CHAPTER XVIII. The Viper in the Breast. (continued)

"And will get plenty of it—such as it is. Did you call on me this morning to discuss literature and Arabella Minton?" "How snappy you are, Amber? I called to have a chat with you. Have you heard that Anne Notting is to be married this spring? The affair was all made up at my entertainments."

SUNSHINE AND Scott's Emulsion. Are the two great creators of energy. You can get along without Scott's Emulsion if you have enough sunshine, but for the millions who don't get much sunshine, Scott's Emulsion is absolutely necessary.

"Do be quiet, Bessie! I am crying nothing glorious to your husband. He is a glorious creature of course." "He really likes you, Amber. We only wanted to warn you." "Robert is the person to warn. Go to Robert."

going to be found out, and she mused upon the circumstance with that good inner laugh which scarcely ripples the face but leaves, nevertheless, a pleasant glow at the heart: "Bessie will be so sweetly cruel! I would not miss the denouncement—no, not for a new Worth dinner-dress. The novel Bessie had thought so objectionable was no longer necessary to Ambrosia. She found entertainment in her own thoughts. Then there was the anticipated visit to preparer, Ambrosia having a very active sense of the toilet dashing to her own sex. But it was quite late in the afternoon when Miss Saltar arrived, and Ambrosia was tired of expectation—she had a feeling of ennui and worn-out visitor, and there was nothing in her visitor to create a fresh curiosity."

do yours or not, as you prefer. Mrs. Jack Madison thinks the reasons good and sufficient ones." "And Mrs. Jack Madison will do her duty and every other person's duty also, I have no doubt." Miss Saltar waved her hand and said, with an air of studied weariness: "There is a little girl in whom I take an interest. She is very poor, and she is sick of consumption. Once or twice a week I go to see her. Last Thursday she sent me word they had moved to a house in Second Street, and to this house I went. As I sat talking to her, a child in the next room cried. She seemed fretted by the crying, and finally said she must rise to go for the child. She had promised the mother to do so. I went in her place. As I lifted the squalling little morsel, I saw on the chimney-piece a large photo of Doctor St. Ange. I felt it also, and on the back was written: "To my dear Leonore, from her devoted husband, Achilles St. Ange."

ST. JOHN'S, N.F.L.D., THE LATE REV. CANON DUNFIELD

The Passing of Canon Dunfield.

On Saturday afternoon we chronicled briefly the passing of one of our best known and beloved citizens in the person of Canon Dunfield, the Rector of St. Thomas's Parish. His demise took place at 2.15 p.m., just before press hour. For the past thirty-five years Canon Dunfield played a considerable part in the religious, philanthropic and social life of Newfoundland, but more particularly of the Church of England.

Sixty-nine years ago the Canon was born in Yorkshire, where he was brought up as a boy, and many of our best characteristics of the county of broad acres, open hearts and sweet voices, he brought to Newfoundland with him and retained throughout life. For generations Yorkshire has been famous for its many excellent church choirs, and its sweet voiced choristers. In this musical atmosphere the Canon was trained, and the benefit of it he shared in after years with his own choir and at public entertainments. As a young man he received his first theological training at Warrminster College and from thence he passed on to St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, and came out here for ordination in 1876. He became incumbent of Trinity, and although he left there nearly 30 years ago, his name is still well remembered there.

Twenty-nine years ago he came to the city and began work with Canon Wood as Curate, and gradually enlarged the sphere of his labours until there was hardly a religious, scholastic or social movement with which he was not prominently identified. This was in the days when the Rev. Canon Wood was Rector, and about nine years ago the Bishop of Newfoundland had raised him to a stall in the Cathedral.

To his pastoral labours Canon Dunfield gave incessant attention. Church music he took an intense delight in, and to his sermon he gave much thought and care. As a preacher he occupied a high place. His discourses were marked by sound sense, clothed in chaste language and delivered in that clear and distinct voice which made it always a joy to listen to him.

Apart from his parish labours, his work was multifarious. For 24 years he was Clerical Secretary to the Synod and became the Erskine May of its procedure and practices. For many long years also he was a member of the Executive Council of the Synod and most of the lesser Committees of the Synod, notably of the Council of Queen's Theological College, Spencer College, Committee, of the Directorate of Bishop Field College, of which he was Vice-Chairman, and of City School Board for Church Schools. For very many years he was Secretary and in reality the working head of the Church of England Orphanage, and it was always a pleasure to see the Canon passing among the orphans as a big brother with a helping hand, a smiling face, and a cheery word. Of a similar nature were his relations with the boys of the Church Lads Brigade, of which institution he was Battalion Chaplain.

In his parish, in his pulpits, as secretary and counsellor of many institutions, as a singer, a lecturer, he played a simple, manly, hearty unaffected part. A man of affairs, with multifarious calls and onerous duties, he liked the solitude of his study and to live among the scenes and characters depicted by Shakespeare and Dickens, and when summer came nothing delighted him more than the sweet solitude of the woods, communing with nature and whipping the ponds and living the life that Isaac Walton lived.

Canon Dunfield was essentially a manly man, and a Christian gentleman, who did his duty in that state of life to which he had been called. To his sorrowing wife, his son John, in Canada, and his son and daughters at home, we extend our sympathy.

will go up heartfelt prayers for the family of the deceased, his old friends who loved him for his zeal in the Master's cause. Our friend and pastor has gone and lives now where suffering is not known. His memory will continue to live in the hearts of his children, whom he grounded in sacred duties. We lay his body in the dust where it will remain till the great day dawns and the shadows flee. We cannot have him back, but we can make use of the remembrance of him to aim at a higher and truer consecration of our lives to the Master's service. His family will be remembered by all his friends who will utter sincere prayers to help them bear their great sorrow. The Dead March in Saul was played while the congregation stood.

AT THE CATHEDRAL.

In spite of the stormy weather a large congregation assembled at the Cathedral in the morning. It was quite apparent that the parishioners deeply felt the loss sustained by St. Thomas's Church. The Cathedral stall which the deceased Canon occupied the past nine years was draped in black. In his sermon the Rector made a very touching reference to the deceased and the great loss sustained by the church. The congregation stood while the Dead March in Saul was being played. Rev. Jas. Bell, who preached at the evening service, spoke in touching terms of the great loss sustained by the church in the death of such a beloved and honored clergyman.

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral of the late Rev. Canon Dunfield will take place to-morrow. In the morning the remains will be placed in the parish church and will be interred in the Church of England Cemetery at 3 p.m.

The clergy will robe in the Vestry at 2.30 p.m.

Rev. Father O'Callaghan preached at Last Mass yesterday. After reading the Gospel of the day from the 4th chap. of St. Matt. in which it is told how the Devil tempted our Divine Lord, the rev. preacher drew a vivid picture of the temptation to drink afforded by the saloons of the city. He depicted in plain terms the heinousness of the sin of drunkenness and the misery that the saloon brought on the wives and children of the man who spent his money there. Drinking was the cause of a great deal of the hunger and poverty now raging in the city, and was the cause of keeping many away from Mass on Sundays and from their religious duties. Those who contributed to the sin of drunkenness had an awful responsibility to face.

In the evening the service consisted of Rosary and Benediction only owing to the weather and the small congregation. Rev. Fr. O'Callaghan gave Benediction.

Recording Music on New Machine.

Instrument Invented That is of Great Help to Composer—No Notes Will be Lost Now.

A famous critic once made the rather sweeping statement that "more masterpieces were lost to music than were ever gained." Strange as this remark may at first appear, there was a good deal of truth in it. He meant, of course, that many wonderful passages which must have been played by great composers while idly fingering the piano were lost forever. The brain of the genius is notoriously fitful, and while working out one idea a dozen others might unconsciously be communicated to the fingers, and their value not appreciated until too late. Such tragedies must be frequent.

Now, however, by the aid of a new invention with the rather formidable name of the "Automusicograph," nothing need be lost to music in the future. This ingenious apparatus, which can be attached to any piano, records on a roll of music paper every note that is played whether good, bad, or indifferent. Many an amateur can compose melodies in his head, and play them but few can write music as it should be written. Now this little machine does that part of the work.

It takes the form of a small cabinet with a glass front, and is fixed over the reading desk. A paper roll, marked with different colored lines, is placed inside and the clockwork machine set going. As it revolves, every note that is touched is marked upon it in typewriter fashion. When the sheet of paper is detached after playing, a graduated gauge is placed by the side of it which determines the exact position of the note.

Don Angelo Barbitri, the inventor, claims for it that it is not only accurately reproduces the notes played, but also the time. The value of the device, therefore, to every composer who extemporizes will be enormous. Mascagni, the famous composer, is using one of these machines in writing his new opera, "Eisibeau."

Reciprocity at Ottawa.

Special to Evening Telegram. OTTAWA, This Morning. The failure of Congress to pass the bill ratifying the Reciprocity arrangement has added perplexity to the difficulties of the Laurier Government. The Reciprocity debate will be resumed on Tuesday, when Laurier will speak. B. I. S. Meeting. Rev. Father Clarke, P.F., of the Honored. At the annual meeting of the exiled Irish Society held here at noon a resolution was unanimously passed to present a petition to Rev. M. J. Clarke, P.F., Torbay, who is about to be found for good. Hon. J. D. the President, occupied the chair after adding two new members to the roll and receiving the report of the committee in charge of the presentation of the petition on the day of the presentation. The President's speech was taken by Mr. Higgins, who made a complimentary speech to Father Clarke in which he referred to his work at Father Clarke had done for the cause of education and the uplift of the people. He was so well known that it was less to speak of it. His speech will be generally received. As Clarke is a member of the Society a worthy son of the Emerald Isle was only fitting that the B.I.S. present him with an address. Mr. J. Lacey, Chairman of the B.I.S. Committee, who presented the petition, paid a glowing tribute to rev. pastor. Speeches appropriate to the subject before the chaplain were made by Messrs. J. M. Devine, Burke, J. P. Croft, J. J. Phipps, E. L. Carter, Mr. Burke's remarks were particularly interesting and had been associated with the gentleman for many years as Superintendent of Education and to speak from personal experience the zeal that the rev. pastor of Torbay had always shown in the education of his flock. Mr. Burke had an opportunity of observing the state of education in Canada, but he never seen anything to equal Torbay. The President said a word in support of the resolution, which, on being put to the vote was carried unanimously. The President then announced that he had received an invitation from the Catholic Irish Society of Boston to attend their annual celebration, which the meeting adjourned till Sunday.
