjects.

It was a theocracy more putent in its operation than that of the Jews; for, though the ranction of the law mlght be as great among the iatler, the law was expounded hy a huinan lawgiver, the servant and representalive of Divinity. Bitt the Inen was both the jawgiver and the faw. He was not merely the representative of Divinity, or, ilke the rope, its vicegerent, hut he was Divinity ltself. The vloiatlon of his ordinance was maerf. lege. Never was there a scheme of government enforced by such terribie sanctions, or whleh bore so oppressiveiy on the sinbjects of it. For It reached not oniy to the visibie acts, hat to the private conduct, the words, the very thoughts of tis vassals.

Under this extraordlnary pollty, a people advanced in many of the sociai refinements. weli skilled in manufactures and agriculture, were unacqualnted with money. They bad nothiug that deserved to be called property. They conld foilow no craft, couid engage in no iabor, no amusement, but much as was speciaily provided by iaw. They couidi not change thelr residence or thelr dress without a license from the government. They couid not even exercise the freedom which is conceded to the most ahject In otber countries, that of select. lng their own wives. The lmperative spirit of despotism would not allow tbem to be happy or miserabie in any way hut that establlshed by law. The empire of the Incas. - " The Inca empire had nttained its greatest extension mad power preeisely at the period of the discovery by Columbius, muler the reign of Huayna Capac who, rather than Ihuasear or Atahnalpa, shouli be called the last of the Ineas. Ills futher, the Inca Tupac Yupanqul, had pushed his conquesta on the sontb, beyond the great desert of Atacama, to the river Maule in Chlll: white, at the same time, Iluayna Capac himself hail reduced the powerful anil reflned kinglom of the seiris of Quito [see Ectiador], on the north. From their great dominating centrai platem, the Incas bad pressed down to the P'acitic, on the one hamd. and to tbe dense forests ố the Amazonlan valleys on the other. Thronghont this wide region aud over ail its nations, prinelpalities, and tribes, Huayna Capac at the beginning of the 16 th century ruled supreme. His empire extended from four degrees above the equator to the 3 th south. ern parailei of lattude, a distance of not far from $\mathbf{3 , 0 0 0}$ miles; while from east to west it spread. with varying width, from the Pacitic to the valleys of Paucartambo and Chnquisaca, an average distance of not far from 400 miles, covering un area, therefore, of more thau one million square miles, equal to nhout one-tbird of the total area of the United Btates, or to the whole of the United States to the eautward of the Miesimalppl River. In the leiande of Lake Titlearn, if tradition be our guide, were deveioped the gurms of Inca civilixation. Thence, it is maid, went the founders of the Inca dynasty, past the bilgh divlde between the waters fowing into the like and thowe failing into the Amaxon, and skirting the valley of the river Vijcanota for more than 200 milies, they estahished their seat in the boizon [vailiey] of Cuzco.

It is not only centrai In positlon, salubrious and productive, but the barriers whlch weparate it from the neighlikr. ing valieys are relatively iow, with pasees which may be traversed wish comparatlve ease; while they are, at the same time, readlly defensible. The rule of the first Inca seems not to have ex. tended beyond thin vailey, and the passes head. ing into if are strongiv forthed, showing the direction whence hustilitles were antlcipated In the early days of the empire, befnre the chlefs of Cuzco began thelr career of conqueat and aggre. gatlon, redueing the peopie of the boison of Anta In the north, and that of Urcos in the soluth.

The survey of the monuments of lerin hrings the conviction that the ancient population was not nearly so numerous as the accounts of the chronlelers would iead us to suppuse. From what I have suld, it will be ciear that but a small portlon of the colnintry is inhabitabie, or enpable of supporting a consliderahie number of people. The rich and productlve valleys and bolsones are hardly more than speeks on the map; and slthough ihere is every evidence that thelr capacities of productlon were taxed to the very intmost. stili their capacities were 11 mited. The suchent lnhabitants huitt their dweillngs among rough rocks, on arid slopes of hifis, and walled up their dead in caves and clefts, or buried them annong irreclaimable sands, in order to uthlee the scant cultivable goil for agrieniture. They excavated great areas in the deserts untli they renched moisture crough to support vegetation, and then brought guano from the islands to fertillize thase sunken gurdens. They terraced up every hill and mountain-side, and gathered the soil from the crevices of the rocks to fill the narrow plat: forms, untlif not a foot of surface, on which could grow a alngie stalk of malze or a single handful of quinoa, was left nimproved. Cblna, purhaps Japan and some portions of Indlia, may ationl s parallel to the extreme nitilization of the sull which was effected in Pern at the time of the Inca Empire. No dombthe Iulian population lived, as it stlli lives, on the sematiest fare, on the very minimum of foxd; but it haul nut then, as now, the ox, the hog. the goat, anl the sheep. nor yet many of the grains and fruits which contribute most to the support of dense populations

The present prpulation of the thrce states which were wholly or in part incluted in the Inca Empire - namely, Equalor, P'eru and ${ }^{2}$ o-livia-does not exceedi five millons. I think it would be safe to esthnate the population under the Inca rule at about double tbat mumer, or perhaps somewhere bet ween ten and twelve mil. lions; notwlthstanding Las Casas, the gomi. bur not very aceurate, Bishop of Chiapa tells us that. - in the Province of Peru alone the spamiards killed abrove forty millions of people.' They returned with twenty-six horas and thifty more men. With this force I'zarro continued his march aiong the sen-coust, which was well peopled; and on arriving at the bay of Gaayagull, he crossed over In the sinips to ibe isiaud of Puna. Hercadevastating war was raged with the unfortunate natives, and from Puna the conqucror proceetiel agaiu hin his shlps to the I'ruvinn town of Tumbez. The country Was in a state of coufusion, owing to a long and desolating war of succession between Huascar auil Atahualpa, the two sons of the great Ynca Huayua Capac, and was thus an easy prey to the uvaders. Huascar had been defeated and nuale prisoner by the generals of his brother, snd Xtahualpa was on hls way from Qalto to Cusco, the capital of the empire, to enjoy the frults of his victory. Fe was reported to be at Caxamarca, on the enatern alde of the mountain; and Pizarro, wlth hle emall force, eet out from Tumbez on the 18th of May, 1598. . . . The Int part of Pizarron march was southward from Tumbez, in the ralnless coant region. After crosalng a vast desert he came to Tangarars, In the fertile valleys of the Chlra, where he founded the clty of Ban Miguel, the site of which was afterwands removed to tho valley of Plurs. The accountant Antonlo Navarro and the royal treasurer Rquelme were left In command at San Mlguel, and Plzarro resumed his march In ecarch of the Inca Atahualpa on the 24th of September, 1532. He detached the gailant cavaller, Ilernando de Soto, lnto the fierra of Huancs. bamba, to reconnoltre, and paclify the country. He Soto rejolned the maln body after an absence of about ten daym. The brother of Atahualpa, named Tliu A tauch], arriver! as an envoy, with presents, and a measage to the effect that the Inca desired friendshlp whth the atrangers. Crosslng the vast desert of Sechura, Pizarro reached the fertlle valiey of Motupe, and marched thence to the foot of the cordilleras in the val. ley of the Jequetepeque. Here he rested for a day or two, to arrange the order for the ascent Ile took with hlm forty horse and alxty foot, Instructling Hernando de Soto to follow hlm wlth the maln body and the baggage. News arrived that the Inca A tainuuipa had reached the nelgh. borinood of Caxnmarca about three days before, and that he deslred peace. Pizarro pressed for ward, crossed the condilera, and on Friday, the 15th of November, $15 \% 2$, he entered Caxainarca wlith his whole force. llere he found excelient uccommodatlon in the large masonry buidilugs, aud was well satistied with the strategie position. Atahualpa was establisied In a large cump ontside, where Ilernundo de Soto had an Interview with him. Atahualpa announced ills lutention of visitling the Christian commander, and Pizarro arranged and perpetrated a biack act of treachery. He kept ail his men under arms. The Ynca, suspecting nothing, came Into the great square of C'asco h grand regal procession. He was auddeniy attacked and made prisoner, and his peopie were massacrcl. The Inca offered a ransom, whleit he described as gold enough to fili a room twenty-two feet long and seventeen wide, to a height equal to a man's stature und a half. He undertook to do this in $t$ wo montiss, and sent orders for the collertlon of goiden vases and ornaments In all parts of the emplre. Soon tite treasure legan to arrive, while A tahoalpa was deceived by false promises, and he begniled inls captivity by acquiring Spanish and learning to play at chess and cards. Meanwhile Pizarro aent nn expedltion under hia brother Ilernando, to visit the famous temple of Pachacamac on the coast; and tirce soldiers were anso diespatched to Cusco, the capital of the empire, to hurry forward the treasure. They set oat in February, 1533, but behaved wltis so mucir Imprndence and Insolence at Cusco as to endanger thelr own lives and the snccess of their misslon. Pizarro therefore ondered two officers of distinction, Ilernando de Soto and Pedro del Barco, to follow them and remedy the mlschief whlet they were dolng. On Euster cve, being the 14th of April, 1533, Almagro arrived at Caxamarca with a reinforcement of 150 spanlards and 84 horses. On the 3 rd of May it was orlered

The trifing affairs that occurred during the re. mainder of the season served rather as a zest to the piensures which engaged them than as a serious occupatlon.

No sooner were they settied in their winter-quarters than the English set on foot scenes of gayety that were long remembered, and often with regret, by the younger part of the iocai gentry. PHILIPPINE ISLANDS. - The archipul. ago known as the Philippine islands (named in honor of Philip 1I. of Spain, stretching, belwera the China Sea and the Pucitic Ocenn, through if degreres of intitude and $y$ of iongitude, almosi from Formost to Borners and the Moluceas, con tains, acerring to Spaulsh mecounts, tus habit. able islanla, besidies many handredis of small and Worthless rocky lisiets. Luzon and Minlanao, each larger than Irelani, are the most consider. able in size. The land area of the whole archlpelago is sakd to be about 114 , (M)0 synare miles The arehipelago was ilscovered by llagellint or Diagathars) in 1501, andi Spanlsh conturest und settlenent was begun in $\mathbf{1 6 6 5}$. Danila, the eapital, on the ishand of Limon, was fommed in 1.jal. It camot be waioi that the supre nacs of spain was erer mate complete, espechally if the sulu group of islanis, at the scinthern evtrenity of the arehipelago, is considered to belong in it. The Nlohammetian sultan of Sulu appars to be a quite sobstantial soverelgn, though the spas. lards chaim tribute \{rom him. In those inands, as thronghont the archlpelago, the natives are mostiy of the Dalayan race. Great tiad al variathons. however, apperr. The Tagals of Luzon and the Visayas or Bisayans of several other Ishands both Malayan in origin. are quite distinct peoples. These are the largest divisions of the Malay stock: but there are seversl others, besides mountalneer tribes of Negrito origin, and a considerable immigrant population of Chinese. Yore extensively than in other regions of the easteru world, the natlves have accepted the Chilstian rellglon. Of the mode in which the Spanlards establighed welr rule, nud in whteli they have exercised it, Dr. Jngor, w•lo publlished an account of traveis in the Phliipplites, in 1873, has this to say: "The character of the people, as well as thel political dispositlon, favoured the occupancy. There was no migh!y power, no old dynasty, no influential priestly domination to overcome, no tralitlons of national pride to suppress. The ratives were elther henthens, or recently proselytized superficially to Islamism, add lived under numerous petty chiefs, who ruled them despotlcally, made sar upon one another, and were easily subdued. . .. The Spaniards llmited the power of the petty chlefs, uplucid slavery, and ribolished hereditary nobility nad diguity, substituting ln its place ar nristocracy created by themselves for services renderel to the state; but they carried out all these changes verr gradually and cautiously. The old usages and laws, so long as they did not interfere with the natural course of government, remained untoncherl." In lts enrly days. Dr. Jagor believes that "' the Spanish rule in these islands wns toimays a mild one, not becuse the laws, which treated the ladlans dike children, were womderfully genthe, but because the causes did not exlst which cansed such scandalous cruelties in Spanish America and in the colonies of other matlons. It was fortunate for the natires that their isiands possessed no wealth, in the shape of preclous stones or costly spices. In the ea-lier days of maritime trufte there was little possibility of ex. porting the numerous agrlcultural productions of the colony : and it was scarcely worth while, therefore, to make the most of the land. The few Spaniards who resided ln the colony fonnd such an easy method of naking money iu the comaerce witlt China and Mexlio, that they heid theaselves aloof from nil economic enterprlses.

Taking into consideration the wearisoure and dangerons navigatlon of the time, it was, mureover, impossible for the Spmaiards, upon whom their too large possesslons in America airealy in,posed an exhausting man tax, to maintain a strong armed force in the Philipplnes. The subjuction . . Waz chisotly nccompllshed by the assistance of the nonastle orders, whose mis. sionaries were taught to employ extreme pris. dence and patience. The Philippines were thus primeipully won by a peaceful conquest. The taxes laid upon the natives were so trifling that ther 5 did not sufflee for the administration of the culoay, The difference was covered by yearly contributions from Mexico. The extortions of uacoasclentious officinls were by mo means conspinnons hy thelr absence. Cruelties. however, such as were praetised in the American inluing districts, or in the mannfactures of Quito, hever ocrurred in the Philipplnes. . . The only tax Which the Iadians pay is the poli-tax, known as the" "Tributo,' which originally, 300 years ago, aamonted to one dolinr for every pair of adults.

13y degrees the tax has been raised to two hul one.slxteenth dollars. .. Besldes this, every a an has to give forty days' labour every yar to the siate. . . . The Ilttic use, however, that is mind. $n$ these services is shown hy the fact that any one can obtain release from them for a sum which at most is not more than three dollars.

No personal eervice is required of women." The writer found. however, a most wieked and cruel oppression of the native peasantry being exerelsed, at the perlod of his sojourn, in the nianagement of the monopoly of tobacco culture which the Spanish goverument maintalns. By selzure of thelr ticles, by compulsion of their Inbour by defrauding them of payments for the prodnct, even at prlees which are plitances, arhitrarily fixed., the wretched peasants were heartlessly abused. There liave leacn many revolts, but none " of any great danger to the Spanlsh rule. The dlscontent has always been confined to a slngle dintrict. us the natives do not form a united nation: noitlier the bond of neommon speedl nor $n$ general laterest biuding the different tribes together. .. . Italf-castes nnd creoles nry not, as they former! were in America, excluded from all oftlelai ajpolutments: but tirey feel hurt and injured tisough the crowds of plare-lunters whidh the frequent ehanges of Illistcrs send to Manilla." "The jutluence, also," wrote Dr. Jagor, "of the American element, is is at lenst vislble on the horizon, and will bu nore noticeable when the relations lncrease be. twren the two rountries. At preseut they nre very slender. . . . In :ropertion as thit navi. gation of the west coast oi Americs exirnds the loflueuce of the Ansericuu element over :ne South Sien, the captivating, mugle power which the gront republic exercises orer the spanish colonies will not fnil tomake ltself felt also in the Philippiser. The Amuricans are evidently destined to bring to a full sevelopment the germis originated by the Spanlards." All taings considered. it is the opinlon of this carefal observer and exundid writer, that "credit ls certainly due to spain for levvine bettered the condition of a poople who. though comparatively speaking hlyluy civilizend, yet, being coutinually distructed ly petty wars. had suak into a disordered nud uinenltivated state. The inhabitants of these Inrauifini inlands, upon the whole, may well be consldered to hise lived ns comfortably during the last hundred yurs, fimotected from all external enemies and gov, rucd by mild laws, as those of ayy other tropical country under native or Eurojean sway.

PHOCEANS, OR PHOKEANS, The.'The clizens of Phocea had been the last ou the coast-line of Ionia [sec Asia Minon: Tue Greek Colonies] to setile down to a condition of tranquillity. They had no building. ground but a rocky penlasula, where they found so little apaec over which to spread at their ease that this very circumstance made them a thorough people of sailors. In aecordance with their local situation they had turned to the waters of the Pontus, established settlements on the Dardauelles and the Black Sea, and taken part in the trade with Egypt. Here however they were namble to hold their own by the side of the :Lilesians, . . . and the Phoceans nccordingly saw themselves obliged to look westward and to follow the direction of Chalcidian navlgation. . . . It was thus that the Ionian Phoceans came into the western sea. Being forced from the first to accustom themselves to long and dlstant voyages, Instead of the easy summer trips of the other maritime citle, they bechme notably boid and heroic sallors. They began where the rest left

They built their ships long and slim, in order to increase their agility; thelr iner. chant vesseia were at the same time men of war.

They entered those parts of the Adriatic which most abound in rocks, and circumaatl. gatel tive islands of the Trrrhenian sea in spite of the Carthaginian guard ships; they sought out the bays of Campania and the mouths of the Tlber and Araus; they proceeded farther, part the Alpine ranges, aiong the coast as far as the mouth of the Rholanus, and finaily reached Iberla, with whose rich treasures of preclous metais they had first become acquainted on the const of Italy $\qquad$ During the perion when Iouia began to he hard pressed by the Lydians, the Plocreans, who had hitherto contented themselves with small commercial settlements, in their turn proceeded to the foundation of cithes in Gaul and lberia. The western writers state that before the time of the Trojan war Belus had conquered and suhjugated the isiand of Cyprus, and tiat Citium beionged to Beius. The vietorions Belus is the Baaj of the Pheaicians. The date of the Trojan war is of no importance for the settlement of the Phenicians in Cyprus, for this statement is found in Vircii onif. Slore Inportant is the fact timt the settlers hrought the Babyionian cuneiform writing to Cyprus.

Tite settie ment of the Sidonians In Cyprus must thercfore have taken piace before the time in winich the aiphabetlc writing, i. e. the writing speciaity known as Phenician, was $\ln$ use $\ln$ Syria, and hence at the iatest before 1100 B . West, which must have been augmented by the fact that they conrezed not only products of the Byrian land to the Euphrates and the Nile, hut could also carry the goots whlch they obtalned in exchange in Egypt to Babylonla, and what they ohtalned beyond the Euphrates to Egypt. At the same tlme the fahrica of Babylon and Egypt roused them to emulation, and called forth an Industry among the Phenlcians whlch we see producing woven stuffs, vessels of clay and metal, ormamente and weapons, and becoming pre-eml nent in the colouring of stufs with the liquor of the purple-tish whlch are found on the Phenlchn coasts. Thls lndustry required above all thlngs metals, of which Babylonia and Egypt were no less in need, and when the purple.dsh of thelr own coasts were no longer sutilelent for their extenslve dyelng, colouring-matter had to be obtained. Large quantities of tbese tish produeed a proportlonately small amount of the dye. Copper-ore .. found In Cyprus, gold in the island of Thasos, and purple-fish on the consts of Hellas. When the fall of the kingrom of the IIftltes and the overthrow of the Amorite prinecs in the south of Canaau augmented the numbers of the population on the coast, these cltles were no longer content to obtain those possesslons of the lslands hy merely landing and making exchanges whth the inhabitants. Iuter. course whth seml-harbarous tribes must be protected hy the sword. Good harbours were needed.

Thus arose protectlag forts on the dlstant islands and coasts, which recelved the ships of the native land. . . . In order to obtnin the raw materinl necessary for their lndustry no less than to carry off the surplus of popultion, the Phenleinns were brought to colonise Cyprus, Ihodes, Crete, Thera, Melos, Ollarus, Samothrace, Imbros, Lemnos and Thasos. In the bass of Latonin and Argos, In the straits of Eubura, purple-flsh were found in extroordinury quan-

We may eonelude that the Phenichas must lave set foot on Cyprus almont the veas 1250 B . C., and on the lslands and coasts of Hellas about the yrar 1200 B. C. A. a consequence, good deal of banking or mnney-iending buslnam was done by the wealthy members of the great Corporatlon of Merchant anil Shlp-owners. The Phcenlclans had an evll reputation with the other natlons of the Mediter. ramenn for sharp practlces, and the custom of leailing money at interest was considered, of conree wrongly, a Pharnlclan lnventlon, though it is ponalhle that they ied the way in the general substitutlon of loans at interest for the more primitive use of antichretle piedges. $\qquad$ the Greek the name Phcealchin seems to have caley up the ame sort of assoclation as those which still cling to the namc of Jew ln circles which make no boast of tolerancc; and it is probahie enough that the firat, like the second, yreat race of wandering traders was icses acrupulous in its dealings with alicns than compa rhots.

Into the past that the historian loves. When we wlsh to make the men of Tyre aud Sidon live again, wheu we try to see them as they moved in those seven or eight centuries during which they were supreme

In the Mediterranean, we have to turn to the Greeks, to Ilerodotus and Ilomer, for the detalls of our pleture; it is in thelr pages that we are toid how these eastern trader made themselves indiepensahle to the balf-ravage races of Europe.

The Pheniclans carrled on thels trade in a leisureiy way. It consisted for the most part $\ln$ exchanglng thelr manufactured warea for the natural produce of the coutries they visited; it was la conformity with the splri of the tlme, and, although it lnspired distrust, at was regular enough in its methods. Storles told by both Homer and Herodotus show them to us as abluctors of women and children, but in the then state of the world even deeds llke thuse deacribed would soon be forsutten, and after a tlme the falthless trader wirild be readmitred for the sake of the wares they brought.
Beeing how great their servicea were to the clvillzatlon of Greece and Rome, and how aimirable were those virtues of industry, activity, and spicndld courage that they brought to their work, how is it that the classic writers speak of the Phcenlcians with so little sympathy ? ani why does the modern hilstorian, In apite of hls brealth and freedom from hlas, timi lt diticult to treat them even with justice? It is becausc, In spite of thelr long relations with them, the peoples of Greece and Italy uever learnt to really know the Phenlclans or to understand tielr languagc, and, to answer the second questlon, because our modern hlstorians are harilly better luformed. Betwecn Greece and llome on the one hand and Phoencia and Carthage on the other, there was a harricr whleh was never beaten down. They truded and fougit, but they uever concluded a lastlng and cortlal peace; they mate no effort to compreheme cach other's nintire, but retalned thelr mutnal. lguorant autlpa. thy to fhe very end. . That fuil justice has never been donc to the Phenlclans ls partly their own fault. They were moved neither hy the pasion for truth nor by that for beaty; they cared only for galn, and thanks to the condition of the world at the time they cuterel upon the scene, they conld satlsfy that iust to the fuil. Iu the barter trade they carrledi on for so many centurics the advantage must always have been for the more clvillzed, and the Phueniclaus used and ahused that advantagc. Tyre and Sldon acqulred prodiglous wealth; the minds of their people were cxcluslvely occupied with the useful; they were thlnking always of the lmmediate protit to themselves in every transaction; and to such a people the world readily denjes justicc, to say nothlng of lndulgeuce.

No douht lt may be sald that it was quite without their goodwill that the Phœalclans belped other nations to shakc off barbarism and to supply thenselves with the material of clvilized llfe. That, of course, is true, but it does not diminlsil the lmportance of the results obtalned through their means. Phanlcla appropriated for herself all the inventions and reclpes of the oid eastern clvilizations and by more than one happy discovery, and cspecially by the Inventlon of the alphabet, she added to the value of the treasure thus accumblated. Whether she meant lt or not, she dill, as a fact, devote her cnergies to the dlssemina* lon of all this preclous knowledge from the very lay on which she entered into relations with these tribes on the Grecian lslands and on the contineut of Europe whlch were as yct strangers to political life.

PISA, Italy: Origln of the city.-Early growth of lts commerce and naval power, Conquest of Sardinia.- Stralogand others have glven l'las n Grerlantionein. "Situated near the sea upon the trlaugle formed In past maes, by the emfluence of the two rivers, the Arai) and the Aurehio; she was highty allupteil to commerce and uarlgation; particularly lin times when these were carried out with small vessels. We consequenty find that she was rich and incrontile in early times, and frequcuterl ly all the barhurots natlons.

Dowa to the cinl of the tifternth century, almost all the navigation of the nations of Europe, as well as those of Asla and Ifriea, which kept a correspondence and commerce witit the former, was llmited to the Nediterranean, Adrlatle, Archipelago, and Euxine seas; nad the tirst three Italian republles. Plsa. Genoa, and Venlce, were for a long tlme mistrusses of it. Pisa, as far hack us the yeur 0.5, was the principul city of Tuseany, nccoriling to latitprimul. In the beginning of the eleventh century. that is, In the year 1004, we find In the Plasin annalo. that the latter waged swar with the Lucchess an:i beat them; thls is the first enterprlse of on: Italian clty against another, which proves that she already acted for herself, and was in great part, If not wholly, liberated from the dominlon of the Duke of Tuscany. In the Pisan annals and In other authors, we meet with a seriem of enterprises, ni..ay of which are obscurely related, or perhaps exaggerated. Thus we find that $\ln$ the year 1005, in an expedition of the Pisans against the maritime city of IVeggio, Piss being left unprovided with defenders, Musetto, king, or head, of the Saracens, who occupied Sardinia, seized the opportunity of making an invasion: and having sacked the city, departed, or was driven out of it. ... It was very natural for the Pisuns and Genoese, who must have been in contiuual fear of the piracies and Invasions of the harbarians as long as they occupied Sardinia, to think seriously of exterminating them from that country: the pope himself sent the Bishop of Ostin in haste to the Pisans as legate, to encourage them to the enterprise: who, joining with the Genoese, conquered Bardinia [1017] hy driv. ing out the Saracens; and the pope, hy the right he thought he possessed over all the kingdoms of the earth, invested the Pisans with the domlulon; not howerer without exeiting the jealousy of the Genoese, who, as they werc less powerful in those tines, were obllged to yield to force. The mutual nccessity of defence from the common enemy kept them united; the harbarians having disembarkedln the year 1020 In Sardinia under the same leader, they were again repulsed. and all their treasure whieh remained a booty of the conquerors, was conceded to the Genoese as an indemnity for the expense."- L. I'isa had astonished the shores of the Menditerraucan by the number of ressels and galleys that sailed under her flag, hy the succor she had given the ernsuders, by the fear she had inspired at Constantinople, and hy the conquest of Sardinia and the Balearie Isles. Pisa wus the first to lutroduce into Tuscany the arts thut ennoble wealth: her dome, her hapthstery, her leaning tower, and her Campo Sunto, which the traveller's eye embraces at one glance, but doe's not weary of beholding. had been sue. cessively hullt from the year 1063 to the end of the 12th century. These chefs-d'cuvre had anlmated the genius of the Pisans: the great architects of the 13 th century were, for the most part, pupils of Nicolas di Pisa. But the moment was come in which the ruln of thls giorious repuhlie was at hand; a deep-ronterl jealousy, to be dated from the eonquest of Sardinia, had fre. quently, during the last two centuries, armed against eaeh other the republies of Genoa and Pisa: a new war between them broke out iu 1282. It is diftleult to comprehend how two simple elties could put to sea such prodigious tieets as those of Pisa and Genoa. In 128: Glnlcel Slsmondi commanded 30 l'isan galleys, of which he lost the half in a tempest, on the 9th of September; the followiag rear, Rosso Sismondi commanded 64; in 1284, Guido Jacia communded 24, and was vanquisherl. The Pisans bal recourse the same year to a Venetian almiral. Allerto Horosini, to whom they intrusted 108 galleys: but whatever efforts they made, the Gencese constantly opposed a superior fleet. This year [1284], however, all the male popula. tlon of the two repuhlics seemed assemliked on their vessels; they met on the 6th of Aligust, 1284, once more before the Isle of Miloria. rendered famous 43 years before by the victory of the Pisans over the same enemles [whin the Ghibelline friendship of Pisa for the Eilucrur Frederiek II. Valor was still the same, lint for. tuae had changel sides; and a terrible divaster effaced the memory of an anclent victory. While the two fieets, ulniost equal in numher, werciengaged, a reinforcement of 30 Gennosi gallys, driven impetuously hy the wind, struck the Pisan fleet in flank: 7 of their veasels were in. stantly sunk, 28 tuken. 5,000 eitizens jerished In the battle, and 11,000 who were taken prisoners to Genoa preferred death in captivity rather than their repuhlie shonld ransom them, by giving up Surdinia to the Genoese. This prodiginus lose ruined the maritline power of lisa; the same nautical knowledge, the same spirit of cinter. prise, were not transmitted to the next genera. tion. All the fishermen of the coast qultted the Pisan galleys for those of Genoa. The ressels diminished ia number, with the means of manning them; and Plan could no longer pretend to be more than the third maritime power in Italr. While the repuhlie was thus exhasted hy this great reverse of fortune, it was attac.eta ivy the leagne of the Tuscan Guelphs; and a powerful eltlzen, to whom it had intrusted itself, betrared bis eountry to enslave it. Ugollno was connt of the Gherardesca, a mountainous country simated along the const, between Leghorn and I'iombino: he was of Ghlbeline origin, but had marriel bis sister to Giovan dl Gallura, chief of the (iuelphs of Pisa and of Sardinia. From that time he artfilly opposed the Guelphs to the Ghitrelines." The Pisuns, thinking him to be the persou best ahle to reconcile Pisa with the Gnelphl league " named Ugolino eaptaln.general for ten yeas: and the new communder did, Inderel, bhtain peace with the Guelph league; hut not till be had caused all the fortresses of the I'isan tern. tory to be opened hy hls ereatures to the Luc ehese and Florentines.

From that time he sought only to strengthen als own dexpotism." In July, 1248, there was a rising of the lisans agalnst him; his pulace was stormed and lurnel and he, his two sons and two gramisons, werc dragged out of the tlames, to be liocked lu a tower and staryed to death - as told in the verse of Dante. "The victory over count C'golino, achleved hy the nost ardiont of the Ghibelines, redoubled the enthusinsm and audacity of that party; and soon determined them to rinew the war with the Guelphs of Tuseany. . . . Gindo de Nontefeltro was named caprain. jle had acquired a hlyh reputatiou iu defending Forli against the Freneh forces of Charles of Aajou: and the repuhlie had not to repent of its choice. PLEBEIANS, OR PLEBS, Roman.-"We are now prepared to uaderstaad the origia of dtatinct body of peopie which grew up alongaide of the patriclans of the Roman state during the Intter part of tha regai period and after its close. These were the pietelans (plehs, 'the crowd,' cf . 'pleo,' to All) who dwelt in the Roman territory bath within and without the wall of the city. They did not beiong to the old clans which formed the three original tribes, nor did they have any real or pretended kinghip with them, nor, for that matter, with one another, except within the ordinary limite of nature. They were, at the outset, simply an 111 -assorted mass of residenta, entirely outside of the orderly srrangement whlch we have described. There were three sources of this multtude: I. When the city grew strong wough, it began to extend its boundarics, and first at the expense of the cantons nesrest it , between the Tiber and the Anio. When Rome conquered a canton, she destroyed the walls of Its eitadel. Its inliahitants were sometimes pernilted to occupy their vil. lages as before, and sonuetimes were removed to Rome. In elther cuse, Itome was henceforth to be their place of meeting and refuge, and they themseives, instcad of being reduced to the condition of slaves, were attached to the state as non-eltizens. II. The relathon of guest-friendshlp so called. In anclent times, conld be entered into bet ween indiviluais with thelr fsmillics and descendauts, and niso between Individuals and a state, or between two states. Irovislon for such guest-friendshlp was undoubtelly made in the treatics whieh bound together Ihome on the one side nad the varlous Independent citles of its nelghborhood on the other. $\qquad$ The commercial advnntages of Rome's sltuation attracted to it , in the course of time, a great many men from the Latln cities in the vicinlty, who remalned permancatly settled there without acquiring Roman citizenship. III. A third constltuent element of the 'plebs' was formed by the clicnts ('the histencrs,' cluere') [see Clientes]. In the beginning of the long struggle between the patriclans and plebelans, the cllents are represented ns having sided with the former. Afterwnul, when the lapse of the had weakened their sense of dependence on their patrons, they became, as in borly, identitied with the plebeinns." -A. Tighc, Derelopment of the Ruman Constitu. tion, ch. 3.-Originally hnving no politicai rights, the Roman plebelans were foreed to coutent themselves with the privilege they enjoycd of engaging in trade at rome and aequiring property of their own. But as $\ln$ time they grew to outannher the patrieians, while they rivalled the latter in wealth, they struggled with success for a share in the government and for other rights of elizizenship. In the end, political power passed over to them cotirely, and the lioman constitutlon became almost purely democratic, before it perished in anarchy and revolution, giving way to inıperlallsm. -1 . The anclent eovereigns of Poland were hereditary. They ruied mont deapoticalis, and with a roil of irm; and, although they acknowledged them. selves vassala and tributarles of the German em. perors, they repeatedily hroke out into open relimi. flon, asserted their nosolute independence, and waged a auccessful war againat thelr masters. Boleslaus, minn of Mieczislaus I., took advantage of the troubies which rose in Germany on the death of Othn III., to possess himseff of the Marehes of Lusatia and Budlanin, or Bautzene Which the Emperor Ilenry II. afterwarde granted him as tiefs. A. D. 1333-1572. -The union with Lithur ania and the reign of the Jagelion dynasty.Conquest of Prussia and its grant to Grandmaster Albert.- Cinsimir ini, or Casimir the Grent, the last Pollsil king of the Pinst iline, aseemded the throne lu 1333. "Polish historians eelebrate the goxid deeds of this king for the internai prosperity of Pulani-his introduction of a legal coxle, his just admilaistration. his encouragement of learuing, and his munificence in founding clurches, sehools, and hospitals. The great external question of liss reign was that of the relations of Poland to the two contiguous powers of Lithuanin and the Teutonic Knights of Prisssln and the Baltie provinces. On the one hand, Polund, as a Cluristian country, bad stronger ties of connexlon with the Teutonic Knights than with Lithumnia. On the other hand, ties of ruee and tradition connected Poland with Lithuania; and the ambltions poilcy of the Teutonic Kinghts, who almed at the extension of their rule at the expense of Poland and Lithu. ania, and also jealously shut out both eountriea from the Baltle eoust, nnt so from the ndvantages of eommerce, turied to increase the sympathy between the Poles and the Lithuanians. A lappy solution was at length given to this question. Cusimir, dying In 1Bi0, left no issue and the Crowin of Poland passed to his nephew Louis of Anjou, at tlint time also King of Hungary [see Ilcivarr: A. I). 1301-1442]. Louis, oceupled with the affairs of Hungary, neglected those of Poland, aad left it exposeti (1) the attacks of the ithuanlans. He be. came exeessively unpopular among the Poles: and, after his death in 13i4, they proclaimed IIdivige [his daughter] Quevn of Poland. in 13*6, a marriage was arranged between this princeas and Jagellon, Duke of UthuaniaJageilon agreeing to be baptized, and to eatabIinh Chrlatanity among hle bitherto heathen subjecta. Thus Poland and Lithuanta were united; and a new dynasty of Poilsh kliggn was founded, called the dynaty of the Jae': wam The ruie of this dynasty, under seven succet. sive kings ( $1886-1572$ ) conatitutes the fiourishlag epoch of Polish history, to which at the present day the Poles look fondis back when they would exalt the giory and greatness of their country.

The effect of the unlon of Poland aind Lithunnla was at once felt in Europe. The frist Jagelion, who on his baptism took the name of Claudishin II., and whom one fancles as still a sore of mugh haif heathen by the slde of the beautiful Polish Hedrige, spent his whole rriva (1386-1434) in consolldating the union and curning it to account. He defended Lithuanta against the Tartar hordes then moving west wivd brfore the impuise of the conquering Tamerlane. But his chief aetivity was against the Tcutunic Kilghts. He engaged in a series of wars against the knights, which ended in a great rle. tory gained over them at Tannenhurg in 1410 . $13 y^{\prime}$ thils Fletory the power of the Lnights was broken for the time, and their territories planeil at the mercy of the Poles. During the relga of Uladisiar Ill, the second of the Jagelions ( $1434-$ 144), the knights remained submisolve, und that monarel, was able to turre his arms, in conjunction with the Hungarians, against a more formidahie enemy - the Turks, then begloning their Invasions of Europe. Uladisiav III. liaving been slain in battle against the Turks at Varna, the Teutoaic Knights avalled themselves of the confusion which followed. to try to res. cover their power. By this time, howiver, their Prusslan subjects were tired of their rule; Dantzic, Elbing, Thom, and nther towns, as weil as the landed proprletors a.id the elergy of various districts, formed a league ngalnst them: and, on the accession of Casimir IV., the thitrl of the Jagellons, to the Polish throne ( $1+t i$ ), ail Western Prussia revoited from the kniglits :nd placed Itself under his protection. A terrific war ensued, wh a brought to a elose fa 1466 ky the peac us norn. By this notathe treaty, the independent sovereignty of the Tratonlc order in the countries they had lield for two centurles was extingulshed - the whole of Western Prussia, with the eity of Marienhurg. and other distriets, belng annexed to the Pidish erown, with guarantees for the preservation of their own forms of administration; aull the kniglits being allowed to retain certain dlistricts of Enstern Prussia, only as vassals of Polaul. Thus Podand was once more in possession of that necesslty of lis existence as a great Eirmpeaa state -a seaboard on the Baitic. Exulting in an acqulsition for which they had so long strig. gied, the Poles are sald to bave danced with joy as they looked on the blue waves and could call them their own. Casimir IV., the hero of thls Important passage in Polish blstory, diel in 1402; and, though during the reigns of his sic. cessors - John Xlbertue (1492-1501), and Alexander (1501-1506)-the Pollsh territorias suf. fered some diminution in the direction of Inussia, the fruits of the treaty of Thorn were enjoveci io peace. In the reign of the sixth of the Jagetlonider, however-Sigismund I. (1506-1:47)the Teutonic Kaights made an attempt $w$ throw of tieir allegiance in Poland. The attempt was sumie in singular circumstances, and ied to a ainguiar conclusion. The grand.master of the Teutunic onder at this time was Albert of Brandenturg . . . a descendant [in the Anspach iranch of that antute Hohenzoilern family which in 1411 had possessed Itseif of the Marquiste of Hrandenhurg. Aibert, carrying out a wheme entertained $h ;$ the jreceding grand-mas. ter, refosed homage for the Prusgian territorien of his order to the Polish king Aigismund, and even prepared to win back what the order had inst by the treaty of Thorn. Sigismund, who was uncio to Aibert, defeated his schemes, and proved the superiority of the I'olish armies over the forces of the once great hut now effete order. Albert found It his lest prifcy to submit, and this hedid in no ordinary fasinion. The Reformation was then in the frst flumb of it progress over the Continent, and tise Teutonlc Order of Knights, long a practical anachronism in Europe, wailosing even the slight support it stil had in surrounding juolic opinion, as the new doctrines changed men's lileas. What was more, the grand-master himself imhibed Protestant opin. fonsand was a discipie of Luther and Meiancthon. He remived to bring down the fatbric of the order sbout his cars and construct for himseif a secu. iar principaity out of its ruins. Many of the knighta shared or were gained over to his views; to he marided a princens, and tiscy tools themweives wives - ali beconing l'rotestants togetber, with the exception of a few tough oid knights Who transferred their chapter to Mergentheim In Wartemberg, where it remained, a curious relic, tili the time of Nispolenn. The secuiarization was furmaliy compieted at Cracow in April, 15i5. There, in a square ivefore the royal paiare, on a tirnne embiazoned with the arms of Poland and Litiunania - a white eagie for the onr. and a mounted kaight for the other- the Pollsh king sigismund received . . . the banner of the order, the knigita standing liy and agreeIng to the surrender. In return, Sigismund em. braced the fate grand-master as Duke of Prussia, granting to inim and the knigits the former poscesaions of the order, as secuiar vassais of the lolish crown. The remainder of Sigismuni's reign was worthy of this beginning: and at no time was Poland more flourishing than when his son. Sigismund 11., the seventh of the JagelInnidse succeeded him on the throne. During the wise reign of this prince (1547-1572), whose tolerant policy in the matter of the great religuus eontroversy then agitating Europe is ant his least titie to credit, Poland lost nothing of her prosperity or her greatness; and one of its last transactions was the consummation of tha union between the two nations of Poland and Lithuania lyy their formai incorporation into one kingrom at the Diet of Luhif (Juiy 1. 1569). But. alus for Poiand, this seventh of the Jageiinnitie was aiso the last, and, on his deati in 15\%. Poland entered on that career of misery and diecline, with the reminiscencea of which her natne is now associated. "- Poland: her IIist. and Prompect: (Wealminater Reo., January, 1855).

Poland renewel its privilepe in ly mont comprehenalve form. At a time when European monarcha gradually deprivel the great feudat barons of all shsre fa the culminlutration of the linw.... the Polish mobles deatroyed the laat ventiges of the royal prerugative.

In the year 1578 the kings lust the right of bentowing the patent of nobility, which was made over to the diet. The kingi had no share in the legislation, as the lawa were made tn every laterregnum. As mon at the thrune became racant by the death of a klag. ani: inefore the diet appolnted a aucceasor, the noties of the provinces ansembled to examine lutu the adiministration of the late king and hils mellute. Any law that was not approved of could be repraled and new arrangements proposed, whith beesme law if the voten of the diet were manimusus. Thla unanimity was most enslly obtuivel when a law threatened the ludividual or when the royal prerogative wan to be decreased.

The king hal no share in the dinimistra. tion, ani even the mont urgent circumstancen did mut justify his neting without the co.operation of the senate [whleh conalsted of 17 archbishops and bishops, 33 palntines or woiwodes - warleaders' - who were governors of provinces or palatinntes, nod 85 castellans, who were originally croumanders in the royal citles and fortressem, lint who had become, like the winiwoles, gulte lullyendent of the king]. The senate itself was de. priveri of its power, nad the representatives of the milley seized upon the highest authority.

They nione held the public oftices and the highinst ecclesiastlcal benetlecs. They filled the wats of the judges exelusively, and enjoyed perfect inmunlty from taxes, duties, de.
Lanther great evil from which the republic suf. fured was the abuse of the liberum veto, whirh, dumperons as it was in itself, had become law in llise." This gave the power of veto to every sinste voice in the assemblles of the nobles, or in the mertings of the deputies who represeuted thein. Nuthing could be adopted without entire unanimity; and yet deputies to the diet were allowed bo diseretion. "They received definite invructions as to the demands they were to liring forward and the concessiuns they were to make.

One step only wis wanting before manimity of votes became sn linposslbility, nad attarelhy was completely organizeti. Thls step their deputles to oppose every tise ussion at the diet, tiil thelr own proposala had been heard and acceded to. Before long, several deputiea re-celved the mame Inatructlons, and thus the diet was in fact disoolved hefore it was openced. Other deputies refunel to consent to any propomala, if thome of their own province were not accepted; so that the veto of one depity in a aingle tranactlou could bring ahout the disolu. than of the entire dlet, and the exercise of the royal authorlty was thus suspended for two yearn [since the dlet could only be held every other year, to last no longer than a fortalght, anit to sht during dayllght, obly).

No law could be passed, nothing could be rewilvel upon. The army received no pay. Provlacen were demolated by enemlea, and none came to thelr alic. Juatice Nns delayed, the coinage wan dehased; in short, Poland cened for the next two yeara to exlat ai a state. Every time that a rupture oncurred in the det it was lookel on an a uational calamity. A. D. 1763-1773. -The First Partitlon and the events which led to it. - The respective shares of Russia, Austria and Prusaia.-.In 1762, Catherine II. ascended the throne of Russia. Everybuily knows what umbition flled the mind of thls woman; how she longel to bring two quarters of the giobe nader iner rule, or under her intuence; und how, above all, she was bent on playing a great part in tise affisirs of Western Europe. Poland lay between Europe and her emplre: she was bound, therefore, to get a frm footing in Poland. . . . On the Icath of Augustus III., therefore, she would permit no foreign prince to mount the throne of Polund, but seiected a natire Poish noblenam, from thos numerous class of Russinn hirelings, und cast her cye upon a ncplicw of the Czartoriskys, Stanislans Poniatowsky, a former hover of her own. Above all things she desired to perinetuate the chronic anarehy of Polani, so as to c.asure the weakness of tial klngdom.
further deslre in Catherine's mind arume from her own peculiar position In Russia at that thee. She had deposel her Imperial (ionsort, dieprived her son of tho succession, and nseendell the throne without the shadow of a titie. During the first years of iser reign, therefore, her sltuation was extremely critical." Sine desired to render herseif popular, nad "she could tind nothing more $\ln$ accurdance with the dispositlon of tio IRussians $\qquad$ than the protection of the Greek Catholics in Poland. Incredible as it may seem. the frantic fanaticism of the Polisis rulers had legun, in the preceding twenty or thirty ycurs, to limit and partlaliy to destroy, by harsh cuactments, the nncient rights of the Nonconformists.

In the year 1768 a complalnt wns aldressed to Catierine hy Konisky, the Greek Bisiop of Mohilev, tiat 150 pariahes of his difocese hat been forcibiy Lomanised by tho Polish autionities. At Vlenna, ever since Peter III. had renounced the Austrian alifance, a very unfavourahie feel. Ing towards Rusia prevalied. .i. The result Wha that Austria came to no definite resolutlon, hut returned a suilen and evasive repir. It was far otherwise with Frederick 11. of Prusala. That energetic and ciear-aighted atatesman had his fauits, hut indecision had never been one of them. He agreed with Catherine in desiring that Poland shouid remain weak. On the other hand, he falied not to percelve that an excenaive growth of Russla, and an ahlding Russian occupation of Poland, might seriousiy threaten him. Nevertheless, he did not waver a moment. He needed powerfui aliy.... Ruad aione was left, and he unhesitatingly seized her ofered hand. . It was proposed to him that six arti. cies shouid be slgned, with certain secret provisions, hy which were wecured the election of a native for the throne of Polan.'. the maintenance of the Liberum Veto (i. e., of the anarchy of the nohles), and the support of the Nonconformists; whilie it was determined to prevent in Sweden aif constitutional reforms. Frederiels, who wss called upon to protect the Weat Prusian Lutherans, just as the ald of Catherine had been sough. by the Greek Bishop of Mohliev, made no ohjection. After the death of King Augustus III. of Poland, in October, 1768, Frederick signed the above treaty, April 11th, 1764. This understanding bet ween the two Norihern Powers caused no smail degree of excitement at Vienna. It was immediately feared that Prussia and Russia would at once welze on Poilsh provinces.
This anziety, however, was aitogether premature. No one at 8 St . Petershurg wished for a partition of loiand, hut for increased influence over the entire Poilsh realm. Frederick 11., for hle part, didi not alm at any territorial extension, but would abandon Poland for the time to liussis, tinat he might secure peace for his country by a lussian aillance. ... Dleanwhlie, matters In Poland procecledi accordling to the wishes of Catherinc. Iler path wis openad to iter hy the Poies themseives. It was at the cail of the Czartoriskys [a wealthy and powerful Pollsh family]. that a Kusslan army corps of 10,000 men entered the country, occupied Warsaw, and put down the opjosing party. It was under the same protection that Stauislaus Poniatowsky was unanimously clected King, on september 1st, 1784. But the Czartoriskys were too clever. They intended, after having become masters of Poiand by the luep of llussia, to reform the eonstlition, to estabilsh a reguiar adininistrstion. to strengthen the Cruwn, and finaliy to bow the Ilussians out of the kingiom." The Czartoris. kys were soon at lisue with the Russian envoy, who commanded the support of ali their poilticai opponents, together with that of ali the religious Nonconformists, both in the Gruek Church and among the Protestanta. The King, too, went over to the lather, bought by a liussian subsing. But this liussian confederation was speedily broken up, when the question of granting civil equality to the Nonconformists came up for settlement. The llussians carried the measure thangh by forfe ant the act crabodying it was signed March 5, 1708. " It was Just here that the contisgration aroee which irst brought fear-

He knew Cith. erine weil enough to be sure that she wonlif not end the war now begun with Turkey, without some mistrial gain to herself. It was equslly pialn that Austria would never leave to llusala territoriai conquests of any great extent in Tur. key. . . The ailghtest occurrence might divide ali Europe into two hostlie camps; and Germany would, as usual, from her central poshion, have to suffer the worat evils of a generai war, Frederick II. was thrown Into the greatest ans. lety by this danger, and he meditated contlan. aily how to prevent the outhreak of war. The main question in hls mind was how to prevent st breach between Austria and Kussia. Catherine wanted to gain more territory, while Austria couid not allow her to make any conquists ln Turkey. Frederick was led to inquire whether greater compliance might not be shown at Vienna, if Catherine, instead of a Turkish, were to take a Polish province, and werc aiso to agre, on her part, to an annexation of Pollsh territory by Austria ?" When this scheme-put forward as one origlnatling with Count lyumr, Savon diplomatist - was broached at St. Peters burg, it met with no encouragement; but subse. quentiy the same plan took shape in the uind of the young Eimperor Jonejh II., and he persmaded hls nuticer, Marin Theresa, to conseut to it. Negotiations to that end were opened with the Ikusslan court. "After the foregoing proceed. inga, it was casy for IRussia and I'russia to come to a speedy agreement. On Februnry 1\%. 1782 , a treaty wnis signed aliottling Weat I'russla to the King, and "he Poilsh territories esst of the Ineiper and Duna to the Empress. The partition of Poland had been acco ipished in a dark periol of the preceding ivnlity. It was almost universally regsnied in West, $\mathrm{F}^{\prime}$ Europe on a mistake and a crime. It Wis a mistake to have removed the barrier which s'pmeted ilussia from the West; it was a crime is lavo sarriticed a free and brave parophe wo the minhit ion of a relentless autocrat. . . The cause of freedom was lientifled with the cause of Poland, 'and freedom shrieked 'when Poland's champion 'fell.' The statesmen, however, who parcelled out Europe monget the victorfout autocrats in 1815 were Incapable of appreciatling the feellnge which had inspired the Bcotch poet. Cantlereagh, indeed, endeavoured to make terms for Poland. But he did not lay much strese on his demands. Ile contented himself with ohtalnIng the form of constitutional government for the Poles. Poland, constltuted a klngiom. Whoee crown wat to paan by heredlary successlon to the Emperors of Itusain, was to be governed hy a reskient Viceroy, assiaterl by Poliah Diet. Constantlne, who had alxilcuted the crown of IRusia in his brother's farour, was Viceroy of Poland. . . . He was residing at Waranw when the news of the glorious dags of July reached Poland. The Poles were naturaliy affected hy the tidings of a revoiution which had expelied autocracy from France. Koscluskothe hero of $1: 84$ - was thelr favourite patriot. The cadets at the Miitary Bchool in Warsaw. excited at the news, drank to his memory. Conatantlne thonght that young men who dared to drink to Konciusko deserved to be flogged. The cadets, learning his decislon, determined on resisting it. Their determination precipitated a revolution which, perhaps, under any circumstances, would have occurred. Every circumstance which could justify revolt existed in Poland. The Constltution provirled for the regufar assembly of the Het: the Diet had not been assemhieni fur tive ycars. The Constitution declared that taxes should not be imposed on the liwles without the consent of thelr representa. thees: for fifteen years no budget had been submitted to the liet. The Constitution provided for the personal liberty of every i'ole: the Grund Inke seized and Imprisoucd the wretcheri Polea at his pleasure. The Constitation hai given Poland a representative governnuent: and Constantine, in deflance of it, had played the part of an autocrut. The threat of punishment, which Constantine pronounced against the military callets, merely llghted the torch which was already propared. Elghteen young men, armed to the terth, entered the Grand Duke'a palace and forced thelr wisy into his apartments. Constantine had just tlue to escape hy a back staircase. Ilis flight sarel bis life.

The insurrectlon, conmmeneed in the Archduted paiace, soon spread. Homic of the Pulish regiments passed over to the Insurgents. Constantime, who dispiayed little courage or ahllity, withdrew from the clty; and. on the morning of the 30th of November [ 1830 ]. the Poles were in complete possession of Warsaw. They persuaded Chlopicki, a generai who had served with distinction under Suchet in Spain, to place hlmself at thelr head.

Haised to the first positton in the State, his warmest counseliors urged him to attack the few thousand men whom Constantlne stiil commanded. Chloplcki preferred negotlat. Ing with the fiusslans. The negotiatlon, of course, falled. . . . Chlopickl-hls own wellIntentioned effort having failed - resigned hls office; and hls feilowcountrymen invested Itadziwil with the command of their army, and placed Arinm ('zartoryskl at the head of the Government. In the meanwhlie Nichoias was steadiiy proparing for the contest whirl was before him. Henry of Burgundy waged war for seven years with his Moorish nelghbors; then went crusading to Palestine for two years. On his return in 1105 he made common cause with his hrother-In. iaw and hrother-ad venturer, Coint Raymond of Gallicia, against the suspected intention of King Alfonso to declare his hastard, half-Moorish son, Sancho, the heir to his dominlons. "This penceful arrangement had no result, owing to the death of Count Raymond in 1107, followed hy that of young Sancho at the hat tle of Uciés with the Moors, in 110s, and finally by the death of Alfonso VI. himself in 1109 . Thic king's death hrought about the catastrophe. He left all his dominions to his legitimate daughter, Urraca, with the result that there wos five yenrs of flerce Aghting between Henry of Burgundy, Alfonso Raimundes, the son of Count Raymond, Alfonso I. of Aragon, and Queen Urraca. . . A While they fouglit with each other the Mohammedans advanced. . On May 1, 1114, Count Henry dled, leaving his wifc Theresa as regent during the minority of his son Affonso Henriques, who was hut three years old. Theresn, Who made the aneient city of Guimaraens her capital, devoted all her energies to building up her son's dominions into an independent state; and under her ruie, while the Christian states of Spain were torn hy internecine war, the Portuguese began to recognize Portugal as their country, and to cease from calling themselves Gallielans. This distinction hetween Portugal and Gallicia was the first step towards the formation of a nationai spirit, whieh grew into $n$ desire for national independence." The regency of Theresa, during which she was engaged in many contests, with her half-sister Urraca and others, euded in 1128. In the later years of it she provoked great discontent by her infatuntion with a lover to whom she was passionately devoted. In the end, her son headed a revolt which expeiled her end, her son headed a revolt which expeiled her from Portugal. The sou, Affonso Ifeuriques, assumed the reins of government at the age of seventeen years. In 1130 ine began a series of wars with Aifonso VII. of Castile, the nim of Which was to estahlish the indencndence of Portugal. These wars were cnded 'a 1140 hy an agreement, "In consonnnce with ticc ideas of the times, to refer the great question of Portugucse independence to a chivnirous contest. In a great tournament, knowu as the Tourney of Valdevez, the Portuguese knights were entirely successfui over those of Castile, and in consequence of thicir Victory Affonso Menriques assumed the title of King of Portugai. Thls is tine turning. polnt of Portuguese history, nad it is a curious faet that the independence of Portugal from Galificia was achleved hy victory in a tournament and not in war. UP to 1136, Affonso Henriques had styled himseif Infante, in imitation of the title horne hy his mother; from 1136 to 1140 he styled himself Principe, and in 1140 hc frst took the title of King." A little before this time, on the 25 th of July, 1139, Affonso had defeated the Moors in a famous and much magnifled hattle namely that of Orik or Ourique - "which, until modern investigators exnmined the facts, has been considered to have laid the foundations of the independence of Portugal. Chroniciers, wo centuries after the battle, solemnly asserted that five kingr were defeated on this occasion, that 200,000 - ohammedans were siain, and that after the victory the Portuguese soldiers raised Af-

Tonso on their shields and hailed him as king. This story is ahsolutely without authority from contemporary ehronicles, and is quite as much a fiction as the Cortes of Lamego, which has been invented as sitting in 1143 and passing the constitutional laws on which Vertot and other writers have expended so much eloquence. It was not until the modern school of historians arose in Portugal, which examined documents and did not take the statements of their prelecessors on trust, that it was clearly pointed out that Affonso Henriques won his crown by his iong struggle with his Christian cousin, and not hy his cxpioits against the Moors."-1i. Y. Stephens, The Story of Portugal, ch. 2-3.-"' The long reign of Affonso I., an almiost uninterrupted period of war, is the most hriliant epoch in the history of the Portuguese conquests. Lisbon which had aiready under its Moorish masters be. come the chlef elty of the west, was taken in 1147, and became at once the capital of the new kingdom. The Tagus itself was soon passed. Large portions of the modern Estremadura and Aleintejo were perminnently annexed. The distant provinces of Aignrve and Andalucia were overrun; and even Sevilie trembled at the successes of the Portuguese. It was in vain that Moorish vessels salled from Africa to clastise the presumption of their Christian foes: their ships were routed of Lisbon by the vessels of Affonso; their armies were crushed by a victory nt Santarem [1184], the last and tarem [1184], the last, and perhaps the most glorious of the many trumphs of the King.
Every conquest saw the apportionment of lands to be held hy military tenure among the conquerors; nnd the Church, which was here essentialiy a militant one, received rot only an cndowment for its religion hut a rewnrd for its sword. The Orders of St. Milchael and of Aris [St. Benedict of Avis] which were founded had a religious ns well ns a military aspect. Their members were to be distinguished hy their piety uot less than hy their cournge, and were to emulate the oider hrotherhoods of Jerusalem and of Castife. .. Sancho I. [who succeeted his father Affonso in 1185], though not adverse to military fame, endeavoured to repnir his country's wounds; and his reign, the complement of thnt of Affonso, was onc of development rather than of conquest. . . The surnamic of El Povoador, the Founder, is the indication of his greatest work. New towus nnd viliages arose, new wcalth and strength werc given to the rising country. Affonso II. [1211] continued whst ancho had begun; and the enactment of laws humnne and wise, are a testimony of progress, and an honouralle distinction to his reign." But Affonso II. provoked the hostility of an arrogant and too powerfui clergy, and drew upon himself sentence of excommunication from Rome. "The dlvisions and the weakness which were caused hy the contest between the royal and ecclesiasticni authortty hrought misery upon the king. dom. The reign of Sancho Il. [who succeeded to the throne in 1223] wns more fataily intluenced hy them even than that of his father.

The now familiar terrors of excommunication and in. terdict were foilowed [1245] hy a sentence of deposition from Innocent IV.; and Sancho, weak in character, and powerless before a hostile priesthood and a disaffected people, retred to end his days in a cloister of Castile. The successor to Sancho was Affonso III. He had intrigued for hla brother's crown; he had received the support of the priesthood, snd he had promised them their reward in the extension of their privlleges"; but his administration of the government was wise snd popuiar. He dled in 1279 . "The tirst period of the history of Portugal is now closed. Up to this time, each reign, disturhed and enfeebied though it may have been, had ndded something to the extent of the country. But now the iast conquest from the Moors bad been won. On the south, the impassable barrier of the ocenn; on the east, the dominions of Castlie, confined the kingdom. . . .'The crusadlng days were over. . . The relgn of Denls, who ruled from 1279 to 1325 , is at once the parailel to that of Affonso I. in its duratlon and importance, the contrast to it in being a period of internai prog. ress lnstead of forelgn conquest.

That Denls should have been ahie to accomplish a.s much as ine dld, was the wonder even of hls owis age. ... Successlve reigns stili found the country progressing."-C. F. Johnstone, Historteal Abstracts, ch. 4.

A. D. $1415-1460$. - The taking of Ceuta. The exploring expeditions of Prince Henry the Navigator down the African coast." Klng John [the First] had married an Engllsh wife, Phllippa Piantagcnet - a grand-daughter of our Kligg Edward III., thoroughly Engllsh, too, on her mother's slde, and not without a dash of Seottlsh blood, for her great-great-grandmother was a Comyn of Broghan. Klng John of Portugal was married to hls Engilsh wife for twentreight years, they had five noble sons and n daughter (who was Duchess of Burgundy and mother of Charles the Bold); and English Lahits nnd usages were adopted at the Portuguese Court. Wc tirst meet with Prince Henry and hls hrothers, Edwnrd and Peter, at the bed-side of thelr Engilsh mother. The king had determined to nttack Ceutn, the most important seaport on the Moorish coast; and the threc young princes were to rerelve knighthood if they bore theinseives manful:y, nnd if the piace was taken. Edward, the ellest, was twenty-four, Peter twenty-three, and Henry just twenty oue. He was born on Mareh 4th, 1394 . There were two other hrothers, Jolnn and Ferdlnand, but they were still too young to beararms. Thelr mother had caused three swords to be made with whlch they were to be girt as knlghts; and the great fleet was loeing assembled at Lisbon. But the Queen was taken lll, aud soon there was no hope. Ilusband and sons gathered round her deathbed. When very near her end she asked: 'How is the wind?' she was tolif that it was northerly. 'Then,' she said, 'You wili all saii for Ceuta on the feast of St. Jnmes. A few minutes afterwards she diexi, and hushand and sons salled for Ceuta on St. James's day, the 25th of July, 1415, according to her word. . . . Ceuta was taken after a desperate fight. It was a memorabie event, for the town never ngain passed into the hands of the Moors unto this dar. . . . From the time of this Ceuta expeditlon Prince Henry set his mind stendfastly on the discovery of Guines aut on the promotlon of commercial enterprise. During his stay at Ccuta he coilected much lnformatiou respecting the African coast.

His first objects were to know what wns beyond the farthest cape hitherto reached on the coast of Africa, to open commerciai reiations with the people, and to extend the Christian falth. Prince Henry had the capaclty for taking trouble. He undertook the task, and he never turned aside from it untli lie died. To be ciose to his work he came to live on the promontory of Sagres, nenr Cape St. Vineent, nnd not far from the sea. port of Lingos. He was twenty-four years old When he came to iive at this secluded spot, in December, 1418 ; and he died there in his sixty. seventh year. . . . He establlshed a schooi at Sagres for the cuitivation of map-drawing and the sclence of navigatlon. At great expense he procured the services of Mestre Jacome from Majorca, a man very learned in the art of mavigation, as it was then understood, and he erected en observatory, . . . My readers will remember that during the time of the Crusades a great order of kalghthood was estahlished, called the Templars, which became very rich and powerful, and held vast estates in most of the countries of Europe. At last the kings becnme jealous of their prosperity and, in the days of our Edward IT. and of the French Philip IV., their wealth was confiseated, and the orler of Knlghts Templars was sbolished in all countries except Portigal. But King Dionyslus of Portugal refnsed eithcr to rob the knights or to abolish the ordcr. In the year 1818 he reformed the order, and changed the name, calling it the Order of Christ, and he encircled the white cross of the Templars with a red cross as the future badge of the kniglits. They retained thelr great estates. Prince Henry was appolnted, by his father, Grand Master of the Order of Christ in the year 1419 . Ile could imagine no nohler nor more worthy employment for the large revenues of the Order than the extension of geogruphlical discovery. Thus were the finds for lits costly expeditlons supplied by the Order of Chivalry of whlch he was Grand Master. When Prince Henry first began to send forth expeditions along the coast of Africa, the farthest point to the south ward that luad heen sighted was Cape Bojador. The discovery of the extreme southern point of Africa, and of a way thence to India, was looked npon then cxactly as the discovery of the North Polc is now. Fools asked what was the use of it. Half-hcarted men said it was lmpossihle. Officials said it was impractical. Nevertheless, Prince Henry sald that it could be done, and that, moreover it should be done. In 1434 he consldered that tue time had come to round Cape Bojador. He selected for the command of the expedition an esquire of his honseholl numed Gh Eannes, who was accompunied by John Diaz, an experienced seaman of a seafaring family at Lagos, many of whrse members became explorers. Prince lifenry told them that the curreut which they feared so much was strongest at a distance of about threa to five miles from the land. IIc ordered them, therefore, to stand out bollly to sea. It was a place before terrible to all men,' hut the Prinee told thom that they must win fame and honour by following lisinstructious. They did so, rounded the Cape, and landed on the otlier side. There theg set up a wooden cross as a sign of their discovery.

The Prinec now equipped a larger vessel than had yet heeu sent oit, ralled a varinel, propelled hy oars as well as sitils. Many were the eager voluntcers among the courtiers at Sigges. Prince ILenry's cup-bearer, named 11 . fonso Gousalves Baitlaya, was selected to cummand the expedition, and Gil Eannes - lie who first doubled Cape Bojador - went with it in a smaller vessel. They sailed in the year 1438 , and, having rounded Cape I3ojador without uny hesitation. they proceeded southward alung the coast for 120 mhles , until they reached anestuary called by them Rio d'Ouro. During the five following Jears Prince Henry was much cngaged in State afiairs. The disastrous expedition to Tangiers took place, and the lmprisonment of his young brother Ferdinand by the Moors, whose nohle resignation under crud lnsults and sufferings until he died at Fez, won for him the title of the 'Constant Prince.' But in 1441 Prince Fienty was sble to resume the despatch of vessels of diccovery. In that year he gave the command of a mall shlp to his master of the wardrobe, Antam Gonsalves.
He [Gonsalves] was followed in the same year hy Nuño Tristram. . . Tristram dlecoverell a headland which, from lts whiteness, he named Cape Blanco. . The next discovery was that of the lsland of Arguin, south of Cape Blaneo, which was first visited in 1448 hy Nuño Tristram In command of a carnvel. . . . The next voyage of discovery was one of great importun se, le-cause it passed the country of the Moors, and, for the first time, entered the land of the Negroes. Dinis Dinz, who was selected for thls enterprise by the Prince, salled in 1446 with tho resolition of beating all his predecessors. He pussed the mouth of the river Nenegal, and was surprised at finding that the people on the north lounk were Moors, while to the south they were all blachs; of a tribe called Jaloffs. Dlaz went as far as a point which he called Cabo Verde. In the following Jears several expeditions, under Lanza. rote and others, went to Arguln and the Senegal; until, in 1455 , an important voyage under Priace lienry's patronagc was undertaken hy a young Venetlan namod Alvise (Luigi) Cadamosto.
They sai' d on March 22, 1455, and went first to Porto $s$ uto and Madelra. From the Cinary Islands they miade sail for Cape Blanco, boldly stretching across the intervenlng sea and luing for some tlme quite wut oi sight of land. Caitsnosto had a good deal of intercourse with the Negrocs to the sout'l of the Senegal, and eventually reached the mouth of the Guinhh wheace he set out on his homeward voyage. The actual extent of the discoveries made during the life of Prince IIenry was from Cape Bojador to heyond the month of the Gambia. But this was only a small part of the great servlce he performed, not only for hils own country, but for the whole cliviIlsed world. He organised discovery, tralned up & generatlon of ahle explorers, so that from his time progress was conthuous and unceusiag.

Indicate by their names the nature of the produets of those lands, and the klnd of trutic. Under King John II., after an Inactive periol of eight or ten years, Dlego Cam (1484) pushed forward fearlessly to latltude $22^{\circ}$ south, ereetlng at intervals on the shore, pliars of stone, whieh asserted the rights of his soverilgn to the newly. fouad land. For the first tlme, perhsps, in history, men had now sailed under a new firmament. They lost slght of a part of the oll celestial constellations, and were awe-struek with the splendours of the Southern Cross, and hosts of new stars. Each sueeessive commander aimed at outdolng the deeds of hils preder cessor. Imaginary perils, whleh had frightened former sallors, spurred the Portuguese to greater duriag. Bartholomew. Dlaz, In 1486, was sent in command of an expedltion of tilree sitips, with directioas to sail till he reaehed the southernmost headiand of Africa. Creeping on from eape to eape. he passed the furthest point touched hy Diego Cam, and reaehed about $29^{\circ}$ south lat. tude. Here driven out of his eourse by rough weather, he was dismayed on again making land to tind the eoast trending northward. He had doublell the Cape without knowing lt, nnd only fouad it out on returnlng, disheartened by the results of his voyage. Raising the hanner of St. Philip on the shore of Tahie Bay, Diaz named the headland the Cape of Tempests, whleh the kiag, with the passage to Indin In mind, elianged to that of the Cape of Good IIopc. By a eurioas coincidence, In the same year Covillan [see Anyssinia: 15-19th Centcries] . . . learnt the faet that the Cape of Good Hope, the Lion of the Sea, or the IIead of Africa, could be reached aeross the Indlan Oeean."-J. These were the same doetors who had told him that Columhus would certainly sueceed ia reaehing India, and advlsed him to send out a secret expedition in antielpation, whieh was actually done, though it falled through want of resolution $\ln$ its captaln. Eneountering the usual difficnlties, tempestuous weather and a matiaous erew, who eonspired to put him to death. De Gama sueceeded, Novemher 20, in doubling the Cape. On Mareh 1 he met sevea small Arab vessels, and was surprised to fiad that they used the compass, quadrants, seaeharts, and 'had divers maritime mysteries not short of the Portigals.' With joy he soon after recovered slght of the northern stars, for so long auseen. He now bore away to the north-east, and on May 19, 1498, reached Calieut, on the Malahar coast. The eonsequences of this voyage सere to lic last degree important. The cum-merclal arrangements of Europe wert completely dislocated; Venice was deprived of her mercantile supremacy [see Venice: 15-17TR Centuries]; the liatred of Genoa was gratitied; prosperity left the Itaiian towns; Egypt, hltherto supposed to posscss a preeminent alvan. tage as oiferlng the best avenue to India, suridenly lost lier position; the commerclal monopolies so long in the hands of the European Jews were hroken down. The diseovery of Ameriea and passage of the Cape were the first steps of that prodiglous naritime development soon exhihited by Western Europe. And since commercial prosperity is fortiswith followed hy the production of men and concentrution of wealth, and, moreover, impiles an energetie in. tellectual coalition, It appeared before long that the three centres of population, of wealth, of inteileet, were shifting westwardly. He did not retarn till the followling October; and thic revolution had been completed beforc lils retirn. On the 2tth of Aagust the troops at Oporto determined on establishing a constitutlonal government, and appointed a provislonal Junta with this object. The llegency which condacted the affairs of the country at Liston denuunced the movement as a nefarlous conspiracy. But, bowever acfarious the consplracy might be, the defection of the army was so general that resistance became impoesible. On the 1st of September the liejetey

Iasued a prociamation promising to con vene the Cortes. The promise, however, did not stop the progress of the insurrection. The Junta which had been constltuted at Oporto marched at the bead of the troops upon Lfison. The troops at Lisbon and in the south of Portugai threw off their allegiance, and established a Juntn ot their own. The Junta at Lisbon were, for the moment, In favour of milder measures thau the Juntan Oporto. But the advocates of the more extreme course won their ends. The Oporto troops, surrounding the two Juntas, which had been biended together, compelled them to adopt the Spanish constltution; in other words, to sanction the election of one deputy to the Cortes for every 80,000 persons iniahitling the country.

When the revolution of 1880 had occurred John V1., King of Portugal, was quietly ruilng In his transatlantle dominlons of Brazil. Portugsi had been governed for thirteen years from Rio de Janclro; and the absence of the Court from Lisbon had offended the Portuguese and prepared them for clisage. After tho mischtef bad been done John VI. was persumied to return to his nativo couniry, leaving his eldest son, Dom Pedro, Regent of Braall in hls ahsence. Before setting out on hls journey he gave the prince pubiic lnstructlons for his guidance. which practically male Brazil independent of Portugal; and he added private directlons to the prince, in case any emergency should arise winicis should make it Impracticabte to preserve Brazii for l'ortugal, to place the crown on his own head, and thus save the great Transatlantic territory for the ilouse of Braganza. Leaving these parting Injunctions with his son, John VI. riturned to the oid kingdons which he had de. screni seariy fourteen years before. He reached Liston, and found the Constitutlonnists in undisputed posscssion of power. Ile found aiso that the action of the Constltutionailsts In Portugai was caiculated to Induce Brazil to throw of the authority of the mother country. The Cortes in Portugal insisted on the suppresslon oi the supreme trihunals in Brazil, on the estabisisment of Provinclal Juntas, and on the reiurn of the legent to Portueal. The Brazilians decilined to miopt measures which they considered ruinous to taeir dignity, and persuaded the legent to disibey the orders of the Cortes. POSTAL TELEGRAPH, The. - " The States of the continent of Europe were the first to appreciate the advantages of governmental controi of the telegraph. . . . From tile beginning they rssumed the erectlon aud management of the telegraph innes. It may be said that $\ln$ taking controi of the telegraphis the monarchlal governments of the Oid World were actuated as much by the desire to use them for the malntenance of authority as by the advantages wilch they offered for the service of the peopie. To a certain exient this is doubtiess true, but it is oone the less true that the peopie ihave reaped the most solid benefits, and that the tendency has been rather to iiberalize government than to maintain arbitrary power.

The greatest progress and the best management have ailike been shown $\ln$ those countries where the forms of yovernment are most iiberal, as in Switzerland and Brigium. . . . In Great Britain the telegrapin was at first controiled by private parties.

In Juiy, 1868, an act was pussed 'to enabie Her Majesty's Postmaster-Generai to acquire, work, and maintain electric teiegraphs.' The rate for messages was tixed througiont the kingdom at one sliiling for twenty words, excluding the addiress nad signature. This rate covered deilvery within one mile of the office of aldress, or withiu its postal deilivery." The lines of the existing telegraph conmpanles were purchased on terms which were commoniy heidid to be exorbitant, and Pariament, changing lis originai lntention, conferred on the post-office departnent a monopoly of the tmegraphs. Thas "He British postal telegraph was from the first handicapped by an enormous interest chsrge. and to come extent by the odlum whlch aiwary attaches to a legai monopoly. But notwith. standing the exorbltant price paid for the tele. graph, the investment has not proved an unprofitable one." - N. P. Hill, speech in the Senate of the U. POSTAL UNION, The. - The Postal Union, which now embraces most of the ciri. A treaty was concluded at that thinc, which estabiished unlform rates of postage ( 25 centimes, or 5 ecnts, on half-ounce letters), between the countries becoming partles to it, and opening the opportunlty for other states to join In the same arrangement. From year to year since, tire Postal Union has beeu whlened by the accession of new slgnatories to the treaty, untll very few reglons of the globe where any postal system exlsts ile now outside of lt. The late accesslons to the Postal Union have been North Borneo, the German East African Protectorate, and the British Australaslan Coionies, In 1801; Natal and Bosnia-Herzegovina in 1892; the South African Republlc (Transvaal) in 1893. Augustus, following his usuai iine of policy, retained the aucient name of 'Praetoriae Cohortes,' while he eatirely changed their character. He levied in Etruria, Umbria, ancient Latium, and the old Colonies, nine or ten Cohorts, consisting of a thrusaad men each, on whom he bestowed double pay and superior privileges. These formed a permanent corps, who acted as the Iuperial Life Guards, ready to overawe the Senate, and to suppress any sudden popular com-motion."-W. Ramsay, IVanual of Roman Antiq., ch. 12. - The Pretorian Guard had been quartered, during the reign of Augustus, and during the cariy ycars of the reign of Tiberius, in small bartaeks at various points throughout the city, or iu the neighboring towns. Sejanus, the intriguing favorite of Tiberius, being commander of the formidable corps, established it in one great permanent camp, " beyond the north-eastern angle of the city, and between the roads which sprang from the Viminai aad Coiline gates." A. D. 312.-Abolition by Constantine. $-{ }^{\prime \prime} \mathrm{By}$ the prudent measures of Docletian, the numbers of the Pretorians were insensibiy reduced, their privileges aboiished, and their place supplied by two fathful legions of Iliyricum, who, under the new titles of Jovians and Herculians, were appointed to perform the service of the imperial guards. . . They were old corps stationed at Illyricum; and, according to the ancient cstablishment, they each consisted of 6,000 men. They had acquired much reputation by the use of the plumbata, or darts loaded with icai. "-E. Gibbon, Deeline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 13, with foot-note.- Restored und augimented by Maxentius, during his brief reign, the Preetorians were finaliy abolished and their fortified camp destroyed, by Constantine, after his victory in the civii war of A. PRETORIAN PRAEFECTS.-"As the government degenerated into military despotism, the Pretorian prefect, who in his origin had been a simple captain of the gunrds, was piaced not only at the head of the army, but of the finances, and even of the law. In every depart. ment of admiuistration he represented the person, and exereised the authority, of the emperor. The first prefect who enjoyed and abused this inmense power was Plautianus, the favourite ninister of Severus. . . They [the Pretorian priefects] were deprived ly Constantine of ail military command as soon as they hail ceased to lead into the fied, under tincir immudiate orlers, the flower of the Ronan troops; and at leagth. by a singular revolution, the eaptains of the guards were transformed into the civii magis. trates of the provinces. Accordiay to tile plan of government iastituted by Diocletian, the four princes had each their Pretorian prafiect; and, after the monarchy was once more nnited in the person of Constantine, he stili continued to create the same number of four priffects, and intrusted to their care the sume provinces whieh they nlready administered. 1. The Prefect of the East stretched his ample jurisdiction " from the Nile to the Phasis and from Thrace to Persia. " 2 . The important provinees of Pannonia. Dacia, Macedoaia, and Greece, acknowledged the authority of the Profeet of Illyricum. 3. The power of the Prefect of Italy "extended to the Dauube, and over the isiands of the Mediterrancean and part of Africa. "4. The Prefect of the Gauls comprehended under that piural denomination the kindred provinces of Britaiu and Spain, aad . . . to the foot of Mount Athas.

Rome and Constantinople were ulone excepted from the jurisifiction of the Pretoriau prafects. . . . A perfect equality was established between the diguity of the two municipal, and that of the four Pretorian prefects. "E. PRESTER JOHN, The Kingdom ofAbout the middie of the eleveuth century stories began to be circulated In Europe as to a Christian nation of north-eastern Asia, whose sovereign was at the same time king and priest, and was known by the name of Prester John. Amid the mass of fables with which the subject is encumbered, It wouid seem to be certain that, In the very beginning of tho century, the Khan of the Keralt, a tribe whose chief seat was at Karakorum, between Lake Balkal and the northern frontler of China, was converted to Nestorian Christianity - it Is said, through the appearance of a saint to him when he had lost his way in hunting. By means of conversation with Christlan merchants, he aequired some elcmentary knowledge of the faith, and, on the application of Ebed-Jesu, metropolitan of Maru, to the Nestorian patriarch Gregory, clergy were sent, who baptized the king and his subjects, to the number of 200,000 . Eled-Jesu consulted the patriarch how the fasts were to be kept, since the country did not afford any corn, or anything but flesh and milk: and the answer was, that, if no other Lenten provisions were to be had, milk should be the only diet for seasons of abstinence. The earliest western notice of this nation is given by Otho of Freising, from the relation of an Armenlan hishop who visited the court of pope Eugenlus III. This report is largeiy tinctured with fahle, and deduces the Tartar chief's descent from the Magi who visited the Savlour in His cradle. It would seem that the Nestorians of Syrin, for the sake of vying with the boasts of the Latlos, delighted ln lnventing tales as to the wealth, the splendour, and the happiness of their convert's klngdom; and to them is probably to be ascribed an extravagantly absurd letter, in which Prester John ls made to dilate on the grentness and the riches of hls domlnions, the magnificence of his state and the benuty of hls wives, and to offer the Byznntine emperor, Manuel, if he be of the true faith, the ottice of lord chamberlnin $\ln$ the court of Karakorum. In 1177 Alexander III. was lnduced hy reports which a physiclan named Philip had brought hack from Tartary, as to Prester John's desire to be received lnto communlon with the pope, to address a letter to the king. recommending Phillp as a rellgious instructor. But nothing ls known as to the result of this; and In 1202 the Keralt kingdom was overthrown by the Turtar eonqueror Genghls Khan. In explanation of the story as to the union of priesthood with roynlty In Prester John, many theories hare been proposed, of which two may be mentloned here: that $1 t$ arose out of the fnct of a Nestorian priest's hnving got possession of the kingdom on the denth of a khan; or that, the Tartar prince's title being compounded of the Chlnese 'wang' (king) and the longol 'khan,' the first of these words was confounded hy the Nestorians of Syria wlth the name John, nd the second with 'eohen' ( n priest).

The identifieation of Prester John's Lingdom with Abysslnla was a inlstake of Portuguese e xplorers some centuries later."-J. C. Robertson, llist. of the Ch. Church, bk. 6, ch. 11, arith foot note (r. 5).

PRINCEPS SENATUS.-"As the title of lmperator conferred the highest mllitary rank upon Augustus and hls successors, so didi that of prinseps senatus, or princeps (ns it came to be expressed hy an easy but material abridyment) convey the Idea of the highest civil preeminence conslgtent with the forms of the old constitution. In anclent times this title had been nppropriated to the first in succession of living censurii, men who had served the office of censor; and such were necessarily patricians nod senators. The sole privilege it eonferred was that of speaking first ln the dehates of the senate; $n$ privilege however to which conslderahle importance might attach from the exceeding ueference hnhltual!y paid to authority and example by the Roman ss. semhlies.

The thtle of princeps was modest and constltutional; It was associated with the recollection of the best ages of the ... state and the purest models of public virtue; it could not he considered beyond the deserts of one who was undoubtedly the foremost minn of the nathon. . . The popularity which the assumption of this republican title eonferred upon the carly emperors may be inferred from the care with which it is noted, and its constitutional functions referred to by the writers of the Augustan age nad that which succeeded 1 t . But it was an easy and natural stepln the progress of political ideas to drop the applicatlon of the title, and contract it from prince of the senste, to prince merely. The origlnal churacter of the appellatlon was soon forgotten, and the proper limits of its privileges confounded in the more vague and geacral prerogative whieh the hare deslgnatlon of irst or premier seemed to imply."-C. It is a recognised fact that the single sheet with a printed igure priceded the xylographic book, in which text and iliustratlon were cut in the same hiock. This process dld not appear much before the secoud quarter of the 15 th century, and It was employed principa!ly for pop" "works wilch were then the unlversal taste. The engratiug also was nothing more thai a kind of imposition palmed off as a manuscript; tite vignettes were often covered wlth hrilliant colours and gold, and the whole soid as of the best quallty.

An attempt had been made to put some text at the foot of the St . Christopher of 1423 , and the idea of giving more lmportance to the text was to the advantage of the booksellers. . . . i: the epoch of the St. Christopher, ia 1423 , se veral works were $\ln$ vogue in the unirersities, the schools, and whth the public.
To tind a means of multtplying these treatises a little cost was a fortune to the Inventor. It is to $r$ cupposed that many artisans of the time attempted it ; and without douht it was the book. sellers themelvea, mostly mere dealcrs, who were tempted to the adventure by the sculptors and wood-cutters. But none had set been so boli as to cut $\ln$ relief a series of blocks with engravings and text to compose a complete work. That point was reached very quickiy when some legend was cngraved at the foot of a vignette, and it may be theught that the 'Donatus' [i. e. the Latin Syntax of Elius Donatus] was the most ancient of booka so ohtalned among the 'Incuuahuii,' as we now call them, a word that signities origin cr cradle. The tirst books then were formed of sheets of paper or par:hment, laboriously printed from xylograplit hlocks, that is to say wooden blocks on wish a 'tall'. leur a' images' had left in relicf thic designs and the letters of the text. He had thus to trace his characters in reverse, so that they could be reproduced as written; he had to a void faults, because \& phrase once done, well or ill, lasted. It Was douhtless thls difficulty of correction tinat gave the :dea of movatle types. . . This at least cxplains the legend of Laurent Costce, oi Haarlem, who, according to Hadrlan Junlus, hls compatriot, discovered by accldeat the secret of separate types whlle playlag with hls children. And if the legend of which we sppak contains the least truth, it must be found in the sense above indicated, that is in the correction of faults, rather than ln the Ir socent game of a merchant of Haarlem. . . . Movable type, the capital polnt of printing, thes pivot of the art of the Book, developed itself lit'le hy little, according to needs, when there was occasion to correct an erroneous inseription; hut, in uny case, Its origln is unknown. Doubtless to vary the text, means were found to reniace entire phrases hy other phrases, preserving the original figures; and thus the ilght dawned upon these craftsmen, occupied in the manufact , re and sale of thelr books. According to Hadriau Junlus, Laurent Janszoon Coster (the latter namu aignlfying 'the discoverer') puhllshed one of the celohrated series of works under the general title of 'Speculum' which was then so popular, the 'Speculum Humane Salvationis.'. . . Junlus, as we see, attrihutes to Laurent Coster the tirst Impression of he 'Speculum,' no longer the purely xylographic lmpreasion of the 'Donatus' from an engraved block. hut that of the more advanced manner in mov-

All the xyloormphle works of the 15th century may be classed in two categories: the xyiographs, rightly so criled, on the block books, such us the 'Dovatus,' and the books with movable typcs, like the 'speculun,' of which we speais. . . The movahle types uscd, cut separateiy in wood, wre not constituted to give an ldeal lmpression. We can understand the cost that the execution of these characters must have occasioned, made as they were one hy one, without the possl hility of ever maklug tiem pe:fectly unlform. Progress was to substitute for this Irreguiar process types that were slmilar, ldentical easily produced, and used for a long tlme without hreakling. Followiug on the essays of Laurent Coster, contlnuoua rese rehes bore on this point. . . Here history is somewhat confused. Hadrian Junius positl vely accuses one of Laurent Coster's workmen of having stoler the secrets of his mıster and taken tilght to Mayence, where he afterwards founded oprinting ottice. According to Junius, the metal type was the discovery of the Dutchman, and the natue of the thicf was John. Who was this John! Was it Jolın Guenselieisch, called Gutenberg, or possibly Jobn Fust ? But it is not ot, all apparent that Gutenhery, a gentleman of Mayence, exilied from his country, was ever in the service of the Dutch inventor. As to Fust, we believe his only irtervention in the assoclation of printers of $\mathbf{M}_{1}$ was as a money-lender, from which may t, prchended the unlikelihood of his having with Coster, the more so as we tind Gutean retired to Sirasbourg, where he pursued his researches. There he w s , as it were, out of his sphere, a :uined noble whose great knowiedze was bent entirely on invention. Douhtless. like mauy others, he may lave had in his hands one of the printed works of Laurent Coster, aud concelved the idea of appropriatiog the infant

Who put a sum of 1.100 Horins at his dispresai to contiuue his experiments. Unfortunately thls money disappeared. It meited away, and the results obtained were absolutely fullerons.

Abrout thls time a thinl netor enters on the scene. Peter Schoef. fer, of Gernshelim. a writer, Intronluced lato the workshop of Chtenberg to design letters, benetiful by the alortlve experiments, and taking up the lupention at its dearl-lock, couducted it to success, John of Triteubeim, called Trithembrs, the learned ublot of Spanheing, is the person who nelates these fucts: but as he got his lnformntion from sclueffer himself, too much cicdence mast not be given to hls statements. Besjies, Schoeffer was mot at all an ordhary artlsan. If we credit a Strusbourg monnuseript written by his himert ha 1449, ine was a student of the 'most glorions univentty of Puris." How much Sehoeffer contributed to the worklng out of the invention is a mater of conjecture; but $\ln 1454$ it was advanced to a state in which the first kuown appication of It in practicai use was male. This wis in the printing of copies of the fumous letters of induigence which Pope Nichoias V. was then selling throughout Europe. llaving the so far perfereterl invention in hand, Fust and Sehocffer (the hatter now having married the former's grondhanghter) whaed to rhl themselves of Guteninerg. "Fost hadi a most easy pretext, which was to demand purely and simply from his assoclate the sums arl: anced by him, and which had produced so iittle. Gutenberg hai probally eommenced his Bihie, but, in face of the clainis of Fust, he hat to abandon It altogether, types. formes, ame press. In November, 14.5 , he had retirel to a little house outside t'. city, where he trical his best, by the aid of foreign ilp, to cestablish a workshop, and to preserve the most perfect secrecy. Relicved of his company, Fust and Schoeffer were able to take up the impression of the Bibie and to complete it without isho. . One thing is certain: that the Bible of Schorffer, commenced by Gutenberg or not, put on saic by Fust and Schocffer alone about the call of 1455 or be. ginniug of 1456, proves to be the first completed book. fie fact is now called the Mazarine Bible, from the fact that the copy in the Mazarin Li hrary was the first to give evidence conecrning it. Mr. Hessels . . . be. lieves that the Coster mentloned In the sichives as ilving In IIunrlem, 1486-88, was the Inventor of types, and that, taken as a whole, the story a told by Junius is suhstantlaliy correct. Pcrsonaily I should like to walt for more erldence. There ls no dount that the back-bone of the i istch claim iles in the pleces and fragnients of whl books dlscoveted for the most part in the last few decades, and whlch glve support to, st the same time that they recelve support from, the Cologne Chronicler. . . . These now smount to forty-seven different works. Their number is beligg added to cuntlnualiy now that the attention of llbrarinns has been strongly calicd to the lmportance of notling and preserving then. They have been catalogued with profound Inslght by Mr. Hessels, and for the first time classitied by lnternal evidence lato their various typus snd classes. But, it may well be asked, what ev. dence is there that ali these books were not printed long after Gutenberg's press was at Work ? . Tie earilest book of Dutch printing bears date 1478, and not a slagle edition out of ail the so-cailed Costeriana has sny printer's name or place or date. To thls the repiy is, that these smail pleces were school bouks or shisies and such-like works, In the production of wi'rb there was nothing to boast of, as there would $b_{c}$ ln a Blble. Such thlngs were at all times 'slne ulia nota,' and certain to be distroyed wien done with, so that the wonder would lie to find them so dated, and the very fact of their bearing a date would go far to prove them not genuine. These fragments have becn aesrly sll discovered In 15 th-century books, printed mostly in various towas of Holiand. . . Mr. Hesecls quotes forty-seven difierent hooks as 'Costerl. ana, 'which leclude four edlitions of the Evecu. lum, alneteen of Donatus, and seven of Doctria. ale. The Donatuses are In five dificrent types, probably from five different Dutch presses. Compared with the earllest dated books of $14 i 3$ and onwards, printed in Holiand, they have nothing in common, whlle their brotherhood to the Dutch MSS. and block books of about thirty years earlier is apparent. But the tedious process of copying was soon thrown aside for the new art which Coland Mansloa inad Introduced lnto Bruges. .. The printling-press Was tite preclous freight be brought buck to England in 1476 after an absence of five-andthirty years. Through the next fifteen, at an age when other rnen look for ease and retirement, we see hlm plungling with characteristle energy lnto his new occupation. His 'red pale' or herailic shleld marked wlth a red bar down the niddle lnvited buyers to the press he estab. lished in the Almonry at Westminster, a little enclosure coataining a chapel and almshouses near the west front of the clurch, where the alms of the ahbey were dlstributed to the poor. Caxton was a practical man of buslness, no rival of the Venetian Aldi or of the classical printers of Rome, but resoived to get a llving from his trade, supplying priests with service books and preachers with eermona, furolah. ing the clerk with his 'Golden Legend' and knight and baron with 'joyous and pleasant his. torien of chivalry.' But while careful to who hle dally hread, he found time to do much for what of higher llterature lay falrly to hand. Ho printed all the waglish pootry of any moment which was then in rlatence. Hls reverence for that 'womhlpful man, Geoffrey Chaucer,' who 'ought to be eternally remembered,' is shown not merely hy bis edition of the 'Canterbury Talcs,' but by bls reprint of ther when a purer text of the poem offered itself. The poems of Lydgate and Gower were added to thowe of Chaucer. The Chronlele of Brat and Higden's - Polych ronlcon ' were tíle only avallahle works of an historical character then existing in the Eng. llsh tongue, and Caxton not only printed them but himself contlnued the latter up to his own tlme. 'Fain wouid I please every man,' comments the good. humoured printer, hut hls stuisy sense saved hlm ailke from the temptatlons of the court and the schools. His own taste pointed to Eaglish, but 'to the common terms that be daiir used' rather than to the Engllsh of hls antiquariaa adviscrs. The most brillinat member of it was the secoud Heury, whose story forms a melancholy episoxie in Freneh literary hlstory of the 16 th century.

The Estlennes are sald to have conc of a noble Provencal family, hut nothlng is cxactly known of their descent. The art of printlng was not much more than fifty years old when ilenry Estlenne, having le rnt his trade In Germany, came to Purls, and set up his press [about 1406] in the Rue Saint Jcan de Peauvais, oppositc the school of Canon Law. There for some twenty years he laboured diligently, hringing out in that time no less than 120 volumes, chlefly follos. The greater number of these are theological and acholastic works; among the few modern authors on the list is the name of Erasmus. IIenry Estienne died in 1520 leaving three sons. Iobert, the secund of them, was born probably in 1003 . The boys all belng minors, the husiness passed Into the hands of their mother, who in the follow. ing year married Simon de Colines, her late hushand's foreman, and perhaps partner.
Robert worked with De Collnes for five or six Jeats lefore lee went Into business on his own uccount in the same street." It was he who first gavc celehrity to the name and the press. "The speli of the Renaise nce had early fallen upon the young printer, and it held him captive nimont tili the ead of his life." Ile married " the daughter of the learned Fiemish printer Jodocus Badlus, notahle for her culture and her beauty, Latin was the ordinary linguage of the house. hoid. The children learned it in infancy trom hearing it constantiy spoken. . . At one tlme ten foreign schoiars if seaist him in welecting and rovising his manu. seripte and in correcting his proofs. . Both Francis [King Francis I.] and his siater Margue. rite of Navarre had a great regard for l2obert, and often visited the workshop; to that royai patronage the printer was more than once in debted for hls ifherty and hle life." II is danger came from the higoted Sorbonne, with whom he hrought himuelf into collislon hy printiog the Bible with as carefui a correction of the text as lie had performed in tho case of the Latln clas. sles, After the death of Francis I., the perii of the printer's situation became more serious, and in 1500 he fled to Gencva, renouncing the Roman Catholle faith. IIe dled there io 1030.- II. C. A. D. 1535-1709.-Introduction in America. -The first Spanish printing in Mexico.-The early Mansachusetss Presa. - Restrictiona upon lia freedom.-"The art of printligg was first Introduced Into Spanlsh America, as early us the mlidle of the 16 th century. The historians whose works I have consulted are all sllent as to the tlme when it was first practlced on the American contínent; but It is certaln that printling was executed, both in Mex lcoand Peru, fong before it made its appearance in the Brltlsh North Amerlcan colonles. [Tho preclse dute of the introduction of printin, into Meylco was for a long tlme in doubt.

When Mr. Thomas wrote his 'History of Printlng in Americu.' early works on Amcriea were rare, and it is prohuble that there was not one in the country printed ln either America or Europe in the 16 th contury, except the eopy of Molina's dletlonary; now many of the perfol may be found in our great private llhraries. The dictionary of Mollon, in Iexleau and Spanish, printed in Mexico, in 1571, In folio, was, by many, asserted and belleved to be the earllcst book printed in Ancrica.

No one here had seen an earller book until the 'Doctrina Christlana,' printed in the house of Jian Cromberger, In the city of Mexlco, In the year 154 , was discovered. Coples of thls rare work were found in two well known private llhrarles in New York and Providence. Fr a long tlme the honor was awarded to this as the earliest book printed in America. But there is now strong evidence that printing was really introduced in Mexieo nine years before that time, and positive evidence, by existing books, thint a press was establlshed in 1540 . Readers familiur whth early books relating to Mexico have seen mentlon of a book printed there as early us $133 j$,

These surdy are not newspapers. The Times and Daily jewe [Londen] beloug to the foarth class, and best. of course, nre newspajvers. . . . Are not, in fact, all the essentinis of a newspaper eomprisel ia the deflitiou of the second class, willelh it may be as weli to repeat: ' decounts in one priblitethin of severai pubilic transactions of recent waturreace, only combected together by having takea place about the sane perioi, sis as at whe time to form the news of the day ' $y$ Let as tuke an instance. There is preserved in the British Juseum a coliection of geveral volumes of interesting publieations Issued in Itaiy between 1640 ani 1650, and contuinlige the news of the times. They are of a smali follo size, aud consist in peneral of four pages, but sometimes of six, sometines ouly of two. There is a series for the month of inecember, 1644, conslsting entircly of ther new: from Rome. The tirst linc of the first fage ruas thus:- Di IRoma, when the date, flrst if the 3rd, then of the 10 th , then the 1ith, then the 2th, and lastiy the 31st of December, sinowing that s number was puhilisied cvery weck, must probshly on the arrival of the post from lume. The plaee of publication was Florence, and the same puhilishers who lssued this colfection of the uewa from Ronec, sent forth ln the same month of December, 1044, two other similar gazettes, st simitar lntervals, one of the news frum Genoa, the other of the news from Germany and abroad. That thls Interesting series of publications, which is well worthy of a miunte examination and a detalied description, is in reality a series of newspapers, will, I belleve, be questioned by very few; but each Indivldual number persenta no mark hy which, If separately net with, it could be known to form part of a set. ...The most minute rwearches on the bintory of newis pepers in Germany arn, at already mentlosed, thoee of Prutz, who has collected notlces of a lisge number of the 'relatlons,' the gh much re. malns to be cleaned. There are, 1 : inatence, in Fan Ifeude's Catalogue of the Lihrary at Utrecht (Utrecht, 1825, follo), the titiee of neariy a hundred of them, all as eariy as tho stxteenth century; and the Britimh Muneuns poasesecs a conaderable quaptity, all of recent acquialtion. Pruts has no notice of the two that have been meptioned, and, like all precediag writer, le draws no diatinction between the publications of the first clase and the recond. The view that be takes in, that no publication which doew not anwwef to the dednltion of what I have termed the fonth clase is entitied to the name of a news. paper. There was in the pocension of Profensor Orellman a pubilcation called an 'Avimo,' numbered as ' 14 ', and pubilabed In 1812, which has beea considered by many German writers at their earliest newspaper, but Prutz denles that honour to it , on the ground of there belng no proof that It was published at stated Intervals. In the zear 1615 Egenolph Emmel. of Prankforton the Main, lsoued a weekly intelligencer, num. bered in a ceries, and this, sccording to Prutz, is the proper ciaimant. Its history has been traced with some tainuteness in a separate disectition by schwarzkopf, who has also the credit of hav. log puhlished in 1795 the firnt generai easay on newspepers of any raiue, and to have followed up the suhject in series of articles in the Allgemelne Líterarische Anzelger. $\qquad$ The clnims of Italy have yet to be consldered. Prutz dismluses them very summarily, because, as he says, the Venetian gazettes of the sixteenth century, sald to be preserved at rlorence, are in manuscript, and it is essent ial to the deflaition of anewspuper that it should be printed. These leatian gazettes have never, so fnr as I an aware, been described at all; they may be nicre 'news-letters,' or they may be somethling cinsely spproacbling to the modern newspaper. But I am strongly incllned to believe that something of the second class of Italinn origin will turn up In the great libraries of Europe when further reses rch is devoted to the subject. $\qquad$ The existence of these 'gazetles' in so many ianguages furnisbes strong ground for supposing that the popularity of newspapers originated in Itaiy."T. On the death of Menaudot, he was eucceeded by his sons Et, bhe and Iswac, who in their turn bequeathed the 'Guzette' to Eusebe Junior, son of the eider brother, who took orders and consequently left no progeny. After this the 'Gazette' became Givernnient property. . .. In 1762 the Gazutte was annezed to the Foreign Office Department. The 'Grazette de France' continued otppuar uader cogal patronage until May Ibt, 1792 , when its oficiai tien were snapped and it came out as a private and republlean juurnal with the date 'Fourth Year of Freedom.' papers exposed to sale, and to be whipped as a common rogue in the parish where he shaii be apprehended. Eariy in the foilowing year, the committee of estates in Scotland passed an act prohihlting the printing under the pain of death, any book, deciaration, or writing, until these were first submitted to their revisai. . . . One of the consequences of these persecutions was the raising up of a new ciass of publishers, those who became noted for what was calied 'unlawful and uniticensed books.' Sparkes, the pubilisher of Prynne's IIIstriomastix, was of this ciass. The presbyterian party in parilament, who thus found the press closed on them, vehemently cried out for its freedom; and it was imagined, that when they ascended into power, the odious office of a iicenser of the press would have been abol tshed; but these pretended friends of freedom, on the contrary, discovered themselves as tenderiy ailive to the office as the old government, and maintalned it with the extremest vigour. Both in Engiand and Scotland, during the clvil wars, the party in power endeavoured to crush by every means the freedom of the press. "C. H. A. D. 1654-1594. - Freedom of the press under Cromvell.-Censorship under the restored Stuarts.-Roger L'Estrange and the first news reporters.-' During the Protectorate of Cromwell the newspaper press knew what it was to enjoy the luxury of freedom. The natural result was that a very great Increase took place In the number of new political journals. Most of them, however, had only a very brief existence. Many of their number could not boast of a ionger iife an six or seven months - nay, many of them not 80 much as even that term of life. But, as might hav ' been ex. pected, from what was known of the antecedents of Charies II., the freedom of the press, which previously existed, came to an Iminediatc cnd on his ascending the throne. IIardis had he done so, than an edict was lssucd, prohiblting the publicntion of any journal except the London Gazette, whlch was origianlly printed nt Oxford, and called the Oxford Gazette, 一 the Court belng then resident there on account of the plague raglug in Loudon at the time, 1665 , when it was commenced, and for some time afterwards. This was an act of pure despotism. But Goverument nt this time reserved to itself the right -a right which there was none to disputc - to publish a broml shect in connexion with the Lundon Gazette, whenever they might deem It cxpedient, which shonld contain either foreign or domestic inatters of interest, - of the knowi. edge of which some of the King's subjects might wlsh to be put in cariy possession. . . . The newspapers of the seventeenth century were perwitted, until the time of Charles If., to be published without belng iiceased by the Government of the day; but in the reign of that despotic sovereign, a law wiss passed [1662] prohlblting the publicatlon of any newspaper without being duly licenseri. . . . Slr John Birkenhead, one of the three men whom Dlsraeli the elder calied the fathers of the English press, was appointed to the office of Lacenser of the Press. But he was soon succeeded by Sir Roger i'Es.
 ch. 2.-Rnger L'Estrange " ls remarkabie for baving been the writer of the best newspapers which appeared before the age of Queen Anne, and, at the same time, a most bitter enemy to the freedom of the press. He was appointed licenser or censor in 1668, and in the sanie year was given authority to publish ali newspapers, periodicais, and pamphiets, not exceeding two sheets in size. He appears to have iookei upon his newspaper as a noxious thing, suffered to ex. ist only that an income might be created for him In return for the labour of purging the press. Yet he spared no pains to make his Public In. telligencer readable, and if we may trust his letters now preserved at the Itate Papcr Office, expenden in the frst year more than est00 on 'spyes for coliecting inteligence.' Threc veara afterwards he estimated the profits at $£ 400$ a year. He sent paid correspondents or 'spyes' as they were cailed, to ail parts of the country, and even induced some respectable persons, under promiae of cnncealing their names, to contribute occaslonai paragraphs; these persons were for the most part repaid by seuding to them their newspapers and letters free of postage. Another set of 'apyes' was employed la picking up the news of the town on Paul's Walk or in the taverns and coffee-houses. L'Estraage printed about aixteen reams of his Inteligeacer weekly, which were for the most part scld by the mercury-women who crled them about the streets. One Mirs. Andrews is sald to have takea more than onethird of the whole quantity priuted. . . Advantage was taken of a slip in the weekly Intelligence to deprive L'Estrsnge of hls monopoly in favour of the new Oxford Gazette, published in the winter of 1665 and transferred to Londion in the ensuing spring. The Gazette was placed under the controi of Whlliamsoa, then $n$ rising under.Secretary of State, Imder whose austcre influence nothing was suffered to appear which could exclte or even amuse the publlc. . . L'Estrange has not been a favourite with historians, and we confess that his harsh measures towards the press are apt to raise a feeing of repugnance. . . But he was certainiy an enthusinstle and industrious writer, Who raiseri the tone if the press, even wlile taking pains to fetter its iiberty. When he iost his monopoly, that cra of desolation begsa which Macauiay has so forclbiy described. The newspapers becane compieteiy sterile. onitting events even of such importance as the trial of the seven blshojs, and were supplsated iu popular favour by the manuscript news-letters, which were, in fact, the only journals of impertance. On the day after the abdicntion of James II. thrce fresh newspapers appeared, and many more burst out after the appearance of the olicial journal under the style of the Orange Gazette. But it was not until 1694 that the king was ia. dnced to aboish the censorsilip and to permit free trade in news; 'he doubted much,' says Hume, ' of the saiutary effects of such unlimited freedom.' The newspapers increased and multipijed exceedingly for the eighteen years betweea the abohiton of the office of ilcenser and the passing of the Stamp Act, in 1712 , by which s halfpenny tax was laid on every half sheet of intelligence." - Farly Einglish Neospupers (Corthill Mrg., July, 1868).

of 1685, and established himself in husiness. "His fret publlcation was 'Kaiendarium Pennsifsniense, or America's Messenger; Being an Aimanact for the Year of Grace 1686.' Thls brought him a summons before the Governor and Councli, for referring to the Proprietary, in the table of chronology, as 'Lord Penn; 'and, on his sppearance, he whs ordered to biot out the ohjectionabie titie, and forhidden to print any. thing without license from the Provinciai Councll. In 1687 be was cautioned by the Philadeiphia mectlng not to print anything touching the Quakers without lts approvai. Two years later he was again cailed before the Governor, and Councli - this time for printing the charter of the province. The spirited report, in his own hsndwriting, of his examination on this occasion, is now preserved in the coilection of the New York Ilistorical Society. Disappointed at the non-fulslment of Penn's promise of the government printing and the failure of his scheme for printing an English Blbic, which, aithough indorsed by the meeting, found few subscribers, snd hsrassed by both the civll and reilglous au. thorities. Bradford determined to leave the provlnce," which he did, with his family, salling to Englaui in 1680 . He was induced, however, hy promises of increased buslness and a yeariy salary of $£ 40$, to return. In 1692 , having become one of the supporters of George Kelth, and havlug printed Keith's "Appeai" (see I'enNsylvasia: A. D. $1692-1696$ ), he was arrested and imprianuci. This occurred In August, and his trial followed in Dccember. The fury disagreed, and he was held for appearance at the next court. " in the mantime the cllssensions in the province aroused by the Keithian sehism had led to the ahrogation of Penn's ciarter by the crown, and the appointment of Benjamin Fletcher to he Royal Governor of Pennsylvania as well as Newlurk." This change icd to the dropping o: proceetinus against Bradifori, and to his removai from Ihlladiclphia to New York, whither he seems to have been invited. His removai was undonbtedly prompted ly a resolution which the Proviuciai Council of Sew York adopted on the 23it of March, 1693: "- Tinat If a Priuter will come and settle in the city of New York for the printing of our Acts of Assembiy and Puhlick Papers, he shall be ailowed the sum of ettocurrent money of New Vork per annmm for his salary and have the beuetit of his printing besides what serves the pubiick." "Bradford's first warmut for hls salary as 'Printer to King William and Qucen Mary, at the City of New York,' was dinted October 12, 1693, and was for sir months, due on the loth preceding, "showing that he had estahitished himself in the coiony more hospitable to hils art as eariy as the 10th of April, 1693. "What was the ifrst product of his press is a matter of doubt. It may have been, us Dr. Muore suggests, the 'Journal of the Late Actious of the French at Canada,' or 'New Englandis Splrit of Persecution Transinitted to Pennsilrania." - which was a report of his owu trial at Phimeleiphia - or it may have been an Act of the New York Assemhiy - one of three Which his press proiuced eariy that year, but the priority smong which is uncertaiu.- C. A. D. 1695.-Expiration of the Censorehip Inv in England. - Quick multiplication of Newapapers.- -" While the Licensing Act was In force there was no newspaper $\ln$ Engiand except the 'London Gazette, whlch was edited by a cicrk in the office of the Secretary of State, and which contained nothing hut what the Secretary of State wished the nation to know. There were indeed many perioxicai papers: but none of those papers could be cailed a newspaper. Weiwood, a zeaious Whig, pubished a journai cailed the Observator: but hls Observator, iike the Observator which Lestrange inad formeriy edited, contained, not the news, but mereiy dissertatlons on poiitics. A crazy bookseiler, named John Dunton, pulitished the Athenian Mercury: hut the Atheuian Mereury merely discussed questions of naturai phliosophy, of casuistry and of gaifantry. A fellow of the Royal Society, named John Houghton, puhilshed what he cailed a Coilection for the Inprovement of In. dustry and Trade: but his Collection coutalneid littie more than the prices of stocks, explanatious of the modes of doing business in the City, puffs of new projects, and advertisements of hooks, quack medicines, chocolate, Spa water, civet cats, surgeons wanting ships, vaicts wanting masters, and ladies wanting husbauds. If ever he priuted any poiitical news, he transcribed it from the Gazette. Thic Gazette was so partini and so meagre a chronicie of eveuts that, though It had no compettors, it had but a small circuiation. . . . But the deficiencles of the Gazette werc to a certalu extent supplied in London by the coffcehouses, and in the conntry by the newsletters. On the thind of May 1695 the inw which had subjecteri the press to a censorship expired. Within a fortnight, a stanch oll Whig, named Ilarris, who had. in the days of the Ex: ciuslon lill, attempted to set up a newspaper entitied Inteiligence Domestic and Forelgu, aud who had bern spccdily forced to rellnquish that design, announced that the Inteiligence Domes. tic and Foreign, suppressed fourteen years before by tyranny, would again appear. Ten days iater was printed the first number of the Eng. iish Couraut. Then came the Packet Boat from Iloiland and Fianders, the Pegasus, the Loudon Newsietter, the London Post, the Flying Post, tine Old Postmaster, the Postboy, and the Post man. The history of the newspapers of Eingfand from that time to the present day is a most interesting and instructive part of the history of the country. At first they were small and meanlooking. . . In 1710, a rival paper was started In Boston, called the "Gazette" and $\ln 1721$, a thlrd, founded by James Frankiln, took the name of "The New England Couraut." Meantlme there had appeared at Phlladelphia, on the enad of Neeember, 1719, - only one day later than the second of the Boston newspapers -.'The Amerl. can Weekly Mercury," printed by Andrew Brad. ford, son of Willlam Bradford. The same printer, Audrew Bradford, removing to New York, hrought out "The New York Gazette," the first newspaper printed in that clty, In October, 1725. -I. The New England 'Courant,' the fourth Amcrican periodical, was, ln Augu +1721 , estabilshed by James Frunklin as an oigai, of Independent opinton. Its temporary success was advanced by Beujamin, his biother anil apprentice, a boy of tifteen, who wrot:? for lits columns, worked ln composlng the ty exw as well as printing off the slieets, nod, as carricr, dlstributed the papers to the customers. The shect satirized hypocrisy, and spoke of rellglous kaves as of all knaves the worst. This was described as tending 'to abuse the ministers of rellglon $\ln$ a manner which was intolerable.'. . . In July 17i:2, a resolve passed the council, appointligg a ceusor for the press of James Franklin; but the house refused its concurrence. The ministers persevered; aud, in January 1723, a committee of inquiry was raised hy the leglsliture. Benjamin, beiug examined, escaped with an admonition; James, the publisher, refuslng to discover the author of the offence, was kept $\ln$ jall for a month; his paper was censured as reflectlng lnjuriously on the reverend ministers of the gospel; and. by rote of the house and council, he was forbidlen to print it, 'except lt be first suphrvisel.' Vexed at the arbitrary proceedlngs, Benjumin Franklin, then hut seventeren rears old, in Uctober 1:23, sailed clandestinely for New Fork. Finding there no enoployment, he crossed to Amboy; went on foot to the Delaware; for want of a wind, rowed in a boat from Burlington to Philadelphla; and bearing marks of his labor at the our, weary, hungry, having for his whote stock of eash a slogle dollar, the runaway apprentice - the pupil of the free sehools of Boston, rich ln the bouudless hope of youth and the unconselons power of modest genius stepped ou shore to seck food nad oceupatlon. On the deep fouudatlons of sobriety, frugality and industry, the young journerman bullt his fortunes aud fame; and he soon came to have a printing offlee of his uwn.

The assembly of Pennsyivania chose him lts printer. A. D. 1700-1752. - The Periodicals of the Essayists.-The "Tatier," "Spectator," and their successors. - "In the sprlng of 130, Steele [Sir IRichard] formed a literary projuct, of whlch he was far indeed from foresecing the cunsequences. Periodlcal papers hal luring many years been published in London. Nlost of these were polltleal; but In some of them ques. tlons of morallty, taste, and love-casuistry had been dlscussed. The llterary merit of these works was small Indeed; and even their names nre now known only to the curlous. Steell had been appolnted gazetteer by Sunderhund, it the request, It is sald, of Aldilson; and thus hal nccess to forelgn intelligence earlier anul more authentle than was la those tlmes withln the reach of an ordinary news.writer. Thls chremmstance seems to have suggested to hlm the schence of publlshing a periodical paper on a new plan. It Was to appear on the duys ou which the post left London for the country, whlel w $\in$ ere, in that generatlon, the Thestays, Thursiluys, and Saturdars. It was to coutiain the forelgn uews, accounts of theatrical representations, and the lltcrary gosslp of Will's and of the Greciun. It was also to contaln remarks on the fashionable toples of the diy, compliments to beanties, pasquinades on noted sharpers, and criticisms on popular preaeliers. The alm of Stecle does not appear to have been at first blgher thau this. Isane Bickerstaff, Esqulre, Astriloger, was an Imaginary person, nlmost ns well known iu that age $n s$ Mr. Panl Pry or Mr. I'ickwiek in ours. Swlft had assumed the name of 13ickerwtaff in a satlicil paniphlet agalnst Part riuge, the alma. nac-inaker. Partridge had becn form enough to publish a furious reply. Biekerstafi hal rejoined fin a secoud pamphlet still more diverting than the first. All the wits had combined to keep up the joke, and the town was long in convulsions of laughter. Steele determbed to employ the name which this controversy had mude populat; and, In April. 1709, it was annonneed that Isaac Bickerstaff, Esquire, Astrologer, was about to publish a paper called the 'Tatler.' Adtison han not been cousulted ahout thls schelur; but as som as he heard of it, he determine to give It hls asslstance. The effect of that assistance cannot be better described than in Stede's own worls. 'I fared,' he sald, 'like a distressed prince who calls in a powerful neighbour to his nitl. I was undone by my anxiliary. When I had once called him ln, I conltl uot sulisist without dependence on him.' 'The paper,' he says clsewhere, ' was alvanced Indeed. It was raised to a greater thlng than I intended it.' "-Lord Macaulay Life and ll'riting* of Addizon (Evalya). - 'Steelc, on the 12 th of A pril 1709. Issued the first number of the 'Tatler.'

This famous newspaper, printed in one folio sheet of 'tobacco paper' with' seurve letter,' ran to 271 numbers, and abruptly ceased to appear In January 1711. It enjoyed in unprecedented suecess, for, ínleed, nothing that approached it lad ever befure leen lssued from the periodical press In England. The dlvision of lts coutents was thas arranged hy the editor: 'All accounts of gallantry, pleas. urc, and entertalument shall be under the article of White's Chocolnte Ifonse; poetry under that of Wllis Coffee. Iouse; lenralng under the title of Grecian; forelgn and domentic news you wili have from St. James' Coflee-House; and what else I shall ou any other subject offer shall be dsted from my own apartment.' The political news graduaily censed to appear. . Of the 271 'Tutiers,' 188 were written by Steeie, 42 hy Addison, and 36 by both conjolntig. Three were from the pen of John Hughes.

These, at ieast, are the numbers usualiy given, but the evidence on which they are based is siight. It rests malniy upon tho indications glven hy Steele to Tickell when the latter was preparing his edition of Addison's Works. The conjecture may be hazarded that there were not a few Tatiers written by Addison which he was not anxious to claim ss his partieuiar property. . . . Addison, remained Steele's firm friend, and less than two months after tho cessatlon of the 'Tatler' there appeared the first number of a still more fsmous common enterprise, the 'Spectator,' on the 1st of March 1711. It was announced to appear daily, and was to be composed of the reflections and actlows of the members of an Imagloary ciub, formed around 'Mr. Spectator.' In this club the most familiar figure is the Wor. cestershire Knight, Sir Roger de Coverley, the peeullar property of Addison. . . . The 'Spectator' continued to a ppear daily untii December 1712. It consisted of 555 numbers, of which Addlison wrote 274, Steeie 236, Hughes 19, ural Pupe 1 (The Messlah, 'Spectator' 378). Another contributor wns Eustace Budgeli (1685-1736). Addison's cousin. . . . The 'Spectator' enjoyedi so very unequivocal a success that it has puzzied historians to account for its diseontinuance. Iu No. 517 Addison killed Slr Roger de Covericy 'that nobody eise might murder hlm.' This shows a voluntary lntention to stop the publica. tion, which the Stamp Aet Itself hnd not been sble to do by force."-E. Gosse, A Miat. of Eigh teenth Century Literature, ch. 6-"After this. in 1713 , came the 'Guardian'; andi in 1714 an elghth volume of the 'Spectator' was issued by Addison alone. He was also the sole nuthor of the 'Freehoider,' 1715, which contains the admirabie sketch of the 'Tory Foxhunter.' Steele, on his side, foliowed up the 'Guardinn' by the 'Lover,' the 'Reader,' and haif-a-dozen abortive eflorts; but his reai successes, as well as those of Addlson, were in the three great collectious for whleh they worked together. ... Between the 'Guardlan' of 1713 and the 'Rambler' of 17502 there were a number of periodical essayists of vsrying merit. It is scarcely necessary to recall the names of these now forgotten 'Intelligencers,' 'Jloderators,' 'Remembrancers,' and the like, the bulk of which were political. Fleiding places use of them, the 'Freethinker' of Philips, nearly on s level with 'those great originals the "Tatiers" and the "Spectators;"" hut the lnitlal chapters to the different books of "Tom Jones, attract us more forcibly to the author's own 'Champlon,' written in conjunction with the Ralph who 'mnkes night hideous' in the 'Dunciad.' . . . Another of Fieidlag's enterprises in the 'Spectator' vein was the 'Covent Garden Juurnal, 1752. . . Coucurrentiy with the 'Covent Garden Journal' appeared the finai volume of Johnson's 'Ramhier,' a work upon the cardinai defect of which its author laid his finger, when, In literlife, he deciared it to be 'too wordy.' Lady, liary said in her smart way that the 'Ramhier' fulluwed the 'Spectator' as a packhorse would do a hunter. . . . In the twenty-nine papers which Johnson wrote for Hawkesworth's 'Adventurer,' the ' Rambier' style is maintained. In the 'Idier,' however, which belongs to a later date, when its author's mind was unclouded, and he was comparatively free from the daily pressure of necessity, he adopts a slmpler and less poiysyiabic style."-A. A. D. 17x2,-The first Stamp Tax on Newapapera in Engiand. - The first stamp tsx on newspapers in Englandi went into effect on the 12th day of August, 1712 . "An act had passed the legisiature, that 'for every pamphiet or paper contained in half a slieet, or lesser plece of paper so printed, the sum of one halfpenny sterling: and for every such pamphiet or paper being larger thnn liaif a slieet, and not exceeding one whole sheet, so printed, a duty after the rate of one penny stering for every sleet printed thereof.' This act, whieh was to curh the ilcentivusness of the press, was to be in force for the space of thlrty-two years, to be reckoned from the 10th day of June, 1712 . Addlson, in the 'Spectator' of this diny, says, 'this is the day on which many emineut authors will probahiy pubish their last works. I am afraid that few of our weekly historians, who are men that above ali others deilght in war, wili be abie to suhsist under the weight of a stamp duty in an approaching peace. In short, the necessity of carry. ing a stamp, nnd the impracticahilty of notify. iug a hloody battle, wiil, I am afraid, both concur to the sinklng of these thin folios which lave every other day related to us the hlstory of Europe for severai years iast past. A facetious friend of mine, who ioves a pun, cails this present mortality among nuthors, "the fnli of the ieaf." On this tax Dean Swlft thus humorousiy alludes in his Journal to Stelln. ns follows (August 7):- 'Do you know that ali Gruh-street is dead and gone last week ? No more Ghosts or murders now for iove or mouey. I plied lt close the lnst fortalght, and published at least seven papers of my own, besidics some of other people's; hut now every single hnif-sheet pays a halfpenny to the queen. The 'Ohservator' ls fallen; the 'Medieys' arc jumhied together wlth the 'Flylng Post'; the 'Examiner' is deadiy sick; the 'Spectator' keeps up aud doubles its price; I know not how long it will hold. Have you seen t'ic od stamp the papers are marked with? MI $1 Y_{4}$ ic as the stamping is worth a halfpenny. Tis stamp mark upon the newspapers was a rose and thistle joined hy the staiks, and enciosing between the Irish shamrock, the whoie three were surmounted hy a crown. $\qquad$ . It is curious to ohserve what an effect this trifilng lmpost had upon the circulation of the most favourite pnpers. Mluny "ere entirely discontinued, and severai of those which survived were genernliy united iuto one puhiication. The bill operated in a dlreetly contrary mnuner to what the ministers had antielpated; for the opposition, who had more ieisure, and perhaps more acrimony of feeling, were unanimous in the support of their cause. The adberents of ministers, who were hy no means behind the opposition in their proficiency ln the topic of defarnation, were, lt seems, not so strenuously supported; and the measure thus chlelly destroyed those whom it was Boiinbroke's lnterest to protect. For some reason, which we have not been able to trace, the stamp-duties were removed chortly after their impositlon, and were not again enforced until 1725. In order to understand how so small a duty as one halfpenny should operate so strongly upon these periodical puhlications, we must look at the price at which they were vended at that period. The majority nf them were puhlished at - penny, many at a haifpenny, and some were even puhilshed so low as a farthing."-C. II. A. D. 1723.-End of Newspaper monopoly in France. "Until Louis XV. was dethroned, Paris was officially supposed to possess hut three periodicals: the 'Gazette de Franee'for politlcs. Le Journal des Savants' for litcrature and sclence, and the 'Mercure de France' for politics, iiterature, and soclal matters mingled. For a time these monopolies were respected, hut only for a very short line. . During the IRegency of the Duke of Oriesns ( $1715-23$ ), the 'Gazette de France,' Mercu.s,' and 'Jouraal des Savants' combined to bring an action for lnfringement against ail the papers then existing, hut they were con-suited on a technieal objeetlon; and this was their last attempt at assertlng their prerogative."

A. D. 1784-1813. -The earliest daily Newspapera in the United States. -"The first daily newspaper published in the United States was the 'American Daily Advertiser.' It was issued in Philadeiphia in 1784, hy Benjamin Franklin Bache, afterwarls of the Aurora. When the sent of nutional government was in Phliadelphla, it shared the eontidence and support of Jefferson with the 'National Gazette.' 1t was strong in its opposition to the Feicral section of the aulministration of Washington, and to all the meas. ures originating with llamilton. Zachariah Ponlson became its proprietor and publisher in 1802, and it was known as 'Poulson's fdvertiser, and we believe he contlnued its pubisher till October 28, 1839 when the establishonent was sold to Brace and Newbold, the publishers of a new paper called the 'North American." The name after that was the 'Vorth American and Daliy Advertiser.'. . . The 'New York Daily Advertiser,' the second real journal in the Unlted States, was puhished In 1785. It was commenced on the 1st of Dlarch hy Francis Childs & Co. . . . On the $29 t$ th of July, 1786, the 'Pittshurg Penn.) Gazette, the first newspaper printed west of the Alleghany Jountalns, appeared, and in 1796 the 'Post' wis issued.
'The Unlted States Guzette' was started in New Fork in 1789 by John Fenno, of Boston. Its original name was 'Gazette of the United States.' It was first issued in New York, because the seat of the national government was then in that city. When Congress removed to Philadelphis in 1790, the 'Gazette' went with that body. In 1792 it was the special organ of Alcxander Hamllton.

- Noah Webater, the iexicographer of Ameri. ca, was a lawyer in 1798, and had an office in Hartford, Connecticut. Washington's odminls. tration was then vlolentiy asalled by the 'Aurorre' ' National Gazette, and other organs of the Republican I'arty, and by the partisans of France. Jefterson was organizing the opposition elements, and Hamllton was endea voring to strengtien the Federal party. Newspapers were estahlished on each side as the chief means of accomplishing the ohjects each party hsil in view. Noah Webster was considered, In thls state of affairs, the man to aid the Federallsts journallstically in New York. He was, there. fore, induced to remove to that city and take charge of a Federal organ. On the 9 th of December, 1798, he issued the first number of $s$ daily paper, which was named the 'Mlnerra.' According to its lmprint, it appeared erery day, Sundays excepted, at four oclock, or earller If the arrival of the mail wh. permit.
arller the 'Dllnerva' was connecied a semi-weekly paper called the 'Herald.'

The names of
'Minerva' and 'Herald' were shortiy changed to those of 'Commerclal Advertiser' and 'Vew York Spectator,' and these names have contlnued.

The 'Commercial Advertiser' is the oldest dally newspaper in the metropolis. Of the humdreds of daily papers started in New York, from the time of Bradford's Gazette in 1725 to the 'Journal of Commerce' In 182\%, there are now [1872] only two survivors - the 'Evening Post' and the 'Commercial Advertiser.'. . . The first prominent daliy paper issued in New Englind Was the Boston Daily Advertiser, ?: publieation of which was commenced on the 31 of Dlarch, 1818. There was a daily paper begun la that clty on the 6th of October, 176\%, by Alexander JIartin, and edlted hy, John OLLey Burk, one of the 'United Irishmen.' It lived about six months. It was cailed the Polar Stur and Boston Dally Advertiser. Another was attempted on the 1st of Janiary, 1798, hy Caleb I. Wayne, who was afterwarls editor of the United State Gazette of Philadelphia. This secoml daily paper of Boston was named the Federai Guzette and Daily Advertlser. It llved three months. The third attempt at a daily paper in the eapitai of Massachusetts w..s a sinceess. It was pub ished hy William W. Ciapp, afterwards of the Saturday Evening Gazette, and edited by IIora tio Blglow."-F. 11udson, Journaliom in the United States, $p p .175-194$, and 3is.

D. $1785-1812$. - The founding of "The Times," in London.-The beginning of "leading articies."-The newspaper afterwarls famous as "The Times" whs started, in 1 irj , under the name of the " Daily C'niversal Register," and did not adopt the title of "The Times" Inntii the 1st of January, 1788. -J. Grant. The Verrapuper Preas, v. 1, ch. 16.-"All the newspapers that ean be sald to have been dintinguished In any way till the appearance of the 'Times' were distinguished by some frak of eleverness. . The 'Times' took up a llne of its own from the first day of its existence. The proprictors staked thelr fortunes upon the general character of thelr paper, upon the promptitude and uecuracy of its Intelligence, upon its pollcy, upon the frank and independent spirit of lif comments out public men. .. . The chief proprietor of the 'Tlmes' was Jolin Walter-a man who knew nothing or next to nothing of newapaper work, but who knew precisely wiat the public wanted In a newapaper, and pcssessed, with this instinct and Intelligence, the determiastion and enterprise which constitute the character of a succesuful man of business. He aw how a newspaper ought to be conducted, aud he thought he saw how, by this development of $s$ new Idea in printing, he could produce the 'Times' a good deal cheaper than any of its contemporarles. The whoie Engish language, according to Mr. Waiter, consisted of about 90.000 words; but by separating tho particles sad omitting the obsolete words, technlcal terms, sad common terminations, Mr. Walter belleved it to be possibie to reduce the stock in common use to about 50,000 , and a iarge proportion of these words, with ali the common terminations, he proposed to have cast separately, so that the compositor, with a siip of MS. before him to set in type, migit pick up words or even phrases Instead of pleking up ono by one every letter of every word in his copy, and thus, of course, save a gool deal of time. The idea wasimpractieabie, utteriy impracticable, because the number of worls required to earry out the system must in itself be so great that no case of type that a printer could stand before would hoid them ali, even if the printer 'learn his boxes' with a case of somo 4,000 or 5,000 eompartments lefore hlm; but it took a good many years, a good many experimeats, and the expenditure of some thousands of pouads to convince Mr. Walter that the fallure was not due to the perversity of his printers but to the practical diffleulttes which surrounded his conception. John Walter was far more sue. cessful in the general conduet of the "Tinues' as $s$ aewspaper than he was in the manegement of the 'Tinies' printing office. IIe set ail the priaters in London by the ears with his whim sbout ingographie printiug. But he hoi a very clear conception of what a naxional newspaper ought to be, and with the assistance of a miscel. lantous group of men, who, is they are sketehed for us by Ilenry Crabb Robinson, were appareatly far more pleturesiue tlenn practical, John Walter mate the 'Times' what the 'Times' has beea for nearly a century, pre-eminently and distiactly a natonai newspaper. The 'Times,' la its origianl shape, conslsted mere!y of the day's news, a few advertisements, sone market quotations, perhaps a notice of a new book, a few scraps of gosslp, and in the session, Parliamentary report. The Morning Chronlele" had the credit . . of inveuting the leaiing artlele, as it had the eredit of lnventlng Parliamentary reporting. The "Morning Chror lele, ' on the 12th of May, 1791, published a para graph, announcing that the great and f: buif of the Whigs of England. true to : priniples, had decided on the dispuie betu Mr. Fux and Mr. Burke, in fnvor of Mr. Fox. the representative of the pure cloctrines of Whig gery, aad that in eonsequence of $t^{1 . i o}$ erolution Mr. Burke would retire from Parliainent. It Has very short, but this paragraph is the nenrest approximatlon that is to he found in the newspapers of that time to a leading artleie, and appearing as it did in the part of the 'Morning Chronicle' where a year or two afterwards the lealing articles were printed. Mr. Wingrove Cinike cites it as the germ of the leaders whieh, When they beeame general, gave a distinetive coluur and authority to newsrapers as indepen. dent organs of opinion and criticism. The idea soor became popular; and In the "Morning Pos:' and the 'Courier' the leadiug article, devoloped as it was hy Coleridge and Macintosh inio a work of art, olten rivailing in argument, wit, and eloquence the best speeches in Parliament, became the object of quite as much interest as the Parliamcntary reports themseives. The 'Times,' knowing how to sppropriate one by one aif the specialties of Its contemporaries, and to improve upon what it appropriated, was one of the first nevispapers to adopt the Id 2 a rf leadling articies, and In adop:ing thac kiea, to Improve upon It by stamping ita articizs with a suirit of frankness and indepentience which was all its own. . The reign of Jcinn Waiter, practicaily the founder of the ' Iimes,' ended in the year 1812, and upon his death his son, the sucond John Waiter, took possession of Printing House Square, and, acting in the spirit of his father, with ampler mrans, soun made the 'Times' the power In the State that it has been from that day to this."-C. Up to the time of the abolition of the stamp dutles, London was the oniy city witich had a daily press; hut between 1850 and 1870 a largenumber of newspapers puhished in the provinciai cities, wifich had hitherto been issued in weekiy or bi-weekiy form, made their appearance as daily journals. With oniy one or two exceptions, ali the prosperous provinciai morning papers of to day were originaily weekiies, and as sueh had iong, occupled the ground they now hoid as dailies." -E. A. D. 1874-1894.-Surviving Press Ceasorship in Germany.-"It would be wrong to speak of the Newspaper Press of Germany as the fourti cstate. In the iand which gare Gutenberg nad the art of printing to the worid, the Press has not yet estahiished a claim to a titie sc. imposing. To the growth and power of n Free Press are needed liberal iaws and institutions, with freedom of poiticai opinion and civil action for the subject. Hitherto these fundamentai conditions have been absent. During the iast ifty years iittie has been done to iiberate the newspaper, to give it free piay, to unmuzzie it. It is the misfortune of the German Press that the special in wes for the reguiation of newspapers and seriai puhilcations have been evoive 1 from a sys. tem of iegisiation which was devised in times of great poiiticai unrest and agitntion.

Liberty of the Press has been one of the ieading poiitical whtchwords of the reform party during the iast three-quarters of a century. Yet though the Press does not stand where it str al at the beginning of the century, when even visiting cards could not be printed without tie solemu assent of the pubiic ceusor, and when ohjectiounhie prints were summarify suppressed at the mere beck of a Minister or his subordinate, littie ground has been wron slnce the severcr features of the measures passeli in 1854 for the repression of democratic excesses were ahandoned. The constitution of Prussia says that 'Every Prussian has the right to express his opinion freely hy word, writing, print, or pictorial representation' (Articie 27). But this right is superseded by the provision of the imperiai constitutiou (Article 41, Section 16) which reserves to the Einpire tite reguintion of the Press, and by a measure of May ith, 1874, which gives to this provision concrete form. Tinls is the Press Law of Germany to day. The iaw does, indeed, concede, in principie at ieast, the freedom of the Press (Press. freiheit), and it abollshes the formai censorship. But a severe form of control is atili exereised hy the poiice, whose authority over the Press is greater in reaity than it seems to be from the letter of the statute. It is no ionger necessary, as it once was. and stiii is in Russia, to obtain sanction for the issue of each number before it is sent into the world, hut it is the iegai duty of a puhlisher to lay a copy of his journai before the poiice authority directiy it reaches the press. This an informai celsor revises, and in the event of any articie belng ohnoxious he may order the immediate conflscation of the whole issue, or $n$ court of law, which in such matters works

in Germany,
very speediiy, may do so for him. As the police and judicial authorities have wide discretion in the determination of editoriai culpahility, this power of conflisa, is felt to be a harsh one. While ihe Soclaist aw existed the powers of the poilice were fur sumpe extensive than wow, ad that they were also reni is proved hy the whinedaie extermination of newspapers of soclailstie tendencles which took piace hetween the years 1878 and 1880. Since that inw disapprired, however, Sociaiist journais have sprung up ngain in aluandance, thougit the expertence gained hy their conductors in the unhappy past does not enabie them to steer ciear of frictlon with the nuthoritics. The poilice, too, regulites the publite snie of newspapers and decicies wheth in $\%$ shaii be cricd in the street or not. In Berinu special editions cannot be pubilshed without the prior sanction of this authority. So frequent are prosecutions of editors that many newspapers are compelied to maintain on their staffs hatches of Sitzredakteare, or 'sitting edil. tors, ' whose speciai function is to serve in priwa (colioquiaily sitzen=sit) the terms of detention that may le awarded for the too liberai eaercise of the critical facuity.

Some measure of the puhbic deoreciation of newspapers is due to the fact that they are iargeiy in Hebrew hamis. In the inrge towns the Press is. Indeedi, esseatiniiy a Jewish iustitution."-W. II. Dawson, Germany and the Germans, pr. 2. ch. 10 (r.1).

"Froin Coionel Chandier's Inspeetion Report [the. port of a Conficlerate offieial] dated August 5th, 194H, I flute the following: 'A railing around the inshife of the storkaif, and about 20 feet from it , constitutes the 'dead line,' beyond wbieh pris onfry are not allowed to pass. A small stream passes from west to east through the Inciosure, about $1: 51$ yards from its southern ilmit, and furnishes the onir water for washing accesslble to the prisoners. Bordering this stream. about three quarters of an acre in the centre of the inclosure are so marshy as to be at present unfl for occupatlon, reducing the avallabic present area to ahout $23+$ acres, which gives somewhat less than six square feet to each prisoner'; and, he remarks, 'even this is being constantly reduced by the additions to their number.' Dr. Jneeph Jones, Professor of Chemistry in the Medicai Coliege of Georgha, . . went to Andermonvilie under the direction of the surgeon generai of the Confederacy, pursuant to an order dated Rtcimond. Virginia, Augnst 6th, 1884.

Dr. Jones proceeds to give a table liinstrating the mean strength of prisoners confined in the stockade. . His table shows the foilowing as the mean resuit: March, $\mathbf{8}, 500$; April. 10, (4K); May, 15,(140) : June, 22,291; Juiy, 20,030: August, 82,899. He says: ' Within tbe elreumscribel area of the sackade the Federai prisoners were compeiled to perform all the offices of life. conking, washing, urinating, defecation, exereise. and sieeping.'
'The low grounds bordering the stream were covered witb human excrement and filth of all kinde. which in many easea appeared to be aiive witb working maggots. An indescribnbie siekening stench arose from the fermenting mass of buman dung and filth.' And

A. D. 943-1092.-The Kings become Counts. -The Spanish connection.-"Southern France, after having been the inheritance of several of the successors of Chariemagne, was eievated in 879 to the rank of an independent kingdom, by Bozon, who was crowned at Mantes under the titie of King of Aries, and who reduced under his dominion Provence, Dauphit-, Savoy, the Lyonnese, and some provinces of Burgundy. The sovereignty of this territory exchanged, in 943, the titio of King for that of Count, under Bozon II. ; but the kingdom of Provence was preserved entire, andi continued in the house of Burgundy, of which Bozon I. was the founder. This noble house became cxtinct in 1092, in the person of Giiibert, who ieft oniy two daugisters, between whom his possessions were divided. One of these, Faydide, married Aiphonso, Count of Touiouse; and the other, Douce, became the wife of Raymoni Berenger, Connt of Barceiona.

The accession of Iaymond Berenger, Count of Barceiona and hushand of Douce, to the throne of Provence, gavc a new ilrection to the national spirit, hy the mixture of the Cataians with the Provençais. $\qquad$ Raymond Berenger and his successors introluced into Provenee the spirit both of iiberty and chivalry, and $n$ taste for elegance and the arts, with ail the seiences of the Arabians. The union of these nobie senti. ments gave hirth to that poetieal spirit which sione out, at once, over Provence and ali the south of Europe, iike an electric flash in the midst of the most paipnhle darkness, illuminating ali things by the brightness of its flume. A. D, 1618-1700.-The rise of the Hohenzollern State.-"The winole territory of the new diuchy of Prussia was aienated eceiesiasticai laui: tle pope's anatioma and the romperor's har fell on the head of the renegate prince. Never was the lzomau see willing io recognize such $\mathrm{F}^{\prime \prime}$ In uniting the dincal crowu of their In isins witi their own eleetoral Lat th.e $\quad$ 'i ans of the Mark hroke forever with the hurch. Their state stood and fell hencel wu with the fortunes of protestantism. At the same time John Sigismuni adopted the reformed ereeti. . . At the sime time of thus gaining a firm footing on the ibatie John sigismund acquired the duchy of Cleve together with the counties of Mark and lavensberg, a territory narrow in eireuniference but inghis important for the internai deveiopinent as well ss for the European poiliey of tise state. They were lands wheh were strongholdis of old and proven peasant and clvie freedom, ricier and of higher capacities for euiture tian the needy colonies of the East, outposts of incaiculahle value on Girnany's weakest frontier. In Vienna sad Malridi ic was felt as a severe defeat that $s$ new evangelicai power should establish Itseif there on the Lower Rhine where Spaniards and Xetherlanders were struggling for the existence or non-existence of protestantism - right before the gates of Cologne which was the citadel of Romanism in the empire. . A power so situat in could no longer have its horizon bounded br the marrow elrcle of purely territorial policy ;

It was a necessity for it to seek to round off lts wideiy scattered provinees Into a eonsistrut whole: it was compeiled to act for the empire and to strlke for lt, for every nttack of strangers on German grounti eut lnto lts own flesh.
For the House of Brandenhurg, too, tempting caiis often sonnderi from afar, ... but a blessed providener, which earnest thinkers shouid not regard as a mere ehance, compeiled the IIohenzolierns to remain in Germany. They did unt need the foreign crowns, for they owed their Independent position anong other sates to tie possession of Prussia, a iand tiat was Gerinain to the eore, a land the very being of whiell was rooted in the mother-cointry, and yet at the same tlme one that diii not belong to tise puliticai organlzation of the empire. Thus with one foot ln the empire, the otiner pianted outsicie of it, the Prussian state won for itself the right to carry on a European poilicy which could strive for none bit German ends. It was ahle to eare for Germany without troubling itseif about the empire and its superannuated forms. . . . The state of the IIohenzoilerns . . . was on the sure road to ruin so iong as Join Sigismuntl's suceessor looked sieepily into the worid ont of his languld eyes.

It was at this juncture that the elector Srederick William, the greatest (irrmnn man of his day, entered the chnos of German life as a prinee without land, arnedi oniy with eluh and sling, and put a new soul into tiu* slumbering forces of his state by the power of his wili. From that time on the impulse of the royai wiil, conscious of its goni, was never lost to the growing elief state of tive Germans. Out can Imaglne English history witiout Wiliiam Ill, the bistory of France without Ricineiien: the Prussian state is the work of its prinees. Already in the first years of the rule of tine Grent Elector the pecuiar eharacter of the new politieal creation siows out sharply and elearly. The nephew of Gustavis Acioiphas who leads his army to battle with the old protestant ery uf 'with Goul' resumes the ehurch policy of inis uncie. Ife it is who first among the strife of ehureites erles out the saving word and iemands general aud unconditionai amnesty for ali three ereeds. This was the program of the Westpinaian pence. And far beyond the provisions of this treaty of peace went the toierauce whieh the Hohenzoilerns ailowed to he exereised within their iands. . . While Austria drives out its best Gernians hy force, tile confines of Brandenburg are tirown open with unequalled hospitality to sufferers of every ereed. Ilow many thousaud times has the song of praise of the Boisenian exiles sonnded fortin in tin Marks! . . When L.ouls XIV revokes tin Edict of Nantes tise little Brandenburg lord steps forth holdy against him as the spokesman of the protestant world, and offers through his Potsdam Ediet sieiter and protection to tite sons of tite martyred ehureh.

Thus year after year an abundance of yonng life streamed over into the diepopuiated Enst Marks : the German biood that the Hapsburgis thrust from them fruetifed the land of their rivnis, and at the death of Erederick II about a third of the lnimbitants of the state consisted of the descendants of immigrants who had come there since the days of the Great Fipetor.
The partleularism of ail estates and of aii territorial districts heard with horror how the Great Elector. . . supported his throne on the two coiumns of monarehicai absolutism: the miles perpetuus and permanent taxation. In the inlnds of the people troops and taxes stiil passed for an extraordluary state hurden to be borne in diays of need. Isut Frederick Wlillam raised the ariny into a permanent institution and weak. ened the power of the territoriai estates hy ln . troxiucing twe general taxes in all his proviuces. On the country at large he imposed the geueral inide-tax (ge'seralhufenschoss), on the citles the accise witich was a muitifurm system of how direct and indirect imposts caicuiated with full regard for the Impoverished condtion of agrl. culture and yet attacking the taxabie resources at as many polnts as possible. In the empire there was hut one voice of execration $\mu_{z}$ alnst these first heglnulugs of the inodern armes and finance system. Prussia remained from the beginning of its history the most hated of the German states: those imperiai lands that felf to this princely dynasty entered, almost all of them, with iond complalnts and vioieut opposition linto this new poiitlcal combinatlon. Aii of them aoon afterwards hiessed their fate. . . . Frederick William's successor by acquiring the royai crown gained for hls house a worthy place in the socicty of the European powers and for his peopie the commou name of Prussians. Only dire need, only the hope of Prussla'a military ald, induced the imperial court to grant its rival the new dig. nity. A spasm of terror went through the theocratic world: the electorate of Mainz entered a protest; the Teut onic Orier demanded hack agaln its old possesslon, which now gave the name to the hereticai monarchy, whilie the papai caiendar of states, for nearly a hundred years to come, was to kuow oniy a 'margrave of II randenhurg.'.' -II. von Treitschke, Deutache Geachichte im 1 tien Trhrhundert (trans. from the German), r. 1, 1 p .
