The Mustard Flouring Mill.

The Mustard Flouring Mill.

The writer recently had the pleasure of a visit to the new mill erected by Mr. Hugh Mustard in this village. The machinery was just set in full motion and though vast and complicated run with perfect harmeny.

THE ENGINE ROOM

is 34x27. The engine, a 65 horse power, is of the best half inch seed, and good for 150 lbs to the sourar inch, though run at much, less. Mr. Wm. McConnel is the energetic and experienced engineer. There is a fine well through to the rock 116 ft, the waser brought in pipes to a tank 16 ft high and filtered into the boiler. The driving wheel is 10 ft in diameter, and 20 inch face. The engine is automatic or self-acting, with 4 valves and 2 steam valves worked by eccentrics, and 2 exhaust valves by came. The most remarkable thing is that by the "American Lubricator" the oil is conveyed by the steam to all parts of the engine. It was built by G. T. Smith & Co., Stratford. Mr. Bridgeford had special charge of its erection and Mr. Bragg is chief engineer of the whole mill.

In the basement is the main shaft and belting, separator, smut mill, a brush machine, wheat hoppers, etc.

on the first floor

ON THE FIRST FLOOR
are six double set of rollers, two mill stones for common gristing, three flour packers, scales, etc. It is the full roller process and therefore superior to many mills bearing the name, and can turn out 130 barrels per day.

At the Forest fair Thos. Stephenson, of the 11th con, sold a sucking Fercheron celt. five months old, to Goo. Knight, of Sarnia township, for $05. The colt was aired by Smith's "Young Roya!

This week Jas. C. Shepherd, of Uttoxeter, received a long letter from his adopted son, J. W. Patterson, who is now a "missionary at Spalmoheen, B. C. The letter gives a description of that province.

The missionary sermon in Bethel on. Sabbath morning last was preached by Rev. A. I. Snider, of Arkona, and the missionary meetine in the same place on Monday evening was addressed by Rev. A. L. Russell, B. D., of Forest, and Wm. McDonagh, of Sarnia.

The Scott Act petition was circulated last.

D., of Forest, and Wm. McDonagh, of Sannia.

The Scott Act petition was circulated last week in the Camiachie polling division by Rev. J. Wilson and Henry Thomas. Very few refused to sign it, and in every case the matter was treated with the utmost courtesy. There is the promise of a very large majority here. The Camlachie division will come well to the front.

COUNCIL MINUTES.

Plympton township council met October 23rd, all the members present. The minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

The infant son of Elias Bedan was buried on Tuesday of last week. Teething was the cause of death.

Mrs. M. M. Downing is very sick with crysipelas of the face. It has been so swollen that she could not see.

In all probability the "matrimonial wave" which swept over our village a year ago will not be revived this season.

Miss Ada Cornell has gone to Paris to attend the wedding of her brother, Seth Cornell, which event is to come off soon.

Mrs. John Romph, who has been ill for the last six months with that dreadful and fatal disease consumption, died on Sunday svening of last week. The funeral took place on Tuesday and was largely attended by relatives and friends.

The Board of Health met on Monday evening of last week, at which Dr. Munns reported a case of Typhoid Fever, which he considered of a malignant type. The health inspector was directed to take precautionary measures against its spread.

Mr. Kerr is pushing his building operations ahead very rapidly on the site of the old Western Hotel, and will soon have his house ready to live in. We understand he intends carrying on the shoemaking business there are soon as he gets moved.

THE STORY OF MY LOVE.

CHAPTER V.

CHAPTER V.

To-morrow! I closed my eyes that night in an ecstacy of delight. The calm screnity of the night-skies, the gentle ripple of green leaves, the silver light of the moon, and the dark handsome face of my lover—I dared in my own heart use the word—were with me in my dreams. The song of the nightingales and my lover's voice blended harmonicusly, greeting my ears with sweet melody as I dreamed on of the morrow. "Felicia—good night, Felicia!" was the burden of the melody; and its ravishing strains fell woothingly on my lesses.

lody; and its ravishing strains fell toothing-ly on my senses.

"To-morrow" was come. The sun was gilding the earth with its resplendent rays, the birds arolled their songs of delight, the gentle wind, kissing the flowers, wafted their perfume abroad. Nello was coming to tell me "hat it all meant." I knew that one word explained it, and that that word was "love." He was coming. Patience— he would be here soon, and then my life would be crowned by the possession of his love!

would be crowned by the possession of his love!

I was standing under the spreading cedar bough, anticipating in thought the happiness that was to be mine, when a letter was brought to me. I had gone thitter knowing that he must pass by the spot. The golden sunlight that pierced through the drooping boughs was warm and pleasant. He would stand beside me, and he would tell me "what it all meant." Taking the letter from the bearer, a thrill passed through me. I knew by instinct that the note was from him, I opened it hastily. It ranthus—my first loveletter—opened it hastny. It is the letter...

"I had hoped to be with you to-day, Fellow to you. But I "I had hoped to be with you to-day, Felicia, as I have much to easy to you. But I have just received a telegram from my agants in freiand, and, if I want to save my property there from utter destruction, I must go at once. I shall not be song absent. I hope to be back with you before the nightingales have once. I shall not be iong absent. I hope to be back with you before thenightingales have cessed to sing."

Though the sun was shedding its warmth around, a sudden grey chill fell over everything. All the gold seemed to fade from the ennlight, the perfume to depart from the flowers, the light from the skies, the glory frem earth and see. A mist of passionate tears rose before my eyes as I saw my cup of haappiness dashed to the ground. It was not "to-morrow" after all; and I remembered how people always said that to morrow never came. But he would return. I felt grieved, disappointed, but not fearful. Lady Saxon had otten spoken to me of their Irish estate, Locofin, and had expressed a wish that Lionel would sell it. The tenants were always in rebellion against the agent, and she was nervous lest harm should come to her son. He laughed at the idea. He was not afraid of disaffection or open rebellion, so he had gone amongst them; and I—

Well, the summer was not over, the roses had not ceased to bloom. All would come right if I had but the patience to wait. I should soon sgain see the face I loved so well.

But, notwithstanding my self-administer-

Dere, and had remained with us a whole week, instructing me in my new duties, and teaching me muoh of which I had previously been quite ignorant. It was he who had approved all my plans for building, and who had told me that I could not spend Sir William's hoarded thousands in a better fashion.

William's hoarded thousands in a better fashion.

I felt no alarm at hearing that he had orms, even though it was suddenly and without notice. I was much broubled about aunt Annette, for she seemed so unlike hersell. "He come soon after you had gone to Dunroom," she went on nervously. "He wanted me to send for you, but I thought you should have one more happy day."

"Mr Benson would never make me unhappy," I laughed. "He is always the bearer of good news to me."

She looked at me wistfully.
"Mr. Benson desires a long talk with you on business-matters," she explained. "You had better defer it until after dinner."

"I will do that with pleasure," I answerdlit le imagning the nature of the business.

Had I been less engressed in my own love.

ness.

Had I been less engrossed in my own love story, I should have known from Mr Benson's nervous hesitating manner that something of more than usual importance was amiss. While I was talking to the grave child laware while I was diung with him, I smiss. While I was talking to the grave old lawyer, while I was dining with him, I was in fancy looking into my absent lover's face and listening to the notes of the night-incales:

face and list-ning to the notes of the nightingales.

"Can you spare an hour this evening," irquired Mr. Benson; "or shall I defer my business until the mcrning?"

It sppeared to me that he was not unwilling to defer it. I had never seen him so unlike himself—confused, hesitating, glancing at me strangely, beginning a speech, then ending abruptly.

I saud to him at last—

"You are not we'l, Mr Benson."

"No, I am in great distress," he answered.

"No, I am in great distress," he answered.

"In distress?" It was such a strange confession for him to make. "In distress?" I repeated. "You are not ill, I hope? You have not met with any misfortune?"

repeated. "You are not ill, I hope? You have not met with any misfortune?"

"I am not ill, and the misfortune that depresses me is not mine," he said.

"Not yours!" I exclaimed; and his grave manner gave an additional significance to his words.

"The fact is," he continued, looking at me, "I have, for the first time in my professional life, made a terrible mistake."

I could only repeat the words, "A terrible mistake."

I could only repeat the words, "A terrible mistake."

'It is not often that lawyers do that," he said. "They are generally very cautious. I fear that in this particular business I have been neither. A lawyer," he continued, "above sIl men, should well crosider every step he takes. In this one case I did not."

He was talking to a girl whose whole soul vibrated to the music of the nightingales and the sound of her lover's voice; and even those words, portentous as they were, did not startle her.

"Yet," he continued, "I cannot see how I could have helped is, or how I am to blame, though blame must lie somewhere."

"It does not lie with you, I feel sure," I said, with a faint attempt at consolation, and as a proof of my confidence in his legal acuteness.

"The worst of it," he continued, "is that the mistake I have made affects you."

"Then," I said, "it can be casily reme."

By degrees hope seemed to come back to my beart, the color to my face, clear thought to my brain. Then I realized that I was no len ger mistress of Jesmond Dene, and that I must give way to my cousin's little son, I confess, between smiles and tears, that the very words "My counts" little son, "softened and warmed my lifeart to the child as nothing else could have done, and robbed the blow of half its bitter sting. My cousin's little son—the son of the bright-faced hand, some lad who had been so kind to me in my girlhood, who had kissed me, and had promised to marry me when he had seen the world! He had married some one else, and I must give way to his child; the rightful heir to Jesmond Dene. Still my heart warmed to him for my dead counin's aske.

"As you will remember," continued Mr. Benson, "there was no cordiality between tabler and any Sig William liked to save warmon to nim for my dead cousin's sake.

"As you will remember," continued Mr. Benson, "there was no cordislity between father sud son. Sir William liked to save money; Paul enjoyed spending it. The father's miserly ways made home haveful to the son. They quarrelled fiercely before they parted, and I should imagine from the tone of the latters that passed between them that they were never on friendly terms spain. Sir William refused him an allow-ance for some time, so deeply rooted was his anger. He afterwards relented; but by that time the young man's heart was hardened. I know that Sir William wrote to him several times on the subject of marriage, urging him to take great care not to be so foclish as to fall in love—that he must not marry until he returned to England, and then he was to marry a wealthy woman. Money was to be his first consideration. Sir William told me all about these letters. He added also that he had never recived an answer to them. "That accounts," remarked Mr. Benson, "for the young fellow's selence about his marriage. There is no doubt he believed implicitly that, if his father knew of it, he would disinherit him and leave him penniless, for he married much beneath him, his wife having no dowry except a beautiful face."

"Who was she?" I asked.

penniless, for he ma ried much beneath him, his wife having no dowry except a beautiful face."

"Who was she?" I asked.

"Her name was Gabrielle Fairfax," he replied, "and she was living in the family of Major Esmond as governess to his children—a very unusual thing in India; but the Elmond children were strong and healthy, and their parents did not care to part with them. She was a most beautiful and a very good girl, so Colonel Brownlow tells me, clever and accomplished, belonging to a respectable English family. She had, of course, no fortune, and no prospect of ever possessing any. Paul Jesmond fell in love with and married her. No one knew of the marriage, except Major Esmond and his wife. Paul dared not let it be known, lest his father should take his wife straight to Jesmond bene, and trust to her lovely face to win bim his father's forgiveness. Miss Gordon, I can hear in fanoy nis cheery young voice saying, "When my father sees her, he will relent." He was always sauguine, poor Paul!"

I knew that—my bright-faced handsome will relent. He was always sanguine, poor Paul!"

I knew that—my bright-faced handsome consin! Mr. Benson went on—

"He rented a pretty little house on the Neilgherry Hils for his wife, and they lived happily for two years no one guessing his secret. "A son was born there; and Paul Jesmond who keew the importance of that son's birth, took the precaution of having it properly registered, and of keeping a copy of the registration. The chill was obristened by the resident chaplain, who, in his turn, faithfully kept the promise of secrecy that he had given. Paul took yet another precaution, which, for one so habitually carelless as him-li, seems to me somewhat remarkable. He gathered together the needful papers—his certificate of maringe, and the ocrtificate of his son's birth—and placed them together, with a long letter to his father, telling him all the story of his marriage, and begging, if anything happened to him, that he would be kind to his wife and child."

"Let little Guy succeed me, 'he wrote." Do not visit the offences of the father on the son. However faulty I may have been.

The state of the s

the matter. But, whou Maj r Esmond returned, and heard what had happened, he went at once to Colonel Brownlow, and told him the whole story. The Colonel was not try well pleased, and blamed Major Esmond for having connived at a seoret marriage of a young officer. Then Captain Hartigan was sen't to find the young wife, so soon widowed, and to communicate to her the intelligence of her husband's death. He found her with her infant son. She was fair. Her distress was territible when she leantful as a fream, and good as she was fair. Her distress was territible when she had dearly loved her husband. At first she had dearly loved her husband. Ask sake she conserved her had been she declined to go home to Esgland. She wasted to be left slone to die in pears where he had left her. It was represented to her how greatly such as course would in in in the prospects of the boy, whe con his granifather's death would in all problity to make the prospects of the boy, whe con his granifather's death would in all problity become Sir Guy Jesmond bene. "Yes, there is no doubt he dil," he replied. Stil there was a significant hestation in his manner.

"You do not like her?" I said, divining, as I believed, his true thoughts. I put the question so suddenly that he had no time to taink before he answered.

"No—indeed I do not," with an air of great relief, "But she will be here to-morrow, Miss Gordon. She would not come with me, but it was arranged that she shoul I fellow me."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the beneat I have derived from the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882.

Yours gratefully,
HIRAM PHILLIPS."

SWINE BREEDING AND FEEDING.

Swine breeding and feeding in the central and western portions of the United States have become a business of almost signatic proportions. It is a common thing to meet with farmers who keep from 25 to 100 head on farms of 160 acrea, where ten years ago ruly three or four were kept for family use. O' the different breeds, the most common are the Berkuhires and Poland Chinas, with an occasional herd off Essex, Geneter-White, or the latest novelty, Duroc Jersey. There seems to be considerable rivalry between the breeders of Berkshires and Polands; in rome localities the mejority favor one breed, and in others, the other.

The prancipal aim of the breeder should be to get healthy, vigorous pigs, that will come to maturity quickly, and formish the most poends from a given amount of food. The days of breeding sows to scrub miles are past; what we now want, is careful al-cuion of both male and femisle. Chose the best natives, or the common stock of the country, and cross them with pure bred males, and the results will be very satisfactory. The pigs seem to take all of the good qualities of the male, while the excess of bring and offial, common to the natives, is greatly toned down.

A Once Noted Outlaw Again Arrested as He Stopped Out of the Peniters, When Harry English stepped out of the penitentiary at Allecheny recently he was accorated by two tall men dressed in dark clothes, writes a correspondent from Bradford, Pa. They were detectives, and they wanted Harry English for forgery. The ex convict, a short and finely proportioned man, who had just served three years and six mooths for a similar crime, held out his hands for the manucles. On Wednesday the detectives brought English to Bradford, and en Thursday he was placed in a cell at Smithport, where he will await trial. English has a remarkable stry. Proir to 1830 he lived with his wife and three children on Washington street, in Bradford, He was for a time in the employ of Mayor Broder. In the spring of 1830 he removed his family to Caledonia, Elk county. In the meantime he had quitted the lumber business, and took lessons in penmanship. He was so successful that at the February term of the McKean county court, several indictments were found against him for forgery.

scorecely be compared, either as regards its sustaining or lattering qualities or the relish with which cattle will eat it. It is generally calculated by the farmer that the grain alone pays for the raising of the corn crop, and the teed realized from the fodder may be considered as so much clear gain. There is a great deal of it upon an acre, and it will crtainly pay to save it in as good shape as possible and when possessing its highest feeding value, which can only be done by cutting it up early before it is fully matured, and before the frests have had an effect upon it. Even when other feed is abundant, we believe it will not pay to neglect the corn-fodder, because other kinds of feed will keep, and in many localities can be disposed of to some advantage. At any rate, the cattle like a change now and then, and a turn to good, sweet, well-curse corn-fodder will be in every way beneficial.

Burn the Hassocks.—At this season of the year time is well spent that is employed in cutting the hassocks on meadow land with a carpenter's adze. They can be thrown into the hog pen, although it takes them some time to decompose, but the best way of getting rid of them is to pile them only, and when they get dry cart them to some gravelly knoll and burn them. EDITORIAL NOTES.

TWESDAY next will terminate the political battle that has been raging in the United States since July last. The parties are apparently pretty evenly matched, with the Democratic prospects brighter than they have been at any time since the war.

It is now believed that Sir John's real object in annexing Jamacia is to open up new territory where he can work off his old joke about a "rum un to go" with good effect. This campaign witticism would be highly appreciated in Jamacia, where everything with rum in goes down.

The amount of deposits in the Government savings banks is rapidly increasing. and now reach the handsome sum of thirty millions of dollars. This indicates that the people are satisfied with a moderate rate of interest where there is no doubt about

Mr. Editor.—I have just returned from a visit to Huron County, Michigan, and find that the country has much improved since my last visit. Considerable improvements have been made in the way of clearing, fencing and erecting a better class of buildings. During my last visit there I was accused of not attending church by Mr. Dibb. I was therefore very much disappointed on attending church this time not to find Mr. Dibb there. That genelleman stated that people who lived there for a while abandoned their evil ways and went to church. Is it to be presumed that Mr. Dibb has not yet lived there a sufficient length of time to act on his own statement? I will have to excuse him on the same ground as the man who could not attend the wedding on account of having bought five yoke of oxen. Mr. Dibb followed his example only on a small scale, as he was away trading a horse for a yoke of steers. Now, Sir, if the man that had the five yoke of oxen is to be blamed for not attending the wedding, what should be done with Dibb for permitting a small yoke of steers to keep him from attending church? On going to church the following Sabbath I found Mr. Dibb there. It is not for me to say what brought him there but "from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and Mr. Dibb was busy discussing political meetings. If that is what he calls abandoning his evil ways, what must he have been before he left North Dorchester? Trusting that in future he will take some of his own advice and not be too liberal in offering it where it is not appreciated, I am, Revival services are being held on the second line south of Arkona. Grand success is reported.

Mr. Gill Hagle and family returned home on Monday from a pleasant visit to friends in Huron County, Mich.

The Rev. W. H. Shaw will conduct the services at the second quartely meeting of the Warwick circuit at Providence on Sunday, Nov. 1st.

Mr. G. B. Patrick, of Ilderton, spent Saturday and Sunday with his son Alfred, teacher in S. S. Nos. 16 and 20, Warwick and Bosanquet.

Chas. McKnight, a hay fork agent, living in Warwick, emigrated to Michigan last Sunday night, leaving a number of business men and farmers sundry debts to remember him by.

A temporary fence has been placed around the gravel pit south of Arkona. This was much needed, as part of the road is dug away and persons driving by after dark were endangered.

Mr. Franklin Barnes is not so slow even if he is a single man. He has had two paring bees inside of a week, each of which wound up by "tripping the light fantastic too" to Frank's own music.

A splendid flowing well was struck on the farm of Mr. William Walker, lot. 15, second line south, last week. The water was reached at a depth of 52 feet. Mr. Phillip Coates engineered the operation.

Mr. Orson Weayer, of the sixth line north, died on Sunday last. The remains were interred in the Forest cometery on Tuesday. His wife and family have the sympathy of the community in their affliction.

Preparations are already being made for the annual Xmas entertainment at Bethel. It is proposed to have, it come off about the 23rd of December. It is understood that an interesting program is in course of preparation.

The little three year old son of Mr. Robert Long, fourth line, died quite suddenly on Sunday last. The remains were interred in the Presbyterian cemetery on Tuesday, the funeral services being conducted by the Rev. Hugh Cameron.

We are pleased to learn that the services of Mr. Luckham and Mr. Frank Kenward have been retained for another year. The Tuesday, the funeral services being conducted by the Rev. Hugh Cameron.

We are pleased to learn that the services of Mr. Luckham and Mr. Frank Kenward have been retained for another year. The general satisfaction they have given in their respective sections in the past is a sufficient guarantee for the future prosperity of the schools under their charge.

The brethren of Orange Lodge No. 516, Warwick village, have arranged a fine entertainment for the evening of Wednesday, Nov. 5th. Literary and musical exceptions and addresses by five delegymen are among the attractions that will be offered. Admission 25 cents. Troceeds to be applied to the building fund.

Gill Hagle states that he is pleased to learn that "Saurkraut" is devoting some of his spare time to reading the scriptures. In this praiseworthy attempt he has got as far as the 28th chapter of Genesis, which is the only portion of scripture he eyer knew him to observe and keep from his youth up.

A novelty in the way of a social will be held at the resilence of Mr. Robert Herbert, Egremont toad, on Monday eyening, Nov. 3rd. Hickohy nuts will be the attraction, and a jolly time may be expected. Admission tan cents. The proceeds will go towards defraying the expenses of the recent improvements made at the English Church, Warwick village.

A rather amusing instance of optical illusion occurred on the sixth line south on Sunday evening. One of the members of a family living not far from the corner of fiften noticed a peculiar light moving around in a mysterious manner near the woods. The attention of the male members of the family was called to the light, and after carefully observing it they decided that it must be a "Jack bo the Lantern." One of the party intimated that if he only had a gun he would "shoot the ————thing anyway." In order to satisfy their curiosity four of the party pursued the wandering illumination, and after tramping through the mud for about a mile, they overtook the mysterious light, which proved to be a lantern in the hands of Mr. A. McG., who was looking for a lost horse. The tired quartette then returned home, remarking that it would be a cold night when they got fooled again with a "will of the wisp."

Council met on Monday, 27th, pursuant to adjournment. All the members present, Minutes read and adopted.
Council took up the letting the contract of digging the Kersey Drain, nine tenders being presented in all. After opening and reading the same, it was decided they were all too high. The Reeve asked for offers to do it lower than the lowest tender, when it was finally awarded to Richard Dengate at $1.63 per rod.
On motion of Mr. McCormack, seconded by Mr. Thomas, James Machlin was paid $2 for gravel used this year.
On motion of Mr. Roche, seconded by Mr. Fuller, Michael Ratigan was paid $2 for minding gate at gravel pit for eight days.
Cn motion of Mr. Thomas, seconded by Mr. Fuller, Alexander Hume was paid $2 for minding gate at gravel pit for eight days.
On motion of Mr. Roche, seconded by Mr. Fuller, Alexander Hume was paid $100 for 33 weeks' attendance on Maggie Johnston and funeral expenses of the same.
On motion of Mr. Roche, seconded by Mr. Thomas, the Clerk received an order for third quarters' salary.

Previous to going iatobusiness in Parkhill, Mr. McIntosh was in the employ of C. M. Eastman & Co., Arkona, and his numerous friends here will be sorry to hear of his failure.

One day recently, as Mesers. Fred and Thos. Bartlett were driving to Parkhill, they were overtaken by a team driven by Mr. John Banks, of Arkona, which team became uncontrollable and ran away. The horses of course took their own way in spite of all obstacles, and unluckily for the Bartlett Bros., that way was directly over their buggy. Both buggies were considerably damaged, the horses received some severe injuries, and the occupants of the buggies a serious scare.

BIRTHS

In Alvinston, on the 17th inst., the wife of Mr. W. Bambridge, of a son.

THE TRUTH OF IT.

Some moreles after this coversation with my extracrdinary elerk, Sir William Jarvis, an old client of mine, died. I was summoned to attend his funerai, and to read the will afterward. The day before I went down to his courtry-house, I thought it would be as well if I looked through the drait of his will, in order to be familiar with its provisions. His box was brought hi, and I soon put my hand upon the document I wanted. It was dated in 1867—the year Wilson came to me—and the draft was in my elerk's handwriting. It was a voluminous document, containing of a good many sheets of paper, joined together at the corner. To the front page was affixed a slip of white paper, bearing sundry memorands—also in Wilson's handwriting—suggesting, most likely, a few alterations to be made if I approved of them.

most likely, a few alterations to be made if I approved of them.

As I bent this piece of paper back, to read the words concealed, I saw writing on the other side of it, and my heart stood still as I knew that the writing was identical with the writing of those words which had been stamped upon my brain since the day of Roland Northwick's death, With trembling' hands I detached the slip of paper, opened my secretaire, and laid it side by side with the net of warning. I had been deceived by no fancied resemi-

Inad been deceived by no fancied resemblance, the writing was the same, and appeculiar was the penmaship that I felt convinced that no chance could have produced these two specimens from different persons. True; the writing on the newly-found paper was better and firmer than on the other; but I compared letter for letter and found them exactly alike in their formation. The hand that wrote one wrote the other; and as the two elips of paper lay before me I felt that the murders of Roland Northwick had had his day. Then, with professional instinct, I sat down to think calmly over my discovery. The paper which I had so unexpectedly found contained what appeared to be a portion of Byron's "When we two parted." Probably the writer was an admirer offthe post, and had transcribed it for her own pleasure. The paper had been torn, lengthways, down the centre: so that only the first halves of the lines were left. But this was more than enough—I could have sworn to the identity of the writing had only two letters appeared.

Now came the difficulty. How could I connect the two papers? What theory could I form? Here, through an extraord: nary chance, was the glew starting from my very office. Here it had bean lying for five years. Now that it was within my hands, whither would it lead? Could it be possible that Wilson was in any way mixed up in the affair? I shuddered at the thought, and felt inclined to dimiss it as proposterous, At first I even contemplated asking him point-blank whoes writing; it might be on the back of the slip of paper he had used; but recognizing the necess ty for extreme caution, I decided not to do so. I endeavored to throw my memory back to the time when Sir William's will was made. Looking through my old diaries, I found that about that date we had a press of business in hand jut I could recollect nothing more then the surface and running over the sheets of the draft, asked:

"Do you remember the circumstances under which you drew this up? I ask, as there are several little things in it I should ha ed it as home, and you attered a good deal of it before it was fair copied."

Then this fact was pretty well established; the paper, whoever wrote it, came from Wilson's house. I saw clearly that my first proceeding was to ascertain everything I could respecting his antecedents and private life. I looked up my letters of 1867, and found from them that Wilson had been recommended to me by Forbes and Thwaites, of Bristol, a firm of high standing. Having ascertained this much, I went in search of a private inquiry agent. I hated the idea of having to spy on one of my household, as it were, but the serious nature of the case gave me no option.

were, but the serious nature of the case gave me no option.

'Can you attend to a bit of business for me?" I said. 'A few private inquiries I want made,"

'Cortainly, sir," replied the agent, pro-ducing his note-book; 'we are rather elack just now."

just now."

"I wantyou to go to Bristol to night. Inquire there of Mesers. Forbes and Thwaltes solicitors, from what part of the world James Wilson came. He was bankrupt in 1866, I believe, and they were concerned."

The heads of my instructions were rapidly jotted down.

"Then you will go to the place at which he originally lived, and find out all you can about kin. If

The agent nodded.

"Then you will ascertain his private address in London, and get all particulars you can of his history since he came to town. As soon as you know anough, write me, and I will call for your report."

"Case of defalcation, I suppose?" said the man, closing his note-book.

"Something of the sort," I replied, and wished him good morning.

I did not choose to take anyone into my confidence this time. I would get all the links together before I put the chain into other hands.

In five days' time the agent sent me word that his report was ready. I had been anxiously awaking its so hastened to hear what

Only awareness, and the had discovered.

There was a good deal in it that was of no consequence whatevar; but the detective had done his duty in getting the fullest information. Sifting out all axtraneous matter, I learned as follows:

James Wilson was of respectable family. He had been well educated, then articled to a firm of solicitors. Afterward he set up in practice at a rising watering-place on the Bristol Channel, where, as I have already stated; he became involved in some unfortunabilities rappaciations failing in conse wife's family lost considerable wums of money by his failure, they became completely estranged. Wilson came to Loudon in 1867, taking lodgings at Onelsea. His wife died on February 22od, 1870. They were apparently a happy and much attached couple. They had no children, and since her death Wilson had continued to occupy the same rooms.

the same recoms.

"And," added my informant, with a luring smile, "I find that since he has been in Loadon he held the poet of confidential clark to Mr. Maitland, solicitor, of Bedford R. X"

"Thack you," said Mr. Maitland. "I am much obliged to you. It has been pairful the same bound to set my mind at rest about Mr. Wilson."

Althorich I had gained little direct evidence, my suspicions gathered strength. Impossible as the idea seemed, the testimony of the handwriting proclaimed that James Wilson must in some way be connected with the perpetrator of the foul crime. At least, he would be able to identify the writer of the message. My signst had accratianed that his wife had died on February 221, 1870—two days after the blow was struck. As I thought the matter over, the fact of Wilson into thawing mentioned his wrife's death at the time, and his misleading words to make it appear possible that the writer of the warning note was Mrs. Wilson herself. Even the tremulous nature of the handwriting wuld be accounted for; as she must have been at that moment lying on her death-bed. How Roland Northwick became crtangled with James Wilson's wife was a master of little consequence now. Detective skill must unravel all that, and no doubt drag a painfal scandal to light, For me, at present, it was sufficient to know that could I prove the writer of these two papers lying un my pocket to be James Wilson's wife, I had enough ground to justify his arrest se the murderer.

This identification must be my first task. I determined to make no delay. The thought that for years I had been in daily contact and communication with the cold-blooded murderer of one of my dearest friends was to me horrible. With this draditius timpossible to breath the same air with Wilson, and he here the hought ground to justify his arrest se the murderer.

companion and trusted associate in business.

Late as the bour was when I reached Paddingtun, I drove straight to Inspector Sharpe's house. Accustomed to surprises at all nours, the natute gentleman expressed no ast onlishment at seeing me, but awaited patiently any communication I had to make for his benefit. Yet for once, at least, in the course of his checkered career I believe he was taken aback.

"If you will be at my office at eleven o'clock precisely to-morrow morning, I will point out to you the man who murdered Roland Northwick."

The inspector stared.

In a few minutes the door of my office opened and Wilson entered. H had a number of papers in his hand, and running them through, said;

"If you are at liberty now, Mr. Maftland, there are several things about which I I should like to consult you."

I should like to consult you."

I shuddered as he spoke; but he stood there with his impassable exterior—his mind, evidently, bent only on business—it seemed abourd to suppose that this was the being who, with hellish vengeance in his heart, crept up the staircase to Roland's bedroom; that those white fingers, holding now a harmless pen, were the same which olosed round the handle of the knife that pierced my poor friend's bosom.

But the time for hesitation and uncertainty was gone by. In an hour Sharpe would be here, eager for his prey; and until he came I determined that Mr. James Wilson should not be a moment out of my sight.

I rose and walked to the office door, looked it, and placed the key in my pooket. Then I resumed my sest; and motioned Wilson to one near me. My unusual proceedings, I fancied, troubled him—he turned a shade paler if that were possible, but he said nothing.

Many a time afterward, in cold blood, I I have wondered at my folly at thus, of my own free will, cooping myself up with a man whom I unspected to be a murderer; a man whom I unspected to be a murderer; a man whom my life might be as nothing. But I was the stronger, although the clier, man of the two. Wilson, although the clier, man of the two. Wilson as corretained that your wife clied in February, 1870."

and in a short time the officers will be here. Wilson sat silent for some time. I was on the alert, expecting that my accusation would be the signal for an attempt to escape. But nothing seemed further from his thoughts. After a while he raised his eyes to mine, and said quietly.

"Your knowledge of common law cannot be very great, Mr. Maitland, if you think that any English jury will convict a man upon the fancied resemblance between two scraps of writing. But your deductions are better than your law—I did kill Roland Northwick."

The audacity of this full confession, spoken as if he were mentioning an incident in his career of little moment, so supprised me that I could only stare at him and ejaculate:

"Villain I Ruffant"

The inspector stared.

"The inspector stared.

"No." I roplied. "I cannot even tell you his name at this moment. I must manage matters in my own way. He will come to my offine to-morrow, utterly unuspecting.

I will then start in the said, the start was face to face with the true man. It is better that the start was face to face with the true man. It is beyt-but little than injet. I was drawing an walking, a wild thought took possession of ma. I fancied that for some reason or other Wilson had divined my snapicions, and that on the morrow home the work of the same than the start of the same man whome the more work of the same than the start of the same man whome the more work of the same man whome the more work of the same man whome the more work of the same man whome the same man had the same man and the same

"But how could you avoid detection?" I asked.
"Simply by not trying to escape it. I cared little whether I was discovered or not. Some strange instinct induced me to take the watch and chain, which now lies a shape less mass, buried in one correr of the collar beneath this house. I only wonted access to the room. Having done what I had resolved to do, it mattered little whether I came out again or not. By some strange chance no one saw me; so I walked down the stairs and reached the office as usual. My glove was on my hand when I struck the blow. It was stained with blood, so I burntit. That was all. Had I been arrested that day—as, indeed, I fully expected to have been—I should have made no defense paying the penalty of my act as carelessly as I shall now."
"But how could you meet me? How paying the penalty of my act as carelessly as I shall now "

"But how could you meet me? How could you go about your business as usual, with this awful crime on your conscience?"

"I tell you, Mr. Maitland, I neither felt nor feel remorse regret. or even wish to evade justice. My life, as I understand life, ended. I simply waited, never doubting but all would some day be known."

I felt it was too horrible to hear this mand discussing his crime and approaching a shameful end as coulty as though he were speaking of some client's ordinary business matters.

discussing his orime and approaching a shameful end as coolly as though he were speaking of some client's ordinary business matters.

"Now you see, Mr. Maitland," he continued, "why I refused your kind offer of a partnership. It will matter very little your clerk being arrested for murder; but had I been your partner it would not have improved the standing of your firm."

I thanked him mentally for his consideration, but said nothing, I was determined to to speak no more. It was too painful, and I longed for Sharpe to arrive and terminate the interview.

Wilson, as though reading my thoughts, glanced at his watch.
"I see that my time is short," he said, "I have one letter I wish to write before the handcuffs are on my wrists. Would it be asking too great a tavor if I requested you to leave me alone for a few minutes?"

I told him he was at liberty to write what he liked; but I should not quit him. He slightly shrugged his shoulders, and saying, "As you will," took a sheet of paper and commenced writing.

His letter was a very short one. He placed it in an envelope, laying it on the table with the address downward.

The "minutes stole on, curely it must now be eleven o'clock, I would have looked at my watch, but a kind of feeling of delicacy restrained me I waited some time longer and then glanced at Wilson, I was sitting nearest the door, with the idea of outting off any att mpted escap . Wilson was in my naul seat at the table which was litered with letters and legal documents. Thi table, I should add, was between us. A he fluished his letter he took up a brief and commenced perusing it. Even at this awful moment he appeared to be interested only in the work which had done so well for so many years. His lett hand held the sheet he was perusing near his eyes; the remain-der of the first had held the sheet he was perusing near his eyes; the remain. only in the work which had done so well for so many years. His left hand held the sheet he was persuing near his eyes; the remainder of the document hung down, hiding his right hand as well as the greater portion o, his body. As I sat walting until the hou sounded from the neighboring church tower and wondering at the self-command displayed by the remorseless murderer, he look od across and met my gaze. There was an expression in his eyes, which I had never before notioed there.

"I have been thinking, Mr. Maitland," he said in his gentle voice, "that, after all, I should like to escape the gallows. As there are only two ways of escaping—one over

And before I could comprehend the hidden meaning of his words I heard the loud report of a pistol, and James Wilson fell forward across my office-table, delaging it and all it held with his heard's blood.

Before I could call for assistance, Inspector Sharpe, who was waiting outside, burst open the door and rushed to the dying man. He sighed once, and then we knew that all was over with him.

The letter he had just penned was addressed to me, It contained only these words:

"The reason of my rash sat is averaged.

The iteral is of the interest of little interest. They had first met outside this very office, where she would frequently wait to have a repend, or what rite is used, I know not. A Little Virginia Girl.

Josquin Miller, the poet and novelist, has been down in the West Virginia mountains and he writes to the New York Star:

"A little Virginian climbed up the steps like a little pet squirrel; she was just as frisky; her hair as black, busby and abundant; her eyes as bright and many times as large and beautiful. Ah, mel my heart went all to pieces at once. She was only a dozen years old, and yet she was a woman, But she didn't know it at all; she didn't dream of such athing. And that is what made her so ten-fold formidable. I gave her my reat in the packed car, and she thanked me with such promptness and grace, such precision of silent, good taxe, that I wanted to stand there before her and wait all the days of my life for her to speak. But she never spoke. Her hair was all tumbled about, her dress was torn badly, her smalf, dimpled fands were brown and briar torn. Pretty som she dived her loft hand into her pocket, threw back her black hair with the right hand, and so began to crack a lot of chesinurs with the whitest set of teeth and the reddest lips you ever looked at. Dear, lovely little girl. She was the quaintiest bit of nature I have seen this side of Oregon. And although I shall never see her again I venture my life that she is of the best blood in the land, one of the ruined families of the war; a pitful little waif, whose valiant people went down to battle and never came back to her mother and her mother's mother any more. And when I contrasther wild refinement with theblg-footed vulgarity in lace and diamonds constantly encountered in New York I again fall to thinking, and thinking of the strange mutations of life in this up and down land of ours." ours.

Oriental Wood Carvers.

Oriental Wood Carvers.

The East Indians are naturally free handed carvers. Long before the Caristian era the Hindoos beautified the interiors of their temples and homes with the most intricate work of the kind. The facility of carving has not left them, and a block of teak wood under their obisels soon became the bed of the most beautiful traceries and reproduces the flora of the East in all its/variety of forms. The Oriental wood carvers in one respect are unequaled—they have originality of conception united with a power of execution which is wonderful. They receive simply the suggestions of the artists on draughting paper with none of the hundred minutis of background supports and the like, which are necessary to the workmenhere. There they in truth use their chisels as brushes, for their hands are firm. They are acquainted simply with the idea which is conveyed, and with one or two scoops of the chisel a lily or a passion flower or a pomegranate lies imbedded in the wood as though it had been waiting simply to be picked and enjoined. But while they are unsurpassed in what is known as emotional carring they are at a loss at the broad sweeps which are required in the decoration of large apartments or halls.—[N. Y. Great excitement was caused a faw days ago on the Thames enbankment by the chase of a preprise up the river by men armed with rifles on board a steam-tug. The porpoise was a large and lively specimen, and gave his pursuers some trouble. He was three times fired at near Westminster bridge, the last shot evidently taking effect, as he gave a tremendous leap under one of the arches on the Lambest side and then disappeared in deep water, the ebb running down very rapidly at the time. Only a day or two previous a porpoise was seen beyond Chelsea bridge, and several have lately been seen within the mouth of the river. A female porpoise, in fine condition, measuring four feet six inches, weight fifty-six rounds, was caught the day before off Sufference and Providence wharves, Belvedere road, by a lighterman, who succeeded in hooking it with his hitcher.

The Russians are reducing their army ex-

The Russians are reducing their army expenditure by $4,500,000 per annum. According to the Moscow Graztle, this economy is to be brought about by extending the time of service and decreasing the annual number of recruits. Instead of the 260,000 recruits serving respectively three years for infantry and four years for cavalry, it was decided at the last meeting of the commission charged with the consideration of the subject: 1. To reduce the Caucasian regiments and the whole reserve forces in times of peace so as to diminish the standing army by 100 000 men, 2. To fix the period of services five years for infantry and artillery and six years for cavelty. 3. To settle the annual contingent of recruits at 190,000 men serving a period of from five to six years, and at 44,000 men serving for nine months, which will diminish the annual levy of recruits by 25 000 men. If the annual cost of a recruit, is put at $45, this reduction will save more than $4500,000 per annum.

The Italian government has recently published some figures on the subject of public instruction in Italy. The budget of public instruction has rises from 16 390,000 francs in 1871 to 130,400,000 francs in 1883; the number of schools from 21,358 in 1811 to 42,510 in 1831; and the number of pupils in the same period from 1,008,674 to 1928 700. There are, moreover, 701 gymnasiums or secondary schools with 3,674 professors and 41,124 scholers, and having a five years course of study. Above the gymnasiums, agaid, are colleges to the number of 298, with 1,601 professors and 11,133 students, and a course of study lasting three years. In addition, there are $33 technical schools, with an attendance of 22,120. Lately, the Royal universities, 18 in number, registered in 1881 10,592 students, the two most important being those of Turin with 1.651 students, and Naples with 2,851 students. There have still to be added 21 high schools indpendent universities, instructingal and together 1,948 scholars.

This year's vintages in France are likely to be of quite exceptional excellence. A good vintage, however, does not, unfortunately, mean what it once did, the ravages of phylloxera during the past sixteen years naving so largely diminished the number of times. A few figures will show what havoc has been made by this securage of French vinelands. Fourteen years ago there were 2400,000 hecta

IN ONE SHORT YEAR!

Mrs. Blake dio not taint. She did not ween revile her future daughter-io-law. Percival's manner told her that words to this effect would be wasted. But she entreated her son, by every claim she had upon him. to do nothing hurriedly. Of course she objections would have no influence upon a man so madly in love. But she prayed for delay—literally went upon her knees and besought him not to be married for twelve months. A clever woman was Mrs. Blake. Who knew what unforseen things might harpen in a year?

Percival yielded to some extent. After all before he married he must prepare another home for his mother and sisters. He wished to fee married without undue haste, He wished to see his people friendly with Philipps, and he wished Philappa io get some idea of what a deregman wite should be. So her married without undue haste, He wished to see his people friendly with Philippa, and he wished Philappa to get some idea of what a clergyman's wite should be. So he agreed to wait six months—even, when worn out by his mother's tearful importunities, extended this time of probation till the end of the present year. In exchange, he stipulated that Mrs. Blake should try and bring herself to regard Philippa as a daughter. He told Philippa what he had promised. She said nothing, but something in her look made him regret he had made the promise. However, he wowd that the first of January should be his wedding day.

Mrs. Blake kept, at any rate, the letter of her contract with her son. The intercourse between the rectory and the Hollies seemed so friendly, that it looked as if the rector's mother was going to make the best of what she thought a bad job. Yet her presentiment was always with her. All though it was placed beyond doubt that Mrs. Russell had a considerable fortune, Mrs. Blake kept her presentiment, and prayed every night that Perivial might escape from this siren. To do her justice, she was not anxious that he should marry money, so Mrs. Russell's fortune did not affect her views. Mrs. Blake played her part very well, and Peroival was delighted when she suggested that Philippa should accompany her daughters and herself to London, whither they always went early in June; for Mrs. Blake, although but a country rector's widow, was a woman of fashion and friends.

toris whow, was a woman or insular and friends.

It is very possible that whilst pressing this invitation on Philippa Mrs. Blake thought: "She has lived in London. A woman of her extraordinary appearance cannot be forgotten, Some one must surely know all about her."

Although Percival begged her to go with his mother, Philippa hesitated.

"Have you forgotten?" she whispered.

"It is better to face what may be in store than to fly it. Nothing can part us."

"It is better to face what may be in store than to fly it. Nothing can part us."
"Very well, I will go."
She kissed him and for the thousandth time told him how much she loved him.
A fortnight afterward Mrs Blake and Philippa were seated side by side at an evening party. The beautiful young widow was the object of much attention. Suddenly Mrs. Blake noticed that her companion stopped short in the middles of a sentence, and begged a gentleman near her to least her from the room—the heat was overcoming her. Then Mrs. Blake felt sure that something had occurred, and looking round in search of it, saw a man leaning against the opposite wall and eying Philippa with amused wender.

She knew him well—a rising barrister, with whose family she had long been upon terms of intimacy. So when he turned his eyes from the vanishing Philippa to her vacant chair, Mrs. Blake signed him to fill the start of the start of "What do you know of her?" asked Mrs.

"It was a burning shame," said Graham. "On my soul, I believe she was innocent. The judge thought so too."
"Ge on quickly," said Mrs. Blake.

"Then," and Mrs. Blake, with emphatic pauses, "she has—actually been—in prison?"

"I suppose so. But why do you want to know f I wish I had said nothing."

"I have a right to know all about her," said Mrs. Blake icily. "For the sake of sealing your lips, I may tell you that Percival intended marrying her. What an escape I in prison! What an ascape I"

Blue sailed away in search of ther daughters evid Philipps. Her head was in a whirl. The Rector of Chalaton about to make a creature who had worked on the treadmill and picked cakum his wife! Her presentiment had come true with a vangeance. She walked from room to room in search of her charges, and mechanically murmured: "What an escape!" Mrs. Russell was willing enough to go home. "Graham I shall see at once," continued her son, "and entreat his silence. But even if the matter become public property it may be lived dews."

Mrs. Blake was goaded past endurance. She rose in fierce wrath.

"Besotted boyl" she cried, "You—in your position—Rector of Chelston—to marry a convict, a felon! Percival, I am ashamed of you—ashamed! I will go to the bashon—to

"I am sorry, very sorry, imother," he said; "but I love Philippa too well to give her up; and surely, if one person above another should exercise Christian charity, it is a clergyman."
"Christian charity!" said Mrs. Blake with biting scora. "Call it by its true nan—blind uppels passion!"

The look which accompanied her words

The look which accompanied her words added another link to the chain which already bound him.

It was impossible she should remain longer with Mrs. Blake. That afternoon, accompanied by the rector, she went back to Chelston. Percival, who considered that he was absolved from his promise to his mother suggested an early day for the marriage.

"No, no." said Philipps. "Why change our plans? I have no fear of losing your love. No one shall say I have hurried you into marriage."

into marriage."

Mrs. Blake's hopes revived when, in reply to a long, repreachful letter, her son informed her that the previous arrangement would be adhered to. There was still six months' grace, so Mrs. Blake did not ourtail her visit to own. She even went to the seaside for a few weeks as usual. Whilst "that creature" was within stone's throw, the Rectory was not an attractive residence.

At last she returned home, and it soon became an open secret that there was friction between the ladies of the Rectory and the lady of the Hollies, but signs soon multiplied which told the Chelston folk that the rector meant to have his own way.

In the late autumn a house was taken in the neighborhood, and it was perfectly well known this was to be Mrs. Blake's house after the marriage. Whispers went round that Mrs. Russell had ordered and extensive trosseau from London. But all doubt was disposed of when the banns were called in Cnelston Church. Then Mrs. Blake's heart really sunk. She had kpt, and would keep her own counsel. The world need not see the Rectory soiled linen But after this public announcement, which she called an insult to God and man, she had another stormy soene with her "Desotted boy." He was more determined than ever to go his own way, so she washed her hands of him alt-gether. Perhaps she was not to blame, Although he had been very busy all the day he had seen Philippa once or twice, and had promised to call again after the evening service. ordinates, he started to walk across to the Hollies.

In going from the church to the Hollies, about two hundred yards were saved by turning out of the main road and passing through the meadows which ran by Chelston stream. Although this route took one to the back of the house, he usually chose it, Philippa having given him a key which opened the garden gate. He went this way mow.

opened the garden gate. He went this way now.

It was a clear starlight night. The ground was turned into iron by a sharp frost. As the rector walked briskly along the river path, he thought of all that had occurred since this time last year, when he bore Philippa into the vestry. Not now did he wish this year taken out of his life. But he prayed that before the next year was over many things which now distressed him might be made right. It was a terrible thing or quarrel with mother and sisters, but then it had been for Philippa's sake. Heavens I how he loved that woman!

As he ran toward them he saw that the combatants were in man and a woman, but he was almost gwithin arm's length before he realized the truth—that the woman, who appeared to be defending herself from some reffina's insurderous attack, was Philippa.

Pereival Blake was a man of immense muscular power. At Oxford he had been farmusular power. At Oxford he had been farmusular power, at Votrod he had been farmusular power. from his victim and half-dislocated, whilst he writhed helplessly in the enraged clergy-man's grip.

That ineradicable old Adam, revenge, lurks in every heart, lay or clerical. Whether it is aroused or not is but a question of the timulating motive. Surely a man in the rector's situation may be pardoned for inflicting summary punishment. He did not stop to argue the moral points of the case. His bloed boiled in a most unchrist, ianlike manner. Without more ado, (he put forth all his great strength and hurled the man lell with a dull heavy thud on the iron bound path; moreover, he lay there still and sil-nt; and Percival, whose rage was expended in that effort of strength, felt his heat grow sick from the fear that he had taken human life, a Yet Philippa was his first care. She stood by his side motionless. He face in the monlight, looked livid. Her eyes were dilated and fall of horror. She paid no head to this anxious enquiries, but she clasped her hands round his strong right arm—she even seemed to caress it, to be trying to estimate it spower.

"Percival," she whispered, "you are strong —you have killed him."

"God forbid!" said Percival nervously, and stepping to the fallen man. His faers were soon at rest. The fellow breathed heavily and as be leaned over him the rector detected in that breath a strong smell of ardent spirits. He was glad to find the man a stranger to Chelston—glad he had not been compelled to chastise one of his own holds. Evidently the rogge was a half-drunk, on tramp; so, greatly relieved, the rector went back to Philippa.

"He is dead—you have killed him?" she said.

A cry of astonishment, of delight, sprung from him. She placed her so't white fingers on his lips, drew him to a low chair, shd motioned him to be seated.

He obsyed. She keelt beside him, her face on a level with his own. A strange sweet perfume emanted from her garments. She wreathed her warm white arms around his neck. Philipps shivered.

"Go back and kill him?" she said in a strange voice.

The rector looked at her in amazement. Her large eyes gleamed like those of a will animal.

"My darling," he said, "you are upset. If he has robbed you or injured you he will pay bitterly for it. Go home, dear Philipps. I will soon be with you."

Again he felt her shudder. Then all at once her calmness and presence of mind seemed to return.

"I was upvest," ane said. "I don't know what I said. Percival, we cannot leave the poor wortoh lying there."

The rector was thinking the same thing. "Besides," she continued, "I am only frightened, not hurt. If you send for the police we shall have to give evidence."

She spoke wisely. To-morrow they were to start for sunniar lands. Was it worth while delaying their departure for the sake of giving this drunken wretch a taste of the treadmill?"

room she left him, to fetch the remedies, he concluded.

More than ten minutes passed before she returned. The rector grew uneary and fighty. Terrified tearful faces met him when he arose. As gently as they could, people told him that an hour ago Mrs. Russell's old serifiquety. He did not like to think of that sensel as trampoutside. He blamed himself for the vengeful force he had put into his going to a ball, but quite cold and dead. In rified whisper they added it was feared she had committed suicide.

This is the story of that year in a man's life which must be swept away from his memory before he can call himself happy. THE END.

The Czar of Russia's Winter Palace.

The Winter Palace is described as the largest palace in the worll, being one-third larger than that of the Enpercor of Austria's, and unsurpassed in point of splendor. It is the residence of the Czar and his Court during winter, and stands on the left bank of the Neva. The place is four stories high, or about 80 feet; the frontage is 455 feet in length, in breadth 350 feet. The principal entrance or "perron dea Ambarsadeurs," is from the Neva and leads by a magnificent fight of marble steps to the state apartments of the naluce. A gateway in the centre of the building, facing Alexander's Clumn, opens into a large court. The most magnificent apartments are the Throne Room of Peter I., where the diplomatic corps generally present their concratulations on New Year's Day; the White Hall, the Hall of St. George, a parafelogram of 140 feet by 60 feet; the gallery of the Field-Marshals and the Alexander gal lery, a suite of splendid halls, filled with marbles, malacnites, vasse, and pictures. When the Imperial family is in residence, about 6,000 persons are lodged in the bailding. The Czar of Russia's Winter Palace.

Alaska Glaciers.

It was nearly sunset when we began to near the Muir glacier, and the day was near ended when the cliff was Teached, and we had anchored near the frowning precipice. The shades of evening had gathered about the islands passed during the day and half hid from sight the lower ranges and the trackless forests; but the Fairweather peaks were visible still and glowed with a ghastly light in the isolated height like banks of phrasphorous hung above the trees. Around us flosted icy fragments, grinding against each other, or floating, solitary, and mijestic down the watery way. The scene was grani past all conception, wild and beautiful, and silencing all with admiration. No other wonder of nature equals this glaciar of untoid age, as it moves silently yet irresistibily down from its birthplace to the sea, crying as it comes the very embodiment of streegth, the destroyer of all life. All the glaciers of Switzerland might be combined and together they would not equal this of Gazier Bay. Set it crawling over the valleys guarded by Mont Blanc, and it would crush the country beneath its weight and leave a wilderness behind. And yet in Alaska, long and broad and wild, it is a mere fissure—a single stream among the many.

ONE of the eleverest swindles that has recently been prepetrated in Canada came to light in Ingersol last week. A young law student named Rose, by a series of well executed forgeries, managed to negotiate a loan with a Toronto ban company and obtained a check for $3,500, payable at one of the local banks. By means of a forged letter of identification he succeeded in getting the check cashed. So systematic and complete had he performed his work that it would probably have remained undiscovered for some time had not the inspector of the company casually made a visit to the property. His surprise may be imagined when he discovered the true state of affairs. Detectives were at once sent in pursuit, and through the barn was insured the loss will be heavy. Cause of fire unknown. A Good Guarantee.—H. B. Cochran, druggist, Lancaster, Pa., writes that he has guaranteed over 300 bottless of blandous attacks and liver and kidney troubles. In us case has it disappointed those who used it. In canada it gives the same general satisfaction.

Mr. William Saunders, Presidedt of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, announces that the winter meeting of the association will be held at the Victoria Hall, in the latter part of January, and that representatives from Ohio, Michigan and New York Associations will be present. These meetings are invariable well attended, and productive of good te the fruit grow-wing interest, and there is every reason to believe the London gathering will be a representative one in every sense of the word.

A very peculiar law suit came up before the court in Montreal recently. The plaintiff in the east sufficient of dames and buggy, having occasion to coss the track, and not seeing the express train going west—barely escaped sudden death, as the buggy had just cleared the evidence that the defondant neglected to pass the collection plate purposely. On the other hand it was shown that the plaintiff had not placed anything in the plate for years. After the particular service in which he had been alighted he went forward and handed in thirty cents. The court hid that the defendant was liable for a certain amount, and therefore gave $20 damages. The cost on both sides, sm, unting to $200, had to be paid by the plaintiff, as he should have brought the suif in a lower court. This is the first instance on record of a man claiming damages for being overlooked by the collector at church. As a rate the majority take it as a great favor and make it a point to have their eyes directed in an opposite direction when that functionary is on his rounds.

THE STORY OF MY LOYE.

CHAPTER XII.

An hour passed, and still the convertation was kept up with unflagging interest. All Lady Jesmond's power of fascination were brought into play, Once or twice his lordship turned to me with some commonplace remark; and at once bright's mile from her he instantly forgot me. We were still out on the balcony. Lord Saxon seated by her side, whilst I stood gozing at the roses with a faint sad heart. What had happened that the light had seemed to have left the sun and the fragrance to have fled from the flowers?

Lord Saxon was "a lover of beauty and a dressmer of dreams"—I knew it—and, now that he had met with a woman of suppassing lovelinese, he would worship at her shrine. Why need I mind? With a smile on my face I stood there whilst my heart was slowly breaking; for I new, just as well as if they had disclosed their thoughts, that a passionate mutual love was burning in their hearts. He could never have loved me; it had been but a passing fancy. That woman had strend his heart with her beauty, and he had surrendered.

he had surrendered,

When the feeling of pain had somewhat moderated, I heard what they were saying.

"Net ride!" oried Lord Saxon. "I thought all ladies rode in India!"
"I was an exception," she said. "It is the one accomplishment above all others that I wise."

"I was one accomplishment above an uniss."

L't me teach you," he begged eagerly.

"Von would not like the trouble," she

"Trouble!" he repeated. "Why, it would give me the greatest pleasure and delight."

"We will spiak of it-later," she said.
Then came an interruption, in the shape of a message from the nursery, saying that Mrs. Evers would be glad if Ludy Jesmend would go there at once, as Sr Guy did not seem well.

would go there at once, as Sr Guy did not seem well.

Nello and I were left on the balcony alone. He had come to ta'k to me of the silvery moon land the nightingale's song. Alas, slas his eyes followed Lady Jeamond, and, when she had vanished from his sight, he stood with a dreamy, musing smile on his lips.

'He is a dreamer of dreams,''I said to myself, whilst a bitter pain seized my heart; 'and now they are of hr, not of me.''

'Fe evis: 'he said, turning to me, 'I' cannot tell you how grieved and distressed I am at your sudden reversal of fortune. I could hardly believe my eyes when I read my nother's letter, and found that Jeamond Dane was no longer yours. Do you feel the loss greatly ?'

His words were kind erough, but the very kndness was as a dagger threst into my hrart; it showed me how completely his love was dead.

The loss of Jeamond Dene was so trifling his love was dead.

The loss of Jesmond Dene was so trifling to me in comparison with this other and greater loss that I could have laughed at the questin; but I answered it soberly enough.

enough.
"I felt it mot deeply; but I do not resent it. I loved my cousin Paul, and I am glad that his sen will have the estath."

"You are very noble and very good," he said, "I have stought a great deal about it, and I cann't express to you how glad I am to see you carry such a brave heart, Felicia. Have you desided yet what you will do?"

mave you desided yet what you will do?"

I could have cried out in my anguish that I had hiped, had thought that he was com ing to settle my future for me; but I shrouded myself in a muntle of pride. If his love for me was so weak that it had died at sight of a fairer face., what had it heap worth?

been worth?

I told him I had decided on nothing—that for the greent I should remain with Lady Jesmond, as she had asked me; also that my and was too ill to be removed.

"I should like to see your cousin Paul's little son," he said. "C. rtsinly his widow is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen."

"And you worship beauty," I ren arked, hiterly.

How deat he was to the angulah that rang in my voice! He laughed frankly, sp parently unaware of the pain he had caused e.

"So my mother said, Felicia; and I am raid it is true. But I want to talk to you of vourself."

When Lady Je-mond returned to the room, laughing at the nurse's anxiety and unnecessary alarm, he immediately left me, and the next moment I heard him beseching Lady Jesmond to drive over to Dunron.

Descending Dunron, "I should like to show you the place," he said, Felicia will drive over with you,"

"I will think about it," answered Lady Jesmond. "I never make hurried prom see,"

"Felicia," cried Lord Saxon. "you will bring Lady Jesmond over to Dunroon?"
"When she likes to go," I answered,
And then Lord Saxon rose to depart. He really must go, he said; he had stayed much longer than he ought. But even after that declaration he lingered, talking to her, and watching her every movement with admir-watching her every movement with admiring eyes.

So this was the prosaic end of my lovestory! Had he cared for me? I could not tell; but I believed he had, or he would not have kissed me.) He had loved me with a feeble apoley for love which had died when he saw the fair face of Lady Jesmond. I had tasted happiness but to lose it; I had dreamed my love-dream but to wake and find it vanished. I had been unspeakably happy for a few days, and now, without any warning, ithe cup of happiness had been dashed from my lins, the blissful delusion had been dispelled.

When Lord Saxon had gone, Lady Jes.

had been dispelled.

When Lord Saxon had gone; Lady Jesmond turned to me:

CHAPTER XIII.

A year passed, and to me it was of alow torturing agony. My strength deserted me, the colour faded from my oheeks, the light from my eyes; but I kept my secret. No one, except perhaps Lady Saxon, had the fathetst idea that I had ever cared for the hardsome Lord of Durroon.

It was impossible for me not to watch Nello and Lady Jesmond as they sauntered amid the trees and fi livers, her bright lovely face and golden hair convasting with i dark, proud, manly beanty. Nover wa lover more devoted than Lord Saxon. He came every day, sometimes twice; and I could hear his vice-cal ing "Gabricole, Gabrielle, Tashes engish her in the greends. He was proud of her love, and he gloried in her I rilliant brauty. If by any clance he same when she was engaged or absent, she would pour out all his passionate loving thoughts to ma. Lashings from a fiery whip could not tave stung me more; but I listened with a smile on my lips, though every word lacerated my heart. As for Lady Jesmond, she gave herself up completely to her love-die am.

"I talked of ambition once," she said to me; "I never could have had any. I would marry Lord Saxon if he were a peasant instead of a prunce, as he is."

"Do you love him so much," I asked.
"Love him," she exclaimed, with a warm glow on her face—'I ve him? That is a weak expression, Felicia. It is something deeper and stronger than simple love, I always knew, she continued, "that if I ever loved at all, is woull be in terrible earnest. I wish I had more moderation and greater self-control."

They were acknowledged lovers when she spoke in that enthu isatio fashion; but no time had been settled for the marriage. My and the marriage was the sure of the same than the species of the same than the had been settled for the marriage.

self-control."
They were acknowledged lovers when she spoke in that enthu isstic fashion; but no time had been settled for the marrage. My aunt Annette was s'ill lyin; ill, and Lady S.xon was miserable.
"I do not like Lady Jesmond," she said to me one day when we were alone; "I never liked her, and I never shall. I do not trust her. There is something strange and mysterious in her manner which repels even more than her glittering loveliness. I am snxious that my son should be h. ppy; but I wish he had chosen differently;" she concluded, with a sigh.

I could not help noting that there were times when Lady Jesmond seemed unhappy, when she was restless and unesay, and started at the least sound, grew pale when she heard an unusual noise. I found her at intervals, with her face clouded in thought and her bright blue eyes shadowed. It struck me that she spent much more time with Mrs. Rivers than she had hitherted done. They were in constant and close companionship, always talking caperiy, e. remanded.

struck me that she spent much more time with Mrs. Rivers than she had hitherto done. They were in constant and close companionship, always talking cager'y, ernestly, and in the largers. Two other things struck me as externey angular—how little thought Lavy Jesmond bestowed upon her dead husband and how little love she showed for her child. All her interest centered in Lord Saxth.

The month of June came round again, and still I was an inmate of Jesmond Dens. I could not leave, first, because I had solemnly romised to remain for a time, and secondly because my aunt Aunette, who was ying ill with a spiral tomplaint, could hard y endure my being out of her presence. All nature smiled in the summer sun, and the nightingales once a sin awoke the cohoes of the night with their melodious song.

At the close of a sulty dsy, when the moon was shining over the trees, I went quietly to hear the nightingales, as I had once gone with Nello. Bitter were my thoughts, hot and bitter were my tears. She had taken him fr m me, this beautiful women whose little son had robbed me of my inheritance.

It was a luxuy to be alone, to pour forth unrestrainedly the agony of my heart, to crouch down on the long of the grass and sob out my grief. They were singing so exquisitely, the nightingales, and yet the sweet muso seemed to Itear my very heart. He would have loved and married me but for her! Haven forpive me—in that moment I haved her! Ah, if she had but remained in India—if my cousin Paul had but lived! and the plaint of Bianca among the nightingales came home to mo.

In the madness of my despair I realized how much I had loved him. He would be standing now on the balcony with her; he would be worshipping the beauty of her fair the, his arm encircling her want, and he would likes her lovely lips. And I was lying there, loss of deslates, and broken-hearted!

She had had the trusting love of my bright young count: she was the mother of his hirr; she was mistress of the house that had been mine; she had money, lander and now she had taken him! Was it fair that she should stand in the circle of his arm, and I lie forsaken there? Was it fair that she should take his caresses and his kisses while I stretched out my arms to the empty air?

CHAPTER XIV.

CHAPTER XIV.

There was a surprise in store for me when I returned from my dismal ramble. I found that Lord Saxon had remained rather later than usual, and that Lady Jesmond had discarded her widow's weeds. Never shall I forget the vision of loveliness that met my dazed eyes. She wore a dress of pale violet velvet, which contrasted well with her golden tresses and exquisite complexion. I had seen, not many days before, Lord Saxon take the little crape cap from her head, and all her shining hair fall in a golden mass of ripples and waves about her shapely shoulcers.

"I hope," she answered calmly, "that I shall never commit a greater."

"I do not think you could commit a sin if you tried," he said, his eyes looking into hera with deep yearning love; and, to my surprise, instead of smiling, her gravity depened.

The remembrance of her dazzling beauty of that evening will never leave me. I remember, too, how she sang to him, and how he leaned admiringly over her chair and drank in the music of her sweet vo e; and then tney went out on to the balcony, where he bade her good night, bending down and kissing her lips, and breathing pa sionate words into her ears which seemed to stir her into new life.

Then he was gene; and she stood gazing after him with a smile sweet and tender. Such as I had seldom seen on her face before.

"I will be a good woman my whole life ltng," she said suddenly, "I will be as good as woman can be; for, oh, Felicia, I am so happy—I am so unutterably happy! Do you know what has happened?"

"No," I answered faithly; but my heart told me what was coming.

Two warm soft arms were placed round my neck, a golden head nestled on my bosom, a fair bewitcoming face was turned to mine, tears shone in the blue eyes.

"Listen to me, Felicia," she said. "I am the happiest woman in the whole wide world. Oh, I will be good—I will indeed be good !"

The white arms tightened their clasp and the beautiful head nestled more closely to me.

"This summer, she repeated; "and, now that my happiness is to cear, I—I am afraid of it—afraid I" she respeated, raising her face and kissing me. "Can you say anything that will give me courage?"

"You have nothing to fear," I said, with difficulty.

Is it coller than usual to night?" she asked. "The air is sweet with roses, but it seems to me chill," and I felt a shudder pass over the graceful figure. "I wish," she added, with sudden melancholy, "that I had my life to begin over again. All people make grave mistakes at one time or another.

she added, with sudden melancholy, "that I had my life to begin over again. All people make grave mistakes at one time or another in their lives, do they not?"

When I awoke the next morning, my first thought was that I must go from Jessmoud Dene. I could not bear to remain in the place that had seen my hopes crushed and my love ruttlessly blasted.

Just as I had prophesied, Lord Saxon came over quite early, as he wanted to drive Lacy Jesmoud to St. Michael's Pricry, a fine ruin about ten miles distant.

Two Popular Singers. Mrs. Agnes Corlett-Thomson, who will be remembered by many of our readers as Muss Corlett, is rapidly coming to the front as a singer of much more than average merit. Her voice is a pure, sweet "stoccato" soprano, particularly strong, and marked with a fullness of tone and purity of production but seldom strong, and market with a laminess of tone and purity of production but seldom met with. She is also a good type of an ideal Canadian, wich in good health, with that bright and c'ear complexion charac-teristic of her countrywomen. Last May she married Mr. J. F. Thomson, a barteristic of her countrywomen. Last May she married Mr. J. F. Thomson, a bartone of whom Canada may well be proud. As yet a young man, he has has already filled engagements with a number of high class opera and concert Companies. It was with the Strakosch and Litta Companies that his greatest successes were made. While with them he appeared with such great artists as Marie Roze, Torriani, Annandale, Litta, Brignoli, Tagliapietra, Kellogg, Carey, Perugini, Conly, etc. The Boston Herald in speaking of his debut there said: "Another debutant, Mr. J. One of Froude's Stories of Carlyle. Une of Fronce's Stories of Carific.

It is no exaggeration to say that if one of the stories in Fronce's "Thomas Carlyle" had been published during the historian's life no woman, unless possibly one of his kinefolk as hard as himself, would ever have spoken to him again. His wife, suffering from the combined effects of chronic neuralgia and a terrible fall, with the nerves and museles of one side, entirely, displied and museles of one side entirely disabled ley on her bed, unable to close her mouth. He came into her room, looked at her, while he lefaned against the mantelpiece—an act intensely irritating to a woman not vain indeed, but proudly desirous not to look ill—and said: "Jane, ye had better shut your mouth. Jane, yell find yourself in a more compact and pious frame of mindif ye shut your mouth." That Mrs. Carlyle endured this gibe and afterwards remained near the man who inflicted it upon her, asys much for her constancy; but no woman who reads its crude brutality canafterwards be opn to conviction that there was anything good about Carlyle.

The Dunce's Cap in the East. She began to pace up and down the long rawing-room.

"You will think that I am behaving strangely to night," she said. "I am uneasy; I cannot rest."

I attempted to go, but she cried out, "felicia, do not leave me!"

"It is strange," she said presently, with rare humlity, "that out of all the world of women Nello should have chosen me."

"I do not think so," I replied quickly.

Another Life Saved.

Another Life Saved.

About two years ago, a prominent citizen of Chicago was vold by his physicians that he must die. They said his system was so debilitated that there was nothing left to build on. He made up his mind to try a "new departure." He got some of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and took it according to directions. He began to improve at once. He kept up the treatment for some months, and is to-day a well man. He says the "Discovery" saved his life.

A MARVELOUS STORY

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882. "Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrof-ula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a serofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case, Yourstruly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago Iwas completely covered with a terrible humor and scorfulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable tiching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARHAPARHLLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of ago. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, ATER'S SARGAPARHLLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully.

AYER'S SARSAPARILA cures Scrofulas and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Bingworm, Blotches, Sorres, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system. PREPARED BY

J. W. Bowen, proprietor of the McArthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever falled to give entire satisfaction."

to give entire satisfaction."

Mr. ANGUS FAIRMAIRN, leaden of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Moss., Feb. 6, 1880: "Ever since my hair began to give silvery evidence of the change which fleeting time procureth, I have used AYEE'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youldrulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministry, orange of the public."

in the eyes of the public."

Mas. O. A. Presscorr, writing from 18 Elm
St., Charlestone, Mass., April 14, 1882, asys:
"Two years ago about two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and I was fast growing bald. On using Ayker's Hair, Vicou the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a mouth my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as of the Vicous, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."

We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYEE's HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

warm and comfortable, and by just so much they will turn out milk at a reduced expense.

There is profit in keeping cows warm in winter. It costs much less to tone down the cold of our severe climate by providing warm buildings for the herd once in a lifetime, than to furnish extra food year after year to restore heat needlessly logs by exposure to cold air. I do not know of a dairyman who could not do something in this direction toward reducing the cost of his milk, and I believe it is possible for most dairymen to reduce the cost of winter keep on-third. I have seen this done by several men who thought they were treating their stock pretty well before they began making a special effort in this direction.

There is but one other source of needless expense in the production of milk, which approximates in magnitude the waste of lodder from exposure to cold; and that is, the lack of a full and steady supply of good milk-producing food through the whole of the milking season, less than ten per cent. of the very intelligent dairy public of New York having foresight enough to provide against even a snort-midsummer and in sufficient protection in winter, the cost of milk is made something like two eas great as it need be. Let the cown be so well fed in summer that there shall be no shrinking in their milk, except from the natural decrease due to the time of coming in; and reduce their keep to a minimum by comfort in winter, and there is money in dairying. It is a better, as well as a more effectual way of enhancing profits, than by endeavoring to raise the price of dairy products, as the side of the milking diminishes consumption by increasing

It is well also to see that the birds from different roosting places agree when put together for the first time. Note that the birds from different roosting places agree when put together for the first time. The controlled it is best for a number of person to surround them, drawing closer and closer to the house. The chickens should see their way, and learn to go in; if taken off the trees and carried in, they do not learn their way, and the operation has to be repeated a number of times before the birds will learn to go in of their own accord.

The Dairyman's Best Way for Enhancing Profits.

Of the various ways through which it is possible for the average dairyman to enhance his profits, the most effectual is toredect the cost of producing his milk. This he cap do in a variety of ways. One means of doing so lies in the improvement of his milking at tok. This is a certain but slow way, and must be the work of years. A more rapid way, and one that can be at once and a variable, consists in reducing the most of keeping his cows, This he may do in different ways: first, by securit greater warmth and more comfort for his herd in winter. The heaviest time of expense which he incurs consists in the cost of wintering his cows, and the more they are responsed to the cold, the heavier that item be comes. Life's Discipline.

Life's Discipline.

It is not the best thing—that is, the things we call best—that make men. It is not pleasant things; it is not the calm experience of life. It is lite's rugged experiences, its temposts, its trials. The discipline of life is here good and there evil, here trouble and there joy, here roughness and there smoothness, one working with the other; and the alterations of the one and the other which necessitate adaptions constitute a part of that education which makes man a man in distinction from an animal, which has no education. The successful man invariably bears on his brow the marks of the struggle which he has had to undergo.

Mr. Meredith said that now would be a good time to make the depositors a proposition and the committee could then investigate and report as to the advisability of accepting it. Mr. Fawcett said it mightbe in order for the committe to accept or reject an offer. In reply to questions from various parts of the room, he said that he would not make an offer to-day, and would not be in a position to do so until the banks were disposed of. Several speakers at this point charged Mr. Fawcett with having promised to make an offer at this meeting, and some very animated criticisms were passed on his refusal to do so. Mr. Fawcett claimed that he only promised a statement and not an offer. Mr. Armstrong, Euphenia, pitched into Mr. Pawcett sin a lively manner, and worked up quite an excitement in the meeting. He said the depositors did not come here to be fooled and lose more time and money. He defied any to tell from the statement given what depositors would receive on the dollar.
